COFFEE WORSE THAN ALCOHOL.

AT LEAST IT MAY HAVE A MORE INJURIOUS EFFECT IF DRANK IMMODERATELY.

It would shock a teetotaler to tell him that coffee drinking is more injurious to the human system than whisky drinking; yet that is practically what Dr. Oliver P. Rex, medical director of the Penn Mutual Insurance company, says. The medical gentlemen who guard the interests of the insurance companies have done much to teach the present generation how to live. Having the best opportunities of studying physiological problems, they are able to draw accurate general conclusions from the great number of individual cases which come under their observation as medical examiners.

The physician for an insurance company always makes a careful examination of the action of the heart for organic or functional derangements. If he finds an organic trouble which cannot be removed, he usually "turns down" the applicant for insurance. He finds plenty of cases with functional troubles, due to various causes, which may be cured in greater or less time by removing the causes. He detects these by listening to the heart beats; and to a well trained ear the variation of these heart beats from the rhythm of a healthy heart indicates one cause of the derangement.

It is easy, Dr. Rex said, to note the difference between the "bicycle heart," a "whisky heart," and a "coffee heart." These troubles are so frequently met with by examiners that they are commonly known by the above names. The man or woman who overexercises by riding a bicycle up hill or "scorching," produces an enlargement, or hypertrophy, of the heart. The stimulation of alcohol, tobacco, coffee, or tea affects the rhythm of the beats.

A heart beat consists of two sounds, one long and one short. In the first, blood is filling the relaxed heart; in the second, the heart contracts, with a corkscrew motion and violently expels the blood through the arteries. It is essential to a healthy circulation that the first movement should be completed and the heart filled before the second is begun. Strong stimulants disturb this regular action, shortening the length of the long beat, and a long continuance in their use may make the derangement permanent.

The best remedy, of course, is to remove the cause, and the doctor referred to several cases where marked beneficial results were produced within short periods. He would confine the use of coffee to two cups a day. Coffee topers are plentiful, and are as much tied to their cups as the whisky toper. The effect of the coffee upon the heart is more lasting, and, consequently, worse, than that of liquor. It is a powerful stimulant, and in certain cases of extreme weakness is more valuable than liquor. As a beverage it is important to use it only at the close of a meal, when it is said to assist digestion. In this respect it is unlike tea, which, by its tannic acid, prevents digestion.

Men and women alike suffer from too much coffee, but men alone, in this country, at least, are the sufferers from "tobacco heart," the result principally of smoking. There is not only the stimulus which comes from smoking and chewing alike, but there is the action of the nicotine in smoking which creates an additional disturbance of the heart's functions. Dr. Rex has found that smoking after the day's work is done is less harmful than the morning and midday cigar. In one or two cases that he mentioned, gentlemen told him that by omitting smoking during the day they found their brains clearer for business and their digestion improved.

Of course, it will be understood that as the heart is the center of the circulatory system, any disturbance of its action must affect every part of the body; and this in turn produces disease in other organs. It is not surprising, therefore, that the examining surgeons of the army have rejected many fine looking fellows with tobacco hearts and bicycle hearts on the ground that they would break down under the strain of service in the field.—Philadelphia Ledger.

FRUIT TREES FOR HIGHWAYS IN EUROPE.

Twenty years ago the picturesque roads of the northeast of France were lined with stately poplars; but although ornamental, their roots went far and wide, rendering the adjacent meadows sterile, and plows were continually stopped by offshoots lying almost at the surface of the soil. The farmers appealed in such strong terms that the Communes decided on the fall of the poplar, and axes and saws were brought into requisition and the roads cleared of these trees in favor of the humble but more useful small plum, to the great satisfaction of the villagers. Thousands of baskets of this fruit are shipped to Paris daily. It is not only in France, however, that fruit trees have peen planted along the roadside; in Germany, Belgium, and the Duchy of Luxemberg the system has been greatly developed, giving satisfaction to the State as well as to local interests. On the roads of Wurtemberg, for instance, the fruit harvest from this source produced in 1878 over $200,000, and last year the return had more than trebled. The annual revenue derived from the national roads of Saxony planted with fruit trees rose from $9,000 in 1880 to $42,000 in 1892, furnishing a total sum of $340,000 for the thirteen years. In Belgium, according to the statistics of 1894, over 4,630 kilometers of roads were planted with 741,571 fruit trees, which furnished the almost incredible sum of $2,000,000.—Ex.

MYSTERY OF SLEEP.

There is a remarkable fact connected with sleep which must not be overlooked. The sleep of a human being, if we are not too busy to attend to the matter, always evokes a certain feeling of awe. Go into a room where a person is sleeping and it is difficult to resist the sense that one is in the presence of the central mystery of existence. People who remember how constantly they see old Jones asleep in the club library will smile at this; but look quietly and alone at even old Jones and the sense of mystery will soon develop. It is no good to say that sleep is only "moving" because it looks like death. The person who is breathing so loudly as to take away all thought of death causes the sense of awe quite as easily as the silent sleeper who hardly seems to breathe.

We see death seldom, but were it more familiar we doubt if a corpse would inspire so much awe as the unconscious and sleeping figure—a smiling, irresponsible doll of flesh and blood, but a doll to whom in a second may be recalled a proud, active, controlling consciousness which will ride his bodily and his mental horse with a hand of iron, which will force that body to endure toil and misery, and will make that mind, now wandering in paths of fantastic folly, grapple with some great problem, or throw all its force into the ruling, the saving, or the destruction of mankind. The corpse is only so much bone, muscle, and tissue. The sleeping body is the house which a quick and eager master has only left for an hour or so. Let any one who thinks sleep is no mystery try to observe in himself the process by which sleep comes, and to notice how and when and under what conditions he loses consciousness. He will, of course, utterly fail to put his finger on the moment of sleep coming, but in striving to get as close as he can in the phenomena of sleep he will realize how great is the mystery which he is trying to fathom—London Spectator.

TO BRING ABOUT SLEEP.

Difficulties in going to sleep are sometimes physical; more often mental. The physical, under ordinary circumstances, are due to the circulation. The following are a few practical hints: Some sleep better half sitting up with three pillows, some better with none; some with little covering, some with much. Hot drinks or a hot bath just before sleep, hot bottles to the feet, are often useful. Tobacco often increases sleeplessness. Sometimes, after long waking, a small meal will bring sleep. Some, especially invalids, wake after two or three hours; a cup of hot, fresh tea will often send them to sleep again. Sometimes the darkness seems exciting, and one can sleep with a lighted candle. Intermittent noises, as of a rattling window, are always bad, but a continuous noise is often a lullaby. Moderate fatigue aids, but exhaustion prevent, sleep.

Oftenest sleeplessness is mental, and springs from a want of self-control. Either one subject engrosses the mind or a succession of ideas. In either case the sleepless must make the effort to stop thought. It is best done by attending continuously to some monotonous and unexciting idea, which is self-hypnotism. Some count, some breathe slowly, as if asleep, some look at imaginary sheep going through a gate. One of the best ways is to watch those curious appearances which come to closed eyes, a purple hare fading into a star, which becomes an irregular line, and again changes to something else. They cannot be seen when first sought, but will come with a little patience. In all these the purpose is to fix the attention on some object which will arouse no associations. It requires steady effort to do this and to prevent the thoughts wandering, but exercise increases the power to succeed. The half hour before bedtime should be spent quietly. —London Spectator.

RAPID SPREAD OF CHOLERA.

London, May 31.—The Daily Express has the following from Bombay, dated yesterday:—

"An unprecedentedly severe epidemic of cholera has broken out in the northern districts of Bombay Presidency, especially in the famine camps. The deaths have increased 40 per cent in three days. In the Kaira district there have been 1,330 deaths in seven days. The government has made a special grant of 61,000 rupees to cremate the dead immediately.

"In Palanpur State on the first day there was one death, on the second there were eighty-four, and on the third there were upward of 400. The swiftness of the infection was due to the fact that the first death was near the only available water supply. The germs were thus carried all over the camp.

"In the city of Bombay there have been sixty-seven deaths in the last seven days."—Chicago Tribune, May 31, 1900.

ALTRUISM.

The God of things as they are
  Is God of the highest heaven;
The God of the morning star,
  Of the thrush that sings at even.

The God of the storm and sunshine,
  Of the wolf, the snail and the bee,
Of the Alps' majestic silence,
  Of the soundless depths of the sea.

The God of the times and the nations,
  Of the planets as they roll,
Of the numberless constellations,
  Of the limitless human soul.

For there is nothing small,
  And naught can mighty be;
Archangels and atoms all—
  Embodiments of Thee.

A single thought divine
  Holds stars and suns in space;
A dream of man is thine.
  And history finds its place.

When the universe was young,
  Thine was the perfect thought,
That life should be bound in one,
  By the strand of love wrought.

In the life of the fern and the lily,
  Of the dragon and the dove,
Still through the stress and struggle,
  Waxes the bond of love.

Out from the ruthless ages,
  Rises like incense mild,
The love of the man and the woman,
  The love of the mother and child.
—David Starr Jordan.

He is the man who is apt to be offended, and to be "hurt," as he calls it, because some one passed him at the church door without speaking, or "said things" about him—he knows not what—behind his back, or objected to some plan which he proposed, or refused to do something he asked. Having worried his wife about the matter, and talked himself into a fever of wounded vanity, he gives everybody to understand that he has a grievance, and assumes the air of a martyr. As a formal protest he may even absent himself from church for two Sundays, and will be still further hurt if no one calls to inquire the reason. Of course he is very provoking, but there is no malice in the man and he ought to be gently treated. It is his misfortune, rather than his fault, that he has no scarf skin, and no protection against the inevitable friction of life. A gentle touch and a liberal use of spiritual ointment will cure his wounds, or, rather, scratches.

—Ian Maclaren.

FAITH AND TRUST.

Have faith and trust, ye wavering,
  God's ways we may not see;
What may seem chaos in our view,
  To him is harmony,
And when deep anguish fills our hearts,
  And tears well from our eyes,
The ill that causes them may be
  A blessing in disguise.

The noisome, poisonous weed which grows,
  Without a single charm,
May hold in its obnoxious stem
  A medicinal balm.
And tempests that o'erwhelm us,
  And fill us with dismay,
May render pure the fetid air
  And drive disease away.

Then faint not when reverses come;
  Have faith, and hope, and trust,
That all is ordered for the best—
  That God is kind and just.
Dwell not on evils that may come,
  Nor mourn o'er evils past,
But nurse the precious hope that God
  Will comfort you at last.

Yesterday is beyond our reach. Don't worry over what may then have happened. There is no work you can do yesterday.

Tomorrow hasn't arrived yet, so there is nothing you can do tomorrow just now. Don't worry about it—wait for it to come, but get ready for it.

Today is the time to do a lot. As far as you know, today is the only day of the year. Do your level best today, without regretting yesterday, save to profit by its omissions, or worrying over tomorrow, save to provide against its demands.—Selected.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORLD ON MORMONISM ANSWERED.

Sometime in October last, Bro. James Cairns wrote us from Vassar, Kansas, sending a copy of The Christian Endeavor World "Continuing the Golden Rule;" for Sept. 14, 1899.

This paper contains a rehash of the old cutting slash at "Mormonism" as a whole; but especially intended as a make weight in the religio-politico war against Utah's supposed attitude and the seating of Mr. B. H. Roberts, who was then Congressman-elect from Utah, and to whom subsequently the House of Representatives refused a seat.

The writer of the article was S. Brainerd Pratt, who wrote from Buckland, Massachusetts.

One would naturally expect that a paper with so sounding a name, and assuming to follow in the succession of "Continuing the Golden Rule," would start fair in dealing with contemporaneous religionists; but this writer disposes of the chief actor and moving factor in the scenes which led up to and included the organization of the church, April 6, 1830, in this fashion:—

> The story of Joseph Smith, Jr., the original head of the Mormon church, need not be repeated. A single statement will show who he was and whence he came. In 1833 more than sixty of the most respectable citizens of Wayne County, New York, where he spent his early youth, testified under oath that the family were immoral, false, fraudulent, and that Joseph, Jr., was the worst of the lot.
> Brigham Young, his most distinguished disciple and his successor as president, did not deny that his character was bad.

This summary way of disposing of the story of a man whose work as a religionist stands out so plainly in the lives of thousands of men and women, who are as good citizens of the state and nation as any Wayne County, N. Y., ever had, is unique, and decidedly inconsistent, especially as no effort was ever made by Wayne County officials, or any of those "sixty most respectable" citizens to bring the family, or "Joseph the worst of the lot," to answer before the bar of justice for "immoral, false," or "fraudulent" practices.

That story of worthlessness was the work of a man who was expelled from the society of the Saints for just cause, and who wrote an elaborate "expose" of "Mormonism" as early as 1834, D. P. Hurlbut. It has been ever since the fruitful source whence all such writers as S. Brainerd Pratt have taken the animus of their articles. The main story of the finding of the plates, the translation of them, the publication of the Book of Mormon, the translating and correcting of the Holy Scriptures is not so badly told in this "screed of Brainerd Pratt's;" but the anti-Christian animus with which he starts out runs through it all.

That Mr. Pratt is not well informed in the history is shown in that he gives the name of Thomas Cowdry as one of the "witnesses." There was no such man connected with the church and Joseph Smith at that time, nor never was that we have ever read of. The writer may have meant Oliver Cowdery, but if he did his memory was at fault.

In contrast with Mr. Brainerd Pratt's statement that President Brigham Young never denied that the character of Joseph Smith was bad, we quote President Young's own words:—

> Joseph Smith was not killed because he was deserving of it, nor because he was a wicked man; but because he was a virtuous man. I know that to be so, as well as I know that the sun now shines. Every man and woman who does the will of the Father, and will keep the commandments of Jesus Christ, may also know, as well as myself—it is their privilege. I know for myself that Joseph Smith was the subject of forty-eight lawsuits, and the most of them I witnessed with my own eyes; but not one action could ever be made to bear against him. No law or constitutional right did he ever violate. He was innocent and virtuous; he kept the law of his country, and lived above it; out of forty-eight law suits, (and I was with him in the most of them,) not one charge could be substantiated against him. He was pure, just, and holy, as to the keeping of the law. Now this I state for the satisfaction of those who do not know our history; but the Lord and the angels know all about it.
> Let me ask another question; do the people know what we were driven from Missouri for? An old friend of mine called upon me the day before yesterday. He said he had been watching my course, had looked and inquired after me, and had endeavored to find out my history, for we were friends. I asked him if he knew anything about the Latter Day Saints, or not? I found he had been looking after me, and had learned I had become a follower of Joseph Smith. I said, Do you know anything about our history? By his reply, I found he knew nothing at all of it, in comparison.
> A great many are in the like situation. Now let me relate one item of it, not for those who are wise, and pretend to be filled with knowledge, and at the same time know nothing, but I relate it for the information of those who know nothing about it. To my certain knowledge, men and women left the counties of Daviess and Caldwell, in the upper part of the state of Missouri, set fire to their own buildings, drove off their cattle killed and slayed, (I know, and could name the people,) and then swore the "Mormons" had done it. Now these circumstances came under my certain knowledge. Says I, can it be possible that men can become so corrupt, and so sunken in wickedness? I say this for the information of those who do not understand and know this people from the beginning. From the first day I knew Bro. Joseph to the day of his death, a better man never lived upon the face of the earth.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 40.

To reënforce these words of President Young, we also give the testimony of Lyman Wight:—

> He was greatly beloved and revered by the members of different churches, as also by all his acquaintances with the exception of the various denominations. His soundness in the belief of the doctrine to which he gave heed; his firm, sound, candid mind, and unshaken disposition to do the will of heaven as he was instructed, caused him to have many enemies among the denominations of the day, as also many in his own society. The greatest difficulty originated from his not giving up his own faith and believing in that of others. As many, very many, have grossly mistaken his character, I, having been acquainted with him for at least fourteen years previous to his death, take the liberty to say: That no man can draw any inference of his religion or character from Salt Lake or Beaver Island. Any person or persons drawing inference of his true character, or of the tenets of his doctrine, from these two histories, would do him great injustice, and do a great injury to themselves. . . .
> Joseph Smith, the "author and proprietor" of the Book of Mormon, the founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was six feet two inches high, of a form and figure difficult to surpass among the human family. He was a man possessed of a great share of good humor. As great a lover of his country as could be found among men. Often spoke of the government as being the most admirable on earth. Wept over the mob of Missouri and Philadelphia alike. He often wept that mobs should arise under the glorious institutions of the United States. Always spoke highly of our chief magistrates and those who administered the laws.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 775.

In the same issue of the Endeavor World are other articles reviewing the creed of the Mormons; but as these are aimed directly at the church in Utah, we leave a correction of them to the people assailed, it being their privilege to appear in their own defense. We have this to say, however, that the way these quasi-religious writers treat the Mormons and the Latter Day Saints, including the Reorganized Church, is unchristian, and quite removed from the principle of the Golden Rule.

Bro. Cairns wrote the editor of the Endeavor World, correcting the mis-

statements in the article, and received the following reply:—

BOSTON, Mass., October 20, 1899.

JAMES CAIRNS, M. D., Vassar, Kansas;

Dear Dr. Cairns:—I do not think it necessary in every article referring to the Mormons or Latter Day Saints (the two terms are synonomous) that mention should be made of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and a statement made that what is said does not apply to them. I doubt whether our readears know about the latter body of believers, and I am absolutely certain that there is no confusion. Whatever is said about the Mormons is taken by them as referring solely to the Utah people.

Sincerely yours,

AMOS R. WELLS.

Several years ago, when Dr. J. G. Holland was editor of the Century, Miss Ellen Dickenson wrote an inaccurate and unjust article concerning the Spaulding Romance and the Book of Mormon. This article we reviewed and sent the review to the Century, requesting the publication of it. To our request we received the courteous reply that the editor regretted the necessity of declining to publish, for the reason that it introduced controversy into the columns of the Century, which they were not prepared to do. It was all right to publish an article attacking the Mormon people, their history and their faith, but wrong to permit them a defense. So with these Christian Endeavor World people. They do not hesitate to insert highly colored sensational attacks on the Mormons, or any other believers in the faith of the Book of Mormon, but declined to permit those assailed to a reply. Upon this plan of procedure such people will be a long time "endeavoring" before they reach the heavenly plane of the Golden Rule.

HASTINGS, Australia, April 22, 1900.

Dear Sir and Brother:—I am instructed by conference of the Victoria district of the church, to write and obtain your ruling in such cases as that of the author of the enclosed copy of letter.

Trusting that you will favor me with a reply through the columns of the Herald, I am,

Your coworker in the "one faith,"

JOHN H. N. JONES,
Pres. of Hastings branch.

COPY OF LETTER.

BEALIBA, Victoria, Nov., 26, 1899.

Dear Mr. Jones:—Enclosed with this please find P. N. for 10s., as payment for the Herald sent me. Last Christmas it was 8s. 9d. due to this September; as I have received them since please find 10s.—which I should think will pay up to date, and then stop supply. I never read them, have not even opened one since April. I have no fault to find with church or people, but I have no desire for further interest in it. My only regret is that such decision means a separation from the kind hearts at Hastings who showed me nothing but love. . . . I have not joined any church, nor am I likely to; but I am tired of contending and proving my belief in Mormonism, and have concluded that life is too short to be spent in worrying and arguing. . . . I have not been influenced by anyone. I have simply lost all interest. . . . I cannot honestly wish to be called a Latter Day Saint, if I cannot be a loyal one. Yours sincerely,

CLARICE E. PRICE.

We can make no ruling in the case, as it is not one upon which a judicial opinion and decision could be passed. We offer the following advice, however.

Let the writer alone after due labor in the way of official visitation, if an effort to rouse the sluggish interest is called labor; but when that is done then leave the writer alone. Time and the ever recurring changes in human affairs may bring a season of temptation and reflection, when the spirit may assert its power to hold in renewed force.

An effort to force an interest in one so clearly intelligent as this writer is, would most likely create disgust with the "church, or people," where none now exists.

Every child of the kingdom must pass the equivalent of the forty days of Christ's passion, one in one way, another in still a different way, but each having for its object the disciplining of the soul to purify "so as by fire."

The spirit of indifference, the loss of interest, the yielding to the sense of ostracism by which the world—respectable world—so tries the young and newly received members, the being assailed by the attractions of former associates, are all of them urged against those essaying to walk in the church, and it is not to be wondered at that some should grow weary and long to be freed from the conflict. So in the case of this sister. She has grown tired of the strife; so let her have the benefit and solace there may be in the reflection that she is not held to bondage of mind. The chances are that after a time the very things which have tried her will bring the reflection and conviction that she may need to once again lead her to the true source of strength, the "Lord whom we preach."

Be courteous, gentle, and kind to her, but let her be free to exercise her agency.

Then gently scan your fellowman,
Still gentler sister woman;
And if ye ken they're gaing rang,
To step aside is human.
And as to motive, let's be mute
We never can adjust it;
Of what is done we may compute,
But know not what's resisted.
—Burns.

It has always seemed to us to be out of character for those professing belief in Christ to compel persons who might perchance become restless, or weary of strife, as is the case with the writer of the letter, to commit constructive crime, in the way of a charge of apostasy for a loss of interest, or a change of opinion, they not being guilty of any real crime, or moral wrong. We believe it to be better to leave them free to the reflections that time and discretion may bring, when they may be revived and restored.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

A correspondent cites 1 Nephi 2:1–6 inclusive, and 2 Nephi, 4:40–44 inclusive, and asks:—

Are these sets of plates mentioned in the two books of Nephi among the people today, or is one written and the other one to come in the future?

Nephi evidently made two sets of plates, one concerning certain matters of history, the other containing matters of doctrine, revelation, teaching, and other things considered to be of value to his descendants. Jacob, the brother of Nephi, in the opening account in his first chapter, refers to two sets of plates, one smaller than the other, and states that Nephi gave him a commandment concerning the small plates, and these he should hand down from generation to generation. Jacob gave the plates to Enos. Jarom received them from Enos; he to Omni; Omni to Amaron, and he to his brother Chemish. Chemish conferred them upon Abinadom, his son, Abinadom upon Amaleki. Jarom in his book, near the close refers to the other plates, and states that they contain the history of their wars, and that his brethren could go to those plates for such history. Amaleki closes his book, thus:—

And I am about to lie down in my grave; and these plates are full.

These plates, evidently both sets, fell into the hands of Mormon, Amaleki, having delivered them to King Benjamin, who put them with the other plates, handed down from king to king, father, son, or brother, until they fell into the hands of Mormon.

From these plates Mormon made an abridged account of the things he deemed most important, history, doctrines, prophecies, teachings, testimonies, exhortations, such as he believed most necessary or pleasing to be handed down. See "The words of Mormon."

In the "Book of Mormon," chapter 1, Mormon states that he made an account of all the wickedness and abominations upon the plates of Nephi; but upon the other he forbore making such record.

Moroni, the son of Mormon, undertook to finish the record his father had begun, as he states in "Book of Mormon" chapter 4; the scene closing at Cumorah. In the 16th verse of same chapter, Moroni states that he was a descendant of Nephi, and the same one who hid the record, which was of great worth. The plates were not valuable, as the Lord had stated that no one should have them to get gain out of them. This statement is true to-day, as no money has been made out of the publication of the Book of Mormon, notwithstanding thousands of copies have been printed and sold, but always at such prices as precluded any profit, over the expense of the printing and the number of copies given away.

Moroni also wrote the Book of Ether from twenty-four plates found by the people of Limhi. He also states that the history from the creation to the tower was written on plates, and if these should be found the one finding them would have power to translate them. Moroni gave the record of Jared and his brother. Ether, chapter 3.

We conclude from this digest that the Book of Mormon is a digest made from the plates of Nephi, both sets referred to in the question, but that we have not those referred to by Moroni which contain the history from creation to the tower, and which he supposes will at some time come forth, to the blessing of the faithful and upright in heart.

The plates hidden by Moroni were evidently the ones on which the abridged record was made; and as those found were all of one size it is evident that we have not had access direct to either set of the two referred to in the question, but only to those on which the abridged account was written.

Tradition seems to teach that some part of the plates was not translated, and that at some time future to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon this sealed part would be revealed.

We should be familiar with the teaching of the Book of Mormon; and those who may have a taste for statistics and dates can find a mine of information from which much that is curious, interesting, and valuable may be drawn.

As a fitting close to this article we quote a statement made by Prof. Azariah Smith Root now the Librarian of the Oberlin College Library, made to an Elder Snow, of Utah, who lately visited Oberlin and saw and read from the Spalding manuscript, which is now in the custody of Oberlin College. Mr. Root's statement is as follows:—

Mr. Snow, it is all humbug to say that the Book of Mormon has any connection whatever with the Spalding manuscript. I have read them both very carefully, and am fully convinced that they are not in any way connected with each other. There is not a proper name or an incident in one that resembles a name or incident in the other, and not only is there no resemblance in the reading matter, but the styles used in the two books are also entirely different.

The foregoing is taken from an interesting letter written by Elder Snow and published in Deseret News for May 26, 1900.

THE ONE HUNDRED FOR INDIA'S RELIEF.

A committee of one hundred has been formed in New York City to attempt a systematic effort to assist the Government of India, at whose head is Lord Curzon, whose wife, Lady Curzon, is the daughter of Mr. Leiter, of Chicago, in relieving the famine distress in India. Wm. E. Dodge is chairman, John Crosby Brown is treasurer, and L. T. Chamberlain is chairman of the Executive Committee.

The committee recommend an extended effort, as in addition to the famine resulting from the failure of good crops, the cholera, almost always an accompaniament of famine has broken out in many of the affected districts.

In the circular issued by the Committee is the following. Read and reflect.

WHAT MONEY WILL DO.

Two to five cents a day will save life.

Ten cents a day will provide food for a starving family.

Two dollars will save a life until next harvest.

Five dollars will give a meal to 250 starving people.

Ten dollars will support 200 workers in various forms of industry for a day.

Twenty-five dollars gives an orphan boy or girl food, clothes, kind care and teaching in books and a trade for a whole year.

Fifty dollars clothes 100 women.

One hundred dollars supports the diggers of a village well to provide against future famines.

Five hundred dollars equips a grain depot and lowers the price of food in a circle of many villages.

One thousand dollars will maintain for a whole year, an orphanage of forty children or provide ten wells, or maintain two centers for selling cheap grain.

If you cannot give much yourself, you can collect among your friends sums that will save many lives.

To remove all doubt as to the actual need the committee cabled to the Viceroy of India and received the following:—

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, SIMLA,
May 1, 1900.

WILLIAM E DODGE, Chairman,
Indian Famine Relief Committee:—

So far from no more funds being needed, every dollar is of service in saving life. We have five and three quarters millions on relief, many in extreme destitution. All help gratefully received.

(Signed) LORD CURZON.

The Saints are doing and will do what individuals may feel able and willing to do, sending to the HERALD what each may choose, and Bro. John Smith will receipt for it and send it to the Chicago Auxiliary Committee, as it is desirable to keep the contributions as near together as practicable.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 9.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

THE CROSS.

A cross which was kept as a sacred relic was found in Peru at the time of the Conquest. The same cross was afterwards enriched with jewels and placed in the cathedral at Cuzco by Christians.

Mr. Priest asks, "How came this emblem of Christianity in America?" Then he goes to work to show that it might have reached America by some Nestorian Christians, who were in the service of the Chinese government in the thirteenth century. (See American Antiquities, p. 273.)

In the mound that once stood near the center of Chillicothe, Ohio, was found a skeleton, and "on the breast of this person" was found "a piece of copper in the form of a cross." Mr. Priest again reaches the conclusion (as with the Peruvian cross) that the prehistoric inhabitants of Chillicothe had heard about Christ and the Christian religion. (See pp. 180, 181.)

On the breast of an idol at Copan may be seen a cross suspended from the neck.

See also the rich carving of the cross at Palenque, and also the cross on the dress of the priest that stands to the left of the tablet, in Prehistoric America, p. 325.

It is strange, yet well authenticated, and has given rise to many theories, that the symbol of the cross was already known to the Indians before the arrival of Cortez.

In the island of Cozumel, near Yucatan, there were several; in Yucatan itself there was a stone cross; and there, an Indian, considered a prophet among his countrymen, had declared that a nation bearing the same as a symbol, should arrive from a distant country.

More extraordinary still was a temple dedicated to the Holy Cross by the Toltec nation in the city of Cholula. Near Tulancingo also is a cross engraved on a rock, with various characters, which the Indians, by tradition, attribute to the apostle Saint Thomas. In Oajaca also there existed a cross which the Indians from time immemorial had been accustomed to consider as a divine symbol. By order of the Bishop Cervantes, it was placed in a sumptuous chapel in the cathedral. Information concerning its discovery, together with a small cross cut out of its wood was sent to Rome to Paul the Fifth, who received it on his knees, singing a hymn. —Panorama of Nations, p. 413.

The Indian prophecy "that a nation bearing the same as a symbol, should arrive from a distant country" may be found in part in Myths of the New World, page 222. One line reads,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"And the cross will be seen by the nations of men."

We see by the foregoing that the Christians were not ashamed of the Indian cross! They gave it a place in their chapel or cathedral. Paul the Fifth gave it the right hand of fellowship and received the heathen cross on his knees, singing a hymn! But how came they to have a cross, and what did it mean? Many writers conclude that the red race received the cross from Christian ministers. It was found in Peru, Central America, Mexico, and Ohio!

The Toltec Culture God, Quetzalcoatl, is said to have worn "a mitre on his head, and was dressed in a long white robe reaching to his feet, and covered with red crosses. In his hand he held a sickle." (See Atlantis, p. 165.)

And who was Quetzalcoatl? Why, he was a foreigner. He came "from the distant East" and returned to the East.

The Blackfeet were accustomed to arrange the glacial boulders on the prairies in the form of a cross, in honor, they said, of Natose, "the Old Man who sends the winds."—Myths of the New World, p. 115.

The Lenape, when they wanted rain, made a cross on something, and commenced to pray. The Muyscas of South America had a similar custom.

The Aztec goddess of rains bore a cross in her hand, and at the feast celebrated to her honor in the early spring, victims were nailed to a cross and shot with arrows.—Ibid., p. 114.

In the Mexican tongue it bore the significant and worthy name "Tree of our life," or "Tree of our Flesh." . . . In the Mexican sacred formulas the tree was prayed to as tota, "Our Father."—Ibid., pp. 114, 117.

Frequently, therefore, in the codices and carvings from Mexico and Central America we find the tree of life, in the form of the cross.—Ibid., p. 141.

Quetzalcoatl, as god of the winds, bore as his sign of office "a mace like the cross of a bishop;" his robe was covered with them strown like flowers, and its adoration was throughout connected with his worship.—Ibid., p. 114.

The cross, we see, was a common symbol with the ancient peoples of Mexico and Central America, and especially with the Toltec people; but these Toltecs were nearly exterminated many centuries before the advent of the Spaniards, and what we know concerning them we get mainly through the Aztec via the Christian missionaries.

This Toltec period is called the "Golden age" in Mexico and Central America, and Quetzalcoatl was their chief god.

He was born of a virgin in the land of Tula or Tlapallan, in the distant Orient, and was high priest of that happy realm. . . . He too was represented as of white complexion, clothed in long white robes, and as many of the Aztec gods, with a full and flowing beard.—Ibid., p. 214.

"The cross" was "his sign of office," "and its adoration was throughout connected with his worship." But what did it mean?

In Egypt, Assyria, and Britain it was emblematical of creative power and eternity; in India, China, and Scandinavia, of heaven and immortality; in the two Americas, of rejuvenescence [a being young again] and freedom from physical suffering; while in both hemispheres it was the common symbol of the resurrection, or 'the sign of the life to come;' and, finally, in all heathen communities, without exception, it was the emphatic type, the sole enduring evidence, of the Divine Unity.—Atlantis, pp. 321, 322.

Mr. Brinton thinks that the cross "is but another symbol of the four cardinal points, the four winds of heaven." (Myths, p. 113.) And that Quetzalcoatl, Viracocha, and Itzamna are but mythical "creations of the religious fancy." (See Myths, p. 335.) But the writer thinks that he can see something more than the "four winds of heaven" in the cross. That it was the symbol of the four winds I admit; but it was also the symbol of the god of winds, Quetzalcoatl; it was his "sign of office." It was the symbol of the "new life,"—immortality, or the resurrection.

Some writers say that the cross is older than Christianity; but the writer believes that Christianity is the mother of the cross. Of course the cross is older than the New Testament; it is found in the oldest ruins and tombs on earth, which are much older than the New Testament. But Christianity is older than the New Testament. It was preached in Eden; in the woman's seed that should "bruise the serpent's head." That seed was Christ. Christ, then, was preached from the beginning. Taking this view of Christianity we can easily account for the cross. It was foreordained that he would die on a cross. He was the "lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

In section 36, paragraph 11, Book of Covenants, is an extract of a revelation given to Enoch, the seventh person in line from Adam, two generations before the flood, in which it was declared that Christ the Son of God would die on a cross.

In the Book of Mormon it was also foreseen that he would die on a cross. (1 Nephi 3:19.)

This may help us to account for the antiquity of the cross. It being foreknown that the Son of God would die on a cross, and that he was the "resurrection and the life," how natural to adopt the cross as the symbol of immortality, "new life," or "the life to come." I see in the Toltec Quetzalcoatl the Son of God—the God of the winds. So in Ezekiel it is the God of the "four winds" that makes the dry bones to live! (See chap. 37:9.)

The cross was "his sign of office." He was born of a virgin at Tula or Tlapallan. He wore "long white robes." He was a foreigner. He came from "the distant Orient," to which he returned after his mission work was ended with the Toltec people. In Quetzalcoatl I see Jesus. The first Christian missionaries after the conquest thought they saw in him St. Thomas. But it was Jesus, and not St. Thomas, who was born of a virgin. It was Jesus who said to his disciples, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: . . . and they shall hear my voice." (John 10:16.) "Not of this fold"—the New Testament fold. These other sheep were at a distance—some other country. He is the Shepherd, and knew the whereabouts of his sheep.

The "Mexicans had a tradition that Quetzalcoatl died on a cross." (Mexican Antiquities, vol. 6, p. 168.) Cannot we see that the natives are trying to tell us about Jesus, how that he came on a mission to the white Toltec people? Cannot we see how this is in harmony with the Book of Mormon when Jesus came to the Nephites, the white civilized people in the land of Bountiful, "clothed in a white robe"? They saw and felt "the prints of the nails" in the hands and feet." (See Book of Nephi 5:3-6.) He told them that he died on a cross. (Ibid., 12:3.) Jesus, or Quetzalcoatl, having suffered death on a cross, the cross became connected with his worship, and it became with the Toltecs "his sign of office." The "golden age" was introduced by his preaching to the Nephites, and afterwards all were "converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites." (Book of Nephi, son of Nephi, 1:2.)

The Aztecs might well say that during the Toltec era there was a "golden age;" but this Christian culture was in a great measure destroyed by the Lamanites. After three generations of peace those revolting from the Church of Christ again took upon themselves the old name—Lamanites. (Ibid., 1:6.) And the Lamanites nearly exterminated the Nephites.

Moroni says:—

And I make not myself known to the Lamanites, lest they should destroy me. For behold, their wars are exceeding fierce among themselves; and because of their hatred, they put to death every Nephite that will not deny the Christ.—Moroni 1:1.

We can see by that statement that it was a religious war; religion in some way was at the bottom of that exterminating war. If a Nephite would deny the Christ, his life would be spared. Thus in the Book of Mormon it was the Lamanites who destroyed the Nephites, the white civilized race; and in the myths it was the Chichimecs who invaded the Toltec country and overthrew their civilization and culture and nearly exterminated them.

Nadaillac says:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Toltecs, enervated by luxury, pleasure, and the most shameful debauchery, decimated by pestilential maladies, abandoned by the allies they had oppressed and by their own subjects, who in consequence of a religious schism had emigrated in great numbers to more favored regions, yet gave proof, in this supreme danger, of manly energy. Their chief Acxtitl called all his subjects to arms; the old men and children took weapons in hand.—Prehistoric America, p. 283.

We see in this story the Book of Mormon narrative repeated. How that the white civilized race was "vanquished" by a fierce, warlike, barbarous people; and that at this time there was a "religious schism" going through the country like a pestilence; and those that had been held together by a common blood and a pure, simple worship, were now broken up into factions. Idols were introduced into their worship, and prisoners of war offered up to them. See the difference between Mormon 2:1–4 and Nephi the son of Nephi, one of the disciples of Jesus Christ, 1:2. In the latter reference we have Christian communities, a Christian culture, "no contentions;" every man dealing "justly one with another," "all things common among them;" "not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift."

But in the former reference, which was nearly 400, A. D., it tells of war, in which women and children were offered up to dumb idols, towns and villages were burned, the Nephites took to flight, and those who could not escape were destroyed and trodden under the feet of the enemy.

This is the narrative as given by the author of the Book of Mormon, which is confirmed by the myths from Central America and Mexico. And this is why the late Henry George could see that "Mexico, as Cortez found it, showed the superimposition of barbarism upon a higher social development." That higher Christian culture crops out here and there, even to the time of the Conquest, and has given rise to many theories.

THE ROCK.

We shall now examine the evidence at hand and see if we cannot determine the character of that rock upon which Christ built his church.

Inspired men of the Bible used the word rock figuratively of God and Christ, when speaking of the relation of the Deity to his people; as, "he is the rock," "lightly esteemed the rock of his salvation," "their rock is not as our rock," "neither is there any rock like our God," "thou art my rock and my fortress," "lead me to the rock that is higher than I," etc.

Paul, in writing to the church at Ephesus, says:—

Ye . . . are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.—Eph. 2:20.

That is, built upon the same foundation upon which the apostles and prophets were built—the word of God—even Jesus Christ. (See John 1:14.) A very fit foundation, indeed! And Paul makes this very plain in writing to the church at Cornith, when he says:—

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.—1 Cor. 3:11.

Let us look at the prophetic cast of this foundation and see if the Saints of old were justified in building thereon:—

Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation.—Isa. 28:16.

The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner.—Ps. 118:22.

Now let us hear what the Savior* says of this foundation stone:—

*Peter.—Ed.

This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders; which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4:11, 12.

And allow me to introduce another, a histo-prophetic witness to this "rock":—

Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ.—1 Cor. 10:1–4.

You will please note that the words stone and rock are used synonymously. (See Isa. 8:14.)

Now we will examine the "rock" of Matthew 16, and see if it does not harmonize with the other scriptures cited:—

Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.—Matt. 16:13–20.

The Savior's manner of introducing the subject shows it to be of great importance, and the injunction with which he closes also helps to impress its importance.

Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?

But whom say ye that I am?

Next comes the answer,—

Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

And the Savior closes this subject of conversation with,—

Tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

Thus the subject is defined "The divinity of Jesus Christ." The Savior in his eulogy to Peter says,— Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

Revealed what? "The divinity of Jesus Christ," without which he could not be the Savior of the world.

Now, kind reader, before we go any farther let us mark the relative pronoun it, which has for its antecedent Jesus Christ, as just cited, and not lose track of it till the subject is exhausted. We hope to be able to show you that in the next instance it has for its antecedent the word rock, which we have already shown to mean Jesus Christ.

And upon this rock will I build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Now, in order to determine what the antecedent of the pronominal it is, in the second instance, as just quoted, we will have to be governed by the facts connected with the subject under consideration.

The context shows that Christ's chief desire and whole purpose of conversation was to teach his divinity. Again, notice how he introduces and closes the subject,—

Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? . . . But whom say ye that I am? . . . Tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

You will now observe that my summary of this text is in perfect harmony with Luke's version of it,—

Who having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first.

Christ received his virtue and saving power of the Father; the church its virtue from Jesus Christ, hence it must of necessity be founded upon him as the word of God.

My words they are spirit and they are life.

There is a statement connected with the text which will materially aid in throwing light upon the subject. It is as follows:—

And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

The word gate denotes power, as power is vested in the gate; but I hardly suppose that these gates are literal. "The gates of hell," "the gate of righteousness," "the gate of the grave."

There is nothing connected with the Christian religion, that the powers of hell have tried harder to gainsay than the divinity of Jesus Christ. It is the central target at which all the agents and emissaries of his satanic majesty, both within and without the pale of the churches, hurl their fiery darts. And never at any time in life or death did the powers of hell prevail against Jesus Christ.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

But was in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin.—Heb. 4: 15.

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.—John 10: 17, 18.

By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison.—1 Pet. 3: 19.

When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive.—Eph. 4: 8.

Now, in order to place this question beyond all disputation, we will briefly examine the validity of some of the counterclaims made for the "rock" and "church."

"Foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone." Surprising as it is, this claim is not without its advocates. They base their claim (not argument) upon,—

Ye . . . are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.

And they understand it, just as if it read, "Built upon the foundation apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone."

Such a rendering of the text makes Paul openly contradict himself in his writings to the church at Corinth:—

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.—1 Cor. 3: 11.

Let me further say to the advocates of this theory that the preposition of shows the relation that exist between the words foundation and apostles, and that the words do not mean one and the same thing, as shown in "the gospel of the kingdom," "the baptism of repentance." Such a foundation would certainly present a sorry picture, or rather a sorry set of pictures. At times it would be something like the apostles of some of the sectarian churches, "dead and gone to heaven."

Confession that Jesus is the Christ now comes in for just a passing notice. What a contradictory muddle the advocates of this theory have gotten into. Jesus says,—

A house divided against itself cannot stand.

Many confessed that Jesus was the Christ before the day of Pentecost, among whom was Simeon and Anna, and no church either, Eh! And to farther enlarge this foundation, devils also confessed Jesus Christ:—

I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God; what have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God the most high."

Revelation is also claimed by some to be the rock upon which Christ built his church. While revelation is an indispensible attribute in the character of Jesus Christ, and without which he could not be the Savior of the world, hence would not be Jesus Christ, I cannot accept it as the "rock" to the exclusion of other characteristics and virtues of the Savior. Jesus Christ is the embodiment of every principle and virtue that is necessary to constitute him the Savior of man. And in this way we have the necessary amount of revelation in the foundation of the church. But the scriptures do not warrant us in making the claim that revelation is the rock. Revelation is the principle or means by which Christ built his church upon the rock, but not the rock itself. If we should admit it to be the rock, what then would be the means employed?

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3: 7.

No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him —John 6: 44.

"No man knoweth the Son, but the Father," and he to whom the Father reveals him. Furthermore, the fact that the powers of hell did prevail against revelation makes it very plain that it could not have been the "rock."

For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes; the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered.—Isa. 29: 10.

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord.—Amos 8: 11.

Neither could it have been the church that the gates of hell were not to prevail against. As cited before, the divinity of Jesus Christ was the nucleus or gist of the whole conversation, while the word church was used incidentally. And to claim that it was, is to claim that Jesus jumped clear off the subject with which he so impressively opened up and closed the conversation. Can we believe that he would do so when teaching a fact of such vital importance? And the fact that the powers of hell did prevail against the church, resulting in its complete apostasy, is proof conclusive that it was not the church that was referred to. The argument that I have adduced against it being the church which was referred to will also disprove the claim that it was Peter.

Respectfully submitted in the interest of truth,

TELEPATHY AND THE SUBCONSCIOUS MIND.

While scientific minds have been inventing such methods of communication as the telephone and wireless telegraphy, other minds equally as scientific have been studiously investigating the possibilities of thought transference, and have succeeded in reducing it to a science under the name of telepathy.

To save the Herald readers unnecessary apprehension I will state that there is no affinity existing between spiritism and the new psychology. The former claims to converse with and through the sprits of the departed dead, while telepathy is the communion of the spirits which occupy our living bodies. It is said that "we are not bodies possessing souls, but we are souls possessing bodies."

Psychic research is as truly a study of self as is anatomy and physiology, and as life is of more value than the house in which it lives, and as eternity outstrips time, as day is more interesting than night, and as God stands above finite matter, so does the science of soul stand above and outstrip physical science in value and interest. Paul, "absent in body but present in spirit," passed judgment on evil conduct." (1 Cor. 5: 34.)

For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding your order, and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ.—Col. 2: 5.

Notice closely the phraseology of Ephesians 4: 23,—

Be renewed in the spirit of your mind,— and you will grasp Paul's idea of spirit. The spirit of Paul's mind was "with" the Colossian saints "beholding," that is, seeing, and enjoying their order and steadfastness. This same spirit of his mind, "whether in the body, or out of the body," he could not tell, was caught up to the third heaven, and into the paradise of God, where he both saw and heard unspeakable things and words "not lawful for a man to utter." (2 Cor. 12 : 1–4.) He referred to these experiences as visions. (Verse 1.) Psychological students call similar experiences telepathy; the many cases of absent administration and healing by Christ and his apostles they also couch under the same term.

That all the students of the various modern phychological schools make ministers, and that many of them are tenaciously clinging to monstrous dogmas, is not to be denied; but to claim that such mistakes and monstrosities invalidate the truth they discover is neither philosophical nor charitable. To reject a truth and refuse its benefits simply because it was discovered, developed, or taught by some one outside of the church, can be nothing short of the veriest superstition. Why did God command Joseph the Martyr to study all good books? Simply because there are many grand truths to be learned, and God proposes that we learn those truths by study. In the forcible language of Bro. T. W. Williams, "We do not yet know all there is to be known." So let us keep the church motto, "All truth," in mind as we proceed.

I called at a neighbor's house recently, and he remarked: "The Devil is always near when we talk about him." It is an old saying, suggestive of an important truth, though little understood. If you watch you may discover that as you start and as you go with thought centered on your errand, "the spirit of your mind" goes before you; goes as you think, and frequently starts the vibration of thought in the subconscious mind of those you are thinking of, and they naturally commence talking about you.

Not long since I entered into a fruitless search for a passage of scripture. I had never read it, and had heard it quoted but once. I had no doubt that Bro. B. gave a genuine quotation. Two weeks passed, and not a day but I thought of Bro. B. and the quotation. Then I wrote inquiring of his life and the passage. A prompt reply to the effect that I had been on his mind much of the time for some days past was exactly what I expected, for there existed between us a natural rapport, or what some style "elective affinity." I could give volumes of such observations. Whoever will watch these things will doubtless become interested and receive reward for the attention given.

I might here refer you to direct evidence; that is, the testimonies of living witnesses that well-defined mental messages have been successfully sent and received by them with no other medium than the force of thought; but as there is nothing tangible in them for you I will pass them by.

If the spirit of Sister Emma Burton could step out of the body, across the sea, into the cabin of a vessel which lay at a foreign port, and gaze with admiration and love on the face of her sleeping husband, return and view her own body as she had left it, and then voluntarily reënter the body as recorded in Autumn Leaves; if the spirit of Sr. Samuel Gurley, or the spirit of Bro. John Burlington, could leave the body and be escorted into the paradise of God and behold the glories that in like manner had been viewed by Paul; if Rev. Edward B. Emerson, Mrs. Charles Collins, Rev. William Tannent, Mrs. Swanson, and others could pass through similar experiences, why should it be thought incredible that kindred spirits can converse with each other while in possession of their natural bodies? Why should we suspicion the well-attested facts that are almost daily witnessed on the public stage of our large cities?

Some of our brethren say "it is too mysterious to believe unless it be seen;" and then when proof is offered they brand it as of the Devil. I have been confronted many times by the enemies of the gospel who take the same stand relative to the gifts, and I think it illogical in both parties.

I have seen but little relative to the efficacy of the Sisters' Prayer Union, yet I know in reason that great good results. Any arrangement which provides for unanimity of loving thoughts at given periods of time must in the nature of things have potency it it. If the sick who petition for their prayers understand the time appointed, and at that time observe the late revelation to the afflicted; i. e., "cease to complain," either orally or mentally, and cease to think for the time of their afflictions, and enter into a passive state of mind as hereafter described, they will hardly fail to be benefited. If the Union will in like manner disabuse their minds of anxiety, and sympathize not with afflicted conditions, that is, allow no feeling in common with affliction to come over you, other things being equal, the God of love will be pleased to grant you your requests. Be commiserate, but sympathize not. Hold yourselves above reciprocal influences and feelings. As you commit the petitioners into the hands of God, do so feeling that they are whole and strong. "When ye ask, believe that ye receive."

We have as yet but faint ideas of the potency of the great spiritual reservoirs within us. Personal will power, affection, volition, desire, attention, gratitude, purpose, skill, wisdom, appreciation, love, and reason all blended in one grand, harmonious whole, and help to constitute the faith that God requires at our hands. He uses these spiritual forces with which he has so liberally endowed us for his own glory in the physical uplift of afflicted humanity.

The elders when called to administer (Jas. 5:14), who go as mere machines, anoint, lay on hands, and pray, at the same time bringing into requisition none of these endowments except desire, and that abnormally distorted into anxiety, are not apt to meet with success. If you are anxious, you are uncertain. You are concerned, disturbed, distressed, uneasy, and out of harmony with the gospel of peace, or, as the psychic student would say, out of the proper vibration.

I can think of no class of individuals who should more joyfully hail the possibilities of telepathy than our missionaries, and no class who are better situated to profit by it. Their mission is one of love. They have larger, better developed, stronger love instincts and qualifications than the majority of mankind, and love is the only plane upon which telepathy will operate. Jealousy, bickering, peccadillos, envy, strife, malice, selfishness, etc., are dead locks against telepathy; but the strong affinity existing between the messengers for truth and the loving ones they leave behind specially qualifies them for successful operations along this line. It is an easy matter for them to get "into the one thought," or to "be of one mind;" and since Jesus promises us that where this perfect agreement exists we shall ask what we will and it shall be given, would it be wrong to ask the privilege of soul communion with absent loved ones?

But many of you doubt the possibility of transmitting mental messages independent of the power of God. It is well that you do doubt it. The writer has not intimated such a thought. If there is any difference between us it is this: I am forced by careful observation to believe that whosoever complies with any portion of God's fixed law, will through such partial compliance receive a partial reward; and I am surprised that some of my brethren fail to see the great breadth of the gospel platform. Jesus probably never placed more stress on any one point, at least never more plainly taught any truth, than that all men shall be rewarded according to their works. I do not believe a man can sink himself so low in the depths of sin and rebellion against God as to be out of reach of the gospel influence. I do believe the smallest kind act or loving thought of the vilest sinner will be rewarded by bringing him that much nearer to God. (See Matt. 10:42.)

Man is surely possessed by a most wonderful "undercurrent of thought and feeling," which is very properly named spirit, though the different schools agree in calling it the subconscious mind. Whatever you may be pleased to call it, it is that intellectual force which controls the circulation of blood, respiration, digestion, nutrition, waste, instinct, sleep, memory, physical growth, the nerve centers, etc. It requires no superior intelligence to see that these so-called involuntary functions are not governed by chance. In the act of assimilation the closest scrutiny is required to select from a heterogeneous mass of food the proper material to supply the various parts of the body. Bone, sinew, brain, nerve, blood, joint and fatty tissue, all require constant nourishment, and of a different kind. It is our subconscious mind, or "The spirit of your mind," which has charge of this intricate machinery; and when our physical bodies are perfectly passive, then our spirits are easily influenced and aroused to intense activity by proper suggestions. This clearly solves the problem, or at least furnishes us an insight to the phenomena of mind healing as practiced by various schools of the day when stripped of its mystery, and of many undue dogmatic assumptions, where is the sin? Can anyone point it out?

In conclusion, I will give a brief abstract summary of operation:—

First. Perfect congeniality, natural affinity, natural attraction. That mysterious quality called rapport or electric affinity is a necessity. Without a doubt the word love or charity, if comprehended, covers the whole ground, so far as qualification is concerned.

Second. As doubt is akin to fear, and renders every effort half-hearted and temporary, it is necessary that you believe, not only that it is possible that some may, but that you can succeed. Be positive, confident, fully assured.

Third. It is best for beginners to have a fixed or stated time; but as you come to understand the power, and process of thought, the need of a set time will be outgrown.

Fourth. The passive state of mind is a broad subject; all should be familiar with it. It should be taught in every school, for it is the only state in which we can fully grasp any truth that is presented. It is the state in which we hear all "splendid sermons." If we are not passive, the grandest, the most sublime sermon ever preached is to us commonplace. A child when passive learns more in five minutes than in five years when not passive. To enter into a state of passivity, occupy the easiest possible position; let down all tension of mind and body; relax every nerve and every muscle; close your eyes and your mind to your environments; thus become perfectly oblivious to your surroundings. With some it seems best to stop thinking entirely for a time, and then gradually center your thoughts upon the object of your desire, while others succeed best by conducting passivity and concentration at the same time. My observation is that whenever thought is sufficiently centered on any object, one naturally drops into the passive state. The more perfect the state of passivity, the more susceptible are we to deep, undisturbed interest, and the deeper the interest, the more completely passive we become. Therefore the act of concentration of thought is not a physical effort, but squarely the opposite.

The methods adopted in telepathy are concentration of thought upon your communicant. This requires a passive state of mind. Do not think of them as being far away. Forget distance. Think not of space. Think of the person only. Look at them as if they were with you. "The spirit of your mind" has eyes, and can see. Direct those alert eyes to identify your friend. Make a mental picture of him. When you have them clearly visualized, when with "your mind's eye" you can see them and feel that there is really no space between you, then speak firmly to them the words of your silent message. Remain passive for a time and listen for the reply, but do not get eager nor anxious.

Fifth. In sending messages some occupy the position of a third party; that is, when speaking of yourself, do not say, "I am well," etc.; but if your name is John, say, "John is well." The reason ascribed is that when in telapathic conjunction our individuality is so unified with the individuality of the communicant that what we speak of ourselves will appear to our friend as being true of himself. Others, however, succeed admirably and deal in the first person I. Various complications arise with a variety of temperaments, so that each individual must have a practical knowledge of it to know just how and with whom you can commune.

Sixth. The science is in its infancy, and you should not be discouraged if at first you do not succeed. A small degree of success will encourage you to repeat the effort. Perfect passivity and concentration of thought will not fail of gratifying results. Our spirits have been subjugated to the flesh for generations, and it will in most cases require patient study and repeated effort to succeed. So great an achievement should hardly be expected all at once and at the first trial.

Wishing success to all who may thoroughly test these matters, I subscribe myself,

Your brother and friend,

D. R. BALDWIN.

Editors Herald:—I have been appointed to labor in this State with Bro. Enge, and I trust we are in a state of acceptance with God.

I left home two weeks ago to go and tell the "old, old story;" or, as the apostles of old said, "We have left all and followed thee." After a three days' ride I met Brn. Enge and Dawson waiting for a train that was twelve hours late because of a wreck six miles west of Thompson's Falls, Idaho. The next day we walked nine miles and reached Bro. Sheldon's. At the end of the journey I was reminded of the thought, "Wayworn and tired we hither come."

I preached that night; but the second night looked more like a disappointment than an appointment, so we preached the following evening, and twice on Sunday.

There is to be a lecture delivered here tonight by a man named Sutton; subject, "Mormonism exposed." We intend to hear what he has to say on the matter. To me it is somewhat strange that they feel it such a duty to expose the truth. Why not expose error?

Three divisions of work present themselves; first, Catholicism; second, Protestantism; and third, Mormonism. Two of these are false. If the Catholics were right then, there was no need for Protestantism; but the protest is made. Whether it is made in righteousness is yet to be seen. I ask the question, "Is there a command from God for the protest?" The answer comes, "No."

Now see what the word says: "I can of mine own self do nothing," but "my Father worketh hitherto, and I work." "I say nothing but what I was commanded to say," "I do nothing but what I was commanded to do." So the protest and the word do not agree—do not harmonize.

How about Mormonism? Hearken! "The designs and purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither doth he turn to the right nor to the left; therefore his paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round." The Pope changes things to suit his purposes and gain certain ends; and if there is such a thing as worse, and much worse, then the Protestants are ahead. Mormonism says God changes not. So the ship of Zion has her course. The surges may roll, the angry billows may roar, but we will anchor by and by.

I desire that the Saints in the State of Washington write me at Orting, Washington, stating the opportunities in the several localities for preaching. Do not forget your duties to God and yourself. If you could only realize your duties in this generation and your visitation, you would never waste a moment, nor lose an opportunity. O, the many lost opportunities that are passed by unheeded. As I see the day approaching I fear that "some will fail in a Saint's reward." I pray God to bless those in this State. Peace be with you. Your brother,

JOHN DAVIS.

Editors Herald:—Let me draw the attention of all kingdom extending Saints to the work as it exists in British Columbia, as I fear the work cannot go on unless present impassible barriers shall be beaten down. I do not wish to assume the role of a crank, nor to manifest any disconted spirit; but I feel that duty compels me to mention certain things in connection with my field.

It will be understood that this is a new field that I started in some ten months ago. During that time I have been pushed from pillar to post, by reason of the most unusual sectarian meanness. This going from place to place has cost a great deal of money, both for board and hall rent. It has been impossible to confine my labors where expenses would always be small, as laboring in a place where there were but about a half dozen Saints, and widely scattered, necessitates my striking out among strangers when the work is accomplished among the Saints. I have sought to labor where a home was open, until interest failed, and then have been compelled to get right out among the people. In doing this I have been put to a big expense, as hall rent is exceedingly high, and board likewise. Saints will be informed by reading previous letters of my traveling from place to place, absolutely forced to it, by reason of the ill-natured proprietors imbibing too freely of the spirit of Babylon, a most intoxicating spirit, in many instances.

I have left splendid crowds when turned out, but could not tarry and preach, because of no other halls in the town.

Some one says, "Preach on the streets!" Permit me to inform all readers that it rains here about every other day; yes, I may say truthfully that all the dry days in a year will not aggregate three months. In one month it rained twenty-eight days. To think of preaching on the streets in any season of the year is out of the question.

And now what can be done to obviate the the difficulty? Answer: Purchase a tent. Tent work ought to be most successful here, as, because of the exceedingly mild climate, it could easily be used ten months in a year; moreover, hall expenses which are from three to twenty dollars a night would be obliterated, and boarding expense would be considerably lessened by the elder boarding himself in the tent.

There is absolutely no use to send an elder out here and then tie him up with no opportunities to present the word. Being such an exceedingly expensive country to live in, we have to adapt ourselves to the conditions.

But some one asks, Why do I ask for a tent through the church organ? Brethren, it is that I might awaken church authorities and Saints to the demands of this arduous field. Let me give you a living illustration. When last I wrote I was opening up the work at Kelowna. I labored there one week, and then had to get up and go, as collections were far too small to even pay my board. I was among strangers, hence had to pony up the wherewith in an honorable way. Board was five dollars for the week, cheapest in town. I was completely broke, financially, and had to approach a gentile, borrowing not only enough to meet my board bill, but to get out of the place, some fourteen dollars all told. I was at that time some three hundred and fifty miles from any body of Saints, hence had to borrow the large sum to get where I could get the next meal. I merely cite this to show you how cold and reserved this Province is, and to see if perhaps some way could not be devised that this expense might be curtailed.

I arrived home last March, and have been helping the Saints as best I could ever since; but I've not attempted to strike out again, all because finance won't permit me. It is useless to attempt getting free schools in the country, as firstly, the farming community is very small, there being little tillable land, or else where there are farms they are often very large and owned by one man, thus creating a sparsely settled region. In some places the farms are seven hundred to two thousand acres, all controlled by one rancher. There is a school, to be sure; but it gathers its students from miles around. Could it be practicable to hold nightly services at such places?

Brethren, I am a servant of the church, but I wish the church would serve me with the means in the shape of a tent to reach the people.

I am satisfied there are many of Israel in this Province yet ungathered and unfettered from gentile manacles; but as has been shown me, the difficulty lies in gathering them out by getting at them. For the sake of Israel in this country yet unseen by naked eye, I feel under deep obligations to plead on their behalf for the necessary help in the shape of a tent to reach them.

Who will respond? I am prepared to receive all donations from any and every source, for surely the Son of man hath not a house, a chapel, nor a tent erected to his honor in this far-off field. Please respond all who will, in a demonstrative way, that my hands may be loosed to push out, for the hastening time is upon us.

The kirks are closed baith far and near,
The parson's fau't nae doot;
The schills are aye refused us tae,
Or else we're syn turned oot.

The rents for halls taks muckle gear,
And freens we hae but few,
And cash wi' us is very scant,
Sae, what will we dae noo.

The muckle rain maks street wark bad,
The folk we canna' teach
Unless some ither wye be planned,
That they may hear us preach.

"A tent?" why that's the very thing,
A house that's a' oor aine,
Where we can ask the folk to come
In sunshine or in rain,

Then, Saints, wha love the gospel true,
We plead your help the noo;
We're strangers in a far-off land,
But look for help from you.

CLEBURNE, Tex., June 2.

Editors Herald:—I left Ft. Worth last week after shaking hands with a few warm-hearted, faithful Saints enroute for this place. Elder H. O. Smith was their preacher at the time of my departure and they were all with one accord of one heart and mind, rejoicing in the Lord.

I came here for the purpose of visiting my son and his little family hoping to preach while here; but through the powers of the elements which have given an unusal amount of rain and the bigotry of the divines, who hold to a form of godliness and deny the power thereof, have this far made a failure, but I hope yet before I go to other parts to enjoy the privilege of declaring against such. As I read the discipline of the various churches and listen to their teachings I can see more and more of their errors, and can realize better the truth of the angelic declaration of the creeds. This morning it seems to me that I can hear the soft whisperings of the Savior, "Blessed art thou, . . . for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven;" "hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." As there is only one way given whereby the Spirit may freely flow from the throne of God to man, we may freely and boldly say we are the only people that can truthfully say we do know.

I find myself alone at this place, so far as earthly help is concerned, amid the breaks of a stormy sea of prejudice, tradition, and ignorance. However, Bro. and Sr. Riley will arrive today, and I think we will arrange services for a day or two.

Since coming to this place, while looking over the city for a place of worship, I met an eminent divine. On approaching him, his sparkling diamonds made it difficult for me to look at him; but before I left him it seemed to be quite difficult for him to look at me; not for my jewelry, but because of the fire darts of a guilty conscience being exposed, through a cross-examination. After making the declaration that he knew our position, his dignity did not allow me to speak to his congregation. His name is Smith. A Congregational minister said he had formerly lived in a neighborhood of our people in Decatur. Further particulars I don't remember; but of this I am quite sure, or least it seems so to me, that he was ignorant of the righteousness of God, going about establishing his own righteousness.

Today I rode out about five miles into the most thriving settlement I've seen for years passed, the finest and best arranged farms, the finest orchards, all kinds of berries, the best of gardens, good houses with yards decorated with the most beautiful flowers. Look which way we would, we could see the hoe, the ax, the plow, all moving, in the hands of this thriving and very industrious people. And as we passed the shops the hammer, anvil, bellows, and the handsaw gave unmistakable sounds of the industry of the mechanic. This is Sunday. "Why all this," I exclaimed to myself; "O, this is a people that has forgotten that Christ is Lord of the Sabbath, and that he arose from the dead, ushered in a new dispensation, and a new commencement of counting time began, and that his enemies did not recognize his authority. I suppose they conclude that the Jewish authority if not the best, is the oldest, and worship on Saturday and work on Sunday. Altogether it seemed peculiar to us, whether it be tradition or Bible.

On our return to this place it seemed almost like jumping from one world to another, or out of one dispensation into another. Here all labor was suspended, even in the railroad shops. All was silent as a graveyard. May the Lord bless his laborers that they may labor together in unity, is my prayer.

Editors Herald:—After tarrying a few days at St. Louis while enroute from Lamoni home, I reached the latter April 30. I found my folks well and very anxious and glad to see me. Since my arrival I have been preaching here and round about. I have in the time become more convinced that home will bear more careful and critical investigation than any other place on earth, not excepting the house of sacred worship. This is so because when endowed with the Holy Spirit it has the elements of the latter as well as those which belong especially to itself. I am decidedly of the opinion that "A boy's best friend is his mother," and "I believe it for my mother told me so."

Sunday, the 27th ult., I administered baptism to my youngest two sisters, one of whom, the elder, is married. Her name is now Mrs. Hosea Burke. The younger has been ready for baptism about two years, but there was no one to officiate. My relatives had not, until my return, heard a Latter Day Saint sermon since I left home over three years ago. The same is true also of other Saints living in this section of country. During my stay in California some parts of the region I had formerly labored in were entirely neglected. Possibly some one was to blame for this, and yet it may have been unavoidable. The same thing may be repeated, for I have already received notice of a transfer of my labors in regard to which the readers of the Herald will learn more later. This appears to be unfortunate; but if some one occupies in my place it will be all right. I do not think I could do better here than anyone else, but I am afraid I will not have a successor.

My sister, Mrs. Burke, was very desirous of receiving some spiritual manifestation before her baptism. She sought the Lord in prayer to that end, and realized it to her satisfaction and great joy. The Spirit spoke to her understanding (not by an audible voice, however) directing her to turn to Revelation, fourteenth chapter. She did so and read the sixth and seventh verses. She did not know before that prophecy could be found there. She was told also at the same time she could teach little children. This was in harmony with her desire, for she wanted to be a worker in the church, and yet didn't feel that she could do anything. There are many in the church who need such a testimony; for, judging from their inactivity, they do not think they can do anything.

I have heard some were disappointed with the late General Conference. I am sure I was not. Although some things I expected did not occur, other things, good things, too, I didn't expect, did; so I am on the average satisfied.

Praying that this year will be one of great success to God's work, and happiness to his children, I am,

Yours in hope,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

RADCLIFF, Ohio, May 29.

Editors Herald:—We are glad that we are still in this latter day work, although there seems to be darkness with some of our people here. Where some go into darkness others are receiving light.

While Bro. H. E. Moler was at home he preached a number of times, baptized three, and left others thinking. Some we expect will obey in a few days. He also organized Sunday school in our school district, which is moving along nicely. So the work moves, if some do turn away. May the Lord be merciful to them.

Work here has not moved very rapidly since conference. No doubt all are getting ready for the conflict, and will soon blow the gospel trump in the ears of the spiritually deaf.

I would request the missionaries who receive support from this district to inform me of their comings and goings to and from their fields of labor so that I may know how to supply their families.

Ever praying for the success of this grand work and the redemption of Zion, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

Editors Herald:—It is not often that I burden these pages, but I thought I might be able to write a few items that would be of interest to the isolated ones; and if any of our people need the sympathy of those who are happily planted among others of like faith it is those who are entirely pilgrims among strangers. Having been baptized in Chicago a number of years ago by Bro. Earl, I from that time forth became more and more in love with all the ancient and modern revelations appertaining to Zion and the regions around about. By study of the word, ancient and modern, and by the leading of God's Holy Spirit, I was enabled not to build air castles or expect too much of either the Lord, his Saints or the world. So having a chance to visit Kansas City, I took everything in a very natural way, and I assure you I am not disappointed, but satisfied beyond any reasonable expectancy.

Now Chicagoans and all other people are generally proud of the place they live in and its associations. So am I, and as I took my pencil in hand I would mark down as the train sped through "the land northward" all the defects as also the good to be seen. Missouri may not in these days come up to her sister states in natural riches; but who can tell what her hills and valleys will bring forth when "the earth shall bloom as Eden," and the Saints possess the land. But this much I know, the people living there are better off than the average farmer of other states; and from the middle of the state on the north and east watershed of the Missouri River is a land fat in cattle, cereals, and fruit, with a climate two months in advance of most places north of the 40th parallel in the central states.

Arriving in Kansas City on the evening of May 26, we met Sr. C. J. Clark, late of Chicago, at whose home we stayed and visited for a week. They live now in a beautiful, hilly, suburban district, southeast of the city. They are a family of great workers, and our loss is Zion's gain.

On Sunday, the 27th, we took the lovely trip on the electric road to Independence, for it was "annual rally day." It was the largest gathering of Saints I was ever in, and for the first time I entered an edifice that is owned by our people. It is a strongly built structure of stone directly opposite the noted Temple Lot, and nearly opposite the frame church of the Hedrickites. The car stopping in front of the church doors, we went in the basement to Sunday school, which has an enrollment of four hundred and twenty-five scholars; but this day brought out four hundred and eighty-five, which, after the lesson led by Wallace Robinson, as superintendent, divided into classes, while a large Bible class, also a large Book of Mormon class, gathered upstairs. Love and friendship lit up the countenance of every face; and by the help of the surrounding landscape which stretches away for miles I could not help wishing that the Lord would come and dwell in the temple (not yet built) in the holy of holies, when the veil is lifted and Israel is thoroughly separated from Babylon. Who can forecast the blessings that then will obtain?

Directly after Sunday school the people assembled in the church, which was well filled. In the morning and evening service the choir sang a number of anthems, such as, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof;" "Who is the Lord," "Let all nations bow," etc. The choir is made up of at least fifty voices, trained with much painstaking practice, and led by Bro. James. I have heard art singing in the crystal palace and temples of London, England, and other cities; but such singing was mechanical, while here it was the sweet singers of Israel, a chosen people, who know who they are singing to, and what they are singing about; and so I believe they can beat the world, because after getting time, pitch, modulation, accuracy of measure, etc., they have one thing more, and that is, they sing by the Spirit. Bro. Ralph Smith, their organist, is fired by the same noble motive, as in Ephesians 5:19.

Then our champion, Joseph Luff, gave us a sermon the world ought to have heard, taking Deuteronomy 32:11, 12, and first part of 15th verses: second reference to Psalms 24:3, and third part, Revelation 6:17. He said the first, last, and continuous design of preaching is the building of character otherwise wasted and lost; quoting Isaiah 24:1, 2, showing the time is soon to come that idols now existing shall be obliterated and men appear for what they are worth; that no credit is due anyone accidently doing good, and God will not blame a man for a wrong he did not intend to do; showing the attribute of justice.

