RISE OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

WE all know, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, that the English language has been growing at a remarkable rate during this century, and that it has been spreading over the whole globe. But few, however, really comprehend how rapid this growth has been. At the opening of the century French was spoken by 31,000,000 people, German by 30,000,000, Russian by 30,000,000, Spanish by 27,000,000, English by 21,000,000, and Italian by 16,000,000. To-day English is the language of 130,000,000, French of 45,000,000, German of 70,000,000, Russian of 75,000,000, Spanish of 35,000,000, and Italian of 35,000,000. In other words, during the present century English has not only risen from the fifth place to the first but has gained enormously on the rest in relative magnitude, expanding from about 13 per cent of the total to over 30 per cent. With this increase of the English speaking people the language itself has kept pace. Concurrent with this growth of the language there has been an equal, if not greater, increase in knowledge. Three hundred years ago one man could know all there was to be known. To-day one man can know thoroughly only one small branch of one science. This increase of knowledge has been most rapid during the last part of the present century. More than any other cause, the progress of modern invention and science has brought about an enormous extension of the language. Thousands of technical words and expressions now in common use would never have been coined but for the innumerable parts of the never ending list of new inventions in mechanics and discoveries in science. In no better way can this rapid increase in knowledge, and thereby in the number of words used, be realized than by a comparison of the first reference works with those of the present day.

FINDING PLENTY OF WATER IN THE AFRICAN DESERT.

ARTESIAN wells sunk in the African desert appear to find an abundant supply of water without going very deep for it, and this fact may in time put a new face on desert conditions, involving important political, climatic, and economical consequences. The English have begun sinking them along the Berber-Suakim road, finding water there as abundant as it was in the regions near the Nile when their first experimental wells were put down. Flowing under the Saharan sands there may be water enough to fertilize oases all over its sterile expanse and rescue it in a measure from its historic barrenness and desolation. Some years ago a French engineer proposed to cut a canal from the Mediterranean to the lower desert levels, thus creating a new inland sea, or rather, restoring an old one; but for some reason the project was abandoned. Local irrigation by means of artesian borings is a more judicious expedient, and, the English having pointed the way in this direction, the French are quite likely to follow it. Only a narrow desert belt separates their possessions in north and middle Africa, reaching from the Mediterranean to the Niger, and it is quite worth their while to fertilize it and plant it with palm groves and date orchards, if possible, at any rate to provide water enough to supply their present caravans and perhaps their future locomotives.

LIKENS CHICAGO TO ROME.

THE Rev. Dr. W. J. Chichester, formerly of Los Angeles, California, the new pastor of the First Presbyterian church, preached his initial sermon yesterday, taking for his text the words of Paul in his epistle to the Romans: "So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also; for I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ."

"I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are in Chicago, also," he declared, and a moment later he added:

"Paul knew all the pride of Rome, the insolence of Rome, the heathenism of Rome, and yet he declared his readiness to go there and preach this gospel. Chicago is going to be the Rome of America, the typical metropolitan city, and it will exceed all other cities of the continent in numbers, wealth, enterprise, and culture. Here the battles of the coming century will be fought out. Here questions of politics, government, theology, and church extension will seek their solution first and most urgently. For all these reasons Chicago needs a pure gospel simply preached."

Again he said: "There is no church so grand, no city so cultured, as to have outgrown the necessity of a gospel faithfully preached. I am told that not for a decade has Chicago been so hungry for the gospel of Jesus Christ. You know my record. I am not a moral reformer. My strongest conviction is that God has called me to preach the gospel."

Explaining, the new pastor said he had no intention of falling into the opposite error of thinking the duty of a church ends when it has erected its edifice, called a pastor, and inserted the weekly notice in the newspaper. In his view the gospel is related intimately to everything in human experience.

"Christ's gospel stands in closest touch with business, politics, reform of all kinds, the elevation of womanhood and the deliverance of childhood," he said. "Still the question of supreme importance is, 'What shall I do to be saved?'"

"Too much modern preaching deals with abstractions. A certain liberal preacher now spells God with two vowels and devil without a 'D.' I preach to you a divine personality, the incarnate son of God.

"Now, I do not want you to think I shall narrow the field too closely. Paul in this same epistle gives instruction about the conduct of a Christian in business, politics, and society. But the preacher must take his stand close by the cross of Christ."

Dr. Chichester declared the most pressing practical problem of the church was how to reach the 3,400,000 people in Illinois who are not connected with any church.—Chicago Tribune.

POPULATION OF MIGHTY RUSSIA.

THE first census of the Russian Empire ever taken occurred nominally on February 9 of the present year, but all the details of the information procured are not yet forthcoming.

While the present enumeration is the first comprehensive, scientific, and trustworthy census ever carried out in Russia, there have been, of course, periodical attempts to guess at the number of the Czar's subjects. Once in about fifteen years an inquiry would be made as to the names, ages, and dwelling places of that portion of the male population which paid personal taxes. The object of the statistics thus secured was exclusively fiscal, the area of investigation was partial, and the method of collecting data was inadequate and clumsy.

This year, however, the utmost pains were taken to obtain exhaustive and accurate returns. The work was distributed among ninety-six provincial and 757 district committees, again each of the districts being split up into cantons. The cantonal sections were themselves divided, every rural division comprising 2,000 souls, and every urban division 750. To each of these smallest divisions a registrar was appointed.

The entire population of the Russian Empire is 129,211,114 souls, of whom 94,188,750 inhabit European Russia; 9,442,590, Poland; 9,723,553, the Caucasus; 2,527,801, Finland; 5,731,732, Siberia; 3,415,174, the Steppe regions; and 4,175,101, the Provinces of Transcaspia and of Turkestan. There are, also, 6,413 subjects of the Czar now residing in Khiva and Bokhara.

[Which is more than three times that of Great Britain or France and nearly twice that of the United States.]

The average density of the population is 8.8 persons to the square verst, a Russian verst being about .44 of a square mile. The density varies a great deal in different regions; it is 84.6 to the square verst in Poland, and only 0.5 in Siberia. As regards the distribution of the sexes, we find that in European Russia there are 102 females to 100 males, but in the Polish provinces only 98.6 females to 100 males. Elsewhere the proportion of women is still smaller; in Siberia there are but 93.7 females to 100 males; in the Steppe country, 89.4 females to 100 males; in the Caucasus, 89.5 females to 100 males; and in Turkestan, 83.6 females to 100 males.

There are, it seems, nineteen cities in Russia which have in each case a population of more than 100,000 souls and thirty-five more which have from 50,000 to 100,000 each.—Ex.

TOBACCO IMPAIRS SIGHT.

DR. FRANCIS DOWLING has given a sensible paper before the Mississippi Valley Medical association, showing, as the careful result of the investigation by himself and others, that impaired vision is the common result of the habitual use of tobacco, either by chewing or smoking, rather more by the chewing, on account of the greater absorption of the nicotine.

He conducted a personal examination of 150 male employees in a large tobacco factory, all of whom used tobacco in one or both of these ways. Of these he found that in forty-five cases the normal acuteness of vision was much diminished. In thirty cases the impairment was very serious, the subjects mistaking red for brown or black, green for blue or orange, and sometimes black, when the tests were made. They were also unable to make out the white spot in the center of a black card.

More than half of the 150 showed persistent contraction of both pupils, and this was the invariable accompaniment of some form of defective vision. In most cases the failure of vision is very slow and becomes well advanced before the patient discovers it. This slowness of action is the reason why the users of tobacco do not notice its effects.

It is with them as with the frog—put one of these animals into water of ordinary temperature and by means of heat raise it about one degree Fahrenheit every five minutes and you may bring the water to a degree of heat which kills the frog, and he never knows it. Its action has been so gradual that the animal did not feel the change. So it is with many who use tobacco. Injury goes on slowly and it is not perceived.—Journal of Hygiene.

The pastor of a London church, in order to popularize his services, permits the male members of his congregation to smoke, and furnishes the tobacco. He also supplies the women with tea, cakes, and marmalade. New Jersey is bound to keep pace, Rector Stoddard, of Jersey City, having started a dancing class in his church.

The Russian government is moving in the matter of making the Siberian rivers accessible to merchant vessels. The Trans-siberian road, now in process of construction, runs only through the extreme southern part of that vast territory and the railroad freight will consist largely of grain. For the bulkier freight, lumber, coal, and minerals, there can be cheap transportation by waterway, as the Lena, the Yenesei, and the Obi and their tributaries traverse all that country that is of commercial importance. It is claimed that the 14,000 miles of river in Siberia are easily navigable if the Kara Sea can be kept open, and with that open the way would be clear to Western Europe and Russia White Sea ports. To keep the sea free from ice is the problem the Russians are now studying and with every prospect of success.—Tribune.

PRINCIPLES RATHER THAN RULES.

Rules are good, but principles are better. Rules may contradict, confuse; principles are constant, consistent. To live by rule is too often to miss the nobler mastery, the mental and moral developing of principle. To live by principle is to be led to the best rules. When Jesus spoke of going two miles with the one who asked for one mile's companionship, of giving the extra cloak, of turning the other cheek, he was not laying down rules, but lifting up principles.

The greater involves the less. Principle is prophetic, genetic, dynamic. Love will take care of politeness, for it is its heart, and the heart vitalizes the hands; but rules of etiquette and deportment are no guarantee of love.—Sunday School Times.

The following is on the authority of The British Weekly: "Next to the Bible, the last book that might be expected to go out of print in Scotland is the 'Westminster Confession of Faith.' This has actually happened."

THE SITUATION.

THERE are crises in all movements, religious as well as political. One has been approaching the church, and is either upon us or very near. Are we prepared for it in sentiment.

Judging from those portions of the field which we have been permitted to visit during the present conference year, a very healthy tone of morality is obtaining. A more careful observance of the rules of propriety in the personal conduct of both eldership and laity is being insisted upon; and the injunction to "avoid even the appearance of evil," is being understood and heeded.

The long contest with the heresies of dogma and practice which there are good reasons to believe were demoralizing, has had the effect to emphasize the desire for personal purity; and the very forceful argument, that if we denounce a system of marriage which contemplates more than one companion in wedlock at the same time, then every word and act which may be either a disregard of the marriage bond in fact, or be properly construed to be one, should be avoided; and thoughts which may lead to such words, or acts should be suppressed; for thought is but the forerunner of both word and deed; right deeds follow right thoughts, wrong deeds wrong thoughts.

In some places, the freedom that characterizes the family intercourse and is almost universal among the saints obtains between members of the church, as members of the common family, the household of faith, and has been somewhat abused, leading to unfortunate complications injurious to the ministry and hurtful to the work; the adverse claim being made, that while the church is insisting upon purity in dogma, members were denying the profession in practice. In these places there is an awakening to the situation, and the conclusion being forced that although there are no strangers in the covenant of grace, there must be no foolish crossing the lines of just propriety; that laxity of morals is far more reprehensible in the elder of the Church of Christ than in any other class of men alive—and the conclusion is very just, and must be insisted upon.

In the two fields of labor in which our time has been spent since October 2, under the missionary charge of Brn. R. C. Evans and Gomer T. Griffiths, two of the younger members of the Apostolic Quorum, we have observed a marked tendency to improve the situation by occupying the places outside of the immediate branches, so far as opportunity and men will permit. The result is visible in the direction that a wider acquaintance with the views of the church is being had, and also a wider experience is being obtained by the local laboring forces, both of which are desirable.

In this connection we notice with regret that there is still a hesitancy in some quarters to the permitting the lesser officers to occupy in the preaching of the word. We suppose this hesitancy arises from a failure to understand the scope of the language found in section 17, paragraph 11, of the Doctrine and Covenants.

In paragraph 10 of this section 17, the priest's duty is prescribed, and at the close the statement is made: "In all these duties [those named in the paragraph itself] the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires." In this there is nothing which directly affirms that the elder is to visit the houses of the members and exhort them to perform their duties; but a liberal and proper rendition of the paragraph clearly makes it the duty of the elder to do that thing.

In a similar way at the close of the eleventh paragraph, there is a restriction which provides that "neither teachers nor deacons may baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they [teachers and deacons] are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ."

The restriction does not include preaching, and we believe very properly. Inviting all to come unto Christ does not mean that the deacons and teachers are to confine their warning, expounding, exhorting, and teaching to the membership, for these have already come to Christ. Neither could a teacher or deacon teach, expound, exhort, and invite men to come to Christ if his ministrations were confined strictly to ministering in the presence of the elder or priest in the general meetings of the church, in which he is usually no more than any other attendant present. The fact is these officers are largely ignored, while the elders or priests are the ones put forward to occupy the attention of the people in and out of the church. And in far too many places an undue jealousy for the prestige of authority offers no opportunity for either the growth of these officers, in a knowledge of public duties, or for the exercise of the legitimate and acknowledged duties of their offices. Whence this jealousy, or on what founded we may not state, or know; but that it exists we have reasons to believe.

And these seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles, first, and also unto the Jews, whereas other officers of the church, who belong not unto the twelve neither to the seventy, are not under the responsibility to travel among all nations, but are to travel as their circumstances shall allow, notwithstanding they may hold as high and responsible offices in the church.

This clause provides that "other officers" of the church may travel and preach, and there is no restriction defining that these "other officers" referred to are high priests and elders only. It may therefore include both teachers and deacons.

There is in nearly all the reports of the missionaries in charge an item of complaint that their fields are deficient in the element qualified to take charge and preside. If a different policy was adopted, which would give these lesser officers opportunity to develop, there might be an increase of "the standing ministers to the church," that would help in this emergency and educate men to preside; but as it is, no inducement is offered for advancement, hence no effort.

A humorous definition given of the word "Mormon" is "a two legged animal endowed with the power of thought, which thinks best when standing up."

This may have been intended as a burlesque, but it is fortunately correct. If we want the thinker put him on his feet and let him think.

There is, also, a tendency in certain quarters among some who have heretofore been Latter Day Saints in beliefs more or less pronounced, to relinquish some of the peculiarities of doctrine and accept the general theories of the Reorganized Church, holding the right to private opinion in regard to some things taught by some of the eldership in reserve. There should be no extreme hesitancy upon the part of the church to receive such and give them an opportunity to develop and grow.

The attitude of the general religions is peculiar; and a sort of hedging in spiritual controversies is going on. What is held by some to be a more advanced and liberal idea is prevailing to a great extent. Under its influence church obligations are assuming lax proportions, and the tendency to relieve the church of the care of the consciences of the membership is developing. To such an extent is this obtaining that there is an open advocacy of such auxiliaries to the churches proper as women missionaries for local work as advocated by Mr. D. L. Moody in his work at Pittsburg; the establishing of reading rooms, gymnasiums, and other adjuncts to athletics and the culture of the human animal, as are already rife in the world; musical concerts, and solo singing advertized in connection with Sunday services; and several other things that would make the bones of Calvin and Wesley rattle in protest if they could take cognizance of these departures from straight, old time orthodox ways of worship.

Mr. Moody's effort in Pittsburg was barren of great results one of the reasons for which is probably this, that the church in which he held services was crowded with those already ostensibly converted; hence, the sinners, the class on whom the evangelist delights to exercise his powers, were absent—could not get in—crowded out by those nominally Christian, but lovers of excitement, who thought more of hearing the platitudes of the celebrated preacher than of the saving of the souls of those needing the preacher's work.

The past and present difficulties in the labor world are also a factor that enhances the gravity of the situation; voiced in the suggestive question of a tin worker in one of the mills, "Will there be a chance in Zion for such workers as I?"

The need for employment in many branches of human industry is an urgent one. Nor is it to be easily solved. The primitive field of labor for man is the soil; but segregation, the gathering into communities, makes the tilling of the soil exclusively impracticable. And notwithstanding several of the so-called communities of the United States, such as the Shakers, Economites, Amanaites, have shown that it is possible for men to associate, and with soil-tilling as the basis, to exist for a time prosperously, the outcome of all of them has demonstrated that there must be mechanical and industrial enterprises fostered, the returns from which may be counted to the laborer in dollars and cents, over and above the daily modicum of food to sustain the life of the body. While life has been sustained at an astonishingly cheap rate in some of these various societies, inequalities unprovided for in the constitutions and by-laws of them have occurred, and, becoming irreconcilable, have resulted in a sloughing off of membership, until in instances, there are many acres of good soil lying idle, owned by the societies, uncultivated except by hired help for lack of members. Existence alone is not a sufficient guerdon of reward for the continued self-abnegation and consecration of effort demanded by these communistic efforts.

If any of the HERALD readers doubt this, let them hunt up the statistical histories of these societies and see.

The Economites, near Pittsburg, have about eight members left. The Amanaites, the foundation of which society was laid by a body of German Perfectionists back in the seventeenth century, has a nominal membership now of some 1800, only about 500 of whom are producers, the remainder being women, children, and indigent persons dependent on the general funds for support. The average estimate of yearly production for the society is something like $250, the result of communal labor, while the average production of the State of Iowa, in which the community is located is $272, a balance in favor of the competitive, or non-communal system.

The Shakers are slowly going to decay as a society, and while many are living to a ripe old age, there is no accretion of younger element to replace the element ripening to departure. Here, too, lands are idle, or are cultivated by hired labor from the outside world. Industries once the admiration of the world are passing away. The competition of individually conducted institutions have underbought and undersold them, until they can no longer compete with the world. The flesh, too, has come in for its share of the work of disintegration; and marriage, or the natural affinity of man and woman for each other, has taken away the younger forces and left the impress of decay.

The Icarian community that settled first in Texas, then at Nauvoo, then at Icaria, in Iowa, and Cheltenham, in Missouri, under Cabet and Gerard, has come to financial grief and been wound up in the courts, to set its membership free from their obligations, notwithstanding their watchword— "Fidelity, Fraternity, Equality."

All these teach a lesson if we can only learn it; but who shall help us to determine it? Who is to answer the tin plate worker's question, "Will there be work for such as me in Zion?" Who is to answer the toiler in the coal mine, the iron mine, the coke ovens, the steel and iron mills, the tile and pipe and brick workers along the valleys of the rivers, "Will there be work for such as we are in Zion?"

Set aside the principles of self-government and noble self-sacrifice which have characterized nearly all the communal societies in the United States in the persons of those in whose minds they took shape and were projected upon the world, and so far as we have been able to study them each has had individual direction and a personal control vested in one, or a few to which the general members had to submit, even appointing the laborer and allotting his task by arbitrary decision. Is such a condition possible for us?

We see, all of us see, that something is wrong, so we say. But it seems to be much easier to say things are wrong than to point to the adequate remedy.

About every society had at its founding an enterprising head, having some funds; some of them large sums. In one instance the founder put in one half the whole. And so far as the schemes we have as yet heard suggested have started with the formula, ten, fifteen, twenty, fifty, a hundred thousand dollars must be raised; then lands can be located, lots laid out, houses erected, towns builded, farms cultivated, etc.

A celebrated recipe for cooking a rabbit begins: "First catch your rabbit, then," etc.

Now, if there is anyone to whom the appellation, "one mighty and strong, who shall set the house of God in order, and apportion by lot the inheritances of his people," who has at his disposal, even the moderate sum first named above, to invest in such a communal system as some are clamoring for, he is not known to the HERALD. Several are known who have aspired to the role of Enoch, Elijah, Prince Michael, the Messiah, the "one mighty and strong;" but no visible adequate results to the mass have followed their claims or their administrations, so far as known to us. For one without means, sufficient even to "provide things honest in the sight of all men," and keep out of debt to do such a work, calls for something of which no one with less power than that which fed the multitude is possessed.

We wrote on this topic some time since, but have not heard of much results. And we are still waiting,

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

THE chief feature of this country just now can be described in three words, namely, entombed in fog. We seem to be in some subterranean region, and one is occasionally seized with an impulse to climb out; but alas, though too solid to breathe with comfort, it is hardly solid enough to climb upon, and so we continue to grope our way along the passages of our prison house. Railroad trains can only be operated by means of torpedo signals placed upon the track; while all kinds of travel in the crowded street is performed with danger, as it is impossible to see a moving vehicle until it is almost upon you. Last night's papers reported several deaths occasioned by persons walking into canals and rivers while blinded by the fog. Lights are kept burning all day, but unfortunately you cannot see them when a few yards away. We never before could appreciate the statement made in the Book of Mormon: "And it came to pass that there was thick darkness upon all the face of the land, insomuch that the inhabitants thereof who had not fallen, could feel the vapor of darkness." It has always seemed peculiar to us that a man could feel darkness, but now we could not describe our experience more accurately than to say, we "feel the vapor of darkness."

Fortunately it is not so bad as it was with the Nephites, for we can still have fire and light, yet as one observes the pale flickering of the light, he can but be impressed with the conviction that a sufficient increase of density in the atmosphere would entirely exclude it; and thus to our satisfaction this wonderful event is rendered quite feasible. But we are reminded that the Book of Mormon not only tells of this extreme darkness, but also goes to the other extreme and relates that there was a night of light: "For behold at the going down of the sun, there was no darkness; and the people began to be astonished, because there was no darkness when the night came. . . . And it came to pass that there was no darkness in all that night, but it was as light as though it was midday."

We have not yet seen anything even in old England to demonstrate the feasibility of this phenomenon, nor do we know that such a possibility can be explained from a scientific standpoint; yet, fortunately for the credit of the story, such a phenomenon has been witnessed since the publication of the Book of Mormon; though so far as we know, never explained.

Alexander Von Humboldt writes: "The extraordinary lightness of whole nights in the year 1831, during which small print might be read at midnight in the latitudes of Italy and north of Germany, is a fact directly at variance with all that we know, according to the most recent and acute researches on the corpuscular theory, and the height of the atmosphere."

Mr. Von Humboldt also quotes a letter from Dr. Olbers to himself, dated from Bremen, March 26, 1833, in which the Doctor says: "Whether what you saw on the Orinoco, not at intervals of seconds but of minutes, were actual coruscations of the zodiacal light, or whether they belonged exclusively to the upper strata of our atmosphere, I will not attempt to decide. Neither can I explain the remarkable lightness of whole nights, nor the anomalous augmentation and prolongation of the twilight in the year 1831, particularly if, as has been remarked, the lightest part of these singular twilights did not coincide with the sun's place below the horizon."—Humboldt's Cosmos, vol. 1, pages 133-4.

If the Book of Mormon was written either for pastime or for the purpose of deception, is it not very strange that the author, whoever he was, would record an account of something so "directly at variance" with all that was then known on the subject? And on this supposition is it not more wonderful still, that this exact phenomenon should occur so soon after the record was published. If this is fiction, then the old maxim that "truth is stranger than fiction" is not correct. For when in the annals of truth did it make a stranger score than this?

We are told that November is the worst month in the year for fogs. May it prove to be so. During the seventeen days that we sojourned in Leeds we had the pleasure of seeing the sun but once, yet we frequently hear the boast that the sun never sets on the Queen's dominions. We would like to know how an Englishman determines what the sun is doing at such a time as this; when the billows of fog, like the waves of sound (according to the wave theory), are rolling along the ground in condensations and rarefactions. However, we had a satisfactory time in Leeds, so far as our ministerial work is concerned. Though the saints are reported to be, to some extent, at war with each other about local questions, we have not been anywhere in this field where we were given a better hearing, or heard more attentively, or where we were treated more kindly, or our needs more fully anticipated. We shall long remember the saints at Leeds, and we wish right here to say that if they will treat each other with the same consideration with which they treated us, all local dissensions will melt away.

We are now sojourning at Birmingham, and are quite well pleased with the saints, so far as we have had opportunity to judge, but have not been around much. If you ask why, just imagine a Nephite in a strange city, during the three days darkness, trying to find a given locality.

Bro. F. G. Pitt writes more hopefully from Wales of late, and from his reports we judge that his own and Bro. J. D. Jenkins' labors are being well received, and prospects are growing brighter. As before stated, we have some promising young people in this mission, and the prospects are fair to persuade them in some places to organize Religios, and thus get in line with the general movements in that direction. We have not had the pleasure of meeting Elder Pitt since he left us at Manchester, two days after our landing. We hope to get together and compare notes in time to make an annual report of the mission, and to talk over some matters which we have had under consideration for some time.

The recent great fire in London, though hard on insurance companies, destroyed thousands of dollars worth of goods, which will create a demand for more, and some will be benefited. So it is in this warring world. What is one's loss is another's gain. Wonder if the Dingley bill did it, eh?

The Hamilton (Scotland) Advertiser treated us nicely, publishing an article in full which we wrote in reply to a controversy between the Utah elder and a Mr. McCullough, in which we conceived that they were both wrong to some extent, though the latter was much the fairer in his methods. Mr. McCullough has since published a card thanking us, but the Utah men have neither replied nor made any concessions, so far as we know. We have learned to expect nothing from that source, however, but contemptible contempt.

The Church Recorder's report states that there are in Scotland fifteen members. Can anyone tell us who they are, and where they reside? We have been able to locate but two. Quite recently, however, one of our enterprising and energetic young Englishmen has so far forgotten the prejudices and traditions of his countrymen as to find a Queen among the Scots, and has removed there to do her homage, taking up his residence with her at Hamilton. This will increase the number known to three. Would be pleased to find others.

We are now very near to where Bro. Charles Derry first raised the standard of the Reorganization in England. The fire he kindled, which has since been fed by so many noble brethren, has not yet been extinguished.

Word has just reached us of the new accessions to the Quorum of the Twelve in Utah. This will no doubt be a surprise to many who have expected that certain men among them would be elevated as a reward for service rendered; but it is exactly in harmony with their recent policy to establish a line of lineal descent in the chief offices of the priesthood. This may sound strange to those who have been acquainted with their strenuous opposition to this principle, as applied to the Presidency; but those who have closely watched the movements there of late years cannot fail to see a tendency to drift in that direction, until now it seems to be the rule rather than the exception. When they first began filling vacancies, after the death of the Martyrs, they did not regard this principle, and they have now in the Quorum of the Twelve two of those chosen in an early day, namely, Lorenzo Snow and F. D. Richards; but note how it has been in more recent times. Joseph F. Smith, son of Hyrum Smith, in the presidency; John Smith, son of Hyrum, presiding patriarch. In the Quorum of the Twelve, Brigham Young, son of Brigham Young; J. H. Smith, son of G. A. Smith; F. M. Lyman, son of Amasa Lyman; H. J. Grant, son of Jedediah Grant; J. W. Taylor, son of John Taylor; Abram Cannon (deceased), son of George Q. Cannon; and now comes A. O. Woodruff, son of Wilford Woodruff. So the exceptions, since the Reorganization has brought the principle of lineal descent into prominence, seem to be Thatcher, Merrell, Lund, and Teasdale, to which may possibly be added the new accession M. T. Cowley; but we hardly know in which list to place him, as he is said to be a relative of President Woodruff's. With this record made, with what consistency can they object to the principle of lineal descent being applied to the Presidency of the church? When in Utah we mentioned this tendency to a representative of the Utah Church, and he scoffingly replied:—

“O you fellows catch at such little things. These men were not chosen because they were the sons of their fathers, but because they were called of God.”

“O,” replied we, “if God is responsible for the recognition of the principle of lineal descent, let the good work go on; but see that you no longer contend against it. We cannot see that it makes any material difference, so far as the controversy is concerned, whether God is, or yourselves are responsible for this recognition, so long as you are committed to it.”

REFUGE IN LIES.

BRO. HUBERT CASE, writing from the Society Islands mission, of a late date, states that he met on the Islands, at Hao, two of the elders of the Utah Church, Messrs. Smith and Neff, of whose methods he says:—

1. That they are telling the natives, among whom their mission takes them, that Oliver Cowdery went with his children to Utah; was there baptized, and died there.

Why would not it have been better for Elders Smith and Neff to have told the truth about Elder Cowdery? That is sufficiently favorable to the Utah idea; as Elder Cowdery evidently intended to give an adherence to what he deemed the church when he waited on the elders at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and was there baptized. But, as he did not move to Utah, nor die there, but at Richmond, Missouri, and left no children, except Mrs. Maria Johnson, of South West City, Missouri, and who passed out of life there, it seems to be a pity that resort should be had to such a tale to make way with the Society Islanders for their own cause.

2. These men, Smith and Neff, further state to the natives that David Smith was much impressed with the views entertained in the Utah Church, and was about to join that institution.

This we have heard before; but have never heard it verified. Certain it is that David Smith returned from Utah an adherent to the faith of his father, as held and promulgated by the Reorganized Church, and never gave any indication of a change of opinion up to the time of his becoming demented by melancholia.

The HERALD is very sure that had there been any change in the religious views of David H. Smith, and he had chosen to express them, he would have been left quite free to exercise his liberty in following the dictates of his opinions. No restriction was put upon him in this particular, nor would there ever have been, under any circumstances while he remained of sane mind.

Messrs. Smith and Neff are also circulating the story that Joseph Smith, the president of the Reorganized Church, is not the son of his father, the Prophet and Martyr.

This is slightly remarkable; that a man is not "the son of his father." Pray whose son is he then?

But, what these men desire to do is to cast suspicion upon the honesty and virtue of Emma Smith, the wife of the Martyr. And the story they tell is a direct imputation upon the reputation of that woman, of whom the Spirit stated to the church years ago that she was an Elect Lady.

Such course of procedure is very contemptible. And had some one wrote that way aside from such a careful man as Bro. Hubert Case we should be inclined to accept it with more than a grain of salt. But, certain it is that these men, if making any such statement, are resorting to worse than questionable measures to impose upon the Society Islanders. Not a breath of suspicion had ever assailed the virtue and honor of Emma Hale Smith, until after the death of her martyred husband, and her subsequent opposition to the doctrinal heresies of Pres. Brigham Young; when it seemed good to him to cast suspicion upon her; by first starting the tale that she was never in sympathy with the prophet, was always wayward and tantalizing toward him, frequently thwarting his views and finally attempting to poison him. Further than this, Pres. Young thought it advisable to censure the widow of the Prophet publicly from the pulpit, in Utah, by making the declaration that she was a bad woman; was a liar, and had taught her children to lie. If proof of this is challenged it will be furnished from public records made in Utah, by Mormon hands.

4. These men further state, that the present Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, was only a tiny infant at the death of his father.

This is rather significant; first, Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, is not the son of his father; and then he was but a tiny infant when his father died. Lies never travel singly, but always in company, bad company at that.

The present Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, was born at Kirtland, Ohio, November 6, 1832, and therefore was at the death of his father, June 27, 1844, in the closing half of his twelfth year; was a rather robust lad, quite capable of taking care of himself among his fellows; was by no means a tiny infant; unless a lusty boy of that age may be called a tiny infant.

In the face of a constant challenge to these Utah plural marriage teachers, who claim, or did claim that Joseph Smith the Martyr was a polygamist, to produce from their ranks sons or daughters, the fruit of such polygamous or plural marriages, or a son; which challenge though oft repeated has never been accepted, claim made and proof presented, it comes a little late for Messrs. Smith (whatever Smith this may be) and Neff to make an assertion casting a stain upon the parentage of Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, and blackening the name of his mother. Such work as that marks the cause as failing in the defense of which the assertion is made; and gives no uncertain clue to the measurement of the men who make it.

5. Messrs. Smith and Neff, also assert that the present Joseph Smith was from his father's death a spiritualist.

This is also traceable to a statement made a good while ago by Pres. B. Young, who deemed it expedient to fortify himself and his people against any possible influence that the son of the Prophet might have, by asserting that he was a lawyer and a spiritualist.

The son of the Prophet did study the law, is in some sense a lawyer, one somewhat acquainted with law; but was not admitted to the bar, and did not practice the law. The statement that he was or is a spiritualist, in the sense that he has now, or ever had any affiliation or connection with modern spiritualism as a believer, adherent, or devotee, is absolutely untrue, having no foundation. Joseph Smith made himself acquainted with the theories advanced by Andrew Jackson Davis, the putative founder of spiritualism in its theories, did read the Divine Revelations and the Harmonia, published by Mr. Davis; and investigated some of the phenomena of spirit rapping, table tipping, medium writing, rife through the country about the years 1848-49-50 and 51; but ceased his inquiries upon discovering that there was no good in the theories or the phenomena for him; all of which he has stated over and over again. And for Messrs. Smith and Neff now to revive that time-worn, splenetic charge of President Brigham Young, made by him because he might fear what the son of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, might accomplish, is decidedly inconsistent and lacking in honesty.

We hope that these sayings of these missionaries on the Society Islands have no other basis than the weak refuge of the minds of the men themselves and are not traceable to the present leading authorities of the church in Utah. We should dislike to think that the leading minds of the Mormon Church directed or sanctioned such an appeal to lies in efforts to offset the progressive work of the Josephite elders. "Truth is mighty and will prevail," has too long been a watchword and rallying cry of the advocates of the angel's message delivered to Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and others, so many years ago, to be lightly set aside now.

If these men have taken any message given by or through any so-called living oracle now existing for the things asserted by them, then such oracle has been actuated by a deceptive spirit and uttered false messages and "do not the truth." All of which Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, and his brethren, advocates and defenders of the original faith are ready to aver and verify.

THE Pacific, Missouri, Transcript, of December 24, devotes about one half of its first page to an account of work being done by Bro. J. S. Parrish and others of the church in Franklin County, that State. In addition it also publishes the following excellent editorial item:—

Doubtless some will be surprised at the statement that Mormons are gaining a foothold in Franklin County. Many may deny it; even some who are associated with them may not know it; and very likely the Franklin County papers that ridiculed the only local item for years that was important enough to be remembered a century hence will try to make fun of this; but it is a fact. Of course, this is not the polygamous branch of Mormonism, and it professes Christianity, but it also believes in the Book of Mormon. Yet, let us remember that at the basis of American institutions is the spirit of religious tolerance. These people have as much right to their belief as we have to ours, and if they are moral and sincere—and no doubt most of them are—should not be ostracized for it.

ANOTHER WORKER.

BRO. J. J. BAILY, of Coleman, Michigan, sends ten new subscriptions for the HERALD, accompanied by a cash remittance of fifteen dollars. Bro. Bailey is the second one to take advantage of the opportunity offered to secure one of our late up to date Self-pronouncing Bibles.

Who will be the next? It ought not to be difficult to obtain the premium Bible on the terms offered. Anyone sending us ten new subscribers at $1.50 each, with the cash, will receive the Bible.

We now begin a new volume of the HERALD. Subscriptions beginning with the year are solicited.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. M. R. SHOEMAKER, Beardstown, Illinois, December 27:—

We are rejoicing in the loving kindness bestowed upon us by our heavenly Father; our hearts are also made glad by the progress of the cause. I have four names now for baptism and as many more have almost as much as given their names, and such material as I believe to be essential to the permanency of the work and its attainment to a high degree of prestige in the community. We will soon have Bro. Bond or some other elder here again. We are all enjoying the spirit of peace and unity, working hand in hand. We hope to be guided into greater ability and usefulness.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. F. P. SCARCLIFF writes, in this issue, further particulars concerning the trials of those who waylaid Bro. T. C. Kelley while engaged in tent work near Scranton, Mississippi. Public sentiment in the South has been considerably stirred of late against acts of open violence by mobbers and similar characters, and we may hope to share in the better conditions to result from an agitation of the question. Though all has not been done that our people had hoped for, much good seems likely to result in favor of the cause from the prosecution of the offenders.

Bro. W. J. Vaughan secured insertion of David Whitmer's testimony to the Book of Mormon, in the Huntsville, Missouri, Herald of recent date; to offset the efforts of Rev. Briney who had lectured against the faith at Moberly, declaring that the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon had denied their testimony. Other matter will also appear in favor of the faith, in the same paper, by arrangement between Bro. Vaughan and the Editors.

Bro. A. J. Kenison, of Catlin, Colorado, an aged brother, would gladly receive numbers of the HERALD that anyone may be pleased to send him.

"Christianity is a gospel of cheer, hope, sunshine, and love-light. Gloom and morbidity are of the Devil."

Sr. Mina L. De Frater, of Wisner, Nebraska, writes of her growing faith in God and his work. Though a constant sufferer, she rejoices in the blessings of peace and receives comfort from the Master.

Sr. Anna Nielson, of Nebraska City, reports progress in branch work at that point. Bro. J. W. Waldsmith presides over the branch, being assisted in his labors by Bro. M. H. Forscutt, also by the traveling ministry at times. Sunday school work is also prosecuted.

Sr. G. H. Parker, of Fagundus, Warren County, Pennsylvania, writes of her efforts to continue a Sunday school organized in that city by Brn. I. M. Smith and G. W. Robley. The scholars need books to form a library, and the school would be greatly aided if contributions of books suitable for such purpose could be obtained. Those who could contribute reading matter are requested to forward to the sister, addressing as above.

The present mission address of Bro. Joseph Luff, is No. 647 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, California; care H. L. Tilton.

"Rev. Dr. James M. Farrar, a Brooklyn pastor, has just given up his charge in the First Reformed church, where for seven years he has drawn a salary of $6,000 a year, and leaves to conduct a ministry at Idlewild, Pennsylvania, without pay. Peculiar man, this. There are not many like him."—New York Journal, December 21.

Severe storms at sea and along the English coast were reported on the 29th. Many steamers report great damage caused by the unusual severity of the waves of late.

Port au Prince, Hayti, Dec. 29.—Last night a fire, which assumed considerable proportions on account of lack of water to supply the pumps, broke out and destroyed 800 houses, including a number of warehouses, a hotel, the Church of St. Joseph, and its parsonage. About 3,000 people were rendered homeless. This morning at 6:40 o'clock there was an earthquake, the disturbance running from north to south, lasting half a minute, and causing slight cracks in the earth. There were no accidents, but the populace was greatly alarmed.

Bombay, Dec. 29.—There has been a fresh outbreak of the plague, especially in the Mandvie district, where the inhabitants are seeking safety in flight. There were fifty-four new cases of plague and thirty-seven deaths from that disease to-day. The total plague returns from Bombay up to date are 14,257 cases and 11,882 deaths.

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 27. — Yakob Sargis of Ooramiah, Persia, now in this city giving talks on Persia and Armenia, has just received a letter from friends in his Persian home informing him that a band of raiders from Koordestan had massacred all the inhabitants of a Persian Christian town, 800 souls, near Salmas, Persia.

Washington advices through the Navy department indicate that Great Britain is modernizing the great fortifications at Gibraltar, with all speed. No less than 5,000 Spanish workmen are employed. A large number of the heaviest pieces of artillery are being put in place, a great dock is under construction, and the plan of defense permits of the absolute protection of a vast British fleet under the guns of the fortress.

Various rumors are afloat concerning the condition of affairs in China and Corea. Washington advices of the 27th quote the Chinese minister as stating that Russia is pledged to protect China and to guarantee her against dismemberment. St. Petersburg dispatches same date report Russian occupation of Kin-Chau, north of Port Arthur, and an important walled city commanding the mouth of the Yaloo River, where the great naval battle was fought between Japan and China. It also commands the recently constructed railway system from Tien Tsin to the capital of Manchuria, and is of preëminent importance as a strategic position. "The seizure of the port shows that Russia has practically taken possession of Corea, Manchuria, and the Gulf of Lau Tung, and possesses a significance which will cause consternation among the diplomats in the old world. Its situation is such that its possession practically places Russia in a position to defy the world."

London Shanghai dispatches of the 29th: It is reported that Japan has a fleet of twenty war ships waiting near Goto Island, outside Nagasaki, fully equipped for war. The fleet, it is understood, is acting in close touch with the British squadron. A dispatch from Kobe, Japan, says the military party is eager for war. Reports state that the British fleet has arrived at Port Hamilton. Peking advices state that Germany's withdrawal from Kiao Chau is conditioned upon her finding a suitable naval station elsewhere. Japan's cabinet has resigned. The newspapers demand a ministry capable of coping with the situation in the East.

London and Shanghai cablegrams of the 30th report that a French fleet has seized Hai-Nan Island, off the south coast of China and which separates the Gulf of Tonquin from the China Sea. It has an estimated area of 12,000 square miles, with 1,000,000 Chinese, exclusive of wild tribes in the interior.

A London news agency has announced that the British naval reserves will be mobilized. Canadian railway officials deny existence of an arrangement to transport large bodies of troops for shipment to China via Vancouver.

Paris, Dec. 30.—The French marine officials regard the report of the occupation of the Island of Hai-Nan, off the south coast of China, by the French fleet in those waters as being an invention.

During the day there was issued a semiofficial contradiction of the report that the French flag had been hoisted over the island.

Pekin, Dec. 30.—The supercession of J. McLeavy Brown, the British Superintendent of the Korean Customs, is at present engaging the attention of the British government with the view of upholding his rights. Four British war vessels are understood to be off Chemulpo.

London, Dec. 31.—The Daily Graphic asserts "on authority" that the British squadron was definitely instructed to assemble off Chemulpo to support a strong British expostulation with Corea on the dismissal of McLeavy Brown (British Superintendent of Korean Customs), who, under the advice of the British Consul, has twice returned the notice of dismissal served upon him.

With regard to Port Arthur, the Daily Graphic asserts that there is every reason to believe the Russians will adhere to their pledge to evacuate at the end of the winter and there is, therefore, no ground for complaint on the part of England. Neither does the government regard the occupation of Kiao-Chou as calling for action, because British interests are not threatened. According to the Daily Graphic both the Foreign Office and the admiralty agreed upon this point.

Another revolution in San Salvador.

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 30.—The officers of the steamer Acapulco, which has arrived here from Central America, say that a general uprising in that country may be anticipated next year. General Fuentes, who led the recent uprising against President Barrios, is now in San Francisco.

The following has been received from the headquarters of the Cuban republic at Camaguey: "Upon the question of autonomy the republican government can only hold one opinion. We hold ourselves an independent nation, unrecognized though we may be by the civilized world. Autonomy is not for one moment considered by us. We absolutely reject it."

Emperor Francis Joseph has addressed an autograph letter to the Austrian Premier, ordering the session of the Reichsrath to be closed.

The representatives of the powers have refused to permit the Turkish government to replace 4,500 time-expired troops of the Island of Crete.

Bombay, Dec. 30.—The Indian National Congress came to a conclusion to-day, amid much enthusiasm and cheers for the Queen Empress.

Resolutions were adopted thanking the people of the United Kingdom, the British colonies, and the United States for generous aid during the famine. It was decided to erect, at the cost of $5,000, a memorial of gratitude in London. Other resolutions were adopted, criticising the government's recent measures regarding sedition.

Calcutta, Dec. 30.—It is officially announced that the recent famine cost the Treasury £800,000, while loans to agriculturists and the suspension of taxes mainly repayable absorbed another £4,000,000 irrespective of charitable contributions approaching £1,750,000.

Bread riots in Sicily; troops called out. Severe earthquake shocks at San Jose, California, on the 1st; also at New Hampshire points on the 2d inst.

Havana, January 2.—It is reported from Santiago de Cuba that General Pando is greatly disheartened on account of the obstacles which prevented a successful campaign against the insurgents in that province. He states that he has no base of operations, insurgent control being so complete that it is impossible to convey supplies to Spanish columns operating in the interior of the province. It is stated that Spain has found it impossible now to furnish more soldiers for Cuba.

Pekin advices of the 31st from Seoul say that a compromise has been effected according to which Mr. Brown, the British customs agent, and M. Alexieff, the Russian agent, to make room for whom Mr. Brown was removed, will work the Corean customs together. The arrangement, however, appears to be favorable to Russia's interests. The Japanese war spirit runs high.

Original Poetry.

OUT OF THE WILDERNESS.

BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

Forty the years that Moses wandered,
Tracking the sands of the wilderness;
Forty the years; have you ever pondered
The number of years from that to this?
And mankind still, as then, is seeking,
But fears to enter the promised land;
And still his camps with sin are reeking,
And still might a Moses pleading stand.
They will not enter—they are afraid,
Ah! wisdom of age, and strength of youth.
They turn their backs and they are dismayed,
For giants dwell in the land of truth.
The grapes of Esheol may fill and darken,
Like purple wine in the sunshine hot;
They stop their ears, they will not hearken—
God bids them enter, but they will not.
O sons of darkness! idly weeping,
Bowing your heads in the dust and slime;
Look up! Look up! the light is creeping Downward through the crevices of time.
Are any here with gift of pleading,
To call them back to the land of truth?
Thine is the duty, God is leading
The wisdom of age and strength and youth.
Bend thy hand to the task of reaching
The souls that would perish as they fly;
Thine is the duty, if prayer or preaching
Will stay their footsteps ere yet they die.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Beyond the night, the eternal soul awakes
To other, brighter day,
Death is but sleep, that gently takes Life's l ad away,
And fits our powers renewed, new parts to play."

MOTHER'S DARLING.

Little arms are clinging, clinging
Close to mother dear,
While the hours go winging, winging,
Soon 'twill be a year

Since you came to bless our household,
Fill our hearts with love,
Since the Father sent you to us
From your home above.

May the years be many, darling,
Many, long, and bright,
That you fill our hearts with gladness,
Fill our home with light.

May you never, never falter]
On life's weary road;
May the Lord your Savior help you Bear each heavy load,—

Which the years may place upon you
As they come and go,
May his holy angels watch you,
Guard from every foe.

That would seek your life to burden
Fill your heart with care;
May these angels keep you, loved one,
From temptation's snare.

May your life be pure and holy,
Useful to the end;
May you make the Lord and Master
E'er your dearest friend.

So when life at last is over,
Heaven's portals fair
May be open for you, darling,
Is your mother's prayer.

COALGATE, I. T.

Dear Sisters:—I will endeavor to write a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard. We have been having some splendid meetings here this summer through the instrumentality of Brn. Montague, Simmons, and Tony. We had some spiritual feasts when Bro. Simmons was here. God has certainly endowed him with his Holy Spirit. He scarcely ever rises to speak in prayer meeting without delivering a prophecy. The Lord has promised us as saints if we would live faithful we should be greatly blessed, a church should be reared, and our sick should be healed. Bro. Montague organized a Sunday school when he was here and we are progressing very nicely. Of course we are all as children and need some one to instruct us even as we instruct the little ones. Pray for us, brothers and sisters, that we may ever move onward and upward, and true to the right. We are very weak and need God to help us at all times.

I enjoy reading the Herald, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. I think them a great help to members of the church. I think the instructions in the Herald in regard to home and care and duty towards children are very beneficial to young mothers. I had a tender little bud intrusted to my care for four short weeks, then God in his infinite love and mercy took it again to himself. I trust that I may live so as to meet it in the sweet by and by where there will be no more parting. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your sister,

MAGGIE ERWIN.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. JANE BOYD, Hill City, Kansas, earnestly requests the prayers of the church in general, and especially of the Prayer Unions, in behalf of her husband, that if the Lord so wills, he may be healed of a sore affliction.

Bro. C. M. Fulks, who is afflicted with a very bad cough and dullness of hearing, desires the prayers of saints and Prayer Union, that if it is the Lord's will he may be healed.

Will the Prayer Unions please fast January 13, 1898, for Elder George W. Eaton, of Stonington, Maine, who is greatly afflicted.

THE INSTITUTE.

THE Interstate Sunday School Institute closed its session at St. Joseph, Missouri, Wednesday evening, December 29, 1897. Early in the afternoon of the previous Saturday, the workers of both the Sabbath school and Zion's Religio-Literary Society began to arrive, and by the time for the organization at two-thirty p. m., Sunday, a goodly number had gathered to enjoy the hearty hand-shaking so expressive of brotherly love and enjoyment, and to participate in the event of organization. After the selecting of a superintendent and secretary, the General Superintendent made a short talk, expressive of the aim of the Institute, of his interest therein, and of the blessings experienced while preparing the program of work for the same.

Bro. J. M. Terry's "address of welcome" was full of good thoughts on the work of the societies in Institute, and of words that made all feel the earnest welcome he expressed.

The first assistant superintendent, Bro. F. E. Cochran, responded on behalf of the General Sunday School Association, and Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, President of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, on behalf of the society whose welfare he has in charge. He too testified to having been guided in his work of preparation. Several other responses were made by workers, representing ten church districts.

The testimonies given revealed the love for the work and the earnestness that impelled the bearer to make the sacrifice to attend. One brother had borrowed the means to come on, that he might better qualify himself for his work and that others, too, might be benefited thereby. While this is truly a work of sacrifice, we are happy in the thought that there are those who are willing to make the necessary sacrifice to keep the work moving.

At six p. m. a Sunday school prayer and testimony meeting was held—a season both strengthening and enjoyable.

At the seven-thirty hour Bro. T. A. Hougas gave a temperance lecture, which was illustrated with stereopticon views by Bro. F. E. Cochran.

The work done the three succeeding days will be reported in detail in subsequent issues, and will probably be put into pamphlet form, too, that all who wish may derive some of the benefits of the meeting.

The Institute was characterized throughout by the unity and thoroughness of the work; and when you consider that the three sessions, daily, included seven hours of solid work, we are led to think that earnestness and patience were present too.

It will be remembered that the Religio and Sunday school workers united in the Institute for work in both departments. Not only were they united in work, but a feeling of brotherly love was inaugurated such as has not been felt before, and which we trust will never grow less. This is as it should be. The two organizations work in different departments, but have the same desires and the same end in view—the conversion and perfecting of all whom they can reach, and their eternal salvation. May they ever be ready and willing to join hands in this great warfare of life.

Bro. Gunsolley in a short address represented the interests of Graceland College, placing it before the saints for their earnest consideration. Many received a better understanding of it and its aims than they before possessed.

As a refreshing and fitting climax to all the work came the exercises of the last evening. After the usual devotional exercises the "Sunday school newspaper," edited by Sr. T. A. Hougas and Bro. Joseph Roberts, was read by Sr. Roxanna Gaylord and Bro. F. E. Cochran. Both the editors being absent, all felt entirely free to express themselves as highly pleased, entertained, and instructed by what they had listened to.

Sr. Louise Palfrey made a short address, appealing to the people of the church for a higher standard socially, morally, intellectually, and spiritually. The effort was timely and well received.

Bro. F. E. Cochran made a direct appeal in behalf of the Autumn Leaves. He urged that the magazine should be in every family of the saints, especially where there are young people.

Bro. J. F. Mintun presented the Christmas offering work for consideration, and commended it to all schools and families.

A few short words of comfort and farewell were spoken by each of the instructors, "God will take care of you" was sung, and the benediction received.

Immediately after the close Sr. J. M. Terry expressed a desire to speak to those present what she had through a feeling of timidity failed to give them. Order was again resumed, and it was again given her what she should say to the workers. It was in substance that the work there done was pleasing and acceptable to the Father; that some had made sacrifice to come there to do work, and that all should be blessed therefor. Bro. J. M. Terry bore a confirming testimony, and spoke other words of cheer. "God be with you" was then sung and the session ended. Yes: the Institute was then a thing of history. But the work there done and the hallowed influences felt throughout, especially those of the last evening, will not soon be forgotten.

Letter Department.

Island of AMANU, Tuamotu Group,
Oceanica, Sept. 18.

Editors Herald:—On the 13th of this month we were gladdened by the receipt of a quantity of mail—the first for over three months. While the conference of April is so long past, and other incidents of interest occupying the attention of those more fortunate, we are now perusing the minutes of conference and Heralds of same date. Well, it is "better late than never," and our hearts rejoice with yours at the good news.

As our force in the islands is so small, we have tried to be as active as possible, and have made no long stay at any island. Our longest visit was at Raroia, where they had had no missionary for a long time. The interest was so good there that we remained five weeks, baptized six, and roused up the entire branch, but more especially the young men and women, to a great interest in the work. The Sabbath school work is a great factor for good. It attracts the young to the church, and gives the preacher a chance to reach their ears. I preached twenty-two times while there; the greatest number of sermons in that length of time that I have ever attempted in the native tongue.

We went from Raroia to Taenga in a small boat. The branch at Taenga seemed to be too soundly asleep to be readily awakened. I ordained a young elder while there, who may assist in rousing them, and left Bro. Poaitu, one of our native missionaries there with them. Our stay was but short; having opportunity to leave on a small schooner we thought best to go, as ships do not call frequently there. The schooner took us to Hikueru again, and though it was going direct to Hao, where we were anxious to go, the Captain refused to take us, as he was very heavily loaded. So we were obliged to remain in Hikueru three weeks, waiting for a ship going to Hao. None came, and we grew restive, for there was nothing to be done at that place, and the time was rapidly nearing when the people of the upper islands would scatter again to their diving.

So we chartered a boat belonging to one of our brethren, a little thing of perhaps four tons burden, for the trip of one hundred miles. After a week of trifling, and vexa-tious delays, we got started, and the Devil fired his parting shot, just as we were passing through the surf. When the brethren on shore cast off the lines that had secured the boat, fore and aft, they neglected to untie the loops in the ends of the ropes. These dragging over the jagged coral, caught firmly again, and held the boat right in the surf, while the great waves broke over her half mast high, and bumped her on the reef till we thought she would go to pieces before they could cut the ropes. Of course there was no knife nor ax at hand, to be used speedily. However we escaped with a drenching, and some severe bruises from being thrown about so violently. The boat was broken pretty badly—that is the house was stove in; she leaked some too, but not to cause alarm, and we set off for Hao. The wind was so light we thought we were not moving at all. But after thirty hours' sailing we found ourselves at the pass at Hao, a matter of surprise to all on board.

At Hao I met two of the Mormon missionaries, Elders Smith and Neff. I had some private talk with them, but they would not talk publicly. They had circulated a pamphlet among our people there, in which they gave a number of quotations from their Doctrine and Covenants, and asserted that they were also in ours; also, that Oliver Cowdery (who they claim received equal blessing with Joseph) went to Utah with his children and died there. They assert to the natives that Bro. David Smith was very favorably impressed with Utahism, and likely at any time to embrace their religious views. Elder Neff was the chief instigator of all their actions, and he declared his entire belief in all the doctrines ever taught by B. Young & Co. He advocated the Adam-God doctrine, also the blood atonement theory in private conversation, but would not come out and talk upon those topics before the people. Polygamy the natives can swallow as an abstract theory; but do not practice it. We have heard it taught from the pulpit here in the islands, and we know they advocate it privately. But the other doctrines mentioned would be rather "strong meat" for these people. Very few would accept them. I baptized eight at Hao—chiefly children of the saints.

Took boat again for Amanu; here I found the Mormons had also preceded me. They have no congregation here, but three or four members, and came of course to try to secure our flock. Our people had them to support of course. They asked for our church to hold their meetings in. It was given them for one service, but they so occupied their time in vilifying the present Joseph that all our people were very angry and would not allow them to use the house again. Among the many fables they try to foist upon the natives are these: 1. That Joseph is not the son of his father—that is not the true son of Joseph the Martyr. 2. That he was only a tiny infant when his father died. 3. That from the death of his father to his accession to the presidency, that he was a Spiritualist. Even a native can see the confliction and absurdity of such statements.

We are soon to leave here by boat for the isles further down the group. My wife's health is poor, and we are planning, if we gain the consent of those in authority, to return to the States early in 1898. We have not met Bro. Burton since April, and probably will not until December, when we think to go to Papeete. At last account from them they were well. I fear I have an unpardonably long letter, but as I don't come very often, please overlook it this time.

Your brother and coworker,
HUBERT CASE.

WOODBINE, Iowa, Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—Seeing your suggestion in this week's Herald for some one in Michigan to reply to the Gospel Trumpet's attack upon the church, I send you the original of a reply made by me while in Auburn, several weeks ago, a copy of which, with some little changes I forwarded to the Gospel Trumpet promptly, but which they have neither published nor returned, although I respectfully requested them to do the one or the other; and I know it arrived at the Trumpet Office, because I inclosed ten cents for the Trumpet until February 1, 1898, and I have received some copies of the paper.

If you think the inclosed worthy of publication, it may meet the eye of some reader of the Trumpet, and they may be thereby enabled to detect the uncertain sound of that bogus gospel trumpet.

CHARLES DERRY.

ALTURAS, Cal., Dec. 22.

Editors Herald:—My last communication was when I came to this part of the State. I have done a great deal of work, the results of which the judgment only will reveal. I assisted Bro. Newton in regulating the Look-out branch. He has now returned home.

Most of my labor has been performed in Big, Round, and Surprise valleys. While the most of this country is mountainous and sage brush land, yet these valleys are very fertile. The one last named is new in gospel work. It contains about two thousand five hundred inhabitants, and was first entered by the writer October 11. He has labored at Ft. Bidwell, Lake City, Soldier Creek schoolhouse, and Cedarville.

At the last named place I only delivered a temperance lecture. I could not get any building to preach in, but was permitted to lecture in the M. E. church. There are some elders who wouldn't have done so after being refused the privilege of preaching there, but I have resolved to labor for the common good of men when I can't work in the especial interests of the church. If I can't convert a man to this latter-day work, I aim to do all I can to make him a better man as a Methodist or Baptist. I do not understand that our object is to convert people to our church theories as much as to elevate them in their general conduct. And besides, a lecture upon temperance or some similar topic will often remove prejudice, and thus pave the way for the presentation of the entire word. This also, we believe as much in temperance as baptism or the laying on of hands. The Lord's advice—"Say nothing but repentance to this generation," "of tenets thou shalt not talk"—is especially significant in this connection.

Repentance is a very comprehensive term. It means to break off sin by righteousness, and therefore includes the cessation of all wrongdoing, and the doing of all things which are right. The entire life conduct of a converted man is fruit meet for repentance, and bears constant testimony to his transformation.

I was very much instructed and entertained by the reading of the Herald's recent editorial articles on conversion. The statement that we, in our anxiety to present the doctrine of Christ in contrast with the doctrines of men had given prominence to some themes to the neglect of others, struck me with great force. In some places the saints have been injured by the teaching of doctrine—not too much, but too exclusively. Many of the saints are tired of this way of doing. They do not feel and say as the children of Israel did about the manna, "Our souls abhorreth this light bread," for they know such instruction is good in its place; but nevertheless they are certain "the mill will never grind with the water that is past."

We should ever remember that scripture is profitable for reproof, correction, and instruction in right doing as well as for doctrine.

Yours in bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

McGraw, Pa., Dec. 22.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Robley and I have been in this vicinity the past two months laboring for the cause. Fagundus, McGraw, Excelsior U. B. church, Excelsior union church, Gossville, and Grand Valley, are the places at which we have preached. I consider this one of the best, if not the best, openings I know anything of in the entire mission. The people, as a rule, seem to be more liberal minded than in many places. True, sectarianism is the same here that it is elsewhere; but, thank the Lord, there isn't so much of it.

Last evening the people of McGraw and vicinity gave a supper, the proceeds of which (nineteen dollars) went to the preachers. And, by the way, those who saw Bro. Robley eat of that supper will hardly ever be able to again doubt the ability of Latter Day Saint elders to perform miracles. To see a preacher putting chunks of pie, cake, chicken, and baked beans, down his esophagus that couldn't be put through his shirt collar, if his neck was out of it, may be a common thing in Rhode Island; but, judging from the way people bugged out their eyes at Bro. Robley last night, I should say that people in Pennsylvania look upon such things as genuine curiosities, to say the least. We had no photographer present, so I am not able to furnish his photo, "Before taking" and "after taking."

Well, Bro. George left me this morning, for his home, and I am left to hold the fort, or move on, just as wisdom may direct. I feel that our labors have done much good here, and that many of the good people who have so nobly stood by us will, in time, accept and obey the gospel. Bro. Robley has baptized six since we came here this time, all of whom, I think, will make good members. I do hope the Lord may bless them abundantly, and strengthen them for whatever trials they may be called to pass through, as much depends upon them, from this on, so far as the progress of the work here is concerned.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

GALIEN, Mich., Dec. 22.

Editors Herald:—I arrived in this my field last week, and find plenty to do. I went from Lamoni where I saw you last to Andrew County, Missouri, and looked after a matter wherein a Holiness preacher desired to annihilate the Latter Day Saints after the two sermons I had preached there. I preached two more on my return, in an opera house crowded full. The preacher was still anxious for a controversy and we agreed upon the propositions, but he could not enter the discussion till after the holidays. Of course I could not remain there so long, but I promised him and the people that we would see that our side of the question would be looked after.

I soon met Bro. I. N. White, who was at St. Joseph, Missouri, at the time, and related the matter to him. Bro. I. N. manifested a willingness to have his theological hide taken off, and said he would wait upon the Holiness minister the first of the year.

I am of the opinion that after Bro. I. N.'s hide has no doubt been toughened and hardened by so much theological battering that Rev. Haynes will find it a difficult job to remove it. However we will wait results with no fears for the cause.

The locality is a splendid opening for the work, as it is an entirely new place so far as our work is concerned. And I am satisfied that good will result.

Yours in bonds,

H. C. BRONSON.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, Dec. 24.

Editors Herald:—It is with the greatest pleasure that we read your truth-laden pages from time to time. The cause you are trying to advance is somewhat represented at this place; but here, as in so many other places in the church, the work so nicely begun has died out to a great extent. At one time there was a branch here, but it has been in a disorganized condition for some time. The saints living in the three cities—Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline—meet in the Odd Fellows' hall, Eighteenth Street, near 2d Avenue; regular services being held there each Sabbath at 2:30. Bro. L. E. Hills, of the Eastern Iowa missionary force, has been doing a good work there.

I preached for them last Sabbath and expect to organize a Sabbath school there next Sunday. We hope to be able to make a report to our coming convention. We feel assured that the Sunday school, if properly conducted, will prove itself all it claims to be—a help to the church. In our next convention let us see to it that we have representatives and reports from every school in the Kewanee district organization. And as our Savior has made us coworkers with him in the salvation of men, let us work to this end. We see no reason why there cannot be a good work done here. But here as in other places there is a warfare for each one. Why should we not be bold and aggressive, and let our light shine before men? If we would see the great work of God advance, let us as individuals cheerfully conform as best we can to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, not taking one or two specified commandments as the only essentials to our spiritual welfare, but observe as did Israel of old, "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do," earnest, persistent effort on our part will insure success. As we are now engaged in the conflict, let us not shun the fight.

Yours confidently in the truth,

WM. E. LARUE.

JONESPORT, Maine, Dec. 24.

Editors Herald:—The year 1897 is nearly ended, its record made. Shall it be for weal or woe in the judgment day? As I retrospectively examine the year's work, am far from satisfied therewith.

My last letter was written from Madison. From there I visited Dixfield. This has been one of the hardest points in Maine. Srs. Taintor and Richardson had secured the church. What a change from past experiences! Formerly every effort was forced, now the liberty of the Holy Spirit was enjoyed. Nine sermons were delivered, audiences and interest increasing. Church and hall being engaged, we were compelled to close our services for the time being. I am satisfied that fruit will be gathered there in the near future.

Visiting Canton Point, we found the people still friendly, willing to hear us, but satisfied apparently as they are. By request of Bro. William H. Kelley I left that part of the State and joined him at Stonington. Services there largely attended, the spacious church being filled; interest excellent. It seems to be the dawning of a brighter day for the branch there. Bro. J. H. Robbins is presiding. Seven have been baptized there this month; one, formerly a Congregationalist, presented the following letter:—

The First Congregational church of Deer Isle. To the Latter Day Saints church of Stonington:—Greeting: This certifies that Mrs. Elvira Shepherd is a member in good and regular standing of the First Congregational church, of Deer Isle. As such, she is, at her own request, hereby dismissed, and affectionately recommended to the fellowship and care of the Latter Day Saints' church of Stonington, and when received by it, her membership with this church will cease. By vote of the church. S. W. Chapen clerk. November 6, A. D. 1897."

You see that other churches are beginning to recognize the saints as Christians. The pastor of another church said to me the other evening, "I recognize that you are doing a work for Christ in this town that is excellent and far-reaching." Surely the saints are growing in favor with the people and wherever they live faithful it tells for good.

Bro. Kelley proved to be a willing worker and we arranged so that but two evenings were lost during his stay. Lamoine, Gouldsboro, Jonesport, Indian River, South Addison, Beal's Isle, Machias, Little Deer Isle, and Mountainville were visited by him. The work was strengthened everywhere by his wise counsel and excellent preaching. Judged by a certain Massachusetts standard, he had splendid liberty: "You could hear him half a mile." Considerable labor has been expended in new openings the past season. As surely as harvest follows seedtime, so will such work result in precious souls being born again. Sadly the parting hand was given Bro. Kelley. His field is large, his stay necessarily brief. May God ever be with him in his work.

The winter campaign finds Brn. W. W. Blanchard and S. O. Foss in the central part of Maine, myself in Washington County. But little can be done till after the holiday festivities; then we hope to press the fight in the strength of the Holy Spirit.

Wishing you all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year,

In pleasant bonds,

U. W. GREENE.

XENIA, Ill., Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—Since April I have been over nearly all the district, and am sorry to say the work is in a much worse condition than I expected to find it. I expected to find the work in a place or two badly crippled, because of the unwise conduct of some; but did not suppose it would have reached throughout the entire district. The Prophet Jeremiah's utterance, found in 17: 5, "Cursed is the man that trusteth in man," etc., was prophecy then, but history to some of the saints in this district now. Too much confidence is put in man, and not enough in God and his word. The way I view it, the saints, or some of them in this district, are like they were in the days of Paul—yet babes; some of them fifty years old, and have to be fed, or they will not develop. Our Savior understood this, and instructions were given to that effect when he told Peter to feed his lambs and sheep.

This is the condition the work is in here, and the district is badly in need of competent men to take charge of the branches and district, those who not only understand parliamentary usage, and the letter of the law, but are in possession of the spirit of the law, having the necessary discernment to discriminate between truth and error, bad and good; not too tenderfooted nor too sympathetic to do all that God has said in his law must be done for the good of his children.

If suffering is a prerequisite to perfection, it may be possible that some of the things we are suffering will result in good for us; but if we do suffer, it will be because we have been made to comprehend the situation. Learning what has been the cause, and seeing the effect, we ought to profit by these experiences.

Dear saints, let us not miss a lesson. Watch, as well as pray; keep out of the ruts we see others falling into, and get out of them ourselves, if we should find we had fallen therein.

I found many good and kind saints in my field of labor, whose hospitable homes I have shared, and have not lacked for anything that was necessary for my comfort. May God bless them and prosper them, both temporally and spiritually, and put it in their hearts to do his whole will.

I am at home; will leave in a few days. Brn. Bond and Hilliard have visited our branch lately. It is hoped the saints will profit by their wise counsel.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. D. STEAD.

KNOX, Ind., Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—After a couple of weeks pleasantly and (we think) profitably spent with the Lansing saints, we drop down to Knox during the Christmastide. Arriving the 23d, we have preached five sermons, married two couples, and feasted sumptuously and visited largely, and otherwise celebrated the 1869th anniversary of the Bethlehem child. Have appointments during week. Crowds large and attentive. Saints faithful and hopeful. Weather beautiful. Nature dressed in snowy robes, shimmers with glistening glory. Merry Christmas.

In haste,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

MANCHESTER, Texas, Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—As we are about to fold another year of time away, I thought I would give a few lines to the Herald. In viewing the year that is about to pass away, I wonder if I have done my duty in regard to serving our heavenly Father. I am trying to tell the beautiful story of the gospel of our Savior to the people. It seems we are met with many obstacles, but thank God he has remembered us in all our efforts to do good; and amid our weak efforts we find that God is forwarding his work. When we look back over years that have passed, and during that time it seemed as if all doors were closed against us, and we were often met with mobs, and at one time Brn. Heman C. Smith and George Montague were ordered out of the country, yet thank God things have changed. We are now welcomed in many places, and calls to come and preach are numerous. Every once and awhile a noble man or lady steps forward willingly to obey the gospel. So the work is moving along slowly in this country.

Bro. Baggerly has done some splendid preaching in Northeastern Texas this year.

We have been battling along for five years without having the pleasure of meeting with anything like a body of saints; but on the 5th of last October, in company with Bro. Baggerly, Bro. Goodman and wife, and Bro. Jenkins and wife, we started to Standley to attend a special conference called by Bro. Montague. We reached there on the 8th, and met with as kind and noble hearted people as it has ever been our lot to meet with. We will never forget the kindness we received at the hands of the Standley saints. May God bless them in their good works. At that meeting we realized that many noble men and women were marching on to Zion. May it be our happy lot to get there. We returned home to face a cold and unfriendly world trying to do our duty to help carry the gospel to the nations of the earth.

My wife attended the debate at Kosoma, Indian Territory, between Bro. White and Mr. Chism. She enjoyed her trip, and thinks a grand victory was gained for the truth. She thinks Bro. White is a grand man of the Lord's. Bro. J. W. Kent returned home with those who went from this place, and we find him a willing worker. He has been doing some good preaching in this county. We have just returned from a trip some thirty miles away, where we preached and found several interested. We believe the time is not far distant when many good people will accept the gospel in this country if we will only let our light shine; and by the help of God we are going to try and let the gospel be our theme.

I want to say to the church that God has greatly blessed me, and though I spend the rest of my days in his service he has paid me for all I ever did in this life. And God being my helper, I am going to try to spend my days in the gospel, let them be few or many. I ask the prayers of the saints that I may fully discharge my duty, and when the warfare is over, be gathered home to Zion to meet with the pure and the good; and above all to hear the welcome plaudit from our Savior's lips, enter into thy rest; well done good and faithful servant.

Yours in bonds,

E. A. ERWIN.

SCRANTON, Miss., Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—I send you clipping from the leading paper in the county. The spirit of lawlessness has by no means been crushed. After I sent you telegram, December 18, I was insulted on the streets of Scranton, and it would not be safe for Bro. Kelley to go to Escatawpa. The circuit court will sit the fourth Monday in April, when other cases will be brought to the attention of the grand jury, when we hope something will be done that will have a tendency to quell this spirit of lawlessness.

There was no drunken elder. Bro. Sherman was the only elder present at court besides myself, and we were both as far from being drunk as anyone could be who had not tasted liquor of any kind. The editor of the paper informed me last week that Bro. Sherman had been horsewhipped on his way home from court, but as I have not seen any of the brethren from Escatawpa, I cannot say whether this rumor is true or not; but as the Apostle Paul said they are still "breathing out threatenings." There are a goodly number of people in the county who do not approve of this lawlessness, but many others who would shield this mob from the just deserts that the law would give them were it enforced. Your brother in Christ,

FRANK P. SCARCLIFF.

"LET OFF LIGHTLY.

"The case of the State against Rev. G. W. Huff, John Jones, S. H. and Joe Shannon, Paul Smith, Craft Smith, E. H. Smith, John Dailey, James Dailey, W. P. Johnson, F. M. Johnson and Eugene Dickson, charged with tearing down the tent of Rev. W. H. [T. C.—Ed.] Kelley, evangelist of the Church of the Latter Day Saints at Escatawpa on September 2, 1897, came up for trial before Judge Chidsey last Saturday morning, the defendants demanding a jury, which was granted and the following jury was impanelled: F. E. Foster, H. G. Oliver, Emile Ladnier, W. Wordtman, S. C. Holley, and P. R. Jane. After hearing the evidence of the State, the defendants not introducing any evidence and argument of counsel, the jury retired and in a few minutes returned with the following verdict: "We, the jury find the defendants guilty as charged, and recommend them to the mercy of the court. They were then sentenced to pay a fine of $5 each and all costs.

"The fine was afterwards reduced to a nominal sum at the request of the counsel. Hons. W. M. Denny and C. H. Wood represented the defense, and Mr. R. L. Bullard the State."

LENOX, Mich., Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—The gospel tent visited us a few months ago and some seeds were sown which have sprung up and we hope may bear fruit for the Master. During a stay of about three weeks the six principles were set forth in a manner which did great credit to the work. Elders J. A. Grant, William Davis, and E. H. Durand were in charge of the work. How well they did it is not fully known as yet, for by their fruits we shall know them. This much we are assured of: The humble writer of this article, also his wife, were baptized in the beautiful river St. Clair, at St. Clair, December 12, 1897, by Elder E. H. Durand, of Detroit, Michigan.

The time is being improved by the holding of "cottage prayer meetings," and short sermons are given at times, Elder Durand being with us still at this writing. We hope the gospel in its fulness is being planted in our midst, and we are looking forward to the time when we will have a branch and an elder to lead us. God speed the day when the whole world shall know him whom to know aright is life everlasting, is the prayer of your humble servant and brother,

SAMUEL D. SPORE.

LUDINGTON, Mich., Dec. 22.

Editors Herald:—Some are alive in the work, and I believe if we could have steady preaching it would arouse those who have grown cold. We have had but few sermons in the past year. The teacher from Free Soil comes once in a while and talks to the saints but some do not heed it. I feel if there was a minister allowed to come much good would be done. We have a church building on our hands to pay for and there are only four of the brethren that are willing to help us (the Aid Society) to pay this honest debt, and there are only seven of us in the society. We have worked hard and struggled along to pay this debt. The one we owe is a widow sister, and all her money is in the church, and she needs it very much. Perhaps it was wrong for us to go in debt for the church, but we did not know at the time that Bro. Joseph had counseled the saints not to get in debt. We have come to the conclusion to ask for a little help through the Herald; if each branch would help us a little, it would help us wonderful and they would hardly miss it. We have worked hard to pay what we have, and there still remains three hundred and forty dollars to pay, besides some interest. We have served meals down town, also suppers in the church parlors, sold quilts, and done all we could. If all would have taken hold, this debt might have been paid. When we have served meals in the church parlors and it so stormy that it almost seemed impossible for anyone to come, they would come and keep coming till we would do quite well. The Lord has always blessed us in our efforts so far, and I know he will as long as we try to do right, and now if you all will turn in and help us if not but a little we will be very glad. We would like it right away, direct Mrs. C. S. Barron, Ludington, Michigan.

From your sister in bonds,

LIBBIE VAN BRUNT.

COHOCTON, New York, Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place with Bro. Kent from Greene, New York, the 15th; we have our faces turned westward, but at present we are domiciled with Bro. Sylvester Campbell, who lives about four miles from Cohocton. He united with the church in the days of old Joseph, and has been a faithful advocate of the doctrines as set forth by the early church down to the present. His wife also accepted the angel's message before the death of the Prophet. They have never united with the Reorganization.

We had not been here long until we began to look around for a place to preach. After walking about thirteen miles in visiting trustees, I secured the use of the Brown Hill church and made an appointment for last Saturday night. Just before reaching the church Bro. Kent halted by the wayside to warm. On entering the man's house, he accused Bro. Kent of being a devil, and the doctrines that he taught emanated in the infernal regions. We had a good congregation, excellent attention, and a good degree of the Spirit in presenting the word. The trustees would not permit us to hold any more services, although the church was built for all denominations. This only enraged the congregation and made friends for us. One man opened up his house and said we could preach there. We have accepted the invitation and commence next Thursday evening. We held one preaching service last Lord's day in the South church; a small audience was present.

After closing our service we started for Haskenville, a distance of three miles, over the frozen ground to hear an exposition of "Mormonism" by Elder Burton of Salt Lake City, a representative of the Brighamite faith. In his remarks he said he was a polygamist child and was proud of it.

After their meeting was dismissed Bro. Kent secured the use of the hall and will lecture on the subject of polygamy next Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Last night I attended the preaching service of the Evangelist church. The church which they occupied was a union church and the trustees had consented for us to use it when not occupied. The minister preached about fifteen minutes. After his service was dismissed, I called the congregation to order and preached another sermon under the power of the Spirit. I am not discouraged, notwithstanding we meet with opposition everywhere; but we always find some friends.

Since coming into this eastern mission, I have met some of the meanest people on the earth and some of the best. There is one thing about missionary work I do not like; when we meet these "good people" we have to go to "new pastures," after getting acquainted. Ever praying for Zion's welfare,
In gospel bonds,

A. M. BAKER.

ELGIN, California, Dec. 14.

Editors Herald:—While meditating this morning on the gospel—our only hope of salvation—I feel it my duty to write a few thoughts, that perhaps others might be encouraged to struggle on in life's battles, looking forward with hope to that better land where toils, trials, and cares come no more; for it seems, in this life, go where we may, toil and trial await us, till at times they almost o'erwhelm us, and we are ready quite to sink into despair and are made to realize that "Every day hath toil and trouble, every heart hath care." But, dear saints, if we are ready and willing to "Freely bear our own full measure and our brother's share," we will be made to realize that we are being helped to bear our burdens by One who is ever ready and willing to help those who ask Him in time of need. This is one comfort the gospel brings, and a greater one still is, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

We have not the blessed privilege in these parts of hearing the gospel preached in its purity each Sabbath as we have been used to, and it is a sore trial to thus be deprived; yet I pray God we may be enabled to let our light shine, that we may prepare the way for the gospel to be presented in its purity by the ministry, should they come this way; and we earnestly invite all who can to come, and we will do the best we can to aid them—and not only be presented but received by the honest in heart, that we may rejoice together.

Some good sermons have been preached here during the last five years by able brethren, but people seem slow to accept, as it is new to most of them. We live in hopes of an ingathering in the Lord's own time, or that they shall have such an understanding of the gospel that they may be left without excuse—that it may be a witness for or against them in the day of judgment.

I crave an interest in the prayers of the saints, that we may move forward in the right direction for the greatest advancement of God's work, and especially invite brethren Luff and Daley, if at all possible, to give us a call, or at least to look after the interest of the few scattered sheep in this part of the vineyard; and may God's richest blessings be and abide with his saints everywhere is the humble prayer of your sister in Christ,

SARAH J. ROSS.

WESTON, Nova Scotia, Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—Through the intercession of Sr. Lawrence I have been opening up a new field, and it has proved one of the most interesting places that I have ever labored in. A fine class of prosperous farmers reside here. They rank well in intelligence and general information. Religiously inclined and chiefly Baptists. A better hearing I could not ask for, and their hospitality cannot be excelled, not even in Cumberland County. Of course there are some that talk against, and all that, but studying to see "whether these things are so" is the order of the day, in the majority of cases. I shall stay with them awhile longer, then return home for Christmas. I am hoping for great things from this quarter, but who can tell? There certainly is a hungering and thirsting after the truth, and there is also a rejoicing at the present, inasmuch they have received. May they continue is my prayer.

I wish to acknowledge, with much heartfelt gratitude, the receipt of a splendid fur coat, the gift of the saints and friends of Nova Scotia, I understand, although I have received no letter of explanation. I presume, though, that it is the work of Sr. Mary A. Taylor, of Williamsdale, Nova Scotia, and others who nobly assisted her, of which more will be known later. I wish all could know the comfort I have already taken in it on two or three occasions. Then they could understand how I appreciate it. The coming cold winter has lost all its terrors for me, and now it can storm if it wants to, so far as I am concerned. May every dear soul that contributed to that present be kept warm and comfortable the remaining portion of the r existence, and Heaven's best blessings be showered upon them continually.

Dear saints and friends, I shall prize your gift for its intrinsic value, but much more so when I am enveloped in its warm embrace shall I feel to be surrounded by a host of warm-hearted friends, who love the cause and are manifesting it by sustaining your unworthy colaborer.

Now, dear Herald, and all your readers, with the happy greetings of Christmastide and a hope for prosperity in our grand cause,
I remain yours in the faith,

H. J. DAVISON.

XENIA, Ill., Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—My last letter was written I believe at Beardstown, Illinois. Before leaving there we ordained Bro. Shoemaker to the office of teacher; gave the little band such instruction, caution, and warning in regard to the dangers that now beset them; that our work, so pleasant and satisfactory to date, was also a challenge to not only men's hostility, but that subtle Satanic powers would not only press them and try them from without, but unlooked for—perhaps unexpected—dangers from within their own circle might assail them; hinder, if not destroy not only future progress, but the work already done.

The work in the city of St. Louis is in fair condition, much better than in the past; but a deal of bad leaven is yet to be worked out; constant need of watchmen, and wise and faithful instruction and warning to keep from falling back into old ruts and poor gospel showing.

Have visited Belleville and Cheltenham; was called to Alton and found Sr. Crowson very sick. Faith in God through ordinances of administration of his own appointment resulted in immediate relief.

Have essayed to visit both Taylorville and Sorento, but was hindered, or circumstances made it impracticable. Bro. Barraclough has a monthly appointment at the latter place. Brethren Archibald and Hitchcock are doing all that secular duties permit, as well as other faithful workers. An effort has been made to organize a Sunday school, and inaugurate regular preaching services in one of the large public school rooms in East St. Louis. The board of trustees seem to be willing, but the superintendent of school, with his sixteenth century religious proclivities, may bar us.

The spiritual status and working force of the St. Louis district, as a whole, is not in a flattering condition. The "letting alone" process—no labor with, no warning of, no attempt even for years to weed out slothful, unruly, wicked members, deadens all interest on the part of strangers, renders the few meetings of saints lifeless, unattractive, unspiritual; going, going down toward—at—and some inside already of—death's door. What can the missionary, anyone else, or even God himself do for such? The all prevailing want is for somebody to live their religion for them—too slothful or worldly to live it themselves.

"To be carnally minded, is death." How easy to see that this is so, and to answer the inquiry as to why so many of us are dead spiritually—bringing forth little or no visible gospel fruit. Thus are we a stumbling block to spiritually minded people who, sick of creeds, are coming toward us, only to be repelled by our inconsistencies.

Our trip into this district (Southern Illinois) has not been successful as we could wish—but some good has been done. The ice storm falling upon muddy roads last Thursday made travel either on foot or with team, especially at nightfall, of peril and almost an impossibility. We expected to have gone over to Orchardville, from Brush Creek, but for this storm. We also wanted to visit down as far as Springerton, but a team could not be got there with the present state of roads, as you can hardly stand up without falling down (that's Irish), let alone locomotion.

I also learned after coming here that Bro. Hilliard is south of us touring the district. He couldn't be in better business, and if he can prove himself a resurrectionist, and bring to pass the vision which Ezekiel saw, he will be entitled to the gratitude of us all and a rest (which he will need) hereafter, in the "sweet by and by."

St. Louis will be busy holiday time. Christmas concert and entertainment by Sunday school, Monday eve following. Public dinner on New Year's day to raise fund for debt and current church expenses, by the sisters—we place them first—and brethren of the St. Louis branch of the church. Wishing a "merry Christmas" and "happy new year" to the Herald Office and attachés.

I am, in bonds, yours,
M. H. BOND.

"REPLY TO GOSPEL TRUMPET."

If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?—1 Cor. 14:8.

Editor of the Gospel Trumpet; Dear Sir:—I find in your paper of November 4, 1897, an article headed "Mormonism." I take it for granted the writer refers to the doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and being a member of that much misrepresented people, I am always ready to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." Hence I have carefully read and compared his article with the word of God; and I find he has made the Gospel Trumpet give forth very uncertain sounds, which please permit me to point out. First he says:—

A great error of this sect is regarding the office of the apostles. They teach a perpetuation of apostles as well as of high priests—that the twelve apostles were succeeded by twelve others, and a succession of the same continued until the great apostasy, which they say took place in the sixth century.

Latter Day Saints do not teach that there was a succession of the twelve apostles until the sixth century; but we do claim that so long as the ancient church of Christ maintained its integrity and fidelity to God, that it also maintained its original form of organization, and hence had apostles and prophets as a part of its membership on the earth. Let us see if this claim is warranted by the word of God. Paul, in 1 Corinthians 12:27, 28, speaking to the church, says:—

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

Webster defines the word set, "to place," "to establish," etc. From the fourteenth to the twenty-sixth verse of this chapter, Paul compares the church to the body of a man, and in the eighteenth verse he says:—

But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

Here we find the word "set" again. Let me ask, Did he place the members in the human body permanently? Has he ever changed the organism of man? No! Man is the same in his organization as when God pronounced his work very good. Hence, to carry out the parallel the apostle shows that "God set" the members in the body of Christ, and they, too, must remain, or it is not the same body. You may read in Genesis 9:9, 11, 17, that God made a covenant with Noah, and the earth, and with all flesh, that he would no more destroy all flesh with a flood of waters; and he said:—

I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.—Gen. 9:13.

That bow is always seen in the cloud as an evidence of God's faithfulness to his covenant, because it was set, fixed, established. Paul declares God hath set some in the church, "first apostles, secondarily prophets," etc., hence they were established there so long as the church of Christ remained in its purity; but an apostasy took place in fulfillment of prophecy. (See the following, Acts 20:28; Rom. 11:13-24; 2 Thes. 2; 1 Tim. 4; 2 Tim. 3; 2 Tim. 4; 2 Pet. 2.)

Please notice, Christ's church was organized upon the earth, its work was to be done on the earth. The gifts that he gave were given to men on the earth, hence it must remain on the earth until its work is done. The apostolic calling is a function, occupation, or office, unto which those men were called. It did not die out when the persons who held such office died, and as Christ organized his church for all time, it follows that this office must remain for all time; or so long as the church existed on the earth and maintained its integrity and faithfulness to God. If the other offices, namely, evangelists, pastors, and teachers were to remain in the church upon the earth, certainly the equally important offices of apostles and prophets must remain. You have no more warrant in God's word for doing away with these latter offices than you have for the former ones; in fact you have no intimation in God's word that either shall be done away until the purpose for which God placed them there is accomplished. (See Eph. 4:11-16.)

The day of healing and miracles is not passed away.

Yet these were placed in the church at the same time as these different offices, and there is just as much evidence that the one should cease with the apostolic age as there is for the other. When and where has God said these offices shall be taken from the church militant? Was not that church militant to remain on the earth until Christ came? Could it be a perfect church if any part was taken from it? If the human body lost an arm, or leg, or any other member, would it be a perfect body? Think you Christ will receive an imperfect bride or church? (See Eph. 5:27.) God says in Ephesians 4:11-13:—

He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

Are the saints perfect yet? Is the work of the ministry all done? Does the church of Christ need edifying now? Can it be edified without the means that God ordained for that work? Are we all come in the unity of the faith? If so what means your frequent denunciation of all "sectism"? Have all attained to the knowledge of the Son of God? Are the children of God all perfect? Have they attained unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ?

Stand erect, ye professed saints! ye men of assumed holiness! and measure yourselves by the infinitely high, and immaculate personage and character of the spotless and glorious being, our great exemplar, Christ Jesus. Lay your hands upon your mouths and cry, Unclean! Unclean!! and confess that "our righteousness is as filthy rags" compared with his all glorious character. Then humble yourselves before God and accept the means of grace which he has set in his church for your perfection; then you will throw away that uncertain

"trumpet," and cease to boast of your holiness; repent of your sins and be baptized for the remission of them by those whom God has called and authorized to preach and administer in the gospel to all men; and then continue in God's way of holiness, and you shall be saved, for God has decreed, "He that endureth unto the end shall be saved." Your Trumpet gives another very uncertain sound when it says:—

If there were a succession of the Twelve, God would have to increase the number of thrones for each one to sit on to judge the Twelve tribes of Israel. (See 1 Cor. 6: 2.)

Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?—1 Cor. 6: 2.

Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.—Rev. 5: 9, 10.

And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them.—Rev. 20: 4.

From these scriptures we learn that the ancient Twelve are not the only ones that shall participate in the great judgment, and more than twelve thrones will be provided when the saints judge the world.

Another very uncertain sound which the Gospel Trumpet gives is found in your claim that "God set the apostles in (the church) as a part of the foundation of the church."

Roman Catholics tell us it was built upon Peter, and you tell us "the apostles and prophets has become a part of our foundation." Christ said he would build his church upon a rock, and Paul tell us,

Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus.—1 Cor. 3: 11.

Christ said it was a foolish man who built his house upon the sand. God said, "I have laid help upon one that is mighty." He also said, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm." Read Mark 8: 33, also chapter 14, also Acts 15; Gal. 2: 11; James 5: 17; Ps. 51; Isa. 6. Compare the confessions of these men with the spotless life of the Son of God. David the prophet says, "My sins are more than the hairs of my head;" Isaiah says, "Woe is me, I am a man of unclean lips." Christ rebukes Peter saying, "Get thee behind me Satan, for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men." Peter denied his Master. Paul boasts that he withstood Peter to his face. Paul and Barnabas had sharp contention and separated in their ministry. James, speaking of Elijah says, "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are" (Italics mine), thereby acknowledging his own weakness, as also that of Elijah and the rest of the apostles. God does not build upon frail humanity! that would indeed be building upon the sand.

Your uncertain Trumpet tries to bolster up its theory by quoting Ephesians 2: 20. It does not read, "And are built upon the foundation of apostles," etc., as it would have to if your theory was right. It reads, "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets [Italics mine], Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone," which literally means built upon the same foundation that the apostles and prophets were built upon. Was the Trumpet afraid to quote that scripture lest its uncertain sound should be detected? Your attempt to prove that Paul was not one of the original Twelve, and hence not a part of the foundation, was labor in vain.

Latter Day Saints, whom you contemptuously call "Mormons," never made any such claim. In conclusion, Mr. Editor, will you kindly publish this article in the Gospel Trumpet in full, and give your people the opportunity to see both sides of the question, and if you do not see fit to publish it, will you kindly return it to C. Derry, Box 354, Woodbine, Harrison County, Iowa, and I will return postage to you.

Very respectfully, your wellwisher,
CHARLES DERRY.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

Philadelphia association will convene Saturday, January 22, at No. 199 Saratoga Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, at 2:30 p. m. INSTITUTE AND RELIGIO.

Inter-State Sunday School Institute was organized at 2:30 p. m. December 26, in the chapel at St. Joseph, Missouri, by selecting T. A. Hougas superintendent, he selecting

F. E. Cochran, J. A. Gunsolley, J. F. Mintun, and W. N. Robinson to assist. W. N. Robinson secretary, he selecting J. F. Mintun to assist. Sr. Ida Pearson chorister, she selecting Sr. Amy Winning as organist. The local janitor, ushers, and librarian of St. Joseph Sunday school were selected to act for the Institute.

T. A. Hougas then spoke of the object for which we had met, saying: We have met to work and be benefited thereby. The Institute was instituted as a necessity growing out of the necessity for improvement in the line of Sunday school work. We must grade up our Sunday school workers before we can consistently talk up the grading of our Sunday schools. Good had resulted from the work of the Institute previously held. Best results come from knowledge associated with zeal. We are here not only to receive added knowledge but added zeal, also that the knowledge already acquired, and that may be acquired, may be more effectually utilized. We are here to carry out what I believe God directed to be done in the formulating of the program—the more completely unify the Sunday school and Religio in its work.

The address of welcome by J. M. Terry was hearty and complete, and replied to on the part of the Sunday school and Religio workers: Frank E. Cochran, J. A. Gunsolley, W. N. Robinson, J. F. Mintun, Louise Palfrey, William Clow, Bro. Hodson, of Kansas, Sr. Marjorie Wright, W. B. Torrance, and Emma Beebe.

At six p. m. an excellent and very spiritual social meeting was held, in charge of J. F. Mintun and D. J. Krahl.

At 7: 30 a temperance lecture was delivered by T. A. Hougas, assisted by F. E. Cochran with his stereopticon, which was very impressive, and showed the evil effects of alcohol upon the human system in very strong terms. This was followed by an excellent recitation by Sr. John McBirnie, entitled "The Light from over the Range," which closed the sessions of the day.

In the division of territory between Bro. Caffall and me, Iowa only is left in my charge. I call attention to the "Important notice" of the Church Historian, Heman C. Smith, of 17 Dawson Street, Manchester, England, as contained in Herald for November 10, page 724. Each general missionary is requested to report directly to him as set forth in the notice referred to above. Read the notice carefully, and then make out and send your report.

The last ministerial reports for the conference year will come due, as per rule, on or about March 1, from those not in charge, and on or about March 10 from my assistants who are in charge of "fields of labor." In these reports please give a clear, but brief account of your labors for the entire year, so that the general missionary in charge can make up his report therefrom as per resolution of last conference. In addition to this, those who are in charge will please furnish me with a report of the number of sermons preached, and baptisms performed, by the local ministry in their respective fields. Will the local ministry please take notice and report in due time to the one having missionary charge in the district in which they have labored.

My assistants in charge will also please remember that, as heretofore, in these last reports they are required to furnish me with a full list of those who desire and are willing to labor as general missionaries for the coming year, together with all necessary items, such as number of dependents, ages of the children, amount of support asked, etc. Also such other information, explanations, or recommendations as may be needed.

CONFERENCE RESOLUTION OF 1886.

Because of misunderstanding on the part of some, and incorrect statements which have been made in public, I furnish herewith the full account of the action had on the following resolution, on April 13, 1886:—

"The following was moved:

"Resolved, That in organized districts, no one be ordained to the office of an elder, without the voice of the district or conference be had ordering such ordination, or by sanction of the missionary in charge.

"Brethren Roth, W. H. Kelley, J. T. Kinnaman and R. Etzenhouser favored it, and brethren E. C. Brand, N. A. Baker and J. A. McIntosh opposed it. It was then moved to amend by striking out the words, 'missionary in charge,' and inserting the words 'president of the district,' therefor. This was opposed by brethren Banta and Griffiths, and favored by Bro. Bronson. It was then moved to strike out both these provisions, or all after the word 'ordination,' in the original. Brethren J. R. Lambert, R. M. Elvin, John Pett and E. Etzenhouser opposed both amendments and favored the original. Previous question moved, and, following, both amendments were put before the house in their order and both were rejected. The original was adopted."—Herald for April 24, 1886, p. 253.

A CURE FOR DROPSY.

Put two heaping tablespoonfuls of cream of tartar into a bowl, pour a pint of boiling water on it, then stir it, and let it settle until it is cold. Drink all the water when going to bed, but leave the sediment in the bottom, and pour more hot water on it to drink the next night. Take a dose of jalap in the morning. It will carry all the water off from the body. Repeat the dose of jalap the second morning.

DIED.

REES.—At Kewanee, Illinois, December 13, 1897, Sr. Elizabeth Rees nee Evans. She was born in Carmarthenshire, South Wales, November 5, 1821. Came to America in 1858, intending to move to Utah, but discovered that that church had left the gospel landmarks. She moved with her family to Kewanee in 1861, and when the voice of the true Shepherd was heard through the instrumentality of Brn. Blakeslee, Gillen, Shippy, and Gurley, she gladly accepted the message. She was baptized by her brother-in-law, John D. Jones, March 14, 1864, and the home of herself and husband became a refreshing asylum to the hungry, weary, foot and heart-sore servants of Christ who toiled for the spiritual building of the Kewanee branch and district. She was mother of six children, grandmother of twenty-six, and great-grandmother of five. Two daughters and one sister mourn. She was laid away to await the Master's call December 16, Elder John Chisnall being the consoling speaker, at the home of J. D. Jones.

Sleep, sleep, fond heart, and take thy rest;
Death ends thy pilgrim mission;
Fair paradise, thy soul's request,
Re-joicing, gained admission.
There to abide in peace awhile,
From care, pain, grief, and sorrow,
Until Idumea, cleansed from guile,
The antedated morrow;
When, from thy grave immortal rise,
Thy final gospel story,
By grace through Christ procured the prize,
With saints in endless glory.

THE SAINTS' HERALD
REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:— Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named— July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

Branch book agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

SOME STATISTICS OF THE YEAR 1897.

FIRE LOSSES.

THE losses by fire in the United States in 1897 aggregated $129,001,737, as compared with $111,856,067 in 1896 and $131,578,206 in 1895. Of these fires those with losses of $100,000 and upwards contributed $56,786,500 of the total and smaller fires $72,215,237.

The aggregate losses by fire for a series of years are as follows:—

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION.

Railway construction in 1897 was but little greater than that for the preceding year. From the record kept by the Railway Age of this city it appears that during the year 1,864.52 miles of road were added to the railway system of this country. Tracklaying was in progress last year upon 153 lines in 38 of the 49 States and Territories.

In New England steam railway construction continues practically suspended, as has been the case for several years. On the other hand a surprising number of electric lines has been built for country as well as city service, and this is true also of every other State. In the middle Atlantic group of States 170 miles were added, on the central Southern group 348, in the south Atlantic group 241, in the gulf and Mississippi Valley States 375, in the southwestern group 341, in the Northwest only 64, and in the Pacific coast country 287 miles, the greater part in California. At the commencement of 1898 the United States will have 184,464 miles of completed railway.

HANGINGS IN 1897.

The number of legal executions in 1897 was 128, as compared with 122 in 1896, 132 in 1895, 132 in 1894, 126 in 1893, and 107 in 1892. The executions in the several States and Territories were as follows:

Georgia	15	Florida	3
Virginia	6	Delaware	3
Kentucky	4	California	5
Missouri	8	New York	7
North Carolina	4	Illinois	5
Alabama	5	Minnesota	1
Arkansas	2	New Jersey	5
Maryland	2	Ohio	4
Louisiana	5	Washington	2
New Mexico	5	Idaho	2
Texas	5	Indiana	1
Mississippi	2	Oregon	2
Oklahoma	1	Connecticut	3
Indian Territory	2	South Dakota	1
Tennessee	5	Pennsylvania	4
South Carolina	2	Nebraska	1
West Virginia	4

There were 82 hanged in the South and 46 in the North, of whom 72 were whites, 51 negroes, 3 Indians, and 2 Chinese. The crimes for which they were executed were murder 117, rape 10, burglary 1.

LYNCHINGS IN 1897.

The criminal work of the mob-murderers is again on the increase. Judge Lynch has executed 166 persons during 1897, 162 men and 4 women. As the question of lynching is now quite generally agitated and has engaged the attention of several legislative bodies, the following table showing the number of lynchings through a series of years will be of interest:—

1886	138	1893	200
1887	122	1894	190

1888	142	1895	171
1889	176	1896	131
1890	127	1897	166
1891	192

The lynchings in the various States and Territories were distributed as follows:—

Alabama	19	Texas	25
Arizona	2	Virginia	5
Arkansas	11	North Carolina	1
Florida	12	Alaska	3
Georgia	14	California	1
Kentucky	7	Illinois	1
Louisiana	14	Indiana	5
Oklahoma	2	Nevada	2
Maryland	1	Ohio	1
Mississippi	16	South Dakota	2
Missouri	4	North Dakota	3
South Carolina	6	Washington	2
Tennessee	7

Of these lynchings 146 occurred in the South and 20 in the North. Of the total number 122 were negroes, 39 whites, and 5 Indians. The alleged crimes for which the victims were lynched were as follows: Race prejudice, 4; arson, 5; murder, 69; robbery, 18; assaults, 7; attempted rape, 9; rape, 23; writing insulting letters, 1; outlawry, 3; by white caps, 4; burglary, 6; elopement, 2; furnishing information, 3; unknown offenses, 5; train wrecking, 1; mistaken identity, 1; refusing to give evidence, 1; insults, 1; concealing a murder, 1; disobedience of regulations, 1; running quarantine, 1.

SUICIDES.

The total number of persons who have committed suicide in the United States during 1897, as reported by mail and telegraph of the Tribune is 6,600, as compared with 6,520 in 1896, 5,759 in 1895, 4,912 in 1894, 4,436 in 1893, 3,860 in 1892, 3,531 in 1891, and 2,010 in 1890, the figures showing a steady increase in the crime of self-murder. Of this number 5,186 were males and 1,414 females, the proportion of about 4 to 1 being steadily kept up from year to year. Among professional men physicians still lead the mournful list, 41 having taken their own lives, as compared with 47 in 1896, 59 in 1895, and 45 in 1894. During the year also 2 actors, 18 prominent lawyers, 1 college professor, 10 clergymen, 2 editors, 1 artist, and 20 persons connected with banks in various capacities took their lives. The causes of suicide were as follows:—

Despondency	2,889	Ill-health	356
Unknown	1,922	Domestic infelicity	301
Insanity	467	Disappointed love	271
Liquor	270	Business losses	124

In these cases of suicide 2,384 persons poisoned themselves, 2,136 shot themselves, 879 hanged themselves, 596 drowned themselves, 357 cut their throats, 86 threw themselves in front of locomotives, 84 threw themselves from windows or roofs, 56 stabbed themselves, 25 burned themselves, 4 starved themselves, and 2 killed themselves with dynamite. The figures show that poison is still the favorite route from this to the unseen world.

MURDERS.

The total number of murders committed in 1897 shows a decrease over 1896, being 9,520, as compared with 10,652 in 1896, 10,500 in 1895, 9,800 in 1894, 6,615 in 1893, 6,742 in 1892, 5,106 in 1891, and 4,290 in 1890. The causes of these murders may be classified as follows:—

Quarrels	4,638	Highwaymen killed	128
Unknown	2,655	Insanity	93
Jealousy	376	Self-defense	97
Liquor	518	Strikes	49
By highwaymen	387	Outrages	42
Infanticide	321	Riots	21
Resisting arrest	195

CHARITIES OF 1897.

It is certainly an optimistic and encouraging outlook for the best that is in man and for the outreachings of charity and humanity that the dark record of embezzlements in 1897, shown elsewhere, is magnificently offset by the generous sums contributed by bequest or personal gift to churches, colleges, charities, museums, art galleries, libraries, amounting to $33,612,914, as compared with $33,670,129 in 1896, $28,943,549 in 1895, and $19,967,116 in 1894. In preparing these statistics no record has been kept of small donations, since to collect them all would be a manifest impossibility. Of the total amount stated above there has been given to colleges the large sum of $10,203,450; to charities the still larger sum of $14,785,626; to churches and religious societies, $5,023,738; to museums and art galleries, $1,218,000.

Of this magnificent total $20,233,378 has been contributed by men and $13,379,436 by women.

PULPIT OFFENSES.

THE manner in which a thing is said sometimes adds to and sometimes takes from its efficacy for good in gospel work as in other pursuits.

If the preacher is coarse and bitter in his treatment of those differing from him in belief, and speaks of such differences in sneering or denunciatory speech, he will fail to reach his object—that of winning their attention and respect. For though the publicly stated or written declaration of the faith and doctrines held by a man or a people becomes by such published declaration the property of anyone who may choose to examine it for acceptance or rejection, there is nevertheless a personal claim upon it, held by the one offering it for consideration, which makes it dear to him; and courtesy, right feeling, and sound religious policy demand that those who essay to discuss it should treat it as fairly as themselves would ask for their own views.

It may be thought to be a mark of moral bravery for a man to emphasize his dissent to principle, doctrine, or dogma, by an arraignment of those holding to such in public, and in terms of harshness and ridicule, when those so arraigned are not present to represent themselves; but we do not think so. To our thinking he is the braver man, morally, who will give those thinking and teaching differently to himself the credit for honesty of thought and purpose he thinks himself entitled to; and then will in quietness of spirit, and in temperate terms, and respectful manner examine and weigh the dogma, doctrine, or principle dissented from upon its own merits from comparison with other things held to be good.

No minister for Christ can afford to detract from the dignity of his calling or the value of the message he is called and chosen to bear to the world by cheapening himself in using the weapons always employed by ignorance and dogmatism, personal abuse, ridicule, sarcasm, or coarse invective. Whoever employs these loses, whether he seems to gain his present point or not.

There is nothing in pulpit oratory so annoying to the sensitive inquirer after the truth, but who may have been raised in some one of the prevailing faiths, than to have those things which have become sacred to him by use and the sanction of age, roughly assailed by men whom he thinks ignorant and unlearned. To him such assault is not Christianlike, and he who is guilty of it loses opportunity for good impressions when he thus commits assaults of that kind.

It may be claimed that it is truth, and the truth ought not to hurt anybody. But the fact remains that the person is hurt, and if it shall be closely inquired into, the hurt has not been caused by the truth, but by the rough, unthinking, and reckless manner in which the truth has been stated. There are honest minded people everywhere, men who at heart love the truth, and who will gladly exchange their errors for truths. But tradition, the claims of prevailing opinions in regard to respectability, the notions men have imbibed regarding religion from the precepts of men, all combine to raise an almost adamantine wall against the truth. It has always been so, is so now, and must ever remain so, until the Christ idea has been universally disseminated; and the "Lamb that was slain," the "Lion of the tribe of Judah," shall permit his Spirit to prevail. Until the Master gives command for his servants to "seal up the law, and bind up the testimony," it is clearly the duty of those servants to make every effort commendable to help spread the truth in the spirit which prompted the Savior's declaration,

"And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The gospel orator should seek to win the confidence of his hearers. He can do this by being affable, friendly, and sympathetic; he cannot do it by being harsh, dogmatic, or dictatorial. A friend to mankind must show that he has the interests of man at heart, and, while believing that himself is in the right, he must feel, also, infinite pity for the erring; and build for them the new house of faith before he destroys the old with ruthless hand.

Brethren, be gentle in your pulpit manners, so far as differing conditions will make compatible with the Master's written law.

CITY WORK.

THE late suggestions of a brother concerning city work, serve to show the necessity of devising ways and means to insure successful prosecution of labor in the cities, among the thousands of busy working people and other classes which it is the duty of the church to reach, with others in the villages and outlying districts. The cities are centers of population and influence that cannot be neglected without great loss and slower progress resulting.

The Apostle Paul, that master builder in missionary and general work, did not neglect such centers of population, trade, and influence as Corinth, Ephesus, Thessalonica, Rome, and other points. At those places he established churches from which the gospel message was spread abroad and carried along with the daily business and general life of the people. The apostle to the Gentiles was both a wise strategist and a capable executor in the campaigns of the church militant. He not only "preached the word," but planned his campaigns with a view to occupying and establishing in the most important localities of and keys to the enemy's country; though by no means neglecting the pastoral villages; like the Master who preceded him and who labored "at Jerusalem," the seat of Jewish authority and influence, as well as in the country and villages of Samaria, Judea, and Galilee.

There is much to study in this city problem of work among the people—how to go about it that best and lasting results may be reached. Here is work for the most talented among both the general and the local ministry, and requiring the earnest complete coöperation of both, each acting in their spheres under the directions and within the provisions of the divine law, and in which there can be no conflict, but unity, where its letter and spirit are fully observed with an eye single to the good of the cause.

There is so much of folly and evil in the modern world, also so much that is visionary and unsubstantial in the preaching from the modern pulpit, that something more must be done than has been done, if the people are to be reached, as they should be reached, and the growing trend toward unbelief be stayed, or resisted to a greater degree.

Not long since we published the statement of a secretary of a prominent western religious association in which he averred that the modern Christian Church was a complete failure, including the Young Men's Christian Association, the Christian Endeavor, the W. C. T. U., and other organizations. He assigned various causes leading him to such conclusions, and added that a new organization must be perfected to take the place of the Christian churches with their auxiliary societies, in the interests of the people. This statement is the most sweeping one we have yet seen and, as noted, is destructive in its tendency. It serves to show the hopeless view that some Christian ministers are taking of the situation; for this minister is not the only one who has practically taken the same ground.

It is not strange that men become discouraged with the present condition of religious affairs. Catholicism with its history of departure from the truth, succeeded by the Reformation and its creed-forming epoch, followed by the multitudinous ideas that have grown out of the Reformation period, has been followed by religious reforms and counter-reforms, including the revision of creeds and efforts toward church union. All these have signally failed to bring about the ideal church movement, and men are weary and sick at heart, moved by earnest longings, yet filled with forebodings. Something must be done; but what shall it be? The spirit of the age demands something new, but how shall it be realized? The conclusion seems to be that the best that can be done is to interpret religious ideas according to the so-called progressive spirit of the age, hence the present movement toward a new declaration of faith, based upon love and moral activities, in keeping with reason, and in harmony with modern science and criticism. But it does not seem to occur to the modern church organizer that the Almighty might be able or willing to say something to help out of the dilemma.

Surely the church has a great work to do to reach the people with the angel's message—the gospel of Christ, the power of God unto salvation. We have what the people need, the solution of the religious problem, and what the Lord designs to be preached in all the world.

May God add to the forces for good that shall send his truth abroad "as a lamp that burneth."

NEIGHBORLY COMMENT.

THE Midland Monthly of Des Moines, Iowa, contains in its January number a correction of a former article which appeared in the December number, under the caption of Anti-Polygamy Mormonism. The correction was written by President Joseph Smith and is thus referred to by the Des Moines Register.

The statement indicates the prevailing general sentiment of the Iowa press toward the Reorganized Church. It will prove both gratifying and useful to many:—

Joseph Smith, Jr., president of the church at Lamoni (Iowa) has written a series of corrections in regard to statements concerning his church. Among other things he says: "The church at Lamoni are not Mormons. They make no claim to the name. Their distinctive title is: The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." We are also informed that the church "believes that Jesus Christ was and is the son of God, and has no successor; that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet, similar in character and mission to other prophets, named in Scripture." We need not add that the church at Lamoni does not and never did believe in polygamy. The church at Lamoni is in fact not different from other Christian churches. The practical results of its teachings on its followers have shown that it is a good influence.—Des Moines, Iowa, State Register, December 26.

RELIGIOUS INDIFFERENCE.

THERE are three million four hundred thousand (3,400,000) people in the State of Illinois not connected with any church; so says the Rev. Dr. W. J. Chichester of the First Presbyterian Church, Chicago. Prominent ministers of London and New York, the metropolitan cities of the eastern and western continents, make statements of similar import concerning those cities.

If the statement of the Chicago minister is a correct one (and we have no reason to doubt its correctness, for it has not been challenged) a great portion of the population of one State, and exceeding in number the population of the thirteen colonies at the opening of the Revolutionary War, is without sufficient interest in religion to make a profession of faith.

Is the fault with the churches, is it the fault of the people, or of both?

If spiritual indifference is so widespread in a leading central State, including the second city on the Western continent, what must be the condition of the relative population of the whole country? If so many are without interest in church life and work, how much more will the rising generation be lacking in regard if not in respect for religious teaching? Is it difficult to discern that the growing tendency of the people is so strongly toward unbelief that it must ultimately culminate in the condition predicted or intimated by the Savior when he asked, "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

"The harvest is the end of the world;" but, "What shall the harvest be?"

"ABSTRACT" FAITH APPLIED.

ELDER J. F. THOMAS, of the Utah Church, has a communication in the Des Moines, Iowa, Capital, of December 17, on the subject of faith. He says some good things, among them the following:—

There are various degrees of faith, both of the true and of the false. . . . But abstract faith can benefit no person—no being. The scripture tells us that the devils believe that Jesus is the Son of God and tremble. (James 2:19.) Sinners may believe the same and yet be damned, through disobedience. Saints or Christians may believe the same—have the same faith, and yet, Judas-like, become the “sons of perdition.” The angels of heaven may have the same faith “in much assurance” and yet be thrust down to hell, (2 Peter 2, 4), so that faith alone, without obedience, will save neither devils, angels, nor men.

Is faith then necessary? Most certainly. It is absolutely essential. It is the very root of the tree of salvation, without it no one can be saved, without it none can repent. If a man does not believe in the existence of God he will not believe in his revealed laws; neither will he believe it is sinful to disregard those laws; he will not believe himself to be a sinner, neither will believe that he will be punished in a future state for transgressing laws which he does not believe emanated from God.

To repent it is necessary first to believe in God and his revealed laws, the laws he has given against doing evil. Believing those laws and comparing their own conduct with them, they will perceive that in many instances they have transgressed them and are therefore under the penalty of them. Then comes repentance. Resolutions of future rectitude are naturally accompanied by grief for past wrongdoing; but regret may, and often does, exist without reform, and such is not saving repentance, the virtue of which is in turning from and forsaking things that are evil, and doing things that are right. The sorrow of the world—regret without reform—fills our jails and prisons and is probably experienced as much within such institutions as outside of them. Repentance of the true character works wonders. . . .

Elder Thomas is sent out to represent the Utah Church officially—to speak for it and to act in its behalf. The Utah Church is therefore represented in the foregoing statements and committed to some extent to the conclusions reached by the logic of the elder; and with which conclusions, in the foregoing, we have no fault to find.

It seems to us a fair presumption that neither Elder Thomas nor the Utah Church could reasonably object to a direct application of the foregoing statements to himself; for surely they will not assume to be free from the application of general rules, which they apply as general rules; and it is a correct as well as a trite saying that a rule is a poor one that “won't work both ways.” Hence we proceed to permit some of Elder Thomas' tests to apply to himself and his church, taking the hint from his references to “abstract faith.”

We have the following among other definitions of the word “abstract” in Webster's Unabridged International Dictionary:—

1. Withdrawn; separate.
“The more abstract we are from the body.”
2. Considered apart from any application to a particular object, separated from matter; existing in the mind only; . . .
- 3 (Logic) Expressing a particular property of an object viewed apart from the other properties which constitute it; . . .

Again, Webster says:—

- To withdraw; to separate; to take away.
To take secretly or dishonestly; to abstract, etc.

The Utah Church in its attitude has proved itself an abstraction in itself. According to its “logic” it has expressed “a particular property of an object” (by assuming the name Latter Day Saint) while in many respects it has placed itself “apart from the other properties which constitute that body.”

It began or had its inception in an abstraction and has dealt with abstractions since its beginning. It “withdrew,” “separated” itself, and was “taken away” from the body composing the original church, and was taken “secretly” and “dishonestly,” as we shall presently show. It has been true to its instincts as an abstraction or departure from the true faith, hence is out of harmony with “the church,” and does not naturally assimilate with it.

The original “Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints” based its faith and practices upon the law of God revealed in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. Those books taught obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ, in which polygamy is condemned and forever prohibited, obedience to civil law enjoined, the permanent location of Zion as a gathering place pointed out, and succession in the presidency of the church provided for and restricted to legitimate lineal channels.

Departing from these plain provisions of the revealed law of God, the Utah Church cast aside the revealed word, the divine law, and substituted therefor human “living oracles”—the priesthood, by whose dictation it has ever since been governed, and contrary to the provisions of the divine word. The legitimate fruits of this withdrawal or separation from the truth continued to manifest themselves right in the beginning of the Brighamite apostasy; for under it polygamy was introduced and practiced, Brigham Young usurped the presidency of the church, and led the people out of the land of Zion to Utah. Thus the whole spirit and policy and movements of that body have been in direct opposition to the spirit and policy of the word as adhered to and executed by the church under the administration of Joseph Smith the Martyr.

In harmony with the policy of abstraction or withdrawal, Brigham Young and his followers rebaptized themselves out of the gospel covenant received under the law of Christ, and into another covenant—a covenant of polygamy, of secrecy, of secret oaths and secret endowments, under Brigham's leadership—when they were rebaptized at Winter Quarters, by Brigham's direction.

The law of God declared that Zion was composed of “the pure in heart,” and that Zion as a location should “not be moved out of her place.” It also declared that “the rebellious” should “be sent away” “out of the land of Zion.” The “abstraction” the “withdrawal” under Brigham was thus foreseen. It was described in another revelation as a “mystery” concocted in “secret chambers” seeking the “destruction” of the church.

It will thus be seen that Elder Thomas and his associates in Utah might add to his statement the quotation under definition No. 1 in Webster, “The more abstract we are from the body,” and thus prove their separation from it.

While the church in Utah has been and is an abstraction, it has continued to be Latter Day Saint in name only. It professes to be such, but in works has denied the name. It has also been active as an “abstractor,” for in the issuance of the Brighamite edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, it left out, omitted, and abstracted the article on marriage. It continued true to its nature and instincts as an abstraction and abstractor.

One would expect since the issuance of President Woodruff's manifesto and the claim that polygamy has been abandoned in practice that said section on marriage would be restored to a place in their Book of Covenants.

However, we suppose polygamy has been abandoned in the abstract—not actually; and that being fully believed in principle, the church leaders have no intention of replacing the article on marriage, which provides for monogamic marriage only—that two persons shall keep themselves “wholly for each other and from all others during your lives;” also that “all marriages in this church of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting;” not in a secret endowment house. Is the belief of the Utah Church in polygamy merely “abstract” or actual—practical? Results so far do not justify the former conclusion, but if it now is an abstract mere belief or item of purely theoretical faith, will not condemnation follow such an attitude? And, if practical, will not the law of the land be violated? Which horn of the dilemma will Elder Thomas seize? Is not the body he represents placed, between the upper and nether millstone? Or, are its leaders so abstracted in kingdom building in Utah as to forget that watchful sentinels of the Reorganized Church, and others interested in the public welfare, are keeping an eye upon their movements throughout the country, prepared to expose their folly and unmask their designs?

As Elder Thomas has pointed out the effects of an abstract faith—the results to follow such a profession, it is unnecessary to add much additional comment concerning it. “Out of his own mouth” let the rule be applied and he and his church be judged. It is well, however, that he suggests “repentance” and pictures the results that follow actual obedience to that principle. We have long believed that repentance would benefit his church, especially its priesthood. We commend to them an application of what Elder Thomas, though a lesser light, has suggested. We wish them nothing worse than that repentance may prompt them to reform, not in the abstract, but actually.

A WORD TO PATRONS.

THE Herald Office force in the business department has been kept busy from early morning until late at night with extra orders, since some time before the holidays.

Patrons are requested to be patient; their letters will be answered in due time. Orders are first being filled; correspondence will follow.

Let the good work go on; and don't forget that the HERALD should have five thousand more subscribers to adjust its subscription list in proportion to the membership of the church.

IN a column article in the Norfolk, Nebraska, Times, of December 25, Bro. J. F. Mintun recites in brief the history, doctrines, and something of the present status of Utah Mormonism; a timely and readable article. Many of our brethren are wielding the pen to good advantage. So far, however, the army of Utah missionaries does not appear upon the scene to defend its positions. From generals to privates in the ranks that organization seems to have departed from long-established and scientific modes of warfare. General Roberts did put in an appearance at St. Louis, and delivered a wordy volley in a sermon advocating polygamy as a tenet of faith (we suppose in order to show that the church in Utah had abandoned (?) the practice of it), but declined even to answer questions in public, let alone engage in combat in a fair and open field. Generals Lyman and Cowley, apostles of the church militant (!) in Utah, also appeared on the scene at Chicago and elsewhere; but all decline the offer of battle from the forces of the Reorganization in the field. The latter are sent out with the three books in their hands and relying upon the Spirit of truth. The Utah ministry claim special endowments and privileges of a spiritual character, in addition to “counsel” received from “living oracles,” and other extras, including help derived from theological training of some in their academies and institutions; yet they decline to meet the issue, in the face of all the points claimed in their favor. Offers have been made to meet them right in Salt Lake City, their supposed stronghold. The Gentile is met in politics (and vanquished too, for the watchmen of Israel see eye to eye almost without exception when the word of counsel goes forth in behalf of certain candidates); but what is the matter in Israel that no one is found to defend her doctrines and history in the arena of public examination and criticism? Alas! Israel declines to “produce” her “cause,” to “bring forth” her “strong reasons.” Evidently she has neither cause nor reasons that would bear inspection. How are the mighty fallen!

BRO. A. S. COCHRAN REMOVED TO LEON.

BRO. ASA S. COCHRAN, Secretary of the Board of Publication, removed from Lamoni to Leon, Iowa, with his family on Monday the 3d inst., to assume the duties of Treasurer of Decatur County, to which office he was elected in November last.

Bro. Cochran has served the Herald Office as its secretary for the past fifteen years, during which time he has endeared himself to all connected with the publishing department, also to the saints at home and abroad, who have found in social relations and business transactions with him an accommodating and kindly spirit. Sister Cochran also is known for her spirit and deeds of charity among the sick and poor, and for her hospitality.

Bro. Cochran has at various times been honored with several positions of trust by his brethren, and by other citizens of Lamoni; among them president of the Lamoni branch, justice of the peace, mayor, member of the city council, treasurer of the school district, etc., and he goes from the city of the saints to assume other duties with the good will and best wishes of his former associates.

The Board of Publication presented him with a handsome arm chair in evidence of appreciation of his services and as an expression of good will.

Bro. Cochran expects to do what local labor he can for the cause at the county seat.

OUTSIDE CHURCH NEWS.

WE take the following items from telegraphic correspondence to the Chicago Tribune of the 4th inst., that our readers may be posted on some phases of up to date methods in church work, according to modern ideas:—

Milwaukee Wis., Jan. 3.—The Board of Trustees of the Congregational Church in Wauwatosa on Saturday, at its annual meeting, decided to cut the salaries of the members of the choir fifty per cent. The choir was not consulted in the matter, but the members were informed yesterday.

Last night the choir struck. The members refused to sing unless wages were restored to the union scale.

The organist was on hand. He knew nothing of the strike and played the usual prelude to the service. The choir failing to put in an appearance, he played it again and repeated it several times.

The Rev. Henry Hames then announced that a strike was in progress, and the Talmage method of congregational singing was adopted for the time. The strikers believe they can bring the trustees to time, but the board is also firm in its position.

Denver, Colo., Jan. 3.—The Ministers' Alliance of Denver initiated action this morning by which interdenominational cooperation can be effected to prevent the overchurched of Colorado. A committee was appointed consisting of one representative each from the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Lutheran, Congregational, and Christian Churches, to arrange a feasible plan of cooperation to prevent the planting of new churches in communities already sufficiently supplied.

This action is the outcome of the agitation begun by Dr. James H. Ecob of the First Congregational Church, which called forth a national controversy.

Dr. Ecob said the ideal of the future was church union. The point on which he hoped the churches of Colorado might federate at this time was to prevent the overchurched of the State; the useless expenditure of money and effort to support several weak, small churches in places where sufficient church privileges were already in existence to accommodate the people.

From the first it appears that union does not prevail in one particular church without choir wages being kept up to a union scale; that the singers do not sing at all, let alone "with the understanding," without a clear understanding as to terms. We are left in the dark concerning extra compensation to the organist, for his added labor. How the strike will terminate can only be conjectured. The item, in view of oft-repeated tales of church troubles caused by differences over the creeds, is a change as church news. However, it too savors of the confusions of Babylon, and smacks of the mercenary spirit. It is apparent that much of the round of service in the costly popular church is cold and formal, because rendered as service "for value received" in the coin of the realm. "'Tis true 'tis pity," etc.

The Denver item represents a new theory advocated of late by several clergymen hunting for ideas new and novel. Hobbies of one kind and another are not new, even among ecclesiastical statesman, and we note this one in passing. It will hardly succeed more than have other late movements toward church cooperation with a view to unity in doctrinal belief. Inasmuch as the new reformers and unionists have not succeeded in bringing the people nearer to Bible standards, nor to any other particular basis of unity, but have added to the prevailing confusion and distress of mind that troubles the realm of Christendom, they will hardly succeed in this later movement.

Its success might benefit the people in a material sense by shutting off the enormous outlay for costly sanctuaries. It might at the same time tend to religious and intellectual stagnation in present forms of faith—could such be possible in Protestantism in this busy, speculative, and fluctuating age.

However, it seems improbable that men will cease to exercise their inventive faculties in lines of religious effort, but rather that man—that audacious and irrepressible creature—will continue, as from the beginning, to suggest improvements in the government designed and revealed by the Creator, and that he will build as many temples as he has ideas to express.

It is apparent that confusion and uncertainty prevail and that the people sorely need the solid anchorage that truth affords.

THE Farm and Home, of Chicago, contains the following in its issue for January 1; concerning Mormon emigration to Mexico:—

Mormons go to Mexico.—Not wholly satisfied with the facilities afforded in Utah, the Mormons are branching out into Mexico, having purchased 3,000,000 acres of land in that country. They intend to send out 40,000 colonists to develop this land. These Mormon colonists are masters of the art of irrigation and are usually successful as farmers.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

THE Herald Office placed forty new subscribers on the subscription list of Autumn Leaves on Saturday the 7th. This is a good indication for the new year. Let the good work go on in behalf of the Leaves and its clientage, the young people.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. F. MINTUN, Magnolia, Iowa, January 3:—

We had a very spiritual day of exercises in this place yesterday, God giving evidence of his work by the gifts of the Spirit. I expect to be at home for two or three weeks, but shall occupy my time in preaching in the near vicinity most of the time. Please to insert my address in Herald for two or three weeks: Box A, Magnolia, Iowa.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Sisters' Sewing Society of Des Moines, Iowa, is now fully organized and pushing the work in their department. Sr. Allie Cook president, Sr. Etta Vice secretary, Sr. Fanny Chandler treasurer. The society forwards $10 Christmas offering in aid of the church, as a part of the work of its members.

Elder T. S. Hayton writes that he succeeded in organizing a Sunday School at Galena, Kansas, with about thirty members, among them quite a number very friendly to the cause. He hopes for continuing results for good to follow the work of the school.

Mrs. A. B. Hawley, of Gladwin, Michigan, writes of her recovery from illness, also an account of a vision, in answer to prayer. In the vision she was shown the true way and the means by which she should enter the church; also one of the elders, whom she has since met. She hopes to soon be permitted to obey the gospel.

Bishop E. L. Kelley went to St. Louis on the 6th inst., expecting to return during the present week.

A statement has passed current among the elders that William Miller, the originator of the Advent movement, obtained the leading or basic ideas of the second advent theory from Elder Jared Carter, during the early days of the church, while the latter was preaching in New York State. Some have stated that Carter held a discussion with Mr. Miller. Who can furnish definite information on the subject? The HERALD is asked for such information, but has nothing but the statements made in Joseph Smith's History, which shows that Jared Carter was sent east from Kirtland to perform missionary labor, during the early years of the church's seat at Kirtland. (See volume 1, Church History; index, Carter.)

Bro. P. W. Surbrook, of Lexington,

Michigan, reports the branch at that place as active in the good work and thriving. The membership is about forty. They meet from house to house and enjoy the Spirit of the Lord and the fellowship of one another. A number of outsiders also meet with them. Bro. S. expects to visit and labor with other branches.

The writer of this paragraph received in one mail during the past week letters addressed with the following titles: "Dr.," "Rev.," "Editor," "Esq.," besides those in his own name. Some of such are the ways of men in current business and professional relations. A partial "analysis" of this flood of titilative or cognomic address is interesting:

1. It proves the old maxim to be true at times, that "it never rains but it pours." 2. The right of an editor to make use of the plural form of the personal pronoun will certainly not again be called in question; no one would now be so audacious. "We" shall continue so to exercise the right, as we have heretofore. 3. Our remarks in this connection will prove that we don't mean "We Us and Company." 4. The experience reminds us of an address to his bishop of a devout Catholic with a full share of Hibernian fervor and flattery in his composition: "Right Reverend Doctor Father Bishop Domenec." Remembering this, and our own littleness as one and only one of God's creatures, we think it dangerous to permit any suggestions of artificial expansion; we are also hopeful in the thought that a head bandage seems unnecessary. P. S.—In this case "Elder" will do and is good enough for us. While the term "Dr." did not come from one of our own people, we think well hereby "to point a moral and adorn a tale," and suggest that it is well to go slow, and "not pile it on too thick" on anybody. It often proves dangerous; and "we" for "one" don't care to be exposed to unnecessary danger. And, sometimes things grow so rapidly that they become hollow and burst—from mere inside "air pressure." However, there is no danger if one lives in and breathes a pure gospel atmosphere. It promotes soundness of head and heart and is discouraging to any form of great swelling words or characters. Its climate is conducive to spiritual soundness; and while noxious insects are permitted to hover around, they are not permitted to deposit the seeds of ambition, flattery, pride, vanity, etc., unless plant personalities receive such elements and give them room for growth. May such influences be rejected from within and lessened from without.

Bro. Michael Lade, Uxbridge, Massachusetts, writes and remits for the HERALD. Isolated from saints, he wishes to read of their experiences and of the general condition and progress of the work. If you do not take the HERALD, Go thou and do likewise.

Biarritz, Jan. 3.—The number of dinners attended jointly by General Weyler and other officers of high rank is much commented upon and is regarded as intended to show that the former Captain General of Cuba is strongly supported by the military. It is even said that on the day he presented to the Queen Regent his protest against the wording of President McKinley's message to Congress eighteen of the officers of Madrid visited General Weyler and congratulated him.

London, Jan. 3.—A special dispatch from Madrid says: "General Weyler has defied the government to take proceedings against him. As he is a Senator, a special vote is necessary to deprive him of immunity from prosecution, and the Cabinet is embarrassed, as the army appears to side with Weyler in his attacks on the United States."

Manchester, Jan. 3.—The Manchester Guardian to-day says: "The government has categorically stated that Great Britain will refuse to recognize any special rights granted at any Chinese port to any particular power. Any port opened to one power must be opened to all or open to none. If Russia has been granted the right to winter ships at Port Arthur Great Britain will enforce her rights to the same privileges, and her ships will winter there, whether China concedes or does not concede the right. If Germany obtains a naval station at Kiao-Chou, Great Britain insists upon having a lease of ground for a naval station at the same port, and she will support every other power making the same claim.

"The contention of the government is that the most favored nation clause in the British and all other treaties with China forbids any special concessions of the nature contemplated by Germany at Kiao-Chou, and prevents nations from acquiring special benefits in which the others have not a share.

"The government has also declared that the same principle applies to such transactions as railway and mine monopolies. Taking her stand on the treaties, Great Britain refuses to acknowledge such concessions, and will insist upon similar railway and mine rights, and will use such force to secure or defend them as may be necessary.

"This declaration does not apply to cessions of territory to which the existing treaties do not refer, but relative to this contingency the dispatch of Great Britain to China says that when it occurs graver questions will arise. The government will then consider the manner in which British interests can best be safeguarded, and the form which the compensation to Great Britain for the special advantages of other nations must take.

"It is reported that a similar declaration has been delivered to the Chinese and other governments by Japan."

London, the 4th.—The Times says:—"England's policy, on the contrary, aims at maintaining the Chinese Empire as a growing concern and a vast field for the extension of trade. Rome, Jan. 4.—It appears that Mgr. Tokio, Dec. 13.—Terrible accounts come to hand concerning the Mohammedan rebellion in Kansu. It is estimated that 10,000 Mohammedans, chiefly women, children, and old men, have died of hunger, or been frozen to death in the hills and mountains. Those that have submitted number 18,000, women and children for the most part. Thirty or forty thousand remained under arms among the hills in the southeastern district in the middle summer. The business of beheading the insurgents was conducted with wholesale vigor as soon as their strength had been broken in any district. An average of 1,600 were decapitated daily for two weeks in Si Ning in June and 3,000 heads remained to come off. Crowds of people watched the executions.

A STORY OF TWO HOMES.

BECAUSE the influence of home is a factor so powerful in the formation of character, we give entire the author's description of two homes. At first it may seem that there is little of special interest in these, but a careful study will show that the germ of true home influence is deeply planted in just such things as we often deem of minor importance.

"Once there came to my school a beautiful young girl from Tennessee. You might not have called her beautiful, but she always seemed so to me because her heart shone in her face, a pure, true, loving heart that always seemed 'at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathize.' It was easy to see that she was a real 'home girl.' She had never been away from home before, and she grew so homesick in the great boarding school that I took her to my own home, and there tried in some measure to supply the loss of her own friends. She grew very fond of me, and confided to me much of her past life. She loved to talk of her father and mother, her brothers and sisters, and I soon grew to feel acquainted with them, every one. Some things in this home life so well illustrate many points in the preceding chapter—what things I leave for you to say—that I am going to give you the story, framing into one continuous narrative the many incidents she told me one by one. If this book ever meets her eye, I am sure she will excuse the liberty I thus take for the sake of the good the story of her home may work for others:—

"Our home is in the country, on a farm. There's more to it than just the sitting-room, but somehow all the others seem to cluster round this one and center in it. It is in the southwest corner of the house, the pleasantest corner, we think. It has two windows 'looking toward sunset,' and one large one, a sort of bay-window of my own planning toward the south. I should like to say the floor is covered with a bright-colored carpet, with roses running all over it, as that would sound better, and look better, too; but the truth is, the carpet is a rag one mother and I made last summer. We put in all the gay-colored bits we could find and altogether it looks quite bright and cheery, ever so much better than a cottony sale carpet, and we could not afford an expensive one. The walls are a light straw-color; I learned how to color them from the man who was calcimining the big house on the hill; round the top runs a paper border of green leaves. On the walls are the few fine engravings we have and two beautiful chromos. But the room is so large they do not fill up enough. So we girls gathered autumn leaves and ferns from the woods, pressed them, and arranged them as daintily as we knew how on cardboard, and then framed them with pine cones and hung them between the pictures. The boys gathered mosses for us in the woods, some fine and delicate as Mechlin lace; others long, trailing, and the beautiful ground-pine which makes such pretty wreaths. With these we festooned the picture-frames and the windows; the effect was real pretty. 'Quite artistic,' our city visitor, Maude, said.

"In the south window is our plants. We hadn't any money to buy a stand for them, so the boys made a bench just long enough to fit into the window, and another, smaller, on top of it; on these our plants stand. We haven't any very rare, expensive ones, but the good old-fashioned kind that will grow and make no fuss about it—a few hardy geraniums which we cut back in the summer, so they are in full bloom now; a white rose and red one just budding; a calla, now opening; a deutzia, covered with sprays of milk-white blossoms; a rose-geranium that scents the whole room, especially after it has been sprinkled; a pot of mignonette and some sweet-scented violets; then the ivies, we think most of them of anything. The German ivy has run to the top of the window, clear across it, and hangs in festoons over every sash; of course we give it string to run over. The English ivy don't grow as fast, but the leaves are such a rich, dark green they repay us for waiting. In the hanging basket—we made it out of wire and lined it with moss—is the dear little Kennelworth ivy. It has completely covered the basket, so you cannot see anything of top, bottom, or side but the dainty leaves of green.

"In front of this window, between it and the stove, is the lounge. The boys made the frame, under mother's direction, and we girls stuffed and covered it. When it is very cold, the lounge is drawn up to the fire, but usually it is turned round toward the window; we all, especially father, love to look at the plants.

"There is a fire-place at the other end of the room, and whenever we can heat the room with that we have the fire in it; an open, crackling, blazing fire brightens up the room so much; but such cold weather as this we must have a fire in the stove, which stands in the middle of the room. On either side of the fire-place stand father's and mother's big chairs. Mother's is a Boston rocker, covered with turkey-red calico; father's is made out of an old barrel. Rob sawed it out in shape of a chair, and put in the bottom; then we girls cushioned it like mother's and gave it to him on his sixtieth birthday. He would have laughed at the idea of sitting in a rocking-chair, but he never laughs at this, and takes a deal of comfort sitting in it. We made little stands to set beside each chair, for mother's work-basket and father's book or paper; the old family Bible, too, is there most often. This is how we made them: we picked out a straight, round stick, about four inches through, from the wood-pile, and the boys sawed off two pieces, three feet long, from it, and nailed round boards to both ends of each of them—solid oak plank for the bottom, to steady them, light pine boards at the top. We covered the tops, and plaited and tacked round the edges calico to match the chairs, one end of it being fastened to the top board, the other end at the bottom; then we tied cords tight round the middle of the standard, and we had as nice hour-glass stands as could be.

"Most of the chairs in the room are old-fashioned, rush-bottomed chairs; several have had their legs sawed off to make them more comfortable for the children, and mine has rockers on it, Rob did that.

"In the southwest corner is an old secretary, with drawers beneath, book-shelves above, and father's writing-desk sandwiched in between. This desk is never locked, and we children go to it whenever we want to write, only we must leave it in as good order as we find it. The drawers below hold pamphlets, magazines, and newspapers, so they shall not be scattered about the room, and on the shelves above are our books. We haven't a large library, but the books are all good, such as we enjoy reading. It is growing, too. Father adds a book now and then, and Rob and I have resolved to buy at least one new book a year with our own earnings. So far he has done ever so much better than that.—Childhood: its Care and Culture.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. RUTH MOODY, of Excelsior, Minnesota, earnestly requests the prayers of the Union in behalf of an old soldier who has suffered nearly a year from sciatic rheumatism. He was administered to December 20, 1897, by request, and although at first he received no marked benefit, since Saturday, January 1, he has been better than for months. Pray that he may be permanently healed.

Bro. David Williams, of St. Davids, Illinois, asks that saints will earnestly pray for the recovery of his daughter Alice, who is seriously ill.

Letter Department.

208 Austin Street,
WORCESTER, Mass., Dec. 31.

Editors Herald:—Arrived here last evening. I got through "courting" (serving as a juror) last week. Spent Christmas at Wheeling, West Virginia. Ate turkey with Brn. Smith and Tary. The Sunday school had a pleasant entertainment. The church was too small for all those who wished to attend, as many were obliged to go away.

On Sunday the 26th, Bro. James Craig and two others were baptized in the Ohio River by Bro. F. Ebeling, and confirmed in the afternoon; Bro. Craig was ordained to the office of an elder. The Spirit of God was present in great power both in the ordination and confirmation. The writer, with all others of the saints were pleased to witness Bro. Craig's return to the fold, and felt assured he would yet do a good work for the Master. We pray that the Spirit of the Lord may be with him to assist him to win souls to Christ. He also has my consent to labor wherever opportunity presents.

Bro. Joseph Smith's visit to Wheeling resulted in much good to the cause, as the saints were much cheered and strengthened by his timely advice and counsel. Bro. and Sr. Smith's little boy Roy was quite ill when I left, but we hope and pray he is better ere this.

On the evening of the 29th I had the pleasure of uniting in the bonds of holy matrimony Bro. Edwin H. Garrett to Sr. Anna W. Hanna, of Cleveland, Ohio, at the home of the bride's mother. A concourse of relatives and friends thronged the house, which had been beautifully decorated for the occasion; gay holly, graceful ferns, lovely palms, and tropical plants made one forget the chilling blasts of winter and dream of the warm sunny days of June. The bride was tastefully robed.

in snowy white, and looked very beautiful indeed. The groom looked serene and happy, and was attired in the regulation suit of black. To the strains of the wedding march came the bridal procession into the parlor; first the groom and the best man, followed by the bride on the arm of her brother who gave her away, and ring and flower girls, and two bridesmaids (Sr. Warnock and the bride's niece, Lillie). At the conclusion of the ceremony a quartet rendered an appropriate selection, and the orchestra played some fine compositions. A sumptuous repast was served. While the guests were making merry at the festive board, sweet music pleased the ear and thrilled the heart. Every one was happy, and enjoyed themselves to their fullest capacity. They were the recipients of many costly and useful presents. Bro. Edwin and Sr. Anna are worthy young people, who have taken a very active part in both Sunday school and church work, and are held in high esteem by the saints and their numerous friends out of the church. We wish this young couple a pleasant and peaceful voyage. And may heaven be propitious, and amid all the trials incident to this life, may the hope of a higher and better life aid them; that as together they share life's joys and sorrows, so together they may be purified and fitted for the Master's service here and earn their eternal reward in the glorious beyond.

Expect to be in the East for about three weeks. Brethren will please address me at the above address.

Hastily yours,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

GLIDDEN, Iowa, Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—A week ago to-day I was in Perry, expecting to go south to preach; that night I dreamed I went north on train. In this dream I saw a man who seemed to be a Catholic priest, who offered me intoxicating drink. In this dream I thought my train was late; and now while I am writing, it comes to my mind that this was minutely fulfilled at Ogden, Iowa, where I changed cars. Other things were presented. Next morning I started north, going as far as my money would carry me; which was the above-named place. You may judge my surprise, when a man at Angus sat down beside me and said: "I saw you presented a clergy credential with ticket; suppose you're a minister."

"Yes," was the reply.

"My name is O'Connor," continued he, "I represent the Baptist Church; was once a Catholic priest."

I was very glad to meet him, as I wanted to learn all I could about Catholicism. After some talk along this line, argument was started on baptism for the remission of sins.

"Now," says he, "after 'repent' (Acts 2:38) is a comma; then after 'sins' is another. Now, what is in between these two commas can be taken out."

Indeed! thought I; at the risk of what? And "water" (John 3:5; 1 John 5:8) was "the word of God," according to this man's profound logic (?). And notwithstanding this, baptism in water was a command of God. I am foolish enough to believe, that the Lord told me that the doctrine of this man would make one spiritually drunk.

When interrogated about "apostles, gifts," etc., he confessed he "didn't know whether they were to continue or not." He admitted that he didn't "know everything."

Have spoke in schoolhouse near here three nights already; so far house has been well filled with attentive hearers.

Four years ago I had a dream of preaching in home schoolhouse on the gifts of the Spirit. It was so plain that I couldn't help but ask myself, Does that really mean preach? No! came the answer, I am not good enough for that. Two weeks passed away, and I dreamed again. This time I saw myself preaching, and on the wall hung a map of the western hemisphere. With pointer in hand, I pointed to it and said, "This is the land that was given to Joseph, who was sold into Egypt." This was convincing; but O, how hard it was to humble myself before God and say, here I am!

Two years ago, I consented to satisfy the curiosity of neighbors in hearing me preach. Without a text or word in mind I got up before a crowded house to tell them what I understood to be the way of life. My friends sat before me as I had before seen in a dream—the very subject was presented, and with it intelligence to make it plain. It made me feel happy, and how I desired that they might realize that God himself by his own power was speaking, using mortal clay in human form to warn them. I was only a farmer and my doctrine was too unpopular, so it didn't convict. When I think of God's goodness, I ask myself, What have I done to merit it?

"We thank thee, O God, for a prophet
To guide us in these latter days;
We thank thee for sending the gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays."

SOUTH GOULDSBORO, Me., Dec. 30.

Editors Herald:—I came to Bar Harbor some few days since, and being booked for this section during the winter, I tried to get a place to preach in that noted place of wealth and refinement. After several days' effort by Bro. Moses McCaleb, who is living there, we failed to secure the mission room of the ministers, on the plea that it would have a tendency of breaking them up. During this time I was at Town Hill, eight miles away, preaching. This is a new place, where our work had not been heralded before. What the outcome may be I am unable to say.

After learning I could not get the mission room in Bar Harbor, I went to Lawyer Lineman's office, who is the supervisor of schools in the place, and tried to get a schoolhouse in the west side of the city; and after asking me a great many questions about our faith, and thus giving me a chance to present to him the epitome of faith and to talk with him for a long time, he informed me that he would do all he could with the committee towards getting the house for me, inviting me to call later for an answer. I did so, to be informed by the gentleman that my case was hopeless, as the Unitarians had previously tried to get the house and being denied its use, the committee, although they did not find a word of fault with our religion, concluded it would not be right to let me in.

Believing it would be useless to stay in that place longer, I came to South Gouldsboro. Shall hold a series of meetings here, thence to Prospect and Birch Harbors, where I was the last of the fall and occupied the Union church for a while. I shall try to hold a series of meetings in each of these places, thence to North and West Hancock, and so on to various places as the Spirit may direct. Snow is holding back, and it is pleasant getting about.

Hopefully,

S. O. FOSS.

ROXBURY, Virginia, Dec. 29.

Editors Herald:—We, the saints of Roxbury, are here to enter complaint against you. We know we are not rich, we fear we are not very wise, we acknowledge we may not be very intellectual, but we believe we are devoted to the Master's cause and to our Prophet; and we desire to ask why, when our president and head of the church was coming almost to our doors, why, if he could not come in, not let us know that we might come out?

We are almost starving for the sight of an elder's face and the sound of his voice in words of encouragement, and imagine our sorrow and disappointment, ye who can, when we learned through the Herald that Bro. Smith had been in Richmond, only eighteen miles away!

And we ask again, is our complaint not just? The work at Roxbury may be moving, but if so it is almost imperceptible. If persecution and looks of hate could kill, we would have been dead long ere this; but "thanks be to God who giveth us the victory," we are enabled to look beyond these petty cares and trials of life, to that crown of eternal life that shall be ours if we faint not. We ask the saints, all those who have faith in God's promises, to especially pray for a young man here, who is ill with what seems to be consumption. He is the son of two who have lately entered the work, and though not of the faith, is studying the church books and papers, and seems to be interested; and would, if he embraced the gospel, be an ornament to the church.

In gospel bonds,

THE SAINTS OF ROXBURY, VIRGINIA.

PORCUPINE, Wisconsin, Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—Not having seen any news from this part for some time, I write to say the work is onward here. Since Bro. C. H. Burr and I packed up the district tent, because of cold weather, I have been laboring in Chippewa, Pierce, and Pepin Counties, while Bro. Burr went to Southern Wisconsin district to labor. I made two trips to Twin Lakes, Chippewa County, one in October and one in November, to look after the work; and I can truly say the saints there are like sheep without a shepherd, meeting only when some elder comes there. They have a branch of forty members, yet no one to preside. How I long for the time when there will be High Priests enough in the church to be sent to take the oversight of such branches.

Our district conference at Porcupine, December 4 and 5, was a good one. The weather was somewhat cold, so that the district was not very well represented; yet the Lord was with us. Two young priests came up from the southern district, Brn. J. B. Wildermuth and Frank Sanford; they remained with me after the conference, and we have held meetings here and at West Frankfort, three miles from here, almost every night since then, with good attendance and interest. December 18, one was baptized, and yesterday two more came into the fold, and others say they will be baptized soon. Bro. J. B. Wildermuth has gone up to Ono, Pierce County, to hold meetings over Sunday, while Bro. Sanford and I hold the fort here until sometime next week when we expect to join Bro. Wildermuth at Ono, where we expect to continue for a time.

BASALT, Idaho, Jan. 1.

Editors Herald.—Though silent for some time, we have not been entirely inactive, notwithstanding there is ample excuse in this field for rusting out. Bro. Davis and the writer parted company at Pocatello some two months ago. He took train for Montpelier, and I drove to Blackfoot and held a series of meetings at Riverside, eight miles from Blackfoot, assisted by my Bro. John. Quite an interest was awakened, and arrangements made for a discussion with two Brighamite elders on the question of "succession." They wanted a few weeks to prepare in, so set the time for January 9.

From there I came to this place, where I found Bro. Anthony laboring as opportunities and physical strength admitted of. We enjoyed a visit and sacrament service with the saints at the home of Bro. George Heaton. Here I left my single horse rig, and in company with Bro. Anthony with his conveyance we spent the month of December traveling and visiting saints and places west. Our first objective point was Malta, which we reached the third day out, going via Pocatello. We held three meetings at Malta, and being more warmly clothed from Bro. Leonard Condit's store, and needed means furnished us by Bro. C. L. Albertson, of Albion, we concluded to continue our journey to Hagerman, which we reached after two rather hard days' drive, going via the Great Shoshone Falls. Owing to the rainy time in which we reached the Falls we were not able to get to a good point of observation, and had to be content with a less perfect view of these yet to be more renowned natural wonders. We crossed on the ferry at a point just above the falls, so dangerously near in fact that the possibilities of the cables breaking comes unpleasantly to one's mind as he realizes that only a miracle could save him from taking the 210 feet perpendicular plunge just a few yards below. However, we were safely landed on the opposite side of the Snake River, and congratulated ourselves on getting across on half fare, because of clerical appearance. We had to be satisfied after a week's stay at Hagerman to leave without having accomplished anything, so far as we could discern. Held one meeting only, and but few of the members were able to attend then.

Considering our limited finances we thought best to return by way of Malta, where we could find friends to stop with. We were cared for at Albion by Bro. Fuller's family, old friends from Little Sioux, and accorded the free use of the courthouse one night while Bro. Anthony broke the bread of life to an interested congregation of some forty or fifty.

Sr. B. F. Mahoney kindly remembered the needs of the traveling missionary also, and we reached Malta in time to enjoy the Christmas festivities with kind folks there, and the Sunday following held a couple of services in the new and commodious hall of Condit and Sons.

Bishop Taylor, of Elba, kindly proffered us their house for Monday evening, "provided we would confine ourselves to the Scriptures, and not abuse them," we accepted, and held forth there, Bro. Anthony giving them a clear and convincing discourse on the "successor." They would not venture any reply or remarks; but we were told afterwards that it was to be replied to the following Sunday. However, we were not invited to come and hear, and while the weather was favorable, thought best to finish our journey, and be on hand to report ready for battle when the time for the proposed discussion should come off. Though we did not accomplish as much as we would have liked, we had a rather pleasant four or five hundred mile journey—the expenses of which were met by the saints en route.

On our return here, December 30, we learned that the fire kindled at Riverside, in Bro. Anthony's field of labor, had not wholly become extinguished, we hope to renew efforts with the New Year, and that some honest souls may be reached in these regions.

If the discussion as agreed upon materializes, we will report. Though agreements were entered into and witnessed, we will feel more sure when the contest begins.

In bonds,
S. D. CONDIT.

BLAIRSTOWN, Mo., Jan. 5.

Editors Herald.—The debate between Elder H. T. Alexander of the Christian Church and Bro. Philemon Pement closed last Saturday. I must say I enjoyed it very much.

Alexander said he was there to affirm a church with a visible body, but not a spiritual body, and that the kingdom spoken of in Daniel 2: 44 was set up by the apostles at Jerusalem, A. D. 33, and was to stand for ever; and that the Christian Church now was a continuation of the same.

Brother Pement showed that the Church of Christ, Senior, was born at Jerusalem, but that the Church of Christ (?), Jr., was born at Brush Run, Pennsylvania; quite a difference in the time of their birth. That the Jerusalem Church of Christ was founded by the direct command of God, and the "Brush Run" Church of Christ was founded on an "if;" not much difference, you know.

The last proposition was on the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. I never saw the time that its divine origin was more fully sustained than it was at this discussion. Alexander first claimed that the Book of Mormon was translated by "Joe Smith" from the Kinderhook plates, because he had a history that said so. After he had been exposed on this position, he then said Joseph Smith got a bag of white sand and made the fools believe he had a gold Bible. But Bro. Alexander failed to sustain this. Next he said that one Solomon Spalding had written such a book and "Joe and Rigdon" stole the manuscript and that we now palm it off on the people for a "golden Bible." But thanks be to God the "stick of Joseph" stood the test and the saints were confirmed that the word of God abideth forever.

Bro. Pement was greatly blessed of God and made one of the most able defenses for the latter-day work I ever heard.

Yours in bonds,
D. C. WHITE.

MARSHFIELD, Mo., Jan. 3.

Editors Herald.—Since our district conference at Mt. Grove, I have labored as health and circumstances would permit, in Oregon, Douglas, Wright, and Webster Counties. A part of this time has been devoted in looking after the Sunday school work. I think every missionary should look after the Sunday school work. I certainly think every branch should have a Sunday school. At Cain Hill, in Oregon County, the few saints by their untiring zeal have run a Sunday school near two years now, although they have no branch and no one holding the priesthood. Let other saints take notice of this and follow their example. Although there has been but little preaching there during that time, the latter-day work is kept before the people by the little band of Sunday school workers. It does not fall to my lot to baptize very many, but by a Godly walk and by plain preaching I try to get the truth clearly before the people. I like to see people converted before baptism, so that the standing ministry can begin with them where the missionary leaves off, and teach them to pray in secret and in public, and thus grow in favor with God and the saints; and by so doing become both a useful and permanent addition to the church. Brethren and sisters, far and near, let us all strive to be useful in our day. The year 1898 is now here; so let us form new resolutions for good, and then see that we do not fail to carry them out by the help of God. The different departments of church work must be looked after. The Herald, Autumn Leaves, Ensign, and our tithing and freewill offerings must be looked after. One department cannot say to the others, we have no need of you, but all are honorable and necessary. Onward and upward let us march.