By Proverbs 29:18 Bro. L. shows that vision in his case means primarily sense, natural power to see; and by John 3:3, 4, 5, he gave an example as to how impossible it is for some to see.

At night the stand was decorated by ten or more vases of native roses and flowers, and the speaker was T. W. Chatburn, another giant. His sermon was of a memorial and patriotic nature. By placing a book upright on the pulpit he called it "Paul" in the witness box. This made the sermon highly interesting, and called for intelligent consideration of the jury of hearers. Then asking the ladies and gentlemen to lay aside their prejudice one hour, saying that it makes no difference what we think about it but what does God think and say about it (the gospel). Many give no hearing because of objectionable doctrine. Starting with Galatians 1:6-9, he said: "Let us see what this man taught, taking the Bible as the ruling guide. Well, Mr. Paul, what did you teach?" etc., quoting all the teaching of fourteen years and the principles, gifts, and officers, with which you are all so well acquainted, such as Hebrews 1:2; Acts 8:14-17; 1 Corinthians 12; 1 Peter 5:8; Ephesians 4:11; etc.

In the intermission we dined at the supurb home of Bro. B. C. Smith, who afterwards showed what Missouri can do in the raising of flowers, vegetables, and fruit grown in his garden. He also took me to his strawberry patch, where I saw many berries the size of a walnut, and I can truthfully say there were not as many in the field when I left it.

On May 30, we all took a trip to the hills of Argentine, Kansas, where the inspiration of the view helped us to chat on the scattered conditions of the Saints and of prophecy pertaining to the near future. By the aid of a nickel each and six transfers, two of us took the street cars, seven in number, to the First Kansas City branch, where a week's revival was in progress. Bro. Hulmes as speaker took his text from Mal. 3:6, showing the unchangeableness of God's law in everything we see; the perfect harmony of the planetary system; how the Bible is the plan and specification by which we as architects can build; and taking the many sects as real estate agents, to well examine the deed so as to be sure of not suffering loss, etc.

We also saw a nice church of the Saints at Armstrong, Kansas, perched on a high bluff. I became acquainted with Brn. John White, Pickering, Criley, three James, Robinson, etc. Saw also my friends Brn. Hattie and H. H. Robinson. The latter I had not seen since he confirmed me years ago.

Taking another trip from Kansas City to Independence, I visited the Ensign office, and saw Brn. Garrett, Luffs, and Rudolph, also a number of our people owning their own stores up town. Visited the temple lot, which is a beautiful plat of about three acres, and the other 60 acres now held by our enemies. I also called on Zion's janitor and his wife, Bro. and Sr. Horton, and I hope when Zion is entirely free from debt and independent they will not forget this brother and sister; for here also "the laborer is worthy of his hire."

We called on Bro. R. Etzenhouser, and although so busy preparing for his Californian mission he nevertheless kindly unfolded his canvas view of "Cumorah's Hill," to see which is almost as good as a visit there. I bought from him a photo of Cumorah.

Independence has several other big churches bunched together; and well can we say, Who art thou? It would not take us long to tell them why I am a Latter Day Saint; but it is mystery Babylon, and so I suppose they never will ask. Will the Lord always tolerate the false crafts of the modern Midianite, Canaanite, Hittite, Amorite, Perizite, Hivite, and Jubusite, etc?

Persevering young men with a good supply of patience should, I think, go to Kansas City and surrounding towns and there endeavor to pass the civil service examination for letter carrier, clerk, mail clerk, gauger, etc. One trouble is the cities are not large; but they are growing and there is no reason why such jobs should not be filled by our men, who would have to scrape rather hard for a little, while as a substitute. Applications should be placed with the Metropolitan street railway and steam roads terminating there. There are any amount and varied avocations for all of us, which can be attained by a steady, systematic effort. I would rather be a sewer digger of Zion in the days to come than a bank teller elsewhere.

But there is no use for us to flock there unless prepared to undergo trials. We are yet far from perfection, and have not enough of the Comforter to attain it (our fault, not God's); therefore if any brother offends us, keep the tongue tied and pray, for that is the most effectual lever to overcome all things. The conditions are such that were every soul in Kansas City, and all the farmers about Latter Day Saints, and all true, honest, law-abiding and just citizens, that they would be an honor indeed to the state and need fear no expulsion.

The word should reëcho along our lines, "Let us up and possess the land;" and even if we are too poor to possess, go anyway, but first by preparing the way before us by writing for positions till one is found. I tell you there are glories near for each and every one of us who truly love this work, if we will let the Lord lead us. It thrilled me with delight to be shown first this and then that home occupied by a Saint. In fact all about was theirs; and for the first time in my life I felt at home, for in the world we are but pilgrims; for the Catholic and her numerous progeny have their homes and their cities. O that we had more faith, FAITH; and that we had more compassion for one another, and that every man were full of truth and integrity! They will be some day. Judas and Satan shall not always wear sheep's clothing.

I did not know what a drawing influence the Holy Spirit has over this land till I had to go away. As the sun was setting and the train carried us away from this choice land, my sensations were as one cast out of heaven to go and dwell among strangers. So passed from view the hills of Zion and the regions round about in Missouri and Kansas. Surely the Lord's wisdom is shown in choosing this center. The vistas, vales, forests, and every conceivable glory is there, and the ground is rich. Even the trees wave their sonnets of praise, and the rocks are full of poetry. Nothing seen of nature to distress the mind, but everything tends to refresh and build the faculties of the weary. I am not drawing a fictitious picture. The whole world is a glory unto God; but can you not see the earth groaning because of abominations and idolatry and gross wickedness. The Lord has designated a spot for the building of his temple, and where the Saints, his children, can live in holiness, salvation, and glory. Ye scattered of Israel, take courage. Remember your covenants and cast your eyes and prayers ZIONWARD. May we all be found worthy to abide the day of his coming is my prayer.

"Shall we meet with those invited
To the marriage of the Lamb?
Who shall then put on their glory,
And forget their earthly shame?
Shall we meet the shining myriads
Who the songs of glory sing?
Shall our voices join their praises
To the everlasting KING?"

Hoping I am in those holy bonds,

"Jesus, still lead on,
Till our rest be won;
And although the way be cheerless,
We will follow, calm and fearless:
Guide us by thy hand
To our Fatherland."

IN presenting to the Daughters of Zion the following, as supplying the interim between the old and the new courses of reading, we feel that no apology is needed, for its beautiful thoughts presented in such simplicity of style will endear it to the heart of each earnest worker in the Master's cause. Its study will impress anew upon heart and mind the great underlying truth of the gospel of Christ, "all ye are brethren."

It has long been our earnest hope and prayer for the time to come when the Daughters of Zion would be enabled to establish free kindergartens as a part of their work, and it may be this reading will appeal to some one competent to aid such a movement. God grant it may.—ED.

SELECT READING FOR JULY MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

THE CHILDREN OF THE OTHER HALF.

MISS LUCY WHEELOCK.

"Oh, child! oh, newborn denizen
Of life's great city! On thy head
The glory of the morn is shed
Like a celestial benison—
Here at the portals thou dost stand,
And with thy little hand
Thou openest the mysterious gate,
Into the future's undiscovered land!"

Every child born, in palace or hovel, stands at this same mysterious portal. For every one the future waits. There is no manger so lowly, no cradle so humble that around it the glories of the waiting world do not shine. As to the Holy Child of old, so to every child to-day, the world comes with its gifts. The gentle Mary is there representing the family life. The humble shepherds come first, foreshadowing the lot of man destined to live among the common people, to live only by using his own powers, and by conforming to the laws of life, that there is no receiving without giving. And yet, the glory of heaven had shone upon these same shepherds, showing that the radiance of the Divine may illuminate even the most humble life, and the celestial music may accompany the everyday talk. Kingly power is represented in the group around this early cradle. The golden treasures of the world's wisdom are laid at the feet of the child standing at life's portal. Every poet, from the time of blind Homer, has sung his songs for him. Every work written in any tongue may be his.

The canvass of a Murillo or Reynolds he may possess in the true sense of possession. "The world belongs to those who take it." The incense of the lives of saints, of the good and holy men of all ages is wafted to him as a sacred gift. The faith of a Luther, of a Savonarola, or of a Joan of Arc may be his inheritance. A long procession of heroes and heroines, the great and mighty of the earth, may march across the stage of his life, each bringing the inspiration of his or her deed as a magic gift to allure to noble living. Such is the possible heritage of every child born. But alas! how often by lack of right environment, and by a false system of training, the heir fails to take possession of what is truly his. To defraud a man of his estate is a grievous sin, but to defraud a human being of his divine possession of himself and of his powers, of his joyous inheritance in this world of blessing, is an evil with which human law may not interfere, and of which too seldom we, any of us, take cognizance. We have easily comforted ourselves by assigning too much importance to heredity and too little to environment. (Let this point be fully discussed.—Ed.)

To take a child of the slums and put him for a half a day into an atmosphere of peace and good will and joy, such as the kindergarten offers, is to make the dinginess and misery of the tenement house impossible for that child when growth shall have come. The child of the slums becomes vicious and wicked because affected by the false maxims of his environment. "The world owes every man a living," is the motto of the tramp, the thief, the pickpocket. The child brought up with no other influence must inevitably look upon the world, not as his natural God-given inheritance to use and enjoy, but as an estate to which others have defrauded him of his natural rights. He must gain by craft and crime that which others have appropriated.

Those whom we call great are so because they most fully accept the truth that their lives belong not to themselves, but to the race. The child standing at the portal of the future, wherever his feet are placed, finds himself confronted by the institutional life of man, offering varied relationships.

To lead a human being to master himself and his relationships is to educate him. The kindergarten takes hold of the family relationship and idealizes it for the child. One of Froebel's finger plays names the fingers for the different members of the family. The children sing:—

"This is the mother, kind and dear;
This is the father, with hearty cheer,
This is the brother, strong and tall;
This is the sister who plays with her doll;
And this is the baby, the pet of all;
Behold this good family great and small."

As they sing, the different fingers are raised, and when the little one takes its place, the idea of a perfect whole is gained. The finger family would be incomplete without the little one. The hand would be imperfect. Each is needed in its place to make the whole. The moral is obvious. Each member of the human family is needed in its right place to make a beautiful home. The little one, pet of all, must stand in its turn and help as the little finger does, when its help is needed. There are many other family songs which impress the same lesson. The mothers everywhere testify to the influence which is felt in the home. "My Johnny is a different boy since he went to the kindergarten," says the mother. "He talks so pretty now, and he runs so quick to get the coal."

The reflux influence of the plays of the kindergarten on the home is not the least important of its effects. One mother was convicted of her own unworthiness when she heard her Jennie singing, "This is the mother, kind and dear." "I haven't been a good mother," she confessed with bitter tears; "but I'd like her to sing it truly of me." This confession was made to the kindergarten for the heaviest doors will open to and the kindest hearts are reached by the kindergartner, who goes into the poorest home as the friend of the children. That is her only passport to favor, and it serves. The charity visit is rarely productive of good, but the visit of a friend is always welcome.

The "divine discernment" is bred within children, who are taken from dinginess and strife, and surrounded for a portion of each day with an atmosphere of peace and good will. The slums will not hold them when the power comes to forsake the life of the tenement. The kindergarten, to many children, seems like a real heaven with blooming flowers and sunshine and singing birds. The warmth and light and kindness of the place first attracts, and then the love for it all comes.

"The kindergarten is the largest step yet taken in the race with poverty." Through the kindergarten plays the fancy is so filled with the shapes of joy that the poorest and hungriest boy gains the power to create his own environment. In fancy he roams the daisy fields, or the green forest. Or perhaps the heat of the summer and the squalor of his surroundings are lost as he personates the fish diving and darting along the clear rippling stream. The songs and talks and plays "have made his mind a mansion for all lovely forms," and have given him a new environment. A new earth has been created around him, and he looks toward a new heaven.

The kindergarten, too, constantly contradicts the old doctrine of Plato, that the useful arts are degrading. The work of the blacksmith, the cooper, the farmer, the miller, the clothier, are represented in the games of the children. It is a joy to be a blacksmith and to hammer well, because we can then set a shoe for a horse. Without the horse the farmer could not carry his grain to the miller, and the flour could not be ground, and the children could not be fed. So the beauty and honor of the work are made to depend on what it gives to others, and in his representative play the four-year old may gain the great truth as a life possession, which we name the interdependence of mankind on the solidarity of the race.

"Everybody has to have everybody," exclaimed the child on whom this great thought had dawned through his play. Can any minister or teacher phrase it better? Can there be any better thought for the child standing at the portal of the future, to carry with him into the undiscovered land? If everybody needs everybody, somebody needs him. If he accepts this universal relationship, he has already become an heir to his true kingdom. He has come into possession of his own.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

If there is any department in all the work of the church today, which will thoroughly test the metal of which church members and Sunday school workers are made, we believe it is the Home Department of the Sunday school. The genuine ring of the real Christian, and the false ring of the mere "professor of religion" are easily detected when put to the Home Department.—Charles D. Meigs, in International Evangel, St. Louis.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

WHAT IS THE HOME DEPARTMENT OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL?

It is a Sunday school in the home instead of in the church, nothing more or nothing less. It may require that some minor changes be made because of the different surroundings; but they are only minor differences and serve to better fit the works of the school to the conditions of the home.

Yes, a home Sunday school should be as nearly like a regular school as the surrounding circumstances will permit. Your numbers may be few and rooms small, but this is no reason why a good school cannot be run.

We give a few suggestions which we believe should be observed as far as the conditions will permit.

1. Have a regular hour of meeting, and be prompt and regular in attendance every time.

2. Have your officers and teachers, even if it becomes necessary for you to appoint yourself and fill them all.

3. Secure the Quarterlies and Bible and study the lesson for the day. Keep in line with the regular work of the association.

4. Invite all the neighbor children and all others to attend and keep inviting till they do attend.

5. Keep an attendance record and report to the regular school if near one, or to the district association if far removed from a local school.

6. These schools should provide their own supplies if they are able. If not able to do so, let the near-by school or the district association provide them. It is often necessary, however, to furnish them for the first quarter till the school or class is in working order.

7. Classify your school properly, i. e., give each child the proper grade of Quarterly and teach them the lesson adapted to their comprehension. It may be that two grades could recite together if it were necessary and the classes very small. But in such or any case simplify your teaching to the needs of the simplest.

8. Have a blackboard and use it in teaching or in the review or both.

9. Open and close with song and prayer.

10. In short, make your family, and such others as you can induce to join with you, into a Sunday school, and conduct the school as nearly like any other Sunday school as the circumstances will possibly admit.

11. Report your work to the near school or to your district association.

WHO IS THE HOME DEPARTMENT FOR?

It is for everybody who for any reason cannot attend a regular Sunday school.

1. You may live too many miles from the place of meeting of your branch and of course cannot go regularly.

2. You may be among the isolated members who so sadly miss the branch and Sunday school privileges. The home class will supply much of this needed association.

3. Many mothers, invalids, nurses, night workers, and still others cannot attend for the time, but may keep in touch with the trend of the work by means of the Home Department or home class work.

WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS?

1. It helps such persons as mentioned above to keep the spiritual spark alive within them, though they be barred from attendance at church or Sunday school for a time. Branch presidents, Sunday school superintendents, and missionaries should think of this when they visit the careless, the indifferent, or the isolated members of the church.

2. It assists parents in performing the duty incumbent upon them to "teach their children" etc. (D. & C. 68:4), and sometimes, yes, frequently, is the means converting whole families through the influence of the little children.

3. We know of several instances where branches have been organized and church houses been erected as a direct result of the home class work of some faithful sister or brother and his family.

4. Full-fledged schools are commonly the outgrowth of the home school.

WHO MAY PROMOTE THE WORK?

1. Any one. You may start one in your own home. You may assist to start one in some other home.

2. Missionaries may start them wheresoever they can?

3. Local Sunday school officers should canvass their territory thoroughly. District officers should look after the work in their whole district. And the general superintendent should—we will see him personally.

4. District officers should look after the matter of reporting the work and see that no reports are omitted. These reports are a great stimulus to good work, and should be the same in substance as is expected of any school.

CONCLUSION.

Home schools are entitled to representation on the same basis as any school.

Great effort should be made on this line, as in many places it has heretofore been much neglected. Many have been pushing this work for some time, and report good results following the efforts.

Who will not make an attempt to provide for Sunday instruction in the absence of regular Sunday school privileges? Parents cannot afford to neglect their children. Others cannot afford to neglect their own welfare or perhaps the welfare of their fellow creature. There is really little excuse for persons to be entirely deprived of all benefits of church or Sunday school work. If you have not tried it, do so now. And think of the quotation at the head of this issue. Many persons will do some work while under the influence of others or under temporary excitement. But the one who will begin this home work and continue it from year to year is the one who has the "metal" of which true, earnest, and devoted Latter Day Saints are made. We have found a good number of these already. How many more can we find?

At one p. m. the meeting was called to order by the president. After singing and prayer, the minutes of the former meeting were read and approved. A brother was forgiven for some transgression the day before. A matter was presented by some of the brethren, asking that more stringent rules be made for the quiet of the conference, and in harmony with that request, the following was ordered. If any member, after being warned three times to be quiet and refuses to do so, was to be cast out and not allowed to come into the congregation. A court of elders—consisting of William, Alfred, and Kehouri—were chosen to try all cases of transgression during the conference, or appealed to the conference. A committee consisting of the following named brethren were chosen to div de the Tahiti division into new districts: Takakahu (sometimes called Metuaore), Tapuni, and Temai. A resolution from the chair was read, forbidding any person to hold any office whatever in the church, Sunday school, or prayer union, who was living with a companion unmarried. A request from the Third Quorum of Deacons, asking for the ordination of their president, was read, and the ordination ordered. A resolution addressed to the Saints and officers in America, asking for the return of Bro. and Sr. Burton to this mission was read and adopted. A statement from a brother asking that Hotu pay back the money overpaid to him, as ordered last conference and yet remaining unpaid. The matter was put into the hands of the elders' court heretofore mentioned, appointed by the conference. A report from the committee on tables was read and accepted. A vote of thanks was extended to the carpenters and all who assisted them with money and food while building the conference house. Adjourned to meet at one p. m.

Conference reassembled at one p. m. After singing and prayer, the minutes of the morning meeting were read and approved. Requests for several more ordinations were read and referred to a committee of three, consisting of Metuaore, Pohemiti, and Pou. A report from the secretary, showing who had and who had not paid their 250 each for the expenses of the conference. Requests for the next conference were read. The names of those who had paid for the Orometua were read. The names of those who had paid for the translation of the Doctrine and Covenants were read. Sunday morning at eight a. m., preaching by Tapuni; at ten a. m., preaching by William; at three p. m., prayer and testimony meeting, in charge of Teota and Pohemiti; evening preaching in English by Bro. J. F. Burton. Among other white folks present were the American consul, Mr. Henry our translator, several government officials, and four Mormon elders. After the evening service, an hour's singing contest was enjoyed. "God be with you till we meet again" was the closing song, and many eyes were moistened, especially those who had heard the tune in their native land.

The Mayor has been kind in stationing police around to preserve order, and attending himself at the opening of the feast.

Monday, April 8, eight a. m. Meeting opened by singing and prayer. Bro. Burton in the chair. After the minutes were read and approved, a resolution was adopted, ordering that the conference house be not torn down, but stand to beautify the place. A motion was also made to repair the missionary house, and other houses on the grounds, belonging to the church. The cost of the conference house was, together with other expenses, referred to a committee to audit and summarize. The committee on Tarona land title reported, and the matter was put off for one year. The meeting adjourned until one p. m.

Meeting called to order at one p. m. by the chair. After singing and prayer, the minutes of the former meeting were read and approved. The names of four men were presented for ordination to the office of deacon, two to the office of priest, six to the office of elder, and four to the office of teacher, and the conference granted the request. Committee on conference debt reported the cost of the conference to be $1,760 Chili coin. $336 had been collected, leaving a balance of $1,423. The matter was referred to a committee, consisting of the presidents of branches, to pay what they could and borrow the rest. A census was taken of the Saints present, and it was found that the per capita debt would be $4 50. By motion, the publication of the Orometua was stopped, it being considered too expensive. At last conference the Orometua was ordered bound in book form, and to be bought by the Saints; but owing to a lack of boats, but few could get to conference, and many books are unsold. By motion, they were put into the hands of the presidents of the branches to sell, and place the money in the hands of the publishing committee for future use. It was announced that the public feast would close at supper to-night. Two matutu's were announced for the evening, one on the eleventh hour dispensation, the other on infant baptism. Adjourned to meet Tuesday at eight a. m.

Tuesday, April 10, eight a. m. Meeting was called to order by the president. After prayer and singing, the minutes were read and approved. By vote it was decided to meet in Papeete again next year. The time of meeting was next taken up. Inasmuch as the Government complains that our gathering in April interferes with their gathering on the national holiday, July 14, a resolution was presented to change the time of conference to immediately after that date in July; also, another to meet in April. By a vote of 65 to 80 it was decided to meet in April. Pohemiti was chosen president of the Tahiti division, and Taneterau president of the Faakarava division. Bro. John Hawkins was chosen president of the Tuboi district, in charge also of missionary work; likewise Vairea, Tahiti, and Morea district. Teure: Rairoa, Tikehau, and Makatea district. Putoa: Kaukura, Niau, and Arutua district. Tapuni: Raratia district. Tavarea: Anaa, Hereheretua, and Faakarava district. Tuu: Hao and Amanu district. Te mare: Rairoia, Tanga, and Mahimo district. Teato: Takaroa, Manihi, and Taapoto district. Ioane Buraue: Raratonga district.

The following missionaries were also sent out into the following districts: Herman Jansson, Raratonga. Mareve, Raiatia. It was ordered to refer the appointment of men that presented themselves, free from debt, for missionary work, in the hands of the president of the mission.

Bro. Burton offered his resignation as president of the mission, and J. W. Peterson was chosen to that position, providing of course, he is so appointed by the authorities in America. A vote of thanks was extended to Bro. Burton for his labors in this mission. Pohemiti was chosen secretary, and Tutatare assistant. Bro. Tekakahua (Metuaore) was sustained as Bishop's agent. A motion was carried supporting and indorsing all the authorities of the church in their order. Adjourned until two p. m.

Two p. m. Before meeting was called, the Saints asked for foreign hymns to be sung. We accordingly sung. "Beautiful Zion" before prayer, and "In the light" after prayer. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved. After the reading, those chosen to be ordained were called for, also a motion calling Varoa to the eldership was carried. After a hymn and prayer, the ordinations took place, as follows: Tehani, to the office of elder, by Bro. Jansson. Varoa, to the office of elder, by Bro. Pohemiti. SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.

Conference was held at Nebraska City, Nebraska, May 13 and 14. 13th, conference assembled in Saints' chapel was called to order at eleven a. m.. On motion, the district president, J. W. Waldsmith, as president, and the missionary in charge, James Caffall as assistant, were chosen to preside over the conference; district secretary and associate were chosen clerks, and the choir and deacons of Nebraska City branch were chosen to conduct the music and care for the congregations. Three preaching services were held on the 13th, at which Apostle J. Caffall, Priest H. W. Belville, and Seventy C. H. Porter officiated in the order given. Two were baptized and confirmed during the day, one child blessed, and some administering to the sick done. The liberty of the Spirit was enjoyed, and good attention paid by those present. May 14, opened for business. Officials present 22, of whom 12 reported, besides others in writing who did not attend personally. Officials: 1 apostle, 2 high priests, 1 seventy, 4 elders, 9 priests, 1 teacher, and 4 deacons—of whom four were missionaries in the field, and whose work for the four months here reported, showed 388 meetings attended, 118 services held, 142 sermons preached. The Bishop's agent's report showed a collection of $360.45 from tithing, and 50 cents from offerings, during the term. One unpleasant feature of the reports was the evidence that the district is diminishing in the number of its branches, instead of increasing. The reason for this was shown to lie in the spirit of restlessness that marks the western people so much. In some of the places where we formerly had branches, and in fair condition, we still have sufficient numbers of members to organize with, but we have no officials. Believing they can do better financially elsewhere, they pull up stakes, and the people are left without any leaders. This fact calls for prompt attention, and the president and the missionary in charge hope to institute some measures for good with these facts in memory. It was decided to hold no reunions this year, but the president was authorized to call two days' meetings wherever he thought it would be profitable. It was agreed to hold the next district conference at Hebron, Nebraska, on such date in September next as the presiding officer shall appoint. The Sunday school and the Religio interests were represented as quite encouraging in the prospects they offer for the work, and in the real good they seem to be accomplishing week by week. The Daughters of Zion have come to the front. The Sunday school, the Religio, and the Daughters of Zion are all filling their places among the "institutions for good among my people." The Sunday school work is in an encouraging state in Wilber, Fairbury, and Elmwood also, in the latter place it is instrumental in keeping alive a memory of the work. Heavy rains hindered the attendance; but it is believed that good was done by the conference.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.

Conference of above district met at Columbus, May 25, at 7:30 p. m.; F. A. Smith president pro. tem, H. J. Hudson assistant, James Huff secretary. Elders reporting: F. A. Smith, H. J. Hudson, J E. Butts, G. W. Galley, and James Huff. Priests A. W. Ballard and H. W. Belville. Statistical reports: Blair 30. Decatur 97; gain 5. Union, now Fremont, 65; loss 1. Omaha 264. Platte Valley 61; loss 2. Columbus, verbally, no changes. Report on C. D. Stevens against Lake Shore branch received as follows: We your committee appointed to investigate the matter of appeal of C. D. Stevens against the action of Lake Shore branch would respectfully report that we find that the said C. D. Stevens did not appear at the trial, and that after the finding of the court he was notified that the branch had given him six months in which to make restitution to the branch, which he failed to do. And after the branch had taken action on the matter, and had cut the said C. D. Stevens off from the church for his failure to comply with the notice as given to him, he assumes to have made restitution; but as far as we are able to find, we do not have that restitution before us, but it only claims to have been made more than a month after the time of the action of the branch. And as we understand the law, after a person is cut off, it is not only necessary to make restitution as the law directs, but it is necessary for them to come in again as they did at the first; and in this case, when the recommendation of the court was that he be silenced until he should make restitution, we think he should have some limit placed on him as to time, and we think the six months sufficient, and that he is guilty as charged of unchristian conduct he should not be carried as a member to exceed the six months as given by the branch; and we therefore, recommend that the appeal to the conference be dismissed, and that the papers be all returned to Lake Shore branch. Dated May 25, 1900. James Huff, of the committee. Report of committee adopted. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report $51.32: received from all sources $210; total $261.32; paid out $72.50; balance on hand $188 82. Audited and found correct. Bro. James Huff authorized and recommended to labor in Northern Nebraska district, as circumstances permit. Ordination of Bro. Marcus Bilyne as priest, and Bro. Herbert Lytle as teacher at the request of Blair branch, provided for. Ordination of Bro. A. W. Ballard as elder, and Bro. C. M. Hollenbeck as teacher, at the request of the Omaha branch, provided for. Next conference to meet at Blair, Nebraska, September 28, at 7:30 p. m. Bro. F. A. Smith elected district president, James Huff secretary. James Huff sustained as Bishop's agent and as district treasurer, and instructed to notify the various branches to forward the amounts due from them. Bro. J. E. Butts released from tent committee and Bro F. A. Smith elected to fill vacancy. Notice to be given to the branches that at next conference a resolution will be introduced to change the time of election of officers from May to January conference. The following resolution was adopted: Resolved that we renew the resolution offered by Brn. D. M. Rudd and F. A. Smith, relative to the proposed change of district boundary lines, and that we authorize the district president to do all within his power to send a delegate or representative to both Central district and Southern district conferences to urge the matter of a change before the next convening of General Conference. Report from Sunday school convention received as follows: "We beg leave to report to you that our convention passed without a jar. The schools reporting were: Omaha, Decatur, and Columbus. Conditions favorable. Hoping that our efforts in Sunday school work may be a great blessing to the church in the near future. Respectfully submitted. James Huff assistant superintendent, Alice R. Watkins secretary pro. tem." Preaching by Brn. H. W. Belville, James Huff, and F. A. Smith.

We hereby call upon all who are indebted to the Publishing House to make settlement as early as possible, and thus lend their financial support to this important branch of church work. The price of the Herald will hereafter be $1.50 per year to all persons, and all subscribers who are in arrears for six months will be dropped from the list unless arrangements are made with the Publishing House for payment. All Herald subscribers who are now in debt will be permitted to settle upon the basis of $1.50 per year, providing such settlements are made within six months from this date.

Book agents are requested, if possible, to make returns to this Publishing House the first of each month, and to cease retaining commissions on sales when they order books, so long as they are in debt. Commissions when due will be allowed when settlements are made. "Pay what thou owest," is a part of the divine plan; and "Owe no man anything but love," should be observed by all Saints. Prompt payments insure confidence in business as well as religion, and confidence is essential to success.

A new catalogue of books will be issued as soon as possible.

Remittances should be made by post office and express orders, bank drafts on Chicago, or registered letters.

Send all business letters and make all money payable to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Bills to May 1 are being sent to all debtors, and we kindly ask you to help us. If there are mistakes we will gladly correct them on evidence. JOHN SMITH, Manager.

PASTORAL.

To the Ministry and Saints of Texas, Greeting:—As the missionary in charge of the Southwestern mission has requested me to take the oversight of the work in Texas, I wish to say to the ministry, both missionary and local, that it is my desire to labor together with you in unity and brotherly love. I have the utmost confidence in you as brethren and as colabors in the work of the Master; and I trust that as our work will bring us closer in touch with each other, I may have and retain yours as well.

I would be pleased to correspond with all, especially those laboring under church appointment, that we may be made acquainted with the demands of the work as much as possible all over the state.

I would suggest that we avoid debating with other denominations as much as possible, except when they make an open attack and misrepresent our position to the hurt of the work.

I would like to meet with you in your district conferences at the different times and places appointed throughout the state, that I may be able to counsel with you for the advancement of the work in which we have enlisted. Address all your quarterly reports to me at Oklaunion, Wilbarger county, Texas, promptly on July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1.

Hoping and praying that we may all work together for good, I am yours in bonds,

T. J. SHEPPARD.

To the Saints of Little Sioux and Galland's Grove Districts:—Having been placed as submissionary of Little Sioux district, I wish to ask the coöperation of all; and if the Saints or friends want missionary work done in their localities, please notify me. As to Galland's Grove district, on account of the serious illness of Bro. C. E. Butterworth, I have retained my position as assistant president of the district by his request; and until Bro. Butterworth is able, or other arrangements are made, I have been requested to act in his place as submissionary. Will the Saints and friends please take notice, that all may work together for good. Any special work that is needed, will you please notify me at my home address.

I hope the missionaries and local force will take notice of J. W. Wight's notice in Herald for April 25, on page 284, in regard to reporting. Brethren of the above named districts, please note this and comply with it. May God add his blessings to our weak efforts, and make our work a success. As one of the weak ones, I earnestly hope that ere long some of the responsibility will be lifted; but till such time will do the best I can.

J. M. BAKER.

To the Brethren and Saints of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, Greeting:—Having been appointed submissionary in charge of the above named field, I earnestly solicit your coöperation, faith, and prayers, that this may be a prosperous year in the Master's cause. With others, I am pleased to say, that I enter upon this year's duties with cheerfulness, and a freedom of spirit surpassing any past experience. Communications from various parts of the mission field already show activity on the part of both ministry and laity; several baptisms being reported.

Would like to hear from the Saints in the various localities as to the needs of the work. My mission address will be Okarche, Oklahoma, in care of L. W. Pate. The brethren of the missionary force will please remember to send their reports to me, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1.

Your brother in the one faith,

DIED.

BINDER.—At his home near Ruth, Michigan, May 23, 1900, Bro. Lewis Binder, aged 52 years and 8 months. He was raised a Lutheran, and adhered to that faith until about twelve years ago, when he heard the restored gospel and obeyed it, and has been a man of unswerving integrity, a consistent and devout Latter Day Saint, a kind husband, and a loving father. He suffered much, but relied on God's promises, and died with full hope of a glorious resurrection. He leaves a sorrowing wife and seven children, most of whom are grown up. His loss is deeply felt by all who knew him, but we know that our loss is his gain. Funeral was held in the M. E. church in Minden; funeral services in charge of Elder Andrew Barr, sermon by Elder Thomas Rawson. Peace to his ashes.

GREEN.—At Pin Oak, Illinois, Bro. John J. Green, May 29, 1900. He was born April 9, 1858, and was 42 years, 1 month, and 20 days at the time of his departure. He was baptized March 1, 1895. He leaves a wife and nine children and a number of friends and relatives to mourn. Funeral in the Methodist church; sermon by Elder F. M. Slover to a large audience.

BIRCHELL.—At Fairfield, Utah, June 1, 1900, Mr. Charles Birchell. He was born in England, April 1, 1842. He lived an exemplary life, the greater part of which was devoted to the care of his mother, who preceded him to the grave over a year ago. Funeral services from the home of his sister, Sr. John Flack. Sermon by Elder D. W. Wight.

HENWARD.—At Haverhill, Massachusetts, May 29, 1900, Sr. Elmira S. Henward. She was born April 11, 1840, at Addison, Maine; baptized March 26, 1872. Sister Elmira was the instrument in bringing the gospel to Haverhill; has always borne her testimony to its truth when occasion presented itself. Three daughters, one in the church, mourn her departure. Funeral services at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Bro. and Sr. Frost, Haverhill, a number of Saints and friends being present to show respect for the departed and sympathy for the bereaved. Services by Elder R. Bullard, assisted by Elder George W. Robley. One by one the Master calls his loved ones home.

He was born in Carson, Wiltshire, England; was baptized in 1844, shortly before the prophet's death. He united with the Reorganized Church in Utah, January, 1870. He did considerable ministerial work in Utah in 1870, in conjunction with Elder E. C. Brand, in which he baptized 101 persons, and in leaving Utah, he had a very narrow escape from Danite vengeance. After passing through many heavy trials, and a prolonged illness of several years, he passed peacefully away in the hope of final rest, glad to go to his reward. He leaves an aged wife and seven children. Funeral sermon by Elder Bozarth, at the stone church.

RICHINS.—Bro. John Richins passed away at his home in Pleasant Grove, Utah county, Utah, March 29, 1900, aged 67 years. Born at Sheepcombe, Gloucestershire, England. He was baptized March 14, 1891, at Pleasant Grove, Utah.

The Factions on Polygamy and Spiritual Wifery.

A new tract by Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, which shows that the factions of the church, other than the one under Brigham Young, were originally opposed to polygamy; hence that polygamy is not traceable to the original church organization. Per dozen 15 cents; $1.00 per 100.

EXCUSES.

The worst of all habits is the making excuses for ourselves to ourselves. We resolve our faults, and even our sins, into the effect of bad influences on us, or a bad heredity from our forefathers. Or we set them over against the virtues we credit ourselves with possessing and find a comfortable balance in our favor. Or we regard our evil act or our neglect as an isolated fact, which stands in no real relation to our character. Or we compare ourselves with our neighbors and find we are "no worse than other people," but perhaps a trifle better.

Blessed is the man who has not acquired the excuse habit! He must be one who has learned to live in the presence of the divine holiness and to feel its constant summons to come nearer perfection. He must be one who realizes that a single cherished and unconquered evil keeps us in touch with the whole body of evil, so that he "who stumbles on one point is become guilty of all." And he must have learned that the whole energy of divine grace is at his service, to overcome his innate or acquired disposition to evil and to remake him in the image of the Son of God. The humility that comes of self-knowledge and the hope that comes of experience will keep us from the excuse-making habit. — Great Thoughts.

EARLIEST LETTERS KNOWN.

During the last few years the Babylonian collection of the British Museum has been enriched by the important addition of several thousands of tablets obtained chiefly by Dr. Budge during his expeditions to the East on behalf of the trustees. Among the principal objects are a large number of small tablets, many of them of the envelope or duplicate class, which were found at Tellsifr, in South Babylonia, representing the ancient City of Larsa (the Ellasar of Genesis 14). The majority of these were contracts or legal documents, but among them are many letters, both private and official. This collection, having just been carefully arranged, is found to contain one of the most important series of inscriptions which has ever been rescued from Oriental ruins. It is a group of fifty letters, written by Khammurabi, King of Babylon, who reigned about 2300 B. C., and who is generally identified with the Amraphel of Genesis 14. We have already been made acquainted with the existence of a system of letter writing in use among the kings of the East at an early period, as illustrated by the famous Tel-el-Amarna tablets.

These, we know, present the diplomatic and private correspondence between the Kings of Syria, Mitanni, or northern Mesopotamia, and Babylon, and may be dated about 1450 B. C. The valuable series of tablets which has just been secured for our National Museum belong to a period of 1,000 years earlier, and are certainly the oldest known letters in the world. The position of those Babylonian letters in Oriental literature is of extreme importance. They reveal the existence of a regular system of correspondence between rulers and their subordinates, and that writing was not only used to record events in royal annals, but for ordinary purposes. They are, besides, manifestly the models for all after time, as in the case of the diplomatic correspondence in the Tel-el-Amarna tablets. We can now see how overshadowing was the influence of Babylonia over all western Asia. During the thousand years which elapsed between the time of Khammurabi and the date of these later letters discovered some years ago, Babylonia became the educational center of the Oriental world.

The great library at Borsippa was the school and university not only of Chaldea but of Syria, North Mesopotamia, and Asia Minor. Fragments of the Deluge and Creation tablets, dated from a period more than 1,000 years before Moses, have been discovered in Babylonia. It is therefore clear that if the scribes of Canaan were taught to write and use the cuneiform script through these influences there must have been some among them who were acquainted with the traditions stored in the Chaldean libraries. The present find is indeed a great one; but one can only regard it as a prelude to still more important discoveries which probably will put a new aspect on the vexed question of Hebrew origins. To possess letters contemporary with the time of Abraham is certainly an astonishing result of Oriental exploration, and one which far exceeds the wildest dreams of those who first revealed to us the buried cities of Assyria and Babylonia. — The Scotsman.

DISTANCES OF THE FIXED STARS.

The sun is one hundred and eighty-two thousand million times as bright as a star of the first magnitude. Upon this basis can be made an estimate of the distance of the faintest stars of the Milky Way on the assumption that they—any of them or all of them—are really as large and as brilliant as the sun, and that their faintness is due to their enormous remoteness from us.

Remove the sun to twice its present distance from us and it will become one fourth as bright; at three times its present distance it would be one-ninth as bright; at four times the distance, one sixteenth as bright; and so one. This is expressed mathematically by saying that its brilliance would diminish as the square of its distance from us increases.

It can easily be calculated, therefore, that to become reduced to a star of the first magnitude the sun would need to be removed from us to 426,600 times its actual distance, and its light, instead of coming to us in eight and a quarter minutes, as it now does, would be 6.7 years in flashing across the intervening space. Removed to ten times this distance it would become one hundredth as bright as a star of the first magnitude. That is to say, it would be reduced to a star of the sixth magnitude, and its distance from us would then be sixty-seven "light years." At ten times this distance it would become a star of the eleventh magnitude, at a distance of 670 light years, and still another ten times removal, to reduce it to the sixteenth magnitude, which is about that of the faintest Milky Way stars, would place it at a distance from us such that its light, flashing through space at the rate of 186,300 miles a second, would require to cross the interval 6,700 years.

So far away from us are the faintest telescopic stars, if really they are as brilliant as the sun. But are they as brilliant as the sun? Here is a question that cannot be answered, and here is the fatally weak point in the calculation. They, or some of them, may be larger than the sun, and in this case the figures reached above must be proportionately increased. They may be smaller than the sun, and it is fair to say here that astronomers are beginning to think that the faint stars which form the groundwork of the Milky Way are, comparatively speaking, small bodies, and that their distance from us has been overestimated. But in either case the calculation made above can hardly be far wrong up to a certain limit, and it serves to impress us forcibly with the vastness of the distance from us at which these little twinklers are.—Philadelphia Record.

HOME GROUNDS.

The home lot or half acre should be most enjoyed, best cared for, tidiest. Open front yard needs be about clear of trees, and be a fine turf of blue grass, kept trim with lawn mower. Trees should skirt this semicircular. Toward prevailing winds plant and have evergreens, on other side have deciduous trees, tallest growers always in the rear, groups of low growing trees and shrubs skirting the lawn irregularly in it. Single tree or a group of cut-leaved weeping birch may be in edge near the house, groups of such evergreens as silver spruce, mountain pine, can be near edge and road. Shrubs, roses, needs be planted in groups, not singly.

Back yards are most lived in, ought not be dumping ground for wash or waste water, ashes, tin cans, and which emit constant stench and malaria. Vegetable and flower garden ought be right at back door. Vegetables of utility should occupy most ground and center entire garden should be skirted with tall growing plants, as sweet corn, cannas, hollyhocks, castor beans, dahlias, asparagus. Annuals as pansies, petunias, phloxes, poppies, asters, sweet peas, nasturtiums, and any of the long list of beautiful flowers, should be in groups or irregular beds, along walks, nooks, corners, to set off the commoner necessities. Vines add to homeliness to cover outbuildings, fences, sheds, trees, poles, arbors.

Tend larger vegetable and fruit garden farther away with horse. Places planted already can be slowly changed to a better plan. Where a balls rolls after a boy throws it up is the place to plant trees, vines, shrubs. Plant nothing in regular lines, or by rule. Use many wagon loads of richest soil, compost rotten manure, leaf mould, yearly. Till, spade, hoe, then enrich again.

The commonest varieties doing well nearest you is always best to plant if given good care, tillage, and fertility.—Bulletin No. 1 Southwestern Iowa Horticultural Society.

THE OUTDOOR WORLD.

"There are some people so afraid of fresh air," laughed an old sea captain, "that they seem to think they can ventilate their rooms by opening their cupboard doors."

And there are people who imagine that they can keep their lives fresh and healthful in very much the same way. They shut off all currents from the outside world. They shudder at its wickedness, they shrink from its clamor, they do not want to be disquieted by its demands and so they selfishly shut themselves into their own interests and pursuits and begin, all unconsciously, to grow pinched and narrow.

Daily employments grow monotonous, familiar enjoyments lose their zest and the spirit becomes peevish, carping, and selfish. The breath of the outdoor world may sting, but it is invigorating; rubbing against other people's angularities may be rasping, but it smooths down our own, and all the rush and hurry about us, however weary we grow, is better than withdrawal and morbidness. Any outdoor atmosphere is better than breathing over and over that of our own cupboards.—Selected.

The coming century will offer and abundance of work in engineering fields. Sir Douglas Fox points out to British engineers the following specimens of the problems of surpassing importance that are now opening up: Trunk railways through Russia, China, Persia, Africa; irrigation works to supply the wants of growing populations; harbors large enough for the vessels of the future; central installations to furnish lighting, power, traction, and heating to whole counties; the extension of telephonic communication (with and without wires), the abolition of the smoke and smell of cities; the replacement of horses by mechanical power in the streets; the increase of the speed of trains to one hundred miles an hour; the erection of tall buildings where land is valuable; the utilization of waste products, especially the refuse of cities; the improvement of the water supply; the reclamation of land; the profitable working of deep seams of coal.

CARRYING BURDENS GRACEFULLY.

"Now watch her," said a tourist friend, pointing to a peasant woman who had lifted a heavy basket to her head and was walking off with free, sure step. "See how steadily she carries it and how well her head is poised. If that were one of our countrywomen she would try to carry that basket on her arm, where it would be in her own way and in that of everyone who passed. She would shift it from side to side, bending awkwardly under its weight and reach her destination tired out. But that woman has learned how to carry a load—and what a fine, erect carriage she has! It's a pity our girls cannot have a little training along that line."

While our enthusiast talked, we thought of another kind of burden and of how much it means to "learn how to carry a load." Bear them we must, of one sort or another—the burdens of grief, care, and disappointment that belong to our human lot—but we all know how differently. Some bend under them and stagger on complainingly, obtruding them upon everyone who comes near. Some lift them quietly out of others' way and, since they must needs be borne, learn to bear them steadily and serenely. There is a gracious poise and beauty of spirit that can be acquired only by the proper bearing of burdens.—The Young Woman.

A baby's record is worth keeping for the mother's present personal pleasure, and for the baby's perusal and amusement in the future, when the first smile, the first tooth, the first short dress and the first articulate words are things in the dim distance of the past, remembered by no one, except, perhaps, the devoted mother herself. One of the dainty books provided for the purpose makes the keeping of the record an easy task and preserves it for reference without difficulty.—June Ladies' Home Journal.

The vexed question as to whether literary men make good husbands will probably never be disposed of, as it needs must be settled by individual cases, and no two individuals are alike. The crabbed Carlyle and his high-strung Jane, the latter undoubtedly dwarfed in her literary product by her constant self-effacement in the presence of her moody husband, form the subject for Miss Laughlin's July contribution to the Stories of Authors' Loves, appearing in the Delineator. She gives a pathos to the subject, lacking with some of the harsher pens that have treated it.

JOUBERT.

Is Joubert fallen?—that old hero dead,
Laid low, in proud sleep with the battle-slain?
Now, who shall grudge him glory? Not again
May we behold his like, as at the head
Of his embattled Burghers, them he led,
Faith against Destiny, and saw them wane,
Fighting for others' honor, all in vain,—
Victorious, yet the while his own heart bled.
Pause, Nations! and salute his passing pall.
Here was a soldier Britons might admire—
You, Frenchmen, and Americans, and all!
And if your souls to Chivalry aspire,
Write, in her Pantheon, Piet Joubert's name,
To plead against oblivion for his fame.

A warm discussion will be awakened by the publication in the June Catholic World Magazine of Father Burns's article on "The Elective System of Studies" in Catholic colleges. It will be construed into a direct attack on the ratio studiorum of the Jesuits. The article is masterly in its grasp of its subject matter.

BEFORE THE COMING OF JESUS.

Belief in the second coming of Jesus is not confined to the Latter Day Saints alone. Many agree with them on this point.

When we take thought upon that coming and what it portends, we ought not to overlook some of the things which must precede such coming.

There must be a people who are prepared and looking for Jesus to come. This preparation must be not only a well-defined theory of and belief in that coming, but must also be the exhibition of a working faith, that as "Christ ascended" that he might fill all things, so must he come again that he may fulfill the prophecies long standing upon which is based the hopes of believers in the righteous reign to ensue after the coming and the complete establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth.

We are rather more interested in this preparation of a people to be ready for the coming of Jesus Christ than in some of the other things looked for to attend his coming for the reason that it seems to us to be a very necessary prerequisite condition that it will make easy many of the other and less important attendant events.

The preparation referred to is first, purity of heart.

It is understood that one of the great privileges to be accorded to those who shall be worthy of the benefits to come to men in the coming of Jesus, the second time "without sin unto salvation," is that they shall see him. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

To be pure in heart means much to the average man. It is a condition of mind and body which gives freedom from the care and turmoil of life because the mind is not fixed on the things of this world, nor the heart set on riches. It induces tranquility and peace, at home and abroad.

To the pure in heart temptations are not severe trials, for the desires are only for those things that make for good, hence the many things which tempt others have no attractions for the man whose heart is pure.

Another thing which results from purity of heart is that it makes possible the carrying into effect those measures for the common good of all, such as societies for the relief of mental, physical, or monetary distress, where temporary aid is needed, and often works wonders for those who are in need; and, also, those associations of men the objects of which are to unite labor and capital in providing useful and necessary employment for the mentally willing and physically able, in the production of articles which may be demanded by the public at large. In short, the absence from the heart of selfish desires and motives and jealousy, personal and official, gives purpose and fidelity to the pure in heart to labor for the benefit of others which cannot result from any other, or lesser attribute or qualification. It makes honest administrators in places of trust, and faithful servitors in places where labor is required.

All cannot be directors in enterprises where labor and capital are united. And one prevalent cause why what have been called "communistic," or "all things common," and coöperative associations have so frequently failed, has been that the men having the movements in charge have not been free from the allurements and attractions of place, power, and selfish gain. While they may have been honest, so far as any intention to do wrong at the first is concerned, the handling of affairs, the opportunity for display, the idea of being conspicuous, and finally the tendency to larger expenditures, all tended to lead to a misuse of opportunities, selfishness succeeded in its work, and failure resulted. When Christ shall rule, only those "pure in heart" worthy of all trust will be placed in positions where they shall hold control of the people's interests, and "Zion's exactors" shall all "be righteous." Coöperation is barely possible now, no scheme having yet been devised, that we are informed of, to do away with middle men, leaders, men who must be trusted from the very nature of human affairs and the conditions of our association. So that in every adventure there must be some one who is to be trusted by those within the association and those without. It will be a happy day when these men shall be selected by unerring foresight because they are pure in heart.

MINISTRY REPORTS.

Our missionaries will do well to note carefully the form of reports adopted by the last General Conference and make a minute of the items required so that each will be able to hand in a complete and accurate report of all work done. The form can be seen in the conference minutes issued as a supplement to the HERALD for June 6.

For the sake of those who may not have seen that HERALD and the supplement, we give a list of the items called for in the form. They are: times preached; times assisted; other services held; number baptized; number confirmed; assisted to confirm; whole number of services attended; ordinations performed, and to what office; administered to the sick; children blessed; marriage ceremonies performed, organizations, district, branch, Sunday school, or Religio society.

Since the church at its General Conference has asked for such items in the missionary reports, it becomes the duty of every conference appointee to see to it that he is able to furnish such items to the missionary in charge of his field, so that the missionary in charge can make a report which will be complete in detail. We trust our ministry will comply.

EXTREMES.

Extremes are dangerous, and extremists are apt to make serious mistakes.

Men frequently defeat their own purposes by failing to occupy conservative ground in their opposition to that which does not meet their approval.

Men, organizations, systems, however erratic, usually have some commendable features; and however good, are apt to display elements of weakness. Even should the system as originally designed be without fault, mistakes may occur as a result of the fallibility of those who attempt to put its provisions into practical operation. Hence, either a wholesale condemnation or commendation of organizations as represented by men is pretty certain to produce harm.

Recently there was organized under the auspices of the Brigham Young Academy, at Provo, Utah, an expedition for the purpose of exploring the ruins of Mexico and Central America. A late number of the Kinsman, a paper published in Salt Lake City, and devoted especially at the present time to a commendable fight against polygamy, contains a quite lengthy article filled with caustic ridicule of the movement mentioned. Just why the efforts of these men should be subject to adverse criticism, while those of others engaged in the same kind of work are to be commended, the Kinsman does not state. However, it illustrates the tendency in the world today to oppose everything that does not happen to originate with the representatives of one's own particular party or creed. Such a course is partisan and extreme, and is one of the most subtle and dangerous influences to be combated at the present time.

We are of the opinion that the right should be candidly recognized wherever and with whomsoever it may be found; and that wrong should be just as candidly opposed, and that, too, from a standpoint of principle, free from bias, and without regard to individuals or organizations. A constant, independent attempt to thus discriminate between right and wrong principles will develop the ability to make discriminations that are correct. Such a course may require bravery; but it is the kind of bravery the world is sadly in need of just now.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

We of the Pleasant Valley branch would like to know how to proceed with members of other branches who have their letters of removal, and hold them, and live in our midst, and are living in violation of laws of the church.

According to resolutions adopted by the General Conference of 1898 all members are instructed to unite with the branch nearest their places of abode. We quote the resolutions as they appear in the minutes:—

1. Resolved that scattered members not enrolled upon branch records be instructed to unite with branches most convenient to their places of residence.

2. Resolved that members changing their residences from branches where enrolled be instructed to unite with branches most convenient to places where they reside.

3. Whereas, in the past members have obtained letters of removal which they have not presented to any branch, whereby such names have been removed from the general church records of the church,

Resolved that letters of removal be issued only to persons actually changing residence from one branch to another, and that names of branches to which removals are made be included in said letters of removal.

Thus, when members have letters of removal they should present them to the nearest branch and become affiliated therewith. If any members do not belong to a branch, it is obligatory upon them by reason of this action of the conference that they should at once associate themselves with the nearest branch. If this action of the body is complied with, condition such as seem to now exist in the Pleasant Valley branch would not obtain. When members disregard this rule of the church, and refuse to affiliate themselves with some branch, and live in violation of church laws, they should be dealt with by the district authorities. This opinion was expressed by Pres. Joseph Smith as early as 1867, as will be seen by the following extract from the minutes of the April conference of that year:—

In answer to an inquiry by Bro. Forscutt, the President gave instruction that persons, professedly members of the church, who have removed from branches to where there is an organized branch of the church to which they refuse to attach themselves, and whose course of conduct renders them culpable, should be dealt with by the general authorities of the district in which they are located. —The Saints' Herald, vol. 11, p. 142.

This answers the question from the Pleasant Valley branch so completely that further comment is unnecessary.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. M. J. Fell, writes from Bigtimber, Montana, June 4:—

I cannot get along without the weekly greetings of the Herald.

Bro. E. F. Shupe, writing from Denver, June 11, says:—

We have the tent up and are holding meetings every night, with increasing attendance and interest. Sunday night there was a large attendance. We hope for success.

Bro. A. H. Smith, in a letter to President Smith, on the 13th inst., writes:—

I spoke in Minneapolis last Wednesday night, and in Audubon Sunday morning. Five were to be baptized in Minneapolis, Sunday. Go to Perham, Friday. All well except rheumatism.

Bro. Isaac True writes from Wheeling, W. Va., June 13:—

I expect to start in a few days as a traveling missionary. I formerly lived at Canton, Ohio.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Last week we neglected to note the departure of the senior editor, who left for a sojourn in Canada. He expected to be gone five or six weeks, and will visit a number of Canadian points.

Bishop Kelley was in attendance at the last Far West conference, and reports a splendid time,—a spiritual feast. The prayer and testimony meetings were indeed spiritual ones.

We learn from Bro. W. D. McKnight that Brn. W. R. Davis and W. S. Macrae were at Blackwell, Kansas, June 9. Bro. McKnight sends us a sample of the handbills which were used to advertise the elders. Our men seem to be at work everywhere.

The brethren at Wilburton, Indian Territory, have organized a company for mining purposes with stock at ten dollars a share, styled "The Mutual Coal and Mining Company;" they ask the coöperation of those interested in such an enterprise.

Sr. Jennie M. Leland, who was formerly employed in the Bishop's office, and who has of late been doing some work in the Historian's office, left for her home in Pecatonica, Illinois, Monday evening.

By the Chatham, Ontario, Evening Banner, of June 11, we learn that Pres. Joseph Smith attended the Sunday school convention held at Tilbury, Ontario, June 8.

Last week a notable gathering took place near Lamoni. About one hundred and fifty or two hundred people gathered to celebrate the one hundredth birthday of Sr. Bunt. She joined the church in 1871, and is now enjoying a really remarkable degree of health for one so old. She has numerous great-grandchildren, and several great-great-grandchildren. May her declining years be peaceful.

The HERALD building has been undergoing some much needed repairing. The design of the roof on the west wing was altered to allow of a quicker disposal of water, and the west half of the roof of the main portion is being reshingled. These repairs were necessary because of leaks. Bro. John Hougas has had charge of the repair work.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 10.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

COULD THE PREHISTORIC AMERICANS WRITE?

They could build great cities, temples, and palaces, and could make great roads, which are said to be "among the most useful and stupendous works ever executed by man." (Prescott's Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 2, pp. 52–59.)

They wrought very heavy blocks of stone and moved them fifteen leagues, and fitted them in the fortress at Cuzco so well that it was impossible to introduce even the blade of a knife into the joints. (Ibid., vol. 1, book 1, chap. 1, p. 31, and book 3, chap. 8, p. 372.) Some of the large stones in the buildings at Tiaguanaco, Peru, are thirty-eight feet long, eighteen broad, and six feet thick. The largest stones made use of in Solomon's temple were forty-three feet, nine inches long, twenty-nine wide, and fourteen feet thick.

Says Mr. Priest,

And who is prepared to disallow that the ancestors of the Peruvians in South America, did not derive their knowledge of stone cutting and building, from the Jews, in the days of Solomon, a thousand years before the Christian era, which is so wonderfully imitated in the palaces of the Incas.—American Antiquities, p. 243.

The Latter Day Saints won't, because Nephi says that he built a temple up there at Nephi (Cuzco), and that "the manner of the construction

was like unto the temple of Solomon." (2 Nephi 4: 3.)

We see how these little things will tell on a person: The great builders of Peru "wonderfully imitated" the great Jewish buildings at Jerusalem. But Mr. Priest brings the ancestors of the Peruvians from China! (American Antiquities, p. 342.) The man who wrote the Book of Mormon has a better theory than that, because he brings them from Jerusalem. (See first chapter in the Book of Mormon, and second paragraph.) The analogy in those buildings may be thus accounted for: The ancient Peruvians were Jews, not Chinamen.

The ancient Americans had bronze tools which would cut nearly as good as if made of iron and steel. (American Antiquities, p. 185.) They also understood the singular process "of tempering copper to the hardness of steel." (Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 5, pp. 152, 153; Atlantis, p. 379.) They had "saws" and drills, and probably the lathe. (Atlantis, p. 379.) They could "cast metals." (Prehistoric Times, p. 254; Prehistoric Races, p. 259.) They could make thin sheets of silver, no thicker than paper, and overlay copper and stone ornaments so neatly as almost to escape detection. (Prehistoric America, p. 107; Atlantis, p. 376.) They were acquainted with tin (Atlantis, p. 140) and iron. (American Antiquities, pp. 126, 131, 159, 234, 235, 236, 237, 253, 254, 261, 397; Prehistoric America, p. 357; Atlantis, p. 451.) They worked mica mines. ("Report of Progress, North Carolina Geological Survey," 1869, p. 56.) "Prehistoric remains of open cuts and shafts for mica mining are found in Alabama." (Scientific American Supplement for July 28, 1888.)

They were acquainted with lead and sulphur (American Antiquities, p. 159), and brass (Ibid., pp. 90, 135, 254), and glass (Ibid., 253, 280); Prehistoric America, p. 356), and steel (American antiquities, p. 253) and China and Delph ware (Ibid., p. 255), and with the plumb (Ibid., 261). It would seem that the Mound Builders must have had domesticated animals. According to Josiah Priest a cattle brand, he thinks, was found in a mound near Wheeling. (American Antiquities, p. 373.)

They had looking glasses, by which they could nurse their vanity. (Prehistoric America, pp. 385, 430; American Antiquities, p. 179.) They were expert in the use of cement. (Prehistoric America, p. 368; Ancient America, p. 157.) They understood "etching" (American Antiquities, p. 93), and built bridges on "scientific principles" (Prehistoric America, p. 288), and had surgeons. (See the "trepanned Peruvian skull," illustration on p. 510, Prehistoric America, and the illustration of the perforated skull from the De Baye collection; Ibid., p. 511.) They had copper pins (Prehistoric America, p. 430) and fish hooks (p. 434). They had round pieces of gold, silver, or copper, used as money (p. 451); and gold disks as money (464); and little bits of tin and copper, T-shaped, as money (pp. 381, 382). Some of them ornamented their coffins inside and out with sheets of gold (p. 462). They could weave (p. 449). And they had in Peru dies to print cloth with. (See illustrations, pp. 448, 449.) Squier says "that all modern masonry, whether executed in Europe or in America, is inferior, when compared with that of the ancient capital of the Incas." (Ibid p. 411.)

In 1875 some costly gold jewels were found with some skeletons in a house, or tomb, near Tehuantepec, Mexico. Some of them represented turtles. They were all made in a single piece, hollowed, without a trace of soldering, and such as the most skillful jewelers of our present day would find it very difficult to imitate. With the gold ornaments were also picked up several copper objects, earthenware vases of graceful form, a cup, the handle of which represented the paw of a feline animal, others ornamented with tastefully executed paintings, and lastly some necklaces of round stones and bracelets of seashells. . . . The state of the bones justifies us in assigning great antiquity to the sepulchre.—Prehistoric America, p. 370.

They [the Mexicans] had at home vases of agate or precious stone, ornaments, statuettes of gold or silver cast in one piece, eight sided dishes, each side of a different metal, fish of which the scales were made of gold and silver mixed, and parrots that moved their head and wings.—Ibid., p. 381.

They made paper. (Prehistoric America, p. 30; Atlantis, p. 451.)

The temple of the Sun [at Cuzco], the wealth of which is still proverbial, was situated on an eminence eighty feet above the Huatenay. The river was reached by a series of terraces. There stretched the celebrated gardens, where, according to the account of the Spanish chroniclers, the animals, insects, and the very trees were of gold and silver. The whole of the quarter where the temple was, bore the characteristic name of Coricancha, the town of gold.

The temple, now converted into a Dominican convent, occupies one side of a vast court, which preserved the name of Intipampa, the field of the sun. The inner and outer walls it is alleged were covered with sheets of gold. This last fact may be true, for Squier relates having seen, in various houses in Cuzco, sheets of gold preserved as relics which came from the temple of the Sun. These plaques, he tells us, were scarcely as thick as a sheet of paper.

Above the altar, which faced east, was a colossal representation of the sun, also in gold, which, after the conquest, became the booty of a certain Mancio Serra de Leguicano, a reckless gambler, who lost it on a single throw of the dice.—Prehistoric America, p. 413.

The ornaments of jewelry described above are in harmony with this:—

And behold, there was all manner of gold in both these lands [North and South America], and of silver, and of precious ore of every kind; and there were also curious workmen, who did work all kinds of ore, and did refine it; and thus they did become rich.—Helaman 2: 27.

The gold and silver in the above reference was not made into money, but into ornaments. These "curious workmen" were gold and silversmiths; and Peru and Mexico were noted for their wealth in gold and silver ornaments at the time of the Conquest.

Again, it says concerning Amulek: "Having forsaken all his gold, and silver, and his precious things," etc. (Alma 10 : 16.) This was not Amulek's bank account or money; all his gold and silver, and his precious things were likely articles made of gold and silver by these "curious workmen."

And they did have an exceeding plenty of gold, and of silver, and of all manner of precious metals.—Helaman 2: 27.

Nephi said concerning Peru, at the beginning of its civilization:—

And I did teach my people to build buildings; and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious ores, which were in great abundance.—2 Nephi 4: 3.

And we multiplied exceedingly, and spread upon the face of the land, and became exceeding rich in gold, and in silver, and in precious things, and in fine workmanship of wood, in buildings, and in machinery, and also in iron, and copper, and brass, and steel, making all manner of tools of every kind to till the ground, and weapons of war; yea, the sharp pointed arrow, and the quiver, and the dart, and the javelin.—Jarom 1: 4.

A colony of Nephites located in Lamanite territory. (Mosiah 6.) In the seventh chapter we have an account given of a very wicked king as follows:—

And now it came to pass that Zeniff conferred the kingdom upon Noah, one of his sons: therefore Noah began to reign in his stead; and he did not walk in the ways of his father. For behold, he did not keep the commandments of God, but he did walk after the desires of his own heart. And he had many wives and concubines. And did cause his people to commit sin, and do that which was abominable in the sight of the Lord. Yea, and they did commit whoredoms, and all manner of wickedness. And he laid a tax of one fifth part of all they possessed; a fifth part of their gold and of their silver, and a fifth part of their ziff [likely an unknown metal], and of their copper, and of their brass and their iron; and a fifth part of their fatlings; and also, a fifth part of all their grain. And all this did he take, to support himself, and his wives, and his concubines, and also, his priests, and their wives, and their concubines: thus he had changed the affairs of the kingdom. For he put down all the priests that had been consecrated by his father, and consecrated new ones in their stead, such as were lifted up in the pride of their hearts. Yea and thus they were supported in their laziness, and in their idolatry, and in their whoredoms, by the taxes which king Noah had put upon his people; thus did the people labor exceedingly, to support iniquity. Yea, and they also became idolatrous, because they were deceived by the vain and flattering words of the king and priests: for they did speak flattering things unto them.

And it came to pass that king Noah built many elegant and spacious buildings; and he ornamented them with fine work of wood, and of all manner of precious things, of gold, and of silver, and of iron, and of brass, and of ziff, and off copper; and he also built him a spacious palace, and a throne in the midst thereof, all of which was of fine wood, and and was ornamented with gold, and silver, and with precious things. And he also caused that his workmen should work all manner of fine work within the walls of the temple, of fine wood, and of copper, and of brass; and the seats which were set apart for the high priests, which were above all the other seats, he did ornament with pure gold: and he caused a breastwork to be built before them, that they might rest their bodies and their arms upon, while they should speak lying and vain words to his people.—Mosiah 7: 1, 2.

The above references pointing out the degree of civilization attained in the industrial arts may sound unreasonable and much like fiction, but when we read that "all modern masonry, whether executed in Europe or in America, is inferior, when compared with that of the ancient capital of the Incas" (Prehistoric America, p. 411), we find relief at once!

The royal edifices of Quito, we are assured by the Spanish conquerors, were constructed of huge masses of stone, many of which were carried all the way along the mountain roads from Cuzco, a distance of several hundred leagues.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 5, p. 137.

Father Velasco declares that the ancient Peruvians made "an 'almost imperceptible kind of cement,'" "a fine bituminous glue, as hard as the rock itself." (Ibid., vol. 1, book 1, chap. 5, p. 129.)

At the Conquest of Peru, Pizarro took the Inca (or ruler) of Peru a prisoner. Later on, the Inca bought his freedom at the following price:—

The apartment was about seventeen feet broad, by twenty-two feet long, and the line round the walls was nine feet from the floor. This space was to be filled with gold; but it was understood that the gold was not to be melted down into ingots, but to retain the original form of the articles into which it was manufactured, that the Inca might have the benefit of the space which they occupied.

This is the account given by Pizarro's secretary. (Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 3, chap. 5, p. 314; and note 41.)

The spoil was composed of an infinite variety of articles, in which the gold was of very different degrees of purity. These articles consisted of goblets, ewers, salvers, vases of every shape and size, ornaments and utensils for the temples and the royal palaces, tiles and plates for the decoration of the public edifices, curious imitations of different plants and animals. Among the plants, the most beautiful was the Indian corn, in which the golden ear was sheathed in its broad leaves of silver, from which hung a rich tassel of threads of the same precious metal. A fountain was also much admired, which sent up a sparkling jet of gold, while birds and animals of the same material played in the waters at its base.—Ibid., vol. 1, book 3, chap. 7, p. 334.

Of this the King of Spain got one fifth.—Ibid., vol. 1, book 3, chap. 7, p. 335, and vol. 1, book 3, chap. 1, p. 265.

The following articles of gold are mentioned, and some of them were included in the above ransom:—

The great temple of the Sun they found literally covered with plates of gold. They had entered the interior and beheld the royal mummies, seated each in his gold-embossed chair, and in robes profusely covered with ornaments. The Spaniards had the grace to respect these, as they had been previously enjoined by the Inca.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 3, chap. 6, p. 329.

The service of his [the Inca's] table was gold and silver plate.—Ibid., vol. 1, book 3, chap. 6, p. 328.

Huayna Capac [the Inca who died just before Pizarro's Conquest] celebrated the birth of the prince by a festival, in which he introduced a massive gold chain for the nobles to hold in their hands as they performed their national dances. The chain was seven hundred feet in length, and the links nearly as big round as a man's wrist.—Ibid., vol. 1, book 3, chap. 2, p. 250, note 3.

It is said that the Book of Mormon tells some big ones, but it cannot beat the Conquerors. Several hundred feet might be cut off that chain, and the links made some smaller, and then a good sized chain left.

In a cavern near the city [Cuzco] they [the Spaniards] found a number of vases of pure gold, richly embossed with the figures of serpents, locusts, and other animals. Among the spoil were four golden llamas and ten or twelve statues of women, some of gold, others of silver, "which merely to see," says one of the Conquerors, with some naivete, "was truly a great satisfaction." The gold was probably thin, for the figures were all as large as life; and several of them, being reserved for the royal fifth, were not recast, but sent in their original form to Spain. The magazines were stored with curious commodities; richly tinted robes of cotton and feather work, gold sandals, and slippers of the same material, for the women, and dresses composed entirely of beads of gold. . . . In one place, for example, they met with ten planks or bars of solid silver, each piece being twenty feet in length, one foot in breadth, and two or three inches thick. They were intended to decorate the dwelling of an Inca noble.—Ibid., vol. 1, book 3, chap. 8, p. 374.

The Inca's throne was "made of massive gold of inestimable value. The palanquin was lined with the richly colored plumes of tropical birds, and studded with shining plates of gold and silver." (Ibid., vol. 1, book 3, chap. 5, p. 301.)

The Inca had a "golden plow." (Ibid., vol. 1, book 1, chap. 4, p. 111.)

At Yucay (a place four leagues from Cuzco), was a favorite residence of the Inca. Here the water for their baths was "conducted through subterraneous silver channels into basins of gold." (Ibid., vol. 1, book 1, chap. 1, p. 45.)

The number of [gold] plates they tore from the temple of the Sun was seven hundred; and though of no great thickness, probably, they are compared in size to the lid of a chest, ten or twelve inches wide. A cornice of pure gold encircled the edifice, but so strongly set in the stone, that it fortunately defied the efforts of the spoilers.—Ibid., vol. 1, book 3, chap. 6, pp. 329, 330.

Such are the stories told by eyewitnesses of what is related above, which will explain some statements in the Book of Mormon, as to how the Nephites so often and so soon turned from God to the pleasures of the world, because of their "exceeding great riches," "and wearing costly apparel." They had no foreign commerce to take their gold away from the country; "the balance of trade" never went against them. No foreign bondholders, like we have, to "suck the milk of the Gentiles," and their wealth in the precious metals accumulated, until Cortez and Pizarro opened the golden gate by which the treaures of the New World passed into the coffers of Spain. It is worthy of remark, however, that notwithstanding the vast sum of over fifteen millions of dollars was sent to Spain in a few years; yet these sources of national prosperity have about all glided away from their grasp, and left them among the poorest of the nations of Christendom! This flood of gold into Spain was the cause of the edict of Medina (1497), which fixed the ratio $10\frac{2}{3}$ to 1, to be changed in 1546 to $13\frac{1}{3}$ to 1. ("Britannica," vol. 22, p. 73.)

The Spaniards put the Inca, and the head general, and many Peruvian nobles to death. "The lands, the persons, of the conquered races were parcelled out and appropriated by the victors as the legitimate spoils of victory." (Conquest of Peru, vol. 2, book 4, chap. 7, p. 177.) Thus they were "smitten by the Gentiles." (2 Nephi 11: 13.)

Does it look strange, in the light of the above, that the prehistoric Americans should not have left to posterity a written history? and that we are left to the myths and ruins (those uninviting sources) to study out their origin and history?

Those fortresses along the high plateau of Peru mean war. They mean that their builders had a rival, and that this rival moved northward, because the origin of civilization was at Cuzco and southward.

"All the indications are," said Henry George, "that previous to the discovery [of America] the population had been declining." (Progress and Poverty, p. 96.)

We have gathered such evidence as induces a belief that America was, anciently, inhabited with partially civilized and agricultural nations, surpassing in numbers, its present population.—Preface to Priest's American Antiquities.

Nadaillac says:—

War was evidently an important subject of thought with the Mound Builders.—Prehistoric America, p. 88.

Squier thinks he recognizes a continuous system of fortifications, arranged with great intelligence, stretching diagonally across the state of Ohio, from the sources of the Allegheny and the Susquehanna in the State of New York to the Wabash River. Along the Bib Harpeth River, Tennessee, earthworks are very numerous. The line of the Great Miami River, one of the tributaries of the Ohio, is defended by three forts: one at its mouth, a second at Colerain, and a third at Hamilton. Beyond this last point other works extend for a distance of six miles along the river, protecting the tributaries of the Great Miami on the north and west, or ranged in succession as far as Dayton and Piqua, so as to complete the line of defence. All these points are connected with each other by isolated mounds, mostly set upon hills commanding an extensive view. These are supposed, with reason, to have been used as sentinel stations from which to watch the movements of the enemy or to transmit prearranged signals.—Prehistoric America, pp. 91, 92.

General Harrison, one of the early Presidents of the United States, in speaking to the Historical Society of Ohio, said:—

"The three mounds that I have examined, those of Marietta, Cincinnati, and that at the mouth of the Great Miami, particularly the latter, have a military character stamped upon them which cannot be mistaken. War and struggle have ever been the sad heritage of humanity, and the New World was not likely to be more exempt from them than the old."—Ibid, p. 98.

In Ohio it is estimated that there were 10,000 mounds, "of which 1,500 are enclosed." "In New York there are 250 enclosures resembling our modern fortifications."—(Ibid., pp. 84, 85.)

Two hundred and fifty inclosures resembling our modern fortifications mean war. "There are two kinds of skeletons found in the Ohio Valley," says Professor Putnam, "the short heads and the long heads." The former he thinks came from the south, as the shape of the head resembles those of Central America and the Indians of the southwest; the long heads came from the north, he thinks, down to the coast of the two great oceans, as far as Northern California, and then came towards the center, and near this section met and conquered the short heads. There is, says he, a line of earthworks from the Alleghanies to the Mississippi River, along about the same parallel; notable instances of them being Fort Hill, Fort Ancient, one in Butler County, others in Kentucky and the southern part of Illinois, etc. The long heads, he thinks, evidently conquered, for the skeletons of the short heads are much greater in number than those of their foes. In some burial places are nothing but short heads, others contain only long heads, while others have a mixture of both. In answer to a question as to the date these people lived here, Professor Putnam stated that it was at least over a thousand years ago; not being able of course to tell how much earlier the peculiar people inhabited the country. From the two races he thinks the American Indian evolved.

According to this, a race of "long heads" conquered a race of "short heads," in Ohio, a thousand years ago or more; and the American Indian evolved since from the two races. Could they write? What interesting reading that would be, to know how it came about that the long heads came to exterminate the short heads!

"The exterminated race" is thought by some to have been Malay. See extract of remarks of Professor Mitchell to Governor Clinton in American Antiquities, page 288.

AN AGED INDIAN'S STATEMENT OF AN ELDER S——, AND HIS OWN EXPERIENCE.

"He came to my house one evening and asked for a drink of water. I asked him to take a seat while my little girl went to the spring. He was sore and lame. His shoes were worn through to his feet which were then bleeding. His pantaloons were worn completely through. I found he was going where I had been intending to go. Upon learning that I knew the man and place, he offered to come back and help me build if I would take him over, as he was too tired to walk any further. I did so. During my stay his brother and I began as usual with our rough, vulgar talk, upon which we were gently corrected, to the shame of both.

"When we should have returned his brother was not for letting him go; but he said, 'I have promised him, and will go, unless you can make some other arrangements with him.' They both agreed to come if I would let him off awhile. Accordingly they came, and my stranger proved to be a first class workman.

"The first evening he started off and his brother asked if I had any idea where he was going. I said, No.

"He said, 'He is a Mormon preacher, he is going off to pray.'

"I then began to hate and abuse him. I would shun his talk, and when he began to preach I would take my family out of the way. Finally, his repeated kindness and invitations, regardless of my abuse, compelled me to go to preaching. I learned in two sermons more than I had in all my attending meetings before. It then became almost impossible to keep me away.

"One night it was too dark to see the stars, and I was about to give up the trip, when a light appeared from heaven, which is impossible for me to describe, or ever forget. We were shown the way, and will never forget that meeting.

"It was not long before there was quite a little branch; it seemed as though he would convert every one.

"He went in with an agent who proved to be a rascal; and to my personal knowledge he, by the combined work of enemies, was made to suffer severely for what he had never done. I do not know where the poor fellow is now. I would ride my pony forty or fifty miles any day to hear him preach.

"After he left, the little branch went to pieces. I have seen but three or four of them in several years. It is ten years since we were in a Saints' meeting; and we have lived so far from right that we do not feel worthy of the name."

Upon leaving them the writer was called aside and asked in tears to offer another special prayer in secret in behalf of the narrator of the above few lines. Truly the church needs its "hunters and fishers."

THE ROCK—COMPANION PIECE.

In my exegesis of Matthew 16, I carelessly made Jesus Christ the antecedent of the relative pronoun it, which I ought not to have done to be in harmony with the rules of grammar; as it is of the neuter gender, while Jesus Christ is of the masculine. I should have made the divinity of Jesus Christ, the antecedent. But when we consider the preëminence of his divine character, we were not very far wrong in fact. It is his divinity that constitutes him Jesus Christ.

The word rock in this text is used synonymously with the revealed fact that Jesus is the Christ.

Saying that our Savior was the author of the statement in Acts 4:11, 12 instead of Paul was just a "slip of the tongue"—pen.

Now, kind reader, can we not join hands and with one hearty impulse sing, "Rock of ages, cleft for me"?

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., June 11.

Editors Herald:—I arrived here, in my new field, May 31. I stopped at Pittsburg and spent a few days, including one Sunday, with the Saints there. Was very kindly received, and felt blessed in ministering the word. Was pleased to find so many live workers. They have secured a lot and hope to have a church of their own in the near future. May the Lord prosper them in their effort.

Arriving at Philadelphia we secured lodgings at Bro. and Sr. Bacon's, in a good neighborhood, on a clean wide street near the outskirts of the city. Was welcomed by the Saints and assured that our labors were greatly needed. The Saints appear to be alive to the interests of the work. They have a live Sunday school and Religio, and a nice class of young people who seem willing to do their part. It is encouraging to witness the spirit of unity and humility manifest among them. They seem to rather underestimate their condition and ability, and welcome assistance. The efforts of the few have resulted in accumulating several hundreds of dollars with which to purchase a lot. The erection of a Saints' church in Philadelphia in the near future is among the things hoped for. This is greatly needed. At present the Saints can only occupy their hall on Sunday. All their meetings during the week are held in private houses. This is quite a drawback. I learn that there is considerable prejudice against holding religious services on Sunday in a hall. Many people will attend church who will not go to a hall. The minister cannot accomplish much when he has to crowd most of his work into one day.

Philadelphia reminds me of some of the cities in England. Many houses crowded together and built up to the sidewalks. Few front or back yards. Narrow streets, well paved and clean. Very few flats. Working people's houses mostly two and three stories, red brick, rents a little cheaper, I think, than in Chicago. Most of the working people seem to be in comfortable circumstances. There are a great many mills here, giving employment to thousands of boys and girls. There are also many beautiful residences, with broad, well-paved avenues, and handsome parks. The city is well supplied with trolley lines; but these are more expensive than in Chicago, as they have a system of "exchange" here instead of "transfers" from one line to another, and these exchanges cost three cents extra. On the whole Philadelphia impresses a stranger as being a nice, clean city. If there are any slums (as there is likely to be a great city), I have not seen them yet. Weather very warm and dry.

FANNING, Kan., June 5.

Editors Herald:—I returned home from conference, the last day, for repairs; la grippe had its grip on me in good shape. The care and caution of Viola, with the cheer and kindly offices of the children, coupled with Zion's sunny skies, and, perhaps, my desire to go forth soon brought me around normal again.

I have spoken a couple of dozen times in Atchison, Baker, Netawaka, and here, and conducted, or attended several other meetings within the last month of active service. Two have presented themselves for baptism, which will claim our care this afternoon. Others here are more or less interested, and the Saints generally feel fairly well, I believe. Last Sunday night's audience was the largest; but, behold, this is quite a busy season of the year. A Catholic priest who officiates here was in attendance last Saturday night when I had occasion to speak on the vicissitudes of the church, including the organization, fall, and rise thereof, or the restoration of the gospel. The old gentleman came in quietly, took the back seat in the farthermost corner, and withdrew at closing song.

There are fourteen counties in this Northeast Kansas district, with seven branches and some scattered members. Some live too remote from places of worship to attend regularly and often, while others are living out of this jurisdiction, and elsewhere. I have had only local help so far, although Elder Hudgens and Priest Frank Pierce are under general appointment, and intend to operate the tent in the very near future.

The foul, disgusting, enslaving habit of tobacco is murdering the peace, happiness, and usefulness of even some of the eldership. It is a cruel tyrant, and a hard master. If you do not down it it will down you. Its victim is uneasy in the presence of common decency; therefore it's a dynamite bomb to ruin fellowship and the communion of Saints. Some glory in this folly, and advertise their shame in the streets and busy marts of life. Others, out of respect, will leave their nice guests, go to the charming outhouses, or stroll all alone amid the beauties of a back alley. What should we do with branch officers who use it, instead of setting a worthy example and executing the law against all evil doers, and thus fail to "see that the law is kept," "made honorable," etc.?

WOODLAND, June 4.

Editors Herald:—I wish to say through the columns of the Herald that I am on my way to my field of labor in Nova Scotia. Called into the Aroostook for a little while, thinking it wisdom to do so at present, as doubtless there will be no other elder able to go there before fall, and the interest there was good last winter. Besides, it is a busy time with the Nova Scotians during their farming season, and but little preaching can be done except on Sundays.

Expect to reach South Rawdon about June 26. Sr. Foss is hoping to accompany me for several weeks.

Conference will be held in South Rawdon, June 30. Cumberland and Kings county Saints are all invited to attend. Come with the Spirit; let's have a good conference and renew our spiritual strength for the conflict another year. It is possible that Bro. W. W. Blanchard will be with us. We request the hearty coöperation of all the Saints in Nova Scotia. Let us be united and work together. Shall visit all the principal places where the Saints are located in that Province as soon as convenient.

Hastily,

S. O. FOSS.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, June 7.

Editors Herald:—I thought possibly some of the scattered Saints from Burlington would be glad to hear that we have our church paid for and that last Sunday at our district conference it was dedicated to the Lord. We were few in number when we started to build it, but steady pulling together has accomplished the task. We had a good time, and the Lord surely overruled and sent his servant Bishop G. H. Hilliard our way. We had not fully decided to have the church dedicated until he came unexpectedly, on his way to the Joy conference, when we decided they should not have all the joy. So Bro. Giesch hustled around and made up the needed amount and paid off the debt. Bro. Hilliard came back Sunday noon, and in the afternoon, at 2:30, the dedicatory exercises were held. Bro. Johnson, our worthy president for twenty years and who until late has been ailing, was in the chair. With Bro. J. L. Wright as usher, the large crowd was seated. Bro. J. R. Lambert offered the opening prayer.

After the singing, which is always good when C. N. Craig's bass voice is heard, Bro. Hilliard preached the dedicatory sermon, (which was seemingly from God himself,) showing that if we did not build our spiritual house aright we could not inherit eternal life. The Spirit attended, giving comfort to all who sacrificed and helped.

Bro. James McKiernan offered the dedicatory prayer, which was eloquent and grand. If we could only live to be worthy of the blessings invoked we shall be able to wear the crown. To God be all the praise.

Our conference was a success and all enjoyed being present. Our Sunday school convention was also a success, and every one seemed pleased with the entertainment. Two of the same program committee were appointed to arrange a program at New London next October.

Bro. Hilliard baptized three, preached five sermons, and presided over prayer and confirmation meeting with J. R. Evans. He bore some grand testimonies, which with his sermons were elevating, and made us feel like striving harder and coming up higher. Bro. J. R. Lambert gave us two of his sermons, and all know what they are. Bro. McKiernan preached one sermon which was full of logic and was appreciated. The three baptized were Jane Brown, of Monmouth, converted through the Ensign; Zulia Duke and John Salisbury. The two last named are third cousins of the President of the church.

KIRKSEY, Ky., June 1.

Editors Herald:—The wonder of the world! The curse being taken from the colored race! Why not? I thought I would tell the readers of the Herald what I saw at Lexington last week. There was a colored woman from Little Rock, Ark., by the name of Frances Jones, thirty-nine years old, who is turning white. The change began three years ago. First a spot will come about the size of a dime. It became larger as it faded from black to white. She is about half white now. Where she is black she is black as can be, and where white she is very white, more so than most white people. The wool on her head is just like other darkies, except that where those white spots come in her head her hair is straight like white people's hair. Also on her arms where she is white straight hair can be seen.

Another feature that seems strange is that her eyes have changed from black to blue; also her gums were once blue but are now pink. Her nose was once flat but is now small and nicely shaped. Her hands were once large with knuckles large, but now are as nice as any person I ever saw.

Now, don't some one say this woman was painted this way, for I am sure she was not. Dr. Howard, of Lexington, was with me, and used a magnifying glass to detect if such was the case, but we found it was no humbug. The woman was very intelligent, and was ready to answer any questions asked her. She thinks it will not be long before all the black will fade away, if it continues as fast as it has for three years. She thinks God is performing this work on her. She is a member of the Baptist Church, and has been since she was thirteen years old.

Over seven hundred doctors have examined this woman, and some governors of the states. All pronounce her case a wonder. When I looked at her I thought of the promise the Lord had made to the people that the heavens would retain Christ until the times of the restitution of all things. Now if the colored race was once white, will it not be restored to its original color? I think so. We read of some in Book of Mormon who were once white but became dark.

So the Lord is truly performing his marvelous work and a wonder in these last days.

CLEBURNE, Tex., June 8.

Editors Herald:—I left Lamoni the third day of May for my mission field, southwestern Texas. I stopped for a few days at Baxter Springs, Kansas, to see my son who resides there, and a daughter at Galena, Kansas. After a short visit with them, and an attempt to preach in Baxter once, I started for the Lone Star State. Bro. Wiley Balding conveyed me in his buggy to Shetopa, some twenty miles from Baxter, where I boarded the M. K. & T. reaching Texas the 13th.

I stopped at Midway and held three services and visited with the saints a few days. Midway is a place where I introduced our church two years ago. Some were baptized, and others are friendly, and some are enemies.

I went from this point to the Mabry schoolhouse, near Clarksville, the county seat of Red River county. I also opened the work here two years ago. Here is where Mr. Chism and I held a debate last December, one year ago. The people seemed glad to have us back again, and I would suggest that this place be looked after by those in charge, for there are some here near the kingdom.

I also visited the Shawnee branch of the church near Lydia. Held four or five meetings here, and on Sunday morning Bro. B. F. Pollard, branch president, administered the sacrament. Quite a good time was had. Here your writer took the grippe, and has been in its clutches ever since. Feel considerable better today.

I bade the saints of Shawnee adieu, and on the 6th started for this place. I was just two days late here or I would have been permitted to have met my old colaborer, L. L. Wight. I start Monday night next at ten o'clock for San Antonio, the objective point in my mission field. There is one member of the church in this city of thirteen hundred inhabitants. Sister Riley and her husband make my stay very pleasant indeed. I may hold a meeting or two before I leave here.

It is very hot. Crops fine.

As ever in the faith,

I. P. BAGGERLY.

CHARITON, Iowa, June 8.

Editors Herald:—On my return from General Conference I visited the branch at Concord. On my arrival Bro. Bare, the president of the branch, informed me that he had secured the use of the Con schoolhouse, three miles west of Pleasantville; and although it was thirteen and one half miles away, and in corn planting, he hitched his horse to the buggy and took me to the home of his father and mother, and also to the home of his brother, where I was royally entertained by both families. When I left after a two weeks' meeting, they gave me many invitations to return at a season of the year when the farmers were not so busy. We had a good hearing, and made many friends. I left with a promise to return in the near future.

I then returned to Concord, held several meetings, organized a Sunday school, baptized four, and while there was made glad by the presence of Elder J. W. Morgan. After holding several meetings we took possession of Bro. Bare's horse and buggy and visited the Saints near Liberty Center, as they are a part of the Concord branch. On our arrival we found Bro. David Daniels had been doing some preaching there, and had organized a union Sunday school. While we do not approve of union Sunday schools where there are Saints enough to have one of our own, Bro. Morgan thought best to leave it for a time; but a change will surely take place.

We held four services with increasing congregations. I also baptized the son of Bro. and Sr. Rowley, who in company with Bro. Waltenbaugh and son and family who are also Saints, have moved into the neighborhood, and have opened a coal mine on the farm of Bro. Nyswonger. This makes thirteen Saints and many friends there. Bro. Morgan started a Saints' meeting to be held on Sunday afternoons with Bro. Waltenbaugh in charge, he being a priest.

We then went to North Liberty, where we held three services with a fair hearing for the time of the year.

I go to Charter Oak to-morrow to hold some meetings, preparatory to the organization of a branch in that place.

My permanent address is Chariton, Lucas county, Iowa.

Yours in the one faith,

W. H. KEPHART.

BARNARD, Mo., June 12.

Editors Herald:—The Nodaway district conference is a thing of the past. There was a good representation present, being a full house at all the meetings. Business passed off smoothly, with the best of feelings. Meetings were spiritual, and the Lord truly blessed all who were present. The sermons were full of thought; every one seemed to be "the best." Two were baptized and four children blessed. Joseph Vaughn and Thomas A. Ivie were ordained to the office of elder. These two brethren are worthy additions to the army of the Lord. May the good Master abundantly bless them in their work. William Ross, a bright young man, was ordained to the office of deacon.

The Saints of this district know how to make everything pleasant for all; good singing, good preaching, plenty to eat, and everybody happy. Kind friends and brethren donated "ye" missionaries a buggy, horse, and harness, to be used in helping to get the gospel to all parts of the district. This will be a great help, indeed.

Brn. J. A. Davis, C. P. Welsh, John Hawley, R. K. Ross, and many others of the elders were present. Ed S. Fannon was chosen district president. Last but not least, Nodaway district is going to have a reunion, and wants Decatur and Far West districts to join with them and have a grand good time. In two weeks or so location and date of reunion will be given. Yours in the gospel,

D. C. WHITE.

TUTNALLS, Lydney, England, May 28.

Editors Herald:—There are thousands upon thousands this side of the Atlantic who have never yet heard of the great plan of redemption which is in force in these last days. The Church of England and about as many more sects and systems as there are days in the year seem to have full and complete sway. None but those who have been privileged to stand on these shores can form any idea of the magnitude of the work which has to be accomplished here. The poet has well said:—

"O, 'tis pleasant, 'tis reviving,
To our hearts to hear each day,
Joyful news from far arriving,
How the gospel wins its way."

"Now," says some, "charity begins at home." Be that as it may, it matters not to some whether the word is onward here or there. Hath not God made of one blood all nations that dwell upon the earth, and hath he not also determined the bounds of their habitations? Again, are we not all citizens of one great kingdom, having over us one great king, even Christ? By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we are rich or poor, black or white, bond or free; and thanks be to Israel's God for the wise provision which he has made by the same Spirit by which we are all able to say, "Abba, Father."

Saturday and Sunday, May 12 and 13, were red letter days in our district. The Eastern Wales conference met in Cardiff, on those dates, Bro. A. N. Bishop, president of the district, in charge. The business passed off without a single murmur of any kind; in fact, the sweet influence of God's Spirit was present throughout the whole proceedings. The Saints seem to be reaching a higher standard; and without any flattery whatever I can truthfully and honestly say that the labors of our late mission president, Bro. Pitt, and his wise counsel have not been in vain; but as in Enoch's city of old all are trying to be of one heart and one mind. Wish you could have looked in, Bro. Pitt, it was the best conference the writer has ever attended. There were ten elders present and about seventy-five Saints, young and old. Upwards of fifty took part in the sacrament service. One aged sister from Nantyglo was present. I think she was 85, with her faculties as keen and active as some are at forty. Sr. Jones bore a striking testimony to the goodness of God and the great cause she has espoused for very many years. Two brethren were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood; Evans of Nantyglo, and Trenchard of Cardiff. Gifts of tongues and prophecy and interpretations were present; tears of joy and gladness flowed freely. The prophecy by Joel was there fulfilled, the children of Zion were all joyous in their kingdom, and all came to a good understanding of what Peter meant when he talked about a refreshing time from the presence of the Lord. To God we ascribe the praise.

I often feel unworthy of all God's goodness, and I feel honored to be one of the delegates of the Redeemer. I pray for power to hold fast to the faith and preach this beautiful gospel as long as I have breath. Myself and others are very grateful to some (whose hearts God has touched by the spirit of love) for a small package of Hopes which arrives here every week.

Your writer has seen many of God's promises fulfilled of late. Amongst others, this one: Some two and one-half years ago Bro. Bishop sailed from here to America. A short time afterwards the Spirit of light and truth made known in the Lydney branch that his work was not yet finished here, and the Lord said his servant Alma Bishop should return here. The correct impression was also given as to the time when he would come; namely, two years. More was said which has yet to be fulfilled; but he who has spoken has said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." "My people shall be willing in the day of my power;" and again, "My word . . . shall not return unto me void, . . . but it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it."

Now to those who have this work at heart and are looking to do good I throw out one suggestion or request. Many whom God has blessed financially have gone from these shores. Unto such I say: Is all your love lost for your mother country, or are you like Paul who said his heart's desire and prayer for Israel was that they might be saved? Do you also desire that your fellow countrymen and women be saved? You who pray the prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven," and ask the God of Jacob to open effectual doors for the preaching of his truth, what are you doing to hasten the redemption of Zion? Bro. Bishop is appointed as missionary to Wales and the south of England, he being the one whom God had appointed and raised up for that purpose, and one who is blessed with sound, logical arguments and strong reasoning powers. Him God hath blessed with liberty, language, freedom, and courtesy in demeanor to help prepare the way for the Savior's second advent. I ask the question right here, Has anyone sufficient love for God's work to send here two or three thousand tracts for free distribution, so that when the servant of God shall stand up to proclaim the angel's message he may have some literature to give to arouse the spirit of inquiry?

We held our anniversary services in connection with the laying of the foundation stone of our little church at Lydney, on May 24. On the following Sunday, May 27, special sermons were preached by Bro. Bishop. Subject, morning, at 10:45, "Present Revelation;" in the evening at six, "The Angel's Message." Good interest was manifest. At two p. m., Bro. Trenchard, of Cardiff, and Holford, of Lydney, preached at the Cross, Lydney, followed by an address by Bro. A. N. Bishop, which was well received. Again at 5:30 we made two short stands in the town, giving the people a hearty invitation to attend the place where God vouchsafes to meet with his people from time to time.

It is our intention to continue outdoor preaching as long as the weather permits; and with this end in view and the hope that some tracts will arrive we labor on, ambitious and with renewed energy. The little hymn rings in my ears:—

"Go labor on; spend and be spent;
Thy joy to do the Father's will.
It is the way the Master went,
Should not the servant tread it still?

"Men die in darkness at your side,
Without a hope to cheer the tomb;
Take up the torch and wave it wide,
The torch that lights time's thickest gloom.

"Toil on; faint no'; keep watch and pray.
Be wise, the erring soul to win;
Go forth into the world's highway.
Compel the wanderer to come in.

"Toil on, and in thy toil rejoice;
For toil comes rest for exile home;
Soon shalt thou hear the Bridegroom's voice,
The midnight peal, "Behold, I come."

I hope and pray that God will maintain his own cause, and that we his servants shall have fortitude of character and integrity sufficient to enable us to fight our way through and to finish the work he has given us to do, so that at the last we may hear the Master say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." God grant it may be so for his name's sake. Your brother in bonds,

HENRY ELLIS.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 11.

Editors Herald:—Five were baptized here yesterday as the result of tent work this spring. Two of this number had never heard the gospel till they heard it in the tent. The Lord has been with us from the first, and much good is being done. My subject last night was that Brigham Young, and not Joseph Smith, was the author of polygamy. The tent was nearly full of adult people, and the effort was well received. Shall continue for some time yet. All goes well. Bro. E. Hayer is with me. E. A. STEDMAN.

WALLACE, Ala., June 10.

Editors Herald:—Bro. T. C. Kelley assigned Bro. W. J. Booker to labor in Florida with me, and we united our forces, on the 26th of May, by hitching our two ponies to one buggy and starting out in earnest. Each of us had to do some local work ere we could enter the field, hence the delay. We started out in the spirit of the teaching of section 122:7, 8, also, 115:1, Doctrine and Covenants, and we have experienced the truth of the teaching in these revelations. We feel comfort and support in each other's company, in all of our labors, especially in going to the world. Equipped as we are we are enabled to travel without depending on the Saints to carry us, which dependency in the past has caused the missionaries to preach too much in the organized branches, thus retarding the spread of the gospel.

I long to see the day when the church will send all of her men two by two, and urge them to labor in the spirit of the two aforementioned revelations. We are not preaching many public sermons, and have to drive about thirty miles on an average to one preaching appointment; but we are preaching a great many private sermons, to individuals and families which we cannot record. This seems to be an unpopular way of doing, since it seems that the idea has obtained among the missionaries that they must preach near 365 sermons a year in order to make a good report to conference. This necessitates preaching in the old organized districts in order that frequent appointments can be had.

Bro. Booker is a genial companion and a zealous worker. We have an "Abstract of Evidence in Temple Lot Case," also, "Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist," and other tracts, and we find no trouble in placing our position before the people.

We have been interviewing some of the Utah members of late, and find little trouble in convincing the honest in heart. I would suggest that the "Abstract of Evidence" be used more freely by our ministry. It is one of the best helps, and in connection with Bro. Heman's "True Succession," the arguments become invincible.

Our young ministers often feel weak and are inclined to apologize for their weakness when they arise to preach to the people. Now, brethren, let us not do this. We have nothing to apologize for. This work does not need an apology, and if we feel weak, let us go to the Lord who "giveth to every man liberally and upbraideth not," and not go to the people. They cannot help us, and it only weakens us in their estimation, causing them to anticipate us, so that if the Lord should help us to preach a good sermon, they would not appreciate it. Don't apologize, don't complain. If you have a headache, or backache, or feel bad, or weak, say nothing about it, but read a text and go right ahead, and leave the results with God.

We came here from our field by request to baptize some applicants, and Bro. Booker buried three souls in the waters of baptism today.

There is quite an interest here, and in due time a good branch will be raised up if proper efforts are put forth. The way is being opened up for preaching the gospel in many new places, and the Lord is preparing the hearts of the people. Opposition is getting weaker in many places, and many are seeking for the old paths.

Then let us press on, brethren, and strive to spread this truth and thereby help to reap this harvest, which is so white unto the gathering. In bonds,

S. D. ALLEN.

Editors Herald:—We find the great work of God advancing slowly but permanently, and can see that God is turning and overturning to fulfill his promises to his people. Bro. Mannering and the writer preached on the streets at Clyde. After the last service a gentleman came to us and informed us that his hospitality was ours to enjoy. We found his wife to be a strict Methodist, but of a kind spirit. The gentleman listened to Bro. C. Scott preach while he lived in Iowa. The seed is sown and is germinating. Attended M. E. services with them on Sunday. After dinner we took our departure for Ames, with a request to come again. Have learned that several are interested from hearing us on the street. No Saints there.

From Ames we went to Minersville. Held services over two Sundays, leaving with some interest manifest. Assisted in organizing a Religio. Interest plenty to do good, if prayerful.

We began meetings at this place on the 29th ult. closing last night. Quite an interest. Very busy season; most all farmers. During the week small attendance. Dr. McLaughlin is taking quite an interest in our meetings. He used his influence, which is not a little, to interest people in attending services, he not forgetting to be present. Last night at close a Catholic, quite well informed, came to me, asking questions relative to the Catholic Church controlling the literature during the dark ages. I answered to the satisfaction of those who gathered to hear, the Dr. shaking his sides in delight. He remembered us with $1.00, and has never taken such interest before. Bro. and Sr. Morgan kindly cared for us, and nothing was left undone to make the elders comfortable. At Minersville we were highly entertained by the few saints there, especially at Sr. Curtis'.

We leave here this evening for Sterling, and find many calls, "come over and help us." We labor diligently, but work must suffer for want of laborers. Our motto is "onward and upward." Praying all Saints will be awake to the interests of Zion,

L. G. GURWELL.

HOOD RIVER, Oregon, June 6.

Editors Herald:—At the earnest request of Bro. Thomas Chapman I left my home at Condon, Oregon, on June 5, came to this place, and found what so far looks like a grand opening. The tent is needed here.

This country in the Hood river valley is cut up into small farms of from five to twenty-five acres, is set in berries and fruit. The valley, being closely settled, makes a very fine place for our people to work. There are Brighamites, Campbellites, Free Methodists, Seventh-day Adventists, Christian Adventists, Congregationalists, and Catholics here.

Bro. Chapman and I called on the Campbellite minister, Rev. Jenkins, and asked for the use of his church. He said he had nothing to say about it, but said that the more he had read concerning Mormonism the less use he had for it, that a revelator who did not reveal something new was a humbug. He said that he was back East last year and called upon a Mr. Hezekiah Bassett, of Mulberry Corners, Geauga county, Ohio, and that the above-named gentleman was in possession of a chair which belonged to one of the apostles in old Joseph's time, that he also had a table and a writing desk which were once the property of Joseph Smith, "Old Joe Smith," he said. These were sold at the time of the failing of the Kirtland Bank. Of course, this reverent gentleman here having sat in this apostle's chair, he now knows that thedoctrine is false. I asked him if he knew that the creditors of that bank had all been paid, every cent. He said he knew they had not.

Well, Bro. Chapman and I are now going to hear him preach, and to see if we can use the church the coming week, and will write our success when we come back.

One thirty o'clock finds us home from the church, and were successful in getting the use of it for next week; so Bro. Chapman announced.

On our way home we fell in with one of the Christian Advent brethren, who told us that they had decided to let us have their church also, and invited me to preach, for them to-night, which I will gladly do, after which I will write more.

Monday morning finds us all in good health and feeling elated over the outlook for our work here. Your writer occupied at the Christian Advent church last evening, with good liberty. Had a fair sized audience; but of course some must show the cloven hoof. One man told his wife he would leave her if she stayed to hear us; but she stayed all the same.

Tuesday night we announced to show the difference between Brighamism and our faith. Just what will be the outcome of this labor remains yet to be seen. Let me say to the conference appointees, there is no need of keeping quiet. There are plenty of openings along this river, the Columbia, for this time of the year.

I find Bro. Chapman a thoroughgoing young man, working hard with his loving young wife to make for themselves a home. May God bless their efforts, crowning them with eternal life at the end of the race. Their example is worthy of imitation, and they should ever be remembered by the traveling missionaries. They live two miles from Hood River.

With kindest regards for all, I am as ever, your brother in the fight until death,

W. A. GOODWIN.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 6.

Editors Herald:—This finds me at the post of duty. My trip east was robbed of much of the pleasure owing to my physical indisposition during most of the conference. It was a severe trial. All trials I'm told are for some good purpose. Am puzzled to know the "why" of this. A trial to be effective for good must assuredly have its moral application. Whatever salutary influence there may have been in mine is still bound up in the puzzle.

I am in no way discouraged over the conference. Perplexing problems and grave conditions are not always indicative of weakness or retrogression. Difficulties develop wisdom and danger begets caution and care. I left the conference with more faith in the ultimate of the work than I ever had before. I felt, yea, I knew, that there was a God in and above our humanity, and when necessary his power would be exercised for the good of the work.

One thing above all else that we need to develop, as men of God, is confidence one towards the other. The worldlings are well nigh destitute of this; we cannot afford to imitate them. The fact that a man is allied with me in this great latter day work, and the further realization of the sacrifice which he has made to defend it, should entitle him to every righteous consideration. If we will not stand by one another who will stand by us? In the world our prestige is of no material consequence, and from indications we cannot soon hope for a change. Then let us be found together with that divine and unselfish love which found its truest expression in the life of our Spiritual Head.

One hopeful sign at the conference was the general desire upon the part of the ministry to study the law of ministerial support and material equality. The results were more than we had hoped for. These discussions will bear material fruit in the not very distant future.

Leaving Lamoni I stopped off over Sunday at Lucas, Iowa. Made my home with Bro. Isaac Phillips and wife. Was pleased to meet so many of the Saints and dear friends of other days,—days when I was one of them, and had not forsaken all for the Master's sake. God bless these noble souls. Sunday afternoon although I was scarcely able to be around, I, with difficulty, walked three miles to Cleveland No. 4, where the new mines are located, and preached to a packed house of Saints and old time friends. It was gratifying to know that "Tommy" was not forgotten. The faithful band of Saints here are pluckily striving to hold the fort both at Lucas and Cleveland. Was disappointed in not being privileged to call upon Father and Mother Watkins, the old standbys there.

The next day I left for the old Pottawattamie district, with Council Bluffs as the objective point. Found a royal welcome. Was greeted with open arms by Saints and friends. Thank God for such friendship. This visit will be a green spot in memory. What a pleasure, when one has lived and labored in a place for years, to find the same warm spot remaining in the hearts of the community for you.

I preached twice in Council Bluffs to a full house. I then went to Crescent. The Saints turned out regardless of rain. Was treated royally in each of these places. While in Council Bluffs I stopped most of the time with Mr. and Mrs. Snyder, both physicians. They are the doctors who waited so faithfully on my children when they went through that siege of membraneous croup and diphtheria. Ordinarily, my bill at that time would have been quite large; but, although they came two and three times a day for weeks, and several times called other doctors in for consultation, yet when I asked them for their bill they replied that they recognized that wife and I were giving our lives for the work of Christ and they were pleased to be privileged to do what they did gratis. It was a veritable Godsend to us. When I returned to the city they would not let me go elsewhere, but insisted that I make their home my headquarters. May God reward them for their kindnesses. I do not mention this to discredit in any way the hospitable attitude of the Saints towards me; for truly many of the Council Bluffs Saints are enshrined in my affections.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I spoke once in Omaha. Owing to ill health I was forced to tear myself away and also to cancel contemplated stops enroute. I did not stop at Denver, and only remained one day in Salt Lake City; thence home.

I have recovered rapidly since my return, and am now ready for active service. Expect (God helping) to make this one of my busiest years—not particularly in preaching, but in attempting to discharge the duties which the late conference imposed upon me. Shortly after my return I was chosen president of the Los Angeles branch. One pleasing feature is the general good will which now prevails. Bro. Earl, my predecessor, a man beloved by all of the people, displays that good will and encouragement which gives inspiration and cheer, and the Saints as a whole are evidencing that they wish to do all they can to make this a prosperous year. Bro. Earl and myself will be the only active elders in the branch, and we will have all we can do.

Bro. Charles Crumley leaves this week for his mission field, Oregon. The Saints, as evidence of confidence and good will, contributed over twenty-five dollars to him for the purchase of a suit of clothes. They also held a pound party at the home ere his departure. Bro. and Sr. Crumley fully appreciate this kindness. Bro. R. R. Dana expects to start for his mission field shortly. He, too, was favored with the present of a new suit of clothes from the Los Angeles Saints. Bro. Dana leaves with our good will and confidence, and it is our humble prayer that he may be successful in advancing the interests of the cause wherever he may labor.

And now, have not the Los Angeles Saints done nobly? They purchased a new suit of clothes for the writer, and gave money enough to Brn. Crumley, Dana, and Barmore to buy a suit of clothes each. Furnished money towards defraying the expenses of Bro. Anderson back east, besides helping others of the elders. All this they have done besides raising a stipulated amount each month to apply on the church indebtedness.

The Southern California Saints, both at Garden Grove and San Bernardino, have been equally generous as far as they were able. A more generous body of Saints it has never been my privilege to meet. It behooveth us as elders to be prudent, however, that we do not in any way betray confidence or become ungrateful in action of their generosity. We look forward to this as a busy year.

Brn. Chatburn and Anderson will be in active tent service most of the year. This means a number of new openings, and we trust that the work will be thoroughly planted, wherever they may labor. We will help the brethren all in our power. Bro. Elbert Smith will find plenty of available new openings without the tent.

Those of us in charge of the local work will have all we can do in caring for, nurturing, and pruning the church. Here in the city, besides this, I hope 'ere long, to commence some mission work and gradually extend it until it will comprise a number of the suburban towns. One thing that has been damaging to our complete success has been lack of labor centralization. When conferences have been held every year, and men have been appointed for the whole state of California, they have felt under the necessity of moving on from branch to branch so rapidly, in order to reach them all ere the year was up, that our eastern elders have been dubbed "wandering stars" by some observant witnesses, and it has given coloring to the statement that such trips partook more of a "visiting tour" and "recreation trip" rather than a systematic gospel mission. Be that as it may, let us endeavor to evidence substantial proof to the contrary. Nothing would please the California Saints better than to see the work expand into new and untried fields.

I am of the opinion that it would be the saving of considerable expense if missionaries who are appointed to California would remain in the mission a number of years. To go back and forth every year will incur an enormous expense. Last conference the cost of transportation across the continent alone for the Pacific Slope missionaries was over a thousand dollars. If the brethren who are bringing their wives with them will make up their minds to remain a number of years ere their return it will minimize expense. I foresee that we cannot all go to conferences every year.

We are looking forward to the coming of Bro. Joseph to the Coast. Come and give impetus to the work here, and we will retaliate by returning you to the bosom of your family with renewed vigor and full of the fragrance of this sun-kissed land. Bro. Alexander expressed a willingness to come here also in the not far distant future. Come. Many are waiting patiently for the time when they can receive their patriarchal blessing.

An article in the Los Angeles Express recently reviewing an address by President Nye of the Utah church on the authorship of polygamy called forth a column article from my pen challenging the proof of his assertions. Up to date nothing has materialized.

Fraternally yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

1014 Alpine Street, Los Angeles, California.

P. S.—I would say that I have made arrangements whereby I can furnish Saints in all parts of the country with Olive Oil in quantities. I can get for them either brand of the pure California oils. Having used the California oil I found it practically impossible to secure pure olive oil in nearly every place I visited in the East. Bulk oil is seldom, if ever, wholly pure. Avoid the cheap stuff which consists mostly of cotton seed and cheap animal fats.

ORCHARDVILLE, Ill., June 13.

Editors Herald:—I send you the following statement which appeared in the Christian Leader for June 12, from the pen of Rev. D. Collins, of Secor, Illinois, who has been making himself quite conspicuous against our work as a writer and a bebater. The statement is as follows:—

"White is just now pressing Braden for a debate. Braden does not seem able to give satisfactory indorsement to White. White requires the indorsement of the editors of the Christian Standard and Christian Evangelist before he will meet Braden. Cannot these societyite editors give Braden their indorsement and let him and White proceed with their work? Do they really think White is too strong for Braden? It seems to me an acknowledgment on their part that White is too strong for Braden, if they do not indorse him or give their reasons for not doing so, if they have any. The Mormons are making all they can out of this. It is not hurting the Church of Christ, but the societyites." F. M. SLOVER.

SCRANTON, Miss., June 14.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference at Theodore passed off pleasantly. Bro. Booker went on from there to visit different parts of the district and mission, attended by the prayers and best wishes of the Saints. We trust his ministry will be greatly blessed the ensuing year. I had strong desires to be in the active missionary force, but Providence ruled otherwise. Yet there is scarcely a week but what I am called upon to perform one or more of the duties of an elder, and therefore hope to be useful and keep the armor on. God be with you.

Your brother in Christ,

FRANK P. SCARCLIFF.

MALLARD, Ia., June 11.

Editors Herald:—This is a comparatively new place, situated in the northern part of the Galland's Grove district; yet the country abounds in whole-souled Saints, and they seem to be vieing with each other in an effort to entertain and provide for the wants and needs of the missionaries. Preached here twice yesterday; felt well in the efforts, which seem to be appreciated by the Saints. They have a neat and well-arranged chapel, built at some sacrifice, yet with cheerfulness.

Bro. Butterworth, our beloved district president and submissioniary in charge was here to help and suggest in the building, and it was finally completed and dedicated to the Lord. Bro. Butterworth is universally loved and respected by this people. Wherever you go, the first question is, "Have you heard from Bro. Butterworth?" He is very sick. Wish the church had thousands of just such Saints, then we would be nearer the gathering than we are.

We had a very enjoyable conference at Auburn, June 3 and 4. Everything passed off pleasantly. Patriarch A. H. Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Apostle J. W. Wight were present and did the preaching. The Spirit of God was present to a marked degree, and everyone felt blessed and well paid for the sacrifices undergone.

Bro. C. J. Hunt was ordained a bishop, in accordance with his appointment at the late General Conference. He selected as counselors Brn. David Brewster and James O. Sheldon. Bro. Brewster lives in Harlan, Shelby county, and Bro. Sheldon in Cherokee, Cherokee county. Both are men specially adapted for the place. Who will say that the church is not moving forward?

The Saints and friends at Auburn are very magnanimous, looking after the wants of the visitors and making them feel at home. Although there are few Saints living there, everybody's wants were provided for.

This is my first attempt as a general missionary and it is a lonely condition, this being separated from home blessings, neighbors, and sometimes we think that if this gospel must be preached until Christ comes and we are to assist we are in hopes that his coming will not be delayed.

Your brother in Christ,

BAY CITY, Mich., June 11.

Editors Herald:—Our Bay Port conference of the Eastern district is over. We had a large gathering, both of members and nonmembers. In our preaching and fellowship meetings we enjoyed much of the Spirit of the Master. Saints were confirmed and built up, and some nonmembers went away feeling glad they were there, and leave with a better understanding of us and our work.

Very truly,

J. J. CORNISH.

WILMINGTON, Ill., June 15.

Editors Herald:—We have the good pleasure to report that as a result of the continued efforts put forth at this place by Bro. A. J. Keck and myself eleven persons have been baptized and confirmed. Seven of them are heads of families, and all respectable people. Others are interested. We will continue for nearly one week yet, or until time to go to the conference at Mission. We hope for a great work here.

Yours in the faith,

H. E. MOLER.

Near SACRAMENTO, Cal., June 13.

Editors Herald:—Elbert A. Smith and wife, David A. Anderson and wife, and I have been in company from Salt Lake City, where we had a pleasant visit. Were splendidly entertained by Saints there, and generously supplied with lunch. A party of us had an excellent outing at the lake. Elbert did excellently at eleven a. m. in his sermon last Sunday. We are all well. Have enjoyed the trip. D. A. and wife stop off at Sacramento, the rest of at San Francisco.

SERVICE EXALTING.

Oh, wonderful story of Jesus the Savior,
Forsaking his home with the Father above,
Where seraphs and angels adore him forever,
And live in the light of his infinite love;
And coming to earth as the lowest of lowly,
Abiding with man as the poorest of poor,
Yet living a life that was perfect and holy,
Such life as the earth never witnessed before.

A servant of servants, condescending
To minister rather than favor receive;
Yet Lord of all power, in one comprehending
The smallest and greatest that heaven can give.
He stooped to perform for his servants and brethren
The menial service of washing of feet,—
O'er hell and the grave, triumphant, to heaven
Ascending, he rendered salvation complete.

Oh, perfect example, oh, leader of mortals,
From gross earthly darkness to heaven's fair light,
Adoring, we'll follow past heaven's bright portals,
And dwell in the day never dimmed by a night.
The humblest of service, as Jesus has shown us,
That's rendered in love, is God's blessed plan;
With him and with Jesus in power to enthrone us,
To glorify God and benefit man.

WILMINGTON, Ill., June 5, 1900.

A PRAYER.

Father, thou in whom alone
Faith and hope can safe abide,
Give us faith to follow on,
Hope to stay, whate'er betide.

Light of lights, upon us shine,
For our darkness give us day;
Glory unexpressed is thine—
May that glory light our way.

Strong above the strength of all,
Pity us and help us stand;
We before our foes must fall,
Save thou hold us by the hand.

Source of love and truth that draw
All who love the truth to thee,
Write within us all thy law,
So thy truth shall make us free.

ANGEL MINISTERS.

High in heaven, angels dwelling,
There behold the Father's face;
Angels on the earth are telling
Of the Father's love and grace;
Messengers of his salvation,
To the sons of men below,
Flying forth to every nation,
Swift from heaven to earth they go.

Through the vista of past ages
We can see them as they came
To the earth at many stages,
For their work is e'er the same.
Oh, the joy that must have thrilled them,
When to Bethlehem they came,
Heavenly pleasure must have filled them
When they spoke the Savior's name.

Latter days have seen the vision
Of angelic forms again;
As of old, still is their mission
Heavenly light to bring to men.
They, the gospel message bearing,
Men ordained to preach the word
To the nations, thus preparing For the coming of the Lord.

RESTITUTION.

As when the storm comes down and sweeps
Terrific o'er the helpless earth
And fairest field lays desolate,
So foul injustice layeth waste
The fields of human hope, till life
Becomes a scene of still despair,
But 'neath the fair adjusting hand
Of time, the storm-swept field shall bloom,
Forgetting its forlorn estate;
And yet in God's own time shall be Where fallen Justice sleeps awhile,
The flowers of truth and fruits of right,
Reviving Justice, smiling, hold
O'er life her undisputed sway.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"The Pessimist looked from his palace,
And mournfully drooped his head;
'Ah, life is so dreary, so dreary,
I wish it were over!' he said.

"The Optimist, ragged and homeless,
With a smile on his lips, went by;
'Oh, life is worth living,' he whispered,
'With sunshine and trees and blue sky!'"

SOUL DEVELOPMENT.

It is said the soul of man has three qualities: the power to feel, the power to know, and the power to will; known as the sensibilities, the intellect, and the will. The work of education involves the development and perfection of each of these three qualities. If one remains undeveloped in a person he cannot have a well-rounded or proportionate character. Though the intellect and will should have been developed, what would one be who had but little power to feel? He would not be greatly different from the marble statue. A heart that cannot be moved by love, that cannot be touched by pity, nor stirred by indignation, is certainly very hard.

But suppose that the sensibilities and the intellect have been developed, but not the will. Then we have a man like a locomotive running without an engineer, or a ship without a rudder.

God evidently designed that these three qualities should be equally developed; for, for the development of the sensibilities Christ said: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." By following this the sensibilities will be developed, the affections will be brought into rapport with God; and love, charity, mercy, and kindness will aid us in working out our salvation.

The same Teacher gives instructions for training the intellect in "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven," and in "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." Could we find a better rule for the training of the will than in "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

So we find that every part of our nature is provided for by the Author of our salvation; and if we would inherit his kingdom we must perfect ourselves in all these qualities. The sensibility, to enable us to love and adore a loving Father; the intellect, to worship him acceptably, and the will, to render perfect obedience. CHARLES FRY.

THE INVALID'S HOPE.

Strength to endure I ask,
But not the reason why
This long-continued feebleness
Must still my hopes defy.
I know that if thy hand
Upon the rudder be,
My little bark shall safely sail
O'er calm or stormy sea.

I know that some day soon
This life and I must part.
I do not ask the meaning now,
But for a patient heart;
For in that land beyond,
Across life's troubled sea,
I well do know my Father's love
Will make it plain to me.

So, if thou wilt but give Me grace, that I may bear
Each moment's pain as it may come,
I shall have naught to fear.
I do not need to know
What path before me lies,
The help that suits my present needs,
My yearning satisfies.

But oh, I would not live
One moment without thee;
Without the guidance of thy hand
Life seems a trackless sea,
And so I trim my sails
And bravely onward move
Because my bark is launched upon
The ocean of thy love.

FIRST DO IT, THEN TALK IT.

A chaplain in the army during the war was passing over the field, when he saw a wounded soldier upon the ground. He had his Bible under his arm, and he stooped down and said to the man, "Would you like me to read you something from the Bible?"

The wounded man said, "I'm so thirsty, I would rather have a drink of water."

The chaplain hurried off, and as quickly as possible brought the water. After the man had drunk the water he said, "Could you lift my head and put something under it?"

The chaplain removed his light overcoat, rolled it up and tenderly lifting the head, put it as a pillow for the tired one to rest on.

"Now," said the man, "if I only had something over me. I'm so cold!"

There was only one thing the chaplain could do and that was to take his coat off and cover the man. As he did so the wounded man looked up in his face and said, "For God's sake, if there is anything in that book that makes a man do for another what you have done for me, let me hear it."

There is a world of meaning in this incident. The need of today is the acting of the object lessons that book teaches.—Exchange.

SEEING THE GOSPEL.

"I've heard the gospel for fifty years," exclaimed a good brother, whose works of charity and mercy were known throughout the community where he lived. "What I want now is to see a little more of it before I die!"

That was a significant utterance. It touches the great need of modern Christianity—more doing, less doctrine. We have all heard the gospel till we know it by rote and rhythm. But have we seen enough of the gospel to make embodied Bible doctrines familiar? Most of us know the beatitudes by heart. How many of us know them by observation? "It is more blessed to give than to receive." How often we hear that! Do we see it—do we exemplify it—very often?—Sel.

IF YOU WISH TO COOL A ROOM.

Under the above heading we find in an exchange this: "If you wish to cool a room, wet a cloth, the larger the better, and hang it up in the room. If the ventilation is good the temperature will sink ten or fifteen degrees in less than an hour.

This calls to our remembrance that at the time President Garfield was shot we saw in our morning paper that he was suffering terribly from heat. As soon as we arrived in town we went at once to our principal telegraph station on State Street and telegraphed the President's private secretary at Washington to cool the President's room by cloths hung across it constantly wet with ice water, and the next morning [or the second] had the pleasure of seeing in our paper that the President had been greatly relieved by this process.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Elder C. J. Spurlock writes: "I desire my name presented to the Prayer Union, that I may receive the benefit of their prayers, in behalf of my afflicted eyes. I have had this affliction for many years, and I earnestly desire to be healed, that my work in the ministry may be more effective for good."

Alcohol is not a food for an athlete, and if not for an athlete then not for anyone. It hardens the tissues of the body, and that is not desirable; besides, it hardens the liver at the same time. When the question arises between a man and alcohol the safe side—for the alcohol—is the outside. Medicinally, it may have its place, but its use is not to be commended either as a beverage or a food.—June Ladies' Home Journal.

LIBRARIES AND READING.

"Libraries are the wardrobes of literature."—James Dyre.

"A taste for books is the pleasure and glory of my life."—Edward Gibbon.

"The true university of these days is a collection of books."—Thomas Carlyle.

"In the best books, great men talk to us, give us their most precious thoughts, and pour their souls into ours. God be thanked for books."—Wm. Ellery Channing.

"To divert myself from a troublesome fancy, 'tis but to run to my books. They always receive me with the same kindness."—Montaigne.

"Books let us into the souls of men, and lay open to us the secrets of our own. They are the first and the last, the most home-felt, the most heart-felt of all our enjoyments."—Wm. Hazlitt.

"Resolve to edge in a little reading every day, if it is but a single sentence. If you gain fifteen minutes every day, it will make itself felt at the end of the year."—Horace Mann.

"Mark, there. We get no good
By being ungenerous, even to a book,
And calculating profits . . . so much help
By so much reading. It is rather when We gloriously forget ourselves, and plunge
Soul-forward, headlong, into a book's profound,
Impassioned for its beauty and salt of truth—
'Tis then we get the right good from a book."—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

"What grand companionship awaits us as we turn from the noises and turmoil of life, and sit down for an evening amongst our books. Kings of thought of every age stand in serried ranks waiting to do our bidding. Poets of the elder time, and of these later years,—Homer and Milton and Pope, Longfellow and the Brownings and Lowell—sing at our bidding their immortal songs. Historians repeat for us the deeds of other days. Philosophers dig deep for us about the roots of knowledge. Shakespeare unveils for us the mystic workings of heart and mind, and laughs or weeps, or fights or dies for us, just as we desire. Great students, with dreams on fire with God, offer us the results of their life-long studies. The men of science probe nature's very heart for secrets, and lay their trophies at our feet. These are the grand and silent fellowships that wait for us. They have hoarded their genius to the uttermost, and made us, 'Heirs of all the ages, in the foremost files of time.'"—Elmo.

The following is clipped from the International Evangel:—

"Books largely are the tools of the student and the teacher. By the invention of printing, books are multiplied by the thousands, and all read, or may be, if they will. It need not be said there are good books and bad

books, 'sheep and goat' books. Some contain the seeds of things in them; the most part are not worth the paper and printer's ink of which they are made up. It requires no little discrimination to choose those which will prove to be nutriment and not poison to the mind, which will impart strength and fiber to it.

"In the choice of books this general rule is confidently recommended: Read those which in the opinion of judicious and thoughtful men have wielded the largest influence, those in which thoughtful men themselves read profoundly and untiringly. Certain books are vital and spermatic, not leaving the reader what he was; he shuts the book a richer man. They are rare; you can count them almost on your fingers. Like their authors they only appear at long intervals, and they give utterance to what lies struggling in the hearts of men, but what finds no voice till these most gifted men come and speak forth.

"With a sigh we look over the monumental libraries of our country, the Congressional, Boston, New York, and others. It is easy to count the pages a diligent man can read in a day, and the number of years which human life under favorable circumstances allows to reading, and to demonstrate that though he read from dawn to dark for sixty years, he must die in the first alcoves. But nothing can be more deceptive than this arithmetic. There are a few standard authors that we may all have upon our private shelves; and to these the annual catalogues can afford only casual and slight additions. 'The crowds and centuries of books are only commentary and elucidation of these great voices of time.' It is quite possible to find compressed into a comparatively small select library the essence of the largest collection of books. 'The old rich wine' say the Italians, 'stored in a single cask is preferable to the same juice watered and diluted till it fills a barrel or hogshead.'

"If I were asked what course of reading might be suggested with the expectation of reaping the greatest profit therefrom, something like the following would be recommended: History, biography, literature (specifically), poetry, and as much of science as possible. Works of fiction cannot be read too sparingly. For, with rare exceptions, the thousands of novels that deluge the earth are mere clap-trap, with the falsest notions of life; filled generally with drivelling sentimentality, with the crudest conceptions of responsibility, with immoralities often, and impossibilities generally. It is a singular fact that no habitual novel reader is a thinker. Indeed, nothing tends more to discolor life, to weaken the intellect, and to unstring the moral faculties. If one desires to expunge all taste for solid reading, to enfeeble the mind, unnerve the will, become aimless and visionary, and to have the moral perceptions sadly blunted; if he wishes to return spiritually and mentally as nearly as he may to that condition of gelatinous mass and pulpy substance which Professor Huxley says is the basis of life, and which he delights to call protoplasm, let him be an habitual, indiscriminate reader of novels."—Prof. W. G. Moorhead.

We must not be understood to be condemning the reading of fiction entirely. This would not be wise. For in fiction we find some of the best thoughts yet produced by any writer. Further, if we cut out all that is or contains fiction we will have little left, the Bible not excepted. Shall we cease eating vegetables because there are poisonous ones found growing? Shall we cease to eat meat because it sometimes contains living parasites? Shall we avoid the use of water because we often find it impure? Shall we cease to breathe the air because there are germs of disease floating therein? The answer could be no other than that we cannot do without these things. Shall we eat the poisonous or diseased food? No, we must select from all that is that which is wholesome food for our bodies and discard the rest. If unwittingly we partake of the poisonous food, we must set about at once to remove the ill effects from our systems. The same precaution must be taken with our reading of fiction, or of any other class of reading for that matter.

You would not permit a child to go to the woods and eat of all or any of the fruits there found unless you knew them to be wholesome. You will not eat of any thing yourself unless you feel quite sure that it will not hurt you. Why then will you allow yourself or your children to read anything or everything indiscriminately, and take the risk of poisoning the mind and soul? We want to here condemn in the strongest possible terms the reading of the trashy or sensational stories found in books, newspapers, second-class magazines, etc. Note what the professor says in the paragraph quoted above. His thoughts are correct. We have seen persons unfitted for business, for sociability, for religion, and for everything else by reading, reading, reading,—indiscriminate reading of everything available, good or bad—yes, continued, protracted, habitual reading of "words, words, words." We have seen young girls and boys form this habit of novel-reading till they were utterly worthless for aught else. Parents, avoid this mistake. Guard your children against it. Of course your children must and will read, so must you. You must and will eat, drink, breathe, too; but you will not fail to select good food and water. Why then neglect to make a careful selection of the reading matter kept about the home? If it were necessary, I would cut down on the table fare and secure good reading matter rather than neglect to provide therefor.

Other thoughts upon how to read and what to read, how to get it, etc., will be presented in another issue. Later will come the "makeup" of a Sunday school library. Several persons will name the "first twenty books for a Sunday school library." We believe this will be of value to all interested in the library movement.

THE Lord knoweth all things from the beginning; wherefore he prepareth a way to accomplish all his works among the children of men; for behold he hath all power unto the fulfilling of all his words.—1 Nephi 2: 28, Book of Mormon.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.

District Sunday school association convened at Scranton, June 8. Convention called to order by district superintendent, Harry Thomas; James W. Burns, secretary. Prayer by M. T. Short. District superintendent, Harry Thomas, and assistant superintendent, William S. Hodson, reported. Schools reporting: Atchison, Netawaka, and Scranton. Program: Paper on "The benefits of an organization," by Harry Thomas; commented on by M. T. Short, Frank J. Pierce, James W. Hudgens, James W. Burns, and James Baillie. GENERAL CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

I again call the attention of those whom it may and should concern that from several districts the branch reports have not come into my hands up to this 12th day of June, some of which are long overdue, and I now give a summary of the situation throughout the church:—

The thirty-one branches on record as existing in the South Sea, or Society Islands, have not been corrected by reports of gains and losses since 1896, but I hope that progress is being made by the officers there toward perfecting their records, and with the purpose of supplying the General Recorder with full details of changes of all kinds.

The church in the Hawaiian Islands was reported up to December 31, 1899, as were also the branches in the Victoria district of Australia. The last reports of the branches in the Sydney district of New South Wales (Australia) brought their records up to March

31, 1899, those made during the past year not having arrived.

Bro. James Baty, clerk of Manchester district, England, sent reports up to December 31, 1898, but those for 1899 have not yet arrived.

The records of London, England, were brought up to March, 1900, and those of Sheffield district to December 31, 1899.

April 2, I received from Brn. Caton and Walton a summary of the Birmingham district, England, but no details of names and of birth and baptism have yet arrived, nor accounts of deaths and other losses during several years past. I am hoping that the brethren are doing faithful work toward soon supplying me with complete corrections.

Eastern Wales' branches have been corrected up to April 30, 1900, which is good, but Western Wales has not been properly reported for a long time.

In America nearly every district was brought up before my annual report was made to General Conference. For some cause September and February reports of Kewanee district did not arrive and have not yet.

The Central California district was to meet April 13, but the branch reports have not yet come to hand. Hope they will soon.

The May conferences appointed were: Alabama, Florida, Pottawattamie, Western Maine, Northern Nebraska, and Southern Nebraska, and the reports have already arrived from Pottawattamie and Northern Nebraska. The others are looked for.

Conferences have been appointed for June in the following districts: Chatham, London (Ont.), Mobile, Northeastern Illinois, Kewanee, Nauvoo, Southeastern Illinois, Decatur, Des Moines, Fremont, Galland's Grove, Little Sioux, Northeastern Kansas, Spring River, Eastern Maine, Eastern, Northern, and Southern districts, Michigan, Nodaway, Far West, Clinton, St. Louis, Northeast Missouri, Montana, Southwestern Texas, Northern Wisconsin, and Southern Wisconsin, being in all twenty-seven districts holding June sessions. That their officers will be prompt in sending reports forward is expected.

Some conferences adjourned to meet "on call," and the following have either published no notices yet or their dates are unknown, namely: Eastern Colorado, Indiana Southern, Massachusetts, Central Nebraska, Oklahoma, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, and Northwestern Texas.

July conferences are to be held by Kentucky and Tennessee, Southern Missouri, Central Texas, and Northeastern Texas and Choctaw.

August conferences are: Pottawattamie, Northwestern Kansas, New York, Ohio, West Virginia.

September conferences appointed: Eastern Iowa, Independence, and Northern California.

October conferences: Central and Southern California districts, and Kirtland, Ohio.

The Nevada conference adjourned to meet in November.

I again urge promptness in copying upon the district records the names and items and the forwarding of the reports to me, according to the provision in the "Rules of Order," sections 173, 174.

Upon the subject of district records my idea is that a complete and perfect record of every branch within its bounds should be kept by each district, for the use and satisfaction of district officers, and also in order that district clerks may see that imperfect reports when presented shall be corrected before being sent to the General Records. Where this is done and district clerks are faithful and zealous, very much aid is given in perfecting the General Records. The district secretaries are upon the ground, so to speak, and can see to details that the General Recorder cannot attend to, or if he tries to do it he may be ignored, or he is too far away to accomplish the work needed to be done among local records. There are repeated contradictions arising in regard to birth dates and places, baptism dates and places, and as to who baptized and confirmed, and as to ordination items, and other facts and details, hence each district needs a live and active district recorder to keep reports and records well in hand; and in this there is a great lack in the church, only a portion of the districts having any record of names and items, at least in an "up-to-date" manner, such as will aid those who need information, district presidents, the General Recorder, and others.

Respectfully submitted for consideration,

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 13, 1900. 25-2t

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Florida District, Greeting:—Having to travel in the field and be absent from you, I take this means of notifying all that I have appointed sub-agents in the district, as follows:—

Bro. O. O. Simmons, of Coldwater, will receive and receipt for your tithes and offerings at any time.

Bro. John D. McArthur, of Berrydale, will officiate in like capacity to all who want to be laborers together for the advancement of this cause.

Bro. John P. Calhoun, of Calhoun, will act as sub-agent in his branch and vicinity, and accommodate all who wish to be doers of the word and not hearers only.

Any tithings or offerings sent to my address, Milton, Florida, will be receipted for by my wife, in my name.

In Doctrine and Covenants 64:5, we read: "Behold now it is called today (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned."

Again, in section 106:2, "Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you."

We are called upon now to pay tithes on what we have and what we make, and if we cannot do this, how can we be prepared in our hearts to consecrate when the call comes to build the temple at Independence?

Brethren, let us remember that "the love of money is the root of all evil," not the money itself, but the love of it. Now let us be careful to guard against the deceitfulness of riches. Let us tithe our incomes and have our hearts in shape to do the Master's will at all times, and not be like the man who hugged the large nugget of gold till he starved to death.

Praying the blessings of God upon you, and that we may all do a good work this conference year, I am your brother and colaborer,

S. D. ALLEN, Bishop's Agent.

June 11, 1900.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Washington and Oregon:—It is with feelings of sadness not unmixed with pleasure that I bid you adieu; sadness to think of the long years that will probably pass ere I see you again, and pleasure in remembering the pleasant times we have spent together. Memory will often call those occasions before me to brighten life's path as I journey on towards the better world. Three years ago I entered that field by direction of the Spirit, and I have never regretted doing so. Bro. Chase and I were ably assisted by nearly all the Saints of the mission. I do not now call to mind a single one who did not help some. By reason of this aid and that of our heavenly Father, we baptized over one hundred people, and preached over twelve hundred sermons, for which we feel to thank God and the Saints.

It has been thought best to appoint Bro. Chase and the writer to another field, but good men have been appointed to take our places, who I trust will meet the same warm reception and hearty support that we did; and that we will all work, watch, and pray for the dawning of the perfect day. Memory will always love to linger around some of the scenes and events of the past three years.

I was sick when I left that field, got worse at conference, was unable to attend much of it, was administered to and improved enough to reach home; but was taken down the second day after getting there. Four weeks have passed, and I am still unfit for duty. My trouble is mostly a gathering in my head, that commenced six weeks ago; have had it lanced twice; but the end is not yet. The Saints here—Los Angeles—have been very kind to me. How I did enjoy meeting them again after a year's absence. Surely it is good to be a Saint in these the latter days, and in Los Angeles. Two prayer meetings were mostly devoted to praying for me, and a day of fasting observed. Surely God loves such a people and is pleased when we love each other.

One evening as I lay nursing my head, my wife entered the room and said, "Can you get up and go into the sitting room, it is full of Saints, and if you could just see the dining room table, I don't know but it will break if they continue to pile things on it." I was not able to go; but as music and song floated out from the room, I thought how good it is to be among the Saints, even if one is sick. A warmer, more liberal-hearted people than the Los Angeles Saints we do not meet these days. I am anxious to visit my own branch—Garden Grove; for another noble band of Saints live there — Saints that I have preached for and prayed with for the last twenty years. I often wonder what the coming twenty years will bring,—I hope Christ and the end of this preaching.

Bro. Chase is in our field of work, and it is needless to say, is hard at work. I hope to be with him by the middle of this month.

We will be glad to hear from Saints and friends, especially those of the Central district of California, who want preaching done. Mail addressed me at San Jose, California, will always reach me. The district has a new tent that we want to make good use of this summer, and to do so must have the coöperation of the Saints; so those wanting tent work done in their neighborhood, please write us. HIRAM L. HOLT.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 2.

To Saints and Friends of Nevada Mission, Greeting:—Sister Jane Gault of Reno, Nevada, purchased a light spring wagon, harness, and tent 12x14, all new, and a fine large horse, for one hundred and thirty-five dollars. All who have seen the outfit consider it very cheap. The above outfit is not for Bro. Daley, or any private property, but is to be owned by Nevada district when above amount is paid to Sr. Gault, and can be disposed of by the conference of said district any time they feel disposed.

Now beloved Saints and friends, as Sister Gault has started me out in the mission with a good durable rig, please remember her, and help pay for the same. Please do what you can as soon as possible. All money sent to Mrs. Jane Gault, Reno, Nevada, box 218, she will give you credit for. Should any one give me money to pay on the above amount, I will send it to her. My missionary address will be Reno, Nevada.

I will be glad to hear from any part of the mission, from the Saints or friends to the cause, in regard to the work or possibilities of getting new openings. I am now in Smith's valley, Lyon county. I see no opportunity to hold regular preaching meeting in this valley, as there are only nineteen families scattered over quite a large valley. I rode on my wheel yesterday six miles and talked two hours with a family of the Methodis faith. I will do what I can by visiting and private talking; will go to Mason valley, which I am informed has a greater population; the distance from here is thirty miles. I need tracts, and am not able at present to buy them. If any one sends tracts to me for distribution to Reno, Nevada, in care of Mrs. Jane Gault, she will forward them to me. I have not one elder to help me in this mission, so I will try and open up the work in new places where there are no Saints. I will be glad for any counsel in regard to the location of towns or settlements in the State, that I may be able to reach. I have baptized five since my report to General Conference. Brethren and sisters, give me all the counsel and aid you can; many are well acquainted with the country and towns that I can reach, and I will be pleased to hear from you. Pray for me and the general interest of the work in this mission.

THOMAS DALEY.

To all the Saints and Local Ministers in St. Louis District in Illinois, and the City of St. Louis and Suburbs, Greeting:—Having been detained on account of business, I did not reach my mission field until June 9. No other missionary has been appointed to this mission yet, hence I trust that the local ministry will give all the assistance they can. I shall be pleased to hear from any regarding new openings and the needs of the work. The field is large, yet I feel by united and rightly directed efforts that we shall be able to accomplish much good. May God bless each member in this mission that we may feel that at the close of this conference year he has been with us and that through his aid we have accomplished much good.

My mission address will be No. 2615 North Market street, St. Louis, Missouri.

ARTHUR ALLEN, Submissionary.

To the missionaries in the Southwestern mission:—I wish to remind you that reports are due July 1; and as I do not know all your addresses, I take this method of notifying you. All missionaries will report promptly the first day of the month. Those in Oklahoma and Indian Territory, exclusive of the Spring River district, will report to Bro. Hubert Case, of Moorehead, Iowa, or to his mission address, which he will doubtless give. Those in Texas, to Bro. T. J. Sheppard, Oklaunion, Texas. Those in Arkansas and Louisana to me direct. Brn. Sheppard and Case will see that their reports will reach me if possible by July 10, or earlier. All reports to me will reach me at Cook's Point, Texas, as I expect to be attendance at the Texas Central conference which convenes there on July 7.