IS IT CHARITY?

IN the revelation of April 11, 1897, it is said:—

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.—D. C. 119:2.

And that they must be without blame in word or in deed; and they must not be boisterous in speech, or in the relating of coarse and vulgar stories; and in Doctrine and Covenants a command is given:—

Contend against no church, save it be the church of the Devil.—Sec. 16:4.

And we are instructed to “speak the truth in soberness,” and if we have not faith, hope, and charity, we can do nothing. And we are to speak evil of no man, but in meekness instruct those who oppose their own interests; and we are commanded to “preach the word”—the gospel of peace and its saving graces. Can any man that is called to represent Christ candidly consider the above, and then indulge in berating, treating lightly and sportively the weaknesses of humanity, as is developed in the various creeds of modern religionists of the day? Can he call them hypocrites? dupes of the Devil? their preachers not having horse sense? consummate fools? that any man with common sense can see their errors? and that their religion is all bosh? that their converts are scared to heaven through fear of hell? etc., etc. Is he supposed to be in line of duty when he switches from the main line, and side-tracks for the purpose of pouring hot shot into the already tottering walls of babylon? Is it charity to tear a man's house down over his head before a better one (at least) is builded by the side of it, in which he can find shelter? or is it not enough to place the beauties and grandeur of this everlasting gospel, scientifically and philosophically, before the minds of intelligent people in a clear, earnest, humble way, and let them strike their own contrast and berate and reflect upon themselves if they choose? would it not be more likely to strike the silver chord in the hearts of the children of promise, to be gentle, kind of heart, candid, and courteous in demeanor, free from sarcasm in word and gesture; but charitably presenting the benefits derived by embracing the truth, carefully soliciting their most tender sympathies in behalf of the author of truth? And would it in anywise outrage the dignity of said representative to concede the point—or condition of religious liberty now enjoyed by us—that it has been brought about by a series of reformations from whose individual efforts the numerous sects and factions have sprung, and that those individuals are entitled to credit and honor in the sight of our heavenly Father for doing the work assigned them as we are for doing our respective duties?

It seems to the writer that it would be ungentlemanly, discourteous, and very unkind, after receiving the benefits of our progenitors' spilled blood and roasted flesh, to turn our guns vauntingly upon and riddle the ship because of its defects, and point the finger jeeringly at its crew because they cling to, revere, and worship the several planks used in her construction. It appears to the writer that much persecution is brought on by the unwise use of words and uncouth gestures by those called upon to represent us, and by so doing they misrepresent the spirit of the church and cater to the spirit of the world.

If I understand the spirit of the gospel it is to build up, not tear down; to heal, not wound; to comfort, not distress; and the missionary that faithfully performs the work intrusted to him will find use for all the talents he may possess in preaching the “principles of the doctrine of Christ.” Paul says:—

Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned; from which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.—1 Tim. 1:5-7.

And if Michael the archangel durst not bring against the chief of enemies

a railing accusation, why, O, why, should we poor creatures presume to trespass on the feelings and rights of those who may choose to differ with us in opinion? and if we seek to win them to Christ, why should we anger them with unkind reflections? If we were trying to catch a wild horse, is it not more reasonable to introduce our friendship with a pan of oats instead of a club?

As stars upon the tranquil sea
In mimic beauty shine,
So, words of kindness from the heart,
Reflect their source divine.
Oh, then, be kind who e'er thou art
That breatheth mortal breath,
And it shall cheer thee all thy days,
And comfort thee in death.
In hope of better conditions,

HENRY C. SMITH.

MALACHI, AND OTHERS.

THE Latter Day Saint of to-day should rejoice, living as we do in the “dispensation of the fulness of times;” and with recent revelations given, the Lord showing his will in complete church organization; and to speed the fulfillment of this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness, unto all nations, and then shall the end come.

How much there is to be done. How shall it be accomplished? By the willingness of God's people, and the power of God. Our gospel offers temporal, physical, and spiritual salvation; but only by obedience to the laws governing.

Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven is as applicable to saint to continue in the gospel as for a sinner to obey first principles. It is evident to all, that no man can keep a law without being blessed, nor break a law without coming under curse. Tithing is a doctrine—gospel principle—a just law for systematic giving, and if obeyed the church would not languish; greater spiritual blessings would be obtained, for the reason your faith would be increased; in fact a compliance with it shows faith beyond that of the individual who does not “prove the Lord.”

Get your Bible, and follow Malachi, third chapter. In first verse we have Behold, I will send my messenger [angel], and he shall prepare the way before me.

As a people we delight in quoting this to show "gospel restored." All well; that is fulfilled in nineteenth century. Then reading on to close of verse 5, we say that means second coming of our Lord. All right; that is a Latter Day Saint doctrine. Now we drive another wedge into the log of orthodoxy. In verse 6:—

I am the Lord, I change not.

We say that proves he will send angels and minister, as he used to do. All well. Then it means that verses 8 to 13 are for us, as it used to be for others; more especially to us, as it is a chapter for latter days. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me." In what? "Tithes and offerings." If you are guilty, make restitution, showing a repentant spirit. Now an offer is made:—

Prove me . . . if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room to receive it. I will rebuke the devourer for your sake.

Do we believe it?

If ye seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give; but beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old.—Doc. and Cov. 38:9.

Here we have a spiritual and temporal combination enough to satisfy all. Or now, Are you a grumbler? fulfilling verse 14, saying:—

It is vain to serve God, and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance.

But to those who are, "not forgetful hearers, but doers of the word," in verse 16 we have:—

They that feared the Lord spake often one to another: the Lord hearkened, and heard it, a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

Now let us connect this with Deuteronomy 14:22, 23, to get a definition of the expression—"fear," in Malachi 16 verse. Moses, in the above, says verse 22:—

Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.

And in the latter part of verse 23:—

That thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always.

So those that are to be heard, remembered, are those that observe the temporal law as a part of the celestial law. Continuing in verse 17, Malachi says:—

They shall be mine, . . . in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his only son that serveth him.

I am glad that tithing is strongest in this chapter of all others, because it begins with the establishment of the restored gospel, by an angel, and ends with the final reward of the saints. "There is something in the practice of virtue unless a man be a confirmed hypocrite, where the outward act has a tendency to compel corresponding inward virtue," and a compliance to temporal law invariably overcomes stinginess, etc. Jacob vowed a vow to God, saying:—

. . . I will surely give a tenth unto thee.—Gen. 28:20-22.

Or he entered into a partnership with God. The Lord is the great capitalist—Jacob the steward. Read the result. Who can read Leviticus 27:30; Deuteronomy 14:22 to end; 2 Chronicles 31:5-11; and seeing these promises and payments of the Lord, and "I change not," without being converted? We trusted God for remission of sins. Why; he promised it on obedience to law. We trust him for salvation. Why; he promised it. Now one promise of his is equal with another, or none are good.

He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved.

These signs shall follow them that believe, are no more the Lord's promise than that,

Prove me now, whether I will not pour out blessings upon you.

Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

Be a drouth-stricken crop for some.

We have heard good brethren pray: "Thy kingdom come;" "Speed thy work;" "Bless the ministry and their families;" "Establish Zion;" "Give us rain;" "Bless our crops." In these they asked the Lord to go into partnership—but they pocket the cash and keep it. And then sing: "Send forth the sowers;" "Shout the tidings;" "Savior, hasten thine appearing." And when the singing is done—all is done as far as they are concerned.

Show me your faith without works, and I will show you my faith by my works.

Or transpose it: Show me your love without your dollars, and I will show you my love by my cash. In the days of Christ, as now, the admonition was given to care for the widow—the poor, and condemnation in loss of spirituality has resulted where failure to comply is seen.

In Hebrews, fifth chapter, read: Christ is made a High Priest forever after the order of Melchisedek. Abraham, as a representative man of the people, paid tithes to Melchisedek; so we see we are to pay to "Christ" forever—long as the church lasts.

The Savior declares in Matthew 23:23, 24:—

For ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not leave the other [tithing] undone.

Next verse:—

Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.

So when Christ says they paid tithes, it must be that is the camel, they swallowed it; but it is too much for our brethren. Unbelief hates literal and present tense promises. We see that is true in the religious world in general. They believe in God; and miracles was, and will be; but not now. So we may say—tithing was, and will be, but don't tear my heartstrings, as they are around my purse—now. Is your faith weak, your spirituality at a low ebb; if so—"prove me now;" put a "temporal plaster" over your heart, and note the "spiritual pulse beat;" or, make a hypodermic thrust of gold or silver solution into the Bishop's empty "box" and see how quickly the Lord will satisfy you on the question of what is the best money as a "standard."

Read Proverbs 3:5 to 10: It begins, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart," and ends with honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase, so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

It will soon show whether you trust the Lord or not.

Personally, I soon solved this financial problem. I took two brethren in comparison, both diligent, God-fearing, respected men; both well to do; one paid tithes, say $500, the other none. "God shall reward every man according to his deeds." The giving was a good deed. Must not one gain, the other lose, in the day of rewards. Justice says, Yes. And whose prayer was consistent before God and man in asking for the "spread of gospel work." "He that will do my will shall know of the doctrine." That is a good offer to all; and it is that you shall know of the doctrine of tithes and offerings, as well as doctrine in general.

We have been asked, Am I under the law? My father paying tithes of that which I inherited! Yes; your father paid on his capital. We are to pay as we are "increased"—prospered—hence what was father's capital became your income, or increase.

Ques.—Is my home to be tithed?
Ans.—Yes. Two saints may be worth $5,000 each; one may have $4,000 in a home, the other $1,000; the only justice is, my all is tithed.

Ques.—Life insurance—is it to be tithed, and if so, what part? Ans.—If you are in a company you must have done so as an investment or business transaction; if the company is good, and we have a right to presume your being in it that it is, so for example you have a $1,000 policy payable under various options on twenty years, you have paid in $30 per year for five years, or $150; you then have a deposit of that amount, and owe the Lord $15. You may say as one brother said, the company may burst. Well, the brother with a bank deposit can crowd out of the same hole. One young brother purchased a musical instrument (guitar) for $45, and asked shall I tithe it? Yes. Why? For the reason you were prospered $45, and chose to spend it that way. I might buy a cow with my money, and there would be no question on tithing that.

One tenth is justice to rich and poor alike. You say you cannot afford it. You are commanded to rest one day in seven. You rest one day—or one seventh of your time, equally as much time as the rich man. Do you complain? No. Why? Because you like and wish to rest. Faith and love in the gospel sense will lead you to do all. Hoping that as we love the cause of Christ, we may serve him with might, mind, and strength,

PERSECUTION.

AS LONG as water slakes thirst or quenches fire, the fraudulent and false, the base and abominable in the religious arena of the world will antagonize the unsullied gospel. This unhallowed opposition, when enthroned in despotic power sweeps along the avenues of time, and the highways of progress, and the thoroughfares of mankind with bleeding innocence and expiring virtue chained to the fiery wheels of the cruel Juggernaut. The doctrine of Christ has no neutral grounds, for, indeed, the God-man stated plainly the pro and con, or for and against, as touching this all-important question of pure and undefiled religion. Himself, with his illustrious predecessors and successors, had deep-seated convictions, and courage to avow them. Their unswerving fidelity, their fixed and settled loyalty, their ardent zeal and aggressive demeanor crowned with success the blessings of God and the fruits of the Spirit, caused adverse elements to rage. Such things as derision, hate, calamitous tantalizing, bonds and imprisonment, confiscation and despoiling, torture and rack, faggot and stake, fire and sword, were souvenirs of their faith, and passports to glory.

This world contains a huge chapter of wrongs, and to chronicle in detail all the misery, woe, and premature death that man has brought to man would be an immense volume. When we bear in mind that the sad and sorrowful burden bearer was not only by times hungry and thirsty, but that he had to brook a world of opposition and traverse a sea of trouble, we ought not to faint in the following. To be a disciple surely means to tread in his footsteps come weal or come woe. In that he died that we might live, we must bear the cross of suffering and crucify the flesh, so that the crown will be forthcoming. To cope with and surmount temptation and trial; to meet, combat, and eventually vanquish the enemy requires fortitude, skill, and the grace of God. Over the mountain the sea is sleeping, beyond the cloud the sun is shining, and the darkest hour harbingers a bright dawn and a sunny day of peace and rest. The products of the ocean come through hardship and adventure, the precious metals of the eternal hills are stowed away in the deep recesses and lonely defiles, and the harvests of the fields are reaped by bone labor. The tiniest flower, the monarch of the forest, and in fine, all things of beauty and utility come up through adversity. The blasts that sweep the plain but scatter the seed. The lightning flash that terrorizes, purifies. The rocks upon which the current dashes dispel the malaria. As in the laboratory of nature, so in the realm of grace we are to conquer, or become enslaved.

The illustrious martyrs from Abel to John the forerunner, and from the weeping One to the victims of Carthage, Illinois, are solemn reminders that the war is not yet over. It seems outrageous that the long flow of time and the annals of mankind are all crimsoned with the red hand of slaughter. If the wild tribes and savage clans of the earth were the leading factors in persecuting those that conscientiously differed from them it would be a blessing in favor of the civilized world. Enlightened nations have both prescribed and proscribed faith and morals; and, zounds! the extirpating of heretics followed in the wake of their unhallowed work. Woe betide both civil rights and spiritual liberty when beliefs are circumscribed to thirty-nine articles of faith. Knox's formula, the Augsburg confession, the shorter or longer catechism, the M. E. or any other discipline of human origin or arrangement, a prayer book, or any manual of devotion whatever, for, lo! and behold, "Where the Spirit of God is, there is liberty," as also saith the law.

Prodigious numbers, from the gray haired sire to the new born babe, have been swept from the earth like the leaves before the blast. The great trans-Atlantic poet tersely said,

Man's inhumanity to man,
Makes countless thousands mourn.

Imperial Rome was a vast engine where cruel tyrants and rapacious monsters in human form were enthroned in despotic authority and power. History chronicles ten virulent persecutions under the reign of as many monarchs; namely, Nero, A. D. 64-68; Domitian, 81; Trajan, 98; Marcus Aurelius, 161; Severus, 193; Maximianus, 236; Decius, 249; Valerius, 254; Aurelian, 270; Diocletian, 303. Authorities do not exactly agree on the very year these rulers issued orders and set in motion the governmental machinery against the poor victims of royal vengeance, and just how long they swayed their calamitous scepters. Their reigns were generally of brief duration, and but few continued a double decade to fan the flames of intolerance.

At intervals, while humane and judicious men were on the throne, the unrepealed laws of previous tyrants, and the lying accusations of covetous pagans, jeopardized the property, liberty, and lives of the Christians. Some of the poor sufferers were not judicious in their conversation to, and about the idolatrous votaries; but were so very obstinate as to stir up hatred, and invite anger rather than through a wise use of the law of kindness and forbearance turn away wrath. Many even courted the martyr's cross, so that they might be sure of the martyr's crown. Dogmatic zeal was thought to be true piety, and physical suffering the passport to heaven. While a disciple of Christ should not engage with the rioters; but, the rather, shun the appearance of evil, and have no fellowship with evil doing and darkness, still he must come so close in touch with the world as to warm, cheer, enlighten, and save the savable. You gain the good will of your neighbor, then he will hear you at an opportune time, unless he is wedded to some hateful idol.

Julian, called "the apostate," ascended the throne 361 A. D., and reigned twenty months. He sought to revive polytheism, and the pagan worship, and authorized the captious Jews to return to, and strive to rebuild Jerusalem. Unparalleled zeal and fervid energy, backed up by the imperial treasure, and the art of man, and the wisdom of the age did not, and could not make the enterprise a success, for the prescience of God through his dearly beloved Son had forecast that the holy city should be trodden down of the heathen until the Gentile fullness was an assured fact. It was said that balls of fire burst from the ground, accompanied with excessive heat, drove the burnt workmen from the place, so that the affair was an abandoned failure. This unhappy monarch fell in death, on a distant battle field, against the Persians. He was the last ruler that sought to revive and keep up idolatrous superstitions, although all worship had more or less of questionable rites, and ceremonies, and practices.

After pagan Rome became converted to popery, by degrees the ecclesiastical tempered, changed, and finally dictated and controlled the temporal. Her arrogance, oppression, pride, hypocrisy, and thirst for opulence and honor, ease and power, turned all Europe into a wide, deep, dark grave. For over a thousand years the eternal seven-hilled city of Rome kept all moral, mental, artistic, physical, and spiritual culture chained to the Vatican. When a man cannot breathe the air of political freedom and religious liberty, he can hardly say his soul is his own. The Christian (?) capital of the world (!) as the Italian city on the Tiber called herself, is on the wane, in both acknowledged power, and magnificence.

The cross of the imperial convert, Constantine the Great, and the crescent of Mohammed, the desert prophet of Mecca, and his wild tribes of mountain and plain, have clashed on many a gory field in days of old. Under the sway of the papacy the Albigenses, the Waldenses, the dwellers in the vales of Piedmont, the followers of Huss and Jerome, the Bohemian martyrs, the disciples of Luther and Calvin, the French Huguenots, and hosts of others suffered untold inconveniences. Spanish fanaticism and the inquisition swelled the tide of suffering and martyrdom. Every protestant country, too, where church and state are combined have displayed the red hand of war on all dissenters, evangelical movements; and powerful religious organizations tip the balance of power, and tinge, if not mold legislation. They may disavow political preferments and proclivities; but partisan leaders, and shrewd wire-pulling, mind manipulating demagogues will take off their hats and bow quite low all the same. It is strange that peace and war, pleasure and pain, prosperity and adversity, and even life and death are in such close, minute proximity, that it is quite difficult to tell where the one ends and the other begins; but we must discriminate.

How often you can hear the remark, "I am glad no single church is in universal power," etc. If left to themselves, and the spirit of the world, woe betide the soul that chanced to see and act in a different manner. The theological whip would crack, the executioner's utensils would be called into requisition, as in the Dark Ages.

The saints are more or less ostracized; and occasionally violence and actual suffering are their heritage.

All things can and will be so turned and tempered that they are but mercies in disguise. The thing is to be faithful under trial and kind and patient while under the harrow. I could give a specimen or so of recent untoward experiences, but choose to forbear and pray for all. M. T. SHORT.

Sunday School Associations.

INSTITUTE AND RELIGIO.

(Concluded from last week.)

The Institute began its work promptly at 9:30 a. m., December 27, occupying from the opening till 10:45 in illustrating what is Effective Teaching by T. A. Hougas. From 10:45 till noon intermission, the Duties of District Association officers were ably presented by W. N. Robinson.

The afternoon and evening sessions were occupied by the Religio work, in the presentation of suggestions, topics, and papers which were quite replete with information covering the subjects treated; the Spirit of God assisting the instructors in these as well as in the forenoon session.

The forenoon sessions of December 28 was occupied by Mrs. Louise Palfrey and Maggie Blair in giving instruction upon Primary and Intermediate Class work. Many good suggestions were presented, showing thought and an experience in this class of work by each.

The afternoon session was occupied by W. N. Robinson in giving instruction on the Duties of Sunday School Officers; followed by the subject of Teacher's Meetings, being treated by J. F. Mintun. Much favorable comment was heard as to the value and importance of the instruction given.

At 7:30 the subject of The Home Department was treated by J. F. Mintun, and because of its being comparatively a new subject, much interest was shown in it, and several concluded to introduce some of the features presented in their future work. Following this T. A. Hougas represented an outline, showing the difference between a profitable and an unprofitable servant. The following is the result of his work, and conclude it best to produce it in this connection:—

- | PROFITABLE. | UNPROFITABLE. |
|-------------------------------------|---|
| 1. One who loves his work. | 1. One who does nothing. |
| 2. One who is prompt. | 2. One who does not prepare. |
| 3. One who is persistent. | 3. One who does only what he is commanded. |
| 4. One who originates and executes. | 4. One who displays abroad but does not work at home. |
| 5. One who is willing. | 5. One who holds a place but does not fill it. |
| 6. One who is capable. | 6. One who does only that which is easy. |

The evening session was closed by a very interesting temperance talk by Mrs. Callie Howe, State Organizer of W. C. T. U.

Forenoon session of December 29 was occupied by review work, conducted by J. F. Mintun, followed by the treating of the subject, What Constitutes a Sunday School? by T. A. Hougas.

The afternoon session was occupied by giving instructions in reference to a library, its benefits to officers and teachers, and to pupils. The object of a library, quality of books to be used, and how to obtain such books. Much of the Spirit of God was enjoyed. This was followed by J. F. Mintun treating upon the subject of Visiting Committee, in which it was shown that such a committee was very desirable, and efficacious where the work of such committee had been done.

While all the work previously done was good, and attested as such by the presence of the Holy Spirit, yet the evening session was the superior of all other sessions. A paper prepared by Sr. Emma Hougas and Joseph Roberts and called a Sunday School Newspaper was read, part by Sr. Roxanna Gaylord and part by Bro. F. E. Cochran; the contents of which was excellent, and the Spirit accompanying the reading was grand. Following this the Autumn Leaves was represented by Louise Palfrey and F. E. Cochran, with a few testimonies by some of the Instructors, and finally a prophecy by Sr. John M. Terry, in which the Lord expressed his approval of the work done and the sacrifices made to be present, and giving encouraging promises of what the future would be for the departments for good represented at this Institute. The Graceland College was ably represented during the Institute by Prof. J. A. Gunsolley, and some were favorably impressed to attend or to make effort to do so.

Thus closed the second annual Interstate Sunday School Institute, giving to the Sunday school and Religio workers the strongest encouragement that has ever been given as yet since the establishment of such departments of work as auxiliaries to the church. J. F. MINTUN, Reporter.

LEVI GAMET, Sec.

BORN.

SUTTON.—To Bro. J. R. and Sr. Libbie Sutton, October 10, 1897, at Fulton, Iowa, a daughter, and named Anna Rebecca. Blessed at Fulton, Iowa, December 26, 1897, by Elders J. R. Sutton, John Heide, and M. G. Maudsley.

DIED.

SKINNER.—At his residence, Auburn, Iowa, December 11, Thomas J. Skinner. Deceased was born in Cass County, Michigan, October 23, 1854; moved with his father to Calhoun County, Iowa, in the spring of 1865. Was married to Miss Olive E. Reynolds, April 16, 1876. Six children were born to them, two passing to the beyond before him, leaving four and a wife to mourn, besides numerous relatives and friends. His funeral took place from Cottonwood chapel, three and a half miles east of Auburn, December 14, 1897, and his remains were laid away in the cemetery adjacent to the church. Services in charge of Woodmen Lodge, of which he was a member; sermon by Elder Hyrum O. Smith.

TARY.—December 20, 1897, Bro. G. B. Tary, at his home in Tyler County, West Virginia, in his seventy-second year, being born May 1, 1826. He was a member of the Christian Church for many years; but through the efforts of his son, O. J. Tary, he was led to an investigation of the Latter Day Saints' faith, and afterwards was fully convinced it was his duty to accept the same. He was baptized at Wheeling by Bro. G. T. Griffiths in May, 1896. For several months he had been in poor health and realized that his departure was near, but his hope for the future was bright, and he passed away peacefully, and was laid to rest to await the resurrection of the just. "Blessed are they who die in the Lord."

THOMPSON.—In Beaver, Utah, October 21, 1897, Elder William Thompson, aged 80 years. His death resulted from an accident. In 1853 he removed from England to Salt Lake City, where he was employed by B. Young as miller in the Liberty Park mill. Later he worked for J. E. Ames in the nineteenth ward mill. He located in Beaver in 1858, there he had a flour and feed store. He also acted as jailer, and was such during the time that John D. Lee was in prison. He united with the Reorganized Church in 1870, under the ministrations of Elder E. C. Brand, and continued with the church until death.

WINN.—At Manchester, Texas, December 18, 1897, Archie L., son of Bro. Nathan and Sr. Winn, aged 5 years and 5 days. Funeral services by Elder J. W. Kent.

WOODCOCK.—Sr. Mary Woodcock died at the home of Mr. Henry Urfer, Galland's Grove, Iowa, January 2, 1898, aged 80 years, 6 months, and 17 days. Sister Woodcock was born at Mason, Lawrence County, Ohio, June 16, 1817, and was baptized and confirmed by Elder Seymore Brunson, in 1833. She united with the Reorganization in an early day and has been a consistent member ever since. Funeral services were held at the saints' chapel in charge of Elder R. Wight, Elder Charles E. Butterworth delivering the discourse. Services were largely attended and the remains were laid to rest in the Doyle cemetery to wait the morn of the first resurrection.

BROWN.—At her home, Centralia, Marion County, Illinois, December 28, 1897, Sr. Clara Brown, aged 18 years. Was married to William Brown, September 9, 1896. She was baptized July 21, 1897, and was strong in the faith of the saints. She was buried in the Johnsonville cemetery, Wayne County, Illinois. Funeral conducted by J. D. Stead; sermon preached by Elder I. A. Morris at the saints' chapel, near Johnsonville, after which she was laid to rest until the morning of the resurrection of the just, when we hope she will come forth. Husband and three step-children mourn.

BOWMAN.—At Wheeler, Iowa, December 28, 1897, Blanch Valora Bowman, aged 3 years, 11 months, 18 days; daughter of Bro. Sampson and Sr. Eva Bowman, loved by all who knew her. Funeral at the saints' church, conducted by Elder D. Hougas.

EPIDEMICS AND FAMINE.

The principal epidemic of the year has been the plague in India, which swept away 18,037 victims; 14,236 persons have died in Japan of dysentery, and 446 in the Southern States of yellow fever. Famine in India has carried off 40,000 persons, and it is estimated that 150,000 persons have been its victims in the unfortunate island of Cuba. The total number of deaths from both causes in 1897 was 222,902, as compared with 22,676 in 1896, 79,461 in 1895, and 171,910 in 1894.

BATTLES.

The loss of life by battles is smaller than it was in 1896. The total roughly estimated is 103,451, as compared with 129,080 in 1896, 157,986 in 1895, and 82,750 in 1894. The loss was distributed as follows:—

Cuba	24,303	Turko-Grecian
Africa	18,205	war	11,839
Brazil	10,859	Uruguay	2,600
Armenia	3,625	Formosa	108
Argentina	238	India	7,024
China	15,000	Persia	800
Philippines	7,750

MARINE DISASTERS.

The following list of losses of life by wrecks upon the ocean and inland waters is approximately correct. It is not possible to make an absolutely accurate statement, as in some cases there was no record left of the number of the crew or passengers. The list shows 2,426 lives were lost upon the ocean and 65 on inland waters, a total of 2,491, as compared with 3,912 in 1896, 4,250 in 1895, and 6,881 in 1894.

EMBEZZLEMENTS OF 1897.

The record of embezzling, forgery, defaulting, and bank wrecking for 1897 shows an increase, being $11,248,084 as compared with $9,465,921 in 1896 and $10,423,205 in 1895; . . . being an average of about $937,340 per month. . . .

Out of 411 cases of embezzling reported 19 persons stole over $50,000 each, 22 over $100,000 each, and 5 over $500,000 each.

The losses are distributed as follows:—

Stolen by city and county officials	$3,111,437
From banks	4,448,291
By agents	1,251,610
Forgeries	517,000
From loan associations	542,713
By postmasters	156,150
Miscellaneous stealings	1,220,883

The summary of defalcations by years from 1878 to 1897 is as follows:—

1878	$2,784,000	1889	$3,600,000
1879	2,754,000	1890	3,622,056
1880-'81	4,888,000	1891	10,720,249
1882	2,900,000	1892	3,837,547
1883	2,350,000	1893	19,029,602
1884	22,154,000	1894	25,234,112
1885	3,475,000	1895	10,423,205
1886	3,780,000	1896	9,465,921
1888	2,240,000

In preparing these statistics the Tribune omits the individual items, though they have been carefully kept, for the obvious reason that an injustice might be done some person by publishing his name as an embezzler, even though he had been arrested. Now and then a person is acquitted of the charge months after his arrest, and to keep track of such an acquittal is difficult. These acquittals are so rare, however, that the figures are not materially affected. — Chicago Tribune, January 1, 1898.

COURT RULES ON PURGATORY.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 8.—Chief Justice Doster of the Supreme Court to-day, in an opinion, which is considered by lawyers an able document, stood squarely by the Catholic doctrine teaching the existence of a place or state of temporary punishment for souls after death. In other words, he upheld the Catholic theory of purgatory and decided accordingly. [The Judge simply decided the question of the validity of the gift and defined the attitude of the law in such cases, etc. He did not in any other sense uphold "the Catholic theory of purgatory."—ED.] It was the famous case known in the courts as "The Wandering Jew." This case has been going up and down the whole gamut of Kansas jurisprudence for several years and the final act was played only to-day.

In the town of Ottawa several years ago there lived a happy old Irish couple named Dennis and Mary Brophy. . . . In the course of time Dennis died and soon after Mary followed him. She lived, however, to see a grandson ordained a priest by the Catholic Church. . . . His name is Father Collins. . . . When Dennis was gathered to his fathers he left all his property to Mary, and when the latter was about to yield the spirit she was generous to her kin. . . . She gave them . . . money, lands, and tenements; but mindful of the future . . . she appropriated $500 to her clerical grandson to say masses and offer prayers for her soul. It was in the nature of a trust.

GRANDDAUGHTER CONTESTS THE WILL.

One of her granddaughters, Abbie Harrison, was not as devoted to the old faith as other relatives, and, although she got her share of the fortune, she was still greedy and wanted more. She enjoined the trustee from paying the $500 out for masses, holding that a disembodied spirit, from the very nature of things, could not be made the beneficiary of a bequest. Father Collins was perfectly frank and fair about the matter and let the law take its course. The judge of the District court settled the matter entirely on the ecclesiastical feature of the matter and decided according to "Lambert's Catholic Faith." When it came to the Supreme Court on appeal by Abbie Harrison, Judge Doster called to his aid the same authority, as well as other authorities on ecclesiastical law, and then, in connection with the constitution of the United States and the bill of rights, was enabled to write a very intelligent opinion on the subject. It is the first case of the kind in the history of Kansas jurisprudence. In accordance with the decision Father Collins can proceed at once to carry out the bequest, but there is nothing left to do but to pocket the money. He, being a more dutiful grandchild than Abbie Harrison, said the prayers and masses long ago, for he did not propose to allow the souls of his generous grandparents to suffer until the courts got around to their release. Judge Doster's opinion is, in part as follows:—

JUDGE DOSTER'S RULING.

"To properly interpret the will part of the will in question, and to determine whether effect can be given it, we must bear in mind the Catholic Church doctrine of purgatory. Purgatory is defined by an authoritative expositor of the church's creed to be: "A state of suffering after this life, in which those souls are for a time detained who depart this life after their deadly sins have been remitted as to the stain and guilt, and as to the everlasting pain that was due to them, but who have, on account of these sins, still some debt of temporal punishment to pay, as also those souls which leave this world guilty only of venial sin. In purgatory these souls are purified and rendered fit to enter heaven, where nothing defiled enters.'

"Devotees of this church believe 'that souls in purgatory are relieved by the sacrifices of men, by prayer and pious works, and almsdeeds.' Scriptural authority, as it is recognized by Catholics, though by others regarded as apocryphal, exists for the practice of offering prayers for the dead and for contributions for the church to enable it to perform its offices in their behalf.

"And making a gathering he (Judas of Machabeus) sent 12,000 drachms of silver to Jerusalem for sacrifice to be offered for the sins of the dead. (For if he had not hoped that they that were slain should rise again it would have seemed superfluous to pray for the dead.) And because he considered that they who had fallen asleep with godliness had great grace laid up for them. It is, therefore, a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loose from sin.'

"In the light of these beliefs, the act of Mary Brophy in making the bequest is reasonable and consistent, and should be upheld unless it be prohibited by some positive rule of law.

QUOTES THE BILL OF RIGHTS.

The opinion then quotes the bill of rights and the Kansas Constitution and the Constitution of the United States refers to English statutes favorable to religious toleration and continues:—

"Many other provisions illustrative of the degree of religious toleration allowed to the people of this country might be quoted. The bequest of Mary Brophy is valid by the letter of many of them and by the spirit of them all. We may question the sadness of her belief and may deride the same of efficacy of the service she desired to have performed, but the law has no care for contrariety of faith as to spiritual things and will, therefore, sanction the bequest she has made.

The law interferes with no mere religious opinions nor with religious practices except such as tend to subvert the foundation of public morals and order.

"A bequest of a sum of money made in the will of a member of the Roman Catholic Church for the celebration of mass for the souls of the testator and another will be construed as a gift direct to the donor with an injunction to the performance of the ceremonial name and not as made to him in trust for such purpose and therefore void because incapable of enforcement by beneficiaries in being.

"The English common law which avoided the bequests of the kind above stated, as being superstitious uses, never became a part of the law of this country, and the validity of the gift for the purpose named is therefore upheld."—Kansas City Times.

SKEPTICISM'S GROWING HOLD UPON EMINENT THINKERS IN THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

THE formal rejection of "all religions, including Christianity," as superstitions, in the will of the late Henry M. Tabor, suggests the inquiry how far this infidelity extends among men who give outward countenance to the Christian Church. It is probable that it is extensive at this time.

Even among the clergy themselves it appears very strikingly. The Rev. Dr. Rainsford, for instance, denies flatly the infallibility of the Bible, and treats the church as a mere association for moral and religious and political improvement. Dr. Briggs finds inaccuracy, positive misstatement, and downright fraud in the Bible. The Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott believes only so much of the Bible as commends itself to his judgment; that is, he treats it like any other book. They all carry to its study a critical spirit, from which a devout belief is discarded.

The old-fashioned faith in the Bible seems to be stronger among lay Protestants than among the clergy. They go on in the old ways without troubling themselves with the questioning which has entered into the theological seminaries and into the professional ministry.

It appears from a review of the progress of the churches in this country during the last year, which appears in the Independent, that there has been "a heathly gain" in churches and ministers of the various denominations. This gain extends to all the considerable denominations. The proportionate increase is especially large and particularly striking among the Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, being from 234,000 to 297,370, or 63,370. The Mormons, therefore, are nearly half as many as the Congregationalists, 630,000, or the Episcopalian communicants, 658,640.

The Roman Catholics comprise about one third of the 25,919,027 religious communicants enumerated in the union. The various bodies of Methodists have 5,735,898, and of Baptists 4,175,300. Next come in order the Lutherans, 1,507,466; Presbyterians, 1,490,162; Disciples of Christ, 1,051,079; Episcopalian, 658,640; Congregationalists, 630,000. The rest are scattered among a multiplicity of denominations.

The skepticism to which Mr. Taber's will gives expression has not benefited the skeptical denomination of the Unitarians, it containing, all told, the small number of 70,000. Nor has orthodox denial of hell helped the Universalists, who number only 51,025.—New York Sun.

EITHER MAY GO TO HEAVEN.

GALESBURG, Ill., Jan. 9.—A large congregation in the Universalist church was surprised this morning to hear the pastor, Dr. G. B. Stocking, announce that Robert Ingersoll has as good a chance for heaven as the Rev. W. H. Geistweit, the Baptist minister. Dr. Stocking was replying to a discourse by Mr. Geistweit upholding eternal punishment, and quoted from the judgment psalm in St. Matthew, in which Christ admits to bliss eternal those who have fed the hungry, given water to the thirsty, clothed the naked, and visited those in prison. These being the conditions of salvation, Dr. Stocking said Mr. Ingersoll has just as good a chance for entrance to the celestial city as the Rev. Mr. Geistweit. In speaking of the doctrine of eternal punishment as a cause of skepticism, Dr. Stocking said that the early teaching on this subject was what made Mr. Ingersoll an infidel. The congregation laughed when Dr. Stocking said Mr. Geistweit could sit by the eternal flame until he got warm.—Tribune.

RAINSFORD IN SKEPTIC MOOD.

BIBLE IS NOT INFALLIBLE; CHURCH AND CHURCHMEN NOT PERFECT. NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—In the course of his annual address to men last night the Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, rector of St. George's church, took occasion more than once to deny the infallibility of the Bible. He also asserted that the churches were not what they ought to be, and that clergymen were guilty of many shortcomings and weaknesses.

Dr. Rainsford said that for several years it had been his custom to have a plain talk with the men of his congregation and the men of New York on the first Sunday of the new year.

"To-night," said he, "I want to ask you men to associate, and I want to ask you to associate in the church. Outside the church men are judged for what they have.

"In the church, however, and in the church alone, you are judged for what you are. Your character is the only thing that counts. Come into the church, therefore, and then bring others in.

"We can't give you everything if you come, but we can give you something. We can't give you an infallible church, because the churches are far from what they ought to be. We can't give you infallible ministers, because ministers have many weaknesses and shortcomings. We cannot give you an infallible Bible, for the Bible is not an infallible book, but we can give you a light unto your feet and a hope for your lives."—New York Sun.

TASK OF THE CENTURY.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 2.—Professor Thomas Davidson, of New York, lectured before the members of the Ethical Culture society to-day in New Century Hall on the subject, "The Task of the Twentieth Century." Professor Davidson said in part:—

"The task of the ages—if, believing in evolution, we admit that they have any task—is the realization of self-conscious personalities, freely related to each other through the free attributes of knowledge, discriminating affection, and originative will. Such personalities alone can be true ends, since they alone have value on their own account.

"The first and most fundamental task of the coming century is the elaboration of a philosophy of the world in consciousness. Along with this philosophy must go an utter repudiation of everything that conflicts with it, no matter what authority it may claim. All pretended revelations, all supernaturalism, all unintelligible dogmas and mysteries, all religions that cannot make good their daring at the tribunal of reason, and romantic and sentimental views of life, all agnosticism, must be quickly but resolutely brushed aside.

"We must live by truth and truth alone. Even Christianity must give way and men and women must cease calling themselves Christians, since that implies the acceptance of supernatural revelation and authority."—Chicago Tribune.

CHARACTER BUILDING.

ONE of the chief charms of the gospel, aside from the giving of life to hope for good in the world to come, is the influence accompanying by which the nature of the individual is brought into change and character built up. The gospel is essentially a character builder.

Obedience to the gospel is the result of an aroused conscience causing an effort in the man to shun the evil course which he has been made to see can only end in degradation and death. Sin has become hateful in his awakened spiritual vision, and virtue and honor have become lovely. Obedience has given a better and more correct understanding of the worth of his own soul, to himself and to his Creator. The ability to see has followed the act by which the spirit man brought the man of flesh into subjection to the new birth; and, the world and its multitude of things seen and known, begin to take on new forms; and like the figures in a stereoscopic picture, seen, at first in distorted fashion soon melt into oneness by adjustment to the sight, so do the things of the world, men, objects of supposed worth, scenes through which men are passing, questions of morality, of right, of wrong, in short, all those things which go to make up the life that now is begin to adjust themselves to the new power to see given to the man that is born again.

The man thus aroused, who will bow to the command, obedience to which will give life, is provided with a means of determining what his life shall be, and with so just and true powers to correctly discriminate between the things right and the things wrong, that if he shall fail the failure is directly the result of his own neglect to use the powers confided to the exercise of his judgment and his will.

"If any man will," is the deliberate verdict of divine wisdom. Granted the will, all needful things are possible. The will lacking, there are lions in the way that will not be lightly removed from the pathway.

The man to whose newly created vision vice becomes unlovely and sin hateful, sees himself in conditions to be improved. Desire to become free—not only from the consequences of sin, degradation, and death—but from desire to sin, is born within him. His constant thought is, How shall this be done? Each succeeding day of his new life the question is more and more urgently pressed upon him. And, as a consequence, his mind re-awakened on each day of strife, sees new beauties in goodness, new hatefulness in wrong. The inevitable conclusion of this discipline can only be that the man will set himself resolutely to the task of schooling himself to do the things judgment and awakened conscience tell him are right, and to avoid those things shown to be evil and wrong.

All this has its effect upon the man. He is changed and changing; not from the moorings of every wind of doctrine, nor because of unstableness, but from conditions of subjection to sinful emotions and desires unto conditions of healthy spiritual emotions and new desires for good. At each renewal of the conflict—and there may be many of them before the final battle is fought and victory won—the man sees himself to better advantage, and comprehends the situation in which he is placed with a keener appreciation of the forces arrayed against him, and his own weakness or strength to cope with them. "If he will," he becomes inured to the conflict, and wins over his own weakness and the forces of evil, becoming stronger at each recurring struggle, until at length he is strong indeed.

This may be called gospel education. That does not matter, it is character building. The man who has been the subject to habit, passion, or vice of any degree, small or great, whether the subjection has been willing and abject, or unwilling and terrified, when awakened to his condition by the gospel light, sets about his deliverance from thralldom at once; and though he may often fail, often become discouraged and inclined to cease the contention, will renew his effort after every attempt and failure, until he finally reaches the end desired, freedom from the disposition to sin.

So long as the ability to be foolish or to sin remains, no matter what the "besetting" sin or folly may be, the disposition will also remain, and man be liable to be overtaken and fall. To remove the ability is to take from the man his agency, to interfere with his will, to deprive him of the right to dispose of his powers and acts in accordance with his own judgment and determination. Nothing in the gospel economy, so far revealed, warrants the belief that God, through Jesus Christ and his revelation through which "life and immortality are [were] brought to light," intended that man should be thus affected or thus saved. The effort to save man is based upon the fact that he may be, if he wills to be; not otherwise. The ability to do wrong, to commit acts of folly, or to sin, must remain with man, not interfered with by Christ. It is the disposition to do wrong, to be foolish, or to sin against which the gospel effort is to be made. "Whosoever will," may commit folly, wrong, or wickedness; "whosoever will," may do things that are good, and wise, and righteous. This is the basis on which the work is to be done.

The desire to be good, be that desire faint or full of strength, sets the mind active to discover the ways in which it may be done. These are educational processes. The ways if discovered followed with tenacity of purpose, more or less persistent, will give partial or full results, and the ability to sin continuing to remain the disposition to so sin grows less and less, until finally it is overcome and drops out of the elements of contention, the man being left quite able to see that he can sin, but equally able to say, "I will not!"

To such a man credit belongs; but to him who does not sin because he has not the ability, power, and opportunity, no credit for not sinning can possibly be given.

Let application be made. John and James start in life with equal opportunities. Both have similar natures. Both hear the gospel; John obeys, James does not. In the mind of one the conviction that wrong is unbecoming and sin hateful takes place. He recognized the ability in himself to do wrong, and feels the promptings of his disposition—his nature—to do such wrong. He has with wakened conscience decided that he must "cease to do evil and learn to do well." The gospel and its helps, spirit, and power, are his to use and enjoy. So he sets about his task to correct and overcome his disposition to do those things which the gospel teaching and his renewed spirit make him to see are unlovely and hateful; but does not attempt to destroy his ability, that given him of God to use for good or evil as his choice may be.

James obeys not; he pursues his way until, folly, wickedness, disease, the judgment of men or the decree of providence, interferes and takes from him the ability, power, and opportunity to sin, and of course he does no sin. His desire and disposition, will to commit sin remains, but he sins not.

Which of these men is in a safe or savable condition?

Thomas has been raised in rough surroundings. As a boy he learned to swear, play cards at unseasonable hours, chew and smoke, and drink, and to fight. He has constant ability to do these and other things not lovely and good. He hears the gospel story, feels the conviction that warns him to cease doing them. He hears the gospel, and learns that in it is "the power of God unto salvation." He brings himself to obedience, and when he has done so, those things he has hitherto done without restraint and without remorse, appear unlovely and become hateful. Does he cut off his tongue and paralyze his lips, so that he cannot swear? Does he manacle his hands that he cannot play, nor drink, nor strike and fight? Does he make the attempt to save himself by any means by which his natural powers of body are broken or destroyed? No; he sees that the remedy is a spiritual one, and must be applied in correcting the disposition, bringing the will into subjection to right ways of thought. He does this by refraining from swearing, by putting away the tobacco and the cards, by refusing to drink either from suggestion of his own thirst or from invitation of comrades. This course resolutely pursued makes him, sooner or later, the master of himself under Christ; a man with the ability to sin, but with the will active not to sin, because the disposition to sin is gone—being overcome. "To him that overcometh," is the promise made.

Make this applicable to every man in the gospel bonds, and to every species of folly, vice, or wickedness, and the method of character building in Christ is made to appear. "Go thou and do likewise."

"THE REORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS."

THE New York Independent publishes an annual statistical and general report of the status of every denomination in the United States, prepared by representatives of such organizations. At the risk of being credited or miscredited with a desire to call attention to our own work, we republish the following from the Independent of January 6, 1898. Our people are interested in all that pertains to the cause, and we present the following in evidence of the growing disposition to recognize us as a church and to treat us fairly.

The item appeared immediately following an article on "The Latter Day Saints, by F. D. Richards, Historian" of the Utah Church.

The statistics in paragraph 5 were mostly taken from reports of Bro. H. A. Stebbins, Church Recorder, and Bro. W. N. Robinson, Secretary of the General Sunday School Association:—

THE REORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS.

BY R. S. SALYARDS, SECRETARY.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints claims to be the lawful continuation of the original Church of Latter Day Saints organized April 6, 1830, under the ministry of Joseph Smith and others. It has been recognized as such by the courts.

"The chief events of the year 1897 in the Reorganized Church" are briefly stated as follows:—

1. At the General Conference, held April 6-16, Elder Alexander H. Smith was appointed Presiding Patriarch and Evangelical Minister; also Counselor to President Joseph Smith, his brother. Bishop Edmund L. Kelley was appointed to act temporarily as Counselor to the President. Elders Isaac N. White, John W. Wight, and Richard C. Evans were appointed to fill vacancies in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. Elder F. M. Sheehy was appointed one of the Seven Presidents of Seventy, and Elder Charles E. Butterworth a member of the Standing High Council. Additions were made to other quorums of the ministry.

2. Missionaries were sent to Europe, Australia, the Society Islands, Hawaii, Canada, and throughout the United States. Incidental to its mission work of proclaiming the principles of primitive Christianity, the Reorganized Church has specifically set forth the original faith of the Latter Day Saints, in contrast to the errors taught by the Utah Church. It has persistently maintained the pure faith, against the doctrine of polygamy and kindred evils, which were no part of the church teaching or belief from 1830-'44, during the lifetime of Joseph Smith and his co-workers.

3. Graceland College, erected in 1896, a nonsectarian educational institution, built and sustained under church auspices, was dedicated January 1, 1897. This institution is located at Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, the headquarters of the church, on a plot of about sixty acres of land. The building is a commodious one of modern style, and up to date in construction and arrangement throughout.

4. The Saints' Home, for worthy poor and aged people of the church, also located at Lamoni, Iowa, and on a farm adjoining the city, was completed during the year. It is an imposing structure, and well adapted to the purpose for which it was erected.

5. Statistics: March 31, 1897, total membership, actual enrollment, 38,370; net gain for the year, 3,556; statistics to December 15, 1897, estimates total membership, 40,000; local church organizations, 600; fragmentary local organizations, 220; active ministers of all grades, about 2,000; church edifices, 98; estimated membership, including families represented, 100,000.

Sunday school statistics, March 31, 1897: District associations, 40; schools, 233; total membership, 12,362.

THE BIBLE HIS AUTHORITY.

REV. MR. DETWEILER QUOTES FROM THE SCRIPTURES TO SUSTAIN THE THEORY OF DIVINE HEALING.

In the introductory to his sermon on "Divine Healing," preached by request, at the Gospel Witness, 1208 East Twelfth street yesterday morning, Rev. Mr. J. S. Detweiler said:—

"I want it to be understood that I have no theory of my own to present, and no experience either of myself or my family to give. I want simply to lay before you the evidence of the divine word in this matter, and discuss the topic I have taken up, from a purely spiritual point of view. The solution of this much discussed question for every believer should be found in the teachings of the Bible. Do you accept the gospel as set forth in the Old and New Testaments? If you do, then all argument ceases with you when you have familiarized yourself with your authority. The Bible answers every perplexing question that can come up in the affairs of a human being during a lifetime and should be followed as explicitly and as confidently as one would obey the detailed instructions in a handbook on some special trade."

The text, from Exodus, 15: 12, was, "For I am the Lord, that healeth thee," and the whole discourse followed closely the lines laid down, being reference after reference, with specimen quotations, to verses and chapters in both the old and the new revelations, which cited examples of "healing through faith," and the many exemptions from famine and disease and the destroying forces of nature enjoyed by the Lord's chosen. More than fifty such passages were read, telling of the seeming miracles wrought by the apostles through their Christ-given power, of the health that came to believers by faith and prayer and of the direct promises of both the Father and the Son that all these things should be.

As illustrative of the purpose of Christ, Rev. Mr. Detweiler gave the language of Hebrews, 2: 14, 15: ". . . He also himself took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Christ's practice, he said was in pursuance of this declaration, and he read from Matthew, 4: 23: "And Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness among the people."

Rev. Mr. Detweiler censured severely ministers of the gospel who failed to attach due significance to the many declarations of the word he had given and said: "I make the charge to-day that in many a place only a small part of the gospel is being preached in strict accordance with the Scriptures."

The foregoing from the Kansas City Journal of December 27, sent us by Bro. Lester Brackenbury, will be noted with appreciation by the HERALD readers. The tendency of many ministers who break away from creeds is to also leave the foundations of faith almost if not altogether. However, while adhering to and teaching the erroneous features of the creeds, they have been ignorant of and in opposition to "the truth;" hence in their new departures they but move out into new circles with other movings connected with the shaking and fall of Babylon.

Rev. Detweiler in the foregoing departure has succeeded in departing from an error, but has anchored to a truth. Where he stands upon other features of vital import we are not informed; but so far as reported he is certainly in harmony with the word of God. His remarks in reference to Bible teaching being "explicitly and confidently" followed, together with other good points, will be duly absorbed by the careful reader.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

OUR stay in the busy city of Birmingham was as pleasant as the condensed fog and other militating circumstances would allow. There are two branches in the city, presided over by the veterans, Elders Thomas Taylor and Charles Tyler. One branch has no place to hold meetings except on Sunday, and the other place, though always at their disposal, is approached by a back way, through a dark passage, not easily found by strangers. Yet we had some very good meetings, and we enjoyed our part in them quite well, and we hope that others also enjoyed their portion. We were treated with kindness and consideration calculated to make lasting impressions upon our memory.

Through the kindness of Bro. J. E. Meredith we had the pleasure of seeing the great annual "Cattle Show." Apparently nearly all parts of the United Kingdom were represented, and they certainly exhibited some fine live stock and poultry, as well as agricultural and dairy products. Of course we would naturally compare them with American products; but after making due allowance for our natural preference, we do not know that we have much to boast of except in quantity. The policy of conducting the show, however, indicates the condition of things here as regards the classes. The usual price for admission was one shilling, but on a certain day the price was raised to twenty or twenty-one shillings, to afford the aristocracy an opportunity to come when the common people could not afford to annoy them with their presence. One would think to observe the distinction, that they were made out of better dirt (or a superior specie of tadpoles.) But we could not escape the reflection that they must sometime be resolved into the same elements with the poor and lowly ones. One end awaits us all, so far as our physical parts are concerned; and as to the final destiny of the inward man, that will depend upon merit, and not upon caste or class. So we thought, "Just go ahead if you think there is no hereafter—we will be even with you by and by, when you will have no more shillings in your pockets than we have."

But by the way, this fact that we are resolved into common dust after dissolution, together with the fact as asserted by science, that what is known as the inorganic crust of the earth contains exactly the same elements as found in animal and vegetable organisms is a strong point in favor of the Biblical claim that man was originally dust. Some have argued these facts as evidence that all forms of life are the result of "spontaneous generation" from original elements. But we could with just as much propriety argue that a building composed of the same kind of stone as that found in a neighboring quarry was spontaneously generated therefrom. Besides, if to one particle of inorganic matter, or to two or more in proximity, were given the innate power of generation, the same power must necessarily attach to all other particles in like conditions, and the result would be an overproduction of organism without sufficient original material left to dwell and subsist upon. So we conclude that God has reserved to himself the power to decide just what proportion of matter should be endowed with organic existence, and by special act formed the first specimens out of the dust, and endowed them with the power of procreation under certain conditions and restrictions. We sympathize with these aristocrats, but facts are stubborn things, and so we will have to claim relationship with them. Perhaps even our sympathy may be explained on the basis of common origin and common destiny; but for the life of us we cannot explain why we should not all attend a "Cattle Show" on the same day.

We are now sojourning in the little city of Stafford, and find here a small but earnest band of saints struggling for the mastery, and we are trying as much as we can to encourage them. We have, however, met here, the first smoking elder that we have seen in this country. Though this habit is quite prevalent in England, our people generally, and especially the elder-ship, have risen above it.

Recent advices from Manchester indicate activity as the following circular will show:—

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, North East Manchester branch, saints' meeting room, 20 Hawke Street, Bradford, Manchester.

The Bible to be the standard of evidence. Chair to be taken at 7:30 p. m. Discussion invited at the close of each lecture. Seekers after truth earnestly invited. Hymn books provided. Admission free. No collection.

We would like to earnestly commend this effort, and recommend it to the consideration of brethren in other places where it is possible to carry it into effect. Though these lectures are to be held in one of the four branches of the church in Manchester, the names of the speakers indicate that the membership of all the branches are to participate. The opposition, however, is not idle, as one of the Reverends of the Established Church has undertaken to deliver a course of four lectures on subjects indicated in the notice of reply which is as follows:—

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the Rev. Fenwick Ward,

M. A. and "Mormonism exposed." "Yeshall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"—St. Matt. 7:16. A course of four evening lectures in reply to those delivered by the Rev. Fenwick Ward, M. A., entitled "Mormonism exposed" will be delivered D. V., in the Latter Day Saints' chapel, 437 Collyhurst Road, by Elder Joseph Dawsnup, Senior, president of the Manchester district, on the following dates and subjects:—

Tuesday, January 4, "Was Joseph Smith an infamous impostor?"

January 11, "The origin of 'Mormonism,' was it fiction and fraud?"

January 18, "Is the character of 'Mormonism' unscriptural and anti Christian?"

January 25, "Is the influence of 'Mormonism' pernicious and immoral?"

Commencing at 7:45 p. m. prompt. Come and hear our side of the question. "Doth our law judge a man except it first hear from himself and know what he doeth?"—St. John 7:51. R. V. Hymn sheets provided. Bring your Bibles with you.

So it seems that the brethren by their activity have succeeded in drawing the enemy's fire; but they are in good hands, and if we are not mistaken, "they are ours." Of course many will hear the attack who will not hear the reply; but some will hear the reply who otherwise would not hear us at all. So "lay on, McDuff," we welcome the fray.

Bro. Pitt still reports prospective progress in Wales. He has recently suffered the bereavement of an aunt who had kindly received and befriended them. This may necessitate some change in their domestic arrangements.

OUR COVER ARTICLES.

OUR readers are furnished a rare variety in the cover articles of the present issue. The court decision is given as showing the disposition of the law to recognize denominational beliefs—the declared authentic faiths of churches as the bases of decisions involving dispositions of church property, or of bequests or conveyances based upon specific organizations and formulas of faith. The careful reader will of course discriminate in the utterances attributed to Reverends Rainsford, Briggs, Abbott, Stocking, et al. Our readers are doubtless acquainted with the difference between men's past and present conceptions of Bible infallibility and what the Bible has claimed for itself; between Christianity pure and simple and churchianity or "the precepts of men."

They are aware that Dr. Stocking is mistaken in his statement of "the conditions of salvation;" or, rather, that he fails to discriminate between a partial or "common" and a complete salvation. There are many features that might be pointed out with favorable or unfavorable comment, that are too numerous for the space at our disposal. The reader will see and ponder. Professor Davidson's statement might be headed, "Everything must go." He will learn, however, that the shaking of all things indicates the "remaining" of some that "cannot be shaken;" that truth will but deepen its hold with the passing of error.

CLASS RECORD—PRICE REDUCED.

THE Sunday School Class Record has been reduced from 8 cents to 5 cents per copy; from 75 cents to 50 cents per dozen; a reduction of 33½ per cent. It is the policy of the Herald Office to reduce prices of all publications so far as possible.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH and Sr. Ada R. Clark were married on Wednesday, January 12, 1898, at the home of Bro. Alexander Clark, father of the bride, at Waldemar, Ontario; Elder Richard C. Evans, of London, Ontario, officiating in the ceremony. They left Waldemar for Lamoni via Toronto and Chicago, arriving home on Saturday, the 15th inst., at noon, where they were welcomed by the immediate members of the family, who had gathered at the family residence to greet them at the home coming. They were greeted by the Lamoni saints at the Sunday morning service, when President Smith addressed the congregation and at the close of service presented Sr. Smith to the many who came forward to tender their expressions of good will. The HERALD joins with saints and friends in wishing President Smith and wife many years of happiness and continuing usefulness.

Bro. L. M. Sollenberger, of New Park, Pennsylvania, writes of efforts of himself and Bro. M. O. Matthews in behalf of truth. He desires additional power to present the word; admonishes unity of spirit and action. He also narrates his experiences in temporal things, his losses incident to failure to observe the law of tithing.

Bishop Kelley returned home from St. Louis on Wednesday, the 12th inst.

Mr. Moody says: "There are forty millions of men and women in this country who never go to church."

In 1897 there were thirty trains "held up" in the United States. Since 1890, 218 trains have been held up, 78 passengers and trainmen killed, and 67 injured.

About 40 persons were killed and upward of $1,000,000 worth of property was destroyed by a cyclone at Fort Smith, Arkansas, January 12. Men, women, and children peacefully sleeping in their homes met a horrible death without a moment's warning. Business blocks, mansions, and hotels were razed and scattered in shapeless masses.

The capital of Amboyna, one of the Molucca Islands, has been completely demolished by an earthquake; 50 people were killed, and 200 injured.

Bombay, the 12th: For the last forty-eight hours there have been 154 deaths from the plague and 167 fresh cases.

London, January 11.—The Chinese loan negotiations are progressing. Great Britain has informed China that she is willing to find the money required and the details are now being discussed. The amount will probably be £20,000,000. Great Britain will ask for certain changes in the administration of China, including the restoration of Li Hung Chang to power.

Dover, January 11.—The greatest enthusiasm and activity prevails at Shorncliffe, from which camp the Third Hussars has been ordered to proceed. Large drafts from other British regiments are also preparing for foreign service.

Balfour, government leader of the House of Commons: "The extent of our trade in China gives us a special claim to prevent her pursuing a policy that would discourage trade." "The deepest traditions of our policy preclude us from using our trading privilege as a weapon to exclude our rivals. If we ask freedom of trade, it is not for England alone, but the whole world."

The Russian embassy at Constantinople has been threatened with bomb outrages unless Russia withdraws opposition to amelioration of the condition of the Armenians.

The engineers' strike in Great Britain is nearing the end. Large numbers of Glasgow engineers have asked reinstatement.

Sharp fighting in the Province of Santiago de Cuba, January 2, is reported, with heavy losses on both sides. The patriots are forcing the fighting.

The Western Union Telegraph Company will demand indemnity from Spain for loss of Cuban business, caused by authorities in Havana interfering with the workings of the Havana-Key West cable.

Of 12,000 troops left by General Weyler on the central trocha, only 2,000 are now available.

General Munoz, the new Captain General of Porto Rico, died immediately on his arrival there. Does his death presage the end of Spain's colonial rule?

Washington advices of the 12th state that private information has been sent to the State Department and to members of the Foreign Affairs committee to show that powerful influences are at work to secure independence of Cuba. It is said that the money power of Europe has become convinced that $40,000,000 of Spanish bonds based on the resources of Cuba are about to become valueless unless the United States in some way guarantees their payment. Representations have been made, urging intervention; that if the American government would stop the war and agree to pay the $40,000,000 the Sagasta government could show that the loss of Cuba had come about by the influence of England and France, rather than by the dictation of the Americans.

The ultra-Spanish element, opposed to autonomy, attacked and wrecked the offices of the Havana liberal newspapers on the 12th. The mob was headed by volunteer officers and the police did not interfere. The riot grew out of General Blanco's refusal to authorize the suppression of the liberal press, recently urged by local Conservative influences, which regarded autonomy as a farce. Its alleged supporters are said to be greatly lacking in loyalty to Spain, if not really insurgents in disguise.

Germany's demand on China: China has agreed to the erection of a memorial church at the scene of the murder of the missionaries; to the payment of expenses of Germany incident to the occupation of Kiao-Chou, the dismissal of a Chinese official, and many special privileges to Germany in regard to coal mines and railways.

Earthquake in New Zealand, December 8.

Destructive bush fires in Victoria, Australia; hundreds of settlers rendered homeless.

Tax riot in the Gujarat district, India; troops sent.

The late rioting in Havana has quieted to some degree. It was a political uprising—against liberalism and autonomy—by some army officers and other malcontents. "Down with Blanco" was frequently heard during the disorder. Spanish power in Cuba now rests on her ability to maintain order in Havana. Military operations against the insurgents are forgotten; 5,000 or 6,000 troops are now collected in the city. Spanish merchants there have suggested American intervention to Consul General Lee. He does not recommend immediate intervention, yet does not take a hopeful view of ability of Spanish authorities to permanently restore public order. Government papers deplore the rioting and say it has done much for the insurgents. The question of sending American war ships to protect American interests will have to be determined definitely, soon. No anti-American demonstration has yet occurred, factions being busy with anti-autonomy demonstrations. If further rioting should break out it is possible a feeling would be aroused against Americans which would be hard to restrain.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"O God! I thank thee for each wish
Denied as well as granted,
Since oftentimes what I craved, if given
Had been what least I wanted.
His thoughts are wiser far than ours,
Who sees from the beginning,
And he who doubts the gracious end
Repays the grace by sinning."

SUPPLEMENTARY READING FOR FEBRUARY MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

SUGGESTIONS FOR MOTHERS IN TRAINING THEIR OLDER BOYS.

WHEN the children are little most mothers want to keep them near them, but as they grow and their minds expand mothers are apt to think they need less attention. I think they need more. I used often to hear a neighbor of mine—whose kitchen was close to my own—tell her boys, "Go out and play, and don't bother me." Out—where? to play—with whom? On the street corners or in the alleys with other boys whose mothers hadn't time "to bother with" them, and so, most likely, boys of no training for good. Boys should not be sent to play, but rather have it as a reward for helpful service.

I once asked this neighbor why she didn't have the boys help her, and she said, "O, I can do the work myself in less time than I'm showing them how—I haven't got patience to be bothered;" and at another time she didn't see how I managed to keep my children in the yard—hers were always on the street. Well, I told her I got mine, to help me because, though I could do the work better maybe than they, I might not always be able to "do," and then it would come handy to have them know how; besides, since their bright little eyes first looked love up into mine I wanted them near me, and when they were out of my sight I wanted to know where they were and with whom.

If you are busy, all the more reason you should have them by to help. The house is never so small or the yard so cramped that a boy is in the road. Are you baking? well, don't you know a boy can beat a cake with a stronger and more even stroke than you can? The best cake I ever ate was made by a twelve-year-old boy. Are you cleaning house? well, a boy can climb on a chair or ladder and do the tops of doors and windows, dust pictures and take down cobwebs with less danger of falling than a woman; and boys like to climb.

One day I was sick and I said to one of my boys, "I just can't sweep those two front room carpets to-day. Won't you take the broom and give a 'lick and promise' to them?" Then he surprised me by asking, "Why can't I give them a good clean?" I said, "You don't know how, and I don't want to worry with you." Then he said, "Let me try." So I did, and he moved the smaller furniture out and gave the rooms the best sweeping they had for many a day—and raised lots of dust? Yes, but he dusted it all before he quit. I've noticed that boys (and this trait isn't confined to boys) like to show you that they are "smarter" than you think they are.

I wrote about cheap tools for little boys. Now as they get older let them have a good saw, hammer, etc. They can have lots of fun nailing up things—our boys made a chute in the cellar this summer, out of all the old boards, boxes, and rails they could get. The little car runs on wood rails so smoothly for thirty feet that nearly all the children of the neighborhood have "shot the chutes" in our cellar, and it is so strong that a party of young folks went down in safety. (He even sawed the wheels out of a big board).

Then supposing you don't want dirty rubbers and overshoes in the kitchen or on the back porch. Get a soap box from your grocer and let the boys nail strips in and fit shelves, make a door out of the lid, and nail little blocks on for feet, then you have a place to put those unsightly articles of footwear, and yet have them handy outside the door. A coat of paint will help the looks of this shoe box, and what boy does not like to wield a paint brush? A few nickels spent in paint and your rain barrel, wash tubs, shelves, and kitchen chairs are soon made more durable and better looking, and the boys have "lots of fun" in the doing it, especially if you manage somewhat in the way "Tom Sawyer got the fence whitewashed."

There are so many things a boy can make and fix with a few tools that I would agree with the man who wrote, "Boys are the best product of the farm," only changing it to read, "the best product of the home."

Some boys take to chemistry, electricity, etc. Encourage them. I know a boy who put up an electric bell in the house, and his folks weren't afraid he would explode something. It's really no more dangerous than Fourth of July celebrations—maybe not as much so.

Boys like to snip and cut. One boy whose mother got him to cut out patch pieces while he was confined to the house with a sore throat, pieced a whole quilt and put it together. Another time he was laid up with a lame knee, and she got him to draw the threads of a large square of linen for a table cover; then he wanted to hem it, and after some showing he hemmed it, then drew sunflowers in the corner, and, after more showing, worked them, and the result was a very pretty table cover.

Now I don't mean by all this that boys mustn't have time to play. They need lots of recreation. But don't "turn them out" to play. Let them play at working 'till there is a game going on that they wish to join, then let them have time for fun and a time to return home to study or rest. Let them feel that they are always "wanted" at home, and that you like to have them there.

The highest priced dressmakers or milliners, and cooks or "chefs," are men, so why object to boys helping at "girls' work." Let them be useful at any work, and when the time comes they will find their vocation in life all the more readily from having been kept busy and happy. We none of us like lazy, worthless men. Then let us help the boys to be of some use, for "Men don't change much, after all, Men are only boys grown tall."

"I CONSIDER the Sunday school work nothing more than missionary work begun while the person is in earlier years."—Elder J. M. Terry, in his address of welcome to the late Sunday School Institute.

The old proverb, "Where there's a will there's a way," is true in far more instances that it is usually thought to be. If we should say that one should not miss a single session of Sunday school during the entire year, it would be thought extravagant to expect it; and in many cases it would be. However, there are many who can find their present mark in the record of every session during the year. There resides in St. Joseph, Missouri, a sister, Oma Kinder, who is but sixteen years of age, and who has not missed a session of Sunday school in the past nine years, or since she came to that city. Certainly this is an exceptional record for one so young in years to make. If anyone can excel it or even approach it, we would like to hear from them. Cannot each one of us make better records during the new year?

A sister asks, "Cannot we discuss the subject of a traveling Sunday school missionary through the department prior to the general convention in April." To this we answer, Yes. But as our space is limited, we suggest brevity as essential. In your letters cover briefly these phases: the necessity, benefits, and how to sustain him, etc. Who will be first?

On the 25th of November, 1897, we sent a blank to be filled out by one of the officers of every district Sunday school association. As these when properly filled out furnish us information which we very much need, we would urgently request all who have not done so to fill out and forward as soon as they can get the items necessary. It may be that some who receive the blanks are now ex-officers. If so, they will please to forward to present officers.

Bro. C. J. Clark of Peoria, Illinois, writes: "I much regret that I cannot attend the Interstate Sunday School Institute. . . . Cannot something be done that we who cannot attend may derive some benefit from the work done there?" This is simply representative of many requests we have received since the Institute was announced. And to meet these wants we are now trying to prepare a report of the Institute work complete, to be put out in pamphlet form. If we succeed in getting it in form sufficiently good to be of value to the Sunday school workers, it will be published and all may then read it. Wait and look for further mention thereof.

Institute work in district associations. The winter months are now on. Many of the workers have some time to devote to improving self. Can you not call a special meeting for, say two or possibly three days, and in it discuss the various points pertaining to Sunday school work. Much may be learned in this way, and a new zeal for the work aroused. The work is already begun. What district will next fall in line? If necessary, the officers of the General Association will help you to prepare for it, and in any other way that may be found necessary. Let us hear from you.

Just how far reaching the work of the late Institute will be in the Sunday school and Religio no one can exactly know. Just how much each one may be able to use or disseminate of what they absorbed we cannot estimate. We are grateful that a few, at least, had imbibed what they expressed in their parting blessing, a new zeal for the work and a determination to do more for the Master's work, he being their helper.

Our register showed that a very large percentage of those in attendance were either officers of districts and schools or teachers. Workers were present from eleven church districts or district Sunday school associations. These were from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri. And that each representative may be able to carry to the workers of his district or school some of the items obtained during the course of the work at St. Joseph is our sincere hope and belief.

"NO MAN CARED FOR MY SOUL."

AFTER reading an article on the above, I asked myself, "Are there any around me who are thinking that no one cares for their souls?" And I realized there were many who were thinking that very thing. "But how can I help?" is the question. And I know there are others trying to solve the same problem, and like myself may find there are some things they can do.

What a sad condition for one to be in, to feel that no one cares for him. Just put yourself in such a place for one moment. Would you under those conditions have as much courage to turn from your evil ways, as if you knew some one was hoping and praying for you?

I was talking with a friend a few days ago on Sabbath school work. She wondered why we did not have a larger attendance at our school. She said that a few months ago there were several who came and seemed to take an interest, but now are attending another school. "Why is it," she asked, "they can get more new scholars than we?"

"They work harder to get them, and to keep them after they get them," was the reply.

That is just it. If we would all work harder to get and keep the new scholars, what an increase the Sabbath school would have. And would we not all be proud of our school?

Let us try to do all we can—and this means much—so that none around us can truthfully say, "No man cares for my soul."

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 8.

Editors Herald:—We are still holding forth here. In this great city of 220,000 people gospel work is rather slow; but still some progress has been made. Baptized two on the 5th, Bro. and Sr. James Riggle; he is a very prominent man and has a good influence among his associates, non sectarian people; they have denounced sects of all kinds. Here are two hundred or more who have left the sects, and probably one thousand who are dissatisfied with sectarianism. They feel there is something wrong among the sects, and are moving away from them.

The people are beginning to believe in the manifestations of the Spirit. They practice the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick and anoint with oil, and they claim the blessings. It seems that Satan is mustering his forces to deceive if possible the very elect. Spiritual influences are felt among those people. I believe if there ever was a time for the saints to live their religion it is now. Spiritual powers of all kinds are manifested now, and will continue to deceive. The Apostle John says, "Many false spirits are gone out into the world, but try the spirits." We have a test. Isaiah the prophet says, "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—8:20. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Our safeguard then is standing by the law; the law converts the soul and makes wise the simple, and detects false systems of religion.

I am holding forth in South Louisville, at a schoolhouse. Have a very interesting congregation. Bro. T. W. Chatburn has been with me; he is at Byrneville, Indiana, at the present holding forth there. I hear they are having a good time. I expect to open another new place here in the near future. I have been hindered this year on account of financial aid. May the time soon come when there will be ample means to supply the missionary force; but this cannot be brought about unless by a compliance with law.

In bonds of the covenant,

JAMES M. SCOTT.

TULARE, California, Jan. 2.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Thomas Daley arrived here October 25; he is preaching in this county and some in Kern. Baptized six, and others are investigating. Our branch is steadily gaining in members. All the officers are doing their duty, and members seem more zealous in the work. But few outsiders attend the preaching meetings in this town. In the country more interest is taken. When I see our elders preaching to small congregations and the other churches crowded to hear a flimsy sermon (like one I heard this morning), it seems to me that it is almost a sacrilege. The minister's text this morning was, Be not carried about with diverse and strange doctrines, for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace. The only time he referred to his text in the sermon was making the statement. It is not fashionable in this day and age of the world to preach doctrine.

Two Utah elders that are traveling and preaching through this county attended one of Bro. Daley's meetings at Woodville. He had previously announced the subject would be, "Brigham Young in the light of prophecy." Some one invited the elders without telling them the subject of the sermon. At the close Bro. Daley offered them the hall to refute what he had said about Brigham and Utah. They would not accept it, stating they would like to preach on the first principles of the gospel. Bro. Daley told them he could do that as well as them. They left, and have kept clear of the saints. My heart is in this work. I do not want to sit idly by while others are bearing the burdens, but want to do something. When I see the elders leaving their homes, giving up earthly ambitions to battle against the wiles of Satan, I think, What am I doing for the cause of Christ?

Not long since I attended a Baptist church; the pastor's salary was deficient. After devoting most of his sermon in devising ways and means to raise the necessary amount, he said, "Well; if you would do like the Mormons, pay one tenth, we would have more money than we could use." Yes; if all of us would pay one tenth the church would be in a better condition financially, and more elders would be sent out. No one is too poor to help, either in a financial or influential way. If all of us would think that the success of the church depended on our help, we would do something. In gospel bonds,

HITEMAN, Iowa, Jan. 11.

Editors Herald:—Your pages contain much of interest that cheers the heart and encourages the life of the gospel believer.

The opening year finds me a believer in the New Testament gospel, including all its associate principles, not "as we understand" them, but as Jesus Christ and his apostles clearly taught them. So far as the writer of this letter is concerned he has no opinion about Christ's religion, for the expression, "As I understand it," does not, and cannot figure in the case at all! What has God said? that is the question; and when man interpolates his idea, he weakens the force of God's statement.

No man has been sent of God to apologize for what is contained in gospel command, promise, or precept; nor to inform humanity that a portion thereof was to be universally applicable for all time—and another portion universally applicable for a few years! The attempt at parallelism between the types and shadows of the Mosaic regime, and the promises to baptized believers, etc., under the Christian rule won't work—because it does not exist! If God intended what is so persistently urged upon us by "orthodoxy," why did he not say so? How can the heart be established in the truth, if liable to the adopting of every wind of doctrine advanced by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive? If the New Testament is to be our only rule of faith and practice in matters of doctrine and ethics, it must be such as we find it to be; for as soon as men begin to impose upon us their theological speculations, and ask that we accept and indorse them, just so soon does the New Testament cease to be our only rule of faith and practice; and how can we be guided by it when men interpose their absolute contradictions between us and the book? No amount of alleged logic can evade this. Am I too dogmatic?

I suppose you have heard ere this if you are an "up to date" character—of the beautiful, new expose of so-called Mormonism issued from a St. Louis, Missouri, sanctum sanctorum. Well, an Elder D. R. Dungan, late Chancellor of Cotner University, near Lincoln, Nebraska, says in the Christian Evangelist, of November 11, last past, as follows: "I have read it from beginning to end, and am highly pleased with it. Many will say that Mormonism is a dead issue, and that there remains no reason for anything written and printed on the subject. I have never been much in favor of teaching archæology in our schools. The silly doctrines of the dead past may remain buried, so far as I am concerned. But Mormonism is not past, it is here, and is more powerful than almost any other heresy to do evil. It assails new communities and is powerful for results. The average preacher is unable to put a quietus on the community affected by it, or to answer their arguments. . . . I have had four debates with Mormon preachers, including one with Apostle [Bishop] Kelley."

That is right Mr. Dungan, "Mormonism" (as advocated by the Reorganization) is not past, it is here, and here to stay! If "Mormonism" is a heresy, and these theologically college-bred men are God-sent men, and are so loyal to Jesus, and so true fidei defensors once delivered to the saints, why are they unable to do as indicated? Is it possible that an "ignorant, lazy, thieving, money-digger" boy has presented to the world a system of religion that the kind of men named by Mr. Dungan cannot down it? Is there not "a power behind the throne" they will not recognize? He says he has "been intimately acquainted with Mormonism since 1852;" "I know its evils and feel keenly the need of such information as will be found in this book. . . . I have read quite a library on the subject, including Ann Eliza and Stenhouse revelations, and the unveiling by John D. Lee."

No doubt others aside from Mr. Dungan have felt keenly the need of a successful downer! But, have they really got it now? We will see, in the soon, sweet by and by! When he says he has read a library on the subject, in such books as he names, does he not do a willful injustice by classifying all of Brigham-Utah rottenness with the doctrines as taught from 1830 to 1844? Will he call it all "Mormonism?" "It seems to me that any sane, unbiased mind will see in this book fair treatment, proper rebuke, and a perfect overthrow of the doctrines and assumptions of this latter-day religious fraud!"

The treatment is as fair as has been usually accorded the faith. And the overthrow as perfect as all preceding efforts. When man can stay the ocean's incoming tide; when he can obliterate the light of the sun, or gather the vapor of the seas with his hands; then will he overthrow this "latter-day work," but not until such power may come to him. The Christian Evangelist says of the new expose that, "it is so far as we know, the most complete refutation of Mormonism that has ever been published." We are not alarmed over the appearance of this "powerful book." It will pass with Ann Eliza, and Howe, and all the other image-smashers.

I have been reading the book, and consider the "fairness" and "candor" of its contents on a par with what Latter Day Saint people have hitherto met. I would like to say something on the Book of Mormon phase of the criticism, but may sometime again.

There may be some things in the work of God's church we do not understand or fully comprehended, but there is much we do comprehend.

Sometimes we may be prone, as a people, to emphasize "And these signs shall follow them that believe," placing them as of primary consideration, forgetful in putting proper stress upon, "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved," and that believing includes what is named in Matthew chapter 5; Romans 6; Galatians 5:14-26, etc., as well as Acts 2:38, 39; 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4:1-11. They are all important, and belong to the matters that constitute "sound doctrine."

Respectfully,

Editors Herald:—In compliance with the urgent request of Bro. Joseph McDougal of this place, I write. He desires that you request through the Herald the prayers of the faithful in his behalf, that he be restored to health and strength, and that God may remove the affliction that is now upon him. As there is no elder residing here, he believes that the prayers of the righteous availeth much. Trusting you will grant his petition at an early date.

Yours respectfully,

FRANK J. PIERCE.

HENDERSON, Iowa, Jan. 13.

Editors Herald:—We have just closed a series of meetings in the church, on Farm Creek. This is an old time place where Brn. Blair and E. C. Briggs received great encouragement while on their first mission west, through the manifestation of the Spirit in tongues and prophecy, confirming them in their testimony concerning the coming forth of Joseph to take his father's place. This was in 1858 or '59. The few old time saints here and at Wheeler's Grove took up with the work and united with the Reorganization, and worked and struggled for years and built up quite a branch. They had their troubles and trials incident to all under like conditions, but they still live.

A few years ago the few remaining ones thought it best to build a church in which to worship and present the word of life to their neighbors and friends; there were but few to undertake such a work; but they commenced with a good will and determined purpose, and accomplished it and paid for it, be it to their credit.

They now have a good Sunday school, with quite a number of their friends and children in attendance, and hold regular services every Lord's day, with Bro. D. Hougas president. They have established the work as we honestly believe, to stay; have proved themselves before their neighbors to be honest in their belief, and also in their dealings with their fellows, and have gained their respect.

Bro. D. Hougas is called upon to preach funeral sermons far and near in this region of country in preference to other preachers, which speaks well for our work; he sometimes travels twenty to twenty-five miles a day in the performance of such duties. His son, T. A. Hougas, is now general superintendent of the Sunday school work of the church, also secretary of the district, with his amiable wife as a competent assistant. This department of our work is in good condition. Bro. Badham is superintendent of the Sunday school of the branch, with all the rest that work with a vim worthy of note.

Our meetings were well attended, and some are very near the kingdom—about ready to be baptized. We are all trying to do our best in the discharge of duties, and all think we feel the spirit of the work prompting us to move forward to duty.

January 24 is the date fixed for the debate between Elder T. W. Williams and Elder W. W. Blalock, of the Christian Church, to be held at Tabor, Iowa. We trust that God will be with us in this work, and come to the help of our beloved brother by the power of his Spirit, for which we shall all earnestly pray.

Yours in the faith, and in hope of eternal life,

HENRY KEMP.

WEDDING BELLS.

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 15, 1898.

Editors Herald:—Wednesday, January 12, 1898, will be remembered by many, as long as the waves of memory ebb and flow. Some may ask the reason. The answer is, President Joseph Smith, the loved and honored prophet of God, was at 1:30 this afternoon joined in the holy bonds of matrimony to Sister Ada Rachel Clark, of Waldemar, Ontario, by Elder R. C. Evans.

President Smith was attired in a clerical black suit; Sister Clark was dressed in a—well, really I cannot tell you how she was dressed (O for a woman's power to describe!); but she looked sweet and pretty—the picture of health and happiness. The groom was assisted by Bro. Archibald McLean, of the city of Toronto; the bride by her youngest sister, Sr. Alice Clark.

The bride entered the room leaning gracefully upon the strong arm of her father, Bro. Alexander Clark, who gave her away. The beautiful bridesmaid never looked more exquisitely lovely than when standing by the side of her sister. Really, the officiating clergyman grew nervous when visions of a double wedding loomed up before him, as he witnessed the strange look in the groom's eyes while that young gentleman gazed upon the sweet figure who assisted the bride.

The beautiful home of Bro. and Sr. Clark was well filled with the relatives of the bride, and other saints. The presents gave evidence of the high esteem in which the couple are held. The supper was both artistic and substantial. From the highest story of the bride's cake was seen the emblems of the two greatest nations upon the earth—the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack. May this miniature annexation be but the prophecy of the greater, which shall link together all America.

The bride was born and educated in the home and village where she was made a bride. Her parents and their family heard the gospel years ago. Strong ties bound them to the Presbyterian Church. Bro. Clark, being selected as an elder, and Sr. Ada was organist of that church; but the power of truth did its work and the writer had the honor of baptizing most of the family; others of the family followed after a time. Bro. Clark is now an active teacher in the church, while his daughter Mabel is assistant superintendent of London district Sunday school association.

A splendid and touching tribute of respect was paid the bride at the railway station, when leaving for her home in Lamoni, Iowa. The station and platform were crowded by village friends, who turned out to do her honor. The affectionate grasp of the hand, the falling tear, and the parting kiss told the story of a splendid life.

Canada is proud of the gift she presents to Bro. Joseph, Lamoni, and the church.

Editors Herald:—Came here from Coldwater, Michigan, to assist in gospel work. Since leaving Grand Rapids, I have preached at Coldwater, Michigan; South Scott, and Clear Lake, Indiana. I am very favorably impressed with this great city. It certainly needs the gospel. Whether or not we shall do any good here, or make any impression on the people, remains to be seen. Bro. Briggs has just left here for Englewood, Illinois. I am to preach here Sunday.

ELLENBORO, Wis., Jan. 8.

Editors Herald:—Memory is busy with the scenes of the past, and though it seems short now that it is past, yet five years with its record of labors performed and unperformed, and opportunities improved and unimproved have rolled into the great sea of the past since the writer, in company with Bro. J. W. Peterson, first visited this part of the Lord's vineyard, as one desirous of being obedient to the call of his Master to be a helper in his cause.

This was not the first time this country had been visited by the servants of the Lord, for even before this these hills and valleys had been the scene of many long and weary grip carrying pilgrimages made by Brn. Short, Pender, and Peterson, whose memory may be refreshed by reading these lines.

On December 9, in company with Brn. McDowell and Ball we landed at Livingstone, Grant County, and soon found the home and hearty welcome of Bro. Cal Anderson, who resides there. We passed a very restful night there, and on the following day, grip in hand, set out across the country looking for fields of labor and conquest. By evening we reached New California, where we found Bro. Leonard Houghton loudly sounding the gospel trumpet. After taking him by surprise the first night, and trying in our humble way to assist the second evening, we again moved on, and reached the cheery and comfortable home of Bro. and Sr. Wrage at Buckwheat Ridge on Sunday the 12th in good time for dinner and to meet with the people who assemble at the church each Sunday afternoon for Sunday school. At the close of the Sunday school we announced preaching for the afternoon and evening, and each evening through the week, which appointments we have been permitted to fill to large and attentive audiences.

As the holiday season drew on, we thought it best to discontinue for a few days. On December 24, by invitation Bro. Ball and the writer went to Lancaster, and the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. S. Blackbourne, where we passed the Christmas day and partook of one certain turkey, which John said they found dead. We know he is dead now. The following day Bro. Blackbourne and your servant drove out to Flora, where we found Brn. McDowell and Houghton, and a schoolhouse full of saints and friends. After the usual greetings and hand shakings, the writer was invited to discourse to them, which he tried to do. Then shook their hands good-bye again, and returned to Lancaster. On the following day walked about three miles out to the insane asylum, which we thought would be a good place for us. Nor were we mistaken for we soon found Mr. and Mrs. Alderson of former acquaintance, and after a pleasant chatty visit and seeing the asylum sights and refreshing the inner man, we again set out for headquarters, and was fortunate enough to get a ride, and by five o'clock were again safe and sound at home with Sr. Wrage.

During the past week we have been preaching in the schoolhouse at Ellenboro, and though the attendance has been good and the attention and apparent interest is all that could be asked for, yet we find the place and the people are still up to their old tricks. When Brn. Pender and Peterson were here first, they were permitted to use the schoolhouse first to preach in, and then for a bedroom. And five years again, when Bro. Peterson and I were here, we could have done the same had I not fortunately or unfortunately as the case may be, had a little more cheek than Bro. Peterson, went out and called for a bed, and got it too! During the past week though we have been preaching nightly, and walking from Buckwheat Ridge four miles distant; we either had to sleep in the schoolhouse or trudge back again. Of course we preferred the latter. But last night Mr. Hall's folks kindly took us home with them. We think that by and by there may be some who live in Ellenboro who will understand what is written in Matthew 25: 31-46; but while there is life there is hope, so we will have charity for the living and hope for the dead.

Your brother in bonds.
CHAS. H. BURR.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Jan. 7.

Editors Herald:—After a short illness I am again at my post of duty, trying to get the gospel before the people. We now have two halls, located about two miles apart, and shall try and hold services at both places for a month and see what the result will be. At the new hall last Sunday night we had the best congregation we have had for some time. If we make a success of it there, we shall continue. It is in the part of the city where the Utah men operated for a while; but it seems that they met with poor success, for they gave it up, and I hear that they have left the city, but it may be a false report.

I find that others complain of nonattendance and lack of spiritual interest as well as ourselves. I have attended some of the sectarian meetings this last fall, and heard very strong language from some of the speakers, which if coming from us would seem harsh to them. Perhaps it would be well to give some of their sayings for the use of the brethren if they choose to use them.

The speakers were men of note and were billed to speak at the time and place. The subjects were also advertised. Mr. Hoag, pastor of a Congregational church, said that "all the churches of to-day were in apostasy;" and referring to his own congregation, said, "I have prayed over them, talked with and preached to them, but cannot do anything with them. I don't know what to do unless I break them up. There is no Christian Church to-day." He also said the same to me in a conversation which I had with him. He said there was not an inspired man upon the earth at the present time. Did not believe that the Holy Spirit inspired anyone now.

At the "Bible conference" held in this city last fall, one of the speakers, a Mr. Marvin, from York State, I believe, said, and he was one of the chief speakers, that the "Tomfoolery of all the churches can be laid at the door of the preachers, and that the less piety there is in the churches the more need of ice cream socials." "There are churches to-day which deny every fundamental principle of the Christian religion. Preacher after preacher and member after member are only imitators." "We can't make a perfect church, for there will be catfish, dogfish, and devilfish; we'll gather of all kinds." Yes; and I wonder if they don't get more devilfish than any other, at least some of them. He also said "that the conformity of the church to the world was a failure."

Speaking of the apostles of Christ, he said, that "they were men of one thought, the gospel of Christ; and that the churches of to-day wanted to come back to that faith." Speaking of the second coming of Christ he said that "it had done more to revive the churches than anything else. The great need of the world is for men with the zeal and inspiration of the servants of Christ." Said that truth had not changed. What was true two thousand years ago is true to-day. We have the same Christ to preach that they had. They were sent out to heal, to cast out devils. Divine healing and all this is in the Bible, and we can't deny it. "The word to them was to go."

Now it seems to me that this man told a good many truths, and that he makes a good witness for this latter-day work. Do not his statements prove that Joseph Smith told the truth when he said that the Lord told him that the creeds of men were an abomination in his sight? They are proving to be such in the sight of men themselves; how much more so then in the sight of God. Thus time and men are proving to the world that Joseph told the truth when he gave that statement to the world!

I have also a statement made by Mr. Gates, at the time President of Grinnell college, Iowa, in which he says, "The church as an institution has come to the time when it must learn that it is not here to build itself up. It stands as badly in need of reformation to-day as the Roman Catholic Church did in the time of Luther. Not for the same reason, but the Protestant church is playing Christianity to-day, and more than that the Protestant church knows it."

This is but a part of the evidence at hand; but will show how some of the leading men in the sectarian churches view them. If these men have told the truth, it shows the need of just such a work as we are engaged in—a restoration of the gospel. These witnesses prove the angel-message of Revelation 14:6, 7 true, which message we are presenting to the world.

Still these men, like the Jews when Jesus came, reject the true gospel when it is presented to them. It does not come through the right source for them. Does not come through some of them, so that they might make a great name in the world. As one said in this city, Why did it not come through such men as Talmage, a Beecher, or some such men? Why should the Lord choose Joseph Smith? that poor boy. The answer is short and easy to give. The Lord says in Isaiah fifty-five that his ways are not as our ways, neither are my thoughts as your thoughts. Then as he does not think as we think, he chose the very one that the world would not have chosen. He chose the one that he could use. If God had called some of the great men, they would have taken all the glory and honor to themselves, and God would have been left out.

That Joseph Smith was called of God, and inspired by the Holy Spirit, is evident when we consider the work done by him. He did that which the combined religious world has not been able to do. That is, he organized according to the divine pattern. To my mind the one that comes the nearest to the pattern shows the highest degree of inspiration. Then as none of the reformers built to the pattern, and Joseph Smith did, it proves that he had more inspiration than they all. If there was not any inspiration of God in this latter-day work it would not be any better than any other; but as it is built according to the pattern, this shows of itself that it is better than the works of other men, and that the one who laid the foundation was a master builder, a colaborer with God. I am aware that when we come to talk about the revelations of God that men object to it, but what of that, some people object to any and everything that has any God in it. No one can preach Christ and his gospel without the aid of his Spirit. The servant of God must be inspired by his Spirit, for Paul says that no man understandeth the things of God save the Spirit of God. The reason then why these men have spoken as they have, is because they see that there is none of the power of God connected with those movements—that they have been planted by men.

Jesus says that "every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." If as these men say, that all the churches of the day are in apostasy, who is to blame for it? The preachers of course; they are the ones that have planted them. Then again, if they are in apostasy it is because the preachers have preached principles of apostasy instead of truth. If they had preached the gospel of Christ and built according to the "pattern," a different state of things would exist to-day, and these preachers would not have been compelled to have spoken as they have. It is written, "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God, for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." We conclude then that as these men have not built according to the pattern,—1 Corinthians 12:28; Ephesians 4:8-14,—that they were not inspired by the Spirit of God, and he does not approve of their work. We judge them by their works. I am satisfied that this latter-day movement is of God, and being of him it is divine, therefore shall continue to labor for its up-building. For truth and right,

JOHNSON, R. I., Jan. 11.

Editors Herald.—I wrote you last from McGraw, Pennsylvania, in October. I obtained the United Brethren church (the one occupied by the writer last summer), and preached a week, while Bro. I. M. Smith was at McGraw. Then we changed about, I went to McGraw, and Bro. I. M. went to Excelsior. November 18, I went to Eldred Center to see about the Adventists' church there, but found a revival in progress in town, so did not make any arrangements for meetings. From there I drove to Gossville, and then went back to Excelsior at night to give a lecture by request, in answer to one of Col. Ingersoll's. On Sunday I preached at McGraw in the afternoon and Excelsior at night. Monday went to Gossville and preached three nights. Friday baptized two at Excelsior. For some time Mr. James Kelley, a liberal minded man, had been trying to get a church for me to preach in at Grand Valley, but had not succeeded. Both the United Brethren and Methodists refused to open their doors. One of the preachers saying (when Mr. Kelley told him we preached the Bible), "Why, you can prove anything by the Bible." "Then," said Mr. Kelley, "you had better throw it away."

I always feel anxious to go to a place where there are a certain class that do not want me to come. Through Mr. Kelley and others we obtained a nice hall, and on Saturday, November 27, I began to preach. The people came out well; some inquiring of Mr. Kelley what kind of a circus he had at the hall anyway. I think they must have found out before the week was over, for some of the leading men in town began to inquire why the churches could not be opened, and said if the church people did not open their church they would not pay the preacher. The church was opened! and by request I remained another week, preaching in the Methodist church to interested audiences. The deacon of the church said that he would not take five hundred dollars for what he had learned. I assisted in the dedication of a Union church near Gossville, and made appointment for service the following Sunday; preached twice to good audiences, and left Bro. I. M. Smith to continue the effort.

After leaving Grand Valley I intended to go to Tidioute, where, through the influence of friends, we had secured the Universalist church. So after baptizing two more at Excelsior, in company with our friend Mr. Brannon, we drove to Tidioute. Through a misunderstanding, however, the church was not lit up and no fire lighted so could not hold meeting. And as the writer only had a few days to stay, and was about played out from constant preaching and changing from place to place, concluded to reach the place at a later day.

Bro. Smith must have bound up the law and sealed up the testimony while at Excelsior, for the authorities decided not to let us hold any more services in their church.

December 18 I held service in Mr. Brannon's house, and next day listened to a sermon by the United Brethren preacher, who tried to undo what we had been trying to do for a month or more, but he failed miserably. The man isn't born yet who can undo Bro. I. M.'s sermons with the Bible. At the close of the preacher's effort, two of his members requested him to take their names from the church record. I preached in a private house at night to all that could get in. Next day went to Fagundus; preached at night, baptized a United Brethren exhorter and wife. Next day at McGraw, or near there, attended a supper for our benefit in the church at McGraw at night, an account of which Bro. I. M. Smith has already given the Herald readers. However, there are a few points he forgot to mention. Some who were openly opposed to us and our work when I preached there last summer, are now our friends, and were at the supper and did their part towards its success; and while the writer, according to I. M., showed his appreciation of the noble efforts of the ladies who were so kind as to furnish such a splendid supper, he forgot to mention the part he took in the post prandial exercises. I presume it was from sheer modesty, and appreciating the delicate feeling, I will tell you about it.

Bro. I. M. was called on for a reading, and responded with a selection. As an expectant hush fell on the attractive audience he arose and began to tell us "How Rubenstein played on the piano." To see the staid and quiet Isaac jump upon a settee, swing his arms like an ancient windmill, and yell like a Comanche Indian, "Go it Rube," was simply irresistible—it brought down the house! However, "all's well that ends well," and the supper was a decided success, and the proceeds divided among the missionaries very acceptable. The work is moving along here. This is quite a long letter for the Herald, but I have left unsaid a vast sight more than I have said. Saints or others living in the Massachusetts district outside of branches desiring preaching in your locality write me at Thornton, Rhode Island.

Yours,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

SALVATION AFTER DEATH.

C. A. BRIGGS, D. D.

NO ONE who knows the biblical doctrine of salvation can doubt that the divine order of salvation has its place after death as well as before death.

According to Holy Scripture, man lives in three states; he is born into a state of existence in this world; on the day of ultimate resurrection and divine judgment he enters upon his final state of existence; the state intervening between the day of death and the day of resurrection is the intermediate or middle state.

It is very commonly supposed that there is little in Holy Scripture to instruct us concerning the middle state; but that is a mistake due chiefly to the lack of attention given to the subject by Protestant theologians of the generation that is now passing. In fact there is fully as much information on this subject as on many others that are deemed of great importance, such as the divinity of Christ and the Holy Trinity. The difference is that theologians have constructed these doctrines carefully and with great elaboration by reasoning from the statements of Holy Scripture; and yet traditionalists, who have never reasoned out these, or any other doctrines themselves, but have simply accepted them on trust, from former generations, warn us not to reason from the statements of Holy Scripture about the middle state, but take them on their minimum of value, or avoid them as very mysterious and uncertain. Students of Christian theology will do no such thing: They will deal with the doctrine of the middle state in precisely the same way as they deal with other Christian doctrines.

In the Old Testament there is very little relating to the ultimate state. The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead first becomes plain in the Book of Daniel (chapter 12). The doctrine of Gehenna in antithesis with the New Jerusalem, has its historical origin in connection with the ultimate judgment of those living on the earth; the dead not being mentioned (Isaiah 66). Reference to the middle state and the ultimate state in the same passage can be found only in that late Apocalypse (Isaiah 24: 21, 22), where the evil angels are imprisoned in the pit during the middle state until the judgment which introduces the ultimate state. All the numerous other passages in the Old Testament relating to the future life, have to do with the state immediately after death, or the middle state. This state of existence is described as in a place called Sheol, a subterranean region where the dead live as disembodied ghosts. In the earlier Old Testament literature the righteous and the wicked descend alike to Sheol; in the later literature there seems to be a distinction between Sheol itself and a deeper, darker place called Abaddon or Destruction. Job does not anticipate any salvation from his troubles in this life; but he looks beyond death into the middle state when he will see God, his Redeemer, and he pines away for that redemption (Job 19). Daniel looks for his redemption at the resurrection when he will stand in his inheritance (Daniel 12).

In the later Jewish theology, before the advent of Christ, the distinction in Sheol between the abode of the righteous and the wicked was sharpened. We see it in the parable of Dives and Lazarus, where there is an impassable gulf between Abraham's bosom and the place of torment. The happy place is also called Paradise in the promise of Jesus to the dying robber (Luke 23: 43). The place of torment is also called Apoletia (the Greek for the Hebrew Abaddon) in Matthew 7: 13, as in the apocryphal and pseudepigraphical literature of the Jews, and so distinguished from Gehenna, which is never used for the intermediate place of torment but constantly and alone for the place of torment into which the wicked are cast at the day of judgment. Unfortunately, the English word Hell is commonly used for both Sheol (Hades) and Gehenna, and so great confusion results in the discussion of these subjects.

Jesus Christ came into this world and preached his gospel of salvation to those then living in the land of Palestine; but he also descended into Sheol (Hades) at death and remained in Hades until his resurrection on the third day (Psalms 16; Acts 2: 31, 32). He went to Paradise, the happier part of it, with the robber, but he also went to the place of torment and preached to the spirits in prison there (1 Peter 3: 19).

This doctrine is set forth in the Apostles' Creed in the phrase, "He descended into Hell," (Greek, Hades—Hebrew, Sheol), and is an œcumenical doctrine which no one can reject without departing from the Catholic faith of Christendom.

Christ's mission to Sheol was a mission of redemption just as was his mission to this world. He was redeemer wherever he went. He also "rose from the dead, ascended into heaven, sat down on the right hand of God, the Father Almighty, from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead." His heavenly reign is also a reign of redemption. His judgment does not begin until the reign of grace is over; the work of Christ until the day of judgment is essentially a work of redemption.

There is a well-known order of Christian salvation. There are different opinions as to the relative place of certain links in the chain of grace, but no important difference as to the links themselves. They are, on the divine side, regeneration, justification, adoption, sanctification, resurrection, glorification; on the human side, faith, repentance, Christian hope, holy love, holy conduct. Unless all these links in the chain of grace have been experienced in the life of the Christian, he is in the process of salvation—he is at a certain stage in the order of redemption; but his salvation has not yet been accomplished.

1. Now it is evident that no Christian, even in an advanced stage of Christian development, departs from this life having previously passed through the entire order of salvation. Therefore he must go on in the process of salvation exactly where he was at the moment of death and complete that process after death. If he has been regenerated and justified, if he has faith and repentance prior to death, he must go through those other processes which may be summed up under Christian sanctification, before he can be raised from the dead and glorified. The resurrection takes place at the beginning of the ultimate state, and glorification during that state; therefore Christian sanctification for all those who have not completed their sanctification in this world, must be completed in the middle state.

The only question that remains is, whether that completion takes place in a moment, at death, or by a gradual process during the continuance of the middle state. When we consider that sanctification is a work of God, and not an act of God like justification, and that one of its most characteristic marks is that it is a process over against justification which is instantaneous—we see that to think of immediate sanctification at death is to think of something different from Christian sanctification, which from its very nature must be a process.

There is, indeed, in Holy Scripture, a use of the term sanctification in the sense of consecration, or setting apart as sacred, or holy; in that use, sanctification is a simple act like justification, only it may be repeated, which justification cannot. But in its theological use, sanctification means vastly more than that; it means the making of the person holy; the gradual transformation of the whole personality, life and character into not merely a sinless, but a positively and actively complete and morally perfect being.

For all Christians departing this life at various stages in the order of salvation, the middle state is the state in which they will become perfectly sanctified. This is the view of the middle state which it is all-important for Christians to take; for so long as they hold the delusion that at death, that is in the moment of death, their sanctification will be instantly completed, no matter how poorly they have lived, if only the root of the matter is in them, there is danger that they will never take any great pains to advance in the holy life in this world. But so soon as they know that their holiness and happiness in the middle state will depend entirely upon the advance in the holy life they have made in this life, they will make determined efforts to be as pure and holy as possible before they die.

2. But only a very small proportion of mankind have had a conscious experience of the order of salvation in this life. What shall we say of the great masses who lack that experience? Is there no salvation for them in the middle state? God forbid!

It has always been a Christian doctrine that the people of Israel who died under the old covenant before the advent of Christ, received their knowledge of Christ, began their personal faith in him and their advance in the Christian life, long after their own death, in connection with the personal advent of Jesus Christ to them in the abode of the dead. As the epistle to the Hebrews tells us: "These all, having had witness borne to them through their faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing concerning us, that apart from us they should not be made perfect."—Hebrews 11:39, 40. The Old Testament worthies had attained in various measures the order of salvation of the Old Testament dispensation—but they could not make the advance into the Christian stage of salvation until they had remained long in the middle state and Christ's gospel came to them there.

3. But what shall we say of those ancient worthies who served God and died without the knowledge of Hebrew psalmody and wisdom, of those who passed away before the age of the prophets, of those who knew nothing of the Hebrew law and the divine goodness in Hebrew history? Are we to suppose that David after his death made no advance into the higher religion of the prophets and wise men of Israel? Did Moses never get beyond the religious experience of the Exodus? Has Abraham always remained stereotyped in the religion of the patriarchal age? And have Adam and Enoch remained forever antediluvians? It is only sufficient to state the question to make it plain that each one of these and all others, after their death, continued to advance in their religious knowledge and sanctification in the middle state at least as rapidly as their posterity, whom they left behind them in this world. Otherwise the departed would be shamed by their posterity in ever-deepening degree as every successive generation joined them in the realm of the departed. Such an experience would transform any state of blessedness into a state of unspeakable torture. We may be sure that they all have long since learned all that their posterity know and more, and that they are all at least as far on in the Christian religion and in Christian sanctification as their descendants now in this world.

4. It is well known that a very considerable number of mankind die in infancy, before it is possible for them to have any conscious religious experience. They do not exercise even faith in God in its simplest form.

The only thing that can be thought of for them is that the order of salvation has begun for them in regeneration and justification. Those who practice infant baptism and believe in baptismal regeneration may find that the order of salvation begins for the baptized in baptismal regeneration. But what of the vastly greater number of those who die in infancy without baptism? When infant baptism was universal among Christians, the eternal damnation of unbaptized heathen babes was of no more concern than that of heathen adults. However, they were assigned by Christian theologians a separate place in the middle state called Limbus Infantum. But now, when so large a proportion of children in Christian lands die unbaptized and so large a proportion of those who practice baptism do not regard it as a saving ordinance, it is necessary for them to find an order of salvation for infants elsewhere.

Some Roman Catholics think of various substitutes for baptism, which God may graciously use; but Protestants cannot have so simple a solution of the difficulty. It is not difficult for some to believe that these children are regenerated by the Holy Spirit without any external medium. In this case their regeneration begins in this life, but they no less than the Old Testament worthies are first brought face to face with Christ in the middle state and must exercise their faith and repentance, and pass through all the rest of the order of salvation there. An eminent Baptist theologian thinks that even their regeneration takes place after death. If this be so, it seems necessary to suppose that the first step in the order of salvation for these infants begins after death. A representative ultra-conservative Presbyterian divine recently taught that all infants dying in infancy were justified without faith. But this mechanical conception has no basis in Holy Scripture, or Catholic theology, and it makes a new kind of justification which is known neither to Roman, Greek, nor Protestant Christianity. These infants cannot exercise personal faith and cannot therefore be justified until after death. If we can believe in their secret regeneration in this life, their order of salvation may begin here; but if not,

5. The vast multitudes of the heathen now demand our attention, vastly more now (not to speak of other ages) than all Christians, real and nominal, combined. It is impossible for modern theologians to think that God would permit all these thousands of millions of mankind to perish forever. It is difficult, however, to construct a theory upon which they can be saved in accordance with the systems of Christian theology thus far constructed. It seems best to think of them as in various stages of religious advancement according to the light God has given them, and to find that those who are faithful to that light and live in a measure in accordance with what they conceive to be the divine will, are in an ethnic order of salvation, which is lower, it is true, than the Christian and the Hebrew, but which God accepts and which will serve as a basis for the higher Christian salvation, first made known to them in the middle state. All such, like the pre-Christian Jews and children dying in infancy, know Christ and his salvation for the first time after death in the middle state and begin the order of Christian salvation there, unless we may believe that in some mysterious way God grants them regeneration in this world before their departure from it. But if we make such a use of the term regeneration, we use it in a sense unknown to Holy Scripture and historic theology.

6. We may now consider another class of persons, quite numerous in Christian lands and not without representatives, we may believe, in the lower stages of the Jewish and ethnic religions; namely, those under the influence of what theologians call "preparatory grace." They have not yet been regenerated or justified, but die while still under the influence in a measure of the divine grace striving to save them. The question emerges whether the calamity of death, coming more speedily upon them than upon others, ends all the efforts of the Divine Spirit for their salvation; in other words whether they must, if they have attained the age of responsibility, accept Christ and his salvation before death or be lost forever. This has certainly been the common

Christian opinion, based in part on a mistaken interpretation of Holy Scripture, but chiefly on excessive deductions from certain speculations of dogmatic theology. It is doubtful if anyone, who has gone thus far with us in our reasoning on the basis of Holy Scripture, will be willing to believe it. It is much more reasonable to suppose that God's preparatory grace, used in part in this life, will be continued after death in the middle state until it is fully and sufficiently used, and that it will lead to the beginning of the order of salvation there, for such persons who, from a human point of view, have been prematurely cut off from life in this world and its gracious opportunities.

7. The more difficult and troublesome question remains whether those in Christian lands who have definitely rejected salvation in this life, and those in heathen lands who have shut their eyes to the light shining from God in their religion, will have another opportunity of salvation in the middle state. Before we can safely confront this question it is necessary to guard ourselves on two sides. On the one side Jesus tells us of an eternal, an unpardonable sin. We must therefore conclude that there are some of our race who will, by their own sinful act, cut themselves off forever from all further opportunities of salvation. On the other side we have to reflect that it is seldom, if ever, that we can know whether any particular person has finally rejected salvation in any of the stages in which he may be placed. We can no longer say that in Christian lands a person must be baptized or be what is called a professing Christian hold to certain Christian dogmas, and engage in certain Christian ecclesiastical practices, in order to salvation; for it is well known that all the ecclesiastical establishments put barriers in the way of men's faith, which are in the interests of those establishments rather than in the interests of the salvation of men, and that, therefore, persons outside those barriers, and even unfriendly towards the establishments which exclude them, may yet be Christians and even better Christians than some of those who exclude them. The same may be said of those in the ethnic religions, who do not walk in the way of the priestly establishments of those religions, who may yet be in the way of salvation outside of its established forms and orders. We can no longer think that any religious establishment in this world has now, or ever has had, the last word to say as to the salvation of anyone. Jesus Christ knows who are his, and we may be sure that he knows multitudes unknown to those who claim to represent him here on earth.

With these two sides of the question carefully guarded, what shall we now say of those who, to the mind of Christ, have definitely rejected salvation in this life? Shall they have another opportunity of salvation in the future life?

(a) Some have argued in the affirmative on the ground of human liberty and the right of human probation. Those who think that this life is a probation, and have an adequate knowledge of the middle state, will think that probation continues in the middle state until it results in the salvation or ruin of every individual by his own personal choice and decision.

They cannot believe that probation will be limited to so short a time in this life for such a multitude of people with such slender opportunities in the midst of such a severe strain of distress and temptation when it involves eternal salvation. Such a probation would be a sham, a mockery, no true and adequate probation at all. For a probation, to be really such, must be adequate to the end in view.

(b) But this theory of probation is a modern theory, introduced by the Arminian Whitby, given wider currency by Bishop Butler, and so commonly used in modern apologetical theology. It may be used by semi-Calvinists, but cannot find a place in a really Calvinistic system. The term most appropriate for the consideration of this question is the biblical term discipline, training. God in his infinite goodness is training the individual, the nations, our race, indeed the universe, in various stages of redemption. He does not train in vain. Some in the various stages of redemption are cast aside as incorrigibly bad, incapable of further discipline, but this does not stay the advancement of others. The Calvinist thinks that to all those whom God has regenerated, or to whom he has given the first link in the chain of grace, he will give every link of the chain even to the end. More than this, the Calvinist thinks that the salvation of every individual begins in the divine election before the ages. If this be so, it is not difficult for him also to believe that those who have died while under the influence of preparatory grace will be prepared by that grace in the middle state and carried on to perfect salvation. The true Calvinist, who holds firmly to the doctrine of the middle state, has no difficulty with the beginning of the order of Christian salvation for infants, pre-Christian Jews, Heathen and semi-Heathen in Christian lands, in the middle state. The supreme question is whether they belong to the election of grace. He sees no sufficient reason why we should insist, in the interests of human freedom, that a door should be left open for the rejecting of Christ and his salvation by anyone in the middle state. It is sufficient to believe that all the processes of redemption beginning in this world, which have not utterly failed here owing to the perversity and incorrigibility of the individual, will be continued in the middle state and carried on to their completion in the sanctification and glorification of all the elect.

(c) Most men in our days are what may be called semi-Calvinists, and they occupy a position intermediate between Calvinism and Arminianism. Such, so soon as their eyes are opened to the significance of the middle state, will think that in some way even those whom Christ himself regards as having rejected salvation, those who may fairly be regarded as impenitent, will not be cut off from the influence of saving grace in the middle state. The great theologian, Dörner, thinks that only those will be lost forever who definitely, finally, and deliberately, in view of all the consequences and with the greatest opportunities of salvation, reject Christ and his salvation. All other minor stages of rejection will lead to greater opportunities until the supreme moment when the final decision must be made. Virtually, only those who commit the so-called eternal and unpardonable sin will be ultimately lost. This theory involves a series of minor rejections of Christ for multitudes in the middle state until the final decision has been made. Others, who are not quite prepared for this dogmatic speculation, still think that there must be opportunities for the acceptance or rejection of salvation in the middle state. They argue on the basis of the preaching of Christ to the spirits imprisoned. If Christ gave these antediluvians, who had been hurled into the prison of the middle state by the divine judgment of the deluge, another opportunity of salvation, is it not reasonable to conclude that he would give others less guilty than these, similar opportunities? It is not sufficient to point to the chasm between Abraham's bosom and the place of torment, for that describes Hades prior to the descent of Christ thither, and Peter tells us that Christ subsequently crossed that chasm, and his crossing it as a Redeemer in all probability made as great a saving change there as his advent to this world made in this world. This preaching of Christ to the spirits in prison and the teaching of Christ as to the one unpardonable sin, are the chief bases in Holy Scripture for the modern efforts to find further opportunities of salvation in the middle state for those who have departed this life and gone into the place of punishment.

The view that I take is the Calvinistic view. But who can censure severely those who take what may be called the Arminian or the semi-Calvinistic and Lutheran views? These have all of them more support in Holy Scripture and in sound reason, and are much less worthy of reprobation than that narrow, unscriptural speculation of the scholastic dogmatists and their allies, who deem it essential to the Christian religion to consign the vast majority of mankind to the fires of hell, or who strive to increase the number of the saved by unbiblical and unhistorical transformations of the Christian doctrines of regeneration, justification, and sanctification. Even the Roman Catholic view is greatly to be preferred to that uncharitable speculation, which has made death a terror to many Christians, and which has deprived them of the comforts of a faith, for themselves and others, in a real, active life of service of Christ and humanity immediately after death, and of a well-grounded hope of the salvation of their babes and their friends who have departed this life without giving sufficient evidence that their salvation had begun here. The larger outlook in science, philosophy, history, and biblical theology; an increased knowledge of man and of nature, of this globe and of the universe, and still more of the infinitely holy and loving God of all goodness and grace—all justify us in holding to a much larger hope of human salvation in the future life than former ages were able to conceive or imagine.—From Church Union, November, 1897.

NOTICES.

The usual annual session of the Tuskegee Negro Conference will take place in Tuskegee, Alabama, Wednesday, February 23. The Workers' Conference, composed of officers and teachers of the various colored schools in the South, takes place February 24, at Tuskegee. These conferences present an opportunity to study the condition and progress of the negro, that is afforded nowhere else. Further information can be had from Booker T. Washington, Tuskegee, Alabama.

To the Saints and Ministry in Northeastern Kansas District:—In the revelation of 1894 is the following statement: "And when those officers are ordained and set in their order, in the church, they should be left to administer in the things unto which they were ordained, having charge of the affairs over which they are called and set apart to preside; the twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the Presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, . . . then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; . . . confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain."

That this instruction may be made more effective in the above-named district, the attention of the conference which will convene at Scranton, Kansas, February 5, will be directed to the matter and importance of making provision, next conference year, for the appointment and maintenance of a high priest, who shall thus be enabled to give his entire time to the presidency of the district.

The matter of uniting with the Western Kansas district in a joint reunion next summer will also require your consideration.

Notice is given that all parties concerned may have ample time to determine upon and formulate the best plans of action in the affairs referred to. Your brother,

WILL S. PENDER.

STICKNEY.—James Stickney, at his home near Bad Axe, Huron County, Michigan, December 31, 1897. He was born at Charlotteville, Norfolk County, Ontario, June 22, 1854. Was baptized June 13, 1897, by Elder J. J. Cornish. Wife and six children mourn. Funeral service was held in the Evangelical church, the sermon being preached by Elder W. J. Smith, to a very large gathering of people. Bro. Stickney died in the triumph of faith, exclaiming just before he died, "Those who die in the Lord shall not taste of death, for it shall be sweet unto them." We weep not as for those who die without hope.

MCKINNEY.—Lewis B. McKinney, born December 27, 1830, in Lycoming County, Pennsylvania. Residing in Indiana and in Centerville, Michigan, at the latter place was married to Emily G. Hazard. Passed peacefully away December 26, 1897. Funeral services at saints' chapel, on his sixty-seventh birthday. Sermon by Alma M. Fyrando, to probably the largest and most representative assembly of all classes ever assembled here. By the aid of the Spirit the exercises were peculiarly impressive throughout. Beautiful floral offerings were made by the branch. He was only "one of a family;" very earnest; loved by all. We only rejoice in the hope of a glorious resurrection, or as stated in the text selected by his wife for the occasion, 2 Timothy 4:7, 8.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

The Necessity for a Reorganization.

BY ELDER H. O. SMITH.

This tract sets forth and refutes the false claims and erroneous doctrines of the Utah Church.

It brings to light much of the teachings of Brigham Young and other founders of the Utah faction, and proves them and the present leaders to be at variance with and their organization a departure from the faith taught by the early church and its three standard books.

It also vindicates and maintains the general position of the Reorganized Church in succession.

A tract for the times. Just the thing with which to meet the arguments of Brighamite elders.

Forty-three pages; two for five cents; per doz., 30 cents.

WHAT IS MAN?

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT.

Man's Nature and Destiny. The Spirit or Soul: Is it immortal? Does it survive the Death of the Body in a Conscious state? The views of Mortal-Soulists Examined and Refuted. In two parts. Second edition.

The author has closely examined the subject upon which he has written, both in study and in oral discussion, with those who differ from him in belief concerning the nature and destiny of man. Discussed from biblical, historical, and scientific standpoints. Christ as the true type of man, in life and in death; his preexistence, life, and death considered; the nature of man; the intermediate state of righteous and wicked; consciousness between death and the resurrection; the second death or future punishment; and the final conscious existence of all after the judgment; are leading features of the chapters of the volume.

THE RUINS REVISITED AND THE WORLD-STORY RETOLD.

BY ELDER SAMUEL F. WALKER

The purpose of the writer is to show that the main facts of scientific teaching concerning the origin, growth, and development of the universe, of human tradition and history, and the revelation of Christianity have a common origin, and are evidences of one design in the creation, and in the history and growth of the ages. Theological conclusions are reached from scientific deductions, and by comparison with human tradition, archaeology, and other sources of information the writer aims to present a scientific defense of Christianity. The latter chapters of the work contain evidences from American aboriginal traditions that Jesus is the Christ and was known and worshiped by the ancient inhabitants of the western continent.

A VOICE OF WARNING AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL PEOPLE.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE FAITH AND DOCTRINE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

This work, in its graphic review of the prophecies and history of God's dealings with his people in past ages, together with the abundant proofs concerning the work of the latter days, the gathering and restoration of Israel to their ancient home in Palestine, is a book for the times. The author presents the prophetic evidences of the restoration of the gospel in "the dispensation of the fullness of times," showing the evidences in favor of a restoration of primitive Christianity and the organization of the apostolic church with its apostleship and priesthood—its authority—its powers and gifts. This publication has always been a favorite one among inquirers for the truth.

HELEN KELLAR, THE GIFTED BLIND GIRL.

BOSTON, Massachusetts, Jan. 13.—What Boston is buzzing about to-day is the unexpected withdrawal of Helen Kellar, the gifted deaf, dumb, and blind girl, from the school in Cambridge where she was being prepared for entrance to Radcliffe College to be instructed by tutors elsewhere. Miss Sullivan, who has had charge of the education of Miss Kellar for the last eleven years, placed her in Arthur Gilman's School for Girls a year ago last September.

Last June it was thought best that Helen should take part in the preliminary examinations at Radcliffe in order to test her standing at that time. She passed successfully examination in English, elementary and advanced German, history, French, and Latin, taking honors in English and German. These examinations proved her to be much further advanced than was at first supposed, and Miss Sullivan decided that not more than two years would be needed at Gilman's school to prepare Helen for the entrance examinations at Radcliffe.

At the beginning of the present school year, October 1, Helen entered upon her active studies of Greek, geometry, physics, algebra, and astronomy, continuing such other studies as were necessary. Recently Principal Gilman intimated to Miss Sullivan that he had arranged Helen's studies on a basis of three additional years, inclusive of the present year, in his school, making in all a four years' course in preparation for Radcliffe, instead of a two years' course, as planned by Miss Sullivan. The latter regarded this as a useless waste of time and protested against it. Mr. Gilman, it is said, urged as his reason that Helen was overworking and was in danger of breaking down. The principal was determined to carry out his plan, whereupon Helen's parents, who live in Alabama, came North and abruptly took her from the school.—Tribune.

IS A PAPAL COUP INTENDED.

THE sentiments of the Civitta Cattolica, the organ of the Vatican at Rome, as given by the Rome correspondent of the London Chronicle, will cause a distinct shock to monarchical traditions throughout Europe and produce a sensation throughout the Catholic world generally. The fact that it is regarded as a mere amplification of the Pope's Christmas allocution, coming through an organ edited by a picked staff of leading Jesuits in close relation to the Vatican, gives it the character of an inspired document, apparently designed to mark the beginning of the final struggle which is to settle the controversy for power between the Pope and the Italian monarchy.

The most significant fact in connection with the article is the expression of friendship for the republican form of government, especially as represented by Switzerland and America, which are commended for their "admirable and glorious constitutions," representing "true unities of nation and state," as contrasted with "that of Italy, which," it is declared, "has produced nothing but weakness, misery, and starvation." In the declaration that "without the aid of foreign bayonets the true Italy will find for itself its own way and will rise again from the ignominy in which it now lies prostrate to true greatness," there is an evident allusion to the foreign aid by which the present Italian monarchy was enabled to establish itself as well as an invitation to the Italian people to assert their power.

These utterances are the more remarkable as made in the interest of—if not directly prompted by—a hierarchy which, for fourteen centuries, has not only been one of the strongest supports of monarchical government, but itself a representative of uncompromising despotism. Does it mean that the papacy, in the closing years of the nineteenth century, has been converted to republicanism, or that it has chosen this method for securing the sympathies of the Italian people in bringing to an end the struggle for "temporal power" which it has maintained for over a quarter of a century with the Italian monarchy? If the latter, the occasion has been adroitly chosen at a time when the Italian government is laboring under an accumulation of financial and economic embarrassments which have threatened its existence. In inviting an alliance with the Italian republicans—who are more likely to be opposed to the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope than otherwise—the advisers of the Vatican have taken some uncertain chances, and future developments in that quarter will be awaited with curious interest.—Tribune.

PREACHER GIVES DANCING LESSONS.

THE Rev. E. S. Stoddard, D. D., the rector of St. John's Episcopal Church in Jersey City, has decided to begin giving dancing lessons in the church building next week. The class will meet each Thursday night.

The price for each lesson will be twelve cents. The Rev. Mr. Stoddard intended at first to charge six cents, but found the expenses would be too great.

Dr. Stoddard decided that he could afford to give eight lessons for one dollar. The class was formally organized last night. There were thirty young woman and twenty-eight young men at the meeting.

Fred Anderson, a dancing instructor, has been engaged by Dr. Stoddard.

The young people are enthusiastic over the dancing class, which is the first of its kind ever organized. Some of the other persons criticise Dr. Stoddard for not only sanctioning so wordily an amusement, but connecting it with the church as well. Members of the Evangelical churches are horror-stricken at the idea of a church dancing school.

Dr. Stoddard says he expects to meet criticism, but declares that, however severe, it will not deter him. He considers dancing not only harmless but a necessary diversion, and believes that every young person should be taught to dance.—Chicago Tribune.

HAUPT'S POLYCHROME BIBLE.

The Book of Judges: A New English Translation, Printed in Colors, Exhibiting the Composite Structure of the Book. By G. F. Moore. Dodd, Mead and Co.

THIS is the initial part of the long-expected and abundantly-advertised "Polychrome Bible" now being issued under the general supervision of Professor Paul Haupt of Johns Hopkins University. This particular part, the Book of Judges, is prepared by professor Moore of Andover. Dr. Howard Furness is also one of the general editors whose efforts combine to produce this noteworthy work.

The crazy-quilt patchwork appearance of these pages will at once arouse the ire of those who love not the higher critics. For the whole object of the work is to set forth the conclusions of these critics to the effect that the books of the Bible, as we have them now, especially the older ones, are not the product of any single author, but rather are composite productions, put together by a series of widely separated editors and compilers. The modern expert critics, working over this Chinese puzzle, claim to have been able to take it all to pieces again, picking out of a single paragraph sometimes bits of half a dozen different documents, redactions, or traditions. These sundry sources are each definitely indicated by tinting that portion of the line or page a certain color.

work and deny that the critics have the courage of their convictions. Their ideas are here diagrammed so that the dullest can understand them at a glance. To what extent they are correct may still be a matter for dispute, and no doubt the battle will rage more fiercely than ever over this polychrome device. But this at least is sure—the scientific critics have already made impossible for the Bible to be abused as a fetish, as it was in a day not so remote as that of the Puritan fathers.

But to the ordinary orthodox mind this patchwork device may seem to require a phenomenal, not to say inspired, discernment and ingenuity which is not always apparent. The color scheme gives an appearance of practical infallibility to the ideas of these learned doctors which tends to make one a little skeptical as to how they come to know so much. Possibly they would have been more successful in winning converts to their ideas if they did not claim to be so miraculously cute in their detective undertaking.

As for the matter of special divine inspiration it is doubtless as easy to suppose that this may have been given to the compilers, redactors, or editors as to the original authors. And, on any theory, the unique character, the moral and religious authority and power of the Bible is evidenced by its own history as a power among men rather than by any body's theory.

The translation here given is made with no troublesome reverence for either the "common" or the "revised" versions. Some will decidedly prefer it to either. But what respectable reason can be given for writing "JHVH" for the word Jehovah or Lord is more than a layman can conjecture. It looks like a silly bit of pedantry. Of course, as every one knows, the Hebrew used to be written wholly in consonants, without vowels, but nobody supposes that those who used the language were compelled to talk in consonants only. And the attempt here to make the reader of this polychrome version pronounce, or rather sibilate, without a vowel the name "JHVH" for Jehovah or Lord every time he comes to it is a trifle irritating.

The publication of other books in this polychrome series will be awaited with interest. The ordinary intelligent reader will then be able with considerable confidence to judge for himself as to the documentary theory and as to this kind of free-hand patchwork reconstruction of the ancient history. From any point of view it is a great undertaking.—Chicago Tribune.

A CAKE WALK IN CHURCH.

ST. LOUIS, Missouri, January 18.—John Calvin's shade would have been greatly surprised had it been in the vicinity of the Second Presbyterian Church last night. The cake walk was unknown in Calvin's day, and as an adjunct to religion it was not known for many years after Calvin died. In fact, it is probable that the young people of the Second Presbyterian Church are the originators of the idea of entertaining themselves in such a good old African way. The occasion was the eleventh anniversary of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the church.—Chicago Tribune.

GOES TO CHURCH DISGUISED.

THE REV. DR. HENRY FRANK, of Dover, New Jersey, a week or two ago made a tour among some of the churches in Greater New York. He went in the garb of a respectable mechanic to see whether any wealthy church would receive him cordially. In one church he stood seventeen minutes and then went out, and no usher offered him a seat. In another church he took a seat, but very soon a large man laid a heavy hand upon his shoulder and brusquely demanded to know what right he had there, and ordered him out.

He visited five churches and was treated similarly in all.

Dr. Frank preached to his congregation to-day in Dover on the subject of his experiences in New York, saying that after fully satisfying himself of the spirit that governs these churches he pronounces them to be uncivil, devoid of human sympathy, hard-hearted, and insolent. He denounced their prayers as brazen acts of mockery and their worship as glaring hypocrisy.—Chicago Tribune.

A TEMPERANCE SCREED.

"ONE of the Common People" writes: "I do not pretend to be the peer of Dr. Grant in any of his great attainments, but in the temperance reform he is evidently only a beginner. I understand his first letter to be simply an announcement in substance that a great and good man was about to take the field against prohibition. To this I beg to reply that professionals like the reverend doctor have been found to obstruct all great reforms. Indeed professionals are generally the last to be reformed. But Providence performs his work with bad tools when the good ones are arrayed against him. In this reform, however, the great majority of Christian ministers advocate prohibition, and no doubt some who oppose it now would favor it if the majority were opposed to it. Ministers, as well as others, like to be distinguished in some way. Though it is difficult to conceive how a man who has achieved eminence in so many respects should volunteer to champion those he so prophetically describes as perjurers, bribers, etc. But he has helped us to an explanation. He says it is in human nature—'just as men who have drunk too much are thirsty and cry "more brandy."'

"When the Christ came on his great mission of reform he found all the leading clergy of the church violently opposed to him. Of his twelve apostles not one was a professional. The doctor assumes, for instance, in the case of smuggling, that the Government would be less able to detect crooked whiskey when there would be no other around than as now, when it can be easily concealed with thousands lawfully authorized to store and sell the like. And now a single cargo smuggled would give a fortune. He speaks of convictions as though their number depended on the prevalence of crime, so that in barbarous countries, where nothing is prohibited by law, there being no convictions there would be no crimes. But in Canada, as elsewhere, there are a thousand frauds to one arrest even. He condemns Maine for having passed a prohibitory liquor law in 1846, which they have stuck to ever since, in spite of a wary and remorseless enemy.

"Christ did not often specify the evils against which Christianity was aimed, but rather laid down in parables or otherwise, great principles applicable to all conditions and times. We admit he did not even forbid polygamy, nor slavery, though they prevailed everywhere. But he laid down principles that condemned doing an injury to any man or woman or creature, anyhow and anywhere. As for prohibition by the Buddhists, it was an absolute necessity, as it is to prohibit selling to Indians, else they would soon have killed one another off and left no followers for Buddha, Mohammed, etc. It is only the restraints of Christianity and consequent loyalty to law that enables the traffic to exist among us. A few days since two men were murdered by two drunken men, who were totally insensible to what they were doing. Had this occurred among the tribal Indians the man who thus drugged and inflamed them would have been shot, and his business of manufacturing mad men stopped. I heard a certain brewer of this city tell how he had violated the Scott act.

"Would wild, unchristian savages submit to have their mandates thus defied? By no means! They would have put the torch to every distillery and brewery and whiskey den in the land, if not to every barley field, railway bridge and boat that had to do with the defiance of their orders. I repeat, it is only Christianity that makes it possible for law to defeat the wishes of the people. A few hundred God-defying men could quickly put an end to the liquor traffic in Canada. Yet we should not infer that heaven wants us to keep the traffic here. It was the same with slavery in the United States. It became more and more profitable, and therefore powerful, every year, like the liquor traffic here. But that reckless, fanatic, John Brown, cut the knot with sixteen desperadoes at Harper's Ferry. He precipitated a war, the most expensive and one of the most deadly the world ever saw. But it freed the slaves. Tens of thousands of Christian ministers, college presidents and professors upheld human slavery, and talked eloquently of vested rights and morality, etc. Yes, we have heard all this before, and from ministers, too, when reforms were mooted."

Miss Henrietta Day Smith, Hamilton, replies to Principal Grant's leading arguments against prohibitory liquor legislation, and quotes from a statement by ex-Governor Dingley as to the influence of prohibition in Maine: "In 1855 there were 10,000 persons (one out of every forty-five of the population) accustomed to getting beastly drunk. There were 200 deaths from delirium tremens annually (equivalent to 300 now), there were 1,500, perhaps, (equivalent to 2,200 now), made so by drink; there were 300 convicts in State prison and jails (equivalent to 450 now), and intemperance was destroying a large proportion of the inhabitants and of the homes throughout the State. Now not one in 300 of the population is a drunkard, not one-sixth as many; the deaths from delirium tremens annually are not fifty, and criminals and paupers (not including rumsellers) are largely reduced notwithstanding the large influx of foreigners and tramps. It does not look as though Maine's morals are being hurt much by prohibition when in 1892 she had only one convict for every 6,959 of her population; whereas Canada had one for every 3,980 of her population in the same year. Maine reports fifty-seven towns in which there is neither almshouse or pauper. She is physically the poorest State in the Union, yet has the greatest wealth per capita of any State, one out of every three or four of her inhabitants possessing quite a comfortable bank account."—Toronto Globe, December 25.

It is quite refreshing to note this effort in our neighbor on the north to escape the evils of drunkenness, and though we may possibly think that the word "prohibition" does not correctly represent the ground covered by the word "temperance," yet, in view of what the writer has stated, "it is only the restraints of Christianity and consequent loyalty to law that enable the traffic to exist among us;" it ought to be pertinent to ask, How is the traffic in intoxicants aided by the restraints of Christianity? Surely, this must be a misprint, a mistake of the printer or the proofreader.

Does it mean that because of the restraints of Christianity the lawless forces of Buddhism, Mohammedanism, which the writer styles "Indian," would despoil the traffic because of the evils following it, and make the safety of society assured by punishing alike him that drank and him that made him drunken? Does he mean that Christianity enacts laws by which the traffic is carried on, and those who profit by it are protected in their business by laws enacted by Christians, enforced by Christians, and acquiesced in and submitted to by Christians? It would seem so.

Then follows the question of great interest to the HERALD readers, What Christianity is this that makes the liquor traffic possible, and is given as the cogent reason for its existence? Is Dr. Grant ready to answer?

The Scriptures has it that no drunkard hath eternal life, or can have continuing place in the kingdom of God. This Christianity, so called, surely cannot set aside this fiat, and replace it with one that not only admits drunkards as inheritors of eternal life, but admits those who make them.

Our theory seems to take in the idea that as no drunkard is an inheritor of eternal life in the kingdom of God, for that reason no man should be either a drunkard or the maker of one. It also contemplates the philosophy that the Christianity of the gospel was designed to make men heirs of the kingdom, joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Hence, true Christianity cannot be the successful coadjutor of the traffic, in that the use of which not only unfits them for useful lives on earth, but absolutely debars them from the kingdom of God after death. It therefore cannot be the Christianity of the New Testament gospel that gives existence and sustenance to the traffic.

We are much pleased to see the defensive showing of Miss Smith in favor of the State of Maine. That State has so long been held up as the place where prohibition did not prohibit, that it is very pleasant to see such a showing as the last sentence shows,—a bank account for one out of every three or four of her people. Pretty good for Maine. What a striking and remarkable argument in favor of the abolition of the liquor selling, liquor drinking element from the municipality and the State this condition of things in the Granite State is. Material prosperity may not be necessarily an evidence of godliness, or an indication of Christian progress; but material prosperity under conditions that show in marked contrast between the poverty and squalor of beer guzzling, whiskey drinking communities, and the thrift and cleanliness of communities where sobriety obtains, does show where the path of wisdom may be found. Maine is rock-ribbed, granite-shouldered against the world in her geological and material organization; and it is fitting that in the attitude of moral reform,—by which the physical and mental health and activities of her citizenship may be preserved, and their powers be enhanced,—she should be also morally and economically rock-ribbed and granite-shouldered. Long live Maine!

The gospel, as the angel's message has delivered it, teaches that the man that sinneth against his own body sinneth against God. This is beautifully stated by Paul. "Now are ye the body of Christ, and members in particular."

It is therefore a foregone conclusion in the mind of the saint that he cannot be other than sober in his habits and retain the Spirit of the Holy One, and be counted as a member in good standing in the body of Christ. If there is no fellowship between the Spirit of Christ and the Spirit of the Evil One, no union of Jesus and Belial, none between the spirit of the Christian and the world; then there must ever be the farthest possible distance between sobriety and drunkenness; propriety and rioting.

It is said that comparisons are odious; but it ought to be that statements of facts where truth and morality are involved ought to be permissible.

All up and down the valleys of the Ohio, Allegheny, and Monongahela Rivers and their tributaries—from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, the converging point of trade and wealth—there are hives of human industry. The masses are toilers. From the slow accretions of small gains from the mines and the workshops, many thousands of men and their families are sustained. From many of these localities murmurings of discontent more or less distinct and loud and aggressive are heard, and yet a condition of things is existent that demands and takes a larger percentage of the gains of the workman than either Carnegie, Frick, or any other so-called iron or coal magnate ever thought of taking.

The town of Benwood is said to contain seven thousand of population, composed almost entirely of mill workers, and the necessary aiders and abettors of such industries, carters, wagoners, coal, iron, and coke handlers of every sort. This aggregate accumulation of laborers and their necessary helpers—the grocers, provision dealers, gardeners, butchers, bakers, candlestick makers, etc.—maintain some thirty-nine (the same number of stripes that Paul used to get) saloons, regular places where wines, beer, and intoxicating drinks are sold and drunk. This means practically that the small army of workers comprised in the seven thousand of population, every five of whom are producers, the bread-winners, pay the licenses, house rent, taxes, and all incidental expenses, support of family, and accumulation of wealth to thirty-nine men, not toilers like themselves. To figure this a little closer, it means that as only one in five of the population, usually considered, is a breadwinner, there are only about fourteen hundred of the seven thousand that are so classed, and this divided by thirty-nine gives one saloon, or resort for drinking purposes, to every thirty-eight of the workers, or thereabouts. This means that every thirty-eight of these toiling men—many of whom are poverty stricken, living poorly in rented houses at high rents—are voluntarily taxing their hard-earned pittances to support and maintain a drunkard-maker, his wife, and children; many of them in luxury, in good houses, with pleasant surroundings; and the chances for the children of such families, such as the coal miner and iron worker dare not even dream of for theirs. All this these toilers do voluntarily; for no State has ever yet enacted laws by which it is made the duty of the citizen taxpayer to set apart any portion of his earnings to the use of the saloon and liquor seller.

Benwood is but one end of the long settlement along the Ohio, known popularly as Wheeling, West Virginia, with some forty thousand population, and the whole mass of busy people properly seasoned, peppered, spiced, and salted with saloons, drinking booths, and tavern bars in the proportion named.

At the risk of raising another storm, we write it as our conviction from what we saw and heard, that it is such a condition of things as is presented above that has made such rioting and bloodshed, as was witnessed but a few short months ago at Homestead, at Chicago, at Birmingham, and other places possible.

Take this mischief-breeding, unprofitable and unproductive element out of the lives of the workingmen, and a vast amount of squalor, poverty, and wickedness would be avoided, and all the unnecessary expense incurred by the State to look after the peace of community and care for the paupers would be diverted into legitimate channels, and the working classes be made much better off.

Maine—with her hard industries of lumber making, granite blasting, paving making, and poorly remunerated fishing—keeps herself afloat in the sisterhood of States, with a prohibitory law laughed at, ridiculed, and confessedly poorly enforced, shows a bank account for every few of her workers, while bibbling, guzzling, swilling West Virginia and Pennsylvania are leaving the barons to pile up the millions, and the toilers are consenting to it largely by voluntarily consenting to sustain a soul and body demoralizing, political, and practical system that is a veritable social devil fish among systems.

If Mr. D. L. Moody and Mr. Francis Murphy want a field where they can do society good, and where they can do absolute and unmeasured good to both the souls and bodies of men, here is one ready to their occupancy. Let them take the three rivers for a radius of a hundred miles up and down from Pittsburg, and open an active personal campaign against the drink evil habit, and the measures by which it exists and is fostered, and they can make names that shall be enscribed high up on the pillars of fame. But while they are catering to the classes above the workers, and away from the places where they may be reached, they may create sensations, get their names in the daily press as such movers among men, they can never reach the cankerous sore in the American economic world. What Neal Dow and others have done for Maine, Moody and Murphy, or some others must do for Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Here is a suggestion. Have we not some one or more who will and can attack this hydra-headed monster, and down him? It is a more notable dragon than St. George ever saw or dreamed of, and there is a chance for immortality for him that will do battle with it to the death.

Wherever the church can and does reach men, those won to its ranks are won from the liquor traffic; and could we but be universally successful, men now engaged in the service of the Demon of Strong Drink would be compelled to find other sources of labor and support.

Down with inebriety, drunkenness, and disaster, and up with sobriety, temperance, and prosperity!

A LIBERAL (?) CHRISTMAS SERMON.

THE Chicago Tribune in its issue of Sunday, December 19, published a number of short Christmas sermons, from which we select the following, from Dr. H. W. Thomas, of the People's Church, as a specimen of current so-called Liberal theology:—

The exceptional, that which is out of the natural order, gives rise to questionings, doubts, hence is a burden upon faith. Professor Schmidt, the eminent Biblical scholar of Cornell University, says: "A future critical edition of the New Testament must adopt in the text or at least register in the margin the reading: 'Joseph begat Jesus,' in Matthew 1:16." In the higher order of the natural, of the ever-becoming life of man, there has been an age-long process of enlargement, of race- uplifting, through birth accessions of moral power. If a Moses, a Socrates, a Buddha, why not the Christ? Not less divine because more human.

Ever since the Jewish elders accused Jesus the Christ of "blasphemy" because he claimed to be the Son of God, and greater than their father Abraham, it has been the leading effort of those opposed to his divine mission to cause disbelief in the miraculous conception and divine Sonship of the Messiah. Infidel, atheist, and spiritualist have joined in ridicule of the statements and claims of holy writ concerning the great truth that Christ was begotten of the Holy Ghost, hence God's only begotten Son.

And now comes Doctor Thomas, a product of dissent from Calvinistic theology, who has swung so far to the opposite extreme and has become so exceedingly liberal in his modes of thought and so loose in his interpretations that he seems disposed to glorify the human and bring down the divine to its poor level, in the phantasies of so-called "Liberalism."

Doctor Thomas has also, as we understand, joined with Dr. Lyman Abbott and others in discarding the account of the creation and fall of man, and other verities of Jewish revelation and history, as myths or indefinite race legends, upon the theory that they were evolved from traditions of the Babylonians and other nations and became merged into the Jewish cosmogony. Therefore it has now become a matter of little or no difficulty for the Doctor to propose a direct alteration, or marginal addition, to the text of the divine word, to suit the so-called progressive ideas or fancies of himself and his school, who have become wise above what is "written."

Liberalism is not always liberality. When it swings so far from foundation principles that it rests upon "nothing," it has nothing, simply nothing, to offer; hence cannot guarantee to its adherents or devotees anything to be relied upon. The physical universe in its structure and growth does not justify such loose methods as those adopted by adherents to the so-called scientific theological school. Doctor Thomas should first satisfy his readers that he is better informed upon the facts of New Testament history than were Matthew and others chosen by our Lord; also that he is fully acquainted with all the workings of nature manifested and at the disposal of the power behind nature, before proposing such an unwarranted departure from, setting aside, or erasure of revealed truth.

No less scientific authority than the eminent Hurley has declared the miraculous conception to be not out of harmony with natural law. Dement in his excellent work "Ingersoll, Beecher, and Dogma," also makes good points to the same effect.

New discoveries in all branches of science show the familiar concrete properties of nature to be endowed with possibilities scarcely less marvelous than those claimed for the spiritual; that the known is yet largely unknown. Indeed, the line drawn between the natural and the spiritual (so designated) is more imaginary than real, so close is the connection, so intimate the relation, so complementary the one to the other, both evidently being parts of a great whole, and to recognize and to bring out which is strictly scientific. Each is but part "of one stupendous whole."

Dr. Thomas' views upon Bible history and revelation do not seem very definite or clear. It is difficult to comprehend his position; whether with him all the statements of the Jewish Scriptures are uncertain and doubtful; or some true and sufficiently correct to constitute a basis of faith. In all events, being a doubtful quantity, in his attitude toward ancient revelation, and evidently an unbeliever in present-day inspiration, similar to that of the past,—direct communication from God to the race,—he is hardly in position to suggest changes in foundations of faith. If God has not spoken since the apostolic age, we have no evidence that he has abrogated what he then declared. Nor have we reason to regard the Almighty as fickle, unstable, or changeable in character. However clergymen of certain schools have little difficulty with such propositions. Fickle themselves, logical propositions are often brushed aside because out of harmony with their systems and methods.

Here we are willing to suggest to the Doctor: Not the human for the divine. The human is faulty, imperfect, uncertain. The divine is true, perfect, steadfast, eternal. We have had too much of the human in theology (Dr. Thomas' theories included); we want the divine, and nothing but the divine. We want the Christ as the Christ: the Way, the Truth, and the Life—the Son of God.

Is it true that that which is out of the natural order (the order that appears to man in the present imperfect state) should "give rise to questionings, doubts, hence is a burden upon faith"? Is there not a distinction between what one sees and knows of the present and what one does not see and comprehend? Have not scientists rejected as abnormal what now they receive as natural? Do not questionings and doubts often lead to investigation and increase of knowledge? Is not proper questioning a prelude to confirmation of faith? Man by his questionings of nature has comprehended her secrets and placed her forces at his disposal. The disciples of the Master received explanations of parables because they asked questions. "Ask and ye shall receive," etc. Light dispels darkness and confirms faith. Man is an intellectual interrogation point with capacity, aided of God, to receive a knowledge of all truth.

Reverting to the "natural order": Must the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead also go by the board?

Will it be natural for man to always exist separate from a tabernacle or body? If so, where the relation to this existence? Or, will the Doctor finally conclude that "death ends all" because some claim there is no "natural" evidence of immortality? Who, what, and where is Dr. Thomas? Who has authorized his presumptions, and when did the Almighty discover his mistakes and constitute evolutionistic theologians, without communication from him, to correct his errors? Are not the exceptions referred to as "the higher order of the natural" which "evolved a Moses, a Socrates, a Buddha," so exceptional as to become themselves, by the Doctor's theory, a "burden upon faith"? How long, according to the Doctor's "progress" will it be until we may sweep away all foundations of faith and have—nothing? How long will it take Nature—nature without God and grace—to evolve the race entire (or what may be left of it) to "the higher order of the natural"! To say the least such a process or method looks discouraging. Who would survive, and where? We have read somewhere of "evolution against itself." The Doctor's own theories literally swallow and annihilate themselves, as the reader will see if he take the trouble to push them to their logical conclusions in the many features that might suggest themselves?

And, who is Professor Schmidt? Does he outrank Apostle Matthew and the innumerable company who have borne witness to the divinity of the Christ? Is his university degree higher than their credentials? Is he more eminent or better qualified to suggest textual changes than were the Jewish rabbis who misled the rabble and condemned the Son of God as a blasphemer and impostor? Pardon the statement, but Professor Schmidt has not yet sufficiently evolved. He seems to require a process of growth out of mistaken conceptions into the higher order of the spiritual. To both the gentlemen named the following texts may afford instruction, with others of similar import:—

No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Cor. 12:3.

No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.—Matt. 11:27.

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.—John 17:3. (See also John 1:1-14; 8:54-58; etc.)

"If a Moses, a Socrates, a Buddha, why not the Christ? No less divine because more human."

We shall not attempt to do more than refer to the superiority of Christ the Son over Moses the servant; the one a man, the other "God manifest in the flesh;" the life of the one honorable to himself and ennobling to posterity, though mistakes are recorded in the recital of it; the life of the other an exhibition of perfection in all its phases, a pattern for man to imitate, a guide for him to follow; "In whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge"—Creator, Redeemer, Savior; the Son of God with power; and "greater than" even "our father Abraham." (John 8.)

The chasm is too great to be spanned in that way.

Socrates, due honor to his worth, will not compare with Moses. Of Buddha enough is known to place him among the exceptional men, but himself and his system are far beneath and not to be compared with the excellency and dignity of the Christ.

We leave the Christ for the reader to contemplate, assured that in reverently so doing he will continue to wonder and admire, though he can never exhaust the theme, because infinite.

BRO. V. D. BAGGERLY DEAD.

BY CARD from Bro. J. M. Baggerly, dated Detroit, Michigan, the 15th inst., we learn that his father, Elder V. D. Baggerly, of the Second Quorum of Seventy, died suddenly at his home, Derby, Indiana, on the 14th inst. A letter to Bro. Columbus Scott, President of the Second Seventy, states that Bro. Baggerly had returned from his field to spend the holidays with his family; and that his death was caused by apoplexy.

Bro. Baggerly was a veteran and a faithful laborer in the vineyard, for whom there is a reward at the Master's hand. We sympathize with his bereaved family.

NOTE IT.

NOTE the many phases of world developments in religious, social, political, and all other lines of thought and progress—progress forward and backward as the case may be; note also the items of church news that we give in the HERALD.

How can Latter Day Saints keep progress with the work if they fail to read the church organ? Surely no one can afford to fall behind in the onward progress of the work and the world as we approach "the end of the world"—the time of the harvest—the closing scenes of the "eleventh hour."

Do you take the HERALD, the official publication issued by the church? If you do not, you ought to take it and read it and use it for good.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. I. N. ROBERTS, Minneapolis, Minnesota, January 14:—

I have just arrived in the city and will begin action to-night; and hope to do some good while here, more to the saints than others. Things are not as I would like to see it in this city, but hope for a revival among our own people. The northern part of my field is in fine shape; prospects are grand for an ingathering. There has been paid in something over six hundred dollars tithing this year in my field; so you can see how the Lord is with them. Am in the best of health and spirits.

Bro. W. S. Pender, Clay Center, Kansas, January 15:—

Am assisting the saints here now, in a project to build a church, with every prospect of success. Will be at Greenleaf, Kansas, Sunday the 23d.

Bro. C. H. Porter, Guide Rock, Nebraska, January 20:—

I have just closed a series of very interesting services near Hardy, and am now on my way to points further west.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. U. W. GREENE'S letter in present issue, though not written for publication, is given space for the benefit of "all whom it may concern" in this: It suggests a thought of general interest in the offer to forward matter for publication in the HERALD. The elders and others who come across matter of importance in advocacy and defense of the truth would aid the cause by forwarding such items to the HERALD. There is much of good in the field of literature, in history, science, archæology, etc., etc., that would prove helpful, that could be furnished from books, magazines, newspapers, and other publications. We refer to matter of value, not the mere passing worthless "stuff" that floats into many publications. The editors will publish such matter as they can, but could return any not used, if so requested. Regular communications are listed and kept track of. Keep the HERALD posted and it will be the better able to post the brethren in the fields and at home. We try to keep a watchful lookout for anything and everything of value to the ministry and the saints.

Bro. R. J. Anthony has been holding a debate with Ben Rich, of the Utah Mormon Church, up Blackfoot way in Idaho. Particulars will be sent by Bro. Condit or Grimmitt.

All notices, communications, newspapers or other matter intended for publication in the HERALD should be addressed to the Editors. They will not hold themselves responsible for delay or nonappearance of matter not addressed to them or the "Editorial Department."

We have request to republish the now "celebrated" "Cure for Cancer." It was recently reprinted. See HERALD of December 29, 1897.

Elder Alma Kent, of the Eastern mission, stopped at Lamoni enroute home to Kansas, visiting relatives at headquarters. He will labor in Kansas until General Conference.

Bro. J. L. Goodrich has a card in the New Lexington, Ohio, Tribune, late date, in which he contrasts the truth from Utah Mormonism in good form.

A letter from some Kirtland sisters recounts a good time had among the Kirtland saints in a social way of late with some who came to visit them from other branches of the church.

A handbill announces a series of meetings at Princeville, Illinois, in the town hall, by Bro. M. T. Short, to begin January 13; on subjects or divisions of "the old Jerusalem gospel." These are the days in which it pays to advertise that the people may see, read, and hear, and learn what, when, and where, concerning the truth.

Brethren sending newspapers will please mark matter to which attention is desired. It takes too much time to hunt through unlimited columns of matter.

A sister writes a lengthy letter urging that the word be taught as diligently in families of the saints as to the world. The sentiment is a good one and we note it, though not having space for the letter entire.

Sr. Fannie Green, Ridgetown, Ontario, asks for the present address of Bro. and Sr. George A. Thayer, formerly of Bennington, Michigan. Bro. John Shields had been holding services at Ridgetown to good effect.

Sr. R. C. Kelley of Bagdad, Florida, writes earnestly of her interest in the cause, of blessings received because of devotion to the work and sacrifice of worldly pleasures and follies. After actual enjoyment of the Master's blessings she commends them to the young as of priceless value.

Bro. George E. Spencer wrote January 15, from Elmore, Colorado; had done some preaching east of his home, and was in good spirits for the onward progress of the work.