H. O. SMITH, Missionary in Charge.

REUNION NOTICES.

The Massachusetts reunion will open August 4, at Silver Lake, Plympton, Massachusetts. A more delightful place cannot be found. This is the spot we have been seeking for years, and at last have found it. The pine grove cannot be excelled—healthful, cool, and refreshing. The lake—with its pure water and silvery beach surrounded with wooded hills that will resound with Zion's songs—form a picture impressive and grand; just far enough from the noise of Boston, and near enough to Old Plymouth to invite all who wish for a spiritual and restful season of joy. It is twenty-eight miles from Boston, on the Plymouth division of the Old Colony railroad, and about nine miles from Plympton station.

This will be largely a tenting reunion. The committee will secure a few places for aged Saints, and for those in feeble health, but the rest will have the delightful experience of camping out. There will be a commissary tent on the grounds, and meals supplied. Tents can be secured through Bro. F. P. Busiel, No. 24 Melvin street, Somerville, Massachusetts, who will gladly furnish price, etc.

Your committee would be pleased to know at once how many are going, so that they can make proper accommodations. There is lots of work for the committee, even if you all try to make it as light as possible for them. If you leave your order for tent early, you will supplied. If you neglect this until the last few days before date of opening, you will certainly be looking for what you cannot find, as we cannot afford to order tents that will be idle. Further information later. Committee: R. Bullard, Arlington Heights, Mass.; H. D. Simpson, Washington street, Malden, Mass.; F. P. Busiel, No. 24 Melvin street, Somerville, Mass.

The committee of Northern Missouri Reunion, or which is known as the "Maysville Reunion," met on the 9th inst. Members present: T. T. Hinderks, A. W. Head, Ben Dice, and C. P. Faul. The committee decided to move the reunion from Maysville.

This is to give notice that the Northern Missouri Reunion will be held in or at the city of Stewartsville, commencing August 31, and continuing to September 11. The citizens of Stewartsville offer the committee every inducement for holding the reunion in their city that we could ask for. We request the Saints and friends of the surrounding districts to meet with us as in the past, and this the eighth annual reunion will be a success.

CHARLES P. FAUL, Sec.

The Southwestern Iowa reunion of the Fremont and Pottawattamie districts will convene in Frank Greene's grove, three and one half miles south of Tabor, Friday, August 24 and will continue ten days. Further necessary announcements will be made in due time.

Committee { M. W. GAYLORD. P. W. FREDERICKSON. F. BECKSTED.

TWO DAYS' MEETINGS.

Eastern Iowa district will hold a two days' meeting at what is called the Advent schoolhouse, with the Osterdock branch, June 30, at ten a. m. All come that can. We want the elders to come if possible. Those who come by rail, come to Edgewood on Friday; the train will be met.

C. E. HAND, Dist. Pres.

A two days' meeting will be held at Burtville, Missouri, Saturday, June 30 and July 1. All the Saints in Johnson, and also all others who can are especially invited to attend. Elder Joseph Luff will be present, and perhaps others of the general ministry, together with the district authorities. Come one and all prepared to have a good spiritual feast.

R. MAY, Dist. Pres.

A two days' meeting will be held at Savanna, Illinois, June 23 and 24, in charge of Brn. J. C. Crabb and D. C. Smith. Clinton Saints, please take notice.

J. W. ADAMS, Dist. Pres.

Two days' meetings will be held in Alabama district as follows: At Flat Rock, July 7 and 8. At Pleasant Hill, August 4 and 5. At Lone Star, September 8 and 9. We will commence on Friday night before each date and place. We will be glad to have some of our missionaries with us. The Saints know what it will take to make the meetings a success. Then let us come praying, and be sure to bring the Spirit of God with us, and we will have good meetings.

By order of district conference,

M. K. HARP, Pres.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Central Illinois district, the new district that was ordered by the late General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, will convene at Beardstown, Illinois, July 7 and 8, to fully organize and officer the district, and put it in running order. All the branches are requested to be represented with reports and delegations. Come, Saints, and let us have a full delegation and a good time.

I. N. WHITE, Sen.,
Missionary in Charge.

NOTICES.

Our district conference is passed and we believe and hope that the joy experienced and the lessons learned have fixed in the heart of each one a firmer determination to serve the Master. The reports show a steady growth in numerical strength, surpassing that of former reports. The attendance indicates that the spirituality of the Des Moines district is on the increase, as does also the Spirit's power.

Our district has again placed me a weak instrument in charge. I do not say this to reflect on the judgment of the Saints, but I feel very weak—I hope to meet the demand.

Now, dear Saints, as we love the work and pray for its success, let us put power to our prayer such as we can, and wherein we cannot, God will supply the deficiency. We feel the need of a gospel tent, and conference decided to put forth an effort to purchase one, placing me as your treasurer and chief solicitor. So please let us do our best. Then let the presidents of each branch take up a subscription in their respective branches, and at an early day as possible send your collection to me at Perry, Iowa. We would like to have our new tent by the first of August. If there are any other Saints or friends who may chance to see our request that desire to contribute to the purchase, it will be thankfully received.

Let all Saints of the district please take notice that our reunion meeting will be held at Colfax, in Jasper County, about twenty-five miles northeast of Des Moines. Look sharp for the date not yet fixed. Also, our next conference will be held at same place.

Notice to all whom it may concern:—This is to certify that the Newton branch was on the 10th day of June, 1900, declared disorganized, and all members thereof desiring letters from said branch will notify the district clerk, H. A. McCoy, Perry, Iowa; also, those desiring letters from the Head Grove branch.

Your brother and colaborer in gospel bonds,

J. W. MORGAN.

DIED.

PENFOLD.—Sr. Rachel Penfold, mother of Sr. J. C. Clapp of Lamoni, Iowa, and Sr. Patterson of Garden Grove, California, died at San Jose, June 12, 1900, aged 78 years, after about three weeks' sickness. A true mother of Israel passed quietly and peacefully away. Her life was one of true piety and "pure religion." Always cheerful and patient, and ever ready to minister to the needs of all. Her body was affectionately laid away in the cemetery at Santa Clara, there to await the coming Lord. Funeral services by Elder J. B. Camichael, assisted by A. M. Chase.

ARGENT.—Allen Argent was born December 23, 1826, at Stambern, England; came to Australia in August, 1857. Was baptized at Argent's Hill, New South Wales, July 31, 1881. On March 3, 1900, he fell asleep in Jesus, and his weary spirit went to join the loved ones in the paradise of God. Sr. Argent and nine children remain to mourn the loss of father and husband. Being a paralytic for more than twelve years, he longed to be free from affliction and be at rest. Funeral service by Elder G. T. Ballard.

"Dear Brother, thou art gone to rest;
We will not weep for thee;
For thou art now where oft on earth
Thy spirit longed to be."

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

DWELLERS IN CLIFFS.

Denver, Col., May 25.—Scientists will make a determined effort this summer to penetrate the mysteries surrounding the history of the cliff dwellers of the Mesa Verde, Colorado, and to shed some light, if possible, on the origin of the strange race, their customs, and what was their position among ancient tribes.

Many exploring parties are already fitting out for the Mesa Verde. Prof. George Dorsey, of the Field Columbian museum, has announced that he will visit the famous ruins for the purpose of obtaining information about the cliff dwellers, and a party of English scientists is equipping itself for a similar tour. This party will soon leave Denver and, besides a thorough equipment for excavation, will carry many large cameras with telephoto lenses. This will be the first time that the telephoto lens has been used for purposes of exploration. There are ruins in the Mesa Verde which are inaccessible to the photographer who carries an ordinary outfit. The only way to photograph these ruins is across a wide canyon, and the distance is too great for an ordinary lens to do effective work. The telephoto, which combines the effectiveness of the ordinary lens with the magnifying power of a telescope, will give some new and important views of these remarkable dwellings which have hitherto defied the efforts of the photographer.

Not only will the Mesa Verde ruins be more systematically and thoroughly explored than ever before, but scientific studies will be prosecuted in Denver. The Colorado State Historical society has gathered a large collection of cliff dweller skulls, bones, pottery, implements, and pictures, and Dr. A. L. Bennett, an eminent anthropologist, has been engaged to study this collection and make deductions as to the life and times of the lost race. Dr. Bennett has done anthropological work in Africa, his observations on the cannibal "Fang" tribe being published by the Anthropological institute of Great Britain and Ireland.

AN UNEXPLORED FIELD.

So far but little scientific work has been done in the endeavor to ascertain something about the cliff dwellers. Nordenskold, a Norwegian, has made a few careful notes and measurements, and that about ends the work. Dr. Bennett intends to find out facts by comparative measurements of skulls and bones and by studying the pottery and picture writings. What the scientific world wishes to find out is to what race and what tribe the cliff dwellers belonged, and why they chose such a peculiar situation for their houses. It is a peculiar fact that all cliff dwellers' skulls are flattened at the back, supposed to have been caused by artificial means, such as binding against a board. Dr. Bennett is inclined to think that this may have had a psychological effect on the tribe, reducing certain portions of the brain by pressure and causing naturally courageous Indians to become timid and to flee to the cliffs for protection against enemies.

At present, scientists do not know whether cliff dwellers belonged to the bronze age or to the stone age. Dr. Bennett is inclined to think that research will prove that the cliff dwellers were the ancestors of the Pueblo Indians and that they were connected also with the mound builders.

Thomas J. Diven, an eminent archæologist, who has returned from an inspection of the San Clara cliff dwellings, near Santa Fe, New Mexico, declares that the people who inhabited the strange dwellings were the ancestors of the Pueblo Indians, and that they cannot be regarded as a lost race.

"History knows of no extinct people," says Prof. Diven. "Absorption by a conqueror is not extinction. The cliff dwellers were the ancestors of the Pueblos, and were driven from their strange dwelling by some great demonstration of nature that was as terrible as the eruption of Vesuvius when Pompeii was wiped out of existence. Everything proves this theory of abandonment. The Pueblos' metates or grinding stones, their fireplaces, their idols and their pottery—all are similar in design and manufacture to those left in the cliff dwellings. The beams that now support the roofs of the adobe huts of the Pueblos are precisely similar to the charred beams thrown up by the excavation made in the San Clara ruins by the Smithsonian institution officials. Their adobe dwellings are built in terraces, receding with every story and similar in design to the terraced rock cliffs that the cliff dwellers left behind.

EVIDENCE OF CATACLYSM.

"In my opinion the cliff dwellers voluntarily left their residences and changed their nature and their mode of living for the same reason that Pompeii and Herculaneum were abandoned, and for the same reason that Sodom, Gomorrah, and other cities around the Dead Sea were deserted by their terror-stricken inhabitants. Some powerful cataclysm of nature operated with irresistible force on superstitious natures. The most casual inspection will convince one that since those dwellings in the cliffs were constructed a terrible earthquake has shaken that region. In some places the caves have been split open, while rocks as large as houses and bearing marks of human workmanship lie far below, where they could not have been hurled by the hands of men. In some places, great rocks, falling from above, have lodged on the terraces and tipped back into the openings, forever closing all egress and ingress. Along the whole front of the cliffs lie rocks, great and small, by the thousands of tons. Volcanic cones and lava streams not far away are mute evidences of the forces that caused this cataclysm.

"The greatest earthquake of modern times must have been a mere tremble in comparison with the mighty force that tumbled these great rocks about in such profusion and that created such destruction in the homes of the cliff dwellers. It must have been thought that the gods had cursed their place of abode, and the terror-stricken cliff dwellers fled to the plains. To this day the Pueblos shun the place of the accursed. None of them can ever be persuaded to enter one of those dwellings. This feeling of terror can be explained only as an inheritance from the cliff dwellers, and to my mind is additional proof that the Pueblos of the present day are the survivors of this stricken tribe that once took up its abode in the cliffs."

In order to preserve the cliff dwellings for the benefit of science, the women of Colorado have been engaged in the work of securing legislation. Through the efforts of the Colorado Woman's club and of Congressmen Shafroth and Bell and Senator Henry M. Teller, a bill setting aside the Mesa Verde as a national park will become a law. No excavations will be permitted unless conducted by scientists, and the destructive work of the relic hunter will be stopped. Already some of the finest cliff dwellings in the district have been ruined by unskilled excavators and excellent pieces of pottery, implements, and even mummies have been dragged off to oblivion. All this material will be saved in the future and doubtless some definite knowledge of the cliff dwellers and their habits will soon result.—Chicago Record, May 26, 1900.

WORDS SPELLED BY SOUNDS.

The following is a unique way of getting round the correct spelling of certain words, or of showing the extreme elasticity of our mixed up language:—

The Northwestern Magazine gives the following unique composition written by a twelve year old schoolgirl. Let our young readers see if they cannot make it still more puzzling:—

"A right suite little buoy, the son of a kernel, with a rough round his neck, flue up the road as quick as a dear. After a thyme he stopped at the house and wrung the belle. His tow hurt hymn and he kneaded wrest. He was two tired to raze his fare, pail face, and a feint mown of pane rose from his lips. The made who herd the belle was about to pair a pare, but she through it down and ran with all her mite, for fare her guessed would not weight, but when she saw the little won tiers stood in her eyes at the site. 'Ewe poor dear. Why do you lye hear? Are yew dyeing?' 'Know,' he said, 'I am feint.' She boar him inn her arms, as she ought, to a roam where he might be quiet, gave him bred and meet, held a cent bottle under his knows, untide his choler, rapped him up warmly, gave him a suite drachm from a viol, till at last he went forth as hail as a young hoarse."

SWEET VOICES.

There is no power of love so hard to keep as a kind voice; but it is hard to get it and keep it in the right tone. One must start in youth, and be on the watch night and day, while at work and while at play, to get and keep a voice which shall speak at all times the thought of a kind heart.

But this is the time when a sharp voice is more apt to be acquired. You often hear boys and girls say words at play with a quick, sharp tone, almost like the snap of a whip. If any of them get vexed you hear a voice which sounds as if it were made up of a snarl, a whine, and a bark. Such a voice often speaks worse than the heart feels. It shows more ill-will in tone than in words. It is often in mirth that one gets a voice or a tone which is sharp, and which sticks to him through life, and stirs up ill-will and grief, and falls like a drop of gall upon the listener. Some people have a sharp home voice for use, and keep their best voice for those whom they meet elsewhere. We would say to all boys and girls, "Use your best voice at home." Watch it by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in the days to come than the best pearl hid in the sea. A kind voice is a lark's song to heart and home. It is to the heart what light is to the eye.—Boston Journal.

THE RELEASE OF THE ROSE.

The rose, once Queen of a fair demesne—
  Breathing of love and trust—
Is drooping now from her darkened bough
  In the prison bonds of dust.
Her fragile red, whence the dew has fled,
  Is filled with a nameless pain;
In yearning leaves how her spirit grieves
  For the swift release of rain!

A sudden stir of the clouds for her,
  With the thunder's martial boom—
The lightning's flash, and the rain's soft plash,
  Unlocking the gates of bloom!
The rose is bright with a new-born light,
  And the joy of danger past—
She lifts her head from the garden bed
  Like a queen re-crowned at last.

A LITTLE SERMON.

What this troubled old world needs
Is less of quibbling over creeds,
Fewer words and better deeds.

Less of "Thus and so shall you Think and act, and say and do."
More of "How May I Be True?"

Less of wrangling over text;
Less of creed and code perplexed;
More of charity unvexed.

Less of shouting: "I alone
Have the right to hurl the stone."
More of heart that will condone.

Less of ruling: "Hear! You must Hold this tenet, wrong or just."
More of patient, helpful trust.

Less of microscopic scan
Of the faults of fellow-man.
More of brave, uplifting plan.

Less of dogma, less pretense,
More belief that Providence
Will sanctify our common sense.

More of chords, of kindness blent
O'er the discords of dissent.
Then will come the great content.

"Just to be good, and to do good."
Simple, plain, for him who would
A creed that may be understood.

GETTING THE GREATEST GOOD FROM BOOKS.

"Summer reading is often largely composed of fiction, and if we choose good novels and bright, wholesome short stories, we are not exactly wasting our time, although every one of these long summer days ought to give us a return in something besides entertainment and amusement," writes Margaret E. Sangster, in the July Ladies' Home Journal. "I fancy that most girls would be the gainers by keeping on hand a good, strong book, a volume of history, or biography, or travels, or essays, and devoting a portion of their time to it each morning or each afternoon consecutively, keeping a bookmark at the place where they break off and moving it on day by day. If, added to this, each girl would keep near her a little blank memorandum book in which she should enter dates, copy passages which impress her as worth remembering, or write her own comments on what she reads, she would gain an incalculable store of mental wealth by the summer's end."

The Brooklyn Eagle says: "The idea of a universe without a creator is unthinkable. The idea of a creator not omniscient and not omnipotent is unthinkable. The idea of foreknowledge without foreorder is unthinkable. That is the Godward side of theology. God can neither be postulated nor conceived nor worshiped nor trusted nor believed on any other basis."

The Interior (Liberal Presbyterian) acknowledges that "there is no escape from this argument. We never try to resist it," it says, "at the same time God says it is not so." "As I live," saith the Lord, "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked but that he should turn and live."—Ex.

As a result of the last anthropological congress, Prof. Virchow is less sure than ever about the Darwin origin of man and after forty years of Darwinism he says we must still regard the two great questions for anthropology to be, (1) Is there a secondary transformation of types? and (2) Can it be inherited? That is, the fundamental questions of the "descent of man" are still open. Dr. Bumiller showed that the supposed middle link between men and monkeys, the "Pithecanthropus erectus," found in Java, is nothing but a baboon. The missing link is still missing.—Ex.

Modern church methods are inadequate, according to Rev. Johnson Henderson. Says he:—

"The church is deserted by the masses, and every vagary in the form of divine healing, ethical culture, Christian science, spiritualism, and theosophy recruits from its ranks. The church is too frightened of criticism and too cowardly to be aggressive. It is so afraid of being contaminated by the world that it is losing its power to save."—Ex.

LAMONI, IOWA, JUNE 27, 1900.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

The Editor left the office and the routine of office duties on Thursday, June 7, for a tour of church work, the objective points being conferences of the Chatham and London districts in the Province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada; a church opening at Niagara Falls, on the Canada side, and a possible church dedication at Waterford, in the London district.

The Chatham conference was held at Tilbury, a point on the Michigan Central Railway, some thirty-five miles east from Detroit, Michigan.

The crossing of the line between the territorial possessions of the two governments, the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, a colonial dependence of Great Britain, is always accompanied by speculative thought, and, we confess, to a sense of partial irritation caused by the fact that the personal belongings of the person crossing are subject to an official examination and inspection by officers of the respective governments, the object being to prevent the bringing into the countries which the officers represent any of those various articles of commerce upon which the respective governments have chosen to levy a duty for the purpose of the protection of industries within their jurisdiction, or for the raising of a revenue for governmental expenses. And, as the travelers as a class are innocent of intention to become smugglers, the sense of suspicion irritates to some extent. However, as we are admonished to be subject to the powers that be, the editor, with quite a goodly number of the Saints, dwellers in Detroit, put grips and satchels at the mercy of the inspectors for her majesty, Queen Victoria, and were pleasantly passed, no article subject to duty being found with any of us.

The party comprised Bro. N. F. Lyddy and wife, Sr. Mary and son, Sr. Monroe, Sr. Watt, of Toledo, Ohio, and daughter, Sr. McDonald, Bro. E. Claus, Mr. R. Sevanayaka, of Colombo, Ceylon, a looker on from the far East, and a few whose names we do not recall.

We reached the hamlet of Tilbury, and were met at the station by Brn. R. C. Evans, B. St. John, and John Shields, and were soon at the place of meeting, where we found the district Sunday school convention in full swing, it being Saturday, June 9, Sr. Jessie Hackett, president of the district association, presiding.

The conference began, and in due time closed on Monday, June 11, the time having been occupied by the exercises incident to such occasions.

Bro. George Green, president of the Chatham district, presided, Bro. R. C. Evans, missionary in charge, and the editor being associated in presiding duties, an arrangement which duly recognized and respected the official standing of the several persons and yet preserved the even balance of business affairs by having them looked after by the local custodians of the rights of the Saints.

It was a very pleasant gathering, and was ably conducted in its material features.

The Saints at Tilbury, some forty or more in number, had appointed a committee of reception and entertainment. This committee hired the rink, had the earthen floor covered with a thick coating of sawdust, insuring cleanliness and dry footing, arranged the stand and seats for the accommodation of several hundred, if they chose to come.

The rink made a pleasant, large, and comfortable place of meeting. Adjoining the main floor, there was a smaller space running the whole length of the rink. Here the committee had made three long tables of trestles and lumber, two of thirty-two feet in length and one of forty-eight feet. These were spread for the meals, and all ate at them, both residents and visitors, making it a regular family arrangement, which was quite convenient. We did not learn how many were in attendance, but it reached above two hundred. No charge was made for entertainment, no collection taken to repay the branch for any expense; but the visitors voted an amount from the district treasury, as a small part of assistance. At the closing session, by request, Bro. Mifflin, chairman of the branch committee, handed up a bill as a matter of information, and to our surprise it was to the effect that at an actual expense of less than $37, the branch had taken care of the entire conference. Of course this did not include the work done by the members in preparing food and caring for the tables, but did include cost of hire of the rink, and lighting at night. Delegates and visitors slept at the houses of the various members, their friends, and hostess to those who chose them.

We have never known a conference taken care of at so little expense. The food was good and abundant, and the sociability of the plan commends it to the consideration of branches in districts where conferences are held. The work of preparing the place of meeting, securing food supplies, cooking, and arranging tables and waiting on the guests at table, was all done by volunteers of the branch and visitors, whoever had time and disposition to help.

From Tilbury to Chatham, is a short run on the C. P. R., which means Canadian Pacific Railroad. Quite a number of the Saints from the east of Tilbury were passengers with the editor on the short run.

At Chatham, two meetings were held; one on Monday, the other Tuesday evening. Both were well attended, so far as the Saints were concerned, but only a few of those outsider the church cared to attend. Bro. Ernest Long presided, and the streets had been well covered with posters advertising our meeting; but "Bobs" (Lord Roberts) would have drawn a larger crowd. We were blessed in our effort, though the crowd was absent. We remembered words we had once received in rebuke for refusing to speak because the people did not turn out, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; thou knowest not which shall prosper, this or that," and did the best we could.

From Chatham to Detroit by boat is a very pleasant trip; some eighteen miles down the Thames river to lake St. Clair and across the lake some twenty miles, gives a chance for change, pleasant and exhilarating. The day, June 13, was wondrously fair, the waters of lake and river placid, the speed of the boat creating breeze enough to give piquancy to the atmosphere. The party, consisting of Mr. Dunne, jeweler of Chatham, his wife and her sisters Maggie and Anne Hildreth, Brn. F. Gregory, R. C. Evans, and the editor, made the time pass pleasantly. Sisters Dunne and Hildreth had provided lunch and so the inner and outward man were not forgotten.

At Detroit the party was met by Sr. Lyddy, son Ralph, and Sr. Munroe, who kindly chaperoned us to the Belle Isle, in the Detroit river, a beautiful summer resort where the usual amusements of the pleasure-seeking citizens, with wives, and children, sweethearts, lovers, and tired toilers may spend minutes and hours in idle or gentle pastimes, to their heart's content and their money's worth. Part went boating, another bathing, of which the latter class the editor was not one.

The return from Detroit to Chatham was varied from the common by the rising and breaking of a rainstorm, accompanied by some wind. The boat, however, kept an even keel and no one was seatossed or seasick. Sleep was welcome when it came, boat getting in at nine o'clock. It was the editor's first experience on a fresh water lake.

A run to London occupied the forenoon of the 14th, where letters from home and elsewhere were gratefully received, and gave an afternoon's employment in replying to them.

The queen's government has a military school of instruction at London, buildings, parade grounds, and other necessary paraphernalia for making warriors of Canadian subjects. There was a twelve days' gathering of the clans in progress. Some 3,000 colonial troops, including a cavalry division, commanded by Col. Aylmer, were in camp, and undergoing the drilling processes through which the citizen is developed from an independent moving thinker, to a conscious, self-acting machine—a soldier whose first, last, and only duty is to "obey orders," and kill, maim, and wound, and be wounded, maimed, or killed, for the glory of the flag, as the fortunes of war may determine.

Bro. R. C. Evans and family with the editor climbed the hill to the camp, and witnessed the evolutions, and heard the music in the afternoon. In the evening a grand tattoo was held to witness the parade and see the fireworks. The crowd was simply immense. A roped enclosure, seated with chairs, had been prepared by some beneficent society, by permission of the authorities, in which persons could secure seats at ten cents per chair. We were content to stand outside where but little could be seen by reason of the density of the crowd, the ground being level. There were torch light bearers, marching of the soldiery led by bands, both orchestral and military, trumpet, drum, and bugle, competing with organized bands of wind instruments.

At the close, fireworks, rockets, shedding showers of colored fires, roman candles, and two set pieces on frames, Lord Roberts and Queen Victoria, wound up the evening's program.

Everywhere were the flags, the cross of St. George, the Union Jack, and the arms of the Empire, singly and in groups, large and small. An estimate of 15,000 people is probably too small to measure the number. It was a characteristic, enthusiastic assembly of British subjects, boisterous but orderly, with camp police in scarlet and black, instead of the blue coated "cops" of United States municipalities. No one was hurt that we heard of. We saw no one that was under the sway of King Alcohol, or ill-natured.

Reflections upon the uselessness of war, the national wickedness of shedding of blood, the waste of life and treasure in the South Africa by the British Empire, the same sort of waste now going in the Philippines by the United States government, and speculation as to how both wars would terminate served to fill the time while the spectacular show was going on.

Notwithstanding the repulsiveness of war and bloodshed for national glory, there was something attractive in the sight of the men in scarlet and black "panoplied as if for war," in the witnessing the serried ranks of armed warriors marching to the stirring strains of martial music, which seemed to make even the air throb with excitement as well as to stir the blood to quicker pulsations.

The "setting off" of the picture of Queen Victoria was the signal for departure, and with the national air, "God save the Queen," the thousands of civilians left the camp to the men in uniform, who would bivouac in their tents whose white tops shone in the partial light of the flambeaux, and the quiet stars shining overhead, for there was no moon.

London is a typical city of some forty-five or fifty thousand inhabitants. It is in its residence and business portions, a model city, clean, airy, and deservedly healthy, so far as municipal care can make it so. The streets are wide and made to the boulevard pattern. The houses are set back from the street quite a space, the lawns nicely sodded and covered and surrounded by shrubs and shade and ornamental trees, hard and soft maple, ash, elm, box elder, chestnut, mountain ash, and a variety or two that we do not recognize; these also line the sides of the streets, often shading the strip of granolithic walk, a kind of artificial stone formed of cement, gravel, and sand, very smooth and hard, and making a splendid sidewalk.

London was at the first a city in a forest, and obtained the name of "The Forest City," which name still sticks to it, and which because of the abundance of shade and ornamental trees, shrubs, and trailing vines it still deserves. It is the home of our active elder and missionary in charge, R. C. Evans, for many years known throughout Ontario as the "Boy Preacher;" but who now is growing stout, and from his years and dignity has outgrown the appellation. He is nearing the forty year mark, but as yet shows but little the wear of years and labor.

We have spoken twice in the Saints' church on Maitland street, to fair audiences. Bro. William Fligg is presiding, a genial, whole-hearted man, anxious for the good of the work. He was sorely disappointed that his advertisement of our coming did not fill the house with anxious or curious listeners, and so expressed himself; but we consoled him by assuring him that we understood both his love for the progress of the work and the causes which operated to keep people from attending a June week night meeting, and that no harm was done our self-love, by the house not being full.

A PLEDGE TO TEACH GOOD MORALS.

Attempts have been made at times to take advantage of and disparage the statement of the President of the Reorganized Church at the time he was chosen to preside at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860.

The statement referred to is as follows:—

> In conclusion, I will come to you if you will receive me, give my ability, and the influence my name may bring, together with what little power I possess, and I trust by your prayers and faith to be sustained. I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you, or the code of good morals.

The objection seems to be that this pledge is construed to mean that the president would not present anything to which the people should object, no matter whence he might receive it.

Those who make this objection neglect to take notice of what had preceded the statement found fault with; and also fail to give the credit to the statement itself that is due to it. We quote two of them:—

> I have come here not to be dictated to by any men or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.
> I believe in the doctrines of honesty and truth. The B ble contains such doctrines, and so do the Book of Mormon and the Book of Covenants, which are auxiliaries to the Bible.

The spirit of fairness would lead a man to take the whole discourse as the index to the man and what he stated.

The man who was present to be put on an acceptance to the office of president, or to be subject to a rejection, had already stated that he had been led to them as a people by what he believed to be spiritual direction. That he came as dictated by a power not his own, and would be dictated by that power. That he did not come to be "dictated by men or any set of men."

He then goes on to state that there was a principle taught that he held in "utter abhorrence." He referred to the dogma of plural marriage.

Following this, in its place, he pledged himself not to teach or promulgate dogma or doctrine which should not meet the approval of the people, or "the code of good morals." Whatever doctrine would be contrary to the code of good morals, found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, which he had already given as the basis, the standards of decision and avowed his adherence to as teaching the "doctrines of honesty and truth," which doctrines he said he believed, he would not promulgate.

There is not a word in that statement of position that bears a mark that the man making it would hesitate to declare what should come to him from God; not a word that will justly bear the implication that he was to be, or pledged himself to be, subject to the dictation of the people, in regard to what he might receive as the word of the Lord, or preach to them as doctrine; but there is a direct pledge that what he should promulgate should be approved of by them, or lacking their approval should be approved by the "code of good morals."

It is entirely within the rule of right principle that whatever a leader or presiding officer should present to the flock should bear the closest scrutiny in regard to morality; and now, after forty years of association with the people, the man who gave that pledge is prepared to answer to his record, as to whether or not he spoke without due regard to the truth of God's word, or in what he said did violence to principles of honor, uprightness, and virtue as God has given them to the church.

COMMENTS ON THE SUPPLEMENT.

The following excerpts are from two of our exchanges:—

We are under obligations to The Saints' Herald, an able advocate of the Mormon faith, published at Lamoni, Iowa, for a large and comprehensive manual, being the minutes of the forty-seventh General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints held in Lamoni, Iowa, during the early part of last April. The minutes show an immense and unremitting amount of labor zealously performed by the leaders and officials of that body. This organization of religionists have a stronger necleus about Lamoni than at any other point in the world, and through a former personal acquaintance in that vicinity we are led to believe that a more intelligent, decorous, industrious, and persevering community of worshipers would be difficult to find.—The Cordell (Oklahoma) Messenger.

One of the most comprehensive supplements we have seen issued in a long time came last week with the Saints' Herald, published at Lamoni, Iowa. It contained the proceedings of the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, held in that city last April, and consisted of 306 pages. In the proceedings we note the name of Elder E. Keeler, who used to be engaged in business in Grant City. He is now in California.—Worth County (Missouri) Times.

PROSPECTS OF GRACELAND.

On another page will be found a "notice" given by the Graceland College board. We would call the attention of the Saints to it. The board has been energetically at work, and are earnest in their zeal for the welfare of our church school.

The personnel of the faculty for next year has been determined. It will be about the same as it was last year, except that the musical department will be under the control of Audentia Anderson instead of A. H. Mills, and Ruth L. Smith will resume her work in the course in elocution.

Not many of the missionaries have reported on the matter of the $25 subscriptions, but the reports received are encouraging, and the Bishop is sanguine of the results, and thinks that it is only a question of a short time until our college debt will be wiped out.

Thus the outlook is not at all discouraging. All that is needed is for the Saints to be more united. They should remember that Graceland is a church institution controlled by conference action as much as is the publishing department. Graceland's welfare thus becomes of personal interest to every member of the church. The school is entitled to assistance from every Saint who is able to assist.

We have a church college, let us support it generously, and pray for the hastening of the day when instead of one school we can point with pride to many schools under our control.

TWO GUILTY OF POLYGAMY.

The religionists who predominate in the Salt Lake valley have fared badly of late. Two of their number have been tried by the courts of the land and found guilty of unlawful cohabitation.

On May 26 John C. Graham was declared by a jury to be guilty, and on June 11 he appeared before Judge Norrell for sentence, and was fined $250, or confinement in the county jail for two hundred and fifty days. It is expected that the case will be appealed.

B. H. Roberts was the other guilty one, as the following will show:—

Salt Lake City, Utah, June 21.—B. H. Roberts, the Utah congressman who was ousted by the House of Representatives, was today found guilty of unlawful cohabitation with Dr. Margaret Curtis Shipp Roberts on an agreed statement of facts that the defendant had married her several years ago, had at times lived at her house while he had a legal wife living at Centerville, Utah. The jury was out but fifteen minutes.—Chicago Chronicle.

This develops a phase of the question of polygamy which, we presume, is not at all relished by the church in Utah. That two of their leading and prominent men, one a church representative and also a politician, and the other a holder of a government position in one of their cities, should thus be declared breakers of the law regulating cohabitation, puts that body of worshipers in a bad light. They have repeatedly claimed that they were living in harmony with the laws of the country, and that polygamy no more caused them to be at variance with the United States' government. Amnesty was granted them on conditions that such was the case. Their leaders vouched for the fidelity of the church members to the laws meant to stamp out the detestable practice. The question naturally comes to one, if their leaders have so manifestly been breaking this law, what means it?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. W. H. Kelley writes from Creolo, Ohio, June 20:—

Bro. O. B. Thomas is here. There is a Methodist preacher in the village who seems to be spoiling for debate. Bro. Kirkendall is looking after him. He talks Greek and writes poetry, so I shall leave him in the tender care of Brn. Kirkendall and Thomas. I don't think his teeth are very long anyway; but a combination of poetry and Greek is enough to scare any ordinary mortal.

Bro. A. C. Barmore, on June 20, wrote from Toronto, Ont.:—

By agreement between Brn. R. C. Evans and J. H. Lake, I have been transferred to the Canada mission. My address is 8 Waterloo Terrace, Toronto, Ontario.

Bro. J. D. Jones, writing from Kewanee, Ill., under date of June 18, says that since 1897 the Kewanee Saints have reduced the debt on their church building from $1,300 down to less than $300, and expresses the hope that the debt will be entirely wiped out soon. He also says:—

It was Children's Day with us yesterday, and the heart was made glad to hear the sweet little buds of promise recite, and chant their thanks and praise. Elder Crabb last evening gave us another of his soul-saving sermons.

Bro. W. H. Walling, under date of June 20, writes from Custer, S. D.:—

Am preaching every Sunday to good audiences and attentive listeners.

Bro. G. A. Smith, in a card to Bro. R. M. Elvin, writes from Fremont, Indiana, June 18:—

C. Scott is with me. Our district conference was exceedingly good. A wonderful degree of the Spirit manifested; the Saints comforted, cheered, and encouraged to go on.

Bro. Elvin says he has received several such encouraging reports from members of the High Priest Quorum. The work is onward.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. W. M. Self writes encouragingly from his Nebraska field. He has visited a number of branches, and reports that the Saints generally are alive to the interests of the work. He is at work, and is active.

From the Wray Weekly Times, we learn that Bro. A. B. Hanson is busy near Wray, Colo., or was at that date, June 16. E. D. Bullard is with him.

We have received from Robert Low's Son, New York City, an oddity in the way of books. It is called the "Turtle Book." It contains twenty pages, printed on heavy book paper in two colors of ink, red and green. There are fifty-two drawings and verses by Charles J. Budd and Emma A. Opper, representing turtles as doing and saying many queer things.

We are asked to call the attention of the traveling ministry to the fact that Bro. and Sr. Geo. Burnham, good, staunch Saints, live close to the depot at Middletown, Conn., and will welcome at any time any of the Saints. Their address is 50 Terry street. Call on them, brethren.

There seems to be a tendency on the part of the members of the Lamoni branch to stay away from the Sunday night preaching service. Last Sunday night there were about one hundred and twenty-five people in the congregation. The question might be asked, Will it not pay to dispense with the evening service?

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. II.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

THEY COULD WRITE, AND DID WRITE.

The Mexican calendar stone shows that they could not only move great stones, but that they could engrave also.

This stone was found near the site of the present city of Mexico, buried some feet beneath the soil, of the same character on which was engraven an almost infinite number of hieroglyphics, signifying the divisions of time, the motions of the heavenly bodies, the twelve signs of the Zodiac, with references to the feasts and sacrifices of the Mexicans, and is called by Humboldt, the Mexican calendar, in relief, on basalt.—American Antiquities, p. 246.

In an artificial hill opposite Marietta, on the Ohio, a Mr. Ash, an English traveler, in 1826, found a skeleton and some human relics, which Mr. Ash describes in this way:—

Under a heap of dust and tenuous shreds of feathered cloth and hair, a parcel of brass rings, cut out of a solid piece of metal, and in such a manner, that the rings were suspended from each other, without the aid of solder or any other visible agency whatever. Each ring was three inches in diameter, and the bar of the rings an half inch thick, and were square: a variety of characters were deeply engraved on the sides of the rings, resembling the Chinese characters.—Ibid., pp. 87, 90.

On pages 93, 94, Mr. Priest says:—

The etching on the square sides of those rings of brass, in characters resembling Chinese, shows the manufacturer, and the nation of which he was a member, to have had a knowledge of engraving, even on the metals, equal with artists at the present time, of which the common Indian of the West knows nothing. . . . The characters on those rings show the ancient Americans to have had a knowledge of letters.

In the wild and savage country of Guiana, in South America, are mountains of a prodigious height, on whose smooth and perpendicular sides, which seem once to have been a barrier to mighty waters, are engraved, at a surprising distance from their base, the figures of animals; also the sun, moon, and stars, with other hieroglyphical signs.—Ibid., pp. 151, 152.

Such were the hieroglyphic signs of the ancient Egyptians. (Rawlinson's Ancient Egypt, vol.1, pp. 59–67.

On the Ohio, twenty miles below the mouth of the Wabash, is a cavern, in which are found many hieroglyphics, and representations of such delineations as would induce the belief, that their authors were, indeed, comparatively refined and civilized.—American Antiquities, p. 138.

Ameghino reproduces a great many inscriptions, which he discovered within the bounds of the Argentine Republic, and which may be compared with those of Brazil.—Prehistoric America, pp. 471, 472.

In the province of Tarapaca [Chili], considerable surfaces are covered, not only with figures of men and animals, most of them of remarkable execution (fig. 201), but also with characters, which appear to be written vertically. The lines are from twelve to eighteen feet high, and each character is several inches in depth. Near Huara half-effaced inscriptions are reported, and between Mendoza and La Punta, Chili, is a large pillar, on which are marks supposed to be letters. Their indefinite character may be judged from the fact that they have been said to present some resemblance with Chinese characters.—Ibid., p. 455.

Professor Liberani discovered in the Santa Maria valley, Province of Catamarca, in the Argentine Republic, figures of animate objects accompanied by reproductions of inanimate objects, geometrical figures, and lines of dots differently combined. The same signs are met with, and this is a fact worthy of attention, constantly repeated and always in a similar order. Ameghino considers these inscriptions to indicate a complete system of writing, made up partly of figures and symbolic characters, partly of purely phonetic characters; and he is even disposed to admit that these are the remains of ancient Peruvian writing, which has been perpetuated far from the district where it first came into existence. According to Montesinos, this writing was proscribed by Pachacuti III., one of the fabulous predecessors of the historic Incas; he even had an amauta [a priest, or learned man] burned for having dared to infringe his orders.—Ibid., pp. 455, 456.

See the very close resemblance between the Egyptian letters, according to Champollion, as quoted by Professor Rafinesque, and the American letters on the monuments of Palenque, in Priest's American Antiquities, page 118.

In Professor Rafinesque's first letter to Champollion, we find the following:—

It is false that no American nations had systems of writing, glyphs, and letters. Several had various modes of perpetuating ideas.

1st Series.—Pictured symbols or glyphs of the Toltecas, Aztecas, Huaztecas, Skeres, Panos, etc. Similar to the first symbols of the Chinese, invented by Tien-hoang, before the flood and earliest Egyptian glyphs.

2d Series.—Outlines of figures or abridged symbols and glyphs, expressing words or ideas, used by almost all the nations of North and South America, even the most rude. Similar to the second kind of Egyptian symbols, and the tortoise letters brought to China by the Longma (dragon and horse) nation of barbarous horsemen, under Sui-gin.

3d Series.—Quipos or knots on strings used by the Peruvians and several other South American nations. Similar to the third kind of Chinese glyphs introduced under Yong-ching, and used also by many nations of Africa.

4th Series.—Wampums or strings of shells and beads, used by many nations of North America. Similar to those used by some ancient or rude nations in all parts of the world, as tokens of ideas.

5th Series.—Runic glyphs or marks and notches on twigs or lines, used by several nations of North America. Consimilar to the runic glyphs of the Celtic and Teutonic nations.

6th Series.—Runic marks and dots, or graphic symbols, not on strings nor lines, but in rows; expressing words or ideas; used by the ancient nations of North America and Mexico, the Talegas, Aztecas, Natchez, Powhatans, Tuscaroras, etc.; and also the Muhiscas of South America. Similar to the ancient symbols of the Etruscans, Egyptians, Celts, etc., and the Ho-tu of the Chinese, invented by Tsang-hie, called also the Ko-teu chu letters, which were in use in China till 827 before our era.

7th Series.—Alphabetical symbols, expressing syllables or sounds, not words but grouped, and the groups disposed in rows, such is the graphic system of the monuments of Otolum, near Palenque, the American Thebes. Consimilar to the groups of alphabetical symbols used by the ancient Lybians, Egyptians, Persians, and also the last graphic system of the Chinese, called Ventze, invented by Ssehoang.

8th Series.—Cursive symbols in groups, and the groups in parallel rows, derived from the last, (which are chiefly monumental,) and used in the manuscripts of the Mayans, Guatamalans, etc. Consimilar to the actual cursive Chinese, some demotic Egyptian, and many modifications of ancient graphic alphabets, grouping the letters or syllables.

9th. Series.—Syllabic letters, expressing syllables, not simple sounds, and disposed in rows. Such is the late syllabic alphabet of the Cherokis, and many graphic inscriptions found in North and South America. Similar to the syllabic alphabets of Asia, Africa, and Polynesia.

10th Series.—Alphabets or graphic letters, expressing simple sounds and disposed in rows. Found in many inscriptions, medals, and coins in North and South America, and lately introduced everywhere by the European colonists. Similar to the alphabets of Asia, Africa, and Europe.

11th Series. — Abbreviations, or letters standing for whole words, or part of a glyph and graphic delineation, standing and expressing the whole. Used by almost all the writing nations of North and South America, as well as Asia, Europe, and Africa.

12th Series.—Numeric system of graphic signs, to express numbers. All the various kinds of signs, such as dots, lines, strokes, circles, glyphs, letters, etc., used by some nations of North and South America, as well as in the Eastern Continent.—American Antiquities, pp. 305–307.

Thus we see that the ancient Americans had several systems of writing, which are said to be similar to the Old World's systems. The eighth series is cursive symbols in groups, and similar to the Chinese, and the demotic system of Egypt, which is "derived" from the seventh series, thus showing the changes in their ancient writings.

Now this is about what the Book of Mormon says about the Nephites; namely, that they wrote in Egyptian, but this Egyptian with them was changed from time to time. They could write in Hebrew also. (Mormon 4 : 8.) Some of the inscriptions are Jaredite writings, no doubt; but the Book of Mormon says nothing about them, so that there is no line drawn between the first and second writings. But they could and did write, and may have written such a book as the Book of Mormon is.

We see then how the above harmonizes with everything else on this subject. How that the ancient Peruvians (the Nephites and the early Lamanites of the Book of Mormon) could and did understand a complete system of writing. It says that they wrote in Egyptian, which "system" was changed by them from time to time. (1 Nephi 1: 1; Mosiah 1: 1; Mormon 4: 8.)

These "figures of animate objects accompanied by reproductions of inanimate objects, geometrical figures, and lines of dots differently combined," must have been far superior to the Peruvian quipo, or strings of different colors tied in loops, etc. It is evidence of a "culture now lost," and of a "vanquished race."

It is now agreed that the Peruvian antiquities represent two distinct periods in the ancient history of the country, one being much older than the other. . . . Cuzco of the Incas appears to have occupied the site of a ruined city of the older period.—Ancient America, pp. 226, 227.

"The older period" was the Nephite period. This first period was put to an end by the Lamanites taking the country. The Nephites—who would —moved northward. (Omni 1: 6, 7.)

Again, it is said that there were three periods in the history of Peru. The first, "which began with the origin of civilization, and lasted until the first or second century of the Christian era." (Ancient America, p. 264.) This period will answer to the time when the people of South America appear to have "revolted from the church" (Nephi 1: 6), and "there began to be Lamanites again in the land." This was in the year 194 A. D.

Second, there was a period of disintegration, decline, and disorder, introduced by successful invasions from the east and southeast, during which the country was broken up into small States, and many of the arts of civilization were lost.—Ancient America, p. 264.

The second period was the end of the Christian era in Peru—by revolting from the Christian Church, and from that Christian union of all things common. We can see how easy, then, at this revolt, it would be for a period of "disintegration, decline, and disorder" to obtain a foothold, and the industrial arts to be neglected, and even lost.

The third was "the period of the Incas, who revived civilization and restored the empire."

The second period lasted more than a thousand years. "Pachacuti III., one of the fabulous predecessors of the historic Incas," was very likely one of the rulers in this middle period who proscribed, as Montesinos says, their ancient system of writing, and even burned to death those who dared to infringe his orders. This order of Pachacuti III., and this long period of decline, which lasted till about the thirteenth century, will account for there being no such records in Peru as the "plates of Nephi," which are quoted from by the author of the Book of Mormon. But we can see from the myths of that country that Nephi was there; his brothers and sisters too. His life work is pointed out. "He was most skillful and handy," the myths say. The Book of Mormon says that he taught his people "to build buildings: and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious ores, which were in great abundance." (2 Nephi 4 : 3.) That is, Nephi was a capable man in any department of life—a priest and king too; and the myths say that Mancotopa, their first king, was just that kind of a man!

"Nowhere in the world, perhaps," says Nadaillac, "has man displayed greater energy" than in Peru. (Prehistoric America, p. 387.) The tombs of Peru bear witness that the ancient Peruvians were "robust;" "their bones are heavy and massive," and "every thing with them indicates great muscular force." (Ibid., p. 503.)

Such gold plates as are said to have been used and made by Nephi and Mormon to write upon, were very common in Peru at the time of the conquest. They were, many of them, about the size of our common "legal cap," and no thicker, says Squier, "than paper."

In Central America is found abundant proof that its ancient inhabitants could write. The museum of Mexico possesses a whole series of paintings or picture writings, showing the education of children, the food given to them, the tasks set them, and the punishments which were inflicted upon them. (Native Races of the Pacific States, vol. 2, p. 539.)

Hieroglyphics are met with on the monuments of Chiapas, as on those of Yucatan; on the walls of Palanque and Copan, as on those of Chichen-Itza or Quirigua. (Ibid., vol. 4, pp. 113, 124, 126, 127, 128, 130.)

Says Nadaillac,

They were sculptured or engraved on granite or on porphyry, with quartzite and obsidian implements. Iron, we repeat, was absolutely unknown: nowhere do we find it mentioned, and nowhere do we meet with the characteristic rust which is the undeniable proof of its presence.—Prehistoric America, p. 378.

But what about those "several iron implements" found under mountains of rubbish at Tula by Charnay, eh? O, we must wait "for a confirmation of that discovery." That is what they said about the horse, the sheep, swine, camel, elephant, etc; but that "waiting era" has passed with the animals; they are all found, and some—in fact many—to spare.

We are constantly being taken by surprise in such matters. Stanley found the natives at Wane-Kirumbu, Africa, working in iron, "hammers, axes, hatchets, spears, knives, swords, wire, and iron beads." (World's Wonders, p. 489.)

Even the ancestors of the natives of the Friendly Islands are believed to have been at some remote time acquainted with iron. (American Antiquities, p. 186.) The builders of the first pyramids in Egypt used iron. (Ancient Egypt, vol. 1, pp. 47, 235.) "Iron was discovered by the ancient Greeks by accident," B. C. 1400, by a "fire in the woods having melted the ore."

But the Central Americans, Nadaillac says, had letters, and these letters "were sculptured or engraved on granite or on porphyry!" When their poor rude tools gave out at working such hard stone, as is described, they could fall back to their finger nails! They had hieroglyphic signs, and then these "signs were replaced by letters, and an alphabet was complete." (Prehistoric America, p. 377.) He speaks of "a hieratic writing, known to the initiated [priestly class] only." And "Bishop Diego de Landa speaks of a graphic system; he has even preserved an alphabet of thirty-three signs." (Ibid., p. 378.)

Le Plongeon published a Maya alphabet in his "Sacred Mysteries," which is very much like the Egyptian alphabet, as published by Professor Bunsen and others. They wrote on "real paper." (Ibid., p. 379.)

The Troano manuscript is written on a strip of paper fourteen feet long by about nine inches wide. The characters, which are red, brown, sometimes blue, according to the text to which they relate, are written on both sides. The paper opens out as does a fan, and each leaf thus represents thirty-five pages.—Ibid., p. 379.

Humboldt mentions books of hieroglyphical writings among the Panoes, which were "bundles of their paper resembling our volumes in quarto."—Atlantis, p. 451.

It is known that books or manuscript writings were abundant among them in the ages previous to the Aztec period. — Ancient America, p. 187.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

So the Book of Mormon says that "there are many books and many records of every kind." (Helaman 2: 4.)

The Toltec records were destroyed by the Chichimecs, their conquerors, and later on the Aztec records were nearly all destroyed by the Spaniards, their conquerors.

Bishop Landa saved the Maya alphabet, but he confesses to have burned their books. Ytzcoatl, a Mexican sovereign, destroyed the Toltec books. Bishop Zumarraga burned the Aztec books. (Atlantis, 217; Ancient America, 189.)

Pictography was common, as would appear. It is found with the Cliff Dwellers, Colorado (Prehistoric America, p. 246); in Arizona (p. 247); on the banks of San Juan (p. 248); MacElmo (p. 248); near Pecos (p. 248); on the Puerco and Zuñi rivers (p. 249); near Salt Lake City (p. 249); in Licking Valley (p. 250); in Cuyahoga and Belmont Counties, Ohio, and in Vermont, (p. 250); in Nicaragua (p. 250); in Oajaca (p. 251); in Sonora (p. 251); in Colombia (p. 251); in Venezuela (p. 251); on the isthmus of Panama (p. 251); in Nevada and California, (p. 251); in Tennessee (p. 254); in South America (p. 254). And characters "on rocks in Dighton, Massachusetts, near the sea." (American Antiquities, p. 117.) On the Davenport tablet. (Atlantis, p. 386.) And on coins, some of which are said to resemble Roman coins, in Missouri. A Persian coin in Ohio. (American Antiquities, p. 50.) Chinese coins in British Columbia. (Bricks from Babel, p. 163.)

A round copper coin with a serpent stamped on it was found near Palenque.—Atlantis, p. 345.

Another coin was found in Guatemala with a serpent stamped upon it, entwined around a tree (Ibid., 445), very much like a Tyrian coin (Ibid., p. 444).

A relic of antiquity discovered at Cincinnati is a curiosity.

It is a spherical stone, found on the fall of a large portion of the bank of the river. It is a green stone, twelve inches in diameter, divided into twelve sides, and each side into twelve equal parts, and each part distinguished by hieroglyphical engravings.—American Antiquities, pp. 137, 138.

Greek letters are said to have been found on a prehistoric tombstone in Brazil. And on the Genesee River, United States, was found a silver relic, on which were engraved "Arabic figures and the year of our Lord 600."

Hebrew letters were found written on a parchment by a Joseph Merrick, in the year 1815, near Pittsfield, Massachusetts. The relic, Mr. Priest thinks, is of great antiquity. (American antiquities, pp. 65, 66; Native Races of the Pacific States, vol. 5, p. 93.)

A stone slab is also reported to have had written upon it "the ten commandments in ancient Hebrew." (Native Races of the Pacific States, vol. 5, pp. 94, 95.)

These last relics, Mr. Brinton thinks, are not native relics, but are the products of foreign civilization or simply frauds. Not a single coin, inscription, or memorial of any kind whatever, has been found on the American continent showing the employment, either generally or locally, of any other means of writing [wampum, hieroglyphs, etc.] than those specified.—Myths of the New World, p. 28.

Thus Mr. Merrick's rawhide and parchment and that nice stone slab on which were written the ten commandments go by the board at one dash of Mr. Brinton's pen. He says, however, that the Aztec paintings—some of them—were not painted, but "actually printed with movable blocks of wood on which the symbols were carved in relief, though this was probably confined to those intended for ornament only." (Ibid., p. 24.)

The reader will bear in mind that scientists, like preachers, don't always agree, even on "first principles." Wherever there is room for doubt, some one of them will be found there doubting.

Dr. West, of Stockbridge, relates, that an old Indian informed him, that his fathers in this country, had not long since, been in the possession of a book, which they had, for a long time, carried with them, but having lost the knowledge of reading it, they buried it with an Indian chief.—American Antiquities, p. 67.

Is that myth a fraud? Had some person, like Cowdery, been at work with this Indian's fathers? Or was this the Devil again at work with these Indians, parodying the Book of Mormon? Which?

We see that prehistoric Americans could write.

The historian Torquemada asserts that five cities [in Mexico] alone yielded to the Spanish governor on one requisition no less than sixteen thousand volumes or scrolls! Every leaf was destroyed. Indeed so thorough and wholesale was the destruction of these memorials now so precious in our eyes that very few remain to whet the wits of antiquaries.—Myths of the New World, p. 25.

A good thing it was that one book was buried!

HELENA, Mont., Jan. 30, 1899.

Editors Herald:—Elder Charles Derry married Mr. Benedict and I, and after the ceremony he and his good wife presented us a fine large copy of the Book of Mormon. When we reached our Montana home, I was nearly surrounded with strangers; so embraced the opportunity my quiet home life gave me to read books I had been wishing to read for a number of years; but my very busy business life had prevented me from doing so. The Book of Mormon was among the first I read. I not only read it, but studied it; and to help me get a clearer idea of the relation of people mentioned and to fix the dates in my mind, I made a sort of diagram, like the accompanying one, and named it, "The genealogy of the Book of Mormon." When Bro. J. W. Wight was visiting us, about the first of last December, I happened to show "my picture" to him, and he suggested I send it to you or to the Herald Office, and perhaps some use could be made of it that would help others, as it did me, while reading the Book of Mormon. It has been almost six years since I made the diagram. My impression is that I felt quite certain that it was correct. If you detect any mistakes I'll be grateful to you or to anyone for correcting or revising the same in any way. I had thought, too, that sometime I would arrange the dates differently, as, for example: state how many years B. C. that Enos kept the record instead of 179 years since Lehi left Jerusalem.

WILMINGTON, Ill., June 19.

Editors Herald:—Bro. A. J. Keck and I have just closed a series of successful tent meetings at this place. Thirty-one services were held, including one social and sacramental service, and eleven persons were baptized and confirmed members of the church. All those baptized are people well respected in the town, and seven of them are heads of families. Our meetings were nearly all well attended, and, with but few exceptions good attention was given.

The singing and music were attractive features of the meetings. Bro. Elmer Kahler lead the music with his violin, Sr. Jennie Allott played the violincello, while Sr. Marchia Robson presided at the little "Bilhorn Organ" which belongs to the tent. These, together with the congregational singing, made very enjoyable music.

One of the sisters baptized was the leading worker in the Methodist Church here, and, up to the time of her baptism, served as class leader. She seems to be very earnest and sincere, and we think that she will be the means of accomplishing good in the interest of the truth in this place. Others here are believing, and we think that in time they will be with us. There is such interest manifested here that we think the work should not be neglected, but should be carefully looked after. We are hopeful of much good being accomplished.

Bro. Henry Southwick came in on us last Friday, and has been with us since. He, Bro. Keck, and myself will leave together on the 21st., for the district conference to be held with the Mission branch. Some five or six others of the Saints in this place expect to attend also. We anticipate a pleasant and profitable time at the conference.

As soon after the conference as is convenient we want to take the tent to Pecatonica, in the upper part of the district, where there is already some interest manifested, due to the efforts of Brn. C. H. Burr, F. M. Cooper, and the writer.

We are still in the conflict, and hopeful of the final triumph of right.

In gospel bonds,

H. E. MOLER.

STRAWBERRY POINT, Iowa, June 19.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place and began meetings on the tenth, and have had real good interest. I have preached thirteen discourses, and splendid order has prevailed on all nights except the first. A man came in the meeting and remained about ten minutes, when he arose and made for the tent door, cursing and swearing, saying, "Damn such preaching," etc. Just as far down the street as we could hear, the man was still voicing such foul words. A greater degree of prejudice I never saw manifest in so small a place as this. Yet I believe there are honest people here who will yet obey the truth.

I have been blessed with excellent liberty since coming here. I expect Bro. Hand today. From this place we go to Lamont, where we hope to create a good interest. Bro. Weston lives there, and we will make our home with him.

I hope the brethren throughout the district will do all in their power to open new fields.

Brethren, all of you who hold the priesthood, strive to magnify your calling. By permitting opportunities, which present prospects for accomplishing good in behalf of the kingdom to pass unimproved, you will be held accountable. I believe if those who hold the priesthood do not strive to magnify their calling, they will die spiritually.

May all the local ministry keep an accurate account of all labor done, that we may be able to make an intelligent report at the end of the year. My permanent address is now Fairbanks, Iowa.

Anyone in the district having in their possession the book, "Life of Joseph Smith by Lucy Smith" with my name in it, will you be so kind as to send it to me? I have loaned the book to some of the Saints, but have forgotten the one.

I feel strong in the faith.

Your brother in Christ,

J. RUSSEL SUTTON.

VINCENNES, Ind., June 19.

Editors Herald:—As I am one of the isolated ones, and far away from any of the Saints, I have concluded to start a free reading room. Any suggestions from those who have had any experience in running one will be gladly received. I have only the Herald and Ensign. If any have back numbers of Autumn Leaves, I would be glad to have them sent to me.

I have written Bro. Jenkins, and am expecting him here soon. We will try to arouse an interest here. Half of the people are Catholics. It will be hard to get an interest. I hope that the Lord will bless every honest soul interested in the truth.

In the one faith,

M. ULMER.

WOODBINE, Iowa, June 21.

Editors Herald:—Since General Conference I have been trying to do something for the cause of truth, but am not aware that I have accomplished much.

Perhaps I am not so optimistic of my efforts as some others, and possibly I lack the power to accomplish the amount of good that others do; but I try to do what I can. I am glad, however, to notice from the reports of others that where I have labored to sow the seed in the past, while there appeared no signs of any immediate fruit beyond the recognition of the truth of the doctrine we teach, others have been enabled to reap, apparently a goodly harvest, so that while "Paul planted and Apollos watered, God has been pleased to give the increase." To him, the giver of all good, we cheerfully give the glory.

I have had the privilege of attending two quarterly conferences, and am pleased to say that was not only a pleasant time enjoyed, but there seemed to be a growing disposition on the part of both officers and members to cling to the Rod of Iron, the word of God, that leads to the tree of life, and to push forward the cause of truth. The apparent obstacles that stand in the way do not deter such from using their endeavors to spread the truth.

I am sorry to say that difficulties have appeared in the Little Sioux and Galland's Grove districts, that would appear to retard the spread of the truth, in the affliction brought upon some of our best and noblest workers. Bro. A. M. Fryando has been rendered unable to do active labor for many months, and he is greatly missed in the field; but when I saw him last he seemed cheerful, full of zeal, and desirous to go forth, as of old, and thrust in his sickle to reap in the vast field, and bring his sheaves into the garner of the Lord. I felt encouraged to believe that his bands would be broken and he be permitted to carry out the righteous desires of his heart, which may God grant.

Bro. C. E. Butterworth was hindered from attending the General Conference by the sickness and death of his child; and nearly ever since then he has been stricken down with fell disease that has come near taking his life. He has been administered to many times; and although in almost every instance he has received, temporarily, physical and spiritual relief, he has had numerous setbacks which made his recovery appear doubtful. Yet on my last visitation to him, which was on June 20, I felt encouraged. His eyes looked brighter, he had but little pain, he rested easier, and expressed himself as feeling better. His affectionate family, and all the Saints, have shown him all the loving care it was possible for them to do, and he appreciates their loving kindness. All who know him earnestly desire his recovery, and long to sit under the sound of his voice as he shall deal out to them the precious truths of heaven. For the comfort of all who know him I wish to say that when I left, his condition, though very low, was favorable. He still feels, however, that he needs the earnest prayers of all Saints in his behalf that he may be restored to his family and the work of God under his charge, which I pray our loving Father to grant in his own good time, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Bro. Romanan Wight was called from his field of labor to attend to his very sick wife last week, and he found her very low. In addition to this heavy blow to a loving husband, on Monday evening, the 18th inst., his youngest son, about seventeen years of age, was badly mangled by a corn sheller, losing all the fingers off his right hand, and part of his thumb. His breast was fearfully lacerated, and his arm badly hurt, and his face cut. I visited the distressed family, and in company with his father administered to him the healing ordinance. On behalf of these afflicted ones I request the prayers of all Saints.

I am in the enjoyment of a fair degree of health, for which I thank my heavenly Father, and see no reason why I should lay down my armor. I have no desire to do it. I do see every reason for greater diligence and faithfulness, and if I cannot do now as much as in the past, I am determined to do what I can to roll on the work of God. I found our missionary in charge preaching here this week, and hope his labors may be beneficial to all. I can say to my younger brethren in the ministry, after more than half a century's labors in the great gospel field, I have found the promises of God, "Yea, and amen," according to my faithfulness and diligence, and so will you.

"Faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies for the work. Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, charity, humility, diligence. Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Amen."—D. C. 4: 1, 2.

Yours in gospel bonds,

CHARLES DERRY.

ARLINGTON, S. D., June 19.

Editors Herald:—As per arrangement, I arrived at the place appointed for a series of grove meetings, adjacent to Bro. Stone's private residence. Bro. Stone's diligence in the preparatory work was soon made apparent. 'Tis always stimulating to see Latter Day Saints diligent, according to the gifts and calling unto them; but such diligence, being attributable to constant efforts in aspiring to a gospel equilibrium, we appear perhaps too slow in evincing gospel diligence.

The stimulants to holding series of grove meetings were: first, it affords scattered Saints, within a radius of fifty or sixty miles, an opportunity to meet, and enjoy the privilege of worshiping together, which privilege they seldom enjoy; second, to offer an opportunity to those unacquainted with our doctrine to hear, for grove meetings seem more attractive to some than gatherings in public schoolhouses, and I believe time and money thus utilized is proper, the spread of the gospel being the sole purpose.

The prospect for a large gathering on Sunday was flattering, the event having been widely advertised; but rain began falling two or three days before the appointed time. After a lengthy drought in parts of Minnesota, South and North Dakotas, proving very injurious to growing crops, the copious rain was therefore a blessing for the country. We therefore bore the disappointment of meeting in grove with, I thought, a becoming resignation. With the consent of Bro. and Sr. Stone we met in their private house, at eleven a. m. sharp on the 15th, the writer presiding, Bro. S. K. Sorensen acting as secretary. Three services were held on the first day and four on the two succeeding days. The Saints were social, united, and happy, evincing appreciation of the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. Stone, whose highest ambition appeared to be the comfort and convenience of the visitors, to the very extent of their ability.

There were six from Howard, fifty miles; five from Pipestone, sixty miles; traveling with teams. A few others from Howard anticipated coming, but it was presumed the inclement weather prevented.

A few strangers were in attendance at each meeting held in the house; but on Sunday the house, with three rooms in close proximity, was by far too small. The evening was pleasant, yet the ground was too damp for grove meetings. The three ordinary sized rooms were all occupied, and it was thought that there were more outside of house than inside. It is safe to say, had the weather been propitious, we would have been confronted with a congregation during Sunday services of one hundred and fifty or two hundred. As it was we were satisfied, having done the best we could.

A little work, well and legitimately done, brings solid peace, tending to build up and establish in the faith. While work consummated, whether little or much, necessitating the evasion of some established truth or principle, would be as effective in causing distress, etc., as that rightly done is in giving peace and satisfaction.

Three were baptized between the afternoon and evening services, which ceremony was witnessed by a goodly number, who were orderly and respectful. But the evening service consisting in explaining the laying on of hands, and confirmation, seemed the climax of satisfaction of the three days' worship. For, despite our crowded condition inside, and the number on the outside, a quiet order and a solemnity prevailed during the entire service, that was inspiring, as if the good Spirit reigned supreme. What may be the effect of this reunion on so small a scale I pause not to divine.

At an early hour on the 18th, twenty souls finding shelter under the roof of Bro. Stone's dwelling were astir, some preparing breakfast, others looking to, and preparing teams, others gathering and folding quilts, etc., packing them in the respective vehicles ready for departure. Breakfast being over, then came the parting, the sadness of which can only be fully realized by God-fearing Latter Day Saints, who share the blessedness of gospel fellowship and unity. The words good-bye reverberate, the three teams disappear, the writer, Bro. S. K. Sorensen, Bro. Stone and family are left alone.

Services to continue during the week, Sunday, June 24, in the grove, weather being propitious. Bro. S. K. Sorensen, rendered good service, but he is restive. Having began his ministerial work in McCook and Miner counties, S. D., thinks he ought to return.

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

PORCUPINE, Wis., June 7.

Editors Herald:—Again I am with the dear Saints of Porcupine. Bertie comes home from college this week. His eyesight is nearly restored, and hence he will not return to the college for the blind any more. To God be all the praise. He has received this blessing through administration, as was promised. On June 7, started for Twin Lakes, a distance of seventy miles, to attend district conference. Nine buggy loads of Saints camped for dinner the first day at a certain place on the road according to previous arrangement, and at night we stopped at a large farmhouse, and spent an enjoyable evening singing hymns from the hymnals, there being a fine Kimball organ in the parlor. Before separating for the night Elder Hutchinson was led to pray God that all scourges and the destroying angel might pass by that house and no harm befall the friends residing there because of their kindness to God's children.

The next morning, early, we were again on our journey. Camped again for dinner and arrived at our dostination about five, in time for supper and evening meeting. Bro. Burr talked to us, and all separated at night with a feeling of unity and that it was good to be a Saint of latter days.

Saturday the usual business was transacted and in the evening Bro. Muceus spoke to us upon the Word of Wisdom. He is a young man of promise.

Good prayer meetings, with the gift of prophecy and tongues and interpretation of the same.

Bro. Closson preached Sunday morning upon the Organization of the Church. Had good liberty. Prayer and sacrament meeting at half past two, which was enjoyed by all.

Bro. Burr spoke in the evening, his subject being, The Resurrection of the Dead. It was an excellent discourse; and it being a part of the gospel plan very dear to me, I enjoyed the sermon very much.

Adjourned to meet at Porcupine, Wis., in October.

Monday morning the Saints went to Fish Lake to catch fish. The brethren caught twenty-five or more. The sisters fried them, and we were hungry enough to do justice to the dinner set before us. Next day we started homeward. The Lord with his Spirit went before us, and we found kind friends again to minister to our wants. Arrived home safely, and when asked how we enjoyed the conference, we all said, with one accord, "Fine."

I feel that the Lord is watching over the work in northern Wisconsin, and that much good will be accomplished for Zion's cause the coming year.

I believe I am firm in the faith, and desire to endure unto the end.

MARY A. WHITE.

CREOLA, Ohio, June 20.

Editors Herald:—After the closing of the recent General Conference, I made a visit to Mills and Pottawattamie counties, Iowa, where I met a number of the Saints who were following their usual vocations. The gospel was a theme of first importance, and the work of the conference was being scanned with interest by them, and all with whom I conversed favored the movement to pay off the college indebtedness, and approved the method adopted by the conference to raise the means. The only thing seemingly standing in the way of immediate success is the proneness of some people to lie back and wait for others to do the work. "Let's see what they will do" is a common remark. Better cease to hesitate and pitch in and help while there is an opportunity, and be found among the valiant workers in the cause.

Saturday, the 5th, I tarried over night with Bro. C. A. Beebe, at Council Bluffs, and on Sunday morning following aided him and Bro. Dobson in the church services, and attended the Sabbath school, which was well conducted. There was a sacrament and prayer service held, followed by preaching, and an excellent spirit prevailed throughout. Bro. Beebe presided with ease and ability, and I noted that among the busy ones aiding in carrying on the meetings were a number of young people.

At one time, in my early schoolboy days, I made my home with Bro. Beebe, since when there has lingered a feeling of interest and friendship between us, born of early associations, and my visit was made very pleasant by the family, which was enhanced by the presence of one Sr. Cisiley Chatburn, who is always interesting by reason of her enlarged views of things and fidelity to the faith. My short stay here was of the kind that one looks back to with pleasure. Scarce as it is, there are few things that afford a greater amount of happiness than true friendship.

Every Monday morning following, I was in Lamoni, where I was engaged a few days with the revising committee on Church History, in preparing matter for the third volume.