Bro. P. P. Starke, lately baptized at Richmond, Virginia, was to visit Roxbury, some twenty miles from Richmond, on the 9th January by invitation. There are nine members at Roxbury, and Bro. S. was thinking that his visit would do them and himself some good, which we believe. Bro. Starke is engaged on a series of tracts that he believed would be aids to the work.

A railway is to be built from the base to the summit of Mount Sinai, according to a late press item; and now a Pittsburg firm has been awarded a contract to light the catacombs of Rome by electricity. Present and prospective conditions indicate that curiosity may be satisfied without the people being brought nearer to God, or made closer imitators of the good of the early Christians, by access to the ancient mount and the later burial place. However, the microbe is at work penetrating everything, and throwing light, that all things may be made manifest—the things of the present included.

At an alumni dinner of Wesleyan University graduates, including ministers of high standing, liquors were placed on the table at the disposal of the guests. The New York Voice, which protested against the grill room of Princeton University, and the easy access of Yale students to liquor saloons, has also called attention to the Wesleyan's banquet. Methodist ministers have protested against the use of intoxicants.

Dr. William Reed Huntington D. D., Rector of Grace Church New York, has written a work, "A National Church," in which he "presents with force and clearness his views on the theory and practicability of a National Church with special reference to our own country. He names as the three 'watchwords of unity:' In the field of Dogma, Condensation; in the field of Polity, Coördination; in the field of Worship, Classification."—Who next? How about the numerous array of D. D's., who have preceded him? Are they and their theories "dead issues"? If so what will become in turn of Dr. H. and his theories and National(?) Church?

Several anarchistic and anti-Semitic demonstrations against Zola, the French writer, and others who charge government complicity in late military trials, occurred in Paris on the 17th. Russia has "borrowed" Talién-Wan and Port Arthur—two ports—from China, and has notified Japan to that effect. Japan has offered no objection.

A submarine boat has been tested at Baltimore which experts affirm, can crawl along the bottoms of rivers and harbors and destroy torpedo mines such as the government is constructing for coast defense. It is claimed that this new invention will compel the adoption of an entirely new system of submarine defense.

At the instance of the German Navy Department a pamphlet has been issued addressed to the Hebrew Reichstag electors, who are mostly followers of Herr Richter, exhorting them to vote for a larger navy, as "Palestine, by its aid, could be turned into new Germany" for them.

Five thousand Socialist workmen, who had been forbidden to hold a meeting, made a public demonstration in Vienna on Sunday, and there are rumors of trouble in Hungary and Bohemia.

Kiao-Chou is free as a trading point; Germany will not seek to restrict its commerce. If Russia pursues a similar policy at Port Arthur, England and America will not complain. England's policy of "no grab and no curtailment of the world's rights" in China has had a soothing effect, thus far.

Pekin, January 19.—The Tsung-Li-Yamen, the Chinese Foreign Office, has had another conference on the subject of the loan, which is still unsettled. Besides the right to extend the Burmah railroad through Yun-Nan Province, Great Britain asks the right to build railroads through the Province of Sze-Schuan (north of Yun-Nan), and a third treaty port is demanded, the identity of which no doubt is Siang-Yin, in the Province of Hu Nan, which Japan proposed to open at the time of the Shimoneseki negotiations. The proposed opening of the Port of Talién-Wan (on the Liao Tung peninsula and north of Port Arthur, a position which would command the railroad connecting Port Arthur with the north and Manchuria) continues to be the chief difficulty, Russia desiring to keep the whole of Manchuria for herself. Neither power is willing to yield on this point, and the question is no longer a commercial one. It has become political.

Yokohama, January 19.—The organ of the government reproaches Russia, Germany, and France with following a selfish policy in the far East, and adds: "Japan will avoid alliances, but she is prepared to act vigorously if necessary for the maintenance of peace."

British war ships in commission at Esquimaux, British Columbia, have been ordered by the English government to immediately join the Asiatic squadron.

The London Times' Pekin correspondence of the 20th says the Russian Chargé d' Affairs has so strongly remonstrated with the Tsung-Li-Yamen against the opening of Talién-Wan as to amount to intimidation. He threatened reprisals and the withdrawal of Russia's friendship and protection. "The Chinese, while recognizing the advantage of the British terms as affording the best hope of maintaining the integrity of the empire, are wavering."

London, Jan. 22.—The Sultan of Turkey has determined to send 15,000 soldiers to Palestine in honor of Emperor William's visit there. The garrisons of Beirut and Damascus will be reëquipped, and his majesty will also give the German Emperor a piece of ground at Jerusalem, which, according to tradition, was the site of the last supper, which different Christian communities have hitherto vainly sought to acquire. It is understood that Emperor William will transfer the ground to the German Catholic missionaries.

Original Poetry.

THE ROD, FOR THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

Saints, saints, will you murmur complaints
Longer, or strive with a friend that is true, o'er a fancied right.
The letter it is that kills, the spirit is pure in God's sight,
And giveth a life that is pure, and seeketh
no longer the ill
That a brother has done, and repented, and would leave, but it clings to him still,
And is flung at his back and is held in his face till he faints.
The rod, for the children of God.
The rod and the law are proof of a son whom the Lord corrects,

The bastard is free and never a father caresses or checks.

'Tis the fold for the weak, and the field for the strong and the true.

The one God protecteth and feeds; and the other he strengtheneth all the day through,

To live for the truth at home, and to witness for it abroad.

The fold for the feeble and old;

But the field of the world for the valiant defender of truth.

The gospel was restored at the last, through the hand of a youth.

The wisdom and knowledge that come with the lengthening years,

Are naught as compared to a faith and trust that are fixed, in the Lord, above fears.

And a love for the truth that can neither be bought nor be sold.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God"—Heb. 4: 9.

"After the toil and trouble there cometh a day of rest.

After the weary conflict, peace on the Savior's breast.

After the care and sorrow, the glory of light and love,

After the wilderness journey, the Father's bright home above."

NEEDED HELP GIVEN.

COMING home from my school work one evening, and feeling tired and somewhat discouraged, I picked up the Herald. It is my usual custom to glance over the Herald and see what is contained therein, and then begin with the Home Column and read all that, and then read the letters. On this evening I glanced over the contents till I came to the Home Column. There these words were read, "God knows it all." I stopped then and read all of the letter. Some place I have read this thought, that when we need any particular help and are ready for it, we will find just what is needful for us, and the help we most need at that time. We will either meet some persons who will give us the necessary help, or find in some book or paper the help we need. How true this is. On this particular evening I had need of just the words contained in Sr. Almira's letter. I could not get to talk with one who had always been ready and able to give me words of comfort and advice. This one was not at home at this time, and I was so anxious to talk with her. Not having the privilege of talking as I wished, words came from the pen of another helper, pointing me to an all-wise and loving heavenly Father, who knows our every need and want. While reading the letter, tears came till my eyes could not distinguish the words before me, and I silently prayed God to bless the writer, and I also prayed for God's help and guidance that I might not weary, but keep onward in the path of duty.

School, with its duties that at the time seemed rather discouraging, looked somewhat brighter. The things there and elsewhere that had caused me to feel discouraged were looked upon in a different light, and I felt like taking new courage.

The thought at the last of our sister's letter prompted me to write this, that she may know that her letter did much good. Many times the thought, "God knows it all," comes to me, and I feel strengthened. We know not the good our thoughts may do if only coined into words, either spoken or written; so let us try to ever be ready to scatter these words of cheer and comfort as Sr. Almira did.

IRENE.

Dear Sisters:—Being a reader of the Home Column, I will try to write you some of my thoughts. I may be an extremist, but then I know I am right in some things; at least I think I am, and I want you to judge. First of all, I do not believe the Devil is the cause of all the troubles that occur between man and wife. I think it is just the cross-grained disposition of themselves, and a willful neglect of cultivating the principle of charity. Some preachers may be that way. I hope they are not Latter Day Saints, and I think they are not. I think quarreling and what is called "jawing around" is just a bad habit like chewing and smoking tobacco, and I have wondered if some good brother or sister couldn't get up a remedy for it, like Bro. Ordway sells for the tobacco habit. It should be "no cure, no pay." Bro. Joseph Smith gave me a remedy for my cough that would cure this disease also, if people would only take it. He said, "Just quit."

There is another remedy which is good. That is, remember the contract entered into when you started in business together.

Fretfulness is another bad habit, but then I think that many of our troubles come from not keeping the "Word of Wisdom" that the Lord gave us. I am satisfied in my mind that that which we cultivate will grow, for God has ordained it so. Then why not cultivate the following plants: Cheerfulness, kindness, and a love for all of God's creatures, whether they be bad or good? Mother love is like God's love, and you know that a mother has always more care for the one that goes astray. I believe God loves all the work of his hands, and we should try and be like him. I feel as though I will try to let those I come in contact with feel and know by my words and actions that I am trying to be a saint.

May the Lord bless and comfort the tried ones and all that are trying to overcome.

Yours in the one faith,

ELIZABETH.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE second annual Inter-State Sunday School Institute was held at St. Joseph, Missouri, from December 26-29 inclusive. There were nine sessions of Sunday school work and two sessions of Religio work, the latter being reported to the Religio Department in the Autumn Leaves will not appear in this report to the Sunday School Department of the Saints' Herald.

The officials of the Institute were: T. A. Hougas superintendent, with F. E. Cochran, J. A. Gunsolley, J. F. Mintun, and W. N. Robinson assistants. W. N. Robinson secretary, with J. F. Mintun assistant and reporter; Sr. Pierson chorister, with Amy Winning organist; the librarian, usher, and janitor of the St. Joseph Sunday school acting in such capacity for the Institute.

The superintendent in his address, "The Aim of the Institute," said among many other good things: "We are here for work and the benefit to be derived therefrom. We are lacking in preparation for the accomplishment of our work; and feeling this, have met to help and to receive help. Although it may not be perceptible to us at all times, yet we are either progressing or retrograding. The Institute is the outgrowth of the necessity existing for it. We must grade up our Sunday school workers before we can consistently talk of grading our Sunday schools. We expect to meet representative Sunday school workers here; we did not expect to meet all the workers. Good resulted from previous Institute, in that those who were present representing the Sunday school workers in different parts disseminated the knowledge there obtained, and we have confidence that good will result from this Institute. Best results come from knowledge mingled with zeal. Our aim is to disseminate and receive added knowledge, and infuse added zeal into the workers. In preparing program was very strongly impressed to invite Zion's Religio-Literary Society to have part in this Institute. God directed in this matter, and hence they have a part in the program. Our aim is to be coworkers, and to thus strengthen each other as organizations, for the work that lies before us, each having a work to do in the upbuilding of the kingdom of God."

Elder J. M. Terry, of St. Joseph, Missouri, in his Address of Welcome said: "In the seventeenth century it was asked of John Locke how one could best improve for life's work. He answered, 'Study God's word.' A Buddhist said that the reason they worshiped that which was neither creator or preserver was to honor exalted merit. We honor the Sunday school because it is of exalted merit, the result of its work being the salvation of souls, in value being more than the whole world. The Lord says in Hosea 10: 12: 'Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground:

for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you.' We understand you are here to sow in righteousness, and to break up the fallow ground. We are workers together with God in this exalted work. We bid you welcome in the name of God whom we represent. We in St. Joseph hope to be benefited by your being here. We will try and make you feel welcome, and will assist in bringing about such results, and the insowing of such seed as will result in great good."

Frank E. Cochran, of Lamoni, Iowa, said: "Greeting and handshakes bring an inspiration, but the greater work we have in hand gives a higher inspiration. The work introduced by the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, is the highest and grandest that can engage the efforts of man. The inspiration received from God in connection with the Sunday school is one of the reasons I am engaged in it, and why I am now here. The work of training the child gives us help that is uplifting. Great is the need of such work as ours. Sin existing evidences there is great need of such work, need of representing the living Christ."

J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa, said: "Religio is now side by side with the Sunday school, which is an improvement over the past. In response to a petition to God presented last April at the convention held at Lamoni, to remove doubt that prevailed in the minds of many concerning the Religio work, doubt was removed, and peace and satisfaction ensued. I am satisfied the Lord's Spirit is in this Religio work as in the Sunday school work, and in every other good work advocated to forward the gospel of Jesus Christ. We have met to study manners and methods to advance the work in which we are engaged. We want such methods selected and adapted from every source, that are calculated to advance this work. We want truth; such as will build up the kingdom of God upon the earth. The greatest lack in the church to-day is in not having proficient local help in the branches. We should try to develop and qualify men for this work."

W. N. Robinson, of Independence, Missouri, said: "I am pleased that the Religio department was added to the program of the Institute: I want to know more of its real nature. By being here we have privileges to review old methods, and the better mature them, that we may the more effectually use them, besides we study new methods. We find it necessary to secure so we can disseminate. We are here to secure that we may disseminate to those with whom we come in contact. We want cowork, all to take interest in receiving, and assist to impart and our Institute is a success."

J. F. Mintun, of Magnolia, Iowa, said: "The hastening time is come. We no longer can say it will come, but must prepare for what now is. The church needs such departments of work as are represented here to develop the youth of the church for the positions of trust they are soon to occupy. While the young men are being prepared to represent the interests of the church, the young women are being prepared as their helpers. Even some of our sisters are doing a grand work as missionaries, some in foreign lands. There is a sphere of usefulness for which all should be prepared. I am here to assist you in these departments of work, believing that they have been and can still more effectually be made a support to the church of the living God. I have been blessed when laboring in the interests of these departments equal to what I have been in ministering the word. I believe good will be done in this Institute. May God's blessing be with us."

Sr. Louise Palfrey, of Macon, Missouri, said: "I am grateful to be here to hear and feel what I have since being here. The church is an established fact: the Sunday school and Religio need special help, because of the present peculiar surroundings. The Sunday school and Religio is to prepare us for the work that is established."

William Clow, of Independence, Missouri, said: "While visiting wife's folks I was made to understand, by an audible voice that this was God's work in which we are engaged, and that it would lack nothing. I felt that having obeyed the first principles there was nothing more to be done. When I came to Independence I saw the children of the saints on the Lord's day using the Temple Lot as a playground. It seems to have been accepted in the past as a fact that no one but the ministry were under responsibility to do any work. The Sunday school furnishes work for all. I hope I never will get too old to work in the Sunday school. I have come to this Institute to learn. We must not rely upon methods and methods alone. The Spirit of God must be associated with methods. I have felt as much of the Spirit of God in the Sunday school work as in any other work in the church."

W. S. Hodson, of Fanning, Kansas, said: "I am young in the work. I am here to learn."

W. B. Torrance, of Guilford, Missouri, said: "I came here because I felt I needed instruction, and the work in the district of which I am an officer needed help. I have made sacrifices to be present; borrowed the money to come with, feeling I would be repaid for such sacrifices."

Emma Beebe, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, said: "I came because I needed encouragement and help."

The evening prayer meeting was good, the time being fully occupied, and the Spirit's presence being felt continuously, at times very touchingly.

Letter Department.

SHEFFIELD, England, Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—Last evening how noticeable it was to see the little groups of people crowding the streets at so late an hour, as if they were in real earnest after some given object. Upon watching them I could see some of them were turning into the portals of the church—some to the Methodist, others to the Baptist. While at the same time I could also see a few of the despised people called Latter Day Saints, wending their way to the home of our aged Brother and Sister Gell, to spend the last hour of the old year in prayer to their God. As for these other people, I long for the day when the honest-hearted amongst them will find to their joy and satisfaction, the angel's message. I am fully convinced that there are a number of good people in the midst of these popular churches of to-day that want finding out. Some might ask, But how shall this be done, remembering how we have been treated at times, when some have said to us, We want no more of you, nor your Joe Smith doctrine, it is from the Devil, and the like? But notwithstanding this we have a work to do. May we then do all in our power to seek and to save the lost.

I was very much edified by the reading of Sr. Pitt's letter in Herald for December 15. I am in full sympathy with our dear sister in her good work, and only wish there were more of the kind at work in these British Isles, for I am fully persuaded that the sisters can do a splendid work. If they will only go forth with full purpose of heart, I am sure God will bless them. Their brethren would feel cheered, believing that they were filling rightly the office for which they were created, to be a helpmeet. In fact it behooves every brother and sister to do their duty, not waiting to ask what shall I do. For the Lord says that he that waiteth to be commanded in all things is a slothful servant.

After having read the first volume of the Church History, I am thoroughly convinced that it is a grand work, and it ought to find its way into the home of every true Latter Day Saint. It bespeaks very much credit to the compilers. We do appreciate our dear Herald. We expect Bro. H. C. Smith, also Bro. and Sr. Pitt, to our conference the 8th and 9th inst. I pray that God will bless us all that we may continue faithful to the end.

Your brother in bonds,
JOSEPH ARBER.

GUILFORD, Mo., Jan. 9.

Editors Herald:—I rejoice in the gospel, which brings to man the hope of eternal life, and an inheritance to the estate set apart for man when God created the world.

The gospel being restored to earth in these the latter days, comes to us in power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. When I cast my mind on past events, and see how God in his tender mercy and love extended to me the opportunity of accepting the gospel, and enjoying the privileges of the children of God, my heart swells in gratitude, and I feel that his mercy has exceeded my worthiness. There are obstacles to overcome, discouragements to surmount, but let us will to overcome and firmly determine to conquer, then the captain of Israel's host will aid us. The work in this part of the Lord's vineyard is on the advance; slow, but I believe sure. There are internal dissensions to overcome, yet the work will go onward. Those who have the work at heart and are actively engaged in the same, are being confirmed, and strengthened; those who are negligent and slothful, and remain so, will be losers; and who will be to blame? Every one will be rewarded for his own works.

Our worthy missionary in charge, Bro. Peter Anderson, is a faithful steward, ever watching over and directing the work, and feeding the flocks of God in this district. The submissionary, Bro. M. F. Gowell, is an active minister, always engaged in the Master's cause.

This district is composed of five branches; three of which are conducting Sunday schools. In the other two branches it is impracticable to hold a Sunday school. In our Sunday school at Guilford, we enjoyed the Christmas festivities; the children of the school were the active ones engaged in the event. I hope the new year has brought a renewed determination to gain the victory in the cause of redemption.

The writer enjoyed his best Christmas feast by boarding the "iron horse" bound for St. Joseph to attend the Sunday School Institute, held December 26-29. So replete with grand thoughts was it, that the writer is doubtful whether the organs of the mind will be able to digest them. The meeting with brothers and sisters of like precious faith, and the receiving of the hearty handshake and greeting of each other, was of itself a delight; but to engage in a work so great and grand in purpose as the Sunday school, confirmed as it is by the Spirit of God is an inspiration to the soul of man.

I left rejoicing in the thought that I was permitted to be there. I should not forget to mention the generosity of the St. Joseph saints, how they sacrificed for the Institute to be held there. To Brn. C. Kinnaman and J. M. Terry and families, there is an especial warm place in my heart for entertainment received while there.

On returning home I found that I had been elected superintendent of the Sunday school. I keenly felt the responsibility resting upon me, but went to work as best I could, and was encouraged by the first effort made. May the good cause prosper in every locality where it has been started, also move out into new fields. May the new year prove to be one of rapid progress to every department of the work of Zion's cause. May error and confusion lose their power, and truth reign mightily, Zion be established, God's kingdom come, his will be done on earth as it is done in heaven, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

HEPPNER, Oregon, Jan. 7.

Editors Herald:—I left the sound country about two months ago, enroute for eastern Oregon, to change mud and rain for snow and ice. Cannot say that I am pleased with the change. I stopped at Castle Rock, where I was much pleased at meeting Bro. Chase again, who had been lost for some six weeks. I joined him in holding meetings there that resulted in seven being added to the fold. They are of the best element of the place. After that we set sail for these parts, and arrived here to find just snow enough to make it good and cold and bad under foot. We found the comfortable home of Mr. Rush, where we were made welcome by him and Sr. Rush until Bro. Wallace's team came in to take us out to Gooseberry, twenty-five miles; and it should be remembered that these Oregon miles are not American miles; at least one would not think so were he traveling them this time of the year. I was glad when we got to the end of that ride; it was a very cold day. Bro. Chase got real cold before we got there.

We held meetings a few days, then Bro. Goodwin and I took horse and cart and went to Lone Rock. Bro. Chase took his feet and went to Condon, a distance of some twenty miles; and having to go a good ways in this country to see a little, he went considerable out of his way, which made him quite a nice walk; but he could keep warm, and that was more than we could do in the cart. Talk about going to the north pole in a balloon; I have been near enough there in a cart!

At Lone Rock we were entertained by Mr. Maden, an infidel, who not only kindly cared for us and horse, but attended all our meetings, eighteen in number. He furnished the wood, and at the close of the meetings took up a collection of $6.20. The attendance was good, from fifty to one hundred and fifty. Closing there, I borrowed a horse and took a horseback ride of nearly thirty miles to join Bro. Chase. I got lost in the fog twice, but arrived there and gained an experience too. I found Bro. Chase laboring under a disadvantage, having taken a bad cold; and when there is anything the matter with his singing gear, he is indeed out of fix; but the attendance was good until the Christmas entertainment, when we closed, holding in all twenty meetings. I got homesick during the holidays. Bro. Chase; well, he says he does not get homesick, but he often feels just like I do when I am very homesick. He has some other name for it, but the symptoms are just exactly the same. I am glad Christmas only comes once a year.

From there we went to Mayville, where we held six well-attended meetings; were cared for by Mr. Edwards, a nonchurch member, but of a splendid family. How I would like to see such people in the fold. I am often made glad by the statement, that if they feed you, clothe you, or give you money, "by this you may know my disciples."

At Condon I found Bro. Moore, an old Californian, where we invited ourselves to a real good Christmas dinner. At Condon I was the guest of Bro. Clark, a real saint.

From Mayville we came by team to Lone Rock, a distance of twenty miles, and such a time as we had getting there! neither Bro. Chase nor myself knew the road; so Bro. Chase made a chart of the road as it was explained to him, and that the chart was all right he still affirms, but we were all wrong in following it. We started in the morning and traveled until 12:30 over an awful road, stopped to inquire where we were—for we had a little misgiving (the driver and I) about that chart, and found it had brought us around to within three miles of town again. We just felt like burning that chart and pounding its maker. There we were, still seventeen miles from our destination, where an appointment was out for preaching for that night. We got some dinner, fed the team, took Bro. Chase and his chart and started to try and get there if possible. We followed along through the fog, mud, and cold until eight o'clock, when coming to a house we made some inquiries and found we were still five miles from our destination; learned that we could stop with them over night if we could sleep three in a bed. This we concluded to do; it was also decided that I must sleep in the middle. You can imagine how much I slept between two big Iowans with their well-known propensities for wanting the most of any and everything.

Again we took the road with five miles ahead of us, supposing that Bro. Chase had remodeled his chart, but on coming to a fork in the road, learned he had not. We traveled on till noon, when coming to a house made inquiry and found we were one mile further away than when we started. We took the back track, and after wandering around most of the afternoon, came in sight of the town.

The fog is awful here in the winter; it freezes on the outside of one, and goes inside of him and freezes. On getting there we found many had been disappointed at our not being there as advertised; also that we could hold no meeting that night, as one of the lodges was going to give a free supper. Bro. Chase attended, took part in the music and supper, and I was told made quite an impression—at the latter part, which I partly believe. We held two well-attended meetings there; had many invitations to return, the use of the church being offered us and plenty of places to stop at; but time forbade our remaining longer at that time.

Having held twenty services there, we concluded to come on to this place; obtained the use of the Christian church and commenced meeting; first night seventeen out, the next fifty, the next upwards of one hundred; if we can keep up that rate of increase we will soon have a crowd. We are both feeling well with the exception of colds.

Our time is near to a close in these parts; must soon return to Washington to finish work there. Address will be, Castle Rock, Oregon.

FOREST, Ont., Jan. 15.

Editors Herald:—On January 4, Elder S. W. Tomlinson came here and remained a week. He preached eight sermons, using his chart to good advantage. In the daytime he did much fireside preaching, resulting in much good, for those who were interested obtained a better understanding of the good work.

On Sunday the 9th, he baptized two, Bro. and Sr. Cates, who, we feel satisfied, will make good earnest workers for the building up of God's kingdom. Others are interested. We are expecting Elder St. John here soon. We rejoice that these two have been added to our number, and hope that ere long many will obey the gospel, that a branch may be raised up here that will be an honor to the name of our God. For this we ever pray.

Editors Herald:—I am pleased to say that we still retain our hall on Lackawanna Avenue, and our Sunday school is progressing favorably. On Sunday, December 26, the Sunday school gave a fine entertainment, and appropriate prizes were given to the children. I was pleased to note that during the exercises there was some talent displayed even in Scranton. Bro. Ervin Williams, the superintendent, takes a deep interest in Sunday school, and although I am aged, still I love the Sunday school, and think it would be well if all the old people, as well as the young, would attend Sunday school; it would be the means of helping them on in church work. We have our social meeting after school, and preaching every Sunday evening by Elder A. N. Bishop, which is greatly enjoyed by the saints. He gave us a number of discourses on "The triumphant march of Joshua," which were both interesting and instructive. He is now treating on the "Great apostasy." We are pleased that Elder Bishop has come amongst us. His clear-cut, logical reasoning is much admired by those in and out of the church.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 17.

Editors Herald:—It seems as if God sends his ministry into certain localities, and through them metes out blessings in the right time. At least so I believe, and also the saints in Hazel Dell. Indeed we had a time that we will not soon forget. Bro. Strain from Council Bluffs was out there and held a series of meetings, using the blackboard. His subjects the last two evenings were, first, "the line of prophets," showing that there was an unbroken chain of prophets and patriarchs from Adam down through the different epochs to the days of Christ and until the time should come spoken of by the prophet Isaiah, "the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered;" and also referring to Revelation, when the "man child was caught up unto God, and to his throne," in which period of time God revealed his will to the children of men.

And in handling the last subject, "latter-day revelation," it was wonderful the reason and the simplicity in which he proved the restoration of the gospel and the mission work of God's Holy Spirit in the latter days as well as in former days.

During Bro. Strain's visit difficulties among the saints were settled, the sick were administered to and fed with the heavenly manna that restores health to the physical body and revives the soul. Indeed I can bear my testimony to this latter-day work, that God has restored the gospel and works with the children of men by his Holy Spirit now as in ages past. Your brother in hope of Zion's triumph,

DE SOTO, Neb., Jan. 14.

Editors Herald:—I am now in the vicinity of De Soto, holding the gospel banner aloft. De Soto was at one time the star branch of the Reorganization. While talking with a gentleman who was a boy in the days of old De Soto, he gave me the follow story: "One night while we boys were playing 'base' in the streets of old De Soto, I concluded I would attend prayer meeting. After going to the private house where the meeting was being held, I discovered that it was a Mormon meeting. Among others who took part in the meeting was a lady who arose and spoke in an unknown tongue. The interpretation was given in the same manner by a young gentleman. The interpretation was a prophecy and warning to the saints of De Soto. They were told that unless they 'ceased their contention,' and 'repented of this iniquity,' that 'they should be scattered to the four winds,' and there should not be 'one left to tell the story.' I have lived to see the fulfillment of this prophecy to a letter. They continued their strife, and to-day there is not one left to tell the story—they are all gone," said he.

At that time De Soto was looked upon as being the center of Nebraska commerce. Those who inhabited the town and vicinity looked fondly forward to the time when De Soto would be a great thriving city, with all the advantages the "Old Muddy" could afford, being navigable as they supposed it would be, and having a fine place for landing on the banks of De Soto. But alas! "the wisdom of the wise shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent shall be hid." Nothing remains to mark the spot where De Soto once stood but a few lonely fruit trees in the midst of a corn field. Instead of running near the old town, the "old not to be depended upon" is near two miles from where it once afforded a harbor for old De Soto, and it looks as though she had deserted the banks of De Soto forever. Thus we see that where once the star branch of the church existed not one of them is left to tell the story.

Excitement runs high in this place. They never heard the gospel before, most of them at least. The M. E. minister has lost his job. People found that the gospel didn't cost anything, therefore they ceased to pay for something they didn't get. The old game followed; when driven to the wall on the doctrine of Christ, and seeing his craft in danger, he began to circulate hatched-up stories about Joseph Smith and the saints in general. He said the saints in Omaha all practiced polygamy, and would lie and steal; said he had a Mormon Bible, and if the people could stomach it he would lend it to them. He said those that had been baptized would have a doctor bill to pay, as it was contrary to nature to baptize in winter. I have gained the favor of the people in general—only two families willing to support the M. E. minister longer. Those two families threatened to waylay me on the way home from church. The night they threatened it I was escorted home with a bodyguard. I don't think they will try it. The house is crowded each night. People are interested; many are near the kingdom. The Devil is doing his best, but he is on the outside. I am greatly encouraged in the work. God is blessing me with the presence of his Spirit. My prayer is for the welfare of latter-day Israel.

Editors Herald:—I suppose that before this reaches you Bro. Joseph will have arrived with his Canadian lassie. God bless them both. We were glad that Bro. Joseph had the good luck to pick up such a noble specimen of Canada's daughters; not only physically but also intellectually, morally, and spiritually. But it will give you (poor degenerate Yanks) a small idea of what we raise in these northern wilds.

We were greatly disappointed in not receiving a visit from him when he was so near us, about thirty miles; but we are in hopes that the first time he pays a visit to his father-in-law he will take us in. May peace, love, and unity be with you all, is the prayer of

ARGENTINE, Kan., Jan. 12.

Editors Herald:—For thirty years you have been a welcome visitor at our house, and have continually brought us news from all over the land that has cheered, comforted, and instructed us to make progress in the divine life; and in order that you may continue, we have sought to assist you in getting new subscribers and to enlarge the circle of your usefulness. We are glad to hear of Brn. Newton and Barmore laboring successfully in Big Valley, California. Many of our relatives live there for whom we have a great desire that they learn the truth. We have sought to instruct them as best we could. We are glad to see the progress that is being made nearly everywhere, and the honest souls who desire the truth brought into the fold and family of God.

This is comparatively a new field where I am now laboring, and am meeting with good success. At Rosedale have baptized two; at Merriam many are believing; at South Park some rejoice in hearing the word; at Turner the people are anxious to hear, and come from far and near. Here in Argentine we are gathering up a few; organized a Sabbath school the first Sunday in this year; have secured a hall free of charge for all winter, in which we hold services every Sunday, and Wednesday evenings. I never enjoyed better liberty in presenting the message of life and salvation than now, and God is confirming our words with signs following. The prospect for an ingathering is good; have many more calls than I can fill; and according to God's promise we are meeting with grace and favor from the people everywhere. May God help us to be wise, to preach the gospel in the spirit of love and meekness; and not abuse the people because they were taught in another school of theology, and by so doing drive them from us.

JONESPORT, Maine, Jan. 12.

Editors Herald:—Every representative of the latter-day work in presenting the Book of Mormon as God-given, has had to meet the Spalding story, and answer the assertion that Mr. Rigdon stole said story, revamped, and gave it to Joseph Smith. The inclosed testimony of P. P. Pratt is found in his reply to La Roy Sunderland, who at that time was Editor of the New York Evangelist. It was published in 1842. It has proven a help to me. If in your judgment it contains sufficient of general interest, publish; if not the editors' waste basket is capacious. I have a number of good things picked up from many sources along the way; would you like to have me submit them to you for inspection? Possibly some of them can be used.

Have just returned from Machias, the shire town of Washington County. Through the kindness of the supervisor of schools I occupied a building centrally located; had excellent audience and liberty. Several expressed the determination of obeying the gospel as soon as the weather was warmer. Midwinter baptizing is somewhat difficult in these latitudes. Prospects appear excellent in all the openings we have in this State. Branches are getting wide awake. We are all greatly encouraged and hope for final victory. Trust to meet you at General Conference.

BARODA, Mich., Jan. 17.

Editors Herald:—In the town of Baroda stands a neat little church, whose spires point heavenward and whose foundation—well, we do not know, but we have been informed that it is so holy that, in dedication, its doors were closed against Latter Day Saints and Catholics. The spirit of discord moved upon the "wilderness"—some against and some defending the rights of the only Latter Day Saints who could be found for miles around. So the leaven worked. At the beginning of the new year, when the air is so redolent of good resolutions as to be perceptible to even the blunt sensibilities of Latter Day Saints, some friend to the cause hired a hall where the truth might be told without contaminating the surroundings.

Elder H. C. Bronson, well known to many, walked in with the "sword of the Spirit" well sharpened, and the Spirit himself as his Guide. For ten nights he has presented the gospel with such power as to draw to its hearing the best citizens, not only of the town, but of the surrounding country. Last night a packed audience voted unanimously for him to remain, the best men in this vicinity offering to aid in defraying the expense of hall rent. We have heard many excellent speakers, but it has never been our good fortune to hear the gospel presented more plainly, pleasingly, and powerfully than it has been presented here by Elder Bronson.

Let us say right here, that if petitioning will count, Elder Bronson will come back to Michigan the coming year. The speaker says he never talked to a more attentive audience. A Baptist lady, a Mrs. Arend, an intelligent, refined person, has played the organ and conducted the music, and when a hard rain-storm came that would have kept most audiences at home, she donned a pair of rubber boots and walked a mile to lead in singing, to our surprise, a good-sized audience. The hall is owned by William Shafer, a square, fair-minded man, who has spared no pains in making everything comfortable and pleasant.

The church people of Berrien Springs, a town a few miles distant, seem so interested in our work that they have sent for Davis H. Bays to come and lecture against Mormonism, so to-night Elder Bronson goes to look after him. To-morrow we expect other elders on the ground, so Elder Bronson will continue his work at Baroda.

Berrien County seems ripe for the truth, and the power of darkness seems ready to do its part toward hindering its progress. We feel so joyful over the outlook that we scarcely know whether we're in the body or out of the body.

Praying that the honest in heart may be permitted to hear the truth, we are

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Jan. 21.

Editors Herald:—Lest some may think that I am presumptuous in engaging in debate with the "one-time Latter Day Saint," Davis H. Bays, permit me to state that the discussion is not of my making, as I have had nothing to do with arrangements thus far; Bro. J. R. Lambert and H. O. Smith looking after these matters. The following credentials place the responsibility for my selection where it rightfully belongs:—

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 3, 1898.

To Whom it may Concern:—We hereby certify that Elder T. W. Williams, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, is a regularly ordained and duly licensed minister of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that he was appointed to do missionary work by the last General Conference of said church; also that he has the indorsement of the Reorganized Church, and has been duly appointed by the missionary in charge of the State of Iowa to represent the interests of said church in a discussion to be held with one Elder D. H. Bays, time and place of said discussion to be provided for.

This document is signed by the "First Presidency," "Church Secretary," "Missionary in Charge of Iowa," and "Missionary in Charge of Harrison County, Iowa."

I am assured that T. W. Williams is not able to meet this or any other man; but God is, and like David I enter the forensic arena feeling that, while I may wield the sling, God must guide the stone; and should this "Goliath" meet a similar fate to Goliath of old, the credit attaches, not so much to man, as to God's unerring accuracy in directing the "pebbles" of truth. I shall have an able assistant and wise counselor in our moderator, H. O. Smith. We really expect Bro. J. R. Lambert to be present also.

The debate will take place in February or March, at Mondamin, Iowa. The subjects for discussion are the relative claims of the respective churches, the reliability of the Book of Mormon, and the all-sufficiency of the Holy Bible.

Next Monday, the 24th, I commence a two-weeks' discussion at Tabor, Iowa, with W. W. Blalock, of Topeka, Kansas. Two propositions are involved, An examination of the claims of the two churches, Bro. Henry Kemp acting as moderator. Hitherto we have never succeeded in securing an opening at this seat of Congregational learning, hence in the way of membership have nothing to lose and all to gain. We hope the theological students may get some points that will stay with them through life.

Owing to the protracted watching during our late sickness, I am not as physically equipped as I would like to be; but I shall trust in God for needed assistance. I do not expect to please everybody not even all professed saints, but I propose not to be manserv-ing but God-fearing. Jesus Christ could not please everybody; in fact, he had many more enemies than friends, and the majority of his friends were unstable at times. Beelzebub, or Lucifer, was the only being who proposed to please everybody, and for his egotism was cast out of heaven. I care not to follow his example. Modern divines have sought to serve men, and it has lessened their influence proportionately. Latter Day Saint ministers must guard against this weakness! He who would desist in denouncing sin, in punishing wrong, in urging truth, for fear of offending any man in or out of the church, is unworthy the calling of a minister for Christ. Rest assured that Latter Day Saints are not yet angels, but noticeably human, and will oftentimes resent that which conflicts with their folly or ignorance.

A cloud, lowering and dark, has hung o'er the local work here for a time, and I am informed that this has been of periodical occurrence since the organization of the branch; but we see rifts in the cloud and hope for a brighter day. So long as saints will persist in digging up the putrid carcasses of past differences so long will clouds gather. A hopeful sign was manifested in a late priesthood meeting, when numbers of the local ministry expressed an anxious desire to assist in furthering the work. However, the Council Bluffs branch is no worse than the average, better than many, and much better than the sectarian churches; but any little defect is particularly noticeable after the era of prosperity we have had. During the past year I have done very little visiting in the city and I now notice the difference. The church must sooner or later care for its city interests. Every large city branch should have a pastor, devoting his entire time to church work. No man can do justice to the work and engage in manual toil. Christ said, "Feed my sheep." Feeding consists not alone in having a straw stack, but in hunting up the sheep and bringing them to the feeding place. This takes time and means, but it must be done, if we expect lasting results.

Bro. Caffall has been with us for several weeks, holding a series of meetings in the interim, dealing with the rules governing the church, and, as usual when men's duties are pointed out, satisfied some and displeased others; but so be it. We hope that all may be led to investigate and be benefited in the end. Craving an interest in the prayers of all who are interested in the success of the work,

Yours for Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

SIDNEY RIGDON'S CONNECTION WITH THE SPALDING STORY.

TESTIMONY OF PARLEY P. PRATT.

"ABOUT A. D. 1827, Messrs. A. Campbell, W. Scott, and S. Rigdon, with some others, residing in Virginia, Ohio, etc., came off from the Baptists and established a new order under the name of Reformed Baptists, or Disciples; and they were termed by their enemies Campbellites, Rigdonites, etc. This reformation, as to its doctrine, consisted principally of the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, etc. And Mr. Rigdon in particular held to a literal fulfillment and application of the written word; and by this means he was an instrument to turn many from the false notions of sectarian traditions, to an understanding of the prophecies touching the great restoration of Israel, and the mighty revolutions of the last days. Many hundred disciples were gathered by his ministry throughout the Lake Country of Ohio; and many other preachers stood in connection with him in those principles.

"I was then pursuing an agricultural life, and mostly occupied in converting the wilderness into a fruitful field; but being a member of the Baptist Church, and a lover of truth, I became acquainted with Mr. Rigdon, and a believer in and a teacher of the same doctrines. After proclaiming those principles in my own neighborhood and the adjoining country, I at length took a journey to the State of New York, partly on a visit to Columbia County, New York, my native place, and partly for the purpose of ministering the word. This journey was undertaken in August, 1830. I had no sooner reached Ontario County, New York, than I came in contact with the 'Book of Mormon,' which had then been published about six months, and had gathered about fifty disciples, which were all that then constituted the Church of Latter Day Saints. I was greatly prejudiced against the Book; but remembering the caution of Paul, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good," I sat down to read it; and after carefully comparing it with the other scriptures, and praying to God, he gave me the knowledge of its truth, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and what was I that I could withstand God! I accordingly obeyed the ordinances, and was commissioned by revelation and the laying on of hands to preach the fullness of the gospel. Then, after finishing my visit to Columbia County, I returned to the brethren in Ontario County, where for the first time I saw Mr. Joseph Smith, Jr., who had just returned from Pennsylvania to his father's house in Manchester.

"About the 15th of October, 1830, I took my journey in company with Elder O. Cowdery, and Peter Whitmer, to Ohio. We called on Elder S. Rigdon, and then for the first time, his eyes beheld the 'Book of Mormon;' I, myself, had the happiness to present it to him in person. He was much surprised, and it was with much persuasion and argument that he was prevailed on to read it, and after he had read it he had a great struggle of mind, before he fully believed and embraced it; and when finally convinced of its truth, he called together a large congregation of his friends, neighbors, and brethren, and then addressed them very affectionately, for near two hours, during most of which time both himself and nearly all the congregation were melted to tears. He asked forgiveness of everybody who might have had occasion to be offended with any part of his former life; he forgave all who had perse-cutted or injured him, in any manner; and the next morning himself and wife were baptized by Elder O. Cowdery. I was present; it was a solemn scene; most of the people were greatly affected; they came out of the water overwhelmed in tears. Many others were baptized by us, both before and after his baptism, insomuch that during the fall of 1830, and the following winter and spring, the number of disciples was increased to about one thousand; the Holy Ghost was mightily poured out, and the word of God grew and multiplied; and many priests were obedient to the faith.

"Early in 1831, Mr. Rigdon having been ordained under our hands, visited Elder J. Smith, Jr., in the State of New York, for the first time; and from that time forth, rumor began to circulate, that he (Rigdon) was the author of the Book of Mormon. The Spalding story was never dreamed of until several years afterwards, when it appeared in 'Mormonism Unveiled'—a base forgery by D. P. Hurlbut, and others of similar character, who had long strove to account for the Book of Mormon, in some other way besides the truth. In the West whole neighborhoods embraced Mormonism after this fable of the Spalding story had been circulated among them; indeed, we never conceived it worthy of an answer, until it was converted by the ignorant and impudent dupes and knaves, in this city, who stand at the head of certain religious papers, into something said to be positive, certain, and not to be disputed. I mean the editors of the New York Evangelist, Zion's Watchman, and all others who are equally guilty, including all who read and believe such a thing."—Pratt's "Reply to Sunderland," published 1842.

ARE WE CAPABLE OF NOTHING BETTER?

IS THERE not in the realms of imagination somewhere within range of American possibility some plan the adoption of which would render the masses of the people much greater certainty of honorably procuring a respectable living than they at present possess under the existing haphazard, rough and tumble, catch as catch can way of getting at it?

I believe it would be much better if work and wages were furnished every man who needs to earn a livelihood, or wishes to be anything more than an incumbrance upon the face of the earth.

The only just way of bringing about such a condition, so far as I can see, would be for all the people to form themselves into one grand company and buy up every individual and lesser corporate real estate and business interest, giving in payment therefor our grand corporate due bills.

I do not believe in absolute equality.

Charity is greatest of the Christian graces; but where is the charity in the man who would not be willing to sell his possessions for a reasonable consideration, if by so doing he could place life's comforts within comparatively easy access of thousands who are now in poverty and wretchedness?

Sunday School Associations.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

Northeastern Missouri convention will meet February 11 at Bevier. Prayer meeting at 9:30 a. m., business session at ten a. m. Program for the afternoon session as follows: Sunday school newspaper. Normal work in charge of district superintendent. Blackboard work in review, using lessons 1, 2, and 3 of present Senior quarterly. Discussion of quarterly lessons: 1. Difficulties in them; 2. How to teach them. Sketch work. Question box. There will be a literary and musical program in the evening. A feature of business will be appointing delegates to General Convention.

Besides the secretary's report, we want a report from the superintendent of each school, as to the interest and prospects of your school. Bring notebooks and pencils, quarterlies and Winnowed Songs with you. It is our first duty to be anxious for the welfare and spread of the work in our own district and locality, and to that end we trust that all professing an interest in our Sunday school work will appreciate their responsibility to better fit themselves for usefulness, and to lend their presence and efforts towards helping to roll the work along. We hope that the future may mark a brighter era for the work in this district. Let each school and place where there are Sunday school possibilities be as well represented as possible. Sr. (Miss) Mary J. Richards, Bevier, Missouri, is clerk.

LOUISE PALFREY, Supt.

MACON, Missouri.

Eastern Iowa district will meet at Fulton, Iowa, February 4, 1898. The afternoon will be devoted to business, and the evening to a sermon on Sunday school work.

ELLEN J. GREEN, Supt.

To the Superintendents of the Several Sunday Schools of the Southern Nebraska District:—Our convention meets at Nebraska City, February 11, 12, 1898. It is earnestly desired that each superintendent report to the convention, in person or in writing, with reference to the following in his school: 1. The blackboard, how it is used. 2. Reviews, by whom and how conducted. 3. Results since using "uniform texts." 4. Teachers' meetings, when held. If none are held, what have you to suggest that is as good, or better? Please state fully. 5. Punctuality and attendance of officers and teachers. 6. Has the attendance in your school increased; has a greater interest been manifested or any marked progress been made in any way, during the past year? If so, to what do you attribute it? Send all communications to the district secretary, E. D. Briggs, Nebraska City, Nebraska. M. J. SCHAFER, Supt.

DELOTT, Iowa.

St. Louis convention will convene Saturday, February 12, at 2:30 p. m., in the saints chapel, No. 2518 Elliott Avenue, St. Louis. It is hoped all the schools will be well represented. Among the important business to be transacted is the election of officers, and of delegates to the General Convention. We are arranging programs for Saturday and Sunday evenings that will be beneficial to Sunday school workers. We will have some features new to this district and expect to have an enjoyable and profitable time. We hope all who can will come with prayerful hearts and a determination to get a better understanding of our duties and do them better in the future.

SPECIAL BUSINESS NOTICE.

The Business Department of the Herald Office published a rule requiring all orders amounting to less than fifty cents to be paid for in cash or stamps, unless ordered by branch book agents having accounts with us. This rule was established to prevent large numbers of small accounts accumulating on our books, which require much trouble and expense to collect.

Attention is called to the following orders, received of late:—

"Please forward one half dozen blank certificates of baptism."

"Please mail at once two blanks S. S. reports, two blanks for S. S. credentials."

"Please forward to my address one half dozen blank certificates of baptism, also inclose price list and will remit."

The office will not fill such orders without cash. Catalogues with prices are sent to anyone ordering, but where parties do not know prices, five cents in stamps would cover such orders.

The blanks ordered in the above are ten cents per dozen, and all these orders amount to from five to ten cents. It would cost us the cost of all blanks in those orders to enter and then collect for the order.

Those ordering supplies will be required to observe the rule and send cash with small orders.

FRANK CRILEY,

Business Manager, Herald Office.

TO DISTRICT AND ASSOCIATION SECRETARIES.

Secretaries of district conferences and Sunday school associations are hereby notified that notices for publication in the HERALD must be made as brief and compact as possible, because of constantly increasing demands upon our limited space.

District association programs will not hereafter be published unless very briefly stated. Persons participating need not be notified through the HERALD, but should receive personal notice otherwise.

With a little care all necessary items of conferences and conventions, both notices and minutes, can be given in a limited amount of space. 2t

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

Dear Saints of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district:—I have thought many times what I could say through the columns of the Herald that would encourage us to move along in this great latter-day work that we so much love, and especially those of us that have not made the sacrifice we should. And when we think the harvest is great and the laborers are few, it might be well for us to ask ourselves why the laborers are few, and I believe we would all agree that it is because some of us do not make the sacrifice we should. Go with me to 2 Corinthians 9:6 and we find, "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly." "Not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." Let us remember it is not the large amounts only that the kind Father recognizes, but the effort we put forward to comply with his laws; and let me say to the children, Do not hesitate to send in your small amounts. The Giver of all good will own and bless you in the effort, and it always does us good to see your names on the agent's book, although the amount may be small. Perhaps you may do some of the older ones good and wake us up to a sense of our duty. We hope to see more names on the book this year than in the past. God wants us to be active in this work and will not ask more of us than we are able to do; he will not reap where he has not sown. We all know times are very close and money scarce, but let us not let the church suffer on account of this, but let us at least bring it in with the rest of our obligations and not make the church wait till all other debts are paid. Think for a moment. Because God holds no mortgages and makes no foreclosures, shall we take advantage of this and hold back what rightfully belongs to him? I hope not. Let us remember there is an account kept of what we do, and it will be a sad thing for us to stand before the great judge with nothing but ciphers attached to our names. It seems to me that it would be a great mistake for one to obey the gospel and then sit with folded hands and try to enjoy what others have labored for. They would be made to say as others have said who have done nothing for the Master, "Must I empty handed go?"

In making out my report which has only run from March 1, 1897, to January 1, 1898, which would be ten months, the district has paid in more than in the twelve months previous, so I for one feel encouraged and hope we may all work together and see if we cannot keep this gain moving along till all those that have not felt the need of complying with the law of tithing may fall in line and do as best they can as they are blessed. Now as this is the beginning of another year, let us see if we cannot do as we are commanded in Malachi 3:10, "bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Why not take God at his word in this as in other promises?

I wish to thank the saints in this district for their kindly aid in my work and for what they have done in tithes and offerings in the past, and my prayer is that God will bless them for the same. May we continue to work together as one family with the same object in view, to do good and help forward on this work. I am, as ever,

Your brother in Christ,

SAMUEL STROH, Bishop's Agent.

COLDWATER, Michigan, Jan. 9.

To the saints of Southern Indiana district I wish to offer my heartfelt thanks for their liberality in contributing to the church fund. Upon making my yearly report to the Bishop for the year ending December 31, 1897, I find we have doubled the amount of previous year, which is quite an improvement. The average per member of those that have contributed is nearly four dollars. If we all would do that well, what a handsome little sum we would have in our next year's report—$1,500. If one half of the members would do that well we would have about $750. One dollar (that little sum) would almost double the report of 1897. We surely can do that much. We hope the present year every one will give something, that this great work will not be hindered. In conclusion would say, May God add his blessing to those dear ones who have so liberally handed in from time to time, and hope and trust the rest will take up their line of march and help in this great cause.

Hastily, yours in the work,

WILLIAM C. MARSHALL.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints in the Southeastern Mission, Greeting; Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Another year with its cares and responsibilities has opened upon us. My prayer is that we may all be able to give to our heavenly Father an acceptable year's service. Doubtless many have formed resolutions to try to do better during the present year than in the years past. Let us see to it that we fail not to make good the resolutions for good, so formed.

In order that the work throughout the mission may develop and increase, and be more perfectly and permanently established; that the saints may be edified and sinners warned, I feel to submit the following suggestions:—

1. The setting apart of regular fast days, monthly or otherwise, as may be deemed best by the different branches. Branch presidents will please bring this to the notice of the saints in their respective branches.

2. Let all who hold the priesthood, either the Melchisedec or Aaronic, be very diligent and faithful in warning and teaching every one as opportunity offers. Do not hide the talent intrusted to you, but improve it as best you can. God will give the "increase" to every one who "plants" or "waters" in faith. Will all elders, priests, teachers, and deacons please systematize their work as much as possible and keep a record of the same and make a full report of same to the missionary in charge at the close of the year? Try to do something every week, make a note of it, and see if you are not better satisfied with your work at the close of the year.

3. Let all members assist the ministry, local and traveling, to the extent of their ability, so that the work in the branches and elsewhere may be fruitful of good results. A united effort on the part of all will bring results that will be more gratifying than if there be not unity.

4. Assist the missionaries as far as possible in prosecuting their work in your midst and in new places. Respect them in their office and calling and encourage them in all proper ways.

5. While it is expected that the members and local authorities respect the missionaries as above, it is none the less expected that the general missionaries will respect the local authorities in their respective callings. None should be ignored. "All are necessary and equally honorable, each in its place." So says "the Spirit." Shall we not recognize the fact? And if so, let us treat the "lesser" authorities as we would like to be treated by them.

6. Let no "jealousy, anger, nor strife" have place in your hearts or minds. There is no room in heaven for either. Why should those who expect to be housed there give room in their hearts for that which cannot be admitted into the heavenly precincts? All should seek to build up (if necessary) and not to pull down a fellow laborer. No one will ever build a very high temple of honor to himself, out of the ruins of a brother's downfall. It is foolish to expect it. So let all beware.

7. I am informed that the Utah Church has three hundred elders operating in the South. They have several branches in different places that have come to my knowledge during the last year, as also scattered members here and there. All these ought to be looked after in a kindly way. To reach them in the most effective way a number of tracts will be needed. To secure the tracts a small fund will be needed. To raise this fund I have thought well to ask as many of the saints in the mission as may feel disposed to do so, to contribute five or ten cents for this purpose. More than ten cents is not asked for from anyone, as it is thought this will raise a fund sufficiently large to provide all the tracts that will be needed. Hand your mite to the president of your branch or Bishop's agent and let them send same to Bro. Frank Criley, Lamoni, Iowa, stating that it is for the tract fund of the Southeastern mission. To save postage the tracts will be sent from the office direct to the parties sought to be reached, when this can be done. When this cannot be done, tracts will be sent to the different district presidents, or to the headquarters of the missionaries in different parts of the mission, as each may be able to use them advantageously. Anyone who learns the address of any parties where these tracts could be used will please report to me or to the president of your district, or to the missionary in your immediate field. In this way I think some good can be effected. I have not consulted with Bro. Criley, but I believe he will receive your money for this purpose, and also for any other literature you may wish to order. Other tracts can be used with good results as well as those designed to correct the evils in Utah. What think you of it, brethren?

From what I can learn I think the tithe and offering fund will be better than in the past. I hope I am not mistaken in this. I congratulate you on the improvement over the past and hope the improvement will continue until the Lord shall say, "It is enough."

The clouds are heavy in some portions of the heavens above us, but they are breaking and the mists are clearing away. Let us renew our diligence, and press on to victory.

In gospel bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

HARP, Ala., Jan. 13, 1898.

REUNION NOTICES.

Cost of board, stabling for horses, and other general information will be published later on.

MARRIED.

ROCKWELL—ROUSH.—At the residence of John Heide, Fulton, Iowa, January 12, 1898, Mr. Emmons Rockwell to Sr. Sarah J. Roush, Elder John Heide officiating.

DIED.

BOESHARD.—At her residence, 922 South Wall Street, Los Angeles, California, Sr. Katharine Boeshard. She was born at Albikon, Canton St. Gallen, Switzerland. Died December 10, 1897, at the ripe old age of 79 years, 5 months, 7 days. She had been a member of the church for nearly fifty years; and though for the past few years suffering severely, yet she bore it with perfect patience and submission, at the end peacefully falling asleep strong in the faith of the saints and full of hope for the hereafter. Services by Elders Charles Baly and H. Smith, at the residence of her daughter, Sr. Hermina Adams.

STONER.—William John Stoner, of Prescott, Michigan, at his home, November 15, 1897. He was born June 10, 1855, at Scarborough, North York County, Ontario; baptized and confirmed by Elder David Smith, April 29, 1894, at Prescott, Michigan. Wife, three boys, three girls, and many friends mourn. Funeral sermon by Elder David Smith.

ADAIR.—Jesse Hyrum, son of Wm. and Ellen Adair, born April 17, 1897, at Cainesville, Missouri; died January 10, 1898, at Cainesville, Missouri. Blessed May 9, 1897, by Elder D. W. Wight. Little Jesse was the pride and pet of the family, and his death was a sore trial to the fond ones who experience for the first time the bitterness of such a separation.

LAMPERT.—Sr. Susanna, wife of Joseph Lampert, at her home, near Stewartville, Missouri, January 10, 1898. She was baptized October 16, 1875. Patiently she bore her affliction as a faithful saint to the end. Funeral conducted by Elder B. Dice; sermon preached by Elder T. T. Hinderks, at the saints' church in Stewartville, after which she was laid to rest in the German L. D. S. cemetery, four miles north of Stewartville, waiting for the morning of the resurrection. Husband and seven children mourn.

WILLEY.—At his home in Blue Rapids, Kansas, July 2, 1897, Bro. A. B. Willey. Funeral services at the saints' church in Blue Rapids on the third. Sermon by Elder Mahlon Smith, assisted by Bro. Henry Bivens. The remains were buried in Prospect Hill cemetery, a beautiful spot overlooking the confluence of the big and little Blue Rivers. Bro. Willey was in his sixtieth year, and leaves a family of a wife, five sons, and five daughters to mourn. He died strong in the faith of the church, with which he united many years ago, in Indiana. A large congregation of saints and neighbors attended the funeral of Bro. Willey whom in his short residence here they had learned to love and respect.

LELAND.—At Pecatonica, Illinois, January 5, 1898, Bro. James M. Leland, aged 74 years, 5 months, 11 days. He was born in Windsor County, Vermont, in 1823; removed to Stoughton, Wisconsin, in 1848, to Carroll Co., Illinois, in 1855; in 1852 to Winnebago Co. He married in 1850, in Wisconsin. For many years he was a member of the Congregational Church, but, through conversations with Bro. H. A. Stebbins in 1867-1869, he and his wife accepted the restored gospel, and they were baptized by him May 15, 1870, during a conference held in Marengo, Illinois, and both were very faithful, as also have been their two daughters who were afterwards baptized by Bro. Stebbins in Pecatonica. Three other children died in their childhood. Bro. Leland was ordained a priest, and he served the small branch during the time it existed, till the members died or removed. Sr. Leland passed on before him about five years ago. His funeral sermon was preached by Elder F. M. Cooper in the Congregational house at Pecatonica. The News of that place says, in its notice of Bro. Leland, "He was known as a Latter Day Saint; and while his creed was not one generally accepted, his faith and piety were unquestioned by any. People say of him, Another good man is gone."

HUNDLEY.—At Kansas City, Missouri, January 10, 1898, Sr. Lucy C. Hundley, aged 36 years. She was taught the way of life and was baptized by Elder J. Huffman in May, 1897. She was a noble woman and a true saint. She was sick but a few days when the angel of death took her to the paradise of God, where two of her little children went before her, where she rests from all her sorrows and care. Funeral at her residence, sermon by Elder F. C. Warnky assisted by Elder J. Huffman, from Luke 23:28. There were gathered many relatives and friends, also a large number of Sisters of Maccabee, of which order our sister was a member. Husband, two children, father, mother, and three sisters mourn. The remains were sent to Belton, Missouri, and laid in the family lot in the cemetery.

WILLIAMS.—At Keb, Iowa, Alice, youngest daughter of W. E. and Mary Jane Williams, born September 8, 1896; died January 10, 1898. Funeral services at residence by Priest John Jervis, assisted by Priest John Brennan.

DEUEL.—At his home, Garden City, Kansas, December 21, 1897, Elder Gordon E. Deuel, aged 76 years and 5 months. Deceased was born in Stormont County, Canada West; baptized at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1842, by Joseph Smith, ordained an elder in 1843 at Nauvoo by Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball. Bro. Deuel was one of the veterans in the service and died firm in the faith of the latter-day work. Wife and children mourn.

ESGAR.—At Bridger, Montana, January 10, 1898, Bro. Robert Esgar, Sen., aged 56 years, 6 months, and 25 days. He was baptized November 20, 1892, by Elder Gomer Reese, and ever since he heard the gospel his testimony was that the Bible was a new book to him, and regretted that he had not heard its glorious sound earlier in life, for it had brought him so much joy and peace. He suffered much and long before death released him, but he bore it all with patience. He was loved and respected by all who knew him. The church loses a valiant soldier, his family a dutiful, loving father and husband, the community an upright citizen. Five sons, two daughters, and a loving wife mourn. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Reese Creek, to await the resurrection of the just. He died as he had lived, enshrined in the love and affection of his family and friends.

THE THREE BOOKS
AT POPULAR PRICES.

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

Because of the increasing demand for the Inspired Translation in home and class study in general and in Sunday school work, also because of the increasing number of Book of Mormon and Book of Covenant classes being formed in various branches of the church, and the consequent growing demand for the "three books," the Herald Office management has decided to issue popular low-priced editions of each.

The books are all well bound and printed on good paper, the paper and plates being the same as used in higher priced editions.

They are good and durable, and with ordinary care will last the necessary wear of years. They are bound in cloth and sold at the low price of 65 cents for either Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants; the Inspired Translation at $1.

Orders solicited. The three standard books of the church are now within the reach of all.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

THE CHURCHES IN 1897.

In its issue of January 6 The Independent gave its annual survey of the history and progress of the religious bodies and societies in the United States during the previous year. The record for each church or society was presented by some one of its leading representatives, and the presentation covers altogether fifteen full pages. In its own editorial summary of these records, The Independent makes note of the fact that two new denominations have been added to the list during the past year, the Polish Catholic and the Christian Catholic. There are half a dozen small bodies, it says, on the eve of dissolution. The financial statistics show a slight gain over the years immediately preceding, and all the writers speak of the more hopeful feeling pervading their respective denominations. The Baptists paid off their entire indebtedness during the year, and the Methodists made a good beginning in the same direction. The showing for the mission boards of the Presbyterian Church, North, is not promising. The Board of Home Missions has just cut down its secretarial force from two members to one in order to reduce expenses. And the financial situation of this Board is said to be "growing steadily worse, the debt having increased heavily since last spring." Referring to its statistical exhibit of the state of the churches, The Independent says:—

"According to these tables the net gains of the year are considerably less than those of last year; that of ministers by 1,500, that of churches by 800 or more, and that of communicants by 113,500. Some of the gains credited to this year really cover several years, as it is not possible to get returns for some denominations annually. It is worthy of special note that the Methodist Episcopal Church, with its 2,989,000 communicants, made only a very slight net gain in the past year. The exact figures are 14,384, which is only about six tenths of one per cent. This, of course, only applies to the United States and not to foreign fields; but the entire increase of the year for all lands is less than 19,500. The explanation of this is yet to be found. To all appearances this has not been a year of great losses in membership, nor one entirely devoid of the revival spirit. The gain in churches and ministers in the various denominations is still a healthy gain and does not indicate any special decline in church activity and growth."

A glimpse at the showing made by some of the religious bodies less generally known to the reading public will be of interest. The narrative for the Adventists is written by Elder George A. Irwin, president of the Seventh-Day Adventists' General Conference. He speaks of "the rapid extension" and enlargement of the work of his church, of an increase of tithes and donations, the starting of a paper, The Christian Educator, and the improvement of denominational schools. A new departure is also noted in "carrying the gospel into the highways and hedges, and into the streets and lanes and slums of our great cities."

One of the new denominations, the Christian Catholic Church, is represented by its "General Overseer," Rev. John Alexander Dowie. This church, it appears, was organized in Chicago, February 22, 1896. It now has a membership, according to Mr. Dowie, of about 7,000, largely in and around Chicago; "Zion tabernacles, 3"; "halls and mission rooms, at least 100"; divine healing homes, 3." It has branches in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Europe, and Asia.

The Christian Scientist are reported by one of their members to have made rapid progress during the year, both in America and in foreign lands. The report speaks of 229 chartered churches, representing an increase of 44 churches for the year. "Besides these chartered churches there are 114 regularly established Sunday services. There are 64 public Christian Science reading rooms, situated mostly in the larger cities of the country." The text-book of the system, written by Mary Baker G. Eddy, "at the end of the year 1897 will be in its one hundred thirty-sixth edition of a thousand copies each." The actual number of avowed adherents and church attendants is put at 250,000 in the United States and Canada. The writer of this record says in conclusion:—

"The three cardinal reasons given for the rapid spread of Christian Science are as follows: First, the restoration of the Christian healing of the Apostolic Church; second, the establishment of Christianity upon a scientific basis; third, the metaphysical and demonstrable interpretation of Jesus's teachings, representing a world-wide reaction against materialism."

Writing of the Dunkards, Editor J. H. Moore, of The Gospel Messenger, says that during the year they increased about 6,000. The ministerial force numbers 2,315. The Society of Friends is reported by Rufus M. Jones to have enjoyed a year of "growth and advance in almost all lines of active work, resulting in a substantial increase of members. In the new fields of the West meetings have been built up, and many new members have been added. All the Yearly Meetings are carrying on successful mission work in foreign fields."

F. D. Richards, the historian of the Latter Day Saints, speaks in terms of great hopefulness and assurance of the progress of his society, especially in mission work outside of Utah. He says:—

"In reference to statistical data, I can only give you approximate figures; for, as a rule, we do not get complete reports from all our missionary fields till about April 1 of each year. At this writing we have in the neighborhood of 1,500 missionaries in the vineyard. To these may be added about 600 elders, who preside over the whole church, the stakes of Zion, and the different ecclesiastical wards and branches. There are about 600 church buildings used for public worship, Sabbath schools, etc. (the number of Sunday schools has been greatly increased throughout the missions generally). The total number of souls may be put down at 259,000 (as nearly as we can estimate the additions since the report ending December 31, 1896.)"

There is also a body called Reorganized Latter Day Saints, which claims to be the lawful continuation of the original Church of Latter Day Saints organized April 6, 1830, under the ministry of Joseph Smith and others. Its secretary writes of the large missionary work carried on in home and foreign lands, and says that the church has a total membership, including families represented, of about 100,000, a net gain of about 3,500 for the year. "It has persistently maintained," . . . "the pure faith against the doctrine of polygamy and kindred evils, which were no part of church teaching or belief from 1830-44, during the lifetime of Joseph Smith and his coworkers."

The story of the year for the Volunteers is told by Commander Ballington Booth, who says that the growth of the order "has been truly phenomenal and remarkable." In evidence of this he says:—

"I may mention that the Volunteers of America have now eight regiments, their centers being located in New York City, Philadelphia, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Grand Rapids, Minneapolis, and San Francisco. These are subdivided into sixteen battalions and detachments, in addition to our national headquarters, in which we publish The Volunteer's Gazette, and employ some forty people. There are already 92 staff officers and over 600 commanding officers, whose whole time is employed in furthering the interests of our philanthropic work, by far the larger majority of whom have been raised in our own ranks. As a further instance of the manner in which the movement has taken hold of the public, I may state that I have just received, through our reports, information that during a recent month 2,142 open airs were held, reaching some 140,000 people, while about 176,000 attended our week-night services, exclusive of the 160,000 attending our Sunday services in the armories throughout the States."

As for the parent body from which the Volunteers came, the Salvation Army, Col. J. J. Keppel writes:—

"There are now 6,390 corps or stations under the charge of 12,609 officers. On an average more than 250,000 persons are induced yearly to make a profession of religion, these being drawn mostly from the godless classes. Millions of person attend daily our open-air and indoor services. The circulation of our weekly newspapers amounts to 1,000,000 copies, and our work is carried on in 42 different countries and colonies, and in 28 different languages.

"We nightly shelter some 10,000 persons, and find work daily for more than 2,000. Our 400 relief institutions are manned by some 1,400 separate officers. They include 95 cheap shelters and food depots, 69 homes for fallen women, 14 homes for ex-criminals, 2 homes for waifs and strays, besides hospitals, nursing institutions, labor bureaus, and other agencies too numerous to mention. Through our rescue homes for fallen women there pass annually more than 4,000 girls, nearly 80 per cent of whom are restored to lives of virtue. Through our homes for ex-criminals there pass annually some 1,500 men, and about 70 per cent of these are permanently reclaimed."

The last denomination in the list reported is the Universalists, whose record is given by President Atwood, of the Canton Theological School. He says in his opening paragraph:—

"The year just closed has been one of anxiety in several of the more important enterprises of the Universalist Church, on account of the protracted pressure of financial and industrial stringency. It is, however, matter of congratulation that nothing heretofore undertaken has been given up, while some advances have been made. One drain to which this body is subject, not equally felt by any other, is occasioned by the steady and often rapid development of its characteristic thought in other and older communions. We can neither harvest our own sowing nor retain our own harvesting."—Literary Digest, Jan. 22, 1898.

GIVES GOLD TO THE SPIRITS.

Dr. H. A. Cross of Chicago has had Benjamin F. Foster and wife of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, arrested in Pittsburg on the charge of swindling him. The Fosters are spiritualists, and while Cross held the same belief they induced him to pass his jewelry and $550 in gold through a cabinet to the "spirits," with the assurance that he could have the same whenever he needed it. He needs it now.—Ex.

PUBLIC OPINION.

The following press notices of Public Opinion are characteristic of those constantly appearing in publications of all classes in all sections of the country. The Wesleyan Magazine says: "The pages of Public Opinion each week give a carefully selected resume of activity along different lines both at home and abroad. One noticeable feature is the condensation of the most important articles from the best periodicals, so that the reader gets, within brief compass, the best thought of the day. 'Solidity' well expresses the character of the articles. Devoid of every tendency to attract attention by mere display and sensational captions, it appeals to busy thinkers, who will find it a most satisfactory reflection of the upper strata of public opinion."

ITS LOFTY PURPOSE.

"Will you tell me," asked the reporter, who had looked upward at the cloud-piercing structure until his neck was weary, "what you are building this gigantic smokestack for?"

"In order, perhaps," coldly replied the architect who was constructing the tower of Babel, "to get beyond reach of the higher criticism."

And the deafening roar of the workmen went on.—Ex.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

WHILE at Stafford we availed ourselves of the opportunity of hearing "Gipsy Smith," the noted evangelist, who is quite a drawing card in this country. He is a real gipsy; says he slept in his gipsy tent until he was a man grown, never having slept in a house until after he was seventeen years old. As a logician he would rank low, as an orator he does not excel; but he is the very soul of pathos; and this together with his being a gipsy must be the attraction. It certainly is not because he is a Smith, for this does not always draw in this country, as we can testify. However, he told one little bit of good news which both pleased and rebuked us: He said that when he was in New York City one of the leading politicians, who stood high in the Cleveland administration, was converted to Christ under his preaching. This was very gratifying, and we thought, Surely America needs the labors of Gipsy Smith! but we were rebuked when we thought how we had misjudged this humble convert; for we had thought that all New Yorkers who stood high in that administration were of the class condemned for having entered the enemy's camp and "compassed sea and land to make one proselyte, and when they had made him he was twofold more the child of hell than before, like unto themselves."

On the whole our stay in Stafford was quite pleasant. It fell to our lot to spend Christmas with the humble little band at Leicester, and during our twelve days there we did what we could to encourage them to continue to humbly and discreetly serve the Master. We are now at Clay Cross, and have been holding forth here and at the beautiful little village of Asho-ver, four miles to the westward. The week's end will find us in Sheffield to attend the Sheffield district conference, where we expect to meet both Bro. F. G. Pitt and Bro. Roderick May. Looks like we might almost Americanize the conference.

We heard that the Mormons in Lanark, Scotland, intended to reply to our late effort through the Hamilton Advertiser, but though we requested a brother residing there to watch the paper closely and send us anything which might appear, we have seen nothing. We think it is safe to say that they have not ventured a reply, and as they have not explained their language, which we gave them opportunity to do, we must conclude that they intended what they said about B. Young. We hope they will not again accuse us of slander, for we have never said anything worse than that. But there is one more feature of their reply to Mr. McCullough that needs some consideration: Brigham, they said, had no more wives "than he supported." If this means anything it means that a man is justified in having as many as he can support. So it is a question of support. Let us see: A. can support but one wife; he should have but one. B. can support two; he should therefore have two. C. can support three; consequently he should have three. D. and E. are only able to support one between them, and hence they should club their resources and have a common spouse. If not, why not? If it is a question of support, and C. is entitled to three because he can support three, there is no reason why D. should not be entitled to a half a one if he can furnish half her support. By the way, perhaps these men are good exponents of their faith after all; for this logical conclusion throws a little light on that strange document called a revelation on the celestial order of marriage. It says:—

Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man receiveth a wife in the new and everlasting covenant, and if she be with another man, and I have not appointed unto her by the holy anointing, she hath committed adultery, and shall be destroyed. If she be not in the new and everlasting covenant, and she be with another man, she has committed adultery.

This teaches by the plainest kind of inference that a woman who is in the new and everlasting covenant may be appointed by the holy anointing to be with another man besides her husband. Thus provision is made for the poor fellow who can only support the half, third, or fourth of a wife. It is an easy step from this to the condition where a woman offers herself publicly to as many as are willing to contribute to her support. It is the boast of these men that houses of ill fame did not flourish in Salt Lake City until the Gentiles came. No wonder! Dram shops do not do a flourishing business anywhere while men keep liquors on their own sideboard. It is an open question, too, as to whether the existence of houses of ill repute there now is dependent on Gentile influence alone, or whether the logical development of the Mormon system of marriage does not contribute to that end. Be that as it may, we know that there was out there an entire Territory of such ill repute that she was not permitted to don the robes of Statehood until she promised to reform and put away her shame.

The position taken by these men at Lanark as well as their reputed revelation, as we have seen, provides by logical sequence for polyandry as well as polygamy. Some of the evidence relied upon to sustain the one will apply to the other with equal force also. Elder Orson Pratt in his early defense, and others since him, have quoted largely from the practices of barbarous and semi-civilized nations in favor of polygamy; but while polygamy existed among them, so did polyandry. When Von Humboldt visited the Canary Islands in 1799 he said: "The women had several husbands, each of whom enjoyed the prerogative belonging to the head of a family in succession, the others remaining for the time in the capacity of common domestics."—(Humboldt's Travels, p. 30.) Mr. Fraser in his "Journal of a Tour through the Himalaya Mountains" page 206, according to Humboldt, says: "It is usual all over the country for the future husband to purchase his wife from her parents; and the sum thus paid varies of course with the rank of the purchaser. The difficulty of raising this sum, and the alleged expense of maintaining women, may in part account for, if it cannot excuse, a most disgusting usage, which is universal over the country. Three or four or more brothers marry and cohabit with one woman, who is the wife of all. They are unable to raise the requisite sum individually, and thus club their shares, and buy this one common spouse."

This would be the exact and logical result of the position occupied by the missionaries in Scotland, who make this a question of support. However, to be frank with these men, we will say that we do not think they intended to give utterance to a doctrine of such strange and peculiar possibilities. When they said of Brigham Young and his wives: "He had no more than he supported, and enough to let other men's wives alone," they said it because they thought it would sound smart and cunning, and did not consider the import of their words. We feel sorry for them because men do not make such remarks as they did except when afflicted by "paralysis of the critical faculty."

Outside of the little circles where the personal influence of the saints is felt there is but little demand or interest to hear in this country. The name of Latter Day Saints has become odious, which causes people to decline to investigate. Take this place for instance: Once there was here a flourishing branch of the Utah people who left a very unsavory reputation. Then came the Reorganization promising better things, and we are glad to say that to some extent they have fulfilled that promise; but we regret to say that the promise has not been as fully kept as it should have been; for the conduct of our representatives have not always been above reproach. The consequence is that the missionary can accomplish but little. He may be a great preacher, but say the people: "so was Elder ——" His conduct may be exemplary "but," say they, "we thought Mr. — was almost an angel in disguise." Those who have disgraced their profession are, to be sure, largely in the minority, and are just the few exceptions to the rule; but the public indiscriminately consider the exception the rule.

We see no possibility of extending the work here only as it widens out from the little centers established, where it is made honorable by the good conduct and example of resident saints. In this direction while all can improve, some are doing nobly. We have visited all parts of England where any openings exist and our careful estimate of the situation is as above.

There are three districts in England. The Manchester district is presided over by High Priest Joseph Dewsnup, Senior. It has seven branches, four in Manchester and Salford, where the reins of local government are held by Elders James Baty, Henry Greenwood, W. G. Leggott, and Thomas Taylor; Wigan branch under the presidency of Elder James Spargo; Farnworth, in charge of Elder Joseph Harper; and Leeds, which until quite recently has been under the jurisdiction of Elder James Moir, now presided over by Elder William Seekins. Birmingham district, Elder C. H. Caton president, has four branches, which hold regular meetings; two in Birmingham, where High Priest Thomas Taylor and Elder Charles Tyler preside; Stafford under the watchcare of Elder John Dyche; and Leicester, where Elder — Pierce holds the chief authority. In addition to these there are fragmentary branches at Hanley and Burton-on-Trent.

The Sheffield conference is presided over by Elder John Austin, and has two branches, one at Sheffield, Elder H. Hoole presiding, and one at Clay Cross in charge of Elder Simon Holmes, Junior. Then there is the London branch, in charge of Elder James Gerrard, which is not included in any district. President James Calfall, we understand, found it necessary to do some regulating in same places; but he left them in such condition that we have had no occasion to exercise any authority except to preach the gospel and administer the ordinances. We desire nothing more,

ELDER DAVIS H. BAYS, under the possible inspiration of the church with which he is now identified, is engaged in an endeavor to overcome the claims of the Reorganized Church at Baroda, Michigan, where some prospect for increase had been created by the efforts of Bro. H. C. Bronson and others of the church. Sr. J. H. Royce, of Baroda, sends us clippings from the Era, current dates, in which Elder Bays' effort is not too highly praised; and the heading, "Probably Profitless," expresses the popular opinion in regard to it. The Era pointedly says:—

Just why this place should have been selected as the point of attack on Mormonism it would be hard to tell. No Mormons live here—or but one or two, and they are not of the Utah stripe. In other localities in this county many reside and are respected citizens. One member of the religious organization Mr. Bays is attacking is senator from this district in the State legislature, and nothing bad is known of him. Others of that faith are among the highly respected members of Berrien County society, and they are, probably, as lawabiding and socially as decent as other people. The crusade begun here has attracted the attention of the people attacked and a rejoinder from them may be expected. There is no one here to convert from Mormonism, but the elders in the church of the Latter Day Saints will find here some people whom they may convert to their views.

Sr. Royce pithily writes:—

The paper of the week previous had a notice that Bays was coming to expose the dangerous doctrines of Mormonism, show the honest men and women of the Latter Day Saints the errors of their way, and "win them back"—to what I do not know.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. C. E. GUINAND, writing from Atchison, Kansas, January 25:—

Bro. I. N. White has been diligently trying to root out some of the old roots of strife and contention here, and his efforts appear to have been blessed with success; for which we are very thankful.

Bro. J. M. Terry, January 26:—

Just closed a very successful series of twelve meetings at Wakenda, Ray County, Missouri, baptizing eight and leaving others near the door. I am now near Richmond; at King schoolhouse. Had a good meeting last night. Will continue here for three or four more nights. Prospects good, weather very bad; am feeling excellent in the work. Will be at St. Joseph for next Sunday.

Bro. W. S. Pender, Greenleaf, Kansas, the 22d:—

The Goshen saints have project to build a church and are progressing with it nicely. I begin a series of meetings in the opera house, Greenleaf, Kansas, January 23, and continue over the 30th. Expect Bro. White with me.

Bro. H. E. Moler, Hemlock, Ohio, January 20:—

Came to this part of the vineyard on the 15th inst. On Sunday night we begun meeting at Buckingham, a small town near here, in a church that Bro. Nevills secured. Have been holding forth every night with fair interest; expect to continue over next Sunday. Before coming here, I had made arrangements to begin meetings in a hall at Chauncey, Athens County; but on coming to the place found two protracted meetings in progress; so we postponed our effort till another time. Am feeling well in the work. The Lord be praised.

One of the brethren, writing from the field, says:—

I am getting along very well with the study of Latin. I keep the books with me and put in at least an hour a day. I especially like it; have found no difficulty, so far, in unravelling it, and enjoy the Spirit of the Lord . . . as in the study of the Bible. I understand that the Lord will be better pleased with a man who utilizes his time than with one who lets precious time go by carelessly or unoccupied.

Bro. D. L. Shinn, who has just buried his aged father, writes from Adamston, West Virginia, January 25:—

I hope to be in Pittsburg at my post on the 29th inst. My trials and tribulations are very heavy just now. I find my companion prostrated with nervousness. She is some better, but scarcely able to sit up. I was never more anxious to be at my Master's work. I came home yesterday from the funeral at Shinnston. Our friends there wanted me to stop and preach. Trust I shall have the prayers of the saints in our behalf, for I surely believe they have prevailed so far in proportion to faith.

Sr. Ella R. Devore, Graysville, Ohio, the 3d inst.:—

Husband is off on his mission work while I am wading through the snow and cold quite a distance from our house to care for horse, cow, and chickens. It certainly is a great task, as well as exposure, but circumstances would not permit otherwise for this winter, unless he would stop his missionary work, and we could neither of us think of such a thing. So he made everything as comfortable as he could for me, and I do the rest. But it was quite a sacrifice for him to go and leave me in such a strait, also for me to let him go; but then we are both used to sacrificing for this latter-day work; so we try to make ourselves brave and courageous for every emergency. There are but three sisters left, Srs. Lucas, Fisher, and I. If it is possible we meet together every Sunday afternoon and have prayer and testimony, and at times have spiritual feasts. Besides, on Thursdays we each devote a season to prayer upon same subject that the Prayer Union has published in Herald. Besides that, we are trying to live worthy of the cause we represent, and our neighbors are making note. We feel that in so doing prejudice must finally give way. Many believe this doctrine but fear to obey it. One young man, a relative, who had been preaching and lecturing, going hither and thither, came and heard, talked, and believed, but was afraid to obey. But he ceased his preaching. We hear of his defense of the true doctrine when in company with others. Again, others are on the eve of obeying and have said we as a family have been sent here on a mission. Again, others are wrought upon to come and look after our needs as two lone women, Sr. Fisher and myself. You see we are neither dead or asleep, and the tide is turning slowly this way.

Bro. J. W. Burget, Cleveland, Ohio, the 20th:—

The work is onward here, some near the kingdom. Our earnest young brother, Elder F. J. Ebeling, is with us and will stay over Sunday, the 23d. The saints are doing all they can to get the work before the people; but we find much in the way; pleasure and wickedness on every hand.

As a rumor from the battle field, Bro. Henry Kemp writes January 27:—

As a people we are in good spirits, trusting God for truth and right. We know in whom we trust; he will never forsake those who strive to do his will. We are having a good, lively time; and fully expect all to be said and done that can possibly be said against our position.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE saints of St. Marys, Ontario, together with the local and general ministry who have labored at that point, have reason to congratulate themselves on the excellent impression they have made for the cause. This we gather from a "descriptive sketch" of the "Latter Day Saints"—"of this quiet and unassuming little church and congregation," of its "origin and history in the town of St. Marys;" which appeared in the St. Mary's Journal of January 20. The article recites the beginnings of the work there and the subsequent labors of a long list of brethren, all of whom are mentioned as excellent citizens and churchmen. The doctrine of the church is also stated, with the remark "it does not make them any less respectable as citizens, nor does it warrant the existence of prejudice and intolerance in those who differ with them." The item closes with these words: "In all, the Latter Day Saint work appears to have taken root in St. Marys and at present to be on the increase."

Sr. Mary Knipschild, Norborne, Missouri, writes voicing her appreciation of the recent articles on the subject of conversion. She seconds the motion of Bro. Charles Derry, that they be printed in pamphlet form. From personal experience she commends observance of the law of tithing.

Sr. Emma Christy, Marshfield, Missouri, writes a word of sympathy for the scattered saints. We omit with other letters crowded out.

Brn. Swenson and Sparling have been preaching at Mayville, North Dakota, of late; Bro. Sparling also held a discussion with a minister—denomination not named. Nine were baptized and a victory gained which placed the work in good light before the people. This we learn from a letter from Sr. Pearl Langton, of Mayville. The saints hope to see Brn. Sparling and Swenson again, next June.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Sr., writes from Galena, Indiana, that he is blessed with good liberty and appreciative audiences in the work of preaching.

The war department of the United States Government has been quietly at work fortifying the leading sea-coast defenses against attack by a foreign foe. From the coast of Maine on the east to Washington on the Pacific the leading points of approach to our important seaports have been supplied with enormous rifle guns and are guarded by an outer line of torpedoes. "The work of fortification has gone on so rapidly and so secretly that it will now do no harm to announce that the coast line of the country is for the first time reasonably well protected against the average modern fleet."

The United States war vessel Maine has been dispatched to Havana, Cuba, to be in readiness to protect American interests should further disorder occur in the Cuban capital. The remainder of the Atlantic squadron is collected at the Dry Tortugas, off the coast of Florida, within a few hours' sail of Havana, should their services be needed; and by means of patrol of light boats between the two points the entire fleet could be signalled and sent to aid the Maine, in event of trouble. The Maine is the first American war vessel to enter Cuban waters since the outbreak of the present revolution. Her going there is simply in harmony with international custom by which neutral powers prepare to protect their subjects and interests. The Maine was well received and duly saluted by Spanish naval vessels and the fortresses. Some Spanish papers comment unfavorably and construe the vessel's presence as indicating American hostility to Spain.

The joint commission of the Methodist Churches North and South has agreed "to recommend to the General Conferences of the two churches provision for the reception of ministers from one church to the other without loss of orders in ministerial standing."

Rome, Jan. 25.—Owing to the bread riots it has been decided to call out one class of the reserves.

To Prod the Sultan.—Russia is about to present a note to Turkey demanding payment of the whole balance of the indemnity of the Russo-Turkish war, amounting to £28,000,000 ($140,000,000), with a view to making the Sultan more docile in the settlement of the Cretan question.

London, Jan. 24.—The most alarming rumors are prevalent to-night in the ministerial clubs concerning the latest developments in the Anglo-Russian relations over China. The St. Petersburg government displays bitter resentment at the threatening language employed by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach and in the face of British diplomatic protests has redoubled the intimidatory pressure at Peking to prevent England securing the issue of the loan. The London Times this morning publishes officially an inspired editorial minimizing the gravity of Beach's words, whose "strong expression," it complains, "has been strangely misinterpreted." The Times continues:—

"It has been imagined that the Chancellor of the Exchequer delivered something like an ultimatum with regard to the proposed loan. In reality he did nothing of the kind. He merely said England would never allow her commerce to be excluded from Chinese markets. Our attitude is in no sense aggressive, but merely self-defensive."

Smalley's Times dispatch to-day, in quoting editorials from the New York papers praising England's attitude as exemplified in Hicks-Beach's speech, is prominently reproduced in the evening papers as evidence that England, in keeping open Chinese markets, will find an ally not only in Japan but in the United States.

London, Jan. 25.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Nagasaki, Japan, says: "The British and Russian squadrons are watching each other's movements. When the British battleship Centurion, flagship of the squadron, left Nagasaki yesterday (Sunday) it was shadowed by the Russian gunboat Sivootch. The Japanese fleet is still at Yokosuka, but is expected to sail shortly for Wei Hai Wei. No serious developments are looked for."

Pekin, Jan. 24.—Another loan conference with the Tsung-Li-Yamen has taken place, the latter receiving the Russian representative in the morning and the British Minister in the afternoon. It is believed the British Minister, Sir Claude M. Macdonald, insists upon the opening of Ta-Lien-Wan, and that Great Britain will not recede. Whether Great Britain or Russia secures the loan depends upon which exerts the greatest pressure. If great Britain undertakes to protect China against Russia's displeasure, it is believed the loan will be concluded on terms proposed by Sir Claude M. Macdonald.

Germany's lease of Kiao Chou has finally been fixed at ninety-nine years. The Chinese Emperor is greatly displeased.

London, January 25.—The St. James Gazette this afternoon says it has authority for stating that Russia is not likely to persist in her opposition to the opening of Ta-Lien-Wan.

The Peking correspondent of the Times says: "Russia has notified the Tsung-Li-Yamen of her willingness to provide a loan on the same financial terms as England's offer. France supports Russia in the matter."

The Shanghai correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "The British fleet has been divided into two squadrons, one at Chu San, under Admiral Sir Alexander Buller, on board the Centurion, and the other at Chemulpo, under the command of Rear Admiral Fitzgerald."

New York, Jan. 25.—A telegram from Washington says: "Information received to-day leaves room for little, if any, doubt that England is endeavoring to induce the United States government to commit itself in favor of England's position in the far East. In seeking assurance that she will not look to this country in vain for support England is not proposing any agreement which would require the formality of a treaty, nor, perhaps, any agreement which could be dignified as a twin alliance. There is, however, much evidence that England is exceedingly anxious to secure an executive expression which would notify Europe that this country would back England's opposition to any Chinese port being opened to a favored nation, and her Ambassador, Sir Julian Pauncefote, is working to that end.

"Senator Clark, of the Foreign Relations committee said he had heard of such a move, and said he was in favor of backing up England. Senator Davis also said he had heard England was seeking the support of the United States."

Brussels, Jan. 25.—Deputy Demblon entered the vestibule of the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon accompanied by a band of Socialists. The officer in command of the guard informed him that in pursuance of the president's orders he could not be allowed to enter, whereupon M. Demblon raised cries of "Vive l'Armes," "Vive la Republique!"

A crowd collected and attempted to rush the soldiers, with the result that there was a violent scuffle, the troops withstanding the mob with fixed bayonets and a hand-to-hand fight taking place between the Socialists and anti-Socialists. For a time the tumult was indescribable and a strong body of police was required to quell the disorder.

Within the Chamber of Deputies the greatest excitement also prevailed. The Socialist deputies demanded to know who was responsible for the violence of the soldiers toward the deputies. The tumult became deafening and the Ministers who attempted to reply were shouted down. After a further disorderly scene the Chamber rejected by a vote of 86 to 29 a Socialist motion condemning the action of the officers of the House.

There was further uproar in the House when one of the questors declared that he was responsible for the presence of the troops in the Chamber, adding as a warning to the Socialists that he would always do his duty against them. M. Vandervelde, Socialist, denounced President Beernaert for calling him a "fighting man," whereupon the president suspended the sitting amid great uproar. When business was resumed the President made a speech justifying the action taken against the Socialists, whereupon M. Vandervelde again rose and uttered a violent tirade against the questors and asked who had ordered the Socialists to be thrashed.

Different reports from Cuba state that Blanco has taken to the field and again that he has not. Report also states that he is communicating with General Gomez, of the Cuban army, with a view to ending the war.

The Italian Cabinet was hastily called together late Monday night to discuss measures for dealing with the bread riots and Socialist disorders.

London, Jan. 25. — It is reported that Lord Delamere's expedition has reached Fashoda, on the River Nile, about four hundred miles south of Khartoum, and at which place the French expedition under Captain Marchand (repeatedly reported massacred) was said to have arrived some time ago.

Berlin, Jan. 25. — Herr Trojan, editor of Kladderdatsch, has been sentenced to two months' imprisonment in a fortress for lese majesty in cartooning Emperor William.

London, Jan. 26. — The newspapers here comment on French, Russian, and German reinforcements going to the far East while no corresponding addition is made to the British fleet and say: "Happily Great Britain has the countenance instead of the hostility of the United States. But the Japanese navy is a factor of uncertain value."

An article in the Pall Mall Gazette says: "The German fleet may be said to hold the balance between England and Japan, and France and Russia. The position of arbiter is the very thing the Kaiser would desire, and, with the force he possesses in the far East, he can dictate terms. If the position is really critical we run a grave risk in leaving our fleet weak.

In fact, we prepare for an open contest by retrograde movements."

Berlin, Jan. 26. — The steamer Darmstadt, having on board detachments of marines and artillerymen, has arrived at Kiao-Chou Bay.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 26. — Captain Porter of the steamer Braemer, which has arrived from the Orient, says he learned on very good authority that a firm of long standing in the Orient is buying up all the Welsh and English coal that can be produced in China and Japan in behalf of Great Britain. He also says there is now in Japan a very strong feeling against Europeans, mainly among the lower classes. So great is the feeling that the government has issued proclamations commanding all Japanese, under severe penalties, to treat Europeans with the greatest respect.

London, Jan. 26. — A dispatch to the daily Graphic from Sebastopol says it is rumored there that a portion of the Russian Black Sea fleet will be dispatched to China.

Managua, Nicaragua, Jan. 26. — L. Wichmann, the agent of the English corporation, the Atlas Steamship Company, Limited, offers the Nicaraguan Government a large sum in silver, advanced from London sources, for Nicaragua's railway and steamship system from ocean to ocean, with a view of obtaining for the company connected interocean transportation across the country, including the canal route. The government is considering the offer.

Congress gives its approval to the parcels post contract with France.

The question of continuing the grants to the so-called London Bank of Central America (Bank of Nicaragua) is still under discussion. It is not probable that these will be annulled.

Muscat, Gulf of Oman, Jan. 26. — The British gunboat Lapwing has seized the steamer Baluchistan, off here, and its cargo of arms and ammunition has been confiscated. The cargo is held by the British Consul.

It is presumable that the cargo of arms and ammunition seized by the Lapwing was intended for the use of the insurgents of Baluchistan, who have recently been giving considerable trouble to the British.

London, Jan. 26. — The seizure of the steamer Baluchistan tends to explain the mystery as to whence the Afridis secured their latest style British rifles. The owners of the Baluchistan say it has been released and has proceeded. They add that the arms were shipped to a dozen different Russian firms.

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 26. — Advices from the Orient bring to hand the full text of the edict recently issued by Fernando Primo de Rivera, Governor General of the Philippines. Taken as a whole, it appears as an official confession of the untruth of the frequent announcements from the government at Madrid that the Philippine insurrection has been suppressed and the people pacified.

The edict begins with the revocation of all passes heretofore issued and the establishment of a military trocha. Property belonging to persons connected with the rebellion, or to tenants, partners, or any person interested in property belonging to the rebels, is declared forfeited to the government, and will be seized to satisfy the needs of the Spanish army.

The families of individuals who are incorporated in the rebel party must go to join them or fix their residence under the watchfulness of the authorities.

For the purpose of this order the families of rebels will consist of their wives, children, parents, brothers, brothers-in-law, and cousins.

New York, Jan. 26. — The steamer Orizaba of the Ward Line, which left for Havana to-day, carried 400,000 pounds of provisions and 200,000 grains of quinine, collected by the Cuban Relief committee, to be distributed among the suffering people of the island under the direction of General Lee. A separate consignment to General Lee consisted of eighteen tons of provisions contributed by the members of the Philadelphia Grocers and Importers' Exchange and six cases of quinine from the Philadelphia Drug Exchange.

It is announced with apparent authority now that the report of the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippine Islands was a canard—probably in the hope of influencing the result in Cuba. The exposure of the fact will cause a recoil upon the Spanish government."

The London Daily Mail says it learns from a "source hitherto accurate" that China is inclined to make the best possible bargain with Russia, whose diplomacy appears to have triumphed at Peking, England having resolved not to force a conflict by further opposing Russia's claims at Port Arthur and in the Liao-Tung Peninsula. "Japan," says the Daily Mail's authority, "has been thrown into a state of consternation by the British backdown, and has adopted a more friendly attitude toward Russia.

Berlin, Jan. 31.—Newspaper comment here is all on the text of England's inglorious retreat as indicated by the announcement of the Berliner Tageblatt that Russia and England have arrived at an agreement whereby England has consented to drop her demand for the opening of Talien Wan.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Though Vice may don the judge's gown
And play the censor's part,
And Fact be cowed by Falsehood's frown
And nature ruled by art;
Though Labor toils through blinding tears
And idle Wealth is might,
I know the honest, earnest years
Will bring it all out right."

EVILS RESULTING FROM A LOVE OF DISPLAY.

THE evils resulting from a love of display are as numerous as its various forms; but whether or not it be a display of wealth, power, knowledge, or religion, the basis is the same—a selfish ambition which tramples under foot the interests of all those who dare to oppose it, and brings slavery, not only to them, but to the one who, in order to gain power over others, loses power over himself.

The desire for power in excess caused the angels to fall. The desire for knowledge in excess caused man to fall, or, as Pope has expressed it:—

Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes,
Men would be angels; angels would be gods,
Aspiring to be gods if angels fell;
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel.

But such ambition, having risen to dignities by indignities, is jealous and suspicious for fear another, with greater power, should cause its downfall or eclipse; and, in the words of Bacon, "Whereas they have all their times sacrificed to themselves, they become, in the end, sacrifices to the inconstancy of Fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned."

Throughout all history, what but the tyranny of display and ambition has caused the downfall of nations? In ancient times, the corrupt and dissolute life of the upper classes, and the consequent degradation of the court; the imbruted life of the masses who had entirely departed from the simple virtues of their early fathers,—these were the vices and immoralities which silently but rapidly sapped the foundation of both society and state, and brought Rome from her proud position as ruler of the civilized world down to the humble state she now occupies.

Later, it was the lavish expenditures of the Bourbons, in order to gratify the love of display, which plunged France into the horror of a Revolution that will always leave a stain upon French history. And to-day, the people are vigorously protesting against the burdens imposed upon them to satisfy the ambitions of those who desire to live in splendor and luxuriance while those whom they oppress live in poverty and wretchedness.

But how much more disastrous upon the state of society will be the effect of a false display of religion. How often in their professions Christians repeat the words of a creed whose truths they deny by the testimony of their individual lives. They expect to be successful in persuading others to be followers of Christ without illustrating the principles they profess to believe by the strongest confirmation which can be given—a holy example. And the influence of such Christians is more to be feared than the teachings of professed infidels, who appear in their real likeness and not as wolves in sheep's clothing.

Arguments may be refuted, but a holy life has a power which can hardly be resisted. It speaks at all times, to all people, manifesting the transforming power of true religion and the splendid possibilities of human excellence; and drawing out, by its own sympathy, the dormant nobleness of those under its influence.

Such a life is an unanswerable testimony to the truth of the religion of Jesus of Nazareth.

SPECIAL REQUEST FOR FASTING AND PRAYER.

THE Sisters' Prayer Union of the Lamoni branch, Lamoni, Iowa, having set apart Thursday, February 10, as a day of fasting and prayer in behalf of Sr. Permelia Sterrett, of Utah, earnestly request that all other locals join with them in observing this day.

The elders who have traveled in Utah will remember the faithful services rendered by our afflicted sister, but will be surprised to know that during the years she has so faithfully and patiently ministered to their physical comfort, she has been afflicted with a running sore upon her breast, which has always been painful, but the pain has increased of late until at times it seems unbearable. We earnestly hope that all will join with us in asking God to heal his faithful hand-maiden.

LA SALLE, Illinois.

Will the sister, of Tama, Iowa, whose letter appeared on page 778 of Herald for December 8, 1897, please write to Mrs. Maud Whitney, 712 First Street, La Salle, Illinois. She is doubtless the one referred to in letter.

MRS. R. J. WHITNEY.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

THE Sunday school teacher should be on the alert to improve every opportunity for developing the mind and character of pupils, and if opportunities do not come as fast as they should, be prepared to make some. In the present Quarterlies we deal mostly with principles. It is necessary that these principles be understood by the pupils, and the all-important question is how can they be presented so that they may be the most easily comprehended? It has been the general experience of teachers that the gospel principles are best taught in connection with rather than abstractly. To illustrate: It would be very easy to tell Johnnie that he should be kind. That would be a gospel principle, and Johnnie is supposed to have learned it; but the next day Johnnie might be seen carrying off a nest of young birds, or swinging a live turtle on a string. If he had learned the lesson of kindness he had not learned how to apply it. Now if the principle had been connected with some historical event there would have been some foundation for the principle to rest upon in Johnnie's mind, and he would have more easily seen the application of it. Take the

of the "good Samaritan." If that were taught, giving special attention to the principle of kindness shown there, and explaining that it applies to all living things, not only to boys and girls but animals as well, Johnnie would then have seen the application of the principle. After

of the lesson and telling the pupils that "God is Love," as we had in our last Sunday's lesson, we may consider our work finished. But have the pupils really learned that "God is Love?" Have you brought out some experience in their lives in which God's love was manifested to them? Have you made them feel that God really loved them? If you have not, your work is not what it might be.

A STATEMENT.

of one of our former editors comes to mind here; it is: "The teacher who teaches only to know, is a failure. She should also teach to do." And so it is, unless pupils are taught and trained to act upon what they learn, their learning is more or less a failure.

THE FIRST PRINCIPLE.

GEORGE FARCHILD.

LAST week I visited a kindergarten, and during the opening exercises was given a seat on the platform. All the children sat with faces turned toward me.

The leader asked them to sit properly, but found it necessary to wait, especially for one boy who crossed his legs and sat in a careless position. The teacher kept looking at the boy, but the boy kept looking at me. At first I did not see where the trouble was, but another moment and I recognized that he was imitating myself. My legs were crossed, so were his; my chair was crooked, so was his; my position was careless, so was his. The God-given characteristic of imitation was at work. The boy was copying me. Immediately I sat up straight, uncrossed my legs, set a good example, and the exercises proceeded. Since then I have been thinking that I must be more careful to set a good example.

Primary teacher, your children are becoming like you. What kind are they to be? What sort of men and women will they become?

The possibilities are great. The imitative characteristic is large in children. A superintendent of a Sunday school once said to me, "I do not remember a thing my Sunday school teacher ever said to me, but I remember her, and the influences of her life have often kept me from evil."

The first principle of teaching is example.

Be what you would have your scholar become.

The aim of the primary teacher is not to teach Bible history, geography, or even memory verses, except as these are a means to an end. The object should be to put within the child's heart truth. It is truth that will set us free. We should teach history, geography, and other things wholly as a help to instill truth in the child-heart.—Selected.

A JUBILEE IN TAHITI.

Editors Herald:—The Protestant church of this place is now in the midst of its jubilee week, which began on Sunday, December 5, and ends Saturday, the 11th. This jubilee is in commemoration of the landing of the first missionaries on this island, which was in March, 1797. Many of the ministers and white missionaries have gathered here, and quite a number of the members of the Protestant church to take part in the jubilee.

In a field near town they have built a temporary shed or roof, for an eating house; and one of the strange features of the affair is that the white missionary, who is at the head of the church here, has forbidden the women to eat at the tables, or to sit in the church even, unless there may be room in the pews after the delegates and men are seated. This has caused considerable criticism and dissatisfaction, as it is so very unusual an arrangement; and even Mrs. Henry, the wife of the son of one of those first missionaries, was not permitted to eat at the table with her husband—not even at Matavai, the place where the missionaries landed, about ten miles from Papeete, where the jubilee folks went on Tuesday.

They hold meetings every evening and on some part of the days. Very much of the talk at these services is of the dark and benighted condition of the former inhabitants of this place, their idolatry, cannibalism, etc., and the coming of the missionaries and the change from idolatry to Christianity, etc.

The following is an extract from one of the addresses that was read at the jubilee:—

"In 1774 two Roman Catholic priests came to this island from Peru and remained ten months, then returned to Lima.

"In April, 1769, Captain Cook, of the Endeavor, anchored in Matavai bay and remained three months, for the purpose of observing the transit of Venus across the sun's disk. He was here again in 1773 and in 1777. Captain Cook said in his report home, 'since there are no motives in public ambition, nor in private avarice, for such an undertaking,' it was his opinion that nothing would ever be done to Christianize the Pacific islanders. But it was owing to these very words that were published in England that the first thoughts of missionary enterprise arose in the hearts of Protestant Christians.

"A young man named William Cary, in the small town of Moulton, was the first to set that mighty wave in motion, and his first thought was to send the word of God to Tahiti. William Cary was a bright man, educating himself and working as a cobbler to support his family; and with a map and a leather globe which he had made, he illustrated Cook's voyages in the Pacific. He was a Baptist, and so earnest did he become in his missionary project, that he proposed a discussion of the duty of the church to evangelize the heathen countries, at a gathering of Baptist ministers. To this proposition Dr. Ryland warmly replied, 'Sit down, young man; when God proposes to convert the heathen, he will do it without your help or mine; nothing can be done for such an object until another Pentecost, when an effusion of miraculous gifts, including the gift of tongues, would give effect to the commission of Christ, as at first.'

"But the young man did not 'sit down'; he was eloquent in appealing to the hearts of the Baptist associations for help until at last he persuaded twelve ministers to aid him in organizing in Kettering on October 2, 1792, the first foreign missionary society of Great Britain.

"While preparations were being made to commence the work in Tahiti, John Thomas, a young surgeon of the East India Company, who had devoted himself to missionary work, while employed in India, arrived in London in search of a missionary to help him, and William Cary and John Thomas were sent by that society to India.

"In 1795 a new missionary society was organized, and thirty missionaries were sent to the South Seas; and Tahiti was where they first landed. On the 10th of August, 1796, they embarked from the Thames on board the ship Duff, which had been purchased for the mission. Captain Wilson was commander. On September 23 following, they left Portsmouth, and on March 4, 1797, they sighted Tahiti.

"Shortly before the missionary ship hove in sight, for the first time on record, a great earthquake was felt in three shocks, early in the morning, at noon, and at sunset, accompanied with a tornado; and men, women, and children were panic stricken; and this prepared the way for a good reception of the missionaries.

"And respecting the burning of the idols by the priest and chief Patii, they say, Some of the missionaries, fearful of the consequences, advised him to consider well what he was about to do; but Mr. Henry, young and zealous for the Lord of Hosts, slapped the heroic chief on the back, and encouraged him to lose no time in carrying out his good intention. Accordingly on the morrow, Patii brought his three family idols upon his back to the place of burning. The people gazed with horror at the sacrilegious act, expecting that some signal vengeance would overtake the bold assailant of the gods; they, however, were unable to help themselves, and the spectators witnessing such impotence, felt their faith in the superstition of their ancestors not a little shaken. This led the people to exclaim, 'Yours is the true God—ours have lost their power.'

On Sunday, December 12, the saints of Taronia (Sharon) held their jubilee services in the saints' chapel. Services opened at two p. m. by singing and prayer. Then a few remarks by the missionary in charge; then Metuaore read the first seventeen verses of the twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus and commented on it; after which Emma read an address in Tahitian, which she had written upon the subject for the occasion. Then twenty-seven of the brethren and sisters in regular order each quoted a verse from the Bible and made short comments upon it. The substance being that the Jews' jubilee was as a sign of the great jubilee (or true jubilee, as they say it) when Christ will reign for a thousand years, and then all the saints will be free from death, sin, sickness, debt, and slavery of every kind. But before the jubilee can begin, the gospel must be preached in all the world, and for this reason the Lord sent the angel to Joseph Smith with the gospel, which would prepare Israel for their return to Jerusalem, and the saints for their gathering to Zion. Then the true jubilee would begin.

I will give one of the speeches as an illustration: Verses three and four of chapter two of Zechariah were recited, then the speaker said: "The prophet says one angel was to tell another angel to go to a young man on earth, and tell him that the Jews were going to Jerusalem again, a great multitude of them; and so the angel came to Joseph Smith, the young man, and the angel's name was Moroni, who told the prophet that the gospel must go to every nation on earth. So this young man ordained elders and sent them everywhere; and after the gospel goes all over the world, the Jews will be gathered to Jerusalem again, and the saints to Zion; then the true jubilee will begin."

After this Emma and I sang, "Blow ye the trumpet, blow." One verse in English, the others in Tahitian.

After these services closed, the singers sang a number of hymns, and then separated a little after four p. m.

Shortly after this several persons came running to the house, saying the Teavaroa is coming; and so we went down to the landing, and sure enough she was coming, and soon we had the pleasure of greeting Bro. and Sr. Case again, after a nine months' parting. Bro. Hubert preached in our chapel that evening—a nice ending to our Tahiti jubilee.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Dec. 14.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing we have taken several hard trips at sea. From Hao Marutea in a three ton boat, one hundred and fifty miles, sea very rough and high wind. I baptized thirteen at Hao, making thirty-two in all since last report. I have been blessed in my efforts to preach. We have plenty of opposition, particularly from the Utah faction. One Elder Neff, whose name I mentioned before, is doing all in his power against us, making false statements concerning Bro. Joseph and the Reorganization. With the help of Church History, Abstract of Evidence, and late Heralds, I have been able to expose his falsehoods so plainly that even the natives say, "E haavare rahi ta te Orometua Mo-moni e e taviri ratou i te parau mau." Which means in plain United States, "That the Mormon missionaries lie, and twist the truth to deceive the people."

We came from Marutea to Takaboto. At Marutea there were a great many people, and owing to the scarcity of water and the wretched quality of what they could obtain, many were sick. The fish also were very poisonous, and many were sick from eating them. They got very little shell there. At Takaboto, things were different. Plenty of good water, good fish, and a reasonable quantity of shell. We left for Papeete on the 10th inst., arrived here on the 12th. The schooner Teavaroa was so heavily laden with "bufaa" and shell that we had no choice, but to sleep on deck. A little rain fell both nights, but we were covered with a sail and did not get wet. We called about half an hour at Kaukura, where I met and bade farewell to Bro. Janssen and several of the native brethren and sisters. They did not forget to aid us financially, for which we pray they may be rewarded.

Upon our arrival we were greeted with the waving of hat and handkerchief of Bro. and Sr. Burton, who were waiting on the wharf. Spent the evening in talking over the trials and triumphs of the past year, or rather since our parting in Kaukura. We have visited sixteen islands since that time, and feel to thank the Lord for his protecting care, and many blessings.

We feel sorry to leave Bro. and Sr. Burton alone in the mission. For the work's sake I would stay, but the state of my wife's health will not admit it, or justify me in staying. We hope that others will soon arrive to take our place.

We hope to meet with the saints at Independence in April, if we are permitted a safe voyage home, by the Father of all.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

HUBERT CASE.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—Last evening Bro. Hubert Case and wife and child arrived from the Paumotus, to make preparation for their return home. Their return home leaves a place vacant out here for some strong man to earn a celestial reward for service performed in faithfulness, self-denial, perseverance, Job's patience, Daniel's faith, Moses' meekness, and John's love and kindness. Anyone wishing the very valuable reward for such services—a crown of immortal glory—will please apply immediately to the proper authorities of the church for appointment, and we will assure them that they will have the opportunity of striving for the crown if they come here. No man is crowned except he strive lawfully. We not only want, but we need two men for this field, and hope sincerely that they will be God-appointed, for it is a peculiar field to work.

There are fourteen elders from Utah here, and they are adepts in avoiding the truth, and in representing things as they are not.

It makes us considerably lonesome to think that Bro. and Sr. Case will soon leave us two white missionaries here alone.

We were all made very sad by reason of the death of Elder Petero Derrien, on November 28, of pneumonia. He was by far the brightest and most intelligent native missionary we had; was of partly French parentage, spoke the French language fluently; was secretary to the French Governor of these colonies at one time. He was baptized by Bro. T. W. Smith, and at the time of his death was in charge of the missionary work in the Tahiti division, secretary of the mission, and assistant superintendent of the Sunday school association. He would compare favorably with the general missionaries of America in his able defense of the faith.

Also Elder Tahuhu a Tama, of Tubuai, died in Tupuai, October 31. He had been Governor of Tupuai since 1873, a man very highly respected as an honorable man, a faithful Governor, kind-hearted to the citizens as a father, and an humble, faithful elder of the church.

Elder Petero Derrien, a few days before his death, saw in vision Joseph the Martyr and Thomas W. Smith in a beautiful bright room, and they called him, saying, Petero, come up here. And so that day he told me, "Joseph, I am going to die"—oia mau—surely so. And on Sunday at midday he entered the bright room—the paradise of God.

The year 1897, now nearing its close, is leaving considerable work on our hands, with no small degree of care, anxiety, and responsibility—with a greatly lessened council of helpers; but the work is the Lord's and he will direct, assist, counsel, and bestow all needed help and every needed gift and blessing. So we trustingly bid good-bye to the departing year, and welcome the incoming one with confidence and faith in the final triumph of the work in which we are engaged.

On October 24 four of our brethren carried Ahupu into the water on a stretcher, and I baptized him; he was very low from the effects of a large tumor in the right side. He had had the assistance of the native doctors, the French doctors, and lastly the doctor from the French man-of-war; but they all told him he must die. He settled in a house near here, learned of our faith, sent for the elders, and the moment he touched the water in baptism the pain ceased, and from thence he has steadily improved, until now he is nearly entirely well. Last week he walked up to Papeete, and this week expects to return to his home in Rairoa. His wife and two children were also baptized. He is a very intelligent half-caste; was formerly a Protestant, is well known here, and his healing is making considerable talk. So as the Lord is still with us, we need not fear.

Peace be with all the Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

SOCIETY ISLANDS.

A speech delivered by Isaac S. Henry, son of the first missionary who set foot on Tahitian soil, at Point Venus, at the centennial services held for the occasion.

It is said in Isaiah 9: 6, 7, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

My dear friends, because of the coming forth of this prediction, and the birth of the Son here spoken of, and he being universally received by the great powers of Europe, caused his ambassadors to be sent forth to the shores of Tahiti; and like unto the wonderful works of God made manifest in those great countries for the establishment of his cause; namely:—

1. The deluge, when all the inhabitants of this earth were swept away except eight persons.

2. When the hosts of Pharaoh were overthrown in the Red Sea.

3. When the graves were opened at the death of Christ, and some of those who slept in the earth arose, after his resurrection.

In many other ways did God manifest his power, as shown in his word, such as his shutting the mouths of the lions to rescue his servant Daniel. Another instance was the rescuing of his three servants, Shadrack and his fellows, from the burning, fiery furnace. But I must not run this out to a great length. Like unto what God performed in those great countries, so also did he display his power on the occasion of the coming in sight of the first missionary ship to the shores of Tahiti. A great earthquake was experienced upon the spot where we now stand, that it might be known that these were his messengers, sent to publish tidings concerning this Son which had been born to bring peace and good will upon earth. There were three shocks of earthquakes in the one day, early in the morning, at noon, and at the setting of the sun.

These things are found in the records of the London Missionary Society in reference to those times. And now, dear brethren, I praise God that he has not deserted us; and it would be quite pleasing and agreeable to my mind should it please God to give us another manifestation of his power, that it might be known that our petitions requesting his favor to be continued unto us [were answered?], and that these his servants might be endowed by his Spirit that they might be aided in cultivating the earth which hath already been cleared by my father and his colleagues.

A matter has been omitted by me in regard to the establishment of Christianity in Moorea, relative to the priest of Oro Patii. After his receiving the word of God he proposed to go to Apotaato and fetch his gods to be burnt. A part of the missionaries advised him to be cautious, as it was not known what might be the effect upon the minds of the people; but my father strongly urged him, saying, "I shall have the wood piled ready;" and when he brought his three idols they were placed upon the wood pile and set fire to. The native spectators were watching, and when the pile was reduced to ashes, and seeing that nothing had befallen these two men, the people cried out, saying,

"Yours is the true God; ours have lost their power."

And now, brethren, you white missionaries, and also you native pastors, this is my admonition to you, that you be of good cheer, and continue to cultivate the soil where the seeds of wheat had been sown by my father upon these islands, and the Lord of the harvest will reward you according unto your works.

This is my speech unto you. May God save us all. Amen.

BRYAN, Idaho, Jan. 15.

Editors Herald:—We have had lively times here lately, nothing less than a discussion between elders of the Mormon Church and those of the Reorganization.

During the month of November last Elder S. D. Condit did considerable labor in the Riverside precinct, and created some degree of interest; and as Riverside is peopled principally by Mormons, the elders of that church were aroused, and an agreement was signed to discuss the following propositions:—

Resolved that Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the legal successor of Joseph Smith the Martyr in the presidency of the church; Elders J. H. and S. D. Condit to affirm, Elders P. J. Fjeldsted and T. H. Allred to deny.

Resolved that Brigham Young was the legal successor to Joseph Smith the Martyr in the presidency of the church; Elders Fjeldsted and Allred to affirm, Elders Condit to deny.

As Elders Fjeldsted and Allred desired six weeks' time for preparation, the time was set for January 9, and three sessions of four hours each were to be given to each proposition; the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants to be the standards of evidence; and with the stipulation that either side might substitute any representative elder of their respective church.

Accordingly the Brothers Condit departed on other business. After their departure the astute gentlemen of the opposition discovered what they conceived to be a base design on the part of Elders Condit to take technical advantage of them in the wording of the proposition, in that the word "legal" was used instead of "ecclesiastical." They wrote Bro. Condit asking that the words be changed, the change being readily agreed to. All went smoothly till the appointed time for the discussion, meanwhile Elder R. J. Anthony having been substituted for Elder J. H. Condit, who could not be present. In the meantime Elder Fjeldsted thought it advisable to withdraw and sent for Elder Ben. E. Rich to take his place. Elder Rich on his arrival claimed that we yet had an unfair advantage of them, because we were to begin the discussion, opening the debate with our affirmative, and had the closing argument also. We willingly agreed to change the order of the debate in this particular; but that did not cure the trouble, and in the face of the waiting congregation they insisted on a total change of the whole question, and that all be embodied in one proposition. In vain we recited the terms of the signed and witnessed agreement. After two hours of cavil and delay Elder Rich thought of a way out of their difficulty, and took the matter entirely out of the hands of the disputants and putting the question to the congregation, which congregation being nearly all Mormons, resulted in the following being substituted for those agreed upon: "Which is the true church of Jesus Christ—the church under the present leadership of Wilford Woodruff, or the Reorganized Church under the leadership of Joseph Smith?" We being thankful for even this little, consented for the debate to proceed.

Bro. Anthony opened the battle in a forceful and masterly presentation of the claims of the Reorganized Church, followed by Elder Rich in a characteristic oration, in which due care was observed not to touch on the real issues, Elder S. D. Condit replying, and Elder Allred following in one of the wildest, most disconnected and meaningless harangues that it has ever been my misfortune to listen to. This order of speaking continued throughout the debate. So closed the first session, two hours of which had been wasted in the wrangle to change the propositions.

At the opening of the second session Elder Allred found that he was totally disabled, and begged to introduce as his substitute Elder Brockman, and the wounded being thus removed, the battle proceeded.

To my mind the debate was ably conducted on both sides, and every inch of ground stubbornly contested, with this distinction: Elders Anthony and Condit proved every point and assertion by the production of evidence, while Elder Rich relied almost entirely on eloquent appeal and assertion, not forgetting the inevitable personal testimony. Elder Brockman labored hard to maintain his points from the books, and quoted copiously; and in fact I think his arguments were as good as his side of the question admits of.

Those of your readers who are acquainted with B. H. Roberts' pamphlet, "The Successor," have the whole line of argument employed, except that Elder Rich seemed more anxious to keep the minds of his hearers from absorbing and digesting the convincing facts produced, than to advance matter in support of his claim.

At the call of order at the third session, a gentleman—a Mormon—in the audience arose and asked permission to make a motion, which permission being granted, he "moved that the present session close the debate, on the ground of the weather being so cold." I could but think that the true grounds were the heat of opponent's arguments.

Elder Condit opposed the motion in a vigorous speech, alleging agreement and promises of six nights; but in spite of protest the question was put and carried, but by a vote which required a division of the house to determine.

We had foreseen that such would be the case, and were prepared to submit with such grace as we could command.

Bro. Anthony opened this last night with an earnestness and vigor that was truly effective, and it was an interesting study to watch the countenances of those opposed, through the varying phases from complacency to consternation, as the evidence accumulated. But Elder Rich, with his usual tactics, soon had his hearers laughing and, for the time at least, safe from considering the only salvation for his position.

The fight is over, and we find our position more strongly entrenched in truth. The other side claims a victory, but I venture it will be a long time before they will desire another victory like it.

The discussion proper was carried on with decency and order, Mr. A. Parsons, the moderator, dispensing equal justice; and outside of the evident desire on the part of the opposition to show their power to limit the debate, we have no cause to complain, we being well and courteously treated by the good people of Riverside. And, I am pleased to say that Bishop George B. Wintle displayed the traits of a high-minded gentleman, courteous and considerate.

After the battle we feel well; are confirmed in our faith, and more than ever convinced that our position cannot successfully be assailed. To God be the praise.

Yours for truth,

NEMO.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—This morning finds me again on duty in the "smoky city." I returned here from Shinnston, West Virginia, on Saturday the 15th inst., where I had stopped over to see my aged parents, who are both in their beds helpless as children. Mother has been able to work some about the house, and has been taking care of Father until recently injured and rendered helpless by a fall down the stairway. She is now eighty-five and he eighty-four years of age. I distinctly remember seeing them both baptized by Elder Samuel James in the summer of 1840. I was then only a little past three years old. He is quietly and peacefully awaiting the end.

Samuel O. Shinn was, prior to the date of his baptism, a member of "the Disciple, or Campbelite Church." After hearing the so-called Mormon preachers, James and Ewing, he began an investigation of church matters, especially of the claims set forth in the new system. The elders inquired if he was a praying man and when answered in the affirmative they told him to "ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not," and wisdom would be given him. Accordingly he submitted the matter to the Lord, asking a sign that if the Latter Day Saints were right—the room, which was dark, might be filled with light. His prayer was heard and the sign being granted, he was satisfied, and was soon thereafter admitted into the fold by baptism, and has "continued in the apostles' doctrine," to the present time. I have no doubt as to their salvation, they will rest in the Lord till the call of "the last trump," and the dead in Christ arise first.

Our brethren here have reorganized their branch, Elder C. Ed Miller being elected president in place of Elder Hulmes resigned. Bro. Miller enters the work with commendable zeal, but not "without knowledge," for indeed the said brother is growing in knowledge and in favor with God and man. I have no doubt but that success will crown his efforts in this, as in other directions noticeable by those who closely observe such things.

I feel well in the good work here. While I do not expect to accomplish great things, great things are expected of him who is over all God blessed forever, and the end of our conversation shall be Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.

Two have recently been "soundly converted" to the faith, and having carefully withdrawn from another denomination, gave me their names for baptism, which will be administered not many days hence.

JASPER CITY, Mo., Jan. 21.

Editors Herald:—On December 17, after a thirty-three mile drive, we arrived at the home of Bro. M. G. Killebrew, near Pax, where we were kindly received and cared for. Bro. G. W. Beebe and I preached alternate nights for a week to interested and attentive listeners. We then went to Sheffer schoolhouse, near Rescue, where we preached a week or more and baptized a Mrs. J. L. Haglew, who by reason of her high standing and noble character in the community where she has been born and raised, will become a power for good in the church. Here we were informed that we might be treated to a basket of eggs, or worse, if we undertook to preach our doctrine in that community (and by the way that is about the best argument the Devil and his fifty sons have got to fight the truth with); but to our surprise we had the very best of order and close attention throughout, leaving a splendid interest and a number near the kingdom, and that too of the very cream of the neighborhood. On the 15th we returned and preached in the house of Bro. and Sr. Killebrew, and on Sunday the 16th baptized three more—a Mr. Alex. C. Blair and two sons, who appear to be strong and firm in the faith. The success of our labors here are principally due to the honorable walk, talk, and labors of Bro. Killebrew and his most noble wife—the fireside preacher. Anyone wishing to head her off on a Bible argument must get up early in the morning; even the preachers lay low when she is around. I wish we had thousands of preachers of the same type.

We started on the 17th to open up the work in new quarters, but on our way received a letter from home, informing me of the sad fact that our house and contents were in ashes; so with a heavy heart I and my noble collaborer gave each other the parting hand, and the next day found me on the spot where my temporary home had been for the past five years, to find that all was too true, wife and children's clothing all gone except what they had on their backs, bedding all in ashes except two feather beds, and an old quilt that was not in the house at the time. I could now begin to sympathize with Elder J. J. Cornish, whose home was laid in ashes while out working for his heavenly Master. Well, the Lord giveth, but the Devil taketh away. As the family were spared from the flaming tongues of fire, I feel to say in my heart, "Blessed be the name of the Lord," and continue to look for the silver lining in and among the clouds, and hope to see the time when my hands shall be untied. But my prospects are not overly flattering in that direction, as this morning I turned over or sold two of my best cows to pay a security debt, in order to save myself and the church from disgrace; but am only realizing that which I saw would befall me, in a vision of many years ago, hence will round up my shoulders and press onward.

Hopefully,

J. C. CRESTENSEN.

Editors Herald:—I am a long way from the church and have not the privilege of meeting with the saints; therefore pray for me that I may stand fast in the faith; that God may give me strength to resist all evil. I feel lonely here without the privilege of meeting with the church. I was born April 11, 1819, in Denmark; embraced the gospel in my native country in 1861; emigrated to Utah in 1864; joined the Utah Church in 1888 and the Reorganized Church the same year; afterwards moved here. Brn. John Grimmett and Hiram were elders here, but one is dead and the other has moved away. I should like to see an elder here.

I was converted by Elder Peter Anderson and baptized by Elder Andrew Layland at Thomas' Fork, Idaho. May we all live faithful.
Yours in the faith,

ANDERS NELSON.

FAIRLAND, I. T., Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—Your paper comes to my post office every Thursday, and I am glad to receive it, for it is a good paper to read. I love to read the grand letters from the brethren that I am acquainted with, and to learn how the grand work is progressing. We do not get to hear much of the gospel here; the most that we do hear is perverted. I go to hear all, and it seems to me just like children's play. I was once a member of the Missionary Baptist Church for two years. I worked in Sunday school as superintendent and teacher, and worked hard to learn something about the Bible; but in the two years I did not learn what the Baptists believed. I do not claim to know everything yet, but I think that I know the gospel when I hear it preached. The Lord said, "My sheep know my voice." I have asked Baptists what they believe, and they say, "Well, I declare, I can't tell you now, but will look up my discipline and then I can tell you." When they get the discipline and read it there is nothing sound in it. I have looked over one since I have been in this church, and I find they leave out too much of the gospel to suit me and every true follower of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Dear brethren and sisters, on the 29th day of March, 1898, if I live I will be in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints two years, and I cannot be sorry for it, although we are persecuted on every hand. I think we have lost some friends by uniting with the saints of God; but I don't care, we have the gospel and plan of salvation to the human race, and we defy the world to overthrow it, for I believe God is in this work, and I know that he has all power both in heaven and on earth, and I am willing to go on and serve him.

Brethren and sisters, I am afflicted with some kind of stomach and bowel trouble, and I desire to ask all the saints to remember me one time when you bow in the presence of the great Creator, that he will restore me to health and strength, both in body and mind, and that I may be of some use unto him.

Yours in bonds of truth,

GEO. M. RHONEMUS.

MARCELINE, Mo., Jan. 20.

Editors Herald:—I just arrived here and found Bro. and Sr. Hopkins, of Netawaka, Kansas, visiting their daughter. I expect to stay here over Sunday, the 23d, then on to Bevier. I spoke twice in the opera hall to a good house, with fair liberty. The saints are well spoken of there.

In the faith,

BRADFORD, Manchester, Eng., Jan. 9.

Editors Herald:—I feel to write to our precious paper, and say how it lifts me up and gives me courage to hold fast to the rod of iron. O may its pages go forth to all nations of the earth, bearing the blessed news of the everlasting gospel to the children of men! May our heavenly Father watch over his church and help his people to keep clear of the notion that anything that they can do can mend the laws given in the books by our Lord Jesus Christ. I pray always to be kept from the snares that are in the world through lust, and invariably I get my answer through the columns of the church papers. There is much preaching and teaching which is not given by the good Spirit of God, but in the vain imagination of men's hearts. I have read that if a man have not the Spirit he shall not preach. O that men would heed this injunction!

We are passing through deep waters because of this. We go hungry and come home the same. May God help us and send us real live shepherds to feed his flock. Asking the prayers of brethren and sisters in the land of Joseph,

Your sister,

ELIZA ALICE RHODES.

LUDINGTON, Mich., Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—As Sr. Van Brunt, president of our aid society has written to the Herald for help to pay for our church, and some have already sent, and one not a member of the church, I would like to say that we are very thankful for what we have received, and trust we may receive enough to pay up the indebtedness. We don't expect it in great quantities. We thought if all the saints could help a little, they wouldn't miss it, and it would help us here so much. We do want to pay for our church so bad.

God has blessed us in many ways since we started here, and I pray he will bless us in paying for the church building. There are but a few of us here. Pray for us, brethren and sisters, that we may succeed; and may God bless you all in Jesus' name.

CORYDON, Ind., Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—On December 18 in connection with Bro. W. H. Kelley, I began meetings at Byrneville. On the 25th Bro. T. W. Chatburn come over from Louisville to spend the holidays, as he could do no work there then. He came just in time to render unto us needed help we were so much desiring. He did us much good in helping to put the branch in order. Bro. Chatburn lets no grass grow under his feet, but sometimes the stones roll under them and he gets a wetting when splash! he goes into the creek, full length. Rolling stones do not make good bridges. Come again Bro. C.

The results of the meeting were three baptisms, and three were called to the priesthood; Bro. James Sappenfield to the office of elder, Bro. Edwin Martin to the office of teacher, and Bro. Wood Kepley to the office of deacon; all being noble saints of the Byrneville branch.

Closing our meeting there on Sunday night, the 16th, we came here the 17th and began preaching in the courthouse with a congregation of about sixty. This is the old State capital. The capital was moved from Vincennes here and from here to its present site—Indianapolis. I will remain until I get the work planted, if possible.

Brethren, let us do all we can for this glorious work, remembering that when a day is spent we cannot call it back, but will have to meet the works of it in that day when we stand before the great Judge, whether our work has been good or bad. Let us see how much we can do for the Master, not how little. Many souls would be glad to receive this work if they knew what it was. We who can preach, let us do all we can in that way; they that are not called to preach can assist by giving of their means and by so doing become colaborers together in the great work. I am greatly encouraged to go on.

Your servant,

G. JENKINS.

MIKADO, Mich., Jan. 24.

Editors Herald:—We are not quite snowed under yet, although we had a terrible storm in Michigan yesterday. It snowed very hard, and the wind was very fierce; snow drifts in some places ten feet deep, or high as some would term it. It blocked us in yesterday (Sunday) so there was no meeting. The mail carrier from here to Greenbush (Bro. Dolson) tried but could not make his trip. It will be some days before the roads will all be passable.

I met Bro. David Smith at this place holding forth with fair interest. A Rev. of some kind has been lecturing against us here and elsewhere, but as yet he has had poor success. No harm has befallen the church by reason of his lectures. This is the northeastern part of Northern Michigan district. I am here to assist Bro. David to organize some branches; there are five or six places where there are from twelve to about thirty members unorganized.

The work is moving on nicely nearly all over. Saints are doing fairly well in most places, and extra well on their duty in tithes and offerings in certain localities, while in other places we receive but little. There is a greater demand for the preaching of the word in some places now than there ever was before.

Many of the local ministers are helping to move the cause on all they can; some for reasons best known to themselves are not doing much. But taking it all through, I feel glad to say the work in northern Michigan is onward. Some have been baptized of late, and others say they will be. God is blessing us in many ways, and we are hopeful.

Having been born in Canada, and always retaining a good feeling for the Canadians, please allow me to congratulate you, Bro. Joseph, in your marriage with my Canadian sister, your beloved wife. May the good Master bless us all. Amen.

J. J. CORNISH.

ST. CLAIR, Missouri.

Editors Herald:—We are having quite an interesting time in St. Clair, speaking on Sunday last in the Congregational church. The disposition heretofore manifested to prevent the "overchurching" of the town seems to be less marked than a few weeks ago. I was locked out of a schoolhouse at Moselle some weeks ago; but some of the congregation climbed in at the window, took the catch off the lock, let us all in, and we had a good meeting that day. Since then we are unable to find out whether the element opposed to overchurching of that town are in control or not.

At last business meeting of Moselle branch it voted to change its name to that of St. Clair branch, as the majority of members now live at the latter place. Upon the call of the president of the branch it also voted to ordain Bro. John M. Wagner to the office of deacon. This was done. The branch has now a full set of officers, three of whom live here.

I expect to start on a tour of the district the first part of February. I will take pleasure in calling on any of the scattered saints who will send me their addresses.

I have as yet received but two reports from the local ministry with which to make out my report to Bro. Heman C. Smith. Please note that I live in the town of St. Clair (not county), in Franklin County, Missouri. Your coworker in the gospel,

JOHN S. PARRISH.

EXCELSIOR, Wis., Jan. 19.

Editors Herald:—I commenced meetings here January 11, for about one week, with increasing crowds and interest. Our heart was made glad to have Elder McDowell step in and help us, out. Bro. Henry Wood also helped me what he could. We have baptized one; we look for more to come soon. The calls for preaching are numerous. We pray God to send more laborers, and open the hearts of the saints to provide for their families, so the work may not be hindered.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
A. L. WHITEAKER.

DELOIT, Iowa, Jan 25.

Editors Herald:—The cheering intellectual gospel truths found on your pages testify of the onward march of the angel's message. Since holiday festivities I have had the opportunity of reading a goodly number of periodicals published by various religious societies, but find none equalling our own Saints' Herald in doctrine, spirituality, and church polity. To my surprise I found the Utah Deseret Weekly, Salt Lake City, to be the least spiritual of any.

Church work is onward in this part of Iowa. It is gratifying, indeed, to witness the confidence manifested by the saints in the final triumph of this latter-day work and the energy exhibited by both old and young. The many urgent calls for preaching from nonmembers is also a fruitful sign.

The writer was permitted to meet with the saints in social service here last Sunday morning and to enjoy a feast of blessings divine. The meeting lasted nearly two hours, the time being fully occupied; yes, kind reader, that Spirit that was manifest on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2; Joel 2: 28, 29) cheered and gladdened our hearts. To our blessed Master be all the praise.

From a paper just received from Bro. O. E. Coiner, Pocahontas, Iowa, I am forcibly reminded that I have done missionary work in that locality and that in the autumn of '95 Bro. J. F. McDowell met and successfully defeated Elder Clark Braden in a seventeen sessions' debate, which fact was admitted by nearly every auditor. But alas '96 came and with it Elder G. W. Elliott, State Evangelist of South Dakota, and began a series of meetings, declaring that he represented the Christian Church and that Elder Braden was not an accredited or authorized minister of their church, but just a man whom people hire to do debating; that's all. Mr. Elliott gave the people to understand that if they wanted pure and progressive Christianity, just to accept his teachings. Several believed his report, a preacher was "called," and a place purchased for a church edifice, which house, we presume, was in course of erection when, to the surprise of many, the actions of their pastor, T. W. McDonald, gave evidence for the following article, which we clip from the Pocahontas Record for January 13, 1898:—

"No little commotion was stirred up among the members of the Christian Church in this place last week when Elder McDonald left town taking with him the deed to the new church property. It is claimed that the members are still owing him quite a little on his salary and he intends to hold on to the deed of the property until this shortage is paid. A suit has been commenced against him forcing him to deed the property to the society, and what the outcome will be remains yet to be seen."

Now, Mr. Editor, by the time this appears in print I shall have mailed sixty letters, containing six questions each on Isaiah chapter 29, to some of the most noted ministers and professors of Bible lore; viz., Catholics, Disciples, Adventists, Jews, Baptists, etc. Answers from some have reached me already, and I intend giving your readers the benefit of them at some future time.

C. J. HUNT.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—As letter intrusiveness has not been one of my "sins of commission," so far as your pages are concerned, I essay the task lest longer delay will cause Mrs. Inquisitiveness to overexert her feelings in trying to learn the cause of silence. It may come with ill grace to say I reached Utah in due time, and have since tried to do what wisdom, or at least the kind and amount of that very desirable "gift" in the possession of the writer, dictated as best for the accomplishment of the most good to the greatest number.

Tent work commenced in Murray, where a fair, and in some respects, lasting interest was had, with the amusement incident to the play upon such words as "Josephites" and "Brighamites" resulting from the controversial conditions existing, but which failed to materialize as to whether and by whom Brigham Young was ordained as president of the church. A very material point, and one that the dominant church here cares as little about taking hold of as they would a red-hot iron.

Thence to Ogden our "duck" tabernacle went, and during its four weeks' stay the "battle" at times raged, resulting in five baptisms and a lasting interest with many others who will yet yield obedience to the mandates of truth. To tell those who have labored in Ogden that the Chase house is a home is needless, hence the item is jotted as one of common interest and as due to those who there preside, as small return for all their kindness. But the other saints resident here as well as friends are not to be considered as lacking in such qualifications. Mr. Littlewood, a "brother-in-law," seeing that one of the preachers would be called upon to wear a dirty shirt, unless action were had, forestalled such embarrassment by the purchase of a new one and some nice gold studs. As the memory waves, like billows in the soul, shall in future roll across the intricate brain meshes, this incident will remind that elder of a "friend in need."

Not vanity, Mr. Editors, but true pride that would cause a preacher to prefer a clean white shirt front dotted with a golden stud—even though he be a "silver man"—to one begrimed with the soil of a week's usage. The young ladies who boldly left their environments to become a part of the most unpopular church in Utah, are to be commended for that as well as for their zeal since shown.

From here the tent was used to the southward, under the efficient generalship of Elders McKiernan and Hansen, hence the writer cannot detail the practicability of its further use. Suffice it to say that the wisdom of such a purchase for this mission has been fully demonstrated. Financially we have $16.54 banked for next year's expenses.

It may be well to here give notice that the writer, should he be returned to this mission, expects to appeal to the saints throughout the world to assist in the building of a chapel in Ogden—badly needed.

Our reunion at Pleasant Grove was both pleasant and profitable—spiritually as well as numerically. Sr. Sterrett bore the burden of caring for the elders, but the saints in general here did nobly. At present writing Sr. Sterrett is in the hospital, having undergone a severe surgical operation as a result of a trouble of years' standing; for a woman of near 77 she has borne up in a way that would be commendable to a strong and vigorous person of youthful activity. Strong in faith, vigorous in constitution for her age, her case is exciting the wonder of doctors and nurses here; and the faith of the saints has certainly prevailed mightily with God.

At Fairfield, where dwell a few isolated saints, we had a pleasant sojourn, where a home for the elders is always to be found. A sad case here is that of Bro. McLane—an invalid for twenty years from rheumatism contracted while on his way to Utah as a soldier in Johnston's army, during the winter, when they were compelled to live at Fort Bridger on half rations, their supply trains being burned by the order of B. Young, and their beeves being stolen at his instigation. Poor man! a sufferer as a result of man's perfidy, blind fanaticism, and zeal.

Here we had an excellent interest and fair hearing, and here God manifested his power in healing Sr. Mary McLane of a severe sickness. It was here that the preacher for three weeks struggled with gripe, but through the kind ministrations of Sisters Maggie and Mary, and watchcare of all, he gained the mastery and kept up sufficiently to preach nightly. May God reward them. Realizing that an elder so far from home likes and is almost sure to enjoy diversion, they planned and pleasantly consummated a trip to the gold mines, eight miles distant, and a party of four of us had the profitable privilege of going through both mine and mill. In the former the dangers incident to such labor was made almost realistic, while in the latter we were permitted to see the cyanide "process," by which a very cheap grade of ore can be worked at a profit. It was a very profitable day and all enjoyed it. The writer anticipates the time when additions shall be had to the church in the little village of Fairfield by baptism. Through the persistent efforts of Bro. H. N. Hansen—somewhat of a "terror" to "Brighamites"—we were permitted the free use of the courthouse in Provo two nights, and felt well in speaking to a very attentive audience of about sixty on each occasion. The first night we had the very novel experience of being interrupted in the midst of the sermon, by the jury sufficiently long for them to render their verdict. After a few months' experience in Utah, however, one don't mind small things like this!

The formidable and omnipresent hair-raising bugaboo here, is the "living oracle," and all that pertains thereto; the "obey counsel" part of it being apparently, as unalterable and binding as the Medo-Persian law. If the saints at Provo enjoyed the elder's presence as well as he did their hospitality, there will be a mutual desire for a recurrence of both.

In the city work we have had varying experience, with practical results very small, so far as discernible. Bro. and Sr. Barrows have ably seconded our efforts by giving us a home, and the saints generally have done nobly. Srs. Barrows, Higgins, and Wilson—Alice—being especially energetic in the society work, Sunday school, and song service. Sr. Higgins has put forth herculean efforts to maintain the Religio. At times that society has really gasped, but strong efforts have succeeded in resuscitating it. For some weeks now we have been deprived of Sr. Wilson's efficiency, on account of Bro. "Jo" receiving a "stroke." He is recovering, and gives promise of a complete recuperation. May it so be. Without further naming it may justly be said that we have some as fine saints here as can be produced, and the marvel of it all is their "staying" qualities under their peculiar environments. The Rocky Mountain missionaries have a record of half a hundred baptisms at the close of '97, twenty-eight of whom have been baptized in Utah. We haven't been doing much Herald or Ensign "tooting," but when our report comes before the conference it will tell its own story. Feel as though I could write a long (?) letter were it not for Editor's enjoiner!

J. W. WIGHT.

EAST SAN JOSE, Cal., Jan. 21.

Editors Herald:—Among your many readers I think there may be some, yea, even many, upon whom the hand of affliction has been laid; some heart who has passed through the very crucible of sorrow. It is to such grief-burdened souls that I especially wish to address myself, if perchance I may write some few words that will soothe some lone and aching heart, I will have accomplished my purpose. Dear friends, whatever I may write in this line, be assured will have come from one who has partaken of the cup of sorrow, and knows that bitter indeed is the draught. But to us who have entered into the gospel covenant, and acknowledged full allegiance to our heavenly King, there comes this comforting promise, "If we suffer we shall also reign with him." Perhaps you are an invalid, one whose days and nights are passed in physical pain; how long the nights are to you, and the days how slowly they pass away. Dear friend, Jesus knows your every heartthrob, your every pain; and he sympathizes with you. Just place your hand within his and say, "Thy will be done." Or you realize your life's work is nearly done, and you look back with a feeling of regret, and say, "How little I have done or can do for the Master." Just here I think the beautiful lines of Milton are very appropriate and very sweet,

"They also serve who only stand and wait;"

So you, dear suffering one, can serve Christ by just waiting patiently for the call to come up higher.

But you may be one who is suffering under the weight of years; you have labored long in the Master's vineyard, but now you are weary, and not in touch with the interests, fads, and fashions of the present day; and as you descend the western slope you long to enter into your well earned rest. Well, the night will soon pass away, then shall your reward come, "and you will be satisfied when you awake with his likeness."

Again, it is a mother who has been obliged to see her darling child borne away in the icy arms of death. Ah, the anguish that fills your heart as you think of that beautiful little form, with its pretty baby ways, that is hid from your sight forever; and often in memory that sweet angelic face will arise before you, and the little prattling voice sound in your ears, and you will hear again the patter of little feet, and your heart arises in rebellion against God, forgetting that your sweet child first belonged to him, and he has said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." But, sister, there are others left to you, they need your care and love; live on for them, and be assured that your own heart will not be very dark or sad while the illumination of God's love is shed abroad therein.

It may be that your loved and lost one who had reached young womanhood—as was the case of the writer—was a daughter whom you hoped would be with you in your declining years; but God called her to himself. Time is ever doing its work. That mysterious Providence we call fate, silently but continually plays upon the chords of the heart, sometimes in strains of joy, but more often in that of sorrow, for joy may occasionally come to us, but sorrow is sure to come to all as the years roll away.

Perhaps it is your companion and support in life's journey that has been taken from you. And the prop on which you leaned having failed, you bow before the blast like a bruised and broken reed. Dear sister, lift up your head and hear the loving words of your heavenly Father, "Leave thy fatherless children, and let thy widow trust in me."

But of all the bereavements that may come to us, I think there is nothing that so vibrates upon the heart as the knowledge that a mother has been taken by death from her helpless little family. One case especially that stirred my heart, where five little ones were bereft of a mother, and during the funeral in the next room the babes cried piteously, as though they realized their great loss, and would lift up their tiny voices in lamentation; but the mother lay stiff and cold in death and made no response; the husband was nearly overwhelmed. My brother, "there is a balm in Gilead—a great physician there." He came into this world to heal and bind up the broken-hearted.

There are other sorrows I would like to refer to, but space will not permit. Our sorrows are multitudinous, and as varied as the human heart; and we realize the truth of the adage, "Every heart knows its own sorrows." Our Savior said, "If I go away I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." I seem to hear those tender melodious words as they drop from his lips, and rest upon some grief-stricken soul with wondrous healing power.

Dear saints, yet a little while and these tear-stained eyes of ours shall in rapture behold the resurrection morn; shall see us arise from the grave clothed in immortality and life, and we shall with all that vast multitude of the redeemed enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb.

PASTORAL LETTERS.

TO THE Saints of the — District:—Having been placed in charge of this field by the general missionary, I wish to inform all the saints that I shall soon be at liberty to meet with you, etc.

Notices similar to the above are quite numerous, and I ask, Is there not a misunderstanding on the part of, at least, some of the submissionaries as to their authority, and duty, and privileges? They certainly cannot be appointed in charge of the branches in their fields of appointment, nor in charge of the district authorities; for we read in section 122, paragraph 7, that the Twelve and the Seventy . . . travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers.

Again we read, paragraph 8, same section:—

And when those officers are ordained and set in their order, in the church, they should be left to administer in the things unto which they were ordained, having charge of the affairs over which they are called and set apart to preside; the Twelve and Seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, if they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the Presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain.

We can see from the above: First, that the Twelve and Seventy are to prosecute the missionary work, organizing and setting in order the branches and districts. Second, to observe the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside. Third, to push their labors into new fields, leaving the organized districts or conferences to the standing ministry under the Presidency. Fourth, we notice that there is the traveling missionaries: the Twelve, Seventy, together with such high priest and elders as can travel; the standing ministers; high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons.

Now in regard to the authority of those quorums (see paragraph 9, section 122), "in all meetings and gatherings of the membership, where no previous organization has been effected," the Presidency, the Twelve, and Seventy should preside. "Where organization has been arranged, and the officers have been ordained and set in order, the standing ministry," Presidency, "high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons."

I understand, from the quotations referred to, that the traveling and standing minister have their respective fields of labor, and that each should labor therein. There is room enough for all, and to my mind, when the general missionary appoints sub-missionaries in charge of any field, they are in charge of General Conference appointees, who are to labor in the missionary fields. They are not appointed in charge of already organized branches and districts, for that has been provided for. In other words, the sub-missionary is in charge of the missionary field; and it would be in harmony with the form for the notices that are published to read, "in charge of the missionary field," and not in charge of district; for if some of the pastoral notices reading "Missionary in charge of the ——— district" be correct, then are they not only missionaries to said district, but are in charge of all concerned, which is not in harmony with the law.

Again, branches that have had some trouble are called on the missionary in charge for help to settle these difficulties, when it would have been in keeping with law, and not to the detriment of the missionary work, for them to call on the district authorities. See section 120, paragraph 7, which reads:—

In matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them.

You can see the wisdom of the above, so that the missionaries can be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work. (See section 122, paragraph 7.)

In conclusion I am pleased to say that in this our district there is now a perfect understanding by the traveling and standing ministry as to their duty, and peace, love, and unity prevail, all being anxious to labor to the best interest of the work; as it is sometimes expressed by some, in conversation on the question of field of labor of the traveling and standing ministry, it is a wheel within a wheel; the inside wheel being the organized field, and the smallest grows as the outside wheel enlarges.

May we all labor together in our respective fields and callings for the good of man and the honor of those whom we love, even Jesus the Christ and God our heavenly Father.

WM. LEWIS.

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI, JAN. 7, 1898.

DIVES AND LAZARUS.

THERE was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day: and there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence. Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house: for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.—Luke 16: 19-31.

Now don't you consider this a touching story? Think a moment of this poor bleeding tramp, Lazarus, lying at the gate of a rich man. Does this reflection awaken no pity in your soul? If not, you are as dead as a Friday jaybird to sympathy. From a Christian standpoint do you conclude this great truth should be mercilessly relegated to a past age? Was it intended only for the generation who lived contemporaneously with the Divine Teacher?

We now have in the United States 685,768 tramps. Many of these tramps, unlike Lazarus, do not even possess sores. The reason for this digression from the original type is patent. They do not anticipate the same kind treatment and attention from Christian dogs which have been trained to take out the gable ends of the pants of these migratory wretches, as they fly over the fence—fleeing in terror before the grinning teeth of Christian dogs, for simply asking for breakfast. Our Christ, like Buddha, was a homeless tramp. It is my purpose to examine minutely the character of Mr. Dives with a view to discover if possible the difference between this man and our rich religionist of America. He was evidently a kind-hearted man. His dogs manifested the force of association with such a master in their kindness to Lazarus. You have no data with which to disprove the opinion that he employed none of the fine arts of finance to accumulate his wealth. He did not deal in futures, watered stocks, and oppression. He did not deny the crumbs which Lazarus asked for. He was charitable. Observe this instinct; in his heart crying out in the torture of hell in his desire to save his brethren. If you can do nothing for me, save them. Can you say as much for our money kings of America?

If they can squeeze in their own little souls, do you suppose they would care for others? Do you discover any parallel in this story and the New York beggar? I am going to prove to your utter confusion that the rich church people of America do not believe what they pretend to believe. They do not believe the Bible. If they believed it they would forthwith begin to unload some of their $20,000,000,000 in doing something to relieve the miseries of earth, and especially the miserable wretches in America. Take the 12,000,000 Protestant church membership, embracing the fabulous sum of $20,000,000,000, by a very simple calculation you will discover that $1,000,000 could be given to every member of the Protestant faith in the United States, and then leave the respectable balance of $19,988,000,000; or to place the proposition more accurately upon a Christian basis, we have a total population of 70,000,000. By giving every inhabitant of the United States $1,000,000 you would still leave these money lords of our country $19,930,000,000. Dives with his few paltry thousands would stand aghast in the presence of these figures.

GENERAL CONVENTION.

The Annual Convention of the General Sunday School Association will convene at Independence, Missouri, at ten a. m., Monday, April 4, 1898. There are, aside from the routine business, matters of interest bearing upon the general welfare and the advance work of the association which demands the attention of all earnest, competent, Sunday school workers. We trust all district Sunday school associations will endeavor to send full delegations and as far as practicable of active Sunday school workers.

The program which will be published later will provide for work closing with the evening session Tuesday. Come, one and all. Don the mantle of brotherly love and charity and the Spirit of peace and come to help make the work of the convention what you will ever be pleased to have it be.

Anyone in England having the unbound volume of Autumn Leaves for 1897, to sell, would confer a favor by writing to the undersigned, stating price, etc. J. Arber, 143 Petre Street, Sheffield, England.

CREDENTIALS OF DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

District officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts in the coming General Conference, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate the organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the district appointing, with name of district and place and date of holding of conference, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary.

Branches not in districts are each entitled to one delegate and one vote.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting," are as follows:—

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference;—

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation, (the full delegation not being present,) they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes."

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Massachusetts district conference will convene Saturday, February 26, 1898, 2:30 p. m. at the saints' new chapel in Providence, Rhode Island. As the General Conference comes so soon thereafter, it is important that our district reports be in the hands of our General Recorder as soon as possible. This can only be done by an early report from each branch clerk so that my report may be completed for above date. I would call the attention of each branch, that conference resolution has provided that such reports be in my hands by February 15, 1898, also would be pleased to have priesthood reports and credentials by same date. Election of officers with much other important business is to come before the conference, so that each branch should see that they are well represented. The work is in good condition. These meetings will do you good. Leave your secular affairs for two days and come up to the conference with the intention of lending your best efforts and prayers for its success, and the Lord will pour out a great blessing upon his people. My permanent address, 136 Greenwood Street, Dorchester, Massachusetts.

M. C. FISHER, Clerk.

The conference of the Kirtland, Ohio, district will be held at Sharon, Pennsylvania, on March 19 and 20. All the branch presidents are requested to see that their branches are properly reported and represented.

L. W. POWELL, Dist. Pres.

TO DISTRICT AND ASSOCIATION SECRETARIES.

Secretaries of district conferences and Sunday school associations are hereby notified that notices for publication in the HERALD must be made as brief and compact as possible, because of constantly increasing demands upon our limited space.

District association programs will not hereafter be published unless very briefly stated. Persons participating need not be notified through the HERALD, but should receive personal notice otherwise.

With a little care all necessary items of conferences and conventions, both notices and minutes, can be given in a limited amount of space.

He removed to Andalusia, January, 1894, where he was elected police magistrate. He was an active worker in the cause of the gospel, and was always willing to share his home and substantial board with the elder who ministered the word. He was married to S. J. Funeral services were held at the Silver Center M. E. church, January 25, by Elder C. E. Butterworth, assisted by the pastor. The remains were followed by many people and laid to rest in the Silver Center cemetery to wait the resurrection and justice of God. Mr. Vansickle's wife and two brothers are members of the church. Sr. Vansickle and children have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

MCQUEEN.—At Waverly, Iowa, September 12, 1897, Bro. Leroy L. McQueen and three other young folks went boat riding, and not returning, a search was started at midnight. She was born at Ashton-under-Line, Lancashire, England, in 1829, and was baptized in San Francisco, California, July 6, 1873, by Elder Glaud Rodger.

BEAL.—At Grove Hill, Iowa, January 5, 1898, Sr. Celia, wife of Bro. Dexter Beal, aged 60 years and 4 months. She was baptized in 1889 by Elder John Shippy. Husband and five children mourn. She was noted for her kindness, and was always ready to lend a helping hand, and especially to the sick. She will be much missed in the neighborhood. The Lord showed her about three months before her time came that she should soon be taken home to rest. She was prepared and willing to go. The sermon was preached by Reverend Day.

LYMAN ABBOTT'S ATTEMPT TO SQUARE EVOLUTION WITH FAITH.

VITAL INCONSISTENCIES IN "THEOLOGY OF AN EVOLUTIONIST."

THE most unsatisfactory chapter in the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott's "The Theology of an Evolutionist" (Houghton-Mifflin), is that on miracles. In it the author accomplishes the disastrous feat that politicians call a straddle. "The doctrine of evolution, then," he concludes, "is not, as it seems to be, inconsistent with belief that at certain epochs of the world's history, and for certain special moral ends, there occurred unusual events which awakened attention and have served as signs of a superhuman power." Here speaks the theologian, and cuts himself off from the main body of evolutionists.

On the other hand Dr. Abbott no less effectively cuts himself off from the orthodox clergy, for he picks and chooses among the miracles, accepting some and rejecting others. "I believe in the resurrection of Jesus Christ as the best attested fact of ancient history," he says. "I do not believe that the sun stood still and the moon staid in the Valley of Ajalon at Joshua's command; and I am still uncertain as to what interpretation is to be given to the wonderful stories in the Book of Daniel."

Dr. Lyman Abbott is on the toboggan slide—or on the steep ascent to the mountain top of truth—whichever you wish to call it. The point is that his position is utterly untenable for any man who goes on thinking. His very state of uncertainty about some of the miracles indicates whither he is bound. There is absolutely no permanent stopping place between Dr. Abbott's present position and the complete agnosticism of Goldwin Smith and Herbert Spencer.

The position of Dr. Abbott is that of a man whom the irresistible power of modern scientific thought has forced out of the secluded valley of orthodoxy, over the edge of a high cliff, beneath which lies the ocean. Half way down he has found lodgment on a narrow ledge, and there he stands proclaiming to those above that his outlook is much finer and his footing much more secure than theirs, and to those below that they cannot swim in the great ocean and will be drowned. He is so constituted that for a moment he can no longer feel the ceaseless storm that forced him over the brink, yet he fails to see that if all the rest of the church comes tumbling after him, his little ledge can neither hold nor stop a fraction of that great body. There is no climbing back, and even he, if he keeps his mind open to the winds of modern thought, cannot perch there long.

"If I were convinced," he says, "that the resurrection of Jesus Christ is not consistent with the doctrine of evolution, I should be compelled to abandon or modify that doctrine; I should not abandon my belief in the resurrection. That resurrection I regard as a fact; evolution as a theory—on the whole the best theory of 'God's way of doing things' yet proposed by philosophic thinkers—the latest word and the best word of science, but not necessarily its last or final word."

In short, Dr. Abbott thinks he will climb back whenever it becomes a question of swimming. But that is impossible for any healthy mind. The word-splitting by which he draws a distinction between miracles done as mere marvels and those done for a moral end—rejecting the one class and accepting the other—is nonsense for any one who has once accepted the doctrine of evolution as an entirety.

Dr. Abbott still clings to the homocentric idea of the universe. Upon Herbert Spencer's axiom that "we are ever in the presence of an infinite and eternal energy from which all things proceed" he has grafted the vast ecclesiastical egotism that makes the individual human being to be the end and object for which the stars and ilimitable systems of the universe were created. That idea can no more stand permanently in the presence of the evolutionary system than the old Ptolemaic theory that made the earth the center of the universe could stand in the presence of the new thought of Copernicus. Herein lies the fatal weakness of Dr. Abbott's so-called Christian evolutionism. With that weakness in sight all his hair-splitting about which miracles to believe and which to reject becomes of a piece with the disputations of the medieval wise men as to how many angels could stand on the point of a cambric needle.

How far Dr. Abbott does go toward the acceptance of the ideas of Huxley and Spencer is clearly set forth in his first chapter. He rejects the idea that the world was manufactured in six days or six æons, and holds that it is the result of growth under natural laws. He likewise rejects the idea that Adam and Eve were manufactured, and holds that man is the result of development from lower orders of life. But he believes nature's laws to be the volitions of a living and personal spirit that dwells in the material universe as the human soul lives in the body. He thinks he has gotten around the difficulty of miracles by saying that they are not outside interventions, but merely isolated natural acts done for a moral purpose—to arrest man's attention.

"Both the religious and the scientific world," says Dr. Abbott, "have come to believe in a greatly lessened number of interventions, until now science has reached with practical unanimity these three conclusions: First, there is but one force manifesting itself in different forms; second, that this force is never increased or diminished in amount, only varied in form; and, third, that this force, if we believe it to be directed to intelligent ends, is sufficient to account for all the phenomena of nature and life, so that there is no reason to believe in any interventions from without. I believe that the theology of the future will gladly accept these conclusions. And, finally, it will affirm that this infinite and eternal energy is itself intelligent and beneficent—an infinitely wise and holy spirit, dwelling within the universe and shaping it from within, much as the human spirit dwells within the human body and forms and controls it from within.”

So far Dr. Abbott is logical and consistent. But when, in order to escape what John Burroughs has called the “cosmic chill” of the full evolutionary thought, he lugs in the idea that this vast system is all run for the benefit of the individual human atom he merely shows how precarious is his foothold on the face of that aforementioned cliff.—Chicago Tribune, Nov. 12, 1897.

MAKES YALE A VALUABLE GIFT.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 13.—It was announced at a meeting of the Yale corporation to-day that O. C. Marsh, professor of paleontology, has formally presented to the university the valuable scientific collections belonging to him, now deposited in the Peabody Museum.

These collections, six in number, are in many respects the most extensive and valuable of any in this country and have been brought together by Professor Marsh at great labor and expense during the last thirty years. The paleontological collections are well known and were mainly secured by Professor Marsh during his explorations in the Rocky Mountains. They include most of the type specimens he has described in his various scientific papers. The collection of osteology and that of American archæology are also extensive and of great interest. The present value of all these collections makes this the most important gift of natural science that Yale has yet received. He has refused $100,000 for them.

At the meeting to-day the corporation accepted Professor Marsh's gift by a unanimous vote and expressed their high appreciation of his generosity to the university. The collection includes specimens of animals and reptile life gathered by Professor Marsh from many parts of the civilized world. There are also marvelous collections of pottery and Indian relics. Skeletons of rare animals' fossil remains that cannot be duplicated in any known part of the globe. Giant bird tracks in solid stone are among some of these interesting curios. The collections take up large space in the Peabody Museum, and to enumerate and describe one-half the relics that comprise them would fill large volumes.—Ex.

MOUND BUILDERS' CORN.

DEMPSEY WAGGY, a farmer of Madison County, Indiana, has raised corn this year from seeds which, he says, were taken out of a Mound Builder's tomb in Arkansas, estimated to be two thousand years old. The stalks of the corn are from ten to twelve feet in height, according to a correspondent of the Chicago Record, and are somewhat on the order of a tree, being as thick at the ground as a man's wrist. Three feet from the ground they shoot out three long, palm-like leaves. The leaves are very heavy and solid, resembling a cactus leaf. Some of them are five feet long from tip to tip. These are the only leaves on the stalk.

About two feet farther up are the ears of corn. Many stalks bear six ears and none has fewer than four ears. At this rate it is figured that the average yield to the acre would be about two hundred and fifty bushels. Above the ears the stalk continues three or four feet, and is topped with an elaborate tassels. The husks surrounding the ears are heavy, and as the corn matures they break and curl back, revealing a firm, yellow-grained ear. The grains are solid and are exceptionally good for feeding.—Ex.

CORN FROM SEED 3,000 YEARS OLD.

THE Rev. Lafayette Johnson, of Owen County, has some corn raised this season from seed taken from a sealed jar that was found in a mound in Missouri, fifteen feet beneath the surface of the earth, two or three years ago. It has possibly been in its hiding place for 3,000 years, according to the Rev. Johnson's estimate, he being an antiquarian of no mean repute. The grains of the corn grown by him are the color of an Indian.—Louisville Post.

TOBACCO IMPAIRS THE SIGHT.

DR. FRANCIS DOWLING has given a sensible paper before the Mississippi Valley Medical association showing, as the careful result of the investigation by himself and others, that impaired vision is the common result of the habitual use of tobacco, either by chewing or smoking, rather more by chewing on account of the greater absorption of the nicotine.

He conducted a personal examination of 150 male employees in a large tobacco factory, all of whom used tobacco in one or both of these ways. Of these he found that in forty-five cases the normal acuteness of vision was much diminished. In thirty cases the impairment was very serious, the subjects mistaking red for brown or black, green for blue or orange, and sometimes black, when the tests were made. They were also unable to make out the white spot in the center of a black card.

More than half of the 150 showed persistent contraction of both pupils, and this was the invariable accompaniment of some form of defective vision. In most cases the failure of vision is very slow and becomes well advanced before the patient discovers it. This slowness of action is the reason why the users of tobacco do not notice its effect.

It is with them as with the frog—put one of these animals into water of ordinary temperature and by means of heat raise it about 1° Fahrenheit every five minutes and you may bring the water to a degree of heat which kills the frog and he never knows it. Its action has been so gradual that the animal did not feel the change. So it is with many who use tobacco. Injury goes on slowly and it is not perceived.—Journal of Hygiene.

WILL THIS EXPLAIN?

We are asked to answer, or explain the words of Jesus in Luke 16: 9.

And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

It has always seemed to us satisfactory looked at in this way:—

1. An object lesson precedes the statement, in which a certain steward fearing to be called to an account for some misdoing in his stewardship, pursued a course by which he ought to make friends for himself in case he was deposed from the stewardship.

2. The course pursued by the steward was commended by the lord of the steward, as being a wise one.

3. His acts were done while he was yet steward and had control of the lord's estate and goods, and his work unchallenged.

4. Who are able to receive a man into everlasting habitations?

5. What is the lesson intended to be taught?

1. Jesus was teaching his disciples the value of due care and the exercise of wisdom in the business of this world with a view to the next one. He used a familiar condition of things by which to do it.

2. The lord for whom the steward was employed knew that his steward had control of his goods, and until he was deposed could use them as he would. He saw the object of the steward and commended the motive, though he might have been a sufferer in goods by it. He commended the wisdom of the acts of the steward.

3. The steward knew that his lord would care little about the value of the goods, for he possibly knew little of what was in the steward's hands, and cared little about his business methods; so he was running little risk in thus using his lord's goods, so far as that lord was concerned. But it would make much difference with those whom his acts befriended, and would turn to his benefit if he was deposed.

4. The point involved in the instruction is found by a consideration of the question clearly raised, who is it that is able when he fails to receive a man into everlasting habitations? Who can it be? Anybody else than God and Christ? Surely not. Then why allow one's self to get hung up on the horns of the idea that the unrighteous mammon, or any power supposed to control it, is the one or ones to placate by the use of it. This has been the query on which many have failed to see the meaning of the Savior.

5. What is the lesson? That men shall so use the things attaching to, or belonging in the realm of the unrighteous mammon that when men fail on earth the only ones in existence who can receive them into habitations that are eternal and everlasting; these are God and Christ.

With this thought uppermost, the solution is easy, and is, briefly stated. So use the things of this world, as stewards of their riches that commendation from the Lord and the Christ may follow; and this would make the passage to read in sense and meaning. Make to yourselves friends by the use of the unrighteous mammon, so that when you fail on earth, those friends, God and Christ, may receive you into everlasting habitations. This is possible, and this view is enforced by the reading of the rest of the chapter, which please see. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." (V. 13.) Any other rendition than this, it seems to us, comes short of finding the true solution of the passage, and so fails to get the Savior's meaning.

IS THERE A LAKE OF FIRE?

A BROTHER writes and asks: Is there a literal lake of fire and brimstone where one will be cast?

Of this the Bible has:—

And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever.

And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death.—Rev. 19: 20; 20: 10, 14, 15; and 21: 8.

The prophet Nephi has the following:—

Wherefore, they who are filthy, are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up forever and ever; and has no end.

O, the greatness of the mercy of our God, the Holy One of Israel! For he delivereth his saints from that awful monster the devil, and death, and hell, and that lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.

For the atonement satisfieth the demands of his justice upon all those who have not the law given to them, that they are delivered from that awful monster, death and hell, and the devil, and the lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.—2 Nephi 6: 6, 8, 9.

The Doctrine and Covenants has the following:—

For Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire; and the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire; and their end no man knoweth, on earth, nor ever shall know until they come before me in judgment.

Nevertheless, I, the Lord, am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father, and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire. And behold, this is not yet, but by and by.

And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness: that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him; who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless, I, the Lord, show it by vision unto many; but straightway shut it up again; wherefore the end, the width, the height, the depth, and the misery thereof, they understand not, neither any man except them who are ordained unto this condemnation.

Wherefore, I, the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whoremonger, and the sorcerer, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.—D. C. 43: 7; 63: 9; 76: 4; 63: 5.

We cannot answer the question by writing; Yes, there is such a lake; or No, there is no such place, for two reasons; one is, we do not want to; the other is, we do not know. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as we have seen, contain such expressions as will warrant anyone who is a stickler for technical renditions saying there is a lake of fire; please locate it. Tell us where it is, and who is going to be burned in it, and how. Is it a literal lake of fire in which literal fire burns being fed by brimstone, sulphur, and other resinous substances, into which people are pitched and burned? And lots of other equally pertinent questions. To all of these we must make the same answer, We do not know.

It does not matter what our belief is; the question implies knowledge. We have two reasons for not wanting to know. The first is, we are not curious about it; the second is that it is pretty plainly stated in the quotation from section 76, paragraph 4, of Doctrine and Covenants, that no one on earth does know, or can know, until such time as it takes effect on the one doomed by his transgressions to bear the punishment of it; except now and again one to whom it may be momentarily shown in vision. This has not been done for us; hence, we have neither seen it in vision, nor felt its awful torment—and have no desire to do so.

All the passages cited clearly indicate the classes of persons who will be the sufferers in the lake, wherever it is located and whatever it may be; and one of them gives an idea as to the time when it shall be, if time is then counted. So that it seems easy for those who may have any possible fear in regard to the existence of the lake, or its torment, to so conduct themselves that if there were ten thousand such lakes instead of one, they may be as far removed from its sulphurous confines as heaven, or paradise is above hell.

Suppose that we do not and cannot know whether there is, or is not a burning lake, but can and do know that there has been an infinite atonement made for sin, through the divine mercy of which we and all others, except the sons of perdition (no matter now who they are), may receive at the end of our life of the flesh, life eternal in happiness and peace, not subject to the second death; is it not much better to be busily engaged in doing what the message of life declares to be necessary and a duty, rather than to be busying our brains and worrying ourselves over those questions upon which the Infinite One has chosen to withhold his revelations? "What is revealed belongs to man; what is not revealed belongs to God."

The knowledge of the date of the coming of Jesus Christ and the specific nature of the second death seem to have been purposely placed in the keeping of the same divine wisdom that will exercise the divine and awful power by which the wrongs of time, earth and the Devil will be righted, and the good to which man is and shall be entitled shall be triumphantly and abundantly given to him.

The church is authorized to teach men "the way of life." If men will learn that, there needs to be neither a knowledge of, nor fear of the lake, hell, or the torment of the damned.

ANOTHER WARNING.

WE have a tract sent us by a brother, in which the writer assumes to warn the world of an impending cataclysm that shall destroy the world by fire, as it was once visited by flood. With due respect to the writer, we do not believe his theories, neither do we credit his predictions and dates; but simply present them among the curious prophecies of disaster being made by some who run without tidings, but who think they know and are ready always to put forth their professed interpretations of prophecy. It has been and is yet true that those moved upon by vain imaginings or other influences by which they assume to warn the people have as great or greater need to repent than has the world they profess to be called to warn.

We believe the world is to be warned, and taught, and prepared for disaster and evil if it will heed the warning; but do not believe in spiritual uncertainty and crankism in any shape or form.

The work of warning and preparing the race is a consistent one throughout. It provides for a reestablishment of natural covenant relationship between God and man; the organization of and entrance into the kingdom of God, that man, the child of God, may receive his mercies and continued supervising care; the correction of human conduct according to the principles of truth—the gospel, which was "in the beginning," and was designed to govern and regulate the life of man, and which demands and provides for the education and normal development of the race as the common family of God.

It will be well with men when the principles of truth are heeded and observed and a sense of acceptance with God realized and actually known. When that condition is reached and maintained, there need be little fear entertained concerning whatever may happen. To be prepared is to be "counted worthy to stand" and "to escape those things that are coming upon the earth."

He is a poor prophet who predicts disaster, yet knows nothing of the way of escape therefrom. He who creates a fear should also inspire and furnish substantial ground for hope. The latter-day message is similar to the message declared by the Christ and his apostles. It is the same message: It both warns the world and brings to those who heed the warning, communion with God and assurance that God himself will protect and preserve. With such assurance from God men have no reason to doubt or fear or be deceived.

THE Nonpareil, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, has the following in its issue for January 24, anent the Williams-Blalock Debate:—

RELIGIOUS DEBATE.

Special to the Daily Nonpareil.

Tabor, Iowa, Jan. 23.—On Monday evening, January 24, will be inaugurated the most sensational religious debate ever held in the State. The contestants are the Christian Church, represented by W. W. Blalock, and the Latter Day Saints (Mormons), by Elder T. W. Williams. The strange part of this debate is that each side affirms the question in debate; that is, that their church more closely follows the teachings of the Bible. The debate will last twelve nights, and will be public.

The following handbill has been printed at Tabor, in connection with the discussion. We have taken the authors' names from the two analyses that the reader may make impartial choice between them. Choose one:—

THE COMMISSION.

Mark 16: 14-20. "Afterward he [Christ] appeared unto the eleven [apostles] as they [apostles] sat at meat and upbraided them [apostles] with their [apostles] unbelief and hardness of heart, because they [apostles] believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

"And he [Christ] said unto them [apostles], Go ye [apostles] into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he [anyone] that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he [anyone] that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them [apostles] that believe; in my name they shall [apostles] cast out devils; they [apostles] shall speak with new tongues; they [apostles] shall take up serpents; and if they [apostles] drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them [apostles]; they [apostles] shall lay hands on the sick and they [who?] shall recover.

"So then after the Lord had spoken unto them [apostles] he [Christ] was received up into heaven and sat on the right hand of God, and they [apostles] went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them [apostles] and confirming the word with signs following."

The trouble with this analysis is that the narration of Mark, in the fourteenth verse and first part of fifteenth, is confounded with the quotation of what Christ said in verses 15, 16, 17 and 18. It makes one term, "apostles," the antecedent of two pronouns, one in the second person (ye) and one in the third person (them), and used by the same speaker in the same speech, this being a flagrant violation of the rules of grammar.

Mark 16: 14-20. — Afterward he [Christ] appeared unto the eleven [apostles] as they [apostles] sat at meat, and upbraided them [apostles] with their [apostles] unbelief and hardness of heart, because they [apostles] believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. And he said unto them [apostles]—

Now thus far Mark is the speaker and he refers to the apostles as "them" because he was talking about them and not to them, hence uses the third person and not the second. What follows is an exact quotation of what Christ said to his apostles when he was with them, he being the speaker (first person) and they the persons addressed (second person). Now remember, that the rule of language is that "a pronoun must agree with its antecedent in gender, person, and number."—Now to the analysis:—

"Go ye [eleven apostles, second person—"Ye" denotes the person addressed] into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he [generic term—he, who, or anyone who] that believeth [of every creature] and is baptized shall be saved; but he [generic term, he, who, or anyone who] that believeth not shall be damned; and these signs shall follow them [creatures talked about, third person] that believe. [Now note that Christ was talking to the apostles, and remember that a pronoun must agree with its antecedent in gender, person, and number.] In my name shall they [third person, denoting the person spoken of, not 'ye,' the second person, the one addressed, but the believers] cast out devils; they [third person, those spoken of] shall speak with new tongues; they [third person, those spoken of] shall take up serpents; and if they [third person, not second] drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them [third person]; they [third person, not second] shall lay hands on the sick and they [the sick] shall recover."

Now, the quotation of Christ's exact words closes and Mark resumes his narrative, hence Mark becomes the speaker (first person) and the apostles the persons spoken of (third person.) Mark says (not Christ), "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them [the apostles of whom Mark is now speaking] he was received up into heaven," etc.

THE NEED OF THE HOUR.

A FRIEND says to us that Our Dumb Animals is the only really independent paper in the United States.

We only say that so long as we have its management, it shall—to the best of our ability—speak the truth without fear or favor, and when it ceases to do that we shall cease to be its editor.

GEO. T. ANGELL.

Unswerving, absolute devotion to truth, without respect to persons, policies, personal interests, or organizations, is so rare, yet so necessary to present and future welfare, that evidences of it in any should be encouraged, both to strengthen the hands of those who manifest it and to educate others—those who are "able to receive" such education and discipline—to govern themselves strictly and entirely by truth. He who fears to affirm the truth in any phase of life, or who compromises it to favor persons or movements, is not to be trusted.

"All things" are not possible, according to the declaration of the Savior in the Inspired Translation. For instance, the Almighty cannot redeem men until they manifest sufficient integrity to come to the light and to stand by it under all circumstances.

There is a crying need for strong, manly and womanly devotion to truth, in everything.

Mr. Angell's words are good and true. They will be considered by the true in heart. Such words find little or no place in some classes of minds, however.

THE spirit of sacrifice is the spirit of the hour; the spirit of the gospel, of the latter-day work:—

Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.—Psalms 50: 5.

This is said following the words,

He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

Without limiting this language to the present thought alone, it certainly implies that things proceeding both from heaven and from earth are to be factors in the judgment of God's people. Granted that the language may refer both to the word of God hidden in the earth (the Book of Mormon) and to that communicated from heaven, recorded in the Bible, also to that received by direct present-day communication; the word so communicated requires that righteousness and inspiration from above shall be accompanied by gifts of earthly substance—tithes, freewill offerings, sacrifices of contributions to aid the work of God; that men and women are to be judged according to their works in this respect as also by manifestation of other virtues. We question if anyone can receive the gospel unto full salvation who is unwilling to work for its advancement, to contribute to its progress. There is marked difference between the character of the individual who is willing to give and the one who withholds his substance; and the difference must appear in the final awards in the judgment. Personally, we believe the Lord to be the best banker in the universe; that no one should be afraid to trust him, especially those "called to be saints."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. H. L. HOLT, Castle Rock, Washington, January 27:—

We are getting along well in our mission. This is the most satisfactory year of my ministerial life. We have baptized ten splendid people here. Yesterday we administered to an old man not of the church who was in a bad fix. He had heard our teaching a few times and sent for us. We administered, and left him rejoicing; said he had not felt so well for years. His voice returned; he showed how he could move his arms, and O but he did feel good! His wife and children said he was surely healed. O how I do hope this blessing will continue! I look for more of this power soon. How I do wish the endowment would be given soon! We will live and watch and pray for it. I have a debate in view. Bro. Chase is with me; he is made of good material and is straight goods.

BRO. P. J. WELLS, St. Armands, Quebec:—

Will you please be kind enough to ask your readers and subscribers if they have any of last year's Heralds to spare. Will be glad of them, and I will pay the postage for them. I believe there are some who would send them to us. We have no branch here, not one in Quebec; but we hope to be able to subscribe to the Herald very soon. Three years ago I saw in the Herald a letter from some saints in Rouse's Point, New York State, which is twenty-five miles from here. Can you inform us through your columns if there is a branch there, or saints still living there? If there is, we would communicate with them. Although alone, we feel well in faith and spirit, hoping and trusting to do all we can in seeking souls for the Master and bring others to the light as I am in the light.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Daily Iowa Capital, of February 1, devotes a column of its space to a statement of the work of the Reorganized Church, the subject matter of the article being obtained from Bro. J. F. McDowell, now laboring and lecturing in the capital city, and whom the Capital representative had interviewed at some length. Bro. McDowell evidently stated his positions in excellent form, for they so appear in the article, which is certainly a clear and strong presentation of the faith and general status of the church. Bro. McDowell states by card that the Sunday Register will contain an article written by him in defense of the faith, in reply to an article in last week's Register. The Iowa press has done and is yet doing well by us as a people.

Bro. William Wilson writes of the work at Wellston, Ohio, that the saints were well and pressing forward in the cause, amid much sickness and opposition around them.

Bro. Henry De Vries, a Hollander, writes of his labors at Freesoil and other points in Michigan. He has labored among those of his nativity, with others. He rejoices in the blessings that confirm his ministerial labors.

Bro. L. S. Willoughby, of Fairfax, South Dakota, wishes to hear from Bro. Swen Swenson; he has failed to reach him by mail. The saints at Fairfax hold services in private houses; some are doing what they can for the cause.

Brn. J. H. Lake and F. M. Cooper began a series of meetings at Sandwich, Illinois, January 25.

Bro. S. W. Simmons writes encouragingly of the work from Maysville, Arkansas. When a few families of saints located at Maysville less than three years ago there was much prejudice against them, and great distrust, owing to the false reports circulated by the evil disposed against the saints. However, since the people became acquainted with the saints and their faith, twelve have united with them and others have expressed themselves as convinced of the truth of their faith. May the good leaven continue to work and the Lord bless and prosper his cause.

The Paris Petit Journal foreshadows the probability of war between France and Germany at no distant day. The relations between France and England are strained because of conflicting interests in Africa, and hints are made that "everything is tending to take the question out of the hands of the diplomats and leave it to be settled by the soldiers." The Manchester Guardian states that Lord Salisbury cannot much longer delay occupation of disputed territory in Africa; that the near approach of British and French forces constitutes the real danger in the situation.

The committee appointed to draw up proposals for the better regulation of the relations between Norway and Sweden has been unable to reach an agreement. Indications are that the tension is fast approaching the snapping point, and it is stated that on the frontier the arming of both parties is rapidly progressing, both sides preparing for war.

The waning health of King Humbert of Italy is causing uneasiness.

Athens, Jan. 30.—Seyfullah Pasha, with 2,000 soldiers and two guns, recently went to the Village of Lazarina, near Trikala, to enforce the payment of taxes. The peasants met the troops with a sustained fire and a regular engagement ensued. The next day the attack was renewed, with results not yet known here.

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 30.—A cyclone struck Perth, West Australia, last month, totally demolishing some buildings and wrecking hundreds. The heat wave throughout the country is almost unendurable, and if it lasts long terrible damage will be done. In many places the thermometer registered 124° in the shade and 165° in the sun, and from a long list the lowest registration was 110° in the shade.

Fires from spontaneous combustion are very numerous, and bush fires are doing terrible damage. In Victoria and other colonies hundreds of thousands of acres have been swept by the flames. In Tasmania hundreds of miles of country were devastated, houses, orchards, fences all being destroyed, many families were burned to death, and the loss of live stock was appalling.

Many people saved their lives by wading up to their knees in creeks. Others raced with the flames on bicycles and won. The gross loss to farmers will be millions of dollars.

The Red Cross line steamship Portia arrived at New York, on the 1st, four days overdue from St. Johns, Newfoundland, and Halifax, after a desperate encounter with pack ice off the Newfoundland coast, and with a harrowing tale of blizzards there and destitution in the coast and section of that country. Hundreds of men, women and children dead or dying from exposure and starvation with abundance close by and hundreds threatened with a like fate, are the brief details of the condition of affairs brought by the Portia.

London, Jan. 31.—The engineering works throughout the country reopened to-day, owing to the settlement of the great strike. About twenty-five per cent of the men were employed. The others will be given work gradually, as the machinery gets in full swing.

New York, Jan. 31.—A dispatch to the Commercial Advertiser from London says: "There is an impression here that the Sultan in the end will be compelled to accept Prince George as Governor of Crete. It is strong enough to provoke discussion of the consequences; namely: that the Turks, with Mohammedan feeling aroused, will be less disposed than ever to evacuate Thessaly; and that the Balkan States, already disturbed and restless, will be likely to ask compensation for Greece's virtual gain of Crete.

"The European concert, as to the near East, is temporarily dissolved, with Germany and Austria on one side and the other powers on the other, but it is not beyond reestablishment. The Greeks are likely to be calmer and more content with the dynasty, but there are fears of worse than the existing anarchy for a time in Greece with the Turks clustered about Canea and jealous Cretan clan chiefs ready to provoke disorder."

Constantinople, Jan. 31.—The Russian auxiliary cruiser Saratoff, belonging to the volunteer fleet, with twelve quick-firing guns and 1,600 troops on board, passed the Bosphorus yesterday on the way to Vladivostock. According to a dispatch to the London Times from Odessa, cabled to the Associated Press last night, the Russian volunteer fleet will convey, in the quickest time practicable, over 10,000 Russian troops to the far East. It was added that the first cruiser, with 2,000 men, would leave within a few days. It is probable that the first cruiser was the Saratoff.

Pekin, Jan. 31.—It is supposed that Great Britain's withdrawal from Port Arthur and its ceasing to exert pressure for the opening of the port of Ta-Lien-Wan, which actions are regarded as incredible and suicidal to British interests and prestige, were owing to its disbelief in the existence of a secret treaty between Russia and China. The Chinese government, however, quotes this treaty as the reason for Russia's presence at Port Arthur, and Russian dispatches to the Tsung-Li-Yamen allege that the occupation of Port Arthur is in accordance with the treaty.

London, Jan. 31.—It is announced on the best authority that the talk of an Anglo-Japanese plan of campaign in certain eventualities is unfounded. No such matter has occupied the attention of the statesmen of the two countries and no agreement exists between England and Japan except the common desire to secure the free development of trade in China.

As regards Port Arthur, the Russian fleet, according to the same authority, is only there for winter quarters, and the statements as to a Russian occupation are unfounded. China is willing that the English warships should anchor there if required.

Manchester, Jan. 31.—The Manchester Guardian hears that the difficulty in the far East has been solved by the opening of Port Arthur to trade on the same terms as Kiao-Chou, Great Britain withdrawing her demand for the opening of Ta-Lien-Wan.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"O Love Divine, whose constant beam
Shines on the eyes that will not see,
And waits to bless us, while we dream
Thou leavest us because we turn from Thee!"

FAIRBANK, Iowa.

Dear Home Column:—For nearly two years I have been sorely afflicted. I took a severe cold in my head and my ears gathered and discharged until I became quite deaf. I wrote to the Prayer Union, and I can say that prayer was heard and answered in my behalf. My ears stopped discharging, and my hearing was, I thought, perfectly restored. To God be the praise. His promise has never failed even the weakest of the servants of God while they have trusted in him. But as open confession is good for the soul, I will confess that I did wrong, for I promised if the Lord would heal me that I would not take any more patent medicine.

But my husband thought that I had been so bad that I needed some medicine for my blood. I told him no, not to get it, for I was all right. He of course meant all right and got the medicine, and seemed determined for me to take it. So I thought to keep peace, and because the good book says, Wives, obey your husbands, I would take that one bottle and never take any more. But by the time it was all taken I could see I was growing deaf again, and have gradually grown worse ever since. It is a terrible thing to be deaf, and unless the Lord will heal me I am sure I never can be healed. Jesus says if our brother sin against us seventy times seven and ask our forgiveness that we are to forgive him, so I am in hopes to be forgiven. I am very sorry for not trusting in the promise of God as I ought to have done, and humbly ask forgiveness of my heavenly Father and those who prayed for me. Will you please remember me at a throne of grace once more that I may be healed every whit, and that I may have grace given me to overcome the temptations and trials of life, and may yet see my children, one and all, faithful, willing workers in the cause of Christ? He is able to grant this request if he will.

Your sister,

MRS. JOHN MCRAE.

CHICAGO, Illinois.

Dear Sisters:—We have no Daughters of Zion society here yet and I often wonder why. But I stop and think of the disadvantage of getting around the city. So much car fare and changing of cars, which make it very bad, if you have little ones that you cannot leave at home alone and must run the risk of colds and sickness from being exposed to the draughts. We have a nice branch here, also Sunday school and Literary, and Sunday is truly a day of worship; Sunday school at 1:30, preaching at 3:00, then an intermission. Each one brings lunch and it is spread on one long table and we have a physical refreshing. Then the young folks either have literary or prayer meeting. After this preaching at 7:30. So you see we have an afternoon of rejoicing and mingling with those of the one faith. Then, as a rule, we part for the week. Some of course have the privilege of Thursday evening prayer meeting, but as yet I never have attended a weekly prayer meeting here in the city. We live quite a distance out in the suburb of Lawndale. We have other churches out here but no Latter Day Saints. I have never been to one of the churches, for it seems as though I was feeding on dry husks to hear them talk. Last Sunday being the first Sunday of the year, I went to our church. It was sacrament Sunday and I truly enjoyed it, for nothing makes me feel so to rejoice as to attend sacrament and prayer meeting. We had a peaceful meeting and one could feel the Holy Spirit's presence, as the Lord has said that he would send his Comforter. I feel as though I could press onward and do my duty this coming year so much better than as if I had remained at home. My companion not being in the faith it is not always convenient to leave him at home. Sometimes he attends with me.

He is not opposed, but just lenient. Does not see the necessity of his obeying just now, but I pray and ask an interest in your prayers for him and myself that I may be the means of bringing him into the church, also that I may be guided by the Lord's teaching in bringing up my little one, who is now two years and a few months old. She has been blessed, and I feel the responsibility that rests on me of training her little mind so that when she reaches the right age she will see the right way and go in it. I so enjoy all the reading and instruction that the Daughters of Zion call forth, and I had the privilege of attending one meeting this past summer at Independence. I am heart and soul with you.

Your sister in the one faith,

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE.—CONTINUED.

MONDAY, 9:30 a. m. Training class, T. A. Hougas. Subject, Effective Teaching. To the question, "What is Teaching?" the following definitions were given by various members of the institute. They were written on the blackboard and after all were given were criticised in order. The superintendent stated that he wanted a definition that "fully covered the ground"—one to which there could be no objection found. [In this report we place the criticism immediately following the definition instead of all together at the last as they were.—ED.]

1. "Teaching is imparting knowledge." Criticism: (1) Imparting necessitates only a giving off. It may or it may not be received and understood by another, and therefore is not necessarily teaching. (2) One can impart knowledge and not be heard by anyone. (3) Incomplete. It is a part of the teaching process, but does not cover the ground.

2. "Drawing out what the pupil knows." (1) This, too, is a part only of the teaching process, or may, in some instances, be teaching, but not necessarily so. (b) Incomplete. It does not cover the ground.

3. "Developing ideas" [thoughts.—ED.] This, at best, can be but a part of teaching.

ASHMONT, Ohio, Jan. 26.

Editors Herald:—I am happy to report that the beginning of another new year finds me earnestly engaged in the most commendable cause of human selection, and that it has opened up more auspiciously than any previous one since giving my service to the Lord.

On the 2d inst I buried three humble souls in the icy waters of the Ohio. One was a returning wanderer, our beloved brother Craig, who found that peace and contentment was not to be found outside of the church of his first love. His humble return was gladly received by all his many old-time friends. By a vote of the branch he was ordained an elder by G. T. Griffiths. Myron Thomas, my bright little nephew, a product of the Sabbath school, and Bro. Commodore Hatcher, the other two. On the 9th inst. I baptized my youngest brother, the only one remaining out of the family and fold of God. O dear mothers, whose anxious hearts are throbbing over the welfare of your sons and daughters, I would to God that you all could rejoice in the midst of your entire family as ours does in beholding her four sons and four daughters, grandsons and granddaughters, sons-in-law and daughter-in-law all striving in the same way for the same place.

From Wheeling I went to Blake's Mills; preached a few times, then on to Cleveland to receive a ready welcome by the few devoted saints. While there two more bright young people asked for baptism, Frank Ollom and Miss Eliza Warnock. On the 24th the saints assembled at the quiet and peaceful natatorium, which the management seemed pleased to let us use, and I buried those two souls in the clear warm water from Lake Erie. At this baptism there was such a quiet peaceful feeling that I cannot refrain from speaking further. Sr. Eliza was dressed in a pure white robe and slippers of the same whiteness. As she stood by my side while the fervent prayer of Bro. Burget rang through the corridors she presented a picture of purity which I shall never forget. The outpouring of the Spirit of God at the confirmation was a refreshing shower to all our souls. If they will but comply with the dictations of the Spirit which attended them on this occasion their purpose in life will have been reached.

I am now domiciled at the comfortable home of Bro. and Sr. Jump, and will begin a series of meetings in the Methodist church this evening.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Jan. 26.

Editors Herald:—Mud, Mud, Mud! streets almost impassable; still we had a very good congregation out Sunday night to hear the speaker on Daniel 2: 44, from my chart. Many seem to be much interested in our work here, but are slow to obey. Our Sabbath school is growing in numbers, and the officers are doing all they can to interest the young.

Inclosed you will find a clipping from the Richland Cyclone and Springfield Republican, a letter sent by me to them to publish. The reason I sent it is that D. B. Ray, of this place, who publishes the National Baptist Flag, has an article in his paper on Mormonism, in which he misrepresents us in almost everything. He is going around, and at every place where we have a membership he takes a special pride in saying some of the worst things he can manufacture against us, and especially at Stoutland, where he claimed our doctrine was rotten or from the Devil, and that the preachers knew it; and then told about Bro. Kelley and his debate. I thought this thing had gone far enough, so I was determined to make them either stand by their assertions or back out before the public.

The discussion Bro. White held here removed a great deal of prejudice and did a great deal of good; and we are getting a hold here, and I intend to hold it if we have to meet every Missionary Baptist in this country.

I took the following clipping from the Springfield Republican, of January 26, which it took from the Richland and added the forepart of it themselves.

"ISSUED A CHALLENGE.

"Rev. Sparling Will Defend His Religion Against all Comers.

"Rev. Henry Sparling has on his war paint. He has issued a challenge to anyone to combat his creed, that of the Latter Day Saints. Mr. Sparling's challenge is as follows:—

"1762 Springfield Avenue,
"SPRINGFIELD, Missouri.

"Having been informed that Dr. D. B. Ray, of Springfield, while preaching at Stoutland, made statements about our church which need correction, in trying to leave the impression that our doctrine was from the Devil and we were afraid to defend it in a manly way, but especially relating to his discussing with Elder E. L. Kelley. Dr. Ray left the impression that we hired a stenographer to take the discussion and after we saw how Kelley was beat we were afraid to publish it. I wrote Elder Kelley. Here is his reply:—

"Your letter making inquiry as to undertaking to publish discussion between D. B. Ray and myself at Lee's Summit received, and replying state that I secured best stenographer I could get in Kansas City to take the discussion for publication. After it was over I wrote Dr. Ray, urging that it be published, that each of us examine our speeches to that end. He wrote me that he understood the stenographer did not get it in full and he did not have time to revise his speech. You see, he is responsible for the nonpublication. If he wishes to repeat the discussion in Springfield, let him name time, giving me sixty days' notice. Dr. Ray knows he lost in that discussion, and some of the people in his church united with ours after it. If he is willing to meet me and have it published in book form, I am ready.

"In bonds,

"If the Baptists have something they can stand by, now is the time. We are willing to

4. "Causing another to have the ability to know." (a) This is an essential part of teaching, but like others, is incomplete. (b) It is simply the one phase of teaching known as "mental discipline." (c) It does not necessitate the transfer of knowledge at all.

5. "Causing another to use what you have imparted to him." (a) This is not actually necessary to the teaching process. You may teach a sinner what he should do, and he fully understand you, but he willfully refuses to do. (b) It is a very desirable addition to the teaching process.

6. "Causing another to know." (a) This was accepted by the leader as being a good definition if not a perfect one. Teaching is a twofold process. It requires action on the part of two persons—the teacher and the one taught. The verb "teach" belongs to a class of verbs which by their very nature involve two persons. Illustration: The verb "murder" requires one person to commit the crime and another for the victim. There could be no murder if there were no criminal. There could be no murder if there were no victim. Two persons are necessary to make murder possible. So with teaching. There must be one to cause the missile—knowledge—to go and another to receive it. Teaching is nothing less than cowork. Efforts on the part of the teacher which produce no impressions, or cause no work on part of the pupil, have failed to become teaching.

1¹ Conclusions.

1² Telling is not necessarily teaching. (Many teachers "tell" too much and pupils too little.)

2² Questioning alone not necessarily teaching. (Teachers make a grave mistake by adhering too closely to the printed questions in the Quarterly.)

3² Hearing a recitation is not necessarily teaching. (Some teachers are satisfied when they hear a thing told without knowing that it is understood.)

The following was given as a fairly good way to proceed with the teaching of the lesson. Of course each teacher should adapt it to his own and his class's immediate needs.

2¹ "True method of teaching." After you have greeted your class, reviewed past lesson or lessons, and discovered the connection between past lessons and the present one, then

1² Call on pupils to tell what they can on the various topics of the lesson—one topic at a time. They may not be able to give it all. Then

2² Draw out more by appropriate questions. Still you may be unable to get it all. Then 3² Tell the pupil what he does not know. Repeat process with each general topic or division of the lesson, varying the work as may be necessary and as your natural tact and ingenuity may direct.

3¹ Objective teaching is superior to abstract teaching, i. e. Teaching by use of objects or illustrations is superior to teaching without them.

4¹ It is better to teach an event, and from it draw the truth, than to teach the abstract principle and try to illustrate it.

"ELDER HENRY SPARLING."

ELLSWORTH, Maine, Jan. 25.

Editors Herald:—My last intrusion was from Madison, Maine, where in company with Bro. Greene, I labored two weeks. We are not overly sanguine of success there at present. God can speak existence and order out of chaos, so we pray, while we patiently wait, that his word may speedily sweep the power that opposes all righteousness into oblivion, and hasten his work in its time.

Bro. Greene now returned to his home to complete arrangements for showing Bro. Kelley the most interesting features of Maine's gospel life. On December 1 we had the pleasure of meeting them at Little Deer Isle. There the saints are remodeling the school building into a chapel which, no doubt, will be a creditable edifice when done. From here we made the Western conference at Mountainville. Weather hindered many from attending, but those there were amply repaid for the effort.

My next call was at Stonington, where I visited for two days while waiting for the eastern boat. Conference at Indian River the 18th and 19th was a success. A few days were spent very pleasantly here, when I returned to Jonesport. Remained there two weeks, occasionally going to Beal's Island. On the 24th left for Lanoin, where three weeks were spent very pleasantly and, we trust, profitably. Some of Maine's best people are in this section and "two by two" they are swinging in line with God's army, marching on to final triumph and eternal rest. While there my home was with Bro. and Sr. Hamor, whom we baptized in September. They are doing finely in gospel life and, if faithful, will exert a powerful influence for good. The Baptists feel the loss of Bro. and Sr. Closson who for a long time have figured conspicuously as workers in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor meetings. We shall soon look for a Sunday school of our own. The young people are strongly in our favor, and as the power of possibility lies with them, we hope to see good returns.

On January 14 I came to Dollard Town in the outskirts of Ellsworth. No saints here; interest good; weather bad. Maine winters are hard on rural towns. Some opposition; enough for interest. Shall remain until February 1.

In gospel fraternity,

W. W. BLANCHARD.

WOODSIDE, Mont., Jan. 12.

Editors Herald:—We have had a good time here. Two Utah elders by the name of Carebine and Young, the latter a grandson of Pres. B. Young, have been visiting our members, trying to make them believe they are not Latter Day Saints, and spoke one night on "succession." By this time Bro. A. B. Moore came and took up the subject. He spoke a few minutes at the close of their service, and pulled down all they had built up in an hour and a half. The Spirit of the Lord was with us; the people could feel and see the power made manifest, for they cried out, "What a warm and different spirit he has to what them other fellows have." These elders spoke one night more to show that they were the only people on earth who had the right to administer in the gospel, and said that other factions are apostates. Bro. Moore showed them up in good style, to the satisfaction of all, I believe, except the Brighamites. Elder Young said to one of them by the name of Waylett, "Let us go like whipped dogs." Elder Moore showed that they were the apostates. The Utah elders go from house to house, and Bro. A. B. Moore follows them up in some places. A lady by the name of Johnson said, Mr. Moore pulled down in one hour what took them other fellows a week to build up.

Bro. Moore is preaching to crowded houses with good interest. If Elder Moore or any good elder could stay here a few months a great deal of good could be done, for the people seem to be sick of deception, and seem to hunger for truth, because they rejoice so much when our elders come, and manifest great interest. There are houses open now for our elders to preach in. The Utah elders are doing us no hurt; they are opening the way for the truth to step in. A lady asked the Utah elders to show her in the Bible where it sanctioned polygamy, and they took their books and said she wanted too much candy for a penny.

Yours in bonds,

SHELTON, Neb., Jan. 25.

Editors Herald:—The 25th of last month I left home for Agnew, Nebraska. I stopped at Baker, Kansas, and remained over night at Sr. J. Arthur Davies'. Her husband has been proclaiming the gospel in Nevada since May. I was glad to find her and little ones in such good health and spirits, and making the sacrifices of missionary life so cheerfully for the truth's sake. May God's blessings rest on these faithful sisters who are willing to let their husbands travel from home for the salvation of souls. I arrived at Agnew the 27th, and walked four miles to the Lane schoolhouse, where arrangements had been made for me to meet Rev. W. B. Hill, a Seventh-Day Adventist, in public debate. I found him to be about fifty-five years old, and very determined to have the greater part of the time spent on the soul-sleeping and Sabbath questions. After some parleying we agreed on the following propositions:—

1. Is man wholly unconscious between death and the resurrection?
2. Is the spirit or soul of man conscious between death and the resurrection?
3. Is the Seventh-day Sabbath binding on Christians?
4. Ought Christians to keep the first day of the week as a sacred day?
5. Are the doctrines of the Seventh-day Advent church in harmony with the teachings of Christ and the apostles?
6. Are the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints in harmony with the teachings of Christ and his apostles?

Two sessions to each proposition, unless the affirmative should desire more time.

We devoted three sessions to the first proposition, two to the second, four to the third, and two to the fourth. There were then some objections urged by the Adventist's converts and a few others, about the house being used, as they thought it would effect the school. One of their converts told his friend that Rev. Hill had stated that "it would not do to debate the fifth proposition." "Straws show which way the wind blows." We had a large and interested congregation, and we made many friends. I never felt as well prepared for every position taken by an opponent before.

Some of the rumors may be of interest. Rev. Hill's moderator, a short hand reporter that came with him for College View, said he "would have given five dollars rather than to have seen the second proposition close as it did." I thought he did not have much love for his theory, or else a great love for his five dollars, or else he would have given more to have seen it closed differently. These people always have great confidence in their arguments to sustain their Sabbath question. Rev. Hill started out with more confidence on the third proposition than he had manifested during the last three evenings. But he seemed worse surprised than ever. His same convert said that when they started home that night he began to pray and continued till about midnight. Then he closed with a loud "Amen," exclaiming that he had "gained the victory." He also stated that I was equal to any ten men he had ever met before. The Seventh-day people consoled themselves by saying that I was "too much for the old man," and that I "could make "white appear black," etc., etc.

Rev. Hill was the best debater they had before the discussion, but he is not the best now.

I held five meetings after the debate, with good results, some are near the kingdom. I preached once in Valparaiso, in a Christian church, then came on to Fairfield. I preached six sermons with good liberty, and held one business meeting. The following officers were chosen and sustained: Bro. C. Blodgett president, Bro. Dalton priest, Bro. Hopper teacher. Sr. Mock clerk, and Bro. D. Jarrad treasurer. I enjoyed myself with the saints, and hope to learn of their prosperity in the future.

I came to Norman on the 22d, expecting to meet Bro. James Lippencott, priest of the Shelton branch, and hold a series of meetings in Daneville. I was met by Bro. Peter Moldrup and learned that Bro. Lippencott was sick and could not come. I preached Saturday and Sunday evenings at Snowflake and rode twenty-five miles Monday to see Bro. Lippencott and visit for a few days with the saints. I organized this branch one year ago last July and ordained Bro. Lippencott over two years ago. I am glad he has made as good an effort for the advancement of the work as his record shows, and hope his zeal will never slacken. The few saints that composed the organization at first have stood nobly to the cause, and now the branch numbers over sixty. They have had their trials, and some peculiar combinations have been witnessed, which called for wise and careful actions; but God has recognized and blessed the work, till now it has a full corps of officers, and we hope the danger line is past. The greater part of this branch passed out of my mission with the change of mission lines last spring. But the last time I visited them was in February, 1897, and at a business meeting succeeded in settling all difficulties that existed in the branch. I was thankful they had succeeded in keeping so free from the snares of the Evil One, and that Bro. M. Sterley, whom I had ordained a teacher, had also magnified his calling.

Out of the debate at Lane's schoolhouse grew an agreement between Rev. Hill and myself to debate the same propositions in March at College View, Nebraska.

This mission is in a healthy condition and prospering as much as could be expected under the circumstances. I go to Fairfield the 28th, then work my way east. Bro. H. W. Bellville is holding meetings at Hebron and was married on the 20th inst., so we see cupid is throwing his arrows with amazing accuracy of late. Who will be next.

Your brother in Christ,
W. E. PEAK.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, Jan. 28.

Editors Herald:—My letter published in the Herald for December 22, 1897, came under the observation of one of the Utah elders, on a mission in Kansas, by the name of C. W. Goodliefe, and he calls it a thing of importance, and feels at once, in duty bound, to "refute" it. Now if he did that I fail to see where the refutation comes in. He transcribed the letter nearly in full and sent it with his comments to the "Brigham City Bugler" for publication, a Brighamite sheet, I presume. The letter and comments, have found their way to the Bishop and other officers of this little city; and have worked up considerable excitement.

I was seen about it, and here allow me to give my answer to them and Mr G. that my letter is a plain statement of facts in my own experience, as well as my collaborators, since the advent of the Reorganized Church in Utah, and I have nothing to retract. The only way out is for you to repent and reform. Of course there are some honorable exceptions, and those that have done better will know without my giving their names, etc. And now if you are right, as you insist, and that God is with you, and of course against us, what is to prevent you to throw open your churches to us, for the first time, and permit us to go the round of your settlements to fill open pulpits? Are you afraid of us under such favorable conditions to you? It would be kind of nice to carry the impress to the outside that you are very liberal and good here; but you are not. I hope you will get better, and "do unto others as you would have others to do unto you."

Now for the comments of Goodliefe: "I find; first, a screw loose somewhere," says he, "and everybody can see where it is;" but

I fail. Second, The Josephites should go out into the world, and not labor with the great Mormon people of Utah and Idaho. The reason, we call sinners to repentance. Third, Some Josephites have told him that we Josephite elders are a very lazy lot. Wonderful! Fourth, How is it that the Josephites were so long completing the organization? Answer, We were waiting the time of the Lord. Now that is all. Wonderful refutation on the contents of the letter. This gentleman stands a fair chance to become an "oracle."

And now, Mr. Goodliefe, before I part with you permit me to inform you that I am a Kansas man myself; have had my home in the State for the last twenty-eight years, and am coming down that way pretty soon; well, about the last of February; and I do hereby challenge you to a public discussion of all the points of difference between the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church; and if there is any "screw" loose, you may stand some chance for a victory; but if not, some of the people in Malad think that your chances will be slim. I have carried the "grip" for a few years. Propositions to be submitted for the approval of both sides.

You will please address at Netawaka, Jackson County, Kansas, care of Box 54.

Very earnestly for truth and right,
J. T. DAVIS.

P. S.—Mr. C. W. Goodliefe, please send this to the Brigham City Bugler when you get it.

DECKER, Ind., Jan. 30.

Editors Herald:—Your columns of the 26th inst. come to us with sad news indeed, as it tells us of the death of Elder V. D. Baggerly. As I was with him in his last ministerial labors, I feel constrained to write.

I accompanied him from the Southern Illinois reunion to Springerton, and from there to Bro. Ben Wadkins', six miles south of Carmi, Illinois, where he baptized three. We then went to Tunnel Hill, where he administered the ordinance of baptism to one more. We left Tunnel Hill November 27, stopping at Eldorado. We went by wagon to Bro. B. Faulkner's. The Baptists were holding meetings in the schoolhouse, so on Monday, the 29th, we went to Parrish and labored until December 7, then on near to Rural Hill, where we held meetings at the Odell schoolhouse until December 14.

On Tuesday, December 14, Bro. Baggerly preached his last sermon, his subject being the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, and at his request we sang hymn 760 in the Saints' Harp.

On the 15th Bro. F. M. Davis conveyed us to Bro. George Taylor's, near Thackery, Illinois, where we remained over night. No place to preach could be secured, therefore on Thursday morning Bro. Baggerly started for home. We accompanied him to the depot and there took the parting hand of one we loved.

The news of his departure was to us a thunder peal from a clear sky. He was an earnest, zealous, yet careful defender of the cause of truth as revealed to Joseph the Seer.

Bro. Baggerly's bereaved family has our deepest sympathy.

After the holidays, which we spent with our sisters at Oatsville, we came to this place. We have held several meetings here since we came. The sanctified (?) people have been and are still holding forth in this vicinity. Their preacher (a woman) was out to our meeting on Sunday. We are now at Bro. H. H. Rose's. The waters are high and we are surrounded. We will go from here to Tennyson, Indiana, as soon as the waters go down. May the Lord prosper Zion's cause.

Yours in bonds,
CHARLES BARMORE.

WEBB CITY, Mo., Feb. 2.

Editors Herald:—I am in the field at work. After making a trip through Southern Illinois this winter, I called in St. Louis and preached twice on Sunday, December 26. Found Bro. Bond and the local brethren there, alive to the interests of the church. Bro. William Anderson, of Lamoni, Iowa, was there, and I had the pleasure of his company to Independence; he going home by the way of Kansas City.

January 8, I attended the Clinton district conference at Rich Hill, Missouri. It was ably presided over by our wide-awake brother, D. C. White. Missionaries Alfred White, F. C. Keck and F. L. Sawley were there, and quite a number of the local officials of that district. Business was done promptly and quietly, and a good feeling prevailed. Bro. F. C. Keck I find is highly esteemed among the saints as a preacher and a good man; but many of them, as well as the writer, think he speaks too fast, much of his work is lost, because of the audience failing to keep up with the speaker. In the saints' meeting on Sunday afternoon there was a little ruffle in the meeting because of a boisterous spirit manifesting itself. In this great care should be taken; sometimes saints work themselves up, and speak very loud, and sometimes harshly, mistaking their own feelings for the Spirit of God, and in this way do harm; and sometimes false spirits get in and deceive them. This is productive of serious results. Confidence in the gifts is destroyed, as well as in the individual; and anything claiming to be from God is looked upon with suspicion. This destroys confidence and brings distrust and division into the church; hence the great need of wise men to preside in and watch over the churches.

From Rich Hill I went to Lebeck, Missouri, and preached seven times in that branch, and left them feeling better because of my efforts there; and they gave me a pressing invitation to come again. Since leaving Lebeck, I learn that the agent there is gathering in quite a bit of tithing. That is right, let the good work go on. I preached two nights at Eldorado Springs to large attentive audiences. I think a good work could be done there if a proper effort was made. In the Veve branch I preached four times; the weather being bad most of the time, the attendance was not as good as could be desired; but some were encouraged, and expressed a determination to do something in a substantial way.

Two nights I spoke in Walker to the largest audience, they said, that had been to their hall in a long time. I stayed three nights in Nevada, spoke each night; one night giving a lecture on temperance. The few saints at Nevada, procured the R. R. T. U. Hall for me to speak in, and expressed themselves as believing it would do good. I trust my effort in the Clinton district will result in some good to the saints individually, as well as good to the church.

My work in Webb City closes for the present to-night and I begin at Blendsville tomorrow night and will continue over Sunday; then to Weir City, Kansas, Pleasant View branch, Sherwin Junction, and Angola; then to Maysville, Arkansas; and that I believe is about all the organized branches of the Spring River district. Bro. O. P. Sutherland presides over this district and seems to have the full confidence and good will of the people so far as I have heard expressed, and his house seems to be a home for all that will come, his good wife toiling patiently to make it comfortable and pleasant for everybody. Indeed, it seemed to me they were imposed upon, but God will not forget the good they are doing.

Trusting that God may be with me in my efforts for good, and praying that he may abundantly bless all his people in their efforts to do good, I am still in the conflict.

MOUNTAIN GROVE, Mo., Feb. 1.

Editors Herald:—I am now making my home at Mountain Grove with Bro. and Sr. Schofield. Until recently I have made my home with Bro. Joseph Ward, of Pomona, but as he has moved to Oregon County I thought best to come to this place. Here I am kindly cared for, and am preaching around town. I baptized three precious souls into the kingdom of Christ on January 30 at Stony Point. At this point there is but little opposition to the truth, as the saints are well respected. I also held meeting some ten miles south of here about two weeks ago, and had a very good interest. While there I was permitted to unite George Stepp and Sr. Grace Homer in the holy bonds of matrimony. It is hoped that Sr. Grace will be instrumental in leading her husband into the fold of Christ. I am to commence a meeting on the 2d inst. about twelve miles west of this place, where the gospel in its fullness has not been preached. I hope the saints will pray for me that I may properly set forth the truth there and elsewhere. Saints, let us not be idle, but let us all watch and pray, that we may shun temptation and press steadily onward to victory.

Your brother in Christ,

C. J. SPURLOCK.

P. S.—Saints, please note that my address is Mountain Grove, Missouri.

A BRIEF EXAMINATION OF D. P. KIDDER'S BOOK.

A GREAT many books have been published and sermons preached against what the world has pleased to call "Mormonism," but few of those books or sermons have been devoted to an exposition of the official doctrines of the church. The majority, if not all, have been largely confined to an exposition of that which has been imagined to be the belief and practice of the saints.

False stories put in circulation by irresponsible parties have been largely drawn upon for evidence by those authors. This evidence is of such a character that no thoughtful person, that desires the truth can have any confidence in. It seems strange to see men of culture and ability presenting such stuff as proof against this "marvelous work and a wonder;" and the only way we can account for it is by believing that "the spirit that works in the children of disobedience" (Eph. 2:2) is yet at work blinding the mind and stifling the judgment of men without their comprehension of it. This "power of darkness" (Col. 1:13) so wrought on the people in the days of the apostles that every possible effort was made to crush the work of God as soon as it was introduced. The people, religious and non-religious, were collectively and individually interested in opposing it, excepting a very few. Paul speaks of this great opposition and places the cause not with "flesh and blood" altogether, but "principalities," "powers," and "the rulers of darkness of this world." (Eph. 6:12.)

While men circulated false reports and persecuted the saints, they were to a great extent instruments in the hands of Satan, opposing the work of God. As long as they were under influence of this power of darkness they could not discern the truth nor see the light of God that was clothing the children of the righteous like a mantle. The poor souls who have been so long accustomed to grope in semi-darkness can hardly be expected to know much of the "ways of the Lord." No wonder so many of us when "called out of darkness into his marvelous light" (1 Peter 2:9) imagined that the way was so plain, the truths so clearly presented, that we could convert all our associates. Some of us have learned by experience that our conclusions were hasty. It seems that some ray of spiritual light must shine on our minds to guide us to the "straight and narrow way," and we should always feel thankful to God for such light; and our love and sympathy should go out for our fellow men who have not thus been guided. The Lord has prepared the way by which this light can be received, and that is the reason we pray for God to bless the congregation when we open our meetings. How futile are our efforts to show men the way without the Spirit's aid. When Jesus was on the cross he prayed, "Father forgive them, they know not what they do." They knew it was not just to treat a man thus; but they did not know or understand the power that was thus moving them. Being in "darkness" they could not or did not discern the spiritual powers that move among the people to lead them to destruction. We are responsible, certainly, for permitting this power to control us, for we become accessories to the crimes thus committed, and Satan will be also held responsible, as is shown by the following:—

And among all the workmanship of my hand there has not been so great wickedness as among your brethren; but, behold, their sins shall be upon the heads of their fathers. Satan shall be their father, and misery shall be their doom.—D. C. 36:7.

We "become servants of him whom we list to obey," and as a servant is under the control of the master to a certain extent, so we are under the control of Satan if we choose to obey him, and the more we obey him the stronger his influence is over us, till we may be completely controlled by him as the man who "dwelt among the tombs." Jesus came to break the chains of darkness that have wrapped the children of men, as the result of iniquity, and make it possible for us all to become free again. The poor negroes who were held in servitude for years were very anxious, and longed for the time to come when they would be made free. One reason why they desired it was they could understand the advantages of being free by seeing others in that condition. We do not understand the advantages of being free from Satan till we have been brought into connection, or associated with those who are. Then is when our light shines like a city on a hill, and the poor captive sees what there is in a righteous life. Then is when the saying of Christ—strikes with a force that is never forgotten. Do we realize all that is meant in this verse?

If ye continue in my word, then ye are my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8:32.

This power that robbed man of his freedom has always pursued the same methods in opposing the work of God, and it is somewhat interesting to notice the similarity of his work in the past and present. A few days ago Bro. M. H. Forscutt presented me Kidder's "Mormonism and the Mormons," and perhaps a few statements made and positions occupied by the author will be of use by affording food for thought.

As long as he condemns the saints and their work, without presenting any evidence for his condemnation, one is left to imagine that he has some reasons for his statements; but when he begins to present them, one is almost amazed at his audacity. On page 16 he presents the following as proof against the Book of Mormon:—

A strong presumption in favor of the truth of Scripture history arises from the fact that when it was published to the world no part of it was contradicted. Although numbers refused their assent to the doctrines of Christianity, and were interested to oppose them, yet there has come down to us no contemporaneous denial of its premises; no exposition of the deceptions on which it was based, if such existed.

Then he proceeds to show that no such claims can be made for the Book of Mormon, as two books have been published against its claims. This argument falls to the ground when we read in the New Testament that the premises on which the basis of Christianity was denied, as well as the basis of the Book of Mormon, shows us that the author cannot be trusted even in his representation of the Bible, when he says "there has come down to us no contemporaneous denial of its premises." (See Matt. 12: 22-30.)

Christ performed a wonderful miracle by the Spirit of God, which was proof that the "kingdom of God is come unto you;" but the very premises on which this argument rested was denied by the religious people, who said he cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of devils. John 7: 20 informs us that the people claimed he was inspired by the devil, and said, "thou hast a devil" instead of "the Spirit of God." Thus again the premises of which the work rested was denied, and so it was all along the line of his ministerial work, from his birth to his resurrection.

On pages 20 and 21 we have the testimony of seventy-five witnesses to prove that Joseph Smith was "destitute of moral character," "addicted to vicious habits," and Martin Harris was "very visionary," etc., and that not "a single person in this vicinity that puts the least confidence in their pretended revelations."

We have no disposition to say that they had confidence in the revelations, but that does not prove them unworthy of confidence. In fact it proves them unable to tell what to have confidence in. We listened to one Mr. Kirby once lecture on Mormonism, and he gave us to understand that he had no confidence in Joseph's revelations also, and then related his experience in going to Utah. They left the boat near Independence, Missouri, and camped on the prairie that is now covered by a portion of Kansas City. He told us he could have jotted the land where the Union Depot now stands for $1.25 per acre. But no, he had no confidence in Joseph's revelations which told the saints to buy this very land for "an everlasting inheritance." (Doc. and Cov. 57:1.) But he could believe a falsehood and follow it thousands of miles. I told him he could now see where he had missed it in a financial way by not going according to the revelations given through Joseph, and in eternity he would see where he had missed it in a spiritual way. Let men testify by the thousands that they have "no confidence in their revelations," there is no denying but what the one I have cited is worthy of belief. To be told that it was "wisdom" to buy all the land from Independence to Kansas City in 1830, which then could have been purchased for only a trifle, but now a great portion of it is covered by the metropolis of the west, was worthy of belief, as we can all see now; but those would-be wise who had no "confidence" in it, refused to do that which was "wisdom" to be done. It is a manifestation of poor judgment of their part. Many revelations can be cited which as clearly presents the truthfulness of their contents.

Then comes the testimony of several witnesses to prove the Book of Mormon a fraud. While he does not lack for a sufficient number of witnesses, yet he finds himself in a similar condition as the Pharisees were when they Sought for witnesses against Jesus to put him to death, and found none. For many bore false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together.—Mark 14:56.

Peter Ingersoll is first introduced. He tells us that Joseph told him that As I was passing yesterday, across the woods, after a rain, I found in a hollow some white sand. . . . I took off my frock, and tied up several quarts and went home. On entering the house I found the family at the table eating dinner. They were all anxious to know the contents of my frock. . . . So I very gravely told them it was the Golden Bible. To my surprise they were credulous enough to believe it, etc. Then he goes to Willard Chase to get a box made to put it in; but as Chase would not make it, he made a box of clap-boards.

This shows that Joseph brought the plates, or what he made the family believe were the plates, home the same day that he thought of such a thing. This contradicts his other witnesses and all the history of the church. 2. He wanted Willard Chase to make him a box to put it in after he brought it home in his frock.

Now let us hear his next witness. Willard Chase:—

In the fore part of September (I believe), 1827, the prophet requested me to make him a chest, informing me that he designed to move back to Pennsylvania, and expecting soon to get his gold book.

One says he had it and went to get the box to put it in; the other says he expected to get it after awhile.

Mr. P. Ingersoll says it was sand Joseph had in his clap-board box which he "allowed people to lift," etc., while Willard Chase says, "for in less than two years twelve men said they had seen it" (gold book).

After the author had waded through the evidences presented by the witnesses, he remarks: 1. "That these men may have seen plates is very possible" (p. 52), which shows that he himself has no confidence in his own witnesses. But seemingly he is like another, "Anything, just so it is against the Mormons." We are next presented a long list of testimonies by his very credible witnesses, to show without a shadow of a doubt that Rev. Solomon Spalding wrote the Book of Mormon. It is not exactly clear how the manuscript fell into his hands; but as Sidney Rigdon once lived in Pittsburg, and S. Spalding was there at one time, he must have gotten it and remodeled it to suit his fancy, so he could start a new sect. Then why or how came he to give it to Joseph Smith, an obscure boy, living hundreds of miles away in the northern part of New York, is harder to account for than the other. But this is all cleared up by the statement that Joseph Smith was then digging for money "occasionally, who was then seventeen years of age, and hence was the proper person to introduce the fraud to the world." But this tissue of lies has been punctured so full of holes that there is no need of examining it here. Time with its unerring shovel has faithfully removed this pile of rubbish that has been heaped upon the truth, and now the false witnesses stand before the gaze of the world in their proper light. But it shows how unreliable have been the arguments made against this work, and what methods men have adopted to oppose it. But "surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay."

The testimony of the three witnesses of the Book of Mormon is criticised and considered unworthy of belief, for,

If they understood not the contents, how could they know that there had been any translation at all, not to say a correct or divinely assisted one?—P. 52.

By reading the testimony of these men we learn that "an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ that we beheld and bare record that these things are true." The testimony is of such a character that it is not possible for them to be mistaken, no more so than it was for Zacharias when the angel informed him that he should have a son, or the apostles when Jesus appeared to them after his resurrection. It must be true, or else the men willfully testified to a falsehood. Then the character of these men is attacked, and the same kind of evidence is produced to sustain his position that he deals with all along. While these men were of no particular note before they gave their testimony to the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon, yet they lived long enough afterwards to show to the world their true character. It is gratifying to read the account of Mr. David Whitmer's conduct that was published in the Richmond Democrat of January 26, 1888, at the time of his death. Just before he stepped to the other shore he called his relatives to his bedside and said:—

Now you must all be faithful in Christ. I want to say to all of you that the Bible, and the record of the Nephites (Book of Mormon) is true. So you can say that you have heard me bear my testimony on my deathbed.—Palmyra to Independence; page 140.

And also the long list of the names of the leading men of Richmond, Missouri, where Mr. David Whitmer lived for nearly fifty years testifying that he was "a man of the highest integrity, and of undoubted truth and veracity." The conduct of those men has been such that it positively disproves the accusation that they would stoop to such a fraud. Their life record shows that they were men of intellect, too smart to be deceived by any cunning craftiness of man. They may be called dupes and other unsavory epithets, but their works show they were brainy men.

On page 63 he presents the revelation given to Emma Smith, July, 1830, and comments on the statement that "his wife was not to work, but to be supported from the church." There is no such a statement in the revelation. This is only one misstatement that we will notice, although a number are found. The part of the revelation referred to, reads thus:—

And thou needest not fear, for thy husband shall support thee in the church; for unto them is his calling.—D. C. 24:2.

This is prophetic, and here is an opportunity to test Joseph's prophetic claims. There were only fifty or sixty members in the church at this time, and it had been organized about three months. It was being opposed in the most unprecedented manner in the annals of the history of our nation. The outlook from a human standpoint was very discouraging sure. Yet here is a prophecy that it would succeed, and that the church would support them. Was it fulfilled?

Thus, from almost a state of beggary, the family of Smiths were immediately well furnished with the "fat of the land" by their fanatical followers; many of whom were wealthy.—Page 76.

On page 151 we have the testimony of W. W. Phelps, as given in court against the church in 1838. This man, who was so faithful in the early development of the church, is now arrayed against his former associates, presents a pitiful scene. He is expelled from the church that he labored for years to build, and is now working with the enemies to convict Joseph. Surely there is no hope of that man ever again reuniting with those he is now opposing. But let us see. On page 317, is a letter published, that was written by this same W. W. Phelps, dated June 29, 1840, from which we extract the following:—

I bless the God of Israel when I lately read your prophetic blessing on my head, as follows: "The Lord will chasten him because he taketh honor to himself, and when his soul is greatly humbled, he will forsake the evil. Then shall the light of the Lord break upon him, as at noonday, and in him shall be no darkness," etc. I have seen the folly of my way, and I tremble at the gulf I have passed. . . . Says I, I will repent and live, and ask my old brethren to forgive me; and though they chasten me to death, yet I will die with them, for their God is my God, etc.

The author presented this letter to show how strongly the delusion held the votaries of Mormonism; but it goes farther than that, and shows the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith. His prediction concerning W. W. Phelps was literally fulfilled. He had sinned, but Judas like, had hardly considered the extent of the crime till it was committed. He then repents and begs his brethren to receive him back among them as a brother again.

In the summer of 1831, the year after the church was organized, we find the saints settling in Jackson County, Missouri. Such activity and rapid movements were never known to a church before in our history. Arrangements were made to plant a colony in this new country, where the land was cheap and the soil productive. Land was purchased and a site dedicated for a temple to be built. Several revelations were given, and one is published on p. 101, dated August 3, 1831, from which I extract the following:—

Ye cannot behold with your natural eyes, for the present time, the design of your God concerning those things which shall follow after much tribulation; for after much tribulation cometh the blessing.

This prophecy is well calculated to test the claims of Joseph and the work he was engaged in. There was nothing of a worldly character to indicate that those peace-loving, industrious citizens would be called on to pass through "much tribulation," and that the blessings were not to be enjoyed by the church till "after much tribulation" had been passed through. But see how literally history shows that this prophecy has been fulfilled.

On page 105 we find:—

The feelings of the people became greatly exasperated, in consequence of many falsehoods and evil reports that were in constant circulation against the church.

While it has been reported by the enemies of the church that the members were vile and vicious, we see by Mr. Kidder's own testimony how those reports were started. The people became so enraged as a result of the falsehoods, that on July 20, 1833, a mob assembled and demolished the printing office, and tarred and feathered the bishop and two or three others, and appointed the 23d to meet again and carry on the work of destruction. The day arrived, and the people met, several hundred, and plainly manifested a full determination to carry on the work of destruction. Some four or five of the leading Mormons offered their lives if they would spare the church, but they answered, "No; every man should answer for his own life, or leave the country." Here let me remark, that up to this time the Mormons had not so much as lifted a finger, even in their own defense, so tenacious were they for the precept of the gospel—turn the other cheek.—Page 106.

Can anyone read this out of a book written by an enemy to the saints, believing that they were such deluded, vicious fanatics that so many have been led to believe they were?

The citizens would collect together, and by night commit depredations on Mormons, by pulling down their houses, and whipping the men, etc., until about the fourth of November, 1833, a conflict took place, in which three or four persons were killed and others wounded.

In a few weeks the saints were all driven from their homes, in the winter, into the adjoining counties, and the writer states:—

During all these difficulties the Mormons were accused of many crimes. This, of course, was necessary for an excuse; but the people of Jackson County well knew that up to that time the Mormons had not been guilty of crime, nor done anything whereby they could criminate them by law.

The majority of the saints settled in Clay County, and in a few years

A portion of the people there also began to grow uneasy lest they should be overrun with the new sect. Without any sufficient provocation, these persons continued to stir up excitement, and the Mormons began to prepare for self-defense. At length the more rational part of the citizens saw that bloodshed would follow unless something was done. They accordingly appointed a committee, who called upon the Mormons to meet them in conference. This was done, and the latter agreed to leave the county, the committee assisting them to procure a new place of residence.—Page 130.

They went into Caldwell County. We raise our hands in horror when we read of Christians being murdered in Armenia, but history shows that the saints were treated in a similar manner in Missouri. Could they have been asked legally to leave their homes and migrate into a new county simply because a few citizens were afraid they would become the most numerous church in the county. Yet for peace' sake they comply with this unjust demand. This only postponed the conflict. The bloodhounds in human form were on their track and did not intend to stop till they obtained every cent of property that was possible to wrest from the saints. Grave stories were circulated about the saints, so that the "citizens of Carroll County held meetings, and resolved to drive the Mormons from the county." (Page 136.) Joseph was represented as being a terrible character, and among other things that he had taught, I extract the following:—

But in order to get protection and favor from God, they must become one, and be perfectly united in all things; cleanse themselves from every kind of pollution, and keep the whole law of God.—Page 132.

From this his wicked designs could be plainly seen, and it was time to stop them. He intended to overrun the country and force all to submit to him and similar reports were circulated. The militia, composed almost entirely of the mobocrats, began their work of expelling the saints as the following shows:—

Shortly after this a bloody scene ensued at a place called Haun's Mill, in which two or three companies of militia are represented to have attacked, without provocation, a house in which a number of Mormons,—men, women, and children,—were assembled for shelter, of whom twenty or thirty were killed.—Page 140.

Then comes the order from Governor L. W. Boggs to drive the saints from the State or exterminate them:—

Several thousand men were soon under way to execute these orders. But happily, before any general attack occurred, proposals of peace were made by the officers in command, and accepted by the Mormons. Their fighting men to the number of five hundred, were to surrender themselves as prisoners. They were also required to sign a deed of trust, conveying all their property to five commissioners, who were to hold it in trust for the use of the creditors of the church, and to pay the damages and expenses of the war. The surplus, in case anything remained, was to be refunded.

This act leaves a blot on the face of Missouri's history that has never been removed. As a result of such treatment, we read that

They had been stripped of their property, and deprived of most of the conveniences of traveling. The season was the most inclement of the year. Several women and children perished in their dreary flight, too feeble to sustain such cruel exposure.—Page 155.

Why was all this cruel abuse? Was it because they were too degraded to live among decent people? Let us see the conclusion of this author that tries to justify everything that was done against the saints, that he can.

We have no respect whatever for the pretended fears of the Missourians, lest the Mormons should rise up and destroy them. . . . The idea that they could accomplish such a design was preposterous, and deserved no place in the mind of a sober man. This pretended alarm, however, was a capital pretext for the many who wished to turn the tables upon the poor Mormons, and to get to themselves, by dint of club law, or of mob law, the possession of lands paid for and cultivated by others.—Page 156.

This man who is exposing Mormonism, after scraping everything together against the saints that can be found, is compelled to admit that the reason the saints were driven from Missouri was to enable these land pirates to get possession of lands owned by the saints. These blood-thirsty robbers who were in no respect better than the James gang, were willing to kill and drive feeble women and children out in the cold winter's blast to perish, could easily enough tell all manner of falsehoods to justify their deeds. Strange that such men as Rev. Mr. Kidder would pay any attention to the testimonies of such characters. But the work started then still lives, "and the blood of the saints" continues to cry unto the Lord from Missouri's plains. The Lord said in 1831, "Let no man break the laws of the land;" and he has told us that after many days all things shall be accomplished. We are just getting through the "much tribulation," and can well expect the sunshine of peace and prosperity to light our paths as it never has in the past. We might well sing, "How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord."

The work, like Daniel's stone, shall increase until it fills the "whole earth."

MINISTRY REPORTS.

At the General Conference of 1897 the following recommendation from the Presiding Bishop was adopted. The action dispensed with the publication of "ministry reports" and provided that all laboring under General Conference appointment should report to their respective missionaries in charge:—

"The printing and sending out circulars known as 'Ministry Reports' has, together with the publishing of conference minutes for the year, amounted to the sum of $197.12. It is a question of whether we can afford to pay for this matter each year an amount almost sufficient to keep an elder in the field for a year. If the reports necessary to the transaction of the business of the conference were made by those in charge of missions, with the provision that in case of any dissatisfaction on the part of any laborer in the field he should have the privilege of presenting his objections to the President of the Church or General Conference for consideration, it would answer the purpose as completely as does the present, and save the expense to the church."

ENROLLMENT IN QUORUMS.

At the General Conference of 1897 the Secretary presented lists of names of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons who had made application for enrollment in quorums, and was authorized "to enroll in proper numbers, and so publish in the Herald."

ENROLLMENT IN QUORUMS.

ELDERS, PRIESTS, TEACHERS, AND DEACONS.

The law contemplates the organization into quorums of all church officers—including elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. All such not yet enrolled may address applications for enrollment to the Church Secretary, who is authorized to present the same to quorums, for their action, that vacancies in quorums may be filled, and new quorums organized, as found necessary. (See D. C. 104: 31; 107: 43-46; 118: 1; 120: 10; etc.)

Applications should include full name and address; dates of birth and baptism; when, where, and by whom ordained; and statement of labor done during the year or years past. Please be particular to include all said items; they are necessary for information and records of quorums enrolling.

The work of enrolling should be completed and kept up every year; and applications should be forwarded personally, and before General Conference, that all lists may be completed before the busy sessions of conference begin. Please be prompt.

In bonds,

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1898.

CREDENTIALS OF DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

District officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts in the coming General Conference, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate the organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the district appointing, with name of district and place and date of holding of conference, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary.

Branches not in districts are each entitled to one delegate and one vote.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting," are as follows:—

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference;—

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation, (the full delegation not being present,) they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes."

In bonds,

RICHARD S. SALYARDS,
Secretary Reorganized Church.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 1, 1898.

RESOLUTIONS OF PITTSBURG BRANCH.

Whereas, Bro. George H. Hulmes has resigned his office as president of our branch, on account of his intention of leaving these parts soon, to engage in the more general work of the church;

Therefore, be it resolved, that we do hereby express our sincere thanks, as a branch, for the great service he has rendered us, during the seventeen years, he has been president of the Pittsburg branch,

We have found him faithful in every way, always ready to spend and be spent, in our service, always kind and considerate, and ready to sympathize with those in trouble, and go anywhere and do anything for the good of others, and the upbuilding of the Church of Christ. We very much regret that he must leave us, but we feel that our loss will be the gain of those with whom he may cast his lot in the future. To all such we recommend him as a man of God, and a true, faithful, loving brother, and that all the church may know that we love him and appreciate him.

Therefore, be it resolved, that a copy of this resolution be published in the Herald, and also a copy be spread on the minutes of the branch.

Resolved, that in complying with the wish of our beloved president to accept his resignation as presiding officer of the Pittsburg branch we do so with the greatest reluctance. When we consider his past labors so wisely and faithfully performed, we feel that as a branch and as individuals we have received instructions that will have an effect upon us for good throughout our entire lives; and because of the example of his life of love toward God and man, with humility and meekness characterizing his life as a true servant of God, in connection with the testimony of men who have had an every day acquaintance with his life while engaged in secular pursuits we feel we have the example before us of one who is walking very closely in the Master's footsteps, and that a great responsibility rests upon us because of the privilege we have had of assimilating these life examples and the teachings we have received through him.

We are consoled by the thought that many others may have the opportunities we have had, of the personal influence of his life, exhortations and counsel; and that as he leaves his work here in Pittsburg, he may enter into a larger field of usefulness.

We assure our brother that our prayers will ascend up for him, that our hearts will not forget him, and that many of his words of counsel will be treasured up in our bosoms as coming from a true friend and a true follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, and by a rising vote we manifested our appreciation of the loss of the shepherd who has so long and faithfully cared for the lambs and the sheep.

On behalf of branch,

THOMAS S. HADFIELD,
Clerk of Branch.

WHAT IS MAN?

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT.

Man's Nature and Destiny. The Spirit or Soul: Is it immortal? Does it survive the Death of the Body in a Conscious state? The views of Mortal-Soulists Examined and Refuted. In two parts. Second edition.

The author has closely examined the subject upon which he has written, both in study and in oral discussion, with those who differ from him in belief concerning the nature and destiny of man. Discussed from biblical, historical, and scientific standpoints Christ as the true type of man, in life and in death; his pre-existence, life, and death considered; the nature of man; the intermediate state of righteous and wicked; consciousness between death and the resurrection; the second death or future punishment; and the final, conscious existence of all after the judgment; are leading features of the chapters of the volume.

More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

DEAN FARRAR ON THE BIBLE.

The Bible: Its Meaning and Supremacy. By F. W. Farrar, D. D., F. R. S., Dean of Canterbury. Longmans, Green & Co.

NOTHING is more certain than that Dean Farrar's new book will be the target of a merry fusillade in both front and rear. It is admirably fitted for stirring up a commotion. It is one of those half-way measures that always call forth the alarm and the anathema of the traditionalists in every sect, and that are equally unsatisfactory to the more thorough-going rationalists. Thus Dean Farrar is pretty sure to "catch it" both coming and going, and only the comparatively few who stand at his particular halting place on the rationalistic toboggan slide will have unqualified good words for his book.

The learned Dean would probably not admit it, but it is a fact none the less, that the particular standpoint from which he views the mass of literature called the Bible, explaining it all with such sweet reasonableness, is but a very temporary halting place on the road that leads straight to the denial of all supernatural inspiration. There is no stopping place between the Papal or Puritan notion of Bible infallibility and the purely rationalistic idea that the Bible is altogether human. There is absolutely no break or barrier between Dean Farrar's present position and that of Goldwin Smith. Having given reason the reins there is no stopping place this side of agnosticism.

This fact the orthodox sticklers will not fail to point out to him with upbraiding, and the ultra-liberals with chuckling. Thus in any case the Dean is assured a lively if not a merry time.

And yet Dean Farrar's work, in the clear light of modern thought, is not deserving of blame, but of praise. The author, feeling the power and truth of modern scientific criticism, comes to the hither edge of orthodoxism and fairly reaches out his arms across the church pale to the larger thought of the time. His spirit is liberal and kindly and earnest, his literary style is limpid and charming, and his volume is sure to be more or less helpful to all save the bats and owls that have not yet been smoked out of the medieval caves into the light of the nineteenth century sun.

Dean Farrar states repeatedly that his object is to strengthen the cause of Christianity by separating it from untenable propositions. He has no sympathy with what he calls the "ostrich policy," of ignoring the difficulties that science and historical criticism have raised. He accordingly stands forth and very frankly throws away many time-honored beliefs that have been done to death in the last half century, and which now drag down many devout minds, but which Dean Farrar stoutly contends were never a part of Christianity.

In the first place the author denies verbal inspiration. "It is no part of the Christian faith to maintain that every word of the Bible was dictated supernaturally or is equally valuable or free from all error, or on the loftiest levels of morality as finally revealed." Then he declares "plenary inspiration" to be a meaningless phrase. As for the sacredness of the particular books chosen in making up the Bible, he says the matter was one wholly of human judgment. "There was no final test of their canonicity except the verifying faculty of the Christian consciousness." As for particular passages that have the unmistakable impress of barbarism on them, like the story of Jael and Sisera or the imprecatory psalms, he freely throws these aside as having no mark of God upon them. He says on this point:

"The treatment which attaches equal importance, equal value, equal validity, to all the books of the Bible—the teaching which represents all their statements as equally authoritative, and which binds us to accept them without reference to the ages or circumstances in which they originated—is unnatural, dangerous, and false. As a matter of plain honesty and common sense, it ought to be stated that the morality of some passages of the Bible is not in accord with the words of Christ. When we maintain the supremacy of the moral teaching of the Bible we mean the supremacy of that teaching which is stamped by the sanction of consciences which the gospel has illuminated."

In other words, Dean Farrar has determined to depend upon his common sense, combined with his private notion of what Christ taught, and to reject whatever does not square with these, whether in the Bible or out of it. He holds that the Bible "is" not the word of God, but merely "contains" that word. But, having taken this position, he must naturally grant every other man's right to pick and choose likewise. This is refreshingly sensible, especially as the world in general is rapidly assuming and acting on that right for itself, but it needs no signboard to proclaim that Farrar and Ingersoll here stand on the same platform.

"It cannot be too distinctly understood that we are free to judge from the standpoint of Christianity every page and every verse of the Old Testament which falls below the rule which Christ set forth." And why only "from the standpoint of Christianity"? Why only "of the Old Testament"? Dean Farrar is seeking to set up metes and bounds where none is possible.

"We must finally repudiate the notion, assumed by the Rabbis and blindly accepted by the Christians, that a deed must be right if it was done by a Samuel or a David and recorded without express condemnation." The usual method of explaining these things away by allegorizing them is shown by the author to be purely heathen. Yet when he comes to the story of the six-days' creation he rhapsodizes over it as "this most ancient allegory," and likewise treats the legend of Jonah's whale, Balaam's ass, and Joshua's still-standing sun as, respectively, allegory, symbol, and poetic trope. One may admire the moral lessons that the good Dean extracts from these stories, but it is impossible to call him consistent or to see any logical stopping place on this side of the belief that the inspiration of the Bible and that of Shakespeare are absolutely the same in kind, differing only in degree and in subject matter.

If the tale of Jonah is "instructive fiction" it is hard to divine the process by which the author comes to regard certain other miracles as literal facts. He says he has no doubt that "God has, on due occasions and for adequate purposes, made himself signally and supernaturally manifest in the affairs of men." Yet it will certainly be clear to any logical mind that whatever arbitrary standard of miracle-test Dean Farrar has set up for himself it is not one that will keep him or anybody else at the particular stage of liberalism set forth in his book. To the entirely free mind, willing to find truth no matter where or how, this is the crowning merit of the volume.

Dean Farrar boldly champions the methods of the higher criticism. He quotes freely from Dr. White's "Warfare of Science with Theology." He even joins in the deserved ridicule that has fallen on the truculent theologians who once denounced and damned Darwin. He portrays the abuses of the Bible with a graphic frankness that ought to please Ingersoll himself. And yet he thinks he is holding himself strictly within the bounds of orthodoxy. If so, then orthodoxy has come to be a compartment of thought with much more elbow room in it than most of us have been wont to believe.

The book is the work of a man who is a master of clear English, who is not afraid to let himself think, and who dares to let the breath of the times blow through his pages. — Chicago Tribune.

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES BURNING WITH TORRID HEAT.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Feb. 1.—When the steamer Warrimoo, which has just arrived in British Columbia, left Australia the heat was terrific and the number of prostrations in large cities was unprecedented. The exact number per day is not chronicled, but a long list of names of prominent men, who have fallen insensible on the sidewalk from the heat, the majority of them never to regain consciousness, is unprecedented in any of the hot years of hot Australia.

As an illustration of how hot it really is there, it is related that window panes in midday crack from the sun's rays and fall with a crash on the sidewalk. In many sections work is out of the question and sleep impossible. In some places the sidewalks are littered at night with humanity on the broad of its back drinking in the night air and staring up at the sky.

There is not a breath of air to be had on the whole vast continent for love or money, according to the telegrams received from every section that can be reached by wire.

In the colony of Victoria, where the thermometer registers 160 in the sun, these who venture out at noon take their lives in their hands. In one short paragraph the death is chronicled of a clergyman of prominence, a well-known government official, and numerous business-men, who all seem to have fallen insensible while standing on the stone steps of various large buildings there. In fact, wherever the terrific heat was thrown for many hours on stone, the stone seems to become as dangerous to human life as a live electric light wire. Says the Telegraph:—

"Victoria allowed Christmas to go by unheralded and unsung on account of the merciless sun glare and compelling north wind. In South Australia the thermometer registered 162° in the shade, the hottest December on record. The inhabitants of Adelaide are simply existing, while those who venture out in the middle of the day are bowled down by old Sol like so many ninepins."

The press of Australia has taken advantage of the awful heat to warn Australians that Klondike weather at present is exactly the opposite extreme to what they are enduring, and no Australian loving his native country now could live in Klondike. In consequence the promised big exodus from Australia has stopped and those arriving here by the steamers turn back as soon as they have received definite information of the rigorous climate of the far North.

From every city and town the heat registration has been sent to Sydney, New South Wales, and from these returns the average heat is about 124° in the shade and the lowest registration 110°, while the records show that Australasia is sweltering to the tune of 160° in the sun. During the day the heat fairly bakes the houses and peels off the paint, while in the case of stone structures the naked hand cannot be borne upon the wall. In fact, the entire inhabitants of some towns are living outdoors.

To make matters worse huge conflagrations have sprung up all over the antipodes from spontaneous combustion. The greatest damage is resulting from bush fires. From dispatches sent to the leading papers in Australia it is probable that the total losses will aggregate millions of pounds sterling. In Victoria 100,000 acres have been swept clean, and an enormous quantity of crops destroyed. In other colonies hundreds of houses and barns were burned.—Tribune.

 Mr. Moody said that a lady came to him asking how she might be delivered from the habit of exaggeration to which she was very prone. "Call it lying, madam," was the quick answer, "and deal with it as you would with any other temptation of the devil."

Heat holidays have been established by law in the public schools of Switzerland. Recognizing the well-known fact that the brain cannot work properly when the heat is excessive the children are dismissed from their tasks whenever the thermometer goes above a certain point.

CONFERENCE AT KEWANEE.

IT is not always necessary to give glowing accounts of what one is doing in the field, especially so if the efforts one makes are but casual, now and then, as the saying is. But a visit made to Kewanee, Illinois, and an attendance at the conference of the Kewanee district, February 5 and 6, was a notable occasion and worthy of notice.

The Kewanee branch purchased a church building some years ago, which at the time was standing at the end of one of the streets leading north from the town. The town was but small, the church seemed out of the line of traffic and business. But time and the mutations of human affairs sent the drift of business and the town in that direction, and the saints found themselves in the way of the car of progress. The inevitable occurred, the saints had to move, and in moving, they sold out the old church and the site; made suitable arrangements, secured a new site, and by dint of energy and finesse in management, built a new building on the new street, a little way from the old site; and were ready for the February conference, which they greeted in their new building.

It is an imposing brick structure, fronting on Tremont Street, only a few blocks away from the business centre, and easily accessible to all corners. It has basement, vestry, and cloak rooms, and an auditorium 33 by 44 feet, and will seat from 250 to 300. This capacity was taxed the first day of its occupancy, a large audience of the saints and their friends from near and far greeted the assembled officers of the church, including missionaries, John H. Lake, of the Twelve, in charge; Pres. Joseph Smith, visitor and guest by invitation; M. T. Short, of the Seventy, T. J. Sheldon, of the elders, and Leonard Houghton, priest and missionary from adjoining field.

The minutes of conference will show what business was done; but the feeling and confidence and presence of the Comforter could only be felt to be realized.

The Kewanee saints have secured a neat and commodious place of worship, which with the kind assistance of those who are friends and counted as the "congregation," they will soon pay for and then dedicate. It is now open to the service, and any of the ministry passing, will find a pleasant welcome among the saints, and to the "Free pulpit and open Bible," the motto of all free men in Christ Jesus.

Bro. John Chisnall, presiding,* can be readily found by an inquiry of any resident at the station—call and see them.

The sermons of the session were by Bro. M. T. Short, Saturday evening; Pres. J. Smith, Sunday morning at 10:30 and 2:30 p. m.; and Pres. John H. Lake, at 7:30, p. m.

The impression made was a good one.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

QUES.—When the saints have met for social meeting, and none of the presiding officers are present, nor anyone holding the priesthood, is it lawful to appoint one of the laymen, or one be chosen to preside?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—In branches where young people's prayer meetings are organized might one not holding the priesthood be appointed or chosen to preside?

A.—Yes.

We read in Book of Covenants, section 16, paragraph 4: "Contend against no church, save it be the church of the Devil. Take upon you the name of Christ, and speak the truth in soberness." Also, section 18, paragraph 4: "And of tenets thou shalt not talk, but thou shalt declare repentance and faith on the Savior, and remission of sins by baptism and by fire; yea, even the Holy Ghost."

Do these two paragraphs apply to the ministry of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, or are they confined in their application to the persons named and spoken to in said section?

Again, to whom does the latter clause of section 83, paragraph 11, apply, and who is required to observe it?

The heading to section 16, referred to, makes the instruction to be of a general nature; "and also instructions relative to building up the Church of Christ, according to the fullness of the gospel," would make the language of paragraph 4 to apply to the work of building up the church to-day. Nor can we see any good reason why the policy there presented being good for the work named at that time should not be good now. The elders have the same classes of objectors and objections to meet now that they who were carrying on the work then had to meet; and, as we believe that the Lord gave instruction applicable to the possible conditions of the church in its propagative period, and that period is not yet ended, then we cannot conclude otherwise than that the course carrying on the evangelizing work at that time would be productive of the best results now. So then to the first paragraph of the query, we answer, Yes.

Section 18, was given to Martin Harris, and is in the main confined in its application to him; yet, the second clause of paragraph 2, would seem to make it of general application. "I speak unto you that are chosen in this thing, even as one, that you may enter into my rest; for, behold, the mystery of Godliness, how great is it?"

From this one expression it is easy to conclude that whatever might in its nature be applicable to the work in a general sense then would be now. However, it will not do to make revelations purely local in character to be of general import; so we say to this section of query, No.

We learn that Elder Harris was very tenacious of his opinions, and would hammer the tenets of the faith into those who took issue with great vehemence, which sometimes gave great offense; and we know that there is now and again an elder having the same tendency, and it would be well for such to take notice of the Lord's way given to Elder Harris.

The latter sentence of paragraph 11, section 83, applies to the same class as the closing clause of paragraph 10, "them that believe." The same class named in Mark 16:17, "them that believe." Those of whom it had been written, they shall cast out devils, heal the sick, open the eyes of the blind, etc., and was addressed to the priesthood.

Similar instruction, not to boast, is given direct to the church in section 102, paragraph 7: "Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works."

This latter applies to the saints in general, for in the same revelation the saints are directed to "gather into the regions round about," etc. Hence is applicable to the church and now.

When a member is "cut off from the church" for transgression, is it right for an elder to baptize him back into the church without making the wrongs right?

The conferences of the church have made such rule that no person who has been properly disfellowshipped, or cut off for cause, can be received by baptism until he has made application to the branch of which he was a member, and in which said action of disfellowshipping was had, and making the reparation, confession, or explanation required by the branch, and obtains permission from the branch by vote to be so baptized. This rule was adopted some years ago, and is in force in the church at the present time.

Whether the action referred to in the question is right, or wrong, we do not say; we give the rule of the church in such cases, which is quite sufficient to determine what would be legal, according to church rules.

SINGERS AND CRITICS, ATTENTION.

NOTE the following letter and queries from Bro. Pearsall, and let us hear from you:—

Will you please present this question to our college professors and publish question with answer in the Herald at your earliest convenience. I think it very necessary that this explanation should be made for the benefit of all. I have always been taught that the vowel "i" in Kidron should have the Italian sound and should be pronounced Kee-dron. If I am wrong I want to be made right. For the benefit of all, I present the question.

Yours truly,
JAMES PEARSALL.

On page 102, No. 169 of Hymnal we have the following: "Thou sweet gliding Ced-ron." Does this have reference to the "brook" "Kidron," as marked in the map of the Holy Land in our Eclectic Complete Geography? If so, by what authority was the word changed?

On page 224 of the new Lute of Zion, Kedron is used. On page 84 of the "Song King," by Professor Palmer, "Ked-ron." There seems to be a difference of opinion how it should be pronounced in singing. This song some sing "See-dron" and others Kee-dron. Will some of our professors tell us which is correct, so there will be no misunderstanding hereafter?

A STRIKING CONTRAST!
ONE of the soldiers in the army of occupation, having met in the open field an opponent, put this battery "in mask" for him, and in the opportune moment uncovered it and trained it upon the opposing forces. It may be suggestive to others who are in the line at the front. The name of the soldier we will give when the smoke clears away a little; suffice it to write, he is well known by the saints and the Master, which is more to the purpose.

THE brethren are having quite a picnic with the newspapers just now. The Pacific Transcript, Pacific City, Missouri, for January 21, has the following:—

It is said the Church of Latter Day Saints led all other denominations in America last year in the per cent of increase. It is not at all improbable that prophet Joe Smith will be a world-character when both Cleveland and McKinley are forgotten.

Bro. Bond gets after the dwellers at Beardstown, Illinois, in the Evening Star for January 29, thus:—

Shamefacedness covered thousands of honorable, honest Latter Day Saints, and the blush has not faded yet, nor the spirit of fear, that wisely does not challenge public hostility without cause or reason. But the Reorganized Church has taken up the task against the odds that oppose, of fighting its way to public recognition unaided by those great introducing forces to common society, money and popularity.

Its banner inscription, Primitive Christianity, nothing more, nothing less, is our forced contention and challenge to opposition.

Sensitive as are other men to the slight of disassociations of our fellow men, and to their ill will, we might gladly turn to a fashionable world and an easy and popular service of worship of God in the church of Jesus Christ and the full blessings of his gospel, if we could find it there, and if not what shall be our condemnation or commendation in the day of judgment, if giving way to the will of unreasoning, or the terror of human anathema, or the misjudgment of men we turn our back upon our highest convictions of duty, or the counsel of God as recorded in his unchangeable law and work—that work which is to “judge us in the last day?”

The Wheeling, West Virginia, News, for January 28, notices the purchase of a lot at Benwood, and the prospect for a new church there:—

The south side will soon have a new church. The congregation of the Church of Latter Day Saints, of North Benwood, have purchased the Garrison property on the southeast corner of Jacob and Forty-second Streets, and in due time that portion of the Eighth ward will have a church of which it may be proud.

We inspected the site when at Benwood, last fall, and it is a most eligible one.

Bro. Short (there is only one M. T.) gives an excellent digest of the faith in the Beardstown, Illinois, Enterprise, for January 29, and Bro. I. N. W. Cooper has five columns and a half of review of criticisms on the faith in the Weekly Advocate, Kirksville, Missouri, for January 27. Bro. Cooper's article is a model digest of criticisms and answers to them, such as few elders can surpass; it closes with the epitome of faith.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. L. F. JOHNSON, Blue Rapids, Kansas, February 10:—

District conference closed Sunday evening; fair attendance considering the weather and condition of the roads. A very enjoyable time was had. Bro. I. N. White has been here the past week, doing most excellent service. The saints feel revived and strengthened by his wise counsel and instruction.

Bro. J. B. Roush, Denver, Colorado, the 7th inst.:—

The work here is moving nicely and we are reaching quite a number of strangers.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. J. B. ROUSH has a lengthy article in the Denver, Colorado, News of Monday, February 7, in which he presents the Reorganized Church as the continuation of the original church, and makes a clear distinction between it and the apostasy in Utah. Bro. Roush has done well in camping on the trail of the enemy, with others of the brethren who are on the lookout in behalf of the work. The Brighamite elders are holding conferences—so-called—in various places throughout the land, and attracting considerable attention by their pretensions, though the results of their work are very meager. However, wherever they have put in an appearance an opportunity has been offered the elders of the Reorganization to give the people a correct statement of facts concerning the faith delivered to the saints, in behalf of which the Reorganization proposes to prove itself worthy of the trust reposed.

Bro. J. F. McDowell has done like good service in the Iowa State Register, of February 6, published at Des Moines, in which he corrects a correspondent who had misstated the work of the church and the character and labors of some of its early ministers. The American people are having an all around opportunity to learn the truth concerning the strange religion that has originated in their native land. Our elders are giving them the facts in the case.

Sr. Clara Millen reports the saints of Calkinsville, Michigan, about twenty in number, as earnest in their labors to advance the interests of the work of God. They have a Sunday school, and prayer meeting on Sundays, except when some one preaches for them, which is not often. Like many other branches they feel the need of shepherds to care for them that the sheep be fed and kept in good condition. Sr. M. feels stronger in faith since she began reading the HERALD. It has brought her into closer touch with her brethren and sisters, and through its columns she has learned much more clearly of the spirit and workings of the church. She rejoices in the truth and hopes to abide faithful.

Mrs. R. H. Anness, a sister residing at Inland, Michigan, desires some of the ministry to call on her brother, Joseph E. Main, at Anson, Sumner County, Kansas; who will care for an elder and provide a place in which to preach the word. Sr. A. reports the branch at Inland as doing what they can, but “starving for preaching.”

Bro. George and Sr. M. Robinson, of Wanship, Summit County, Utah, earnestly desire to see some of the local or traveling ministry of the Reorganized Church. They are isolated and alone and feel the need of friendly communion with some of the household of faith. They have heard no preaching for fourteen years, but are strong in the faith, which they love more deeply as their experiences enable them to test its worth.

Good meetings at Minneapolis, think we are gaining ground; so writes Bro. E. A. Steadman, February 3.

A brother sends us a sheet of the New York World of February 6, in which is a lengthy account of the life and death of Henry M. Taber, a prominent and wealthy member of the old and wealthy congregation of the First Presbyterian church, and son-in-law of the pastor, in the metropolis, but who was at heart a confirmed agnostic. Mr. Taber, while apparently deeply pious, was a wealthy and influential supporter of agnostic propagandas. He was largely interested in the publication of such agnostic literature as the Truth Seeker. Mr. Taber died January 4, last, and following his death came the announcement of his views and the publication of a book written by him, “Faith or Fact,” a vigorous attack upon Christianity, with a preface by Robert G. Ingersoll. Mr. Ephraim E. Hichcock, another prominent member of said church, and who died January 13, also died an agnostic, being also interested in the Truth Seeker. The circumstances of the religious professions of these men, it seems to us, is more of a blow at agnosticism than at Christianity. While their real attitude as agnostics is to be deplored, agnostics have nothing to be proud of in the deception practiced in their professions of faith. We note these instances in passing as among some of the strange things peculiar to the age. They furnish food for sober thought, as showing the possible condition of some who have attached themselves to forms of faith but who lack faith in what they profess.

Bro. A. W. Gorbutt, of Chicago, sends us a copy of an article he had written for the Western Catholic World, of Chicago, in refutation of statements made by the World editor to the effect that Mormonism, so called, was dying out in America. The article contains some good points, but is not likely to "see daylight," because of criticisms upon the ancient and modern Catholic hierarchy.

Bro. W. S. Taylor, of Sherwin Junction, Kansas, has been assisting Bro. J. A. Davis in new openings near the point named. He mentions some public lectures delivered by a Mr. Robert Norman, of the Chautauqua college, in which that gentleman made plain the distinctions between the Reorganized and the Utah churches. He also spoke well of our ministry, some of whom he knew personally, expressing a willingness to accept our baptisms. This Bro. Taylor writes under date of February 9.

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 9.—The foreign demand for spirits is increasing rapidly. This is the first shipment made to Hamburg since 1882, as Germany had been producing her own spirits, but the failure of the potato crop has reduced the supply.

The letter of de Lome has caused an international sensation and is much discussed in diplomatic circles at home and abroad. The Spanish government has accepted the resignation, but has not as yet made amends by condemning the action. It is hinted that the acceptance of the Minister's resignation without censure may result in the recall of Minister Woodford from Spain, and the ceasing of diplomatic relations between the two governments.

CONVERSATION AND READING.

"CONVERSATION is a fine art. In many places it is growing to be a lost art. This ought never to be true in the family, or a potent factor in education is lost. Nothing fixes the status of family life more surely than its prevailing type of conversation, or the lack of familiar conversation between parents and children. If the father is but a silent or gruff presence in the home circle, whose coming hushes the chatter of children, there can be no unity, no sympathetic love in that home. If dress, or gossip, good natured or bad, form the staple of the mother's talk, there will be little development of noble character; if children have secrets from parents, and little to talk about with them or in their presence, look out for breakers ahead. These things indicate that the atmosphere of home is not right—that it is not a healthy atmosphere mentally and spiritually.

"The atmosphere which permeates a home has much to do not only with its style of conversation, but with the growth of all that is good and noble therein. It should inspire to all pleasant, pure, and noble deeds, as the sweet spring air inspires the tree to leaf out, and the flowers to bloom. To be so it must be pure, loving, sympathetic, cheerful, sunshiny. Its breezes should blow over the garden of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, bringing the fragrant breath of that charity which suffereth long and is kind; that envieth not, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things for sweet love's sake. It should be an atmosphere of freedom, in which children can develop originality in accordance with the laws of their own being. It should be permeated with warmth and light proceeding from the Sun of Righteousness, and reflected from parents upon children.

"In such a home atmosphere the right type of conversation will grow and flourish. It will be loving and sympathetic, as it ought to be. Many hearts starve for lack of loving, appreciative words; if spoken they would voice the true sentiment of the heart, but are repressed for fear of being charged with sentimentalism. Never fear that. True sentiment is the highest thing, as well as the strongest motive power, in the universe. If the words do voice the feeling of the heart, let them be spoken; they will go from heart to heart, and we will never regret them. Few of us passed middle life do not regret leaving unspoken some such words till the ears that should have heard them were dulled in death.

"Conversation should be bright and genial, bubbling over with fun and frolic when the 'spirit so moves.' We pity the man or woman who cannot talk nonsense; and doubly do we pity their children. Hours of joyous, rollicking fun with father or mother often impress themselves more deeply upon children's minds than those spent in more staid fashion, and the witty sayings which flashed through them from the lips of father or mother are often long remembered. Be sure your children can enjoy all your good things as no stranger can, so don't keep your best thoughts for company; give them to the home circle. Study to make yourself a good conversationalist for the sake of your children. It will pay. They may not take to books, and so will learn little from them; but you are a book they never tire of studying, and whatever drops from your lips has more weight with them than all the tomes of Egypt. . . .

"The table talk should be such as interests the whole family and all can join in. Often meals are the only times the whole family are together on week days, and they should be made bright, cheery occasions, tending to make the family feel its oneness. The talk should not be confined to the food, whether in praise or complaint, for that gives the gratification of appetite too great prominence; it should not be of unpleasant subjects, as that impairs digestion; it should be of something in which all are interested and which all enjoy. Reserve deeper topics for other hours; let meal times be bright, happy, and free from care. If you have spent a restless night, don't detail all its sufferings at the breakfast table; if business does go wrong, don't season the family dinner with its perplexities.

"At the proper time, talk over business with your children, make them feel that they are partners in the family firm. Let them know the amount of the family income, and let them be early trained to adjust their desires to it. This talking over affairs with your children, not only helps to train them to a wise economy, it is a good preparation for life work, and often assists in deciding what life work shall be. Better than all this, it strengthens the bonds between parent and children, makes sympathy between them more quick and intelligent, and many a time tides a man over difficulties. Many men have failed in business because they have never thus made wife and children their confidantes. To save them pain, they have hid their embarrassments from the home circle. Knowing no reason for retrenchment, family expenses have gone on as usual, perhaps with greater lavishness to hide the fear of failure, till the crash came, and all suffer together in the wreck. On the other hand, we know of many cases where men have been saved from failure because wife and children knew the exact state of affairs, and lovingly helped the father to bear the burden. Even when the crash could not be averted, the sympathy and helpfulness of wife and children have made its effects easy to bear. For these and other obvious reasons, we reiterate, talk over business affairs in the family circle. Talk over the news of the day, whatever of interest is transpiring in your own neighborhood, in the State, the nation, the world. History is being made very rapidly these days; it is better that your child should receive it as a living impression, than that he should learn it first, a score of years hence, from a text-book. Lately we were visiting in a home where there were six children under twelve years old. The evening papers came before the father came from business. I was pleased to see how eagerly they were scanned by the ten-year-old son, and how intelligently he told their most important items. There was no lack of topics for conversation in that family; father, mother, and every child brought something to the family feast, from the day's experience in business, in the household, the schoolroom, or the playground.

"Use nothing but pure, good language in familiar conversation. The talk of the household becomes, in nine cases out of ten, the talk of the man or woman. I have known professional men, well educated in the schools, who never outgrow the incorrect expressions used in childhood. Of course they knew better, but in the heat of debate, or the excitement of eager talk the incorrect expression would slip from their tongues, to their mortification and grief. It is cruel to allow children to form such habits of speech which will cling to them, a badge of dishonor, all their lives."—Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE.—CONTINUED.

TUESDAY, 9:30 a. m.—The Primary class drill was conducted by Sr. Louise Palfrey, using lesson 1 of Quarterly, "Jesus the Son of Man" being the subject. Sr. Palfrey began her work with a few explanatory remarks to the audience of the method she would pursue. She said the object of the lesson was to teach the human side of Christ, and why he assumed the human.

In order to make them clear and impressive, it was necessary to take into consideration the ages and abilities of the class in determining the teaching points to use, and how to present them.

With the present class she considered the use of the term, "Jesus the Son of Man," would be confusing with the double idea of his sonship presented in the following lesson, "Jesus the Son of God." Since the design, after all, was to teach the humanity of Christ, that idea could be taught without using the term, leaving the children's minds clear to learn, in the next lesson, to call Jesus the Son of God, which term it was more important they know, since it conveyed the chief character of Christ.

2. In teaching young minds it must be remembered that but few points should be presented in one lesson. Hence, and taking her present class into consideration (the class was composed of little ones that could not read yet), she deemed it not wise to go further than the purpose Jesus came to earth in human form for, "Jesus came to save that which was lost," and explain the meaning of "that which was lost." Leave how Jesus saved the lost to be unfolded, principle by principle, in future lessons, keeping ever before the class, as they go along, the idea they learn at the start—"Jesus came to save that which was lost." The name Galilee, Palestine, Nazareth, and name of the angel Gabriel, she would not try to teach the children; she wanted them to learn the name of Mary, Jesus' mother, and if their childish memories were taxed too much, they would get things mixed up, and not remember anything distinctly.

The plan of the lesson was outlined as follows:—

CENTRAL THOUGHT.

Jesus came to save that which was lost.

THEME.

Humanity of Jesus. { Babyhood.
Boyhood.
Manhood.

Sr. Palfrey then turned to her class and proceeded with the teaching, using no quarterly from first to last. She made a few informal remarks to the children, first, to make them feel at home, telling them she was glad to see them, asking them if it had hurried them to come so early, etc., etc.

To catch the children's attention on the start, she showed them a picture of Mary; this introduced the lesson. "Do you see this woman?" was asked. "Doesn't she look sweet and good? Don't you think you would like her?" Then the teacher went on to describe Mary's goodness, how she loved the Lord, etc., the children gazing at the picture the while. Told them how the angel was sent to her, who greeted her by "Hail," "just as we would say 'good morning,' you know," and told Mary not to be afraid.

The children were told the message the angel was sent to make known to Mary, how she should be blessed, and that the baby's name should be—a pause—"what do you think?—Jesus?" Here a picture of the infant Jesus was shown to the interested children, and they were asked, "You've all heard something about Jesus, haven't you?" "Tell me some things you know about him."

The children were often thus questioned, as the lesson story proceeded, to draw them out, in a natural way, getting into little conversations now and then.

That Jesus came into the world a baby like other people, had to be fed, etc., like other babies, and she "expected it cried," too, was told. Then his life was traced to boyhood, showing his humanity all along, but keeping clear, too, his divinity, that he needed not to be taught, illustrating with the story of Jesus going to the temple when he was only twelve years old, and knowing more, and "telling those grown up, wise men, and some of them were old men, too,—see"—pointing to another picture shown at this point, and the children crowded around to see it,—“see, these men, here, have gray hair, and those are baldheaded—Jesus told them more about God and his ways than they knew."

Reaching the stage of Jesus' manhood, the children were told how he worked as other men till he was thirty years old, when he began to preach; "and, children, listen to what Jesus told the people; he said that he had 'come to save that which was lost.' Now you say it, because this is so important we all want to learn it."

The teacher then had each child repeat the text, and in this natural manner they learned it.

One little boy, being very timid, she got down close to him, had him repeat the text after her, then he repeated it all through in a whisper.

She asked the children, "Who was lost?" No answer being given (it was not expected, of course, only a way of awakening the little minds for the explanation). "It was people, every body; none of us could have been saved if Jesus had not come; we should all have been lost. It means lost from heaven; we should not have been able to find the way to heaven if Jesus had not come."

"You know when you get lost and can't find the way home you are glad when Papa or Mama finds you and shows you the way, are you not?" The children assented.

"God made us all and he loves us and wants us to go to heaven where it is so beautiful and happy. Do you know what heaven is like?"

One little girl said, "We've got a picture of heaven at home; there's a man going up in a buggy."

Teacher corrected this idea, simply, by asking the children if they thought that was the way people went to heaven. The little girl, with the other children, readily answered, No.

"No," said the teacher; "that is not the way; the picture must mean something else, must it not?"

"How many of you want to go to heaven, where little boys and girls and big people, too, will be so happy?" All raised their hands.

"And, children, God wants you to go, too; that is the reason he sent Jesus to this world, so we could go, for Jesus came—what for?"

Here the children repeated again the golden text, and they were reviewed on the lesson, being questioned, Who was lost? Where were they lost from? Who came to save? Wasn't God good, and wasn't Jesus good to come? etc., etc. The teacher believed in artful repetition to fasten the points she wanted the children to learn, and next questioned them on lesson theme, how Jesus came into the world, how he was like other children; how much wiser, though, what he did when he was twelve years old that showed it, etc., etc., leading up again to the central thought,—Jesus came to save, etc.—questioning upon which, last, to leave it fresh in the children's minds, she closed.

The children were prompt in answering. Their confidence had been won, and they understood the lesson.

1. After the class drill was over, there was interesting discussion entered into. The picture the child had referred to in class was of Elijah going to heaven in a chariot of fire. Some asked if it should not have been so explained to the child. Sr. Palfrey replied that in order to do so, something of the marvelous part about it would have to be told to make the happening clear to the children, and she considered it would detract from the lesson, and be confusing to such young minds.

She suggested that teachers often finished before the class time was up, and then had opportunity, and should take note of such incidents occurring during the recitation, and entertain the class by telling them the stories while waiting.

2. Some thought the teacher should have used the exact terms given in the lesson, "The Son of Man," but she believed the sense or meaning was the important thing, and the method by which that could be conveyed most correctly and clearly was the best; certainly she believed in using terms exactly when children could comprehend them, but when they could not, it would be making the truth subordinate to the letter.

3. The teacher's method throughout the drill was informal; she believed the golden text should be taught where it naturally suggested itself. A teacher, she said, should always have a clearly defined system in his or her own mind, but should not allow the "sharp corners" of it to be apparent. Naturalness would obviate monotony in teaching; no two times might be just alike.

Where children could not read the lesson, the quarterly should not be used in the class. The teacher should tell the lesson, not read it from the quarterly; by keeping her eyes on the children, the teacher can gain their attention better.

4. Number in the class should be from eight to ten.

Question was asked: Suppose we have a class composed of children of unequal ages and abilities, and to divide the class would make but three or four in each new class formed—would it be well to do so?

Answered, yes. A teacher can do justice to a small number, where it is more difficult to do so with too large a class, or ungraded members.

Most favorable form of class—semicircle. Position of teacher—near center, sitting.

5. In preparing the lesson, consider capability of class and adapt the lesson accordingly.

The remarks prefacing the above class drill, and the methods of the drill, illustrate.

6. In teaching there must be telling, also be careful to question much to draw the children out. Repeat often, but in a varied manner, so as not to become tiresome. Use simplest language. It is said that eighty per cent of what we learn comes through the eye. This is especially true of children, hence use pictures, object lessons, and such helps as much as possible. They also make the lesson more attractive to the child.

7. Where children cannot read, what use should the teacher make of the quarterly?

Answer. To help her at home in preparing the lesson.

GRINNELL, Iowa, Feb. 8.

Editors Herald:—After looking after the interests of the work in Des Moines in November last, I went to Nevada, Story County, where I held a series of twenty services in the Baptist church, which cost Brn. Hidy and Hardy, residents there, fifty cents per service. Audiences there not large, but its staying qualities were good, holding out to the end. Good liberty granted; interest keen. Hearers mostly middle-aged and older. One lady, eighty-five years old, Aunt Mary Reedington, is believing, investigating, and, I think, will soon be with us. On concluding at Nevada, I went to Colo, eight miles east, and conducted a series of thirteen services in the Christian church. My efforts there were promptly seconded by Bro. Frank L'Hommedieu and wife and mother-in-law, Sr. Bett, all of whom reside there. Bro. L'Hommedieu owns a controlling interest in the church there, and consequently it cost us light, fuel, and janitor work only. The last we shared among ourselves. We all felt willing to work, so we got along nicely.

On December 20 a telegram came, calling for me to come home on account of illness of my wife. I arranged and left for Lamoni the same evening, leaving two appointments out unfulfilled. But I feel sure all concerned forgave the disappointments when informed of the circumstances, and no doubt "our Father" has a regard for our anxieties in times of trial. On this account I was absent from my field of labor just one month. Our Father was gracious to us in our time of need, and greatly blessed through the administration of his servants. Our deepest gratitude for such blessings seems weak and faint, yet we give him the glory for life and health.

I left home again January 21, visited Runnells, and held thirteen preaching services with large audiences and growing interest. Some there are deeply interested, and are near the gateway of the divine fold.

Came to this place the 3d instant to attend the Sunday school convention and conference of this district, held February 4 to 6. A moderate attendance only present, but the sessions of both were interesting. Neither district president nor clerk were able to attend, circumstances forbidding; but officers pro tem. were provided, and the work to be done was attended to so far as presented; done pleasantly, agreeably. A number of encouraging reports were read from the local laborers, as well as missionaries, which went to show progress made in the work since the previous conference. Delegates to the General Convention and Conference were chosen. The Bishop's agent's report showed a healthy growth since the opening of the new year, and thus the "men of business" are laboring together with the ministry to move the great latter-day work along to victory.

Bro. McDowell is holding the fort at Des Moines, and improving further the opportunity to set the work before the people through the capital city papers, now being so freely opened to us.

Bro. E. B. Morgan and I are holding services here this week, in the G. A. R. hall, trying to instruct those who became interested during the conference; attendance good. Resident saints standing by the cause diligently, cheerfully. Bro. J. S. Roth entertaining a cold at present, but is doing it in a hopeful mood. Bro. Kephart doing Warren County, ministerially, at last accounts.

On the move,

C. SCOTT.

SANDY, Utah, Jan. 31.

Editors Herald:—I send a few lines, not to give an itemized account of the ups and downs met with in this peculiar field nor of the kind receptions tendered the missionary by this or the other brother or sister, for if each elder should enumerate all these the Herald would need to be enlarged or their communications go unpublished. We have as kind and warm-hearted saints in this mission as I have had the pleasure to meet anywhere; and the poor and humble who share with the missionary are entitled to equal credit with the one in more fortunate circumstances who does the same. It would be unjust to mention one and ignore the other.

One difficulty in gospel work, in my experience is to reach the ears of such among this people as are honest in heart and are indeed seeking for the truth. It is only upon a rare occasion that a public house or hall can be obtained, notwithstanding missionaries going from here constantly make the boast among the people that their church buildings will be opened to every denomination, and that all will be accorded a hearing. There may be some truth in the statement with reference to other churches, but not with regard to the Reorganization. I have upon several occasions when applying for a house to preach in, met with the answer, "Any other denomination can have the house, but you cannot."

Sometimes I have thought there were only a few honest people here, but the Lord knows better than I; and after all there may be many who would not knowingly bow the knee to Baal, but whose eyes are blinded through tradition and influences surrounding them. But I have not much hope of many being made to see the truth, unless the Lord in some way shall speak to them "with a voice louder than that which shall shake the earth."

Here one can meet the greatest deceptions and falsehoods, all in the name of religion, and by people who in other respects are kind and good, which seems very strange. Priestly rule is now recognized fully as much as some years ago, and with statehood, the authorities feel themselves more completely in control of not only ecclesiastical but also of temporal matters. The practice of polygamy is not a secret now, and the constitutional law of the State against it is but a dead letter. It is indeed as a leading man in the church here stated to me recently: "It would be suicidal to either party to attempt to enforce the law." So politicians, anxious to retain power, put forth no effort to magnify the law. Of course it is claimed that no new plural marriages are contracted, but who knows? Marriages by proxy can be performed for the dead, and if so, what may not be done for the living? As long as men and women can live together and beget children in that relationship, polygamy is thriving in spite of statements to the contrary.

Another difficulty in this mission, according to my observation, is to keep people interested in the work after they have become convinced of its truth and have been brought into the fold. This is especially true of the young, who are so easily led away by the influences and prevailing customs of the people. While this is a healthy climate in other respects, I believe with Bro. J. T. Davis, that the spiritual atmospheric condition of this rocky mountain country is not conducive to the growth and development of true and genuine Latter Day Saints. It may not be wisdom to encourage all who come into the church to leave here, yet I believe that parents with growing families, who can see their way clear for a livelihood would do well to go where their children would be under different influences, before it is too late. I wish the church was in a condition to encourage gathering somewhere in the regions round about the land of Zion, believing that such would be a material help, especially to this mission, and I think for the good of the work in other places also.

I notice that a late writer in the Herald thinks that "every large city branch should have a pastor, devoting his entire time to church work, and not be engaged in manual toil." While believing that city work in many respects differs from that in rural districts, I very much doubt that improvements can be made upon the law which makes the priest the special visiting officer, and the teacher the one to watch over the church always. A pastor appointed and supported by the general church who can devote his entire time to church work in the branch, will, of course, bring us nearer the custom of other churches; but when we remember that this latter-day message is especially to warn the world, I am afraid that such appointments would tend to materially cripple the mission work.

In the days of Alma "the priests left their labor, to impart the word of God unto the people, the people also left their labors to hear the word of God. And when the priest had imparted unto them the word of God, they all returned again diligently unto their labors; and the priest, not esteeming himself above his hearers." (Alma 1: 22, 23.) Under these conditions the Church of God then prospered and was blessed; and in looking back upon the history of the latter-day work I find that when the people and ministry have been faithful it has prospered under like conditions. I believe I am not mistaken when I say that as effectual and spiritual sermons have been preached by brethren who have been engaged in manual toil in the shops, the mines, and on the farms, as by others. Of course those called to bear abroad the message cannot so engage, but I believe that the local ministry can do that now as effectually as in times past. I have been sorry sometimes to see brethren of the traveling ministry, who were not branch officers, advertise themselves as pastors of local congregations, thus ignoring instead of encouraging those chosen to be the shepherds of the flock.

But I have said enough upon this matter, more than I intended to when I began; but what is said is with good feelings to all, and with the hope that we may all profit by what the Lord has given unto us as well as by our experiences.

Yours in the faith,
H. N. HANSEN.

NEW STRAITSVILLE, Ohio, Feb. 2.

Editors Herald:—Though I have not written for a long time, have been doing what I could in the work of the Master. The laborers are very few in this district, but we are making some progress. I have been giving attention to the branches in this district, trying to encourage the saints to a more consecrated life of faith and works. On the evening of January 14 I began meeting in the saints' chapel at Vales Mills. The branch officers had been rather remiss in duty for a long time. I tried to urge them to duty and succeeded fairly well, and with them I visited as many of the saints as we well could, and the results were good, and quite a number were heard to say, "I have been greatly blessed and strengthened," and resolved to live a better life. Twelve were baptized, others are believing, and friends were made; but as usual the Devil, seeing there was going to be a good work done, tried to inspire one to do some of his dirty work, but it did not work out any good for Mr. Devil. I remained there over three Sundays, and though hindered by high water to some extent, we held five or six prayer and testimony day meetings, and preached every night but one. Bro. S. J. Jeffers assisted me most of the time; we had large and attentive congregations.

Monday, the 31st, I started for home; on arriving at Radcliff I received a telegram from Bro. Isaac Vernon, saying that his father (who has been failing all winter) was sinking very fast, and requesting me to come at once. The sons, Isaac and Thomas, had some time ago spoken to me in regard to his funeral. I arrived yesterday at two p. m., and learned on my arrival that he had passed away at 11:15 a. m. The funeral will take place to-morrow in the M. E. chapel. On arriving here I was informed that my son H. E. was holding forth at Congo, a new opening nine miles from here, and learning that he was not in very good condition for preaching on account of hoarseness, I felt desirous of relieving him for one night, and notwithstanding it was very cold and the roads very bad, Bro. Elmer Barstow and I mounted two fleet horses and arrived at Congo in good time for service, where I spoke in a union chapel to a fair-sized congregation of very attentive listeners; there appears to be some interest there. H. E. will remain there as long as the interest will justify. Bro. E. Barstow and I returned to the home of his father, Bro. Levi Barstow, not as warm as we have been sometimes in July.

Saturday I expect to go home and will remain a week, then will labor with the Bierly branch awhile, then on to La Grange. We are expecting Bro. G. T. Griffiths in this district about the 15th of this month. The Lord has blessed me this conference year. I have had good liberty in speaking the word. My administrations have been blessed, and some of them very signally; some children, according to the testimony of parents, were rescued from the grasp of the destroyer. To God be all the praise. May the Lord bless his people, and may they speedily prepare for the coming of our Lord.

Hopefully yours in the conflict,
JAMES MOLER.

MILLERSBURG, Ill., Feb. 1.

Editors Herald:—My visit to southwestern Wisconsin was one of profit and pleasure, and I hope it was to those whom I was permitted to associate with. On my way back to my mission field in Illinois I called at Adamsville and Argyle, Wisconsin. Just prior to my arrival at Adamsville Bro. McKinzy had undergone a surgical operation which caused him to be very sick at the time of my visit.

At Argyle I had a very pleasant visit with our faithful and esteemed brother, Knute Gregory. At Woodford I preached one sermon in the town hall to a large and attentive audience; if the effort could have been continued it would have resulted in good for the Master's cause; as I had to pay seventy-five cents per night for the hall, besides hotel fare, I could not well continue. The interest created by Bro. J. W. Peterson about one year ago has not all vanished. Here would be a good location for a gospel tent. (Brethren in southern Wisconsin please take note.)

I called at Savanna, Illinois, where I found some very pleasant saints, who seemed to be doing the best they can under the circumstances. I preached three sermons, and should have continued, but the rules of the school board limits all meetings to three nights. I think Savanna is another good location for a gospel tent. My short visit at Rock Island and Davenport was a very pleasant one indeed. We were glad to note the increased interest in gospel matters at those places. While there I sojourned part of the time with my old-time friend and brother, L. E. Hills. He and Bro. W. E. LaRue seemed to be doing a good work. Bro. M. T. Short in his usual good humor returned home last evening in time to assist us in preaching service. He reports success in the labors of Bro. M. H. Bond and himself.

I expect to remain at Millersburg a few days and then go to Kewanee district conference. Ever anxious for the success of Zion's cause, and endeavoring to labor to that end,

I am, your brother in gospel bonds,
LEONARD HOUGHTON.

BILOXI, Miss., Jan. 24.

Editors Herald:—The saints here, though few in number, have been permitted to enjoy the blessings and privileges of the gospel. Bro. M. A. Booker's family of eight, all had the yellow fever. Bro. Booker was so seriously sick as to have black vomit; but by the use of the oil consecrated for the use of the sick, accompanied with the prayer of faith, he and all his family recovered.

As soon as quarantine was raised Bro. F. P. Scarecliff, of Scranton, without waiting for an invitation to do so, came over and held sacrament meeting. How grateful we all felt for his thoughtful kindness; and what a precious blessing of peace and comfort attended his words of instruction and administration of the ordinance. Our hearts were cheered and our determination strengthened to live the gospel as far as lay in our power to do so.

Last week Bro. J. D. Erwin, who is on his way home to Texas, stopped over and preached for us, beginning Thursday night and closing Sunday night. He is a good speaker, full of love and zeal for the latter-day work. A good congregation turned out to hear him, paying the best of attention and courteous treatment. Some are interested and investigating. One man, a Catholic, who heard Bro. Erwin at Moss Point, I think, a year ago, admitted to Bro. Levins that Bro. Erwin clearly proved his claims, and though he is convinced, has not yet obeyed. One lady was so much interested that she called Sister Levins out of her house and engaged her in conversation about an hour, saying she wanted to know something more about our church. Bro. and Sr. Levins are saints whose consistent lives have won for them the respect and confidence of their friends not in the church, as well as those who are members, and we feel we may safely leave this inquiring sister in their hands.

Bro. Erwin's lecture from the chart on Sunday night drew out a crowded house, which gave the most interested attention while he presented the claims of the restored gospel. At the close of the meeting our kind friend, Bro. Creel, a minister of the Baptist Church, announced a lecture for next Sunday night, in which he would try to prove that the Baptist Church did not originate with Roger Williams. Bro. Creel has always been a courteous and careful hearer at our meetings, and we are always glad to see him out. But we think he must necessarily fail to prove the point he wishes to prove, as the standard histories are against him, as well as some of the writers of his own denomination.

Bro. Erwin baptized and confirmed one child and held sacrament meeting while here. The ceremony of baptism was attended by a large congregation, to whom he explained briefly and clearly the differences between the Utah Mormons and the Reorganized Church.

We believe that good was done during his visit here, and look forward to the pleasant weather of April and May when we hope he can come with the tent and stay as long as the interest lasts, preaching and teaching the full gospel of Christ and gathering out the honest in heart who desire the truth. May God bless Bro. Erwin's labors here, and send him to us again to complete the work so well begun.

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. IDA STEWART.

VALES MILLS, O., Feb. 2.

Editors Herald:—I write that your readers may know we are still in the faith and battling for the right. Bro. James Moler came here January 13. We commenced meeting the 14th and held meetings every night and part of the time in daytime, with the exception of one night on account of rain, which raised the creek so high we could not get to the church house for three nights. But it was so ordered that Bro. Moler was on one side of the water and I on the other. He occupied a schoolhouse and I in Brn. Jasper and Giles Bowen's houses. We have had splendid meetings, with as good interest as I have ever seen at this place, both with members and outsiders, and the result is that twelve have been baptized, two on the 21st and ten on the 29th, six men and six women; while there are several who are near the door, as they have expressed the desire to be baptized at sometime in the near future. Bro. Moler's visit here was in good time, as there was quite a good deal of work among the members that needed looking after, which we feel has been done in such way as will be lasting, while there are some that will have to be dealt with yet.

Our branch officers are in great cheer, and the prospect is now that I will have more help than I have ever had in that way, which I thank the good Father for. It has been quite a task for me to look after all the branch affairs, with the other duties devolving on me. But I thank our heavenly Father for the blessings received, and for the desire to press on in this great work. We expect Bro. G. T. Griffiths here about the 15th. We are anxious to see him. He is ever welcome with the saints at Vales. Without any doubt of the final result of the latter-day work, I remain,

Yours in faith,

S. J. JEFFERS.

BARODA, Mich., Feb. 3.

Editors Herald:—The D. H. Bays' conflict is ended, and we send a few items. Bro. Libbeus Scott had been making his home at Berrien Springs for a few months, and while there talked the gospel with different ones. As a result three persons became convinced of the truth and were baptized. One of the three was a member of the Baptist Church. As the Baptist preacher saw a member less, he contemplated a thinner slice of bread and butter, and to prevent further shortening of rations, he joined with the other preachers in sending for Davis H. Bays to "refute and expose Mormonism." This same Baptist preacher—Smith by name—stated, with as long a face as if he had been telling the truth, that their purpose was to address themselves to the honest men and women of the Latter Day Saint Church, and if possible lead them back from the error of their ways; though the facts in the case are, there is but one saint in the town, and no others nearer than eight miles away.

According to arrangement Mr. Bays came and commenced work January 17. The first evening he spoke so highly of the Reorganized Church that many seemed disgusted. He stated that he never knew a purer set of Christian men and women than there are in the Reorganized Church; that Joseph Smith is a perfect Christian, and as dear to him as a brother; that this church does not practice, preach, or believe in polygamy; that it was instrumental in the passage of the Edmund's Bill; and that E. C. Briggs was the first missionary sent to convert the Mormons.

The second evening Bays became bolder; there being no elder present, he challenged the elders to come and defend their faith, and instructed the writer to bear the word to them. As a result, the next evening Brn. E. C. Briggs, S. W. L. Scott, and H. C. Bronson were on hand. He then denied the challenge. They met, however, to arrange propositions; our people asking him to affirm that any one or all of the four churches of Berrien Springs is in harmony with the New Testament church, and therefore the church of Jesus Christ; but he and his ministerial colleagues refused, claiming that they are parts of the church; just what parts we do not know. We have wondered if they are parts how many such churches one would have to join before becoming a member in full.

No debate being arranged for, Mr. Bays went on with his lectures during the week—our people giving him our quiet and respectful attention. The points he tried to make were these: That we originated in polygamy; the founders of the Reorganization having come out of Strangism. That Joseph the Seer was a polygamist—bringing those reliable (?) affidavits of polygamous women in proof of same. That Joseph Smith made the Book of Mormon. The proof he tried to bring was that Joseph Smith made it to prove his own doctrine. He then tried to show that one of our hobbies is the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit, and that the Book of Mormon in no place taught it. That we believe in redemption from hell, and the Book of Mormon was on the other side. He made a great ado about our people's not believing in an everlasting burning hell; then said there wasn't one of the churches in Berrien Springs that taught such a hell, and proved it by the sectarian preachers on the rostrum. When Bro. Scott quoted Spurgeon on the subject, they tried to go back on it, that it was only a newspaper reporter's statement of Spurgeon's words. Bays then said he would put our elders and the Doctrine and Covenants on one side, and the Book of Mormon and Talmage on the other, and for his part he would stand with Talmage.

Reader; can you tell me whether Mr. Bays believes in a burning hell or not?

Another weighty objection to the Book of Mormon is that the sea of Irreantum cannot be found. He says he sent copies of the characters—cutting the leaf from Presidency and Priesthood—to scholars of Oriental languages, even to Jerusalem, to prove them a fraud; that scholars cannot read them, and that there is no Egyptian about them. He also tries to prove that the "five books of Moses" is a modern expression, and that they never were written on brass plates. He states that the sticks of Judah and of Joseph were simply two sticks, upon one of which were written the words "For Judah," and on the other, "For Joseph." Sublime! isn't it? The six principles of doctrine he claims belonged to the Mosaic economy, and were abolished in Christ.

After six nights of warping God's word to his ideas, making many assertions with no proof, he closed his lectures. Then our elders hired the hall and began their replies, together with enough gospel to show our position upon disputed points.

Bro. S. W. L. Scott made the replies, and while he is beloved by the entire district, we never had reason to be prouder of him than during the present conflict. He held the attention throughout, of the most prejudiced audience we ever saw. His arguments were simply unanswerable.

At the close of each evening Mr. Bays took of our time and tried to review Bro. Scott's talk. He did not try in many cases to bring argument in rebuttal; his chief weapons were assertions, slurs, and low insinuations. I was disappointed in Mr. Bays, for we had heard that he is logical. We tried to follow him from an unbiased standpoint, and we find that he does not hesitate in denying statements once made, nor in misrepresenting what others have said. If he ever won a debate for the church by the low trickery he now employs, it certainly was no victory for the church to be proud of. We believe that prejudice is lessened to a certain degree; and this we know, that our enemies give our elders the credit of being scholarly, well informed on Bible topics, and gentlemanly throughout.

The saints are firmer in the faith than ever, and seem determined to live as near to the pattern as possible, so that when storms of persecution fall they may be unshaken.

Yours in bonds,

MRS. J. H. ROYCE.

WINTER HARBOR, Me., Feb. 2.

Editors Herald:—While at South Gouldsboro I had the privilege of preaching in this place, a village of four hundred inhabitants. Mr. P. Joy, of the Trilby House, allowed me the use of his hall, lighting and heating it of his own accord. We seldom find men so generous. He and his esteemed wife invited me to make the Trilby House my home, which I did part of the time. Although there was a Baptist revival going on, large congregations greeted me every night; many coming to hear me who never go to meeting. The Pendeltons furnished us with fine music, both vocal and instrumental, while others in many ways used their influence to make me welcome. Several came to me and said, "Make my house your home night and day." One can appreciate such kindness after being met in some other places with frowns and curses. At this place I had no opposition except from one man.

My time was mostly spent each day in visiting from house to house and talking upon the gospel.

I preached a few times in Birch Harbor with fair liberty, to good-sized congregations; thence to Prospect, a village where dwell some of the finest and most noted men of Hancock County. Many of these men came to hear me, and expressed themselves as well satisfied. I feel indebted to them for the use of the church, as some objected. One lady writing me quite an impertinent letter saying I must furnish my own light and wood for my meetings; but she afterwards repented and came to hear me. A good old friend, Samuel Brown, furnished oil and wood, and something to eat and a place to stop. The Brn. Sargent and Harmond at South Gouldsboro have endeared themselves to me by their many acts of kindness. If large congregations, good interest, and good liberty are evidences of success, we can say we have been successful. I go to North Hancock.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 7.

Editors Herald.—The district conference meetings held here yesterday and the day before passed off very satisfactorily. A growing interest was manifest in the work, and many signs indicating success were easily seen.

My visit to Washington, D. C., was not barren of results. We held two preaching services in a small way, and came in contact with both members and friends of the faith there. Am convinced that a work can be done there also for our cause, as well as elsewhere; and I am revolving the matter in my mind now as to whether I had not better return there and sound it more thoroughly before leaving Pennsylvania. A hall has been provided at Havre de Grace, Maryland, and notice given for meetings to begin on the evening of the 10th instant.

The late cold storm swept over all of the East, and sent the mercury down about as low as it ever gets in this country; but is coming out warm and nice again, and the snow is about all gone.

WM. H. KELLEY.

A BAPTIST PROPHECY.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Jan. 31.

Editors Herald.—There is a great revival going on at the East Avenue Missionary Baptist church. The writer with other saints went out to hear them Friday night, January 28. The preacher's whole discourse was directed to those unsaved. He pictured the damned in hell and the Devil laughing at them. He told them that God's Spirit would not always strive with man, and recited instances where men and women died saying, "I am lost! I am lost!" But, when he gave the invitation for sinners to come up to the front, only one or two went.

Rev. John A. Newport, who is assisting the pastor, arose and said: "Bro. Elsey, let me speak a word;" and he delivered the following: "I feel very strongly impressed, and I know the impression is from God, so I make this prediction: There is one in this congregation whom the Spirit of God is now striving with, but will not give in, who will be wearing a wooden suit in less than four weeks. I made this prediction once before in one of my meetings, and inside of a month a man died, and he confessed on his deathbed that he felt the Spirit of God strive with him, but would not give up. He died, and was lost! lost! Don't let this be you. God has given it as a warning to some one." And much more he said. The people must have believed it, for many went right up to be prayed for.

The next day I sought an interview with Rev. Newport, and by exhibiting a great deal of cheek I got one. I put the following questions to him:—

"Do you believe that prediction was from God?"

"I certainly do."

"I suppose you look upon that as a revelation to some one?"

"Well, yes; God no doubt gave it to warn some one of the danger of putting off the day of salvation."

"How long have you enjoyed that gift of prophecy, Bro. Newport, for I suppose you would so consider it."

"Well, yes; I suppose I might call it prophecy. I have only given that prediction once before, as I related; but I have been led to make predictions before, but not like that."

"Then you do believe the Spirit of the Lord can be given as Paul so states in 1 Corinthians 12? To one the spirit of wisdom, another the spirit of prophecy, and another the gift of knowledge, as Bro. Elsey said this afternoon?"

Ans.—"Yes; I believe that God has given unto his people his Spirit, that we might know we were saved."

I was glad I was there last night, for I am always glad to see people taking God at his word, and especially the preachers. We change our meeting house back to our old hall.

HENRY SPARLING.

BEARDSTOWN, Ill., Feb. 8.

Editors Herald.—I do not care much to criticise Bro. J. D. Erwin's figures on page 79 of February 2 Herald; but I was afraid some mathematician might get hold of the paper and trap him, ha!

He states "by giving every inhabitant of the United States $1,000,000 it would still leave these lords $19,930,000,000, etc." When I went to school they taught me that that would supply only 70 persons; and to supply 70,000,000 persons with $1,000,000 each would run up into the trillions.

Guess again, Bro. Erwin.

Yours in Christ,

M. R. SHOEMAKER.

KINGFISHER, Okla., Feb. 3.

Editors Herald.—The weekly visits of the Herald have brought much instruction, consolation, and comfort to the Oklahoma missionary. And in turn I have tried to appreciate the good received in recommending the message of life to the people here.

I believe our work is progressing in Oklahoma, and the saints are making an effort to live up to the law of the gospel. However, there are exceptions to all rules. Some who have not fully complied with the requirements of the law, have, as they express, a desire to do so; so when we see them with good desires we are hopeful of them observing by and by. As a teacher of the gospel I feel the responsibility lest my teaching be not effectual. Missionary work is only half done when the person is brought into the church, so I find a great need of progress being made after we enter the church.

I have just returned from a trip to McCloud and other points in the mission, preaching the word and visiting scattered saints. Jesus was while in the world, and is yet, the good Shepherd; his ministers should also labor as shepherds, seeking and caring for those away from the fold.

We are looking forward to attending General Conference with much pleasure and encouragement. In fact we have much to encourage us. Oklahoma is still a good field, and the people generally are kind and generous, willing to hear. We expect to have our gospel tent in operation as soon as the weather permits. Anyone having subscribed for the tent fund in this mission will please hasten to make remittance to Elder S. J. Hinkle, Stillwater, Oklahoma Territory, so that the work will not be hindered. The blessing comes when all work together; so we hope to have the hearty support of all the saints in Oklahoma, not only in purchasing the tent, but in assisting to run it, and to keep the work moving in our own homes. The home is the proper place for the gospel influence to commence its work; and I am doubtful of the success of anyone who labors to convert others and convince them of this latter-day work who does not have the proper control and influence in their own home. So let us make our homes a place of worship, having family prayer where Father and Mother each take their part in training and setting an example to the children — teaching them to pray. Children will remember their early training and the example of Father and Mother. And there seems to be a natural impulse which gives hope and joy to the parent in wanting his child to become good and noble. And a good example is indispensable.

Wishing you much success with all God's children, I am still in the faith, yours,

R. M. MALONEY.

THURMAN, Iowa, Feb. 7.

Editors Herald.—The debate between Elder T. W. Williams of our church and Elder W. W. Blalock of the Christian Church closed on Saturday night last, at Tabor, very peacefully and satisfactorily to us; both disputants shaking hands good naturedly, and wishing each other well.

Bro. Williams affirmed our church and doctrine to be in harmony with the New Testament scriptures very clearly and cogently, to the joy and satisfaction of our people, and we believe to the satisfaction of many others, as they freely expressed themselves to us. Mr. Blalock did his best to prove our position not in harmony with the New Testament; and for the want of argument would bring in the usual objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, with polygamy and all of its kindred evils, and baptism for the dead, in connection with many lying stories published and circulated against us by the enemies of truth.

The last week, and second proposition, Bro. Blalock made a strong and determined effort to prove his church to be in harmony with the New Testament scriptures, but to our mind he signally failed in the attempt, notwithstanding he labored hard and did his best. We give him credit for his gentlemanly deportment, which was far in advance of many of his denomination.

Bro. Williams was fully up to date on the negative of this proposition, and did his work argumentatively and in a forcible manner, in accordance with truth and reason, backed up as we are fully satisfied with God's Holy Spirit. In his last speech the truth shone forth majestically under the dictation and inspiration of the Spirit of promise. To God be all the praise, and his name glorified for evermore, for the revealment of such a glorious plan, through which all may be saved if they will comply with its requisitions.

Our cause has suffered no loss through this debate. We have many friends, both to ourselves and the cause, and are satisfied that our heavenly Father will carry on his work in his own way to victory; and that it will ultimately triumph over all its foes, and accomplish the grand purpose of God; namely, the redemption of the race.

Our work is in very fair condition in the district; the way opens up on every hand for the preaching of the word. We are trying to do our best to supply the demands with brethren who labor locally. May the blessing of the Master attend every department of this great work is our earnest prayer.

In the one faith,

HENRY KEMP.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Feb. 4.

Editors Herald:—For the last four months I have tried to carry the angel-message among the German-speaking people in this city, but with very little effect. I have called on some of the German preachers here to give me a hearing, but have been refused; so at last, not at least, I went to a German who keeps a hotel called "Benevolent Home;" he has a large room fixed up for preaching service, and invited the ministers to come and preach. So I also went and asked the privilege; and it was granted, and everything was well for a time, but when they had learned of the latter-day gospel, the other preachers objected to my coming, and they told the gentleman, "Better not to let me come there." So he obeyed orders and told me, "It is the rule of the house that if there are more preachers than one present, that they divide the time," while for a length of time my appointment was every Sunday night to speak. I always did grant him, if there was one present, the time first. The readers of this may see that I have to contend with great trials to hold my own; but thanks be to my God whom I serve, for his Holy Spirit in these hours of trial. I do rejoice indeed in this glorious light of the latter-day gospel, and may God give me strength to continue faithful.

Some time ago I made another attempt, and so I went to the German Reformed church and try to become acquainted with them, and did ask if they would grant me the privilege to preach to them, and at this writing I do rejoice once more, for this great privilege which is given me to tell them the story of the angel-message. Their minister, a young man, came to my house a few days ago, and we have had indeed a grand time. He asked for German literature, because he is not sufficiently learned in the English. So I helped him out as well as I could, and he went away very much pleased with what he had heard. The hindrance in this great work which stands clearer and brighter before mine eyes than ever, seems to me this, that we have not sufficient German church literature to reach our German speaking friends in this country. I do fully realize and see the great necessity of German tracts, wherewith we can reach them. There are many honest people who would obey the true gospel if we would only supply them with reading matter. What is the use to let our eyes and thoughts go on the other side the Ocean? Is there not plenty work here at home for some good German brother? We have sixty thousand people here, from them are about sixteen thousand Germans. What shall be done, my German brethren? Can we reach them? How can we reach them?

Not long ago a brother from Lamoni wrote to me and suggested a plan like this; that we should try to get some tracts published, like the Swedish and Danish brethren, and to do this more successfully we should form among us a tract society to raise means for this purpose, and no doubt we could do as good a work as our brethren mentioned above. Why not try this plan, and let us respond to this, my German brethren and sisters; let us put our hands to the wheel and help to push the gospel wagon along. What say you, can we do it?

Your brother,

ROBERT GARLICH.

NEW HOPE, Va., Feb. 9.

Editors Herald:—My last communication to our church periodical was from Worcester, Massachusetts, about the first of the new year. I remained in the East a little over three weeks. My wife and I spent one week in Boston, and during our sojourn in the city of learning and enterprise, we made our home with our worthy Bro. and Sr. Sheehy, both of whom have the faculty of making visitors feel that they are welcome within their humble and cheerful home. By the way, Bro. Frank is an expert in showing you the sights that are to be seen at the Hub. Their daughter Ruth is one of our bright young saints, and one of our most active Sunday school and church workers. The parents are very proud of her, and well might they be proud of such a noble, dutiful daughter, and who is such a joy and a comfort to them. We met with the saints in one of their social meetings, and had a feast, as the Spirit of the Lord was with us to cheer and comfort our hearts.

On the Sabbath I occupied the rostrum both morning and night, and was blessed in my weak efforts to dispense the word of life. It was very gratifying to me indeed, to witness such energy and activity exhibited by both old and young of the Boston branch. They all seem to be lively stones in the building of our God and his Christ. Here is to be found a healthy Sunday school, and a number of young, intelligent, zealous workers, who seem to work in harmony and with a will to keep their end of the Sunday school in line. Bro. Bullard is the president of said branch, and his efforts are ably seconded by his associated officers. All of these brethren seem to be on the alert, and appear to be faithful workers in the cause of Christ.

We have met Bro. C. Lake, son of Bro. J. H. Lake. This young brother is growing and developing into a very useful man in the church and if he continues to be prayerful and very humble and studious before the Lord, he will make his mark in the church. Bro. Lake will be glad to learn that his only son and child living is striving to become a useful man in the service of God.

While in Boston Bro. Sheehy and I attended a lecture in one of the medical colleges in the city, which was delivered by Bro. or Dr. John Gilbert, of Fall River, Massachusetts, before a class of young students. Bro. Gilbert is a fluent speaker, and seemed well versed on the subject matter that he had in hand.