The 19th, I started for southern Missouri and Arkansas, in order to visit relatives as well as saints. This trip had been in contemplation for twenty years or more, but postponed waiting for something to "turn up" so that it might be made with but little sacrifice of time or means. "Down south in Arkansas" always seemed a long way off. But, concluding that men owe something to their relatives as well as to other people, I determined to turn something up myself, and so started, believing in the theory that, "The way to resume is to resume;" and the way to make this trip was to start and go. Evening found me in Independence, Missouri, in company with Srs. Robinson and James, whom I chanced to fall in with on the electric car out from Kansas City. Sister James insisted that I stop with them during my stay at the "center spot," which I did, Bro. James renewing the invitation on returning home from business. We got acquainted. Had an old-time visit, including Bro. and Sr. Robinson, the young man and wife, and in turn, the new arrival that keeps folks amused and laughing at his queer squints and maneuvers as he sniffs and flutters in the bracing morning air, while getting acquainted with the jolly folks standing around making cute remarks. Bro. and Sr. James' home is one to which a person wished to return after having once been there; call in when passing by, to see if there is as much sunshine in the morning as at evening, and at noon as in the morning; take a sun bath and so go on his way rejoicing. Little Pauline has something to do with it.

Sunday was a bright day. Leafy trees, sightly bowers, blooming flowers, and songs of birds presented nature in her attractive dress. Smiling faces and cheerful greetings were seen and heard in every group. Independence never looked better to the eye of the writer. Order, decorum, system, discipline were seen at the Sabbath school. We joined the Book of Covenants class, and the lesson was made interesting. At eleven o'clock, Bro. T. W. Chatburn discoursed fluently at an attentive audience. The sermon was studiously arranged and well delivered. Things said on purpose. We were interested. The evening was occupied by the writer, under considerable physical disability, but there was some meat in what was said. Brn. I. N. White and Joseph Luff occupied the stand with the speaker. Bro. Luff's invocation was a well-worded and earnest appeal for needed help and guidance. Bro. W. H. Garrett is in charge of branch and is doing well.

At the solicitation of Cousin T. C. Kelley, who was to accompany me South, I remained at Independence until Wednesday. Tuesday evening was set for commencement exercises at the high school, and T. C.'s oldest boy was in the graduating class. They have a very substantial and attractive high school building at Independence. On the occasion refered to, there were thirty graduates, some of them children of Saints, and what seemed strange enough, nearly all of them were girls. It was a pleasing sight. They were seated in a semi-circle and the girls were all arrayed in white. The programme was well rendered.

It is a hopeful feature to see the youth of the land animated with a desire and ambition to secure an education. Education leads; and from it is derived the greatest amount of pleasure and benefit in the affairs of men. It is a prize to secure a scroll tied with a blue ribbon at the hands of a professor, indicating merit and attainment. It is more to be desired than wealth, or pleasure, or amusement, or fashion. Educate! Educate!!

We left Independence on the 23d, Brn. George H. Hilliard and Rudolph Etzenhouser accompanying us to the depot, and at about three p. m. we arrived at Webb City, Missouri, and soon after found the home of Bro. O. P. Sullivan, where we were kindly received and tarried over night. The time of the evening prayer service was given to us, and we occupied with ease and pleasure, and what seemed to be interest to others. There were a number present whom Bro. George A. Blakeslee and I baptized some eighteen years ago while in Manitoba. We had not met since. It was a pleasure all around to meet again.

Webb City is rather of an attractive place, and much larger than we expected to find it. A chief source of wealth is from the lead mines in active operation there. They have a splendid high school building, and there are signs of thrift. The Saints continue zealous and enterprising, and are pushing ahead, ambitious for a new church building.

Next morning we arrived at Seligman having started early, and soon thereafter found the home of Cousin Orson Kelley, and soon after met Aunt Keren Happuch, now in her 83d year and almost blind. Her husband died a year and a half ago. She belongs to the church, but the others of the family know but little of the faith. Been in the wilderness, mixed up more or less with the Campbellites—neglected. Later, we called on Cousin E. F. Hyde and sons, one of whom had just entered the marriage state, and appeared serene and happy.

Next day we called on Mr. Leonard Tracy who married a cousin of ours. He served three years in the late war. Seemed at ease before his old fashioned fireplace. Has two bright looking boys, in their teens, whom he thinks to send to Lamoni to educate and develop under better surroundings.

We were now over the line, in the State of Arkansas.

The church at Seligman having been procured by others for Sunday services, we concluded to leave an appointment, and on Saturday go to another neighborhood some twenty miles east. A heavy rain defeated this, however, but Sunday morning, the 27th, Earl and Frank arrived with the team, a little mule that looked to weigh about four or five hundred pounds and a young horse to match. They were hitched on to a spring wagon, and we were off, Orson joining us further on. For a few miles the road led along a level country, with wheat and corn growing on either side, which looked well. The outskirts were timber, and we were soon on the flint rocks moving down a steep hill nearly a mile long, into Roaring river bottom. High hills covered with timber all around. The water of Roaring river is clear and swarms with small fishes. Looks beautiful as it rushes along over the bright-looking, clear-washed stones at the bottom.

On the way we fed and dined with Mr. Charles A. Munsey, who married Orson's daughter. His father was from Massachusetts, and he appeared to be happy with his young wife and family in their home by the gurgling waters of Roaring river.

The little mule was an attraction on this trip. Its feet would stick to the ground in spite of the weight of the wagon, its muscles swell and it would push forward with amazing strength. It is as slick as a deer, and when animated its eyes are as expressive as a gazelle's; and all this is no reflection upon its mate.

Passing on, after having crossed Roaring river, by fording eleven times, the little mule drinking every time, we landed at the foot of a rather steep and rocky hill, which had to be surmounted. We alighted, as cheerfully as if members of the humane society, and walked it, in order to help the mule.

Soon after, we arrived at Cousin Christopher G. Kelley's; captain, doctor, farmer, and preacher, the oldest of the family. We had attended school together when young boys, and had not met since. He is now over sixty years of age. Is living with his third wife, the first and second deceased. He has seventeen children in all, the larger number by the third wife. They range all the way from babyhood to "grown up." His wife is a typical southern lady, from near Paducah, Kentucky. Has a florid complexion, and bids fair to survive the doctor.

This is a prolific country, and we soon learned that we had over a hundred relatives somewhere in these parts. We were kindly received.

Monday, the 28th, we went to see the youngest of the family, Cousin Rhoda, said to live six miles away, but turned out to be nearer twelve. It was eclipse day. The clouds gathered and obscured the sun. It rained, the road was rough, but the mule and mate were equal to the task. Up one hill and down another, across White river, the jack-oaks hugging the road in places so that umbrellas had to be closed down, the rain coming down in such torrents that we had to stop and wait. Then on and over into Owl creek, where there was an old over-shot mill, out on dry ground. We forded the stream and started up a steep hill, the roadbed being of solid sandstone, ascending by stops. The mule's feet stuck as if soldered to the rock and he laid forward and broke his singletree. But difficulties were made to be overcome, so by the aid of a jack knife, an oak stick, and some hickory bark, repairs were made and we were soon on our way.

Were soon at Golden, a village on a hill. Two miles farther and we were at our destination. Found Rhoda surrounded by her family of seven children, looking serene and happy, her husband absent. Six girls and one boy, ranging all the way from small to "grown up." The boy's name is William Roy Oliver Hiram Jennings Bryan McCarty. (It was not necessary to inquire into their politics.) Four girls about grown, with dark eyes and hair, white skin and comely features, and literally without opportunity; their surroundings being against them. Two miles to a school, and up hill at that, and in this country it seems to be up hill going both ways. Yet some people cannot appreciate opportunities—an up-to-date school at their own doors. Those who cannot should take a trip to this part of the country, and observe, in instances, how richly nature has endowed the people, but who are destitute of the means of culture and growth as is known further north. Schools and proper social relations and surroundings, with religious training, are what help the youth ahead. But conditions are said to be fast improving there, the older ones, however, except the favored, will have to die in the wilderness.

After dinner Mr. McArthur returned; then a short talk, a heavy down-pour of rain, and we were off on a return trip, our minds crowded with thoughts in regard to the difference in surroundings and opportunities of people of this world. When three or four miles on the way, going down hill, the front axle of the wagon broke and let us down; but fortunately no one was hurt. We were near a house where we borrowed a lumber wagon and so went on, leaving the broken one behind. At dusk we were back at Captain Kelley's.

The 29th T. C. and Frank returned to repair and bring the wagon left, as well as to take the borrowed one home, and the doctor took his team and conveyed Orson and I back to Seligman, arriving in time to fill the evening appointment at the Union church. A good audience was present. I tarried over with Bro. Solomon Beirley where, also, Bro. A. J. Cato resides.

The following day T. C., Earl, and Frank returned with the team and the wagon, the latter repaired with a new axle and singletree, made of the best seasoned hickory wood, all for $1.75. This gives the cue to the business of the country. Farm hands received from $10 to $13 per month. Some of the land is good, but can be farmed only in patches, much of which is so poor that it is disheartening to even look at. More exist than live. In the evening we preached again in the church to an interesting audience, Dr. Kelley being present also. How our views on divine authority are likely to dovetail on to his Campbellite notions remains to be seen.

Early next morning, T. C. left for his mission field, and that day I baptized four persons, and with the assistance of Bro. Cato, confirmed them. Preached again at evening to an interesting audience. The young people took charge of the singing, and did nicely.

There is an opportunity for some one to do a good work here, but it cannot be done in a day. It is in Bro. I. N. White's field. Should not be neglected. We hope to turn the attention of relatives and others from the wilderness of sectarianism to the way of light, progress, and hope.

Next evening found me back at Independence, lodged with the family of Bro. T. C. Kelley. The family was well but the milch cow had run off or was stolen, and they were in distress. By accident I met a jolly few at an ice cream and strawberry festival at Bro. Joseph Luff's. It was similar to the one attended at Bro. George H. Hilliard's on my way down. All went well.

Saturday evening following found me at Lamoni, Iowa, the event of the day being a conversation with a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher on the train out from St. Joseph. He was interested in securing something that would defeat Adventists' views on the Saturday question. One of their men had been defeated, and they were taking it to heart. I cheered him by letting him have one of Bro. Haws' little books on Sabbath keeping, a Voice of Warning, and some talk besides, all of which appeared to be appreciated. He has all the points of a candid and honest man. So time moves on. WM. H. KELLEY.

GUY, Oklahoma, June 14.

Editors Herald:—There is a vast country here, where for a hundred miles in a place, perhaps, the latter-day work has never been presented. No railroads near to travel on.

I started out in a buggy last Sunday to open up some new fields for labor. Preached to a fair audience after their Sunday school, at three p. m.; and left another appointment some twelve miles north. Went on, asking the Lord to guide me. Near sundown met an old man with team, and told him my business. He said it was a bad place for preachers; they had just treated one, a Seventh Day Adventist, to bad eggs a short time before, three miles west. Upon learning my faith, said I might get the same treatment.

I soon learned the preacher had baptized two married sons and a single daughter of his, and his wife and another daughter, and several of his neighbors were firmly believing, and he was in great trouble. He lived four miles northeast; and upon my informing him that I would gladly give my assistance to help him in his trouble, he invited me home with him.

The Advent preacher was away, to return in two weeks. He went to their schoolhouse, where the Christian Endeavor had met, when the old gentleman told them there was a new preacher in camp, who claimed to understand something about the Sabbath question. The Christian minister in charge said they would gladly give way, if I would preach upon that subject. I did so, the Advent members present taking notes for their minister, asking me if I would debate the question when he returned. They seemed surprised when I told them yes, as he had claimed that no man would meet him there, and that he had defeated three this year, baptizing one of them.

By request, preached on the second advent of Christ on Monday evening. Nights being so short and farmers so busy, could get no hearing through the week. The Adventists invited me to preach to them after their Sabbath school on Sunday, 23d, when their preacher will be present. I accepted the invitation.

The old man's daughter referred to as believing the Advent faith, a very intelligent school-teacher, took her Bible and had me trace out my objections to the seventh-day theory, until she frankly admitted there was no truth in it, and asked, "Who, then, has the truth?" As I declared unto her and others of the family, the angel's message, and the wonderful mission of Joseph the Seer, from his first vision onward, she sat for hours listening, and her eyes filled with tears. She wanted the Book of Mormon, read Jacob's teaching on polygamy, declaring it to be God honoring, and asked if we had the gifts in the church as the Adventists claimed to have. I gave her Herald, of August 23, where the great miracle was performed as recorded in the Detroit papers, and other evidences. They insisted I must visit them when I returned.

Returned home preaching on the way to different ones. Am going tomorrow some twenty miles southeast, into True Follower settlement, where twenty-five have lately joined them, to see what I can do there. Feel the need of tracts and Voice of Warning to aid me very much. As ever,

Yours in the one faith,

D. S. CRAWLEY.

THE GOSPEL RESTORED.

TUNE.—"I love to tell the story of Jesus and his love."

I love to tell the story
To every list'ning ear,
That from the realms of glory
An angel did appear,
Restored the blessed gospel
As preached in days of yore
In its entire fullness,
With priesthood,—spirit power.

CHORUS:—

I love to tell the story
Unto the youth and hoary,
The old, old gospel story,
In fullness now restored

I love to tell the story,
Make plain each gospel rite,
As Christ to Nicodemus
Declared the same by night:
To enter in my kingdom,
Ye must be born again
Of water and the Spirit,
Thus, cleansed from ev'ry stain.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

CHORUS:—
I love to tell the story,
As brethren told it me
When rapt in sin's dire mantle,
In death and misery;
Although the world derided,
As if a thing of naught,
But for the truth decided,
I did as Jesus taught.

CHORUS:—
I love to tell the story,
At morning, noon, and night,
Delight to meekly reason
On what I think is right.
'Tis God, the Father's ruling
His Spirit to make known,
His saving truth to all men
Who will the Savior own.

CHORUS:—
I love to tell the story,
But live it, more than all;
Complete my earth life mission,
Like the Apostle Paul,
Be in that happy meeting
When the dear Lord appear,
To live and bask forever
In his celestial sphere.

CHORUS:—

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"What silence we keep year after year,
With those who are most near to us and dear;
We live beside each other day by day,
And speak of myriad things, but seldom say
The full, sweet word that lies just in our reach,
Beneath the commonplace or common speech."

BREAD VS. POETRY.

I watched a star at eventide
Rise in the heavens blue.
I followed it in joy and pride,
All worshipful and true.
And as the lark beyond the mist
Ascends through smiles of scorn,
My spirit rose on wings, star-kissed,
Into a new world born.
I sang a song with heart and soul,
The melody was sweet;
I listened to its echoes roll
In happiness complete.
My dear ones heard the graceful rhymes,
And much admired the tune.
They likened it to distant chimes
Of church bells in the moon.

I set my sponge at evening,
In the good old-fashioned way,
And rose upon the morrow
At the first faint gleam of day.
The snowy flour was waiting
In the big old wooden bowl
For the restless, foamy leaven
To uplift its latent soul.
I mixed them, and when molded
Into rounded forms of grace,
The oven in its bosom
Held the loaves in hot embrace.
When at last upon the table
Lay the slices, soft and light,
Beside the golden butter,
They were a tempting sight.
My darlings looked up naïvely,
And said with energy:
"This bread is so much better Than any poetry!"—Sel.

On board the Galilee, May 1, 1900.

WHILE our ship is still at rest—in the harbor of Papeete—I will sketch our leave-taking of the Saints here in these islands, after a stay among them of three years and five months, most of which time we have spent in Papeete. For six months or more we have anticipated returning to America on the Galilee, if circumstances would permit. Her time for sailing was first reported to be on the 12th of April. Therefore, it seemed necessary to absent myself from conference much of the time, and make ready for our voyage. But before all was completed, the sailing time was postponed a few days longer, on account of the difficulty the government was causing both the captain and the consignees. So we felt thankful that we were not going to be hurried off till everything was done that Mr. Burton deemed it his duty to do before leaving.

When conference was over, the Saints all proposed remaining until we left, thinking it would be but a few days or a week. But when one sailing time was reached, another would be appointed, and another, and another, until the whole month of April dwindled away! During which time a portion of the Saints had left for their respective islands, and ultimately Bro. and Sr. Peterson also had gone on the steamer to Rairoa—left on the 26th.

It will be seen by the above that we have been in a semi-packed condition for a month; therefore, were well pleased when word came yesterday afternoon to send our boxes on board, preparatory for an early start in the morning, and permission from the Captain to come on board ourselves in the evening if we preferred, and we concluded to do so. It being Monday evening, was not our regular meeting night; but the church was lighted at an early hour, and well filled with Saints, who still remained at Tarona,—and many friends also, for a good-bye meeting. During the meeting the pilot came in and bade us good-bye, with wishes for a pleasant and successful voyage home. The meeting was tearful and impressive. And while the closing hymn was being sung,—"God be with you till we meet again," the voices of some grew husky and refused to sing.

When meeting was dismissed, all wended their way to the shore. The pilot having kindly proffered his boat for conveying both our effects and ourselves to the ship, we repaired to her mooring place on the government grounds. There was no moon, but the evening air was so still the Saints carried with them eight lighted lamps, together with lanterns, and placed them on the ground in the oval-shaped arena, around which the mass of the people stood. Joseph and I stood in the arena. After singing again and prayer, we took affectionate leave of the white people first, then the Saints in line as they came to us; first Metuaore, followed by the children. Then the sisters, afterward the brethren; and last of all, Paiour, staunch and ever ready friend and helper in those islands.

Many bestowed tokens of regard; some in ten, and twenty cent pieces; for their money is now scarce, albeit Pai's was a dollar. He never gives less. Some in flowers, natural and artificial. One gave me a silver ring, made, I presume by the donor.

When seated in the boat, and pulled off a rod or so from the shore, the men rested on their oars while those on shore sang again one of their plaintive airs, and continued singing till we reached the ship, which lay near the island fort. A pleasant and satisfactory closing of our mission to the people of these islands; a mission fraught with much labor, care, weariness, and petty sacrifices, notwithstanding the kindness of the people, which kindness afforded many an oasis bright and pleasing to look back upon.

I might with propriety include the entire day Sunday and Monday in our leave taking. The Sunday services were very enjoyable, at least to me, more than for a length of time. The church was packed during all four services. Four extra benches had to be brought in during the ten o'clock service, which utilized all the usually vacant space. The afternoon prayer meeting was well attended as the morning service, which was quite unusual; and the Spirit of light, love, and peace was with us. And the brethren seemed to enjoy speaking by or in its influence, so that before one would sit down another would be standing ready to occupy.

After meeting was out, several came in for a social talk. Our evening meal was partaken of early, to give opportunity to go and bid Mr. and Mrs. Henry good-bye, and at the same time have one more evening walk along the water front, my favorite street for an evening walk, returning in time for evening preaching.

On Monday, among other calls, we drove out to the residence of the widow of the late ex-consul Hart. We had not visited the family since our first coming in the Evanelia; but felt impressed to call on them before leaving. They now live out near Papau. We were received most cordially. Mrs. Hart said she had been greatly desiring an interview with Mr. Burton in regard to the probable condition of her husband since departing this life. That she had been much troubled in mind concerning him. She wished to learn from Mr. Burton if there was, in his religion, or the gospel he preached, any hope for those who died without professing religion. And when Joseph made known to her some of the precious truths contained in the gospel, as revealed in these last days, she was much comforted. And as we took leave, she said, "You had ought to come back to Tahiti; everybody wants you to."

But here comes the tug to tow us down the harbor; just outside of which stands the schooner Tropic Bird, ready to be towed in as soon as our lines are cast off. What a pity our Captain cleared last night!

More anon,

E. BURTON.

UNCONSCIOUS SERVICE.

"The Bee"—she sighed—"that haunts the clover
Has Nature's errand to fulfill:
The bird that skims the azure over,
Bears living seeds within his bill:

"Without a pause his flight pursuing,
He drops them on a barren strand;
And turns, unconscious of the doing,
The waste into a pasture-land.

"I, craving service—willing, choosing
To fling broadcast some golden grain,—
Can only sit in silent musing,
And weave my litanies of pain."

"I, making answer, softly kissed her:
All Nature's realm of bees and birds,—
What is such ministry, my sister,
Compared with your enchanted words?

"The seed your weakened hand is sowing,
May ripen to a harvest broad,
Which yet may help, without your knowing,
To fill the granaries of God!"

LIBRARIES AND READING.

WHAT SHALL WE READ?

Samuel Smiles, in his essay on "responsibility," says: "Bad books are worse than bad words. Like evil deeds, they mould the thought and will of future generations. The printed book lives, while the author is dust and ashes. The bad author lives forever in his race. His book continues to disseminate vice, immorality, and atheism."

Frederick Schlegel, in the history of literature, remarks: "The art of printing, in itself one of the most glorious and useful, has become prostituted to the speedy and universal circulation of poisonous tracts and libels. It has occasioned a dangerous influx of paltry and superficial compositions, alike hostile to soundness of judgment and purity of taste."

Further, he says of authors: "They are responsible for the good they do as well as for the evil they inculcate. The leprous book gets into our libraries; it gets into our homes. The books may be very clever. Their style draws the reader on, yet they may be full of vicious thoughts. It was said by Sterne that 'vice loses half its evil when it loses its grossness.' But this is a mischievous idea. Grossness may revolt us, but covert abominations, clothed in sprightly words, may sink deeper into our minds. Look, for instance, at the scrofulous novel read by our young ladies. It is written in a brilliant style, though it is full of unchastity, impurity, and moral poison. It often begins with a murder and ends with unchasteness and adultery; as if the objects of these writers were to display the cancerous rottenness of life."

This class of books or of authors we cannot condemn too strongly.

Of another class of reading, Smiles says: "Then there is the book that kept one in the state of constant giggling—a sure sign of a shallow mind. Ill-natured chaff, sarcasm of the good, praise of the bad, is a frightful sight. How different from the good book or the good novel! Not the 'goody, goody' book; but the book that inspires health and purity and courage. Lockhart said of his father-in-law, Scott, 'We may picture to ourselves in some measure the debt we owe to a perpetual succession of books, through thirty years of publication, unapproached in charm, and all instilling a high and healthy code; a bracing and invigorating spirit; a contempt of mean passions, whether vindictive or voluptuous; humane charity, as distinct from moral laxity or from unsympathizing austerity; sagacity too deep for cynicism, and tenderness never degenerating into sentimentality; animated throughout in thought, opinion, feeling, and style by one and the same pure energetic principle—a path and savor of manhood, appealing to whatever is good and loyal in our natures, and rebuking whatever is low and selfish.' The praise is great, but it is deserved."

Sir Walter Scott, upon being congratulated upon the purity of his words at one time near the close of his life, remarked: "I am drawing near the close of my career. I am fast shuffling off the stage. I have been, perhaps, the most voluminous author of the day; and it is a comfort to me to think that I have tried to unsettle no man's faith, to corrupt no man's principles, and that I have written nothing which on my death-bed I should wish blotted."

We believe that as much could truthfully be said of Dickens. He has been called by Smiles "the apostle of the people." The Bishop of Manchester said of him and his works: "I have read most of Mr. Dicken's works, and, so far as I can remember, there is not one single page, or one single sentence, tainted with any impurity or anything that would suggest a vile or vicious thought. I believe that the literature of which he was the author has been pregnant with consequences of incalculable benefit to our people."

"The good book, like the bad book, will live long after the author is dead. A book written two thousand years ago may fix the purpose of a life. The remembered sentiment of the speechless dead may arrest the attention and transform the character. On the other hand vicious books still lift their voices and urge the young to deeds of shame and crime."

It is not now a difficult task to decide to read the good and reject the bad. But it is not always an easy task to know which is good or which is bad. Emerson, in his "Society and Solitude," gives some very good suggestions and rules. He says: "In contemporaries, it is not so easy to distinguish between notoriety and fame. Be sure, then, to read no mean books. Shun the spawn of the press or the gossip of the hour. . . . The practical rules I have to offer are these: 1. Never read a book that is not a year old. 2. Never read any but famed books. 3. Never read any but what you like."

Lord Lytton's maxim is: "In science, read by preference the newest books; in literature, the oldest."

There are enough standard books in every line to supply any possible want, and there is, therefore, no use in selecting anything that is not known to be all right in all respects. There is no excuse for resorting to the "claptrap" class of novels to find fiction. Go to the class of fiction which is standard; which portrays character worthy of emulation; which describes conditions, customs, and peoples as they are; which holds up only the true and laudable notions of life; which is correct as to history, geography, and the like; and which carries with it the power to transform a character of its reader, if needs be, to make it as it should be—to put within it a desire for something better and an inspiration to higher and more useful life. No one can carefully read a selection from this class of books without being the better therefor. But on the other hand, no one can read a selection from the trashy or sensational class of novels and say they are the better therefor. Not one person in many but that would be the worse for it.

The same might be said of all classes of literature. The biography is valuable reading in just the degree that its subject is good for example or study, and in which the work of writing is done. But there is much less danger of being deceived in the reading of biography, for the characters are more true to life. Yet care in the selection of biographies is a very necessary thing.

A mistake very often made by many of our people is to rely solely upon the reading furnished by the cheap newspaper. Newspapers are good in their place. We could not well do without them. But they contain much that should not be read by anybody. The continued or the short stories are not standard fiction; the details of murder, theft, divorce, and other crimes should not be read; accidents need only a notice; the sporting news furnishes no improvement to any one. Scan your papers and read what is necessary to be known, and leave the rest.

In the family a standard magazine is worth many times more than the newspaper. They contain a far better grade of literature, and as a rule, what is purported to be true may be depended upon. Of recent years the price of our best magazines has been reduced to within the reach of anyone, and as a result they are fast entering the homes of many people of moderate circumstances and taking the place of the story paper and other publications.

We should not confine our reading to one line. Such a course would in time tend to narrowness of thought. Of course the specialist must throw the most of his energies and thoughts in the line of his special work; but he cannot afford to entirely omit the study of other lines of work. If he does, he will become "out of balance." The mind of a thinking person grows in the line he thinks in. And to give him a complete control of that mind, to make it of the most service to him, he must cause it to grow in more than one direction. It should be a "well-rounded" mind. He who thinks he can confine his study to an exclusive line will find sooner or later that he has impaired his usefulness. As long as we have to deal with all conditions of life, just so long it will be necessary for us to know something of all things. And distributing our reading along several lines will give us some knowledge of all things and make us stronger for the special line in which we move.

It would be difficult, indeed, to say exactly what would be best for anyone to read, as the tastes and requirements of individuals vary. But remember the advice given by Emerson, "Be sure, then to read no mean books." Our general librarian has been at work for some time in the preparation of a list of books to which no legitimate objection could be raised, and from which individuals and Sunday schools could select in the purchase of books or libraries. We advise all schools who contemplate making a purchase of books, however small, to correspond with her, and get the list she has prepared before making your selection and purchase. We cannot be too careful in the selection of literature which we place in the reach of anyone, and especially of children. Our general librarian, is Miss Mamie A. Allen, of Lamoni, Iowa. Write your district librarian, if you have one, or the general librarian, or both if you prefer.

Next week we continue the subject above, considering "how" to read, and other thoughts growing out of it.

Bro. W. N. Robinson, of Independence, Mo., wrote under date of June 11: "We had a very nice children's day exercise at our Sunday school yesterday. I baptized twenty-five, one of whom was an adult. The others are the product of the school, and is no mean showing for that department of the work, is it?" Reports of other children's day exercises have reached us, but we have not space for them now, and they are too good to pass with only a mention. We will give them another time.

The order of the next convention was left to the district superintendent. The district superintendent and E. S. Fannon were requested to give a talk on Sunday school work at the evening session, and that we have the reading and discussion of the "Echoes." It was moved and carried the Echoes be continued, and that the superintendent appoint the editors. Srs. Eliza Byergo and Annie Ivie were appointed editors.

Reports received indicate a total enrollment for the district of about 1,200. There was a short prayer service, a Sunday school newspaper, a paper and discussion on "the library," and short talks by the district officers. Complying with her request, a district librarian was elected, Sr. Mattie Hughes being the choice. The treasurer's report shows the amount on hand last convention to have been $6.80; amount on hand June 8, $15.951. GRACELAND COLLEGE FUND.

There are at this date two hundred and thirty-eight subscription lists in the hands of Saints and helpers in the Lord's work, and from those who have thus far made report, it is encouraging to note that the effort to obtain the one thousand subscribers bids fair of success. May the Lord bless the workers, the donors, and the work. We have also quite a number of requests by mail from Saints, where no parties have gone with lists, to place their names among the subscribers. This is encouraging indeed, showing that each is striving to bear his or her part, whether the special solicitor calls or not.

The first to report his list filled is Elder Charles Derry, and instead of intimating that he was glad to have a hard task off of his hands, he asks us to send him another blank to be filled.

Well, the Lord be thanked for such helpers as that. Let us urge upon all the necessity of completing their lists within the next thirty days. If our collections are made within the next six months it will save several hundred dollars interest.

As ever, hopefully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

To the Saints in Nova Scotia:—At the request of Bro. J. W. Dimmock, of Ardoise, Nova Scotia, to be relieved from the duties of Biship's agent for the district of Nova Scotia, and upon the recommendation of Bro. Dimmock and others in Nova Scotia, Bro. Robert Newcomb, of Delhaven, Nova Scotia, has been appointed Bishop's agent for said district of Nova Scotia for and in behalf of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Bro. Newcomb is well known to the Saints in Nova Scotia, and we earnestly hope and trust that they will give him material sympathy and support in the performance of the duties of this office, putting forth in every time of need a helping hand in order that the gospel may be preached in the providence, and the worthy poor cared for according to the wisdom manifest in the law of the Lord.

All tithes and offerings of the Saints in the said province or district of Nova Scotia should be sent to Bro. Robert Newcomb, at Delhaven, who will issue a receipt for all offerings of every description so placed in his hands. Remember the Lord helps those who make an effort to help his cause, and that all who put forth a hand to help move the cause of Zion will be strengthened and blessed in their efforts and finally receive the reward that belongs to the faithful doer of the word of life.

Ever confident in the full fruition of the promises made in Zion's behalf, I am,

Hopefully in the faith, yours,

LAMONI, Iowa, June 19.

DISTRICT OF MONTANA.

The Saints in the Montana district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ will please notice the change in the agency of the district by the death of Elder J. E. Reese, of Bozeman, Montana.

Bro. Reese was a worthy and faithful servant of the Master, and answered the call to the other side while striving for the truth here, and we miss him in the financial work as elsewhere. His son, Gomer Reese, of Anaconda, Montana, has been appointed Bishop's agent in his stead for the Montana district, by advice of the Montana conference, and we trust the Saints will give to the new agent their hearty support. Let each help, now the Master calls for workers, for it is but right to serve the Lord, and we will desire the reward of the welldoer by and by.

Remember the address of the new agent, Bro. Gomer Reese, and send him some help.

Hopefully working for the Master's cause,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

COLLEGE CATALOGUES.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are sending out catalogues, and desire the coöperation of all friends of education. We call attention to the following items which we desire all to notice:—

We are sending catalogues to all the General Conference appointees, to their mission address when known, and to their home address when the former is unknown to us. Will the families, when the catalogues come in the absence of the missionaries, kindly forward the same to them, as this class of mail is not forwarded by the post office department without additional postage. Will not those of our friends where missionaries have been stopping, but have changed their address, please do likewise. The object of sending out these catalogues is to inform the representatives of the church abroad as to the progress and condition of the college, as well as to solicit students. Therefore, we earnestly solicit your coöperation in this way.

We desire to place our catalogues in the hands of as many young people as possible who are contemplating attending college. Therefore, you can aid us in another way, by sending us the names of young people whom you may meet or whom you may learn of in your travels who are interested, or the names of parents who have children who ought to become interested, so that we may send them our catalogues and announcements.

You can aid us in another way, by talking up the interests of Graceland College where there is opportunity of gaining a student. Many young people who go to college could be turned in our direction, if their attention were only called to the fact of there being a college in Lamoni, and its good qualities mentioned, and reasons given why it is as well to come here, and in many respects better than to go elsewhere.

You can help us in another way, by buying a scholarship of one or five years. These are transferable and good until used. We must have for the running expenses this year one hundred such scholarships, or their financial equivalent; we now have thirty-five; who will make one of the remaining sixty-five?

There is another way you can aid the college, and that is by being one of the thousand who are to pay twenty-five dollars each to liquidate the present indebtedness. Think of the church paying fifteen hundred dollars a year in interest, when you can pay the debt with your twenty-five dollars, should you be one of a thousand who shall each be ready when the Bishop shall announce that the one thousand subscribers have been received.

Then there is another way you can serve the interests of our college, by sending to our library, books of reference, history, travel, standard literature, etc. We now have twelve hundred volumes of books and pamphlets, and we hope soon to have several thousand. Why should we not have them? How many can you spare?

Yet another way by which you can be of use to the work. We now have a nice little museum of several hundred nice specimens, representing collections from several states of the union, Hawaii, Australia, Philippines and Central America. Let the traveling men and women of the church, especially, remember our museum, and we shall soon have a collection of which we need not be ashamed. Saints engaged locally, too, please do not feel that you are slighted in this invitation, for you are cordially invited to contribute of your possessions to build up the college museum.

There are many more ways in which the college can be helped. Some of these will suggest themselves to the thoughtful workers of the church, and they in turn can suggest them to the less thoughtful. A strong healthy sentiment in favor of the college is needed as much as anything, and to this every one can contribute if they will. Let us not talk of the mistake that was made in building the college prematurely, or of paying too much for a building, or of not putting the faculty on a ministerial basis, or of not employing teachers of our faith. Or if you do talk of these, remember that "Rome was not built in a day." The present Board, and the former ones, too, are in favor of making advancement along these lines just as rapidly as they can do so consistently and safely. When you are inclined to think that things in connection with the college work should be done differently, why not write to the Board of Trustees and tell them just how it is to be brought about. But don't withdraw your support thinking that when things get to going your way, you will help, but help anyhow, and then let your voice and influence be heard and felt making things go your way, or at least some way the best possible under the circumstances.

Yours for progress,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY,

In behalf of Board of Trustees.

GROVE MEETING.

Arlington Grove meeting, South Dakota, June 15, 1900. The Saints assembled at Bro. A. C. Stone's, at eleven o'clock, as per previous arrangement; called to order by Elder James Caffall. S. K. Sorensen acted as secretary. Meeting opened in due form. Elder Caffall briefly informed the Saints of the object in view of this meeting together, and it being too cool for meeting in the grove, he suggested that we hold service during the day in the house. Offered an address from Philppians 4:8. Adjourned to meet at three o'clock. Elder Caffall being the speaker at that hour, assisted by the writer. At the close of the service, the speaker announced the order of the meetings for the succeeding days as follows: At nine a. m. prayer service, at eleven preaching, and at three and eight p. m. preaching. Eleven services were held; two of which were for prayer and testimony, eight for preaching, and one for confirmation and administering of sacrament.

On account of rainy and cold weather the services were continued in the house, although a beautiful grove had already been provided with seats to accommodate those who would be there to listen to the sound of gospel, yet we felt not to complain, as the rain was indeed a great blessing to the famishing crops, many thousand acres are now beyond redemption. And while we rejoiced in the blessing of the Lord in that direction, we truly did also rejoice in the showers of blessing poured down upon us through our worthy brother, Elder Caffall, who spoke as one having authority. The prayer services were also inspiring and confirming; and very strengthening to the scattered Saints in the faith, who are scattered from forty to sixty miles apart.

The meetings were all well attended, considering the adverse atmosphere conditions. Sunday was a bright and beautiful day, and as a result, the house was not large enough to near accomodate all. At the close of the afternoon preaching service the whole congregation went to the water, where Elder Caffall buried three precious souls in the waters of baptism, one of whom was on the Sunday previous elected superintendent of the Latter Day Saints' Sunday school at Howard, South Dakota. He has for some time post done a good work for the church at Howard. Hope his usefulness may increase. On Sunday evening the house could not hold more than half of the congregation. The evening was devoted to an explanation of the laying on of hands by Elder Caffall, after which the three candidates who had been baptized, were confirmed. This was followed with the administration of the sacrament. Elder Caffall then announced meeting every night during the week, and twice on Sunday following, in the grove. This closed the series of meetings as previously announced, to the seeming interest and satisfaction of all. Our appropriate Hymn was sung, and benediction by the writer.

S. K. SORENSEN, Sec.

PASTORAL.

To the Southeastern Mission Saints:—To call attention to one or two pressing needs of the cause in this mission, I now address you.

First: To hold what vantage ground we have is very necessary, and will evince a loyalty and valiantness of a highly commendatory character; while to fail would be an evidence of unfitness to occupy as trusted servants of God and soldiers of the cross. Let each one, therefore, see to it that in precept and example, they do their part in holding the fort and repelling all the attacks of the enemy. Let us be united; let brotherly love continue; let harmony prevail. Let not jealously, evil speaking, or evil surmising, fault finding, harsh judging, or anything of a kindred nature have place in your hearts. Let the injunction: "Seek first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness," be heeded by all who profess faith in the latter-day work, then will Satan have no power to overthrow or destroy.

Second: It is desired to open up the work in new fields, and thus attack and defeat the enemy on his own ground. Here again is the old adage true," "In union there is strength." Will the Saints in all parts of the mission, and those who have friends living in the mission, and especially those who hold the priesthood and hold positions of trust in the church, please help in this work. How? did you ask? By writing to your friends, talking to them and to others, sending them literature, and in every laudable way creating an interest. Get out appointments, and if you are an officer, fill them; or if you are not an officer, go with your branch officers, and hold up their hands by your faith and prayers, and don't discourage them by refusing to recognize them in their calling because they are "home folks."

God can accomplish his work through any one who will be humble and true. And he will do so, no matter who does or does not recognize their worth. So don't wait for some missionary, or missionary in charge, apostle, high priest, or seventy to come along; but put your trust in God and go to work to do good, and thus glorify his name. You can not fail of some measure of success.

After a careful survey of the situation, I am unable to make a better arrangement of fields of labor than the following:—

Bro. M. L. Sory at and near Memphis, Tennessee.

Bro. C. L. Snow, Kentucky and Tennessee district, together with middle Tennessee and central Kentucky.

Brn. S. D. Allen and W. J. Booker, Florida.

Brn. D. E. Tucker, and W. L. Booker, southern Alabama, Mississippi, and eastern Louisanna.

Bro. James M. Scott, eastern Kentucky and Tennessee.

This arrangement, I believe, will give every part of the mission as good supply of labor as is possible with our limited number of men, and will reduce the expense for travel to the minimum. May abundant success crown the labors of each one, is my prayer. I trust, also, that the local force will assist all they can, and that they may be abundantly blessed in the same. May the grace of God, our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, abound with you all. Amen.

GENERAL CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

I again call the attention of those whom it may and should concern that from several districts the branch reports have not come into my hands up to this 12th day of June, some of which are long overdue, and I now give a summary of the situation throughout the church:—

The thirty-one branches on record as existing in the South Sea, or Society Islands, have not been corrected by reports of gains and losses since 1896, but I hope that progress is being made by the officers there toward perfecting their records, and with the purpose of supplying the General Recorder with full details of changes of all kinds.

The church in the Hawaiian Islands was reported up to December 31, 1899, as were also the branches in the Victoria district of Australia. The last reports of the branches in the Sydney district of New South Wales (Australia) brought their records up to March 31, 1899, those made during the past year not having arrived.

Bro. James Baty, clerk of Manchester district, England, sent reports up to December 31, 1898, but those for 1899 have not yet arrived.

The records of London, England, were brought up to March, 1900, and those of Sheffield district to December 31, 1899.

April 2, I received from Brn. Caton and Walton a summary of the Birmingham district, England, but no details of names and of birth and baptism have yet arrived, nor accounts of deaths and other losses during several years past. I am hoping that the brethren are doing faithful work toward soon supplying me with complete corrections.

Eastern Wales' branches have been corrected up to April 30, 1900, which is good, but Western Wales has not been properly reported for a long time.

In America nearly every district was brought up before my annual report was made to General Conference. For some cause September and February reports of Kewanee district did not arrive and have not yet.

The Central California district was to meet April 13, but the branch reports have not yet come to hand. Hope they will soon.

The May conferences appointed were: Alabama, Florida, Pottawattamie, Western Maine, Northern Nebraska, and Southern Nebraska, and the reports have already arrived from Pottawattamie and Northern Nebraska. The others are looked for.

Conferences have been appointed for June in the following districts: Chatham, London (Ont.), Mobile, Northeastern Illinois, Kewanee, Nauvoo, Southeastern Illinois, Decatur, Des Moines, Fremont, Galland's Grove, Little Sioux, Northeastern Kansas, Spring River, Eastern Maine, Eastern, Northern, and Southern districts, Michigan, Nodaway, Far West, Clinton, St. Louis, Northeast Missouri, Montana, Southwestern Texas, Northern Wisconsin, and Southern Wisconsin, being in all twenty-seven districts holding June sessions. That their officers will be prompt in sending reports forward is expected.

Some conferences adjourned to meet "on call," and the following have either published no notices yet or their dates are unknown, namely: Eastern Colorado, Indiana Southern, Massachusetts, Central Nebraska, Oklahoma, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, and Northwestern Texas.

July conferences are to be held by Kentucky and Tennessee, Southern Missouri, Central Texas, and Northeastern Texas and Choctaw.

August conferences are: Pottawattamie, Northwestern Kansas, New York, Ohio, West Virginia.

September conferences appointed: Eastern Iowa, Independence, and Northern California.

October conferences: Central and Southern California districts, and Kirtland, Ohio.

The Nevada conference adjourned to meet in November.

I again urge promptness in copying upon the district records the names and items and the forwarding of the reports to me, according to the provision in the "Rules of Order," sections 173, 174.

Upon the subject of district records my idea is that a complete and perfect record of every branch within its bounds should be kept by each district, for the use and satisfaction of district officers, and also in order that district clerks may see that imperfect reports when presented shall be corrected before being sent to the General Records. Where this is done and district clerks are faithful and zealous, very much aid is given in perfecting the General Records. The district secretaries are upon the ground, so to speak, and can see to details that the General Recorder cannot attend to, or if he tries to do it he may be ignored, or he is too far away to accomplish the work needed to be done among local records. There are repeated contradictions arising in regard to birth dates and places, baptism dates and places, and as to who baptized and confirmed, and as to ordination items, and other facts and details, hence each district needs a live and active district recorder to keep reports and records well in hand; and in this there is a great lack in the church, only a portion of the districts having any record of names and items, at least in an "up-to-date" manner, such as will aid those who need information, district presidents, the General Recorder, and others.

Respectfully submitted for consideration,

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

They removed to Lamoni, Iowa, in 1890, and after that lived in Ringgold county, thence removing into Missouri, south of Lamoni, three years ago. He became deranged in mind and had to be placed in an asylum. He endured great mental suffering, and his family could not be with him even in the hour of his departure. The burdened wife and mother almost falls beneath the blow. Several of the children are small, and their circumstances such as to call for the deepest sympathy of all who know the situation. Three daughters are married, the other six are at home, one son being just twenty-one. Bro. and Sr. Brown united with the church June 24, 1878. He was ordained a priest and labored in Canada and in Iowa in branch work. He was of a strong nature, and very determined in his ways, but was honest in his dealings, and had a fine reputation, until the malady gradually overcame him and destroyed his mind, and finally his life. He was brought to Lamoni for burial, Bro. H. A. Stebbins being called upon to preach the sermon. Bro. William Anderson assisted in the service. May the Lord kindly give strength to the mourning, and direct their ways into lasting good.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and its Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

CRADLE OF RACE IN YUCATAN.

Archæologists just have returned from Yucatan with accounts of new discoveries about that most marvelous of all native tribes in North or South America, the Maya of Yucatan. Archæologists have been studying, investigating, and exploring for a hundred years and more to find out the history of these strange folk, who care little for the world outside their own dwelling place, or that they are perhaps the oldest of the peoples now living on the earth.

Students from France, Germany, Spain, England, and the United States, not to mention New Mexico, where the government has done much work, have sought to discover the meaning of the picture writings, bas reliefs, the sculpture, and the architecture which are the relics of the Mayas of olden time, and to connect this distant past and its imposing civilization with the rude simplicity of today. Students agree that the Maya of today is of the same race as the ancient Maya, for when the Spaniard discovered him four hundred years ago he had written books in which he used the same characters that the old sculptors used in decorating the walls of the ancient palaces and temples.

Priests burned up the books because of their heathen authorship, and now only the ruins of the ornamental walls remain. The Maya of today does not know the meaning of the carvings of his ancestors, or, if he knows, he will not tell, and so the man of science guesses and tries again and keeps a-guessing. In time he will succeed.

CRADLE OF THE RACE.

Then, if the Brooklyn savant, Dr. Augustus LePlongeon, is right, and the doctor has spent twelve years in Yucatan studying the Maya language and digging among the ruins, where he has made some famous "finds," Yucatan will have a claim to call itself the cradle of the race. The doctor says the Mayas are the oldest race living. Their history, he says, goes back beyond that of Egypt or of China; they had the original Isis and Osiris and the original Sphinx; they had a highly developed language before Sanscrit had been heard of—words of which were seen on the walls of Nebuchadnezzar's palace, and were also used by Jesus when nailed to the cross. They lived in splendor long before and long after that strange land—the Land of Mu, which Plato called Atlantis—sank below the waters to become the bottom of the sea.

Among other English writers who have studied the Mayas are John L. Stevens, one of the great travelers of the century; J. A. Maudslay, the result of whose seven years' work appears in the archæological section of the splendid Biologia Centrali-Americana; Professor Cyrus Thomas of the Smithsonian Institution; Dr. D. G. Brinton of the University of Pennsylvania, who has done brilliant work in deciphering Maya inscriptions; and Dr. William H. Holmes, curator of the Department of Anthropology in the Field Columbian Museum. Professor Putnam of the Museum of Natural History in New York is now arranging in the new wing of the museum what is by far the best collection of reproductions of Maya architecture, carvings, and inscriptions in the world.

YUCATAN BORN FROM THE SEA.

Dr. Holmes, who has been to Yucatan recently, gives a good general description of the country and of the Mayas of today. He says: "We are told by the early Greek historians that a broad continent known as Atlantis once spread out over what is now the middle Atlantic Ocean; that this land was inhabited by a vigorous and cultured race of people who carried their arms eastward to the farthest limits of the Mediterranean, and that the Greek gods, righteously angered by these encroachments, retaliated by sending Atlantis to the bottom of the sea. It has been a favorite theory with many students that the American races came from this source, inheriting therefrom the germs of that strange culture now represented by so many ruined cities.

"Whatever may be the truth as to the disappearance of one continent, it is a curious fact that another land has risen from a watery bed. We are able clearly to show by the aid of geology that a large block of terra firma now known as Yucatan is a new-born realm. The massive beds of limestone of which the peninsula is formed contain and are largely made up of the marine forms of life now flourishing along the shores, possibly bringing the date of the elevation of Yucatan down somewhat near that of the reputed sinking of Atlantis some 11,000 or 12,000 years ago, or not far from the period that witnessed the oscillations attending the close of the glacial period.

"Though soil has gradually formed on the rocky plains, and dense forests have overspread all, there is everywhere present, especially in the dry season, the suggestion of a waterless and forbidding desert. But a strange thing has happened to fit this land for habitation. As time passed by the roofs of the underground streams were perforated in places by the process of disintegration, and, caving in, formed yawning sinks, in the bottom of which were pools of sparkling water. From these unique reservoirs the ancient inhabitants obtained almost their entire water supply."

DWINDLING OF MAYA TRIBE.

When the Spaniard came the many tribes of Yucatan were at war, but they united against the invader and would have kept him off that part of the earth had it not been for his gun and horse. It is said that at the time of the invasion the Maya tribes numbered two million persons. They were all over Yucatan and reached out to the south and west. Today there are fewer than five hundred thousand, probably, of whom two hundred and fifty thousand still speak pure Maya. In the northern part of the peninsula there is now a half Maya, half Spanish race; but in the interior the tribes are today as free as they were 400 years ago. These hold to the temples of their ancestors, and defy all comers, white or red, or half and half.

Physically they are short, sturdy, and dark, with the general characteristics of red men. They have two stories of their origin—one that they came over the ocean, or through it, ages ago, with their hero god Itzamna, and another that they came from the west with a warrior god, also a hero.

There are few language ties between the Mayas and the Aztecs or other Mexican peoples. In culture they stood at the head of all the American tribes; though still barbarous, they were on the threshold of civilization. They were the only people on the Western continent to use a phonetic system of writing. They made paper of maguey, and three of their books—all that are known to have escaped the burning desire of the priests—are now in European libraries, and show advanced skill in pictographic and glyptic writing, as well as a fertile imagination.

Their calendar system was highly developed and accurate. Von Humboldt thought it must have been borrowed from the far East, but Dr. Brinton believes the Mayas worked it out for themselves. The language is guttural. It is more like English than any other American tongue.

Their religion was less cruel than that of the Aztecs, as they had little to do with human sacrifices. Their priests were intelligent and powerful. They were good farmers, good navigators, and understood trade. They were clever workers in wood, stone, and clay. They did not have native minerals, but obtained copper, silver, and gold from foreign parts. Their pottery was the best in America, and they wove flax so fine the Spaniards mistook it for silk.

MAYA ARCHITECTURE.

"Maya architecture," says Dr. Holmes, "with its associated sculpture and painting, constitutes the best remaining index of the achievements of the race. The seventy thousand square miles of the Maya territory are so dotted with the ruins of towns and villages that the traveler is seldom out of sight of some mound or pyramid or other massive structure. The preservation of these remains is wonderful, considering the four hundred years of decay and destruction through which they have passed. There is hardly a village or town on the peninsula of Yucatan that is not built in some part of materials derived from ancient structures. Yet the work of demolition still goes on, and presently, unless the Mexican government takes adequate measures to preserve them, the traces of the race and its strange art will exist only in books.

The question as to the purpose of the many buildings now going to decay in the Maya province has come up again and again and still remains imperfectly answered. In the main they were devoted to religious purposes. The Spaniards saw many of the Maya rites. Their most important buildings were devoted to the gods and to the priesthood. There are temples and shrines in almost every group of ruins. It is evident these were unfitted for the ordinary purposes of dwelling, assembly, or defense. They are so solid in construction and overloaded with mythological embellishment as to be inconsistent with the requirements of ordinary secular uses. The ordinary dwelling houses, being of wood and thatch, have disappeared, but were probably like those the Mayas use today.

STRANGE SUPERSTITIONS.

Mrs. Le Plongeon, who accompanied her husband during his years of exploration, says: "The Mayas are more superstitious now than they were five hundred years ago, for, added to their own queer notions, they have a vast store of strange fancies imported by the Spanish conquerors. Many of the native ideas are of great antiquity, such as the belief in metempsychosis and metamorphosis. They hesitate before killing the most venomous reptile if found in or near the old palaces or temples left by their ancestors. Urge them to destroy a viper near those deserted halls and they say: 'Ah, no, it belongs to Xlab-pak Yum (lord of the old walls), whose spirit roams here.' It would be like killing father and mother, a crime not known among the Mayas, who revere their parents with filial piety.

"They show respect to elders, too, never contradicting them directly. 'So says my elder,' are the Maya's words, and he does not dispute. When questioned about the old ruined cities he says the alux or dwarfs built them, and declares the pixan, the souls of those dwarfs, haunt their houses at night, coming in whether the doors are open or not. These alux correspond to the 'little people' of Ireland. They disturb tired laborers by shaking their hammocks, they lash those who sleep too heavily, they throw stones, and they whistle. They have enormous appetites and are great thieves.

"Another spook is Xtabai, a wicked, deceitful phantom that haunts highways at night. It appears as a beautiful woman, always combing her luxuriant hair with a comb known as 'the comb of Xtabai.' She is likely to run away at one's approach, but if a lovesick laddie does succeed in clasping her in his arms she changes into a sack of thorns that rests on two ducks' feet. After hugging this bag the youth always has a fever. Balam, the god of agriculture, is another trouble to the Maya mind. He has whiskers, walks in the air, and, like the alux, he whistles. He must have the first of all the crops. He likes pies made with a crust of corn, stuffed with chicken, and loaded with red pepper—a sort of tomale. The Maya farmer puts a pie at each corner of his field, soaks three of them in balche liquor, and leaves one rumless, in case a teetotaler should chance along. This balche is made of balche bark soaked in honey and water. It is strong stuff. The Mayas use it at all their feasts and ceremonies.

THEIR MEDICINE MEN.

"When they are sick they try herbs; if these fail, they call an Indian doctor, who proceeds to discover who has bewitched the patient. He thinks he can do it if the good folk of the house will give to him all he can eat and drink for three days and will let him have plenty of sleep. On the third day he pours in balche until he rolls over. When he comes to he fusses round under the patient's hammock and produces some sort of small doll, the cause of the disease. Then he takes his fee and the naughty doll and departs. If the patient recovers the medicine man is great. If the patient dies—that was the divine decree, with which the medicine man could not have anything to do."

Dr. Le Plongeon says:—

"It is well to notice that, like all the Maya authors who have described the awful cataclysms that caused the submergence of the 'Land of Mu' (Atlantis), Proclus mentions the existence of ten countries or islands, as Plato did. Can this be a mere coincidence or was it actual geographical knowledge on the part of these writers?

"Inquiries are often made as to the causes that led to the interruption of the communications between the inhabitants of the western continent and the dwellers on the coasts of the Mediterranean after they had been renewed by the Carthaginians. It is evident that the mud spoken of by the Egyptian priests had settled in the course of centuries and that the seaweeds mentioned by Hamilco had ceased to be a barrier sufficient to impede the passage, since the Carthaginians reached the shores of Yucatan at least 500 years before the Christian era."—Chicago Tribune.

LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 4, 1900.

A PLEA FOR GRACELAND.

The year 1899 was a record breaker in many ways. It was a remarkable year in the number and size of donations made to educational institutions. The year 1900 promises to be fully as noteworthy in this respect, as is shown by the following extract from one of the daily papers:—

It is already apparent from the record of the first half of the year that the total donations for 1900 will equal, if they do not exceed, the large and unprecedented aggregate of 1899. The total thus far reported, contributed in sums of $100,000 and upwards, is $14,734,000. The smaller sums will swell this total to nearly $20,000,000. Selecting only the larger amounts, institutions of education have been benefited as follows this year: Washington University, $5,000,000; Cooper Union, $800,000; University of Chicago, $713,000; Harvard College, $356,000; University of Topeka (Kas.), $250,000; Vanderbilt University, $250,000; Columbia College (Rochester, N. Y.), Mechanics' Institute, and Washington and Lee University, $200,000 each. St. Paul's School (Long Island), Newton (Mass.) Theological Seminary, Yale College, and Bowdoin College, $150,000 each; Brown University, $125,000; New York University, Wellesley College, Keuka College, and Barnard College, $100,000 each. Libraries have been assisted as follows: Pittsburg, Pa., $3,600,000; Newport, R. I., $900,000; and Evanston, Ill., Charleston, S. C., Elizabeth, N. J., and Conway, Mass., $100,00 each. The fine art institutions have not been forgotten. The Buffalo Art Gallery has received $300,000; the Chicago Art Institute, $300,000; and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, $140,000.

Nine-tenths of these sums have been given outright by donors while living, who will thus be enabled to see that their generosity is not misapplied by the beneficiaries. They will also have the satisfaction of knowing that their munificence cannot be prejudiced by the litigation of heirs or the uncertainty of wills. In spite of the pessimists, this is a generous old world.—Chicago Tribune, May, 31, 1900.

Since the publication of the above a number of magnificent donations have been made to various colleges and universities.

It is hardly to be expected that Graceland will be fortunate enough to receive any such endowments as are recorded in the foregoing. We wish, however, to call the attention of our people to the manner in which some of the schools of our country are being supported by sympathizers and friends. Surely our people have not less interest than others.

The needs of our church school are many. We need better equipment. We need additions to our collections of books, specimens, etc. "Every little helps," says the old adage. The "littles" help not alone in a material way, but by reason of the encouragement offered to those who are in charge when they realize on the receipt of the littles that the sympathy and moral support of the donors are extended to the school.

In the way of financial support, we are confident that our people can do more than they have. There is no better way, no nobler way, of endearing one's name to posterity than by forever associating that name with some institution of learning by liberally and generously endowing the whole or a part of it with means sufficient to guarantee its permanency. While this church has comparatively few wealthy men, as the world goes, we have a number who are amply able to endow chairs in Graceland.

For instance: Let us suppose some earnest Saint desires to aid Graceland in a permanent way, and is desirous of having his name associated with the school as a benefactor. If he be not able to give the school enough to place it at once on an independent financial footing, he could endow a chair, say a chair of mathematics, a chair of Greek, or a chair of history. He would do this by giving a sum of money large enough so that when invested it would yield an income sufficient to pay a professor of mathematics, Greek, or history. This chair could be called in honor of the endower. If his name be Jones, the chair could be called the "Jones chair of mathematics," etc. Thus would his name be always remembered, generation after generation, and he be called blessed.

Two, or three, or several could combine forces to endow one chair, or one man could endow several. Surely there is no better way of endearing your name to posterity.

Many are making noble sacrifices for Graceland, and many others will. Will you be among that number?

LYNCHING AND THE NEGRO.

It is pleasing to note the stand the southern editors are taking against the horrible practice of lynching. Of late quite a number of editors throughout the South have placed themselves on record as opposing the practice; even in the case of negroes. The South has always been merciless on the criminal negro, and many of the colored race have been swung into the air by ruthless mobs, when the offense committed was but trivial.

We believe that the racial hatred is growing less in the South; and with a loosening of the tense strain has come a better sense of justice which impels the people to await the somewhat slow but usually sure action of the law.

One of the most potent factors in the eradication of race troubles has been, is, and will be, the educational elevation of the colored race. With improved mental powers comes a clearer and keener sense of moral obligations. The effect of civil education upon the negro will be to lift his race up to a plane near that occupied by the white race.

The superstitious negro is naturally devout. Remove his superstition by educating him, and his nature will turn him towards religion. To educate him, then, means to Christianize him.

Booker T. Washington has done a noble work, and who can say but what to his efforts the credit is largely due for the improved condition of the negro in the South.

To be sure, not only negroes are lynched in the South, and lynching is not confined to the South. The lawless practice is far too prevalent among us, and it is to be hoped that every year will see less of it. The press of the South can do much towards suppressing it, and more of the Southern editors should "fall in line" and lend their influence against it.

"Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord," we should abide his time.

"NOT HUSBANDS ENOUGH."

It appears that Utah is unique in several ways. In the Salt Lake Tribune, for June 12, 1900, in a report of a conference of the Y. L. M. I. A., occurs the following:—

Miss Sarah Eddington and Mrs. Maria Y. Dougal made brief remarks to the young ladies, congratulating them upon the progress they have made and are making in their improvement work. Mrs. Dougall said that marriageable girls are so much more numerous than marriageable young men, that a good many of the girls must necessarily remain single, and so she advised them to fit themselves for the missionary field, saying she was confident that women could preach the gospel as forcefully and as logically as their brothers.

For some time past there have been telegrams in various papers something like the following:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

A carload of girls, converted to "Mormonism," passed through Denver today en route to Utah. They were in charge of a deacon and his wife. They came from Missouri, Illinois, and other states.

Dispatches similar to this, have come from various places. The Deseret News comments editorially on these reports, under the caption, "An absurd Dispatch," and ridicules the idea of there being girls in carload lots sent to Utah. Among the reasons presented for pronouncing the news absurd, the News presents this:—

One fact ought to be known, as it would furnish a sufficient refutation of such stories as that wired from Denver. That is, there are hosts of marriageable girls and women in Utah who are single, and apparently have no opportunities of entering the matrimonial state. It is something that is greatly deplored by thoughtful people anxious for the general welfare. There is not a town or settlement in Utah without a large number of young women, capable of marriage, who seem to have no present chance to become wives and mothers, for which nature has designed them. There is a backwardness on the part of many men, young and old, to embark on the sea of matrimony. Whether it is for fear of the expense which accompanies family responsibilities in these extravagant times, or for other causes, is not explained, but the condition exists and it is one that gives reason for serious reflection.

From the foregoing quotations it seems that Utah is confronted with a condition that exists in very few if any other places. In this country the number of females has usually been slightly smaller than the number of males, except possibly immediately following great wars. It will be interesting to watch the census returns to see what the true conditions are. The idea seems to be somewhat prevalent among our Utah religionists that there is an urgent need for husbands. Of course the girls must get married; and if there are not men to marry them, what next? The Salt Lake people (the men) have wonderfully broad ideas on matrimony, and they will probably solve the problem some way.

THE FOURTH.

One hundred and twenty-four times has the return of this day been hailed with joy by the American people. One hundred and twenty-four years have we existed as a government.

The progress and condition of this government is of special interest to Latter Day Saints, both because this work had its incipiency here, and because we as a people believe the Divine Ruler has had a special watch-care over the nation. Our optimism will not permit us to believe otherwise than that both our nation and our church is guarded by an all-powerful King, and that the ultimate outcome will be the complete fulfillment of prophecy and the triumph of truth and righteousness.

The developments of the times are rapid and significant, and indicate that the time so long predicted is here,—the hastening time. To us the confusion and tumult is not mysterious. To us they are signs of the times, and speak in clear tones of the truth and strength of the words and laws of our Master.

And on this, the birthday of our nation, we are thankful for peace divine and a strong faith in the ultimate success of all things good. May the right be speeded by our Supreme Ruler!

ENCOURAGING CONFERENCES.

From all directions come tidings of joy. Conferences are being held in many districts, and the almost invariable report in each case is, "One of the best we ever had." That such is the case argues strongly that among the Saints there is unity. With unity come strength and peace; with peace after tumult comes progress substantial. Long have we been admonished to occupy higher grounds. Surely the good reports from the gatherings indicate that the Saints are heeding the admonition.

Unity is the keynote of peace and success. Illy can we afford to destroy our peace and prospects for success by harshness and ill feeling. Too much is at stake! We cannot afford to lose the peace and influence of the Comforter by jangling and quarreling.

We believe that if the cause for dissension among the Saints is sought for, if the conditions and results are carefully analyzed, we believe that the cause in nearly every case will be found to be a species of selfishness. Think of it, Saints, and see if we are not right. Paul says:—

Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, endureth all things.—1 Cor. 13: 4–7.

Is not then charity a perfect antonym for selfishness? What would tend more towards the harmony in a conference or gathering than for each to be actuated by charity? Our conferences are becoming more harmonious and peaceful. Difficulties and obstacles which seemed calculated to cause dissolution have been overcome with scarcely a jar, and peace has prevailed. Truly we have some charity; let us have more, and let joy and harmony continue to dominate at our gathering.

We are thankful for the good reports from all parts.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. T. W. Williams, writes from Los Angeles, California, June 19, announcing the reunion to be held there in August next. (See Miscellaneous Department.) After making quite a plea in behalf of the sisters, he adds:—

Church prospects are good here, and we anticipate a prosperous year. Brn. Harris, Holt, and Dana are yet with us, but are preparing to go to their missions. We expect Brn. Chatburn, Anderson, Smith, and Burton shortly.

Bro. W. S. Taylor, says in a letter from Sherwin Junction, Kansas, June 24:—

Bro. T. S. Hayton was with us lately, preaching for us. He baptized three into the fold.

Bro. T. C. Kelley, writing from Sedalia, Ky., under date of June 22, says:—

It is a hard time to do mission work here, as there has been so much rain that farmers are behind with their work and are too busy to go to church except Sundays. Prospects as to the work are not very flattering, so for as I can see; yet we hope to accomplish some good this season.

E. B. and E. L. Anderson, writing from Bermidji, Minn., June 25, say:—

There are now somewhere between thirty and forty members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints in this region of country. And we have tried not to leave our religion but to take it with us wherever go. We first started a little home Sunday school; and afterwards, when we were given permission to use the schoolhouse we organized a union Sunday school, last winter, which is still in progress. We use the Quarterlies, and think them just right. We have prayer meeting immediately after Sunday school whenever it is possible. The young people are trying to help all they can, which makes it encouraging. We would like to be organized into a branch if it is the Lord's will.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Graceland College catalogues are now ready for distribution, and the college board has sent out many of them. Those who desire them, and especially those who think of attending school next school year should write to Secretary I. W. Allender. Send the names of those who are expecting to go to college soon.

Considerable notice is given in some papers to the Sanford religious movement. Mr. Sanford has a temple at Lisbon, Me., according to the Kansas City World, where prayers are continuously offered up. He advocates a system of faith cure, and has taken a number of converts from Kansas City, several school-teachers among them.

Our readers will be glad to learn that the work on the third volume of history is progressing rapidly. Over 600 pages are already set.

We have received a pamphlet entitled, "Christianity vs. Mormonism. An acceptance of the Challenges of Josephite Mormonism. Indorsements of Clark Braden by Church Papers, Church Boards, Churches, Colleges, and Preachers." He gives a number of indorsements, none dated, evidently taken from indorsements received when in better standing than now, MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 12.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

REVIEW.

Thus we see that by following men who are or have been engaged in a number of modern researches made in different fields of thought, we find a score or more of converging lines of light turned on man's primitive condition in the New World. We have but touched a few points. We can see, however, that when the Book of Mormon was first offered to the world as a true and authentic history of America, or certain parts of it, that at that time some of its statements looked to be incredible and altogether out of joint with what the public mind had settled on with reference to prehistoric America. The chances were then, in the 'twenties, a hundred to one against it in some of its statements. But every day, Nadaillac says, some of the old theories are getting upset. Yes, sir! "What had appeared to be the best founded conclusions" are from day to day being swept away.

This process of reconstructing the past is in effect putting that book on trial; but if the reader will only notice, it escapes condemnation almost every time. It fares a good deal better with scientists than it does with the preachers! How is this to be accounted for, only upon the hypothesis that it was written by an eyewitness of what is related? How comes it that men who made American antiquities a study should have to change their "conclusions" from time to time as discoveries are made, while the man who wrote that book is confirmed by these same discoveries in some of his broadest and wildest statements? Is that an evidence of fraud, or a true narrative—which?

Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith could not have done that well—you neither. Its author starts primitive man in Central America, the antiquities of which are older than Mexico or Peru. Here science and the Book of Mormon join hands, and that is a good point for its true authenticity. That first era (the Colhuas) came to an end, the myths say, nine or ten centuries B. C. According to the Book of Mormon that first era (the Jaredite) ended about six centuries B. C.

The South American colony landed on the Pacific coast. The first traces of them are in the Titicaca region and to the southward. Four brothers located at Cuzco, and were directed there in the first settlement by a miraculous golden branch, or rod, or wedge. The youngest of these brothers, in most of the myths, became the first ruler in Peru.

In the Book of Mormon, Nephi located a colony at Nephi, and became the first king there. He was soon followed up by his brothers, and war followed. This city of Nephi became the center of civilization for several centuries; first for the Nephites, and afterward for the Lamanites. They built roads leading from city to city; that is what the record says. These roads, then, will point to Nephi, which was the "chief city." (Alma 21:24.)

Four great roads lead into Cuzco; one from each one of the four divisions of the empire. (Prescott's Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 2, p. 52.) Two of these roads went northward and two southward. One of them passed over the grand plateau northward to Quito; a second went down to the coast, and then northward along the lowlands, on the borders of the ocean; a third went down southward into Chili; a fourth went southeast, past the Titicaca region, to Potosi, in Southern Bolivia. These roads point to Cuzco as a center of civilization. So the roads point to Nephi, the "chief city." The four brothers were at Nephi, or in its neighborhood; and the four brothers were at Cuzco. In the myths they came to Cuzco from the south or southeast. In the Book of Mormon they made two journeys before they reached Nephi. Nephi, likely, is Cuzco. Cuzco was built on the ruins of an old city, and that gave it its name, "coscos," or Cuzco. The old city was Nephi, and the new one Cuzco.

The four brother myth is found with almost every tribe in South America. They trace their pedigree back to those four men. In Central and North America the native tribes trace back their pedigree to four or eight ancestors, thus declaring the unity of the race.

The Aztecs trace back their pedigree to eight ancestors, who were led by a "prince," who had four sons. This we see points out Lehi and his four sons, and the four brothers.

The Toltecs trace their pedigree sometimes to eight ancestors, and sometimes to four, and then again they speak of seven families.

The Chiapenese also speak of seven families from the tower of Babel.

The Toltecs, Chichimecs, and Aztecs say they came from Tulan, Tlapallan, and Aztlan. These are said to be one and the same place. This distant Orient was in the east, "over the sea."

A person who is called Quetzalcoatl came also from Tulan to preach to the Toltecs. There has been a great deal of speculation as to who this person could be. He was white, with a long beard, and dressed in a long white robe; his teachings are said to have been pure and elevating—"the purest Christianity." This person was high priest at Tulan (the distant Orient); he was born of a virgin "over there." He was crucified; was the creator.

Now, dear reader, cannot you see who they are trying to tell you about? Some Christian minister thought this must be St. Thomas, who came across from India to Central America, and became a Christian missionary to the ancient Toltecs. But that won't do. St. Thomas was not born of a virgin; he was not creator, nor crucified. This myth of Quetzalcoatl will not fit any other person than our Lord, and it will just fit him. Tulan, then, is identified as the country where our Lord was born, thus confirming the Book of Mormon story of Christ's ministry to the Nephites, and that the ancestors of the natives came from Jerusalem.

The Mayas are traced to the northern part of South America. The "Empire of Mayax" started down there; and grew like a "tree," extending its dominions up through Central America into Yucatan. This is where the people of Zarahemla were found by Mosiah, in the northern part of South America. This appears from the reading of the narrative. They were located on the river Sidon. This Sidon was a "great river." It ran from south to north, and the line between the country called Nephi and the country called Zarahemla passed by the head of this river. This, then, takes us southward to a watershed, with a water basin leaning to the north. The physical geography of the northern part of South America answers this description. This watershed is nearly under the equator, and the land of Nephi was southward from this watershed; and the land of Zarahemla was northward, and ran up into a "small neck of land," which joined to Bountiful. This small neck of land is what kept those countries (Nephi and Zarahemla) from being surrounded by water. There is no country in the Book of Mormon south of the national land of Nephi.

These Mayas, then, are found to be the Mulokites, who seem to have in some respects a different pedigree. Their union with the Nephites will account for their empire reaching from the northern part of South America up into Yucatan; for that northern country was settled by those two peoples jointly.

This northern country was the Jaredite country, which is called Desolation. This term applies to the whole of the Jaredite country in the first place; but after the Nephites and Zarahemlaites had settled it up, they retained the name Desolation to a local land only.

The Nephites moving up into Central America and Mexico, which had previous to that been left desolate (the Jaredites having been exterminated by civil war), accounts for the reconstruction of their cities, which appear so plain in the ruins. The Nephites, too, were exterminated by the Lamanites, or nearly so; those who would "deny Christ" were saved, as would appear from what Moroni says, thus leaving the Lamanites and dissenters in possession of the country. This Lamanite victory over the Nephites is the Chichimec victory over the Toltecs. The Nephites were a white civilized race, with a Christian culture. The Toltecs were a white civilized people with a Christian culture. Their culture hero came from Tulan, and was born of a virgin there, etc. The Nephites were taught by our Lord in person—in Mexico.

There had been three eras in the Nahuatl rule; 1. the Toltec; 2. the Chichimec; 3. the Aztec.

The animals are all on record, and more too. Professor Lund, "the learned Dane," reports forty-two extinct animals in South America. Among the number are the ox and horse.

The metals appear in the myths and in the ruins. They could write, but the Toltec writings were destroyed by the Chichimecs and Aztecs. But after all, the Toltec era is referred to by the Aztecs as "the golden age." In turn, the Aztec writings were destroyed by the Spaniards, who wanted to wipe out the past, because their writings, they said, "impeded the work of conversion."

The book buried with the chief seems to be a recollection of the plates of Mormon (Book of Mormon), or the plates of Nephi, from which Mormon quoted; or the plates of brass (the Hebrew writings down to Jeremiah) which were all hid up unto the Lord by Mormon and Moroni. This book myth is significant. It shows the ancestors of the man who related it to have been familiar with some such book as the Book of Mormon. Or was that a fraud too? And then, again, it is related by a person in the region where the Book of Mormon was hid by Moroni, who was a chief of ten thousand. The book and the myth are found nearly together. If the Book of Mormon is not that Indian book, then it is buried yet, and may be found.

If the Book of Mormon is a fraud, and was conceived and written by Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith, as many wise men now say and conscientiously believe, even then we meet great difficulties, because the fraud is growing bigger "every day." Is it common for frauds to be confirmed by scientific research? The Bible is confirmed by both myths and archæology, and this is taken by its believers as a "Godsend" in these days of unbelief.

If the Book of Mormon is confirmed by the same kind of evidence—then what? Is that a Godsend too? Or is that the Devil destroying our souls? If the concrete facts of history as revealed by scientific inquiry in our own day are true, then that book cannot be false. These facts are buttresses built up of different materials, and are growing stronger every day. As discoveries proceed points of agreement are multiplied, obscurities cleared up, and difficulties are solved. Where the narrative is unconfirmed, and it rests solely on its own basis, I am willing to wait and let science speak. The very "stones" in time will, I believe, be made to "cry out," "Blessed be the name of God forever and ever, for wisdom and might are his. . . . He revealeth the deep and secret things" (even by a Charnay, a Lund, and a Brinton). "He knoweth what is in the darkness," but these men will reveal it for him; they are honestly carrying on their investigations in antiquarian research by their different methods, and reach certain conclusions, and that identical with the statements made in that "strange" narrative. This is as when, starting on any portion of the tire of a wheel and passing down the nearest spoke, all these diverse spokes lead to one hub. One travels on the spoke of mythology, another the linguistic spoke, and one on the archæological spoke, and another on the geological spoke. Now the Book of Mormon being the hub of American antiquities, they all fit into it nicely. This they would not do if it was false; but being true, they could not do anything else, because with the truth all things that exist are in harmony.

BARNARD, Mo., February 5, 1898.

LAY ON HANDS LIGHTLY.

Perhaps there are few who need such advice; but if there are any, I hope they may receive this in the same spirit in which it is written. To make my meaning plain, I will give a little experience. Several years ago a sister was baptized, and, as usual, at the next meeting was confirmed. When the elders approached her to lay their hands upon her head, she closed her eyes and began to pray in her heart that the promise of our heavenly Father might be realized, and the Holy Spirit be given her. But they grasped her head in a firm way and held it as in a vise, and with a bearing down pressure upon her neck, until, in a moment of time, such a torture was inflicted upon her that the pain was almost unbearable, and nothing but the fear of doing something unheard of prevented her from putting up her hand and loosening their grasp from her head. One of them, in particular, whose hands were shaking constantly from overwrought zeal, or some other cause, unconsciously inflicted the most suffering. Her prayer was greatly hindered, and it was such a relief when their hands were removed from her head. Since then, at different times when being administered to in times of affliction the same torture has been inflicted, until she feels it a duty to beseech the eldership to learn how to lay on hands lightly, tenderly, carefully.

I have often wondered how children, from eight years old and upwards, have endured it without screaming or fainting, if the same thoughtlessness has been allowed.

If you do not believe this, I would suggest that you prove it to your own satisfaction by seating yourself in a chair and allowing two or three strong persons to grasp your head in the manner indicated, so that you cannot or dare not move a muscle of your neck, and see the effect it will have upon your head and neck.

Now, I know there is not an elder in all Israel who would knowingly be guilty of such carelessness, and I also know there are not many who would ever mention it to them, for fear of hurting their feelings. I assure you, it is with a desire to see not only the elders, but all God's people "come up higher" in the plan of perfection, that I write the above truths.

A SISTER.

A MONTH IN THE SOCIETY ISLANDS. NO. I.

BY J. W. PETERSON.

In order to extend more widely in America and among the Saints a knowledge of what missionary life among the islands of the Pacific ocean really is, I thought to copy from a few leaves of my diary, and fill out and enlarge upon the points noted therein, according to the best of my knowledge. I think it best to begin with October 15, 1899. In order to be well understood, however, it will be necessary to mention a few things that transpired before that date and which are connected with matters afterward mentioned.

Arriving at Papeete, a city of about three thousand inhabitants, composed of people of many nationalities, we found a colony of Latter Day Saints living on about three acres of land located in the eastern part of the city. On this land is located a frame church, built of flooring and roofed with galvanized iron, a missionary house built of the same kind of material, and twelve other residences mostly built in the same way. In the missionary house live Bro. and Sr. Burton at present. In one other house, wife and I were very comfortably located during our stay there.

This latter house is to be the "Lane-

shine house" or printing office. It is the same house in which most of our missionaries have first made their homes after arriving here.

East of the printing office the missionary house (now sitting back) is to be moved and repaired. When moved it will be on the corner of the block on front street facing the bay. West of the printing office the church (also now sitting back on a dark street) is to be moved, repaired, and repainted. West of the church the new tabernacle is to be built for the April conference. It is to be one hundred by eighty feet. Immediately back of it, and not far from the center of the block, a new hydrant is to be situated. A splendid new picket fence, built of New Zealand red gum, now surrounds the block. The land is not quite paid for yet, and the improvements will cost some hundreds of dollars. But as it is all done by direction of the annual conference, no great fears are felt as to the outcome. There are not far from two thousand Saints in this mission, and in this country everybody goes, or tries to go, to conference; so that a few dollars from each would soon liquidate a large debt.

Nothing is needed here for winter necessities, as the climate is nearly the same the year round, and frost is unknown. Besides the continuous supply of fish and fruit, there are certain coral islands that furnish pearls and pearl shells amounting to several hundred thousand dollars annually, and many thousand dollars worth of cocoanuts are exported annually besides. Bro. Burton says these people are the wealthiest in the world, but they are swindled and robbed on every hand by the traders. Of this we will have more to say in another place.

By the above the reader will discover that the annual conferences here are almost as large as the General Conference in America. American Saints seem to think they are the whole thing when you mention the church; but when we send up to the General Conference over eighty Lamanite delegates from here, some of you may alter your minds. The entire sixth quorum of elders are Lamanites, and dwell upon these islands of the sea. Bro. Johnson says there are enough to half fill another quorum.

Bro. Burton edits an eight-page monthly paper, called Te Orometua (the Instructor), in the native language. He also issues an annual Sunday school book of questions and answers. Besides, many of our tracts have been translated and published, also some new ones are in circulation; one excellent one by Bro. Mark H. Forscutt. The Doctrine and Covenants is being translated, but we hope to get that published more cheaply at Lamoni. For all this of course, money is needed.

As most of the Saints gathered at the little island of Hikueru about October 1 to dive for pearls, we thought it a good time to get acquainted with them and a good opportunity to instruct them, as also to receive a few dollars for the many expenses of printing and improving at Tahiti. Bro. Burton's health not being very good, he sent us up here to look after the interests of the work spiritually, and to assist the bishop's agent to look after the financial affairs, should he require any help; or in other words, to regulate, if any regulation was needed. Besides all this, the Saints had sent us money to pay our fare to Hikueru; and so Sunday, October 15, found us all ready, except packing satchels, etc., to board the steamer next day for Hikueru.

Sunday, October 15, 1899, at eight a. m., listened to one of the native missionaries preach. A fair effort, though not a very long one. At ten a. m., Bro. Burton spoke in native tongue on the necessity of obeying the law in order to enter the celestial kingdom. After the sermon, Sunday school convened. They study the Bible by subjects. First the Sunday school book refers them to a lesson which they study in the classes, then the superintendent asks twenty questions on the subject matter in the lesson, which are printed in the book, as also the answers, often quoting various other texts to prove the lesson true. These answers are all to be memorized and not read out of the book. They continue the lesson until it is memorized, if it takes two months. They try to learn out here, and not simply to get through with the book.

After the Sunday school, my wife went over to the Adventists to borrow a song book from which she desired to copy a few songs. (Ah, if we had only known what we needed here, how much more pleasant it would have been.) The Adventists, true to their calling, were washing on Sunday. Wife was asked by the minister what she would say at the judgment when she was asked if she had kept the Sabbath.

She said, "I will answer him that I was not a Jew but a Christian, and therefore kept the gospel of his Son."

Quite a long argument followed about the law and the gospel, in which, if I am any judge, the minister came out at least second best. I was warned by the Spirit as to what was occurring, and so prayed that my wife might have the Spirit to answer the Lord's foes. When she returned she said, "Words and arguments came to me that I never thought of before."

At 2:30 p. m., attended prayer and testimony meeting. At seven p. m., it fell to my lot to speak in English. I had announced the "Second coming of Christ as my subject. Several Adventists, two Mormon elders, a few other white folks, and several natives were in attendance.

After church, most of them came over to the missionary house for a social chat. Among others were some young people from Shenandoah, Iowa. From the Mormon elders I learned that they have twenty-four missionaries in these islands. We have four, and our membership is twice as large as theirs. The captain on the Tropic Bird coming down from San Francisco told me that he was informed by certain Mormon missionaries who had traveled with him on his last trip, that they were going down to swamp the Reorganization. During the balance of the night we were mostly engaged in fighting mosquitoes. Two and a half months' experience had at least qualified one of us to chase a thousand, and two to put ten thousand to flight.

Monday, October 16. Early in the morning the Saints began to bring in bananas, pineapples, oranges, and cocoanuts for us to take along with us, as at Hikueru nothing grows but cocoanut trees. Boxes, bundles, trunks, and satchels, to the number of twelve, were soon in ship shape; and some of the brethren pulling a wagon, hustled them off to the boat.

Just as we were getting ready to go to dinner at Bro. Burton's, the blacksmith called with a pair of iron hinges which I had ordered made two weeks before, hoping to get them in time to get the gates to our fence up before I left, as Bro. Burton has about all he can see to with the pen. I had overseen the putting up of the fence and the making of the gates at odd times when I had nothing else to do. Not finding the kind of hinges we wanted, I had ordered a new kind made that would allow the gate to swing either way and always swing shut. The blacksmith had done as good a job as I could have gotten done in America, and I am not sure but the iron is better.

After dinner several of the Saints gathered in, and we had a short prayer meeting, after which we all went down to the wharf, and found that the boat would not leave till about four p. m. However, we went aboard and enjoyed ourselves for awhile, Bro. Burton soon leaving to look after some type just arrived from the Herald Office, though having been ordered and paid for several years ago.

About four o'clock in the afternoon we steamed out of the harbor, having on board a very heavy cargo of fruit, merchandise, lumber, and coal. The coal was for the United States steamer Albatross, now on a scientific exploration among the coral islands, of which we will have more to say, as we expect to meet them again at Hikueru. Besides our company, consisting of the Bishop's agent and family, and wife and I, there were aboard several merchants, a French judge, and a Catholic priest.

The sea was almost as smooth as glass, but it looked rather stormy ahead. We got a fine view of the island as we steamed out to sea. Tahiti is mountainous; the other islands that we shall visit on this trip are but coral reefs. We passed Point Venus about dark. Point Venus is where Captain Cook came to observe the transit of Venus in the latter part of the eighteenth century. We retired for the night with high hopes of a smooth journey.

About eleven p. m. my wife was thrown from her cot, and I being on the other side of the cabin, was tossed against the wall. We were just on the point of getting seasick, but we clung to our berths, noticing, however, before going to sleep again, that a heavy sea was on, and things unusually noisy up on deck.

Tuesday, October 17.—Don't feel like eating anything this morning. About half seasick myself, and Lillie about four thirds so. Seem to prefer to lie in our bunks. Don't care for any dinner either. Think it best to try to go up on deck and get a little fresh air. One effort convinced me that the air in the cabin was good enough. Went to the table for supper (they call it dinner here), but the waiter was so long in bringing my order that I began to get seasick, and was compelled to lie down. Lillie ate a very few bites and followed my example. What a powerful thing example is, isn't it? The steward, however, brought us a can of cove oysters, which we ate, and soon retired for the night. Thus we spent our fifth wedding anniversary.

Wednesday, October 18.—Did not feel like eating breakfast. The steamer rolls fearfully. Went up on deck a few minutes, but soon returned and reclined on the sofa till dinner. Ate a very little, during which time the captain said, "Do you folks know how nearly you came being sent off in the boats the other night?" I answered no, but I realized quite a sea was on, for my wife was thrown on the floor and I against the wall. He then told us they threw ten thousand feet of lumber overboard, and would have sent us off in the lifeboats in a few minutes more, but the boat righted itself again and they were all right again in a few hours. A wave had struck the boat broadside, and it had rolled over on the side so far that the water had filled the engine room, put out the fire, and stopped the steam pumps. For a few moments the captain said it seemed as if the boat was doomed, but it slowly raised itself, and they soon got her in shape again. Was up on deck most all afternoon, but staid up too near supper time, and was feeling too bad to eat supper.

Thursday, October 19.—Did not care for breakfast. Was on deck all forenoon reading. Ate a fair dinner. After dinner a discussion started on deck between Metuaore, the Bishop's agent, and the Catholics. Metuaore's wife was quite sickly, but soon forgot her sickness and took a hand in the discussion. She is well versed in the Bible, as is also her husband. At the last conference she repeated from memory the first thirteen chapters of Matthew. The priest and the judge and all who could understand native took part in the discussion. The steward told me that the whole crowd, priest and all, was done up by our people. He said, "We often have them aboard, and they can whip out anything that they come across." Later in the afternoon, had some talk about the archæology of the islands with an old resident. About eleven p. m., we sighted the island of Anaa; but as these coral islands have no place to anchor, ships have to stand off shore and send the goods ashore in small boats. This standing off shore is like Lou Hills would say, "They keep pulling ahead and backing up all the time just to keep the men busy."

Friday, Oct. 20.—Feeling quite well this morning. Went ashore about eight a. m. with the Bishop's agent. The Saints gathered at the church to see the new missionary, and after singing and prayer, they presented me with two dollars and seventy cents, also one duck and several chickens. I thanked them for their kindness, and gave them back the fowls, and told them to have a feast prepared for themselves at my expense, which pleased them very much. An old brother being sick, sent word for administration, and I went and administered to him. We returned to the church, where I was requested to ordain an elder, he having been chosen by vote some time previous, and as the missionary in charge gave me the right to do so, I ordained him, after which I returned to the boat, and was soon off for our destination. The afternoon was spent quite pleasantly, except that my hat blew off in the sea. Had a short talk with one of the merchants on religion. He being a German, I presume he was a Lutheran. Among other things he said was, that he did not like to argue much, as it might cause him to change his faith, and he thought that was wrong. I asked him if he thought it was right to hold to a wrong faith. He evaded the answer, and turned the subject. About eleven p. m. we sighted Hickueru, and stood off shore till morning.

Saturday, Oct. 21. — Morning dawned as some one has said, "quite early," and revealed a round coral reef surrounding a lagoon about eighteen miles across. The reef is from fifty feet to two hundred yards across at different places, and covered in places with barren cocoanut trees. The sea was rough and the landing was bad. Came nearly upsetting the small boat we went ashore in. A wave carried us up within eighty feet of shore. From there we were carried ashore by the natives. Some of the Saints were at the shore, including Elder Herman Janssen, a Swede of twenty-seven years' residence on these islands, and who is to be my interpreter. We were conducted to the Saints' church, a nice, clean building. The sides are built of flooring, with a splendid floor, good windows, solid seats, and iron roof. The church is thirty by seventy-two feet with raised platform.

Soon the house was literally packed. After song, prayer, and song, an address of welcome was delivered by one of the brethren in true native oratory and translated to us by Bro. Janssen. We each replied as best we could, but the house and land, and even the people, seemed to toss about like the waves of the sea. We were then conducted to the house of one of the brethren where we were informed that we would remain until they could build a missionary house for us and our interpreter. Spent the rest of the day in trying to get our heads level again. At seven p. m., the Saints met for singing. Here all sing who can. We have no preferred singers. One man has as good a right to use his one musical talent here as the ones with more. Oh what a blessing, and how the Spirit thrills my soul to the center when I hear them sing! What a joy to hear natural voices and natural melody where it is not laced, and pinched, and padded by human laws called human rules of music. We were asked to sing one piece, but nearly made a failure.

Sunday, Oct. 22.—At eight a. m., listened to one of the native elders. At ten a. m., it fell to the lot of the new missionary to preach. The house was well filled and the day quite warm. Everybody seemed to vie with each other in presenting an outward appearance. Silk dresses and satin dresses and lawn dresses, very bright, brighter than any dress that I ever saw in America, (some of which cost hundreds of dollars,) glisten in every direction. Dresses here are all made Mother Hubbard or empire style. Silk lace and drawn work, and ribbons bright as a rainbow appear in abundance. They don't know the new missionaries yet, or they would have known that this display of dress was very displeasing rather than pleasing to them. The men dress in all kinds of ways and all kinds of styles, mostly, I suppose you would call it "Father Hubbard," though many of them dress in the best broadcloth made in the latest Prince Albert style.

The sisters here wear costly jewelry set with pearls that cost a great deal of money. Some pearls are worth $1,800. I hardly know whether they have borrowed from America the foolish idea of appearing what they are not inwardly by outward appearance, or whether our folks in America have borrowed it from these whom they call heathen. Meeting was opened by singing and prayer, and again we noted the difference between natural and mechanical singing. I observed also that the Saints here sing out of their hearts, while some in America sing out of books. As we stood to sing I noticed one man here and another there who was almost the perfect image of some Saint in America. How comes it that they look so much like the Saints and not others? One word answers it: "Ephraim." As surely as there is a God in heaven, so surely these people and the generality of Saints are of one blood. As I contemplated that matter, I looked upon them as if I were really living among the converted Lamanites in Book of Mormon times, and the Spirit rested on me and melted me to tears; in fact, I never think of them as Lamanites without the Spirit bearing testimony of its truth. I spoke upon the subject of the apostasy in order to furnish them proofs that would be useful for them in combatting Catholicism. After church, Sunday school convened, conducted on the same plan as in Papeete.

I forgot to mention that after the morning meeting I baptized two Mormons,—a man and his wife. Four other Mormons had been baptized before I arrived. Thus they swamp us. Prayer and testimony meeting in the afternoon. After the opening exercises I blessed one child, named Rowdy. Also the two baptized this morning were confirmed. The meeting was a very good one, but among this people the outward gifts of the spirit are seldom given, for good and sufficient reasons, no doubt, with God. In trying to discover the reasons myself for this lack, I have concluded: 1. It is not necessary, as they believe the gospel just as firmly without. 2. They are of an excitable nature, and would get greatly excited if the gifts known as outward gifts were given. I observed one manifestation in which the person almost got beside herself. They would not know how to use them if given. 3. If enjoyed by a few, the rest would literally worship them and follow them, right or wrong. They are in this regard much like some others I know who do not dwell here. They regard the man rather than the giver—God. One of the native elders preached in the evening, after which, the Saints all gathered in the yard and sang for about an hour to keep the young folks from running all over camp. Presented with $85.80.

Monday, Oct. 23.—Several of the brethren are putting us up a house just beside the church. It is twelve by sixteen feet. First they put up a frame of pine, and then covered it all over with the leaves of the cocoanut trees called niau. This is by far the coolest house that can be made for this climate. They have some good capenters among them, as well as tailors.

Possibly some would like to know how the niau (pronounced neow) houses are made. Imagine a large feather, ten feet long, split in two parts, then the fibers would be about like ribbons an inch and a half wide and three feet long. These are plaited and laid together with the points down. On the roof they are laid about six inches to the weather, but on the sides about a foot, but always two together for the purpose of making it cool. Should you see a picture of one of those houses you would take it for a hay stack, but on the inside you would think it a ribbon house. They will last about seven years. In America they would last till the first wind arose. Usually they do not make them very high, but ours is high because they intend sometime to cover the frame with lumber.

One hundred and seventy-seven dollars were handed in by the Bishop's agent to be sent to Bro. Burton for printing, translating, and for personal expenses. The brethren also handed us in a few more dollars, and I stopped them and told them not to squander their means on us, that we did not come to get their money, but to preach the gospel, and the first instruction I would give them was to be careful with their money; use it freely for the work of the Lord, but where needed.

Tin cans lay scattered over the ground almost as thick as along the railroad track from Ogden to San Francisco. The living here is mainly canned meats, mostly from New Zealand. Canned butter and canned milk are much better from there. Sometimes in Tahiti and other islands where cocoanuts grow, we use cocoa butter. We grate up the meat of two or three cocoanuts and pour half a gallon of water into it after it has been wrung through a cloth, and let it stand over night. The oily part rises to the top, and this we either churn or eat without. It is a very good substitute for butter.

Tuesday, October 24. — Brethren still working at the house. Purchased some cloth (eight dollars' worth, cheapest we could get) and partitioned off two bedrooms, one for ourselves and one for Bro. Janssen. In ours I also fixed up my book box so I could use it for a bookcase, and by letting the lid drop down on some supports, made it answer very well for a writing desk. In the commissary department we laid one box on top of the other to form a cupboard. In one corner we arranged a table and fastened one side and one end to the wall so that only one leg is needed, but we have neither chairs nor bed. On top of the cupboard we set our sugar box. Slept in our own house.

IMPORTANCE AND NECESSITY OF BOOK OF MORMON.

In the revelations given to the church through Joseph, the Seer, as published in Doctrine and Covenants, we find the following important items concerning the Book of Mormon. In section 1, paragraph 5, it is said that after receiving the record of the Nephites, Joseph Smith, Jr., might have power to translate through the mercy of God by the power of God the Book of Mormon. In paragraph 4 it is called "mine everlasting covenant," and it states, "that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and simple, unto the ends of the world." Section 2, par. 6:—

For this very purpose are these plates preserved which contain these records, that the promises of the Lord might be fulfilled, which he made to his people; and that the Lamanites might come to a knowledge of their fathers.

Section 5:—

He who spake unto you said unto you, I, the Lord, am God, and have given these things [plates] unto you, my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and have commanded you that you should stand as a witness of these things. . . .

Behold, verily, I say unto you, I have reserved these things which I have intrusted unto you, my servant Joseph, for a wise purpose in me, . . . and in addition to your testimony, the testimony of three of my servants, whom I shall call and ordain, unto whom I will show these things [plates]; . . . yea they shall know of a surety that these things are true; for from heaven will I declare it unto them.

See testimony of the three witnesses in Book of Mormon; also section 3, paragraph 10, Doctrine and Covenants:—

Behold there are many things engraven on the plates of Nephi, which do throw greater views upon my gospel; therefore, it is wisdom in me, that you should translate this first part of the engravings of Nephi, and send forth in this work. And, behold, all the remainder of this work, does contain all those parts of my gospel which my holy prophets, yea, and also my disciples, desired in their prayers, should come forth unto this people. And I said unto them, that it should be granted unto them according to their faith in their prayers; yea, and this was their faith, that my gospel which I gave unto them, that they might preach in their days, might come unto their brethren, the Lamanites.

tion 10, revelation to Hyrum Smith, paragraph 10:—

Behold, this is your work, to keep my commandments; . . . study my word [the record of the Jews] which hath gone forth among the children of men, also study my word which shall come forth among the children of men, or that which is now translating [Book of Mormon].

See section 15, revelation given to Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, paragraph 2:—

And ye shall testify that ye have seen them [the plates], even as my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., has seen them, for it is by my power that he has seen them, and it is because he had faith; and he has translated the book, even that part which I have commanded him, and as your Lord and your God liveth, it is true.

Section 17:2 says in speaking of Joseph Smith, the first elder of this church, that—

God ministered unto him by an holy angel . . . and gave unto him commandments which inspired him, and gave him power from on high, by the means which were before prepared [Urim and Thummim], to translate the Book of Mormon, which contains a record of a fallen people, and also the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, and to the Jews also.

Section 3:14, 15:—

Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. . . . I am he who said, Other sheep have I which are not of this fold, unto my disciples, and many there were that understood me not. And I will shew unto this people, that I had other sheep, and that they were a branch of the house of Jacob; and I will bring to light their marvelous works, which they did in my name; yea, and I will also bring to light my gospel, which was ministered unto them, and, behold, they shall not deny that which you have received, but they shall build it up, and shall bring to light the true points of my doctrine; yea, and the only doctrine which is in me; and this I do, that I may establish my gospel, that there may not be so much contention.

In these quotations given by Jesus Christ to different persons, as stated in Doctrine and Covenants is made known the will and purposes of God in bringing forth these ancient records. They are said to be of great worth because of the important matters therein contained pertaining to the generation in which we live.

These records show in some degree the peace and harmony that existed in the church among the Nephites. Nephi tells us the disciples of Jesus had formed a church in all the land round about, and in thirty-six years from the coming of Christ among them on this continent the people were all converted unto the Lord, both Nephites and Lamanites, and a happy state of things existed. There were no contentions or disputations among them, and every man dealt justly one with another, and they had all things common among them. There were no rich, no poor, because every man dealt justly and honestly with his neighbor.

We can hardly conceive or portray to your minds such a condition of things; but we believe it is a natural product of the gospel when practically carried out, not in word only, but in acts of kindness, justice, and mercy. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself" seems to be the basic principle of all that is good in this life and that which is to come. Riches and poverty have been mixed up in the history of the race, and an improper and unwise use of the provisions God has made has been the cause of much that is sorrowful and distressing to contemplate.

These people, because of their abiding faith in God and their faithful obedience to his commandments, were entitled to the abundance of the manifestation of the Holy Spirit, and that shed a heavenly light and luster over the weakness and defects of both rich and poor. This brought them on an equality before God and each other, and of them it could justly and truly be said, "As himself each loved his neighbor; all were of one heart and mind."

Thus was manifest the power of the gospel; and because of its wonderful and transforming effects they desired that this same gospel should be made known or preached to those who should live after them, both Jew and Gentile. Hence we sing with the poet,

Book of Mormon, hid for ages
On Cumorah's lonely hill,
Written by those ancient sages
Whom Jehovah taught his will;
Glad we hail it,
Fullness of the gospel still.

Hail the glorious light of Nephi,
Hail the truths that Alma taught;
We will trust in God like Lehi,
Seek the Lord as Mormon sought;
Like Moroni,
Buy the truth and sell it not.

It has been said the same cause will produce the same or like effect. If we, with Israel, Laman, and Judah, gather round this gospel standard, if we follow this guiding star, this law of God, this new covenant with man, we can receive and enjoy just as great blessings by every man dealing justly and honestly with the others. Right doing between man and man, right doing before God, will bring about the gathering, about which so many are anxious; will help us to become united, to see eye to eye, to help all drink into the one spirit; will cut off contention and discord; will place man on an equality with his fellow man. Neither rich nor poor, class nor distinction, will he know, because of that love which unites all the children of peace. This seems to be the burden of their prayers, the main and sole object in bringing forth the Book of Mormon.

This book shows more clearly the doctrine of Christ, the plan of salvation, what he did and how it was done, what he taught and how his followers should teach, than any record extant. The plan of salvation, the principles of the everlasting gospel, are set forth in a plain and simple way. It sets forth that certain ones were called by Jesus Christ and were given power to baptize those who truly repented and desired baptism, that only those who had power and authority given them could legally baptize. It also defines most clearly the exact mode of baptism, and the words or formula to be used in order to constitute a valid baptism.

Jesus says: "According as I have commanded you, thus shall ye baptize." The memorable sermon on the mount, as taught at Jerusalem, is reproduced with all its spirituality and power, setting forth in plainness the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. It teaches the simplicity and necessity of prayer, so that the weakest can express their desires and heartfelt thanks to our Father in heaven, for the kindly provision he has made for universal man.

It shows the effects and benefits of living up to the golden rule as taught by Christ, how there were no contentions, and every man dealt justly one with another, because of the love of God which dwelt in the hearts of the people. Surely there could not be a happier a people among all those who had been created by the hand of God. Such was the testimony of one of the writers of the Book of Mormon.

In the years 1829 and 1830 this same gospel was again restored, committed to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery by a heavenly messenger, Moroni, an angel from heaven, declaring the fulfillment of the prophets and ordaining Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to the Aaronic priesthood, promising them if faithful they should in due time receive the Melchisedec priesthood. This is in harmony with the example of Christ among the Nephites. It also agrees with John the beloved apostle, on Patmos:—

I saw an another angel fiy in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach.

These men to whom power and authority to preach repentance and baptism had been given, weak and simple as they were, were abundantly blessed in their efforts. Many believed their testimony, the signs that Christ promised were manifest, and they were confirmed. Their faith increased every step they took, though they met with scorn and severe persecution. The Lord blessed them, and many became obedient to the gospel. A church was organized, officers were appointed to watch over the flock; revelations were given guiding and directing both officers and members with instructions to the elders to see that the law and rules given of God were kept.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Behold, verily I say unto you, I give unto you, this first commandment, that ye shall go forth in my name, every one of you. . . . And ye shall go forth in the power of my Spirit, preaching my gospel two by two, in my name, lifting up your voices as with the voice of a trump, declaring my word like unto angels of God.—Doc. and Cov. 42: 2.

In section 52 instructions to go two by two were given to the elders journeying to Missouri. Also in section 61: 6, they were to journey together, or two by two, as seemed right under the conditions. In section 115 this command was renewed in 1865, showing that it was still the mind of the Lord and the will of God given to the elders:—

My elders in going to declare my gospel to the nations, shall observe the pattern which I have given. Two by two let them be sent, that they may be a help and a support to each other in their ministry.

Again in section 42, paragraph 5:—

The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them.

In 1831 it was said to the elders:—

By the prayer of your faith, ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church.

Reader, have you thought seriously of this matter? The Church of Christ is to be governed by law, the law of God, and the Lawgiver said,—

He that receiveth my law and doeth it, the same is my disciple.

Only those who abide within the limits of this law belong to the Church of Christ. Only those who are willing to be governed by this law have the promise of the Holy Spirit for their guide, who shall not be deceived. Let no man deceive you. Let no false spirit deceive you. Do not deceive yourself. The Spirit of truth, the Comforter that Jesus promised, is governed by law in its operations, and it depends entirely on whether you and I abide in the vine.

He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit.

The principles of the gospel as taught in the Bible have been taught to some extent. The fullness of the gospel as taught in Book of Mormon has been to a great extent neglected, lost sight of, treated lightly. The faith and prayers of those ancient worthies have not been respected.

In 1832 (section 33, D. and C.) a revelation was given to a number of the elders, and in paragraph 8 a severe rebuke was given because they had treated lightly the things they had received, and brought the whole church under condemnation. Their attention was called to the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon.

What is our duty? It is evidently to comply willingly and cheerfully with the former commandments; as representatives of the church remember the Book of Mormon as God's new covenant with man, and do according to that which is written as the fullness of the gospel. Then contention will cease, and our love to God and each other will grow and increase, and we shall warn the world by acts of righteousness, and prove our right to the tree of life by virtue of doing according to that which is written.

We commend a careful study of the Book of Mormon and former commandments to both officials and members,—to all who are or can be called Saints.

GEORGE DERRY.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 1, 1900.

HOW THE EARLY CHRISTIANS WERE TREATED.

Ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death. And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake.—Christ (Luke 21: 16, 17).

If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.—Christ (John 15: 19).

Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer; being defamed, we entreat; we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.—Paul (1 Cor. 4: 12, 13).

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed.—Paul (2 Cor. 4: 8, 9).

Nothing more injurious can be conceived than the terms of contempt, indignation, and reproach which the heathens employed in expressing their hatred against the Christians, who were called by them atheists, because they derided the heathen polytheism; magicians, because they wrought miracles; self-murderers, because they suffered cheerfully for the truth; haters of the light, because they held religious assemblies in the night: with a multitude of other ignominious epithets.—From note 1, by Dr. Maclaine, in Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, vol. 1, p. 149, edition of 1797.

Tacitus reproaches them [saints] with the odious character of haters of mankind, and styles the religion of Jesus a destructive superstition.—Ibid., p. 73, note m.

Mosheim himself remarks on the same page:—

The Romans concluded that the Christian sect was not only unsupportably daring and arrogant, but, moreover, an enemy to the public tranquility, and every way proper to excite civil wars and commotions in the empire.—Vol. 1, p. 73.

Again, I quote from Lardner's Works, London edition of 1788:—

What the crimes were, which were laid to the charge of the primitive Christians, we know from divers writers, Greek and Latin—from whom it appears that, besides atheism, or impiety to the established deities, they were charged with having their wives in common, with promiscuous lewdness in their assemblies, with incest, and eating human flesh, especially young children, whom they first killed and then ate, at their nocturnal meetings, where persons of each sex and every age were present.—Vol. 1, p. 240.

Lardner, in vol. 8, p. 3, quotes Celsus, who says:—

Jesus taking to himself ten or eleven abject, vile publicans and sailors, went about with them getting his subsistence in a base and shameful manner. . . . Some of them say: "Do not examine but believe;" and, "thy faith will save thee;" and, "the wisdom of this world is evil, and folly good." These are their institutions: "Let not any man of learning come hither, nor any wise man, nor any man of prudence; but if any man be unlearned, if he is ignorant, if he is silly, let him come without fear." Thus acknowledging, that these are the men who are acceptable to their God; and thereby manifesting that they are neither willing nor able to gain any but the foolish, the vulgar, the stupid, slaves, women, and children.—Vol. 8, pp. 23, 16.

The following is also from Lardner:—

Coecilius Natalis, a heathen, arguing against the Christians, speaks to this purpose: "As for the feast, it is a well known thing: everybody talks of it. They come together upon an appointed day, with all their children, their sisters and mothers; persons of each sex, and of every condition. And after feeding plentifully, when the lights are put out, they practise promiscuously, incest, and all manner of uncleanness."—Dialogue of Minutius Felix. Published A. D. 210.

Robinson, in Ecclesiastical Researches, page 49, edition of 1792, quotes Tertullian as saying:—

You tax us with killing and eating children. The charge is absurd and cruel in the extreme, and we cannot conceive how you came to invent such a scandalous calumny. We defy you to prove it. Why do not the magistrates examine us on this subject? . . . But you hate us, even the bare name by which we are called, and without giving yourselves any trouble to examine, you say all manner of evil of us.

I do not know that Latter Day Saints have been accused of eating children, but I guess every other crime has been laid at our door. And why is this so? Because, "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." (2 Tim. 3: 12.)

Ah! brother and sister, remember the early Saints—were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; of whom the world was not worthy. (Heb. 11: 37, 38.)

BYRNEVILLE, Ind., June 23.

Editors Herald:—As we have been made overseer again over the flock at this place, we feel it our duty to let the membership know how we are getting along. Elder Bell, of Lamoni, Iowa, has been with us for several days, and has preached some splendidly good gospel sermons. If our district was filled up with such elders the work would build faster than in the past. His expressed opinion is that if an elder is in the active ministry he should move out in the world and preach "while it is called day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

Elders Geo. Jenkins and Wm. C. Marshall were also here with us. They, too, are alive in the work, willing to make sacrifice of home and all that is dear to us. The membership should receive these brethren at all times, and give them a word of encouragement, for we feel they are doing God's bidding.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Our branch is getting along nicely. We have received several by baptism lately, and some by letter. We number now about sixty. We have all the district officers associated with us. Bro. Marshall, of Union branch, being placed in the active ministry, resigned the office of Bishop's agent, and was succeeded by Bro. Hurbaugh, of our branch, and we feel that the right man is in the right place. So we are moving along, and everything is working for our good and for the upbuilding of the work. May the Lord bless the labors of the faithful!

JAMES P. SAPPENFIELD.

CANTON, Ill., June 23.

Editors Herald:—On the 21st inst. myself and daughter Lula bade loved ones farewell, which is always a sad task to perform, and started for my mission. At present we are visiting my youngest sister and family, whom I had not seen for some years. Expect to spend the Sabbath here, the place where I was baptized twenty-three years ago the 22d of last April, and was ordained the same day. The following day I started on my first mission, and have been actively engaged in missionary work ever since. However, since that time I have passed through varied and peculiar scenes, however feel stronger in the faith of our blessed Lord, and more desirous to continue in the conflict than ever before. I can testify after twenty-three years' service for the Master that it is good to serve the Lord. I sincerely hope that I shall ever be able to continue true and faithful to the trust that my heavenly Father has committed to my keeping. I feel at peace with all mankind, for which I thank the Lord.

Since I last wrote, Brn. D. L. Allen and E. A. Smith have been assigned to labor in Pacific slope mission. The former will labor with Bro. E. Keeler until further notice. The latter will be associated with Bro. R. Etzenhouser. Both of these young men are able and willing workers, and stand high in the estimation of the Saints in their home districts. Bro. C. H. Rich, who was to labor with Bro. Etzenhouser, informs me that he is not able to enter upon his mission at present. In the arranging of the ministry in my field of labor I have tried to keep in harmony with the command to go two and two, so that they may be a comfort and support to each other.

Let us all guard against the spirit of jealousy and be true to each other. If there should be cause for complaint, let it be made known to the proper authority whose duty it is to regulate such matters. Let us never allow ourselves to speak or write disparagingly of another's efforts, for there is no necessity, and the law forbids that we should publish one another's weaknesses from "Dan to Beersheba."

Considering the number of the present force in my field, and the encouraging prospects before us, we should be able to do a good work during the current year. All the missionaries of California are expected to report directly to me every three months. Address 3010 Sixteenth street, San Francisco.

Am sorry to learn of the death of our faithful and worthy sisters, Price and Penfold. Both will be greatly missed in the assemblies of the Saints, and especially by the traveling ministry. While we sympathize with those who have cause to mourn, and realize their great loss, it should be a consolation to them and us that they were ready to enter upon the promised rest. God comfort and bless the bereaved ones and help them to prepare themselves to meet those who have gone before.

Yours in haste,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

WILLIAMSTON, Mich., June 24.

Editors Herald:—I have been holding meetings in this section for about ten days, with a fair interest. The time of year is not as favorable as it might be, because of the busy season.

I went some three miles south and east of here last Saturday to hear the Utah elders who have been holding forth around here for several months. Of course we had to cross swords, sharp and heavy, and it will probably result in a public exchange of thoughts on succession of authority.

I think there is a large field for a good work in the near future. The school houses are all, or nearly all, open for meetings; and as soon as the busy season is over I purpose to see what can be done in the way of spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ.

There is no branch here; but the few Saints have hired a small hall, seated and lighted it, and are endeavoring to do all that lies in their power to spread the work. Four Saints have done all the financial work, and propose in the strength of the Master to keep it up until help comes. There are only eight Saints here. Some of them are not financially able to help, but all anxious to have the work spread, and are doing what they can.

Hoping and praying for the advancement of the cause and the upbuilding of the kingdom, I am,

Yours in the gospel of Christ,

E. H. DURAND.

GREENVILLE, Conn., June 20.

Editors Herald:—The weekly visits of your paper to our house are very welcome, indeed, as you come laden with the "good things" from all quarters, furnishing food for thought, which we all so much need, and especially those to whom this is the only source of communication with the church. How encouraging it is to have some one to buoy us up and point out the dangers that lie ahead of us.

Bro. Kelley's letter in the late Herald was indeed a grand one, and in it was so much that was good, I read it twice. I was rejoiced to see the article on "feathers." I have not worn feathers for a number of years. O, if we could only realize what manner of persons we ought to be, and how careful we should be in our daily walk and conversation, so that we shall give no cause for offense to our brother or sister, and how closely we have to watch ourselves to see that our motives are pure. It requires constant labor; for when we think we have overcome one fault, then is the time of danger, for we are apt to relax our diligence and be overtaken.

The word has been spoken, "Come up higher." Surely, God does not expect us to do something more than we know. What, then, does this mean except to more closely observe what he has already told us. Are we living by "every word which proceedeth" out of his mouth, as he has commanded? Are we keeping the word of wisdom concerning the eating of meat; and are we "retiring and arising early that our bodies and minds may be invigorated"?

But these are not given by commandment or restraint. Truly so. Nevertheless, it is written, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God;" and these are received by the church as coming from the mouth of God. Then shall we live by them?

Also the word on clothing: "Let all your garments be plain." Is that being observed? Is not the failure to do so depriving the church of blessings, both financially and spiritually? The various colors and fashions to be seen at church are very distracting to me, and to an extent detract my thoughts from the object of the meeting. What is true in my case may also be true of other persons. Can there be as great unity of thought and purpose when there is so much in other directions to engage the thought? The mind is capable of holding only a certain amount, and these things of fashion only crowd out that which might be more profitable to us if there were room to receive it. We cannot serve two masters.

Just think of the extra time we might give to the improvement of our minds in studying the "books" if we lived more simply, which would do away with the extra stitches and extra ironing. It would save also the fretting and "planning" of in selecting the style in which to make our garments.

"Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart." What does that mean? These are things that I have been seriously considering of late, and I would like to be able to understand them and do them aright.

Yours for Zion's weal,

SR. LILLIAN WHIPPLE.

DENNISPORT, Mass., June 25.

Editors Herald:—Down by the sea, speaking peace to the troubled souls that will listen to the grand gospel story. I wrote you while at Lamoni, in April. Since then I have been trying to do what I could in the gospel work. I wish I could report splendid interest and grand progress and baptisms by the hundreds; but facts are hard things to deal with, and have an uncomfortable way of looking one in the face. However, we rejoice to hear of the success of our brethren in the great West and feel glad that they (the people) are not sufficiently "cultured" to reject all gospel truth.

There are a few honest souls among the millions here who hear the word with gladness, and are willing to obey. And to such there comes joy and peace. We struggle on, looking not back, but forward.

Yesterday a young sister put on Christ by

baptism; and as I led her robed in becoming white, into the cool depth of the foam-crested waves, my soul was filled with divine love, and peace rested upon us all.

Some years ago, while laboring here in Dennisport, I was called upon to administer to a little girl, the daughter of Sr. Joy, who had a sad affliction, being unable to use one of her limbs. She could walk only by using crutches. She grew worse until the doctor had no hopes of her ever being able to use her limb, as the one afflicted had ceased to grow. We administered to her, and she began to recover, laid aside her crutches, and today she walks, runs, rides a bicycle, and none could tell that she ever was lame.

What did that? Was it a "happen-so," or did the Master hear the prayer of his servants, and answer for the good of the child.

I expect to be here until after the two-days' meeting that will convene next Saturday and Sunday. Yours in the conflict,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

CLIFFORD, N. D., June 21.

Editors Herald:—Desiring to let my many friends know of my whereabouts, and what I am doing, I address your valuable paper. I left home on May 5, stopping at Lucas, Des Moines, Fraser, and Coalville, Iowa. Arrived at Brinton, S. D., on the seventeenth. Expected to meet Bro. Sparling there, but on account of sickness in his family he could not come. While there my home was principally with Bro. and Sr. Bierlein, and they certainly made it like home for me.

It being my first experience as a missionary, and being alone, I was timid about starting out; but knowing that God was in this work, I announced for a week's meeting, determined to put my trust in him who doeth all things well. I got along all right for four nights, and then it looked to me as though I had told them all there was in the Bible; felt like I wanted to quit. I asked God in humble prayer to strengthen me for the occasion. The fifth night came, and I was determined to make the effort. I selected a subject, and gathered all the scriptures to be found on it, thinking that if I could not talk I could read to them. Am thankful to say God blessed me with an abundance of his Spirit, and I made the best effort of my life. This writing finds me at Clifford, holding meetings every night. I expect to be in this neighborhood till about July 1, and then join Bro. Sparling at Leeds, N. D.

Yours for the truth,

GEO. W. THORBURN.

Editors Herald:—I came here a few days ago, and obtained consent to hold a few meetings in the Christian union church; but as I entered the house, a young lady presented me a note from her father, as follows: "Mr. Foss:—There are obj ctions to your preaching in this church, so you will please leave no other appointment after tonight. We see by looking over your card or code of discipline, that you deny that the Bible sets forth the plan of salvation. Hence we don't want that man to preach in our family who denies the power of God's word, as set forth in the Bible. T. B. HARDER."

Mr. Harder's brother preaches for them. This may somewhat account for his statements. I met him a few days after, and he still affirmed that my card denied the plan of salvation. I said: "Mr. Harder, there is no such a thing on my card."

"Why," he said, "Don't your card say, 'We believe the Bible contains the word of God so far as it is translated correctly'?"

I answered, "Yes, sir; but does it say that we do not believe in the Bible, or that it does not teach the plan of salvation?"

"O, that is just what it says."

After trying to show the man just what my card did say, I could not get him to see the truth of it. So I told him that he was blind.

Bro. Cushman and myself spoke in the schoolhouse, and at the house of Bro. R. L. Ware to the few who came out. Showers of rain hindered the people from coming; but on Sunday I baptized Emma B., the wife of Bro. Graham. Her parents live at Independence, Missouri. I am looking for others to follow.

Bro. Cushman spoke at eleven a. m., on Sunday, and gave very good instructions to both old and young. He is now visiting the Wakenda branch. I expect to join him there, July 8. Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

Editors Herald:—I have lost some time since General Conference, because of sickness, but am at my Father's business again.

I baptized another fine lady at Grinnell, on the 3d inst., also two at Boonesboro, two weeks ago. We converted a nice woman from the Brighamite church at Boonesboro, and her husband told me he would soon be baptized, too. He said he was done with those deceivers and false teachers of Utah.

As soon as I get through here I will go to New London and other parts of the Nauvoo district, till fall, then to eastern Iowa during the winter. In bonds, COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, June 25.

Editors Herald:—Since the adjournment of the General Conference I have been able to do a little for the cause we love. Several times I met and sat with the revising committee on Church History. Spoke once at Lamoni, with fair liberty, from John 18: 36, with Doctrine and Covenants 102: 1, 2. Differing and urgent demands call for different lines of thought to be expressed by the ministers of the word.

May 12, I went to Cleveland,—a new mining town, sprung up as if by magic, near Lucas, Iowa,—where I preached once. On the 14th we organized a branch to be known as the Cleveland branch. The opportunities for doing a good work at this place seem to be more than ordinary.

On June 2 and 3, I met with the Saints of the Nauvoo district, in conference capacity, at Burlington, Iowa. The conference was fairly good. The writer spoke on Saturday evening, and on Sunday at 8 p. m. Bro. James McKiernan made a good effort at 10:45 a. m., on Sunday, and Bro. G. H. Hilliard another one in the afternoon, on the occasion of the dedication of the church. On the same day Geo. P. Lambert was ordained to the office of high priest. Three were baptized by Bro. Hilliard.

From Burlington I went to my old home in Illinois, and visited with my aged parents, also with brothers and sisters, and brothers and sisters-in-law. Spoke Friday and Saturday nights, and twice on Sunday, in the Rock Creek church, and I felt well in ministering the word of life to those among whom I had labored years ago.

June 12 found me at Montrose, Iowa, where I preached at 8 p. m., made a short visit with my eldest brother and family, and on the next day repaired to Burlington, where I made pleasant visits with Sr. Herrick, my niece, and Bro. and Sr. Geisch. I also attended, and by request took charge of, the weekly prayer meeting.

For valid reasons, which do not need to be named, I present the following incident: More than twenty years ago a sister was living on a farm near Persia, Iowa. She and her husband had a sick pig to doctor. The swelling on its head, or throat, was lanced and relanced, but its recovery seemed doubtful. At this juncture the sister made a vow and promise that if the pig recovered she would give the proceeds of its sale to a certain elder. She wants those who were conversant with the above facts to know that she has redeemed her pledge and paid the $5.00, the sale price of the pig, to the elder referred to. J. R. LAMBERT.

SANTA ANA, Cal., June 24.

Editors Herald:—On account of the fright about the bubonic plague being in San Francisco and in Australia, the government officers in Papeete inaugurated strict quarantine laws, and especially so with the San Francisco mail vessel, and we were therefore delayed and did not leave Papeete until May 1, instead of April 12 to 15, the regular time. We were to go on board in the evening of the last day of April, as the tow boat was to tow the vessel out to sea early in the morning. At seven p. m., the Saints and several not members of the church met in the chapel, and after singing and prayers for our safe journey home, several made speeches in which they reviewed the work of the church during our stay among them. We all then repaired to the beach, where the pilot's boat was awaiting us to take us on board, as the Galilee was out moored to the buoy. When we arrived near the boat they set their lamps and lanterns on the ground, and gathering around us again sang and offered prayer. One of the four verses of the hymn they sang was as follows, to the tune of "God be with you till we meet again."

Ei te Atua tatou i teienei
I to tatou nei taa e raa;
Na te Atua e arataï
Tae 'tu ai i te farerei raa mau.

Farerei, farerei faahou,
I te pae avae no Ietu;
Farerei, farerei faahou,
Tei te rai te farerei raa mau.

A free translation is as follows:—

God be with us now
In this our separating;
By God may we be led
Until the time of the true meeting.

Meet, meet again,
At the feet of Jesus;
Meet, meet again
In the heaven we'll truly meet.

Then after the closing prayer and benediction they came and bade us good-bye, shaking our hands warmly. A French family was present, and partaking of the feelings of the rest bade us good-bye with trembling voice and wetted cheek, and wished us bon voyage. After this we shoved off from the shore a little ways, when they sang another farewell hymn, and then we rowed out on the bosom of the beautiful harbor of Papeete, and got on board of our vessel, and found all hands had gone to bed, for it was late.

In the morning the Eva towed us out to sea, and after the usual incidents of such passages we arrived in San Francisco, whose harbor we left on the day on which the people elected William McKinley president of these United States, nearly four years ago.

At the time of my departure Uncle Sam was at home on his own farm, inside of the ocean fence. Since then he, like the young man, having obtained his freedom suit, has gone abroad to seek his fortune, and necessarily has become mixed in the affairs of republics, empires, and kingdoms of the world, and possibly is now standing at the head of them all, perhaps the greatest of them all. And while the ambitious, go-ahead citizens relish all this and see coming glory in it all, the more conservative mistrust it, and with doubts and fears are trembling for the results.

I sincerely hope the Saints will not drink into the bitterness of feelings which may grow out of these affairs in our nation, and avoid the asperities engendered by political disputants in these tumultuous days. Let us possess our souls in patience, until our King comes, and setting up his kingdom and righteous reign, govern men in righteousness and peace.

Our meeting with the Saints of San Francisco, Oakland, San Jose, Gilroy, Mulberry, San Benito, and other places, was very joyous and pleasing to us, and a feeling of sincere gratitude to the great Giver of every good was ever present with us as we met the dear Saints again with whom we had toiled and labored, and been blessed in heavenly peace in the days gone by. He has spared us, and in peace we were permitted to meet them again. Some have passed on to their reward. For the first time the angel of death claimed one of our grandchildren. Little Mead entered, through a rough pathway, into the shining path which leads into the blissful rest of the children of God.

On our way south we stopped off at Tulare; and on Tuesday, June 19, we laid the body of Sr. Mary Twaddle to rest in the cemetery in Tulare. On Sunday morning she and her mother started for church, a fifteen mile drive, as we were informed. The horse took fright, and overturning the buggy so injured her that she died within two hours. The mother is improving. All the Saints were present, and quite a number of friends. The services were in the Methodist chapel. At the request of the president of the branch I spoke, my brother assisting. Bro. Flory and all the Saints of his branch will miss Sr. Twaddle, as will all the Saints of the Central district; and many of the poor and discouraged of that city will miss a generous friend and a kind benefactor.

We had a good resting place at Bro. and Sr. Clarke's in Tulare. Always kind, generous, and hospitable. May peace abide with them, and may God in his loving kindness heal her and bless her with peace and comfort.

After a stop of an hour or two at Jewetta, with Sr. Cockerton and family, we took the nine p. m. train for Los Angeles; and on the 20th inst. we met our children and grandchildren, of Los Angeles, and soon will meet those of Santa Ana and San Juan.

HIS REFERENCE.

"Good-bye. Tomorrow by this time I shall be well on my way to Chicago."

"I shall miss you more than I can say; but I suppose that it is an opening you cannot afford to refuse."

"I would not refuse it for anything. It may be the means of my getting into the office here, a thing I have tried for over and over again without success. If I manage that I shall be home again in a year or two. You will certainly write?" wistfully.

"To be sure I will."

"And go to see mother often?"

"Of course."

It was storming hard the next morning, but in spite of that Alice told her mother that she had decided to go to town. "You don't mind, mother, do you? To tell the truth, I feel all turned about by Will's leaving. I'm going to miss him so. I would go to see his mother today, but I know perfectly well that the moment she began to talk about him I should cry, and I don't believe that would comfort her much. I love the snow, and I'll go and see some pictures and take lunch with Laura if you are willing."

"Perfectly willing, dear; only, if you find that there is going to be any trouble on the road you will come home on an early train, won't you?"

"Yes, indeed. Good-bye."

Alice had had her outing and was just seated, and the train on the point of starting, that afternoon, when somebody asked: "May I sit beside you?"—and at the sound of the familiar voice she looked up, her eyes wide with astonishment.

"Why—why, Will!"

"I do not wonder that you are surprised; I can hardly realize myself that I am here," he said, as he took the seat beside her.

"But you should be half way to Chicago by this time. You told me that they would only hold the position for you until tomorrow?"

"Yes," quietly, "but—I have given up the position, Alice."

"Given up the position! That means giving up all hope in the home office? Do you mind explaining, or would you rather I would not ask?"

"No, I do not mind explaining—to you. It is simply this: I found that my mother was breaking her heart over it—my leaving home, I mean. She tried her best to hide it, but I found it out last night after I left you."

"But—what a terrible disappointment!"

He did not reply at once; then, with his eyes bent upon the ticket which he was snapping between his fingers, he said, quietly: "Yes, it is a disappointment, and the more so for the loss of hope for the future here; but, Alice, there are two things which I have promised myself never to do. One is," lifting his head, "that for no earthly consideration will I commit a dishonorable act, in or out of business; the other, that I will never, God helping me, grieve or disappoint my mother. There are, perhaps," with a faint smile, "other positions in the world; there is but one mother."

An old gentleman, seated directly behind them, who had glanced up at Alice's words, now rose and changed his seat. "I don't believe all that was meant for my ears," he growled, "and I suppose I ought to be ashamed of myself for listening. But I'm not! I don't know that I ever did a better thing in my life. But how will I ever manage it? I wonder where he lives? I believe I'll speak to him!"

But before he had decided what to do the train stopped and to his dismay the two young persons in whom he had felt such deep interest got out and he sank back in his seat with an expression of disappointment upon his kindly face.

"Now, who would have thought he was going to leave so soon? Well, I suppose there's nothing for it but to go hunting all over Heathdale for a handsome young fellow answering to the name of 'Why Will!'" And with an inward chukle at his own wit, he took up his paper and began to read.

But in leaving the train at his own station, a few miles further up the road, he glanced involuntarily at the vacated seat and saw that a book had been left there. Picking it up eagerly, he turned to the fly leaf, while waiting for the train to stop.

"Not his, but it will serve!" he exclaimed with satisfaction, as his eye rested upon the name, "Alice M. Rowland," neatly written there. "I'll save the company the trouble of taking charge of it."

The next evening, when Will Stanley stopped at the post office on his way home from the station, he brought the Rowland's mail as usual.

"An interesting looking parcel, Alice," he said, "and a letter directed in the same hand."

"Why, I wonder whose writing it is? I never saw it before. But, Will, have you found anything today?"

"No," he replied quietly. There was something in his voice which made her change

www.LatterDayTruth.org

the subject instantly, with a throb of pity at her tender heart.

"Now," she said, "we shall what this mystery means." And tearing open the letter, in what Will always called her "womanish manner," she glanced at the signature.

"No help here!" she exclaimed. "Whoever is James T. Worthington?"

"James T. Worthington? Why, he's the head of the home office. Why, Alice, what is it?" For the girl had sprung to her feet and was fairly dancing about the room as she cried: "Will, Will, listen to this!" And turning again to the letter, she read:—

"My Dear Miss Rowland:—I return your book which you left in the train last evening thanking you heartily for so doing, as the finding of it has helped me out of a difficulty. I have to confess to having overheard a few words of a conversation between you and your friend, as I sat directly behind you. I only listened to a few sentences and then changed my seat. But the result is that I wish that you would oblige me by requesting Will—pardon me, but I know him by no other name—to come to my office tomorrow morning. He will know where to find me. I wish to make him the offer of a position the value of which he will understand more fully than you. A man who has two such aims in life as he declared himself to have, is the man I want. I require no other reference.

"Gratefully your friend,

"JAMES T. WORTHINGTON."

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, June 21.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union:—It has been a long time since my name has appeared as a contributor to your columns, although I have felt, sometimes, that it was my duty to write, if for nothing more than to tell you that I am still interested in the good work. Some time ago Sister Ruth Gifford sent my name up to be placed among the special requests for prayer; from this I have received great benefit, also through administration. I feel to thank and praise the Great Physician for his loving care and watchfulness over me.

Dear sisters, I come before you now to make a special request in behalf of our aged sister, Grandma Kuykendall. She is almost entirely blind, in fact, she can't distinguish objects at all, though she can discern a small degree of light. They have spent a great deal of money with doctors to no purpose. There is some kind of an obstruction growing over her eye, which entirely covers the sight. Now I suggest that the Thursday after this appears in the Herald, those of the sisters who feel like it, fast and pray with me, that the obstruction may be removed, if it be the kind Father's will.

Some twenty years ago, Grandma accidentally got one of her eyes put out, and now the other one has become affected in sympathy with that one. She has been a member of the church for many years, and belonged to the old church. She says that she has heard Joseph the Martyr preach, and was intimately acquainted with his wife.

Bro. H. O. Smith has been here. We all went to a conference in another part of the district, a short time since, and left Bro. Smith there; but he will soon return to San Antonio again. Bro. Baggerly is with us at present. Both have been doing some good work here. It is not often that we are favored with such efficient laborers. The work is on the move, to success, in this part of the vineyard, and I think if every one will put his shoulder to the wheel, much good will be accomplished.

Ever praying for the success of the work everywhere, I am your sister in the conflict,

LIBRARIES AND READING.

HOW TO READ.

It seems to be thought by some that the amount read is a guage to the accomplishments of the individual. Nothing could be further from the truth than this. While it is a fact that the requirements of an educated person include considerable reading, it is not the amount of matter read, but the manner in which it is done that accounts for good. And upon the assumption that it is not the quantity but rather the quality of reading that is desirable, we look first to discover "how to read," or "how to use books." We quote again from Professor Morehead in the International Evangel, St. Louis.

"1. The primary element in reading is meditation, thoughtfulness. Too much reading without reflection will produce the effect of a lamp inverted, which is extinguished by the very oil that was meant to feed it. 'Multifarious reading,' writes Frederick Robertson, 'weakens the mind more than doing nothing; for it becomes a necessity at last, like smoking, and is an excuse for the mind to lie dormant, whilst thought is poured in and runs through, a clear stream, over unproductive gravel, on which even mosses do not grow.'

"Coleridge divides readers into four classes: 'The first may be compared to an hour-glass, their reading being as the sand; it runs in and runs out and leaves not a trace behind. A second class resembles a sponge which imbibes everything, and returns it in nearly the same state, only a little d.rtier. A third class is like a jelly-bag, which allows all that is pure to pass away, and retains only the refuse and dregs. The fourth class may be compared to the slave of Golconda, who casting aside all that is worthless, preserves only the pure gems.'

"Our danger is, not that we read too much, but think too little. Some of the wisest men read sparingly, traveled none scarcely, but thought profoundly. What they read, however, lay in their minds fructifying, and came forth at length a living tree with fruit and leaves. This grappling with the subjects of which one reads is indispensable. It is that habit of mind which corresponds to digestion. Meditation is to the intellect in reading books what the gastric juice is to the food we eat. That wonderful solvent God has provided must separate and dissolve the food to the end that it may be assimilated, and carried through the system, repairing its wastes, supplying fresh elements of combination of its various parts; feeding the blood, keeping that life-current full and strong, and so by it pouring into the farther streets of the body the tide of health. The most wholesome food would be poison without that solvent. Reflection is to the mind what that is to the body. We might learn a profitable lesson from the quiet ruminating habits of the cattle.

"Read all solid books slowly. The best readers seem the most plodding. Few can turn the pages with the rapidity of Macauley for very few possess his splendid gifts and capacious memory. Robertson tells us that it would require him six months to read a small octavo volume on chemistry. 'But then,' he adds, 'I could stand an examination on it.' Harriet Martineau often read a page in an hour, but she thought enough to fill ten. Resolve to finish but a few pages each day; if valuable at all, the book is worth reading thus. Think over each chapter or paragraph; examine yourself mentally with shut eyes upon its principles and doctrine. This is the way to read, not many books, but much, and one read thus, carefully, will result in greater good to the reader than twenty skimmed. The old scholastic rule has never been repealed or improved: 'not many but much.'—(Non multa sed miltum.)

"Our reading should be methodic. By judiciously systemizing our work it is astonishing how much may be accomplished. Method helps a man to sail right on his course; without it he is perpetually on the tack. Labor without system is a dead lift. Some of the busiest people have the least of a busy look. The most tiresome person is the fussy one. He is also the most idle. Of real work he knows nothing. All true students are methodic, careful, quiet. Albert Barnes wrote all his commentaries in the early morning. When the clock struck nine, he resolutely laid aside pen and books, and turned to his pastoral duties. A German pointed out one of our characteristic weaknesses as a people when he said, 'I cannot comprehend how you Americans accomplish anything working as you do largely without system. All I have been able to do I owe to my habits of study.' At ten in the evening the historian, Neander, used to retire. His rooms might be crowded nightly with distinguished scholars, nevertheless, he would cheerfully bid them all goodnight. At five in the morning he was with his amanuensis, and till nine the toughest problems in ecclesiastical history and exegesis were grappled with. As his secretary used to put it, 'it rained Greek and Latin from the fathers for four stricken hours.' Mr. Moody reserved the morning hours for his scripture reading, meditation, and prayer.

"Then, too, we should read and study to be more helpful to others. We are not educated for our own pleasure, to gratify our own individual tastes and vanity. If what we learn, if the powers that unfold within us, by assiduous application, be not employed in God's service and for others' behoof, our reading will be in vain. We are to be pitied if we are merely receivers; we are to be congratulated if we are both receivers and distributers. All the waters flow into the sea; but the generous sea gives them back again to the earth in the form of rains and snows, vapors and dews. Let us be like the sea in this respect.

"Let readers and students remember suggestive words of Boaz to his reapers in behalf of Ruth the Moabitess: 'Let some handfuls fall on purpose for her.'"

Lord Bacon says: "Some books are to be tasted, others are to be swallowed, and some few digested." Holmes expresses much the same thought when he says: "Some books are edifices to stand as they are built; some are hewn stones to form a part of future edifices; some are quarries from which stones are to be split for shaping and after use."

Yes, we have books that must be literally digested if we get any benefit from their reading. A casual reading or anything less will be wasted. No benefit can be derived from a slipshod way of reading anything, and it is especially true of this class of books. In this class we might mention Samuel Smiles' works on "Duty," "Character;" Emerson's essays; Macauley's essays; scientific works; and many others which must be studied as you read if you would get the full benefit to be derived therefrom.

Another class is to be "swallowed." That is, we must read them in such a way that they will each be understood as a whole. This class, like the former, must be studied with extreme care, but will not require the depth of study or the amount of study that the former requires. In this class we would expect to find such works as "David Copperfield," by Dickens; "John Hallifax," by Mrs. Mulock; "Ivanhoe," by Scott; "Ben Hur," by Wallace; and a host of others. They are not, however, necessarily all of fiction. For there are also many works of travel, adventure, biography, etc., that may well be classed as books that may be "swallowed."

The books that are to be "tasted" are many and varied in character, from the dictionary to the tedious Gibbon's Rome, or kindred books of complete history. We keep many books for reference only. To make a regular reading of them would be a loss of time, if not worse. For what purpose do we keep our complete histories of nations or countries, our encyclopedias, our dictionaries, manuals, compendiums, atlases, etc., more than for reference? We "taste" them when we need something upon the line treated in them. We turn often to the dictionary or cyclopedia as we pursue our regular course of study or reading to get light upon something not fully understsod.

Thus we see that "some books are to be digested, some to be swallowed, and some to be tasted." But whether we digest, swallow, or taste, it should be done in a careful, thoughtful, and thorough way. Read for some particular object. Think about what you have read.

Never read just for pastime. It will do you much injury. Soon you will find yourself unable to do any other kind of reading if you allow yourself to form that indolent habit. It is an indolent habit and deserves to be condemned. If you have but two minutes to read, read something that will be food for future growth. We have heard people say they were "too tired" to read anything solid. They are mistaken as to where the trouble lies. It is not the tiredness, but rather the habit of indolent mindedness that we spoke of above. This comes from the habit of reading "just for pastime." If one is really too tired to read carefully, he is too tired to read at all. He had better sleep. We are a manual laborer and find that no matter how tired we get, reading and reading studiously will rest us. It takes the mind entirely away from that which became wearisome. Mind work will rest the body, and vice versa, bodily work will rest the mind. Reading should be made mind work.

You have now read this article about through. Please try this. Read it again and mark with your pencil every good thought you see. If it is especially good, underscore it. If you do not agree with it, or wish to add to it, make a brief note on it at the bottom. Talk with others about it. This talk will interest them and benefit you all whether you see as we see or not. And if you feel like going farther still, and write me a letter about it, I shall be greatly pleased, indeed. But whatever you do, make an effort to improve your way of reading. Not "How much," but "How well" do you do your work.

In the near future we will handle the general subject of a Sunday school library in its detail. But for some reason, we have not received replies from all the persons from which we desire to hear before we put out this number.

"For the book is in my heart,
Lives in me, wakes in me, and dreams in me;
My daily bread tastes of it—and my wine
Which has no smack of it, I pour it out;
It seems unnatural drinking.—E. B. Browning.

Miscellaneous Department.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

DISTRICT OF MINNESOTA.

The Saints and friends of the Reorganized Church, in and for district of Minnesota, please take notice that Bro. W. W. McLeod, Bishop's agent, has duly resigned his position as agent in said district, and that by recommendation of the district conference, Elder Florence D. Omans, of Perham, Minnesota, has been appointed agent in his stead.

Bro. McLeod resigns the agency on account of his age and inability to travel in the district and perform the work necessary in the office. He has been a faithful and competent agent for a number of years. The Bishopric feel that he has done a goodly work, and has faithfully cared for the finances of the church which have come into his hands. We extend special thanks to him for his aid to us in this work, and also bespeak good word for the new agent, Elder Florence D. Omans.

Trusting in the direction of the Lord in this work, as in the past, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,
E. L KELLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 29.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Southern Indiana District:—On the resignation of Bro. W. C. Marshall as Bishop's agent, I was recommended by him to Bro. E. L. Kelley. Bro. Marshall resigned the office on account of having to go into the active ministry, and being away from home and out preaching continually in new places, could not have much time to devote to Bishop's agency. So upon this statement and these reasons I became the agent of Southern Indiana district.

Now, brethren, I ask the assistance and earnest coöperation of all Saints that desire to see the work move along smoothly, and in a right way. We now have four active working elders in southern Indiana this year. They ought to do much good service, and present the cause of Christ,—or in other words the latter-day work,—in some new places, and make many friends to our faith. We give them our prayers and send our sympathy out for them, and if they labor diligently we will try to pay their families what we can. So now, beloved Saints, this all means that we must go and pay some tithes to those collectors in each branch, that the work may move along, and furthermore when we pay our tithes we are keeping one of the commandments.

D. HURBAUGH.

REUNION NOTICES.

Oklahoma Saints:—At our last annual reunion a committee was appointed to consider and report on the advisability of a coöperative boarding house at our reunion this year. The committee have canvassed, and after reporting, were authorized to arrange for a boarding place, where all Saints who attend can get their meals at the actual cost of preparing them. Such arrangements are now in progress. The plan is about as follows: The committee provide a place, hire a cook, provide provisions, etc. At the close of meeting, the entire expense is summed up, the cost per meal determined, and those boarding pay their proportion according to number of meals taken. An estimate discloses the fact that meals can be prepared at a cost of about seven cents. One among the many commendable features of this plan is, it relieves the sisters of the labor of cooking during the meeting, gives them much needed rest, and leaves them free to devote their minds entirely to the services.