On the eve of the 24th ult. I crossed over to New York City on one of the Norwich line steamers; went direct to Washington, D. C., and was met at the station by Sr. Warnock, at whose home I was made welcome. On the next day I met Bro. W. H. Kelley, and together we visited the capitol and other places of interest. Srs. Blum and Jolley were our pilots, and they are experts at the business. We spent many pleasant hours at the home of Mrs. Blum, with whom Sr. Jolley and family are staying. We shall not soon forget the kindness shown us by Mrs. Blum and Sr. Jolley. We also held one preaching meeting in Mrs. Blum's house, and Bro. Kelley held one preaching service in the house of Mr. and Sr. Peck. I presume that Bro. Kelley will write you with regard to those meetings. We stopped two nights with Mr. and Sr. Peck, both of whom are highly respected in the city. We truly appreciated their kind hospitality. We pray our heavenly Father to abundantly bless the few saints in Washington, and do earnestly pray that the time will come when a branch of the church will be established at the capital of our great nation, and we sincerely believe that our prayer will be fully realized in the Lord's due time.

From Washington I went to Roxbury and Richmond, Virginia. Held two preaching meetings at former place. Brn. Barnet, Dickey, and families with a few others are striving to let their light shine; but the country is poor, and the people also, and the outsiders are very prejudiced and creedbound. The few saints there have done their best to get the gospel before the people, but the people don't want it and won't have it. Hence it is that the brethren expect to leave there for the north or west this coming spring. We wish them Godspeed wherever they go. Bro. or Dr. Stark, is alive in the work and is going to try and get the truth before the citizens of Richmond. We pray that success will attend his efforts. Bro. Stark and the writer ordained Bro. E. Dickey a priest. I requested Bro. Stark to take charge of the work at Roxbury, which he consented to do. On my way here I called at Dayton, Virginia, to see Bro. O. Bowman, wife, and mother. I found them strong in the faith, and enjoying the blessings of life. They, as well as Dr. Stark and the saints at Roxbury, treated me very kindly.

I arrived here on the 5th inst. Have held preaching services every night so far. Only a few turn out, but those who come, pay excellent attention. Am being well cared for by Bro. and Sr. Coffman, in whose house I am holding meetings. Bro. and Sr. Coffman have stood the storm of persecution with the patience of Job. I am of the opinion at this writing, that there are a few honest hearted souls in this part of Virginia, who will obey the gospel by and by, and that a branch will be raised up here in the future.

The church should send a minister here the coming conference year. Bro. I. N. Roberts would do, and we have felt for years that he should be sent to Virginia. I leave here on the 12th for Ironton and other points in the Ohio district, where I will labor for about three weeks. The traveling ministry in my field are reporting progress all along the line. Your brother in gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Editors Herald:—I have no knowledge of William Miller, of the Millerite or Adventist Church, and Elder Jared Carter of the Latter Day Saints Church, holding a public discussion on any subject. My statement of the rise of the Millerite and Adventist churches is found in Saints' Herald for June 26, 1895, pages 413, 414. I send this statement by request.

CENTRALIA, Kan., Feb. 3.

Editors Herald:—In my last prayer was requested in behalf of Bro. Joseph McDougal, of this place. He firmly believes that the prayers of the saints proved effectual in restoring him, as he is now practically recovered. Moreover, Elder Henry Green, of Netawaka, was sent for, who administered to him. What grand blessings are within reach of a Latter Day Saint! The aim of the precious gospel is mankind to bless. The work is a true haven of refuge to humanity. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Our little branch numbers seventeen at present, and eight of them are absent members. Though few, we do not forget to meet to worship our heavenly Father, and to speak of his goodness; and in return we truly receive times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The people in this region of country are very friendly towards us, inasmuch that the Union Sunday school out here has been in charge of Sr. Joseph McDougal and the writer respectively. We do not have the Quarterlies, but we discover many good and noble thoughts in the lessons we study, and endeavor the best we can to present truth and discard error. I know that the Spirit of the Lord is working upon the minds of the people, by their splendid attention, whilst we are talking to them in the review, and we enjoy much liberty of thought and utterance. How weak and frail do the doctrines of men appear when the effulgent light of the true gospel is turned on! May the saints of God strive as never before to live by "every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God," that many may be added to our numbers and God be glorified.

FRANK J. PIERCE.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Feb. 3.

Editors Herald:—The health of the branch is good, and we seem to have taken a new lease of life; we are hopeful of seeing a revival of spiritual interest. Some time ago at a meeting of the priesthood it was decided to go out into the highways and hedges and see what could be done towards creating an interest in gospel work. A mission was created in the south, east, and western portions of the city. The writer was given the south side appointment, and the interest is increasing, and good word comes from all the stations.

Last Sunday morning our young brother Carstensen spoke, and all were greatly pleased at the effort, and if the brother only keeps humble and trusts God, he will do a good work yet. Bro. Williams was at home Sunday, and feels confident of victory. He says his opponent is no mean antagonist—sharp as a briar, but not vulgar.

Brn. Editors, I have about two hundred numbers of the Herald that I will box up and send to any of the isolated saints who will pay the freight on them; part of them are bound in a rustic style. Address J. S. Strain, No. 9 Thomas Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Brn. Hall and Bassett, the old elders who are sick, still linger on the shore, awaiting the summons to come up higher. This is Herald day, but for some reason it has not come, and how I do miss it, for it always comes freighted with precious news, and especially the editorial department appears to have received an inspiration, and the words of instruction, comfort, and advice have been of a high order. God bless the Herald as it goes on its mission of love, and may every saint feel it to be their duty to hold up the hands of the devoted men who are charged with its publication.

Yours in the one hope,

J. S. STRAIN.

Original Articles.

MIGHT NOT THIS IMPROVE THE SITUATION?

A HERALD editorial January 5, entitled "The Situation," shows such a true perception of the social condition and its fundamental need that it is not surprising that sincere men and women should find themselves unable to let the tinworker's question pass without laboring to answer it, "Will there be work for such as me in Zion?"

In your last week's edition (January 26) an article by J. B. Farr entitled, "Are we capable of nothing better?" also unveils this humanitarian thinking. In this article there appears to me to be a very suggestive idea, though I am sorry to say it also appears to be impracticable. Dependent as Bro. Farr's solution is upon a condition in which "all the people" would respond to the appeal of Christian charity, it would have no practical connection with the present time.

But is it necessary that "all the people" should be required to get something of this nature started? Has not all true growth begun from the few? The question as it appears to me is, Where is there a united body of people, even if it be a small body, that will recognize it to be an imperative duty to seek each the welfare of the other? Where is there a body of people sufficiently united to make cooperation practicable?

May not the Latter Day Saints be that body? If not, the case would appear to be indeed desperate; for there does not appear to be any other people so likely to have the necessary faith.

Suppose that a majority of our forty thousand people should send to some central point a portion of the surplus cash on hand to be invested in capitalizing industrial enterprises, and repeat this when convenient, and suppose that our people would patronize the productions of the same, would not a considerable nucleus be evolved from which to grow? Why not do it? We can make manufacturing pay as well as others. But the main thing is that our artizans and laborers would get the work. If no valid reason can be raised against this, I have faith enough in our people to believe they would do it, by proper explanation and management.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.DELINQUENT BRANCH REPORTS.

In the following named districts conferences were either advertised to be held or were published as having been held, during the months of 1897 herein stated. Without a doubt to the most of them reports of branches were sent. But the present difficulty is that said branch reports have not yet come into the hands of the General Church Recorder, as provided for in the "Rules" of the church. The conferences thus appointed to be held were as follows:—

Alabama district in October; Mobile district in December; Western Maine (three) in May, September, and December; Minnesota in June and October; Montana in June and November; Nodaway (Mo.) in October; Far West (Mo.) in December; Nevada in June and November; Central Nebraska in August; Southern Nebraska in October; Kirtland (Ohio) in July; Southeastern Ohio in September; Pittsburg, (Pa.) in September; Northern Texas and Choctaw in September.

It would be a favor if the brethren would immediately send in the branch reports that were presented to the above conferences, that they may be recorded and correspondence had upon them before the rush of reports from the February and March conferences make haste to arrive and prevent those already due. Brethren, please attend to this.

From England not any reports have been received for the conference year. Bro. C. H. Caton supplied full accounts of the branches in the Manchester district for 1896, arriving in November, 1897, and it is hoped that he can send in the 1897 reports before April. And from the London, Birmingham, and Sheffield conferences I wish to hear soon. For nothing has been received from the Birmingham and Sheffield districts since 1894. The last reports from Australia were dated December, 1896.

I regret this state of affairs. But throughout America and Canada there has been a better service than ever before. Also a prompt action upon the part of nearly all branch and district clerks, and kind and willing responses to correspondence for corrections and additional reports.

H. A. STEBBINS,

General Church Recorder.

ENROLLMENT IN QUORUMS.

ELDERS, PRIESTS, TEACHERS, AND DEACONS.

The law contemplates the organization into quorums of all church officers—including elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. All such not yet enrolled may address applications for enrollment to the Church Secretary, who is authorized to present the same to quorums, for their action, that vacancies in quorums may be filled, and new quorums organized, as found necessary. (See D. C. 104: 31; 107: 43-46; 118: 1; 120: 10; etc.)

Applications should include full name and address; dates of birth and baptism; when, where, and by whom ordained; and statement of labor done during the year or years past. Please be particular to include all said items; they are necessary for information and records of quorums enrolling.

The work of enrolling should be completed and kept up every year; and applications should be forwarded personally, and before General Conference, that all lists may be completed before the busy sessions of conference begin. Please be prompt.

In bonds,

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1898.

ENROLLMENT IN QUORUMS.

CORRECTED LIST.

At the General Conference of 1897 the Secretary presented lists of names of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons who had made application for enrollment in quorums, and was authorized "to enroll in proper numbers, and so publish in the Herald."

Some of these applications date as far back as 1885, and are presented as received from the former Secretary. Those received by the present Secretary since the General Conference of 1896 to the close of the conference of 1897—that have not been enrolled in other quorums, are also included in the lists below.

If any of those named do not now hold the offices according to which they are enrolled, necessary changes will be made as errors in the lists are pointed out. Those knowing of changes resulting from ordination, death, or other causes, will please so notify the Secretary.

It is understood that the brethren enrolled may complete the organization of their quorums at any General Conference, by making choice of officers and so reporting.

MINISTRY REPORTS.

At the General Conference of 1897 the following recommendation from the Presiding Bishop was adopted. The action dispensed with the publication of "ministry reports" and provided that all laboring under General Conference appointment should report to their respective missionaries in charge:—

"The printing and sending out circulars known as 'Ministry Reports' has, together with the publishing of conference minutes for the year, amounted to the sum of $197.12. It is a question of whether we can afford to pay for this matter each year an amount almost sufficient to keep an elder in the field for a year. If the reports necessary to the transaction of the business of the conference were made by those in charge of missions, with the provision that in case of any dissatisfaction on the part of any laborer in the field he should have the privilege of presenting his objections to the President of the Church or General Conference for consideration, it would answer the purpose as completely as does the present, and save the expense to the church."

R. S. SALYARDS,

Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1898.

GENERAL CONFERENCE NOTICE.

At a special meeting of the Independence branch, it was resolved that board be furnished all visitors coming to attend conference, at the rate of $2.50 per week.

That Wm. Crick, A. L. Newton, and W. N. Robinson be a committee to assign visitors to different places for boarding.

That the visitors be requested to communicate to either of these as early as possible, their intention of attending the conference, and stating preferences in stopping places, if any be had.

That the visitors also be requested to register at the church, on arrival, where a committee will be in waiting to direct them to their assigned places, and to take notice.

That it is the intention to have the electric cars stop in front of the church.

CURE FOR CANCER.

(Republished by request.)

I have often noticed in your columns deaths from cancers, and I have often thought to send you a remedy that has proved successful in many hands in every case that I have applied it to cancers.

The remedy is this: Spread a plaster of common sticking plaster, cut a hole a trifle larger than the cancer, so that there will be a small margin of good flesh, about the sixteenth of an inch, all around the cancer. Apply the plaster over the cancer, leaving the cancer and this small margin exposed; then apply over the cancer and resting on the plaster the cancer plaster, composed of one part of wheat flour, one part bloodroot (sanguinaria) ground fine, one part chloride of zinc.

Mix the sanguinaria and flour with water, then the chloride of zinc. Mix well and apply over the cancer, letting it remain from twenty-four to forty-eight hours, according to the time the cancer has been standing. Then take off the cancer plaster, and dress with any good healing salve. In from a week to ten days the cancer will drop out. (Don't try to press it out.)

Then heal with any good salve. Probably the best healing salve is the All Healing or Black Salve. It is the best for a cancer, which I will furnish the recipe of to anyone writing for it, inclosing a two-cent postage stamp to pay postage. LEVI CHENEY.

DIED.

WEBB.—At Sacramento, California, January 17, 1898, Sr. Sophia M. Webb. She was born in Arkansas in 1830; married to Elder E. Webb, October, 1851. The fruits of this union were five children. She was baptized into the church in Joseph the Martyr's time, exact date unknown. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church March 18, 1871. Her husband was a great worker in the cause of Christ and was instrumental in converting many to the gospel. He was an elder in the first organization as well as the present one. He did the first work in behalf of the Reorganization on the Pacific coast and was once in charge of the work there. These things are mentioned to show her connection with the latter-day work, for she has long been interested in what he was doing. Like many others they were induced to go to Utah but were disappointed, and left for California as soon as they could. The funeral was held at the residence at two p. m. the 19th, sermon by Elder Alma C. Barmore.

ANDERSON.—At Fruto, California, January 7, 1898, Sr. Serena Anderson, aged 84 years and 7 days. Deceased was born in Norway; came to America when eleven years old with her parents; married March 1, 1831, to Jacob Anderson; husband and nine children passing to the beyond before her. One son, five grandsons, and one granddaughter mourn. She was baptized by Elder Gordon E. Deuel in LaSalle County, Illinois, May 24, 1842, and rebaptized in California by Elder E. C. Brand in April, 1864. Her hope in the future was bright and she passed away peacefully. She was laid to rest in Napa cemetery, beside her husband and one son, to await the resurrection of the just.

HOOLE.—“Fatal Accident at the Regent Works: An accident, which had a fatal termination, occurred yesterday afternoon at the Regent Works of Messrs. Bury and Co., Penistone Road. Henry Hoole, of No. 135 Creswick Street, had been at work yesterday afternoon about three quarters of an hour from the resumption after the dinner hour, when an emery wheel broke. Pieces flew in several directions, some of which struck him on the forehead, chin, and chest. His jaw was shattered, and the injury to his chest was very severe. The man was removed immediately to the Infirmary, but on his way to that institution he died.”—Ex.

The foregoing clipping and following resolutions are sent by the Manchester District Priesthood Association. The resolutions were passed at our business meeting held the 15th January, Apostle H. C. Smith presiding:—

“Resolved that in the death of Elder Henry Hoole, of Sheffield, the association recognizes that the church has lost a wise, faithful, and exemplary laborer, and his family a faithful son, loving husband, and affectionate father.

“Resolved further that while we bow with humble resignation to this dispensation of God's providence, we record our sympathy and condolence with the bereaved family, and express our conviction that Bro. Hoole was well prepared by consistent and faithful service to occupy an honored place in the church triumphant.

“Resolved further that the secretary of this association be instructed to present copies of these resolutions to Sisters Hoole and Gell, the wife and mother of the deceased; and also that a copy be sent to the Saints' Herald.”

WM. R. ARMSTRONG, Sec. to Assn.

VERNON.—James Vernon was born August 1, 1821; died February 1, 1898, at New Straitsville, Ohio. He was father of ten boys and three girls. Nine sons, one daughter, and a large number of grandchildren mourn the loss of father and grandfather. James Vernon was a member of the Bickerton faction of the church a few years, but hearing the claims of the Reorganized Church, he identified himself with it by obedience. He died in hope of a part in the first resurrection. He was frequently blessed with the gift of tongues. Elder James Moler preached the funeral in the M. E. chapel at two p. m., the choir furnishing the music, Elder H. E. Moler offering the prayer. Father Vernon was tenderly laid to rest in the New Straitsville cemetery.

CAZIER.—At Reese Creek, Montana, January 27, 1898, Frances Cazier, aged 61 years, 11 months, and 27 days. Deceased was with the church in the dark and cloudy day, and went to Utah in early day, and suffered many things, the result of priestly domination and human perfidy. United with the Reorganization at Reese Creek, September 4, 1881, baptized by J. E. Reese. Funeral sermon by Gomer Reese at the saints' chapel. She was laid to rest on the hill near the church.

CHALKER.—Sr. Ellen Chalker was born October 18, 1853, in London, England, and was baptized by Elder J. Arthur Davis, November 25, 1891, at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Died January 9, 1898, strong in the faith of the gospel and hope of the first resurrection. Sr. Chalker was a good wife, a noble saint, and will receive a glorious reward. She died praying for her children and family. A large concourse of neighbors and friends attended her funeral, as she was beloved by all who knew her. Elder E. A. Stedman preached the sermon from Romans 8: 11. Good attention was given.

WILLAVIZE.—Anna M. Fisher, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Jeremiah Fisher, was born April 26, 1860, at Pritchard's Grove, town of Clinton, Illinois; came to Plano with her parents in 1883 or 1884. She united with the Latter Day Saints Church November 22, 1885, being baptized by Elder J. C. Foss. She was married to Theodore Willavize, December 31, 1885, by Elder J. C. Foss. She died January 31, 1898, leaving a husband, three daughters, and one son, one of which is an infant, also her father and mother, one sister, and three brothers, with many friends, to mourn. She sleeps in peace. She was buried in the Plano cemetery, February 2; funeral at the stone church. Sermon by Elder W. Vickery.

WAHLSTROM.—At her home in Lamoni, February 5, 1898, Sr. Christina Wahlstrom, wife of Elder John Wahlstrom, passed from this earth life confident of a welcome among the saints who have gone before. Sr. Wahlstrom—formerly Miss Christina Larsen—was born at Môle, Sweden, 1826. She came to America in 1869, first uniting with the Utah Church in Sweden, but upon a closer examination of the belief of that people in America united with the Reorganized Church under the administration of Elder Joseph Luff. She was married to John Wahlstrom in 1875 and they returned from Utah to Omaha, Nebraska, in 1880, and in 1882 came to Lamoni, where they have since resided. In 1894 Sr. Wahlstrom accompanied her husband on his missionary labors to Malmo, Sweden, returning in 1896. Funeral February 6, in charge of Elders H. A. Stebbins and Eli Hayer, E. L. Kelley preaching the discourse.

PRESBYTERIANS CRY "HERESY."

WESTERN Presbyterians, with Chicago as their thought-center, are stirred up over the publication of a book which they claim attacks fundamental principles of their doctrine.

"A History of Christianity in the Apostolic Age," by Dr. Arthur C. McGiffert of Union Theological Seminary, New York, has been before the public but a few weeks. In that time it has provoked world-wide discussion. The attacks attracting the greatest attention have come from Chicago. Letters demanding that the doctor be placed on trial for heresy, with which members of his presbytery have been flooded, have gone in large numbers from Chicago, it is said.

Among Chicago ministers who have discussed the book and challenged its statements and conclusions are Dr. Gray, editor of the Interior; Dr. McPherson of the Second Presbyterian church, and Prof. A. C. Zenos of McCormick Theological seminary. Dr. Zenos said last night:

"The book has caused more of a stir among Presbyterians than anything that has occurred since the Briggs trial. I would not deny him the right of belief, but if his researches and studies lead him to conclusions that the book seems to indicate he is out of place as a minister in the Presbyterian Church. His book is a challenge to Presbyterian doctrines all along the line."

Dr. Herrick Johnson said he had not examined the book except as to the chapters relating to early church government. While in them no points of doctrine were involved yet he could not but disagree with the general conclusions drawn. Dr. John L. Withrow, of the Third Presbyterian Church, said he had not read the book, but from criticisms by men with whom he was familiar he could not but hold it in an unfavorable light. He said: "I heartily hope there will be a kindly effort made to have Dr. McGiffert see that the mind of the church is opposed to the doctrines of his book and that he may so act that a heresy trial will be avoided."

It is said no defense of the book has appeared from anyone connected with the Presbyterian Church. Defenders outside the Presbyterian Church have arisen, and among them are Dr. Clyde W. Votaw and Dr. Shailer Mathews, both connected with the theological department of the University of Chicago.

CONTENTS OF THE BOOK.

Dr. McGiffert in his history discredits several of the New Testament books. The Book of Acts seems to have fallen specially under his ban. A doubt also arises in the mind of the reader as to whether Dr. McGiffert believes in the actual resurrection of Christ. He says the apostles believed in it and derived as much comfort from the belief as though it had been an actual fact. His conclusions in regard to the last supper have been subjected to special criticism. . . . — Chicago Record.

UNITED PRESBYTERIANS ON TITHES.

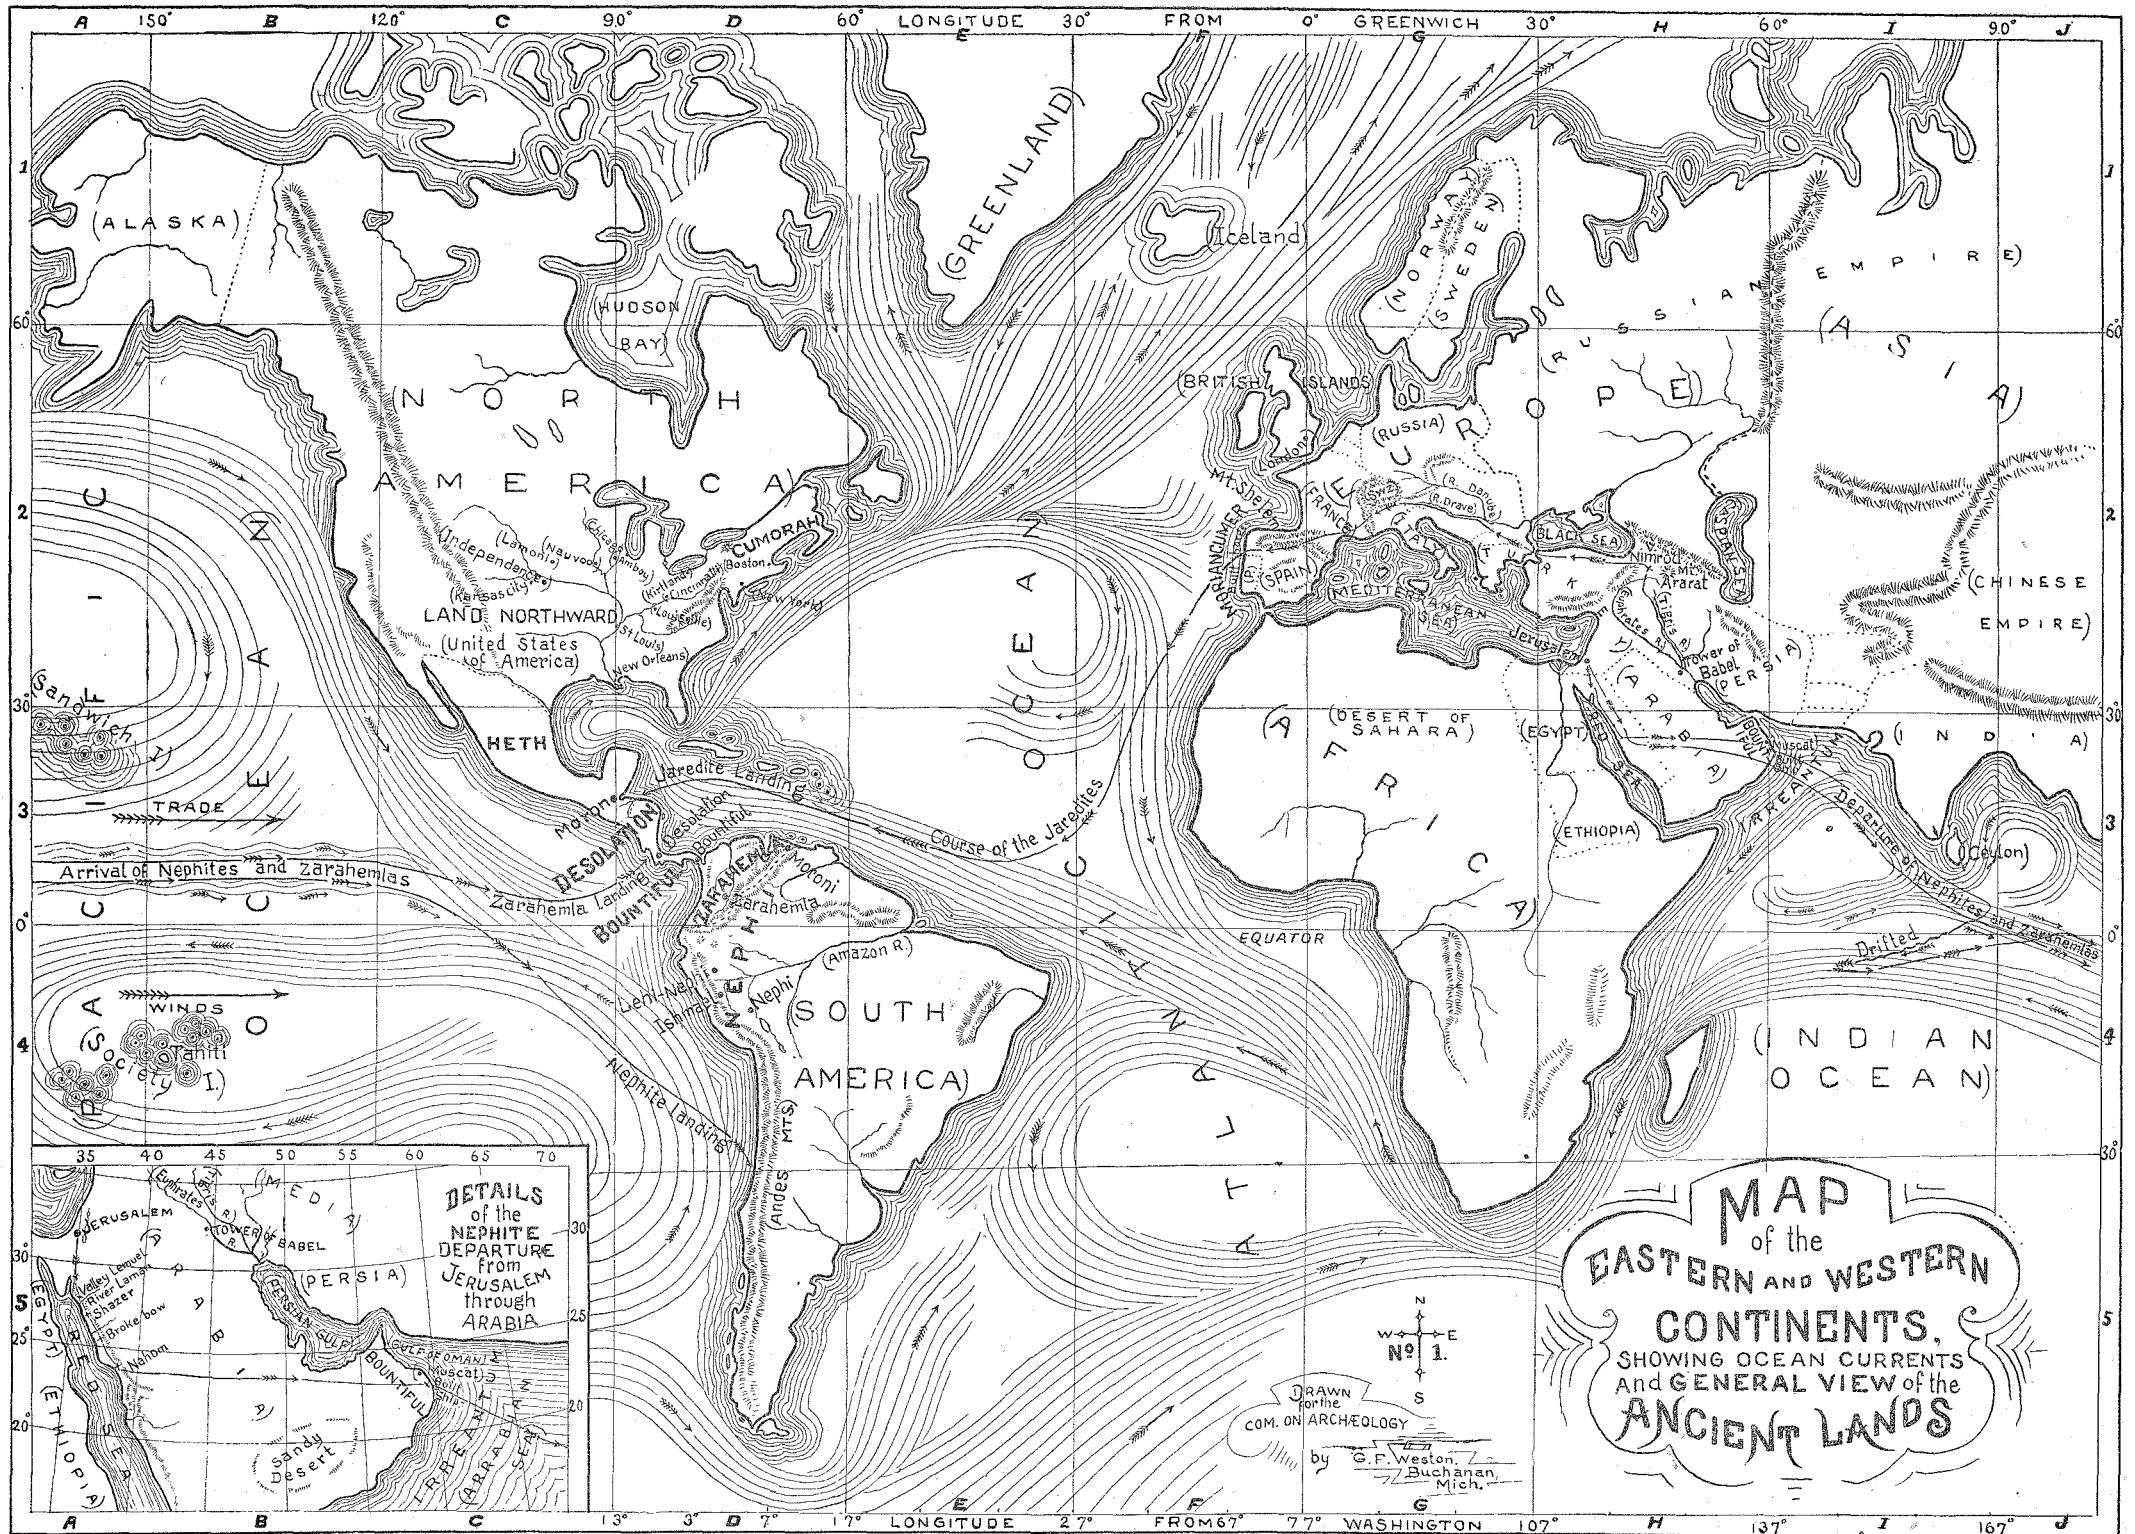

IN the Union Presbyterian church at Sixty-third Street and Parnell Avenue the first tithe convention in the history of the world assembled yesterday afternoon. Representatives of fourteen United Presbyterian churches listened to arguments why a tenth part of a man's worldly wealth should be consecrated to the use of the church, and at the close of the meeting in the evening resolutions recommending this as a duty to the united presbytery were passed without a dissenting voice.

One of the most prominent among the advocates of a tithe system, the Rev. E. B. Stewart, of the Third Chicago church, addressed the convention in the afternoon. He delved into ancient history, and brought forth instance after instance of the observance of tithing. He quoted the fathers of the church—Nicene and ante-Nicene—where the teaching of the twelve apostles required for the support of the prophets "the first fruits of a batch of dough or jar of wine or oil." He cited the Hebrew law, the customs of the Chaldeans, Chinese, Arabians, Babylonians, Hindoos, Egyptians, and Syrians. Then he traced the custom to Offa, King of Mercia, and Charlemagne, winding down through the middle ages to modern times.

From all this he argued that the tithe is a universal principle and not merely a Levitical institution. Nevertheless, he said, he did not favor the idea of compulsory tithe-giving. "There is a tendency against this all over the Christian Church," he declared. "The offering should be voluntary. I hold that this is a divine appointment, else why the number ten. Seven is a holy number. Why was it not a seventh part? Three is also a holy number and twenty. Why not any of these numbers if it was not primeval appointment? It is still binding. It is as binding as the divine institution of marriage.

"If tithes were paid by the worst of Heathen where ought the modern Christian to stand? Shall he say that his God shall not have as much as the gods of the Heathen? Covetousness is at the root of it all. Men who do not believe in prohibition, who believe in a liberal Sabbath—these and those who oppose tithes—are often actuated by covetousness. Men are willing to apply Christian principles to almost anything but that which conflicts with greed for money."— Chicago Record.

DANGERS OF MORMONISM.

IN a lecture recently delivered by General John Eaton of Washington, D. C., after referring to the accession of 65,000 converts a year claimed by that sect, he made the following substantial argument:—

"The Mormons, though essentially the same as formerly, do not carry out the old plan of conversion. They now visit the houses of persons in pairs, and are very similar in their methods to followers of Moody. They present a card on gaining admittance and proceed to enumerate the articles of faith, which, as they are written, do not seem so extravagant. They are careful not to give offense, and having won favor can obtain a satisfactory hearing. Their hearers, finding no objection to their mild religious statements, become less horrified, and by degrees are influenced disastrously, oftentimes becoming members of the Mormon Church in spite of its atrocities.

"The Mormon faith in itself is to be dreaded, but the probability of its unhealthful influence is still worse. The State of Utah, though admitted into the union by promising to abandon polygamy, is now governed by the followers of Smith, and as their religion is universally adopted, the State will make no laws to destroy it. But the danger does not cease here. The State of Utah has the right to send senators to Washington. Two Mormons are therefore living at the capital with their wives and admitted into our most respectable American society. The danger of this is obvious. More than once social intercourse has resulted in the ultimate conversion of Christians to Mormonism. Many who have settled or visited Utah began to worship in these pagan churches because it was stylish to be Mormons in that country, and their ruination soon followed.

"Another danger resulting in the power of Mormonism in Utah is its political strength. Even now nothing could be done in the senate against it without being strongly opposed by the two senators just mentioned. In the State itself no one but a Mormon will be received favorably. It is beyond doubt that Mormonism is spreading. They have recently established two headquarters in Mississippi, one in Athens, Alabama; one in Tennessee, and several in New York, New Jersey and other localities near by. Even our own State contains many Mormon converts. They are now erecting schools, acadmies, and even universities to spread their infamous doctrine."—Des Moines Capital.

It is said in certain philosophical circles that almost everything in the physical, scientific, mental, moral, and religious realms moves in waves of periodical occurrence. Without stopping to discuss the proposition in its general form, we accede to the thought that every now and again there occurs a spasmodic scare in regard to Mormonism, so-called. The foregoing from the Capital, published at the Capital City of Iowa, is in evidence that this particular sensational and periodical wave is in motion.

We are not specially called upon to defend the Mormonism of Utah, but there is something so uncalled for, and so absurd in what the Capital called General John Eaton's substantial argument, that some notice ought to be given the idea of it.

1. General John Eaton is running a tilt against a faith and a people of which he knows next to nothing, or worse. For the reason that he styles the "churches pagan;" and alleges that many drifted into the Mormon Church because it was "stylish to be Mormons in Utah."

2. Such men as General Eaton, in their Don Quixote manner of attack, fail to see how they impugn the common intelligence of the average, so-called Christian, by assuming that said Christian is likely to become an easy victim to Mormon shrewdness of policy and smoothness and seductiveness of speech. If there is so little of the real Spirit of Christ in the average Christian that he is in absolute danger from the attractiveness of pagan Mormonism, it is a fearful comment on the way such Christian has been originally proselyted.

3. Jesus said of the "disciple indeed that he should "know the truth;" hence, there should be no need for fear on the part of General Eaton and a lot of contemporary fearful chaps all over the country for the good welfare of those for whom they are exercised; for if those whom these men seek to warn were Christians indeed, they could easily hear, examine, "prove all things and hold fast that which is good," as admonished by Paul.

4. Mr. General Eaton is only giving echo to a similar cry raised in different places. A writer for the Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, papers raises it in West Virginia, upon the plea that Mormonism is making headway, fearful headway, among the mountains of that loyal State. Another writes to the New York Sun, and raises the hue and cry in defense of Long Island; another raises it in Indiana; another in Mississippi; and so it goes, "all along the line."

5. What is it that these men fear? Is it the illiterate, half enthusiastic, partially educated men, whom they say are the proselyting ministers employed by the Mormon Church? Or, is it the inexorable logic of fact and statement, the plain restatement of the words of Jesus constantly made? Or the absolute and dogged refusal to admit that Jesus made a mistake, or uttered a false philosophy? Which is it? It would please us to have the doctor, General Eaton, to explain.

6. If there is anything pagan in the average Mormon's statement of his faith, or in the public worship of any branch of believers in the faith enunciated by Joseph Smith, and commonly known as Mormonism, we have never seen or heard it. Nor do we believe that General Eaton, or any other of these bugaboo peddlers, ever saw it, or anything like it. They have simply conjured up a hoodoo out of their own consciousness of inability to rationally meet and overthrow the real beliefs of those who accept the angelic message, and this they are holding up before those among the people prejudiced against anything supposed to be Mormon, like themselves, and using it as stock in trade for the lecture platform. It passes for the golden in argument, but it is very like brass.

7. The writer in the Pittsburg press assumes that there is a pressing necessity for congress enacting a law making plural marriage, or polygamy, a penal offense, such law to have national jurisdiction. Personally, and as a representative of the faith of the original church, as organized in 1830, we have not the slightest objection to the enactment of such a law. It would in no sense affect the moral standing or progress of the truth of the angel's message. But we have small sympathy for the men who are urging the passage of such law, on the premises and arguments presented by them; the premises are incorrect, the arguments faulty. The attitude is that of a senseless scare, having its base in error and prejudice rather than in truth, or a healthy desire for the good of men.

It has long passed into an adage that, "Error is not to be feared if Truth be left free to combat it."

8. General John Eaton's attention has been called to the fact that there is a class of so-called Mormons by him, who are resident in Iowa, and who are just as loyal, to the General Government, just as moral, just as good citizens as are any of the societies of Methodists, Presbyterians, or other Protestant denominational churches or the Catholics; and, if he had the elements of fairness in him that a proposed reformer ought to have, he would not make the sweeping denunciations that are credited to him in the closing sentences of his reported lecture.

9. The State of Iowa contains many believers in Mormonism of the Reorganized Church type, and these are interested in erecting schools, academies, and other institutions of learning; but in not one of them is it intended or sought to "spread" an "infamous doctrine," unless the doctrines of the Lord Jesus Christ may be styled "infamous" by this doughty and devout Mormon hater.

REPENTANCE.—NO. I.

CHARACTER building is the true aim of gospel effort. A substantial, enduring, and creditable structure can be hoped for only where the foundation is carefully and safely laid. Equally important is it that the material employed throughout shall be of a character to bear exposure and to resist the elements that threaten. A little neglect in this regard, anywhere along the line of work, may entail serious consequences, if not disaster, later on. Many a building has proven unequal to the strain put upon it, because of the builder's failure to fill in the interstices or insert the necessary supports as indicated by the architect; and still others have gone early to decay because of the unsound character of the material employed in their construction.

The Great Architect, by whose plans and specifications it is intended we should build our characters, has exhibited wisdom in every line of his instructions, and to ignore a single detail is to jeopardize our eternal interests. Implicit confidence in his wisdom should be the incentive to our acceptance of what he has appointed. He who thinks to introduce improvements or varying features as the work proceeds, had better not start to build. Disappointment awaits him, for his structure will never be approved. Every thought in that direction voices a lurking lack of confidence, and is a forerunner of dismay and loss. God's formula is the expression of the spiritual, and what varies therefrom must be the suggestion of the carnal. One is life and the other is death. One will endure the fire that tests, and the exposure that threatens; the other must succumb, sooner or later, under such visitations. An imperishable structure must be proof against all destructive elements, hence must be divine throughout. From foundation to capstone it must bear the impress of the builder's implicit faith in Christ.

Under the personal ministry of our Lord, even the Pharisees would have been willing to take the gospel as a patch with which to repair their accepted philosophy, or as a wine with which to replenish their carnal bottles; but they were distinctly informed that such an admixture or combination would simply mean disappointment and mortifying loss. (See Matt. 9: 18-23, I. T.) Paul, too, carefully notified the builders that as the foundation was imperishable, so also must be the elements entering into the superstructure; otherwise a ruination of hope must accrue. (See 1 Cor. 3: 11-19.) If the foundation was laid in the wisdom of the Infinite Designer, and that foundation is indestructible, it follows, in reason, that the material and labor provided and specified by that Architect will best comport in character and durability with the foundation. It were as reasonable to question the stability of the foundation as to slight any of the details specified for our direction in building thereupon. Christ as a living illustration of absolute obedience to God, was laid for us to build upon. How unseemly then must appear the structure thereupon which carries evidences of divided trust—part Christ and part self.

With faith in Christ as an incentive, we are ready to surrender instantly when the cry of Repentance salutes our ears. We are ready to drop all plans, theories, and practices that have been in vogue. We have no inclination to carry them farther. The answering word from our hearts and heads is, "What wilt thou have me to do, Lord," and there should be no mental reservation in this. If Christ is to pioneer us to success, it must be by his own methods and along his own lines.

Many of the Jews "believed" on Christ, but when the touchstone was introduced by which their acceptance of him unto salvation was to be determined, they suddenly exposed the shallowness of their pretended faith. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," was but another way of saying "Bring forth fruits meet for repentance." (Compare Luke 3: 7, 8 with John 8: 31-33.) In both instances where these words were employed they laid the axe at the root of traditions which the professed believers were wedded to. Their faith in Christ had not included the idea of abandonment of all theories in conflict with his, and hence his "if" provoked them, and they retorted quickly by an assertion of their lineage from Abraham. That darling tradition was bigger to them than the faith they had in Christ. Repentance meant reform in doctrine as well as practice, and an abandonment of all claims not comprehended in the new regime. For this they were not prepared, hence Christ was lost to them as a foundation. The carnal and the spiritual could not be mixed and wrought into a structure in agreement with that foundation, hence their belief was vain.

The apostolic injunction, "Repent and be baptized," that rang out in answer to the inquiry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do," on Pentecost day, was directed to "devout men out of every nation." These devout men were worshipers of God, and it was their forms of worship and sacred traditions which chiefly came under the iconoclastic swing of that word, "Repent." It meant a transfer of their affection, a renunciation of their old convictions, and a preparation for absolute immersion into the new philosophy. Nor does it mean less to-day. These are a part of the essential "fruits meet for repentance." When citizenship in Christ's kingdom is sought, it should imply an end of allegiance to self, creedism, churchianity, and all that in them is, and when the baptismal wave sweeps over our immersed bodies, it should imply our complete entrance into Christ. Our rising from the liquid grave should mean that a "new creature" is born, in whom Christ alone is to be portrayed and illustrated.

Such to us is Repentance in its relation to the mind, and without this the initial labor and material in the character structure cannot be said to be in harmony with the foundation as to spirit or genius. In our next we shall deal with the evidences of repentance in overt conduct.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

THE report of the committee on American Archæology, appointed at the General Conference of 1894, is now ready and on sale at the Herald Office.

The report forms a book of 110 pages, about the size of the Instructor—in the page size.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 is an addenda. It contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, including their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; also a list of authors quoted. The work also includes an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has sought to outline and locate the lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of the countries and civilizations mentioned in the Book of Mormon. It has summarized and presented the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made for the record. It has gathered evidences from sources not accessible to the average reader, who in the report will find matter of great value in advocacy and defense of the divine origin of the Book of Mormon.

Not the least among the features of the report is the series of maps, six in number, prepared at the direction of the committee by Bro. G. F. Weston. These maps are bound in with the report. They also appear on the HERALD cover in connection with the advertisement of the report. Other engravings also appear, illustrations of "Mexican picture writing," and "Landa's Maya alphabet," "Le Plongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas-relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The work has been compiled and completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

Every Latter Day Saint should have a copy of this excellent work. It is both a manual of Book of Mormon archæology and an interesting literary account of the past and much of the present conditions of the lands named in the work.

All should be informed by reading and study of the committee's report. For sample of maps, see HERALD cover.

Price 50 cents per copy, post paid, to any address. Address orders to Herald Office.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. S. D. ALLEN, Milton, Florida, February 14:—

We have had some la grippe; all very well now. Bad weather caused our last conference to be small. However, we transacted all necessary business. Bro. Tucker has gone to Gordon, Alabama; Bro. Carpenter to Mississippi. Just a little brighter prospect in our district, in my opinion. Local divisions will melt away in time, if the saints do their duty.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRETHREN making appeals in behalf of others should remember that such items should be presented to the Presiding Bishop; or if of local importance, to the Bishop's agents, who are authorized to act in such cases. The HERALD cannot publish indiscriminate calls for relief; not that it is not in sympathy with the unfortunate, but because there is a proper method of dealing with such matters. The Bishop is at the head of the temporal arm of the service and to him such matters should be addressed. Were we to publish every individual or general call for help requests would soon become so numerous as to attract little or no attention. The lawful way is the correct one.

Bro. George Jenkins baptized four at Leavenworth, Indiana, as a result of a recent series of meetings. Letter from Bro. P. A. Flinn, late date, who reports good prospects for further additions.

Bro. A. W. Gorbutt sends us an article written for the Chicago Catholic World in reply to an editorial in that paper on the subject of "the vanishing Mormons." The article contains some good trenchant points; the World, however, declined to publish.

Bro. J. R. Lambert, who submitted to a surgical operation during the past week, is doing well and recovering rapidly, with prospects of permanent improvement in health.

Sr. Mary Powell writes of the work of a few saints at New Castle, Pennsylvania, where they hold services in private houses, also in schoolhouses. They mean to bring the truth to the attention of the people.

Sr. Cora L. Kelley, of Bagdad, Florida, writes thanking a sister who sent her printed matter and requesting that she write her. Her faith in the work is confirmed as her understanding increases.

Elder Ellis Short, of Independence, Missouri, and Standley, Indian Territory, was at Lamoni during the past week visiting relatives and friends, etc.

Sr. Alice M. Joslyn, of West Harrisville, Michigan, writes of her hope and trust in God, which have been a stay to her in trial and adversity. She is a teacher and with others is isolated from branches of the saints, but is strengthened nevertheless by the presence of the Holy Spirit realized in answer to prayer and faithful endeavor. Bro. J. J. Cornish and David Smith were laboring diligently in that field to build up the work.

Bro. C. E. Hand, of the Eastern Iowa district writes of some encouraging and some discouraging features in his field. Among the latter he mentions worldliness among some called to be saints, stating that they justify the practices of dancing, horse racing, etc., because General Conference has not condemned them, and because of which Bro. H. urges that the conference speak out definitely. The conference has expressed its opinion as adverse to the practice of dancing. The conference has not seen fit to pick out each separate evil and pass upon it, but has expressed itself in general terms against all that in letter and spirit is contrary to the law of God. Because it has not specifically condemned horse racing, it is nevertheless opposed to it and similar practices, undoubtedly. Were the conference to specifically condemn every crime in the calendar and to disavow every unhallowed or unwise practice, the evildoer would find some pretense to excuse his misdoings. The conference is not blamable for the worldliness of any bearing the name of saint; nor has the conference prevented proper and wise labor with a view to correct the conduct of the supposed or actual transgressor. The brethren in conference have discussed these questions time and again. If wrong, they may yet be converted; but it seems to us a fair presumption that they have examined the questions pro. and con., and have "done what they could" in the premises.

Particulars of railway rates will soon be announced. As stated the reduction has been granted. Particulars are delayed because of negotiations for a conveniently located joint agent at Independence.

An explosion destroyed the United States man-of-war Maine, lying at anchor in the harbor of Havana, Cuba, on the night of the 15th inst. The vessel sank with most of her crew, 256 seamen and two officers losing their lives. It is now believed that the explosion was purely accidental and was caused by gases generated in the coal bunkers, though some hold to the theory that it was caused by a Spanish torpedo. A rigid investigation has been ordered by the government. Universal expressions of sympathy have been tendered by representatives of foreign governments, including those of Spain.

Miss Frances E. Willard, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, died at New York City, on the 18th inst. Miss Willard was "in the highest degree a typical American woman—a woman of genius developed by culture, animated by the purest and loftiest motives and ideals. She had the genius for the discernment of her opportunity for helping others to better and happier living. She never was guilty of hiding a talent in a napkin. To be indolent, to shirk a responsibility, to surrender to any cowardly fear, was foreign to her nature." All honor and respect to her memory; all due regard to the nobility of her nature. She rests from her labors, but her works continue an inspiration to others for good. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Vice President, succeeds Miss Willard as President of the Union.

Vernal, Utah, Feb. 16. — Range riders just in from the Blue Mountain country, east of Green River and along the Colorado line, report cattle dying daily on the range on account of wet and cold. One cattle man states that he fears the loss will amount to from 50 to 75 per cent before the country dries up in the spring.

The Executive Council of the Mule Spinners of America met in Boston and voted to call a general strike, to affect every mill in New England. If the various unions act upon the recommendation 147,000 people will be thrown out of employment.

Orders have been issued by the French government to the mints that henceforth the sacred motto, "Dieu Protégé la France" (may God protect France), shall be omitted from all coins. It has been used for one hundred years.

The Rev. Dr. Arthur C. McGiffert, Washburn professor of Church History in the Union Theological Seminary may be brought before the New York Presbytery on a charge of heresy because of statements in his recent book, "A History of Christianity."

A note from Minister Woodford, handed to the Madrid government on Monday, demanded that Spain should formally disavow the insults to President McKinley contained in Señor de Lome's letter to Señor Canalejas. The Cabinet Council, it is reported, decided unanimously to reply to Minister Woodford that Señor de Lome's spontaneous resignation and the terms of the decree accepting it were considered sufficient satisfaction.

A special dispatch from Shanghai says the relations between China and Germany are seriously strained over the latter's fresh demands.

Count Esterhazy predicts that the Dreyfus-Zola controversy will not end until blood is shed, and says he would ask nothing better than to lead his regiment against the Jews of Paris.

The Agrarian Socialist movement in Hungary is becoming most serious. In the Kaschau district the peasants are in open revolt and there is much disorder in other districts.

According to the London Daily Mail all the details have been settled for carrying out Cecil Rhodes' scheme for the extension of the Buluwayo railway to Lake Tanganyika, Central Africa.

A dispatch from Constantinople states that the Ambassadors are trying to arrange a provisional government for Crete, and to introduce autonomy without appointing a provisional government.

Mr. Curzon, British Secretary of Foreign Affairs, in a recent speech in the House of Commons pointed out that Russia had advanced to the Oxus, and that it was impossible for Great Britain to allow a gap to remain in its northwestern Indian frontier. Russia stood on the borders of Afghanistan which England was pledged to defend. The Ameer had said: "England and Afghanistan are as one house with one wall. Are your soldiers going to join mine in defense of that wall?"

Mr. Curzon added that it was necessary, therefore, that communications with the frontier be kept open, and, while no sane man would propose to go beyond the mountain barrier, yet the two passes traversing the range must be secured. Moreover, the foreign relations of the frontier tribes must be controlled, assurances of their good conduct must be obtained, and it was vitally necessary to enter into confidential relations with them. The frontier officers, continued Mr. Curzon, would be carefully selected and if their work was successful the tribes would be "brought willingly under our rule, will wear our uniform, and form a valuable recruiting ground for the Indian army, for the resources within India are less plentiful than formerly."

Bro. W. H. Kelley sent us slips from New York and Brooklyn papers containing statements as made by Elder Kessler, of the Utah Church, and Bro. Kelley. Some of the differences were quite sharply drawn. The Utah men had no desire for discussion, however.

Bishop E. L. Kelley desires us to state that the families in the Decatur district of those in the field will be supplied by Bro. David Dancer, the local Bishop's agent.

Cablegrams indicate that a crisis is impending in West Africa, growing out of the conflicting claims of Great Britain and France. The French have been pursuing an aggressive policy in reference to territory claimed by Great Britain and an actual conflict seems imminent as the two forces approach one another. France by her attitude indicates that she depends upon Russia, and possibly Germany, to support her, if there is not an actual understanding between those powers.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"A page of words locked up in foreign tongue,
To which our present knowledge holds no key.
A life of care, of dark and toilsome ways,
In which no meaning, no intent, we see.

"The language learned, that page is all aglow,
Bringing a message from a radiant soul.
God's language learned, the ways illumined stand,
And in his light we read the perfect Whole."

AUNT MIRA'S ROOM.

WELL, what is there about Aunt Mira's room worthy of note? But little apparently. A brief description will outline the picture. It is a back chamber of a one and a half story house. It is eleven feet by thirteen and a half; has one window facing the rising sun. This window has an outlook into an extensive orchard, which perfumes the air, enchants the eye, and satisfies the taste. It is also made alive by a flock of hens, and vocal by the cackling of the same, the chirp of chickens, the early morning crows of many roosters, who seem to outdo one another in their loud hurrahs for the break of day, just when the tired brain wants to rest. In front of the window and on the left as far as the view can be taken in, it is a dense forest, lost in the horizon, while to the right in the distance a few farmhouses can be seen.

The house stands near the road, on which there is considerable passing, especially in summer. It is on the sunny side of a hill which gives the grandest view in the county—"Grand View" is an appropriate name, and "Sunnyside" the slope of the hill. The house is painted white, has green blinds, and two barns, one joining, the other separate. Only one neighbor in sight, yet others one fourth of a mile distant, screened by hills.

In the subject of our essay there is a bed, bureau, stand, table, chairs, heating stove, woodbox, a small oil stove, etc. This one room is used as a cookroom, bedroom, dining room, laundry, schoolroom, and play room, to say nothing about the mending and making that have been done there. A clothespress is very satisfactorily used as a dish closet and a storeroom. The woodwork is painted white, the walls covered with paper adapted to such a room, and it is nearly covered with paintings and useful ornaments, made by the hands of the occupant.

Why did this old lady make her home in this cozy little corner of the big world? We will briefly answer: Eleven years ago she faithfully and tenderly cared for her sick husband for months, through a severe illness which terminated in death. None but those who have had a similar experience can for a moment realize the emotions that attend such a case. We do not attempt to describe it—our pen cannot draw the picture—it merely states the fact that when she saw his remains placed in the last resting place, her soul cried out from its depths, "O that I might lie down in the grave with him!" The next thought forced itself into her mind with great power, and drove the other out. It was: "No, Father, let me stay on the earth and do a work for thee."

She could not live alone, yet knew not where she could go or what to do. She had had no anxiety about it, however, for she had made it the main and only object in life, to care for him she had promised to be faithful to, in sickness and in health. On returning to the house her brother said, "Come and live with me." She accepted the kind offer, saying, "I will never throw myself on you for support; I will do all I can to support myself." A few weeks later she became the mistress of this room, where she has played keeping house when at home, nearly half of the time being absent doing light work on small pay, or being company for friends.

Three little boys, the oldest seven, the youngest two, made this home glad and busy, as well as musical. She appropriated them, took them into the vacant place in her heart, believing that neither home nor heart are complete without the little ones. It is now nine years since she has had the enjoyment of one living object of her own, animate or inanimate, not so much as a kitten or a plant, and yet she always had a taste for the beautiful, a love of home, a proper desire for the same, and the necessary objects to complete it. A better developed head for domestic life than for the business world.

When visiting among the saints and other friends, who are in a prosperous condition, the question would sometimes present itself: "Why were such blessings withheld from me, and bestowed on so many?" Then asked God to direct her thoughts, and consequently her feelings, and thereby was able to rejoice in their prosperity instead of being envious.

The comforting thought that there is a home being prepared for the faithful, that can never grow old, never need repair, never be taxed, needs no furnishing, no cleaning, no lighting, but is pure and even glorious forever, fills her soul with a foretaste of its blessedness—not constantly, but occasionally.

The first winter she interested herself in sewing and knitting for her brother's family. The sister-in-law accepted the needed help, and one day remarked: "If you wish to help me, there is no way in which you can benefit me so much as you can to teach my children. It is a long way to the schoolhouse, and besides, there is no one to look after them."

"That I will do with pleasure, if they will obey me," was the quick response. The thought of giving them regular teaching had never occurred to her mind, although she enjoyed teaching and had given them a little oral instruction during the winter.

One hour a day, according to the mother's wish, two of the boys sat by their aunt, and received instruction according to her ability and judgment. This new occupation, and yet an old one, filled her mind with a different train of thought; something to live for, a purpose in life, without which any life is but a barren waste. If we cannot obtain a great, a grand purpose, let us accept that which presents itself, although it may seem small and insignificant, and make it great.

Two years later the third boy entered the little school and learned his letters—that was another stimulus, another object to live for. This little room was large enough for the children and their books. Plenty of room on the table for the latter, and room on the wall for a blackboard, although some ornaments were crowded over. They received more weeks school each year than was given in the district school, which they entered five years from the commencement. As they advanced in their studies, more time was given daily, at each term. Exercises in study were not the only pleasures and benefits that this little room has afforded. Many little games and amusements have been enjoyed by Aunt Mira, as well as by the children, to say nothing about the much whittling and paper cutting. Often a dinner party, or a treat of molasses candy was enjoyed, being a reward for diligence and good deportment, also strolls in the woods were taken. They took pleasure in gathering flowers, berries, and mosses for her, and in making a soft seat of boughs for "Auntie to rest on." O the happy hours that have been spent there! Who is able to enumerate them? Think ye that they have a record? We hope so.

"But," says one, "they must have been wonderful children if they always lived in such harmony." We can say as a truth, They are better than the average of children; but like all strong, intelligent children they must have amusements, and if it storms so that they cannot attend to their outdoor work or play, they find a chance and material with her. Paper bags are saved for them to burst, strings are collected for them, pins are given as they wish, also pieces of cloth, knives, and scissors are not refused when it is safe, and, "Please, Aunt Mira, can I have your knife?" is the manner of the request. Many little boats have been built and enjoyed there. Sometimes a dish of water, but more frequently the floor, has been used for the sea. Carts and sleds, too, have abounded.

Eight years ago this summer a dear little girl, fresh from the world of purity, came to make glad this home. A little more than two years later, a beautiful boy followed her, and when about the same length of time had elapsed, another joined the group at Sunny-side.

"Well," says one, "I guess Aunt Mira had no room for them." Yes, she did, too, both in her heart and in her room—'tis something like a stagecoach, always room enough for one more. Not unfrequently five children and a cat are present and can stay, unless called by their parents, as long as they wish, if harmony prevails. If she rebukes them, which has been done many times, no disrespectful language is given back—two now no longer children, but young men, soon to go out and meet the stern realities of life. O how glad is she that their happiness and comfort have been her purpose all these years. We see her sitting so that the light from the window will fall over the left shoulder onto her work or book—she is confined to glasses by day and can do only plain knitting in the evening. While thus engaged the little ones are amusing themselves by hauling wood from the woodbox on their little cart or sled to some other part of the room or out into the hall. This they do not do without permission, and usually haul back when done. They have much pleasure in hunting, one being a wild animal whose den is under the bed.

"Well, old lady, don't you get sick of such nonsense?"

"No, but a little tired, sometimes." We older ones should not forget that we, too, were children once. What does one's childhood amount to if it is robbed of its rights? What are its rights? Its innocent home pleasures. Many times have the three boys sat by their aunt's bedside, while she was resting, and laid their heads down on it, and given attention to her stories and recital of poems—now another three occasionally do the same. Another three help bring up her wood and water—even the little two-year-old boy loves to bring up "Aunt Mi'a's 'ood and awter."

Right here we will say, "Like begets like"—love begets love, hate begets hate, and especially with children.

Ye who have grown old as regards time, cultivate your love for children, that ye may sow no tares in the garden of the Lord, and that ye may be happier here as well as happier hereafter. SR. ALMIRA.

Invite some senior scholar, or some one of the family to study with you, if it is thought to be preferable. If two or more teachers live near to each other let this hour be occupied studying together.

Teachers should cultivate sociability with each other, and consult together for their mutual good in their work.

5¹ Have a meeting or meetings at first of quarter to study general plan conducting the lessons of the quarter, that is to take a preview of the work to be done, and how best to do it.

If there are outlines in all the quarterlies study and contrast them. Decide on most important points.

4² Lesson text.

Outline should precede lesson text to give a system to its study.

5² Select teaching points.

Teachers of the different grades to select as best suited to their grade, then compare and harmonize with each other and with time to be occupied in lesson.

6² How to illustrate.

7² Form outlines.

Each teacher should conclude upon an outline governing her in teaching points she or he has concluded upon to teach.

Tuesday, 7:30 p. m., the subject of the home department was treated by J. F. Mintun, and the following thoughts were with others presented:—

HOME DEPARTMENT.

1. Preparation for.
 - 1¹ Have quarterlies and Bible always at hand.
2. Time.
 - 1¹ Study spare moments.
 - 2¹ Study evenings with family, inviting friends.
 - 3¹ Study on appointed hour on Sunday, inviting friends.
3. How conducted.
 - 1¹ Appoint hour of meeting.
 - 2¹ Secure extra quarterlies and Bibles.
 - 3¹ Prepare during week and on Sunday as for regular Sunday school.
 - 4¹ Select some one to lead.
 - 1² Preferring member of the church.
 - 2² One best qualified.
 - 3² Prefer father all other things considered equal.
 - 5¹ Invite friends to meet with you.
 - 6¹ Where people are very poor gather them into their own home, or your own, and teach both parents and children. Thus gather them until better provisions can be made.

The following topics were on home work, but not wholly limited to what is known as the home department, yet it is governed by the same principle:—

- I. Parents' aid to scholars or children.
 1. By studying with them.
 2. Assist child to be punctual.
 3. Accompany child to Sunday school.
- II. Parents' aid to teachers.
 1. Inspire confidence in the child for the teacher.
 2. Request child to comply with teacher's instructions.

OAKLAND, Cal., Feb. 1.

Editors Herald.—I have had a talk with some Utah elders. I told them if they were the true church they should not be afraid to meet us and prove it by the books.

They refused; but claimed that the gifts of the Spirit, their prosperity, and the great things they were doing in temple building, and the work for the dead, and the little we were doing in contrast with their sending one of their apostles to Jerusalem, and in the South, and the gain they were making from our church, claiming twenty-four in and around Oakland and San Francisco, was conclusive evidence of their being the true church; and that it was only a matter of a few years when we would go down, said that President Joseph Smith had seen it in vision while here in Oakland. The vision having been reported by old Bro. Al Nethercott, who was excommunicated from the Reorganized Church for unchristianlike conduct.

They also accused me of having stopped their preaching on the streets of Oakland. As I have found several of them to be very unreliable, and for fear they will try to make capital of this, as they are doing of all the old stories they can find, I here make a statement of just what occurred: I found they were preaching on the streets and representing themselves to be Latter Day Saints, and giving out tracts which taught only the first principles of the gospel. But on the covers I found two tracts advertised; one on polygamy, another on blood atonement, and thus secretly introducing their damnable heresies. To this, and to be classed with Utah Mormons, I had objections; so I went to the Mayor and Chief of Police, and asked for the privilege of going on the street and showing the difference between the two churches. This led to an inquiry on their part of what the difference was. I told them we were and always had been a law-abiding people, and anti-polygamists in the strongest and fullest sense of the word. But the chief told me these men had told him that they did not preach or practice polygamy, and that it was stopped. I then showed him that they advertised polygamy and blood atonement, and that their Book of Covenants had a revelation in it that commanded it and made it necessary to a full salvation, and they could judge for themselves whether polygamy was thus dead or not.

The Chief of Police thought if we went on the streets it would lead to controversy and disturb the peace. I told him it would not on our part, and if they were permitted on the streets we wanted as much time as they had, and that we had invited them to discuss the differences before the public, but they would not meet us, and that we did not want to let our good name and the true church be misrepresented in this way. The Chief of Police then said, "I will stop their preaching on the street, for they have misrepresented themselves to me," and he stopped them; and now they lay it to me, when I only asked for the privilege of showing the difference between the two churches.

I suppose some of your readers would like to know what has become of Bro. Haws. My answer is that my health has been poor this winter, and that I have not been able to be out in the active ministry, but have done a little preaching and some talking here in Oakland. My troubles have been of such nature that I have been able to write but very little; but, thank the Lord, I am again able to be up and am feeling considerable better. I am still in hopes of being able to battle for the truth several years if the Lord so wills, and for which I am praying.

Yours in bonds,

A. HAWS.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Feb. 11.

Editors Herald:—As reported by Bro. D. L. Shinn, Bro. George H. Hulmes has resigned his position as presiding officer of the Pittsburg branch, which office he has held for fourteen years. He left here on Tuesday to join his family at Independence. It was really painful to see the sorrow manifested by all on Sunday when farewells were made. Appropriate resolutions had been passed at the time he handed in his resignation, but there seemed to be a spontaneous desire by all to show our appreciation, in a substantial manner, of our brother's ability as an educator, and a recognition of his faithfulness, which resulted in the branch presenting him with a fine indexed copy of Webster's Dictionary, in connection with a beautiful oxidized stand of latest pattern, also a copy of Young's Analytical concordance of the Bible. The presentation was made immediately after the sacrament service. It was a complete surprise to our brother.

During all these years of faithful service, ever standing up firmly for the right and true to his convictions, he has been marvelously successful in not making enemies, but at the gathering of the best representation the branch has had for a long time, not one but who felt that they were about to part with a true friend and a wise shepherd who had ever cared for the fold.

Public praise of individuals is not always desirable, but there are times when if appreciation is not expressed, the principle is good that the stones should cry out in recognition thereof.

Pittsburg is justly proud of the talented saints it has given to the West. Among those who have gone from here our talented brother J. F. McDowell; Richard Salyards, assistant editor of Herald; Will Garret, editor of Ensign, with family; Frank Criley, manager of Herald Office, with family; Sr. M. E. Hulmes, President of Daughters of Zion, and soon Bro. Ralph G. Smith, of musical fame, with his talented wife; and Victor Kress, a rising young artist of fine ability, with family, will shortly move to Independence; and now Bro. George H. Hulmes has gone to join in the Pittsburg workers for the Lord, whose field of usefulness has increased as years have been added unto them.

Bro. Hulmes has not only had the respect, love, and confidence of the saints, but among the business men of the city he has made the name of Latter Day Saint an honorable one. His departure has had a tendency to bring the officers of the branch closer together by reason of the added responsibility placed on them. He has left the branch in good condition. Much could be written in praise of the work accomplished by our brother, but for fear of making my letter too long will close with a few general remarks.

We are putting forth renewed efforts to raise money to put up a church here. We have an auxiliary society, organized by Bro. Hulmes, whose object is to assist the branch to obtain a church. We are just trying a new idea, and it promises to be successful from the orders already received. We are having circulars printed of extracts taken from Herald cover articles on whole wheat flour. We can get this flour from a mill near here where they make it after the old-time method of grinding with stones. We propose to distribute these circulars, sell the flour, and give the profit to the auxiliary society.

Have just been informed by Mr. Duss, head of the Economite Society, that his mother-in-law, Sr. Susan E. Creese, died this a. m. He requested that an elder take charge of the services.

C. ED. MILLER.

WEIR CITY, Kan., Feb. 11.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you last I have been very busy doing what I can for the "marvelous" work. A pleasant Christmas was spent with Bro. Hisle and family at Scammon, Kansas. The first part of January I preached eleven times at Medoc, Missouri; had large crowds, good listening, and fair interest. The good (?) Methodists at that place tried to interfere in an undermining way, by pouring out the lamp oil, locking up the coal, telling lies, and conducting other meetings in the neighborhood to draw away the crowd, but it only added as fuel to my meeting.

Some good old soldiers and friends to principle were made friends to the "cause," after standing by me from principle. While at Medoc I made a speech at the G. A. R. meeting; a large crowd was present, and by this step a host of friends were made. Many invitations were given to return; many are thinking, and one was baptized as a result of the meeting.

I went from there to Galesburg, near by, and spent a week preaching, except three nights on account of rain. Good interest and liberty was had. From there we went to Waco for my regular appointment (fourth Sundays). The following Sunday I went to Opolis, Kansas, preached three times, and the following week preached at Neutral and Owsley schoolhouses.

While at Opolis I was challenged for debate by a local preacher, Mr. Denton, a theorist. So we commenced February 7, and continued three nights; Mr. Denton affirming as follows: "Water baptism is not essential to the salvation of the Gentiles." I denied. Mr. Denton claimed to be a preacher to the Gentiles; and Paul was a preacher to the Gentiles. I showed the contrast between Mr. Denton and Paul, as one point in 1 Corinthians 1, Paul baptized; twelfth chapter, second verse, they were Gentiles. Paul's Gentile converts were given the Holy Ghost, in different gifts—wisdom, knowledge, healing, prophecy, etc. Mr. Denton only believes in Gentiles having wisdom. Again Paul's converts in 1 Corinthians 12: 28, some were apostles, prophets, and had miracles, healing, etc., among them—the Gentiles. Mr.

Denton is not in harmony with his brother (?) Paul; yet he, Denton, claims and knows God sent him to the Gentile people. He also claimed to be perfect without sin. I referred him to 1 John 1: 8-10, as proof that the truth was not in him; and Philip. 3: 11, 12, that Paul was not perfect, etc. Large crowds were in attendance, and I think a great deal of good was done for the gospel mission to every creature, without respect to persons or nations.

I go to-morrow to Englevale, Kansas, for a series of meetings. The M. E. people there have closed us out of their church, but a schoolhouse will be used.

In gospel bonds,

W. C. CATHER.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Feb. 9.

Editors Herald:—I have just closed a two nights' debate with Sam Bettes (the cowboy preacher), subject, "Resolved that baptism in water for the remission of sins is essential to man's salvation." Bible the standard of argument. Much good was done, as the debate was held in another part of the city from where our meetings are usually held. Bro. Bettes was fair with us, and thoroughly gave the people to understand that this church was not a Mormon Church, saying we were as much Christian as any church he knew of.

I go to Lansing, Michigan, Monday next, to commence a four nights' debate with Moses Hull, of Chicago, the great apostle of Spiritualism; subject, "Spiritualism."

Hastily,

R. E. GRANT.

BLENDSVILLE, Mo., Feb. 14.

Editors Herald:—I have returned from a seven weeks' trip into Benton and Washington Counties, Arkansas. I had the pleasure of presenting the gospel to many who had never heard the true position of the church. My first effort was at Herd. By previous arrangement I had the pleasure of meeting and laboring with our esteemed young brother, Jesse L. Reed, who like Philip of old, after finding the true way through the preaching of Bro. J. W. Jackson, could not be content till the glad tidings of the restored gospel should be preached to his near kinsfolk and friends. At this place we met with crowded houses and marked attention throughout, with many invitations to return, giving us the assurance that open doors would greet us at any time. After ten days of pleasant association with Bro. Reed, preaching every night and visiting his old friends every day, of which he seems to have a legion, at last we gave the parting hand, he to go to his home at Mena and I to points in Washington County.

Leaving my team and buggy at Bro. M. P. Dale's, near Durham, the face of the country being so rough, I started on foot with only books and satchel in hand, hungering in my soul to be of use to the Master in bringing light and liberty to the children of men in those mountains. For three weeks I had the pleasure of preaching every night and twice on Sundays to hundreds of people who had never heard of the faith once delivered to the saints, on the middle fork of White River, nine miles southeast of Fayetteville. My heart was made glad to meet with and we entertained for several days at the comfortable home of an old-time friend of the saints, S. P. Buxton and wife, also his son and wife. These friends have been and are doing a great deal of good for the latter-day work, they having lived right among the saints in Iowa for more than twenty-five years, of whom they unhesitatingly speak in the highest terms of commendation. While at this point I was well treated by all, and was made welcome at the homes of some of the best people in the country, Mr. John Barns, Professor May, and many others. I left that place with the full assurance that in the near future a people would be gathered out of this mountain region that will be an honor to God and a great benefit to their associates.

I baptized the wife of Bro. M. P. Dale, and ordained Bro. M. P. to the office of a teacher. Two others demanded baptism who had heard but a few sermons I advised to wait till my return, feeling that it was wisdom in that case. Many said "God bless you," and "Come again," and I am off to other parts, feeling that Arkansas is not such a hard field after all. May God bless and prosper his work.

Yours for truth,

T. J. SHEPPARD.

XENIA, Ill., Feb. 11.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place from Parrish, Illinois, last Wednesday. District conference of Southern Illinois last Saturday and Sunday, held at Parrish, was fairly attended and productive of good. Hopeful signs are manifest in the apparent awakening to the necessity of enforcing the law in cases of flagrant and long standing neglect or violation. Church trials and expulsion have cleared the atmosphere and given hope to order and virtue loving people. The just reproach that the persistent retaining and fellowship without labor or protest of the transgressors of law, has wrought incalculable and lasting injury to the gospel cause, and it seems strange sometimes that honest, clean people should so long submit to such association and classification with members whose lives are anything but gospel ensamples.

We spoke Monday and Tuesday evenings after conference to increasing audiences. Roads were becoming very bad, however. Bro. Slover was to occupy the following night, going from there to Tunnell Hill; Bro. Stead to Springerton: these places being supplied through previous appointment. I made arrangements to visit Brush Creek and Orchardville, provided roads made it possible to hold meetings, calling at this place on the way, desiring also to see old friends again, and probably for the last time, as Southern Illinois will be ministered to by others than myself during the coming conference year, in all probability. I have found here a good-hearted people, and am truly sorry to part with them, and to say perhaps and likely a forever good-bye. I shall leave them, however, with the consciousness that I have without fear or favor stood for their permanent good and lasting interest, and in the light of a judgment day verdict as to the character of the labor done. I have always been kindly and courteously treated, and gladly welcomed by the local and general church laborers; and pray that God may bless and help them and all of us to rise to higher grounds and a more complete fellowship with Jesus Christ. Baptized six persons at Beardstown two weeks ago, a place and country that needs looking after by a competent, conscientious overseer.

To-morrow night and Sunday have appointment to preach at Brush Creek chapel, if the state of the roads will allow me to get there. Preaching here last night and to-night.

Three of our Utah misrepresentatives attended our meeting last night. These people, like the flies of Egypt, are everywhere, and all over Illinois; the most nondescript lot of ministers that I have ever personally come in contact with; with the collar and chain of Brigham Young or President Woodruff around their necks; their manhood broken to the wheel of that ecclesiastical tyranny in Utah; and as full of evasions, contradictions, and ecclesiastical tricks as has ever opposed in any age the light of God's saving truth. Truly are they "reprobate concerning the faith," a fact so easily demonstrated that no amount of either good or ill treatment will serve to draw them out into the open, where their history and actual design and merit may be publicly ventilated! Their works are "truly in the dark." Denying polygamy in public in one breath, and privately teaching it in the next. A thing "forever abandoned" in one place, and as "the grandest principle God ever gave to man" in another. Their real design and desire is illustrated in the exodus to Mexico, where lust may be legalized, fornication and adultery Christianized!! God save the mark; it fairly takes our breath away. To Mexico, where God may be farther and longer mocked, and made a liar; Jesus Christ turned back upon his word; the Book of Mormon thrown to the mire of lustful forgetfulness; the Holy Scriptures—so clearly corrected of God as against these crimes—wrested, perverted, evaded, dimmed; the mission work of Joseph Smith dishonored—brought to ignominy, and public shame, and contempt; the gospel work and sacrifice of former years turned to failure and to disaster; the gospel submerged—its original contentions destroyed by contradictory laws with "celestial" titles. Devils laugh; the Gentiles mock and say, "Aha! I told you so."

But the "reproach of his people" God will surely "take away." The Devil is cunning; but God's wisdom is greater, and he will not fail to establish his kingdom according to his promises.

Mexico already is turning her face toward the sunlight of God, and will sooner or later spew that filthy, unreasonable, anti-gospel, anti-Christ, Heaven-cursed contention out of the land, into—let us trust—its original home and final resting place—in hell.

There is one thing that apparently at times seems to catch the "gudgeons" or deceive the simple-minded or uninformed; and that is the very "umble" demeanor apparently manifest by these Utah church missionaries. My conclusion from observation and experience with them is that it belongs to their card of instructions, and is one of the very few "attractions" they have to present to decent people, and that these "so very umble you know" fellows are mostly after the Uriah Heep pattern, and that the mischievous and soul-destroying spirit of that apostate fraud that after 1850 blasphemed and dishonored the name of God, defied the laws of our country, subjugated the freedom of and terrorized saints, is still unchanged and the same, saving the opportunity or power of expression or enforcement. I do not believe that their official acts receive any higher indorsement than that of their masters in Utah, under whose control their consciences are kept or directed.

Their "priesthood" I believe to be as powerless, and as unauthorized, and as devoid of sealing or saving power as was the priests of Baal in the time of Elijah; our personal observations and the testimony of competent witnesses compel this conclusion; at any rate, we stand ready for the test in open field with altars side by side, and let these priests who worship Baal, and their fathers who have eaten at Jezebel's table, call upon their Adam or other gods, "and the God that answereth by fire, let him be God." Even so, Amen!

In the faith of our divine Lord and hope of his blessed and pure gospel, Editors Herald:—I wish to have an inquiry made for my daughter, and when Elder Moore of your church was here he advised me to write to ask you to insert an advertisement.

My daughter was born in Warren County, Illinois, in 1862. Her mother died and she was raised by her grandmother Catharine Russell, grandfather's name George. My daughter's name was Lydia Caroline Kughn. She was taken to Kansas in 1865. Any information of her will be gladly received by CLAY CENTER, Kansas.

Editors Herald:—Healed from consumption, since I was given up by different physicians. This is the testimony of a young man who has belonged to the Kewanee branch in Illinois since the 17th of October, 1897.

About one week before I became a member of the above-mentioned branch, I was administered to by an elder, and received much strength from the dear Lord, for which I will thank and praise his name.

A few days after this I was again administered to by Elders Wilbers and Whitehouse, who belong to the Kewanee branch, and again I received much help from the living God, who is our blessing in all our afflictions.

Again, a few weeks after this, I was administered to in Lamoni, Iowa, about the 8th of November, 1897, by an elder who was on his way to St. Joseph, where he had his home, and again I received help from the Lord, and I was healed from the night-sweat, for which I had sought all kinds of cures for about three years; but now I can thank and praise God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; because he is the only true physician to his chosen witnesses.

I thank my living God for the good he has shown his chosen witness, and for the healing through the light and power of his Holy Spirit. Honor and praise be to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Amen.

Again I must say, that some weeks later, I was again administered unto, for the fourth time, by Brn. Smith and Henry Hart, of Braton, of Kansas, the latter of whom lives twelve miles north of Clay Center, Kansas, this last time I was completely healed, and now I am and shall be well from the terrible disease—consumption.

I am glad that Jesus has said in his word that if any among you are sick, "let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil, in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." And again he says in Isaiah 53: 4: "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows."

And now in conclusion I wish to say that I am glad. I have stood and listened to his truths and have received light through his Holy Spirit.

In bonds your brother,
N. A. NILSON.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Feb. 9.

Editors Herald:—The work here we believe is on the upward move. It looks as if things were shaping into a condition of prosperity, and a time to come soon when Zion's cause will be more better established in this great city of the South. I say great, it is great in many ways; its reputation is widely known as a health resort, a place visited by hundreds of tourists. Romantic in its ancient history, and interesting to behold its many ancient edifices constructed years ago by the early Spanish Catholic fathers. It is a Jerusalem to all south Texas, so far as commerce is concerned. With all these natural resources and advantages for spreading the gospel, I cannot help but strive on and on amid discouragements and oppositions on every hand.

Our church building committee has begun work and things are moving along nicely. We attended a basket supper last night, given by the committee, in which a nice little sum was netted for the church. Our young folks are meeting every Friday for singing practice, and we believe much good will be done by interesting them in this important auxiliary of church work.

We had a splendid meeting on Sunday night, the house being crowded beyond its seating capacity, and I think I enjoyed the Spirit in preaching as much as I ever did to any congregation. I feel greatly encouraged, and may the day speedily come when our opportunities will be better for the cause of Zion. I am satisfied the church will be built, and that will mean so much for our work here.

Your brother in Christ,
H. P. CURTIS.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 18.

Editors Herald:—Please rectify mistake in my wife's death report as follows: Sr. Wahlstrom was born at Môle, Sweden, 1827; united with the Utah Church in Sweden, 1868; she was married to John Wahlstrom in 1870. She came to America with her husband in 1875. She also united with the Reorganized Church under the administration of Elder Joseph Luff, in 1879; returned from Utah to Omaha, Nebraska, in 1880; and in 1882 came to Lamoni.

In 1892 Sr. Wahlstrom accompanied her husband on his missionary labor to Malmo, Sweden, returning in 1894.

Yours truly,
JOHN WAHLSTROM.

WILLIAMS-BLALOCK DISCUSSION.

Editors Herald:—As you have given prominence to our "Commission analysis" and "identity slip," I send you the following in addition concerning our late debate at Tabor. We write after mature reflection, and not in the heat of immediate victory. I am assured we have lost nothing, while the opposition clearly manifest keen disappointment, for—

1. Elder McClure, ere the debate was half over, realizing that something must be done to augment their glimmering hopes, announced a series of lectures by "I, Clark Braden," to immediately follow the debate. When I showed how this reflected on their effort, Elders Blalock and Fisher publicly disclaimed any connection therewith, and now the local church is divided, some siding with Fisher and some with McClure.

2. Elder Blalock, I am credibly informed, has written the local church at Mondamin, urging that they get out of the discussion if at all possible, as it would be the worst thing that could take place there; adding if they could not honorably do so, that at least they insist on a rearrangement of the proposition involving the claims of the Christian Church. They have acted thereon and resolved that if Elder Bays enters the discussion under the present arrangement they will issue circulars and scatter them over the country, disavowing any connection with the debate, leaving Elder Bays to go it alone!

3. An ex-pastor of the Christian Church in this city told me the other day that he had received word from the Christian people at Tabor stating that Elder Blalock was no match for Williams, and that we "completely snowed them under." Of course this minister felt it was due to the weakness of the man and not the cause he represented.

4. The Fremont County Herald says editorially concerning our effort: "The first six nights Rev. Williams affirmed for the Latter Day Saints, Rev. Blalock's work being to tear down step by step as the affirmative laid down his premises. It would gratify the most exacting follower of the saints' belief to know how fully their representative met the expectations and requirements of his friends, as measured by the Gentile world who attended. As a debater he was gentlemanly, had his references at tongue's end, arranged in systematic order, and while affecting no wit, was on hand when repartee was needful.

Polished in all his ways, he won the admiration of his hearers by the straightforward earnestness with which he handled his case."

In reference to the character of the debate they say: "However much the critical public may decry a religious debate, this one was conducted upon broad and liberal lines. The expected ill-feeling did not crop out among the followers, for the leaders kept their respective claims and assertions within the bounds of reason and charity."

"When it became known that the Disciples had another debate on deck for the 21st Elder Williams interpreted the announcement as a signal that reinforcements were needed by his foes."

Again: "It is not an injustice to prevailing sentiment to remark that it would seem best to let well enough alone and not overdo in their zeal for controversies so laden with germs of bitterness and strife." And, closing with the following: "It would seem an act of misjudgment to bring about another controversy where our local friends have everything to lose and but little to gain." The local friends referred to are the Christians or Disciples.

By request I furnished the following which they inserted: "I am thoroughly satisfied with the results of the discussion. It means future growth for us. People, who heretofore have entertained an incorrect and vague idea of our religious philosophy are better informed and, as a result, look upon us with more favor. Experience evidences that the better acquainted people are with our claims the more readily do they accord us our rightful place as representatives of the consistent Nazarine. We went into this contest with nothing to lose and all to gain. We have not been disappointed. We congratulate the people on their fair canvass and are content with the judgment which they shall render. Whatever other discussions may have been, Christianity has lost nothing in this encounter. People have studied their Bibles as never before, which can harm no one and bless all. Thanking you for the favor thus conferred, I am,

"Yours only for the right,

"T. W. WILLIAMS."

They quote a number of leading citizens. We copy those whom we know to be in sympathy with neither:—

Dr. McKittrick: "Looks to me that Elder Williams has been the most logical and Elder Blalock the most witty."

Wate Feast: "From what I've heard it looks to me that Williams is the ablest man."

John Penny: "Williams proved beyond a doubt that the Bible says those signs shall follow those who believe, and that is all there is in it."

Dr. Eppler: "I don't belong to either, but it looks to me that Williams is rather ahead."

Others are quoted more favorable to our side, but I have omitted them because of seeming interest they have in our faith. They published the statements of some of Campbell's followers which gave a show of approval of Elder Blalock's effort. The local pastor, W. T. Fisher, wrote a letter of indorsement and also the "usual" letter of indorsement saying, "We are satisfied with the work of W. W. Blalock in his debate with the Latter Day Saints." Certainly! Some people are forced to be satisfied from necessity rather than choice.

The following is a summary of our closing speech as furnished for publication in the Hamburg Democrat: "Proposition, Resolved that the Christian or Disciples' Church of which I, W. W. Blalock, am a member, is the church of God in fact, and in doctrine, practice, and church organization is in complete harmony with the teachings of the New Testament Scriptures. The proposition is so worded that unless my opponent has maintained his position in every particular, he must go down as having failed to substantiate his claims. It is not enough for him to show that they teach some things contained in the Bible, all others can do likewise: but he affirms that the Christian or Disciples' Church is the, not a, but the Church of God in fact, meaning only one; that it is the Church of God in fact. To prove this he must of necessity bring more than assertion or assumption; he must produce divine testimony that they are in line with God and his truth. In affirming that this church, in doctrine, practice, and church organization is in complete harmony with the teachings of the New Testament Scriptures, my opponent must show that they have the identical organization in every particular as is represented there; that they teach the identical doctrine and practice the identical things practiced throughout New Testament times. If my opponent has not done this he has failed in his affirmation. The Christian or Disciples' Church is not the Church of God, because it is not in harmony with the New Testament in—

"1. Name: My opponent has maintained that they adopt nothing unless they have a 'Thus saith the Lord' for it. He has repeatedly stated that he could prove that the name to be borne was that of 'Christian,' and that the mouth of God gave it. I have repeatedly asked him for the chapter and verse where God spoke the name and he has failed to produce it. I have shown that the name 'Saint' has been the name of God's people in all ages; so called by God (Ps. 50:5). The members of the church are so called in the New Testament. (See Rom. 1:7, 8; 8:27; 1 Cor. 1:2; Eph. 1:1; 1 Thess. 3:13; Jude 14)

"2. That the church should bear the name of Jesus Christ; that as the wife bears the name of her husband, so the church should bear the name of Jesus Christ. (See Eph. 3:14, 15; Acts 15:25, 26; 4:10-12; 1 Cor. 6:11; Col. 3:17.) Elder Blalock in his proposition calls it the 'Christian or Disciples' Church,' yet has produced not a single proof from scripture to show that this was the collective name. The other evening he shook hands publicly with me agreeing that 'Church of Jesus Christ' was the proper name. This forever destroys the proposition, 'Resolved, "that the Christian or Disciples' Church,"' etc.

"3. Elder Blalock has maintained that the name 'Christian' should be borne by the children of God because the mouth of God had given it. We have shown that it was never used until A. D. 43, or ten years after Pentecost; that it was given as a name of reproach by the enemies of the church (see Acts 11:26), used by Agrippa, the ruler, and not by Paul (Acts 26:28); referred to by Peter as the cause of suffering and not as God-given. (1 Peter 4:16.) We have repeatedly asked Rev. Blalock for the chapter and verse where God gave the name, and he has failed to give them. We have proven from Alexander Campbell that 'Christian' is an earthly name. (See Millennial Harbinger, 1840, p. 378; see also Smith's Bible Dictionary, p. 116; Jenks' Com., p. 62; Dean Alford's Com., vol. 2, p. 823; Com. by nonsectarian tract society on Acts 11:26.)

4. I have shown that Alexander Campbell claimed to be a restorer, but by his own confession failed. That Barton W. Stone organized an undenominational church. (See "Why I am a Disciple," p. 129.) That in 1809 Alexander Campbell organized a Union church.—(Ibid. 130.) That in 1829 Stone and Campbell united their organization.—(Ibid. 131.) That Alexander Campbell was the man who 'conceived, organized and made successful the present reformation.'—(B. W. Stone's Tract.) That he 'founded' an organization called 'Disciples.'—See Johnson's Encyclopedia revised by B. A. Hinsdale (Disciple) 'Dis. of Christ' p. 30, 31. That he is the recognized founder of the Christian or Disciples church.—(See Memoirs of Alexander Campbell by Professor Richardson, vol. 2, p. 548.) That he is the recognized head of the Christian or Disciples' Church.—(See Life of Alexander Campbell by Segor, p. 25, also Living Pulpit by W. F. Mire, p. 14, 19, 20; American Cyclopaedia, vol. 3, p. 662.) That in the Christian Evangelist of November 2, 1893, the Editor, J. H. Garrison, writing on the subject, 'Disciples of Christ,' says that Alexander Campbell was the recognized leader.' That Charles L. Loose, one of the brightest lights, writing to the Christian Evangelist October 6, 1892, says: 'The work was inaugurated by the Campbells, Scott, and others. All these Elder Blalock controverted. Then to cap the climax I read an extract from Elder Blalock's own pen, wherein he says that Campbell restored the Church of Christ. Thus we have proven that, though Campbell has been recognized as leader, founder, restorer, organizer by the leading lights of the movement, that he did not restore the complete church, by their own confession.—See Christian Evangelist vol. 33, p. 740; vol. 34, p. 53, sketch of Alex. Campbell by Scott p. 44; Our Movement, by Garrison p. 28, 29.

"5. Elder Blalock has affirmed that a man can be a child of God and belong to any of the sects, while I have shown by their own admissions that they are the Ishmael of the age; that they denounce all organizations which do not coincide with theirs (see Christian System, p. 182, 183, 259; Great Controversy, p. 138-155; Christian System p. 227, 228, 244; Disciples of Christ, p. 29, 39); that a man cannot be a Christian in other churches according to their teachings. (See One Body p. 19); that all other churches are wrong

"6. They are wrong in organization; they admit an apostasy from primitive Christianity, and teach the necessity of a restoration. They claim that this restoration was made by Alexander Campbell, entirely unaided by divine direction or inspiration, thus admitting that God nor Christ had any hand in the organization of the Christian or Disciples' Church. They are wrong in this, because the Church of Christ, according to the New Testament Scriptures, was organized by Christ by direction of God the Father. (See Matt. 16:14-20; John 12:49, 50.) They reject the idea of authority as it was recognized in the New Testament church, and claim that all of their ministers are uninspired; that anyone can preach (see Chris. System, p. 82:13); that the congregations select the preachers and the old men ordain. (Ibid., p. 82:15.) This is in direct conflict with the practices of the Church of Jesus Christ so far as the New Testament goes, for all the officers therein were inspired men. The apostles and prophets were inspired men. (See Acts 2:1-12; 13:1-4.) Evangelists inspired. (Acts 8:6; 1 Tim. 1:14; 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6; 4:5.) Teachers. (Acts 13:1.) Deacons. (Acts 6:3-8.)

"7. They are wrong because they do not have all the officers that Christ placed in the church; viz.: Apostles. (Matt. 10:1-16.) Seventy. (Luke 10:1, 2.) Prophets. (Acts 13:1.) Evangelists. (Acts 8:6.) Pastors. (Eph. 4:11.) Elders. (Acts 15:23.) Bishops. (1 Tim. 3:1.) Teachers. (Acts 13:1.) Deacons. (Acts 6:1-6.) (See also 1 Cor. 12:28; Eph. 4:11-15.) The last two citations state that all the officers were to be perpetuated, while they retain only three; and even on this point they are in error in the congregation selecting the minister and ordaining without divine direction. (See nonsectarian com., article Bishop, also Priest.)

"8. They are wrong because they reject apostolic succession; the Bible teaching that the apostles had successors; first, Matthias (Acts 1:23-26); Barnabas and Paul (Acts 13:2; 14:14); James, the Lord's brother (Gal. 1:18, 19.) (See also 1 Thess. 1:1; 2:5, 6; 1 Cor. 4:6-9; Mosheim, first century, chap. 3; Jenks' com.; Dean Alford's com.; Gill's com., vol. 1, p. 911; Speaker's com., and others.)

"9. They are wrong in organization because they are not the "one body," they being divided up into small congregations, each one of which is independent in its organization and considered a complete church, they having nothing in common with each other; while the Church of Christ, according to the New Testament, were under one general head with general officers, who had authority over any and all congregations. (See Acts 8:14-16; 2:14; 5:1-11; Matt. 16:14-18; Acts 6:1, 2; 11:1-4; 14:23-27; 15:22; 20:28; 1 Cor. 4:17; 7:17; 16:1; 2 Cor. 11:28.) Others had general jurisdiction besides the apostles. (1 Tim. 3:1; 2 Tim. 2:1-3.) Their officers lay no claim to be sent of God, but are chosen by the congregation. (See T. G. Allen's tract 'Christians or Disciples,' p. 33; Chris. Evan. vol. 33, p. 644; Chris. Sys. p. 82:13-15.)

They have no system of ministers and their call is but human (Chris. Evan. vol. 34, p. 66, under the editorial caption, 'Have we too many preachers?'; also vol. 33, p. 740); while the New Testament Scriptures outline a divine system under the supervision of God alone. Paul says no one can preach except he be sent. (See Rom. 10:13-15; Heb. 5:4-6; John 17:18; 20:21; 12:49, 50; 13:20; Acts 20:28; 13:1; 1 Tim. 4:14; Eph. 4:8-12; 1 Cor. 12:28; Acts 1:24; Luke 10:2; John 3:27.)

"10. They deny present revelation, yet admit there is no specific form of church government outlined in the New Testament. (See 'What is the Christian Church,' p. 6; Chris. Evan. vol. 33, p. 740.) That there is no 'Thus saith the Lord,' that anyone can administer the ordinances or sacraments of the church without being called of God; while we have shown by fifteen scriptural quotations that men must be called of God to do this work. Thus while nine specific officers are mentioned in the New Testament, they have only three.

"They are wrong in faith and doctrine in denying present revelation. They can only assert that God was, and cannot certify that he is; while Christ says in John 7:17. 'If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine.' They represent God as demanding certain things of one class of men in the gospel church, yet not demanding the same things of other men in the same church; while God says, 'I am the Lord, I change not.'—(Mal. 3:6); and the wise man says, 'Whatsoever God doeth it shall be forever;' and 'God requireth that which is past.'—(Eccl. 3:14.) They are wrong because they reject the Baptism of the Holy Spirit. (See John 3:5; Acts 8:1-17; 19:1-8; 10:44-48.) They reject the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick, for confirmation into the church; while the New Testament expressly states that this was practiced all through the history of the church.—(See Heb. 6:1, 2; Acts 8:14-19; 9:17; 1 Tim. 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6.) They teach that the New Testament Scriptures is the gospel or the word of God, while Paul said 'our gospel came not in word only, but in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.' The word of God was in existence long before the Bible, and will continue long after it has passed away. The Bible is not the word itself, but contains a record of the Word. They are wrong in practice because they baptized people before they are instructed in the prerequisites and results of baptism; they affirm that baptism by anyone is Christian baptism; they acknowledge the baptism administered by the sects whom they denounce, while no baptism in the Church of Jesus Christ, according to the New Testament Scriptures, was ever legally administered save by one holding authority from God. John baptized—he was sent of God. Jesus baptized—he was sent of God. The apostles baptized—they were sent of God. Philip baptized—he was sent of God.

"12. They are wrong because they do not produce a scriptural baptism; they repudiate the baptism of the Holy Spirit now, and reject the laying on of hands as a divine ordinance. They deny that the spiritual gifts of 1 Corinthians 12 and the signs promised the believer in Mark 16:16-19 are realized now; thus stultifying the religion of Jesus Christ; impugning the honor and unchangeability of God, and tacitly branding Jesus Christ as a deceiver.

"13. They are but a human organization; organized by uninspired men who acted independent and apart from God; who accepted that part of the Scriptures which suited them, and with impunity rejected that which did not.

"14. They reflect on the majesty and justice of God in stating that he lavished his spiritual blessings on his children in one age and left his children to famish in another; while the Bible teaches they are for all. (See Acts 2:38-40; Mark 16:14-20; Acts 10:34.) The life, the force, the power of the Church of Jesus Christ according to the New Testament Scriptures, was the direct operation of the Holy Spirit. They deny its operation in the Christian or Disciples Church, and thus stand self-convicted, out of harmony with God, Christ, truth, and the Holy Spirit. Thus they are wrong in name. Their organization compares unfavorably with that found in the New Testament. They teach but a part of the fundamental truths of the gospel, deny its results, and repudiate the vital principles thereof. Their practices are in harmony with the wishes of the majority, and not a reflection of the demands of God. And whatever may have been your opinion ere this discussion began, you are forced as an impartial jurist to decide against them; for the defense put up by our opponent has been weak, vacillating, and changeable; and they stand convicted before this audience as not being the Church of God in fact, bearing the name of Jesus Christ and adhering to the New Testament Scriptures in faith and doctrine; but theirs is the church of men in fact, bearing a nickname given by the enemies of God and his people, and holding to strained and unwarranted interpretations of the Holy Scriptures, instead of to the truth itself. Hence we conclude that they are not the Church of God in fact, and are not in harmony with the New Testament teaching, organization, and practice."

I may give you some points on the first proposition, later. T. W. WILLIAMS.

GIFTS AND CALLINGS.

THE gifts and calling of God are without repentance.—Rom. 11:29.

The writer in the Herald of April 21, 1897, uses this quotation and then says, "The above is an axiom with God, as Paul lets us understand; hence Israel may be saved irrespective of repentance."

While I have no quarrel to make with anybody's pet theories, yet it seems that this statement should not remain unchallenged; as it is not in harmony with the teaching of Christ, or the sense that Paul intended it should be taken. Paul declares in Acts 17:30, "All men everywhere" are commanded to repent. Then may some be saved "irrespective of repentance"? Christ declares in Luke 13:3:—

Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

And he was talking to the Jews, or Israel. Then let us examine Romans 11:29 in its proper connection, and see what we are to understand from the statement made. It certainly cannot be "that Israel may be saved irrespective of repentance," for in all God's dealings with, and word sent unto Israel, there is warning that transgression will bring punishment, and that punishment will continue till there is repentance. (See Deuteronomy, chapters 28, 29, and 30.) In Matthew 3:9 John the Baptist warns certain ones not to depend upon their descent from Abraham for their salvation, telling them that "God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham;" and Jesus speaking to the Jews in John 8:39, tells them that if they were "Abraham's children" they would do the works of their father; and in the same line of thought, in the forty-fourth verse, he tells them that they are of their father the Devil; and if he was right, then had they ceased to be Israel, on account of their transgressions?

In Romans, eleventh chapter, Paul asks, "Hath God cast away his people?" and then answers, "God forbid. . . . God hath not cast away his people whom he foreknew." Then he proceeds to quote from that scripture now known as 1 Kings 19:18, "I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal;" and then makes the statement, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace."

This was the promise of God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—that in their seed should the nations be blessed; hence there was always to be a "remnant whom the Lord shall call" (see Joel 2:32), and in this remnant was to be salvation, but certainly not "irrespective of repentance," for "all men everywhere" are commanded to repent;" for that "all have sinned." But to come back to this chapter in hand:—

If some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them, . . . boast not against the branches. . . . Thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. . . . Because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear: for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. . . . And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graff them in again. . . . And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion a Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins.—Romans 11:17-27.

Then, after this promise of a Deliverer, which Paul quotes from Isaiah, he proceeds to comment as follows:—

As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the father's sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.—Romans 11:28, 29.

And now, because of his closing declaration, shall we say that "It is an axiom with God that all Israel shall be saved irrespective of repentance?" Not so, but Paul is simply voicing the same truth which was uttered by Samuel in 1 Samuel 15:29:—

The strength of Israel will not lie nor repent.

And because of God's promises unto the fathers, he would so work with "Israel after the flesh," that there will always be a remnant, and from this remnant shall be counted "Abraham's seed;" and the "Deliverer" will come "out of Sion" and "turn away ungodliness from Jacob." "And so all Israel shall be saved," but not in their ungodliness; but when that is "turned away," and "they abide not still in unbelief." And when this happens it will be as it was with the remnant in Paul's day. They will be required to "repent and believe the gospel," and then shall be "added to the church daily such as should be saved."

I said at the commencement of this article that I had no quarrel with anyone's pet theories; but as the writer referred to seems to base his entire theory on the axiom as he states it, I think, to say the least, that his foundation is very bad.

Yours for truth everywhere,
A. M. CHASE.

BAPTISM.

REPENT, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—Acts 2:38.

In taking these words as a starting point I am aware that it is an old and favorite subject with my brethren. But the world, the sectarian part of it at least, object to the stress we as a church place upon it as a necessary element in the salvation of man, and insist that without obedience to the principles embraced there is no promise to the world of a remission of their own individual sins. We do so, however, because the Apostle Peter, upon the memorable occasion when he commanded the people by the words of our text, was "full of the Holy Ghost;" and because of the promise made by Jesus unto Peter and his brethren, that when the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, is come he shall lead and guide you into all truth, and shall bring to your remembrance all things whatsoever I have commanded you. Therefore, we believe that when the apostle commanded the people to repent and be baptized for the remission of sin, he wished and intended that they should understand that by obedience to the principles of repentance and baptism, they should receive a remission of their sins; with the further promise, that they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. But now comes the objector, and says, Peter, when he used the expression "for the remission of sin," did not mean that by their obedience to the act of baptism they should receive a remission of their sin; but when he used the word "for," he meant that because of the remission of their sin they should be baptized, for so soon as they, the people, believed the words of Peter that the Jesus whom they had taken and slain, had arisen and had ascended to the Father, and had become both Lord and Christ, they were justified by their faith and received a forgiveness of their sins, and their baptism, as our Baptist friend would say, was merely an outward sign of an inward and spiritual grace; and for proof that this was the meaning of Peter, they say, Just get your dictionary, and see if the meaning of the word "for" is not because of. I take my Walker, having no unabridged Webster, and turn to the word, "For, a preposition. Because of. In consequence of," etc. They say, Did not I tell you so? Yes, of course. What is a preposition? I turn and read, "Preposition. In grammar a participle governing a case." A position which would give the words of the Apostle Peter, if placed in accordance with these definitions quite a silly appearance. When the people cried out, "Men and brethren, what must we do?" Peter's answer would have run in this wise: Because of your belief in my word that Jesus was the Christ, therefore you are justified by your faith, and you have received a remission of your sins, and have received the Holy Ghost, and now I command you to repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ; thus placing the remission of sin before repentance; that is, receive a remission of sin before they had been taught that it was necessary that they should cease to do evil and learn to do well; for Peter had not until then taught them repentance as a principle of salvation.

We will now go a little farther, and we will discover by our "Walker" that this word "for" occupies two positions in the English language. The first, which we have been examining, presupposes something done before; as, "because of." The second occupies a far different position; to wit: "For, a conjunction, union, league, association; one of the parts of speech whose use is to join words, or sentences together." This is the position that we as a people believe the word "for" occupies in our text. And the Apostle Peter, at the time he uttered it, being "full of the Holy Ghost," and the promise being that this Comforter should lead them into all truth, we believe that when Peter spoke he placed the principles he uttered each in their proper order, and the effect to be produced was not because their sins had been remitted; but that they must repent and be baptized, for, or in order to the remission of their sins.

And this position is confirmed by the command of Ananias to Saul, "And now why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." Here is another of those conjunctions which join words or sentences together. "And, a conjunction. The particle by which sentences or terms are joined together."—Walker. Thus if Ananias had said to Saul, "And now why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized for the remission of your sins," it would have been synonymous in its meaning with that which he did say.

Yes, baptized by water, properly administered by a servant of God called and ordained under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, is indeed for the remission of sin, and will under God-appointed ministrations insure the inheritance of the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost to all who obey, as an indwelling Comforter who will lead them in the ways of righteousness, provided always that their obedience was and their continued life is with a full purpose of heart to do the will of God and keep his commandments.

Two resolutions were offered providing for action in the case of B. V. Springer having been reported as a seventy in the Lucas branch. The matter was referred to a committee consisting of R. S. Salyards, J. S. Snively, and S. V. Bailey, they to ascertain the facts and report to Lucas branch. A report from Decatur district Sunday school association was read, reporting a very interesting and profitable convention held on the 3d and 4th inst. Wight, president of the Cainesville branch, spoke of the condition of the same, stating that it was practically disorganized; no meeting could be held because so many had moved away. The Cainesville branch was declared disorganized, instruction given that all records and papers be sent to district secretary, and he was authorized to issue letters to members of said branch. Upon motion, the conference proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year. Before nominations were made the following communication from the missionary in charge was read:—

"Lamoni, Iowa, Feb. 5, 1898.

"To the President and Saints of the Decatur District; Dear Brethren:—I have earnestly and prayerfully, and to the best of my ability, taken into consideration some of the leading necessities of this district, and have arrived at the following conclusion: If one or more available and suitable high priests can be had, we should, by all means, choose one to preside over the district; and, it is my conviction, in addition to other qualifications, he should be a man who can and will work in harmony with the missionary force, so long as that force is in harmony with the laws and rules of the church.

"In this connection, I take pleasure in presenting to you the name of Bro. Frank M. Weld, hoping that you will give the suggestion careful consideration. I am aware that Bro. Weld is not so brilliant a preacher as some of his brethren; but, when blessed with the Holy Spirit (without which all must fail to build up the work), he makes a good talk and representation of the work. His discernment and executive ability are more than average.

"If you should see fit to select him, I can in a very short time, arrange for him to come into this district and go to work.

"Your brother,

"J. R. LAMBERT."

The following nominations were made: F. M. Weld, R. M. Elvin, H. A. Stebbins. The vote resulted in F. M. Weld receiving 46 votes, R. M. Elvin 65, and H. A. Stebbins 9. The choice of Bro. Elvin was made unanimous. B. M. Anderson was chosen secretary and treasurer. The president was authorized to choose his assistant, subject to ratification by the body. His choice of H. N. CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

DELINQUENT BRANCH REPORTS.

In the following named districts conferences were either advertised to be held or were published as having been held, during the months of 1897 herein stated. Without a doubt to the most of them reports of branches were sent. But the present difficulty is that said branch reports have not yet come into the hands of the General Church Recorder, as provided for in the "Rules" of the church. The conferences thus appointed to be held were as follows:—

Alabama district in October; Mobile district in December; Western Maine (three) in May, September, and December; Minnesota in June and October; Montana in June and November; Nodaway (Mo.) in October; Far West (Mo.) in December; Nevada in June and November; Central Nebraska in August; Southern Nebraska in October; Kirtland (Ohio) in July; Southeastern Ohio in September; Pittsburg, (Pa.) in September; Northern Texas and Choctaw in September.

It would be a favor if the brethren would immediately send in the branch reports that were presented to the above conferences, that they may be recorded and correspondence had upon them before the rush of reports from the February and March conferences make haste to arrive and prevent those already due. Brethren, please attend to this.

From England not any reports have been received for the conference year. Bro. C. H. Caton supplied full accounts of the branches in the Manchester district for 1896, arriving in November, 1897, and it is hoped that he can send in the 1897 reports before April. And from the London, Birmingham, and Sheffield conferences I wish to hear soon. For nothing has been received from the Birmingham and Sheffield districts since 1894. The last reports from Australia were dated December, 1896.

I regret this state of affairs. But throughout America and Canada there has been a better service than ever before. Also a prompt action upon the part of nearly all branch and district clerks, and kind and willing responses to correspondence for corrections and additional reports.

H. A. STEBBINS,

General Church Recorder.

BEARDSLEY.—At Princeville, Illinois, June 14, 1897, to Mr. Burdette J. and Sr. Agnes A. Beardsley, a boy, named Lindley Hopkins. Blessed by Elders M. T. Short and J. H. Hopkins, January 17, 1898.

MARRIED.

STEVENS—VALLEM.—At the home of R. W. Davis, Sheridan, Nevada, January 25, 1898, Mr. Thomas Stevens to Sr. Helen Vallem, Elder R. W. Davis officiating.

DIED.

HERRICK.—At her home, Burlington, Iowa, January 1, 1898, after an illness of eleven weeks, Sr. Margaret Dianna Herrick, nee Blanchard. She was born January 20, 1824, at Ellisburg, New York. She was one of the number that crossed Lake Erie in the vessel with Mother Smith and family. At the age of eleven years she was baptized by Elder Hyrum Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, and passed through the troubles in Missouri, and also in Illinois; but has ever lived faithful to the covenant of her youth, and has gone to reap her reward. Interred in Montrose cemetery.

BAGGERLY.—At his home, Derby, Indiana, Bro. Vardemon David Baggerly, of apoplexy, after an illness of five minutes, January 14, 1898, aged 53 years. He was born April 14, 1846, in Wood Township, Clark County, Indiana. After a membership of some years in the Disciple Church, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church by Apostle W. W. Blair, at Marietta, Crawford County, Indiana, June 13, 1870. He occupied the offices of deacon, priest, and elder, and was ordained to that of a seventy, June 3, 1894, by his brother, Isaac P. Baggerly. He had gone from his field of labor, Southern Illinois, home, to spend the holidays with his family, whose season of joyousness was thus suddenly invaded and turned to mourning and gloom. Like others preceding him, he fell in the gospel armor, and in line. Two brothers and two sisters, his wife and six children, survive him. Thus another faithful man, and laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, has left us to move in brighter scenes on the other side the mystic vale.

GERBER.—Bro. Henry Gerber was born December 22, 1821, in Germany; baptized by Elder Wm. Newton in Wyandotte, Kansas, December 22, 1877; ordained a deacon by elders J. T. Franklin and H. Faulk. The gospel was his joy and delight, and he was faithful unto death. January 31 he was struck by a street car. For a few days it was thought that he would recover, but on the evening of February 7 he passed peacefully away. Wife and eight children mourn. The funeral was conducted by Elder F. C. Warnky. Sermon will be preached in the church at Armstrong, February 27.

CAN THE TEMPORAL POWER OF THE POPE BE RESTORED?

THE position of the Vatican as a political power has much improved of late, especially in Italy, where its organs attack the monarchy with renewed vigor. The Civiltà Cattolica, Rome, an organ generally recognized as the mouthpiece of the Vatican, though its opinions are sometimes repudiated, expresses itself to the following effect:

The Pope greatly desires to be at peace with the Government of Italy, but this peace cannot be established unless he is restored in his sovereign rights, as temporal ruler. Temporal rule is not only necessary for the liberty, but also for the unhampered international government of the Christian church. The Rudini Ministry have sent to the provincial governors a circular in which the officials are requested to repress all attempts for the restoration of clerical power, as being opposed to the free institutions of the state and the national unity of Italy. But it is not the unity of Italy which is at variance with the interests of the Vatican. It is solely the struggle between the King and the Pope. It is impossible for the Italian Government and the Vatican to remain at Rome together. One of them must go. Neither of the two powers is inclined to leave, and undoubtedly both are right from their own point of view. Yet there is a possible solution. Italian unity, as at present constituted, is not the only one imaginable. There is such a thing as union by confederation, as in Switzerland and the United States. Could not something of the kind be substituted in Italy for the present form of government, which is ruining the country? Could not the monarchy be discarded in favor of a republic or a confederation? The Pope, it is well known, is a good Italian and a loyal patriot, and His Holiness would be glad to hear the opinion of his countrymen on this matter. It is not necessary to call in the help of foreigners. Without the help of foreign troops, Italy will find the way to rise to her former greatness and to rid herself of her humiliation.

This suggestion has created much comment. The Daily Chronicle, London, does not believe that the church will ally itself with the Republicans. But it is willing to treat with a republic whose central power is seated outside of Rome. The Republicans, on the other hand, will accept any help, even that of the church, though they are much more anticlerical than the monarchy. The Spectator, London, which also believes that the chances of a restoration are at least no worse than they were, points out that Rome may hope to extend her power enormously in consequence of recent events in China. We summarize as follows:

The papacy looks far forward, and has long ago decided that the conversion of China and its dependencies would be the most useful as well as the greatest triumph any Christian church could achieve. It would reconcile to Christianity a fourth of the human race, and place at the disposal of the Vatican almost limitless means for achieving further conquests. All experienced missionaries believe that whenever the Asiatic races adopt Christianity they will do it in great masses, and their belief is peculiarly strong about China, where the masses are homogeneous.

No reasonable man can doubt that the acceptance of Christianity by Constantine as the official faith of the Roman Empire did smooth the path of the new creed throughout the nations which considered themselves its subjects, and among the barbarians who at once despised and revered the Roman civilization.

The Spaniards in America made Christians in heaps by what we should now call torture, but from Louisiana to Cape Horn the whole red-brown population is now in all its external aspects devoted to Christianity, and in spite of the survival of old superstitions, and even in places of the old faiths, does probably in some way believe the gospel to be true. Spain herself lost fearfully by the expulsion of the Jews and Moriscos, but Spain remains entirely, and in a sense devotedly, Roman Catholic.

The chief opponent of Rome in Asia—so thinks the writer—is Russia, who will wish to introduce the Greek Orthodox faith. But he doubts that Russia can compete with Rome, as the latter power has much influence at her command in France, Germany, and even “in the United States, which produces good officers and possesses fair fleets.” He then says:—

“We see at this moment that a few letters from the Pope have paralyzed the Monarchists in France; that the Centre, which obeys the Vatican, holds the balance of power in Germany, that a Clerical party is supreme in Cisleithan-Austria, and that the decision of the Poles on the urgent question whether to accept Russia or continue their secular warfare against Russia depends entirely on religious considerations; and we ask ourselves whether the influence of the creeds has decayed quite so completely as the educated suppose.”

That this influence is feared by Russia is shown in a recent article in the Viedomosti, St. Petersburg. The paper complains that the conciliatory attitude which Russia, as well as Prussia, has adopted toward the Poles during recent years has only strengthened the hands of the church, which agitates for the restoration of a national Poland among the Russian and Prussian Poles alike. The paper accuses the Roman clergy of abusing the greater liberty of speech that has been granted, and fears that new restrictions will have to be imposed, much against the wish of the Russian authorities.—The Literary Digest, February 19, 1898.

AMONG THE NEW BOOKS.

HENRY PRESERVED SMITH TURNS HIS GUNS ON MOHAMMED.

IN "The Bible and Islam" (Scribner) Professor Henry Preserved Smith, D. D., has dealt with a timely subject. Islam is the religion which dominates the mind and life of one tenth of the human race. The antagonism of Islam to Christianity is absolute and deadly. The inevitable and age-long conflict between the resultant civilization of the one and that of the other is the great "Eastern question," of which the late Turco-Greek war was but an episode. Islam is without doubt one of the great powers of the world—one of the most formidable facts in modern history. It could not have such power if it did not have at the bottom of it certain great and elemental ideas. Where did those ideas come from? And how did its founder get hold of them?

The specific aim of this work is to show the indebtedness of the religion of Mohammed to the history and ideas contained in the Old and the New Testaments. The author, Professor Smith, formerly of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Cincinnati, now of Amherst College, is a man of erudition, and particularly familiar with the latest results of German scholarship. Those who remember his recent trial for heresy by the Presbyterian synod will not question his ability to think and speak his own thoughts.

The object of the book is not at all to be a biography or an account of the way Mohammedanism began to achieve its marvelous victories. Neither is it to any considerable extent a criterion of the character of the strangely potential system which to-day disputes with Christianity the right to rule the world, having as its chief representative the Sultan of Turkey, the man who has for the last few years bewitched and befooled to the last degrees of infamy the entire "concert of Europe." Many attempts have been made to account for the mystery of this power. Never did a single watchword and wacry have such continuing power over myriads of men as this: "There is no God but Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet." Such a system must somehow have deep roots, both in history and in human nature. The system was primarily religious. The name Islam means resignation to the will of God: but, in fact, the system admits of no distinction between church and state; it is "the whole thing."

Its founder until forty years of age was an unlettered heathen, and yet, as it is the special object of this book to point out, the Koran is pervaded all through with historic incidents and ideas taken from the Jewish and Christian scriptures, although there is not one accurate quotation from either in the entire Koran. It is as if all had come to the "prophet" as a kind of hearsay, and was then wrought over in his own amazing intellect and imagination to suit his gradually evolving purpose.

But was he really prophet or impostor, or both; or was he neither? This matter it must be admitted, the author of this volume has treated rather gingerly. If he has any definite conviction about it he has not cared to express it. While Islam is eminently a religion of a single book, and that not a large one, there has grown up an enormous literature relating to it. Buchari, in his famous collection of the sayings and traditions of Mohammed, brought together a little over 7,000 in number; but, as he said, these were selected out of 600,000 then existing.

Professor Smith's volume is well written and coldly impartial.

"The Baptist Principle" by William Cleaver Wilkinson, D. D., is a new and enlarged edition of a volume which is intended as a sort of campaign document for the Baptist denomination. It advocates immersion as the only baptism and the necessity of close or, as the author prefers to call it, restricted communion.

Professor Wilkinson is a member of the teaching staff of the University of Chicago, but he does not hold the chair of logic in that institution, a fact which is worthy of note. In his chapter on "Common Sense and Close Communion," the author, while frankly admitting that the Baptist contention, if pushed to its conclusion, would leave all non-Baptist Christians out in the cold, as it were, naïvely remarks: "Is it best always to follow logical roads to the end? May not common sense sometimes judiciously advise logic to let a particular conclusion sleep undisturbed in her premises?" The great world cares little for the small contentions of rival denominations regarding postures, vestments, modes of baptism and the like, but in the interest of common everyday reasoning it may be worth while to say that any system which cannot be pushed to its conclusions is unworthy of a book in its defense. To say that any belief is logical which in its conclusions is out of harmony with common sense is practically to deny the laws of reasoning altogether. Common sense would teach that a conclusion which is a reductio ad absurdum involves wrong premises or wrong methods of reasoning.

Professor Wilkinson's book is full of concessions. It seeks to make Baptist principles appeal to non-Baptists. It is suave and appealing. But it has the fatal weakness of admitting premises which the author feels he cannot prove and must apologize for. (Baptist Publication Society.)—Chicago Tribune.

An association exists in England known as the Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews, which maintains a kind of industrial establishment at "Abraham's Vineyard," Jerusalem, where fifty-four Jews are steadily employed, and where many come hungry and ill-clad.

Several of the Boston churches have received to membership quite a number of Chinese. They have for the most part received their religious training in Boston Sunday schools. It is stated that there are about 800 resident Chinese in Boston and five or six hundred more who go there to trade.

The self-made man was speaking. He said: "My father was a raiser of hogs. There was a large family of us—" and then his voice was drowned by the applause.—Life.

THE scriptural order of gospel principles bears the impress of divine wisdom. Nothing is out of place or irregularly appointed therein. Each principle follows its predecessor as a needful and natural as well as delightful sequence in the work of purification and righteous development. He who pursues the letter of the rule in the fervency of spirit intended, imbibes at every step a consciousness that God is resident there. It is one thing, however, to read the words, "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son;" and it is quite another thing to plant one's self at the alpha of that doctrine and step by step proceed in intelligent obedience so as to sense the divine presence referred to. Those words of the apostle are true, and are no more forceful in argument than they are demonstrable in application; but an attitude of spirit as well as of body is needful to the discernment of their truth.

The intention of the Savior's mission was to save us from sin, not in sin. This is impracticable without our co-operation, for where the desire for sin remains, the carnal mind continues, and even the forms of obedience do not avail unto our salvation. There can be no genuine repentance while the desire for sin abides, for they are opposites. Instantly a genuine faith in Christ opens up its work in the heart, a longing to be like him is born, and the anxiety to be freed from sin becomes intense. This is not merely to escape the consequences of sin, but to be free from sin and every taint that it has left upon the character. It is a groaning to become spiritual. It is love of Christ at work subduing love of self and sin. It is simply repentance as an operative principle preparing the individual for the ordinance by which sin is to be remitted.

We have but little sympathy with the idea of repentance which exhausts itself in tears and words of bewailing. The character must show the motions of this gospel principle. "Cease to do evil, learn to do well," is the motto under which it operates. It calls up the wrongs of the past, and stirs conscience to demand a full restitution. In proportion as we heed the admonitions of this aroused conscience, so do we either accelerate or cripple the work of repentance within us. In Leviticus 6:1-5 may be found an outline of what is legitimately demanded. Also in Luke 19:8 we hear the voice of repentance after the genuine order. And we seriously question whether baptism will cleanse the taint of a sin committed by us, by which another has been wronged, until we have to the extent of our power recompensed the injured one. To possess power to make good the loss we have occasioned another, and yet to refuse or fail in doing it would expose the hypocrisy of our profession of repentance, notwithstanding all our tears. It is enough that God's mercy shall reach us and forgive when we have proven the genuineness of our repentance by doing all we can to right past wrongs of our commission.

The man of wealth who has accumulated his store by oppression and dishonesty cannot expect forgiveness while his victims remain unrequited and his hands retain what belongs to them. The person who has damaged the reputation of another and wrought injury thereby, has an obligation to discharge to that one before a reasonable hope can be entertained that the ordinances of God will secure a remission of his or her sins. It is true that such persons may enter the organization known as the church, and remain there undisturbed by church discipline, or a formal application thereof; but "God is not mocked." Men may see the name of such an one enrolled on the books below; but we seriously doubt whether any can see that name enrolled in the Lamb's book of life. To make a clean record and have claim on the divine promise we must not only resolve to store the vessel with pure and wholesome things in the future. We must cleanse it of the taint of the past first. Restitution is in demand, and that demand will be met in proportion as our repentance is sincere and intelligent. What taint we cannot purge out thus, or when our power to cleanse ourselves is exhausted, God will supply grace to complete. His mercy will always supplement our honest effort.

It were as foolish to ask God to send an angel to pay our current grocery bills, while we have thousands to our credit in the bank, as to ask him to right our moral wrongs while we hoard up the power to right them ourselves. We are told that there is "joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth;" but there is no warrant for the belief that heaven is deeply stirred to gladness over everyone that merely observes external church rites.

If this duty be neglected there is left a defective part in the structure that we expect to present at last for inspection to the Divine Architect. The character is bleared and blurred, and too late for first resurrection privileges, the word may be heard, ordering the foolish one back to do his "first works." Ah, how sad the loss—how terrible the mistake.

After righting, so far as possible, the wrongs of the past, and receiving grace from above, the genuineness of repentance is further evidenced by carefully avoiding the avenues which expose the soul to temptation. It is not only proper to resolve to resist, but we are morally obligated to keep out of the way of evil. The slippery places where we lost our footing before should be avoided as dangerous ground. It is worse than folly to attempt an exhibition of our newfound strength by resorting thither. The safest route is farthest from the precipice.

We once knew a man who, by divine grace had been rescued from evil habits, including smoking and drinking. In seeking to show his complete emancipation from even the appetite for tobacco and liquor, he went where both were in constant use, and even took a smoke and a drink. His boast was that he was master of the situation and could touch without danger, because God had destroyed the old appetite. Alas for such folly. In a few years he fell, and lost all the ground he had gained. He tempted God, and reaped the natural result. Divine grace will supplement our efforts to get away from sin; but offers us no encouragement to hope for protection in the midst of dangers self-invited for purposes of display.

Repentance is a loathing of sin, and the person in whom this principle is at work is pained where sin is present in any form. His desire is to escape contact with it. He may be overtaken by it in an unguarded moment, but his indulgence in it is never premeditated. Repentance obligates us to place a watch upon our thoughts, to crucify every unholy conception and thus prevent their development into words, deeds, or habits. It is truly a fundamental—a foundation—principle. If laid well, it contributes generously toward the beauty and stability of the character structure. It gives color to all that follows and has to do with the effectiveness of every subsequent ordinance. Baptism, confirmation, the Lord's supper, and every participation in the holy services of the church wait for their sanctifying outcome, upon the unfeigned operation of this prerequisite. It is the associate—the inseparable companion of true faith. Together they present themselves at the portals of the spiritual treasury of God's house, and at the sight of them angels are made glad, heaven is moved to a response, and the liberties of holy estate are extended.

The injunction of the apostle was wise, and is as timely now as eighteen hundred years ago: "Let every man take heed how he build." The "gold, silver, and precious stones," as imperishables are still in demand. The "wood, hay and stubble" will surely consume away when "every man's work" is "made manifest," and when the "fire shall try" it. Let us be wise and build according to the plan revealed, and thus secure as a certainty the approval of the Divine Architect.

ZOARITES GONE.

WE are all interested in the fate of any of the efforts looking toward cooperative or communal association of labor and capital; hence the following:—

Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 18.—Ancient Zoar, one of the most noted communistic settlements in this country, will soon disband. Lawyers have been employed to adjust the affairs of the society, which are said to be greatly mixed.

The colony was organized in 1817 by a colony of Germans, with Joseph M. Baumler at its head. The colony consists now of about 150 members, and owns 6,989 acres of land, valued at about $800,000. Its personal property, money, and credits do not exceed $300,000. Flour mills, a saw mill, and brewery are owned by it. In its history no instance is known of a member violating a law of the State.—Chicago Tribune, February 19, 1898.

BRO. C. J. HUNT has an even two column article in the Denison, Iowa, Review, of the 15th inst., on the subject of the Book of Mormon; a well written statement of evidences supporting its claims. Bro. Hunt is generous in the use of newspaper space—generous to the cause for which he is working—and believes it is good for both the public and the editors to have an ample representation of the work in the public press. Many local publishers have extended him sufficient space to carry out his policy, among them the editor of the Review, who thus comments on his article:—

Somewhere we have read that "variety is the spice of life," and with this issue of the Review we furnish our readers an article by Elder C. J. Hunt of Deloit, Iowa, styled, "The Book of Mormon, Its divine origin; Peopling of America centuries before the discoveries of Columbus; Origin of the American Indians; Church of Christ organized in 1830." As to the truthfulness or falsity of Elder Hunt's article we have nothing to say; he is, of course, responsible for his own writings. One thing is certain, he represents a visible church known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which has a wide-awake ministry, who are always ready to present and defend their claims. This society has more than ten thousand members in Iowa. They denounce the degrading practice of the so-called saints of the West, declaring them to be apostates. Mr. Hunt has converted this article into a tract or leaflet and is having several thousand printed.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. W. M. SELF speaks well of the work of Bro. W. E. Peak, who held a discussion with a Seventh-day Adventist, north of Lincoln, Nebraska. The people were made to see that the Lord was in the work and with Bro. Peak in representing it. Friendly expressions were heard on every hand and our cause has gained a footing as a result. The late conference of the Southern Nebraska district was excellent; Brn. J. W. Waldsmith and F. A. Smith were present.

Bro. Thomas Dixon, who lies in the hospital, at Dunnedin, New Zealand, with one leg broken at the ankle and the other at the thigh, from a fall of coal in a mine, wrote very cheerfully of his situation and the hope that is in him. He was thankful that he was not killed, so has something to be thankful for.

Bro. T. A. Kelley, of Bagdad, Florida, writes of his belief in the work; he states that though separated from branch association he could never be anything but a Latter Day Saint.

Sr. Dora Booker and her mother, of Evergreen, Alabama, write of their sense of isolation, being now removed from their association with saints. They miss the church publications, which they read when among those of the saints taking them.

Bro. J. D. Erwin left the Southeastern mission on February 19 and on the 26th reached one of his old fighting grounds near Manchester, Texas. He found some changes, but reports that E. A. Erwin had done well for the work. He would labor in Standley, Wilburton, and Coalgate, Indian Territory, enroute for General Conference; so he wrote February 7.

Utah elders are operating at Souris, Manitoba. This in answer to a query asking reply through the HERALD.

Zola, the Jewish novelist of Paris, was found guilty, by the Paris court, of making libelous comment upon the court martial of the army in connection with the famous Dreyfus and Esterhazy cases. He was sentenced to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of 3,000 francs. The trial has caused great commotion and much anti-Jewish agitation in France.

"It is now authoritatively announced that the Chinese loan has at last been concluded through British and German banks, presumably guaranteed jointly by these two powers. While this excludes Russia from the arrangement, its influence in northern China and Corea is not likely to be materially diminished. This is indicated by its refusal to name any date for its withdrawal from Port Arthur on the request of China at the instance of Japan. The Czar professes to regard his retention of that port as necessary to the welfare of both China and Corea, but without asking leave of either. This is likely to perpetuate the friction between Russia and Japan indefinitely."

London, Feb. 24.—The Parliamentary Secretary for the Foreign Office, Mr. Curzon, replying to a question in the House of Commons to-day, said Russia's pledge respecting free ports in north China was conveyed in the following note:—

"Count Muravieff (the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs) has expressed great surprise at the agitation which appeared to prevail in England, both in the press and in official circles, on the subject of recent events in China, where English and Russian interests could not be seriously antagonistic. Count Muravieff observed that various English statesmen of position had recognized that it was perfectly natural Russia should wish for an outlet for her commerce on the coast of the North Pacific. Any such port will be open for the commerce of the world, and England, whose trade interests are so important in this region, would share the advantage."

In reply to a question as to the West African situation Mr. Chamberlain said he expected a friendly and satisfactory settlement, but under the agreement with France he could not give details until the negotiations in Paris were ended.

Kingston, Jamaica, Feb. 24.—A succession of terrific earthquakes have caused great destruction of property on the Island of Montserrat. They began on the 15th, but the most severe occurred on the 20th. There were numerous landslides, and water pipes were wrecked, and the entire population of the island were thrown into great consternation. There is much distress.

China has given Great Britain satisfactory assurances that she will not alienate to any other power any portion of the Yang-Tse Valley, and has agreed that the inland waters shall be open to all nations.

News following the Maine disaster is about as follows, as summarized daily by the Chicago Tribune:—

February 23: "Contracts were signed yesterday with New York and Boston companies for raising the Maine. Progress was made by the divers at the Maine wreck, though their work is laborious and risky. Several of them had painful falls. The court of inquiry visited General Blanco, and also held two sessions. The Senate has passed a bill adding two new regiments of artillery to the regular army. Senator Morgan presented facts showing that autonomy is a failure in Cuba, that ruin is seen everywhere, and that Spain's policy is responsible for 600,000 deaths in the island. Senor Govin, the Cuban Secretary of the Interior, turns against Sagasta, and a political row is progressing in Madrid."

The 24th: "President McKinley stated yesterday that preparations for war had been carefully made, although he still believed it possible to maintain peace. He said that all the facts in the situation could not properly be published. There was great activity in the war and navy departments. The best war vessels of the navy are assembling off Florida. An exciting war debate occurred in the United States Senate over a resolution introduced by Senator Allen for the recognition of Cuba's belligerency rights. The resolution was not in order, however, and was ruled out. Spain is arranging for a war credit. Spain's Cuban fleet will be greatly enlarged in a few days. The cruiser Montgomery has been ordered to Havana."

The 25th: "The monitor Terror is assigned to watch the Vizcaya. The war spirit is strong in Washington and the government is vigorously preparing for emergencies. The court of inquiry concludes its labors at Havana and will come to Key West. Premier Sagasta and other Spanish officials deny that the Maine was located over a mine. Secret subterranean passages are known to exist at Havana. Enlistment is going on all over the United States. Spain will not listen to proposals for the purchase of Cuba."

No sensible American citizen can fail to regret the unseemly insult offered to the Spanish Consul General Baldasano in New York, as well as a similar display of spite manifested towards a Spanish teacher in the same city on Tuesday last. Although the act of unthinking boys and possibly as unthinking men, such occurrences are similar in spirit to the riotous demonstrations of a Spanish mob about the residence of the American Consul at Barcelona a year ago which aroused the indignation of the American people. Such scenes, while only displaying the narrow prejudice and hate of the most unthinking and irresponsible class toward individuals who are restrained by their official position or defenseless condition from resenting it, should be condemned and frowned upon by everyone who has a proper respect for the American name. So long as citizens of another nationality, residing either as officials or private individuals temporarily or permanently in the United States, conduct themselves in a becoming manner, they are entitled to protection and respectful treatment, and the exhibition of such small malevolence as that reported only serves to disgrace the participants in it.—Ex.

Original Poetry.

WHAT AM I?

Gal. 6:1-4.

What am I? What an important question!
Lord, give me this to understand.

Give, that to myself I speak the truth,
And to see me as I am!
Who himself learns not to know,
Stands far remote from wisdom's way.

I am the work of thine own hand,
Thou call'st me to give thee praise
My lifetime worthy to employ.
This is thy Fatherly command;
But live I as I live thine own,
As is my duty to thy praise?

Am I a saint, according to thy word,
And am I one indeed?
Lord, open thou mine eyes
To see aright. If I the path
Which Jesus pointed out do walk?
And if I also stand in faith?

Is he, who by exercise of wisdom
The inner standing of his heart conceals,
A truthful bett'ring of himself desires
And does not know how much he fails
Himself to know, is understanding?
Lord, help me, that I know myself.

What to my salvation now is wanting,
My Father, give thou that to me;
If I the way of truth have found,
Give strength that I do not lose
The light which leadeth me
Deceivers to confound.

Sometime, hereafter, I shall know
What here I was, what here I did.
O let me not till then be waiting
Where sad repentance is too late.
Here make me perfect for my standing,
And free from all ungodly thoughts.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

After the pain and sickness, the tears are all wiped away,
After the flowers are gathered, no more of earth's decay,
After the deep heart sorrow, an end of every strife,
After the daily crosses, a glorious crown of life.

[WE greatly regret that by an oversight of the editor the appearance of the following letter has been delayed, and we ask the pardon, not only of Sr. Emma, but of the many friends deeply interested in news from her.]

PAPEETE, Nov. 3, 1897.

Dear Readers:—ONE year ago this morning "we two" stood upon the deck of the City of Papeete as she gradually receded from the wharf and floated down the harbor, leaving a group of friends on the shore signaling to us their kindly feelings. The presence, at that parting hour, of some of the many dear saints we were leaving cheered and comforted us greatly as we were being wafted from our native land; with feelings divided between the natural clinging to all that was left behind, and of looking forward to the new field where our work was soon to commence. There seems, this morning, to be a strange coincidence of feeling to that of one year ago. Yesterday the mail packet arrived, bringing us more letters than any mail since we came here. And such good, cheery letters, too, bringing the writers very near. And now this morning as the letters are in a cluster on one end of the table, they remind me of the group who stood on the shore; though a little bit in the distance, the light, love, and good spirit they imparted remains with us to warm and cheer our hearts. And, to make the coincidence more complete, Bro. Luff's letter was detained in the post office yesterday and came to us this morning, like as did his benediction one year ago after all had said their parting words and passed along the gangway to the shore. That feeling of sweet, brilliant peace,—the only words in which I can express it,—is not with me in the same degree now as then. I have too often grieved it. Yet in looking forward to the coming year or years, as it may be, it is with less fears in some respects, less hopes in others. But with all, I feel better prepared to do my part than in the past. For, while we have had much to rejoice in and be thankful for, we have also had some dark hours and some experience which will, as all lessons obtained in this life, work the peaceable fruits of righteousness if we are rightly exercised thereby.

It should not be thought that it is any easier to be a good saint here than in America. One is brought nearer to God simply from utter loneliness and soul cravings for companionship. There are not the opportunities to be built up and strengthened by communion with saints, and it is necessary to go to the fountain head. But should such a one fail to "lean harder," spirituality would very soon sink into its most dangerous condition—indifference. The saints here do not seem to have entered into the things of the Spirit to speak by the Spirit. As a rule their exhortations are studies and sermons copied. But they are gaining, and we hope ere long to see them enjoy the leadings of the Spirit. True, there is not so much here to engross and divert the mind, but much more to induce a stupor. I, in my silent condition, find that it requires a constant labor to maintain mental activity, being hedged in on all sides, not being able to talk or understand in this language only a very little, and that imperfectly, neither with any degree of the Spirit in my own, having to speak only a few words at a time, then wait for it to be translated. How I would like to hear a sermon or a testimony in English! Joseph and I have our cosy chats at eventide while the twilight deepens, or the moon peeps down between the branches of the majestic cocconut trees. But with our meager communication with the outside world, we often are at a loss for something new and interesting to talk about.

Dear sisters, I hereby express my gratitude for the many kind letters received, and assure you all it is quite a self-denial to forego the pleasure of answering each one personally; but must forbear, at least for the present, from two reasons. On account of heavy drafts on the church treasury, and also upon the saints this year, the treasury has but little in it, and is not likely to be replenished very rapidly because of other taxes upon the saints in all the islands. There would be a great plenty if they were skilled in managing their financial affairs, but as yet they are children in that line. And again, the authorities at the post office have refused to take Chili money for stamps, and there is very little French money to buy. Since the price of silver has been reduced our dollars out here are not worth as much as they were, so it takes more of them to buy both French money and food, but they do not come in any faster. I do not want any of our friends to feel at all uneasy about us. I have no fears of suffering want for any of the necessities of life.

We are sorry to learn that the mail steamer is not to be continued. Those designated for this line proved to be too small for the necessary transportation of freight and passengers, and their consumption of coal was too expensive without having those other advantages of income. Yet I feel confident that the enterprise will materialize in the near future. There is now a steamer running semimonthly between the Paumotus and Papeete, which is a great convenience for mail transportation, but fear it will not be a benefit to the missionaries, their price for passage being five dollars per day, French money, being nearly twenty in Chili money. Missionaries could scarcely afford so much,

And, since there is a passenger boat on the line, the traders may not be so accommodating as heretofore. I have no fears for ourselves personally, because we are not seasick, have no little ones to disturb anybody, are used to the rules of a ship, and can quietly take care of ourselves without being in anybody's way, which makes a very great difference.

The rainy season has now set in in good earnest, and we are having very high winds. By taking the needful precautions we both keep tolerably well, and the work of the press goes regularly on. Many good words in regard to Te Orometua from almost all parties, Catholics included. The leading French people here in town speak quite highly of it. It is our daily prayer that it may be with God's blessing instrumental in doing much good. We are looking for a visit from Bro. and Sr. Case next month, while they make preparations for returning home. We shall feel lonely when they are gone.

The merry Christmas season will be near by the time this reaches you, so I will join in the gladsome greeting of "A merry Christmas to you all! A prosperous and happy new year!"

In answer to the sister of Stockton who asked if greenbacks were good out here I can answer, Yes. We can hand them to the American captains, who will give the face value in Chili money.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

A SISTER is in pressing need of a sum of money ($120) and asks the sisters of the Prayer Unions to join with her in prayer that our Father will in his own way supply the need. The money must be raised very soon and she knows not which way to turn to get it, and has yielded to the impression to come to you asking your faith and prayers in her behalf, that God's name may be honored. Her faith in God through prayer is strong, and she believes if it is his will she will have the money that she feels she will have to have. (Phil. 4:7, I. T.)

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE Sunday school library has hitherto been regarded by many as little more than a "fixture." Books bought by the dozen or hundred, "at greatly reduced prices," and placed in a case to be handed out indiscriminately constituted the Sunday school library. Now the world in general, the churches, and the Sunday schools are awakening to the fact that in the library there is a power. Lives have been wrecked and lives have been redeemed by the reading of a single book. The workers of the General Sunday School Association realizing the necessity of a proper selection of books and a proper management of the same, sought to put the library work in a progressive condition. The office of "Librarian" was created by the General Association in convention, April, 1897. The duty of the librarian is to work to the advancement of library movement, by gaining and disseminating knowledge, encouraging the workers, improving the libraries, etc. Miss Mamie A. Allen, of Lamoni, Iowa, is the General Librarian. Correspond with her if interested in books for the Sunday school.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARY.

IN a library of any kind we expect to find a collection of books, and if a well arranged library to find them classified so that anyone wishing a book may by application to the librarian readily find what he may wish to read.

In a Sunday school library we expect to find the nature of the books such that the Sunday school scholar will find only good food for thought, and certainly that is what we ought to have in our libraries; but I often think that we fail to comprehend just what is the best food, in the nature of books, to place within the reach of our children, that their minds may be directed aright in their reading.

We often, and rightly too, judge the character of a child by his taste for literature; and if, then, in the molding of his character we have failed in this particular, when we have had opportunity, so far we have "left undone what ought to have been done."

Our Sunday school libraries ought to consist of books that will teach of the things of God, develop a love for Nature, and a love for the study of the workings of Nature, without teaching doctrine, unless they are books written by our own members, who from an understanding of the doctrine by the enlightenment of the spirit of truth can weave into a story the truths we are anxious should be taught the children.

Too often Sunday school libraries consist only of books that tell of bad little boys and girls, who suddenly turned out good by being converted.

The little minds are so susceptible of impressions that they can easily be misled, and if we could plant firmly at first the doctrines of truth, as the mind develops and matures, the comparisons of our own faith with others could be made, and the one brought out clearer and brighter by being placed opposite the others.

Some one might say that the Sunday school library furnishes a very small part of the reading matter of the child. That may be true; but a very little sometimes seasons the whole lump, and I believe there is the possibility of the Sunday school library forming an important factor in the reading of the child, if it is carefully and wisely selected, and the teachers and officers of the school, and also the parents of the children will become interested in the books, and encourage the little ones to read.

There ought to be a great variety of books in the library. The mind is not always in a condition to read deep, solid matter; but there are times when the mind needs to rest, and it can do so often, better by reading something instructive in the lighter vein of literature, that does not require a strained mental effort, than by being left alone with its own thoughts.

History stories are always good, stories of child-life are particularly interesting to the little ones, and nature stories I have already mentioned. Lives of great men are good; but I have always found that these are the books that remain longest in the library unread, so if we who know that good may come from such books would talk with the boys and girls about them, we might help to develop a taste for them. The higher grade of fiction, works by noted authors, are often very instructive.

Here, too, comes in the work of the librarian. While we often think that the only duty of such officer is to catalogue the books, and see that all books taken from the library are returned at the right time, I believe that a much greater responsibility ought to rest upon the person chosen for this place.

It would be well, were it possible, that the librarian should have read all the books that he handles, or at least that he know the general character of the books he hands to others. If such a person could be found, when applicants for books come to him, he would be able to assist by directing the channel of their reading, where there would be a steady development of the faculties of the mind.

This idea of the duties of the librarian may, perhaps, be ideal, but we advance by aiming at our ideals, if they are good. While it is not possible for the librarian to read all the books, he can be wonderfully assisted in becoming acquainted with the nature of a great variety of books.

We are all readers, to a greater or less extent. We are all interested in the youth of our church. I believe then whenever we read anything that is instructive and elevating, we might make it known, by writing, perhaps a brief statement as to the nature of the book, or at least by sending the title of the book with the name of the author, to the one chosen by the association to look after this department of Sunday school work.

I do not think this ought to be the work of one person, but that we all ought to work together, that good may be accomplished. Ever praying for the guidance of God's Holy Spirit,

Yours in bonds,

MAMIE A. ALLEN.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Editors Herald:—Eleven years have glided by since the writer, guided by the hand of a member of the Baptist Church, came to this little village (Vanessa, Norfolk County, Ontario). The Baptist above referred to had heard me tell the story of the angel's message and felt satisfied that her people (who were all Bible scholars) would obey. Accordingly we left St. Thomas and arrived here. The first house we entered was Mr. R. C. Longhurst's splendid home. Mrs. Janrow (our Baptist friend) and Mrs. Longhurst were sisters. The writer, amid many clouds and a little sunshine began to preach, calling down the ill-will of the pious. In time eight were baptized. The first two led into the fold were R. C. Longhurst and his wife. A discussion followed; the work rolled on, a branch was organized, a small house fitted up as a church. Other elders followed the writer, doing good work. Our Baptist friend who brought me here was baptized, as also her husband and children. Her husband, Bro. Janrow, was ordained, and I think is now president of Detroit, Michigan, branch.

Vanessa branch grew till a new church was called for. R. C. Longhurst who by the way has grown in favor with God, has been ordained: 1, a priest; 2, an elder; 3, a high priest, and is now president of this branch and district, gave the land on which to build, and the branch has now a nice brick church 26x36 feet, stone foundation. There was something over one hundred dollars of a debt, but the saints have arranged that by personal notes, and Sunday, February 6, the land and church were presented to the Lord free of debt.

The writer, by request of the branch, opened the new church on Sunday. We had prayer and sacrament at ten a. m., and the dedicatory sermon and prayer were offered by the writer in the afternoon. The church was packed; every seat, the aisles, and platform were crowded. A nice choir gave us good music, Sr. Taylor presiding at the organ. Bro. Longhurst assisted in each meeting during the day. I preached again in the evening and each night this week. Will remain over Sunday, 13th.

The Vanessa branch is to be congratulated over their success. This branch has never had a hard word in all these years, and is one of the leading branches in the tithing list of the district. The writer looks over to the tall pine trees in the distance, 'neath them he wandered oft to pray that God would raise up a people here who could build a church where the truth would be presented. The time has come; those prayers are answered; so he takes courage and continues the journey on the sunny path of duty.

SUMNER, Okla., Feb. 15.

Editors Herald:—I am again in the field; arrived here on the 9th. The weather was unfavorable for our conference, being quite wet; but in spite of muddy roads the brethren continued to drop in, till we had a fairly good representation. On the 11th, as per appointment, we proceeded to organize a district, to be known as Oklahoma district. Bro. D. S. Crawley was chosen to preside, and Bro. S. J. Hinkle to assist, Bro. R. M. Maloney secretary. We had an excellent conference; peace and good fellowship prevailed throughout the entire session. The preaching was by Brn. Crawley, Macrae, Maloney, and others, and was fully up to date, allowing your humble servant to judge. Oklahoma is coming to the front in the way of finance, the brethren paying tithing cheerfully, and some joyfully. We feel that a bright future awaits the saints of Oklahoma.

Brn. Crawley, Maloney, and Duncan left us this morning, after a very interesting and spiritual season of prayer, in which Bro. H. C. Hughes was called to the office of elder, and Bro. Bly to the office of priest, and both were ordained. Brn. Crawley and Maloney go to Norman to arrange for a debate with some one of the Christian or Campbellite faith. Bro. Duncan and the writer will go Saturday next; the debate is set for the 21st. The saints think Bro. C. R. Duncan the right man in the right place; he has the confidence of all; is a genial, competent, and kindly man, who has won his way to the hearts of the saints. I design to make my way to Coalgate after the debate, to spend some time with the saints there, and try to build them up and encourage. Mail addressed to me at Standley, Indian Territory, will be forwarded to me, or found when I get there.

Yours in hope,

GEORGE MONTAGUE.

PURYEAR, Tenn., Feb. 18.

Editors Herald:—For ten days, since the conference, I have been working ten men on the Eagle Creek church; have the frame all up and the roof on, 24x36. Brn. Kelley and Henson started home immediately after the conference, going up through Illinois, by Kelley's home, to visit his parents; but I have not been lonesome since their leaving, however. Home thoughts will force themselves on our mind, and we are longing to see the dear wife and children; but our time belongs to God and his church first, all things else are secondary. I was sent for yesterday to come here in haste, coming just in time to hold the deathly hand of one of our brethren while his spirit passed away to the paradise of God; transferred from the busy, loving, harmonious band of workers to this silent chamber of death is lonely indeed. I preach funeral this afternoon at the Foundry Hill church, ten miles away. Will then go to High Hill branch, in Kentucky, to settle difficulties there among brethren. Then on to Sedalia, Kentucky, to preach a week, and to adjust and set in order the Farmington branch. Brn. Kelley and Henson should have assisted some there, but I learn went through without calling.

Our conference passed off very nicely; Bro. T. C. Kelley approving heartily my methods and work, and preached us a good sermon. The Eagle Creek church will be ready to dedicate in latter part of summer or early fall, and I certainly hope President Smith and Bishop Kelley will come. I want one "blow out" in Tennessee, and that will assure it.

Your brother,

T. W. CHATBURN.

WEST MECCA, O., Feb. 14.

Editors Herald:—I opened meetings in this place, and some are quite interested. The roads are so bad people can scarcely get out, and we have rain most every day. If the roads would permit, the house would not hold the crowd that would come. I believe there will be a good work done in Trumbull County. I could do more if I had a little financial means to help myself. But I cannot get money scarcely to pay my way and get what I actually need. I hope the day will come when God's servants will be better provided for, so they will not have to go with wet feet, cold backs, and no money in the house to buy food for the little ones, and it shall be my prayer. Amen.

F. C. SMITH.

BEVIER, Mo., Feb. 15.

Editors Herald:—I spoke twice in the opera house at Pollock, and four times at Higbee. Last Sunday attended district conference at Bevier. It was a grand success. Although the saints had added twenty feet to their house, yet it was crowded. The saints say they never had such large congregations. Some are thinking of obeying, so I hear. We hold forth each night this week, and Bro. Turpen will stay over Sunday with Bro. J. A. Tanner. Bro. Summerfield and myself go to Lentner on Friday, to hold forth over Sunday in the Christian church, a new place, by request of Bro. J. L. Williams.

Our noble cause is looking up in this district. Bro. Palfrey is looking after the work in Macon. He is after two Brighamite elders. They asked him not to publish them any more in the Macon paper. He said to them, I'll chase you all over this city, for you are trying to lead my neighbors astray, and palm yourselves off as being Latter Day Saints, when you are not.

Sister Louise Palfrey, of Macon, Superintendent of Northeast Missouri district Sunday school association, acts well her part in looking after and building up the Sunday school cause. She's a noble young lady; her sisters are not far behind her. Parents have lots to do in training children.

I am yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

EAST HALL'S HARBOR,
N. S., Feb. 5.

Editors Herald:—A mountainous sparsely settled country, with deep snow and storms frequent, with temperature ranging from 25 below zero to 20 above, with General John Eaton's effort in the Christian Herald believed, are not very congenial environments for the promulgation of the latter-day work; especially for breaking new ground. Nevertheless our audiences are increasing, in spite of an attempt to close up the Adventist church which was promised me. The majority ruled in my favor, and I am to continue a few more nights; after which a lumbering camp is at my disposal for a time, which I shall occupy. I have already held one interesting meeting in it. The country around is quite aroused, and our faith the general talk. I have recently come from Scott's Bay, where I occupied the Advent church for about a week. It seems to be my lot this year to be among this people. Well, take them all round, they are more free than any other people I meet to open their houses and entertain the preacher.

An effort of about two weeks in Pereaux, in which I held meetings at three different points, evidences quite a change from the time that Elder Burton first opened up the work there. Although it has been predicted that the work has been forever killed there, yet there are quite a number to hear with respect and kindly feeling; not an uncivil word from any of them. Of course the old ones who have opposed it so long are as hard as ever, but the younger ones, and those who have moved, make quite an audience to speak to.