The prospects for the work in Oklahoma were never better than they are now. Why not all the Saints in Oklahoma arrange to attend and renew your strength and zeal in the cause? If you intend coming, drop a card to Bro. G. M. Hiles, Downs, Oklahoma. The committee desires this very much. Please don't omit it. Any information you desire in regard to the boarding tent, write to the above brother, or the writer. Remember the time, August 3 to 13; place, four miles east and two and a half south of Hennessy, Oklahoma. W. S. MACRAE.

Box 155, Blackwell, O. T. 2t

We are going to have a reunion in southern California this year, commencing August 10, and continue over the 17th. It will in all probability be held in Sycamore grove, within the incorporate limits of Los Angeles, and is one of the very best places for a reunion in this country. We are fully expecting one of the Presidency to be in attendance. It is very probable that Bro. Joseph will be the "one." It is proposed to continue the "community table" which was so in evidence last year. This will save much time and worry for the sisters.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

The Des Moines district having secured the Chautauqua grounds at Colfax, Iowa, as the place to hold their annual reunion, have set the date of August 31, 1900; reunion to run ten days. Furniture. Cots, canvas, 15 cents; cots, wire single, 25 cents; cots, wire double 40 cents; chairs canvas, 10 cents; chairs wood, 15 cents. Gasoline stoves two burners, 50 cents. We extend a cordial invitation to all Ssaints to come and enjoy themselves with us, not of Des Moines district only, but everybody. We have a very nice place, well adapted for just such a gathering. Good water, hay, and corn at reasonable prices. This is an established grounds of the Iowa Epworth League and good railroad accommodation; some five trains per day.

BY REUNION COMMITTEE.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Chatham District, Greeting:—Having been appointed to labor in your midst, we would ask the coöperation of all in the district who may be interested in missionary work. If you know where an opening could be made; a schoolhouse, or a hall, or a grove could be got for preaching, kindly let us know. We also have the use of the district tent this summer; anyone knowing where the tent could be set up to advantage, will kindly let us know, and we will attend to you as soon as we can. Trusting we may have your hearty support, we are hoping and praying for success in this great latter-day work. Address all communications to Box 20, Ridgetown, Ontario.

Asking for an interest in the faith and prayers of the Saints, I remain, yours in bonds, J. W. RUSHTON.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

BOOK OF MORMON HAS SOME BASIS.

Emmett S. Compston, who is connected with Harvard University, has become convinced that Joseph Smith did not make up all of the Mormon bible. The book on which the Mormon faith is based purports to tell of the peoples who inhabited Central and South America centuries before the arrival of Columbus. The race perished in the terrific cold of one of the glacial periods, according to Mormon calculations, but the last survivors buried the golden plates on which were inscribed the history and an account of the religion of the race, and these plates were miraculously revealed to Joseph Smith, who translated the inscriptions.

An expedition from the Mormon church is now in Mexico and Central America looking over the ruins of great cities and places of worship, seeking for proofs of the authenticity of their bible. Mr. Compston, who is an authority on archæology, was invited to go with the party, but returned because he feared the hot weather, having already had a touch of the fever which prevails in Yucatan during the rainy season.

"I can't say that the Mormon faith appears any less preposterous to me than it did," Mr. Compston said at the Brown Palace hotel last night. "But I am pretty well convinced that some of the narratives on which it is based relating to those old cities of Yucatan were not wholly imaginative. I don't feel at liberty to discuss the matter at length, for you see I only went along because of my knowledge in certain lines of archæology, in tracing out ruins. I have helped dig out cities in Assyria and have worked in Persia and Egypt, and so, of course, I can trace the lines of old cities and of fortifications by signs that would be all but undiscernible to a man that had not that experience. But while I shall leave the detailed reports, with references to the Book of Mormon and all that sort of thing to the representatives of that church with whom I am working, I can say this, that we found cities and settlements that fitted into the accounts of cities and fortresses in the Mormon bible in a way that could not have been accidental. We found bas reliefs describing battles, and journeys, and religious observances, exactly as described in the words of Joseph Smith.

How do I explain it? The only explanation that seems possible to me, for of course all the talk about the Angel Moroni showing Smith how to read the golden plates is nonsense, is that some traveler must have studied those ruins carefully, must have seen them in a much better state of preservation than when we saw them, and then Smith in some way got hold of his writings, or talked with him, and made his discoveries the basis of the pseudo bible.

I hope to go down there again, with a party that is less trammeled. This time we went to prove one particular thing, not to make a study of the ruins from a scientific standpoint. We went to places where I am sure no white man had been for centuries, cutting our way through the most tangled jungle you ever could think of, and crossing swamps and rivers where it was a fight to make every foot of way. But the ruins are more interesting and I believe more important than those of Egypt and Assyria on which so much time has been spent.

Do I think there is a connection between this civilization and that of the Old World? No, I don't, or if there was any it was very remote. Of course there are resemblances, the touches in sculpture and arrangement that mark the handiwork of all mankind, from the Esquimaux to the Hottentots, but there are very wide differences, too, differences that show to my mind that the whole basis of thought and belief was different from that of Egypt and Assyria. But I won't talk about that, until I have studied the matter more. These theories are simply theories, based on the most cursory study. It's a field about which no one can say anything positively."

Mr. Compston left last night for Santa Fe, where he will examine the collection of cliff dwellers' relics and will then go to Salt Lake City to submit his share of the reports in advance of the return of the expedition.—The Denver Republican, June 9, 1900.

MAXIM PREDICTS A GREAT WAR.

Hudson Maxim, one of the greatest inventors the world has ever produced and a man who might very properly be called the king of high explosives and death dealing instruments of war, predicts that the world is upon the verge of a great war. It will be a war between giants, he says, will be fought to a finish, and will be the greatest the earth has ever known. "It will be replete with horrors, will wipe out nations, and will be short, bloody, and decisive," is the manner in which he sums up an article which he has written upon the subject for the Home Magazine. "The Coming War," is the title he gives his article, and he begins by stating the matter with a number of questions. For instance, he asks what is the meaning of the standing armies of Europe, for what reason is England straining every nerve for the increase and improvement of her army and navy, what meaning was there in Lord Salisbury's appeal to the people of England to form rifle clubs and go out into the fields and learn to shoot, why is Lord Roberts asked to send home one hundred thousand of his South African troops before October 1, and why is Russia working night and day to complete the Trans-Caspian and Trans-Siberian railroads? Then he adds:—

"An outbreak is at hand. The United States war department has already ordered military representatives to Peking and Tokio to watch proceedings. General Sakorov, chief of the Russian general staff, has started for Manchuria, where six forts will be immediately erected. Russia is seizing the excuse offered by the Boxers against Peking to rush every available man on to the disputed ground. From the foothold thus obtained it will be difficult to dislodge her, unless steps are taken at once to block her game. Japan seems ready and anxious to do this thing. And from the conflict thus begun may arise the world war so long threatened and so long feared."

We believe, and hope, that the views of the situation as entertained by Mr. Maxim are pessimistic, and that conditions are overdrawn, but certain it is that the situation is the worst it has been in years, if indeed it has ever before been so grave. We have enough faith in Christianity, civilization, and humanity, however, to believe that the terrible conflict predicted by Maxim will be averted.—Register.

EVIL IN MODERN LIGHT.

"There is no personal devil, though there are plenty of devils," said the Rev. R. A. White yesterday morning at Stewart avenue Universalist church. He was preaching on "Evil in the light of modern knowledge; or, who is the Devil?" Elucidating his subject, he said:—

"Evil is whatever harms mankind. Good is whatever benefits it. To the primitive man the world was full of evil. The sun scorched, the cold froze, the seas engulfed, the fire consumed, the storm destroyed, disease killed, men wrought harm to their kind. Some contend that the habit of worship began in devil worship—propitiation of the forces of evil. When it is remembered that much of so-called Christian worship in the past has been a system of appeasing God and averting his anger it seems likely enough that primitive worship was to appease the powers that harmed men.

"Modern knowledge may not yet be presumptuous enough to pretend to satisfy every requirement of a final explanation of evil, but a few propositions about one of the natural elements may clear the subject somewhat. Fire has seemed the devil of destruction. Property and life are its victims. To be noted, first, fire is a necessity; second, its power to benefit the world is inseparable from its power to injure the world; third, its power to injure mankind is proportionate to its power to benefit it. The greater its power to do good, the greater its power to do evil if the opportunity offers. Fourth, the primal purpose of fire is to benefit mankind, and its benefits are infinitely beyond the evil it works. That it works evil at all is due to the wrong use of it by ignorant or willful men. A good intention puts the match to the fuel under the boilers, and the steam soon hisses and the machinery hums. A bad intention puts the match to a building filled with human beings, and we have a tragedy.

"Evil is only the result of the wrong use of what was intended for good, and what in its proper use yields only good to mankind. Every force in the universe or in society and every faculty of the individual has its beneficial uses. Men, through ignorance sometimes, sometimes through greed and maliciousness, wrongly use these beneficial forces, and evil follows. The heart of things is good. The purposes of God are good purposes. Nor can we conceive a better arrangement for a world. Through evil and ignorance the world climbs toward the good and the true. Evil has its uses, compensating in the long run for its injuries to men.

"An ignorant or malicious humanity, misusing beneficial forces to evil ends, is the only devil known to modern knowledge. There are devils enough, devils in homespun and rags, devils in dress suits and immaculate kids. There are hells enough—hells where children are damned, where justice is perverted. Evil abides. But we no longer fight horned and cloven-footed devils, but the evil and the ignorance in men. Slowly the shadows grow fainter, and over the world of human thought falls slowly but surely the dawn of God, the breaking day of a greater good."—Chicago Tribune, February 22, 1900.

EFFECTIVE PREACHING.

In an article in the Homiletic Review Joseph Parker draws the line sharply between the preacher and the essayist who reads his pulpit address. According to the London clergyman the effective preacher is not the one who delivers a set oration. The reader stands at a distance from his hearers, while the preacher appeals to them personally. Mr. Parker considers Beecher, Spurgeon, and Moody the three best preachers he has heard, ranking them in that order. Beecher used the fewest possible notes, which would be unintelligible to any one else and gave no hint of the store of eloquence which they would suggest to him. Spurgeon wrote down catch-words and a few beginnings of sentences. Both Beecher and Spurgeon trusted almost entirely to the inspiration of the moment to secure fit words in which to clothe their thoughts. Either could expand a slight idea into an indefinite number of charming words, while either was also a master of short and pregnant sentences, some of Beecher's aphorisms being among the best in any literature. Moody used no notes at all. "Can any one imagine Moody standing up in the pulpit, taking out a sheaf of paper, putting on his spectacles, holding down his head, and reading a sermon?" Instead, he spoke extemporaneously and passionately, appealing to "sinful human nature."—Chicago Tribune.

CHILDREN'S PRIVILEGES IN PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

The separation of children from the adult users of the library, by means of a room of their own, originated in the public library of Brookline, Mass., which in 1890 set aside an unused room as a children's reading-room. In 1893 the Minneapolis Library fitted up a room for the young people which has the largest number of children's books provided by any public library in the country. The Denver Public Library also opened a circulating library for children, and by 1896 Boston, Omaha, Seattle, San Francisco, Detroit, New Haven, Buffalo, Pratt Institute (Brooklyn), Pittsburg, and Kalamazoo had followed suit. The Chicago Library has no special room for children, and they are expected to use the branch libraries. Out of 125 libraries, 31 have some sort of children's reading-room.

At present there are four principal kinds of children's libraries:

1. That represented by the New York Free Circulating Library, in which children are served with adults.

2. That of the Utica Library, in which juvenile literature is given a special set of shelves.

3. That of the Pratt Institute Free Library, in which the children have a separate room opening out of the room for adults.

4. That of the Minneapolis Public Library, in which the children have a room on the ground floor entirely separate from the part of the building devoted to adults, and need not enter the main part of the building.—Katherine Louise Smith, in Review of Reviews for July.

In the August number of the Delineator Dr. Murray handles very thoroughly a subject of great interest to mothers. The sudden attacks of croup with their very distressing symptoms, and the alarming dangers of diphtheria are treated with professional thoroughness, but in such a way that unprofessional people can understand and act upon the advice at the outset of an attack. Of similar aid and help to mothers in the same number is Miss Lina Beard's very clever article on Pastimes for Convalescent Children.

ANOTHER TESTIMONY FOR THE BOOK OF MORMON.

We have given space on the cover of late to several articles on archæology which vindicate the position of the Book of Mormon. This week we give space to another from the Denver Republican, for June 9. It is the testimony of E. S. Compston, who is connected with Harvard University. He was invited by some of the Utah people to accompany them on an exploring expedition among the ruins in Mexico and Central America. He did, and he gives some strong evidence which will be gratefully received by our people.

He, of course, ridicules the idea of any divine aid being given Joseph Smith in translating the plates, and attempts to account for the appearance of the book through human agencies. He thinks that Joseph Smith heard some traveler relating scenes in the countries to the south, and that this formed the basis for the work.

Mr. Compston says:—

I can say this, that we found cities and settlements that fitted into the accounts of cities and fortresses in the Mormon bible in a way that could not have been accidental. We found bas reliefs describing battles, and journeys, and religious observances, exactly as described in the words of Joseph Smith.

He then goes on to give his theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon, as we mentioned before, and then graphically described some of the places he saw. He said that they visited places where he was confident no white man had been for years,—places where they were obliged to use their axes to cut their way "through the most tangled jungle you ever could think of, and crossing swamps and rivers where it was a fight to make every foot of way." We are afraid that upsets his theory of the traveler telling his tales in the presence of Joseph Smith. It must have indeed been an "angel" who could give Joseph Smith so minute an account of places where white men had not set foot for centuries.

It is pleasing to us to see how scientists are, unknowingly to themselves, slowly but surely vindicating the claims of the so called "Mormon" bible.

ANOTHER EXPOSITION OF MORMONISM.

We have received from the Pentecostal Publishing Company, of Louisville, Kentucky, a copy of a book written by Rev. S. J. S. Davis, called, "The Origin of the Book of Mormon, together with an Account of the Rise and Progress of the Mormon Church." The book is being sold for twenty-five cents per copy. The publishers deemed it necessary to apologize for placing the book before the people, and offers such as apology the statement that there were hundreds of missionaries preaching, visiting, and distributing literature, and "doing what else they could to make converts" to the "Mormon" faith. The following is from the publisher's preface:—

The people want to know something of this strange sect, and they will find the desired information in this little volume. The author is a local preacher of the M. E. Church, and has the highest indorsements as a man of unquestioned integrity. We have allowed him to tell his story in his own way, having only changed the phraseology in a few places. We assure the reader that his statements in the following narrative are in perfect harmony with those of other writers of Mormon history, though very much more condensed. The revolting facts here given are well attested and should be known, in order that the people may be protected against the wiles of these apostles of darkness. This is the only apology we have to offer for placing the book before the people.

Thus does the reader receive the indorsement of the publishers, and we are told the author is a M. E. preacher of good standing. From the author's preface we learn that he gathers much of his information from those "who lived in the immediate vicinity of the place where the first Mormon church was organized, and were well acquainted with all the members both before and after the organization." The author says:—

My boyhood and early manhood were spent near the cradle of Mormonism. Here have I seen and heard their preachers, and I have here met with many others who, after a short trial, have become disgusted with, and left them. These and other circumstances which I will not here mention, have conspired to furnish me with facts not heretofore made known to the public.

When we read this, we were somewhat pleased, in a way, for we presumed that this author would tell us something about "Mormonism" which we had not heard. We thought that he would tell us all about how the Book of Mormon originated—something new in the way of a theory by which we might account for the origin of that book which has caused the religious world so much worry and trouble. Imagine our surprise and disgust, then, on carefully perusing the exposé, to learn that the wornout Solomon Spalding "Historical Romance" was the basis for the Book of Mormon. Dr. Priestly's book on American antiquities was, we are told, the stimulus for Spalding writing his romance. Mr. Spalding became sick and died before he had opportunity to get the manuscript printed. After his death, Mr. Davis tells us, "efforts were here made for its publication, but it disappeared in a mysterious manner, and what became of the manuscript copy was never certainly known." Then he significantly adds as an introduction to the chapter in which he gives the history of Joseph Smith:—

Living near and having access to the office where the manuscript was last heard of, were some personages whom it will now be necessary to introduce to the reader. I will describe them as they were described to me by those who knew them well.

He then describes Joseph Smith as a man of low cunning and unscrupulous principles, who would steal to satisfy his covetousness. Mr. Davis quotes the language of his uncle, who said:—

He was fond of dress and display and could sometimes so far lose his prophetical dignity as to drink like a sailor and swear like a pirate.

Then is introduced to the reader in similar language Sidney Rigdon and Oliver Cowdery, and accounts for Smith getting possession of the Spalding manuscript in this way:—

It is generally believed that Rigdon, an occasional printer, saw the chance in Spalding's manuscript, and by some means placed it in the hands of Smith and Cowdry, and then disappeared for a time, his absence causing no comment as he was, by habit, liable to come and go at any time. Now with the material at hand, and the idea of engraved plates, how easy it was for Smith, who was already in communication with the celestial world, to have an angel direct him to the hill Cumorah, where he should come into possession of plates containing a new revelation to mankind!

Thus does this M. E. preacher in good standing resurrect that dilapidated theory of the Spalding romance being the origin of the Book of Mormon, and puts it forth to the world as being facts never yet presented to the world.

After presenting to the reader this history of the origin of the Book of Mormon, he pretends to give a history of the church and an outline of some of the things taught and practiced. As might be presumed from his history of the "origin of the Book of Mormon," he has woefully misrepresented the facts of history, and has attributed to the mind of Joseph Smith some of the most abominable practices and doctrines that one can imagine. If Mr. Davis, as a M. E. preacher in good standing, really believes that Joseph Smith was such a man as he is represented to be in this book, we certainly think that there is one M. E. preacher who is an object for the sympathizing pity of every intelligent person. It is simply astonishing to us that one can live in this enlightened period of free thought and rapid dissemination of knowledge and really believe such rot as he presents to the public in his book, when it is so contrary to the real facts of history. We cannot believe that a man would maliciously present to his readers such falsehoods, and so we simply presume that the poor man is ignorantly deluded, and extend to him our earnest sympathy.

THE INDIA FAMINE.

The famine in India is still engaging the attention of the philanthropic, and funds from all parts of the United States and the world are being sent to the stricken district. Much as has been done by way of relief, thousands are perishing, and thousands more will before the conditions are sufficiently changed to check the famine. In the interim, it is devolvent upon Christian countries to practice the principles of their religion and do what can be done to alleviate the awful suffering the poor Indians are undergoing.

In Calcutta, the Viceroy said:—

If any rich man in this city is in any doubt as to whether he should subscribe I would gladly give him a railroad ticket to a famine district, and take what he chose to give me on his return. He might go with a hard heart, but he would come back with a broken one. Nor need any poor man desist from offering his mite. A mite to him may be almost a fortune to the starving.

On May 21, Bishop Thorburn, of India, said in Chicago:—

All India, I may say, will feel grateful for the help that you are sending at this time. Ten dollars will buy food for a family for at least six months—only one family, but that may be all you are accountable for when you stand before Him who said: "I was hungry and ye fed me." You may not have another opportunity like this till you stand before the judgment seat.

The Chicago India Famine Relief Committee, at 629 The Temple, in a letter to us on July 3, said:—

Six million persons are receiving relief, the greatest charity of all time. Many more millions need it desperately. We entreat your prompt and liberal help.

The attention of the Herald readers has been called to this matter before, and our only excuse, if any is needed, for again mentioning the matter, is that any help extended to these poor, suffering mortals will be in direct harmony of the spirit of the words of the Master when he said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The people of the United States have come to the rescue of the famine stricken people generously, but not too much so.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. N. V. Pearson writes, June 29, from San Antonio, Texas:—

Bro. I. P. Baggerly has been holding meetings since last Friday night, preaching in a grove near the Baptist church, on South Flores street. Bro. H. O. Smith reached here Wednesday, so both are preaching now, with very good attendance. One lady is to be baptized Sunday.

The following letter from one of our brethren breathes a spirit of honesty, and interest in the work of the publishing department, that is highly commendable:—

Will you please send me my account at the Herald Office. I have an old account of about $5, had about seven or eight years ago. Please send it with interest, and also Herald dues.

Bro. J. C. Hitchcock sends us a copy of the St. Louis Republic for June 24, 1900, and says:—

I sent you today a copy of the Republic containing a picture of the Washington University Class 1900. No. 12 is Bro. S. A. Burgess, son of S. R. Burgess. Sammy stood first among the eighteen boys in the class.

We congratulate our young brother on his excellent record.

Bro. F. M. McDonald writes from New London, Iowa, and says:—

Brn. J. R. Evans and D. Tripp are here with the tent and ready for business. They are intending to commence meetings tonight. We celebrated part of the 4th in the tent. The Saints met at three o'clock, and Bro. Evans compared the two translations. All felt well paid for the hour and a half spent there. The Saints of the Nauvoo district will be pleased to learn that the tent is in a fair condition. Bro. Tripp spent the 4th at home.

F. A. Smith, under date of 7th inst., writes from Omaha:—

Well, the Fourth has passed, but we cannot say quietly. It was bedlam turned loose. The noise was terrific. Casualties very light, considering the crowds and the many opportunities there were for accidents. I spent the most of the day reading; went to one of the parks in the evening awhile. Everything moving very nicely here. We have a few sick people, and very hot weather. Nice shower last night.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Patriarch A. H. Smith returned Tuesday from a trip into Minnesota and other parts. He reports the Saints in Minnesota as spiritually alive. He brings with him Bro. Leon Gould, who will act as stenographer in the Patriarch's office.

Bishop E. L. Kelley returned July 3, from Independence. Reports things moving nicely.

Bro. F. A. Atkinson writes us a short article on "the rock," maintaining that when Jesus spoke to Peter he meant the word. He says, "The stone is the word of God."

Bro. D. C. White, missionary in the Nodaway district, spent the Fourth with his family in Lamoni.

It is with sadness that we chronicle the death of Sr. Campbell, wife of Bro. Duncan Campbell. Her influence has always been great in the Sunday school, where she will be greatly missed. While Sunday school workers will feel they have suffered the loss of an earnest worker, it is only in her home where the real extent of the blow will be felt. To Bro. Campbell and family we extend our heartfelt sympathies in thus being robbed of a kind wife and a mother in Israel.

Lamoni Saints were saddened in the midst of the festivities on the Fourth, to learn of the death of Bro. Thomas France, who died suddenly on the evening of July 3. We extend to his family our sympathies. We have no need to call their attention to that glorious meeting in the future, for they are well grounded in the latter day faith, and grieve "not as those without hope."

Our business manager has received for the India Famine Relief fund, some $46, which have been sent to New York headquarters.

By a clipping from the Arlington (S. D.) Sun, for June 25, sent us recently, we notice that Bro. James Caffall, one of our able veterans, has appeared in print to offset some errors which had previously appeared in the Sun. Bro. Caffall's watchfulness and zeal have become proverbial.

Bro. A. J. Keck writes from Chicago, Ill., July 5, stating that in the HERALD for June 20, in the hymn, "Service Exalting," second stanza, first line should read, "A servant of servants, in love condescending." The words "in love" were in some way omitted.

The Patriarch is "at home" now in his new office in the building just south of the Herald Office. He has furnished the room anew, and it is fast assuming a real "office appearance." Bro. Leon Gould, secretary to the Patriarch, is very busy on the records, and "Uncle Alex" seems happy in his work as "father to the church."

When last heard from Pres. Smith was at Waldemar, Ont. That was on the 7th inst. From there he expected to go to Detroit, on the 12th, and from Detroit he will go to Chicago for a short time. There he will look up some of his cousins he has not yet seen.

Work on the third volume of the Church History is being rushed. Over seven hundred pages are already set. Send along your subscriptions.

A MONTH IN THE SOCIETY ISLANDS. NO. 2.

BY J. W. PETERSON.

Wednesday, October 25.—Moved in our things not moved yesterday. Wife went to get some sugar out of the box, when, dear me, sakes alive, you couldn't see the sugar for ants! Ants are as bad here as mosquitoes are in Tahiti. There are neither birds nor reptiles here except a very few centipedes and scorpions, and they mostly on Tahiti. Commenced making chairs; also put some legs on the sugar box and set them in cans of water. Found some very good tools to work with. At dinner we had to appoint one of our number to shoo the flies away while we ate. Screen doors are unknown here, and on a niau house they would do no good anyway. In the evening we took a walk around town, and to our astonishment almost every native family had a sewing machine. Have also seen a number of native women pushing their babes along the road in baby carriages. In one store I saw a few of the latest hammerless, breech-loading shotguns, though what they do with them here I am sure I don't know. I hear that there is a small island not far from here where they hunt a kind of sea fowl. Saw also bycicles and nice eight-day clocks. We also saw the children playing with China dolls, rubber balls, and glass marbles. We passed watch-makers, bakers, etc., and on one corner we discovered a crowd listening to one of Edison's latest phonographs. What a surprise from what we expected! We passed one man's house who is said to be worth a million dollars.

On returning home a sister presented us with a mat for our floor. I can scarcely describe these mats to Americans. There is a kind of bark, also the leaf of a tree, that grows on some of the islands, that they use for mats and hats. If any of you ever saw Bro. Joseph's hat that was sent to him from here you will know what kind of material the mats are made of. It is almost as tough as buckskin and not far from the color. Some very nice hats are also made from split wood and split bamboo. We saw on our way some of the prettiest quilts that I ever rested my eyes on.

At seven p. m. listened to one of the native elders preach. The authorities here in the church wanted Lillie to sit up front on the platform. This she positively refused to do. But they said Sr. so-and-so and so-and-so sat right here and the white missionaries with them. She replied, "Sisters don't sit on the platform with the elders in America, and I must not do here what I would not do in America. Besides, I don't believe it is pleasing to God." She asked me what to do and I replied, "Do as you please, but be sure you are pleasing God." She chose to sit down in her place among those not ordained. As she did so the Spirit testified that it was pleasing to our heavenly Father. I suppose it is easy for people to be pushed ahead out of their place, but I hope while we are here that the church in America can know that the very letter and spirit of the law will be kept and taught by us both, in precept and example. May the the Lord help us so to do.

After church they all remained to talk over the sermon. Retired to our bed on the floor but could not rest nor sleep much. Our bones would not fit the rocks.

Thursday, October 26. In the morning made more chairs. About ten o'clock, Prof. Alexander, of the Albatross, called and we had a talk about the origin of these coral islands. From my early school days I remembered having been told that coral islands were built up from the bottom of the sea by coral insects. I thought the story then, as I do now, a big fish story. That coral insects can and do build up the islands from a few feet beneath the surface is true. But that these same insects that labor so near the surface could bear the water pressure miles under the surface is anything but reasonable. But how did they get a foundation to work from? That is a question which I think the scientists must have felt unable to answer, and feeling ashamed to longer teach theory for fact, have concluded to investigate a little further. Now they say all these islands are the mouths of old volcanoes and that sometime a range of mountains existed where these islands are, and that a whole continent has been swallowed up in the sea. This story is almost as large a fish story as the other, though it has some show for truth. One thing is true, the coral does not extend down very far, and under and mixed with that is lava in great abundance. Sometimes the lava is found on top and sometimes the coral appears to be melted to lava. But a crater eighteen miles in diameter is rather a huge crater. That is the distance across this lagoon, and it is one of the smallest. Others are near fifty miles across and even larger. Rather big story, isn't it? However, there was a time when a mist covered the earth. I suppose it was when these mountains sank and the sea rushed in and put out the fire of these huge volcanoes. I am not prepared to say it is not true, but it looks rather big.

While in Papeete we were invited aboard the Albatross and shown their collection of sea fish and sea serpents. A wonderful sight was that. The most wonderful thing we saw was a glass ball about eight inches in diameter and an inch in thickness which had been let down in the sea (I think nearly four miles) and the water had been forced through the pores of the glass till it was nearly half filled with water. Another glass, or rather, a piece of glass the same thickness, was shown us which had been crushed by the pressure of the water. And yet coral insects, they say, work down there (?)

Some of the crew of the Albatross attended our church one Sunday evening in Papeete and would have attended here and reproduced one of the native hymns for them, but Professor Agassiz's son was sick at the French hospital in Papeete, so he was anxious to return, and could not remain over Sunday.

Bro. Janssen is our cook, steward, and interpreter. Read in second volume of Church History.

At seven p. m., the sisters have a prayer and testimony meeting. Some of the leading sisters would not attend because the meeting was not held at three p. m. instead of seven. Another came, but would not sing or take part otherwise; but the majority ruled, or tried to. We will try to get the minority to submit willingly and meekly like they do (?) in America.

Now comes a perplexing question to us. Has a brother not ordained a right to preside over a prayer and testimony meeting? All will doubtless say, "No, if those are available who are ordained." If the brother has not that right, has an unordained sister? Neither my wife nor I in America were much in favor of such meetings, or those so-called helps, because we are certain that when Paul mentions "helps," he does not refer in any way to organizations, but to officers. The Lord said in 1841,—

> And, again, I say unto you, Samuel Rolfe and his counselors for priests, and the president of the teachers and his counselors, and also the president of the deacons and his counselors, and also the president of the stake and his counselors. The above officers I have given unto you, and the keys thereof, for helps and for governments.—D. C. 107:46.

While we do not want to stand in the way of any good nor to be a clog in the wheels of progress, yet so many departures have been sanctioned by the church in other ages, we fear for this. We have prayed, earnestly prayed, that the Lord would witness to us by his Spirit if such things be acceptable to him. So far not one ray of light, but every time we contemplate the matter a spirit of darkness attends. My wife was asked to lead the sisters' meeting. What should she do under existing circumstances? Only wait for greater light and do the best we can. To stop the meetings would do violence to the feelings of the Saints, to continue is to do violence to our own. For the present we crucify ours for their good.

Friday, October 27.—In the forenoon made a mattress to go under our bed, out of cocoanut boughs. Read Church History and studied Tahitian. In the Church History I noticed some points on lineal priesthood, pages 47, 72, and 139. Also read over and over again Bro. H. C. Smith's tract in the Herald on, "Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist?" An excellent little tract. When I get back to Papeete where I can do so, I am going to send money enough to Bro. Criley to pay for mailing one of those tracts to every newspaper in some county in Iowa that I shall name. If every Saint in America would do that I think our work would soon be better understood. In all my missionary work in Wisconsin and Iowa, ninety-nine out of every hundred persons really believe Joseph Smith was a polygamist.

In the afternoon some of the elders came in and I read to them from the Book of Mormon of Hagoth's leaving America about 37 A. D. and never returning, also others left in like manner, and that I thought they were some of those who left. Showed them a copper cent and compared their color with that, and explained to them that their brethren the Lamanites, in America, were that color, just like themselves. They seemed to have lost almost all tradition of their origin. Almost to a man they seem to think they came from America. They have great love for anything American. It is strange that here under the French government they seldom talk or try to talk French, but many of them speak a little English. A real old man showed Bro. Hawkins by the first compass he ever saw, where they came from, and following the direction would land one in California. Their acts, looks, and ways are purely Indian.

For dinner we had fresh fish. To our taste all salt water fish is so very fresh, and no amount of salt will make it taste otherwise. We have only really relished one meal of fish since we came, and much of the fruit in Tahiti is the same way. The much talked of bread fruit and feis (fayee) taste very much like a raw squash or pumpkin, and cooking or seasoning does not seem to alter the taste.

At seven p. m. listened to one of the native elders present the gospel in Tahitian. I rejoice to hear the gospel being presented in other tongues than English. Shows we are growing.

Saturday, October 28.—Haven't an almanac or even a calendar, so have to guess at dates. A very convenient mission this, but I like it for all that. Read Church History all forenoon. Studied a little on the language 'Tisn't natural for me to learn by books. I always learned by observation. Could learn more in three days at a county fair than a whole year's schooling. I don't know that that is my fault, either. Think I will get out among the brethren and learn the language that way, if possible. In the evening took a walk up town to do some purchasing and observe. Think my prospective qualities rather overbalance my reflective. Paid $2.50 for a pair of tennis shoes for my wife,—the only pair of ladies' shoes to be bought in town. Everybody goes barefooted here, to church and everywhere. This of course does not include American missionaries. Following are some of the prices here: Small smoked hams five pounds, $7.50 each. Glass jar of dried prunes, three pounds, $1.80. Rain water barrels, $17.00. Cloth shoes, rope bottoms, $1.40. Leather shoes, $6.00 to $24.00. Salmon 50 cents per can. Boiled beef 80 cents. Most other canned stuff, cabbage, fruits of all kinds, 80 cents per can, and this is cost (?) price to missionaries. The natives perhaps will pay two or three times that much. Prices vary according to the conscience of the merchant. The government is doing a great deal to help the natives and against the traders. The French are very good to the natives. Personally, I would rather they were under French than either American or English rule. No white man is allowed to dive for their pearls, and no tax is imposed on them but road tax. The home government is out several thousand dollars annually to support their government here. They are indeed nursing fathers and mothers to the natives. The natives, too, are waking up to their treatment by the traders. This evening as we were in one of the stores word came that all the natives had struck for higher wages, and that they were thoroughly organized and determined. Think of a regular organized strike among these people on a little island in the midst of the Pacific, and then say, if you can, that civilization (?) is not advancing.

Shaved myself, and shined my shoes and otherwise made preparation for the Sabbath. Attended song service in the evening in front of the church. How these people do love to sing! and we love to hear them. Some have said they sing out of harmony, some high and some low, and all degrees between. I have heard none of such singing since I came. One reason I like it is because it is in perfect harmony. They never strain the sounds to make harmony or rather strain the harmony to make sounds.

Sunday, October 29. At seven a. m., listened to the gospel presented by one of the native elders, after which the saints desired to hear my certificate of appointment read and translated to them, which was done, together with some letters from Bro. Burton. At ten a. m. I spoke on what we might expect at the judgment should our lives be found to be out of harmony with the gospel. After preaching, Sunday school convened with four hundred twenty scholars. After Sunday school about a dozen engaged in a discussion as to the meaning of the passage of scripture where Jesus says, "In my Father's house are many mansions," whether it was paradise or the celestial kingdom. I find the natives to be quite intelligent. They remind me more and more of the old Nephites, or rather Anti-Nephi-Lehies (B. M. 269: 3.)

At three p. m., Saints met to organize a branch out of all the branches gathered here, some twelve in number. A temporary organization had been effected before I arrived. I was chosen to preside and given the privilege to choose my assistants, if I wanted any. I made choice of Taneterau (president of this division I suppose it might be called, in one sense, a stake, of which we have two in this mission) as one assistant, and asked them to choose the other. They made choice of Tapuni, a missionary from the Tahiti division. The priests, teachers, deacons, and secretary formerly chosen were sustained. Meetings were ordered to continue in the same order as fomerly: Preaching Wednesday and Friday evenings; prayer meeting on Tuesday evening; women's meeting Thursday evening. Singing Saturday evening. Preaching Sunday at seven and ten a. m. Sunday school at eleven a. m. Prayer and testimony meeting at three p. m. Sunday evening was turned over to the president to use as he thought best, after that, singing for about an hour out in the yard under the cocoanut trees. Bro. Tapuni was placed in charge of the singing. Arrangements were also made for the branches who camped on the other side of the island during the week, to have services. All sick were to be reported to the presidency, but if on the other side, to the president of the various branches. For all this I had permission from Bro. Burton, president of the mission. That no one might be slighted or considered above another who held the priesthood, we placed all their names in a box and drew out the names of those the previous week who were to speak or have charge during the coming week. I am trying to impress upon them the idea that we are all equal when not in transgression and all are alike unto God. We think the instruction found in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 16 is needed instruction, or else it would not have been given. It reads as follows:—

Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege, and shall be blessed of me.

We know one reunion in Missouri conducted on this plan, and the Saints talk of it yet as being a grand spiritual feast. We are of the opinion that a poor speaker will do better before a good crowd than a small one. Two small points together do not even up very well. After all regulations were arranged prayer and testimony opened. One brother (formerly a spiritualist, but now a very faithful Saint, and who was president before I came) related a vision, how two brethren now dead had appeared to him and told him to prepare himself to go to America. The brother, though very sick at the time, arose from the vision a well man. This also brings to mind a brother I saw and conversed with in Papeete who had a very large tumor in his stomach, and was told by all the doctors and friends that he could not live over two weeks. One of the doctors was the doctor from a French man-of-war. But the man about that time heard and accepted the gospel with all his heart, and demanded baptism at the hands of Bro. Burton. He was carried to the water, and his feet had no sooner touched it than all pain left him and has not returned since, and I think his baptism occurred something like two years ago. But the tumors still remains, perfectly healed over. I saw the man and talked with and questioned him, and saw him going about the town, the wonder of everybody. To me it is the most wonderful thing I ever beheld. A man with a stomach on him almost as large around as a barrel going about his work without pain, and all healed in an instant of time. Wonderful! He also told me of a sister who had been healed of the leprosy. In this country, as everywhere else, all do not have the faith to be healed. Several of our Saints at Tarona had to be sent out to a little country place Teona, (Zion), on account of their leprosy.

It is a custom here for parents to give away their own children, for say they, we are too tender-hearted to punish them, and our love for them causes us to let some one else care for and correct them, and we will do the same for some one else. Not a bad idea, after all. They are true to their charge. A little boy in the Tarona branch at Papeete was being raised by one of our sisters (president of the women's meeting), but was found to have the leprosy, and was banished. Can you, sisters in America, imagine this woman willingly going with this boy to care for him who was not her own child, and that for life? Scarcely any family here are raising their own children, yet you would never know but what they were their own children by their attention to them.

I observed that here as elsewhere the human rises often above the divine and desires to rule rather than be ruled. But with all that, they are very respectful to the ministry. Nothing in their whole lives would do them as much good as to see Bro. Joseph. Even outsiders often inquire if he is not coming. All expenses would more than willingly be met by them.

The afternoon meeting was well improved. Many earnest prayers and testimonies were heard, we trust by our heavenly Father. At seven p. m. I spoke on the subject of "the personality of God," and it was translated by Bro. Janssen. After preaching, the regular singing service took place in the churchyard. Many outsiders gathered to hear the singing, so the Saints sang some of their matutus, which are short questions on the gospel sung by the bass and tenor and answered by the soprano and alto. It sounds pretty, and is instructive

Monday, October 30. In the forenoon I read a book on "Salt Land heresies," by Bro. W. C. Cather, of St. Joseph, Missouri, also Church History on how Joseph the Seer caused certain matters which were to be considered by the whole church, to be presented first to the deacons, then to the teachers, priests, and ascending rather than descending, including the Aaronic as well as Melchisedec priesthood. (See vol. 2, p. 28, pars. 6, 7.) Thermometer at noon eighty-five degrees Farenheit in the shade. After dinner I made a mattress of cocoanut leaves to spread our bedding on. One can buy all kinds of necessary furniture here if they have money enough, but such unnecessary things as chairs, tables, and bedsteads are only to be bought of white folks in Papeete.

It was reported to me this afternoon that the Protestants and Mormons had composed a letter and sent several around to various parties to the effect that Joseph Smith was not ordained by his father, and that one of our own books contained the sworn statement of Joseph three times to that effect. Most of the brethren here have the idea that Joseph was ordained by his father, and they have been fighting the Mormons for years with that point. So when they learned from his own testimony that he was not, they felt very bad. They came to me and wanted to know what to do and how to answer. I could not help from noticing how sad they looked. I told them that Joseph was right. That if Joseph was ordained president by his father, then his father no longer held that office, which was not true, as he was president when he was killed. I told them that he was anointed, set apart, and appointed as the successor, to be ordained at the proper time and by proper persons, and that I would write it all out and explain it to them, giving them quotations and references so they could copy them when translated. Had a talk about Brigham as sucessor, and in answer to their question, explained how Salt Lake City was not in the lake nor on top of the mountains. I told them of Joseph's prophecy that Brigham would lead the church to hell. They replied, "We know that, but the Utah elders say that was true, he led them to a desert country among wild, ferocious Indians." I could not but laugh at that, how they admitted that Utah was hell. I then told them the story of the Dutchman and boy who were traveling by team through to California in an early day. One evening desiring to camp for the night, and not far from Salt Lake City, the old gentleman was walking ahead looking for a place to camp. He spied a sparkling spring of water, and hallooed to the boy, "Ve sthop here, Chon. Here is blenty of vater," and lying down to drink put his lips and nose in a spring of boiling water, when he jumped up and shouted, "Dhrive on, Chon, dhrive on, kveek! Hell is not far from here."

We are anxious for rain. Water is very scarce, and well water here is simply awful. However, we have a little yet that we got on the steamer before we landed. This idea of dying for water when you can see nothing but water, sounds queer. Today two hundred jugs of water from Papeete, four hundred miles away arrived, which sold readily for one dollar per gallon. The judge told our people today if we were bothered with drunkards crossing our land, just report the matter to him, and he would take care of them.

THE MIRACULOUS.

All things under human control are but the varying expressions and forces of the natural, as seen in the arts, the sciences, and multiform industries of the world. In the botanical gardens abound an almost endless variety of bursting buds and blooming flowers, diversified and wonderful to behold, and pleasing to the sense of smell. In the chemical laboratories and workshops of mankind are produced, from the raw material, things of utility and beauty too numerous and various to mention. Artistic skill and scientific disclosures have contributed liberally to our wonder and admiration, as well as very greatly accelerating our happiness and usefulness. The rude savage, or even the uncultured swain fails to drink deeply from the rich, sweet, everflowing wellsprings of nature; whereas the Christian philosopher will regale in her fountains, and look up through the handiwork to the great Workman.

It is superhuman to organize, set in motion, perpetuate, and assign metes and bounds to the heavenly bodies. Their martial array, or goings forth in their respective orbits and spheres, because of their silent regularity, are not ranked as miracles, although such demonstrations are both wonderful and glorious to contemplate. The same power that originates, keeps or changeth as seemeth his good pleasure. Direct, or through intelligent agents, or often inanimate objects, miracles have been wrought. The Lrod spoke, chaos heard, and a world emerged into being.

The mineral substances form the basis on which rest the vegetable, and they both support the vitality of the animate creation. The phenomenon of life and the emotions of existence, the accretions of the physical and decay and dissolution of the mortal, are chimes from the watchtower of time. The restless sea ebbs and flows, the springs fail not, the river is the channel for the flowing water, and man is in the long caravansary that waiteth never for either tide or time, opportunity or convenience. The lamp of reason and the torch of nature would burn low, and go out in darkness, if they were not supplied from an inexhaustible urn, or a boundless forthcoming treasure. This general supply department weds time to eternity; binds the creature to the All Father; assuages grief, mitigates pain, retrieves loss; dispels dark clouds; dissolves distracting doubts; sweetens an otherwise bitter cup; paves the rugged highway of life; and buoys on to conquest and victory.

In the "Oxford Sunday School Teacher's Bible" are chronicled, in tabulated form, fifty well-authenticated miracles of the Old Testament, howbeit the words and works of God are more or less miraculous all along the way. A full half score of plagues sent upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians, as also the strange experience with Aaron's rod, the culmination at the Red Sea, the forty years in the wilderness, the crossing of the Jordan, the downfall of Jericho, the subjugation of the land, their peace and prosperity, their vicissitudes and humilations are strange indeed; but, behold, their leader was a wonder-worker who had infinite resources at his command. The magicians of old Egypt wrought upon by and inspired with the occult influence and subtle power of the adversary counterfeited some of the signs performed by the Lord of hosts through Moses and Aaron. The great Hebrew lawgiver and inspired emancipator of enslaved, degraded, effeminate Israel knew, experimentally and from observation, of the power of God. His birth, and cradle on the Nile; his rescue, and bringing up; his valor, flight, and wedlock; and from the burning bush to his lonely, unkept grave in the mountains of Moab, are a prodigious wonder, and an ever-living marvel. From the hands of God he received the tables of the law, with the ten commandment covenant written thereupon, as also the subject matter of the Pentateuch, or first five books. In the thirteenth of Deuteronomy he informs the people that had it demonstrated to a certainty that their God was infinitely great, and superlatively good, and altogether incomparable to their idols, or any and all the heathen deities of the nations; that they must in no wise hearken to a sign, wonder, or oracle, that would cause them to apostatize, and follow after other gods, although the prophetic dreamer's forecast duly came to pass.

Through well-informed human agency alone is the future often fairly well understood from passing events. Necromancers, astrologers, soothsayers, witches, and wizards have ever been deceived through Satan. When any one is captured through allurements, they in turn render allegiance to and work for their leader and commander, and thus the malady and contagion spreads through all time, and in every clime.

It goes without saying that the well-armed and warlike nations of Christendom, and the barbarous savages of the world, are not working under the golden rule. The rank and file of the religious are all honeycombed with high treason, to say naught of the avowed infidel. Disappointed clergymen, and the restless laity, are pulling out of these man-made churches, to organize still others, and forsooth, their names and types are legion. A miracle working demon, with great power, signs, and lying wonders, touches the button of this vast, complicated machinery, and keeps the mystery of iniquity at work in all the zones of this teeming earth. A superhuman demonstration is not necessarily a divine attestation that the recipient thereof is in the straight and narrow way, or that he believes in, loves, and obeys the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. A lying spirit was permitted to go forth from the divine presence, even from God, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of the false prophets of wicked Ahab. Lucifer did some strange things with Job, including his family and substance; but the Arabian philosopher and patriarch maintained his integrity, and came out all right.

The Lord wishes his people to stand aloof from Babylon, and disfellowship the pernicious works of darkness. The child who plays in the dirt will hardly keep clean. The time has not come that the timid kid is safe in the company of howling wolves and rapacious leopards, or a tender lamb would be unmolested amid roaring lions. The unwary who seek after signs can have their morbid curiosity intensified by the arch deceiver. Yea, his lying wonders are freely advertised, till the public mails are surfeited with this fraudulent, diabolical stuff. Dr. Weltmer, the magnetic healer, of Nevada, Missouri, has the government on his back for his swindling use of the mail service. I do not suppose this nation will set down on this modern Simon Magus very heavy; for, indeed, "the unclean spirits" are abroad to deceive the kings, and emperors, the governors, and rulers of the world. "Try the spirits," is a heritage that belongs to the humble, faithful children of the living God, and it is a sterling necessity so to do, and so much the more as the time of the end doth hasten towards a close. The evil one and his angels and human emissaries are flooding the globe, and the battle rages fierce, because his time and opportunity are limited. The lines of truth and life will be more and more evident as falsehood and death writhe in the expiring throes of speedy dissolution.

Unprovoked murder and suicide without the shadow of a cause, the incendiary's malevolent work, and widespread, complicated wickedness; the profanation of the Lord's day, and unbridled appetites and passions; the corruption of the avenues of justice, and the prostitution of the very fountain of life; and ten thousand often recurring evils only elicit a passing comment. The news fraternity vie in giving publicity to all lapses from virtue and the revolting list of diabolical horrors. The details that led up to some dastardly are we ferreted out like a sweet morsel; and the stages and outcome of a family feud, or a community's shame are the stock in trade for the newsmonger. The god of this world is blinding the eyes and dulling the hearts of the many who are under his baneful influence and control. At the insidious instigation, and through the seductive power and working of Satan, unaccountable, strange, and marvelous things are occurring and multiplying daily. When a sign or a wonder will aid in the deception, and render honorable his tactics, and blast the character and ruin the life of the unwary, behold, his deadly work rolls forth with accelerated speed. The orthodox clergy and blind followers, are human vehicles through which his aim and object are wrought out with telling effect.

The fraudulent and false miracles cannot overcome the genuine, no more than a base coin can invalidate the true, or an artificial rose can rival the real; for, indeed, Solomon in all his magnificence could not come up to, or even favorably compare with, the flowers of the field. Miraculous attestations, coupled with the truth, and a good life, are strong circumstantial evidences of an invulnerable fortress of adamantine strength. When "God is in you," by the presence and indwelling of his Spirit, you are armed and equipped against the shafts of the most powerfully adroit enemy. It is worse than of no avail to pray and not obey. Supplication in deceit, and coupled with vanity, pride, and hypocrisy, is adding insult to injury. Honesty, sobriety, fidelity, humility, submissiveness, veneration, devotion, earnestness, piety, and the likes, ought to accompany our petitions; and then when the heavens deign to bless, even marvelously, we are all safe and right if we have embraced the gospel, obeyed the ordinances, and been faithful. Such loyal subjects who walk in the light, love, and filial fear of God can have wherewith to try the spirits, discern aright. Rebuke and disfellowship the evil in all phases and forms, and both adhere to and promulgate the great antidote and panacea, for sin, even the pure gospel.

Portentous, wonder-working frauds pander to the lusts of sign seekers, and fatten on the gullibility of the curious, the rabble, and the baser sort. Mediums, clairvoyant doctors, magnetic healers, hypnotists, Christian(?) scientists, necromancy, magic, enchantment, witchcraft, sorcery, etc., conjure up evil spirits, that supply the ever increasing volume of their benighted votaries. Iniquitous environments of the popular throng is a swelling tumult, and a hilarious uproar. Backed by pelf, patronage, and power, and made potent by hoary age and supernatural attestations and verifications, lo and behold we have a foe that will try the temper of our steel. There is no caution and profit in treating this wonderful phenomenon as an idle tale. To know somewhat of the strength of an adversary will be a wall of defense, a shield from the darts, and a thoroughfare for invasion and conquest. The buckler of Jehovah, and the battle-axe of Omnipotence, and the eternal power of the Spirit, including the whole armor of the God of all truth and righteousness should be in constant demand to protect, direct, and perfect the vigilant. I believe it was the late lamented P. P. Bliss who said,—a short while before he went down to a sad death, and an untimely grave, at the Ashtabula, Ohio, wreck,—that he had rather be with God in the dark than to walk alone in the light.

In the faithful administration of the ordinances, and in the legitimate execution of law and order, and in the piety and sacrifice of the Saints, the blessings, glory, and power of godliness is manifest to the spiritual-minded people. The carnal are sightless, so far as the eyes of their understanding are concerned. A little power and authority is dangerous; and great light augments the peril if we do not put all to a good use and occupy. Meager attainments should not be thought of; but growth and development ought to be the rule when our eternal interests are at stake. The unbounded fields of wisdom lie open to the humblest, feeblest petitioner for needed grace. Demons, masked in human form, may rage, and fallen angels may do lying wonders, and the denizens of all hell may exert their utmost miraculous endeavors; but, know this, that God is true; and his arm is plentiful, strong, all-sufficient, and altogether reliable. Believing aright, let us go forth in the strength and power of Israel's God, and then we will know of no disaster or defeat; but a prosperous campaign and a speedy victory will be emblazoned upon the standard of truth and the ensign of righteousness.

And now to our good Lord be the praise and honor, through Jesus Christ, henceforth and forever. Amen.

MORRIS TRIMBLE SHORT.

THE SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST.

Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men who receive me and repent; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him; neither in this world; neither in the world to come.—Matt. 12: 26, 27, I. T.

Mark records it:—

But he answered them and said, Verily I say unto you, All sins which men have committed, when they repent, shall be forgiven them; for I came to preach repentance unto the sons of men. And plasphemies, wherewith soever they blaspheme, shall be forgiven them that come unto me, and do the works which they see me do. But there is a sin which shall not be forgiven. He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness; but is in danger of being cut down out of the world. And they shall inherit eternal damnation. And this he said unto them because they said, He hath an unclean spirit.—Mark 3: 22-25, I. T.

Blasphemy is defined in "The American Educator": Etymologically, it denotes speaking so as to strike or hurt; the using to a person's face reproachful or insulting expressions."

As there are means prepared by which man can obtain pardon for all "manner of sin and blasphemy," except "the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost," it becomes quite important to know what is considered blasphemy against the Holy Ghost." "But whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him," shows clearly that speaking "against the Holy Ghost" is blasphemy, and "unpardonable;" but whether that is the only was by which an unpardonable sin can be committed, is a question. We cannot condemn a person for "blasphemy," as it is defined, till he had spoken "against the Holy Ghost;" but God looks at the heart, and judges man according to the thoughts and intents thereof; and it is not necessary for the overt act to be committed, to bring the individual under condemnation. And as the acts of man speak for his nature or disposition, and many times louder than his words, let us see if we are not justified in coming to the conclusion that many "blaspheme against the Holy Ghost," and thus commit unpardonable sins, that never deny its operations.

For he hath made it impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to be renewed again to repentance; seeing they crucify unto themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.—Heb. 6: 4-6, I. T.

We are not informed in these verses to what extent we must "fall away" to reach the condition that makes it impossible "to be renewed again to repentance," neither are we told that this impossibility will remain "in the world to come." But by turning to the Doctrine and Covenants we find,—

And now, behold, I speak unto the church. Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come.—42: 5.

This applies only to those who "were once enlightened" and have fallen "away," to the extent that they become murderers. This crime, then, must be included in the sin of "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost."

For if ye sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment.—Heb. 10: 26, 27.

The same thought is presented in this verse, that if we go on in wilful rebellion to God, by committing sins that we know is forbidden, we will reach a condition when these sins will not "be forgiven in the world to come." Be as though no "sacrifice for sins" had been made for us. Can this condition be reached without "speaking against the Holy Ghost" or committing murder? Let us turn again to the Doctrine and Covenants:—

Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffer themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the Devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: These are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power.—76:4.

The particular thought we desire to emphasize in the above quotation is, the "sons of perdition" have "no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come;" and they are "the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power." These have known the power of God and have "suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome." The particular crimes that all had committed, when they were "overcome" are not stated. But if we can learn what crimes or sins, when committed, places man in the condition that the second death shall have power over him, we shall know what will make a "son of perdition" out of us, when "overcome" to the extent that we commit them.

And verily I say unto you, as I have said before, He that looketh on a woman to lust after her, or if any shall commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith and shall fear; wherefore, I, the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whoremonger, and the sorcerers, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Verily I say, that they shall not have part in the first resurrection.—D. C. 63: 5.

From the above we learn of a large class who were "overcome" in different ways, and they all are subject to the "second death;" and as we have already learned, that none are but the "sons of perdition," and for them there is "no forgiveness," we are forced to the conclusion that "the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost" has a wider meaning than is sometimes supposed. This is in harmony with Revelation 20: 13–15:—

And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

From this we learn that one class who are raised at the last resurrection will have their names "written in the book of life," and they will be rewarded "according to their works;" but the other class, who are the "sons of perdition," and subject to the "second death," are "cast into the lake of fire."

The Savior throws additional light on the subject, in the following parable:—

When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then he shall sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left. And he shall sit upon his throne, and the twelve apostles with him. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee; or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in; or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the king shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not. Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal.—Matt. 25: 32–47, I. T.

The time referred to by this parable was after the "Son of Man" had "come in his glory," and when "all nations" should be gathered before him. This is after the "thousand years' reign," for only a portion of the human family will be resurrected at the coming of Christ. John saw the same event and discribed it thus:—

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which was the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Rev. 20: 12.

Those who were on the "right hand," which were represented as a shepherd's sheep, were rewarded, not for having believed in Christ and obeyed the gospel, but for giving to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward.—Matt. 10: 42.

And for similar acts of kindness. The other class did not even have this to their credit.

Those who enjoy the glories of the "sun," or the "moon," are resurrected at the beginning of the millennial reign, as is seen by the following:—

And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them.—D. C. 45: 10.

While the heathen will have "part in the first resurrection," his condition is only "tolerable," which by no means describes the celestial glory.

And again, we saw the terrestial world, and, behold, and lo; these are they who are of the terrestrial, whose glory differs from that of the church of the Firstborn. . . . Behold, these are they who died without law; and also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them. . . . These are they who are honorable men of the earth.—D. C. 76: 6.

This shows that "the heathen," "they who died without law," which have "a part in the first resurrection," are in the "terrestrial glory," which shows that the "terrestrial glory" and those of the "celestial glory" will be resurrected at the coming of Christ; and those who come forth in the second resurrection will be in the "telestial glory," or else must inherit "a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory."

As those of the celestial and terrestrial orders were raised at Christ's coming, and were with him during the thousand years' reign; and there are only two more classes of human beings—those who are of the telestial order and the sons of perdition—and all are to come forth in the second resurrection, that did not have part in the first, we conclude that those represented on the right and left hand of our Savior, "as a shepherd divides his sheep from his goats," came forth in the second resurrection. The ones on the "left hand" had been "overcome" after having received the light, and the reason why no good acts stood to their credit is given in the following:—

When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it.—Ezekiel 33: 13.

Let us so live that we will not be "overcome." W. E. PEAK.

AUSTRALIA'S ENSIGN.

In 1899 a small mission paper was started in Australia, run mainly by advertisements. By this means our work was brought prominently before many people who up to that time had been in utter ignorance of it. Though small, the influence of the paper was decidedly good; but after sailing along splendidly for eight months it has been shipwrecked—stranded on the advertisement sandbank. But "Nil Desperandum" is the motto of Australians. We have our hearts set upon launching a larger craft, but we want to have a propelling power sufficiently strong to keep it clear of that dangerous shoal — advertisement. The only power by which it could be propelled, of which we have any knowledge at present, is that which would come from five hundred subscribers at seventy-five cents each per year. Now, we Australians (Saints) are not numerous enough to furnish the necessary driving power. We believe that the "stranded Ensign" was propelled by "one hundred and thirty subscriber power" only. No wonder that she went aground! If we could get about five hundred of the American Saints to help us with "one subscriber power" each, we could publish a sheet about the size of Zion's Ensign, each month, and for each subscriber we could distribute one copy free to outsiders.

Three good things would be accomplished if the American Saints can only see their way clear to favor us in this matter: First, we would be able to point to a respectable sheet free of advertisements; second, those who subscribed would be brought more in touch with the work in Australia; third, besides having a copy for themselves, each subscriber would be putting a copy of a paper, filled with our doctrine, into the hands of some one whom we cannot at present reach in that way. Remember, Saints, we have only three missionaries here, in an area of 3,000,000 square miles. A real, live paper would take the place of one or two others, and would be invaluable in getting our work more prominently before the people. We say to those who can, "Do help us." The price is only sixty cents for the paper, and fifteen for mailing. We would like to make a start with this work early in the coming year, 1901, so if, on reading this, you make up your mind to help us, do not delay, but send us your name and address, now. Do not send any money; simply your name and address, written plainly, and when we have the required number of subscribers we will notify you through the Herald to send along the cash. We do not wish money sent just now, for the reason that if the required number of subscribers are not forthcoming we could not publish the paper, and to send back the money would cause needless expense. We trust that we shall have a hearty response from those who are able to help us. Write now, and address your communications to Elder Walter J. Haworth, Martin Dale, Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia.

A MISTAKE.

In Myths of the New World, Herald for June 27, 1900, page 417, first column, three lines from bottom, it reads: "The second period was the end of the Christian era in Peru." It should read, The second period commenced at the end of the Christian era in Peru. Respectfully,

WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

PINGREE, Mich., June 26.

Editors Herald:—It is a long time since you heard from this part of the Father's vineyard. The few Saints here, four in number, are trying to live at their best.

I had the pleasure of enjoying the late conference at Coldwater. It was grand; something long to be remembered by one who never had the privilege of attending one before. It was a peaceful, happy gathering. How pleasant to meet with those we know and to become acquainted with many more kind and noble Saints.

We stopped with Bro. and Sr. Edward Whaley. Their kind hospitality will never be forgotten by us.

I am one of the isolated ones and since returning to my little home, feel more isolated than ever. Am eleven miles from all who love or care for me; no Saint nearer than three miles. The days are very sad and lonely. How thankful I would be for words of cheer and comfort from all with whom I've ever corresponded. Letters addressed to Pingree, Livingston county, will always reach me. Such letters would help to brighten life's pathway, and you know it's our duty to do all we can to lighten the burden for each other.

I know Father's work is progressing all along the line. May we all as Saints live so true to what is required of us that the gathering time may soon come.

Your sister in the faith,

A. J. DALEY.

PERHAM, Minn, June 29.

Editors Herald:—Our reunion is a thing of the past. A joyful time it was to all until Saturday, the 23d, when about half past three o'clock, while arranging to go to the lake to baptize, our worthy and much esteemed Bro. Maynard Ochsner dropped dead from heart failure. It was a heartrending affair.

As it was understood that another should write up the reunion I will say no more about that. Since I left my home, April 23, I have been very busy in the work arranging for my associates in the work. I am glad to say that thus far all have been busy, and have done good good work. I have calls coming from different parts of the state urging some one to come and preach. We shall do all in our power to supply all demands for labor. I wish we had a dozen more missionaries up here. Brn. Omans and Baggerly have labored acceptably in their part of the mission, as have also Brn. Hayer and Stedman. That is right. Onward, my brethren, and God will bless your efforts for good.

There have been twenty-three baptized since General Conference; E. A. Stedman 3, Eli Hayer 2, Alonzo Whiting 3, T. J. Martin 1, F. D. Omans 1, and the writer 13. I am much pleased to see the work broadening, and honest souls obeying it. With kindest wishes to all, I am, Yours in haste,

I. N. ROBERTS.

OPOLIS, Kansas, June 28.

Editors Herald:—The work in this district seems to be onward. Our district conference passed off very pleasantly. It appears that some Saints imagine if a stand is taken against any measure that may be introduced that "war" is declared immediately.

We have some broad, liberal minds down here, and we hope to see the work rise far above personal feelings. Certainly God has to work at a great disadvantage when he uses humanity as an agent to represent his cause. However, we expect to see it triumph some day.

My experience at General Conference was an interesting one, and I am desirous of doing more for the cause this present year than ever before.

I have just returned from a missionary trip out in southern Kansas. The wheat yield is immense. Kansas is wearing her "Sunday clothes" this year.

While at Elk City, I made arrangements for a week's meeting in the Adventist church. The people were curious. They came and looked in the windows and passed on. Some wanted to know if I was related to Brigham Young. Well, the first night my congregation numbered six, so I bade farewell to Elk City pride, and came to more inviting fields. However, if I had had enough means to pay my board for a few days I would have labored hard to secure a congregation. Sleeping out doors does not agree with the physical constitution or that of the United States. Before leaving this section I opened up the work ten miles southwest of Elk City, in Bro. Anderson's neighborhood. They are excellent Saints and always stand up for this latter-day work. It is up hill work for an elder to labor in a place where their own members deny having any relationship with the gospel. How can Saints permit pride to lead them astray? May the Lord help us all to be strong in the faith.

In gospel bonds,

A. M. BAKER.

WRAY, Colo., July 3.

Editors Herald:—I reached my mission field, Colorado, on the night of May 28. Found Bro. J. B. Roush at his home at this place. The branch place of meeting is about nine miles south, in the country. Some of the Saints here live in Wray, and some out by the place of meeting.

The Sunday after my arrival I met with the Saints in sacrament services. A pleasant time was had, and the Spirit was present. The filling of a preaching service appointment at night was prevented by a heavy rain.

The following Sunday I preached at Haigler, Nebraska, at eleven a. m., at Laird, Colorado, at three p. m., and at the Seward schoolhouse at eight p. m. Good sized congregations and marked interest. On the Thursday afternoon following, I went to a meeting of the M. E. Missionary Society, at Wray, where the subject of "Mormonism" was to be discussed; but before the meeting began was told by the pastor that my "presence would be embarrassing." Of course I could do nothing but withdraw. I tried to impress upon his mind that all I wanted was to see that they did not class the Saints here and those I represented with the Utah people. I do not think they threw any new light upon the "Mormon fraud."

The Saints here are living so that they command the respect and confidence of all liberal-minded people. Elder E. D. Bullard is the branch president, and it has been through his labors largely that an organization has been maintained in these parts.

Saturday, June 16, Bro. Bullard and I took an overland trip to the "South Divide," fifty miles away, to see the Saints there. Found them firm in the faith, and the few members there now trying to keep up a Sunday school and prayer meeting. There is a branch organization, but most of its members have gone away, crop failures being the cause of emigration. Bro. Zimmerman and wife kindly threw open their doors for meetings; and we held two services on Sunday, and one Monday night. Splendid interest manifested. Good liberty in presenting the word.

The large Book of Mormon map that the Lamoni Religio presented me on my departure to my mission field has come into good service. I use it to so much advantage in teaching the Saints the Book of Mormon story; and it is so helpful in my efforts on that subject before the world.

Sunday, June 24, Bro. F. E. Bullard, priest, oldest son of the president of the branch, filled my appointment at Haigler, and did real well, on the subject of "the moral man." I on the same date filled my appointments at Laird and Seward schoolhouse. On the 27th ult., I preached the funeral sermon of an infant granddaughter of Elder Bullard.

June 29, Elder Bullard and I started for the home of Bro. and Sr. Lee Korf, about forty-five miles northeast of Wray. Found them anxiously looking for us. Sunday following we held two preaching services and one prayer meeting. Bro. and Sr. Chas. Curtis live near Bro. Korf, and treated us royally, and helped to put out the appointment. Later on we expect to do some more preaching in that vicinity.

We would hold nightly preaching meetings, but it is too busy a season of the year. After harvest we expect to begin. Plenty of schoolhouses that can be obtained and the people seem glad to hear us.

The Eastern Colorado district conference will convene at this place on August 18, on which occasion we expect the tent.

Crop prospects are excellent. A better wheat yield has not been had for years; and a general good feeling and bright outlook exist. While I am not always satisfied with my weak efforts at presenting the word, yet I am determined to persevere. The cause is of the Lord, and why should mortal man shrink from his part. I ask for the prayers of all. Your brother in Christ,

ALMA B. HANSON.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., July 3.

Editors Herald:—In company with Brn. Bullard and Busiel we left Dennisport yesterday morning, where we had been attending the two days' meeting, which was fully as successful as we expected. We had in mind to visit the new location selected by our committee for the holding of our annual New England reunion, which is to commence on August fourth, and we are not sorry for the expense or trouble of our visit either. A lovelier spot for reunion purposes would be hard to imagine; and it must be a chronic grumbler indeed who would fail to appreciate the natural and scenic beauty of the locality. Nothing approaching it in this line has ever been had by us as a district, so far as I know.

Silver Lake, properly so-called, is about seven miles in circumference; three miles long, one mile wide. It is one of the most beautiful bodies of water I have ever seen. Cottages of dwellers nestle here and there around its borders. Its waters are clear as crystal. Its shores are sand or gravel; no swamps, nor malaria. There is on its southwest shore a lovely forest of tall pines, just thick enough to make a fine shade and wind protection, which with its soft, dry carpet of fine pine needles looks out upon a scene that might furnish material for artist brush or pencil. Here should Saints who are privileged to come, with the love of God and good will toward all in their hearts, find one of God's most beautiful "first temples," a place for wholesome recreation, physical help, and social and spiritual delight and profit.

The grove is three minutes' walk, only, from Plymton station on the Plymouth and Boston branch of the N. Y., N. H., and Hartford railroad, and eight miles from Plymouth, not Plympton, as late Herald notice has it. It is twenty-eight miles from Boston, fifty-eight from Providence, via Plymouth by railroad, and about the same from Fall river. Fare from Providence to Plympton by railroad for excursions or mileage book rate is one dollar and sixteen cents, single or regular fare about one fifty. Almost direct connections at Plymouth for Plympton. For those who can make arrangements to ship their camping outfit or such things as they might carry as hand baggage, the expense of getting there from Providence can be made much less by coming via electric line from Providence to Taunton, Brockton, Whitman, and railroad from Whitman; nine miles to Plympton. Connections sure enough to secure early arrival if starting in forenoon. Fare in electric line this way from Providence, seventy-five cents to Plympton. A lovely ride it is! About the same rates from Fall River; something less from Attleboro, etc.

Some dissatisfaction or disappointment has been expressed that a location near to salt water, for bathing privileges, was not secured. There are plenty of bathing privileges here; and if weather is warm the lake will be none too cool, and with no outside or public interference, as we control the grounds. If salt water bathing becomes a necessity such as have wheels can have fine bicycling roads to Duxbury and the Miles Standish monument, three and one half miles away. We have control of boats, sailing privileges, and other advantages which with advantage of being much nearer than Dennisport to center of population and where the majority of Saints live, lessening the cost of attendance, making it more practicable and possible for them to attend if but a portion of the time of reunion, more than offset, in my opinion, all claims to be justly allowed for the absence of salt water privileges. We shall have, besides, new audiences, many strangers to our faith and who have never heard of the angel's message. We have sole control of the grounds and its privileges, and we feel quite sure of the general verdict when Saints behold the choice of location made by our committee. Two or three cottages one third or one half mile from ground or camp across the corner of the lake, and beautifully located, with bed and household arrangements, stove and everything ready for sojourn, neat and clean, have been secured for invalids or those who want to pay for that kind of accommodation. Boat or a fine path to camp ground.

Arrangement for tents have been made and notice given. Commissary arrangements, provision for board at about the rate of three dollars and fifty cents per week, will no doubt be had. Tickets for meals, allowing latitude regarding expenses, etc., are to be provided, we understand, for those who do not wish to board themselves.

Let all make preparation to come and have a good time by helping others to have a good time. Be prepared to put up with little inconveniences for the good to be obtained and the good that may come to others through this effort at spreading the gospel light in new places.