Monday, 7th.—The fight is on in this neighborhood. A sermon on the resurrection of the wicked, and matters concerning the future, brought some sharp criticisms from several of the Advent friends. I understand they are going for me worse as I proceed. All right. I am glad our faith does not fear fair opposition.

Wednesday, 10th.—Our opponents were as good as their word. Last night we spoke upon the kingdom, and they did go for me; but I am perfectly satisfied with the result of the contest. The young men deserve credit for the energy displayed in contending for their faith, and I admire them for it. How much better that is than closing up the door and going around misrepresenting us and our faith. I am happy to say that these people are above that, or have shown themselves that way so far.

13th.—My effort among the Adventists was temporarily closed up, some of the folks objecting to a further use of the house. A majority would have stood by me in a contest for the house, but I did not want to make a break among them, so I gracefully yielded for the present; but they promise to have it opened to me in June, when their elder will have a lecturer on the Book of Mormon for me to reply to. Then they say I must meet him in debate, when the two churches will be discussed, to which I assented with pleasure. Do you suppose we will really have a good square debate upon the respective claims of two faiths? They say so. I hope so. I left them with the kindest of feeling all round. We have a lecture service in our house this evening. Next week I go to Hants County.

May continual blessings attend the faithful.

CENTRAL CITY, Neb., Feb. 18.

Editors Herald:—I very readily indorse the resolution adopted by the Manchester district priesthood association, which appears in Herald, February 16, in reference to the unanticipated death of Bro. H. Hoole, president of Sheffield branch, and offer to the bereaved wife, son, and aged mother of the deceased, and the saints of the branch, my individual heartfelt condolence and sympathy. And without the least exaggeration it may be said, if integrity, a due love for family, and consistent and Godly walk as an official in Christ's church constitute might or greatness, a mighty man has fallen in Israel; and nothing but gospel comfort, assurance, etc., could make so great a loss tolerable to the survivors.

While evincing a becoming resignation to the dispensation of God's providences which he permits to visit us, the church can ill afford to lose such men as Bro. H. Hoole, who was a living epistle known and read of all men, as an exemplary member. Peace to his ashes. May our departure be as his.

This small contribution adds nothing to his name or character; but knowing his worth, I take pleasure in offering it. He leaves a dazzling record though not a word of indorsement were heard. And were I near the spot of his resting place, with a clear conscience, and steady hand, I could write on his tombstone, "Bro. Henry Hoole did his duty."

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

IMLAY CITY, Mich., Feb. 15.

Editors Herald:—I appreciate the Herald as it comes laden with good news of the progress of this beautiful gospel in various parts of the world, where it is being preached. As I read the letters from the brethren who are so nobly wielding the sword of the Spirit "and pleading Zion's cause" to the nations, I often think I must write, if it be but a few lines.

I have come in contact with some complications in the last six months which have caused me much distress of mind. But I find in my experience the only sure and safe way is to stand by the law given to govern the church. Though duties may seem hard, but when performed in harmony with the law, it brings a peace of mind. At present writing I am domiciled at the home of Bro. Pearson, four miles from the above city. I came here one week ago and have been holding forth in a union Baptist church. The weather and roads have been somewhat against us, but our audience has increased from four to about fifty. I expect to remain here until the 19th, thence to Bay City to resume my work there. Following the instruction of the president of mission, I have spent the major part of the fall and winter thus far in Bay City, looking after the interests of the work there. I have held several meetings in Saginaw, and prospects bid fair for a good work being done there if properly looked after.

There are four Utah elders in Saginaw and four in Bay City, distributing tracts and preaching occasionally. Those in Bay City came to my meetings quite regular for a time, and occasionally one from Saginaw. I was in hopes of getting them in discussion as they seemed very brave at first, but they declined all fair propositions. I think Bro. E. C. Briggs gave them a fright in the two lectures he delivered for their especial good, on the works of Mr. Young and his coadjutors. However, they still came to our meeting; we had more or less talk with them each time they came; they finally said they would occupy alternate nights with me; and with the consent of our people I agreed to meet them that way, as they would not enter in joint debate. But pending the time we were to start, those of Bay City, assisted by Elder Miller of the Saginaw force, held a meeting at Bro. Petie's house; of course I was on hand, and at the close of their meeting, by permission of Bro. Petie, I cut loose on them with the books in contrast to what Brigham taught, and lo they have not appeared at one of our meetings since. I saw them sometime after, and I inquired why they did not come and occupy according to agreement. They said they had concluded unless we would give them control of the church for several evenings they wouldn't have anything to do with us, and of course we were not built that way. They are not injuring us in the least, but rather doing us good, for people say, Now we know there is a difference. And so may it be wherever they go, is my earnest prayer. Ever praying for Zion's welfare, LUCAS, Iowa, Feb. 21.

Editors Herald:—January 31 I visited Warren County and stopped a week at Hickory Grove, where I found the saints all in good spirits, though not enjoying all the church privileges they would like, as they have no Sunday school. We organized one there a year ago. It was poorly attended by outsiders, but it became an eyesore to the U. B. Church in the neighborhood, who secured the services of a girl preacher, who preached for them a few times. They then organized a Sunday school in the same schoolhouse, set their hour at 2:30 p. m., ours being at three p. m., crowded our people out and then closed theirs. We had good interest and attendance, and no doubt but some will be added to their number soon.

I stayed two weeks at Concord, and in spite of snowdrifts we got a good hearing. The saints here are up to date, and no doubt will soon be rewarded for their untiring zeal by seeing some of their neighbors numbered with them.

At Mount Moriah, eight miles south of Indianola, I was well cared for by Alfred Nyswonger and his good wife; although not in the church. Also Bro. Joseph Chumbley and wife, and W. H. Chumbley and wife, who are members of the Methodist Church; and thanks to their sons and daughters who so kindly furnished the music. This is a new field and within one and a half miles of the M. E. church, yet our meetings were well attended, though bitterly opposed by a few cranks. I left after holding eighteen services, with many requests to return. This I expect to do in about two weeks. Some are near the kingdom.

Yours in bonds,

W. H. KEPHART.

MILTON, Fla., Feb. 16.

Editors Herald:—Our branch was organized February 1, by Bro. D. E. Tucker. We are few in number, but by observing the law of the Lord I think we will grow in numbers and in spirituality. We have a flourishing Sunday school organized by Bro. C. I. Carpenter last October. So the good work goes on. I have been in this church a little over a year, and I know that if we will all live up to the light which we already have that we will be enabled to receive more and more. I am making an effort to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. When I see the saints indulging in practices that are contrary to the revealed word of the Lord I feel sad. Let us try to live up to the privileges that are ours to enjoy. On us and our conduct depends the salvation of the human family. Shall we use our influence for their benefit or shall we go on doing things which are condemned by the books we profess to believe, and thus bring reproach on the church?

Let us ever try to remember that the same God who said, Repent and be baptized, also said that tobacco and strong drink are not good, and that we must avoid even the appearance of evil. We must tithe our possessions, and give the tenth part to the church, in order that she may be enabled to send out more elders, that the gospel may penetrate to every part of the world. We must also "recompense evil for evil to no man, but provide things honest in the sight of all men." I could write more, but for fear of crowding out some letter which is better than mine, I forbear.

Your sister in the gospel,

MARY E. BAILEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 22.

Editors Herald:—It is encouraging to see through your columns the sick are being blessed, and that they give God the glory. We, the sisters of the Prayer Union have fasted and prayed for Brn. Dougal and Shearer and Sr. Sterret; felt well in so doing. Let us continue praying for them, that they may be fully restored to health. It builds us up to hear from them. Secret prayer is a source of great comfort to me. It is a trial for me to pray in public, for all I know God is no respecter of persons. Let us not forget the sister who once had her hearing restored through the prayers of the saints. Her husband thought she should take some medicine. She did so, and has lost her hearing again. She says she will rely on the Lord if we will pray for her again. So let us all think of her. And I do desire the prayers of the Prayer Union for the same affliction. Please remember me. God is ever merciful to his people, with all their faults, if they put their trust in him. We will be pleased to hear from Nellie Sparling; several Hopes fasted for her February 21.

Your sister in Christ,

ROSENDALE, Mo., Feb. 21.

Editors Herald:—I can say that truth here as elsewhere is marching on. Fourteen months ago accident or Providence placed me where I am, and two or three months later Bro. Peter Anderson came and was placed in charge. The church work in this district is certainly on a better footing and prospects much brighter than a year ago. Since General Conference sixteen have been added by baptism, and it seems as though a larger increase would follow in the near future. I have only baptized one of the number, but have tried to do what I could to contribute to the result. We are not received with open arms in this part of the land, but it is evident that the influences of good are at work among the people, so that the way is being prepared faster perhaps than the church is in readiness to take advantage of the situation.

Bro. Anderson and myself came here and commenced operations last Wednesday, the 16th. We secured the Christian church for that night, advertised to speak on "adding to or taking from the word of God." We had a good house, and at the close of my sermon Bro. Anderson asked for the church the rest of the week. A prominent member arose, signified his willingness, and called upon Trustee Pettijohn who was present to express himself. Bro. Anderson proved to be a "stayer," waiting 'mid long and painful silence for an answer. A ripple of merriment passed over the audience, at, I suppose, my colaborer's ability to wait and Bro. Pettijohn's inability to say either Yes or No. Finally silence conquered us, and we dismissed without hope of further meetings. But at this juncture a Methodist trustee came forward and tendered the Methodist church for the next night, so we halted the congregation and made our announcement, and afterward got consent to use the house for two more nights.

We have heard of numerous expressions of disapproval relative to the Christian church episode and Trustee Pettijohn's dumbness. One member said the church had lost by it more than they would recover in a year.

Bro. Anderson led out in the M. E. church, reviewing an expose of Joseph Smith's prophecy on the rebellion printed in a recent number of the Christian Standard, and exposed the ignorance of the one who wrote the article, which was circulating about town. The sermon gave general satisfaction, but one man at least was mad about "old Joe Smith." The next night the way seeming to be prepared for it, I spoke to a good audience with good liberty and attention on the Book of Mormon. The mad man of night before got still madder; he has been sort of a historical and theological champion about town, but his wisdom must have been upset to some extent by the way he conducted himself; but judging from what I have heard from other sources good was done. The next evening, and perhaps the last in this place for the present, Bro. Anderson having left to hold meetings at Rhea, I spoke on gospel restoration, etc.

The church authorities are having great reasoning among themselves as to whether they will accede to our request for use of the church during the week to come. The Board meets this morning to decide the matter. They are between two horns of a dilemma, fearing to displease those who wish to hear more, on the one hand, and on the other fearing they may lose some members, I suppose. And thus it goes with us. Every inch of ground is contested, and must be fought for if won.

The canvas church in some places and under some circumstances seems to be the only resource. I am stopping with a Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt, who have long been believers, who have heard but one sermon previous to our coming. Feel assured they will obey ere long. Bro. and Sr. Jordan, who have come here recently from Iowa, have also stood by us in our efforts. May the good cause roll on.

Your brother,

M. F. GOWELL.

A PECULIAR DEBATE.

Editors Herald:—"Baptism by immersion in water, for the remission of sins, is a part of the gospel of Christ, and should be observed by his church until Christ comes; hence is necessary now." J. D. Erwin affirms; T. S. Finches denies.

The above debate began February 10, at Morgon town, Lamasco, Texas. J. D. Erwin introduced seventeen witnesses to baptism in water for remission of sins: John the Baptist; Jesus Christ; the Holy Ghost; God the Father (Mark 1); Peter, and the rest of the Twelve (Acts 2: 38); Ananias (Acts 22: 16). These were all placed on the blackboard before their eyes. He next proved, by the last commission in Matthew 28, Mark 16, that baptism was enjoined upon all nations, and all the world.

T. S. Finches replied to this as follows: All nations only referred to all nations of Israel; apostles went into the world and preached the gospel to every creature (Col. 1: 23; Rom. 10: 18). The commission was fulfilled, hence ceased. When a command is carried out and finished, it is no longer necessary. Baptism in water was the washings under the law of Moses, and was abolished between A. D. 64-70 (Col. 2; Heb. 9:10). The Greek baptizo means conditions uncertain in what it does mean. Acts 15:23, 24; Ephesians 2:14; Acts 21:21 was read and reread by T. S. Finches to prove that baptism was abolished with the law of Moses. Paul was the great minister to the Gentiles. Christ sent him not to baptize, but to preach the gospel (1 Cor. 1:17).

J. D. Erwin examined all these scriptures and showed not one scintilla was said about baptism for the remission of sins ceasing with the law of Moses. He admitted baptism was taught in Moses' day. Read 1 Corinthians 10:1-4. Also Christ was that rock they drank of; therefore if baptism ceased because the law of Moses ceased, Christ ceased, and we are without Christ, the gospel, or anything. Bro. Erwin took up Hebrews 9:10; Colossians 2, linked them back with Leviticus 15:17, 18; 16:24; Numbers 19, showed just what divers washings (baptisms), meats, drink ordinances referred to and not baptism in water for the remission of sins. Bro. Erwin next examined the two commissions found in Matthew 10, and Matthew 28, and Mark 16:15, and showed the vast difference between them. He showed the last commission did extend outside of Israel and went to the Gentiles (Acts 10; 1 Cor. 12:1-4). Bro. Erwin next introduced proof from the Bible to prove baptism by immersion in water was for the remissions of sins; he also proved by a number of lexicons and lexicographers that baptizo means to immerse in water. Several church historians confirm the overwhelming evidence. He finally turned Bro. T. S. Finches' own witness against him, Paul the great apostle to the Gentiles (1 Cor. 3:6), and forever settled the argument of his opponent with (Gal. 1:8), though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. This was written A. D. 58, and Bro. T. S. Finches brought the curse of God and all heaven upon Paul by claiming a different gospel was taught A. D. 64-70; if true; but could not be true. Then Bro. Erwin put Paul down as his eighteenth witness to baptism in water for the remission of sins.

"The eating of unleaven bread and wine, commonly called the Lord's supper, was a feature of the law of Moses, and was abolished by the law of Christ with every other feature of Moses' law." T. S. Finches affirms, J. D. Erwin denies.

Suffice to say that Bro. T. S. Finches failed to produce one verse from the Bible to prove the Lord's supper was abolished—not one. Bro. Erwin read plain proof to sustain its continuation until Christ comes again (Luke 22:14-20; 1 Cor. 11:23-30; John 6:53, 56.) This last proof was rubbed in hard, showing Bro. T. S. Finches to be without Christ. This brought the frowns and groans from the brethren of this peculiar belief.

The debate did much good; being in a stronghold of this peculiar philosophy. One Baptist preacher said Amen for Bro. Erwin. One old rich planter, Dr. Griffith, came to Bro. Erwin after the debate and said, "I am glad you came and saved our country from infidelity." Another debate is fixed for July on church propositions. T. S. Finches is a slick debater and a powerful talker.

NATHAN C. WINN.

NORMAN, Okla., Feb. 22.

Editors Herald:—The work at this place is at present on trial, in the case of a debate between Elder D. S. Crawley and Elder M. L. Wilson, of the Christian Church. Discussion commenced last night; Bro. Crawley affirming our church to be in harmony with New Testament church in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice. The question of origin was discussed. Elder Wilson made an earnest effort to show that our church originated upon the foundation of the Book of Mormon, and Joseph Smith as its head. This same elder denied there being an apostasy after the days of the apostles, upon the grounds that if so, Christ being the head of the church and the church the "body of Christ," then if there was an apostasy the "body" ceased to exist, which would leave Christ, the "head," without a body. He had no doubt overlooked or forgotten that Paul wrote that Christ is the head of the church as man is the head of the wife. He also reasoned that if the church apostatized, and the woman or church was no more, then Christ was a widower. He also asked the question that if this Reorganized Church was the church or bride, would Christ have two wives when he comes the second time?

This also was an evidence of bad memory or something else, for the Scriptures say nothing about the marriage being performed when Jesus was in the flesh; but quite to the contrary. John the Revelator was viewing things which must be hereafter, after the time when he was on Patmos in the year 96; and his vision extended down to future time, to the day of judgment (Rev. 19:2), also to the second coming of Christ, at which time John says the marriage of the Lamb is come. Therefore Elder Wilson's position is wrong, for Jesus Christ was not married, even to the church, while he was in the flesh, but had only "chosen" the church as his bride, and went to prepare a place for her.

We are hopeful of good results, and feel confident that this latter-day work will stand all the criticism that is offered.

I have of late been reading the book by D. H. Bays; and while I am willing to believe he is honest in his effort, it is nevertheless hard to determine when he is or was the most honest in his belief. Think of a man who has spent twenty-seven years of his life preaching that baptism is for the remission of sins, then change because of honest conviction, and preach baptism (for another church) "because of remission of sins." Then his honesty breaks out anew, and once more he preaches (for a different church) that baptism is for the remission of sins.

I am encouraged in the work, and have always enjoyed investigation, and proper controversy. The truth has always gained the victory in fair investigation. Men who represent the truth will also win if they are humble and devoted to God. This I am conscious of, and hope to so live. This is my first visit in this part of the mission since last August, then our stay was short. Some have been waiting my return, desiring to be baptized, which I will see to before leaving for General Conference. Will report results later. My mission address is Kingfisher, Oklahoma. Yours hopefully,

R. M. MALONEY.

TABOR, Iowa, Feb. 23.

Editors Herald:—The war clouds of the Williams-Blalock debate have hardly cleared away when lo, the boom of cannon is again heard upon the same battle ground, and the shouts of victory from the enemy are heard all over the field. And why is all this? Smarting over the recent defeat they have returned with their Goliath, Clark Braden, to renew the battle, but there is no David here to meet him; hence we have a kind of a sham fight with only one side, and of course it is very easy to show their bravery and to shout "cowards," etc.

Though Bro. E. L. Kelley had reserved the right to set the time for the second debate here, Elder J. D. McClure, representing the Christians, sets the time for February 21, announcing in a circular that if Elder Kelley could not muster up sufficient courage to meet them, Mr. Braden would give a series of lectures exposing "Mormonism." It is evident that it was intended to set a time when they knew Elder Kelley could not be here, in order to deceive the people, making them believe that Elder Kelley had broken his "pledged word" in agreeing to meet them.

The lectures are proceeding though the audience so far has been small, but will increase as he proceeds. Circulars have been distributed setting forth Bro. Kelley's position, and we believe the people outside have confidence that he will fulfill all agreements. Public sentiment, generally, seems to be against Braden and his methods. Many friends have been made to the cause in the work of the last month and, as Bro. Williams says, "It means future growth for us." The Lord is in the work here, and we have no fears.

THE LAST DAYS.

THE dispensation indicated in the caption of this article includes "the fullness of the Gentiles," and "the fullness of times;" as also it is the morning star to "the times of restitution." The phrase, "In that day," used so frequently by Isaiah and other ancient prophets, refers to the evening twilight of a dying world, unless what precedes and succeeds it draws the meaning out of its ordinary channel, and directs the sense otherwise. This auspicious epoch of most wonderful vicissitudes, is of a two fold character, in that it is both a sifting and a hastening time. The chaff is flying; but the wheat is being garnered in all the same. The dross, like salt that hath lost its saving qualities, is going; but the precious metal abideth steadfast. The dark rolling clouds, the terrific thunder, and the advancing storm sweep on. The elements in connection will either purify and save, or hurl down and destroy all as we may elect. This glorious season is all replete with blooming aromatic flowers and blossoming orchards. It is a fleet-footed evangel, and forerunner, presaging and harbingering forth "the redemption and glory of Zion."

The Lord eternal is pledged to build up Zion ere he appears in his glory, accompanied by the sacrifice and gathering of his people, as saith the psalmist David. The leaven of his "strange act" is working, and his "marvelous work and a wonder" is rolling on. The sound of battle for truth and right may be heard in the "mulberry trees" of the civilized world. The groaning armories and glistening shields of rival nations indicate a universal upheaval of contending powers. As the corroding hand of time is at work in the vast laboratory of nature, and governments great and small are alarmed with sectional rivalry and strife; yea, with anarchistic demagoguery within, and the iron hoof of the advancing foe without, the child of faith beholds the revolution of all things with confidence and trust. The rumbling earthquake, and the awful volcano; the tumultuous sea, and the appalling waves; the fearful hurricane, and the withering scourges; the decay of crowns, and the fall of empires; the dissolution of armies, and the degeneracy of human brotherhood; the unparalleled greed of man, and the miraculous energy of demons are but heralds of the retiring night, and sure tokens of the advancing dawn, and of the rising day that is just at hand to come.

While we stand in the sunset of the world, and hear the evening hymn of time; and view the drama of mortal ending, and sense the throes of expiring nature, may we ever realize that such is but the overture and stepping stone to "a new heavens, and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." This belief will be a shelter from storm, a shield against every foe, a staff and stay for the feeble, and an inspiration to "lift up your heads and rejoice." The mustard seed of the orient is potentially the wide-spreading tree of the field. The germs of vitality fill our larders, cellars, and granaries. The leaven is the handmaid that brings the "staff of life." But behold the gospel reaches all zones and gives the "bread of heaven." It was, is, and will ever be the infinite fulcrum to raise and redeem fallen humanity. Its electric effulgence was to penetrate, warm, and vitalize the wayfaring pilgrim's benighted heart; for, indeed, "in the evening there shall be light."

It is to be inculcated and disseminated quite far and wide ere the second advent.

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify.—Mal. 3: 1-3.

The student is referred to the last chapters of Malachi for a fuller account of startling events that cluster and cling about the glorious appearing. "The great and dreadful day of the Lord" will be a high day of emancipation and glorification for his people; and, on the other hand, a crisis of shame, defeat, and vengeance to the poor sinner. Divine light is a vehicle that has grave responsibilities attached to the fiery wheels thereof, the nature of which will either excuse or accuse. Matured individuality is answerable to law, and sin is knowing and not doing. Ability should be an unsheathed sword, all furnished for the battles of life. Inactivity, indolence, and sloth are stepping-stones to ignorance, vice, crime, and every evil thing. Were the heaving ocean asleep, the gushing springs on a strike, the flowing streams at a standstill, and the atmosphere motionless, the solid globe would soon be tenantless. The martial host that are "on the King's errand" should double-quick, with closed rank and file, so to speak; for indeed

three unclean spirits like frogs . . . are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which goeth forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.—Rev. 16: 13, 14.

Once again:—

Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.—Rev. 12: 12.

Saint Paul, the illustrious advocate, maintainer, and defender of "the truth," has chronicled "for our profit and learning:" "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." He enumerates a long catalogue of evils with selfishness, egotism, pride, and the likes, within the caravan of death and ruin. We cannot, in justice, make "the Evil One" a scapegoat for all our shortcomings, however well we may like this bankrupt scheme: For evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." The fatherly care and divine caution to all is, "Be not deceived." "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." "Take heed that no man deceive you." "To the law, and to the testimony." "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my pathway." "And whoso treasureth up my words shall not be deceived." "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." "The Father, which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say," which "is life everlasting." "Come unto me all ye that labor." "Believe in God, believe also in me." Repentance and remission of sins should be preached. "Be born of water, and the Spirit," etc. If "ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered unto you," "happy are ye," "if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you;" and "stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free;" "and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. . . . Redeeming the time, because the days are evil."

Now-a-days, as in olden times, those who have purloined "the keys of knowledge," even "a hireling careth not for the sheep," only for the fleece, as they shall say, "Peace and safety" etc. The fate of false shepherds and blind guides, with their credulous throng, is delineated in plain and unmistakable terms on the great monumental pages of the sacred writings.

The prescience and foreknowledge of the Supreme Arbiter and eternal Judge hath revealed forth as follows:—

Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron.—1 Timothy 4: 1, 2.

Knowing this first, that in the last days there shall come scoffers, walking after their own lusts.—2 Peter 3: 3.

There shall come mockers in the last time, who should walk after their ungodly lusts.—Jude 18.

These lying lascivious apostates, scoffing and mocking, are multiplying like the German carp in our silvery lakes, and sparkling streams, and the end approacheth. Religious charlatans, beguiling unstable souls, and luring silly women, with "a form of godliness" are cancers on the body politic, and the bane of social purity. "Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was." "Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed," for, behold, the coming Lord is to be a "swift witness against" the lewd, the perjurer, and all that oppress the hireling, widow, orphan, etc.

Go to, ye peoples, and make your cliques, bands, bundles, combines, trusts, syndicates, railroad pools, labor unions, protective associations, beneficiary societies, secret orders, oyster and whiskey rings, and the likes, strong, but all is to come to naught ere long. Ye Christian nations (?) swell your vast armies and navies, and beggar the yeomanry for the deadly conflict, but all will be of no avail whatever.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, by the Spirit that searcheth all things, ere he was translated, comprehended; viz., "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment." Israel foretold of "the last days," and Baalam and other ancient seers looked through the ages till the earth would be crowned with the deathless beauty of redeemed man amid the glory of God. The prophetic spirit forecast the struggles, conquest, and sure victory of lovely Zion. The temple of the Lord, which may refer to a literal building, or the house of the Most High, which is the church of the living God, is to throw wide open her portals to the soon coming king in his glory. He may come to each, either, or both more likely, and the remainder of the elect will then be gathered in. At all events the little flock, as saith the Christ, are to have the kingdom presented to them by the eternal Father.

The meek are to inherit the earth, says Jesus Christ, and the saints are to possess the kingdom evermore, as revealed to and through Daniel. The palefaced nations of the dead are to arise to judgment, but all in order. The righteous are to some forth when the child of Mary comes to reign on the throne of the Lord at Jerusalem. He will also rule in the Zion, remote from all the dwelling places of Jacob, and before his ancients most gloriously. The faithful will be translated, when he appeareth, so they will not see death, and the Devil will be bound. Nations will beat their spears into pruning hooks; and their swords into plowshares, and the arts of war will fade from the annals of time. Ultimately death will be a thing of the past, sorrow no more, pain all gone, and pleasure supreme will hold scepter and sway. In our most sanguine anticipations and exalted aspirations to inherit all things, and fairly revel in ecstatic bliss and superlative unending glories, we must not lose sight of the King's highway of holiness, and the signboards and mile posts that mark the entire way. False Christs, prophets, and teachers have, do, and will throng the long avenue. National calamities, desolating wars, universal perplexities, pestilential contagious diseases, withering famines, awful earthquakes, storms that will sweep the seaboard, and ravage the land, will multiply and intensify, great and unparalleled wickedness will abound, and predominate; the fidelity and love of many will wax cold; surfeiting, drunkenness, and earthly cares will snare unwily feet; base pretenders will work signs and wonders, and the elect according to the covenant will be jeopardized if they do not watch, work, and pray.

After these things that are upon us, and the fullness of the Gentiles culminates, the glorious orb of day will veil his face; the moon will follow suit, the stars will be hurled through the fields of ether; fearful sights, and great signs will be beheld in heaven, as well as on the land, and ocean; and then, behold, the sign of the advent, and the glorious appearing. The experiences of Noah and Lot will be duplicated; the wise will understand, the children of light will sense "the times and seasons," the faithful will be arrayed in the wedding garment, the foolish virgins will get left, and the wicked will be filled with consternation approximating despair. The wheat will be garnered, the tares will be consumed, angels will rejoice, and demons will be bound. Let us all strive to be on the watchtower, so we will not be taken unawares. And now may the Lord move the cause of Zion.

NOTHING.

THE writer when searching for something real upon which to found his hopes, discovered the following. The Godhead as defined by Roman Catholic authority:—

Question, "What is God?" Answer, "God is a spirit; eternal, independent, infinite, and immutable; who is present everywhere, who seeth all things, and governs the universe." Question, "Why do you say that he is a spirit?" Answer, "Because he is a supreme intelligence, who has neither body nor figure, nor color, and who cannot fall under the senses."—Doctrine and Scriptural Catechism of the Catholic Church, by the Rev. P. Collot; translated from the French by Mrs. Sadlier; published in Montreal in 1853.

Question, "What are the five senses of animal life?" Answer, "smelling, tasting, hearing, seeing, and feeling."—Webster.

Godhead defined by the Church of England:—

The thirty-nine articles. I.—Of Faith in the Holy Trinity. "There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions; of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things, both visible and invisible. And in unity of this Godhead there be three persons of one substance, power, and eternity; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost."—Church of England Prayer Book, article 1.

Godhead defined by the Presbyterian Church:—

There is but one only living and true God, who is infinite in being and perfection, a most pure spirit, invisible, without body, parts, or passions; immutable, immense, eternal, incomprehensible, almighty, most wise, most holy, most absolute, working all things according to the counsel of his own immutable and most righteous will for his own glory, most loving, gracious, merciful, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth; forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin; the rewarder of them that diligently seek him, and withal most just and terrible in his judgments, hating all sin, and who will by no means clear the guilty.—Confession of Faith, chap. 2, art. 1.

Godhead defined by the Methodist Church:—

There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts; of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness. The maker and preserver of all things both visible and invisible; and in unity of this Godhead there be three persons of the one substance, power, and eternity,—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.—Methodist Discipline, 1886.

Godhead defined by the Baptist Church:—

We believe that there is but one God . . . We believe that God is revealed to us as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Each with distinct personal attributes, but without division of nature, essence, or being.—Manual of Baptist Church, Port Colborne, Catechism.

Godhead defined by the United Brethren:—

In the name of God we declare and confess before all men that we believe in the only true God: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. That these three are one, the Father in the Son, the Son in the Father, and the Holy Ghost equal in essence or being with both. That this triune God created the heavens and the earth, . . . and sustains the same.—United Brethren Discipline, chap. 2, p. 13.

I am informed that the above referred to God is the one spoken of in the Bible. Turning to the one hundred and fifteenth Psalm, I find that it does speak of gods as follows:—

They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not: they have ears but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not: they have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat.

The articles above cited show their God, "cannot fall under the senses," so does the ones referred to in Psalms 115; and if the Gods described in the creeds as having neither "body, parts, or passions," can see, feel, hear, smell, or taste, he has not said one word to them about it and hence they say he cannot. Surely the God described above is not the God that "made man in his own image." Surely the Jesus Christ of the Bible, said to be "in the form of God," is not the one referred to in the creeds as being one with the Father, "without a body." Surely it is false to say that the true "Godhead" has neither "body, parts, or passions," "Figure, nor color," and can neither "hear, see, taste, feel, smell." This is another name for nothing.

2. God made the world of nothing.

Question. "How did God make the world?" Answer, "Of nothing; and by his word only."—Catholic Catechism, by Rev. Dr. Butler.

It pleased God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost . . . in the beginning to create or make of nothing the world and all things therein, whether visible or invisible, in the space of six days.—Presbyterian Confession of Faith, chap. 4, p. 43, v. 1.

Question: "Who made nothing? Out of what material was nothing made? Where did nothing exist prior to the creation of this world—'of nothing?' Was there any of nothing left? or did it take all of nothing to make this world? According to the creeds 'nothing' made the world 'of nothing,' hence those who believe the creeds believe that—

"He took a lump of nothing
And made the glorious earth;
Another bit of nothing, and Oceans had their birth.
Another bit of nothing, he made
The glorious sun;
And so he worked with nothing,
Until stars and skies were done.
He took a rib from Adam,
With nothing for a knife,
And by mixing it with nothing,
Made him a full grown wife."

Would it not be better to believe that "the elements are eternal?" "Intelligence . . . was not created or made;" "and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy." (D. C. 90:5.)

LITTLE QUESTIONS FOR BIG THINKERS.

IS IT better to be civilized than savage?

Would you rather be man than beast?

If man had never believed himself to be more than a beast would he ever have risen above the level of the beast?

If the majority of men should reach the conclusion that "all is vanity," that all religions are simply grand social air castles, would not civilization forthwith begin to decline?

Whether would it be more demoralizing for a people to believe in a future state without any Devil or hell, or to believe that death ends all?

Is not a religion without any Devil or hell in it about as useless as a government that did not punish transgressors would be?

Is it better to be than not to be?

If we feel that life with all its joys and sorrows, hopes and fears is in the aggregate a blessing, is it not good?

If life is good must not God, its author, if there be a God, be good also?

If there be no God who deserves the credit or discredit for man's believing there is a God?

Bearing in mind that wise men differ now and always, have differed widely respecting what we are, whence we came, and whither we are going, is it not, to say the least, a little rash for any man to say, "Give me the naked truth if it annihilate me this moment"?

Do you regret the fact that you did not know years ago just what you would have to come through up to the present?

Are you sorry that you cannot see exactly what awaits you this side the grave?

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Western Passenger Association has granted reduced rates to the General Conference and conventions of auxiliary societies,—Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and the General Sunday School Association,—naming the dates, as requested, from April 5-20. The Conference does not convene until the 6th, but the 5th is named in order to permit attendance at the conventions.

Reduced rates are granted under the following conditions:—

1. Going tickets must be purchased not earlier than three days before the 5th, and not later than three days after, Sunday not being counted as a day in any case. In other words, tickets may be purchased on any date from April 1 to 7, inclusive, but not later than the 7th.

2. The rate is one and one third fare for the round trip. The rule is to purchase full fare tickets on the going trip. Passengers must, in all cases, obtain certificates with every ticket purchased, which certificates, when signed by the Church Secretary and stamped by the agent of the Chicago and Alton Railroad at Independence, Missouri, will entitle purchasers to return trip tickets at one third the usual fare; provided that one hundred tickets are purchased; provided further, that ministers holding half-fare permits are not entitled to this reduction; nor are tickets purchased at fifty cents or less to be counted.

Where passengers can do so, it is better to purchase a through ticket to Independence and obtain one certificate. Where several tickets are purchased, separate certificates must be obtained with each.

Special Note:—Passengers must be particular not to complete their journey from Kansas City to Independence by street railway or electric lines—they must go through to Independence by the Missouri Pacific or Chicago and Alton—the regular railroad lines—to secure the reduced fare.

"Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is usually necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket of each road's issue, between points traveled thereon, and procure certificates thereof for each of the lines in this territory over which he travels in going to the meeting, as through tickets are not always sold, and it is not always practicable for the various lines to honor each other's certificates. Passengers should, therefore, ascertain from the ticket agent what portion of their journey can be covered by the certificate obtainable from him, and procure certificate filled out to correspond with the tickets purchased."

For information concerning best routes, etc., apply to ticket agents.

The Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern will sell tickets to points on the C. R. I. and P., M. and St. L., St. L. K. C. and N. W., C. B. and Q., and R. I. and P. Rys., which roads will honor its certificates for return passage to starting point on its line at the reduced rate.

"Where parties or clubs traveling in a body purchase round trip party tickets to the place of meeting from stations from which the local one-way rate is more than fifty cents and at not less than the rate announced on the certificate plan for the particular meeting in question (instead of one-way tickets at the regular rate) and present to joint agent a certificate from the selling agent to that effect, they will be counted by the joint agent in reckoning the attendance at any meeting."

"No certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single-trip ticket."

Tickets on the going passage may be limited or unlimited, according to the rules of roads selling them; but return tickets are good only for continuous passage, and not later than three days after the 20th—to the 23d inclusive.

Purchasers should hand in their certificates promptly to the Secretary, that the local railway agent may be notified of the required one hundred being purchased.

The following lines of road will sell tickets on the certificate plan:—

Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe; Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Northern; Chicago and Alton; Chicago and Northwestern; Chicago, Burlington, and Northern; Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy; Chicago Great Western; Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul; Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha; Hannibal and St. Joseph; Kansas City, St. Joseph, and Council Bluffs; St. Louis, Keokuk, and Northwestern; Illinois Central; Iowa Central; Jacksonville and St. Louis; Minneapolis and St. Louis; Missouri Pacific; Rock Island and Peoria; St. Louis and San Francisco; Sioux City and Pacific; Wabash; Wisconsin Central Lines.

TRUNK LINE ASSOCIATION.

The Trunk Line Association has also granted the same reduction in rates, subject to the same general conditions with some minor exceptions.

1. The reduction is from Trunk Line territory; i. e., from Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Dunkirk, and Salamanca, N. Y., Erie and Pittsburg, Pa., Bellaire, Ohio, Wheeling, Parkersburg, and Huntington, W. Va., and points east thereof, except in New England.

2. Fares under 75 cents will not be computed in the reduction.

3. Certificates are not kept at all stations. If, however, the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to place of meeting, he can inform the delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained. In such a case the delegate should purchase a local ticket to such station and there take up his certificate and through ticket to place of meeting.

4. "It would be well to impress upon those availing of the reduction the necessity for giving ticket agents timely notice of their intentions, so that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required."

5. List of roads: Addison and Pennsylvania; Allegheny Valley; Baltimore and Ohio (Parkersburg, Bellaire, and Wheeling, and east thereof); Baltimore and Potomac; *Bennington and Rutland; Buffalo, Rochester, and Pittsburg; Camden and Atlantic; Canada Atlantic; Central of New Jersey; *Central Vermont; Chesapeake and Ohio (Huntington, W. Va., and east thereof); Cumberland Valley; Delaware and Hudson; Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western; Elmira, Cortland, and Northern; Erie (Buffalo, Dunkirk, Salamanca, and east thereof); Fall Brook; *Fitch-

LUFF—ELVIN.—At the residence of Bro. Robert M. and Sr. Emma Elvin, Lamoni, Iowa, at eight o'clock, on the morning of Wednesday, February 23, A. D. 1898, Bro. John W. Luff, of Independence, Missouri, and Sr. Mary Amy Elvin, of Lamoni, were in the presence of a large company of the saints, married, Pres. Joseph Smith pronouncing the ceremony. The bride is the eldest daughter of Bro. and Sr. Elvin, aged twenty-four next birthday; the groom is the son of Bro. John Luff, of Independence, Missouri, aged twenty-five. The groom was dressed in the conventional black, and looked neat, manly, and happy. The bride wore the white dress which twenty-eight years before was worn by her mother at her marriage with her father; was pleasantly attired and looked radiantly happy. The company was too large for a set breakfast, but the bride's cheerful assistants furnished the good-natured guests with an elaborate and plentiful repast. The ceremony was witnessed by the bride's grandmother, Sr. Hartwell, now in her eighty-eighth year, and her invalid mother, who sat with the company in the little parlor where the solemn compact was made. Bro. Luff is a printer in the employ of the Ensign office at Independence, Missouri, where the young people will make their home. They will be "At Home" February 25 and after.

Man's Nature and Destiny. The Spirit or Soul: Is it immortal? Does it survive the Death of the Body in a Conscious state? The views of Mortal-Soulists Examined and Refuted. In two parts. Second edition.

The author has closely examined the subject upon which he has written, both in study and in oral discussion, with those who differ from him in belief concerning the nature and destiny of man. Discussed from biblical, historical, and scientific standpoints. Christ as the true type of man, in life and in death; his preexistence, life, and death considered; the nature of man; the intermediate state of righteous and wicked; consciousness between death and the resurrection; the second death or future punishment; and the final conscious existence of all after the judgment; are leading features of the chapters of the volume.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

ENGLISH SPOKEN AND WRITTEN.

AT the recent Postal Congress attention was called to the fact that two thirds of all the letters which pass through the post offices of the world are written by and sent to people who speak English. There are substantially 500,000,000 persons speaking colloquially one or another of the ten or twelve chief modern languages, and of these about 25 per cent, or 125,000,000 persons, speak English. About 90,000,000 speak Russian, 75,000,000 German, 55,000,000 French, 45,000,000 Spanish, 35,000,000 Italian, and 12,000,000 Portuguese, and the balance Hungarian, Dutch, Polish, Flemish, Bohemian, Gaelic, Roumanian, Swedish, Finnish, Danish, and Norwegian. Thus, while only one quarter of those who employ the facilities of the postal departments of civilized governments speak as their native tongue English, two thirds of those who correspond do so in the English language. This situation arises from the fact that so large a share of the commercial business of the world is done in English, even among those who do not speak English as their native language. There are, for instance, more than 20,000 post offices in India, the business of which in letters and papers aggregates more than 300,000,000 parcels a year, and the business of these offices is done chiefly in English, though of India's total population, which is nearly 300,000,000, fewer than 300,000 persons either speak or understand English.

Though 90,000,000 speak or understand Russian, the business of the Russian post department is relatively small, the number of letters sent throughout the Czar's empire amounting to less than one-tenth the number mailed in Great Britain alone, though the population of Great Britain is considerably less than one-half of the population of Russia in Europe. The Southern and Central American countries in which either Spanish or Portuguese is spoken do comparatively little post office business, the total number of letters mailed and collected in a year in all the countries of South and Central America and the West Indies being less than in Australia. Chile and Argentina are, in fact, the only two South American countries in which any important postal business is done, and most of the letters received from or sent to foreign countries are not in Spanish, but in English, French, German, or Italian. —Scientific American.

RELICS OF CITY OF BABYLON.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 2.—The Rev. Dr. Herman V. Hilprecht, Professor of Assyrian and Comparative Semitic Philosophy at the University of Pennsylvania, has just returned home from Constantinople, where for several months past he has been engaged in the reorganization of the Babylonian section of the Imperial Museum of Turkey. He examined 180 cases of sarcophagi, pottery, antiquities, both gold and silver and of every kind and condition. Bricks, statues, and some 13,000 cuneiform tablets were included. Among these tablets are a number of the greatest importance, which present a peculiar shape, differing from those of a later time and going back to the fifth millennium B. C., which can be proven on archæological and palacographical evidence, and these may be regarded as the grounds of the latest results.

Among other points which are set at rest by the deciphering of these tablets is the conclusion which Assyriologists had arrived at upon other grounds, that Darius lived after and not before Artaxerxes.

But not alone the older and middle chapters of Babylonian history receive new light from his recent investigations in Constantinople. He has devoted much time to clearing up the mysteries around Jewish settlements in Babylonia after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

Most of the Jews carried away by Nebuchadnezzar were settled in the neighborhood of Nippur, and Professor Hilprecht has found a large number of Jewish names in these cuneiform tablets which are identical with those characteristic of the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. These and other investigations will largely contribute to a correct understanding of these two biblical books.

Notwithstanding the attacks of the American newspapers on the Sultan and his government in connection with the Armenian troubles, Professor Hilprecht was most courteously received and treated by the Turkish government, as well as by the officers of the museum. —Chicago Tribune.

GREATEST PERIL TO THE LAND.

DR. JOHN HENRY BARROWS preached yesterday morning in the Kenwood Presbyterian church his final sermon before his long Eastern trip. He spoke of the gospel of Christ as the hope of America, and, among other things, said:—

“To my thinking the greatest peril to our land is from the unchristianized populations that are massing in our great cities.

“Now, who is educating the foes of law and order in our city? To some extent, we are. I bless God for the vast increase in the number of mission schools and free kindergartens. But more potent than we are the saloon-keepers and infidels.

“I would not have you forget that eternal vigilance, that ceaseless and prayerful activity, that self-denying and consecrated labors, are required to counteract the forces of evil so mightily mischievous at this time. A democracy without God is growing up in some of our cities that must be met with a larger force of Christian missions and Christian schools."—Chicago Tribune.

WHAT IS LIFE?—EVIDENCE TOWARD EXTRA-TERRESTRIAL ORIGIN.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S definition of the nature of life implies, as is well known, a continuous adjustment of internal to external relations. In other words, vitality is preserved by interactions going on between the constituents of the protoplasm. On the face of it this view must be very materially modified in the light of some exceedingly interesting experiments recently brought to the notice of the Royal society by Mr. Horace Brown, whose classic researches on that interesting class of ferments, the enzymes, are well known. He has found that by submitting seeds to the very low temperature of evaporating liquid air—i. e.: from 183° C. to 192° C.—for 110 consecutive hours, their power of germinating is not in any way impaired.

Since the above temperature is considerably below that at which ordinary chemical reactions take place, the result is very remarkable and would appear to show that although a state of complete chemical inertness in protoplasm may be established, it does not necessarily lead to a destruction of its potential activity. Is the protoplasm thus brought to a "resting" condition to burst into activity on restoring favorable conditions? If so, what becomes of life during this "rest"? These observations are also of interest in connection with the suggestion of Lord Kelvin that the origin of life as we know it may have been extra-terrestrial and due to the "moss-grown fragments from the ruins of another world" which reached the earth as meteorites.

That such fragments might circulate in the intense cold of space for a perfectly indefinite period without prejudice to their freight of seeds or spores is, Mr. Horace Brown remarks, almost certain from the facts we know about the maintenance of life by "resting" protoplasm; the difficulties in the way of accepting such a hypothesis certainly do not lie in this direction. Here is an interesting problem for biologists, and the development of the question will be followed with the keenest interest.—London Lancet.

THOUSANDS USE THE DRUG.

TWENTY THOUSAND RESIDENTS OF SAN FRANCISCO ADDICTED TO USE OF OPIUM.

THERE are 20,000 victims of the morphine, opium, and cocaine habits in San Francisco, I learned this week. Wipe out all the normal portion of the city and you would still live in a town whose population is not to be despised. There are 20,000 slaves, 20,000 liars, 20,000 embryotic murderers, 20,000 thieves, and 20,000 lunatics abroad in our midst, and one should not wonder that there is so much crime, but rather that San Francisco is not a seething, tumultuous mass of evil.

Twenty thousand men have saved and won many a battle. Twenty thousand men might exert an immeasurable power for good, and it is astounding that they accomplish so little evil.

The physician at the jail states these figures as the minimum. I repeated them to a friend, who answered: "O, yes, but they are all Chinamen." I had said the same thing to the doctor, who replied: "No, there are 5,000 of them white. These we know, and you would be shocked to see the many of whom we are not aware, uncovered in respectable and even high society. San Francisco is the worst place in the Western world for the fiends of all sorts."

"Why?" I asked, and the brief reply was, "Chinatown." Every other Chinaman, I am told, is the victim of some habit, and they all use a drug in moderation as English women take claret and the American his tobacco. The Chinaman, the phlegmatic, nerveless, temperate, careful, prudent, cautious Oriental, is unable to do this. He can take enough morphine to kill twenty white men, but for the nervous, highly strung Anglo-Saxon there is no such thing as temperance in drugs and very little in tobacco and alcohol. He can abstain altogether; he can stifle desire at its very birth, but he cannot resist temptation. His brain is so keen, his nerves are so alive to even the inspiring winds, or the depressing fogs, that a little alcohol, a morsel of opium, or cocaine, makes black of white.

There is the same difference between the vices of the European and the Oriental as between those of a man and woman. The habitants of the West suffer keenly, and wallow more deeply, just as when a woman once allows herself to even become fond of alcohol she reveals to the masculine mind vileness of thought and language of which he never fancied.—San Francisco Bulletin.

COSTS MONEY TO GO TO CHURCH.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, January 24.—Dr. J. E. Roberts, pastor of the Church of This World, which holds its services in the Coates Opera House and has literally "turned them away" every Sunday, has announced that hereafter an admission of fifty and twenty-five cents will be charged, the gallery remaining free. In defense of his innovation Dr. Roberts said today:—

"No religion is free. Nothing in this world is free, not even religion. It costs money to go into church and worship God. If you don't pay the money some one else does.

"The difference between our church and other churches is this: They entice people into church by telling them that it doesn't cost anything there to praise God. Then when they get them in they hold them up. We are honest about it. We say we have an entertainment here that will do you good. If you are not a poor man you will have to pay something to get in. But you will have the comfort of not being held up and robbed when you get inside. Nobody will rattle a collection box under your ear. Nobody will get up on the stage and make a tearful appeal and beg a few coppers out of your purse."—Tribune.

BAD CLAIMS FROM GEBO, MONTANA.
MRS. ALBERT J. PREMO, writing from Gebo, Carbon County, Montana, February 20, states:—

There is a pair of men recently arrived who claim to be elders of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," who make a very confident statement that they can prove Brigham Young to be the rightful leader of the church, and that Joseph Smith was hired by an enormous salary to assume the leadership and usurp authority. They also claim to have met elders of the Reorganization in debate, even recently, and worsted them in every encounter.

What is worse there is no one in our little band who can successfully contradict them. If one of our elders could come here just now he would be received with open arms by the saints, and there would be no difficulty at all in obtaining the use of a large centrally located schoolhouse on Clarkes Fork, for holding services. We should be most thankful if an elder could make it convenient to stop here, but I am very sorry to say that we saints are all very poor and we are quite unable to send pecuniary aid.

In case an elder should happen to come this way, I will state how he may find us. The nearest railroad is Joliet, Carbon County, Montana, eighteen miles from here. Some of the saints would meet him if notified. Should be notified early, as mails are sometimes irregular here.

The foregoing is only a sample of the "refuge of lies."

We challenge the proof that Pres. B. Young was the rightful successor to Joseph Smith, the Martyr, as president of the Church; and vow absolute unbelief in the ability of the two elders referred to to prove it.

We personally, will be much obliged to these two elders if they will furnish the proofs that Joseph Smith of Lamoni was "hired by an enormous salary to assume the leadership and usurp authority." We are sadly in need of a few hundreds of dollars, and if we had the proof referred to, we might make speedy collection of some part of that "enormous salary," and get out of debt. Gentlemen from Utah, please send the proofs referred to at once and help Joseph Smith out of difficulty. We thought people had got tired of that lie long ago.

We would also like to be informed the names of the elders of the Reorganization whom these Utah elders met and "worsted them." We would like to make inquiry why our elders did not report their defeat. Send us the names please.

THE LAMBERT-BAYS CONTROVERSY.

WITH this number of the HERALD containing Elder Bays' article and the reply of Bro. J. R. Lambert to follow, the Lambert-Bays controversy will be brought to a close; that is, so far as the HERALD is concerned.

The present article of Elder Bays was offered us some time ago, but publication was deferred for this reason: It was manifest to us that, Elder Bays being a representative of the Christian or Campbellite Church, the whole correspondence should be placed before the readers of the Christian Evangelist, published at St. Louis. We therefore stipulated with Elder Bays, before publishing his former article, which has already appeared in the HERALD, that he agree to present the whole controversy to that publication with request to publish. This he agreed to do, also to notify us of the result. The present article was shortly afterwards offered us, but action as to publication was deferred till the action of the Evangelist was learned. Elder Bays has not notified us concerning the decision of the Evangelist, but in its issue for February 3 last we find the following:—

D. H. BAYS AND THE SAINTS' HERALD.

We have recently received several copies of the Saints' Herald, an organ of the Latter Day Saints, published at Lamoni, [Lamoni] Iowa, which contain a somewhat rambling discussion by Elder Lambert, of the Latter Day Saints, and D. H. Bays, author of Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism. The controversy seems to have started from some references on the part of Elder Lambert to D. H. Bays' new attitude toward the Mormon Church. To these references Bro. Bays replied—a right to which he was entitled—and quite a voluminous controversy ensued running through several numbers of the above-named religious journal. We have been asked to publish the controversy as it appeared in the Herald, in our columns, but it is too voluminous for our space. Moreover, our readers not being acquainted with the circumstances provoking the controversy would have but a very weak incentive to read so many long articles. Having read the controversy, however, it is but just to say that it has been conducted in fairly good spirit and has doubtless given the Herald readers a better understanding of Bro. Bays' motives for leaving their fellowship. There is much parrying, pro. and con. about certain proposed public discussions and other matters of local character, but Bro. Bays made use of his opportunity in the controversy to define his present attitude toward Mormonism and some of its doctrines, which is about all that he could hope to do in a discussion of this character. . . .

We omit the concluding portion of the article, which is simply an advertisement of Elder Bays' book.

The Editor of the Evangelist declines, but the HERALD gives its readers both sides of the controversy; a difference in policy, to say the least.

Some of our readers object to anything of a controversial nature appearing in the HERALD. This idea is, in our opinion, a greatly mistaken one, for several reasons. Truth does not suffer from investigation; error alone flourishes in the dark, and resists examination. Its ways are "in the dark" because it is of evil. The result of investigation is to bring out, to make plain, that the superiority of truth and right may appear, in contrast to the designs and weaknesses of wrong and error. Jesus said, "Everyone that doeth evil hateth the light, lest his deeds should be re-proved [discovered—margin]. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."

The church and its ministry are confronted by active and wily opposers of the truth. Is it the true policy to shut off all discussion simply because articles take on something of a controversial nature? Certainly not. But if so, how could the people be educated to see and be prepared to expose the false positions of their opponents? People who simply read one side of a matter are not strong advocates of their own principles. Not knowing the positions urged against their beliefs, they are unprepared either to fully appreciate the truth or to defend it. Truth appears in its superiority when attacked by error; it shines out clearly and strongly by contrast, and its heights and depths are seen and understood and the faith of the believer is confirmed as he more fully comprehends its immovable character. The Apostle Paul commended some as full grown men in Christ because by reason of "exercise" of their "senses," or powers of mind, they were able to discern between good and evil.

Opposition has its uses; it serves to bring out, to emphasize, to make manifest; hence when the elders have met their opponents in discussion and have been careful to meet them wisely, the false reasoning of opponents has been made plain and the truth has been brought to the attention of the honest in heart.

It is stated in the word that the disciple shall be led and guided into all truth. The Latter Day Saint who is so undeveloped as to be unable to discern where the truth lies in any question, has not yet come to the full measure of his development; and until he exercises his powers of mind, in study, in prayer, and in diligent application in the line of privilege and duty, will not reach the condition of understanding and usefulness designed. Christ is the pattern in all things. And, he was not only good in heart; he was also intelligent, and was thus able to comprehend and to meet the conditions everywhere prevailing against him.

The gospel comprehends the elevation of the saints by spiritual, moral, and general education. We shall not be made free until we "know the truth." "They shall all be taught of God," is the prophetic statement concerning the people of God. Salvation without understanding, without knowledge, without ability to discriminate and to reach correct conclusions upon all questions in which the saints are to act, in matters pertaining to church and other duties, is an anomaly.

Salvation without knowledge is unscientific, untrue. A Latter Day Saint who cannot reach a correct conclusion, or who does not so do, concerning matters upon which he or she is obliged to act according to his moral agency, in the interests of branch, district, or general work, is to that degree unprepared to do his part in the interests of the work. He "falls down" before responsibilities when, had he been sufficiently developed, he could have acted in the interests of the work; and thus often it is true, "if one member suffers, the whole body suffers with it," because some unwise action is permitted to obtain.

The redemption of Zion means the redemption of her people. "Zion cannot be built up except it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself," the Lord has said. The principles of the celestial law cannot be put in operation until there is both an acquaintance with, a comprehension of them, and a disposition to heed them.

The policy of crying down discussion is one of the Devil's favorite themes. He is pleased when people are willing to glide along easily and dreamily without knowing just where they are, what they are doing, or where they are going. It is the people who think and act from an understanding of law that he is afraid of. He cannot easily mislead those who, acquainted with God's law, humbly but firmly refuse to be led by what is in opposition to it; and who, having acquainted themselves with the misleading and deceptive devices of the enemy of truth, understand his tactics and are able to detect them—to discern their real character.

The education and development of the people can only come about by individual and personal effort. Society in church and state can only be exalted by the development of the personal quantities that compose it. All men and women have powers of mind and heart that may be brought out, that must be brought out to their full extent if the units of society are to be happy and brought up to the possibilities open to all. This the gospel contemplates, hence individual action in faith, repentance, baptism, and in receiving confirmation is required. The trouble is that many practically stop here, waiting for the ministry to do the rest.

All our people should study the revelations of God to the church, and become familiar with them. They should know what they are doing and why they act. The Lord can scarcely be pleased with less than this. He designs the development of all his children—he is no respecter of persons; he is, however, a respecter of character; and Christlike character includes information, knowledge, intelligence, goodness. The greatest things in the universe are heart and mind—love and intelligence. The glory of God is intelligence.

The Lord has said, "The inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion, and liars and hypocrites shall be made known."

The Apostle Paul wrote to the early saints, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?"

The idea that men should not judge at all—not discriminate—is erroneous. Jesus, in the Inspired Translation, is thus quoted: "Judge not unrighteous judgment." To render a proper judgment requires care, and justness, and considerateness, and information; all of which are commendable and strictly essential to the "perfect man."

Those, then, who oppose the idea of counter arguments or discussions in the HERALD, are in our judgment, mistaken. The arguments or methods of Elder Bays and other opponents properly criticised, afford our readers an opportunity of development in discerning false positions and of growth in exposing them. Our young men grow by moving out among the enemy, not by remaining where they hear but one side only.

We believe in investigation. It was well expressed by the statement of a minister at one of our General Conferences: "We are here to cut gordian knots, and to solve problems."

No subject of general import is beyond the realm of proper investigation, and criticism, and analysis. We plead for open, unhampered, full investigation. It means death to tyranny and error, but life to the race by manifestation of the truth.

When the people become well posted in the revelations of God, including the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, they will be better able to comprehend the purposes of God and the work of the church, and to stand by the ministry in the execution of their work. The ministry will also be moved upon to occupy higher ground, to lead the way upward and onward in the principles of life and godliness.

Let the good work of investigation go on in the interests of the church and of man universal.

JUSTICE, IF TARDY, STILL JUSTICE.

SISTER M. E. E., writing from Denver, Colorado, February 22, is rather elated over the kind showing which the local press is giving our people under the efficient and rather wise administration of Brn. Gillen, Thomas, Gilbert, and Roush. The Rocky Mountain News for February 21 has near a column notice of the district conference with a cut of Bro. Roush.

The News states:—

The semi-annual conference of the members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints for the Eastern Colorado district, came to an end last evening. Fully fifty delegates and the following ministers were in attendance: J. W. Gillen and O. B. Thomas, of Iowa; J. W. Gilbert, late missionary to the South Sea Islands; C. B. Goldsberry, of New Windsor, Colorado; M. F. Ralston, of Eaton; J. B. Roush, E. F. Shupe, K. Seli, and Joseph Schmutz, of Denver, and James Kemp, of Conifer, Colorado. Reports from the branches in Denver, New Windsor, Conifer, Sterling, Wray, Kirk, Coal Creek, Colorado, and Eustis and Maxwell, Nebraska, showed a membership of 375, being a net gain of about seventy-five during the year. The bishop's agent reported $450 collected during the year for the general church fund. Elder J. B. Roush was reelected presiding elder of the district, and C. E. Everett, of Denver, secretary. Rev. Roush is one of the younger ministers of the conference, but has had wide experience as a missionary in the interest of his church. Delegates as follows were elected to attend the General Church Conference to be held at Independence, Missouri, commencing April 6: J. W. Gillen, O. B. Thomas, J. W. Gilbert, J. B. Roush, and Mrs. L. S. Nudd.

This is followed by a fair digest of a sermon by Bro. Roush. 'Tis a good sign.

INTOLERANCE STILL LIVES.

OUR Methodist friends solicited the coöperation of the Pope to secure equal religious liberty in the South American regions, with other believers. The Pope snubs the inquirers and suggests that the State should by law repress any and all Protestant heretics from preaching in the country.

A lot of would-be wise preachers down about Tampa, Florida, have become alarmed because the Utah Mormons are operating in the South with Chattanooga, Tennessee, as a center; and are suggesting that the Mormons should be stopped by force if necessary. The Chattanooga News for February 10 gives these very wise elders the reproof stating that the Mormon elders are doing good in and around Chattanooga.

Bro. E. Gerber, a long resident in Tennessee, who sends us clippings from the Chattanooga papers, is of the opinion that an elder ought to be sent to Chattanooga to make that city his principal place of labor, and believes that a good work might be done by such an effort. Bro. Gerber will gladly give any information in his power touching the city and the country. The attention of the missionaries for the Southeastern mission is hereby called to the situation. Address E. Gerber, Hill City, Tennessee.

TO TRY TO CONVERT INGERSOLL.

EMPORIA, Kan., Feb. 22.—William Crowdy, the colored evangelist, who claims to be a John the Baptist, and that he precedes Christ only a short time, is working wonders among the people in Emporia. He has now over 100 followers. Of these he has baptized twenty-three in the Cottonwood River. Yesterday afternoon five were immersed in the icy water, four of whom were white people. He says he has received a personal message from God to go to Washington and convert Bob Ingersoll.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. W. E. LARUE, of Rock Island, Illinois, wrote us March 1 and sent clipping from Moline papers, which very kindly allowed a card from Bro. LaRue correcting some statements, made in a previous issue. The press in many places is quite fair, we are pleased to note.

Andy McBrayer, of Artemas, Kentucky, would like if some elder would call there and preach. He has been reading the Book of Mormon, and believes in revelation.

Bombay, March 3.—An epidemic of plague has broken out in the state of Hyderabad. Fifty deaths are occurring daily.

London, March 5.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Tien-Tsin, China, says: "Japan has addressed a note to Russia demanding an immediate and explicit statement on the question of the continued occupation of Port Arthur."

"There has been a steady decrease during the last ten years of candidates for holy orders in England, and among them the proportion of Oxford and Cambridge graduates is also diminishing. The number ordained in 1897 was 1,296, which is the lowest in twenty-two years."—Chicago Tribune, March 5, 1898.

Up to the 5th inst. there is practically no change in the Cuban situation, except that the United States has stationed several war vessels along the coast of Cuba. The naval board of inquiry has not yet reported on the direct cause of the Maine disaster. War preparations continue both in the United States and in Spain.

A Washington dispatch of the 6th to the Chicago Tribune reads thus: "Spain has protested against General Fitzhugh Lee as Consul General at Havana. President McKinley has refused to recall him. Spain has intimated that to send supplies to Mantanzas and Sagua la Grande by war ships would not be acceptable, and would be considered as tending to encourage the insurgents. President McKinley has decided that the supplies will go, as originally intended, on the war ships Montgomery and Nashville."

"The President will not consider the recall of General Lee. He has borne himself throughout this crisis with judgment, fidelity, and courage, to the President's entire satisfaction. As to the supplies for the relief of the Cuban people, all arrangements have been made to carry a consignment this week from Key West by one of the naval vessels, whichever may be best adapted and most available for the purpose, to Mantanzas and Sagua." The last paragraph is an "authorized statement given out by Assistant Secretary Day at the State Department." War preparations continue.

Original Poetry.

CALVARY.

Oft looking back along time's ancient vale,
As peal the Sabbath bells at restful eve,
A vision comes of that sad, hallowed tale,
That round my heart a halcyon calm doth weave.

I see that gentle One, whose soul divine,
Whose form was grace, and face angelic cast,
On which there shone a glory all sublime,
With eyes that beamed impassioned love so vast.

I see that fearful scene on Calv'ry's hill,
The cruel cross, and hear that mournful cry,
" 'Tis done!" His mission now on earth fulfilled,
Though Holy One, he dies as mortals die.

The shrouded sun goes down in lurid gloom,
'Mid quaking earth the veil is rent in twain;
As man he dies, though not as man his doom;
His death but sleep—so soon to rise again.

No more by lake and shore 'mid Judah's hills
Is heard that voice in gently pleading tones;
But now on high for man redeemed he thrills Celestial throngs before the Father's throne.

Can man forget the water and the blood?

Can man forget that agonizing cry
In anguish wrung from holy Son of God,
"Eloi! Eloi! Lama Sabachthani?"

" 'Tis finished! The work thou gavest me to do;"

'Tis finished! And Holy Lamb the sacrifice.
'Tis finished! And man in God is born anew;
'Tis finished! And Jesus reigns in Paradise!

PRAY!

"Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right.
Pray, if thou canst, with hope; but ever pray,
Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness, if there be no light.

"Far is the time, remote from human sight,
When war and discord on the earth shall cease;
Yet every prayer for universal peace
Avails the blessed time to expedite.

"Whate'er is good to wish, ask that of heaven,
Though it be what thou canst not hope to see;
Pray to be perfect, though material heaven
Forbid the spirit so on earth to be:

"But if for any wish thou darrest not pray,
Then pray to God to cast that wish away."

LAMONI, Feb. 26.

Dear Sister Walker:—Might I offer the following suggestions to the sisters of the Prayer Union? To those when making selection of texts for the different subjects, that they be selected with the view of bringing our minds and hearts in close touch with the subjects for prayer, and that they need not therefore be limited to one or two verses or paragraphs.
And that we try to make the opportunity to each day, sometime during the day, devote a short time, if it be only a few minutes, to the reading prayerfully and thoughtfully the text or texts given in connection with the subject for prayer of the week. The benefit to be derived from this course I believe will be a better preparation for engaging in the prayer to be offered when the hour has arrived for united prayer on Thursday.

And further, when selecting the texts we remember that on some days there are more than one distinct subject, as notice the third Thursday, there are at least three, so let us try to select for each.

If you think, Sr. Walker, these suggestions timely, please present them to the sisters through the Home Column.

Lovingly,

S. CLAPP.

We are pleased to present to the members of the Prayer Union the above letter of Sr.
Clapp, who is leader of the Prayer Union in Lamoni and a very zealous worker therein; one whose heart seems to respond to every demand made upon it by the suffering ones of earth. And how many such there are can hardly be appreciated until one has been placed in a position necessitating contact therewith. The thoughts expressed in this letter carry us back to the time when the Prayer Union was first organized and the object had in view in introducing the Memory Texts. It was intended that these should have a direct bearing upon the subjects of prayer and should be committed to memory by each member of the Union. It was in the mind of those who originated the Prayer Union that it should be a helper in the great battle being waged between the forces of light and darkness, truth and error, and to the end that it might answer or fill the measure of its creation this thought of occupying the mind with that which was good to the displacement of that which was light, trivial, or perhaps even sinful, seemed an opportune one. Nature abhors a vacuum and will not allow any space to remain unoccupied, but if emptied of one element it is quickly occupied by another. An eminent writer has said, "The only way to get rid of anything that is obnoxious in the world of sense or spirit is by displacing it," and it was the intention that these selected passages of scripture should help in bringing the mind into harmony with the season and subjects of prayer, by helping to displace from the mind everything not in harmony therewith, and occupying both mind and heart to the exclusion of all unwelcome guests.

In order to a wise and profitable selection of texts it becomes necessary to devote much time and thought thereto, and, in fact, it cannot successfully be done by one who is not familiar with each of the three books. Much time and careful painstaking has been given to this matter by those who at various times have had it in charge, and at times they have felt seriously discouraged and have questioned whether after all the labor bestowed thereon was to any extent helpful, or beneficial, since so few seemed to avail themselves of it, by using the selections as designed. It is for this reason that we welcome the letter of Sr.

Clapp and sincerely hope that her suggestions will meet with a hearty response. If the reading of a single text will lead to the thoughtful and prayerful reading of many others, we can but feel that great good will be accomplished thereby.

HE CARETH FOR THEE.

"Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."—1 Peter 5:7.

"What can it mean? Is it aught to him
That the nights are long as the days are dim?"

Can he be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?

Around his throne are eternal calms,
And song, glad music, and happy psalms,
And bliss unruffled by any strife,
How can he care for my poor life?

"And yet I want him to care for me, While I live in this world where the sorrows be.

When the lights die down on the path I take:

When strength is feeble and friends forsake:
When love and music that once did bless,
Have left me to silence and loneliness:
And life-song changes to sobbing prayers—
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares.

"When shadows hang o'er me the whole day long;

And my spirit is bowed with shame and wrong;

When I am not good, and the deeper shade
Of conscious sin makes my heart afraid;
And the busy world has too much to do
To stay in its course to help me through;
And I long for a Savior—can it be
That the God of the universe cares for me?"

"O wonderful story of deathless love!
Each child is dear to that heart above;
He fights for me when I cannot fight;
He comforts me in the gloom of night;
He lifts the burden for he is strong;
He stills the sigh, and awakens the song;
The sorrow that bowed me down he bears,
And loves and pardons because he cares.

"Let all who are sad take heart again,
We are not alone in our hours of pain;
Our Father stoops from his throne above
To soothe and quiet us with his love.
He leaves us not when the storm is high,
And we have safety, for he is nigh.
Can it be trouble which he doth share?
O rest in peace, for the Lord does care."

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. ELIZABETH MOSS, London, Ontario, has been unable to walk for about five years.
She has been administered to many times with good results, but is not yet able to walk.
She is now strongly impressed to ask the united and earnest prayers of the sisters, that if it is the Lord's will she once more be able to walk. She would also be thankful if those who know her would fast for her on the 17th of this month.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

QUESTION: "Should a new enrollment be made at the beginning of a year, or should the old one be retained?"

Answer: "An absence of three months without sufficient cause will forfeit membership."—Article 3, page 16, By-Laws for Sunday schools.

No name should be dropped except after three months' absence, as above. If a new roll were made the first of the year, including those present only, many might be thus omitted who had not forfeited membership. Hence the roll should be perpetual, not annual.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY.

THE Church of Jesus Christ is, was, and always will be a missionary organization, until the possibilities of reaching one soul not affected by its saving power does not exist. Not only does this spirit of missionary work extend to the notifying the sons and daughters of men that there is such a church, and apprising them of its saving importance, besides warning them of the consequent loss do they refuse its proffers of mercy; but it demands the sheep and lambs to be fed. Peter, who represented that quorum of church officials upon whom rested the missionary responsibility equal to if not more than all others, was commanded as though this part of the work was of special importance and was liable to be neglected in their interest in spreading the gospel to parts as yet unacquainted with it, to "Feed my sheep," and "Feed my lambs;" placing, however, double importance upon feeding the sheep; and the only reason I can see is that if the sheep were properly fed there would be enough given to them that they would willingly divide with the lambs, that being one part of their duty when they are fed so they fully understand it; yet with all this there was the direct instruction to Peter to "Feed my lambs."

This can be done in either one or both of two ways, by direct attention to the lambs of the fold in giving instruction, or by making provision that this work be done by those specially gifted in this department of work.

That the Sunday school is a department, and a necessary department of church work "for good among my people," as the Lord has referred to, has been acknowledged by every quorum of the missionary force, also by the General Conference, hence must come under the fostering care of such quorums and the church; and the spread of the principles governing the methods best calculated to make this department of work the most effective for filling its mission as a department of the church disseminated. Some of the general missionaries claim they are not adapted for this class of work, possibly in a good many cases because they have not studied to become acquainted with it; while others say that they do not have time for this class of work, and this is because in most cases time is not sought in which to perform it. But taking these excuses to be justifiable ones, and in some cases and at some times they may be, yet I have found but few such cases or times, the argument is the more strongly in favor of making provisions that those who are adapted to the work and do find time for it may be specially appointed thereto. The work should be done, and no class of members of the church are or should be more interested in this work being done than those who are by reason of their special calling deprived of personally instructing their own children, thereby leaving that work to be done by others. And the more proficient those others are in doing that work the better satisfied such ones will be that that work will be done so their children will be trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord without such an added burden being placed on their companions because of their absence.

That there is great need of advancement on the part of persons called to teach and act in behalf of this department of work as officers, will be most emphatically acknowledged by those who have or are now acting as officers and teachers. And while much has been and is being done to meet this demand through conventions and institutes, there are many places where such advancement is most needed that cannot afford to have a convention or institute, neither can the parties living there afford to go such a distance as most of them would have to to gain the information given at these places they so much need, however much they might desire to.

This proves the need of a Sunday school missionary, or missionaries, who can take to such places the information those who live there need, and also be specially prepared to attend many conventions and institutes and assist with the work there. While he or they would have this work specially in mind, yet their time could be largely spent in those places visited in preaching, and thus there would be double assistance rendered the church.

Could the General Superintendent or one of the assistant superintendents do this work, I would deem it advisable. The church could well afford to supply the families of such ones, while the Sunday School Association should meet the necessary traveling expenses, the districts and schools where they might labor assisting what they could, the association standing ready to meet what expenses were not thus paid.

The Sunday school is assisting the missionary work financially through the Christmas Offerings. Thus it would be no special burden for not only one, but three or four families of such missionaries as would make a specialty of Sunday school work in connection with ministering the word. Thus carry Sunday school organization right along with the conversion of souls into the church. And wherever two or three of the saints could be found or brought into the church, organize a Sunday school, remain until they were acquainted with the plan of conducting it successfully in harmony with the laws and principles of the General Association, and then pass on, leaving them equipped for their work. Which work if persistently and righteously done, would be the basis upon which would be founded the organization of a branch, and when organized there would be such a development in instructing and executive work that it would be less trouble for them to take charge of and do the work necessary in a branch.

I trust the General Association will urge this matter and present such ones as they may choose to the appointing power of the church for their approval, and through them to the General Conference for endorsement. Thus all act conjointly, each having an equal interest, as we are laborers together with God. Let the springtime see at least as many sent out with the above thought in view as the Reorganized Church sent out upon the first missionary effort.

Yours for advancement in all departments of church work,
J. F. MINTUN.

REPLY TO ELDER LAMBERT.—NO. 2.

Editors Herald:—In your issue for November 24, appears a second article from the pen of Elder Lambert, which he styles his second "article of defense," to which I wish to make brief reply. I shall not follow Elder Lambert's example, however, and devote a little over five columns of your valuable space to the discussion of the origin of a debate which never materialized, and which probably never will.

Concerning the proposed debate about which Apostle Lambert has so much to say, I have only to add that I have stated facts as they were known to exist, and if called upon to do so can prove every word I have said. Only a short time ago I had a talk with Joseph Seddon, in his store, in Persia, Iowa, and he admitted having intentionally deceived me about sending the propositions to Elder Lambert, and maintained that the end justified the means.

It is a matter of little importance to the intelligent reader as to how the proposed discussion originated, and it may be quite sufficient for them to know that the debate never came off. With this I shall now pass to the consideration of a few points of more vital importance to all parties to this controversy. But before doing so I wish to correct an obvious error either of the types or of the copy sent to the Herald.

In the opening paragraph of my former article I am made to refer to Elder Lambert's "first article of defense" (?) as a "twenty-two" page effort. Where the mistake lies I am not prepared to say, but think it quite likely to be a mistake in copying. The original manuscript, of which I sent a copy, reads "two-page article," as it also appears in the body of the published article.

I very much regret to be compelled to call your attention to other misrepresentations in the elder's last article of "defense." As to number these articles of misrepresentation seems to produce more or less disturbance to the feelings of my sedate but not very careful critic, I will forego the pleasure of numbering those I find in the article now under consideration, but will leave that for the reader to do.

The first point to which I shall invite attention is that found in paragraph one, in which we have the following: "1. My first allusion to Elder Bays' attitude occupies less than one half column in the Herald. It consists of a mild statement of fact, and two queries. It was in no sense [the italics are Elder Lambert's] an 'unprovoked attack,' as Elder Bays puts it. That statement is entirely false." (These italics are mine.)

In reply to this remarkable declaration—remarkable for the reason that we have a right to expect better things from a man in Elder Lambert's position—I have this to say. The statement misrepresents every fact connected with the matter. It makes me to have declared that his "first allusion to Elder Bays' attitude," was an "unprovoked attack." I have just re-read my "first allusion" to Elder Lambert's "mild statement of fact and two queries," and there is absolutely nothing in it from which any such conclusion could possibly be drawn. And then, after this inexcusable perversion, he has added "insult to injury" by charging me with falsehood pure and simple. "That statement is entirely false," quoth the elder.

"I very much regret that Elder Lambert feels himself called upon to resort to such questionable methods. A plain, truthful statement of the case would have been far better, and attended with less difficulty.

Elder Lambert tries to justify his course in writing his "first article of defense" by saying that his only purpose was that "the situation should be made to appear as it is, without regard to where it strikes or whom it hurts." Had the elder carried out his "only purpose" by stating facts—the exact truth—to his readers this controversy would never have occurred; but this he has not done, as will appear as we proceed. I quote: "Elder Bays thinks there is nothing in what he wrote to warrant the effort or justify the course Elder Lambert has pursued [and I am of the same opinion still]. If my effort and course have been what Elder Bays represents them to be he is certainly correct; but if, on the other hand, I have correctly and truthfully represented his positions, where is the ground for complaint?"

If Elder Lambert had "correctly and truthfully" represented my position, I should have no word of complaint to offer, but this he has utterly failed to do. In his skillful meanderings through the mazes of an occult criticism, he has sought to hide the real issue that he may thus evade the consequences of his numerous misrepresentations. But this I do not intend to permit him to do. He must face the issue he has himself raised.

Now this brings us again to the question: What is the issue raised by Elder Lambert's "first article of defense?" What was the character of the charge he makes against me? Here it is in his own words: "His talk about 'destroying the last vestige of any ground upon which to base an argument in support of the dogma of plenary inspiration,' is but a man of straw, and is not sufficient to hide his EVIDENT UNBELIEF IN THE CLAIMS OF THE BIBLE, at the time he wrote up his resignation."

No amount of sophistry or special pleading can disguise the fact that Elder Lambert's chief desire and principal motive in arraigning me before the readers of the Herald is found in the fact that he wished to convict me in the minds of former friends of being an "unbeliever in the claims of the Bible." In my former article I challenged Elder Lambert, and now challenge him again, to produce from my paper of resignation a single instance in which I have ever called in question a single claim made by the Bible.

As an illustration of Apostle Lambert's lamentable lack of candor I give below my challenge and his reply, as follows: "And I now call upon Elder Lambert to produce a single sentence from my paper . . . in which I call in question any statement of the Bible itself as to its 'inspirational claims.' I simply and only object to the claims made for it by others, and not the claims which the Bible makes for its own inspiration."

To this Elder Lambert made the following exhaustive (!) but characteristic reply: "And I now call upon Elder Bays to produce a single sentence from his paper in which he calls in question any statement of the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants as to their inspirational claims."

While comment seems entirely useless, yet I cannot refrain the remark that men are seldom driven to such extremes as to impel them to such artless evasion as that which characterizes Elder Lambert's reply. I am sure he has the sympathy of all his friends, my own included.

Elder Lambert has given you, he says, all I had said in my paper "concerning the Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and the Bible;" but does he point out a single passage in which I call in question "the inspirational claims of the Bible"? As every intelligent reader knows, he has not even attempted to do so, for the obvious reason that he knew it could not be done.

I shall now proceed to examine a few of Elder Lambert's statements in the order in which they occur. The first will be the Elder's unbecoming charge of dishonesty, as follows: "If Elder Bays had possessed a little more frankness and honesty [the italics are Elder Lambert's], notwithstanding his claims, he would have stated that this sentence, about which he says so much, did not injure him nor misrepresent him at all."

Were I disposed to retaliate in kind I would probably say that had Elder Lambert "possessed a little more frankness and honesty" he would not have manufactured a sentence out of whole cloth, inclosing it in quotations, and then tell his readers that the language was mine. But since I consider such a course wholly incompatible with the character and dignity of a Christian gentleman, I cannot afford, neither do I desire to indulge in such epithets.

The next evasion to which I invite attention, is the following: "So far as the 'veracity and authenticity of the Bible' is concerned, not one word in favor of either is to be found in the paper referred to. Elder Bays is invited to produce it."

That "not one word" appears in my paper in defense of the "veracity and authority" of the Bible is quite true, and the reason why it does not may be found in the fact that the question was not under consideration—no attack had been made by anyone upon either the veracity or authenticity of the Bible, and hence no necessity that anything should be said "in favor of either."

Another misrepresentation, and that means another effort to evade the issue and mislead the reader, is found in the following: "But in his paper of resignation nothing is said about 'direct inspiration,' but it is claimed that these Bible writers were not inspired to write."

With all due deference to Elder Lambert, no such claim is made. Where, in all my paper, is it claimed that "these Bible writers were not inspired to write"? I have simply and only said that the writers themselves "do not claim to have written the books attributed to them by inspiration." Is that equivalent to saying the "writers were not inspired to write"? If so, then words are not signs of ideas; and how a man of Elder Lambert's acknowledged ability could permit himself to so grossly misrepresent the views and statements of another, is wholly unaccountable, except upon the hypothesis that he is blinded to justice by a partisan and unfair spirit.

The paragraph immediately following that quoted above presents another not very ingenious effort to evade the issue: "Elder Bays calls upon me to point out a passage from the Pentateuch or from the writings of the prophets, to show that Moses or the prophets wrote by direct inspiration."

Elder Bays calls upon Elder Lambert to do no such thing. I have never called upon Bro. Lambert "to show that Moses and the prophets wrote by direct inspiration," but rather to show that they "wrote their respective books by divine inspiration." Do you see the difference, Elder?

And then instead of pointing to the Bible to show that such claim is made by these writers, he seeks to escape the responsibility the question imposes, by quoting a part of my words found in the same paragraph, as follows: "That the prophetic utterances were inspired has never been denied."

Here the elder stops at a comma, because, of course, it suits his purpose; but the explanative clause, "but that the historical and homiletical portions were written by supernatural power is nowhere claimed by any of the divine writers," was purposely omitted. Why all this perversion and misrepresentation? Why it is I will not pretend to say, but shall let the reader draw his own conclusions.

In my former communication I stated that Elder Lambert's object was to create the impression that I placed the three books of the church upon the same plane, and now the elder admits the fact in the following language: "I stated plainly that Elder Bays objected to the inspirational claims of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Book of Mormon, and the Bible. . . . In these statements I thought I was fairly and properly representing Elder Bays. I think so yet."

But now in order to dispel this illusion from the brother's mind, I will quote from my paper of resignation, as follows:—

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS:

"After years of careful investigation of the facts, as well as the circumstances under which the book was written, I have arrived at the conclusion that there is ABSOLUTELY NOTHING to be offered in support of its claim to divine inspiration."

This declaration precludes the possibility that any part of the book in question was written by divine inspiration, and for the obvious reason that every paragraph, every line, originated in the same brain and was written by the same hand, and that brain and that hand were Joseph Smith's.

With these facts in view, will Elder Lambert have the hardihood to affirm that I placed the Bible on the same plane with such a production as this?

THE BOOK OF MORMON:

"But the mere fact that its moral precepts may be regarded as faultless, cannot serve to prove it to be of divine origin. . . . To say the least its INSPIRATION and AUTHENTICITY are extremely doubtful."

Will my venerable critic pretend to say that I have placed the Bible on the same moral and spiritual level with Book of Mormon? I will not permit myself to believe that he will be so reckless as to undertake such a thing.

THE BIBLE:

"Not only do I find that the writers of the several books of the Bible, whoever they may be, do not claim to have written the books attributed to them by inspiration, but I find marked and irreconcilable disagreement between them on questions of vital importance, thereby destroying the last vestige of any ground upon which to base an argument in support of the dogma of plenary inspiration."

This declaration is characterized by my partizan critic as "evident unbelief in the claims of the Bible."

If any writer of any book in the Bible claims to have written the book attributed to him by "divine inspiration" why did not Elder Lambert point out the fact, as a noble, fair-minded critic should do, and not beat around the bush as he does, in the vain effort to conceal the weakness of his position?

There is but one answer—he could not do it, and none is better acquainted with the fact than Elder Lambert himself.

The passage in question says that the want of harmony between some of the writers of the Bible is incompatible with the idea of "plenary inspiration." If no such disagreement exists, why does not Elder Lambert point out the fact, and make it so plain that he who runs may read? But does he attempt this? No, sir! He prefers to wander in the mazy labyrinths of verbal obscurity, thus creating false impressions by misrepresentation of the facts! This is plain language, but it is as true as it is plain.

Commenting on my paper Elder Lambert endeavors to lead his readers through the tortuous avenues of occult criticism in the forlorn hope that they may lose sight of the real issue. But this he cannot do. He says: "Section one of the third reason rejects 'the inspiration of the Bible,' or else sections one and two do not reject the inspiration of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon. Elder Bays can take which horn of the dilemma suits him best."

The trouble with the elder's "dilemma" is that it is a hornless, and therefore a harmless little beast, and can hurt nobody. But suppose we reverse the order of Elder Lambert's proposition, and see how many horns his "dilemma" contains. Reversed the proposition would stand thus: "Sections one and two do not reject the inspiration of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon," therefore, "section one of the third reason" does not "reject 'the inspiration of the Bible!'"

If Apostle Lambert's logic be sound, whither hath his "dilemma" fled? Where does the proof my "evident unbelief in the claims of the Bible" appear? Certainly not in this declaration about which the elder has had so much to say.

But Elder Lambert seems to have found the evidence of this wicked "unbelief in the claims of the Bible," in a later paragraph of my paper, and concerning which he gravely remarks: "Elder Bays not only rejects the inspiration of the Bible, but he rejects the exceeding plain accounts of Matthew and Luke as to the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost."

Like any good soldier when driven from his more advanced positions, the elder gracefully falls back into that stronghold known as the last ditch. We have now followed Elder Lambert to his last ditch, and if we compel him to abandon this position, as we certainly shall do, then nothing will remain to him but unconditional surrender.

Let us now examine this last place of temporary refuge in which the elder has ensconced himself. He charges Elder Bays with "unbelief in the claims of the Bible," because, forsooth, he is unable to bring harmony out of apparent discord—sees what to his mind is an "irreconcilable disagreement" between the accounts of Matthew and Luke concerning the paternity of Jesus, the Christ.

But while this astute philosopher arraigns me for questioning the claims that these conflicting statements were written by "divine inspiration," he carefully avoids committing himself to the equally "plain accounts of Matthew and Luke," concerning the genealogical descent of Christ from the loins of Abraham through the lineage of Joseph.

The difference between Elder Lambert and myself is this: I have frankly and fearlessly declared my honest convictions upon this grave and confessedly difficult question, while he has not the moral courage to do so. Why does he not come out from the obscurity which his own efforts—cuttlefish like—have created, and with "a little more frankness and honesty" (please do not forget these italics are Elder Lambert's) take a position upon this "vexed question?" The fact is simply this: The moment Elder Lambert admits that Jesus could not be miraculously conceived and at the same time be a descendant of David through the loins of Joseph, the husband of Mary, that moment he would be compelled to admit the force of my argument, and that, in its turn, would utterly demolish the ground upon which he bases his argument to convict me of "unbelief in the claims of the Bible;" and that would never do.

Instead of seeking to evade the issue raised by the facts which this question involves, why does not Elder Lambert let his superior light so shine upon this "vexed question" as to dispel the clouds of darkness and drive away the blinding mists of a false theology, and thus bring rest and peace to many troubled minds. Why not?

If I am in error in the views expressed in my paper, as it is possible I may be, why did not Elder Lambert undertake to enlighten me upon these difficult questions, and thus reclaim an erring brother, rather than strive to convict him of infidelity, and thus destroy the power for good which may have been left in him? Or, if he could not do this, why did he not candidly and honestly admit that a real difficulty exists which he is unable to explain? Simply and only because such a course would justify my conclusions, and would afford no opportunity for Elder Lambert to convict me of "evident unbelief in the claims of the Bible," which, as the most casual observer can see, was his principal aim.

In my paper of resignation I state:—

1. "The writers of the several books of the Bible . . . do not claim to have written the books attributed to them by inspiration."
2. That the "irreconcilable disagreement" between some of these writers destroyed "the last vestige of any ground upon which to base an argument in support of the dogma of plenary inspiration, and,
3. It recites the disagreement between

Matthew and Luke as proof that these varying accounts were not written by "divine inspiration," and that such disagreement is in fact wholly incompatible with the idea of "plenary inspiration."

It was against this doctrine of full, or plenary, inspiration that our effort was directed, and not, as Elder Lambert declares, against "the inspirational claims of the Bible." It seems to me that this distinction is made so plain that a "wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein."

And now let us get right down to bed-rock upon this question. Does either Matthew or Luke—or any other New Testament writer, as for that matter—declare directly or by implication that his account of Christ's conception and birth was written by divine inspiration? Elder Lambert knows, and he knew when he penned his second "article of defense," (!!) that no such claim was ever made by either of these writers.

A minister of Elder Lambert's opportunities ought to know that the consensus of opinion among Biblical scholars is unfriendly to the old idea of verbal inspiration. As neither Elder Lambert nor his church believes that these accounts were written by divine inspiration, as he now bravely confesses, then why, I ask, in the name of common honesty, and of common justice, should I be anathematized and stigmatized by Apostle Lambert as an unbeliever "in the claims of the Bible"? I cannot help feeling that it is wholly beneath the dignity of the man that he should have permitted himself to indulge in such an unbrotherly assault, and earnestly hope that he may yet see and confess his folly.

I have not noticed all the points in Elder Lambert's "article of defense," which are subjects of just criticism, for the reason that I do not wish to exceed the bounds of the liberal space allotted to me.

I hope both Elder Lambert and your readers may be able to see, as I am quite sure they will, that a man may question the "dogma of plenary inspiration," and yet not be an unbeliever "in the claims of the Bible."

And now, in conclusion, if Elder Lambert is willing to let the matter rest where it is (each having written his "article of defense" No. 2), we will now shake hands "across the bloody chasm," and remain as good friends in the future as we have ever been in the past.

Thanking the Herald editors for the courtesies extended, and wishing both its management and readers a happy and prosperous New Year, I have the pleasure still to be,

Yours fraternally,

D. H. BAYS.

SPARKS FROM OUR ANVIL.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Feb. 24.

Editors Herald:—The closing conference year, with the exception of a brief period in the latter half of the summertime, when I was physically indisposed, has found me busily engaged in the missionary work of the great field of sowing activities. If it be not accounted presumptuous, I might say that I have reason to believe that the presence of the Spirit has been recognized in our work by many of the children of God. We have sought to dispense the word of life as taught in the sacred books. Have lectured in some places on the Archæological evidences of the Book of Mormon, from whence request came for such effort.

Many saints have expressed themselves as instructed and blessed by the efforts; and friends informed, and inquired for copy of the book.

As a church we claim to believe that God's power attended the revelation of the whereabouts of the book, and that nothing connected therewith was "done in a corner." I presume, therefore, we have naught to fear from a proper announcement of that fact. A process of educational development may be commendable, while a hesitancy to proclaim our faith in the same, where opportunity is present, would be of doubtful propriety. We sometimes sing:—

"And shall I fear to own his cause,
Or blush to speak his name?"

Fear to own or acknowledge any portion of that cause, anywhere or at anytime when human hearts should know about it? We are not sent out as apologists for God; he has said that he excuses not himself, and I know of no one who he has sent to offer excuses for anything that he has brought forth in these latter days. I do not know that any Latter Day Saint believes that; but I desire to be understood as to where I stand on this question, at present writing, and I know of no conversion on the point likely to occur to the contrary.

Along in the progressive tenor of our times we hear and meet with some things and items of news that contain the essence of humor. I desire to furnish one of them. I feel assured your readers will be highly entertained. It is this: A recent issue of the Christian Index, published in Des Moines, had a letter from the pen of Rev. Ellis, I believe; he urged upon Editor Brokaw to have Mr. Bays come to this city, "by all means" and expose "Mormonism," because it is aggressive and alive. He says, "all religions have a central idea; the central idea of Christianity is that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; you destroy that and the whole Christian superstructure goes down with it. The central idea of Mormonism is that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; now you destroy that idea, and Mormonism goes down." Now get ready for the go down. Mr. Ellis believes that Jesus told the truth when he said: "I walk to-day and to-morrow and the next day, for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." "Joseph Smith perished at Carthage, Illinois. Hundreds of miles from Jerusalem, in June, 1844." Therefore he was a false prophet! Mr. Bays ought to know that. Mormonism has a central idea, and I think several ideas surrounding it that seem to sadly perplex our theological friends. I presume the gospel commands, ordinances, promises, and the perpetuity of the official polity of the primitive church, as to the correctness of the entire position of Christology, are made wholly dependent upon that one point, was Mr. Smith a true or false prophet?

The effect of this logic is simply overwhelming. But, does the gentleman know that Christ died in Jerusalem?

Again, I observe an item in a late issue of the Christian Evangelist, of St. Louis, Missouri, from the pen of Mr. Haggard, State Secretary for Iowa. He says he has been noticing results of public debates in this State between their men and the Latter Day Saints.

"They are always death to Mormonism; and the Latter Day Saints are learning this and will soon cease debating." "That the Latter Day Saints have their Jerusalem in Iowa, therefore under the necessity of looking after the New Testament churches of Christ"—the Disciple Church.

In the February number of the Christian Blade, published by friend W. W. Blalock at Topeka, Kansas, he says: "Mormons are in their war paint with tomahawk and scalping knife in hand." Did he ever know of a time when the Latter Day Saints we represent were not ready to defend their cause?

One would think from his talk that there was a sudden and unprecedented uprising of our forces. "They are very zealous in propagating their faith." It is because we fully believe it to be true, and try to exercise a zeal worthy our estimate of the faith we hold.

"The unprepared fall easy victims to their dexterity." I wonder if there are any people who are "victims of Discipleism?" How many persons are biblically posted so as to successfully resist Campbellistic sophistry? In one of the Evangelists of the latter part of '97 the editor deplored the ignorance of their church members as to Bible knowledge, and said the preacher should be a teacher as well as a preacher; that the people required or needed instruction is the first principles of the oracles of God! What have their preachers been doing that so many of their members are so grossly ignorant of the Bible?

Whose dexterity blinds the people? Who is "duped," people who first investigate what they hear, or persons who accept a religious teaching without investigation? "No one can stand up against them unless he is well drilled in the use of the 'sword of the spirit,' and also knows how to turn their own guns upon them." How does that agree with the statement of some that we do not believe the Bible?

Yes; and as we previously quoted from Mr. Dungan, "the average preacher is not able to successfully withstand their arguments."

I presume Mr. Dungan and Mr. Blalock have learned that to their entire satisfaction. But at the same time they are prepared to meet the heresy.

"They are taught to deceive the people." Does he prove it?

"Brethren, if this 'evil beast' enters your community, send for us. Do not sit unconcerned 'under your own vine and fig tree' while this 'wolf in sheep's clothing' is devouring the lambs. Neither send an unarmed novice after this 'man eater,' lest he devour both the shepherd and the sheep." Mr. Editor will you allow me a little—ha, ha, ha! For I feel so much like it. The dear soul thinks he is armed; if he is, it has taken place since last March! I tell you the Disciple "vine and fig tree" does not afford very secure shelter for the flock. For men do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles. During the debate at Defiance a year ago, he called about every evening: "More ventilation, brethren, lower that window there; it is pretty warm in here." So much so, that it became a by-word among the people. His handkerchief came in contact with his face unusually frequent; was it because he was a "novice," or was he conscious that "tekel" was written on the brow of Discipleism?

"Joseph Smith was a false prophet and a polygamist." Has he proven it, or can it be proven? "The Book of Mormon and the book of Doctrine and Covenants are of human origin, and unworthy of the belief or respect of Christian people." In order to be so unworthy it should be shown that their teachings are infidelic toward Christianity, and otherwise impure. This cannot be done. "The Mormon claim that they possess miraculous gifts is a fraudulent pretension, unwarranted and condemned by the teaching of the New Testament scriptures." How would anyone attempt to prove that? Will assertion alone support the saying? Are the testimonies of forty thousand people of any value, in the premises? And especially so when they stand in accord with the teachings of the New Testament?

It is evident that every Latter Day Saint should stand upon all that forms the groundwork of this church. That no one portion can be ignored; we indorse the whole or none of it. That an unreserved acceptance of the entire philosophy, all that enters into its composition as a system of religion, based upon both ancient and modern revelation, is essential to proper membership in this church. If the whole system is of divine inspiration, no member having the Spirit of God can stand out of harmony with any portion of this latter-day work. Am I wrong?

Does God stand in his own light? Does he antagonize any part of his work? If not, will his Spirit cause any member of the church to do so? I believe that no member can completely identify himself with the work upon a partial acceptance thereof. In the work of the dispensation of God's church in our times, we are not sent to present to the world an ecclesiastical lunch counter; we desire the people who are willing to hear, to know the whole truth of this "marvelous work and a wonder," believing that it is fully defensible. We would not unreasonably intrude upon the domain of any one's tender faith; nor intentionally offend; but at the same time shall we keep back words of knowledge that human hearts should know? We who are members of the church are expected to grow in the knowledge of the Lord; and we cannot do this without study of those things that are intimately related to the work.

A passive congratulation of one's self that they have obeyed the first principles and are in the church is not sufficient; first principles imply others to follow. And it is not with us to draw the line as to the limit of the understanding we should obtain; unless we improperly proscribe our own intellectual possessions. If the "glory of God is intelligence," a comparative ignorance of after first principles would be a poor way to add of his glory to our mental status. I am thankful that many of our people recognize this fact. The glory of the church will be found in the degree of her intellectual attainments, all beautifully harmonizing with the spiritual idea of life in Christ. If any think I am mistaken on this point, read the last half of paragraph 12, section 90, Doctrine and Covenants, and midway of paragraph 5, section 98, Doctrine and Covenants, beginning with "yea, verily I say unto you," closing with the words "of all this glory."

It is for each one to occupy upon the talent they have, to learn of the length and breadth and height of this latter-day work; for it is one of quantity as well as of quality! The enemy is not in love with it, we all know; and it behooveth us to be on the alert, fully up to date. We can afford to be posted, and know whereof we believe, and are assured of the divinity of the work, for we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ.

The liberality of our platform is based upon the liberty wherewith Christ makes us free. Its length and breadth is found in unrestricted truth. Its height and depth in the possibilities of its divine treasures.

The light thereof is the reflection of the mind of God; its stability is derived from his unchangeable promises; its strength lies in his command; its force in the execution of his will; its life-giving power is in the Holy Spirit given to the church. All these form the beauty and value of the church. Make it invulnerable to the attacks of the enemy. The cry of heresy depends upon the degree of disloyalty in the advocacy of the gospel, or inharmony to the polity of the church.

But so far as true abidance is maintained, there is no room for ecclesiastical proscription. And no man in the church has the right to tell another how much of the work he can advocate, or what portion, where or when; is there? Circumstances, time, and place to govern as to that.

Preach the word refers to all that belongs to the general features of the cause we represent. We preach Christ in the broadest sense of the term, depending upon God for help, because the message is his, and we should keep in memory that our sufficiency is of him.

We should hold ourselves free from unkind prejudice, be as liberal in our faith as the gospel warrants, understanding so far as possible what that phrase implies. Examine, but be not fault-finding; believe, but be not credulous; be firm, but not obstinate; be reliant, but not egotistic; be humble without pretension; be meek without long facedness; in all things seeking to do unto others as we would have people do unto us. It has been said that "it is unholy ground where tyranny murders liberty; where malice murders forgiveness; where dogmatism murders faith; and falsehood murders truth; and cruelty murders mercy; and mockery murders prayer; and hatred murders love;" and we would add, where the emissaries of darkness banish the messengers of light.

May none of us ever occupy upon such ground.

Respectfully,

J. F. MCDOWELL.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Feb. 26.

Editors Herald:—Am just home from Elmwood, Nebraska, where I have been assisting Bro. F. A. Smith in a series of meetings. Interest continued to increase each evening. This is a good point, and many are interested. I go to Hazel Dell to-night for a week's effort. Elder Blalock assuredly does not think it child's play to meet the "Mormons." In the Christian Blade for February, of which he is editor, he has this to say, under the title "Mormonism":—

"Mormons are in their war paint, with tomahawk and scalping knife in hand. They must be met. They are very zealous in propagating their faith. They 'compass sea and land to make one proselyte.' They send out their emissaries, who scour the whole face of the land, and report to headquarters every point which they think vulnerable."

Why shouldn't they? Do not all others do likewise? By the way, how Christlike (?) Elder Blalock and his ilk are! They with impunity call us "Mormons," but how like coyotes if anyone says "Campbellites." Their golden rule must be: Do all the dirt you can to those who differ from you, and then be shrewd enough to avoid a return of the compliment!—Christianity revised by A. Campbell and Co.!

He continues: "The 'Captain General' sends a detachment of soldiers to make an attack on all such places. The unprepared fall easy victims to their dexterity. No one can stand up against them unless he is well drilled in the use of the 'sword of the Spirit,' and also knows how to turn their own guns upon them. They are taught to deceive the people. While 'spying out your liberty' they are among you, and you 'know them not.' They occupy a pew in your house of worship, and little do you think they are 'devising mischief in their heart.' They meet you with a pleasant smile, and with one hand give you a very hearty hand shake, and with the other (metaphorically) plunge a dagger into your heart."

What a confession! Blalock feels bad because I outdid him in gentlemanly courtesy in extending my hand at the close of debate. But I hardly expected him to confess his defeat in saying, "metaphorically," that I killed him!

Again, he says: "Brethren, if this 'evil beast' enter your community send for us. Do not sit unconcerned 'under your own vine and fig tree' while this 'wolf in sheep's clothing' is devouring the lambs. Neither send an unarmed novice after this 'man-eater,' lest he devour both the shepherd and the sheep." "We are just home from Tabor, Iowa, where we held a twelve days' debate with T. W. Williams, one of the shining lights of Reorganized Mormonism. We are to trot beside another one of their 'war horses' in a six days' heat at Troy, Kansas, beginning February 21."

Whatever else can be said of Elder Blalock, he considers others novices, and we—"I & Co."—are the one you must send for to defeat Mormonism. Elder Braden is lecturing at Tabor. He has changed his tactics and confesses it much more advantageous for them to lecture than debate; but the saints are not asleep. Bro. Henry Kemp, in consultation, has issued a circular disclosing their trickery, and insisting that they meet the issue by the 30th of May, 1898. The following closing clause we insert:—

"To Elder McClure and the Christian Church at Tabor:—As you have, without Elder Kelley's consent, announced a debate (between Bro. Kelley and Braden), or a series of lectures against "Mormonism" in its place, thereby acknowledging your defeat in the recent debate; therefore, unless you, or some one chosen by you, appear on the 30th day of May, 1898 (or some other date which may be hereafter arranged with you), you will manifest your inability and unwillingness to meet us in fair and open discussion. If you fail to meet us we shall feel at liberty to make an examination of all the points at issue in our own defense."

From several years' experience and observation I am forced to conclude that there is but a step betwixt Campbellism and Infidelity, and frequently the odds are in favor of the latter. At the present rate of arrangement I opine our encounter with D. H. Bays will not take place prior to the General Conference. They are like the man who having a bovine's tail desperately in his grasp, cries out, "For God's sake, won't somebody help me let go?" Not if we know ourselves.

Southwestern Iowa presents as inviting a field for evangelization as any part of the world. It is to be hoped that our scant missionary force will be augmented by several worthy additions at the coming conference.

Yours in the faith,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

P. S.—It seems that Joseph F. Smith, one of the counselors to President Woodruff, of the Utah apostasy, has passed through our country, for he has left behind their accustomed trail—misrepresentation and falsehood. He told a reporter to the Omaha Bee the other day that "the Mormon Church is constantly spreading its influence and membership throughout the United States, and even in Mexico, the South American republics, and Canada branches of the organization are constantly springing into life."

If this is so they must have a considerable following in all these countries. We respectfully challenge them to a vindication of this assumptive claim. We know better. The paper states that "he is a lineal descendant of the great Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, who in the infancy of the church was killed during the stirring incidents that marked the pilgrimage of his followers from Nauvoo, Illinois."

This is absolutely false. Joseph F. Smith is not a lineal descendant of Joseph Smith the prophet; he is only a nephew of this great man. Joseph Smith was never a Mormon prophet either, nor was he killed during the Mormon pilgrimage, but long before. Again, "In the Salt Lake Valley," said Mr.

Smith, 'reconstructed Mormonism' is yet in its ascendancy, and growing in influence. Of course all of our cities and towns out there have been invaded by other religious denominations, which I am inclined to believe has done more to promote Mormon interests than any other outside influence. Our societies known as the Latter Day Saints are springing up everywhere and in the western part of Iowa they are very strong. In Council Bluffs, for instance, there is an established Church of the Latter Day Saints, the membership of which numbers several hundred persons. We now have missionaries in Canada, Mexico, and the South American republics, as well as in the Hawaiian Islands, the Orient, Asia, and Europe. Everywhere Mormonism finds its share of followers."

In the above statement Joseph F. Smith has committed himself to a position, the very opposite of that taken by them since the commencement of the Reorganization or he has deliberately misrepresented facts. There are several hundred members of the Reorganization in Council Bluffs, but according to former Mormon decisions these are apostates, and in no way saints, but terrible sinners. Have they retracted their former position and now accord us our rightful claim and place as Latter Day Saints? If so, then well and good; for if we are Latter Day Saints, then they are not. If he does not so concede, then he has deliberately misrepresented facts and deceived the people, for there is but a handful of the Utah following in this place. Why should men make "lies their refuge" when the truth were better for them? What, pray, does he mean by "reconstructed Mormonism"? The Encyclopædic Dictionary gives the following definition for "reconstruct": To construct again after destruction; to rebuild; "to reconstruct the whole afresh from the very ground." Webster says: "To construct again, to rebuild."

Herald readers! Joseph F. Smith, one of the presidents of the Utah Church, has confessed that they represent "reconstructed Mormonism"! Facts will out. But we hardly expected, where there had been so much deception and wily intrigue, that a president of the Utah body would confess what we have contended for these forty years.

T. W. W.

LATER.—A copy of the Fremont County Herald, of the 24th inst., just received. It says: "The students of Alexander Campbell, known as the Disciples, have opened again this week (at Tabor) upon the Mormons, and have brought forward their heaviest battery, bidding all kinds of defiance to the followers of Joseph Smith to send a man to meet their Goliath, Clark Braden. In his opening lecture Mr. Braden threw out some very warm defis, which to the mind of an ordinary listener would seem to demand some serious attention from the defenders of the Mormon holy writ. Leaving aside all controversy over the details involved, which both sides claim as the reasons for this being a one-sided affair, it would seem that our Mormon friends could afford to forsake formal codes to accommodate their rivals in some way; for as it stood, the feeling in the community was rather favorable to the Mormons as the more able to defend their cause. Much of Mr. Braden's opening lecture was devoted to showing wherein leaders in his own church fall down when in controversy with the saints, and said that not one in a hundred of their ministry had any business tackling the Mormons. Braden's friends bring him forward as their main reserve, as the one man whom the Mormons dare not meet; and Braden himself not very distantly owns to the theory that he is about the only one equipped for that undertaking, and he would have more confidence in his own ministry if they would all so acknowledge Braden, and not attempt to handle the Mormons without his assistance and leadership."

This comes from one of the opposition, and one does not have to read between the lines to discover that they concede a victory for the truth in the past conflict.

Bro. Charles Fry, under date of the 23d inst., writes: "Braden with his right hand man, J. D. McClure, was on hand Monday night entertaining an audience of 62!" Sixty-two is quite a difference from 600 or more who attended the debate.

He continues: "They made a great ado about Kelley's cowardice and backdown; McClure giving a recital of all the preparations, correspondence, etc., concerning this debate, being careful to read nothing but patching it up with a profuse supply of falsehood."

"Braden stated on the stand that he would meet Kelley on the 30th, or any other time, preferring August; but said he would not consider any proposition unless we entered into $500 or $1,000 bonds to have the man there at that time to fill the contract. This is another dodge, in which they are seeking a hole to crawl out."

"Monday night Braden gave 'Tommy Williams' and our elders generally, quite a compliment. He said, Anybody undertaking to debate the Mormons on church propositions would be defeated every time, and he hoped the fool-killer would get out and kill off all those fellows who are going around working up debates with the Mormons on church propositions."

Bro. William Stuart, of Mondamin, Iowa, writes me that I had been slightly misinformed as regards the action of the Mondamin church and Blalock's letter to them. Blalock wrote: "Don't let the debate go on with the second proposition written as it is." It was in relation to this that the church acted; they said nothing about issuing circulars, but they "Resolved to write Bays that if he debated the second proposition with the clause referring to Alexander Campbell as being the founder or organizer of their church, that he would do it without the authority of the church, and they would let it be known that they did not so believe." I make this correction, not desiring to misrepresent in any particular. We can win fairly.

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 21.

Editors Herald:—I am still in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I started the Lord's work here one year ago, and it is no small star among the colored people. The gospel is the plan of salvation, which we know to be true.

Our district conference will be held here this time, beginning Saturday, February 26. Pray that God may give us a good time. I hear that Bro. John H. Lake and other prominent elders in the field will be with us. I have gained a very prominent minister who will obey our gospel at this conference, his name is Rev. C. Williams, a Christian gentleman, who will be of great worth to me in this latter-day work, and I have gained two more for baptism little later on, who give me their word, and more believing. I have preached forty sermons in nine weeks. Elder Strange preached one sermon for me last week with good liberty.

Your brother in the gospel,
G. H. GRAVES.

SPRING VIEW, Neb., Feb. 21.

Editors Herald:—I have been enjoying myself in the work of the Lord this year, and the Lord has blessed me in my efforts. I have been holding meetings near this place for three weeks. Last Sunday week I lead six precious souls down into the waters of the Niobrara River and baptized them into the kingdom of God, and there are many more near the door of the kingdom.

The last fifty days past of this new year I have preached forty-seven sermons, baptized eight into the kingdom, and presided over seven other meetings, which makes fifty-four meetings that I have taken active part in during the last fifty days. Have sold three of the Book of Mormon, and three Doctrine and Covenants, one Harp, four Hymnals, and one Instructor, and the prospects look bright ahead in the gospel work.

Dear brethren in the field, let us be encouraged in this work, for it is God's work. When I realize the great responsibility that rests upon me, I feel weak under the burden; but the good Lord says that he will place no more upon us than we are able to bear. When I look back and see where the gospel found me, I don't feel discouraged, and I pray that I with you may continue faithful to the end. And let us say as one of the servants of old said, that for me and my house we will serve the Lord, let others do as they may.

Your brother,
W. A. SMITH.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Feb. 20.

Editors Herald:—I notice in Herald an inquiry in regard to the name "Kidron" from Bro. Pearsall. I have a new and very complete work called "The Self-interpreting Bible" in four volumes, being a "Bible Encyclopedia," which is the latest and I think most correct. It says "Kidron or Cedron (pronounced Ke'dron), meaning 'Turbid.' A brook which ran through the Valley of Jehoshaphat, on the east side of Jerusalem, between the city and the Mount of Olives. Christ passed it on his way to Gethsemane (John 18: 1)."

I have "Brown's Concordance to the Bible" also. That gives "Kedron or Cedron," but gives no pronunciation of it. The same definition is given as above; he adds that it is the same Kedron referred to in 2 Samuel 15: 23; 1 Kings 15: 13; 2 Kings 23: 4; 2 Chronicles 29: 16; and John 18: 1; showing that it was written three different ways—Kidron, Kedron, and Cedron—all meaning the same brook.

Richard Watson, in his "Biblical Dictionary," gives only one way of spelling it—"Kedron"—and no pronunciation. But I think "The Self-interpreting Bible" the best and latest authority, and that gives Ke'dron as the correct pronunciation, which I think agrees with Bro. Pearsall's pronunciation of it.

PAULINE HIGGINS.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 19.

Editors Herald:—Last night closed the discussion between Moses Hull, of Chicago, Illinois, and the writer. Mr. Hull claims to represent twenty-one millions of people known as spiritualists; he is a foxy, cunning debater, and when cornered will turn to scouting rather than yield the point.

The proposition was, "Resolved that the Bible teaches spiritualism is of the Devil, and tends to evil."

The King James or authorized version of the Bible to be the standard of argument. I contrasted spiritualism with Christianity from a biblical standpoint, and the result was my opponent pitched into the Bible, which was to be our measuring line, and tried his best to destroy it. He always quoted himself as being the best authority he knew anything about.

When asked what good spiritualism had done for humanity, he answered by telling how a man had been delivered from a beaver trap, after being caught in it, through the guidance of spirits; on another occasion the spirits had helped him hunt up a lost boy, but not until the boy's mother had given him one hundred dollars in money; and beside all that, by it he was convinced of the immortality of the soul. He frankly admitted he himself did not believe one quarter of the things coming from the spirit world; also said a man who was a liar here would be a liar in the spirit world, and when he came from the spirit world to this to direct mediums, would still be a liar. Said the same was true of a murderer or any other bad character.

When asked why spirits that had power to materialize a body and come back to this world did not stay here, as it was much easier to retain a position than to gain it, he answered by saying they did not want to stay out of heaven. Of course he had forgotten that just a few moments before he had said to the audience that he himself was now as much in heaven as he would be in the spirit world, claiming heaven to be a condition and not a place.

When asked how spiritualism stood on the marriage law, as they were accused of wanting to override all law, and especially the law of marriage, he explained by saying he did not like the marriage law Michigan once had, as it would allow the husband to whip his wife, providing he did not use a stick larger than his finger. He said he and Mrs.

Hull, when they were ready to become husband and wife, simply called in a few friends and agreed between themselves to be husband and wife; but forgot to explain just how the law would protect Mrs. Hull as his wife any more from being whipped under that mode of procedure than a legal marriage. Mrs. Hull being his wife would be subject to any and all points of law that another wife was, and if she was not his wife then she was living in crime and ought to be corrected.

Whenever crowded too close he would just more than recite heathen mythology and tell all about the heathen god hauling the sun in a wagon across the earth in the day time, then tumble it over the battlements of the western horizon into hell, through which it rolled down through under the earth at night, and was back to the east ready to be loaded into the wagon red hot in the morning. In short Mr. Hull is the echo of R. G. Ingersoll in many ways. Is a splendid talker, but was made to feel the weakness of his position many times during the discussion. I am sure there were a majority of the hearers on our side of the question after the first night. All goes well.

R. E. GRANT.

CENTRALIA, Kan., Feb. 19.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference held at Scranton passed off very pleasantly, and the writer was happy to meet with many of the saints there for the first time.

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love,
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

Upon returning I visited an uncle at Topeka, and sojourned there several days. As the saints had no meeting, we spent the Sunday elsewhere. Our curiosity led us to a society called "The divine healing mission," in charge of Rev. James Thom. This people believe and teach that the healing of the sick is a literal part of the gospel of Christ as much as it was nineteen centuries ago. A part of their creed being: "Health for body, happiness for soul, holiness for spirit, and heaven for the whole man at last." Inscribed upon the walls were the words: "I am the Lord that heals thee. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

After the sermon was preached, which was of an ordinary character, the minister proceeded to actually perform the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick; the absence of oil, however, was noticeable, and quite a number came forward to be administered to. In the testimonies which ensued, many spoke of receiving health and cure. I felt to thank God that the saints of latter-days are also enjoying this blessing; but, O, from what a different source! Inasmuch as the workings of Satan are "with power, and signs, and lying wonders," we can readily see the consistency of the apostle's warning and admonition when he wrote: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." We know that the divine edict is: "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20.

A short time ago I attended some Christian

Scientists' meetings in a prominent city, and became convinced that they were in possession of a seductive spirit. At that time a sister, who had been a Latter Day Saint for years, asked that the branch permit her name to be stricken off, as she had joined the Christian (scientist) church. I meditated much upon this action, as I couldn't see how it was at all possible for one to depart from the "one faith." Then, one day I was made to realize as I never had before the strong delusions that are abroad in the earth; and amid sobbing and sighing I prayed for steadfastness and strength to endure faithful to the truth which I have espoused. A feeling of gratitude to God came over me that I had been made acquainted with the restored gospel, brought to earth by the hand of an angel from heaven. My heart was also moved to great pity for those who have been deceived by Satanic influences. And though men and women take readily after these healing-wonders (which are so prevalent in the world to-day), yet the fact remains, that the mere healing of the body never can accomplish the salvation of the soul as promised and set forth in the gospel through an entire obedience therunto. Whatever is short of abiding the "celestial law" will not stand the test in the great day of accounts. We must, then, be wise in choosing that part which can never be taken from us, that the end may be that of peace. May the day hasten on when the fullness of the gospel shall have reached all the honest in heart, that a righteous people be prepared to meet the Lord of glory when he comes.

KEOKUK, Iowa, March 1.

Editors Herald:—Sr. Jane Clarke of this city (late of England) is trying to locate her son William Clarke; the last address she has of him was Laman Street, Coot Hill, New Castle, N. S. W. She has written to the above address, but received no answer, and she thinks he must have moved. He is a baker by trade, also an elder in the church. We thought a notice in the Herald might find him.

The last time she saw him was in 1884, at Barrow-in-Furness, England. She came to America less than two years ago, and he does not know of her leaving England. Sr. Clarke has been very sick for the last two months, and is in a very critical condition yet, so any news of her boy would be a great comfort to her. Sr. Clarke's present address is No. 429 Palean Street, Keokuk, Iowa.

LYDIA, Texas, Feb. 24.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I labored some in Indian Territory, then attended the White-Chism debate; from there, by invitation of E. A. Erwin, went to Manchester, Texas, laboring in the regions round about, until December 24, when Bro. Erwin took me by wagon to Shawnee branch, where I found a fine band of saints all willing to do their duty, but sadly in need of instruction. When will elders learn that saints perish for want of spiritual food and proper instruction. I labored here preaching and teaching until January 3, then went to Simms, in Bowie County, where I preached on the 4th in Gum Spring schoolhouse, but there being objections to the use of the house, I returned to await development. In a few days I got a card stating that I could have the house as long as I wanted. So I went on Friday, 14th, and delivered three sermons. On Sunday night, after service, some fifteen or twenty shots were fired. On Monday night I had the largest congregation, and fine order and good attention, while I presented the latter-day apostasy. After preaching five discourses I returned to Gum Spring to fill my appointment, where I was received by the people, and held forth until the 30th, when I baptized two; after two weeks' absence returned and baptized three more. I promised to return if the Lord wills after crops are laid by. I am booked for Douglass to-night, and then by invitation go to Mabry, west of Clarksville.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March 1.

Editors Herald:—We are having very nice meetings here; on Sunday afternoon Elder EYANS addressed us, and in the evening the hall was nearly filled with attentive listeners. Elder Grant having been advertised to speak, answering the objection of Infidelity on the Bible account of creation. Many were heard to express themselves as being well pleased.

Last night a large number of the saints and friends gathered at Elder Grant's and gave him a very happy surprise—the occasion being in celebration of his birthday. The house was filled with jolly people. Vocal and instrumental music were the order of the evening; after which a bountiful supper was served. An enjoyable time was had by all. After supper, by request of the saints and friends, Bro. George in their behalf presented Elder Grant with a small purse of nearly twelve dollars as a birthday gift.

We all feel to rejoice that we have had the privilege to embrace this latter-day work, and may we all live to the honor and glory of God, and always be found keeping his commandments is the prayer of TROY, Kan., Feb. 28.

Editors Herald:—Closed six nights' discussion here with W. W. Blalock Saturday evening. The questions involved an examination of the Christian Church and that of the Latter Day Saints.

Three nights were devoted to consideration of each proposition. I asked for 12 nights instead of 6, but asked in vain. Elder Blalock had but six nights for discussion in Troy and did not know that in all the future he would ever have another six nights to debate the authenticity of the Book of Mormon and the Prophetic claims of Joseph Smith here.

He evidently had learned, in his recent twelve nights' controversy at Tabor, Iowa, with our "T. W." that lengthy debates are not profitable to his cause. If I mistake not he will, ere long, learn that the Christian Church can gain nothing, nor the church of the Saints lose, even in a short contest.

The shorter the contest the better the opportunity to "throw dust in the air," endeavor to darken the spiritual skies and get away before the dust is "lightly laid again" by refreshing showers of light and truth.

I can but express gratitude for the courageous fairness and unswerving integrity displayed in every particular by Mr. A. Bowers, an attorney at law, who presided over the sessions of the debate. He himself a member of the Christian Church, but I am sure there was nothing in his decisions, or conduct of the discussion by which an observer would have known that he was directly associated with one of the churches on trial.

I expect to labor in Ness County until General Conference. My address while there will be Brownell, Kansas.

Now that the Northwest and Northeast Kansas districts have again and thus early decided to unite in a reunion next summer, let us all and of both districts begin at once to labor to make it the largest, and because the largest the most profitable gathering of the kind ever held in the State. "The greatest good to the greatest number" should be the motto inscribed in every heart. The reunion committee is already at work and will make all necessary arrangements for the accommodation and comfort of all and will announce the arrangements made in the church papers at an early date. They solicit and expect the cooperation of the saints in both districts.

Your brother,

WILL S. PENDER.

NORMAN, Oklahoma, March 1.

Editors Herald:—The contest is over, and the long talked of debate in this part of the mission is a thing of the past. Notwithstanding poor health, Bro. Crawley was able to respond to his turn in defense of the angel's message. Elder L. M. Wilson, representing the so-called Christian Church, is I believe above the average debater; he is a very able man, and conducted himself rather gentlemanly throughout. However, he is bold and skillful in blinding the eyes of many with sophistry and misapplication of the scripture. He tried to disprove the Book of Mormon by referring to dispensations as he finds them marked off in the Bible, saying that because they do not commence and end (on each continent) alike, the Book of Mormon is not true. Mr. Wilson urged that if there was an apostasy from primitive Christianity, that if the church was rejected, corrupted, and lost; then as Christ was the head of the church, then he was left without a body, therefore he was beheaded. Again: to refute the idea of apostasy, Elder Wilson claimed that if the church apostatized—become dead—then as the church was the bride or wife of Christ, he was then left a widower! Bro. Wilson had a very cunning way of ridiculing anything that did not agree with his philosophy. His skill in this line makes the casual observer think he is winning the controversy, but when Bro. Crawley would expose his reasoning, and furnish the proof from the Bible, it would show up in a different light than what Mr. Wilson had first shown. Bro. Crawley made a good defense, and by his calm, gentle manner won friends, even those who are most prejudiced against the church.

Another glowing point (?) that Mr. Wilson made against the idea of an apostasy was: "The people apostatized, but the church didn't!" Now you have it! The people composing the church departed from the faith, wandered from God, but the church itself kept the faith, remained true to God; so Mr. Wilson's logic is known to his brethren.

This objection is at par with one I met with while here last summer from a Mr. Brazier, a Methodist preacher. Our meeting was well attended, and the people friendly; and to divert their minds from us Mr. Brazier volunteered information regarding Joseph the prophet. He claimed to know so many things that Joseph was guilty of, which if true, would be a discredit to him as a man of God. When I questioned him closely he vowed his statements to be true, claiming he was there and knew for himself. The congregation became attentive; he became earnest, and repeated over and over that he "was a man grown when Joseph Smith was killed."

After this statement was well understood by the people, I asked him: "What year were you born?"

"In 1840," was the reply.

"Well," I said, "you were a little bit of a man, four years old!"

The conversation at this point came to an end amid applause and laughter; for I had informed the people before that Joseph Smith was killed in 1844.

Our little boy, Richard, is quite sick at this time, and we ask your prayers that God will restore him to health. I am to go tomorrow to Noble, to tell the gospel message and baptize some who have been waiting my return.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa, March 3.

Editors Herald:—Since my arrival from the West I have preached in Omaha, Nebraska, Woodbine, Galland's Grove, Dow City, Moorhead, and this place, Iowa;—twenty-eight times in twenty-five days. At Woodbine a young lady student gave her name for baptism.

Have felt well in presenting the word as a rule, though had to contend with a combination of toothache, neuralgia, and climatic enervation while laboring at Woodbine. The "combination" was at least preferable to the results produced.

The saints at Omaha have in view the securing of a booth in one of the exposition buildings for the exhibition of the church publications and other matters of general interest, and should be backed by the church in so commendable a scheme. Most gratifying results would likely be had at little expense.

Expect to close here to-night, thence to Woodbine for convention and conference, Omaha for Sunday night, and home next day to prepare for quorum work.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

THE editor of this monthly wishes once more to call your attention to the youngest born of the church publications. It would seem that at the present reduced price at which the management are offering it, it ought to come within the reach of a great many who have not heretofore felt able to subscribe for it.

There are times when many of us feel the need of being strengthened by such strength as comes from the testimony of others; and how much greater that strength is when we know those others—have implicit faith in them because of their consistent walk as Christians. Let us say to you, brethren and sisters, you will wait long and search far before finding stronger testimonies of the divinity of the work represented by the elders of the Reorganized Church than are now appearing in the pages of Autumn Leaves, from the pens of Sister Emma Burton and Bro. Alexander H. Smith. The plain, unvarnished manner in which they are related adding, if possible, to their strength.

The opportunity now offered awaits only your decision in the matter. Subscribe to the Leaves and help to circulate these testimonies by loaning them to others after you have read them yourself.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

WESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The Western Passenger Association has granted reduced rates to the General Conference and conventions of auxiliary societies,—Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and the General Sunday School Association,—naming the dates, as requested, from April 5-20. The Conference does not convene until the 6th, but the 5th is named in order to permit attendance at the conventions.

Reduced rates are granted under the following conditions:—

1. Going tickets must be purchased not earlier than three days before the 5th, and not later than three days after, Sunday not being counted as a day in any case. In other words, tickets may be purchased on any date from April 1 to 7, inclusive, but not later than the 7th.

2. The rate is one and one third fare for the round trip. The rule is to purchase full fare tickets on the going trip. Passengers must, in all cases, obtain certificates with every ticket purchased, which certificates, when signed by the Church Secretary and stamped by the agent of the Chicago and Alton Railroad at Independence, Missouri, will entitle purchasers to return trip tickets at one third the usual fare; provided that one hundred tickets are purchased; provided further, that ministers holding half-fare permits are not entitled to this reduction; nor are tickets purchased at fifty cents or less to be counted.

Where passengers can do so, it is better to purchase a through ticket to Independence and obtain one certificate. Where several tickets are purchased, separate certificates must be obtained with each.

Special Note:—Passengers must be particular not to complete their journey from Kansas City to Independence by street railway or electric lines—they must go through to Independence by the Missouri Pacific or Chicago and Alton—the regular railroad lines—to secure the reduced fare.

"Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is usually necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket of each road's issue, between points traveled thereon, and procure certificates thereof for each of the lines in this territory over which he travels in going to the meeting, as through tickets are not always sold, and it is not always practicable for the various lines to honor each other's certificates. Passengers should, therefore, ascertain from the ticket agent what portion of their journey can be covered by the certificate obtainable from him, and procure certificate filled out to correspond with the tickets purchased."

For information concerning best routes, etc., apply to ticket agents.

The Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern will sell tickets to points on the C. R. I. and P., M. and St. L., St. L. K. C. and N. W., C. B. and Q., and R. I. and P. Rys., which roads will honor its certificates for return passage to starting point on its line at the reduced rate.

"Where parties or clubs traveling in a body purchase round trip party tickets to the place of meeting from stations from which the local one-way rate is more than fifty cents and at not less than the rate announced on the certificate plan for the particular meeting in question (instead of one-way tickets at the regular rate) and present to joint agent a certificate from the selling agent to that effect, they will be counted by the joint agent in reckoning the attendance at any meeting."

"No certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single-trip ticket."

Tickets on the going passage may be limited or unlimited, according to the rules of roads selling them; but return tickets are good only for continuous passage, and not later than three days after the 20th—to the 23d inclusive.

Purchasers should hand in their certificates promptly to the Secretary, that the local railway agent may be notified of the required one hundred being purchased.

The following lines of road will sell tickets on the certificate plan:—

Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe; Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Northern; Chicago and Alton; Chicago and Northwestern; Chicago, Burlington, and Northern; Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy; Chicago Great Western; Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul; Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha; Hannibal and St. Joseph; Kansas City, St. Joseph, and Council Bluffs; St. Louis, Keokuk, and Northwestern; Illinois Central; Iowa Central; Jacksonville and St. Louis; Minneapolis and St. Louis; Missouri Pacific; Rock Island and Peoria; St. Louis and San Francisco; Sioux City and Pacific; Wabash; Wisconsin Central Lines.

Its territory "is bounded on the east by Pittsburg, Salamanca, Buffalo, and Toronto; on the north by the line of, and including points on the Grand Trunk Railway, from Toronto to Port Huron, thence via Lakes Huron and Michigan to Chicago; on the west by Peoria, Keokuk, Quincy, Hannibal, St. Louis and Cairo; and on the south by the Ohio River, but including points on either side of that river."

Its roads are as follows:—

2. Fares under 75 cents will not be computed in the reduction.

3. Certificates are not kept at all stations. If, however, the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to place of meeting, he can inform the delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained. In such a case the delegate should purchase a local ticket to such station and there take up his certificate and through ticket to place of meeting.

4. "It would be well to impress upon those availing of the reduction the necessity for giving ticket agents timely notice of their intentions, so that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required."

5. List of roads: Addison and Pennsylvania; Allegheny Valley; Baltimore and Ohio (Parkersburg, Bellaire, and Wheeling, and

While quite young he united with the Methodist faith. Not feeling fully satisfied, sought further light, and in 1873 united with the Church of Latter Day Saints, fully convinced he was in the true faith. He lived a most conscientious, earnest life, and was a faithful worker in the cause of Christ. A most devoted husband and loving father. He bore his severe suffering with great Christian fortitude to the end. He lived an active life of usefulness and died at his post, loved, honored, and mourned by all who knew him. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church August 26, 1868, and was soon ordained an elder. He presided over the Atchison branch and the Northeastern Kansas district for many years to the satisfaction of all concerned. It was often said of him that he was an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile. Old age, accompanied with a cold, brought about his release, for which he was prepared, rejoicing on his deathbed and praising God for the consolation and comfort afforded him through the gospel. K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines & Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

HORRORS IN AUSTRALIA.

ENTIRE COLONY STRICKEN.

VANCOUVER, B. C., March 6.—Disaster and desolation beyond description have overtaken two colonies of Australia. Passengers arriving by the Aorangie to-day, blooming in straw hats and blazers, tell a startling story of the terrible heat rays which are withering up a continent. Whole pages cut from that weird fantasy, "The War of the Worlds," would but aptly describe the antipodean nation's struggle for life beneath the blighting heat of a pitiless sun. At noon in Melbourne, Victoria, the sun focused a withering ray on the city. Water in the wells sunk into the parched earth, streams dried up, and rivers visibly sank as in a falling tide. Hysterical women proclaimed the end of the world. Men, women, and children gasped for breath as they prayed to be delivered from a horrible end. The weakest were dying and did not see the dense, opaque vapor which, as the day waned, rolled in from the burning forests and shut out the scorching sun.

Another evil was upon them. The air was thick and murky, alive with blinding cinders. Men would have suffocated or gone blind had they not shut themselves away from the overpowering influence of the mountain of smoke that settled over the city and blotted it out even from the sun's hateful light. But the darkness was worse than the light, and the air was harder to breathe.

Relief was soon to come, nature could do no more; but the trial by fire was not over. The elements must kill a few more. Only the strongest must survive.

Down from the sky above came a thunderbolt, then another, and another. Several buildings were wrecked, and as the people cautiously peeped from their houses, the stifling, overpowering smoke fumes were gone, and a blinding sheet of rain was falling from the black vapor that had lifted above them. They rushed into the rain and danced and shouted for joy. Nature had decided not to destroy Melbourne.

The darkest hour had passed, and after that rain the atmosphere was worth a million dollars a minute to those poor souls, and an hour's respite prepared them for the next period of suffering. The mortality was very large. Besides deaths from heat 255 cases of typhoid fever broke out, with a large percentage of deaths.

In the country matters are much worse. Miles of farms are burned, and in New Zealand, as well as in Victoria, bush fires have blotted out whole townships. Settlers are flocking to the towns in hundreds and thousands, half naked and terror-stricken.

A few actual experiences chronicled by the easy-going Sydney Mail and Australian Telegraph show more truth than fiction.

A Tasmania correspondent says flowering hedges, fields of grain, and typical Tasmania farmhouses are all gone and in their places all is desolation. There is nothing more to burn.

A Wellington correspondent says bush fires are destroying everything from Hoonsville's Gully to Burnside, over a magnificent farming country. The fire jumped from bush to farmhouses, 500 feet, defying the efforts of farmers to stay its course. The sun became eclipsed by the dense volumes of smoke. A Methodist camp-meeting was overtaken by fire and the people, mostly women, fled for their lives. Five minutes after the 500 tents were deserted they were in flames. The people ran for miles till they reached a sheep station, where all the women took refuge in a sod dairy and poured milk on the roof all day long as the fire raged around them. The men went on to town. The women were left behind. When rescued they had slipped their clothes off, dipped them in milk, and spread them on the roof. In the meantime thousands of homes were being licked up by the flames.

Crowds continue to come into town blind with smoke, being badly burned. Half of those who reach the town fall into a dead faint from reaction, some never to rise again. Many refused to leave their destroyed homes. One man sent his family to a place of safety, walked back to his burning house, and dropped at the door. The papers give a hundred instances of heroic deeds strangely interesting and showing how heroes are made in an hour.

All the fish in the river are dead. Many cattle were killed by rushing at the advancing flames. The dense smoke has stopped shipping. A Melbourne correspondent says: "Bush fires in Gyppland, Victoria, have left a scene of unconceivable ruin.

"Heartrending reports of suffering come from all over the colony. Thousands are arriving in the towns, almost naked and terribly blistered. The most awful experiences are from Poowong. All Poowong—north, south, and west—is gone. The flames came quickly, jumping like live fiery furies from bush to bush, tree to tree, and house to house. The residents left all and fled to save their lives. In some cases flight was impossible. Hundreds of children were lowered into wells in tubs, and those who escaped drowning were saved from the fire. W. G. Pratt dragged his mother-in-law, aged 80, through three miles of bush and saved her. W. Treadwell, his wife, son, and daughter got into a dam and staid there all night, up to their necks in water. When taken out they were parboiled, as the fires had heated the water to boiling point. G. Pratt and two men covered themselves with wet sacks. They are alive, but all blind. All who are alive are wandering about badly burned and naked. Scores of families tell the same story.

"They raced with flames, but they dropped from exhaustion. When half unconscious they would again be aroused by the advancing flames sweeping upon them with the noise of a dozen tornadoes, only to struggle on till reached by relief parties with horses. Thousands of people were rescued in burning buildings by a band of 500 heroes who organized to save lives. Jumbunna and Kouembuna are entirely annihilated, and in a score of other districts the scene of desolation baffles description."

The last dispatches state the flames are now under control. Ships cannot move in the smoke, and thousands of rockets are being sent up for ships that may be feeling their way through the dense smoke, half a mile high, that settled on the water. As the Aorange left an attempt was made to enumerate the dead and missing in both colonies. — Chicago Tribune.

THE FAR EAST.

PEKIN, March 6.—On Friday last Yano Fumio, the Japanese Minister to China, demanded an official signed assurance of the payment of the indemnity due next May. The Chinese government instructed Yang Yu, the Minister at St. Petersburg, to urge Russia to evacuate Port Arthur. Russia deferred a decision alleging that the presence of Russian warships at Port Arthur was beneficial to China and favorable to peace in the Orient.

Russia is now opposing the Anglo-German loan. M. Pavloff, the Russian Chargé d' Affaires, lodged a formal protest last Thursday and demanded a quid pro quo. The details of the Russian demand are not yet made public, but Russia's attitude is regarded as inimical to peace in the far East.

On Friday M. Gerar, the French Minister to China, made a similar complaint, with corresponding demands for compensation in the South.

England and Germany are now regarded as having obtained their legitimate aspirations, and Russia and France desire to secure theirs.

The Chinese acknowledge that the late British loan negotiations were disinterested and calculated to advance China's welfare and to maintain her independence.

London, March 7.—The Pekin correspondent of the Times says: "Russia has demanded that China surrender to her all sovereign rights over Port Arthur and Ta-Lien-Wan for the same period and on the same conditions as in the case of Germany at Kiao Chou. Besides this, Russia demands the right to construct a railway under the same conditions as the Trans-Manchurian railway, from Petuna on that line (near the River Sungari) to Kwang Chung-Tsu, Mukden, and Port Arthur. Five days are given for reply, and the agreement must be signed within a month.

"In the event of noncompliance Russia threatens to move her troops into Manchuria. China will perforce yield. By this agreement Russia will obtain the right to send soldiers into Leao Tung, ostensibly for the protection of the railway engineers.

"Russian assurances that the ports will be open to the world are deceptive, inasmuch as while conforming to these assurances Russia can convert either port into a second and stronger Vladivostock."

Berlin, March 7.—The Tageblatt to-day publishes a dispatch from Pekin saying China has agreed to lease Port Arthur and Ta-Lien-Wan to Russia for ninety-nine years.

Pekin, March 8.—The Russian demands from China have caused the greatest excitement at the Japanese legation, and the Japanese Minister has had several interviews with the officials of the Tsung Li Yamen (the Chinese Foreign office), urging the rejection of the Russian demands. In addition it is reported that Japan has threatened to take vigorous action if the demands of Russia are conceded.

Hongkong, March 8.—Prince Henry of Prussia has arrived here from Singapore, and a number of dinners and receptions have been arranged in his honor.

Yokohama, March 8.—The Korean Cabinet, it is understood here, will impeach the Foreign Minister of Corea for leasing Deer Island to Russia.

Berlin, March 8.—A dispatch to the Tageblatt from Pekin, published to-day, says Russia has definitely leased Port Arthur and Ta-Lien-Wan for ninety-nine years. It is added that Russia is determined to carry the Siberian railroad to Port Arthur whether China consents or not.

The Budget committee of the Reichstag to-day unanimously passed the entire shipbuilding program included in the estimates for 1898.

Teheran, March 7.—The Governor of the Province of Kerman has routed the insurgents of several points in Persian Beluchistan, where it is expected order will shortly be restored. There were serious riots at Hamadan, capital of the province of that name, February 22, due to a quarrel between partisans of rival priests, during which twenty-seven persons were killed.

Bombay, March 7.—The situation here is grave. There is extreme unrest among the natives, who are incensed at the plague measures, which wound their religious susceptibilities. In addition the plague authorities are at loggerheads with the city corporation, which has stopped their supplies of money.

London, March 9.—The presentation of the British naval estimates yesterday (increasing the expenditure by $7,202,000, adding to the personnel of the navy by 6,340 men, and providing for the building of three new battleships, four armored cruisers, and four sloops of war) has been received with much satisfaction by the press and public. The total appropriation for the year, $118,890,000, has never been exceeded. The nearest approach to that amount was in 1894, when $117,520,000 was appropriated for the uses of the navy. Adding this year's naval appropriation to the army estimates it makes over $240,000,000 to be expended on British defenses for the year, exclusive of the amounts to be spent on the Indian army and the armies of the self-governing colonies.

The naval estimates show that surveys are in progress for works at Bermuda, Jamaica, the Island of Mauritius, and the Cape of Good Hope.

The number of people who have lived upon this earth since the time of Adam is calculated to be somewhere about 36,627,844,600,000,000.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND AND WALES.

THE conference at Sheffield passed pleasantly, and though numbers were few, all seemed to enjoy the communion together, and to be pleased with the business done and the instruction given.

It seemed a little like America to be in company with Bro. and Sr. Pitt and Bro. May. We remained in Sheffield two days after the adjournment, availing ourselves of a privilege secured to us by Bro. John Austin to visit some of the famous steel works. The wondrous things there seen we will not occupy space to describe. Leaving Bro. and Sr. Pitt in Sheffield, we enjoyed the company of Bro. May to Manchester, where he remained with us one day and then left for bonnie Scotland, to visit his old home and friends, and to do what opportunity would permit to sow the seeds of truth. Our prayers and best wishes went with him. Only a few days after reaching Manchester, and the sad news followed us from Sheffield, that our generous host while there, Bro. Henry Hoole, had been suddenly killed by accident while at his daily work. The news came so suddenly, the change was so great since we had left him but a few hours before in robust health, that we were greatly shocked; but we will not dwell on the sad features of the case, for it has its brighter side, for he was one of the noble men of earth. In kindness, in integrity, in sincerity, and in steadfast devotion to the right, he had no superiors and but few equals. He leaves a wife, son, and aged mother, all of whom were devotedly attached to him. All who knew him loved and honored him.

We arrived in Manchester in time to hear two of Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Senior's, replies to the Rev. Mr. Ward, but as we did not hear the lectures to which these were replies, we could not pass an opinion on their sufficiency. Bro. Dewsnup, however, seemed to be at home in his subjects, and to treat his opponent with great fairness. We were pleased also to note that the saints were greatly encouraged by the effort, and others were interested, and the advertisement as well as the fearless and honorable manner in which it was met has done us much good.

The reverend gentleman delivered four lectures, two of which he has published, the two to which we did not hear replies. We have read these. They are composed of old stale stuff which has been many times replied to. The learned gentleman (for he says he is learned), seems to have suddenly awakened from a Rip Van Winkle sleep, and discovering some old musty records, he gathers them up, and without investigating their authenticity or genuineness, delivers them to the public with much gusto and flourish.

The conference of the Manchester district was held with North Manchester branch, January 29 and 30. It was well attended, and the word was heard by full and attentive houses. The business was done with dispatch and with but little friction. Bro. Pitt was in attendance, but on the Tuesday following went to Birmingham, where he was at last advices. Right here we wish to respectfully enter our protest against the publication of private letters (written from here) without the consent of the writer. The publication of a recent letter, intended to be private, did us much harm, and we felt like one who was not afraid to meet his enemies, if God would protect him against his friends. Though this letter was not published in the church organ, it was published in a paper assuming to be published in the interests of the church. We wish to mildly suggest, that unless a little more discretion is used, it will not be in the interest of the church here. Several have recently been baptized in Manchester, each of the branches receiving additions.

February 4, we came down here to Carnarvon, in North Wales, where we are the guest of Captain Bro. R. Lloyd, and family, who have received and entertained us with much kindness. Carnarvon is situated on the east bank of the Menai Straits at the mouth of the Seiont River, said to be the Segontium River of the Romans, surrounded by a beautiful and picturesque country. The chief attraction of the place is the great Carnarvon Castle, commenced by Edward the First, and completed by Edward the Second, who was born in it.

It is the largest castle in North Wales, and in the best state of preservation. It is pronounced by some competent judges to be one of the finest in Europe. Through the kindness of Bro. William Lloyd we obtained permission to climb its towers and turrets, to view the beauty of the landscape, and to examine its historic compartments at leisure. At the outskirts of the town stands the old church of Llanbeblig. No one knows how old it is, but some parts of it are known to be over a thousand years old. We attended a funeral service in this ancient structure, and after the service the Vicar Rev. J. W. Wynne Jones, M. A., kindly gave us the liberty of the house, and when at liberty showed us through, and gave us such information as he was in possession of regarding the relics. The building is substantially built of stone, having a massive tower at the west end adjoining the nave. It has north and south transepts, and east chancel; and in the northwest corner of the building and joining the chancel on the north is an ancient chapel called Vaynoe chapel. In this chapel is an ancient tomb of which there is no record, on which are two recumbent marble effigies. On this tomb is the following inscription: "HERE LIETH THE BODY OF WILL . . . ESQUIRE THE SOE OF SR. WILL

GW' KNIGHT WHO DIED THE LAST OF NOVEMBER 1587 AND MARGRET HIS WIF DAUGHTER TO JOHN WYNE AP MREDD ESQ AND DID BUILD THIS TOME 1593."

In the south transept is the remains of an old shrine, said to be of pagan Rome; and here is another tomb, said to be that of Constantine Chlorus, father of Constane the Great. There were several other relics and inscriptions which were curious and interesting, but which we will not occupy space to describe. The length of the building from the inside of the east wall of the chancel to the west wall of the tower is ninety-seven feet and six inches. The breadth of the nave and chancel are twenty feet each. The total length across the transepts is fifty-seven feet and six inches, and the width of the transepts is nineteen feet and six inches. There has been some extensive repairs of late, but the features of the old are retained in the new as nearly as possible. The entrance is through a porch into the northwest corner of the nave, and near the door, on the outside, are some bullet holes, said to have been made in the time of the Cromwell war. While we were in the church a couple appeared at the altar to be joined in holy wedlock; he with whitened locks of age, she in the bloom of youth. We thought this to be in strange harmony with the new and the old workmanship on the walls of the sacred structure. If she can harmonize with the old as nearly as the workman has made the modern to agree with the ancient, all will be well; but we fear the result will not be so easily accomplished. May has her charms of beauty, November his crowns of fading glory. We admire both, each in its season is appropriate; but to undertake to blend them in one is against nature. We fear that to such the beautiful lines of Tennyson will not apply:—

"For woman is not undeveloped man,
But diverse; could we make her as the man, Sweet love were slain; his dearest bond is this,

Not like to like, but like in difference.
Yet in the long years liker they must grow:
The man be more of woman, she of man;
He gain in sweetness and in moral height,
Nor lose the wresting thews which throw the world:
She mental breadth, nor fall in childhood care,

Nor lose the childlike in the larger mind;
Till at last she set herself to man
As noble music unto noble words."

We are placed under great obligations to the vicar for his great kindness, and for information imparted.

News just received from Bro. R. May announces that he has been well received in Scotland, and though now bound for home, he has some idea of returning to labor there. We hope he may; one acquainted as he is, could accomplish what a stranger cannot. He will sail from Liverpool by the Campania February 12, and ere these lines are in print will be at home. May he have a pleasant voyage and a safe return to home and loved ones.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

THE GODHEAD.

WILL you kindly state through the Herald, the faith of the church on the Godhead. Whether there is one or two personages?

The church has not taken formulated ground by conference action that we are aware of. But the position may be briefly stated to be about as follows:—

There are in the Godhead proper, two personages; God, the Father; Christ, the Son; the Father and the Son; or God the Father, and God the Son.

The Father is a personage of Spirit, glory, and power, in whom all perfection and fullness of attributes dwell; the Son is a personage of tabernacle in the likeness of the Father, and possesses a similar fullness of attributes of glory, wisdom, love, power, and majesty, the Firstborn of the Father and subject only to him. The Holy Spirit is sometimes called the third personage in the Godhead; but is in reality the mind, will, and element of power of both the Father and the Son. This Holy Spirit is the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth, by which all things are controlled, upheld, and sustained, by the will and command of the Father and the Son, through which witness and record of the Father and Son are borne on earth and in heaven.

These three are one in purpose, spirit, and power, and constitute the directing, governing, and controlling power of the universe; the source of life and light, and existence of all things that have been, are, or ever shall be; the One only independent and self-existent head of All in All.

Every devout believer is at liberty to enlarge upon this as the Spirit which revealeth the things of God may give him the testimony of truth.

It is impossible for finite minds to comprehend God, but when fully obedient and receiving a fullness of glory, then shall man see God as he is; until then let us follow the Son and the Spirit as they have been revealed to us, and wait the time when where God and Christ are we may surely come.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. P. J. WELLS, St. Armands, Quebec, late date:—

I saw a note of Apostle Caffall's labor in England. I can say indeed he is a grand old man; how he set in order our branch in London, England, and gave such grand discourses as lifted us above the ordinary life and set us on our feet rejoicing. Such a life as his is worthy of good and faithful servant. May he live long yet to work for the Master.

Bro. W. S. Pender is on the move, according to a late letter from Brownelle, Kansas, to one of the brethren. He says:—

This western country turns out en masse to preaching services; from 100 to 200 every night. The country is sparsely settled, but roads good and people go five or six miles and think nothing of it. I preach here, then go to Beeler; thence on March 21 to Ransom to hold a discussion with J. E. Sniffin, a Christian minister, on five propositions. I expect an interesting time, as one rule adopted reads: "The Bible shall be the standard of authority and no other book and no other evidence shall be introduced or used in the discussion of these questions."

The members of the Austrian Cabinet tendered their resignations on the 5th inst., which were accepted by Emperor Francis Joseph. His Majesty appointed Privy Councilor Count von Thun Hohenstim Prime Minister and intrusted to him the task of forming a new Cabinet, pending the organization of which the retiring Ministers will conduct the current business.

Verona, March 5.—There were two earthquake shocks here last night. Each lasted several seconds.

Kingston, Jamaica, March 5.—Earthquakes have again visited the Leeward Islands. They were quite severe and did the greatest damage on the Island of Antigua and at St. Kitts. No loss of life has as yet been reported.

Rome, March 5.—The earthquake reported from Verona was felt throughout Italy, and most severely at Parma, Placentia, Sestola, and Chiavari.

London, March 5.—The Times in its annual statement says the drink bill of the United Kingdom is nearly £3,500,000 ($17,500,000) in excess of that in 1896, averaging £3. 16s. 5¹/₂d. (about $19.12) for each man, woman, and child.

Mozambique, March 5.—Advices just received here from the Island of Mayotta, Comoro group, says Mayotta was swept by a cyclone during the night of February 27. The government buildings were partly destroyed, many of the native villages and crops were destroyed, and large numbers of people were killed or injured. Many of the sufferers were left without any shelter and are now suffering from famine.

Mayotta is one of the Comoro Islands, forming, with some adjacent islets, a French colony. The area of the island is 137 square miles. The natives are Mohammedans, of mixed African, Arabian, and Malegasy stock. The population of the island is about 11,000.

Berlin, March 5.—A discussion is proceeding between the Emperor and the evangelical council of Prussia relative to the program and aims of the trip to Palestine in October, the Court Marshal fixing all the details, which will be submitted to the Emperor before they are adopted. One of the Majesty's main objects is to determine authoritatively the exact sites of Golgotha, the Temple of Jerusalem, the crucifixion, the Pretorium, and similar places.

There have been large strikes in a number of German cities. In Berlin 12,000 shoemakers have struck for a uniform scale of wages, and it is thought that the shoemakers elsewhere will join. The cabinet makers of Hamburg and Algona have struck for nine hours' work per day, and at Dresden 8,000 cigarette makers have gone out on strike. There are similar reports from Charlottenburg, Stettin, Koenigsberg, and Sorau, and big strikes are impending in the Rhenish mining district. At Baron von Stumm's request a detachment of troops has been sent to the Saar district to preserve order.

Congress has voted $50,000,000 to be placed at the disposal of President McKinley, to be used at his discretion, in view of the possibility of war with Spain. The vote was unanimous, all shades of political difference being lost sight of in the passage of the patriotic measure, which called forth the strongest expressions of loyalty to the government and its attitude in the present crisis. War preparations continue unabated. It is stated that Great Britain has offered to mediate between the two countries.

Dispatches of the 10th indicate that President McKinley will await the report of the naval inquiry board on the Maine disaster before taking further action. It is intimated that unless Spain puts a stop to the Cuban insurrection by the opening of the oncoming rainy season, about one month hence, the independence of the Cubans will be recognized, and practically supported by the intervention of the United States, should Spain refuse to withdraw from the island.

On the 10th inst. members of the British House of Commons discussed the question of interrogating the government concerning the sending of the British fleet to aid the United States, in the event of the latter becoming involved in war with a European power. The discussion developed strong sentiments of friendship toward America.

Madrid, March 9.—The celebrated toreador [bull fighter], Frascuelo, died yesterday. The interest taken in his illness was so great that bulletins were displayed at the house where he expired, and the Queen Regent and high officials made repeated inquiries regarding his condition.

New York advices of the 10th, through the Cuban Junta, report a signal victory for the Cuban forces under General Ricio, at Najasa, February 21-24. The Cubans were outnumbered, but after a four-days' fight drove the Spanish force of 4,000 from the field, and captured a considerable amount of military stores.

The Alaska boundary dispute between the United States and Great Britain, has been practically settled.

Archbishop Corrigan will shortly be made a cardinal, according to late press items.

Hongkong, March 9.—The Russian warships Sissoi, Veliky, and Navarin, belonging to the Black Sea fleet, have arrived here. The political situation in the far East is causing uneasiness among the population of this port.

A dispatch from Odessa states that Russian troops and war material are going to the far East with such haste that in addition to the Russian fleet the government has chartered some French steamers.

A special dispatch from Shanghai says that Russia has agreed to open Port Arthur and Ta-Lien-Wan to foreign trade, but under Russian laws and administration.

St. Petersburg, March 10.—An imperial ukase just issued orders the disbursement of 90,000,000 rubles as extraordinary expenditure for the construction of warships. It is added that no loan will be raised to provide the money.

In official calculations, according to the Statesman's Year Book, 6.40 rubles are considered equivalent to the British pound sterling.

Pekin, March 11.—The British Minister, Sir Claude M. MacDonald, visited the Chinese Foreign office on Tuesday and lodged a strong protest against the cession of Port Arthur to Russia, saying it would destroy the balance of power in China. The Chinese officials, however, declared their inability to withstand the Russian demands.

M. Pavloff, the Russian Chargé d' Affaires, wished the cessions to take place within five days, in order to forestall the arrival of his successor, M. Speyer, but China required a longer time to consider the matter, and therefore the negotiations were transferred to St. Petersburg.

Rumor has it that a secret agent of the Spanish government has been making overtures to the New York representatives of the Cuban cause with a view to practically granting Cuban independence, but under the Spanish flag. The proposition was distrusted and spurned by the Cubans.

So many calls come for Bro. Levi Cheney's "cure for cancer" that we have published it in slip form; sent to any address on receipt of two cent stamp.

"Give not to me life's splendors—they would blind

The eyes that now have light to see the way;

Only a little sunlight for my day,

And for my night the shadows soft and kind;

And for my wealth the quiet of the mind,

Gentle and sweet; and lips that sing or say

In kindness, and are answered when they pray;

And for my glory duty, love-defined.

And give to me the love of her whose kiss

Is recompense for toil; whose smiles await

My coming, brightening with expected bliss

In some sweet spot where twilight lingers late;

And yet one other blessing crowning this,

In little footsteps pattering to the gate!"

GOOD taste and good feeling must rule conversation everywhere, especially at home, to make it a success. There seems to be a curious kink in human nature that leads us to say hateful and unkind things to those we love the best, which we would be ashamed to say to strangers. Watch for this kink and straighten it out in your own home circle. There, as everywhere, more than anywhere else, try always to say "the nicest things in the nicest way." Avoid topics which may be painful to anyone present. If Johnny has been in disgrace at school, leave him to tell of it in the bedtime conference with mother. Don't announce it with a flourish of trumpets to the assembled family. Don't hector nor tease. Do not take more than your proper share of time in conversation; give others their share and listen respectfully while they speak. Never interrupt, and do not fly off on a tangent by abrupt change of subject. Be always courteous and respectful, especially to those who are older than yourself, or from whom you differ. Never ridicule an assertion made by another, though you may not believe it, and never try to show off your knowledge.

Edward Everett Hale, in the book from which we have before quoted, "How To Do It," has an admirable chapter on how to talk. We wish you might all read it; lest some fail to do so we will give some of his points. They refer to conversation in general among young people, whether at home or abroad.

His first rule is, "Tell the truth. Bob meets Laura for the first time as she comes on a visit to Poughkeepsie. She is a nice girl, and he is really glad to be introduced to her, but thinks he must not talk commonplace to her, so says, 'Did you go to the opera last week?' wishing to impress her with his artistic tastes. 'No,' said Laura, 'I did not.' 'O it was charming!' says Bob, and there the conversation fell flat, as it ought, for it was founded on a lie. Bob did not care two straws for the opera, never attended but once, and then was terribly bored, but he was not going to own it. Will was next introduced; he spoke right out the first thing he was thinking: 'I saw you riding this afternoon.' 'Yes,' said Laura, 'we went out by the red mills and drove up the hill by Mr. Pond's.' 'Did you see the bee-hives?' said Will, eagerly. This opened up a spirited conversation, for it so happened that Laura was an enthusiast on bees, and before the evening was over the young folks felt as though they had known each other for years, and it all came from telling the truth, not pretending to be interested in what they were not."

His second rule is, "Do not talk of your own affairs" in general society. Of course in the home circle it is proper that you should do so, provided that you do not obtrude your own affairs where others' affairs have a right to be; if anyone asks you explicitly to tell them anything you have done or how you did it, tell them modestly and plainly, but don't chatter and prattle of what you did, or you saw, or you said in company where few feel any special interest in your doings and sayings. Do you not notice that those who really do the bravest deeds talk the least about their doings? The old scarred veteran has little to say about his own prowess; it is the carpet-knight who boasts most pompously. Confess ignorance. That is the way to become wise. Conversation is the providential arrangement for the relief of ignorance. We often lose the chance of learning much by pretending to know it already. Sometimes we do this because we are ashamed to confess ignorance, sometimes from sheer thoughtlessness. We know a little of the subject, and we gabble about it, never stopping to ascertain if the one with whom we are conversing does not know vastly more. I had visited Arizona, and returned brimming over with enthusiasm about the Zuni. At a cousin's home in Washington I was introduced to a gentleman whose name I did not catch, as a group of us were deep in conversation about these wonderful people. The stranger was rather reticent; indeed, he had no chance to be otherwise, for we were chattering so fast there was little opportunity for him to speak. After he had gone I learned to my great chagrin that he was Mr. Cushing, who could have told more about the Zuni in five minutes than we all knew, if only we had given him a chance; and we had foolishly cheated ourselves out of learning from him. Often we defraud ourselves of knowledge we might gain by simpering "Yes" to hide our ignorance, when anyone says, "You know about" so and so. Never do it. Say straight out, "No, I do not know about it, but I should like to hear."

His third rule is: "Talk to the person who is taking with you," do not pretend to converse with one person while you are watching another, or listening to what some one behind you is saying. It is the height of ill manners, though it is being continually done by fools and snobs. Mr. Hale says if you are really more interested in something else than in what your companion is saying, the honest way is to tell him so and ask him to excuse you. No matter if the person with whom you are conversing seems to you to be poky, or stupid, or tiresome, your business is to listen attentively and reply courteously. Long before Lincoln was known to fame he had won the hearts of all men, women, and little children with whom he came in contact, by this very thing. It is said of him, "Whoever sailed down on him at any evening party and engaged him, though it were the most wearisome of odd old ladies, was sure of him, while they were together. He would look her right in the eye, would enter into all her joys, and terrors, and hopes, would help her by his sympathy to find out what the trouble was, and when it was his turn to answer, he would answer like her own son. He talked so to schoolboys and to shy people who had just poked their heads out of their shells, and to all the awkward people and to all the gay and easy people." Does not this, in part at least, account for the love felt for him by all who came within his influence, as well as for his wonderful insight into human nature?

Mr. Hale's fifth rule is: "Never underrate your interlocutor." He illustrates this by a story at his own expense; he says: "In the conceit of early life, talking to a man of twice my age and of immense experience, I said a little too flippantly, 'Was it not the King of Wurtemberg whose people declined a constitution when he had offered it to them?' 'Yes,' said my friend, 'the king told me the story himself.' Observe what a rebuke this would have been to me, had I presumed to tell him the fact which he knew ten times as accurately as I did. I was just saved from sinking into the earth by having couched my statement in the form of a question." We may not chance upon a man who has conversed with kings, but we will meet with many men and women who know much more concerning many things than we do. The safest way is to take it for granted that our companion knows more than we do upon many topics, and be willing to learn of him. It is wonderful how this knowledge often fits into our ignorance. Almost always when we are thinking intently on any subject, or studying it up, it seems as if every one we met gave us some light upon it, and that often without our asking for it or referring to the matter at all. It is an illustration of the proverb before quoted that conversation is the providential arrangement for the relief of ignorance.

His last rule is, "Be short;" say what you have to say without circumlocution, and when you have said it, stop. Do not preface it by a long introduction, nor even by a short one like, "that reminds me;" of course you remember what you are saying, if you did not you could not say it, so you need not announce the fact. Nor do you need to give authorities, if you only make it clear that you make no pretense to originality. Never, except in extreme necessity, explain who people are. Nine cases out of ten it makes no difference who they are, and in the tenth case you will very likely get into inextricable confusion in attempting to tell, as in the case cited by Mr. Hale. Frank wants to say, "George went to the stereopticon yesterday." Instead of that he says, "A fellow at our school named George, a brother of Tom Tileston, who goes to the Dwight, and is in Miss Lomerly's room—not the Miss Lomerly that has the class in Sunday school—she's at the Brimmer school, but her sister;" and so on till Frank, as he expressed it, "is all muddled up." He could manage George alone, but when it comes to George's brother and Miss Lomerly and Miss Lomerly's sister, they are too many for him. Stick to the one thing you wish to say, give your hearers credit for being people of sense, who can understand something without having it explained to them. If they really need or wish for explanations they will ask for them.

Don't exaggerate; don't transform a "smart sprinkle" into a deluge, nor be almost "tired to death" after ten minutes' exertion, nor describe a pretty dress as "too awfully beautiful for anything," nor speak of a box of candy as "just lovely," nor go into ecstasies describing a poodle dog. Above all do not try to intensify speech by such exclamations as "mercy on us!" "goodness gracious!" and the like. Trace these down to their real significance, and they come very near breaking the third commandment. On whom are you calling for mercy? All these tricks of speech detract from, instead of adding to, the strength of your words.—Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

THAT REPORT OF THE INSTITUTE.

WE had intended to publish in pamphlet form the work in full of the late Sunday school and Religio Institute at St. Joseph, in December, 1897. But upon getting the report of the work completed, together with such explanations as would be necessary to make it intelligible to the reader, we found our manuscript was very bulky, and an estimate of the cost of publishing placed the cost so great that we declined the responsibility of the expenditure. We now hold it till after the meeting of the General Association, where it can be acted upon if desirable.

The work done was very thorough, and the reports if published complete would answer many questions in many minds. The reports that have appeared in the "Department" are not complete. Space would not admit it.

THE Galland's Grove, Iowa, district is always striving to be on the advance. "It was the first district association organized. . . . Now it is the first to inaugurate Institute work in the district convention. In February, 1897, they met at Dow City, Iowa, for a two days' Institute. The General Superintendent was present to assist. Good work was done."

In just one year they met again in like capacity, and under very similar circumstances. The improvement in the workers, and in the schools, is very marked. This is the result of the Institute work in the district and in the General Reunion, together with the earnest efforts of the district officers and local workers, and all under the direction of God's Holy Spirit.

In his address of welcome to the workers at the Galland's Grove Sunday School Institute, February 24, Bro. J. M. Baker said: "I am happy to state that we have made some advancement since we met in like capacity one year ago. But we are just as anxious to improve now as ever we were."

C. E. Butterworth: "I think the Sunday school work is improving. . . . The Institute work is important."

Charles Derry: "I feel that my early Sunday school experience, though not under the influence of the restored gospel, has helped to equip me for duties devolving upon me in later years."

J. W. Wight: "I can say for the Institute work of the Sunday school, that I heartily indorse it. It is one of the means by which an organization may exist. . . . The head cannot say to the feet I have no need of thee; all are very necessary. . . . The Institute work is necessary for the improvement of the day school. It is equally necessary for the improvement of the Sunday school and Religio. . . . I believe that if there had been Sunday schools at the beginning of the church work, we would have more church missionaries now in the field."

Harrison Rudd: "I am glad to hear the Sunday school work indorsed by the missionaries. It does me good—gives me encouragement."

THE PRIMARY CLASS.

A paper read before New South Wales Sunday school convention, December 27, 1897, by Walter J. Haworth.

I MUST confess that I have neither the time at my disposal nor the ability to treat this subject as it rightly deserves. However, we are only expected to do the best we can in order to make our efforts acceptable to our heavenly Father.

Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." He took them in his arms and blessed them; and we who are following him to-day take our little ones and present them to his ambassadors, that they might follow his example and call down the Father's blessing upon them. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven"! What a compliment to the purity of a little child!

Are they not innocent and pure as the angels of heaven, while in that irresponsible state between babyhood and the years of accountability? But we must not forget that during those few short years their little bodies and minds are developing, and that "the manner of men or women they may be" depends largely upon the instruction they receive during that time.

It is during those years of unaccountability that the foundation of character is laid; and to a great extent the destiny of the little individual is shaped by the person upon whom the child's instruction depends. Latter Day Saints are commanded to so instruct their little ones that at eight years of age they may enter the field of Christ; and while the little one is irresponsible until that age be attained, great is the responsibility resting upon its parents.

The child comes to them pure and spotless; yes, innocent as the angels of heaven. But it comes to a world full of sin and iniquity, full of snares and pitfalls; with degradation and shame on every hand. Its future depends upon the instruction received. Which shall it be? Shall its little steps be guided into the straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal? or shall its instruction be neglected and its little feet be allowed to stray into the broad way leading to eternal woe and misery?

The wise man has said, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart therefrom." What an amount of anxiety and needless pain parents might be spared could they be brought to see the wisdom of that thought; and acting upon it, train up their children in the fear and admonition of the Lord. Such parents need have no anxiety with regard to the conduct of their sons and daughters when nearing manhood and womanhood.

With what delight parents should hail the advent of a well-conducted Sunday school, to which they could send their children and have their efforts supplemented by teachers who make it a study to lead little feet in virtue's way. No child who is four years of age is too young to send to school. In fact I have elicited really surprising answers from children not much older than that. As soon as a child is old enough to do wrong (whether it be accountable or not) it is old enough for Sunday school.

I know that to some the primary class is the hardest class in the school to manage, while I have heard others say it is the best class to teach; but be that as it may, the teacher of such a class is involved in a great responsibility; and whether the task be hard or easy, the best results can only be obtained by a prayerful and obedient attitude before God.

The teacher of a primary class should be of a loving disposition; she should love the work, love the children, and love God. It is only according to the measure of his Spirit, which she merits, that she will be able to instruct them in the way of Jesus their example. All teachers, and especially the teacher of a primary class, should strive to live as pure a life as possible, for the reason that children learn better by example than by precept. The teacher by his or her precept creates within the child a desire to be like Christ, but the child will look up to the teacher expecting an example in keeping with the precept taught. Unless the example of the teacher be good, the effect on the child will not be good; for children, and young children especially, are great imitators and invariably follow the example of the teacher. Teachers should therefore learn that the preparing of lessons is not the only responsibility; but that the most important thing of all is the example we set. Take Jesus for example. He was the greatest of all teachers, and although his precepts are the brightest gems in the rich and abundant mine of Holy Writ, his example is a more brilliant gem than all; and fully demonstrates the truth of the good old saying, "Actions speak louder than words." Then let us bear in mind that "example is better than precept," and remembering the great responsibility resting upon us as teachers, let our example be as a bright monument of that which we teach in precept.

REPLY TO ELDER BAYS.—NO. 3.

In the Saints' Herald for March 9 appears what Elder Bays designates as his "Reply to Elder Lambert.—No. 2;" but in fact it is his third reply.

In my last reply I pointed out a number of important issues which Elder Bays had dropped, with victory perching where it properly belongs; in this article I will point out a few more of the same character. Notwithstanding the vigorous efforts made to blind and mislead, the true issues between us, in this controversy, are these:—

1. Is Elder Bays "now willing to tear down, if he can, what he once sought to build up?"
2. When he offered his resignation as a minister of the church, did he oppose the claims of the Bible, and the inspiration of the Bible?

I have never claimed, as Elder Bays ought to know, that he opposed all three of the books on precisely the same plane, or to the same extent; but I have claimed, and do still claim, that he opposed the Bible as well as the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Let us see if this claim is correct.

When Elder Bays offered his resignation to the Latter Day Saints in 1892, he knew that then, as now, their sacred text books and standards of authority were the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants. In presenting his reasons for stepping down and out, as a minister, he does so under four distinct captions, as follows:—

"THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS."

"THE BOOK OF MORMON."

"THE BIBLE."

"THE INSPIRED TRANSLATION."

Did Elder Bays mean to be understood as opposing the Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and Inspired Translation? O yes. This is what he now says of the character of that opposition:—

"I unreservedly declared my absolute rejection of the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and Inspired Translation." Did he mean to be understood as opposing the Bible? No; he says not. What did he mean? Why, he meant, as stated by himself, to "simply and only object to the claims made for it by others, and not to the claims which the Bible makes for its own inspiration." But what is this leading, false claim made for the Bible "by others?" It is, as Elder Bays himself defines it, that the Bible is plenary or verbally inspired. Did the Latter Day Saints ever make that claim? Were they advocating the plenary inspiration of the Bible when Elder Bays resigned? Let the Elder himself answer these last two questions:—

"During my fifty years' experience in the church, I have yet to hear one of its ministers affirm the doctrine, or anything that could be tortured into a support of it; and I very much doubt if Elder Lambert himself believes it."

All this being true, will Elder Bays tell us why, when offering his resignation to the church, he made his opposition to the doctrine of the plenary inspiration of the Bible, one of the leading and most lengthy reasons why he should step down and out as a minister of the church? I called Elder Bays' attention to this point in my last, but what does he do with it? Nothing at all; does not even mention it! Why does he not answer on this point? Because, using his own style of controversy, he knows that there is absolutely no answer to be made! We are fully justified in the conclusion that Elder Bays was badly demented when he presented his objections to the claim of "plenary or verbal inspiration" of the Bible as a leading reason why he should resign his ministerial position in the church, or in the one which we have chosen to accept; namely, that he opposed, and meant to oppose, the Bible as well as the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Which one is correct?

In answer to my invitation to Elder Bays to produce from his paper of resignation "one word in favor of" the "veracity and authenticity of the Bible," he says: "That 'not one word' appears in my paper in defense of the veracity and authority of the Bible, is quite true, and the reason why it does not, may be found in the fact that the question was not under consideration—no attack had been made by any one upon either the veracity or authority of the Bible, and hence no necessity that anything should be said 'in favor of either.'"

Very well. In the light of this reply let me ask: Does Elder Bays mean that nobody, up to that time, or at that time, had considered and attacked, or was considering and attacking, the veracity and authority of the Bible? Surely this is not what he meant, for he knows that hundreds and thousands were considering and attacking both. Well, if he did not mean these statements to apply outside of the church of which he was then a minister, I ask, who, in the church, was affirming, or defending, the doctrine of the plenary inspiration of the Bible, to call forth Elder Bays' opposition to it? Who?

Again; who was saying anything against "the moral excellence of Christianity" that caused Elder Bays to express his "abiding faith in" it, as contained in the closing paragraph of his paper?

A common sense interpretation of what

Elder Bays says in the first paragraph of what is presented under the caption of "The Bible," sustains our position; namely, that Elder Bays was, at that time, opposing the Bible, as believed and taught by the Latter Day Saints. If not, why does he not undertake to explain why he presented his opposition to a doctrine which the Latter Day Saints never advocated, as a leading reason why he should resign? The paragraph referred to reads as follows:—

"3D. THE BIBLE.

"Ministers of the gospel are expected to believe and teach the inspiration of the Bible. During the later years of my ministry I made this a question of special inquiry, and quite contrary to the generally received opinion, I found nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments, or any particular book in either, were written by divine inspiration. Hence I have been led to reject the dogma of the 'divine inspiration of the Bible,' as wholly untenable."

Let us look at the opening sentence: "Ministers of the gospel are expected to believe and teach the inspiration of the Bible." By whom was Elder Bays expected to so believe and teach? By the church of which he was a minister, of course. And the proper inference is that as he could not, at that time, conscientiously "believe and teach the inspiration of the Bible," as believed and taught by the church, therefore it was necessary for him to resign. If this sentence did not mean this, and nothing less than this, it meant nothing.

He then proceeds to say, in substance, that in his later and thorough investigation of the claim that the Bible is inspired, he "found nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments, or any particular book in either, were written by divine inspiration. Hence, I have been led to reject the dogma of the divine inspiration of the Bible, as wholly untenable." (The italics are mine.)

Then Elder Bays did not believe in the inspiration or divine inspiration of the Bible, or any book in either one, at the time he offered his resignation. He regarded the doctrine "as wholly untenable." If the Bible is neither inspired nor divinely inspired, what language would Elder Bays use to describe its inspirational claims?

In my second reply I notified Elder Bays that we could not allow that the different phrases used by him when speaking of inspiration, "mean one thing when applied to the Bible, but an entirely different thing when applied to the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants." How does he answer this? He does not answer it at all; for, evidently, he is aware that this, one of the fundamental rules of interpretation, strikes at the very vitals of his lame apology, and proves that my statements concerning his paper of resignation are correct.

Allowing Elder Bays' apology to be correct, as to what he said concerning the Bible, the matter stands like this: One of the reasons why he resigned his office in the church was because he could not believe or teach the plenary or verbal inspiration of the Bible, although he had no reason to believe that Latter Day Saints expected any of their ministers to advocate the doctrine to which he was opposed!

Sometime after his resignation, he attached himself to the Baptist Church, and became a minister of that particular faith. A little later, he became a member and minister of the Disciples, or "Church of Christ." Query: Do these two churches believe and teach against the plenary inspiration of the Bible? I propounded a question similar to this, in my last, making it apply in like manner to the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost, which Elder Bays also rejects. What did he do with it? Nothing; absolutely nothing! But he finds plenty of time to quibble, and attempt to convict me of misrepresentation and falsehood, without any proper grounds for either one.

In Elder Bays' last reply he made a vain effort to destroy the force of my claim, that he had taken a stand against the Bible as well as the other sacred books of the church, which claim was founded upon the reading of the first paragraph of what he said concerning the Bible. Attempting to explain this paragraph, Elder Bays stated that he had already said that he "found nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments . . . were written by divine inspiration." I proved his statement to be false by showing that he had previously said nothing on this point, as this was his first paragraph. How does he answer? Does not answer at all! Honorable controversy, for the sake of truth only, *demand*ed, that if he had been unwittingly misled in making this false statement, he should frankly say so, and beg pardon for the error.

I herewith present another exposure, made in my last, of a trick resorted to by Elder Bays in order to convict me of gross misrepresentation, and to which Elder Bays makes no further allusion:—

"Elder Bays quotes from his first letter to H. O. Smith to prove that he was not 'out of fix' nor 'sorely disappointed.' This letter was written before Elder Smith had reached his conclusion, hence the supposed proof does not apply. The quotation comes from a letter bearing date of July 27, while the final conclusion against debate, to which I referred, is contained in a letter of H. O. Smith to Elder Bays, bearing date of July 31. It reads as follows: 'Under these circumstances, I shall take no further notice of your challenge, unless you urge the matter, stating in conclusion that neither myself or my brethren will fail to respond to any legitimate offer to discuss the merits of our church, or the Book of Mormon, when the invitation is presented to us in properly worded propositions.'"

If it were possible for Elder Bays to fix up his own misrepresentations, instead of spending his time in a vain attempt to convict me, it would be much better for him.

In my last I examined and exposed Elder Bays' version of why his opponents in debate failed, when he was affirming and defending the faith and doctrine of the Latter Day Saints. To this he makes no reply.

In this controversy I have been compelled to follow Elder Bays to a great extent, in order to expose his misrepresentations and defend my own positions; and then when he sees that he is badly worsted, and no proper answer can be made, he stoops low enough to accuse me of trying to hide and leave the "real issue;" refers to my efforts as "skilled meanderings through the mazes of an occult criticism;" accounts for the bad work I have done (?) upon the grounds that I am "blinded to justice by a partisan and unfair spirit," calls me his "partisan critic," who "prefers to wander in the mazy labyrinths of verbal obscurity." Well, this is one way of trying to cover up defeat. But may the good Lord deliver us from the "way."

Elder Bays will, I presume, affirm that in the above paragraph I very improperly impugn his motive. My answer is, that I have carefully read and reread his last reply, and in connection with it all the other articles in the controversy; and my conviction is, that Elder Bays' last reply is little more than a cunning, desperate, unfair effort to cover up defeat, at any cost.

I will now pass through the Elder's article, noticing such points as seem to demand it.

Right at the beginning, Elder Bays complains as follows: "I shall not follow Elder Lambert's example, however, and devote a little over five columns of your valuable space to the discussion of the origin of a debate which never materialized and probably never will."

If I occupied that much space in my last article, which I do not concede, I am glad to know that it has produced good results; for, all at once, Elder Bays has lost his interest in that reported challenge at Persia, and has become deeply interested (?) in the Herald's welfare, and the welfare of its readers! A big charge is not wasted if, thereby, you can still the enemy's guns.

In addition to what was said before concerning that much talked of debate, I am prepared to prove by unimpeachable evidence: 1, that no such challenge as reported by Elder Bays was ever made; and 2, that what Elder Bays has since explained to be the challenge made by W. A. Smith, was not accepted by Elder Brown, and as Elder Bays denies ever having accepted it, it was not accepted at all. Whose fault is it, then, that this debate did not materialize? Not ours, surely.

Concerning the part which Elder Joseph Seddon is said to have taken, I have said from the beginning, that, if guilty, as stated by Elder Bays, he did wrong. Moreover, I am prepared to prove that I instructed H. O. Smith, my assistant in charge, to see that the matter was properly investigated, and if Bro. Seddon was found to be guilty, he should be labored and dealt with as the law of the church directs. Why did not Elder Bays acknowledge the validity of my stated position on this point, or else attack it (if he thought it to be wrong), instead of presenting the charge again as though nothing had been said by me concerning it.

Elder Bays says: "I very much regret to be compelled to call your attention to other misrepresentations in the Elder's last article of defense."

How much necessity there was for Elder

Bays to do that which he so much regretted, we shall see as we pass along. Would it not have been better for the Elder to have built over again the structures which had tumbled all to pieces, than to have gone to work building others after the same pattern and in the same manner?

I will not thank the Elder for foregoing "the pleasure of numbering," for it is no accommodation to me. I do not object to those innocent figures, "1," "2," "3," "4," "5," as used in his last; but to the word "misrepresentation" connected with each one of them. I object to this word, thus used, because it is false; and that which is false, I detest.

The first serious charge made against me is that in defending my first allusion to Elder Bays, I said "it was in no sense an 'unprovoked attack,' as Elder Bays puts it. That statement is entirely false."

Elder Bays says this "statement misrepresents every fact connected with the matter." The Elder declares that he has just reread his first allusion to my reference to his attitude, and there is nothing in it from which any such conclusion could be drawn. This charge, it will be noticed, is made upon the monstrous and absurd presumption that if Elder Bays used the words "unprovoked attack," as applied to my first allusion to him, the phrase must necessarily be found in his first reply. This being an entirely false premise, as anyone can see in a moment, away goes his position at once.

The language I quoted is found in Elder Bays' second reply, as published in Saints' Herald for November 17, page 735. Alluding to my reference to his "vexed questions" mentioned in the first part of his paper of resignation, he says: "Why does he prefer to characterize a sentiment thus clearly expressed as 'a man of straw,' thus charging an opponent with insincerity and dishonesty? The reason is obvious. He could not in any other way justify this unprovoked attack, and his whole case would fail." (Italics mine.)

Now, I understand this to refer to my first allusion to Elder Bays, as published in Herald for August 4. But if he now explains that it referred to my first reply, then it is another evidence from the Elder's own pen that there was nothing in my first allusion to him that justified his first attack on my positions. Further, my first reply was simply and only a defense of my former statements, with additional proof, demanded by the character of Elder Bays' first reply, so that it still remains true that it was "in no sense" an "unprovoked attack." That statement was, and is, "entirely false."

Elder Bays evidently wished to impress the reader with the thought that the language imputed to him was deliberately made by me for a purpose. Why did he not say, frankly, that the quotation was contained in his second reply; but that he did not intend to apply it to my first letter? Why?

Elder Bays says: "If Elder Lambert had 'correctly and truthfully' represented my position, I should have no word of complaint to offer, but this he has utterly failed to do."

If I have utterly failed, as stated, it is strange that Elder Bays, with all his mental acumen, has not been able to point out a single incorrect or false statement in any of my letters. I am fully persuaded that my correct representation of his paper of resignation is what has worried the Elder more than all else. Had he come out like a man and told us that he was very skeptical about the origin and claims of the Bible as well as the other sacred books of the church, when he wrote up his resignation, he would have saved me some work, and himself a great deal of work and humiliation.

Elder Bays says much about me hiding and leaving the real issue which I myself had raised. The real issue, as I have before shown, was referred to in my first letter, when I stated that Elder Bays "is now willing, if he can, to tear down what he once sought to build up." In the Elder's first reply he indicated, or implied, very plainly, that my statement was, at least, partially false. I then undertook to prove what I at first supposed the Elder would not be so rash as to question, and in doing so, I affirmed that his willingness, as plainly manifested in 1892, extended so far as to lead him to oppose the Bible as well as the other sacred books of the church. It was not, as Elder Bays claims, my "chief desire and principal motive" to convict him of unbelief "in the claims of the Bible;" but after he made his first and uncalled for reply, some parts of which were false, others misleading, and still others evasive, I concluded that the proper thing to do was to give the reader the full benefit of his own stated position.

Elder Bays says he has challenged me before, and now challenges me "again, to produce from" his "paper of resignation, a single instance in which" he "has ever called in question a single claim made by the Bible."

This is not the same challenge which was answered in my last, but I will accept it at once. It is a plain historical claim of the Bible that Jesus was conceived by the Holy Ghost. It is just as easily proven, from the sacred history, as it is that he was born of Mary the wife of Joseph, or that he was baptized in Jordan.

In Matthew 1:18-21, we have the following: "Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost. Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."

Luke 1:35: "And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

As to the qualifications and credibility of these witnesses upon such an important doctrine, the following is the "claim made by the Bible."

Luke 1:1-4: "Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed."

Now, in direct opposition to the above testimony of Matthew, and of "the angel of the Lord," as given by Matthew and Luke, Elder Bays says, in his paper of resignation, the following: "That Christ's human form had a purely human origin; and that this view agrees with every known law, is apparent. Hence, I believe that Christ had a natural father as well as a natural mother. Otherwise he could not be 'in all things like unto his brethren.' (Heb. 2:17.)"

The reader will please bear in mind that the question between Elder Bays and me is not whether the Bible is reliable, or contradictory, but has Elder Bays opposed any "claim made by the Bible?" The above evidence, and there is more, proves that he has.

Elder Bays feels badly hurt because I answered his ingenious demand, that I should show where he had called "in question any statement of the Bible itself as to its 'inspirational claims,'" by a counter demand which revealed the true character of his challenge. If there was any deficiency in candor, it is found in the demand made by Elder Bays. Let us see. After informing us that he found "nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments, or any particular book in either, were written by divine inspiration;" and after announcing his conclusion that "the dogma of divine inspiration of the Bible," is "wholly untenable," he then calls upon me to prove that he had called in question any of its "inspirational claims!" Pray what inspirational claims had Elder Bays left with the Bible? And does it follow that because the writers of the Bible do not claim to have been inspired to write their respective books (which I do not admit in the sense presented), therefore they were not so inspired? I think not. Should a servant of God preach or prophesy, under the influence of the divine Spirit, without making any claim to inspiration, it would not change the fact that he was inspired. The very fact that Elder Bays failed to accede to my demand concerning the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, is good evidence either that he did not oppose the inspirational claims of these books, or that my failure to accede to his demand, would be no evidence that he had not opposed the Bible.

Elder Bays calls my reply "artless evasion." In reply, I call the reader's attention to Mark eleventh chapter. Verse eighteen states that "the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy him," that is, Jesus. The latter portion of the chapter reads as follows:—

"And they come again to Jerusalem: and as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders, and say unto him, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority to do these things? And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one question, and answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things. The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not believe him? But if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed. And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell. And Jesus answering saith unto them, Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things."

Here, then, is my vindication, and it is complete. Elder Bays did not get me to walk into his trap, and he is terribly disturbed over his failure. I only need to add that had he been present when the above described controversy took place between Jesus on the one hand, and the priests and scribes on the other, he would probably have made the following observations:—

"Jesus is not a Christian gentleman; he is lamentably lacking in candor; 'Men are seldom driven to such extremes as to impel them to such artless evasion as that which characterizes' the reply of Jesus. 'I am sure he has the sympathy of all his friends, my own included.' Clearly, the Scribes and priests are right, and Jesus is wrong!"

Right here, I will run the risk of vexing the Elder's soul with another question: Was the angel inspired who said that Mary should conceive by the Holy Ghost; and, afterwards, that she had conceived by the Holy Ghost?

I did not say that Elder Bays is destitute of frankness and honesty, but that if he had possessed a little more, "notwithstanding his claims, he would have stated that this sentence, about which he says so much, did not injure him nor misrepresent him at all." And now, after his repeated failure to acknowledge the truth, which is the only vital point in this issue; and his failure to even accept my apology for the possible misuse of quotation marks, I adhere to my former statement. Why does not Elder Bays attack the ground upon which I based my statement? I produced what Elder Bays did say in connection with what I had said, and I challenge the proof that I misrepresented him a single hair's breadth, so far as sentiment is concerned.

When I stated Elder Bays' claim to be that the writers of the Bible "were not inspired to write," I had no allusion, of course, to anything outside of the Bible. If, as Elder Bays said, "the dogma of the divine inspiration of the Bible" is "wholly untenable," then is not my statement correct? Elder Bays says that he has "simply and only said that the writers themselves do not claim to have written the books attributed to them by inspiration."

This statement is not true. As I have shown, time after time, Elder Bays claims:

1, that after "special inquiry" into the subject he found "nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments, or any particular book in either, were written by divine inspiration;" and 2, that "the dogma of the divine inspiration of the Bible," is "wholly untenable." (The italics are mine.)

In order, it would seem, to evade the force of my response to Elder Bays' demand, he indulges in a mere quibble, charges misrepresentation, but entirely ignores my response to his demand! Is this what Elder Bays calls meeting the issue?

The following is my statement of the demand which the Elder says is not correct: "Elder Bays calls upon me to point out a passage from the Pentateuch, or from the writings of the prophets, to show that Moses or the prophets wrote by direct inspiration."

The following is what Elder Bays did say:—

"Will Elder Lambert point me to a passage in the entire Pentateuch in which the claim is made that Moses wrote his books by direct inspiration? Will he point to chapter and verse where even the prophets wrote their respective books by direct inspiration?"

Here is the response I made to the demand, about which Elder Bays finds it very convenient to say nothing: "When Elder Bays wrote up his paper of resignation he was dealing with the Latter Day Saints and with them only; therefore, it is pertinent for me to refer him to Genesis 1:1, Inspired Translation, for evidence that God commanded Moses to write. The Lord said to Moses, 'Write the words which I speak.'"

No other books than those found in the Bible, and attributed to its reputed authors, were under consideration; so I did not misrepresent Elder Bays at all. But when he undertakes to state what his demand was, he changes the word "direct," found in his own article, to "divine," inclosing the statement by quotation marks, while I did not quote, but simply gave his meaning.

Now, if Moses and the prophets did not write their respective books by divine inspiration, but they may have written other books not found in the Bible, would it not be an excellent thing if we could procure them so as to have something that was written by inspiration? The doctrine of present revelation, in its practical grandeur, would certainly be a good thing for all who believe as Elder Bays does.

Next, I am accused of making a partial and unfair quotation. Elder Bays surely knows that my quotation being indirect, I had the right to close it at a comma, or where there is no point at all, if I chose to do so. My only reason for making the quotation was that possible injustice to Elder Bays might be avoided. And my only reasons for stopping my quotation where I did were to save space, and because all that part which I did not give is plainly implied in that which was given.

Now Elder Bays proposes to "dispel" from my mind the "illusion" that he opposed the inspirational claims of the Bible as well as those of the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. But how does he propose to dispel this illusion? Why, by quoting, in part, what I furnished in full, in my last defense. And in furnishing such parts of his paper as he sees fit; he italicizes, and even capitalizes, where there are neither italics nor capitals in the original! And, after furnishing his quotation, amended by italics and capitals, he proceeds to say:—

"This declaration precludes the possibility that any part of the book in question [the Doctrine and Covenants] was written by divine inspiration, and for the obvious reason that every paragraph, every line, originated in the same brain and was written by the same hand, and that brain and that hand were Joseph Smith's."

So the Elder has succeeded in saying something popular and smart, even if it is untrue, for which, of course, we must give him due credit.

Suppose, now, for the sake of the argument, we allow that no part of the Doctrine and Covenants "was written by divine inspiration." What follows? Why, according to Elder Bays' remarks on the Bible, neither the Old Testament nor the New, nor any particular book in either, was written by divine inspiration. In fact, the inspiration of the Bible is an indefensible dogma. This places the two books on an exact equality so far as being written by inspiration is concerned. There is, however, this difference; he makes the Doctrine and Covenants to claim "divine inspiration," but denies that the Bible writers make any such claim. But in order to properly estimate this claimed difference, we must inquire what the Elder means by "divine inspiration," and we find him defining the phrase to mean, as used by him, the same as "plenary or verbal inspiration." Elder Bays has not shown, and cannot show, that either the Book of Mormon or the Doctrine and Covenants, claims to be plenary or verbally inspired, according to the theological definitions given to these terms. So, when Elder Bays "unreservedly" and absolutely declared against the "plenary or verbal" inspiration of these two books, he was guilty again of vigorous opposition to "a man of straw."

As to the second part of this remarkable paragraph, that is, that the whole thing originated in the brain of Joseph Smith, and was written by his hand, this origin was not ascribed to the book in his paper of resignation, hence is of no force in this connection. Clark Braden claims that Sidney Rigdon made the revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. Would it not be a good idea for these two champions to hold a conference and fix this matter up, if they can?

After furnishing us with a short quotation from his paper, on the Book of Mormon, Elder Bays comments as follows: "Will my venerable critic pretend to say that I have placed the Bible on the same moral and spiritual level with the Book of Mormon?"

My answer is this: The claims of the Book of Mormon are left by Elder Bays as an open question. Notwithstanding all that he has said, the book may be just what it claims to be. So far as the moral level of the Book of Mormon is concerned, Elder Bays has placed it a little above the Bible. This is what he says on this point:—

"As to the ethical status of this book, I think no unfavorable comment can reasonably be made. Its moral precepts are unquestionably good. They are all that its friends claim for it, and, indeed, superior in some respects to those of the Bible."

And in addition to this, which is his first paragraph on the Book of Mormon, we have the statement found in his quotation, in which he admits that the "moral precepts" of the book "may be regarded as faultless."

Next, Elder Bays comes to the Bible. But instead of quoting the first and strongest paragraph against the inspiration of the Bible, he cunningly skips this one and quotes the second, where, as I stated before, an additional and incidental claim is set forth against the doctrine of plenary inspiration; and then he speciously adds: "This declaration is characterized by my partisan critic as 'evident unbelief in the claims of the Bible.'"

Not so. My position is, as shown by my first reply, that his article, as a whole (that is, on the Bible), shows "his evident unbelief in the claims of the Bible;" and that what he said in the paragraph quoted by the Elder, about plenary inspiration, was not sufficient to hide it. Immediately after making that statement, I added these words: "I hereby give his own words when writing up his objections to the Bible."

This is followed by a quotation of the first paragraph entire. This is a gigantic misrepresentation, and is almost enough to stagger one's confidence in human integrity.

Under the caption of "The Bible," not one word is said in favor of its ethics, or moral teachings; and as already admitted, nothing is said in favor of the veracity and authority of the Bible. We may judge that his confidence in the authority of the Bible was not very strong, when upon such grounds as were stated by him, he could so easily set aside the purported message of the angel of God concerning the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost, as stated by Matthew and Luke.

If we were to admit that Elder Bays has "unreservedly" and absolutely opposed the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, this would be no proof that he has not also opposed the Bible.

I now wish to make still plainer, if possible, a point made in my last, which the Elder did not notice. That is, that whatever meaning Elder Bays attaches to "inspiration," "plenary or verbal inspiration," "divine inspiration," as applied to the Bible, he must allow the same thing when applied to the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants.

We are compelled to adopt one of two conclusions: either that Elder Bays meant to reject every inspirational claim of the Bible, and made for the Bible, or that he meant to use these terms and phrases synonymously and interchangeably, meaning "plenary or verbal inspiration" all the time. The latter conclusion is the one we must adopt to be in harmony with his attempted defense, though, in truth, there is a marked difference between plenary and verbal inspiration, and a still greater difference between inspiration and verbal inspiration.

Abbott, in his Dictionary of Religious Knowledge, defines verbal inspiration, in part, as follows: "By verbal inspiration is meant the immediate communication to the writers of every word and syllable and letter of what they wrote. It has been supposed that the writers were in a state of ecstasy, in which their own moral life was suspended, and they wrote in a state of semi-unconsciousness, with little or no understanding of the subject."

Just think of Elder Bays presenting his opposition to and rejection of "verbal inspiration," as a leading reason why he should resign his ministerial office in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints!

"Plenary Inspiration is a general term, meaning inspiration which is full, complete, entire. . . . It may, perhaps, however, be taken as a designation of the faith of those who believe the Bible to be inspired in all its parts, and the writers in all their faculties."

Now, I wish to ask: Does the Book of Mormon, or the Book of Doctrine and Covenants lay claim to verbal, or plenary inspiration? If not, then Elder Bays is surely guilty of wasting his strength in toppling over a huge man of straw, or else he meant to oppose all kinds of inspirational claims for all three of the books when he wrote up his resignation.

All this proves my statement, out of which the Elder tries to make capital, to be true. This is the statement: "Section one of the third reason, rejects 'the inspiration of the Bible,' or else sections one and two do not reject the inspiration of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon. Elder Bays can take which horn of the dilemma suits him best."

But the Elder wants to know how this proposition would work if it were reversed. My answer is, splendidly. I considered all this before writing it, careless as the Elder thinks me to be. Here it is as reversed by him:—

"Sections one and two do not reject the inspiration of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon, therefore, section one of the third reason does not reject the inspiration of the Bible!"

Just so! This leaves the inspirational claims of the three books all intact. But where does it place Elder Bays? Is this the horn of the dilemma you wish to take hold of, Elder? If so, we will take back all we have said about your opposition to the Bible, and accept your explanation in good faith, though it would compel us, of course, to decide that you are not a "very careful critic." But, then, this is a little thing compared with your salvation. Ah! the dilemma is all right, you see, and I still say you can have this horn, or the other, just which you please. You must take one, for there is no escape; and whichever one you take, you can depend upon it, you will be badly gored with the other.

Elder Bays quotes me as follows: "Elder Bays not only rejects the inspiration of the Bible, but he rejects the exceeding plain accounts of Matthew and Luke as to the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost."

This Elder Bays represents as withdrawing from my "more advanced positions" and gracefully falling "back into that stronghold, known as the last ditch."

I meant just what I said, fell back from nothing, and presented this as additional evidence of the Elder's opposition to the Bible. No matter what is said about supposed contradictions, I am prepared to show that whoever rejects the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost is to that extent in direct opposition to the Bible. If not, then the whole Bible history is rendered uncertain and unreliable. But the question between me and Elder Bays is not whether the Bible is true, but, rather, did he to any extent oppose the claims of the Bible, as believed and taught by the Latter Day Saints when he offered his resignation to the church. However, a conflict has not been certainly established. It does not necessarily follow that either claim is false, even if there is a degree of conflict; because it may be accounted for upon the grounds of imperfect, or partial, presentation of that which, of itself, is true and harmonious.

The Bible does say that Jesus was conceived by the Holy Ghost; but it does not say, anywhere, that Joseph begat Christ; and yet Elder Bays rejects the former, and accepts the latter, and at the same time claims to be in harmony with the Bible!

I pass over some matter which Elder Bays spreads out on paper, but which does not touch the issues between us, and come directly to the following:—

"Does either Matthew or Luke, or any other New Testament writer, as for that matter, declare, directly or by implication, that his account of Christ's conception and birth was written by divine inspiration?"

Suppose they do not so claim, does it therefore follow that they were not inspired? And suppose, further, they record a very important matter, and without inspiration, which is said to have transpired in their day, and in their midst; and also affirm that an angel of God declared it, is it therefore false? If so, what becomes of the Bible, "the divine inspiration" of which Elder Bays has rejected? I believe these men who wrote the biographies of Christ, were inspired to write, as much so, at least, as they were inspired to preach. Why not?

The following is remarkable: "As neither Elder Lambert nor his church believes that these accounts were written by divine inspiration, as he now bravely confesses, then why, I ask, in the name of common honesty, and of common justice, should I be anathematized and stigmatized by Apostle Lambert as an unbeliever 'in the claims of the Bible?'"

Elder Lambert has made no such confession either for himself or the church! Here is exactly what I said: "As to 'plenary inspiration,' it is highly impertinent for Elder Bays to keep flinging that at me, inasmuch as I have never claimed it for any of the sacred books of the church, and he himself says that I probably do not believe it."

"Do you see the difference, Elder?"

As to the church, Elder Bays himself said that he never heard one of her ministers teach it, and he never taught it himself. And yet, if his present fix-up is reliable, we must conclude that one of the leading reasons why he found it necessary to resign was, because he had discovered the plenary "inspiration of the Bible" claim to be "wholly untenable!"

If any "mark of infamy" rests upon Elder Bays for opposing the Bible, I did not place it there. I have simply and only pointed out, in a gentlemanly manner, the things set forth in his own paper, over his own signature, quoting him in full, so that the reader might see that I did not misrepresent him. And the Elder surely knows that I have not "denounced with curses" because of his evident unbelief. And then, as a climax to this paragraph, Elder Bays expresses the hope that I will yet "see and confess" my "folly" for doing the very things which he falsely charges against me!!

Before passing to Elder Bays' closing words, I wish to notice, in brief (though the issues between us do not demand it), Elder Bays' repeated challenge for me to show that any of the Bible writers wrote their respective books by direct inspiration. What kind of proof will satisfy the Elder I am not able to say. The mortal soulist demands that we point to chapter and verse where it says, in so many words, that man is possessed of an immortal soul. We cannot do it. Is man, therefore, wholly mortal?

Revelation 1: 10, 11, reads as follows: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia," etc.

Also, verse 19: "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter."

This shows that John was commanded of Jesus Christ to "write in a book" and send it to the seven churches. He received this command while "in the Spirit." He wrote the Book of Revelation and addressed it to the seven churches in Asia. This is sufficient. Will the Elder say that this furnishes us with no proof "to sustain the belief that the" Book of Revelation was "written by divine inspiration"?

The truth is, that while the Bible contains much valid evidence to sustain the claim that writers of both the Old Testament and the New wrote by divine inspiration, Elder Bays usually so words his demands as to hide, or shut off, this valuable proof, in order, it would seem, to hide his real attitude towards the Bible, at the time of his resignation. This indicates that his lack of true regard for important Bible claims still continues.

Now, Elder Bays is nearing the end. He says:—

"I hope both Elder Lambert and your readers may be able to see, as I am quite sure they will, that a man may question the 'dogma of plenary inspiration,' and yet not be an unbeliever 'in the claims of the Bible.'"

As usual, the real issue expressed by Elder Bays in his paper is avoided. The question is this: Can a man "reject" the "inspiration of the Bible;" the "divine inspiration of the Bible;" "plenary or verbal inspiration" of the Bible, together with the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost, as false, without, at the same time, opposing "the claims of the Bible?"

I quote again:—

"And now, in conclusion, if Elder Lambert is willing to let the matter rest where it is, each having written his 'article of defense,' No. 2, we will now shake hands 'across the bloody chasm,' and remain as good friends in the future as we have been in the past."

The vital point in this paragraph is that Elder Lambert should "let the matter rest where it is;" that is, that he should make no reply. Wouldn't that be nice?

Elder Bays has conceded that in my first allusion to him he was not misrepresented "in any important particular." He wrote a reply, beginning it with a quotation from my letter. This reply contains direct and implied positions which are false, and up to date, he has utterly failed to sustain them. This reply, as already shown, was without caption, and has not been included in Elder Bays' enumeration. To this article I replied, defending my positions. Elder Bays wrote again under the caption of "Reply to Elder Lambert." In answer to this I wrote my Reply, "No. 2," and we now have Elder Bays' "Reply to Elder Lambert.—No. 2," which should be no. 3. So with my "Reply to Elder Bays.—No. 3," I am "willing to let the matter rest where it is," and "shake hands 'across the bloody chasm,' and remain as good friends in the future as we have been in the past;" but I must be excused from bidding the Elder "God speed" in anything more than that which I conceive to be true and right. And, in conclusion, whenever Elder Bays informs me, definitely and plainly, which horn of that dilemma he proposes to cling to, I will gladly adjust myself to the situation.

MT. CARMEL, Ill., Feb. 22.

Editors Herald:—I moved from Birdseye branch, Indiana, in the year 1890; am sorry to say that the evils of this world came near leading me to ruin and disgrace while at Birdseye; and if I offended any brother or sister I ask forgiveness, and I thank God that I felt impressed to come as a humble penitent to the Giver of all good gifts, and to plead for mercy. My wife and I are the only saints that I know of in this part of the country. Bro. A. C. Barmore preached here a week or ten days over a year ago, which left a good impression. I would be pleased to see some elder come this way. I believe there are honest-hearted men and women here who have never heard the angel-message. The sanctified M. Es. are numerous here. We are poor, and getting old and feeble, but would welcome an elder or any brother passing this way. Bro. V. D. Baggerly stopped one night with us last summer, which was a great feast to us; but when I read of his death in Herald of January 26 it was very, very sad news to me; I feel to sympathize with the bereaved.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN CRITCHFIELD.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, March 4.

Editors Herald:—Our Sunday school convention and conference held in this place commencing February 24, and ending the 27th, was truly excellent. I think we never had a better time. The work of the convention would be hard to beat. Bro. Charles Fry, superintendent, with his able corps of willing and efficient workers in this line of business, also General Superintendent T. A. Hougas.

In our conference work every one seemed to enjoy God's Holy Spirit. We were a unit in all matters of business brought up for consideration. Preaching services were enjoyed by all, both members and non-members, as expressed. Social meeting on Sunday afternoon was really one long to be remembered. God's Spirit rested upon the entire congregation. Our hearts were melted down in tears of gratitude to our heavenly Father for the gospel of these latter days.

We shall stay here over the next Sabbath, then work in Hamburg and Mill Creek the most of this month. We are more than pleased to be able to state that our work is onward and upward in this district. We are now united as a band of brethren, and are determined by the help afforded from the Master to push the work on to victory. Praying for its final consummation, we are

Yours fraternally,

HENRY KEMP.

Editors Herald:—The Jenkins and Paine debate commenced the 16th and lasted until the 24th. H. A. Jenkins of the Seventh Day Adventists affirmed that his church was identical in organization, doctrine, and practice with the church of Jesus Christ, as set forth in the New Testament scriptures. He failed to establish his church, and claimed that there was no apostasy; but claimed that the church was handed down from the Christ to the present time. His strongest fight was on the soul-sleeping theory and the Sabbath. He also claimed that the grave was the hell.

Bro. Paine told him according to his theory that all the Adventists that had died had gone to hell; then called his attention to the passage of scripture that the wicked shall be turned into hell, and all those nations that forget God.

Bro. Paine affirmed the Latter Day Saints Church. Jenkins could do nothing but throw dust and misuse Bro. Joseph and the saints. Bro. Paine defended the church nobly, and there was lots of prejudice removed. People who had never been to hear our preaching came every night. The saints were strengthened, and people outside of the church claimed Jenkins never made a point. After the debate the chairman gave Jenkins this question, "Who organized your church?"

after he had been trying to establish it for eight nights; so you can see how he established it. I have not heard of anyone but what thought that Bro. Paine won the victory by one hundred per cent. The debate has done much good to the cause. The writer was moderator for Bro. Paine. The last two nights Jenkins would stammer, and he weakened so he could not do anything. We have been greatly blessed in our little branch this fall.

Yours in the gospel,
G. W. JOHNSON.

FENTRESS, Ind. Ty., Feb. 28.

Editors Herald:—We are twenty-four miles east of the Oklahoma line, in the Creek Nation, on the North Canadian River. There are no saints near here that we know of, only myself and father. I was ordained to the office of priest by Eli M. Wildermuth and B. H. Case, August 22, 1890, and made my first effort to preach yesterday. Some of these Indian people have been taking some interest in our belief, and asked me to talk some for them; in consequence of which I went and made them a talk. I had to have an interpreter. I talked about an hour and a quarter, and gave the meeting to them. Two of them were Methodist preachers, and both said they were well pleased with my talk and with our doctrine, and asked me back again. I believe we can do some good here if we do our part. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the saints, that I may hold out faithful to the end.

Your brother in the gospel,
J. N. PERKINS.

NORMAN, O. T., March 2.

Editors Herald:—In November last I moved my family to this territory, settled in "D" County, some one hundred and fifty miles northwest of this place. Have been traveling and preaching much of the time since with horse and buggy. Left home first of February to attend the conference at Sumner, one hundred and fifty miles east, and from there came here to debate with a Disciple minister by request of Bro. C. R. Duncan, who was unable to attend to it because of lung trouble. Debate was held ten miles east of here. I preached on Saturday and Sunday evenings in the settlement, and begun the debate on Monday evening; held ten sessions, ending February 28. Then came here and preached last night in Bro. Niles' house; good interest. Will preach again to-night, and until time to reach a place, some forty miles northwest, where they expect me by Sunday to preach a funeral discourse. From there I shall make my way home, preaching at various places where I have been before. There was quite an interest near my home when I left, and Bro. Frank Vroman and James Yates (my stepson) have been preaching since I left.

My opponent behaved himself quite well until the last speech, when he got beyond control, refusing to subside when called to order by the moderators; then Bro. Duncan threw him the Rules of Order, and told him to go on. After the close his brethren insisted strongly for another chance at us in debate, showing how sore they felt, when Bro. Duncan told them that when we got our tent in May he would accommodate them. There is much interest manifested here, and wherever I have been. I was preaching in Kansas, Missouri, and Indian Territory from July last until I came here. Held a debate with a Baptist minister at Miami, Indian Territory, in October, where I think good was done. Am getting old and feeble, but my lungs are strong, and I preach most every night by resting during the day. Myself and two stepsons have taken homesteads in "D" County, and there is much good land there yet for homesteads. We have a branch of twenty-one members. A railway was surveyed within three miles of us in January. The county is settling very fast. Saints (homeless) might do well to look here.

As ever yours in gospel bonds,
D. S. CRAWLEY.

RICH HILL, Mo., March 7.

Editors Herald:—Since writing to you last I have made a tour through the Spring River district. I find the district in better condition than when I was through it three years ago last summer. The conference at Webb City passed off without a jar or any discord whatever. All seemed to enjoy themselves from beginning to close. It closed last night. Bro. O. P. Sutherland was reelected president of the district. Some of the branches are in very good condition; some a little low in spirituality, and lacking a little in promptness. There is still room for improvement in all; but all that is needed is promptness in executing the law on transgressors and proper labor by branch officers, and the district will soon be in good condition. I find there are plenty of calls in the regions round about the branches for preaching, so that all the local ministry can have appointments out and preach every Sunday if they will. There is also ample room for the general missionaries to open new fields and raise up new branches; an excellent field for labor. They are also improving in the financial department of the work, and seem willing to understand their duty; and if the Bishop's agent and general authorities will remind them of duty in this as well as everything else, I shall look for good reports from that field in the future.

The sisters in some branches are working hard to raise means to help on the work. In Webb City they want and need a larger house, and the sisters are trying to make money to help build a larger one. (Better not begin it until they have sufficient means assured.)

At Maysville, Arkansas, the saints were closed out of a union church they had been using; and now they have rented, seated, and put a bell to a new building that was built for a storehouse, and control it altogether, in fulfillment of a prophecy given after they were closed out of the other building. It turned the sympathy of the people in favor of the saints when the Presbyterians locked the door of the union house; and there seems to be a prospect for an ingathering there soon, if wise and faithful labor is performed. I am booked here for three nights, and expect to go to Holden to Independence district conference, to be held there next Saturday and Sunday. I expect to be at Lamoni, Iowa, by the 23d, by request of the Bishop.

Believing in the final success of the gospel call, to gather the saints out of the midnight darkness of spiritual Babylon, and working to assist them all I can, to be among the wise virgins when Christ shall come, I am in the faith,

G. H. HILLIARD.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 5.

Editors Herald:—Another conference year is now drawing to a close and I am led to ask, "Watchman, what of the night?" what will the record of the year just past be? how many failures have been made? how many hearts have been made glad by our labors to them, and how many tears have been shed because of our actions towards them? The year's record has been made and must be met by all sooner or later, and what will it be? Will there be a balance in my favor, or will it be against me? As I view it, I have tried to do my duty to all, without fear or favor to anyone. That I may have made mistakes I am willing to admit; and who has not? But they have not been intentional on my part.

The most of my labor this year, or since the first of July, has been confined to the city of Minneapolis; and as I view the past I can see that advancement has been made; a better understanding is had, a better feeling prevails, and a stronger determination to live better is manifest by the members of the branch here. A good many have heard the gospel, some of whom will never obey it; others have heard it who will in time receive it. The labor will be as "bread cast upon the waters"—will "return after many days."

The work in this State is in better condition than ever before. A better understanding from the outside is had, and many are learning of our faith and work that knew nothing about us before. By looking at my diary I find that my first sermon preached in this city was on February 3, 1889. I then held a series of meetings in private houses, and as a result four gave their names for baptism, but because of prejudice and the influence of friends it was deferred, and I presume they were never baptized after that. As far as I have been able to learn I did the first preaching ever done here by any of our ministry. The next was done by Brn. A. H. Smith and J. Arthur Davis, in 1891. Four were baptized in the fall of that year, and from that the work has spread till now there is a membership of fifty-four. Some of these have not been baptized here; but have joined by letter. But of this number I have baptized seventeen, and I find that my name is quite prominent on the branch record. Others, perhaps, might have done better than I; but I have tried to do my duty to all, and have stood by the work here when others would not.

One reason why I have done this is, it was shown me that this was my work, and obedient to the heavenly vision I have tried to do the Master's will. Better results would have obtained if all had labored in harmony with the law which says: "He that heareth him that is sent heareth the Lord who sent him, if he be called of God and be sent by the voice of the church."—D. and C. 120:5. This is in harmony with the teachings of the Savior while here upon the earth, for he said to his servants then, "He that heareth you heareth me, and he that heareth me, heareth Him that sent me." This is good wholesome counsel and if heeded by all would bring peace and prosperity to the church. The laws also that, "The traveling presiding councils of the church being made by the law, their calling and the voice of the church the directing, regulating and advising authorities of the church, and representing it abroad, should when present in either district or branch be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such, their counsel and advice be sought and respected when given; and in cases of conflict, or extremity, their decision should be listened to and regarded, subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law."—D. C. 120:4. This is a plain statement of the law and of the duties of the members of the church; and if honored would bring peace, and God's work would spread, and his name be glorified. We can only advance as a people and as individuals by keeping the whole law. As the member grows, so grows the church, for it is the individual member that helps constitute the body of Christ. So the degree that each member advances and grows, to that same degree the body grows. And to the degree that I as a member dishonor self, I dishonor and disgrace the body. If all could realize this, and act accordingly, it seems to me that we would be nearer that higher life which the church has been exhorted to come up to so long.

The servants of God are compelled sometimes to do that which they dislike to do because it is written that they are to see that the law is kept. If no one transgressed the law, much of the burden would be removed, and a better feeling would exist. And why cannot the member keep the law as well as the servant? They are both under the same one. If the priest keeps the member in order, who will receive the reward? The priest or the member? The priest, of course, for he has done the work; and all are to be judged by their works. "Honor to whom honor is due," is an old saying, and will apply here as well as anywhere else; and I believe that every one should be honored in his position, and due respect given him. The deacon in the branch is entitled to just as much respect while in the performance of his duties as the President of the church is in his; and unless he receives it the office he holds is not honored, and God's work is hindered.

That a better understanding is had in this mission in regard to the law is evident, for it is more fully kept. Especially is this so concerning the law of tithing; more has been paid into the storehouse this year than in any one year before, and there must be a reason for this. What, then, is the reason? It has been more fully taught than ever before. Who taught it? Those whose duty it is to teach it—the Bishopric, Brn. E. L. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard. Bro. Kelley laid the foundation one year ago, and this year Bro. Hilliard came and built the building. Bro. McLeod, the Bishop's agent, opened the door, and the members came and filled the building; thus the law was honored by being kept, God's name was glorified, and good will prevails.

I expect to leave the city the first of next week, as I have several places which I desire to visit on my way home. I shall leave the State with the consciousness that I have tried to do my duty as an officer of the church—as one sent out to represent its faith, and am willing to abide the result of my labor.

For the gospel's sake,

E. ABBOTT STEDMAN.

INMAN, Neb., March 4.

Editors Herald:—Since my return from the Sunday School Institute held at St. Joseph, Missouri, I have neglected to write to the church paper, for which I offer an apology; which is, I thought that others had something more interesting to write than I.

I returned home December 31 and did not return to my field only to attend the Sunday school convention and conference of the Northern Nebraska district, at Omaha, January 28-30, till February 14. While from my field I preached at Mahoney schoolhouse several nights, where deep interest was shown on the part of a few; at Mondamin, where a good audience greeted me; at Persia, where I preached the funeral sermon of a child, and followed this by a Sunday evening service which was largely attended; and in the Magnolia branch, where the Spirit of God bore me witness that my feeble efforts were acceptable. I was much cheered by the presence and assistance of God's Spirit in all the labor above-mentioned, and the advancement seen in the lives of the saints and the increased efficiency of many of the Sunday school workers.

On the 10th of January another son came to claim a home with us, who was named Mark Emery. This event was my only excuse for being so long from my field, if any excuse is desired by any. While trying to assist as nurse, housekeeper, and general roustabout, I rested by preparing the report of the Institute work at St. Joseph, replying to a lengthy communication from W. K. Lay, of Columbus (who is seeking to have his claims as a leader in the church recognized, while not a member of it, and contrary to every principle of law God has revealed to his church governing priesthood), and in writing several articles for different purposes, besides replying to numerous correspondents, whom I had neglected writing to on account of the work of the Institute.

I started to my field February 13, stopping on my way at Council Bluffs that eve, occupying at the church, and on Thursday and Friday eve I returned, also occupying at the church, assisting Bro. T. W. Williams with a week's meetings, he feeling quite poorly on account of contracting a severe cold. An excellent spirit present during my ministrations there, especially the last eve. At Omaha I held two sessions in giving instructions in Sunday school work.

From the 19th to the 21st I occupied at the Plattford church, west of Springfield, and although the weather and roads were bad, yet some good audiences greeted me, and a desire was expressed for my soon return.

Came to Clearwater the 24th and on the 25th to 27th attended the convention and conference of the Central Nebraska district, where was manifested a marked improvement in Sunday school work during the last six months judging from the teachers' and school reports, and where was present large audiences and much of the Spirit. I remained there till Thursday p. m., when I came here and preached last night to a very attentive audience. Preparations are still continuing for the Shelton reunion to be held from May 31 to June 5 inclusive, a notice of which will appear in a short time from the committee. The calls for labor never were so urgent in this mission to my knowledge, and yet the missionary force is and has been somewhat crippled. Bro. S. Wood is at home on account of his wife's sickness, and Bro. W. A. Smith is doing effectual work in Keyapaha County among some of his relatives.

The most satisfactory work has been done where the brethren have labored of any year I have been on the mission, and the saints are making in several places a very effective effort to purify themselves, and present to their fellow men a more godlike example.

The injunction of Paul to "owe no man anything," has not been observed by several, and because of which they have suffered trouble and loss, and the church has suffered and is suffering reproach. I am sure it would be pleasing that this injunction of Paul's be more strictly observed by the church, as well as its membership, for a failure to do this is the cause of much of the difficulty now existing in the church. The members should not owe God anything, neither his church, nor each other, in a financial way; and this would relieve many from owing slight grudges to each other, thus avoiding and overcoming many of the present causes for trouble and anxiety.

I am in correspondence with a minister of the Seventh-day Adventist Church looking to a discussion in the near future, he having sent the propositions, and I accepting them; but further arrangements have not been made.

May grace and peace attend you all, and Zion's redemption be hastened is my prayer.

J. F. MINTUN.

DOW CITY, Iowa, March 8.

Editors Herald:—We are still in the faith and believe it is defensible, notwithstanding the persistent efforts of the would-be mighty ones to destroy the foundation upon which we are built; though, strange to say, these mighty ones have nothing better or even as good to offer in place of the faith they would destroy. They seem to think that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is in error because it believes and teaches too much Bible. They seem to think it is wiser and better and safer to teach in substance that Christ, the great Teacher sent down from heaven, came and taught, suffered, and died all for the purpose of establishing for the time being a transient Christianity. However, be this as it may, there are few saints who have been baptized of water and of the Spirit who would exchange their faith for anything else. They love their religion, not because it brings them earthly wealth, honor, or fame; but because it brings to their souls the testimony that Jesus is the Christ, and his teaching the power of God unto salvation to all who believe and obey his glorious precepts. Who would exchange a positive testimony for an uncertainty? Who would part with sweet communion with Christ through the Spirit for a "guess so"? Who would depreciate the precious promise, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine," for a doubtful hope? How much better it is to be able to say with Paul, "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air." "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Conference of Galland's Grove district held at this place the 26th and 27th, was a grand success, in every sense of the word. The Spirit was present, and its comforting influence enjoyed by the saints, and its manifestation in the gifts of tongues and interpretation of tongues bore testimony that God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit were the same to-day as in days of yore; that the saints were worthy of his blessings whenever they are obedient sons and daughters.

The district Sunday school convention and entertainment, held the 24th and 25th, were good, instructive, and entertaining. The Spirit was present here also to encourage the workers in and teachers of righteousness, and to show the approval of him in whose name the work was done.

The writer was favored with the privilege of attending Little Sioux district conference at Woodbine, Iowa, the 5th and 6th inst., which was also a success. The good Spirit was there to cheer and gladden and encourage the people of God. Its manifestations in the gifts of tongues and interpretation of tongues were clear, grand, encouraging, and in perfect harmony with the teaching of the word of God. How much assumption, misrepresentation, slander, and persecution would it take to make those saints who attended these spiritual feasts believe that they were deceived, or that the gifts and blessings promised by the Savior are not to be received and enjoyed by the true believer in this day and age of the world? However, we should not soon forget the admonition given to be faithful, prayerful, humble, good, kind, true, united, and persevering. If each and every one will put the instruction given into practice how beneficial it will be to them and the work they love! May God give each and all the necessary grace to accomplish the required work and to endure unto the end. Hopefully,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Kemp to this district. Carried. The following preamble and resolutions were presented and adopted: Whereas, unlimited errors and consequent trouble to the Church Recorder and district secretaries has been caused by the irregular way in which five of our branches have been named, and whereas, as long as such names are retained and used there is no hope that the situation will improve, and, whereas, the General Church Recorder has suggested that it would be well to change such names as Farm Creek, Elm Creek, Keystone, etc., to the name of the nearest post office, therefore be it resolved, 1. That we recommend that the names of the Keystone, Plum Creek, and Union branches be changed to Emerson, Thurman, and Riverton, respectively, these being names found in the U. S. Postal Guide. 2. That no names of places in the U. S. not found in the U. S. Postal Guide be used in items on record or reports. 3. That all names of settlements, deserted villages, or towns having no government post office now on our records, be changed to the nearest post office or the post office most convenient now in existence. 4. That the branch clerks see that all names of persons and places are properly spelled and otherwise correct before recording them. 5. That full names, not initials, be given record. 6. That incomplete or incorrect items received on letters of removal be corrected and completed so far as possible before recording and reporting. 7. That all branches reclaim all names of members not properly removed. 8. That each branch be required to provide its clerk with an official United States Postal Guide. The district president presented the case of J. B. Heide and stated that all was adjusted except one item. It was then moved: That when Bro. Heide shall have settled the one item and furnished voucher therefor that his elder's license be restored to him. After considerable discussion it was moved to refer to a committee of three, they to report at next conference. The motion to refer prevailed. Committee appointed were A. Badham, S. Orton, and H. F. Durfey. The following were appointed delegates to General Conference and empowered to cast full vote of district: Srs. Etta Ray, Vanderpool, Ethel Skank, Blanche Andrews; Brn. W. D. Leadingham, G. Kemp, H. Kemp, M. W. Gaylord, W. W. Gaylord, Charles Cline, Bro. and Sr. T. A. Hougas, Bro. and Sr. Wm. Leeka, Bro. and Sr. D. Hougas, Sr. Mary E. Pace, and Sr. M. W. Gaylord. Voted that the next conference convene at Farm Creek chapel, June 4, ten a. m. Preaching by Elders D. Hougas, H. Kemp, and J. W. Waldsmith. Social services in charge of H. F. Durfey and A. Badham. Archæological Committee's Report, WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

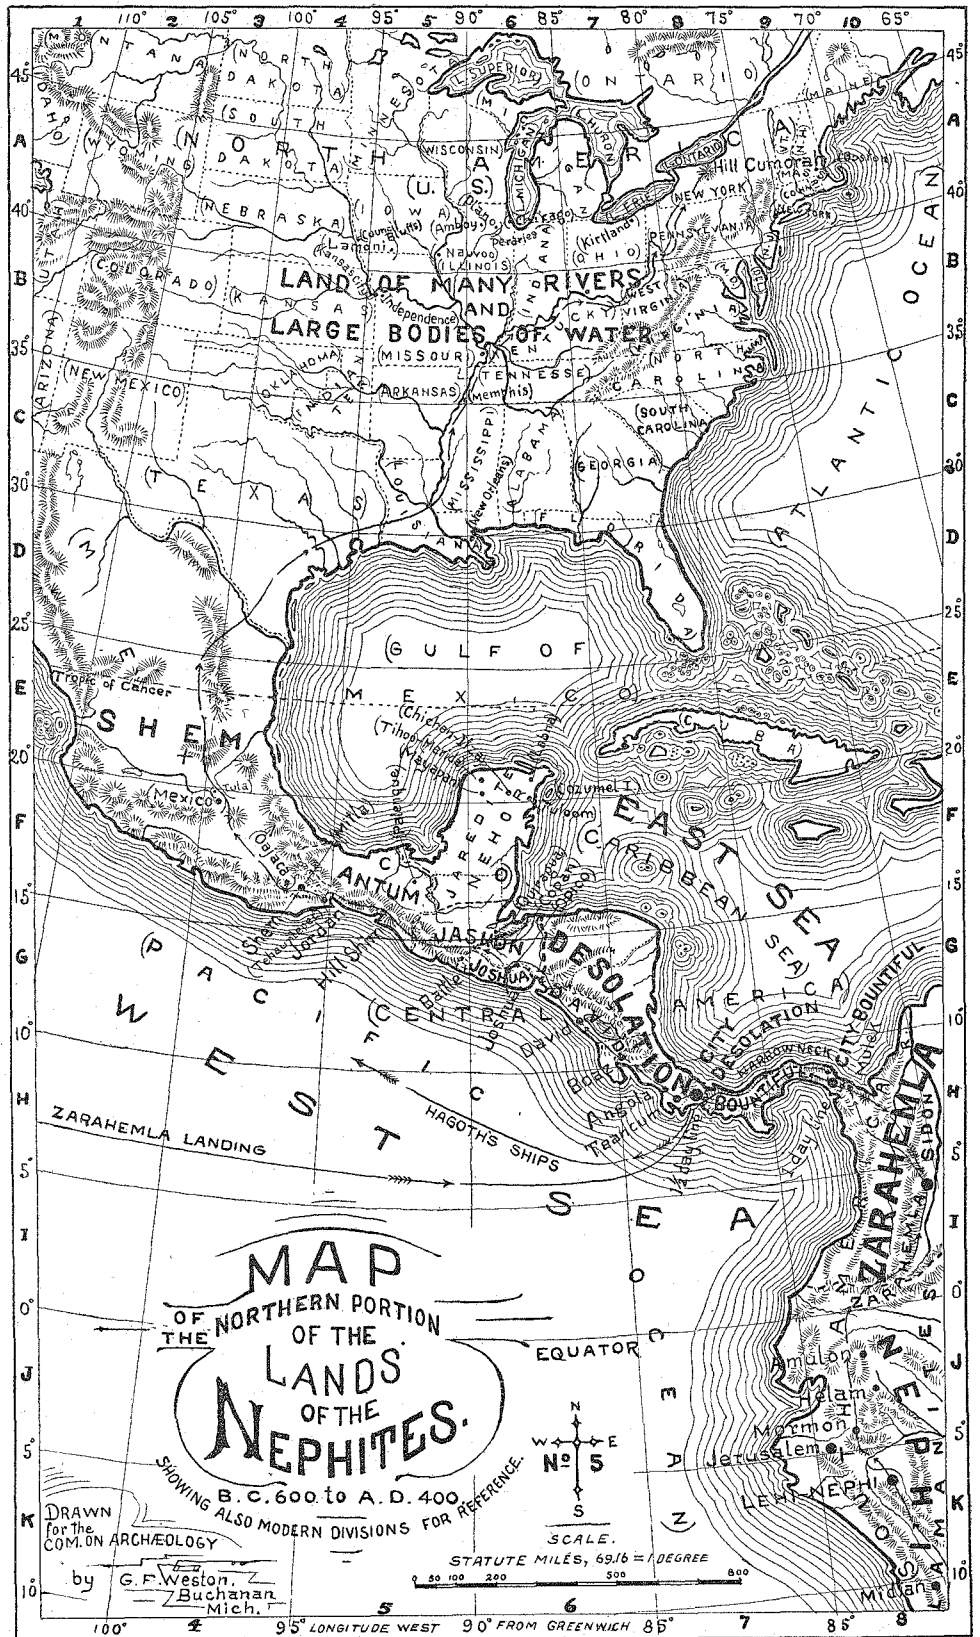

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

MATTHEW THIRTEENTH IN BROAD SCOTCH.

MATTHEW 13. Parables and wyss-sayins poundit; and a wheen o' them made plain. Lat ilka man tak tent!

1. O that vera day gaed Jesus oot o' the hoose, and sat doon by the side o' the Loch.

2. And great gatherins o' folk cam thegither till him, sae that he gaed intil a boat, and sat doon; and the hail o' the folk stude on the shore.

3. And he spak mony things till them in parables; and quo' he: "Tak tent! The sawer gaed oot to saw.

4. "And in his sawin, a neiffu' was mis-cuisten on the fit-road, and eaten up wi' the burdies.

5. "And some fell on the stanerie bits, whaur the yird was jimp: and it brairdit bonnie, for the mool was thin.

6. "And whan the sun raise heigh, it birsl't up; and, for that it had nae rute, it dwined awa.

7. "And some fell whaur thorns had been; and up cam the thorns, and chokit it.

8. "And some fell on the gude grun', and brocht forth fruit—this a hunner, that saxty, and the ither thretty.

9. "Wha has lugs for hearing, lat him hear!"

10. And, drawin nar, his disciples say, "Why soud ye speak till them in parables?"

11. And he answer't them, "It is, that till you it has been gien to ken the things o' the Heevenlie Kingdom: but to them it isna sae gien.

12. "For wha has, to him sal be gien, and he sal hae rowth o't; but wha hasna, frae him sal be taen awa e'en what he has!

13. "Sae, speak I till them by parables: for they seein, are blin'; and, they hearin, are deif; naither div they ken.

14. "And wi' them is brocht to pass the prophecie o' Esaiah, whilk says: 'Wi' hearin ye sal hear, and in naegate understaun; and seein ye sal see, and in naegate perceive.

15. "For this people's heart is gross, and their lugs are dull to hear, and their een hae they steekit; least they soud see wi' their een, and hear wi' their lugs, and understaun wi' their heart, and turn again, and I soud heal them!"

16. "But fair fa' yere een, that they see! and yere lugs, that they hear!

17. "For truly say I t' ye, that a handle o' prophets and holie men war fain to see the things that ye see, and saw-them-na; and to hear the things ye hear, and heard-them-na!

18. "Hear ye than the parable o' The Sawer:

19. "Whan ony ane hears the word o' the Kingdom, and understauns-it-na, than comes the Ill Ane, and cleeks awa that sawn in his heart: this is he sawn by the fit-road.

20. "And he on the stanerie bit sawn, is he wha hears the word, and blythely receives it;

21. "Yet has he nae rute in himsel, and bides but for a wee; and on dool and fash comin, he stumbles belyve.

22. "And he sawn amang the thorns, this is he wha hears the word, and than the cark o' the warld, and the glamor o' riches, choke up the word, and it bears nae frute.

23. "But he sawn on the gude grun', this is he wha baith hears and understauns the word; wha e'en brings forth frute; and gies, this a hunner, that saxty, and the ither thretty."

24. Another parable set he afore them; and quo' he: "The Kingdom o'

Heeven is like till a man wha sawed gude seed in his croft;

25. "But whan folk war sleepin, cam his fae, and sawed tares amang the wheat, and slippit awa.

26. "But whan the wheat brairdit and brocht forth frute, than schawed the tares as weel.

27. "Sae cam the servants o' the gudeman, and quo' they till him, 'Sir, did-ye-na saw gude seed i' yere croft? Frae whatna cause than has it tares?'

28. "And he said till them, 'Some enemie has dune this!' And quo' the servants till him, 'Wull ye hae us gang and gaither them up?'

29. "But quo' he 'Na; least as ye gaither up the tares, ye pu' up the wheat wi' them!'

30. "Lat baith grow thegither till the hairst; and at hairst-time I wull say to the shearers, 'Gaither ye thegither the tares first, and burn them; but gaither ye the wheat intil my barn!'"

31. Another parable set he afore them, sayin, "The Kingdom o' Heeven is like till a mustard-seed, whilk a man took, and plantit in his yaird.

32. "Whilk in sooth is sma'est o' a' seeds; but whan it is grown is greater nor the yerbs, and comes till a tree, sae that the burdies o' the lift come and howff in its branches."

33. Another parable set he afore them: "The Kingdom o' Heeven is like till risin, whilk a wumman took and pat in a firloft o' meal, till the hail was risen."

34. A' thae things spak Jesus to the folk in 'parables; and wantin a parable spak-he-na till them.

35. That it soud come to pass what was said by the prophet, 'I wull open my mou' in parables; I wull gie oot things keepit hidlin frae the warld's fundation.'

36. Than he pairtit frea the thrangs, and gaed intil the hoose; and his disciples cam till him, and quo' they,

1 Verse 34.—Hoo mony maun hae been oor Lord's parables! Matthew, maist like, gies us but a wheen oot o' the number. And think-ye-na, Christ aften gied them ower again? Weel-kent evangelists in oor ain day fin' the advantage o't. And wadna this account for the differ i' the cleedin o' them? Matthew gien a parable the way he first heard it, or the way he likit it best; and Luke the same parable in anither form that he likit best, or they likit it best wha tell't him.

'Expone till us the parable o' The Tares o' the Croft!'

37. He answer't and quo' he till them, 'He wha sawed the gude seed is the Son o' Man.

38. 'The croft is the warld; the gude seed are the bairns o' the Kingdom; but the tares are the bairns o' the Ill Ane.

39. 'The enemie that sawed them is Sautan; the hairst is the endin o' the warld, and the shearers are the angels.

40. 'And e'en as the tares are gaither't and brunt i' the fire, sae sal it be at the end o' the warld.

41. 'The Son o' man sal send oot his angels, and they sal gaither oot o' his kingdom a' things that ensnare, and a' that do ill;

42. 'And sal cast them intil the lowin furnace; thar sal be maenin and girnin o' teeth!

43. 'Than sal the richtous glint forth like the sun, i' their Faither's Kingdom. Wha has hearin to hear, lat him hear!

44. 'Ance again: The Kingdom o' Heeven is like till gear, hidlins in a field; the same, whan a man has fund, he hides again, and for the joy o' gangs and niffers a' that he has, and buys that field.

45. 'Again, the Kingdom o' Heeven is like till a tradin-man, seekin precious pearls;

46. 'Wha, whan he had fund ae pearl o' a' price, gaed and sell't a' he had, and coft it.

47. 'Again, the Kingdom o' Heeven is like till a net cuistin intil the sea, and it gaither't o' a' kinds:

48. 'Whilk, whan it was fu', they harl't till the shore, and they sut them doon, and waled oot the gude intil creels, but cuist the bad awa.

49. 'Sae sal it be at the end o' the warld: the angels sal come forrit, and wale oot the wicked frae amang the gude;

50. 'And sal cast them intil the lowin furnace: thar sal be maenin and girnin o' teeth!'

51. And quo' Jesus till them, 'Hae ye understude a' thir things?' Quo' they till him, 'Aye Lord!'

52. Than said he till them, 'Ilka scribe wi' the lear o' the Kingdom o' Heeven, is like till ane that is heid o' a hoose, wha can fesh oot o' his presses things baith new and auld.'

53. And it cam aboot, that whan

Jesus had made an end o' a' his parables, he gaed frae that place.

54. And whan he was come intil his ain kintra-side, he was teachin them i' their kirks, sae that they war astonish't, and quo' they, 'Whaur gat this man this wisdom, and thir ferlies?'

55. 'Isna this the wricht's son? And isna his mither ca'd Mary? And his brithers, James, and Joseph, and Simon, and Judah?'

56. 'And his sisters, arena they a' wi' us? Frae whaurawa, than, has this man thir things?'

57. And they war stumbl't at him. But Jesus said till them: 'A prophet is nevir wantin honor, binna it be in his ain kintra-side, and amang his ain folk.'

58. And he wrocht-na mony wunner-warks thar, because o' their unbelievin.—Rev. William Wye Smith in S. S. Times.

A. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL wrote no line nor word of his own that was meant to be, or that has ever been accepted as being authoritative.

He composed no confession of faith, he dictated no creed, he presented no rules, he founded no church; but he lives notwithstanding, in the hearts of a free, consecrated and mighty people. They honor him for his exalted character, his spotless life, his dauntless courage, his masterful power; and, above all, they honor and revere him as the chosen messenger of One who came 'to proclaim release to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind.' They think of him as a great warrior, victor on many a hard-fought battlefield; they think of him as a great author, whose numerous works embalm his mind and perpetuate his thought; but they love better to think of him—he seems nearer and dearer to them and more their very own—as the great preacher, unfolding the divine message and exalting the divine Savior. In spirit they gather to-day—the older generation leading the younger—into a vast congregation, where listening multitudes were wont to hang enraptured upon his lips and drink inspiration from his words—and there he stands before them calm in the assurance of his faith, radiant from the brightness of his hope—a peerless man, majestic in pose and attitude—silent now forever, but eloquent still, as with one hand he points to an open Bible and with the other to an open heaven.—J. S. Lamar, in New Christian Quarterly.

PERHAPS the best uninspired eulogy upon the Bible is from the pen of that masterly scholar Sir William Jones. It was written on a blank page in his Bible, and inserted in his eighth discourse before the Society for Asiatic Researches:—

'The Scriptures contain, independently of a divine origin, more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, purer morality, more important history, and finer strains both of poetry and eloquence, than could be collected, within the same compass, from all other books that were ever composed in any age or in any idiom. The two parts of which the Scriptures consist are connected by a chain of compositions which bear no resemblance, in form or style, to any that can be produced from the stores of Grecian, Indian, Persian, or even Arabian learning. The antiquity of those compositions no man doubts; and the unstrained application of them to events long subsequent to their publication is a solid ground of belief that they were genuine predictions, and consequently inspired.—Sel.

INDIAN EDUCATION.

The annual report of the Executive committee of the Indian Rights association, which has just been issued by Secretary Herbert Welch, says:—

'Indian education to-day is on a better basis than ever before. There are 284 schools. In 1896 there were 17,789 pupils, in 1897 18,670. The enrollment of the contract schools showed in 1896 4,439 pupils, and 3,124 pupils in 1897, making a decline of 1,315. The contract schools conducted by the religious bodies are gradually being superseded by those of the government. The money granted by the government last year amounted to $257,928, of which $2,760 was given to two Presbyterian schools and $156,760 to Roman Catholic schools. The appropriations for Indian schools in 1896 were $2,517,265, while in 1897 they were $2,631,771.35, an increase of $114,506.35. The treaty provisions for schools are about $600,000, making a total of $3,231,771.35.—Philadelphia Item.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

SOME curious questions are sent us for answer in HERALD. Here is one:—

I have been requested to ask, Did God, or Jesus Christ, or an angel, one or all, appear to anyone on this earth and tell them to build up the church known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?

We have no knowledge of such a commandment ever having been given in the specific form stated above. It is simply one of those questions that the one suggesting it knew could not be answered. We know of no command of God, or Christ, to build up the M. E., Baptist, Congregationalist, or Catholic Church, in so many words. But there is a command on record given of Jesus Christ, as follows:—

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and its righteousness.—Matt. 6: 33.

This is given in the Holy Scriptures, thus:—

But seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness.

There was a revelation from Jesus Christ, given at a very early day of the church, to the effect that they were to be humble, faithful; that the commandments were of God, and were for the purpose that

Those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually; for I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven.

There are commandments and instructions of a similar import running all through the history of the church from 1830 to 1844; but, we think, none in the express terms used in the question.

We have now some hundreds of questions lying on our table, the writers of which have required us to reply to in the HERALD. Some of them involve an expenditure of time, to pay proper attention to that we have not yet had to give. Some of them require us to express opinions upon this or that subject, or passages of scripture, which at best would be our opinion only. One or two, because we have not answered, have written us quite sharply, reminding us that they had written us some time back asking such and such questions, and wanting to know why we did not answer, etc.

There is only one of us, and about forty thousand of our dear brethren and sisters, every one of whom has equal right to question us and demand replies. It may be that we will come short of doing our duty by some of our questioners because we do not answer, as they request. But we are trying to do the best we can, and answer such as we have time, ability, and disposition to; the rest will have to remain unanswered. And we have no hesitancy in admitting here that there are questions asked which we cannot answer.

We have also some dozen of newspaper articles written about Mormonism, the statements in many of them being out of line with truth, both of facts and doctrines of the church; and we are told by those who send them that they are calculated to do the work great harm, and it is necessary that they should be answered; and we are asked to write up the replies and have them them published so that such replies may be circulated where the misstatements have been issued and circulated.

For the same reasons that we cannot make reply to all the questions sent us, we cannot write these seemingly needful reviews. Some of them are sent us by men who have more time for such work at their disposal than we have; and could give the facts needed nearly, if not quite as accurately as we can.

Those who have thus sent us these articles will need to be patient until we have time and opportunity to take the matters up. It will be well to remember too, that there are a good many people who have access to the newspapers who seem to be interested in "downing" the Latter Day Saints; and it will be wholly out of our power to write reviews and corrections to all the errors put into print against us; and that should we publish in the HERALD only very few, possibly none of the thousands who read the original articles would ever see the corrections, as they would not appear in the papers publishing the attacks, in one of a hundred instances.

This world is given to lying; and so few know the truths of so-called "Mormonism," the "Mormons," their history and the theories, legendary teaching, faith, and doctrines, that many fair-minded and intelligent people who essay to write of them misrepresent them from ignorance rather than from intention.

So far as harm to the work in different localities may be concerned, every intelligent Latter Day Saint knows that the adversary of the work is active and does not intend that the truth shall gain any ground if he can prevent it, so, in every place where these scurrilous articles are put afloat, there are people who love the truth and will obey it if they get an opportunity to hear it.

Again, the work is the Lord's, so we believe, and so we teach. If so, then we must permit him some latitude to work in, and not think that only is done which we do.

He can take care of his work much better than we can, in places where it is in danger; and "Though defeated ne'er despairing, God speeds the Right."

We will do what we can to fill all the expectations of our watchful brethren who love the work and are jealous for its onward progress. Do not relax your vigilance.

Does the priest holding the Aaronic priesthood have the right and authority to bless the bread and wine for sacramental purposes?

Paragraph 10, of section 17, reads thus on the point raised in question:—

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. . . . In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.

From this citation from the Doctrine and Covenants, together with the decision of a late conference that the passing of the emblems was a part of the administration of the sacrament, and could not be legally done by either teacher or deacon; and that both the blessing of the bread and the wine, the breaking of the bread, the pouring of the wine, and the passing of the prepared bread and wine to the saints, thus administering the sacrament; it being held that it took the whole proceedings to complete administration, we can only answer the question, Yes, the priest has such right and authority.

Will you please state through the columns of the Herald if it be right for members of a branch to vote whether to accept a person as a member, who has been baptized in the immediate locality, or does baptism make him a member of such branch without any vote?

Branches make their own regulations in regard to receiving members, that their names may be enrolled on the record. Some require a vote on all members no matter where baptized, or by whom. The general church has made no rule. The better rule is that all persons baptized within the jurisdiction of the branch should be done with the knowledge and consent of the officers of the branch, or by them; and that all persons so baptized become members of the branch by virtue of such baptism without the necessity or formality of a vote. This is the rule of the Lamoni branch, and of other large branches, and works well, and is in accord with the spirit of the law, as we believe.

If there is a branch where no rule has been adopted, such branch should at once adopt some rule to govern such cases, and we recommend the one referred to; that all persons baptized within the jurisdiction of the branch by the knowledge and consent of the branch officers are members of the branch by virtue of such baptism, and their names should at once be enrolled on the branch records.

Editor's Herald: On page 55, General Conference minutes, 1897, appears the following:—

"Resolved that districts be required to consult with and secure the consent of the missionary in charge before making such appointments."

Does that mean that districts cannot appoint missionaries in their districts, who are willing to labor at their own expense? Or does it mean that when a district gets the consent of the missionary that the appointee, or appointees are on the same footing as General Conference appointees?

If the brother who asks this question will turn to page 13 of the conference minutes of 1897, he will find that the resolution to which he refers was but the outgrowth of an action by conference authorizing the district conferences to appoint men to labor as missionaries in their respective districts, and issue certificates to them.

It was not intended to be so applied that each of such appointees should be necessarily an appointee of the conference, nor on the same footing as those appointed by conference; they are simply appointees of the district conferences, and labor as such.

The second resolution was intended to bring harmony between the general missionary in charge and the district authorities. The answer to the queries then would be that it must be understood as requiring district authorities to consult missionaries in charge before appointing persons to labor as missionaries in the districts, whether laboring at their own expense or not.

This does not apply to the labor of local elders, priests, etc., within the district, as circumstances will permit, by agreement and direction of either president of district, or missionary in charge, or both.

The resolutions were intended to affect men appointed as missionaries in that way that they might legitimately ask for courtesies of roads, steamboats, and other lines of transportation, as laborers in the gospel field. If such appointees were to be considered the same as general appointees there is no value, or application to the resolutions.

IMPROVEMENTS.

THE spring season with its spirit of renovation and garden making has reached the Herald Office, where operating on the ground floor as a starting point, a great change for good has been made in the Business Manager's office. Patrons who were wont to do business where the Herald and other lists are kept and books and other publications sold, will recognize the transformation on sight. The woodwork has been grained, from white to a rich oak, by a master workman in the grainer's art, Bro. Matthew H. Smith, formerly of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, now of Independence, Missouri, and who also displayed his skill on the Saints' Home greatly to the enhancement of that worthy institution; the walls and ceiling have been papered, tables covered, a new floor put in and painted; new curtains added to windows; with other touches too numerous to mention; all of which give the Business Department a general up to date form, and serve to bring out the fine appearance of our bound volumes, as arranged in the cases, in the tasty contrasts of color.

Bro. Criley has also placed neatly framed engravings of Joseph the Martyr, Hyrum and Emma Smith, and President Joseph Smith on the walls. To these will be added engravings or crayon portraits of Brn. W. W. Blair and G. A. Blakeslee, with others connected with the office from early days.

Cheerfully arranged rooms help the spirits of those occupying them and conduce to the rendering of good service. Both plants and men thrive in proper surroundings. "Let the good work go on."

TOMB OF OSIRIS IS FOUND.

LONDON, March 5.—Scientists are excited over the authenticated discovery of the tomb of Osiris, the chief god of the Egyptians and brother of Isis, at Luxor, a village of upper Egypt, built on the site of Thebes. The news was first received with incredulity, but all doubts were quieted by a telegram from the director general of excavation to the President of the Egyptian Council of Ministers. The discovery was made by M. Amelineau, who in a letter also affirms positively that he has discovered the tomb of the gods Seth and Horus is in the same necropolis at Abydos.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—

"There is no doubt this is a great discovery. Thus we know the tombs of the last three god kings of the second of the divine dynasties, which dates back 10,000 years."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. G. J. WALLER, in charge of the work in Hawaii, writes from Honolulu, the 2d inst. He reports the translation of Book of Mormon into Hawaiian as finished with the exception of fifteen pages, which the printers lost. He expects to publish the work soon. It will be remembered that Bro. Waller has already published the Doctrine and Covenants in the Hawaiian language.

Bro. William Hewitt, Prescott, Arizona, recounts a manifestation by which he was shown that tobacco using would class him among those not purified, in the future state. He was almost blind from its use, but has greatly improved in health by heeding the command, "Avoid the use of tobacco."

Bro. T. A. Kelley, of Bagdad, Florida, writes commendingly of labor done by brethren in that portion of the Southeastern mission.

Bro. J. W. Booker, of Harp, Alabama, writes of his love for the work, in which with others he finds peace and joy. He hopes for advancement of church work in the South; and to that end the missionaries and saints are striving on earnestly.

Brightening prospects for the cause are reported from Clear Lake, Indiana, and adjacent points, where Bro. S. W. L. Scott met Mr. Braden and Joseph Musser in discussion within the past two years; so reports Bro. W. F. Shaub, March 14.

Sr. Laura I. Cook, No. 153 South Market Street, Frederick, Maryland, requests prayer in behalf of herself and family that all may obey the gospel, in which she finds comfort and joy. She sends clippings from Baltimore papers concerning the work of Brighamite elders in the monumental city. Elders of the Reorganization are requested to call on her family, also on the family of Mary E. Young, No. 38 South Cary Street, Baltimore; and that of Fannie E. Walters, No. 914 L Street, N. W. Washington. They are favorable to the work.

Arrivals of the ministry include Brn. J. W. Gillem, C. Scott, E. A. Stedman, and A. M. Chase.

Lamoni is again aroused over a prospect of a new railroad, the connecting line between Des Moines, St. Paul and the Gulf. Committees are at work to secure the right of way and prospects are good for a successful outcome of the movement. This would give the city of the saints another route north and south and add greatly to the general business facilities of this section of country.

There are no special developments in the Cuban situation. Both the American and the Spanish government are busily engaged in war preparations. Senator Proctor, who is understood to stand in close relation to the President and who visited Cuba, reports that newspaper accounts of suffering, degradation, and death in the island are not overdrawn. He says that 200,000 Cubans have been starved to death in what are virtually Spanish prisons, that autonomy is a failure, and that the Cubans are capable of self-government.

"A Baltimore judge has decided that faith cure doctors are not entitled to remuneration for their services. He takes the ground that the faith cure physician renders no apparent service to the sick."—Scientific American. In the administrations provided for in the law of God, according to James 5: 14, there are apparent and decided results for good; hence the decision of the judge concerning "faith cure doctors" cannot and does not apply to the doctrine and practice of laying on of hands of officers in the kingdom of God.

Russia has published her intention to withdraw from Corea, leaving that country to maintain its own administration. However, she states her determination to interpose in Corean affairs.

London, March 18.—It is announced to-day in a dispatch to the Times from Peking that the mission of Shu-King-Chen, the Chinese Minister to Germany, who was sent to St. Petersburg in an effort to prevail upon Russia to modify her demands upon China, has been unsuccessful, and, it is added, there is no alternative but to agree to the Russian demands.

France has notified China that she will occupy Hainan unless China immediately concedes to her demands.

Gladstone, the Grand Old Man of Great Britain is reported to be near the end of his earthly career; according to late dispatches his malady is rapidly progressing. Prince Bismarck, the Iron Chancellor, is also failing, though apparently in no immediate danger of death. Premier Salisbury of England is reported in such failing health as to render his early withdrawal from public life practically a necessity.

A fleet of no less than forty war ships is now massed in Chinese waters.

Bro. J. N. Perkins, of Fentress, Indian Territory, requests us to state that a good opening for a physician—Latter Day Saint preferred—awaits the right man at that point. Correspondence solicited. There is no physician nearer than twenty miles.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Though poor and loveless creeds may pass
For pure religion's gold;
Though ignorance may rule the mass
While truth meets glances cold,—
I know a law complete, sublime,
Controls us with its might,
And in God's own appointed time
It all will come out right."

JUST A THOUGHT.

WHEN we come to examine closely into the matter, we are inevitably led to the conclusion that greater importance attaches to what God thinks of us, than to what we may think of God. To know God and Christ whom he sent into the world, the Scripture assures us is life everlasting, but it is only as the true standard of God's perfection becomes our standard that it is possible to attain to this knowledge. It is only as we divest ourself of all influence opposed to the influence of right, justice, truth, and love that we have grace to draw near to God and follow the leadings of the Spirit which Jesus promised should guide us "into all truth." If we know that our act is just and right before God, we should be strong and steadfast, though opposed by the world,—yes, even by those nearest and dearest to us. But if on the other hand we have doubts of its justice,—if by our pursuing it our brother or sister or even the stranger within our gates is to suffer,—then though the whole world approve and no voice is lifted in condemnation, let us remember that God, even our God, seeth in secret, and the time is coming when his thoughts will be openly declared, and we shall know that his ways are even.

WHAT IS WRONG?

"O, I'LL be so glad when you are old enough to go to school—you just torment the life out of me!" Who has not, somewhere, heard these same words addressed to some noisy child, from the lips of one whose accents should ever be those of love and forbearance? Not long ago were the writer's ears saluted by the sentence penned above, and instantly the appeal rose to the lips, "God help me, that one of mine shall never hear such words or such a tone."

We ask, What is wrong? Do mothers forget to love their children, and do they not realize that to a large, a very large extent, they are responsible for the happiness and usefulness of that child in this life, and also in the countless years that are to come?

I would not care to point the thoughts of this mother in question to the time when disease would lay hold of that active little body, never to relinquish its grasp till another stronger power conquered, and the little limbs are stiffened, the bright eyes sealed for all time, and the little noisy tongue is silenced. This would be sad enough, but far sadder is the fate of the child that must grow to man or womanhood, never learning the force and beauty of God's love through the mother love, that for so many years of its early life is to be the standard of its measurement of the Divine love. The little one that seeks early its heavenly home, with all the freshness of early dawn and undeveloped loveliness still upon it, is more fortunate than the one that remains to grow in an unloved and unloving condition.

We believe these little ones are gifts from God, and sad indeed and lonely is the home where the baby never comes; where the pattering footsteps and the prattling little voice are never heard. Such a home is to be pitied, for it lacks heaven's sweetest sunlight and music. Yes, it lacks more than this. It lacks an ever flowing fountain of purity and innocence, that would prove to its inmates an incentive to a nobler life and greater purity of thought and action. Not that I would say this purity cannot exist where the little ones are absent, but it is intensified by their presence, and how many times has one of those pure spirits been the restraining power holding us back from some grave sin we were tempted to commit. If we will but appreciate our children and study their natures, live with them and for them, we will indeed find them an untold blessing.

Among these little ones of to-day are the standard bearers and the army of to-morrow, those that will go forth to proclaim the gospel, and those that will labor at home. All the offices that are filled by God's aging servants of to-day, must to-morrow be filled from the ranks of our little ones. Then here is a great work and honor for parents, mothers especially, that is second to none in this life: the bearing, raising, and training of those that are to be used in His hands for His glory. Why should we ever grow weary or seek to shrink this blessed work? If we only realize the unlimited capacity for development that lies in every child, and that the future usefulness of our children is so much of our making, would we not seek to purify our own lives, curb the impatient temper, be more kind to the little ones, love them better, and a thousand other things one might mention? Who can say that in our service to our children we are not feeding and clothing the bodies, and washing the feet of God's servants, for but a few years will find many of them occupying in this calling.

Life itself is sweet to us all. The beauty of all of God's creations are calculated to make us enjoy and appreciate his goodness, and with every breath we draw comes some inspiration of the joy of our existence. Then comes the time when we feel that we could be still happier with a companion to share our joys, so we find in married life a confidant, an abiding friend, and a sympathizer. Life is then more complete, but in the process of time, according to the laws of nature and the will of God, there enters into this already happy home a little stranger for us to love and care for. Then human happiness has reached its climax; the cup seems indeed filled to overflowing, and the flood-gates of love break their fastenings, and love, perfect, complete, and hitherto unknown, comes in unlimited measure like Heaven's own sunlight. This little spirit, so pure, so dear, brings with it to its earthly friends an inspiration of its own purity, and turns our thoughts and desires all to the better life, and what a fervent prayer comes from the heart of the weak custodians of this precious gift, that through its life with us it may lose none of its purity, but may be returned to the Giver a bright and untarnished gem.

Let us never forget the thankfulness and the almost perfect happiness with which we first received these little ones into our arms, and we will be kinder to them, more unselfish, loving, and devoted. Let us ever look upon their purity and take the lesson home to our hearts, and pray that we may indeed become "as a little child." Let us do our duty by them and they will ever in this life be a joy and a satisfaction to us, and in the perfect life we may expect to hear, because of these labors of love, the welcome words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

BRO. WILLIAM C. SMITH, of Winston, Missouri, desires the prayers of the sisters of the Prayer Union, that the affliction may be removed from this body, that the ulcer on his face may be healed, that he may be well and able to work, as he earnestly desires to help roll on the work of God by paying tithes and offerings into his storehouse.

Sr. Polly A. Morris, of Lebanon, Oregon, writes: "Will the dear sisters please remember me when they meet together in the Prayer Union, and ask the Lord to heal me of my infirmities, for there are times that my afflictions seem greater than I can bear, and I now wish to put my trust in the great Master, and not in the arm of flesh. Also remember my family."

A sister who is soon to pass through a severe physical trial, and who from great weakness of body fears she may not live through this trial, asks the prayers of the Prayer Union to the end that God will spare her life that she may be permitted to raise her little ones to his honor.

Sister A. E. Scott has been sick for six months with la grip and neuralgia and other complicated diseases, with a general weakness. She has been administered to many times with good results. She now wishes the faith and prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union and the saints that if it is the Lord's will she may regain her health and strength.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

ST. CLAIR, Mo., Jan. 11.

Dear Editor:—Our Sunday school here under the supervision of Bro. A. S. Davison is progressing nicely. Last Sunday there were about twenty present, and all of them joined in the singing, loudly and cheerfully. They were delighted with the new tickets (a donation from the district superintendent, Bro. Billinsky). . . . We have no song books, class books, nor secretary's book, no Hopes paid for, and only the tickets referred to. There are about seven hundred inhabitants in the town, and we seem to have some friends to the work here. Bro. Davison's is the only other family of saints. Our Sunday school is held in the Congregational church. Here is a fine opportunity for the sisters and local brethren of St. Clair to work. I believe there are about three hundred children living close to this church, many of whom do not go to any religious services. It is hoped that our district association officers will keep their eyes on this organization and make it "the banner school."

There seems to be a spiritual feeling in our sessions, and good will certainly come from the efforts, if the workers do not get "weary in well doing."

Your coworker,

JOHN S. PARRISH.

[District officers can help a great deal, but a Sunday school must be run by local officers. Here is, it seems, one of the rare chances to spread the work. And we rest assured that our alert district superintendent, Bro. J. J. Billinsky, will not fail to keep his "eyes on this organization."—ED.]

DUTIES OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL VISITING COMMITTEE.

IT is to be presumed that none will doubt the advisability of such a committee being appointed. It does not debar anyone from exercising the missionary spirit, which is the true spirit of the gospel. The of committee work is known in all societies, religious or otherwise; and the faithful workers in every school have no doubt felt the need of some method by which both the numbers and the interest of the school might be not only maintained but increased; and right here the visiting committee comes in as an auxiliary. We are all coworkers for that which is good. This brings the thought that our work is so interlaced and interwoven, that it is difficult to speak of a part without including much that is closely related to the whole.

I am sure if I were a member of this committee I would like to introduce the new scholars into a school, where I knew and a warm welcome awaited them. They should be welcomed not only the first Sunday, but thereafter also, that it might grow to seem "homelike" to them. A young man once said to me, "I feel more at home in your church than any other." Now, thanks to our Father above, that man is inside the fold, and rejoices with us in the hope of the home prepared for all the tried and true. Here comes anew the thought of our being workers together. For this welcome should not be extended alone by the visiting committee, nor the superintendent, nor the teacher, but by all of these, and by the scholars of the school as well. There are various in which you can make the stranger feel at home in your midst. One of these is to put yourself in his place. You have all attended other churches than your own. Where did you feel the most at home? Where you came and went, and none seemed to notice or care for you nor invited you back, or the place where some kindness was shown you? Perhaps it was only a trifle. Some one handed you a song book, or it may be some one spoke with you, and with a friendly handclasp said they were pleased to see you there, and invited you to come again. Where did you feel the most at home? There is only one answer.

God did not intend us to float along in this world like icebergs in the northern seas, but the words of holy writ are, "Be ye kindly affectioned one toward another." I do not understand this to apply to the household of faith alone, but to all among whom our lot is cast. "The Son of man came to seek and to save that which is lost," and we are not only workers together, but—blessed thought—coworkers with Him if so be that we have not received the grace of God in vain.

At this juncture a friend who has been looking over this asks, "What are you writing about?" and I reply, "Coworkers, I guess." And the gentle reminder in the question brings me back to those coworkers that I was to especially speak of, the Sunday school visiting committee.

It has been suggested that it be at least four members (ours was appointed by the superintendent). One of their duties should be and is, to thoroughly canvass the neighborhood for new scholars, especially inviting those who are not in the habit of attending any Sabbath school. And here I will say that in cases that have come under my own observation, whole families have been brought into church fellowship through the children first becoming interested in the Sunday school. To do this you must have an interesting school, and that means a wide-awake superintendent, assistant, teachers that interest and instruct, and various other things. A cheerful, homelike place to meet, beautified as best you can, etc., and above all the love of God and your fellow men in your hearts, and a willingness to cheerfully consecrate your talents to the service required, performing each duty, not in a half-hearted way, but with alacrity and zeal, doing the best you can, and leaving the result with God, trusting that the bread cast upon the waters may return, though it be after many days.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT DUTY of the visiting committee is to visit absent scholars and ascertain the cause of their absence, and thus let them know that they are missed, and an interest taken in their welfare. Either the secretary or the teachers can report those absent to the committee, and they should be visited as soon as opportunity offers. So to sum up the matter, as it appears from my standpoint, the duties of the visiting committee are (to put it tersely, and in a way you will all remember) "to help get all you can and hold on to all you get;" so success to the helpers. And O, could we but realize the magnitude of the saying, "He that converteth one from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death, and prevent a multitude of sins." The salvation of souls is the noblest work in which we can engage, and the peace that comes from God's approval will be our sure reward.

VALES MILLS, O., March 7.

Editors Herald:—I continued my efforts at New Hope, Virginia, some time after I wrote you last; my audience kept increasing, till the last night the house was full, and there seemed to be quite an interest manifest on the part of some. I still have hope for that part of Virginia. Bro. and Sr. Coffman are putting forth their best efforts to get the gospel before their neighbors; and the most gratifying thing to me was the fact that the people who are opposed to our religious views spoke in the highest terms of the honesty and integrity of Bro. and Sr. Coffman. This is what I call "letting their light shine." The saints there are very anxious to have I. N. Roberts and J. L. Goodrich sent to that mission.

On the 11th ult. I took my departure from Virginia to Ironton, Ohio, and began operations on Sunday, the 12th, and continued over two Sundays, preaching every night and three times on each Sabbath, with the house crowded on each occasion. Baptized six and left many more on the eve of obedience. Great interest was manifest on the part of the people. Bro. Webberly is president of the branch and attended most of the meetings. We have some young men coming up here who if faithful will be helpful to the work. During my sojourn there I domiciled with Bro. and Sr. Smith, who with their family showed me every kindness. Srs. Haggerty and Anderton are firm in the faith, and by their consistent and faithful living have been the means of bringing all their children into the church—a duty all Latter Day Saints owe to their families. The prospects for an ingathering at this place are very encouraging.

On the 21st I started to Wellston, and had the pleasure of meeting Bro. James Moler, who took me the same night to Weldon, where I discoursed upon the beautiful theme of salvation to a fair-sized audience. On the following day I reached Bierly and spent one evening with Sr. Bierly and her four sons. I found our aged sister full of the gospel fire, though growing infirm physically, by reason of old age; however, she is growing stronger and firmer spiritually in her declining days.

On the 23d I went to Limerick (Ohio, not Ireland), where I remained over Sunday, the 27th. During my stay Brn. J. L. and V. M. Goodrich arrived on the scene. Altogether we held eight services and baptized three on Sunday, the fruits of Sunday school and parental training. On Monday following Bro. J. L. Goodrich baptized one more. Bro. James Moler was at home and assisted in the services. Said brother is the president of the branch and of the Ohio district. I made my home mostly with our worthy brother, T. J. Beatty, whose health is much improved since last we met. It reminded us of old times to again be associated with Bro. Beatty. Said brother expressed himself as being anxious to help forward the work of the Lord among his fellow men. Bro. Beatty has many warm and true friends in both the Ohio and West Virginia districts, where he formerly labored and brought so many into the fold, and the question is so often asked of us, "When is Bro. Beatty coming to preach for us again?" We sincerely hope he will soon be able to respond to the calls, and to this end I pray our heavenly Father to abundantly bless him. There is a much better spirit prevailing in the vicinity of Limerick than when the writer was there last.

Arrived at Vales Mills on the 1st inst. and began a series of meetings here, and my efforts have been favored with some degree of success so far. We have had good and attentive audiences. Brn. J. L. Goodrich, H. E. Moler, and S. J. Jeffers (who is president of the branch here) have rendered excellent service during these meetings. We have baptized three persons already, and there are many more near the kingdom. A short time ago Bro. James Moler held a series of meetings here, which were conducive of much good. I expect to leave in the morning for the west. Brn. Goodrich, H. E. Moler, and Jeffers will continue the meetings a few evenings, or longer if the interest continues.

With love to all, I remain your brother in gospel bonds,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

PIPESTONE, Minn., March 8.

Editors Herald:—I am still in the work and am blessed much in preaching the word. I have held meetings nearly two weeks in the new church at Audubon. Some have decided to obey in the spring, others are near the kingdom. Have spoken ten times in Minneapolis of late, and several told me they would be with us in the spring. Have made a fair opening in Albert Lea. Spoke Sunday night in Magnolia on the signs of the times; the Methodist church was crowded. The Spirit of God blessed me in telling the people of the signs of the times. I spoke for near two hours; some wanted me to keep on longer, but I thought that was long enough. I am to speak here to-night and to-morrow night, then to Hills to hold forth over Sunday.

I am glad to say that the work is moving on nicely. If we had two more active workers in this mission next year, I assure you we will be far in advance of the present. The saints are in better condition spiritually than ever before. Of course there are a few sick ones spiritually, that will never do anything but growl about something, or who think they have something to growl about. But they are few. Up to date there has been nearly eight hundred dollars of tithes paid in. This is good evidence of growth in spirituality. This dates back to March, 1897. Others who have not as yet paid any tithes have expressed themselves to me that they were going to begin soon. You can see by this that the Spirit is still working. Thank God for it.

I see in the Herald of late a letter from Apostle G. T. Griffiths, saying a man was needed in Virginia, and that I. N. Roberts would do. Well, perhaps he would do. But if I. N. Roberts knows himself, he won't do, for these reasons. I have now spent twenty-two years in the ministry, and most of that time has been on what I call breaking new ground. Have passed through all the hardships of a missionary, sleeping outdoors and in schoolhouses; going hungry and sometimes nearly barefooted and very poorly clad; all of this without a murmur or complaint. Have worked in stone quarries and at other work in daytime, and preaching at night. That is the way I supported my family. Now I am getting old; my body is wearing out; and to ask me to take a mission to that State looks to me like more than I am able to stand. My spirit is good enough; my will is all right; but my feet and legs cannot stand the traveling over the rough hills of my mother State. Years ago I was asked to go; the people there wanted me to come; but the powers that be could not spare me from other fields, so I did not go. Where I am, the people both in and out of the church know me and I know them; and so far as I know, all are willing to have me with them longer. Therefore I don't feel at all like making the change, when we have so many young, active elders who could stand traveling over the hills of the Old Dominion much better than an old man could possibly do. I feel that my work the few years I may live will have to be more localized. I cannot stand to walk as I used to do. Hoping and praying for a good conference, and that all will be right, I am

Yours in the faith,

I. N. ROBERTS.

SCRANTON, Miss., Feb. 5.

Editors Herald:—Our recent district conference at Three Rivers passed off pleasantly. A few days prior to the assembling of the conference a union church at Escatawpa, which had been abandoned by Methodists and Baptists, and repaired and used by the saints, was burned down by unknown parties. Sunday school is now being held in private houses.

Threats of whippings for myself in store for me by some of the mob reach my ears occasionally; however, I have been through Escatawpa several times during the last two months and preached at Three Rivers to-day, and no harm has come to me yet. The looks of some of the mob whom I passed on the streets were not pleasant, however, and the experience Bro. Kelley had with them is evidence of their willingness to fulfill their threats, should a good opportunity present itself. They say now that they want to do their work in the dark; the recent adverse decision of the courts having rendered them a little wary and cautious.

I go to Biloxi next Sunday to preach to the brethren and friends there. I thought last fall that there were some there near the kingdom. Tent services were advertised for about the 1st of September last, but the tearing down of the tent at Escatawpa and quarantine interfered. By the way, tent services can be held here in the cities of the Gulf all the winter with occasional interruptions of a few days at a time. Largely attended services were held last month in Mobile by a Christian evangelist in a tent about the size of ours. You can determine the temperature down here when I tell you that I have turnips, radishes, lettuce, and beets growing in my garden all winter; occasionally we have slight frosts, and sometimes see a little ice, and some winters we have severe spells of a few days that materially injures the growing vegetables; but in a day or two, should the north wind die out or a south wind spring up from the Gulf, we will have growing weather again.

This is a point to be considered in connection with tent work in the South; and I trust that the General Conference will find it practicable to accede to the request of this district to send us two missionaries to travel with our tent. There are portions of the peninsula of Florida where the coldest weather only amounts to light frosts. I hope that one of the missionaries at least will be able to play upon the organ, or be accompanied by his wife or a daughter who may be able to do this. Should this be the case, I think that I can guarantee the organ.

Your brother in Christ,

FRANK P. SCARCLIFF.

BEATRICE, Neb., March 7.

Editors Herald:—We have been holding the fort as best we could and have no reason to complain. Have been blessed by the Lord in our presentations of the gospel. Since last writing I have held meetings at Hardy, where we created a good interest; also at Hebron, Fairbury, and Wilber. While at Wilber we were not favored with a very large attendance. Bro. F. A. Smith came down and occupied a few evenings with good interest. We spent Sunday with Bro. Foreman's folks, in company with Bro. David Graf and wife. While there we were privileged to preach to the people of that vicinity in the afternoon, on the second advent of Christ. We then returned to Bro. Graf's in the evening and were blessed with liberty in presenting the word to a fair house that awaited our arrival. There is good prospects for future work in Southern Nebraska; calls are being made for preaching and new places opening up. May the Lord bless and prosper his work.

In gospel bonds,

H. W. BELVILLE.

WILBURTON, I. T., March 7.

Editors Herald:—This leaves me holding meetings at Wilburton; we have a branch here of about twelve members, presided over by our noble brother, Peter Adamson. He has had a hard struggle here against persecution; but his consistent life and vigilant effort are changing the tide. Wilburton is building up as by magic; it is in a fine coal belt; about four mining companies have located here. All around is a fine farming country. All saints hunting homes could do well here. Bro. Adamson solicits them to come and make their homes here. He wants some moneyed man of the church to take hold of one of the best coal claims in Indian Territory. He could soon get rich. Write Bro. Adamson for particulars, who is now president of the town. This is a healthy place. I will continue meetings one week, then on to Coal Gate.

J. D. ERWIN.

DETROIT, Mich., March 4.

Editors Herald:—One of your April issues of 1897 contained a brief article, written so many months previously, that my active interest in it had waned. The writer's attention has been called to two "replies;" one by T. W. Williams, another by A. M. Chase; and I perceive that one clause in the introduction has absorbed so much of their attention that they have not taken the article itself seriously.

In introducing the theme, "The gifts and callings of God are without repentance" (Rom. 11:29), I said: "The above is an axiom with God, . . . hence, Israel may be saved irrespective of repentance."

Now, if the clause, "hence Israel may be saved irrespective of repentance," be left out, doubtless it will enable those brethren to get the meaning intended. I inserted that sentence simply to give force to the idea that the text (Romans 11:29) was a premise upon which Paul based his reasoning, and not a deduction. This little sentence and its obnoxious influence formed no part of the main argument, and I am sorry the brethren did not so understand it; for at that time I should have been pleased with a careful canvass from such able minds.

With the present explanation, however, if those or any others be disposed to take exception to the somewhat immature ideas set forth in the article in question, I have no objection, and I think I can make good the position taken. Lengthy discussion through the Herald is objectionable, owing to advance articles and other delays, the time between publication of answers and rejoinders, is such that participants themselves are liable to lag in interest; for the sake of effect a person may take a possible rather than an intended meaning from an opponent's argument; and in such long-range discussions with no time limit, side issues are prone to assert themselves, especially for making a "sweeping reply." If they be not answered there is apparent discomfiture; if answered the discussion loses its unity. All these difficulties would be overcome by first carrying on the discussion by letter, then trimming it up for publication. This course would save much time, much space, and add interest to any important topic, and I think promote a better feeling between disputants, since by personal contact their differences are not so apt to magnify, especially when church members are the interested.

HARLAN, Iowa, March 14.

Editors Herald:—I arrived home from my mission field on the 23d ult., on account of physical disability that made it impracticable for me to try to labor longer. However, after a little rest I am trying to do what good I can and at the request of Bro. C. E. Butterworth I came here to labor for a time.

The Western Nebraska mission has done well during the past year, and I feel much encouraged for the work there. During the year there have been sixty-four baptisms and a loss of but two, as far as I have been able to learn.

Brn. C. H. Porter and S. D. Payne have labored diligently. We could have used a much larger force and then not answered all the calls for labor. Bro. W. A. Smith stepped over the line into the Western mission and labored for a few weeks and reports baptizing eleven. We are glad of it, Bro. Smith, and wish you could stay longer. Bro. C. W. Prettyman has done effectual labor, although he has to labor for the "bread that perisheth." I should like to see him placed in the mission field. During the year he has baptized eight.

My labor for the year has been almost entirely north of the Platte River, while Brn. Porter and Payne have labored chiefly south of the river. Bro. Payne reports a debate with an Advent minister and thinks a marked victory was won for the cause of truth.

Feeling greatly interested in the cause of Christ, which is the cause of humanity, to make them better in every way that improvement can be made, I remain,

BURLINGTON, Iowa, March 12.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Lake is here with us. Last night after preaching, four noble young ladies gave their names for baptism, which will be attended to this evening. We expect Bro. Lake to officiate. Last Sunday I baptized a man at Oskaloosa; he stands high in society, and if he proves faithful will be the means of leading others into the light of the gospel. He belonged to the M. E.'s for some time, but he was never satisfied, and was very near an infidel when the sound of the gospel in its grandeur and fullness found him. I baptized his wife also; she was raised a Catholic; and now they rejoice together in the glorious light of the gospel. A very intelligent negro lady and her husband, also M. E.'s, are also persuaded, and have confessed that we have the truth, and I believe will soon obey.

Another very wise (?) lady, a Baptist, knows our doctrine is all false and has volunteered to show the saints in the Bible that there should be no officers in the church only elders and deacons, and that Jesus was a high priest, and the only one that should ever be in the church, etc. Well; she hasn't overthrown any yet, and when she gives them the quotations we will examine them carefully.

The Lord has blessed me with his Spirit in presenting his truth. I think some of the opposers of God's truth will soon be compelled to send for Mr. Blalock, or McClure, or perhaps Braden, to help them to block the truth, or it will certainly roll on till it fills the whole world. In bonds, Editors Herald:—Thought it might interest some of your readers to describe briefly, Economy, and the funeral of our worthy Sister Crees. She was the mother-in-law of John Duss, trustee of the Economite society. By reason of this relationship, some of the customs of the society were observed in her interment. She lived in one part of the "big house"—the home of the head of the society. This house looks as solid to-day as if it were built ten years ago. We think the temple at Kirtland is in a remarkable state of preservation—and so it is; the same is true of many of the structures at quaint old Economy, although the Economites were looking for the coming of Christ, and expected him to come at any time. Nearly all of the present structures were erected somewhere near 1823, I believe. Some are brick, but the majority are frame. Nearly all the doors open into a small yard at the "front side." They have no "front" doors generally. The "big house" is quite a modern looking brick house, surrounded by a yard occupying a whole square. At one time the Economites carried on different industries; their productions were much sought after because of their excellent material, etc.

The town to-day bears witness of what concentrated effort can accomplish. As a logical result of the adoption of the law prohibiting them from having offspring, there are only about one man and three or four women left. I saw the old gentleman and two of the women at the funeral. They too will soon be laid away in the quiet burying ground. The corpse was taken from the big house to the church across the street. The building is quite commodious. It was filled with friends and relatives. The men sat on one side and the women on the other, following the custom of the society.

Mr. Duss is a composer and musician. He had a well-drilled choir sing several German hymns for the benefit of the Germans present. Elder D. L. Shinn delivered the discourse, after which Mr. Duss made a few remarks in German. Then the casket—made in Economy—was closed, placed in the hearse followed by the mourners to the cemetery near by. A männerchoir sang at the grave, prayer was offered by Bro. Shinn. Mr. Duss offered the Lord's prayer in German, and then flowers were thrown in the grave by about a hundred persons, which concluded the services.

Sr. Crees was a lovely old lady, bright and active to within a few hours of her death. She leaves a son and three daughters living.

GARDEN GROVE, Cal., March 2.

Editors Herald:—In Herald, January 26, page 58, is a communication headed, How is this? with part of verse 11, section 17, Doctrine and Covenants quoted. If another part of same verse, namely, "They [teachers and deacons] are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ" had been quoted, it would have appeared in a different light, as we certainly would not want to invite the church to come unto Christ when they had already done so.

I read in Book of Moroni, chapter 3, verse 2: "I ordain you to be a teacher, to preach repentance and remission of sins through Jesus Christ;" and if God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, it seems to me a teacher is called to preach the gospel, but perhaps I am wrong. I have been told before that it was not the duty of a teacher to preach, and if I have been doing what I had no authority to do, I should like to know it. I have waited some time, thinking that some one abler than I would give us some light on the subject. Excuse me if I have wasted your time, but I would like to know and do my whole duty. Yours ever searching for the truth a teacher, RADCLIFF, Ohio, March 9.

Editors Herald:—I am happy to report that the work at Vales Mills is still improving and advancing. In the month of January my father held a successful meeting here, which resulted in his baptizing twelve persons, and in getting the branch in much better working order.

I began meetings on the night of February 26, and was followed by Bro. Griffiths on the 1st inst., who was joined by Bro. Goodrich on the 4th, and meetings have continued with good interest until now. Three more have been baptized, making fifteen in all. The saints are greatly encouraged, and matters of hardness and difficulty have been settled, and all are rejoicing in the Lord. Bro. Harvey McLaughlin was called and ordained to the office of teacher, and Bro. W. J. Bowen to the office of deacon. Another brother was called to the office of priest, and admonished to humble himself, and get away from evil habits; he will be ordained if faithful.

Bro. Griffiths departed for Lamoni and Independence, via St. Louis, on yesterday. On his instructions we are continuing meetings here, and shall hold forth over next Sunday. Bro. Goodrich is still with us, and doing the preaching. We expect to continue in and about this (Vinton) county till General Conference time.

I have been hindered much of late by hoarseness, which has been a great inconvenience, and kept me from doing as much as I would have done; yet I am not discouraged, but desire to continue and hope to be able to do some good.

Yours in the gospel,

H. E. MOLER.

NEW CASTLE, N. S. W., Jan. 25.

Editors Herald:—By the last boat I sent you a copy of the Town and Country, a leading Sydney paper, containing a short article, furnished by Elder Kaler and myself, as pretext for the appearance on the same page of two large group pictures—one of the three missionaries; the other of local officers and preachers in attendance at our late conference at this place. Trust you received it safe. We regard it as the best opportunity we have yet had over here to get our church identity before the public.

The editor of another Sydney paper (Truth) recently waged war against the Utah missionaries in that city. They attempted a defense, but got more besmirched than before, and let it go as a bad job. Following this is our own presentation by a friendly journal, who allows us to speak for ourselves without combatting. Much good is sure to follow, as the paper is widely read and is found in every reading room in this country. I must not fail to say that it was through the alertness of Bro. Edward Pickering, news-agent at Cockle Creek, that this opportunity came to us. He negotiated with the editor for the report and pictures, or we might not have been so prominently noticed. Progression and energy is a characteristic of those who catch the Spirit of the angel's message of latter days.

Superb photos (Paris panel size) of the three missionaries, as published in the Town and Country, may be obtained from either of the three originals by their friends at fifty cents each postpaid.

Was out last Sunday for an open-air with Elder E. J. Haworth on the Lambton Reserve, a suburban park of New Castle. We have never had such an excellent hearing in this district. Mayor, aldermen, and prominent business men listened respectfully for one hour and over.

I go to Sydney soon to assist Elder Kaler for a short time and return. Permanent address: G. P. O., Sydney, N. S. W.

Editors Herald:—The work in this vicinity is moving on slowly, and the Master is blessing us according to his promises; and the saints are hopeful of the future and rejoicing in the present and past. Bro. Roth has just closed a series of meetings here which were greatly enjoyed by the saints and appreciated by the outsiders; resulting in the baptism of one, who will no doubt prove a most valuable acquisition to the household of God. Bro. Perry is the head of an interesting family, whose wife and little daughter were baptized last August. And so they come one by one; one of a family and two of a city. Bro. E. B. Morgan has also been laboring in this vicinity, having preached once here while en route for Pekay, where he filled several engagements. He also preached a funeral sermon at Beacon, two miles west of here.

Bro. Roth also preached the funeral sermon of Mr. George Covey at Coal Creek union church, ten miles southwest of here; and also filled our appointment at said church on the following Sunday. The work at that place was opened up last summer by Elder W. H. Kephart, and is held in favorable consideration by non-professors, but prejudice is high among the professors. The saints here I believe are mostly striving to live their religion, and officers striving to keep in line with their calling.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., March 12.

Editors Herald:—Have just returned from Spring River district conference, which was well represented and the attendance very large. Elders F. C. Keck, missionary in charge, and Bishop G. H. Hilliard were in attendance, and did some very tall preaching. The spirit of our Master was present in power, and we had a time of joy and peace from first to last. We had the good pleasure of meeting Elder H. R. Harder, of your city (and it might be a nail in the future history of time, to state that said brother and the writer had the honor of putting up the first building in Lamoni), after a lapse of many years, and was glad to see him. Elder O. P. Sutherland was reelected district president, and Elder T. S. Haton (Lock Box 493), of Galena, Kansas, became my successor as district secretary and treasurer; no better selection could have been made, in our thinking. Our branch here numbers about 63, with a good reliable man at the head, in the person of W. R. Pickering. Brother Barnett and family, of Roxbury, Virginia, arrived here Thursday, and will make this their home for the present (they are looking for a farm). I have received quite a number of inquiries about our city and country, which I will gladly answer. Letters of inquiry must be accompanied with a two cent stamp. I need Heralds, Ensigns, and tracts for free distribution. Who will send me a lot?

Editors Herald:—I have often thought I would write and ask you to kindly republish the inclosed cure for hydrophobia. Some years ago a dog went mad in our neighborhood and bit stock belonging to three of our neighbors. My wife remembering having seen this cure in the Herald, looked it up. I copied it and took it to the neighbors. Some laughed at the idea of so simple a remedy for such a disease, but one man had faith enough to go sixteen miles to a drug store and get the medicine. He had seven head of cattle bitten, some of which began to show signs of hydrophobia. He administered the medicine and they all got well. All the other stock in the neighborhood that was bitten, died with hydrophobia. It is no uncommon thing to read of persons and animals being bitten by mad dogs. I was reading today of two children being bitten, so I thought I would neglect it no longer, but would ask you to republish this wonderful remedy. It was in the year 1887, I think, that our neighborhood had their experience. We at that time attached this recipe to a fly leaf of our family Bible, to make sure that it should not get away. If every one who reads it would do the same it perhaps would save many a life.

Yours in bonds,

A CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

Hydrophobia can be prevented. I will give what is an infallible remedy, if properly administered, for man or beast. A dose for a horse or a cow should be about four times as great as for a person. It is not too late to give medicine any time before spasms come on. The first dose for a person is one and a half ounces of elecampane root, bruised, put in a pint of new milk, reduced to half by boiling. Then take all at one dose in the morning, fasting until afternoon, or at least a very light diet. After several hours have elapsed, the second dose the same as the first, except take two ounces of the root. Third dose same as second. To be taken every other day. Three doses are all that is needed, and there need be no fear. This I know from my own personal experience, and I know of a number of other cases where it has been entirely successful. This remedy has been used in and about Philadelphia for forty years and longer with great success, and is known as the Goodman remedy. I am acquainted with the physician who told me that he knew of its use for more than thirty years; but never knew a case that failed when it was properly administered. Among other cases, he mentioned one where a number of cows had been bitten by a mad dog; to half of the number they administered this remedy, to the other half not. The latter all died of hydrophobia, while those that took the elecampane and milk showed no sign of disease.

SMITHFIELD, Utah, March 2.

Editors Herald:—I am in deep water here and am crowded on all sides; have preached seven times in one of the schoolrooms of this city of one thousand six hundred inhabitants, and from the first have had the whole city in a turmoil, and such a studying of books and argumentation as has been going on since a week ago Monday night has never been known in this valley before, I am confident.

The mayor has been my chief opposer; that is, of their recognized representatives, and every move they have made has been suicidal to them. They won't venture an open fair fight, but watch for a chance to catch us in word and doctrine. They were very abusive the first few evenings, the marshal being called into service one night and a prominent member of the legislature from here taking up the fight for us two other nights. He told them we had had them in a hole for a week and they were only getting themselves in deeper by their laying traps and resort to abusive methods. Every means are being resorted to to turn the battle against us, but in spite of opposition meetings, entertainments, mud, etc., we have a crowded house every night, and a tirade of questions and argument after each sermon.

I thought to have gone East this month but wouldn't feel justified in leaving this work. Don't know how long I will remain. I feel the need of help badly enough, as between visiting through the day, study, and night work from two to four hours, it is trying, and no help. I stop with Bro. Pettit and wife, the only saints here. The Presbyterians are with us in a body, including the pastor. However, he did offer them sympathy when they were pleading persecution, and admitted that it was mean in the preacher when he would no doubt tip the scales to the one hundred and thirty mark to pitch onto a city of only about sixteen hundred people and knock every prop from under them.

I understand that the bishop admitted in the tabernacle Sunday that we might get some of their members, but of course it would be the no-account ones; "birds of a feather," and such like arguments were presented to his flock, but the coming to hear wasn't abated by them.

I feel truly weak for such a work, but trust the prayers of the saints are being lifted up for this mission. Remember us.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 16.

Editors Herald:—By the consent of Bro. J. R. Lambert, missionary in charge, I left Lamoni on the 5th of the present month to do missionary work in Harrison County, Missouri. My first objective point was Mt. Gilead, about twenty miles southwest of here. There was once a large congregation of the Christian Church at this place, but the question of an organ in their church has divided them, by which their influence to promulge their doctrines has become neutralized. They granted me the use of their house, and I occupied their pulpit from the 6th to 11th. I delivered five discourses in all, to increasing congregations. Friday evening it rained out my appointment. Some were interested, and my opinion is that good can be accomplished there.

I also had the promise of the Christian church in Eagleville, and think of going there soon. I visited with the people and reasoned with them, and find many are anxious to hear us. There is a splendid field lying fallow in this direction that will require sagacious workmen. I also found a sprinkle of agnostics in that region, and they think they have routed all their religious brothers. They were kind to me and assisted by furnishing lights for my meetings, also lodging and board while there.

Editors Herald:—Can I just trespass on your space for a while to tell you how I feel. Reading a letter in the Herald last week I wish to give my idea on the same matter. I was very much impressed to write last week, but left it. I am much more impressed now. I feel that the Spirit wishes it.

None of us need go home hungry. If we go in the right spirit God will help us. We must remember that our elders are God's servants, and before they speak they nearly always ask us to pray for them, that they may be blessed with the Spirit. And we know that it rests with us when they ask for our prayers. If we do not listen aright, it is with ourselves and not with the preacher. I am sure if we want to be fed, let the preacher not be quite as we want him. If we have given him an interest in our prayers, let him be what he may be, God will speak to us through him to do us good. If we want good, dear sisters, think what the elders have to do. You know that they are not like the ministers of the day; they do it for the love of God and us. Let us help them all we can, and ask God to bless them with his Holy Spirit. You know that they go from day to day earning our daily bread, and have to work hard, and when they go on Sunday from one place to another to feed us, we should try and eat; not go home hungry. You can take from this if we sisters do anything for our husbands, and they do not like it, and we have done our best, how disappointed we are.

Now, sisters, let us help those who are set to teach us. I have been a long time in learning this, but I have learned it at last, and I would ask you to try and do the same. You will prosper by it. Remember faith, hope, and charity; and charity is the greatest. Do not dishearten the brethren!

Editors Herald:—About six years ago I sent a cancer recipe to the Saints' Herald. I also stated at the end of the recipe that I would send the recipe of the Black Salve, if anyone would send me a two cent stamp to pay postage, this being when I lived in Kent, Illinois. When the recipe was published I received a large number of letters. Then it was dropped for about three years, when it was again published. Then the letters began to come, and they came so fast that I could not answer them; so I sent the Black Salve recipe to the Saints' Herald, and this stopped the letters. I did not hear any more from it until about three weeks ago. It was reprinted in the Herald. I have received about forty letters since, and being old and not able to write, I will again publish it. This will be the last time I will publish it. So if anyone desires it, take care of this recipe.

BLACK SALVE.

Take rosin and beeswax two ounces each, sweet oil eight ounces. Melt them together, stirring in while near the boiling point four ounces red lead; stir until brown, and when nearly cool add two drachms pulverized camphor and stir until cold, then box for use.

All those who have written for the recipe will please note this.

To pulverize the camphor put a few drops of alcohol upon it when it will readily powder under pressure of a table knife.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, March 15.

Editors Herald:—It seems very strange to me that the Salt Lake elders should be so shortsighted and foolish as to try to convince people (and that in the vicinity of our branches) that there was no difference between their doctrine and that of the Reorganization; but they distribute tracts containing articles of faith exactly similar to ours. A lady whose house one of them had visited told me they declared to her that the doctrine was just the same, and she said, "Why don't you unite?"

"O," he said, "they deny authority of Brigham Young." He further told her that Joseph the Seer was the author of the doctrine of polygamy, but that the Reorganization had destroyed all evidence of it.

They are careful, however, to keep out of reach of our elders. Those of the young elders I have talked with seem to be ignorant of the doctrine and past history of the Salt Lake concern, or else they are shamming. One of them has been around Crescent and Honey Creek, but has not had much encouragement, so he pulled up stakes and left.

The writer spent Sunday up at Crescent, and had a pleasant time; I had the best of attention and good liberty. The Crescent branch has lost a number of members by removal. Bro. Pratt has gone to Kansas to live and will be greatly missed. Bro. Charles Lapworth goes to Underwood to live and will be greatly missed, having been deacon for a long time. After service on Sunday the branch gave Bro. Lapworth a substantial reminder of their love, in the shape of an oak wood revolving office chair of fine make. After service the people were held a few moments while Bro. Boyd went out and came in with the chair and seated Bro. Lapworth in it. The writer then presented the chair with a few remarks. The brother could only say thank you, for he was too full for utterance. We visited dear old Bro. Pratt, who is rapidly nearing the other shore, but no murmur escapes his lips. The cancer is slowly doing its work, but his faith is strong.

The Council Bluffs branch has reorganized the young people's Religio, and already about thirty members have been enrolled, and the interest is increasing. All things considered the branch is in excellent order for work. The district Sunday school association meets at Crescent next Saturday, the 13th inst. May God keep us faithful to our trust is the prayer of MANCHESTER, England, March.

Editors Herald:—In your issue of the 2d ultimo there appears a letter over the signature of Sr. Eliza Alice Rhodes, dated January 9, 1898, Bradford, Manchester, England, in which appears the following paragraph:—

"There is much preaching and teaching which is not given by the good Spirit of God, but in the vain imagination of men's hearts; I have read that if a man have not the Spirit he shall not preach. O that men would heed this injunction! We are passing through deep waters because of this. We go hungry and come home the same. May God help us and send us real live shepherds to feed his flock."

This statement was undoubtedly intended to apply to the officers of the Northeast Manchester branch of the church, of which the aforesaid sister is a member. And we, the undersigned officers of the said branch, herewith desire to offer our protest against the publication of such a slanderous statement through your columns, wherein upon the mere say so of an irresponsible member our ability and integrity, as servants of the church, is publicly called into question. ELDERS' COURTS.

ON the hypothesis that every recognized help or department, under the general church government, acts for a specific purpose, it therefore follows, as a logical sequence, that elders' courts, since they are duly authorized, should begin and finish the work committed to them, leaving the parties affected by their decision to solicit a rehearing, or take an appeal, to another recognized higher tribunal, if dissatisfied, seeing their work partakes of a judicial character, so that that begun in law, may thus terminate. This were compatible with the idea that in all well regulated governments, there must be a point at which disputations, litigations, etc., should cease, in an authoritative manner.

Those failing to be reconciled by branch officials are to be delivered up to the church, not to the members, but to the elders, which elders constitute an authorized tribunal or court, not because of the mere fact of the branch having appointed them. No; but because the law authorizes the delivering of those up to the elders failing to be reconciled, through labor of branch official are authorized to perform, the branch therefore has nothing further to do with the matter, save as the law directs; if otherwise, law would cease to be the rule of action.

All are innocent until proven guilty, which is but the simplest justice in which we would all like to participate.

The accused are to be proven guilty by two or more witnesses. And as Latter Day Saints are not expected to lie, prevaricate, or perjure themselves, the court is to decide as to the guilt or innocence of those arraigned by the preponderance of the law-required amount of unimpeachable evidence. If guilty, the explicitness of the law itself prohibits them from affixing or suggesting a penalty, or punishment. And the idea of the branch having anything to say or do to inflict or stay punishment, to my mind would be replete with absurdity.

Listen to the law. "Thou shalt not lie, and he who lieth, and will not repent, shall be cast out." So with he who committeth adultery. Further; thou knoweth my law concerning these things are given in my Scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not shall be cast out. That is final, and should end controversy.

God's law being mandatory and retroactive, the elders' court, if by evidence as above referred to, find the accused guilty of any one of the above named crimes, have to so report; and as repentance by those who unfortunately are inveigled in any of the above crimes may obtain a forgiveness and a retention of church membership, there exists no necessity for anything being presented to the branch than the fact of the charge being sustained, save a space of time in which to repent. Then should follow the lifting of the hand by the church, that they may be dealt with according to the law of God. So that if the offender fails to repent within the time, gives no notice of an appeal, or requests a rehearing, he is as Christ commanded, if failing to hear the church, let him be to thee (the church) as an heathen man and a publican.

Thus the trouble is met and disposed of in an authoritative manner. That which is governed by law is preserved by law, etc. Latter Day Saints ought to be satisfied with law, of which we say God is the author and giver.

I would not feign a wisdom, justice, or love, above or below that evinced by Christ himself; hence, believe in view of his decision, 'tis better for him who fails to hear the church to be out than in the church. As I believe since Christ has said, "ye must be born again," 'twere better to seek and accept the means and be born again than repudiate the method.

The Book of Rules says:—

The court is not to pass the final sentence of acquittal or condemnation upon the one under trial; nor . . . to state definitely what shall be the punishment inflicted; except in cases where the accused is proven guilty of adultery, and the trial is for a second offense, the penalty for which is expulsion, as provided in the law itself. The language of the law is, "And the elders shall lay the case before the church, and the church shall lift up their hand against them."—Book of Rules, page 130.

Thus it is seen, that the Book of Rules insists in carrying out the letter of the law in cases of adultery as a second offense. But as shown above, the penalty as set forth in the law itself is the same for adultery as a first offense as a second offense, with this difference only; that the first offense may be repented of, but for the second offense no repentance is granted; expulsion is to be immediate.

I would not say that the committee formulating the rules of Book of Rules, and the body indorsing the same, would have the reader understand that adultery, as a second offense, is the only sin punishable under the law; but it is made to appear it's the only crime for which they insist the raising of the hand, as provided in the law itself (D. C. 42:21), so that by the grant of negative vote, in the event of a recommended penalty by the court, the adulterer (for the first offense), the liar, the thief, etc., may be set free by a majority vote of a ten-year-old boy. The loyal and God-fearing Latter Day Saint mourn, the honest inquirer after truth be made to think the church is a nursery for crime, the lawless, and those watching for opportunities to have their own way exult. Then we prate about the verity and imperativeness of law, saying the Lord does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, or walk in crooked paths. Whither are we drifting?

If I am thought premature or exaggerative in my conclusion, I would like to learn the correct status of a case presented to a branch by a court, and the finding affirmed. The finding may be either of the above crimes, and the recommended penalty voted down.

If the majority negative vote does not set the sinner free, what is the object of the vote? If it does, then what is the purpose of the court? From whom or whence will light radiate?

If the, "And the church shall lift their hand," etc., is so flexible that the right of a negative vote may be granted, and so by virtue of the negative vote the right of discussion claimed, and that which should be as a house of God—a house of order, is made more like a political arena, then what of the inflexibility of the, "Thou shalt love thy wife and cleave unto her, and none else," and many similar law injunctions?

I cannot believe that individuals, quorums, or the body have a right to make interpretations contrary to the express words of accepted law; nor can I believe that a general law should be trammelled by any specific or particular precedent.

The twenty-seventh section of Doctrine and Covenants briefly narrates the existence of an exigency in the incipency of the church, necessitating an interposition with a view to adjudication. And Oliver Cowdery was informed that nothing should be appointed to any (no respect of persons) in this church contrary to the church covenants. And again, "Thou shalt assist to settle all these things according to the covenants of the church." Surely there is some significance to be attached to this positive instruction. First, not to appoint anything contrary to the church covenants to anyone; second, a command to settle all these things according to the covenants of the church. And what other construction could possibly be placed on the above than that the church covenants reflect the pattern for the adjudication of trouble arising in the church? In the same paragraph reference is made to common consent, but to what end? Can we suppose that common consent was permitted to change the verity or imperativeness of those solemn injunctions? hardly. Following the injunction to settle all these things according to the church covenants, the following is read: "For all things must be done in order by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith." Hence it is made to appear that the object of common consent was to obtain a unanimity of feeling or concert of action, in the work of adjudication, to the prevention of strife and disorder; for were it otherwise, the imperativeness of law were a myth. But as it is, evidence is apparent that law is the rule of action given by the superior to the inferior, which the latter must obey; and I offer no apology for inserting the little word "must" though to the stalwart advocates of liberty it may be a little terrorizing; but it's just possible that this furor of excitement often seen in the advocacy of liberty is but another effort to palliate or hide a rebellious feeling to law and order, or to reach a coveted point through some wretched and deceptive policy, which given and accepted law would condemn. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and it's not improbable that a cherished rebellion may so affect those evincing it, as to beget a desire to dethrone the very God of heaven were it possible, before they would relinquish their pet theories.

Such is the perversity of humanity, which if cherished will prevent spiritual progress, in which event retrogression will be visible. With which evidence a necessity exists for the needed labor as a preventive to a further retrogression. For watchmen are not only expected to grapple with the thief when caught in the act, but to watch the premises to see that he does not enter. And so I believe branch officials should so cooperate as to prevent evil, which would render them more proficient to cope with evil when despite their efforts it comes to the surface.

I am told that the, "And thus shall ye do in all cases," refers only to the cases of adultery, which I respectfully decline to believe; for after the detailed instruction found in the twenty-second and two following paragraphs being mandatory, for bringing into requisition the method of adjudication, when a necessity exists.

The last line in paragraph twenty-three runneth thusly: "And thus shall ye conduct in all cases." And as above quoted, the law denounces other crimes than that of adultery.

Moreover, I learn that a failure to deal with the sinner as the law directs is offensive to Him who is our Lawgiver (D. & C. 64:2), and further the law itself declares "that the elders shall see that my [Christ's] law is kept."

He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple: and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you.—D. C. 41:2. (See also D. C. 46:1-7.)

There seems to be considerable anxiety about climbing unto Moses' seat before a proper conception is obtained as to what the Moses, in the event of his being elevated, would have or should do. So that I think Hebrews 5:12, and Doctrine and Covenants, section 10, may be studied with profit.

The right of citizenship does not carry with it the right to do as we please, unless we choose to do right.

I cherish no wish to denounce the action of General Conference, nor have I done so, thinking they should stand until modified or changed. But I don't understand that this prevents the expression of thought—especially so as the present edition of the Book of Rules gives evidence of revision on pages 9 and 12, which is preclusive of the thought of the body claiming infallibility. I believe in raising the hand as provided for in the above law, but I would not so far transcend the dignity of manhood by scheming like a politician to induce others to believe and do as I do—and scandalize them if they didn't; but I find it possible that any acting as above may be pampered and flattered, when the fearless advocate of the law and order may become a prey.

There being so much of "They say," I chose to give publicity to the above thoughts.

JAMES CAFFALL.

WOULD LIFE BE WORTH LIVING?

THERE are very few men who would not like to be running a business successfully upon their own footing, and many are the delusive hopes cherished for such conditions. I think I am perfectly safe in saying that nine out of every ten of us succeed better financially when working for salary or wages than when trying to do business on our own hook. Would not the masses of us be better off than we now are if we held government positions, receiving a reasonable remuneration for our services? Would life be worth living if we were deprived of the chance of making millions?

It appears to me that the Christian civilization is at its noonday height. "There is a time to build up and a time to tear down." "That which is now has already been, and that which has been will be again."

I understand both the foregoing quotations to refer to the constant successive rise and decline of civilization that is going on among men. We are nothing more than people, and if we believe in a just God we must believe that he is no respecter of peoples any more than he is of persons.

There was a highly civilized people upon this continent hundreds of years ago, and the Book of Mormon informs us that they "dwindled in unbelief"; any fair-minded man must admit that we as a people are rapidly approaching a similar fate. Among the many factions of Christianity that constitute the faith element, I know of none better equipped for withstanding the swelling tide of unbelief than are the poor despised Latter Day Saints. Some one has said, "He is a wise man who having acquired a competency by the time he has reached the meridian of life, is able to spend his declining years in the enjoyment thereof." Somebody else said, "We must judge nations just as we do individuals." We as a nation have certainly reached the zenith of our civilization, and we have certainly acquired a competency in the way of labor-saving machines and utensils. Shall we, like the wise man compose ourselves and spend our declining centuries in comparative ease? Shall there be a millennium? Will the millennium be something that shall be thrust upon us, or will it be something that "we poor, civilized sons of sin, care, and sorrow" shall be instrumental in bringing about?

Since beginning this conglomerate production the Herald has come to hand containing an article from W. D. C. Pattyson, entitled, "Might not this improve the situation?" Pleased to see the Herald publish such articles.

I may be shooting very wide of popular sentiment, nevertheless I am thoroughly convinced that if we would present anything for the benefit of the masses it must be something easily understood.

What could I suggest more simple than a government position for everybody, and no work no pay?

Like Bellamy, I would also be in favor of pensioning old people, and let their pensions be regulated according to the record they had made during the active period of their lives. I have no doubt it would be a veritable hell for many people to think of going through life without getting a larger share than they really earned.

A CHRONICLE.

AND it came to pass, that in the day of God's preparation, before his saints were sufficiently purified to abide his coming, there was—among others—a man sent from God whose name was George.

This same George travelled up and down throughout the wilderness of the people, bearing witness to the saints of the true light that shineth in the darkness, and oftentimes the darkness—outside and inside the kingdom—comprehendeth it not.

And he said, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord;" Make straight paths for your own feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way. And when he marked out the path, some thought how woefully straight it was. And it came to pass that he also asked, "Have you paid your tithing since you believed?"

And some answered one way and some another, and still others said, "How can we, except some man teach us?"

And he answered them saying, "For this purpose am I sent." Then expounded he more fully unto them the law and the Scriptures; and some saw, believed, and obeyed, to the satisfaction of their souls, and some "Comprehended it not."

Yet with strong words did he seek to stir up the saints to prepare to meet their coming Lord, and in all things he shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God; yea, even to the proclaiming against idol worship; for, behold, there were idols in the land, which the people did worship; and one, though much smaller than

"Diana of the Ephesians," was worshiped by many of the inhabitants of the land. Yea, a great multitude, which no man could number, bowed daily at its shrine, and though it was a small, pocket god, dark and ill-favored, bearing neither the image nor superscription of Cæsar, yet men loved it so much that they ate, or chewed it up, so that it had to be replaced by another. And many loved it better than wife, or children, or houses, or lands, or God's sake; and others, whose names were legion, did offer incense to it, even on the altar of their lips, and the fumes thereof were spread abroad, throughout all the length and breadth of the land; yea even to the four winds of heaven did the smoke of the torment ascend.

And it came to pass that God beheld it was not good for man, and to his people he lovingly said, "Avoid the use of it." And the wise understood, and they answered and said, "All the words which the Lord hath said will we do." But some, Moses-like, comprehended not the light shining so close to them, and wondered at the strange sight, and knew not that God was in it, nor that they stood on holy ground.

And it came to pass, as this servant of the Lord journeyed, he came to a place where, owing to partial darkness, the light was not comprehended in its fullness, and finding certain disciples there, he said unto them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

And they answered him saying, "We believe we have."

Then asked he them, "Have ye brought forth fruits meet for repentance that needeth not to be repented of?"

And their answer was as before.

Then said he unto them, "How is it that some among you bow down to strange gods?"

And they answered quickly, saying, "This is but a small thing; trouble us not about the matter, we were in peace—asleep—before you came; let us so abide."

Yet he strove to awaken them, and then went on his way; and after he was gone, they did reason among themselves, and with one accord did they say, "Behold this our brother is 'cranky.'"

And this same saying went abroad concerning others, who from time to time did come among them, and seek to arouse them, and they did settle down to sleep as before; except that their dreams, by times, were troubled.

And it came to pass, after many days, that George did return to these same disciples, and found them still asleep; and he did not say unto them, "Sleep on, and take your rest;" but with great earnestness did he call on them to awaken, and cease from idol worship,—for some, even among the Shepherds of the flock, did indulge therein,—which they did consider but a small matter. But he said unto them, "Not so." But if ye would not be transgressors ye must keep the whole law. Except ye obey in its fullness the celestial law, ye cannot inherit a fullness of celestial glory.

And again he went his way, and again were their hearts troubled within them. Then after a season of deep meditation, rose up one of the young men, and said, "It is finished; no more will I bow down to, nor worship the pocket god." And it was done as he said.

And it came to pass that he grew in stature and wisdom, and in favor with God and man. Yea he did ascend the sacred desk, and proclaim with holy boldness the gospel; and he did even go out on the dark and lonely mountains, after the sheep that had gone astray, and by his wise counsel did he bring back the wandering ones to their Father's house, and because they returned, there was joy and rejoicing in all the household—not excepting the elder brother—but all rejoiced together.

And it came to pass that he did beseech some of the Shepherds, saying, "Set, I pray, an example before the young men, in that ye abstain from idol worship."

But they did shake their heads, and say sadly, "My son; expect not perfection here; it is not to be found." And they comprehended not the light in its fullness nor the saying, "Obedience is better than sacrifice;" so they did continue to "sacrifice."

And it came to pass that some of the young men and maidens said, "Let us make merry in the dance," and it was done as they said. Then up rose the Shepherds and said,

"This thing must not be allowed in Israel, lest thereby our holy cause, we love so well, be disgraced; and as our counsel seemeth ineffectual, behold we will take the matter before the Sanhedrim." And they did go on a journey thereto, and there presented the matter; and it came to pass that among the wise men of the Sanhedrim was George—who had happened by that way—who when he had heard their complaints, looked on the Shepherds and said, "I perceive, brethren, that ye also are transgressors of the law." "How readest thou?"

And they departed the same way they came; and they were sorrowful in spirit, and wondered what they could do—that would be easy to do—and they found nothing. And as they murmured and complained, some said, "Let us build a citadel in which we shall be safe from these disturbers of our peace; and let it be builded out of the faults and failings of our brethren." And it was builded accordingly; and though the material was sufficient, the citadel proved insufficient, for enough of light had dawned to behold the greatest disturber of their peace—called Conscience—within the gates thereof, and he could neither be driven out, nor barred out; and again they were troubled and said, "What shall we do, for behold the work of God languisheth."

And one of the Shepherds said, "Brethren, I do perceive that we must purify ourselves, and cease from that which is displeasing to God, even from idol worship, and then shall we see more clearly the light; for I do behold that it is beautiful beyond compare, yea it is near us. Let us not shut our hearts against it; but let it shine in upon our souls, and it will cause us to rejoice, even greatly, and be to us an abiding Comforter. Yea, he who is the Light of the world will guide us, if we will obey his counsel, and all will be well."

And there was rejoicing at these words, and at the light accompanying them, and it was evident that a brighter day indeed was dawning, and that God's invincible army—battling against wrong—was being reënforced, and was marching steadily on, on to victory.

"Lo! the day of God is breaking;
See, the gleaming from afar!"

Sons of earth from slumber waking,
Hail the bright and Morning Star.

"Trust in Him who is your Captain;
Let no heart in terror quail;
Jesus leads the gath'ring legions,
In his name we shall prevail.

"Conquering hosts with banners waving,
Sweeping on o'er hill and plain,
Ne'er shall halt till swells the anthem,
Christ o'er all the world doth reign!"

MORE NOTHING.

IN addition to what Bro. R. C. Evans presented, I copy from a book published by S. G. Goodrich in 1851, and he gives the following description of the gods of India:—

BRAHMA,

The great deity of the Hindoos, is said to have emanated from the Eternal Essence, who, in the language of their sacred books, is supposed to be omnipresent, and by whose immediate agency the world was created.

The Bhagavat Gheeta, one of the Hindoo oracular writings, speaks thus of Deity:—

"Being immaterial, he is above all conception; being invisible, he can have no form; from what we behold in his works we may conclude that he is eternal, omnipotent, knowing all things, and present everywhere. God is one creator of all that is. God is like a perfect sphere, without beginning or end."

It is apparent from this that the primary notions of the Hindoos respecting the Deity were just and reasonable.—Ancient History, p. 240.

The religion of India being older than any of the churchianity of the present time, it is possible that ancient mythology has in some way furnished the definition for the modern god.

of a better home beyond. She leaves husband, son, one adopted daughter, a grandson, and seven brothers. Two funeral sermons were preached over her remains, to full houses, by Elder J. C. Foss; one at Higbee, her home, assisted by Elder George Thorburn, the second at Bevier, the place of her burial, assisted by Elder T. A. Tanner.

WEEDMARK.—At Lamoni, Iowa, March 7, 1898, Sr. Almira, wife of Bro. Nathan Weedmark. She was born at Chatham, Kent County, Ontario, June 3, 1849; was married to Bro. Weedmark, December 21, 1867. To them were born six children, the only surviving one, Sr. Davis, a resident of Lamoni. She was baptized June 16, 1872, in Ontario, by Bro. John Traxler. The family moved to Michigan, in 1875, and thence to Lamoni in 1889. Funeral sermon at the brick church by Elder R. M. Elvin, from Revelation 14: 12, 13, assisted by Patriarch A. H. Smith. Interment in Rose Hill cemetery.

ROCKWELL.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, March 5, 1898, Mr. George W. Rockwell. He was born at Pleasanton, Iowa; was at time of death 29 years, 4 months, and 13 days old. July 8, 1894, was married to Miss Nettie Frink. He thus leaves a young widow and two children. Sermon from Job 14: 14 at the Christian Advent church to a full house, by Elder Robert M. Elvin.

KERN.—At Seligman, Missouri, March 3, Sr. Isabel J. Kern. She was born October 30, 1861; baptized April 20, 1894, at Seligman, Missouri. Also her five-year-old daughter was burned to death at the same time and place. Sr. Kern was burning trash in the yard, and went in the house to see after her baby, and the little daughter went too near the fire and her clothing caught fire. The mother ran to the child to try to extinguish the flames, and her own clothing took fire, and both were burned so badly that death ensued in a few hours. Funeral sermon by Elder G. H. Hilliard.

CREES.—Susannah E. Born at Beindersheim, Rheinfaiz, Germany, November 4, 1822. Died at Economy, Pennsylvania, February 10, 1898. Baptized at Independence, Missouri, April, 1894, by Elder Joseph Luff. Came to America with her parents when ten years of age, settling near Economy. Some of her relatives live in Iowa, where she resided for some time. Her death was due to neuralgia of the heart. She possessed more than ordinary intelligence and was a faithful saint. Services were conducted by Elder D. L. Shinn.

HOLCOMB.—Harmon C. Holcomb was born November 3, 1837, Ashtabula County, Ohio; died February 24, 1898, Galland's Grove, Iowa. He united with the Saints Church October, 1861, and remained a consistent member and firm believer until death. December 7, 1873, he united in marriage with Elnora Homer, she passing this life July 22, 1895. Two children, Martha A. and Homer C., are the result of this union and thus become orphans. Besides these, three brothers and four sisters, with other relatives and numerous friends, feel the departure. The commodious church at the Grove was not ample to the funeral occasion—proof of the high esteem had for this worthy brother. Elder J. W. Wight was the speaker.

EATON.—Lucy A., wife of John Eaton, died at Little Deer Isle, February 26, 1898, aged 22 years, 5 months, 3 days. She was baptized May 17, 1896, by Elder J. C. Foss, and lived a consistent life to the last. Husband and one daughter three years old mourn. Funeral sermon at chapel by Elder J. J. Billings.

BROADWAY.—Bro. John James Broadway, second son of the presiding elder of the Hamilton branch, New Castle, New South Wales, Australia; aged 14 years and 7 months. The deceased was away at Charlestown taking his holidays. On the 13th of January, in company with another young brother (Jimmie Jones), he went swimming, buying some sweets on the way. John put a lollie into his mouth before going into the water. Among other movements, he turned onto his back to "float," when the hard round lollie dropped into his throat and he sank at once, suffocated, and never rose till his lifeless body was recovered. This sad event came as a terrible shock to his relatives and the church. The deceased usually played the violin in the praise services of the church, and the vacant place by the organ will be very painfully conspicuous for some time. The funeral services were conducted and the sermon preached by the writer and were specially well attended. G. R. WELLS.

CRAMER.—Harold Manly, son of Bro. John H. and Cedora Cramer, at Blakes Mills, Ohio, February 10, 1898, aged 5 years, 4 months, and 10 days. Little Harold broke through the ice on the canal and was drowned. Funeral service Sunday, 13th, at the church, which was filled to its utmost capacity. The Baptist choir from New Philadelphia furnished the singing. Sermon by Elder L. W. Powell.

BAXTER.—At Empire, Nevada, February 28, 1898, Bro. William Baxter. Deceased was born in Alton, Hampshire, England, November 19, 1827; baptized February 2, 1872, at Jacks Valley, Douglas County, Nevada, by Elder Abednego Johns. Bro. Baxter leaves a wife, two sons, four daughters, and a number of grandchildren to mourn. Funeral sermon by Elder R. W. Davis from Revelation 14: 12, 13.

HAILEY.—At Geelong West, Australia, January 2, 1898, Willie, youngest son of Bro. Godfrey and Sarah Hailey, born January 1, 1897. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Funeral services conducted by Elder W. J. Trembath at the grave in Eastern cemetery, Geelong, on January 3.

LUKE.—Miss Catherine, daughter of Mr. John and Mrs. Kate Luke, at Beacon, Mahaska County, Iowa, March 8, 1898, after an illness of twenty-three days. She was born at Cleveland, Lucas County Iowa, December 10, 1882. Funeral took place March 10, 1898. Services held in Baptist church, where Elder E. B. Morgan preached to a large and attentive congregation from John 11: 25. Miss Luke was an obedient and affectionate daughter. She had many friends. Tokens of their friendship were seen in flowers and tears at the funeral.

Archæological Committee's Report,
WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

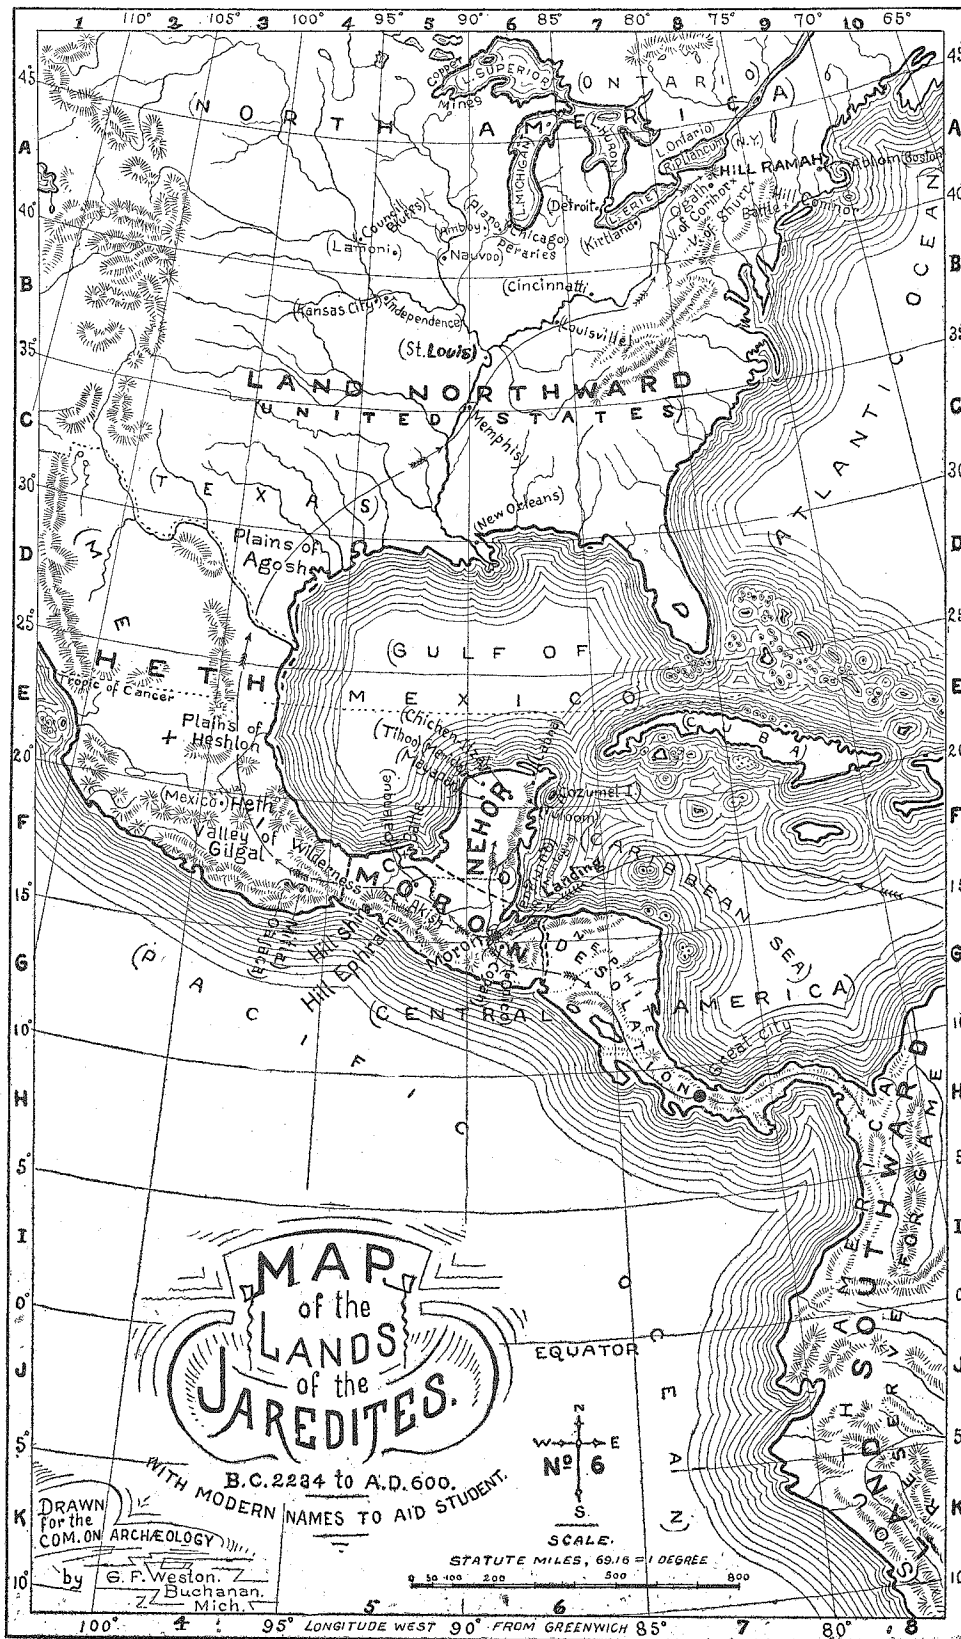

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

THE DISCOVERY OF THE TOMB OF OSIRIS.

London Press Dispatch, March 5.

SCIENTISTS are excited over the authenticated discovery of the tomb of Osiris, the chief god of the Egyptians and brother of Isis, at Luxor, a village of Upper Egypt, built on the site of Thebes. The news was first received with incredulity, but all doubts were quieted by a telegram from the director-general of excavations to the president of the Egyptian council of ministers. The discovery was made by M. Amelineau, who, in a letter, also affirms positively that he has discovered that the tomb of the gods Seth and Horus is in the same necropolis, at Abydos. The Pall Mall Gazette says: "There is no doubt that this is a great discovery. Thus we know the tombs of the last three god-kings of the second of the divine dynasties, which dates back ten thousand years."

M. E. Amelineau, in the Journal Egyptien.

Everybody who has had a little education or has read a little, knows, or at least has heard of, the legend of Osiris. The benevolent god, benignant and charming, to whom is generally attributed the progress of civilization in the Nile valley, who taught his contemporaries how to cultivate the earth, to enjoy the rural pleasures, to charm their leisure, and to forget their fatigues with the help of simple and touching songs, has been considered up to the present time more as a creation of the imagination than as a real, mortal being. But hereafter it will be difficult to doubt that Osiris, Isis, his sister-wife, and Horus, their son, lived in reality, and played at least partially the parts with which legends and traditions have credited them. The Egyptian texts speak very often of Osiris's tomb, which is designated under the name of "staircase of the great god." They add that the high officials that lived a short time after that epoch desired greatly to be buried near Osiris, who had preceded them in life and death. I discovered on the first of January of this year this famous staircase, which cannot leave any doubt as to the destination of the tomb which my excavations brought to light.

Two years ago I had already begun a very important work, if we consider only the number of cubic meters of sand removed, and my diggings on one side had stopped at a point three or four meters from a large tomb. During my previous excavations I had found a great number of traces of Osiris worship, but they could be explained by the general devotion that people of Abydos, as well as other parts of Egypt, had for the God of the dead, who was also sometimes called "the Universal Lord," because men are all submitted to death's law. The hill under which was hidden Osiris's tomb is about one hundred and eighty meters in length by one hundred and sixty meters in width, and is here and there seven or eight meters high. It was composed of millions upon millions of small jars or earthen vases, also some large ones mixed up with sand and few rare pieces of stone.

From the first days of the excavations, in December last, pieces of pottery of all shapes, entire or broken, were found, bearing inscriptions written in hieroglyphic or hieratic signs. Large numbers of pieces mentioned the name of Osiris, and were due to the priests, while a number of smaller pieces bore the name of Amou-Ra. A few of these inscriptions mentioned the house of Osiris. Among Egyptians a term generally used to designate tombs was "eternal houses." These discoveries impressed me so strongly that as far back as December 2 I recorded in the diary, which I keep of my excavations, the belief that I was going to come across Osiris's tomb. If my discoveries had only related to a general worship I would not have found the double (Ka) name of King Menes among the debris; I would not have found that the worship of the dead buried under the hill had lasted until the end of the Egyptian empire. In spite of all these proofs, I lacked yet the details given in the Egyptian texts.

The tomb was in shape a large rectangle, and on the four sides of it were series of tombs which would number about two hundred. Moreover, the necropolis, known in the country under the name of Om-el-Gaab-el-Gharby, contained the sepulchers of persons of very high rank, among them kings, the steles of which I discovered two years ago. So this first point was settled. On January 1 appeared this fortunate staircase mentioned by the texts. The next day I discovered a unique monument. It was a granite monolith in the shape of a bed, decorated with the head and legs of a lion. On this bed was lying a mummy bearing what is known as the white crown, holding in his hands, which came out of the case, a flagellum and a pastoral cane. Near the head were two hawks, and two were at the feet. The dead was designated by the inscription: "Osiris the Good Being." The hawks were labeled: "Horus, avenger of his father," and the goddess Isis is also designated by her name. This monument is one meter seventy in length, and about one meter in width and height. The tomb itself has the shape of a dwelling, with a courtyard in front. It contained fourteen rooms and the staircase, five rooms to the north, five to the south, and four to the east. The western face was open. The two extremities, south and north, were closed by a wall on the east side.

The tomb was about thirteen meters in length, twelve meters in width, and two and a half meters in depth. There were evidences of fire in it. I found at the bottom of the rooms indisputable proof of the work of spoliators. This fact of the tomb's having been destroyed by fire has rendered sterile a great part of my labor. This is to be lamented, and the case is hopeless, for what is lost is lost forever.

It was not without a deep emotion on my part that this holy sepulcher of Egypt was brought to light by my workmen, who did not even suspect the importance of the discovery. The emotion I felt at the thought that I was touching soil sacred for thousands of generations was rendered more intense when I considered that my discovery came just in time to prove that what have been called my theories and theses were not pure unsupported theories and sensational theses, but unquestionably realities proved by facts. Such are in a nutshell the main points of my discoveries.—Public Opinion, March 17, 1898.

JEWISH FARMERS IN PALESTINE.

THE first historic record of the Jews makes them a pastoral people, tending flocks and herds. This they remained till the destruction of Jerusalem. Then they were scattered to the four corners of the earth and persecuted by Christian nations. In Europe the fact that for centuries they were forbidden to own land changed the Jewish character apparently, and forced them to become a commercial people. Now there seems to be a tendency to round out the circle of human experiences for the race by making many of them at least an agricultural people. In literature, in the professions, and in scientific pursuits they have long since taken first rank. Now it only remains for them to become for the first time in their checkered history farmers.

They were driven to the agricultural life once more by persecution, this time the persecution of the Turk and the Russian. Not all the starving Russian Hebrews came to America. There are thousands of them in Palestine, engaged in farming, successfully too. In fact there are already twenty-two agricultural colonies representing the modern return of the Jews to Palestine. The estimate has been made that of these Jewish farmers and their families in Palestine there are as many as 6,000, with 100,000 acres under cultivation.

Wine growing, silk culture, fruit raising, and honey production chiefly engage these Jew farmers who have returned to the promised land. There is at Yafa, the Joppa of Bible times, actually a Jewish agricultural college, which is doing a great work in the education of Hebrew farmers. Its graduates take charge of farm colonies of the men of their race in both Palestine and elsewhere. From the advance made in Palestine it looks as if the wilderness will indeed blossom as the rose in that dried up land, and that the Jews will prove as successful at farming as they have done at everything else they have attempted.—Carroll, Iowa, Sentinel, Nov. 11, 1897.

CRUCIFIXION OF CHRIST.

DEATH ON THE CROSS WAS A MOST TERRIBLE FORM OF TORTURE.

"CRUCIFIXION was a terrible death," writes the Rev. Amory H. Bradford, D. D., apropos of Holy Week, in an article on "The Last Week in Christ's Life" in the April Ladies' Home Journal. "It was reserved for offenders of a servile class and never used for a Roman citizen. The hands and feet of the victim were nailed to the wood, and a kind of rude seat was provided—just enough to prevent the weight of the body from tearing through the flesh. The exact spot where Jesus was crucified cannot now be identified. Golgotha was probably some skull-shaped hill 'outside the city wall.' Thither a strange procession wended its way—the condemned with their crosses on their backs, the hard-hearted rabble making fun of them as they passed. The strength of Jesus failed before the destination was reached, and another was compelled to carry the cross for him. This crucifixion, like all others, was cruel and barbarous in the extreme. The executioners were Roman soldiers, but a host of Jews feasted their eyes on the hideous sight.

"Such agony was no protection against the gibes of the crowd. With but one of his disciples in sight, and only two or three friendly women near—one of them his mother—Jesus passed the last hours of his earthly life. Those who suffered by crucifixion sometimes lingered three or four days—Jesus lived about five hours. While hanging on the cross he spoke seven times. Soon after the cross was raised, looking over the coarse and brutal soldiery, and the mistaken fanatics who had hounded him to that hour, he uttered a prayer, which has probably made a deeper impression on the world than any other single prayer ever offered: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

BIG ARTIFICIAL WATERWAY.

INDIA HAS AN IRRIGATION CANAL WHICH IS THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD—RUSSIA'S WATERWAYS.

THE Chenab irrigation canal, in the northwest provinces, India, is 200 feet broad. It is doubtless the largest canal in the world. Its main channel is 450 miles long, while the principal branches have an aggregate length of 2,000 miles, and the village branches will extend, when completed, for an additional 4,000 miles. Apart from irrigation, the longest canal in the world is that which extends from the frontier of China to St. Petersburg, and is 4,472 miles in length. Another Russian canal, from Astrachan to St. Petersburg, is 1,434 miles long; both the last-named canals were begun by Peter the Great. The Bengal canal, connecting with the river Ganges, completed in 1854, is 900 miles in length, and cost £2,000,000 or £2,200 per mile. The total length of canals in India for irrigating 8,000,000 acres is calculated at 14,000 miles. The canal du Midi, connecting the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, is 148 miles long. The Caledonian canal in Scotland has a length of 60 miles. The Suez canal is 88 miles long, and the Erie 360; the Ohio canal, 332; the Miami and Erie, 274; the Manchester ship canal, 35½ miles.—Washington Star.

RATHER A MISTAKE.

SOME of our religious cotemporaries are making something of a mistake so far as we are concerned, in this: They affect to assume that the major proposition of our faith is that Joseph Smith was a true prophet; and that if they can defeat that proposition "Mormonism," or the faith of the Reorganized Church, is necessarily overthrown. A late writer in the Christian Index states this proposition as follows:—

Every system of religion has a central idea or foundation on which it stands. The central idea of the Christian religion is that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. Overthrow that proposition and you overthrow the entire superstructure of the Christian religion. Now the central idea of Mormonism is that Joseph Smith is a true prophet, this is the major proposition; in it all other propositions are included, or in other words all Mormonism is included in this one. Now overthrow this proposition and you overthrow the entire superstructure of Mormonism.

The writer makes a grave mistake in this statement. The central idea of Mormonism, the faith of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is that Jesus Christ was and is to be the Savior of mankind. In this is involved the belief in all the prophets who wrote of or believed in him; the fact that Jesus is the Christ, and that the knowledge that he is must be revealed to the disciple, learner, believer, or Christian devotee, now, as it was when Luke wrote of him, "Thou art the Christ of God;" or Matthew wrote in reply to Peter's emphatic declaration, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16:16-18; Luke 9:20.)

The gentlemen of the Christian Index type make another very serious mistake; one which if they will but correct in their own declaration of philosophy of the salvation offered in or by Jesus the Christ, they will do themselves and many others great good. They seem to be of the opinion that the world—their world—is very much more interested in the question whether Joseph Smith was a false prophet and Mormonism a fraud, than it is in the question that their faith and church are true. It is a fact susceptible of demonstration, that those among whom the labors of the Index and its supporters, and all of the so-called Christian, Advent, and Disciples of Christ, believers of every sort are being carried on, are and ought to be just as much interested in being accounted, proved, and known to be true, and of divine origin and sanction, as they possibly can, or ought to be in the idea that Mormonism is a fraud. For, if the isms of Alexander Campbell, and his associates, and every last offshoot from that parent stock that began with the Rev. Alexander, B. W. Stone, and others, are not true; and the church, and churches which have been built up by their teaching did not have divine sanction, and are not now recognized by Christ Jesus as his, then every man and woman who listens to their teaching is no better off than the Episcopal, the Congregational, the Presbyterian, Methodist, or any other of the Protestant denominations, or the Catholics, as churches.

It is useless to attempt to deny the proposition that unless Christ and his church are represented by those who seek to build up churches, inviting men to unite with them, then the unseen but powerful agencies by which Christ established the believer and the church in days of himself and his disciples, are not brought into operation to the convincing the disciple of the sonship of God by divine revelation.

Jesus has positively declared that he will build his church; and the fact upon which it is to be built, that Jesus was and is the Christ, is to be the bond of unity by which the disciples, members of Christ's body are to be made one with Christ as he was one with the Father.

The proposition that Joseph Smith was a prophet is a minor one and has never been taught as a necessity precedent to salvation. Belief in Joseph Smith being a prophet has been taught as a consequence, something that occurs as the result of belief in and obedience to the gospel and the reception of the gift of the Holy Ghost, an accompaniment to the faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Belief that Joseph Smith was a prophet has come to many in direct answer to prayer, without effort on the part of the ministry to enforce it. It has not been taught as an essential part of the faith of the church; so that this premise of the argument of the Index falls without avail. Yet our opposers are constantly making this mistake.

"Mormonism," so-called, has been attacked during the whole period since Joseph Smith stated that an angel had visited him and given him a message to deliver to the men of his age and time, by nearly every class of religionist, and especially by some of those whose religious movements began near the same time that Joseph Smith began his; and the method of attack has nearly always been the same; an attack upon the personal character of the man and an endeavor to prove him to have been a false prophet; and yet the faith still lives, and has earnest believers and devotees. Nor can its life and perpetuity be destroyed by those who assume to locate its central proposition and so grievously mistake as this Christian Index has.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

FASTING, PRAYER, ANOINTING, AND SACRAMENT.

DO THE Latter Day Saints practice anointing and washing, as taught in Matthew 6:18? If so, when is the proper time to anoint? If anyone has not understood the commandment can they anoint at the time they are made to understand, or is the anointing done by each individual privately by him or herself? Or can it be done in a meeting before the congregation? Is it lawful to partake of the sacrament when the saints have their meeting at a country schoolhouse?

The instruction referred to as found in Matthew 6:18 is in the sermon on the mount, as it is called, and was delivered to an audience of a multitude, including the disciples. The moralities of this sermon have always been taught as the instructions to those who hear as individuals; but are not taught as church tenets, doctrines, or practices; nor enjoined as church practices. We presume, however, that all who propose to fast at any time, whether such fast is general by request of the church authorities, or as the result of conference resolution or order, or as a matter of personal and private intention or purpose, will before entering in upon such period of fasting, wash themselves, and be clean as it is possible for them to do. Not many have access to the oil of the sort used in oriental countries, and according to the customs then and still prevailing there.

It would be the proper time for such washing and anointing just prior to the entering in upon the fast.

One cannot obey a command until it is heard and understood; therefore one who has not understood this may obey it when he does. The anointing should be done by the individual by himself. To do it in a meeting would be doing just what the Savior told them not to do, "appear unto men to fast." It would be a public advertisement of the intention to fast.

It is lawful to partake of the sacrament among the saints at any place where their meetings are held.

MISCELLANEOUS.

1. Is a written confession presentable to the church? If so; under what circumstances is it acceptable?

Where circumstances show reasons why the person confessing cannot be present personally.

2. Can the church expel a member for not fellowshipping with the church after they been labored with?

Yes. It might be a bad policy to do it, however, in every case.

3. What is considered the best thing to do with such members for the good of the church?

This is owing to conditions; and the church should be very careful that its reasons for such action are good, and the conditions such as to warrant it.

4. Must the church abide by the decision of the civil law?

Yes; under all circumstances, and in all matters in which the civil law makes provisions and the courts have jurisdiction.

5. Can an officer of the Aaronic priesthood be chosen to act as branch president, if desired by the branch, when there are elders present of the branch?

Yes; but it is not good policy to do so; except under peculiar conditions warranting it. The right of choice is with the branch. It is better to choose an elder if practicable.

THE SAINTS' HOME.

THE HERALD readers will be interested in learning further particulars concerning the Saints' Home. Though not yet formally opened or dedicated, the Home is open and in charge of the Matron, Sr. Alice Dancer, who is putting on the finishing touches in the way of making it ready for occupancy; floors have been cleaned, matting and carpets put down, and other items are receiving attention, by Sr. Dancer, assisted by others who have lent their aid to the good work.

The Home is a large building of about 34 x 66 feet with an ell about 32 x 34, another about 18 x 26. It faces south and east and has three towers; two on the south and one on the east side of the building. The towers add both to the outside appearance of the structure and to the inside arrangement of a number of the rooms. The building is of pressed brick with stone trimmings and has a slate roof. It has two stories, attic, and a basement, and presents a substantial and handsome appearance. It has, roughly speaking, about fifty rooms, and so arranged that the majority if not all are well lighted and to which the cheering rays of the sun have access.

Large halls traverse the building crosswise; being well heated and ventilated and each separate room being fitted with hot water register, ventilator, and transom, enabling occupants to arrange the temperature to suit their individual comfort. The heating and hot and cold water plants are modern and up to date in every respect. The walls are pure white hard finish; the woodwork the natural light tint wood with hard oil finish. The office, parlor, dining rooms, and other general apartments are so arranged as to suggest comfort, cheer, and homelike surroundings, and the occupants will doubtless find the Home a home indeed, where the spirit of "home" will prevail.

The building is located in a plat of over one hundred acres and is one of the most sightly locations in the county. It is high and well drained, and an excellent view of the surrounding country is obtainable from even the first floor. The basement is cemented; the rear or vegetable cellar is separated from the other portions of the basement with a view to providing against unpleasant odors or ill effects.

Some of the rooms have been papered and furnished. The regular apartment rooms are fitted with neat iron bedsteads, with brass trimmings and mattresses, and present a very tasty appearance.

Bishop Kelley and his coworkers deserve credit for the skill and taste exhibited in the construction and general arrangement of the building. The work throughout has been done with a view to the cheerful comfort of the aged saints who shall there seek rest and content under church care.

We have not been furnished a list of donors, but learn that the Boston sisters are to furnish a room, "the W. W's." of Lamoni have furnished another, Bro. and Sr. Criley have furnished and papered the upper parlor, and Bro. and Sr. Nicholson have furnished a room. The Mite Society and Zion's Religio, and others of Lamoni, with saints from abroad, have aided materially in the furnishing. Credit will doubtless be given to all, if all do not happen to be mentioned in the HERALD.

Success to the Saints' Home.

We can see one way with a little thought, but it usually takes a second or third thought to see the best way.

THE Hills Crescent, of March 17, published at Hills, Minnesota, has this to say of Bro. I. N. Roberts' work in that field:—

Elder I. N. Roberts, a missionary of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, preached two powerful sermons at the opera house Saturday and Sunday evenings. Mr. Roberts is a fluent speaker and presents the merits of his church in a forcible way. The Latter Day Saint cause is steadily increasing, having at the present time about a dozen members.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A NEW catalogue has been issued by the Herald Office. Patrons are requested to send for a copy before ordering books and general supplies, as some publications heretofore issued are now out of print. The catalogue will be mailed free on application.

Bro. D. L. Harris, of San Bernardino, California, has issued a local circular, from which it appears that he is after Brighamite elders laboring in that region.

In Bro. Caffall's article, "Elders' Courts," in last HERALD, in paragraph 6, read restrictive for retroactive: "God's law being mandatory and restrictive," etc.

The Birmingham Mercury, of March 5, has a unique presentation of a saints' meeting in that English city, where the reporter heard Bro. F. G. Pitt deliver a discourse on a gospel theme. Though inclined to add some features of a sensational nature peculiar to reporters abroad as well as at home, the report contains good points in favor of our cause.

The Quorum of the Twelve began its sessions on the 23d inst., at Lamoni. Brn. Kelley, Briggs, Caffall, Lake, Lambert, Gillen, Griffiths, White, Wight, and Evans are present. Bro. G. H. Hilliard is also on duty at headquarters. Bro. I. N. Roberts has also arrived from Minnesota. The spirit of conference has already begun to operate and the brethren are hard at work making preparations for the coming sessions.

Sixteen lives and an estimated property loss of over $11,000,000 is yesterday's record of devastation by flood in Ohio and Indiana. Almost continuous rainfall for four or five days has overflowed practically all the smaller streams and made the larger rivers bank full. The rains have amounted to a cloudburst in portions of Ohio. Many thousands of people have been rendered homeless and dependent upon public charity. The railroads are paralyzed throughout almost the entire extent of Ohio and an enormous amount of trackage is either submerged or has been washed away. From almost all parts of southern Indiana almost equally alarming reports are received. Traffic on nearly all the railroads has come to a standstill, and many miles of tracks will have to be relaid. The telegraph lines are down in many directions and large cities in Ohio and Indiana are cut off from communication with the outside world. The rivers are still rising, and it is feared the flood in the Ohio River will be worse than any experienced since 1884 if it does not surpass that disaster. The complete reports will probably add largely to the list of fatalities and the amount of property damage. Throughout Illinois and Kentucky the rainfall was heavy, but the resulting overflows have done far less damage than in Ohio and Indiana.—Chicago Tribune, 24th.

The Spanish-Cuban situation remains practically unchanged, except that the Spanish torpedo fleet has sailed for Cuba, and general war preparations upon the part of the United States continue. The report of the naval board on the Maine disaster has been received, but not yet made public. It is stated that the board found a verdict to the effect that the Maine was destroyed by a submerged movable torpedo.

The following passage from Senator Thurston's speech on the Cuban question is striking and worthy of note: "Christ died nineteen hundred years ago, and Spain is a Christian nation. She has set up more crosses in more lands beneath more skies and under them has butchered more people than all the other nations of the earth combined. Europe may tolerate her existence as long as the people of the Old World wish. God grant that before another Christmas morning the last vestige of Spanish tyranny and oppression will have vanished from the western hemisphere."

Those going to General Conference should not forget that, if traveling on the certificate plan by which reduction in rates is granted, it is necessary to go through to Independence by the Missouri Pacific or Chicago and Alton Railroad, thus securing certificates covering the entire trip to Independence. A time table of trains between Kansas City and Independence will be found in our miscellaneous columns.

Lamoni saints have been edified by the preaching of visiting brethren during the past week; Brn. J. M. Terry, R. C. Evans, W. H. Kelley, J. H. Lake, I. N. White, James Caffall, and G. H. Hilliard, also Brn. Joseph Smith, J. W. Wight, and A. M. Chase, of Lamoni, having preached the word acceptably to their hearers. Bro. J. M. Terry, of the auditing committee, left for home on the 25th. Bro. Joseph Luff, who has been ill at home, arrived on the 26th to meet with the Twelve in the business sessions of the quorum.

A WISH.

What shall I wish thee?
Treasure of earth,
Songs of the springtime,
Pleasure and mirth?
Flowers on thy pathway,
Skies ever clear?
Will these insure thee
True happiness here?

What shall I wish thee?
What can be found,
Bringing thee sunshine
All the year round?
Where is the treasure
Lasting and dear
That can insure thee
A happy life here?

Fzith that increaseth,
Walking in light;
Hope that aboundeth,
Cheerful and bright;
Love that is perfect,
Casting out fear;
This will insure thee
True happiness here.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"After the hours of chastening, the spirit made pure and bright,
After the earth's dark shadow, clear in the light of light,
After the guiding counsel, communion full and sweet,
After the willing service, all laid at the Savior's feet."

DON'T obscure to-day's sunshine with to-morrow's cloud. How natural it is to the human heart to reach forward towards the future and often cloud the peaceful, if not joyous, present with fears and apprehensions of what the morrow may never bring. This is not wise, not becoming the faith of a follower of Christ. The present demands the concentration of our best energies, and it is only by wisely improving the present that we are fitted to meet what the future may bring, either of trial or of happiness.

"How very weak humanity is after all, and how their weaknesses should draw them to each other and make them struggle together, not divided. A little more love and sympathy would do so much more good." So wrote a treasured friend to us, and the words have enshrined themselves deep in our heart. That they may be helpful to others as they have helped us, is our object in passing them on.

Said another dear friend, "When we learn not to require more of others than we do of ourselves, our judgments will be more just and our peace of mind less often disturbed."

PAPEETE, Jan. 28, 1898.

Dear Readers of the Columb:—I feel as if I really must talk to some one, still I cannot express what I have enjoyed while reading the lately arrived letters, Herald, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. The arrival of the mail vessel, Tropic Bird, yesterday, was a glad surprise. We were not looking for her so soon—being only the 27th of the month. Joseph learned of her arrival, but did not tell me, knowing how—for certain reasons—feverishly anxious I was for this mail, and how tedious would be the three or four hours of waiting before the mail could be distributed, and planned an entire surprise for me. But one of the natives anticipated him by fifteen minutes. It was not long to wait, though, till I walked Mr. Burton, with an armful of mail matter. And such a feast of good things as this four weeks' mail contained! And how appreciated and enjoyed by us! It is so cheering when afar off to learn of the activity and progress of the gospel work in the land of Zion, and in other lands also.

Was much interested in Bro. Pitt's letter in the Ensign. Sr. Pitt has our interest in and prayers for success in her work. Am also especially interested in communications from Australia. The world is so quiet out here, and the work moving so slowly, we almost fear at times it is not progressing at all. But this is a peculiar mission; with a peculiar people; where "Religios," "Aid societies," and "Willing workers" are quite out of the question. Yet much more might be done, and which I would gladly do, if only the channel of communication was sufficiently opened up.

Bro. and Sr. Case took passage home on the Galilee, and probably will have arrived before this reaches you. When three days at sea a squall carried away her topmasts, so she had to put back for repairs. They left the second time on Tuesday last, 25th, only two days before the arrival of the Tropic Bird. There had been a long spell of rainy, squally weather, but the day they left was bright and dry and seemed to have permanently settled, and we hoped and prayed that they might have a pleasant "run" homeward. But that very night the sky again became overcast, and there have been frequent heavy squalls and much wind ever since. We see that the sea has been very rough outside. But though the Lord has not averted the storm, we trust his protecting care will be over them and will bring them safe through it.

We enjoyed Bro. and Sr. Case's visit very much during the time they were here in Papeete. Had one very pleasant day at "Ziona." Left here at seven in the morning and returned at five. The drive was very enjoyable, both in the early morning and in the cool of the evening; and also our visit with the Ziona saints. Had a prayer meeting in the forenoon and preaching in the afternoon. The small frame house that Bro. T. W. Smith built for himself—and the only frame building there except the church—is kept in reserve for visiting missionaries. The same little square table used by them, and the same little wooden bottomed chairs are still there. Also three corned beef cans that he nailed to the wall under a shelf—for pigeon holes—are still there with the papers he left in them, and I suppose will ever remain so, unless another missionary occupies the house. The natives regard them as being too sacred to his memory to ever destroy them.

Again, we embraced the opportunity while all together to visit Point Venus. The drive through the broad, shady avenue while on the level ground was very enjoyable. And when going over the hill, or around the bluff of it, the view was grand. At the Point we first ascended the long, winding stairs to the top of the lighthouse, and saw the great revolving lamp; then stepped out on the balcony and looked far over both land and sea. From that elevated height of two hundred feet we had a view of the oldest cocoanut tree on the Point, one hundred years old, and, like King Saul, it stood head and shoulders above all others. On coming down from our aerial flight, we were conducted to what is known as "Captain Cook's monument." It is a small, evenly hewn piece of coral rock, not very high above the ground, and which had been set firmly enough in the ground to endure the wear and wash of something over one hundred and twenty years, without being moved out of its place. On the upper surface of this little monument is a smooth, square plate of copper, embedded in the rock. If there were ever any inscriptions upon it, time with its beating rains and whirling sands has completely erased them. Not very long after Captain Cook erected this monument—while tarrying at that place watching the transit of Venus—he sailed for Honolulu, where he met his sad fate. After viewing the famous monument I went to the water's edge to hunt some shells of some kind as keepsakes, while Sr. Case took baby to the carriage to get something to eat. I knew, too, that Bro. Penfold would appreciate a trophy of shell or coral picked up on Point Venus, and secured a few rough ones.

Mr. Burton and I intended to have gone to Takapoto on the Teavaroa shortly after the Galilee sailed the first time, but did not get off, and upon her return were glad indeed that we did not; it would have been so gloomy for Bro. and Sr. Case to have come back to an empty house. We think now to go on the Leon in about ten days or two weeks. We are still real well, and not at all discontented, though lonely for awhile since Bro. and Sr. Case left. May the spirit of wisdom, zeal, and activity permeate the hearts of all the Lord's people, and success crown their labors.

BENEFITS TO BE DERIVED FROM THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

IN considering and meditating upon the benefits of the Sunday school, we are constrained to wonder if there is anything but benefits to be derived from it if the duties of each are rightly discharged. In a neighborhood it is similar to a signal of peace and unity, casting an immortal hue; and when one enters a neighborhood where it is said, "We have a fine Sunday school," one feels at once that there he will find true friends. If interesting it lures the wayward youth and child into its fold; those who, perhaps, come at first through curiosity; some because it is new to them; some because it is "somewhere to go;" some who really desire to learn God's will and ways; and some, perhaps, who come to ridicule and scorn; but those are generally the ones to either leave or step forward into the fold. Many does it save from treading the paths of ruin and darkness.

We see the influence of this institution upon children at our day schools; if they are regular attendants of a good Sunday school they will not be difficult to govern. We look at the throng of street urchins, who if they were not enticed to attend Sunday school where they are taught to shun the vile habits of lying, swearing, stealing, and drunkenness, would, when grown to man and womanhood, be a curse to themselves and those with whom they come in contact, and our billiard halls and saloons would be a trifle more crowded. But the Sunday school has saved many from such a fate. Then leaving the younger class, we turn to the older ones and see instinctively the warm feeling, the true neighborly love, and the strength of unity brought forth in the Sunday school. There it is the people learn the personal worth of their neighbors.

We think of those who, perhaps, once claimed a share of God's blessings, and thanked him daily for such, but had turned into by and forbidden paths, have reentered the vineyard, through the efforts and influence of the Sunday school. And those striving to keep God's holy commands who are sorely tempted, striving under disheartening influences, 'tis at the Sunday school they were stimulated, strengthened, and given new courage and heart.

We also see the effect in heathen lands, where many poor souls living in darkness are brought to the light of God by its great power. We cannot overestimate the benefits to be derived from the Sunday school. But our pen cannot nearly describe all the benefits, so we pause and say, "It is good."

INSPIRATIONAL TEACHING.

THE Sunday school is now regarded with favor the world over, and looked upon generally as a place of instruction rather than a place of amusement for the young. This is decidedly advantageous to the school and encouraging to those who labor diligently in forwarding its interests.

It is certain we were not created in ignorance, or intended to remain in ignorance. Therefore, we have had revelations of God and Christ to give us an understanding of God and our own fallen condition. To interest ourselves in these revelations is pleasing to God; but to love darkness—ignorance—more than the light, brings the just judgments of God upon us. Ignorance degrades, leading to a careless, indolent life, and a dark, ungodly end. Knowledge has the opposite tendency. And is, when properly applied, in every sense beneficial to the creature and pleasing to the Creator.

The Sunday school, being organized to accomplish this very end, stands mostly in need of competent teachers. All institutions of learning recognize that the success of their undertaking depends upon the work accomplished by the staff of teachers employed, and so make it a special object to obtain such men as by nature and study are best adapted for that line of work. The Sunday school is no exception. Its success rests largely—and very largely—with the teacher. If the scholars are improving as rapidly as conditions admit, so far the school is a success. If in after life the one so faithfully instructed turns from the lessons learned, it in no way reflects discredit upon the school deservedly. But on the other hand, where the student is benefited in after life, which is usually the case, the amount of good accomplished can never be correctly estimated by human measures.

In studying the best methods of qualifying the teacher naturally adapted, it should be understood that success does not follow those naturally adapted, only as they are spiritually adapted. The work of the teacher is spiritual, and necessary to the proper growth and development of the school, as also of the church, hence the necessity of being "spiritually" qualified. Paul writes, "Spiritual things are spiritually discerned;" so the work of a teacher can best be understood and carried on by the Spirit of God. . . . It belongs to him to reveal his own nature and work which in his great mercy he is willing to do. The Apostle continuing, says, "We have not received the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things freely given to us of God." The teacher must be educated by the Spirit, and to properly and fully instruct others, must teach with a degree of the Spirit. Our Savior is a noble example in this respect. He was the greatest of teachers, and hence it is to our advantage as his representatives to teach after the same manner. Success is then certain.

The teacher bears about the same relation to the class as an elder does to his congregation. He may have considerable natural ability to preach, but if he does not enjoy a measure of the Spirit he cannot hope to succeed as a preacher. It is the secret and power of his success, and so it is with the Sunday school teacher. If neither are living to enjoy the Spirit in teaching, their work is empty, and but a cold, lifeless form. . . .

The church needs an inspired ministry—the school, inspired teachers. Neither can hope to succeed only as God is in them. Spiritual things are still spiritually discerned.

Formality, rhyming, rigid rule, etc., may serve a purpose; but there is nothing to qualify for the work of teaching the young and old in the Sunday school so thoroughly as the gentle whisperings of the Spirit of Truth, voiced through a humble, thoughtful, patient, loving, godly person in a few well chosen words.

Holy Ghost, the Infinite,
Shine upon our nature's night,
With thy blessed, inward light,
Like the dew thy peace distill.
Guide, subdue our wayward will,
Things of Christ unfolding still;
Search for us the depths of God,
Bear us on an upward road,
To the height of thine abode,
Comforter Divine.

SCRANTON, Pa., March 16.

Editors Herald:—About five months since Apostle W. H. Kelley visited us, and found the branch in a disorganized condition; pretty near all the saints were in a deplorable condition. The only thing that did survive was a Sunday school, so the missionary in charge suggested that under the circumstances we had a partial organization. And if this would prove a success, in six months time we should be organized into a branch. Elder A. N. Bishop and his very interesting family of boys and girls thoroughly grafted and grounded into the work who were in no wise tinctured with sectarianism or any other ism, except it be the true saintism, located here. Elder Bishop was appointed overseer to have charge of the work, consequently we hired a nice large hall located right in the heart of the city; it is nicely furnished, and we have a piano and organ, which we find to be a great help. Srs. M. G. Ruane and Lillie Bishop and the writer preside at these instruments. The Sunday school is indeed a success, as we are increasing in numbers. Sr. Bessie Bishop has charge of the primary class; it is really a grand sight to see how well she has her class disciplined.

The partial organization was indeed a success; we find that our numbers are increasing all along. This undoubtedly has been owing to the interest that Bro. Bishop has taken in the presentation of the gospel and this marvelous work. He has taken a great interest in educating the saints and people, and in proving the divinity of this, the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. O that the elders and officers could see the wisdom of such a course, as it would make hundreds of poor, weak, frail saints a great deal more zealous and stronger, and increase their interest in the work. Elder Bishop has preached every Sunday evening with much liberty, to the convincing of all honest hearted people, and to the confounding of all false doctrines.

Last Sunday we had prayer meeting at 8:30, and all taking active part and enjoying it. There were thirty present. We had Sunday school at ten. The hour following was occupied by a grand exhortation from the president, and five minute speeches from quite a number of the brethren. Then we held a splendid sacrament meeting at 2:30, and the Spirit's sweet influence was enjoyed by all. The testimonies were encouraging. In the evening Elder Bishop gave us one of the most interesting and logical discourses the writer ever had the pleasure of listening to. There were between seventy and eighty present; and one pleasing feature was that most of them were young men and women. O how vividly it came to my mind, when looking over the large audience of young people, that a few years ago the Lord spoke to the saints in prophecy through a sister and some brethren, that if the saints would not live more faithful and appreciate the work, he would withdraw his Spirit from them, and the work would finally go down. But in his own due time he would raise up another people, and would intrust the work to their care. This has been literally fulfilled, as the writer and Sr. Jones have always kept this in remembrance, and were the only two old saints in the meetings. There are some very near the kingdom, and we expect to see some baptized ere long.

Ever praying for Zion's weal,
JOHN J. MORGANS.

SINKING SPRINGS, Ohio, March 18.

Editors Herald:—The work in this district is moving along fairly well. Since I closed my excellent meeting at Vales Mills, three more have been baptized, and recently four at Limerick and one at Weldon have been baptized; part of those mentioned were baptized when our beloved brother, G. T. Griffiths, was in this district; he also baptized six at Lagrange. I am here now to look after the disagreeable part of the work, that is to try to adjust difficulties. O how I long to see the time come when all will do right. I am succeeding fairly well with the matter in hand here, and shall do all in my power to avoid calling an elders' court. There is not much spirituality in the branch here, though

I believe our young officers, Isaac Woods and Thomas Rhoades, are doing what they can to advance the interests of the work. I am now abiding at the quiet home of Bro. James Davidson, where all is done that can be to make the elder's stay pleasant and happy; in fact all here in this branch seem never to tire trying to make my visits pleasant. I go from here to Lagrange to try to set the branch there in better working order. Then about the first of April I expect to go home to labor during the month, to shape things up for the summer.

And as the time for General Conference draws near, I feel a drawing in that direction; and notwithstanding I greatly desire to be there, I shall sacrifice the pleasure, on account of not feeling able to furnish the means myself; and knowing the depleted condition of the treasury, and knowing too how some of the poor saints sacrifice to try to keep the work moving, I don't feel to ask the Bishop to help me to and from conference, that I may enjoy the blessings that are to be had at such meetings; but I shall pray the Lord to bless those who do go, and that the Holy Spirit may direct in all the work that shall be done; and may the spirit of revelation and wisdom specially direct in the locating of the ministry. May the Lord bless those at the head; yea, and every one who have taken upon themselves the name of Jesus our Lord. Ever striving to advance the interests of this great work, I am yours in the hope of final victory,
JAMES MOLEK.

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., March 5.

Editors Herald.—I last wrote from Porth, Wales. While there our aunt, who had been so kind to us, and with whom wife made her home, suddenly took ill and died. This necessitated a sale of the house and division of the property among the children, so our comfortable home prospects soon faded out of sight. Wife joined me at Porth and remained till we could find another location. She was very ill, but as usual refused to give up, and managed to keep about by pure will power, for she had little bodily strength left. I was kept busy preaching in Porth and surrounding towns in company with Elder J. D. Jenkins, missionary in Wales, who rendered me excellent assistance, and whom I found a willing worker. I believe we could have accomplished a good work here, had it not been for the bad and divided condition of the branch. We held several meetings in the town hall and a good interest was manifest among the outsiders, but the actions of some of the members were very discouraging. I labored faithfully to create a better interest, and met with some success in certain directions, but results were by no means flattering. Wife and I spent Christmas quietly together at the hotel talking of loved ones at home, and contrasting conditions here with those in our own land. If there had been just a little more love and unity on the part of the membership, a Sunday school could have been established, a good hall secured, and our work placed upon a good footing. This was our hope when we began labors there; but in spite of all our efforts we had to leave them much the same as we found them, continuing their meetings in private houses.

From Porth we went to Cardiff, where we spent New Year's Day with Bro. Gould. Only two families of saints reside in Cardiff; excellent people. Bro. Gould is vice president of the district and Bishop's agent. We spent a pleasant week here. Elder Thomas Griffith, from Lydney, president of the district, joining us on Sunday, and we enjoyed a spiritual testimony meeting in the afternoon, in which once more the Lord spoke words of encouragement, and a part of my future work was pointed out. I preached in the evening with good liberty to the few present, and trust the day may not be far distant when the city of Cardiff shall be made acquainted with the angel's message.

We next directed our steps towards Sheffield to attend conference, stopping one day in Bristol and three in Birmingham; at the latter place being made welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. Meredith. At Sheffield we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Heman for the first time since the third day after his arrival; also our friend and brother, R. May, from Independence. And we had a social feast, but for a few days only. Bro. May going up into Scotland, Bro. Heman to Manchester. Our conference was fairly good, but not largely attended. Here the work seems to have been backward instead of forward; many of the members taking no active interest in the work. As a result the saints had to move out of a good hall to a little place in the rear, difficult to find. But some good active workers were found here, and they are on the lookout for a better place of meeting, and are hopeful for the future. The most to encourage them I think, is the Sunday school. They have a nice lot of children in attendance, mostly of parents who are outside the church. And if these children are only properly taught the branch ought to increase from this cause alone. But these children are poor, as a consequence the school is lacking in those "helps" that we in America find so necessary. I would like to recommend the sending of a number of the quarterlies to these poor children free for at least a year. I wonder if the association could not afford it. Instead of every child having a copy of the Hope, just one copy was given to the school the Sunday I was there, so only one child received a paper. Great good could be done if those who take the Hope would take care of them after reading and send them to this country for these poor children to read. Here is a chance for a lot of American children to do good, not in this school alone but many others as well. I have great faith in the Sunday school, and rejoice to hear of its advancement in America. Teachers, and all Sunday school workers, keep two things constantly in mind, the necessity of the Holy Spirit in your teaching, and the distinctive features of this latter-day work. This is the restored gospel. Teach it as restored, and teach it by the aid of the Comforter.

While at Sheffield I started out with the priest to visit the delinquent members; but our labors were suddenly stopped by the sad death of Bro. Hoole, who was killed by the breaking of the emery wheel over which he was working. He was an excellent brother, and a leading man in the branch. The entire branch feel their loss keenly; but as one of old said, so could Bro. Hoole, "For me to live is Christ, to die is gain."

We did what we could to comfort the bereaved ones, also counseled the officers and members of the branch as best we could; but here again the opportunities for doing the work needed was very limited. Wife assisted in organizing an aid society among the sisters. Our hopes are that they may prove active workers.

We next came to Birmingham where we have been most of the time since. We rented two furnished rooms for wife, and she is quite comfortable in that respect; but very lonesome, especially when I am away. She has had no reason thus far to complain of too much company. I am in hopes when the weather gets warmer she will grow stronger and be able to get out more. I find lots that need doing in this district, but here again the opportunities for doing it are not flattering. Two things especially need attention; one is getting our work before the world, the other is the taking care of our young people. All with whom I have talked acknowledge this need. I would like to help them along these lines, and believe I could do some good, but whether I shall be permitted, remains to be seen. If the idea obtains here that "they are competent to take care of themselves without any outside help," it will make our work very difficult. But I hope I shall not meet that kind of opposition. There is plenty for all to do, and this country is big enough, and room for all to work, without one interfering with another.

I find the saints here kind-hearted, yet not quite as much life as is really needed. The largest branch of the two in Birmingham only has a hall that they can occupy Sundays. They hope, however, to have one soon that they can occupy every night in the week. When they get it a better opportunity will be had to build up the work and make themselves known. I have been giving a series of sermons at the smaller branch with good interest, but not a very large attendance. The saints are encouraged and look for better times just ahead.

Last week I visited Leicester, another branch that has been going backward through the bad conduct of some of its members. But the good element is now moving forward with a zeal that is commendable, and they think they see better times just ahead. Here for the first time in England I was called upon to perform the ordinance of baptism—two apparently fine young men, principally the fruits of others' labors, however. One claims to have seen me in vision some time before I arrived. A good spirit was present at the baptism. Those who were present saw, to their own edification, more than did the writer. To God be all the praise. Two young ladies present will be the next to obey, I think, by what they said. I think the young men will make good Sunday school workers, and hope that a school may soon be organized here. The saints in Leicester though few in number, have a nice hall in a good neighborhood—a blessing which all the branches in England do not enjoy.

I am now on my way to Porth, to be present at the eastern district of Wales conference. Weather has been very mild this winter, but I think I never suffered more with the cold. No snow to amount to anything, and very little frost, and yet I am chilly most of the time. I am not in love with open fireplaces.

Wife's health continues much the same; she cannot seem to gain strength. We would be delighted to be with you at conference. The first one we have missed in a long time. Hope the Lord will be with you.

Yours in bonds,

F. G. PITT.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 18.

Editors Herald:—By a persistent effort I have succeeded in opening the work in three places; one in particular, in Jacob addition, south of this city. On March 3, I administered the ordinance of baptism to three noble-hearted souls, and at the confirmation meeting the Spirit of God rested on Bro. John Graham in power, and he had to bear his testimony to the work being done here by me, and that the work was of God, and that I had learnt him more about God and the Bible than he ever learned in all his life before. It was a grand testimony, wonderful indeed. And on the 13th I had the pleasure of baptizing four others, all heads of families; this making nine I have baptized here this conference year; and others will follow soon. We have enough to organize a branch here now. Bro. James Riggle will soon be ordained a priest, and other officers are here. This work should not be neglected; some one ought to be stationed here awhile yet; good will be accomplished. We may have to fight hard, yet we have planted our battery. The Campbellites and Baptists are on a warpath, but it is bushwhacking with them. I stated that I am ready to defend our claims any time; but they think they have not time to debate their cause.

I have all the work I can do at the present. The work in the city is going to be tedious, as so many claim they have received the gift of the Holy Ghost, and are not willing to be corrected. Hundreds of people are laboring under this delusive spirit. It is the spirit of the Evil One deceiving the world. I think this eastern part of the field will open up for a good work to be done. The work is planted here now, and it will gradually extend. I have an appointment every Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, in Jacob addition, and have been preaching on Sunday nights in the saints' hall, New Albany, Indiana. Some interest there. It would be well for the ministry in Southern Indiana mission to make an effort there; the saints have a snug place of meeting. Leonard Scott would be preferred by them, but the Lord's will be done in this as in all other matters. This work is the Lord's and he moves things by the council of his own will, not as we will.

The Lord will qualify us to do the work assigned us, if humble and prayerful. We would be glad to have Bro. T. W. Chatburn returned to this field another year; think he could do a great deal of good. He has made many friends to the cause of Christ. Have preached nearly every night since the 3d of January, and am yet at work.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES M. SCOTT.

STANDLEY, Ind. Ter., March 19.

Editors Herald:—Since my last communication to your columns we have changed our location somewhat. We have bidden "Good-by" to Bro. and Sr. Burton, and the saints in the far away islands of the sea. On January 15 we set sail for our native land. As we watched the shores of Tahiti fade away in the distance, we imagined that we were taking a farewell view of its beauties. But not so. After two days of favorable wind we were encountered by a sudden squall, lasting about ten minutes, which carried away the upper part of our foremast. After working away all day at the rigging and wreckage, the Captain announced that we must put back to Papeete for repairs. As we could carry but little sail, we were four days in covering the distance we had gained in our two-day run. We acknowledged ourselves to be the "Jonah" of the trip, remembering our experience on the Evanelia, when she first left San Francisco. After repairing the vessel, we again set sail on January 25, and made a fine trip to 'Frisco, arriving there February 21, after a voyage of twenty-one and one half days. We were not at all crowded on board, as there were only two other cabin passengers besides ourselves. Mrs. Case was the only lady on board, and the only one who suffered from seasickness. Little Cicely was perfectly well, and the picture of health when we arrived.

For the work's sake we regretted having to leave the island mission, but we trust and pray that others more capable than we have been, or may be sent soon to assist there, for I firmly believe there are saints in those islands who are worthy of being cared for. I know, by experience, that Bro. Burton and wife will feel lonely in Papeete. They have worked hard running the little printing press during the past year. The paper has been eagerly read by the natives both in and out of the church, but the paper alone is not enough. They need some helpers to go among the people and teach them, for others are among them trying, if possible, to lead them away from the light, and pervert the truth. I speak especially of the representatives of the Utah Church, who are strong in numbers in the Society Group and Tuamotus. None of them have consented to open debate with us; but after private conversation do not hesitate to misstate the arguments made, and in many cases substitute something entirely different, which never took place except in their own imagination. The natives are often thus deceived by them, which shows the need of keeping missionaries of the true faith constantly among the people.

The saints in San Francisco gave us a hearty welcome. We were entertained at the home of Bro. Marion Hawley, a cousin of my wife's, of whose residence in the city we were not aware until our arrival there. We enjoyed a pleasant, social evening with the branch at the home of Sr. Anthony; after which we were presented with some of the "needful," which was very acceptable just then.

We came on to Standley after a week or so in California. We were much surprised and greatly pleased to meet with my wife's father, Bro. George Montague, at a little station in northern Texas. We had thought to meet him at Standley. Standley and its people need no introduction to readers of the Herald. Suffice it to say that we are being kindly cared for at the home of Bro. E. D. Bailey, and are trying to get acclimated before the journey north to conference. Poor baby finds it rather rough experience, but we think she will soon be in health again. We feel to thank the Lord for his kindly watch-care over us throughout our long journey. Fearing this letter is impardonably lengthy, I will close.

In gospel bonds,

HUBERT CASE.

FAYETTE CITY, Pa., March 17.

Editors Herald:—Conference is over, and we had such a grand time, for the Spirit of God flowed like a river all the time. We all rejoiced in meeting so many of God's people and to hear so many grand testimonials to this work. We have been greatly benefited by the conference being here, as we learned things which will be of use to us in the future. We are glad to know Bro. C. Ed. Miller and D. L. Shinn were the life of our business meetings. All seemed to enjoy themselves, especially our brothers and sisters from the Pittsburg branch, also Bro. Rush from Virginia, in an isolated place called Kedive, where there are no saints but him and his wife, and where they cannot get a whole hand shake, and as he had met with only one or two of the saints in his life before, he said he never met with such grand people in his life as he met here; and he went home rejoicing in the love of God.

Bro. Shinn was called home by sickness in his family, and our hearts were made sorry for him, for it is a great sacrifice for an elder to be away from his family when all are well, but in time of sickness our hearts ache in sympathy for them, and pray that all will be well when we hear from him.

Bro. Craig and Ullom are with us yet. Bro. Craig has preached some very able sermons which have been refreshing to all who heard him, both saints and sinners. One man told Bro. Craig he had been going to church for nigh on sixty years and he had never heard the gospel preached before; and one lady, a Disciple, told me that it was the best preaching she ever heard, and it could not be beat; also, when their own preacher tried to pull us to pieces when we were not present, she told one of our brethren that we were nearer right than anyone else. So the good work goes on. We would like to keep Bro. Craig with us awhile, as Bro. Devore has gone home from our midst and a large field of labor for awhile, and we hope that the conference will send him back to labor here, as we have began to look on Bro. Devore as one of our own, and do not like to see him go away, as he and Bro. Shinn have been the means of bringing many into the fold, by God's assisting grace, in this place. We feel that we have a claim on them; and as we are young in the cause, we feel that we need some of the brethren with us all the time. There are some of the Salt Lake elders around; but we do not fear they will have any weight on any of our people; for we cannot get any of them to meet our brethren in public. We know that they are cowards, and dare not face one of us sisters in an argument.

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. ANNIE ASHTON.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, March 19.

Editors Herald:—From Philadelphia (at last writing) I went to Havre de Grace, Maryland, and held two services with small audiences in attendance. These were followed by an effort by Bro. A. H. Parsons. There is prejudice there to be overcome, but time and effort may add numbers to the believers already there.

I attended the New York district conference held in Brooklyn, New York, on February 12 and 13. The conference was well patronized, and an excellent spirit prevailed during the services. The officers of the district were continued. Bro. Ephraim Squires was ordained to the office of teacher, and Bro. Gilfoy to that of priest. The saints seemed to be very much in earnest, cheered, and comforted in the faith. Indeed the Spirit of the Lord was present to bless, and all seemed to feel its presence. On the 22d five were baptized in the font of the Baptist church, and others are thinking of thus accepting the faith. The saints in Brooklyn are putting forth a commendable effort to succeed, and the outlook is more promising than in the past. They should have a constant laborer of first class gifts and graces to labor with them; but who would not enjoy an associate of that kind? Thanks are due to many for kind consideration and care while there, but none more so than Joseph Squires, Jr., Ephraim, Bro. Potts, etc. It was while I was here that the warship Maine was blown up in Cuban waters, and New York was a good place to feel the American pulse over that matter. With the many yet it is a puzzle why the American government does not say to Spain and firmly, "hands off of Cuba." But I suppose it will not do for everybody to turn statesmen.

The 25th, in company with Srs. Tyson and Hyves, I started to Providence, Rhode Island, to attend the Massachusetts district conference. We arrived there the next day in time for service. It was a pleasant meeting. Held in the new chapel, a very creditable one for the Providence saints. It was a typical saints' meeting of the first class. Everything went well. Massachusetts is to the front with many well disciplined helpers. Business sessions peaceful, preaching services good, and prayer services devotional and spiritual. A pleasing feature was the baptism of five or six persons on Sunday afternoon by Bro. Orin Coombs, in the font in the chapel, in the presence of the audience. They were confirmed at the evening session. One young brother, Suttell, was ordained to the office of teacher. Bro. I. M. Smith made a fine effort on the unity of saints in the afternoon. It is most gratifying to note how things are shaping in the Massachusetts district. It is decidedly gaining. The atmosphere seemed to be blooming with good will and pleasant faces. The presence of Sr. G. T. Griffiths and daughters was an added pleasure to an eastern conference. May her stay east be a pleasant one. We are much indebted to Bro. George Gates and helpers and the Srs. Holmes for special care, with many others in general, while in Providence. All at once, before we were ready, the time was up for staying here, and it was exit.

Spent one evening at Plainville pleasantly with the Srs. Staples, Wilcox, and Coombs. The saints are trying to keep their armor bright and are succeeding.

The next day I went to New Bedford, more especially than anything else to see Bro. John Smith and family. Sister Smith has been very sick at times for a long while, and Bro. Smith is not at liberty to leave home. Sister Smith seemed to be much better that day, but kept pretty close to her couch. Ester seemed cheerful, and this was a little mysterious, as it had only been a short time since her husband lost thirty thousand dollars through the misdoings of others, and they were left without even a V. Takes a pretty courageous woman to smile under these circumstances. Bro. Smith, as usual, was busy. At evening I met a number of the saints in the church at Fall River, and tried to interest them on gospel topics, aided by Brn. S. W. Ashton and Moore. Was kindly cared for at Dr. Gilbert's, who chances to be living near the church; and for that reason if none other, he doubtless has his share of preachers to entertain, as it has got out, it seems, that they are a little lazy at times, and don't like to go far after night, at least, to find lodgings. Sister Griffiths was visiting here, and we all were snug in bed next morning before two o'clock.

From here I went to Boston and stopped at Bro. F. M. Sheehy's, but saw no one but Sisters Sheehy and Ruth; yes, and the young boarder. My time was so limited that I took the next evening train for home. March the 5th a. m. I arrived at Syracuse, New York, and concluded to tarry over at Palermo with Bro. F. M. Sheehy. I arrived there by rail and stage at three p. m., Saturday. Was kindly received at the home of Mr. G. Trimble, by his excellent wife, he being absent, but returned at evening. There are no saints in this immediate community. Bro. Sheehy was introduced here by Bro. Whitehead, who lives five miles away. Bro. Sheehy had the neighborhood woke up, and a host of friends standing by him, with some of the preachers very uneasy, and, "Mormons," "How many wives," etc., common topics. I helped Bro. Sheehy Sunday; good and attentive audiences being present. Bro.

Sheehy thought I had done him no harm, so I felt gratified that I tarried over. Since, several have given in their names for baptism. Frank seems to be sticking stakes out in Oswego County. Arrived home on the 7th instant, and have been busy arranging to go to the General Conference, which leaves me at six o'clock Saturday, March 19, 1898, in Kirtland, Ohio.

WM. H. KELLEY.

REED CITY, Mich., March 21.

Editors Herald:—I have been terribly crowded with district and other work. On my arrival home this last time there must have been fifty letters to answer, saying nothing about the most urgent ones Sr. Cornish had forwarded to me here and there where I was laboring, which I answered, besides receipts for tithing and offerings, etc. And so many saying, Come here; come there, etc. I am very busy all the time; but I am feeling well in body and mind, and weigh more than ever before, — over 140 pounds. I do not know how much Elder Harris of the Seventh-Day Adventists thought I weighed when I gave two lectures on the seventh day Sabbath, and one on the soul question! But I did not lack for words nor proof. The Lord stood by me wonderfully. It would seem strange to some, perhaps, to think that Latter Day Saints would be led off to keep Saturday for the Sabbath; but still if one would attend their meetings for eight weeks, as some of our members did this past winter, and almost every night something would be said on the Sabbath, while some discourses would be on the seventh day Sabbath only, it would sometimes stagger one if they have never heard the other side.

On going to Beaverton, and finding one or two affected, it put me in mind of the time I first came to Michigan, from Canada, nearly twenty years ago or thereabout. I might say I was but a boy then; but one evening after meeting, a gentleman said, "Elder, that was a pretty good discourse, that is much like our elders preach."

"Is it," said I. "Well then, no chance for us to quarrel."

"Say Elder," said he, "what is the soul of man?"

Well, I did not know what to answer. Finally I said, "Why I can scarcely tell you; I never had such a question asked me before." I had never met any of the Adventists in Canada, or any who believed that way.

He said, "Well; did not God make man out of the dust of the ground. Yes. And then did he not breath into his nostrils the breath of life? Yes. And man became a living soul. Yes. Well; then the breath is the soul, isn't it?"

Ye—s; well—yes. I don't hardly know; that is something new to me; I must look that up. The next day I met another one of that same belief, and about the first thing he said was, "I was over to your meeting the other evening and enjoyed your discourse very much. Say, Elder, What is the soul of man?"

Said I, "I do not believe I can tell. That question was asked me by one of your people the other evening, and it was something new to me. I must think it over a little."

Said he; "Well; did not God make man out of the dust of the ground? Yes. And then breath into his nostrils the breath of life? Yes. Well then, the breath is the soul, is it not?"

Yes; I guess (but I did not believe it). It was not two hours after that when I met the man who had charge of that body of members, who asked me what the soul of man was. Dear me, thought I, that's all them fellows know, and that they don't have right.

So with others who only hear the one side and think there is no other, are apt to be led away somewhat at first. After I spoke on the Sabbath at Beaverton, the party laughed at the idea of trying to keep a Saturday Sabbath. That people will never be fooled again in Beaverton. What a change in the seventh day man! They used to challenge, dare, and defy others to meet them in public and discuss those questions. But since Latter Day Saints have taken it up they utterly refuse to meet us in Michigan.

Coming from Beaverton through Coleman, I put in two or three discourses there, and the Lord did bless me wonderfully, especially on Sunday evening, on the subject of the future home of the saints.

We have had a pretty rough winter, roads drifted terribly; sometimes it was hard to get about. But we are all doing the best we can, and the work we love is moving on nicely. Bro. David Smith has been and will be for a time out in the northwestern part of the district. Brn. H. J. DeVries and G. D. Washburn are spending all the time they can in the work. All the local officers are doing something to advance the work, and we are doing fairly well financially also.

Musser, is not doing as much to tear down as usual, and still it seems that when he is busy against us it gets many more out to hear the true standing of the church by our replies thereto. The lawsuit which was commenced by reason of our being shut out of a schoolhouse which Musser claims to have done beside fifty other houses (the fifty others are false) was put over from time to time, and finally settled that it with some other cases should come up at a special term on March 1. But for some reason or other the judge would not hear the case, and yet at the same time tried to pass judgment, saying that he thought a majority could let preach who they would, and exclude any they choose, and virtually left it worse than before. We then thought best to bring the matter before the supreme court of the State. We believe our cause is just, and believe when it comes before a proper court we will get justice. If it remains as it now stands, hundreds of houses will be closed against us all over the State. We purpose to have our rights or know the reason why. It will cost us a little, but as it concerns the whole State we believe the saints will all help us bear the expense. Justice will surely come. We are all hopeful, cheerful, and happy. May God's blessing come to all his saints.

J. J. CORNISH.

EAGLEVILLE, Mo., March 24.

Editors Herald:—I reached this place this morning. I have the promise of the Christian church here; may preach here to-night. I preached in the opera hall in Ridgeway last night to a large crowd. The good people of that city hired it at their own expense and asked me to preach for them. My theme was the character and mission work of Jesus Christ. I spoke two hours. I was almost accorded an ovation; had a good time.

As ever,

I. P. BAGGERLY.

WOODSIDE, Mont., March 10.

Editors Herald:—On Sunday night, February 6, my family and I and a few of the saints went nine miles to hear two Utah elders preach, Messrs. Young and Hill; and when they got through speaking, I arose and asked permission to ask a question on their discourse; but Mr. Hill said, "No, sir, we want no question from you, we know you; sit down, sit down, sit down. We have known you long ago."

He had never seen my face before, nor me him. I told him all right; I would speak to this people when he got through. He strutted around like a demon in human form. They tried to put on the cloak of Jesus Christ, but it was not big enough to hide their cloven foot, and the Utah wolf in sheep's clothing. And said, "No, sir; get out of the house, get out of the house."

And the people said they did not want anything from them, while they could not defend their position. The people asked me to show them the other side of the subject. The trustees gave me permission of the house right there. I think any Latter Day Saint as big as your fist can hold the Utah wolf, if they will keep back of what is written in the Book of Covenants and Book of Mormon.

I think Brigham Young told the truth on April 6, 1871, when he said he could turn out elders in Israel the greatest liars in the world. We need not sit idle waiting for reapers more to come, for on that date I saw and heard more than ever the necessity for reorganization.

Yours in bonds,

FIVE LAKES, Mich., March 18.

Editors Herald:—I have been laboring this winter at Five Lakes, Goodland, Lapeer, and vicinity. I was called to Juniata, and when I got home, found three saints from Goodland awaiting my return; so I went back with them, a distance of sixteen miles; held meeting nearly two weeks; attended one branch business meeting and presided over it. I explained to them the custom of the church, as I understood it, and stated we had met to do business for the Lord, and that if any had troubles and difficulties to settle, they must not be brought to a meeting of this kind. It has been remarked that this was the best business meeting that they have had for years.

I live three miles west of Five Lakes branch, and this branch is twelve or thirteen miles east of Five Lakes. I moved from Juniata last fall, and resigned the presidency of that branch last October, I think, and intend to unite with the Five Lakes branch. They want me to accept the presidency of this branch. They have no elder in the branch, and the president is a priest, and I think a good one. What troubles my mind is the work down in Goodland. There are some good saints there, and some not as good as they might be. I was called there a short time ago to preach a funeral sermon. It is reported that over two hundred were present; some who used to be bitter against the saints. I was blessed with the best of liberty in telling the story of the cross and the hope of the saints. Those not of our faith want the saints there to get the schoolhouse and have me come and preach, as they thought that was the best gospel sermon they ever heard. When I was coming the other day I called into a store, and the lady gave me an introduction to a man. He said, "Elder, I have been wanting to see you for some time. Do you believe what you preached the time you preached that Baptist lady's funeral sermon?"

He rather took me by surprise. I said, "I do; and we believe it as it stands, that God is just the same to-day, and deals with his children alike, and that Christ so taught it, when he told his disciples when ye pray, pray after this manner, say, Our Father who art in heaven," etc.

He said he was a Methodist, and mentioned two or three other sects he had joined, but never was satisfied; and that was the first gospel sermon he had heard preached. This Baptist lady requested that I should preach her funeral sermon, as she believed that I was a Christian man if there was any, when I was holding meeting south, among the P. M. Methodists. One lady made me a present of a new Oxford Bible, teacher's edition. I have good news to tell from that part, but must forbear.

In gospel bonds,

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 23.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference was a profitable one, and spiritual blessings were enjoyed by those who were in a frame of mind and disposition to appreciate the gifts designed of heaven to bless his people with whenever and wherever God's saints erect an altar to him, and bring thereunto the proper sacrifices; even the offering of a contrite and obedient spirit.

Bro. John Hitchcock who has long served us, and faithfully performed duty in the offices of teacher and priest, being duly called and signified under the proper rules governing, was ordained to the office of elder; and if faithful and wise as his gifts and privileges entitle him to be, will prove of great service to the church, both as a local and general worker in especial lines, in which through natural gifts and spiritual graces his life may abound, unto the saving of souls, and the uplifting of our gospel contention and work in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Last Sunday was also a good day, and a feast of spiritual things, notwithstanding the very stormy weather. Somehow, bad weather doesn't seem to keep the Lord away from the place where he has appointed to meet those who are anxious to meet and commune with him. While bad or disagreeable atmospheric influences, or storm, or heat, or cold seldom affects materially the attendance upon a party, festival, supper, etc., even where a good many Latter Day Saints are often interested or really concerned.

The afternoon attendance, however, was very good. Brethren John Billinsky and Joseph Swift were confirmed by ordination in the office and unto the work of teachers in the Church of Christ, the Spirit also bearing powerful witness to the care and wisdom had in their calling, selection, and appointment.

The saints in St. Louis have many things to be thankful for. God has not been slow in his acknowledgment through heavenly gifts and blessings to those who seek after and for such things. The Sisters' Prayer Union, a thing of distrust, if not of ridicule in the past, has proved a leaven of power for good.

The attempt to organize was made, and persisted in under the most discouraging and disheartening circumstances, but faith in the right has prevailed, and demonstrated that communion with our heavenly Father, through the comfort and enlightenment which the Holy Spirit bestows is the highest form of social intercourse which, for an hour or two every week, the sisters of our holy faith may engage in—purging the old life of its leaven of profitless conversation or works—shaming unsaintly gossip into its retreat, and away from the place where God and holy influences abide. This good leaven has reached out and into the regular meetings of the church, and encouraging also branch officers in their lawful undertakings to set things in order, "God also bearing witness" to the faithful in an unmistakable manner, "both with signs and wonders," and even with what may be considered miracles, "and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to his own will" all along the line of faithful and unselfish endeavor to promote the best interests of the church of God upon earth. This is our consolation, and indeed must be our consolation which sustains us in our work when adverse winds or storm or tempest of opposition assail our progress and the pathway in which conscience and duty appoints us to walk.

From the place of our last writing we went to preach at Brush Creek, Illinois, also preaching at Xenia. Have also since visited and preached in Sorrento, Bond County, and at Alma, where an attempt will be made to revive interest in our work and aid the faithful few who dwell there. Was also at Alton last week, preaching three nights at the home of Bro. and Sr. Crowson.

Not long ago I received a note of invitation for myself and friends to attend one of the meetings that were being held from house to house every night by the Utah representatives in this city. Four of their elders rose up by invitation of their president and "bore their testimony" to several things, including the right and righteousness of their calling, appointment, and work. No opportunity was given for us to speak, until after the close of meeting we were invited to ask questions. This I think was forced upon them by the criticisms made upon Elder Roberts' conduct while holding meetings in this city.

Before leaving them Brn. Archibald, Hitchcock, and myself told them we had a testimony, which we were also willing to bear, but which unfortunately contradicted theirs in matters recognized to be important, and proposed settling the discrepancies between us by appeal to a competent judge and third party of supposedly disinterested character; namely, the law, and let the two witnesses testify before the ones we both were seeking to enlighten; namely, the public; against the one—or in other words, the wrong party in the contention. They of course chose the usual manner of rendering verdict against themselves by a kindly and magnanimous (!) refusal to expose the weakness of the claims of the Reorganized Church and portray before the public (that we were both seeking to save from error) the beatitudes with which celestial contradictions and decrees have crowned (!) early church contention and gospel teachings.

They may be doing a little harm so far as proselytes are concerned, but not much in this direction, in my opinion. The mis-education of the public constitutes the chief objection to the work. They of course reach people that we do not, and leave them always with the understanding and conviction fastened upon the mind that Brighamism was and is Mormonism, and the only unadulterated article now offered to the public. The simple minded say sometimes, "they preach the gospel," "the gifts," "the Book of Mormon," "they testify to the divine mission of Joseph Smith." Alas! yes. I have heard spiritualistic mediums testify to the same. Devils said, "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou son of God." (Matt. 8: 29; Mark 5: 7, etc.) But Jesus said: "He that is not for me is against me." What relation to that which we believe and know to be the church of God, the body of which Christ is the head, and to which many of us know that he speaks through its clearly and legally appointed mouthpiece—what relation, I ask, does the church in Utah in its past history and present attitude sustain toward us as a church? I do not, cannot possibly see how that we can in any consistency mix things up. Sooner or later we or they will have to quit the field, and ultimately give up every substantial contention or claim to church identity so far as heavenly authority is claimed.

I have the cards and addresses of four of the Utah Church representatives before me; also that of an elder of the Reorganized Church. Upon the reverse side of these cards are epitomes of church doctrines and faith, and reading so nearly alike as to easily confuse the uninitiated public. The card of every Utah elder who either believes, preaches, or practices polygamy and defends the church that has, and we believe still does sanction other things equally bad, reads at the bottom or close thus: "We believe in being honest, true, chaste," etc. "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, we seek after these things," etc., and the name and memory of Joseph Smith is dragged away from his family, from his sons, and from the holy work which under God he builded, and corralled up there in the basin of the Rocky Mountains with apostates from, or those who have not known the saving grace of the gospel that represses, instead of encouraging the development of passions that are destroying the world and provoking the wrath of the Almighty. "He that is not for me is against me." If the church in Utah are friends and gospel allies, where are our enemies?

The conference year with its work is fast drawing to a close. What of approval or disapproval will the final judgment or sentence reveal? It takes courage and faith to keep that question above all others, and not subvert that high challenge of Jesus Christ, or forget his constant appeal to that which is noblest in our nature. "Who then is that faithful and wise servant," etc. One may labor early, long, and late, if permitted to do so after the fashion of his own will; but it is often, too often, seen that a man is more willing to bend his muscular powers than to bend his spirit, even to the yoke of Christ; to fulfill his own thought rather than to "learn" of "him in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." "Who then" among us shall be found at last to be "a faithful and wise servant" whom his Lord shall honor? Faithfulness, unaccompanied and alone, has often in the past, and still may meet with dire disaster. "They also serve who only stand and wait," said the blind poet Milton. Davy Crockett was not a prophet; but the sentence, "Be sure you're right, then go ahead," amounts at least to an intellectual inspiration of no ordinary character. The more energy displayed or exercised in precipitate action, the more damage as a result, oftentimes. People there are, who may be found in all the walks and ways of life, that are willing to work hard where inclination and the natural law of their activities point the way; but, let only the voice of duty cross this path and oppose, war instead of submission may result. Shall we learn ever to conquer ourselves? and "commit unto the Lord our ways, that he may direct our paths." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." To pick out the soft spots in the work which is furnished us, and lie down upon them, seems not a very laborious task; but to live, or conduct our life "by every word that proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God," makes everybody squirm and wriggle, and fly to the refuge of evasion if not open denial at times. "Where are we at," or how far along as a church or as individuals are we on the road "to perfection," as compared with our location and situation one year ago? M. H. BOND.

TWO AND TWO.

It is quite apparent from the reading of the scriptures that the work performed by the ministers, in the primitive church, was largely missionary work. And if so, it would necessitate them to travel, in order for them to successfully fulfill the mission assigned them. Now we are informed by the Apostle Paul that

All scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for instruction.—2 Tim. 3: 16, I. T.

And in Romans:—

For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning.—Romans 15: 4.

Now if the sayings of the apostle be true, we are certainly justified when we revert to the scriptures to learn what the nature of the work of the ministers was, and how they were to perform that work.

So accordingly we turn to Matthew and read:—

These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and enter ye not into any city of the Samaritans. But rather go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matt. 10: 3-6, I. T.

Again:—

Go your ways; behold I send you forth as lambs among wolves.—Luke 10: 3.

The commission of the Savior, after his resurrection, was:—

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16: 14, I. T.

Or:—

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 28: 18, I. T.

We learn from this commission that all nations and every creature, needed to be instructed concerning Jesus and his doctrine. And further, we learn that Jesus made it the duty of his ministers to instruct them. And consequently their work would be missionary work.

Now that the method adopted by the Savior for the preaching of the gospel (to every creature or all nations) was the very best, I think none will deny.

For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.—John 12: 49.

From this last citation we are informed that God was supervising the work of his Son; therefore, the work would surely be done right. Now what we wish to learn is, how did Jesus send his ministers forth. To the law and to the testimony.

And he called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two.—Mark 6: 7.

Without any doubt he knew the greatest good could be accomplished by sending them in that way.

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place where he himself would come. And he said unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the laborers few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest.—Luke 10: 1, 2.

We learn here that Jesus realized the greatness of the work to be done, and the scarcity of those (at that time) who were appointed unto that work. Yet he was sending them forth two and two. Human wisdom might question the propriety of sending them two and two, when there were so many cities and peoples to warn. But it is evident Jesus knew best how the work could be accomplished.

Now that two and two was the order, and so understood by the apostles, after the ascension of Christ, is quite evident when we read:—

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God they sent unto them Peter and John.—Acts 8: 14.

Again in Acts 15: 35-40 we learn that Paul and Barnabas were associated together in the ministry, until a contention arose, and they parted asunder, one from the other; but each chose another to be associated with him. Barnabas took Mark and Paul chose Silas.

Now two and two being the method used by the Savior, in the primitive church, for the preaching of the gospel, do we think he would ever change the order? What does Paul say? "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." That does not sound like as though he would change. So then in the restoration of the gospel, this side of the great apostasy, we would look for him to act just in harmony with himself. Consequently we will turn to the revelations, which he has given to the church in these last days, and see how he sent his ministers forth to preach.

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together, in my name, even Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, the Savior of the world; inasmuch as they believe on my name and keep my commandments; again I say unto you, hearken and hear and obey the law which I shall give unto you.—D. C. 42: 1.

Now what do we learn by this? First, that Jesus wanted them to listen, or lend an ear to what he was about to say to them. Second, that they had met in Jesus' name, and were willing to be instructed by him. Third, that they must keep his commandments when given. And fourth, that they were to obey the law which he was about to give unto them.

Now let us read the first commandment he gave them:—

Behold, verily I say unto you, I give unto you this first commandment, that ye shall go forth in my name, . . . and ye shall go forth in the power of my Spirit, preaching my gospel, two by two, in my name, etc.—D. C. 42: 2.

Now we have learned that the first commandment was to go forth in his name, and that two by two. Hence we see that Jesus acts just like himself, and Paul's statement of him is verified, that he is always the same.

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto the elders whom he hath called and chosen, in these last days, by the voice of his Spirit, saying, I, the Lord, will make known unto you what I will that ye shall do. . . . Wherefore, verily I say unto you, let my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, take their journey. . . . And again, verily I say unto you, let my servant Lyman Wight, and my servant John Corry, take their journey speedily; and also my servant John Murdock, and my servant Hyrum Smith, take their journey unto the same place. . . . Let them go two by two, and thus let them preach by the way in every congregation, baptizing by water and the laying on of the hands by the water's side.—D. C. 52: 1, 2, 3.

Again:—

And let the residue take their journey from St. Louis, two by two, and preach the word, not in haste, among the congregations of the wicked, until they return to the churches from whence they came.—D. C. 60: 3.

Now it is plain to be seen that the work to be done by the ministers of Christ, in these last days, is the same as it was in former days. And the language of Christ in the revelations already cited is so explicit, that it needs no comment. But that two and two is the order in which they should go forth is not only seen in what we have cited, but in the following:—

Behold, and hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, even Jesus Christ, your advocate; who knoweth the weakness of man and how to succor them who are tempted; . . . yea, even all together, or two by two, as seemeth you good.—D. C. 62:1, 2.

Here the Savior assigns a reason why he sends them two and two. He knoweth the weakness of man, and the many temptations they will encounter in the world; remember he is speaking to the elders of his church when he says, "I know how to succor those who are tempted." Now what does "succor" mean? Webster says to "relieve in distress;" "to aid;" "assistance in distress." So we see by sending them two and two they can aid, and assist, and relieve each other; and thus they will be honoring his law.

I have often wondered when alone and feeling the need of some one to pray with, and council with, O why is not this order of two and two observed by the church now-a-days, when the commandments of the Savior are so plain? I have given expression, on several occasions, when talking with the brethren on this subject; and in reply have gotten answers something like this: O the church can only send so few elders out, we cannot afford to labor together; or, two elders together would only preach one sermon a night, while if singled out they could preach two.

Well, it seems to me if there are a people on earth who can afford to keep the commandments of Christ, it ought to be the people who claim to be directed by his Spirit. I wonder how much such reasoning as this it would take to reason away the order of two and two revealed in the revelations and commandments of Christ. Jesus said truly, the laborers are few; yet he was sending them two and two. (Luke 10.) It has been said that in the short space of fourteen years, from 1830 to 1844, the church gathered in about two hundred thousand; and the revelations reveal the fact that during that time the elders were commanded to go forth two and two.

The Reorganization has been in progress about forty years, and numbers less than fifty thousand; now what is the matter? Is the Lord not as interested in the welfare of his creatures now as he was then? Or, is it because we do not observe his laws and commandments as strictly?

Now for the benefit of those who may feel that it would be too extravagant to send the elders forth two and two, we will read the language of Christ:—

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, and give ear to the voice of the living God; and attend to the words of wisdom which shall be given unto you, according as ye have asked and are agreed as touching the church, and the spirits which have gone abroad in the earth. Behold, verily I say unto you, that there are many spirits which are false spirits, which have gone forth in the earth, deceiving the world: and also Satan hath sought to deceive you, that he might overthrow you.—D. C. 50:1.

In fact read this entire section. If we can justify ourselves in deviating from one of Christ's commandments, how soon we could from another; and would this not soon result in the overthrow of the work? The writer believes two and two is the way the elders should go forth now, as well as in days gone by, and has offered the above in confirmation of his belief. Hoping to hear from others on this subject, I remain, your coworker in the gospel of Christ,

PARADISE.

WHEN the sun of life sinks beneath the distant hills of time, and our eyes grow dim to the visions of this world, when the voices of our loved ones gathered around our bedside, seem to faint away in distance, and all becomes quiet and still in death; what then?

When the Son of God came to this issue in life upon Calvary he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit, that great heart ceased to beat, his body was taken down and placed in the tomb, and the Spirit took its flight, carried away into the hands of his Father, which no doubt in the economy of God an ample provision existed. In studying the question of immediate conditions after death, perhaps it is well to notice the promise the Lord made to the thief on the cross, that was; I say unto you, to-day, shalt thou be with me in Paradise.

We understand that before the sun set, thus dividing the sixth day from the seventh or Jewish Sabbath, that death was visited upon both Christ and the man to whom the promise was made. I think we can safely reason then that the promise was fulfilled on that occasion, and had its fulfillment in conditions after death.

While but very little is said concerning paradise in Scripture, we ought to remember that according to Paul's vision it was a place that in its conditional existence were things unlawful for a man to utter. We notice Paul's rehearsal of this vision:—

I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth;) how that he was caught up to paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which is not lawful for a man to utter.—2 Cór. 12:3, 4.

From the foregoing we note that paradise exists, and Paul testifies to its existence, and we also notice that there is a curtain that obscures the vision of men from the conditions of paradise. It is wisdom in the mind of the Deity no doubt. I have heard it said that if the people of God had a vivid realization of paradise or the conditions after death, that our lives would worry here for the desire to be on the other side; or as Paul said he would rather depart and be with Christ. Yet he knew his duty was with the church, and more needful to them. It is an allwise Father that holds in his hands the grandeur of the blessings of his children. It is well for us that our hope is anchored well within the veil. The nearest approach of a realization of paradise that I believe I ever had, was a dream which seemed to inwrap me in the uttermost sense of peace, in a land where beautiful flowers strew our walk; where the countenance of those we met seemed to be lit up with love; where everything was peace and purity, and the soul seemed filled with such a sublime feeling of great joy, that words could not give utterance to the heavenly feeling. Did you ever dream such a dream? Did you ever try to tell it to your friend and fail in lack of words to express your feelings; and while you were inwrapt in sublimity, yourself, you could not impart it to another? Did you ever think, perhaps like Paul, it was unlawful to utter, and in the vision of the night the curtain had been drawn and God had given you a glimpse of his paradise to come? The great resting place that awaits his faithful people. In giving the meaning of the word paradise, standard language books, says it means a place of rest. Taking then this meaning of the word we have paradise a place of rest.

David, when worried with the cares of life, gave utterance to this desire:—

Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away and be at rest.—Ps. 55: 6.

When David's enemies were about him, and the fears of death came upon him, he expressed the desire of his heart, to be at rest. We believe the economy of God has amply provided for just such a refuge. We notice in Hebrews:—

Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. . . . There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his. Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief.—Heb. 4: 1, 9-11.

Yes, we shall rest; this is not the time of the day of one thousand years reign with Christ on earth. For the time of Christ's reign with his church on earth, in my mind, will be a busy one for him and his people. I think this time of rest will be found to be the immediate condition of God's people after death, and will last until the resurrection of the just. It is the condition of Lazarus that gathered crumbs at the rich man's table, who, after death, the Scriptures say, the rich man lifted up his eyes in hell, and saw Lazarus afar off in Abraham's bosom. Now the question is, where is Abraham? We notice in Revelation:—

And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar, the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and the testimony which they held. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.—Rev. 6: 9-11.

So we find here a condition awaiting the resurrection of God's people. Would it be incorrect if I should say that Abraham was there, and in that condition it is represented that the rich man beheld Lazarus, resting in his bosom. John says:—

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors.—Rev. 14: 13.

So in conclusion may we not say we shall hope for a glorious rest in the paradise of God, when the active scenes of this life vanish beyond the distant hills of time that divides this life from the conditions of a grander one.

H. P. CURTIS.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, JUNE 17, 1897.

NOTES FROM CRITIC.

WE are aware that in order to bring about the best results to all concerned, the writer should carefully prepare what he has to offer; but amid the hurry and bustle of life's activities it may perhaps be safe to say this off-hand,—that there's a bright side to everything, not excepting the present existing institutions of popular theology, for they generally do not come short in those functions which are effective in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, visiting the oppressed, afflicted, and outcast; and as a body of educators are full of zeal for that which is elevating morally and physically. The forces that are everywhere at work now more than ever before furnish the mind with food for thought, so that it can hardly keep pace with the discoveries in science and philosophy.

As an instance, the German scientists are clamoring for the exclusion of all American fruit, because of infection; and an exchange says that the most precious gems are subject to various diseases which frequently destroy their luster and beauty; one of the most common diseases of jewels being an inclination to change their original color.

Were it not for the revelations of God to man, this life, with its darkness and brightness, would indeed be a problem which none of us could solve. A casual glance at existing manifestations might cause us to say, "there's no good in the world outside of the narrow confines of mental development; without this charmed circle are forces dark, evil, and degrading beyond compare." But history, the inspired word, and our own experiences and observations have all along taught us that an all-wise and beneficent Creator can bring light out of darkness, so that even those who are denounced as blind guides are found oftentimes disseminating some truth.

Says the Rev. Kloss:—

Salvation is a big word, and a church's work is not defined simply by the number of souls saved, but as well by the subtle influences which modify environment.

It seems as if all over the world at present there was a conspiracy to hurry in the kingdom.

The discoveries and inventions, press and school are saving agencies. All questions of man's relation to man are religious questions included in the scope of the gospel—what principle should govern men in their business; how they should act as buyer and seller, proprietor and tenant, employer and employee; questions of food, sanitation, and government, are religious matters. Christianity is not a circumstance in life; it is the very life. But, above all, men are to be brought not to theories and conditions, but to Christ, who is "the way, the truth, and the life."

Speaking of discoveries and inventions, we learn that America has lighted up with electricity the Roman catacombs, and the gloom of eighteen centuries has been dispelled in one of the largest of these subterranean cemeteries.

There is another class of believers whose Gibraltar is, "There is no such thing as matter: all is mind." A lady conversing with us upon religious subjects said among other like vagaries, "This body of ours is all spirit." Reasoning from this standpoint it is no wonder the Christian Scientists cling to their rock, and they have been classed by some as a "network of falsities and a general jumble of absurdities!"

We will not infringe upon the space of these precious columns by repeating any of the erroneous and profane utterances of one who is a fair representative of "the Church of this World," but think it more profitable to quote from the London Chronicle concerning the discovery that the founder of the first Egyptian dynasty, Menes, is no longer a mythical person, but a real character:—

It is now admitted (and with good reason we believe) that the biblical record which some of the critics tried to dissolve away into thin air have been justified by tangible evidence. The new history calls archaeology, craniology, and inscriptions to its aid, and so earns for itself a position of strength which before our century was unknown. A reconstruction of Egyptian history and religion would be a most important contribution to the knowledge of the history of mankind.

We read also of another discovery—of a people who are star worshipers, inhabiting a tract of country near the lower Euphrates. Their religion is a mixture of Christian, Heathen, and Jewish, and they speak a peculiar language. They are a moral, peaceful, and industrious people. And so, wonders will never cease.

"A people is but the attempt of many
To rise to the completer life of one;
And those who live as models for the mass,
Are simply of more value than they all."

CRITIC.

WHO SHOULD PRESIDE?

IN the early history of the church the question of presidency was one that demanded something of a specific character, as a criterion to stand as a bar to aggressive and ambitious men. Men starting out without precedent or example, as far as any other church was concerned, with regard to the functions of their office and callings, were compelled to look to the source that gave them their authority for direction, so that the Divine-imposed limitations or circumscriptions would be a guarantee to the newly installed officers, that they could move with perfect freedom, and with a degree of certainty that the one who had committed to them so sacred a trust, would bless them in the discharge of every duty devolving upon them, and that no confusion would follow. There being limitations to each and every one's authority, it mechanically located every man that was honored with any office in the priesthood. Nevertheless, after all that has been revealed from time to time, we are still undecided in regard to some matters, while a large majority may be united, the minority will have the satisfaction of standing as the critic of the majority, until their cause is being vindicated, or they convinced of their error. And it is the only reasonable premises upon which a majority and a minority can possibly stand united, and the minority carry out the wishes of the majority.

Common consent being a bases for action, as it is written:—

And all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith.—D. C. 25: 1.

Again:—

Neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith.—D. C. 27: 4.

By these quotations we see that there must be an appeal to the body, or the aggregate, for license, before any action can become authoritative; but to conclude that a majority vote, of any General Conference or assembled body, is infallible, would be tantamount to defying Deity itself. But for the safety and peace of every well organized body, there is no higher nor better standard, and in fact it is the only standard by which it can stand. While I may be a little slow in presenting what I have in mind, that incites me to write this article, I will now proceed.

Every now and again, of late, the question is being asked, "Can a priest, or a teacher, or a deacon preside when there is an elder or elders living in the branch, and nothing standing against them as un-Christian conduct?" This question has been answered in the affirmative, and as a result is causing more or less unrest and division in the minds of those that feel an interest in the election of branch officers. Some time ago one of our largest branches of the church, at one of its business meetings held to elect presiding officers, considered this question and decided by their vote that a priest could preside. This brother, a priest, who was elected to preside, is an excellent man, and possesses both good natural and acquired ability, and was a good worker; and from this point of view his election may be regarded as right; but in the face of the fact that in that branch there were apostles, high priests, and a little host of elders, some of them men of large experience, it certainly gave prestige to what the writer thinks was a bad precedent.

Under the circumstances, and once other branches heard that such action was had in this branch, the imitiveness that is so active in the brain of many, sought occasion to emulate what to them appear a virtue, right in direct opposition to the spirit and genius of the law of the church that says:—

If a branch, or district be large he who is chosen to preside should be an high priest, if there be one possessed of the spirit of wisdom to administer in the office of president; or if an elder be chosen who may by experience be found qualified to preside, as soon as practicable thereafter he should be ordained an high priest by the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the one ordaining, and by direction of a high council, or general conference, as required in the law.—D. C. 20: 2.

Here is a clear defining of who should preside, and the qualifications essential to eligibility to this high and holy calling; and such ordination, if it means anything, means the setting apart of one or many, as the case may be, to preside. Is there any virtue in the ordination; if so, what is it? It is solemn mockery to ordain men to sacred trusts and then ignore them and speak lightly of their rights. It would be infinitely better that their ordination should be opposed, when they are proposed for ordination, and thus save the church from embarrassment that otherwise will follow. It will be observed that provision is made that the qualifications must precede the ordination, when speaking of the high priests. And this may apply in a measure to all other offices; if not so, we may have a case similar to what occurred in Boone, Iowa, some time ago. A very ignorant and simple man, from some cause, was elected justice of the peace. The man came to the judge, as he said, to be qualified. When he approached the judge, the judge asked, "What can I do for you?"

"Qualify me," said the man.

"What for?" inquired the judge.

"For justice of the peace," says the man.

The Judge looked at him for a moment or two, then remarked, "I can't qualify you. I can administer the oath to you; but it is very doubtful if God himself could qualify you."

While we would not be justified in placing limits to God's power, we can see the possibility of ordaining men to offices that they are not qualified to fill, and in some instances has proven fatal, and in many injurious. Yet who will stand as the arbitrary judge to say who shall and who shall not be ordained to this or that office? After that our experiences and observations have shown us that men have been called to certain offices in the church by revelation that astonished the most sanguine, yet from human appearances they would never have filled those stations had they not been designated by the voice of the Spirit. To have held these men back, and to have told them that they should not minister in the office and calling whereunto they had been ordained, would virtually be casting reflection and discredit upon the revelation that called them.

It takes more than a mere acquaintance with the rules of order to make a man a good president. While he stands as the representative of the united body, it is rarely that men retain that central thought when divisions occur in the body over which they preside. The Hon. Thomas B. Reed says in his "Manual of Parliamentary Rules," that "the president should not only appear impartial, but feel so."

And as far as administering in the office of president is concerned, the rules are absolutely the same for all, regardless of the office they hold, as far as the priesthood is concerned. Upon what bases a priest, teacher, or deacon can preside over a branch in which there are good and honorable men holding the Melchisedek priesthood, I fail to comprehend. I know of no case in the Bible, Book of Mormon, nor Doctrine and Covenants as an ensample. However, I find in the Doctrine and Covenants these words:—

The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God.—D. C. 17:9.

Again, in speaking of the priest's duty:—

And he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he [the priest] is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties.—D. C. 17:10.

Now observe:—

In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.—D. C. 17:10.

Who is "the elder" here referred to. Is it the presiding elder of a branch? Let us see. It says, "He is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to teach, preach," etc.

The words, "When there is no elder present," "but when there is an elder." The words "no elder" would exclude from the assembly all elders, before the priest would have a right to preside, unless so authorized by an elder, as is evidenced by the words, "But when there is an elder present," etc. The indefinite article "an" meaning any elder, in that case, "he is only to teach," etc.

Now if enough of authority can be conjured out of these quoted paragraphs, or any other, to justify priests presiding, I will willingly submit. However, if I am not mistaken, the present order of things, where the priests are to preside over the elders, and their official acts is rather a modern affair, even the Reorganized Church existed many years before the practice became patent. From present indications where branches are wont to place priests to preside over branches having elders and even high priests, teachers to preside over priests, etc., there is low estimate placed upon those who should be honored to preside by virtue of their office. And there are some officers who refuse to act or officiate on account of this order of things, regarding them as irregular. We hear it said sometimes when reference is made to certain good men that are patriarchal and fatherly, well calculated to be shepherds to the flock, "He is a good man, but he is rather slow;" or he is not as smart as others. The law has provided assistance for the elder, when it says, "In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires." Again, it would seem that when priests are so preferable to the elder or elders that are resident in a branch, it would be better that they be ordained to the office of an elder, "according to the gifts and callings of God unto them."

Our president in a late Herald has called the attention of the church to the great necessity of giving the officers of the Aaronic priesthood a chance to develop, and of using them as preachers, etc., that thereby they may develop into presidents, etc. That's right, they should be used; but there are a number of elders that if properly appreciated and encouraged would do much more than what they are doing, and would become bright and shining lights; but on account of some little personal bickerings between them and those in charge of branch or district, they are held back. I know of a case where one, who afterwards became one of our missionaries, a good elder, and able to interest and instruct any audience, lived for nearly three years in the vicinity of one of our large branches, and during that time was never asked to perform any official act in public service,—never asked to preach once. I am not aware that this was the result of any difference between himself and its president, simply he was too insignificant to be noticed was the interpretation that was given for the oversight. I think that an expression of the General Conference or some one or more of the leading quorums of the church should be had relative to the propriety of electing priests to preside over elders, teachers over priests, deacons over teachers, except where there are legal objections or manifested inability.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Missouri District:—I wish to make known to you my appreciation of your favors and liberality financially the past year. My annual report shows a large increase and zeal to carry out the law of tithing. During the ten months of my annual report it has broken the record of any previous year since the organization of the Northeastern Missouri district. I find a few new tithe-payers. They have come to understand more fully their duty concerning the law of tithing. Let others follow who have not yet started to honor this law. Dear saints, I am proud that I can boast a little of the Northeastern Missouri district for the sacrifice they have made the past year, invoking God's Holy Spirit to assist you to continue this year as in the past. The Bevier Sisters' Sewing Society has been a great help for the work financially during the past year, not only in local aid, but for the general work also. Those sisters have shown their faith by their works. Others have done well and are worthy of imitation. Let the good work go on, brethren and sisters, till the conflict is o'er, and when our work is ended here we shall enter into the joys of our Lord.

The funeral was held in the M. E. church at Elk City, the M. E. choir kindly doing the singing. Elder F. A. Smith to administer to him just before he died. The Sunday school superintendent made the prayer and gave a very nice talk at the church, Bro. F. A. Smith preaching the sermon from Matthew 5:8, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

Archæological Committee's Report.
WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

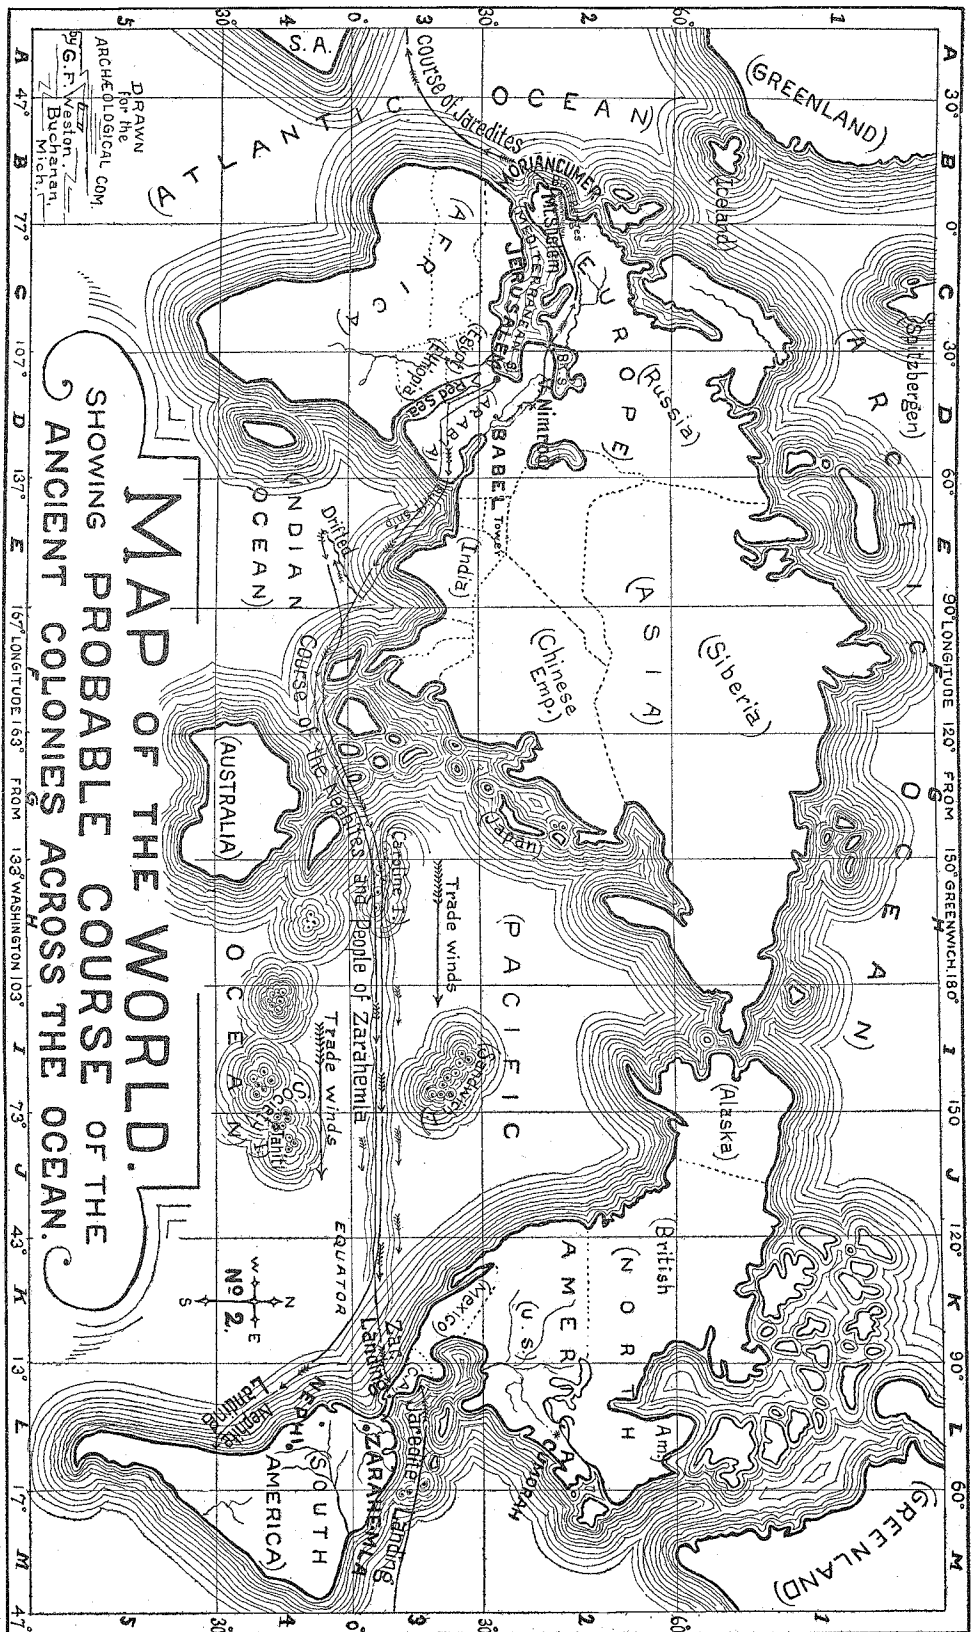

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

LEGISLATION ON MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Report of the National League for the Protection of the Family. Excerpt.

AS THE legislatures of nearly all the states held their sessions, which are now biennial in most instances, in 1897, we can report considerable new legislation regarding the family. Improved marriage laws are secured in a number of states. Indiana designates the classes of persons who may celebrate marriages. Missouri requires that all such shall be citizens of the United States. Probate courts in Michigan may now issue marriage licenses under careful regulations, to protect the good name of women in certain cases. Oklahoma has repealed her former loose marriage law and enacted a new one, with a system of license, returns, and records much like that of the older states. The effort for reform in New Jersey, where the old loose law of marriage without proper license led to great abuses, has in part succeeded. Massachusetts and New Hampshire improved their excellent laws for the registration of marriage still farther. In Massachusetts, the plan of including all facts regarding previous conjugal condition among those required in the license gives clergymen official information in cases of a previous divorce, and will enable statisticians to show the number of divorced persons who marry again in a given year, as Connecticut has done. Connecticut has also increased the efficiency of her registration law. This state has provided for the complete record of all births, marriages, and deaths from the date of the incorporation of the towns and cities, as far as these facts can be copied from public and church records. California has granted to certain religious denominations the privilege of marriage according to their rites without previous license; but such marriages must be acknowledged to the civil authorities within thirty days, and recorded by them.

California has now made the marriage of divorced persons illegal until one year after the decree of divorce has been rendered. Washington makes the offer by advertisement to procure divorces, annulments of marriage, etc., a misdemeanor, following, in this respect, recent legislation in California and Illinois. Kansas has forbidden her courts to grant divorce on the uncorroborated testimony of the husband or wife. Minnesota has adopted the former recommendation of the commissions on uniform legislation, and made the term of residence in the state before divorce one year. Vermont makes provision for the legal separation, without divorce, of husband and wife for any of the causes for which divorces may be granted. This affords relief to those especially whose conviction of duty forbids their resort to absolute divorce. An amendment of the laws of Maine permits its courts to hear petition for divorce in certain cases "if the libellee is a resident of this state." Michigan has adopted a good system for the collection and publication of statistics of divorce. This makes ten states, I believe, which now furnish these most important statistics. The number of states supplying statistics of births, deaths, marriages, and divorces should be rapidly increased, in order that these most important of social movements can be intelligently followed. Pennsylvania has granted certain public officers the power to take depositions regarding divorce, and to husbands the privilege of divorce for cruel treatment by the wife. Maryland can now be added to the growing list of states that provide for the punishment by fine or imprisonment of the man who willfully deserts his wife or child, or who fails, without just cause, to provide for their support. The effort to transfer the jurisdiction of divorce entirely to the courts has failed in Delaware, whose legislature granted forty-nine divorces in 1895. Virginia amends her laws providing for the revoking of divorce in certain cases. Congress did good work in this general direction in 1896 by its excellent marriage law for the District of Columbia, and in prescribing a uniform term of residence for one year before a divorce can be granted in any of the territories.

Other departments of family law have given us some legislation of more or less importance. These relate to the extension of the property rights of married women, to the adoption of children from state institutions by families, or to the admission of children into such institutions, and raising the "age of consent." Louisiana now allows married women to make and withdraw their own bank-deposits without the intervention of their husbands. While the legislation thus noted is less important in any one instance than that of some recent years, it pretty fairly represents the continuous and healthy movement in the right direction. More would doubtless be done but for the fact that many are waiting for the commissions on uniformity to make further recommendations. —Public Opinion.

JEWS IN THE UNITED STATES.

STEADY GROWTH IN THE HEBREW POPULATION DURING THE CENTURY.

AS TO the number of Jews at present living in the United States no exact statistics are attainable, as the government does not classify the population by religions in the enumeration for the decennial census. But more or less careful estimates have been made from time to time, from which Mr. D. Sulzberger of Philadelphia has compiled an approximate statement of the growth of our Semitic population. From estimates made on the authority of the Rev. Gershom Mendes Seixas in 1812, it is inferred that there were at least 400 Jews in New York at that time. The Jewish population in Pennsylvania included from 80 to 100 families; in Richmond, Va., 30 families; and in South Carolina, about 1,000 souls.

The first systematic attempt to obtain definite statistical information was undertaken by the Board of Delegates of American Israelites, with the assistance of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, whose committee reported in 1877 a total population of 189,756, and in 1880 a total of 230,257. In 1888, according to Isaac Markens, the population had risen to 400,000, of which 125,000 were credited to New York and 114,000 of which landed on these shores between 1881 and 1886. The work of gathering the statistics for the eleventh census (1890) was committed to Philip Cowen of the American Hebrew, and he presented tables showing 533 congregations of orthodox and reformed Jews, with 130,496 communicants. The two branches together have 301 church edifices, with an approximate seating capacity of 139,824. Besides these edifices 281 halls, etc., are occupied by congregations, and these halls have a seating capacity of 28,477. The total value of the synagogue property is $9,754,275, an increase in ten years of $3,549,697, while the number of communicants advanced over 80,000.

Coming down to the present day, Mr. Sulzberger says: "The total ascertained immigration since 1885 is 411,073, and, adding 74,310 given by Mr. J. Jacobs in the Jewish Year Book of 1896, the total of Jewish immigration to the United States since 1881 would not be over 485,383. And, finally, he gives, in a conservative estimate, 937,800 as the total number of Jews now settled in the United States. According to his computations, various principal States rank as follows in the sizes of their Hebrew population: New York, 350,000; Illinois and Pennsylvania, each 85,000; Ohio, 50,000; California and Maryland, each 35,000; Missouri and New Jersey, each 25,000; Massachusetts and Louisiana, each 20,000; and Virginia, 18,000. In all the Southern States it is large and rapidly growing, while in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Wyoming it does not exceed 1,000.—Leslie's Weekly.

THERE is a genuine hunger to-day on the part of the laity, not merely for practical expositions of certain texts and passages, but for a clearer idea of the Bible itself; how it came to be what it is, why it carries authority, to what extent the human element in it is to be recognized," says the "Congregationalist" of Boston. "The people are not ignorant of the fact that a host of scholars in both continents have given long years to the study of such questions as these. Every pastor has in his congregation more souls that are seeking light on these points than he perhaps realizes. Some are meeting the situation by facing it fearlessly and thoroughly. So prominent a pulpit as that of the First Church, Detroit, has recently been used to set forth the modern views of the Bible, and the eager interest with which the evening congregations have followed the ten consecutive addresses of Dr. Nehemiah Boynton shows that there is a great readiness for a wise and temperate presentation of the subject. Dr. Boynton supplemented his lectures by after meetings, at which questions were freely asked and answered. It requires a considerable amount of reading and study to prepare one's self to do this special work, and no minister ought to carry to his people mere theories. But one who has come to see that the fire of criticism has left us a very substantial Word of God need not hesitate to share with his people the conclusions reached under the guidance of the Spirit."

THE PRODUCTS OF CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 1.—The Chronicle, in its New Year edition, gives the following statistics regarding the principal natural products of California for 1897, the figures representing totals: Wine, 30,000,000 gallons; beet sugar, 6,500,000 pounds; wheat, 18,000,000 cents; barley, 9,600,000 cents; wool, 32,000,000 pounds; lumber, $10,600,000; hops, 50,000 bales; beans, 87,000,000 pounds; prunes, 82,500,000 pounds; raisins, 64,000,000 pounds; honey, 310 cars, 12 tons each. The exports of merchandise from San Francisco amounted to $46,000,000, the largest in any year with the exception of 1891, which was $48,000,000. The imports amounted to $39,000,000.

Dr. Maclaren, the famous Baptist preacher, of Manchester, England, said recently that experience proves that what draws people to church and interests them in religion is the old-fashioned gospel put straight in Saxon words.

AUTHORITY—ITS USE AND ABUSE.

WITHOUT the existence of authority, — and unless that authority is recognized, sustained, and if necessary maintained, — no government can exist, nor can safety be guaranteed. But abuse of authority, or the usurpation of privileges not justly attaching to one in whom authority is vested, has brought as much woe and disorder into the world as has unwarranted rebellion. Both are wrong, and both should be suppressed. Rebellion against the just exercise of authority should receive no favor. Unjust exercise of authority should be resisted. They are equally dangerous to good government, and subversive of the best interests of society. He who rashly or unjustly exercises authority is a tyrant; he who submits is a slave. He who resists the proper exercise of authority is a rebel; he who condones it is a traitor. But so difficult is it to draw the line exactly where it should be that submission should not be made compulsory, nor usurpation resisted by force only in extreme cases of emergency, and as a last resort; where appeal to kindness, entreaty, and long-suffering has failed to bring release or improvement of condition. On account of the difficulty in discriminating, some latitude should be allowed on both sides, and some concessions mutually granted. There are some general rules, however, that can be laid down with comparative safety.

First, The authority which punishes must necessarily be arbitrary. But who does not regret the necessity for its exercise? Who has been so blind as not to observe that where occasion for its exercise is most frequent, government is weakest and most futile. The reason is obvious. Man may be made to heed a decree through fear, so far as action is concerned; but action not in accord with conviction is but a mark of a coward, hypocrite, or slave. Hence he who undertakes to exercise authority by edict or force brings to his support the cringing hypocrite and coward, while he sows the seeds of rebellion in the noblest and best of his fellows. He thus weakens confidence in himself, destroys his own influence. His authority wanes, and no matter how justly nor righteously he may have become possessed of his authority, his government is impotent and must fall.

Second, The authority which directs in or stimulates to duty can never be arbitrary or absolute. To attempt such a thing can but result in failure. Absolute authority in either church or state was never vested in man by divine right. It has been exercised only to enslave or degrade. Examples of it in matters of state can be traced on every page of history where an absolute monarch has reigned. Its tendency in church is plainly visible in the East, in so far as it has been vested in the Pope at Rome; and in the West, in so far as it was vested in Brigham Young. Though an act may be good, virtuous, just, and honorable so far as its effect on others is concerned, yet the doing of it is not a duty fully done unless done with full purpose of heart, and under sincere conviction of mind and soul; nor can conviction of mind be secured only by evidence and reason which to that mind is potent. Hence duty enforced by edict or fear is but a sham—a pretense from which honest men will shrink in abhorrence and disdain.

The strength of the government of the Christ lies, and ever must lie, in his recognition of individual liberty, and the absolute necessity of internal conversion—the necessity of the whole man acting in complete harmony, and his whole soul being imbued with love for the thing done, and the principle which prompts the doing of it. What transcendent beauty there lies in the principle of condescension expressed in the words: "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." He who assumes to represent the Christ upon any other principle than this, misrepresents him.

The nearest human relationship (if indeed it can be called human, for it partakes of the nature of the divine) to which the relation of Christ and the church bears an analogy is that of husband and wife. In this association the husband should hold the highest authority; and where this is not recognized, domestic felicity is in danger; but if he exercise that authority in a dictatorial way, expecting that his command will be absolute, he will lose the respect and confidence of the wife who would be glad to reverence and respect his authority if exercised in love and consideration. His government will and should be a failure, for he thus proves himself incompetent to rule. No woman capable of discharging the functions of a wife will tamely submit to the edicts of a man who directs and commands her in the discharge of duty without consulting her opinions, feelings, and desires. In such a house there is no government, and marriage is a failure; peace is a stranger; and the results of such a union are unsatisfactory. But where a true wife is treated with courtesy and consideration, her opinions, feelings, and desires respected and honored, there the authority of the husband is supreme, the home is made happy, family government is a fact—not a pretense.

If this analogy is even comparatively correct, Christ will ever meet, as he has ever met, his subordinates on terms of closest intimacy, friendship, and consideration, so far as their work is concerned; and he who assumes to exercise authority in his stead must be governed by the same rules of courtesy and consideration; otherwise he will misrepresent his divine Master, and abuse a privilege for which he must account. By acting in harmony with the policy of our Master we will insure respect and confidence, and our influence for good will be an hundred fold greater than if we attempt to enforce recognition and obedience, or expect that our word alone shall be sufficient authority. Let us who are in authority honor our trust by considering respectfully the feelings and opinions of those over whom we preside, and thus insure good government, permanent influence, and divine favor. Let no absolute commands be given without consultation, advice, and consideration, and confidence will increase, respect for authority will be secured, and good government be insured. At least if there are exceptions they will be of the lawless and unruly class, and not those whose noble spirits revolt at oppression and servitude. Let it not be truthfully said of us: "Man, vain man, clothed in a little brief authority, plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven as makes the angels weep."

We unconsciously partake more or less of the nature of the government in which we live, and are influenced to some extent by our surroundings. Hence scattered as we are, and subject to so many and so various conditions and influences, we must expect that difference of opinion will exist; but let us remember that absolute authority to dictate in matters of duty is a relic of the dark ages, and to enforce it is an impossibility—a sham; and the fabric built upon it has no foundation, and must therefore fall, for the reason that its products are rebels and not loyal subjects; and what is worse, causes the best and truest element in the body to revolt. Let us then govern in love, in equity, in justice, consideration, and respect for all; and thus secure fealty, fellowship, and divine approbation. Let no man fear that his authority will not be recognized unless he prominently and persistently asserts it. This is weakness, not strength, and betrays incapacity to rule. Alexander, Cæsar, Herod, Napoleon, and others made this mistake, and to-day there are none to do them reverence. Christ founded his kingdom upon love, and in tender considerations for his subjects, and now, though he died a felon's death, thousands would die for him, and his authority is still supreme.

Those who bear authority in the church do so by his appointment and favor, and must rule as he ruled, or come to shame and confusion.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.

IN addition to what has been stated in regard to questions and answers it may be well to suggest that those asking questions would do well to themselves give thought to the questions involved, and also examine available sources of information, before submitting their questions to the HERALD.

The standard books of the church define quite clearly the duties of local and general officials. They also contain what the Lord has seen fit to reveal to the present age on points of doctrine and principle. The Book of Rules also lays down methods of procedure in many matters upon which the church has taken action in conference.

This writing is not intended to deny submission of proper questions for answer, but to lead to the exercise of personal examination and discretion to a proper and wholesome extent. All personal development must come from within, and if a man makes little or no effort to solve a problem he becomes simply an echo of what others may conclude.

In matters affecting local procedure, subordinate officers of branches should first consult their branch presidents, following which branch presidents have access to the district presidents, the latter to the missionaries in charge, the missionaries in charge to the Presidency; and all to the inspiration of the Spirit and the word. However, where an emergency can be properly met within the sphere of each man's jurisdiction by so much is the necessity removed for troubling many with it. Proper consultation and advice are provided for in the general arrangements under the law, and all should feel free to avail themselves of each other's counsel and advice, all under the influences of the Spirit of truth promised to be with the church in the several functions of work assigned its various departments and officials.

In thus writing we are aware that many newly ordained officials are not informed concerning the position of the church upon certain points of doctrine or methods of procedure. However, as stated, such have access to the counsel of those placed in local and general charge, who are supposed to inform themselves according to the demands of the respective interests over which they are given supervision and charge under the law.

Should we follow the letter of the law as laid down in Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 17, also Book of Mormon, in the blessing of the bread and wine? If so, why? If not, why not?

It is well to follow the form referred to, because revealed to the church in the standard books. However, we believe that should the officiating minister express the same sentiment with slight changes in verbal expression, it would not render the ministration void. It is right to be sufficiently particular; it is also well not to be over particular. (See D. C. 119: 7.)

Do you think it wisdom to hold entertainments in church consisting of dramas, recitations, etc., and also violin music, such as quicksteps? This last question you may answer or not as wisdom directs. I am not a crank on this, but I notice many times entertainments of this nature cause trouble.

The following action of the Twelve, indorsed by the General Conference is sufficiently explicit, we think, to determine the scope of proper action concerning church entertainments:—

Sunday school and branch entertainments:—

The young, middle-aged, and aged, are alike under obligations to shun the evils of the world, and adhere to the teachings of the word of God. They are not their own, but having been "bought with a price," they belong to Christ. That which is immoral in its tendency, or that which will in anywise interfere with the performance of duty as presented to us in the Sacred Word, or that which tends to prevent us from rising to that high standard of thought and action to which all the saints of God should aspire, should be excluded from the entertainments held in different branches of the church. And we believe that the enactment of tragedies should be avoided, and that purely frivolous display, or farces which embody no moral, as a prominent feature, are improper.

While in the very nature of the case it is difficult, if not impracticable, for us to denounce in a wholesale manner any class of performances known by a specific name, yet we may safely condemn all that we are unable to harmonize with the teachings of the sacred books of the church; that is, the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. That which is harmless and pure in its character and tendency may safely be admitted; that which is not should be excluded. The holding of Sunday school and church entertainments for laudable purposes, when of a proper kind, are not only permissible, but commendable. The exercise, however, should be of such a character as will tend to develop the latent powers of mind in the young, and those of riper years, imparting broader views of morality and social enjoyment, thus imparting that innocent pleasure which inspires those who possess it to reach higher after all that is elevating and instructive. We are further of the opinion that those who are in charge of Sunday schools and branches where these entertainments are to be had, may with proper care, be qualified to choose between that which is innocent and beneficial, and that which is not. All should so live as to enjoy that measure of the spirit of truth which will prevent them from indulging in that which would lead them away from God.

When a man has been chosen to office in the branch and is serving, if he is chosen and is ordained to a higher office does that release him from the one he did hold, or should he be released by a vote of the branch?

He should not be ordained unto another office unless he is to labor in the office to which ordained. Men may fill lesser offices than those they hold, but, other things being equal, should officiate in their own callings. Circumstances governing particular cases should determine in such cases.

The law states that the teacher's duty is to watch over the church and to see that there is no iniquity; and that if he or she does any manner of iniquity he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of God? Should the teacher prefer charges in such cases?

The teacher may do so, or it may be done by the branch officers conjointly. The teacher should take cognizance of the general spiritual condition of the membership and, in counsel with his fellow officers, take wise and necessary steps to eliminate and correct evils; and without harshness or hastiness in procedure.

Is it agreeable with the law of the church for one of the priesthood to partake of the sacrament with other denominations?

No; certainly not. The law provides for it only in the church.

Can one hold the priesthood when he turns his wife away from his home because she is not able to work?

He might "hold the priesthood," but would come under censure as a transgressor. The question scarcely needs an answer.

We have another question which comes within the scope of the work of the Bishopric, to whom the questioner is referred for information.

Has an elder the right to labor in the office of a teacher until the teacher refuses to labor?

An elder may act in the office of priest, teacher, or deacon. He should not be chosen to act in the Aaronic priesthood if officers in that priesthood having qualifications and in condition to act are available. It might be necessary to appoint an elder to act as teacher; circumstances and conditions must determine in the choice. We can only answer the question on general principles.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

AFTER a few days spent at Carnarvon, and a few attempts to minister the word to the few who attended the service, we made our way back to England, convinced that the prospects for our special work were not very flattering in North Wales; yet carrying with us pleasant memories of the kind saints at Carnarvon, and the beautiful scenery bordering on the Straits of Menai. Since our return we have labored in the four branches of Manchester and at Wigan, finding everything in fair condition in these places; but have made a specialty of writing our numerous reports made necessary by the several functions placed upon us by the church. There have been but few changes in the British Isles since our former statement. Elder Samuel Platt succeeds Elder Henry Hoole as president of Sheffield branch; Elder Charles Tyler, on account of old age and infirmity, has resigned from his presidency in Birmingham, and Elder J. R. Meredith has been chosen to succeed him; Elder James Gerrard has resigned his charge in London, and is succeeded by Elder R. Clift.

The season of the year is one in which all minds interested in the great latter-day work turn with more than ordinary interest towards America, for there are the measures soon to be enacted which must effect the present and future of the work in all the world; and in our hearts and upon our lips are prayers that love, kindness, wisdom, humility, and light may characterize the assemblies of latter-day Israel. Then, too, we anxiously scan the political horizon, and watch the ominous war cloud that hovers over the home land, anxious to discover whether it will be a war, or a rumor of war, as each are in order in this dispensation. War is a calamity far reaching in its consequences, the evils of which no nation can afford to invite only in the most extreme emergencies. Patriotism sometimes demands that a man fight for his country's honor, and to avenge the blood of fallen heroes; and yet to sober thought it seems poor satisfaction to avenge the lives of a few men by killing more; and from all this confusion and strife one turns with restful feelings to that King whose coming was heralded by the angelic proclamation of: "On earth peace; good will toward men."

But just at this time, when the eyes of the world are turned towards the heroic struggle of Cuba to throw off the Spanish yoke, it is interesting both from a religious and a political standpoint to consider the basis of the original claim made by Spain to the supremacy of the Kings of Castile and Leon over these Spanish-American countries. In 1509 Alonso de Ojeda, an emissary of Spain, made an extraordinary proclamation to the nations upon the coasts of America, and Robertson tells us that:—

The form employed on this occasion served as a model to the Spaniards in all their subsequent conquests in America. As Cuba was conquered in 1511 by Diego Velasquez, it is evident that his claim was upon this extraordinary model. It is as follows:—

"I Alonso de Ojeda, servant of the most high and powerful Kings of Castile and Leon, the conquerors of barbarous nations, their messenger and captain, notify to you and declare, in as ample form as I am capable, that God our Lord, who is one and eternal, created the heavens and the earth, and one man and one woman, of whom you and we, and all the men who have been or shall be in the world, are descended. But as it has come to pass through the number of generations during more than five thousand years, that they have been dispersed into different parts of the world, and are divided into various kingdoms and provinces, because one country was not able to contain them, nor could they have found in one the means of subsistence and preservation; therefore, God our Lord gave the charge of all those people to one man named St. Peter, whom he constituted the lord and head of all the human race, that all men, in whatever place they are born, or in whatever faith or place they are educated, might yield obedience unto him. He has subjected the whole world to his jurisdiction, and commanded him to establish his residence in Rome, as the most proper place for the government of the world. He likewise promised and gave him power to establish his authority in every other part of the world, and to judge and govern all Christians, Moors, Jews, Gentiles, and all other people of whatever sect or faith they may be. To him is given the name of Pope, which signifies admirable, great father and guardian, because he is the father and governor of all men. Those who lived in the time of this holy father obeyed and acknowledged him as their Lord and King, and the superior of the universe. The same has been observed with respect to them who, since his time, have been chosen to the pontificate. Thus it now continues and will continue to the end of the world.

One of these Pontiffs, as lord of the world, hath made a grant of these islands, and of the Tierra Firme of the ocean sea, to the Catholic Kings of Castile, Don Ferdinand and Donna Isabella, of glorious memory, and their successors, our sovereigns, with all they contain, as is more fully expressed in certain deeds passed upon that occasion, which you may see, if you desire it. Thus his majesty is king and lord of these islands, and of the continent, in virtue of this donation; and, as king and lord aforesaid, most of the islands to which his title hath been notified, have recognized his majesty, and now yield obedience and subjection to him as their lord, voluntarily and without resistance; and instantly, as soon as they received information, they obeyed the religious men sent by the king to preach to them, and to instruct them in our holy faith; and all these, of their own free will, without any recompense or gratuity, became Christians, and continue to be so; and his majesty having received them graciously under his protection, has commanded that they should be treated in the same manner as his other subjects and vassals, you are bound and obliged to act in the same manner.

Therefore I now entreat and require you to consider attentively what I have declared to you; and that you may more perfectly comprehend it, that you take such time as is reasonable, in order that you may acknowledge the church as the superior and guide of the universe, and likewise the holy Father called the Pope, in his own right, and his majesty by his appointment, as king and sovereign lord of these islands, and of the Tierra Firme; and that you consent that the aforesaid holy fathers shall declare and preach to you the doctrines above-mentioned. If you do this you act well, and perform that to which you are bound and obliged; and his majesty, and I in his name, will receive you with love and kindness, and will leave you, your wives, and children free and exempt from servitude, and in the enjoyment of all you possess, in the same manner as the inhabitants of the islands. Besides this, his majesty will bestow upon you many privileges, exemptions, and rewards. But if you will not comply, or maliciously delay to obey my injunction, then with the help of God, I will enter your country by force, I will carry on war against you with the utmost violence, I will subject you to the yoke of obedience to the church and king, I will take your wives and children, and will make them slaves, and sell or dispose of them according to his majesty's pleasure; I will seize your goods, and do you all the mischief in my power, as rebellious subjects, who will not acknowledge or submit to their lawful sovereign. And I protest, that all the bloodshed and calamities which shall follow are to be imputed to you, and not to his majesty, or to me, or the gentlemen who serve under me; and as I have now made this declaration and requisition unto you, I require the notary here present to grant me a certificate of this, subscribed in proper form.—Herrera, dec. 1, lib. VII., c. 14. See note 23, Robertson, vol. 1.

This then is Spain's case, according to her own pleadings. While as suggested by a certain eminent court, in another important case, it may not be well to question this claim lest we cloud other titles and disturb values; yet it does seem to us that when resident citizens in any country wish to establish a government of their own against such a title in a foreign potentate, that they have a case in court. Especially so, since the statute of limitation does not bar them in the tribunal where Spain has lodged the case, where the question was to be decided by the arbitrament of the sword. It seems to us then that Cuba is legally in court, and entitled to all the rights of a contestant. To deny this is to deny the legitimacy of the title now in Spain; or to acknowledge the right of the Pope to grant deeds of nations and provinces at his will. We can understand how from a Catholic standpoint the Cubans are rebels, but how in the opinion of a Protestant nation they can be so considered we cannot determine. This is not to say whether it is best for all concerned for Cuba to be free or not; but simply that Protestant nations to be consistent must acknowledge that her claims have as good right to recognition as have Spain's, according to her own showing. May the God of nations turn and overturn, until the nations learn war no more. May the followers of our soon coming King "Seek peace and ensue it." Whatever may be the rights and prerogatives of contending powers, our mission is to preach peace.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE HERALD will endeavor as heretofore to furnish its readers with a report of Religio, Sunday School Association, and General Conference proceedings. The effort is made at a great disadvantage, however, because of time required in getting mail matter from Independence to Lamoni, delay often occurring in transmission of matter by mail.

COMFORT.

Comfort in my heartfelt sorrows,
Heavenly Father, I would seek;
May thy Spirit's holy influence
O'er my soul its vigils keep.

Though my heart in anguish bleedeth,
And my tears unbidden flow;
Yet I know that in my sorrow
Thou canst peace and love bestow.

And while treading through life's pathway,
Thorns I find instead of flowers,
Heavenly Father, grant that I may Ever put my trust in thee.

May thy Spirit rest upon me,
And its peaceful calm be felt;
May I live in peace and quiet,
Till my days on earth are spent.

Then with those who've gone before me,
Those who've fought the battle through,
I may hear the Master saying,
"You have won a bright crown, too."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

But when one doeth amiss, the right-hand Angel doth lay His palm on the left-hand Angel, and whispers, "Forbear thy pen!

Peradventure in seven hours the man may repent him and pray;

At the end of the seventh hour, if it must be, witness it then."

THAT "like begets like" is an axiom few doubt. In some cases so marked in its development has this likeness become, that husband and wife after living for a series of years together in harmonious communion, have grown into a physical likeness of each other which did not at first exist. Drummond calls this "The law of physical influence," and adds, "we become like those whom we habitually love."

If this be true, it justifies the world in demanding of the Christian that he who professes to love Christ should sustain those professions by being assimilated to Christ in his life,—his daily walk and conversation,—in short, in all the attributes which God revealed in him as the measure of that which he requires of those who would be his disciples.

We say it justifies the world in demanding this and condemns those who fail to meet this demand, for this law which governs the physical realm is equally applicable to the spiritual realm. Unlimited, then, is the sphere of influence which the humblest follower of Christ may exert. To this influence in countless instances have yielded those who have been proof against every argument, every reason brought to bear upon them, and have through the consistent life of some humble child of God been constrained to say, like the dying Julian, "The Nazarene has conquered." May God help us then, to be witnesses for him in our lives, even if our lips forever keep silence.

"To him who is Christ's there is no need to search for the 'evidences of Christianity,' because he is his own best evidence. Good works done for Christ's sake are quite as much the evidence of Christ's work in the world to him who does them as they can be to the outside world."

BABY'S FIRST BIRTHDAY.

Just one year ago to-day, pet,
You our hands came to employ,
Fill our home with love and sunshine,
Fill our hearts with deepest joy.

Oh! so delicate and feeble
Was the tiny baby form;
Launched forth now upon life's ocean
Could it weather e'en one stern?

Soon the waves are beating round her;
Could our pet withstand the shock?
Yes, for all our faith is founded,
Grounded on a solid rock.

Lo, in God we trust, and healing
Power is given from above,
Brings our darling from the shadow
Of the grave, to life and love.

Then to God be all the glory,
As we bow our heads and say,
Thank thee, Father, for this blessing
Of our baby's first birthday.

THE CHILDREN.

THE position that children occupy in the household to-day points distinctively to the attainments of a high state of civilization. It seems almost incredible to read history in the last days of the Republic of Rome and the early days of the first Empire, to believe that such an unnatural condition could exist; that there was an entire lack of appreciation in parents toward their children.

When a child was born it was laid at the father's feet; if he picked it up it was recognized, otherwise it was thrown into the street. Can it be that these people were human? or were they in the first stages of development toward humanity?

Mankind at that age of the world was little superior, in some respects, to the brute creation. At this time we read of appeals being made by Terrence, for parents to be more tender towards their children, showing that there were men living in advance of the times. The world has ever had leading minds imbued with knowledge to teach the masses. This has been provided by the Heavenly Father who governs all, and leads us up step by step.

But to return to our subject, the children, how compared to-day with that dark era of man's existence. To-day children occupy the first place in the hearts of parents, and I might almost say in the community in which they live. No pains are spared in their training, either intellectually, morally, or religiously. It seems as though each parent is making an effort to make his child capable of filling the highest ideal, and the result of such training is plainly seen in the high developed intelligence of the children.

It is remarkable to see how easily they grasp almost classic ideas, that not many years ago were thought sufficiently hard problems for girls and boys of double their ages to solve. The world is rapidly advancing. There can be no loitering by the way-side. Each must be ready to grapple with the problems of to-day.

Surely there can be no happier pastime than the proud mother whose mission it is to care for these bright little spirits intrusted to her care. That she to-day is intelligent enough to realize her responsibility will result in perhaps the grandest generation of men and women that has ever existed.

Next door to the writer of this article lives a lady of refinement, possessing no ordinary degree of good sense, education, and, best of all, highly religious attainments. The mother of two beautiful little daughters, the eldest a little past three years, and one of the most lovable of children. She has acquired the title of "Lady Ruth" by her pretty ways. The little sister just running around the house is a source of great happiness to Ruth. She recently said to her auntie, "Don't sister make me hard to catch?" This is only one of her original ideas. Surely a home possessing two such treasures need look no farther for happiness. Mothers when entertaining little children, are entertaining angels unawares.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. H. F. JEWELL, of Oregon, Iowa, desires to be remembered in prayer that she may be healed, if it be God's will, of neuralgia of the heart and stomach.

Bro. Henry Hanna, of Virginia, Minnesota, asks for prayers in behalf of his wife, who is much afflicted, and who was once restored to health through the prayers of the Union, even to the astonishment of the doctors; but for some cause is again broken in health, but realizing the Lord is ever merciful, makes the request that she may again be remembered.

Sr. Leoni Stranahan, of Helena, Montana, a widow, the only support for herself and dear little daughter, asks for prayers in her behalf that if it be God's will she may be healed of a most distressing heart trouble. She has been afflicted since childhood with heart disease, but after the loss of husband and home one valve of the heart broke, since which time she has suffered untold agony.

Sr. Mary Ann Fry, Woodbine, Iowa, writes: "I request the prayers of the sisters in behalf of my hearing, that it may be restored if it is the Lord's will."

A sister desires the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of her young daughter, whom the doctors have pronounced afflicted for life, but the mother firmly believes she may be cured in answer to the prayer of faith.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, March 30.

Editors Herald.—The work is moving on apace in this district; I baptized three a week ago. Our conference at Crescent, last Saturday and Sunday, opened auspiciously, but an Alaskan cold wave engulfed us, and Sunday was the most unpleasant day of the entire winter. On Saturday the business was handled with dispatch, and we think the right obtained throughout. Present incumbents were retained in office, and the conference adjourned to meet with the Boomer branch, May 28 and 29. The preaching was by Bro. H. N. Hansen, S. Butler, and the writer.

Recently, by invitation, I delivered a lecture before the Omaha Philosophical Society, on "What is Religion? or the History of all Religions." This society is largely composed of liberals, or free thinkers, so-called. When I concluded, I was not a little surprised to have a person in female attire, presumably a woman, arise, and without any provocation proceed to give me and the Reorganization one of the worst tongue-lashings it was ever my privilege to endure. The woman was a "sharp one," being well posted on the strength of our doctrine, and the weakness of our practices. She arraigned Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, David Dancer, Elijah Banta, Bishop Rogers; the Order of Enoch, etc. I am assured she was secured on purpose, for when I essayed a reply I was politely informed by the President, that "time was up." I asked for farther audience at some future time, but received a negative reply. The woman's name is "Phœbe Arnold." I presume she is a public lecturer. She is a fluent, concise speaker, and makes as strong an attack on our faith as any I have heard.

A lecturer in the M. E. church here, recently took occasion to make a personal attack on the "Reorganized Latter Day Saints;" and I am credibly informed that the "one time defender of the faith," in the days of the Seer, Benjamin Winchester, lectured one Sunday afternoon, recently, on "Mormonism;" and so the "heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing."

The Christian Index, representing Campbell's restored church, in its issue of March 23, contains a communication from W. L. Mellinger, of Mondamin, Iowa, who is to act as Bays' moderator in the coming contest, in which he endeavors to show how just and fair Elder Bays has been in his negotiations for discussion. But the gentleman misrepresents facts, or I am greatly misinformed. He states that "during the month of November, 1897, Elder D. H. Bays, author of 'Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism,' was here and delivered several lectures on the above subject. As a result, the Latter Day Saints presented four propositions for discussion."

He then quotes one as follows:—

"Is the Church of Christ (sometimes called Disciple Church), organized and established through the instrumentality of A. Campbell and his coworkers, the church of God in fact, and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization." He adds, 'Elder Bays objected at once to this, and also in two of the other propositions.'

If he did, his objections never came to me. I have papers containing his signature to all four of the propositions long before I learned of his objections. The first inkling I had of his dissatisfaction was at the Williams-Blalock debate, at Tabor, Iowa, and I immediately informed him I would do all in my power to see that he was accommodated.

Then Mr. Mellinger continues: "Having heard that Elder Bays had at last signed articles to debate the question as stated, I wrote to him asking an explanation. He says: I signed the propositions under protest, as to the wording of two of them, and reserving the right under specific rule, agreed to by Elder Williams (his opponent), to define the terms of my own proposition."

If this represents Bays correctly, then he has deliberately misrepresented facts, for Elder Bays well knows that when the propositions were first signed by him that there was no "specific rule agreed to by Bro. Williams," granting him the privilege to "define the terms of my own proposition." It is but recently that we have agreed upon rules. There are other misstatements, but I pass them by to notice the weighty ones.

The writer says: "The Latter Day Saints do not wish to meet Elder Bays, as having been in their church all his life, and having taught their faith for twenty-seven years, he is too well acquainted with their teachings and practices.

Not so, Mr. Mellinger. But we propose that when discussion is held, that the faith of each shall be examined on its merits. While our informant concerning Blalock's letter and the action of the Mondamin church did not get things exactly correct, of which we before informed you, yet Mr. Mellinger says, "The church also voted that they would not tolerate the question as worded."

My statement was, "They (the church) have acted thereon, and resolved that if Elder Bays enters the discussion under the present arrangement, they will issue circulars and scatter them over the country, disavowing any connection with the debate, leaving Elder Bays to go it alone!" The only discrepancy is in the issuance of circulars. Their actions remain the same by the writer's own confession. Straining at a gnat,—usual Campbellite tactics, you know!

The editor of the Index has this to say:—

"It is our opinion that Mormons should be asked to affirm that 'Joseph Smith is a true prophet.' If they will not affirm this, let them as cowards and deceivers get their own audiences; we are acting foolish to help them get an audience. Joseph Smith was an impostor and a hypocrite; how foolish to debate the church question with people who honor Smith as a prophet."

Rich! Astonishing logic!! Surely a greater than Campbell is here!!!

Let me inform this great one that never have we refused to "affirm that 'Joseph Smith is a prophet of God;'" but we insist that it is ever just to the people that the claims of both disputants be examined. Would a man with a thimbleful of brains go into a battle, previously agreeing to be bound and gagged, and then permit his enemy all the appurtenances of battle, and free use of the same? And yet this is just what these Christian Infidels want. If we are willing to affirm our claims and they refuse to affirm theirs, who are the cowards? Our elders will make a grave mistake if they agree to meet these people on any other than the church propositions whatever may be added.

Yes. "How foolish to debate the church question with people who honor Smith as a prophet!"

And why? If Smith and the philosophy he advocated are as false as you would make us believe, success must follow every encounter, and where the folly of an act which means victory in the end? I opine that the very fact that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and being thus, he was enabled to so satisfactorily adjust this "church question" that it really is foolish upon the part of the Christian Infidels to debate with them. One thing experience has not been lost altogether with these people. A few years ago, they eagerly accepted propositions involving their distinctive church claims. Now a man is considered "foolish" who does this. Why the change? Are their ministry so poorly informed that they cannot uphold the standard or are the Latter Day Saints so strong that they fear our criticism? I pity that man who has so little confidence in his religious belief that he will not affirm it any time and anywhere.

A special to the Omaha Bee, dated Salt Lake, Utah, March 27, says: "Information comes from Ottawa, Canada, to the effect that Mormon emissaries have been working in the rural districts of Ontario, and their efforts have been very successful. Meetings have been held, at which 'the most objectionable features of Mormonism have been kept in