A sad accident occured here about eight o'clock last evening. Sr. Addie Nickerson, twenty years old, a fine girl and good Latter Day Saint, was thrown from her wheel by collision with another rider. We thought she was dying. She was carried, unconscious, to the home of Bro. Leland. Has regained her consciousness this morning, and will without doubt recover, though badly hurt.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, July 2.

Editors Herald:—On the 12th day of June, our worthy missionary, I. P. Baggerly, made his appearance in San Antonio, and in connection with the president of the San Antonio branch, Bro. T. J. Jett, began at once to arrange for a series of meetings, which lasted two weeks, closing last evening. The meetings were well attended, and very instructive and encouraging to us all. Our chief missionary, H. O. Smith, came to our assistance the last week, and rendered valuable assistance. At the conclusion he addressed the Saints, and gave valuable instructions and answered some questions, satisfactorily to all, that have been quite difficult for some of the Saints to understand, and I believe all the Saints feel more encouraged. If the instructions given by Bro. Smith are followed out I believe that they will unify the branch.

One noble lady was baptized Sunday in the San Antonio river, by Bro. Baggerly.

We have postponed our meetings till after the celebration on the 4th of July, as the people here are making great preparation for the celebration. Then it is the intention of Bro. Baggerly to prosecute the work to the fullest extent of his ability. Bro. H. O. Smith leaves here on the 5th for Cook's Point, Texas, to attend the Central Texas district conference which convenes there on the 7th. We feel encouraged in this grand and glorious work.

LAMONT, Iowa, July 6.

Editors Herald:—Came to this place yesterday. Will begin meetings in the tent tonight. Baptized two at Strawberry Point last week, and left others very near the kingdom. While there we had a round with D. H. Bays, and I do not think him a very strong man intellectually. I am certain he is not strong spiritually. The M. E. preacher there sent for Bays as we afterward learned.

A strange incident occurred the evening Bays came. Just as I had finished my discourse, Mr. Bays asked the privilege of asking questions. I answered them; and then by the spirit of discernment was made to know that he was D. H. Bays. I then spoke his name, which surprised him, I assure you. He then asked me how I knew him. I told him I knew it, for all I had never seen him before. I then asked him when he told the truth, when for twenty-seven years he testified that he knew that Joseph Smith was a true prophet and the Book of Mormon of divine origin, or now, when he made the statement that Joseph Smith was an impostor and the Book of Mormon a fraud? Well, his answer was ridiculous. He said he was raised in the church, and that he always heard his folks talk that way, and of course he grew right up with the same lie in his mouth. So you see instead of his being a man he was only a talking machine, a graphophone; he did us no harm I am sure.

The work is onward in this district, and Bro. Hilliard's presence among us for a season, and his timely instructions, did us much good.

I have $65.00 on my subscription list for Graceland college.

In the one hope,

PREPARED READING FOR AUGUST MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCALS.

"Dear baby, again look into my eyes,
While I look into thine;
Together we'll spell life's lesson out;
Thy faith shall still teach mine.

. . . . . .

"All that thy clinging helpless love
Has told me I should be—
All that thy fond hope prophecies—
I'll strive to be for thee."

Daughters of Zion:—Fully impressed with the fact that the present year is to be the crucial period of our existence as a society, I ask the privilege of changing somewhat the usual order of our meetings—of dispensing with all formality and drawing near to each other in a spirit of helpfulness and also of inquiry. The two must go hand in hand. We cannot help each other until we know each other's needs.

Because of this fact, let all questions contained in this reading be honestly and fearlessly answered, not alone by the member who is present, but by the one not present, and especially by those sisters who may never have in the past felt that it was their duty to attend.

Doubtless the question has often been asked you (but have you given it the serious thought which its importance demands), where is laid the corner stone, the foundation of church and state? Jesus Christ being himself the chief corner stone, can that home or that government not founded upon him be in harmony with the laws of God as found in nature and revealed in his word?

(Sisters, discuss this freely before you pass to consider the next.)

Have you ever given close attention to the results of thought and labor bestowed upon prevention of wrong or evil in any of its thousand shapes, as opposed to that bestowed upon cure? Will not each one of you call to mind and state for the benefit of the others, some case illustrating this? Take for instance contagious disease. Do you not remember a time when the governments of countries, cities, or towns, took no measures to prevent the spreading of these? How is it now, and are results better?

If then prevention is the better method of disposing of an evil which endangers society in this case, might it not be better in all cases and with all classes of evil? If this shall be answered in the affirmative, then the question which most naturally follows is: Where shall prevention begin?

If the past be in God's hand, and the future assured to no man or woman, it must follow that the present is the golden opportunity. We may weep bitter tears of regret for the hours past in which we might have been workers with God in making this earth better; but the regret which does not lead to reformation is time wasted and avails in no way to better mankind. Blessed is that mother then whose soul has been early awakened to the grand possibilities of her calling, and who has felt that in comparison with the crown of motherhood, all fame, honor, or glory was insignificant. There have been many such in the past, and we are glad there are many such in our day.

But, sisters, the world is moving. In many directions rapid advancement is being made, but in none more than along the lines of seeking to know and understand child-life, in order that those who have to deal with children, especially teachers, and mothers, may understand the child and understanding him may work intelligently to the accomplishment of the good each seeks to do. And this good? Is it not that by developing all that which is best in the child's nature, the tendencies to that which is not good will be dwarfed or entirely eliminated? Can we then as parents, having the opportunity of meeting and consulting together that we may aid each other, afford to slight this opportunity?

There is yet another class—and it is a large one—who equally with mothers need this training. We refer to the many young girls engaged as teachers in the Sabbath school. In order that the best results may follow their labors, they need to understand child nature. Not only to recognize the fact that the child is possessed of a threefold nature, each throwing out tendrils for its share of the nourishment which is to develop a perfect whole; but that they must understand the kind of nutriment demanded by each, in order that they may be workmen equipped for the task of helping to train an immortal soul for life and immortality.

Some fine natures there are who seem to be instinctively possessed of this rare faculty of discrimination, but by far the larger part of us need all the help obtainable along these lines. Is there a mother who will read this, who sometime in the past has not said, "Who is equal to these things?" Now, perplexed mother, it may be there is more than one other mother who could help you in just this perplexity, and there are points upon which your experience would be invaluable to her and many others as well. Will you not use it for the common good? Surely you have it in your heart to help those needing help. Then why not join with us and bear us company? "As iron strengtheneth iron, so doth a friend the face of a friend." There is one great need of this organization as indeed of all others. If there was in each branch of the church two or three earnest workers, zealous and willing to lend a hand, who would put their shoulders to the wheel, the results of such work would soon be apparent. And now, my sister, you whose conscience is even now asking, "Am I doing all in my power for my children?" will you not, just while you are reading this, resolve that you will be one to help start this work in your locality? Sit right down and write to Sr. Hulmes, President of our Advisory Board, at Independence, Missouri, and she will not only give you all needed instruction, but will welcome you to our ranks with gladness and offer you every help and encouragement in her power.

Upon another and previous occasion we have referred to the parental instinct of dumb animals and birds by means of which they warn and protect their young, teaching them how to discern the approach of danger and how most successfully to avoid and outwit their enemies. This has been recently illustrated in the most touchingly beautiful manner, by Ernest Seton Thompson, author of volume, "Wild Animals I Have Known" in his "Wild Animal Play." And just here let me say this is a book which will enrich the mind of any boy or girl reading it, to an extent that few volumes will; for we are persuaded that having read it they will ever after feel a keen interest in this portion of God's creation and regard these wild things of the wood with a loving wonder mixed almost with awe. But mothers, we have referred to this play which you will find in the July Ladies' Home Journal, because we wish you to note one of these animals especially and the words which Mr. Thompson puts into her mouth as also those of her son. She is not a lordly animal, but simply a common little rabbit whom the author names Molly and who says of herself:—

"I am wee, shy Mollie Cottontail,
The least of the woodland band;
I lived with my child in a willow swamp wild,
In the midst of the sportsman's land.

"I set all my heart on my baby,
For him I was bold in the strife;
I taught him how wits may be stronger than strength,
And loved him far more than my life."

Then her baby, in whose defense she finally lost her life, speaks up:—

"I am Raggy, the cottontail rabbit,
That lived in old Olifant's swamp;

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I'm living there yet, and unless it is wet,
I'm out every night for a romp.

. . . . . .

"I was trained in the college of woodcraft,
The college whose hall is the trees;
I learned how to swim, play back-track, and limb,
And puzzle, and side-track, and freeze.

. . . . . .

"So well did I study at college
That I know how to baffle my foes;
For Molly has taught me to run with my wits
And trust in the sweet-brier rose."

And now finally appears upon the scene the Angel of these and all Wild-things, and after giving various commendations to each one, she says:—

"But you, dear little, true Molly Cottontail!
You sought the success of your son,
You trained him up right, equipped for the fight,
And he entered the fight and has won.

. . . . . .

"Then hail, Mollie Cottontail, Queen of the woods!
Her duty she did as she could;
She died, so must all, but in triumph she died,
So Mollie is Queen of the woods."

It is at least a beautiful conceit of the author and suggestive as well. He had watched this little rabbit as she taught her baby the lessons which saved him from his enemies, had seen the baby rabbit grow up to practice up and many a time by so doing escape dangers and snares set for him.

Why go to the animals—the lower creation of God, for an example? Is not this instinct God-given—direct from the hand which has fashioned all things in wisdom? "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider his ways and be wise," was the injunction of the wise man, and there is ringing through our heart this morning as we write the words spoken by Jesus: "Do not their angels always behold the face of my Father who is in heaven?" Mothers, in His fear then we appeal to you to so be faithful unto your children—the children God from his own family has loaned to you for a season—that their angels who always behold God's face may witness for your faithfulness even as the angel of the wild-wood creatures witnessed for the faithfulness of the shy little rabbit mother.

SULTAN'S CRIMSON SWORD.

Since 1604, when the Persians surrendered Armenia to Turkey, the numerous sultans of Turkey have never sheathed their swords in regard to the former country, save in the flesh of the inhabitants. True, every now and again, when matters are very slow in European politics, some country becomes righteously indignant, and a concert of Europe is called and a note sent to the sultan. Still, the fighting goes on—or, rather, the butchering.—New York Telegram.

CLASS OF LITERATURE FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

of the library is to entertain and instruct. In our Sunday school libraries we are anxious to furnish as much as we can of the best literature, to help the young to acquire a taste for the pure and good. In making our selection it would be well had we more books written by our own members that would teach the doctrine of the church, such as "The Silver Thimbles," "Pattie, or Leaves from a Life," "With the Church in an Early Day," and others.

Many of the so-called Sunday school library books contain stories that are too improbable to be true; and while the imagination must play its part, principles of doctrine should be as nearly true as possible. For our libraries, these books should be carefully read by some one competent to judge before being placed on the library shelves.

IN THE FIELD OF HISTORY

are many books written in child-language, and in most interesting style. We ought to encourage the reading of such books. The series by C. C. Coffin, "Boys of '76," "Boys of '61," "The Drumbeat of the Nation," are excellent examples. Where these are placed in public libraries the worn condition of the books tells its own story. The boys particularly enjoy them. Facts of history are acquired in this way that are of incalculable service. Rose G. Kingsley has written "Children of Westminster Abbey," a story of royal children buried there, furnishing the youth of America with a knowledge of his English cousins.

Not many have the opportunity of spending to become acquainted with men and customs of different nations, but the press has supplemented the lack of time and money by giving us books to read.

YEARS IN TRAVELING

Hezekiah Butterworth, in his "Zigzag Journeys in Europe," in classic lands, in Australia, in the Orient, in the Occident, etc., takes the boy and girl on a tour around the world, and introduces him to men of all nations, acquaints him with the habits and customs of men of other nations, and stores his mind with much useful knowledge.

This is the great age of

and many books have been written for children, which give a good idea of the fundamental principles of scientific knowledge. The young boy and girl will read these books and enjoy them and his time will be well spent in reading them. "History of a Mouthful of Bread" and "Servants of the Stomach," by J. Macé, teach physiological principles.

A very large number of books on plant and animal life can be obtained, and nearly every child is interested in the little pets he sees about his home. "My Little Neighbors" tells him stories of bird life, and will do much towards creating a love for God's creatures and taking away the desire to kill for amusement the little songsters. "Who was the First Architect?" takes him to the life of the bees, their busy career, their ingenuity, etc. "Who were the First Weavers?" acquaints him with the habits of the spider, the spinning of its web, etc. "Prang's Natural History Series," in representatives of each class relates stories of Wading Birds, Cat Family, Birds of Prey, etc.

"Effie and her strange acquaintances," by J. Crofts, gives natural history stories in fairy language.

IN THE FIELD OF GEOLOGY, too, are many facts told in child language. "Madam How and Lady Why," by C. Kingsly, gives in an interesting way knowledge about earthquakes, volcanoes, coral reefs, etc.

"Dame Nature and her three daughters," by X. B. Saintine, are stories told about plants and animals. "Story Mother Nature told her Children" tells how Indian corn grows, tells about tadpoles, etc.

Passing from the realm of science, in different conditions, under various circumstances, are good. "Child Toilers of Boston Streets" gives stories of newsboys, flower girls, rag pickers, and other poor children.

BOOKS PORTRAYING LIFE

"Children of Olden Times" describes dress, games, toys, and employments of English children.

IN THE FIELD OF POETRY

we find the sublime thoughts of many authors. What we can do by means of our libraries to encourage the reading of this department of literature cannot be done without good results. Comparatively few really enjoy sitting down and spending an hour reading poetry, but I believe it is here we find the real music of the soul, and there never was a time that the reading of poetry was more needed than now. The progress of science and the development of ideas pertaining to what is most practical and to material affairs has a tendency to draw us away from poetry; but it is here the soul finds harmony. As William Henry Hudson has said in an address to young men and women, "Make the poets your friends, your counselors, your daily companions. They will be ministers of true delight; they will bring you inspiration, comfort, strength."

First of all in this department we place "Hesperis" by David H. Smith. Then "Afterglow," a collection of poetic gems. "Hypatia," by Charles Kingsley, gives a story of the decay of Greek influence in the fifth century. "Maurine," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and "Katharina," by J. G. Holland, are rich in poetical elequence.

But aside from these different divisions I have mentioned is the very large field of FICTION.

Here is the place where perhaps most care must be taken in making a selection. Among our well-known authors are to be found many good books, not only for the reading matter

www.LatterDayTruth.org

but the manner of expression. While some condemn fiction entirely as a waste of time, I disagree, thinking that here is to be found some of our most interesting and instructive literature.

Hawthorne, in his "Scarlet Letter" and "Marble Faun," has given us the fruit of a master-mind. In each of these he aims at some moral principle. Cooper's "Leather Stocking Tales" open to the boy some things in pioneer life, in plain, pleasing style. Sir Walter Scott, in his "Waverly Novels," gives much history of Highland life. In "Rob Roy" he describes Scotch character, manners, antiquities, and scenery. In "Kenilworth" he describes Queen Elizabeth and her court. In "Ivanhoe" he gives us a story of chivalry. George Ebers, in "An Egyptian Princess" and "The Bride of the Nile," has opened to view many things of the history of Egypt.

These that I have mentioned are for the most part historical fiction, and it may be, as one opposed to fiction reading has said, that a great deal has to be read before getting at the facts the author aims to teach. But in my work with boys and girls I have found that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," and especially is this true in his reading. It is well to give the children books that are nothing but plain facts, but it is better to vary his reading and give him some that is easier. So, I think, good, healthy fiction is the right thing for young people mixed with other literature.

Much of the late popular fiction is good. "Red Rock," by T. N. Page, is a fine story of the reconstruction period in the South. "When Knighthood was in Flower" gives quite vividly an account of the days of Henry VIII. and the demands made of a princess. But for the small child let the fiction be less of romance and more of pure stories, such as the "Dotty Dimple Series," "The Kathie Books," Louisa M. Alcott's books, "Little Men," "Little Women," "Jo's Boys," etc.

Perhaps I have written enough of these different kinds of books, but before closing let me say, by all means, let the Church History be in the library, together with the three books. Also, books of instruction for teachers ought to find their place; "Bible Dictionary," "Normal Methods," etc.

If some good periodicals could be obtained, such as "St. Nicholas" or "Wide Awake," they would form a valuable addition. The monthly numbers could be arranged with a temporary pasteboard cover at practically no expense and after being read be preserved and bound, thus forming a nice volume of good literature.

We cannot overestimate

THE VALUE OF GOOD LITERATURE.

The reading of a good book, the reading of a poem, may change the whole career of a life. The boys and girls who have formed a taste for good reading are the boys and girls upon whom we can depend and to whom we look for our strong men and women in good deeds and efforts to uplift mankind. The boy finds it pleasanter to spend his evenings at home with some master mind in literature than to be seeking the haunts of sin and crime.

While our libraries may be small, yet if good they can do their part in training the young mind to appreciate the pure and the good.

In this paper I have tried by examples to give my idea of what we ought to have in our Sunday school libraries. I hope the work may prosper. MAMIE A. ALLEN, General Librarian.

WIGHT AND OTTESON DEBATE.

ITS ORIGIN.

Several of the Utah elders were in consultation with Bro. Riley, of Council Bluffs. Elder Riley said to them, in substance: "It is strange that you will teach these things in private, but will not meet the elders of the Reorganized Church in public debate." The elders reported to Elder Nephi Otteson, who is reported to have said: "We will meet them in public debate. Would be glad to do so." When in the city, (the matter having been duly reported to Elder J. W. Wight, missionary in charge,) the Utah elders were called upon with the following results:—

"PROPOSITIONS AND RULES FOR A PUBLIC DISCUSSION.

"We, the undersigned, hereby agree to discuss in Council Bluffs, Iowa, beginning June 25, 1900, the following propositions, and to be governed by the following rules:—

"Proposition 1. Is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, having its headquarters at Salt Lake City, and presided over by Lorenzo Snow, in line of true and lawful succession to the church established by Joseph Smith, the Seer, April 6, 1830, and does its president have the approval and receive authority from God to preside?

"Nephi Otteson affirms, J. W. Wight denies.

"Proposition 2. Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, having its headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and presided over by Joseph Smith, the true and lawful successor to the church established by Joseph Smith, the Seer, April 6, 1830, and does its president have the approval and receive authority from God to preside?

"J. W. Wight affirms, Nephi Otteson denies.

"RULES.

"1. There shall be three sessions of two hours duration on each proposition; the affirmative to open and the negative to close their respective propositions. No new evidence to be introduced in the final negatives.

"2. The duration of each session shall consist of four half hour alternate speeches.

"3. Each disputant shall choose a moderator; the third, whose duty it shall be to preside, shall be mutually agreed upon.

"4. Each session shall be opened and closed by prayer, and shall commence at eight p. m.

"5. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants (published prior to June 27, 1844,) shall be the standard of evidence; all other evidence to be subject to rules governing in courts of law.

"6. Hedges Logic shall be accepted as rules to govern in this debate.

"Signed, J. W. WIGHT.
"NEPHI OTTESON."

Elder J. R. Lambert acted as moderator for Elder Wight, Elder D. O. Wadman for Elder Otteson, and Mr. ——— Fields for president moderator. The weather was hot and the attendance not large; but the writer believes that good was accomplished, and it was, under the existing circumstances, a necessary part of the work.

Elder Otteson's strongest qualification for a defense of their faith, as the writer sees it, is his wonderful obliviousness to the weakness of their positions. Nevertheless, there were a few times when he felt the force of our positions as ably set forth by Elder Wight.

On the first proposition, not a word was said about the doctrine and practice of polygamy; but on the second proposition, the doctrine and practice of monogamy was shown to be a necessary characteristic of the Church of God; and from the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the Times and Seasons, published before June 27, 1844, it was proved that a church which does not teach and practice monogamy, cannot be "the true and lawful successor to the church established by Joseph Smith, the Seer, April 6, 1830. When Elder Otteson found that he could no longer remain silent on this point, he attempted to show, by introducing the usual affidavits, that Joseph Smith, the Seer, was responsible for the introduction and practice of polygamy. But when Elder Wight showed that the practice of polygamy is contrary to the law of God and the law of the land, and successfully impeached a number of his witnesses, referring also to the wording of the proposition, Elder Otteson quailed, and failed to rally.

When Elder Otteson attempted to defend the teachings of Brigham Young on the "Adam God theory" and "Blood atonement," he suddenly found himself in a most embarrassing situation; and he "made a mess of it." He attempted to show (or rather, he affirmed) that God is not bound or controlled by the laws of man. But if he desired to meet Elder Wight's argument, he should have attempted to prove that God's people are not bound by what God has said to them, should not be controlled by it, and that God himself is not bound by what he has said! He attempted to show that Joseph Smith taught that Adam is God, in harmony with Young, but it was a miserable failure. After a time he shifted his position, and told us plainly that he did not endorse everything that Brigham Young might have said. But he did not tell us how the president and prophet of the church can teach and practice polygamy; teach that Adam is our "only God;" that some men are so wicked that Christ's blood will not reach their case, but their own blood must be shed in order that they may be saved, and yet at the same time retain his standing before God as the prophet, seer, and revelator to the church, and the true and lawful successor to Joseph Smith, the Seer!

Elder Wight made a strong defense, and treated his opponent with the utmost fairness and magnanimity. I was pleased with his defense and presentation of our claims. Elder Otteson, it was thought, aimed to be fair; but he manifested much personal and bitter feeling against the first and prominent men of the Reorganized Church,—Briggs, Gurley, Marks, Deam, et al. And in his last speech, when there was no opportunity for another reply, he misstated nearly all our leading positions.

Truth is still the most glorious and desirable thing there is in this world; and it never appears to better advantage than when compared with error. I believe the Devil knows this, hence his continued effort to bring the truth into disrepute by getting God's ministers and people to commit folly and wrong.

Yours for the restored gospel.

J. R. LAMBERT.

BOUNDARY LINES OF DISTRICTS, ETC.

It is necessary to have on record a description or statement of the boundaries of every district, for the use of the Presidency and other church officials. District presidents and secretaries are therefore requested to forward statements of the boundaries of their respective districts. They are also requested to give lists of names of branches in their districts. If boundaries have not been closely defined, or not specified at all, kindly so report, and as promptly as possible. If your district contemplates action on boundary lines, please report its present status, also its further action when taken. It is necessary to complete the record as soon as possible. District officials are requested to be prompt, that unnecessary correspondence may be avoided. Please do not omit list of names of branches in your district.

NORTHERN MINNESOTA CONFERENCE AND REUNION.

Some time ago, notice appeared in the papers that there would be a reunion of the Saints of Northern Minnesota, held at Perham, June 16, and promptly at two on that date, conference convened. District president, T. J. Martin, occupied the chair, and Marcus Ericson took the minutes. Ten elders, five priests, two teachers, and the Bishop's agent submitted reports. Elder I. N. Roberts was elected district president, and Elder T. J. Martin secretary, for the coming year. The work of the conference finished, it adjourned to meet at Audubon, this fall.

With the closing of conference began the week of reunion and good feeling. The Minnesota reunions are perhaps not so largely attended as some of the Iowa or Missouri gatherings; still members come from all points of the compass, bringing their testimonies with them. The speaking was by the following elders: Alexander H. Smith, I. N. Roberts, E. A. Stedman, Eli Hayer, J. M. Baggerly, Lon Whiting, H. Way, F. D. Omans, and T. J. Martin. Of those holding the lesser priesthood, William Oaks, Charles Pierce, and P. W. Martin assisted in various ways.

The meetings were orderly and very spiritual throughout the entire series. However, a gloom was cast over the closing sessions owing to the death of Bro. M. Ochsner, which occurred in the street near the tent, as the result of heart failure. It has been said that it is glorious to die on the field of battle fighting for one's country. It is also a blessed thing to die while at work in the Lord's vineyard, full of faith, zeal, and hope, as was the case with Bro. Ochsner. During the reunion eight were baptized, and F. D. Omans was ordained an elder and Leon Gould a priest. PENN MARTIN.

REUNION AND DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Massachusetts reunion. A mistake was made in last notice; it should read nine miles from Plymouth instead of "nine miles from Plympton." The charming spot selected for our reunion this year should bring together a large body of Saints. The lovely pine grove with its healthful perfumes, carpeted with pine needles, should cause prompt orders for tents, lest there be not enough on hand. The cool refreshing breezes from the lake kissing the cheeks of the fair sleepers will make the spot and occasion akin to paradise. Saints coming from Providence, Fall River, New Bedford, and Plainville, not bringing trunks or heavy baggage, can take electric cars and ride through a delightful part of the country to Whitman, via Taunton and Brockton. Take train from Whitman to Plympton. Fares: Providence to Plympton, seventy-three cents; Fall River to Plympton, same price; New Bedford, one dollar. This is for those coming on electric cars. Those traveling on steam cars all through can travel two cents per mile on mileage book. Meal tickets will be issued to those requiring board, on reasonable terms. Dinners twenty-five cents, other meals twenty cents each. Two small cottages, furnished, have been secured for those who are unable to tent. The committee cannot insure a whole room to one person. Send in your orders for tents to Bro. F. P. Busiel, 24 Melvin street, Somerville. Prices of tents for ten days, or during reunion: 10x12, $2 50; 12x15, $3.00. Let all come with a desire to make our reunion a success. Come with hearts prepared for a Father's blessing. Come with joyousness of spirit, and a good supply of patience. Come with a word of cheer for what has been done to make you comfortable. Murmuring and faultfinding strictly forbidden. Saturday, August 4, at 2:30 sharp, the opening hymn will be sung. Address for information H. D. Simpson, Washington street, Malden; R. Bullard, Arlington Heights, Massachusetts.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of the State of Maine and the Province of Nova Scotia:—Notice is hereby given, that Bro. Holmes J. Davison is appointed in charge of the State of Maine as a "field of labor," and Bro. S. O. Foss to a similar charge in Nova Scotia. The Saints will please consult them in regard to labor to be done in the respective localities where they reside, and other matter affecting the work when needed, and also aid them in extending and strengthening the work, so far as they may be able to do. Bro. W. W. Blanchard will labor in each one of these "fields of labor," as wisdom may dictate. It is to be regretted that more laborers could not have been sent into this vast area of country the present season, but they were not at hand to send. Thus the wisest provision that suggests itself has been made. May success crown the efforts of the ministry, and those to whom they minister and aid in the work. Other aid will be sent if practicable.

WM. H. KELLEY,
In Charge of Eastern Mission.

REUNION NOTICES.

ST. LOUIS DISTRICT.

Arrangements have been made for holding our district reunion August 2 to 12 inclusive. We have secured the use of Normandy grove, a beautiful place for holding such meeting. Conditions were such as to render it inadvisable to again secure the use of Ramona Park, but so far as we can now see, Normandy grove is much better adapted in almost every way for our purpose. It is located on the suburban street car line, about eight miles from the city, two miles from Wellston. Fare from the city this year only ten cents.

Tents to be furnished for the entire ten days, put up and taken down, 10x12 $1.10; 12x14 $1.50. Those desiring tents will please write Bro. J. E. Dawson, 2510 Garrison avenue. He will arrange for you a tent. Cots and camp chairs same as last year, twenty-five and ten cents respectively.

Arrangements have also been made to conduct an eating house for the benefit of those coming. The same will be in charge of the reunion committee; fifteen cents per meal, seven for one dollar. This for the accommodation of those who do not wish to do their own cooking. Extra tents will be arranged for those who only want to stay one or two evenings, charging so much per day, probably about fifteen cents per night or less.

We expect two or three speakers from abroad, and it is to be hoped that every Saint in the district who can possibly arrange to come without too much inconvenience, will be present. If there are difficulties in the way that we could consistently remove, write us. Possibly we can help you out. Please advise about the tents soon as possible.

Committee, ARTHUR ALLEN.
J. E. DAWSON.
J. C. HITCHCOCK.

The Clinton reunion will convene at Nine Wonders, one mile and a half southwest of Eldorado Springs, Cedar county, Missouri, on Friday, August 3, and continue ten days. The Saints and friends of the surrounding country are earnestly invited to attend and help make the reunion a spiritual feast indeed. We have the use of the large amphitheater building. The grounds will be prepared and spring and wells cleaned, so good water will be plenty. Bro. A. H. Smith, the patriarch of the church, and his stenographer, have been invited, and are expected to be present. Bro. I. N. White is also expected to be present. Bro. Gunsolley in the interests of Sunday school and Religio, and other good faithful brethren will be present to give good instruction. The Sunday school will have one hour each day from eight to nine, and Friday, the 10th, will be given entirely to Sunday school exercises. All wishing tents should write to John Hardacre, Veve, Missouri, at once, what size, etc. The rent of tents will be fifty cents apiece for the entire ten days. Hay, corn, and pasture will be furnished at reasonable prices; wood and straw at cost of hauling. Bread and meat supplies can be had from Eldorado Springs. So come all who can and enjoy the reunion. Committee: G. W. Beebe, A. J. Oglevie, John Hardacre, Wm. Lowe, C. A. Budd.

Reunion camp meeting of the Nodaway district will be held at Barnard, Missouri, August 4 to 13. Bishop E. L. Kelley, J. Arthur Davis, C. P. Welsh, D. C. White, and others will be the speakers. The grounds are nicely located, just a few rods from town. Plenty of water, hay, wood, and straw. Pasture for horses about five cents each per day. Those wanting to rent tents, report at once to Ed S. Fannon, Bedison, Missouri. Rent of tents: 9x12, $1.25; 12x14, $1.75, freight added. Decatur and Far West Districts invited to join in and make the reunion a grand success. Music in charge of Miss Arletta Byergo and Ed S. Fannon. For further information write Ed S. Fannon, Bedison, Missouri. Committee: William Woodhead, Barnard, Missouri; D. C. White, Lamoni, Iowa.

Spring River district reunion will begin Friday, August 10, in a grove on Cherry creek, about one mile west of Sherwin Junction, and about two miles east of Hallowell, both on the St. Louis and S. F. R. R. The public wagon road runs from both stations past the reunion grounds. Our reunion committee, W. S. Taylor and L. J. McCall, of Sherwin Junction, Kansas, and Jasper Richards, of Pittsburg, Kansas, extend a cordial invitation to the ministry and Saints to come unitedly, and heartily join in the services. Several visitors are expected whose presence and teachings may cheer and strengthen our faith in this grand latter-day work. For further particulars or information, write to any of the committee whose names already appear, or to T. S. Hayton, secretary for Spring River district, lock box 493, Galena, Kansas.

Oklahoma Saints:—At our last annual reunion a committee was appointed to consider and report on the advisability of a coöperative boarding house at our reunion this year. The committee have canvassed, and after reporting, were authorized to arrange for a boarding place, where all Saints who attend can get their meals at the actual cost of preparing them. Such arrangements are now in progress. The plan is about as follows: The committee provide a place, hire a cook, provide provisions, etc. At the close of meeting, the entire expense is summed up, the cost per meal determined, and those boarding pay their proportion according to number of meals taken. An estimate discloses the fact that meals can be prepared at a cost of about seven cents. One among the many commendable features of this plan is, it relieves the sisters of the labor of cooking during the meeting, gives them much needed rest, and leaves them free to devote their minds entirely to the services.

The prospects for the work in Oklahoma were never better than they are now. Why not all the Saints in Oklahoma arrange to attend and renew your strength and zeal in the cause? If you intend coming, drop a card to Bro. G. M. Hiles, Downs, Oklahoma. The committee desires this very much. Please don't omit it. Any information you desire in regard to the boarding tent, write to the above brother, or the writer. Remember the time, August 3 to 13; place, four miles east and two and a half south of Hennessy, Oklahoma. W. S. MACRAE.

The annual reunion of Spring River district will convene August 10 and continue until the 20th. There will be free pasture for all the stock that comes. We are expecting Pres. Joseph Smith and other prominent speakers will be there. Good new tents 10x12 can be furnished for $1.25 apiece. Those wanting tents must write J. M. Richards, Pittsburg, Kansas, Box 446, not later than July 20. Please remember the date.

MARRIED

ANDES—SWENSON.—Bro. Jacob L. Andes and Sr. Minnie J. Swenson were united in marriage at Lebeck, Missouri, June 14, 1900, at the home of the bride's parents. Valuable presents were received. Elder A. T. Roberts officiating.

DIED.

COPELAND.—Near Merced, California, John F. Copeland, aged 51 years, 2 months, and 8 days. He leaves a widow, Sr. Mary E. Copeland, and six children to mourn their loss. He was a kind husband and father. Interment at Burwood, San Joaquin county, California. Funeral services by Rev. Rodda, of Oakdale.

NICKERSON.—Lost at sea, November 26 or 27, 1898, in the vessel called the James B. Race, Daniel J. Nickerson, eldest son of Mr. Daniel H. and Sr. Dora Nickerson, and husband of Sr. Ronena Nickerson, aged 24 years. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel in Dennisport, Massachusetts; sermon by Elder George W. Robley. He leaves a young wife and child to mourn his departure.

Noble boy, the sea has claimed thee,
And the waves rush o'er thy head;
But we hope again to see thee,
When the sea gives up its dead.

CHRISTIANSON.—Near Rolfe, Iowa, June 20, 1900, Bro. James Christianson had just left his house to assist a neighbor to put his team in the barn, which on account of a storm coming on had drove up. After tying the team they were looking out of the door at the storm, when a bolt of lightning struck the barn and ran down the studding by which he was standing. He was born in Denmark, December 27, 1848. He was baptized August 13, 1897; was ordained a priest January 8, 1899. Buried June 22. He leaves an aged companion. Service was held at the grave; sermon by Elder Edmund Ford.

OCHSNER.—June 23, 1900, of heart failure, our worthy brother, Mainard Ochsner, dropped dead at the reunion at Perham, Minnesota, just as we were getting ready to go to the lake for baptizing. He was born January 22, 1843, at Einsiedel, Switzerland; baptized July 27, 1894, by Elder Swen Swenson, at Audubon, Minnesota. Funeral was held on Monday the 26th at Detroit, Minnesota; the sermon by I. N. Roberts, assisted by F. D. Omans. May God comfort the good sister and the four good children.

JACK.—At Hopeville, May 6, 1900, Sr. Jinnie Ellen Evans, the youngest daughter of Bro. and Sr. Cathren Jack, aged 12 years, 2 months, and 20 days. On her way to church she fell down and in an hour and a half she was dead. Elder James McLean preached the funeral sermon. She leaves father and mother, two brothers and four sisters to mourn.

KOEHLER.—George Cleveland Koehler, born July 31, 1899; died June 17, 1900. Buried in Union cemetery, Kansas City, Missouri. Elder Joseph Emmett officiating. He was the child of Bro. Fred and Sr. Ada Koehler, who with their little daughter Grace mourn this brief separation.

CAMPBELL.—Lida, daughter of Herman and Elizabeth Hulse, was born August 11, 1848, in the township of Menlz, Cayuga county, New York. When about twelve years of age, with her parents, she moved to Van Buren county, Michigan, until her marriage to Elder Duncan Campbell, October 5, 1876. She prepared herself for the profession of teacher, at the Michigan State Normal school, located at Ypsilanti, and devoted several years of her life to teaching in the public schools of that State. With her husband she moved to Decatur county, Iowa, in the spring of 1877, and the following April they settled on the home, near Pleasanton, where they have continued up to the present time. To them were born ten children, four of whom survive. She united with the church during the summer of 1876, in the faith of which she continued until her demise in the early morning of July 3, 1900. She leaves her husband, one daughter, and three sons. She was greatly interested in the work of the Sunday school and kindred institutions, and at the time of her death was superintendent of the Saints' Sunday school at Pleasanton. To the extent of her strength and ability and means she was ever ready to help the sick and the needy. Funeral services at the home; sermon by Bishop William Anderson, services in charge of Elder M. M. Turpen. A large gathering of friends attested the esteem in which the deceased was held. Interment beside a number of her children, in the home burial plat.

FRANCE.—At Lamoni, Iowa, on the evening of July 3, 1900, Elder Thomas France suddenly passed from earth to the paradise of God. He had been alone at the house not over ten minutes when he was found dead upon the floor, paralysis of some kind having thus quickly separated the spirit from its tenement. He was born in Atherton, Lancashire, England, January 1, 1832, thus was past 68 years of age. He heard the latter-day message and was baptized September 17, 1853, when past twenty. He married Miss Alice Carter, October 28, 1855, and they came to America in 1859, but did not go to Utah. They lived in Kewanee, Illinois, twenty-six years, then came to Lamoni, in 1886. Of the eight children born, there yet live William and Charles, and Srs. Jane E. Stanley, Margaret Baguley, and Eliza Chase,—two sons and three daughters. The blow to Sr. France and family is a very severe one, coming so entirely unexpected. When last seen he was reading his paper and apparently as well as usual. He united with the Reorganized Church April 27, 1867, under the hands of Elder J. S. Patterson, and was ordained an elder in 1868. His life all through was one of quietness and peace, observing the laws of God and man with a full heart and having no trouble with any one. He was constant in attendance at services, and at nearly all prayer meetings he took part, often speaking of the brightness and glory that he knew existed in the eternal world where God and the just dwell. Elder H. A. Stebbins preached the sermon after reading the twenty-sixth Psalm as appropriate to the memory of Bro. France. Elder J. A. Gunsolley offered the prayer, and Bishop E. L. Kelley pronounced the benediction. Elder Gunsolley had charge of the services at the house and the grave.

DONEY.—Sr. Marcella A. Doney, daughter of Sr. M. T. Taylor, of Poplar Bluffs, Missouri, also a sister in the flesh to Sr. M. S. Frick, died at Blendville, Missouri, June 18, 1900. She was 22 years old January 16, 1900. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn their loss. The age of the children (boys) is two years, and five days respectively. She called for the elders the day before she died, and was administered to according to James 5:14. While the Lord did not heal her body, we have the assurance that he forgave her sins, and will raise her up at the last day. Bro. E. A. Davis preached the funeral discourse.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

EDUCATIONAL ADVANCE OF NINETEENTH CENTURY.

BY A. S. DRAPER, PRESIDENT OF UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS.

The nineteenth century can hardly fail to be known as the century of educational advancement, and certainly of educational diffusion. At its beginning there was no such thing as a national system of schools for the masses anywhere in the world. At its close there is not a people in the family of nations, no matter what the form of government, which is not moving towards such an ideal. The American people broke out the roads and led the way. They took one step at a time. Experiences pointed out the importance of succeeding steps, and they were taken, regardless of cost, with unflagging courage and undoubting confidence. The result is that we have a free elementary school within the reach of every home, a free secondary school in every town, a free college and university but a few miles away.

It is a peculiar satisfaction, too, to know that the rich as well as the poor hold these theories and have these desires. Too often the rich are misjudged. Much of the cost of the common schools falls upon them, and too commonly their children do not attend them. Yet their complaint at the cost of an elaborate education at the common cost has never been serious and has now practically disappeared. And the gifts of men and women of liberal means to education are coming to be simply stupendous and munificent. In the year 1898–'99 Harvard University received more than $1,500,000 in private gifts. In the last decade Columbia University has received $7,000,000, and the University of Chicago $11,000,000 in benefactions. A trustworthy estimate of the amount given to education in the last year places the sum beyond $70,000,000.

And no less noteworthy than the multiplication of schools and the evolution of school systems in the century has been the widening of the range of study and the changes in theories of intellectual development and in processes of instruction. Every phase of intellectual activity is being stimulated, but the application of learning to life is being made imperative. Facilities for the most exhaustive research are being provided at public cost. To the three original learned professions a dozen more have been added, and men and women are being trained for them at a minimum cost. Every son and daughter of the state is urged to come and take the best there is. The individual student has been set upon a pedestal. Everything between him and natural law has been removed. He has been enjoined to elect his course, and he has been taught to do, not by lecturing or by discussion, but by demonstration.

What has produced such an accumulation of knowledge of the earth and its people, and such changes in economic conditions in the last one hundred years? Is it a mere disposition to roam, only a spirit that dares? Not at all. It is the spirit of science in the breasts of heroes. The great expeditions which have added to the world's knowledge of the world in recent years have been organized and supported not by adventurers, but by men yearning for more knowledge, and they have been carried out by men trained in scientific methods, who have well realized the dangers and were ready to go to the death in the search for scientific truth. Franklin, Hayes, Kane, Livingston, Stanley, De Long, Greeley, Nansen, Andre, Peary, are names that have a place in the list of the world's scholars, as well as the world's heroes. They have carried the telescope, and the sextant, and the microscope, and the theodolite, and the test tube, and the balance, and a knowledge of how to use them, into the jungle and over the desert, and through the Arctic seas, and over the everlasting snows, to gather our precious knowledge of the physical earth.

The recent and wonderful advances in medical and surgical knowledge have not been made by men in the active practice of a great profession so much as by tireless investigators in chemical and biological laboratories.

We never blundered into what we know of electricity. Scholars searched it out, and devised the instrumentalities for its use. It was found by scientific eyes, and it has materially changed our manner of life through hands guided by scientific instinct. The evolution of machinery has not been in the shops so much as in the schools. The technical schools are not only making better homes and higher living for us, but they are inciting the industries, fixing the channels of commerce, equipping armies and navies, and helping the intelligent powers of the world to unquestioned leadership upon the earth.

The multiplication of schools and the evolution of natural systems of schools is not a mere circumstance and without known cause. This growth is the product of a philosophy of education which has had its development, if not its birth, in the century whose long shadows now encompass us. The century was four years old when Pestalozzi established the school through which the doctrine of his life, that nothing should be allowed to come between nature and the individual child and that education is the inherent right of all, was carried to a demonstration and given to the world. There he successfully illustrated one of the aphorisms of Comenius, that "we learn to do by doing." And there he started a discussion which resulted in a new philosophy of education and a new science of teaching, the logical sequence of which was the laboratory system of instruction, elective courses, schools of all grades, for all, and at the cost of all, and which in the end was to engage the attention of the millions and produce such educational awakening as the world had never seen before.

There are few of us who believe that any system of philosophic reasoning can take the place of our Christian religion, and there are few of us who believe that those elements of a religious belief which are supernatural can long satisfy the souls of an intellectual race of men. Philosophy is intellectual, and religion is spiritual; philosophy is reasoning, and religion is feeling; philosophy is the deduction of mental processes, and religion is founded upon faith. I surmise there are few of us who do not feel that this wondrous creation in which we live is the work of a creator outside of and above all, and that our spirits, if ripe for that life, will in his time enter into a new and higher relation with almighty power. We feel all this; it is not repelled by the known facts of creation and therefore our intelligence supports our feelings, and we accept it and act upon it. But we cannot and we ought not to forget that from the beginning of history one system of religion has supplanted another, and that while our own system has stood the test for centuries it has not been without modifications. Every system has appealed in greater or less degree to the superstitious tendencies of the ignorant. As intelligence has advanced the dread elements have been put away. In all ages the religion of a people has reflected their intelligence quite as much as their feeling. Dogma cannot long successfully oppose the reason of a people. Nature cannot supplant the God of nature; on the contrary, our realizations of God grow sweeter and stronger, and more satisfying as we know more of his works, and we are bound to repel a conception of God which is opposed to ascertained truth concerning his works.

If we seek the great cause of these many changes we have little difficulty in finding it. It is in the marvelous evolution of political, moral, and intellectual independence of the people which has taken place in this century. The foundation for this were not laid in this century. The bitterest struggles came before its dawn. The glorious people who dared and died in the making of them builded better than they knew, and placed all posterity under a debt to them which can never be discharged save in tender and appreciative recollection and in an heroic amplification of the results which their heroism made possible. But the results have been gathered in this century. Those results have been great, and they have poured directly out of the scientific investigations and the philosophic thinking of people who are free in all save in the right to violate the laws of being and the power to arrest the progress of their fellow-men.

Reason about it as we will, differ about it as we may, the fact has come to be clearly revealed that there is no place on the globe where a people can rest unless they are prepared to do as much to develop the resources of the earth and as much to advance intellectual and moral freedom as some other people are able and ready to do. —Chicago Tribune.

WHAT CAUSES EYE TROUBLES.

The changes which come to the eye as a result of age are beyond the power of the individual to remedy. It is true that the time for the wearing of glasses may be hastened by abuse of the eyes, but with all possible care that one may take, the eye that hitherto has been normal will need shortly before, or it may be shortly after, the age of forty-five the aid of glasses. So universal is this that an oculist, in his examinations of the refraction of the eye of his patient, can determine accurately the number of his years. The responsibility of much eye trouble, however, can be brought directly home to the individual. It is due to the reckless expenditure of the eyesight. The service of the eyes is demanded in any and every light. The eyes are most tried by reading fine print or doing the fine stitches of sewing or embroidery. If the print is on glossy paper whose smooth surface reflects, mirrorlike, the light, the effect is bad upon the eyes. If the embroidery is to be done on satin, or upon canvas, with its bewildering maze of meshes, the strain is soon shown in the redness and the weariness of the eyes. Women's eyes suffer greatly from the tax of veils. It only shows the great adaptability which the eyes share with every other part of the body, that the veils, with their intricate meshes and numerous dots of embroidery and chenille, do not occasion more trouble with the eyes than they do. The first thing to do in selecting a veil, if one has mercy upon the eyes, is to test its effect upon the sight, to see that the weave is not confusing, and that the dots do not come athwart the eyes. —Harper's Bazar.

WAR.

As we read of these great nations,
And their banners waving high
Above the homes of freedom,
We ask the question why.

Why are there tears and sadness
In so many homes tonight,
Instead of joy and gladness?
Can we say that this is right?

Is it right to rob the fireside
Of the husband, father, son,—
And plunge the nations deep in grief
For—"A victory won?"

—Our Dumb Animals.

THE MOTHER'S PRAYER.

Starting forth on life's rough way,
Father, guide them;
O, we know not what of harm
May betide them!
'Neath the shadow of thy wing,
Father, hide them;
Waking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to thee,
Do thou hear them;
From the stains of sin and shame
Do thou clear them;
'Mid the quicksands and the rocks
Do thou steer them;
In temptation, trial, grief,
Be thou near them.

Unto thee we give them up;
Lord, receive them.
In the world we know must be Much to grieve them—
Many striving oft and strong
To deceive them;
Trustful, in thy hands of love
We must leave them.

COLORADO VS. SWITZERLAND.

A COMPARISON.

Switzerland, "The playground of Europe," is visited annually by over 15,000 American tourists and invalids. Why?

While the Alps have isolated peaks such as Mont Blanc (15,781 feet), and the Matterhorn (14,836 feet), the mean elevation of the highest Alpine chain is from only 8,000 to 9,000 feet. Colorado possesses more than 120 peaks over 13,500 feet in altitude, of which no fewer than thirty-five peaks range from 14,000 feet upward. In the whole of Europe, there are not over twelve mountain peaks of note.

The highest village in Europe is Avers Platz in Switzerland (7,500 feet); the highest inhabited point in Europe is the Hospice of St. Bernard in Switzerland (8,200 feet). In Colorado the mining town of Leadville, with 15,000 inhabitants, is 10,200 feet above sea level; other mining camps are still higher and some gold and silver mines are worked at an altitude of over 12,000 feet.

The highest wagon road in Europe is said to be the Stelvio Road in Switzerland (9,170 feet). In Colorado the railroads cross the crest of the continent at Fremont Pass (11,328 feet), Marshall Pass (10,852 feet) and Tennessee Pass (10,433). Switzerland does not possess, even in the famous St. Gothard line, any railroad engineering surpassing, if equaling, these. There are wagon roads over numerous passes in Colorado ranging from 12,000 feet upwards, the highest being Mosquito Pass (13,700 feet).

In Switzerland the cog-railroad from Vitznau to the summit of the Rigi Kulm (5,900 feet) has a length of four and a half miles, in which the ascent is 4,072 feet. In Colorado the cog-railroad from Manitou to the summit of Pike's Peak (14,147 feet) has a length of eight and three-quarter miles, in which the ascent is 8,100 feet, or an average of 846 feet per mile, the maximum grade being 1,320 feet.

One class of Switzerland's finest scenery is along the Via Mala, the Schyn Pass and Urnerloch. In Colorado, the Canon of the Arkansas with the Royal Gorge, the Black Canon of the Gunnison, the Canon of the Rio de las Animas, the Canon of the Grand River, and others, are all much longer, quite as grand as and more varied in character than the best passes in Switzerland. The walls of the Canons of the Grand River, the Gunnison and the Arkansas rise to a sheer height of more than 2,000 feet.

As Colorado can be reached by at least one railroad—the Burlington—in one night from either Chicago or St. Louis, it is hard to understand why more Americans do not travel West instead of East in search of health and pleasure.

LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 18, 1900.

FROM THE EDITOR'S NOTES.

From London to Niagara Falls, Canada side, is but a step, in railway talk, and may be taken at this time of the year between four p. m. and twilight, if one does not miss the train.

Bro. R. C. Evans and the editor left London for Niagara Falls, at 4:40 p. m., and were comfortably housed at the home of Sr. Mary Hillers by dusk. Sr. Emma Warnock, of Cleveland, one of the sweet singers of Israel, accompanied us, en route to Toronto, her former home. She had been at the St. Thomas conference, and aided in the song service during the session.

The Saints at the Falls, under the care of Bro. Wm. Place, had built a house of worship; and having made all necessary arrangements, were ready for the dedication services, which had been set for June 24, D. V. We arrived in time. So, on the morning of the 24th we assembled for prayer at 8:30, and for nearly two hours engaged in social worship and testimony. It was a pleasant season.

The house is excellently located on Lawrence avenue, on the line of street railway between the Bridge street, the point of departure, and Lundy's Lane, the scene of one of the battles of 1812, between the British and American forces, in which the latter were defeated. It is 26x40 feet, of stone basement and brick upper room, ceiling finished on the rafters, leaving the truss spans which support the roof exposed to the view of audience. It is well lighted with stained glass windows, sashes moving easily, giving a chance for ventilation. A raised platform affords room for the desk and organ and chairs for singers. It is wainscoted with Georgia pine and is finished in oil. The reading stand is a beautiful piece of work, done by a brother cabinet maker, Bro. John Wyatt, and donated to the work. It is made of walnut, finely inlaid with other woods, showing skill of work and beauty of design.

The cost of the church is approximately given at $1,400.00. Much of the work was done by volunteer labor, Bro. J. L. Mortimore doing the stone work, the bricklaying, and plastering; Bro. Biggar the carpenter work, with the help of other brethren doing what they could. The sisters, also, did what they could, helping to finish, paint, and such other work as they could do.

At eleven o'clock, Bro. R. C. Evans opened the work by an excellent sermon, which was listened to by a fair audience and appreciated. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it," was the topic for the discourse.

At 2:30 p. m., the dedicatory services were held, Elder R. C. Evans in charge. Opening prayer was by Bro. J. L. Mortimore, the sermon by the editor, the dedicatory prayer by Bro. R. C. Evans; all of which was satisfactory to the Saints gathered from all the country side round.

Services were held in the evening at which the editor was again the speaker.

In the services of the day, solos were given by Sisters Minnie Faulds, of Toronto, and Emma Warnock, of Cleveland, Ohio. The song service was in charge of Sr. Augusta Place, and was very good.

Services were continued each evening of the week following dedication, closing Friday evening, the editor and Elder R. C. Evans alternating. Audiences good but not large. Better is a few who have an interest, than many who are neither interested nor respectful.

The Niagara Falls Saints, albeit there are some on both sides of the Niagara river, seemed to have vied one with the other, doing what they could.

Bro. Edgar Compton, of St. Thomas, was left to continue the services at Niagara Falls, so long as the interest should continue. An able minister though young in the work.

The hospitality of the Saints was kindly extended to all who came, and much good cheer coupled with great cordiality marked the stay of the Saints with the Niagara Falls branch.

A ride down the electric tramway, Canada side, past the spot where General Brock of the British army fought the Americans, and fell, now marked by a stone and a monument erected on the heights near the earthen forts in which the British were intrenched, to the little hamlet of Clifton; and thence down the river and over the lake to Toronto, was a very enjoyable experience of two or three hours for the editor; though his traveling companion Bro. R. C. Evans, a martyr to sea sickness, was obliged to sit hugging the lee side of the cabin with closed eyes to avoid seeing to the dancing, foam crested waves, and feeling the rise and fall and roll of the boat as she plowed the tossing waters of the lake. The editor, apparently impervious to the malady which distresses many who "go down to the sea" in ships, was comfortable and enjoyed the motion of the boat, though it was not nearly so rough as it must be at times. The wind was strong, and waves rolled quite high, yet the steady throb of the imprisoned and escaping steam and the passionate beat of the wheels on the water sent the Chippewa along at a great rate toward the city on the hither side of the lake.

At Toronto, Sunday, July 1, was spent by the editor and Bro. R. C. Evans with the Saints of the branch in their hall, on Bathurst street, off Spadina avenue, in prayer and sacramental services at 8:30 a. m.; preaching at 11:00; Sunday school at 3:00 p. m.; and preaching at 7:00, the editor being the preacher at both services; and a preaching service in a tent nicely located near Spadina avenue, at 8:15, in which Bro. A. C. Barmore made an excellent effort, which was well attended. Bro. Barmore was to continue during the month, each evening, in a missionary effort.

Monday, July 2, was the national holiday, Dominion Day. July 1 is really the day, but that date falling on Sunday this year, the celebration of the day was set for Monday. A visit to Munro Park, one of the city's pleasure places, on the eastern side of the city and on the shores of the lake at the end of the car line, filled in the time for many.

On Tuesday evening, the editor spoke in the chapel of the Saints at the Humber Bay branch, where he met a faithful little band, all eager for the word. It was a warm day and evening, and it was an evident relief when the amen was said.

On Wednesday, the Fourth, the editor left the city of Toronto, for the "Gara" branch, where a two-days' meeting had been arranged for. Here the editor reached the kindly welcome from the household of Bro. Alexander Clark, to which he was allied in marriage, and whose wife's sister, Miss Mabel, accompanied him from Toronto to her home.

Bro. R. C. Evans followed on Saturday morning, and at three p. m., the meetings began with quite an assemblage of Saints from all over the country side, Masonville, Egremont, Arthur, Cedar Valley, Proton, Fergus, and other places far and near, greeted the preachers with right good will. The first session was occupied by the editor, Bro. Richard Howlett, and Bro. R. C. Evans, in personal reminiscences and brief exhortations.

But Sunday, the 8th, was the day. Services began at eight o'clock in the church, and until 10:30 there was constant prayer, testimony, and patient and fervent waiting on the Lord. At eleven o'clock the crowd had increased to such an extent that the shed and the improvised canvas shelter were both occupied. The editor was the speaker, with fair liberty. After service the assembly was served with refreshments, the chief of which were plain sandwiches, easy to serve, good to eat, and sufficient. The Saints were there for waiting on the Lord; not to feast the body; hence provided against hunger only, not to pander to the appetite. It was a valuable lesson, and should be heeded.

At two p. m. Bro. Richard Howlett gave a forty minutes' excellent discourse, and at three the editor talked upon the salvation which is by Jesus Christ, to a large audience. At the evening service Bro. R. C. presented strong reasons to sustain the idea of preëxistence, consciousness after death, and the triumphs of faith. The day was cool, showery, and at night almost cold; yet the services were largely attended. One pleasant feature was the presence of Sr. Hathaway, of Arthur, with her two little children, Ira, aged five, and Hazel, aged about seven. These have excellent voices, and sing almost marvelously good. At each of the services these little missionary singers sang sweet songs of exhortation and cheer. Little Ira, though only five, and not large, made the crowd hear him.

This closed the day, a busy, enjoyable day, in which the Lord did bless his people. The branch is in good order, and Bro. John Taylor has reason to feel well over the success of his two days' meeting.

GROWTH.

In the physical life, substantial growth depends first upon the assimilation of necessary food element, and second upon the muscular action necessary to make the growth a compact, useful one. It needs but little observation to determine the fact that assimilation of food of itself is not sufficient for a healthy growth. The laborer and idler eat the same food; and while the muscles of the former become hard and vigorous, those of the latter are weak and capable of but little physical endurance. Inaction favors weakness and decay. Activity begets strength.

What is true in this respect of the physical portion of our natures is also true of the mental and spiritual. An idle mind is an unproductive one, and liable to all the disease and decay naturally resultant from stagnation.

No doubt all agree that the gospel contains sufficient element for our complete spiritual and mental development; but we think many make the mistake of supposing that the assimilation of this spiritual food is sufficient. Not being awake to the necessity of activity, the growth accomplished is not so vigorous as it should be. No wonder that God has so repeatedly placed his disapproval upon idleness. As individuals, as a body, we shall only be able to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth" in proportion to the activity we manifest in right directions. It is not enough that we have identified ourselves with the church, and listen with pleasure to good sermons. We must work; and when we do so with singleness of heart for the truth's sake, we shall find that a great many unpleasant things, such as discontent, fault-finding, backbiting, etc., that seemed so natural to us when idle, will entirely disappear when we become busy laborers. Busy people have no time for such things.

The comforting thought in connection with all this is that there is no lack of opportunity for labor in the vineyard of the Master.

> Behold the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts."—D. C. 10:2.

All may not labor in the same way, but there is all the work that all can do, and no room for idlers.

We are glad to note what we believe to be increased activity on the part of the Saints, and trust and pray that it may continue, until every Latter Day Saint is an energetic worker in a sphere agreeable to the will of our heavenly Father. Then, indeed, will the cause we love flourish, and the redemption of Zion become an accomplished fact. Let us grow.

BISHOP STEVENS AND HIS CIGAR.

In reading the Iowa State Register not long ago, the following paragraph struck us as quite nicely representing the attitude of some of the ministry of other churches, and we give it to the readers of the HERALD in the hope it might serve as a negative lesson:—

> At one of the sessions of the general council of the Episcopal Church, held in Baltimore a few days ago, the question of the use of tobacco by the clergy was brought up and was being generally discussed. Bishop Stevens, of Philadelphia, came in when the discussion was well advanced, and, as soon as he could get the floor, said:—
> "I smoke, and I shall continue to smoke. I don't believe the use of tobacco is as bad as it has been described; I believe it is all a piece of will worship. God has never said anywhere that we shall not be ministers of his gospel if we do use it. God provided for every need in nature, and I thank God for my cigar."
> The council then dropped the tobacco question.

To Bishop Stevens the Lord has not spoken as he has to us. We cannot conscientiously thank God for a cigar, for Latter Day Saints who use the weed must do so feeling that the disfavor of the Master is upon them, for the Doctrine and Covenants speaks in no uncertain way concerning the use of tobacco, and a minister cannot in any way use tobacco to satisfy the cravings of an appetite or please a taste without coming under the disfavor of our Divine Ruler.

> Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly and is not good for man.—D. C. 86:1.

In a revelation given April 11, 1887, and directed to the "elders of the church," the Lord again says:—

> Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form.—D. C. 119:3.

Thus plainly has he spoken, and we are glad to see a constantly growing tendency to comply with what the Lord has here advised or commanded. For a man to persist in the use of what has thus been prohibited or advised against by that great Being who is so zealous for the welfare of his church and people, is selfish. The church is every year drawing the lines tighter on the user of tobacco. The quorums of the church are all falling into line and refusing to sustain in membership one who will not quit the use of the filthy weed. And it is well that they are.

The Bishop's declaration that he would continue to smoke in spite of the opposition among the members of his church to the use of tobacco comes far from being in the spirit of the words of Paul when writing to the Corinthian saints:—

> Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Alexander H. Smith, writing from Battle Lake, Minnesota, June 27, stated:—

> The conference is past; new experiences are opening before us. Had a very good reunion; in some ways the best one I ever attended in Minnesota. There was the best feeling throughout all the meetings I think I ever experienced. There were no special gifts manifest, but there was a wonderful good feeling, a seeming general desire upon the part of all to do their part, and bear testimony of the goodness of God. The work in Minnesota is in better condition than for a long time, at least so it seems to me. There is more harmony among the ministry. The old question of the seventy presiding is in a manner quieted, so one of the bones of contention is removed. There is a better force in the field than for a long time, and I believe those of the ministry are doing better preaching. Bro. Eli Hayer is developing nicely, and Bro. Stedman has developed wonderfully. He delivered some fine sermons during the reunion, so fine that it was said of him by an outsider: "That long whiskered man is one of their best speakers," and I thought so, too, at the time.

This is good news. It is always encouraging and pleasing to learn that our brethren are developing into able defenders of the faith. May their number increase, and their fame never become less.

Bro. William Leeka, who, together with his family, has been a constant and liberal contributor to the building and maintenance of Graceland College, sends from Thurman, Iowa, July 8, the following letter of encouragement:—

I herewith enclose a list of names with amount subscribed by each individual to aid in payment of Graceland College debt. I have been away from home most of the time since General Conference, and for that reason neglected to look after this matter as I should have done had I been at home. I heartily indorse this method of obtaining funds for church purposes and trust the full amount required may be subscribed to liquidate the indebtedness and relieve the church from any further embarrassment in the matter.

Bro. R. B. Howlett, writing from Shelbourne, Ontario, July 5, says:—

Since the London district conference, held at St. Thomas, June 15 and 16, I have preached at Egremont, Snell settlement, and Masonville, and have baptized six. I am trying to bring before the Saints the need of taking the church papers, and trust that you will hear from me often in that line.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We wish to call the attention of our readers to a correction which appears among the Herald Publishing House notices. It would also be well for our readers to note carefully what the business manager says about sending money.

On July 10, Bro. W. N. Ray, who has been janitor of the Herald Office for several years, was sixty-two years old. So proud is he of the fact that he is past sixty years and is still the spryest man about the office that he treated the office force to lemonade, and the whole force joins in wishing him many returns of the day, and a peaceful journey on the latter part of life's road.

Bro. A Whitehead writes from Cadillac, Mich., expressing praise for the Herald and its corps of efficient writers. He is filled with sorrow when he sees those fall away from Christ who have once known his goodness. He expresses his love for the work and a desire to help it along, Reports a good time at the Boyne City conference, and returns thanks to God for raising his little baby from the sick bed when it was nigh unto death from measles. The prayer of a good sister proved efficacious. He has been doing some preaching, and thinks a good work can be done where he has been if the advantage can be followed up. Hopes that some elder will call on them before long, and would like to see Bro. Beckley, who is acquainted there, and is well liked. Expresses a prayer that God will call more laborers into the field.

We learn by letter from Bro. W. S. Macrae that the Oklahoma Saints have met with a severe loss by the death of Elder Stephen Butler, who for many years has been a diligent worker for the cause. Not the Oklahoma Saints only will miss him, for the influence of staunch defenders of the faith extends more or less throughout the church, and their death is felt. It makes us sad to see them fall, but we can be comforted by the thought that many able young men are ready to take up the work dropped by the stricken soldier of Christ. We condole with the Oklahoma Saints in their loss.

A MONTH IN THE SOCIETY ISLANDS. NO. 3.

BY J. W. PETERSON.

Tuesday, October 31.—This morning the Bishop's agent came in and showed me the deed to the church property and said it was not worth the paper it was written on, because there were no witnesses. The man of whom the land was bought is a Mormon, but says he will make a new deed after while; that there is some trouble over the title he has. Later the agent came in again with another deed of land on which a church is built at Taenga, which deed is also worthless, as it deeds the land to no one. In this country the law does not permit property to be deeded in trust. It must be deeded to some individual and a citizen, and then the law also provides that at the man's death all property descends to his heirs. So by this it can easily be seen that it is only a matter of time and all the property the church now owns will pass into other hands unless some provision can be made through Paris and Washington. Yet it appears to me that one living in a foreign country and owning land here could compel them to give him a deed to that property though not a citizen. Already the Catholics have some of our property by inheritance. A very great trouble here, too, is that to change the title of land costs an enormous price (I think one fifth the value of the land).

Thermometer at twelve m., eighty-five degrees. In the evening we attended prayer meeting. It was a rather short meeting, but not so short as some I have witnessed. Here the president watches a chance to close the meeting rather than to continue it. I have seen them close immediately after one or two prayers.

Wednesday, November 1.—Spent the early morning in writing out English notices for English preaching next Sunday evening; but as I had been told that all notices but government notices must be written or printed on colored paper, I thought it best to inquire of the judge, so I took Bro. Janssen and started up to the judgment hall to inquire concerning the matter, but met the judge on the road and inquired, and was told that I could not put up notices of any kind on any kind of paper. I asked him to give me the law for his decision, for I had known of notices being put up in Papeete. He became angry and said if I wanted to argue the matter to come up to the office. I told him I did not want to argue the matter, but I wanted the law for it. He said, "You haven't called on me since you have been here." I replied no, but I have not intended a disrespect any more than you have shown to me by not calling on me. He then started to go away, when I told him I was not through yet, and that I did not want to be insulted by his running away when I had come for legal advice. He then wanted to know what I wanted. I told him I wanted to know the law about putting up notices. He said he was in a hurry, and if I would excuse him and call at the office he would talk with me. I told him I would do so.

Today one of our brethren was drowned while diving. He had been down one hundred and eight feet, but caught his breath before coming to the top. In the afternoon, heard of the death of an old sister in camp. Attended preaching service in the evening.

Thursday, Nov. 2.—In the morning a great time was had about the grave for the drowned man. It was not safe to bury on the church ground, for we had no deed to it, and beside that he was a relative of one of the governors, and the natives thought the government ought to show him some respect. They finally, after talking the matter all over among themselves, (some think secret government,) decided to bury him in the public burying ground. At eleven a. m. I preached the funeral, and he was buried at twelve m. But the government had not given them written consent to bury, which by law they must do, nor did they send an officer to take or receive the paper at the grave in case one should have been given. The Saints felt quite insulted, and quite a tumult occurred around the grave. The old clothes and bedding and mats of the dead man, according to custom, were thrown into the grave.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Considering the nature of the diseases from which many of them die, the missionaries have thought it to be not a bad custom. After that it is the custom for each relative to throw in a handful of dirt on the coffin and utter a short prayer. After the burial the relatives mourn for nights on the grave. Many of them injure their health by it. Bro. T. W. Smith tried to stop it but accomplished little. I noticed also that when the corpse was carried into the church, they who were in the church all arose and held up their right hand. I asked them privately where they got that idea, and they said from the white folks. I told them that I guessed not; that I had never seen that where I had been, nor heard of it either. What a queer, not to say foolish, custom.

Thermometer at twelve m., eighty-four degrees. At five p. m. the sister who died yesterday was buried. Funeral by Tapuni. Not many out. This old sister was baptized by Addison Pratt, who was sent here from Nauvoo. Most of her relatives were inside diving, and did not hear of the funeral until afterward. Women's meeting in the evening.

Friday, November 3.—In the morning a small boat arrived that had been lost seventeen days. Boat also arrived having on board a load of sea turtles which sold for $28.00 per turtle. For dinner we had baked squash (they call it pumpkin, here), soup, hard tack, and apple pie. Thermometer at twelve m., eighty degrees. While we ate dinner as described above, it would not be surprising if at some of the houses a nice, fat dog were being eaten, though that custom is nearly extinct, especially when the white missionaries are around. After dinner Bro. Janssen and I went up to see the judge about notices, when he informed me that we were not only forbidden to put up any notices of any kind, but that I was forbidden to speak in English either to the public or to the interpreter. I told him that I had spoken in English every Sunday night in the last three months, and no notice was paid to it till now, and that I wanted to hear him read the law on that point, but he could not show it, nor did he try. I told him that I would most assuredly keep the law, but that I could not do so until I knew what it was, and for that reason I had come to him to find out, but he still insisted that I must not speak in English. I told him then that I appealed from his decision to the authorities in Papeete, including the American consul. He seemed worried at this, and said if I wanted to I could write my texts and have the interpreter interpret it to the people. I told him that was not what I wanted, but I wanted the same privilege as all the rest of our missionaries had, to talk in whatever language I pleased, and if he did not grant it I would appeal to Papeete. He said that I could do as I pleased, but if the authorities in Papeete gave me the privilege he had nothing to to say. In this and similar ways they try to bother us. The authorities in Papeete told Bro. Burton that they had no authority to expel us, but that they would worry us all they could. Attended prayer meeting in the evening.

Saturday, November 4.—Read most all day. Thermometer eighty-two degrees at twelve m. In the evening a Mormon missionary called to see about our tactics to get to administer to their people and heal and convert them to our faith. He said he did not think that was religion. I told him that our people had instructions from me to convert and talk with everybody, and I was glad to know that they were accomplishing something. One of his members had called this afternoon and asked that we administer to his sick child, and I sent two of the elders to do so, but it seems that they would not do so unless the parents would agree to be baptized. I told the elder that that was not my instruction, and that I would see further to it. Attended singing in the evening.

Sunday, November 5. — Morning sermon by one of the native elders on "Church built on a rock." It is the custom here to remain and talk over the sermon for hours, especially on Sunday. Not a bad idea. At ten a. m., preaching by Willian, president of sixth Quorum of Elders, on "The Kingdom." Attended Sunday school at twelve m. A funeral of a child belonging to a Mormon family was preached by Taneterau. At three p. m., sacrament and testimony meeting. For wine they use cocoanut water. Three gallons were used this day. Oblations, $20.00. It was a pretty sight to see a little twelve-year-old girl lead in prayer the first one. After meeting I was called to administer to one. In the evening two native Protestant Presbyterians called to ask our interpretation of Psalms 8: 4. In the evening, Metuaore, true to his calling, preached on tithing.

Monday, November 6.—In the early morning, administered to one. Much sickness in camp. Took to my bed myself about eight a. m. Bad water is doubtless the cause. Thermometer at twelve m., eighty-four. Was administered to by three of the brethren about five p. m. I felt like I had the grip, ague, and mumps in every joint.

Tuesday, November 7.—Some better this morning. Still weak. Thermometer eighty degrees. In bed all day. So much sickness in camp there was no church.

Wednesday, November 8.—In bed most all forenoon. Thermometer is seventy-eight degrees. In the evening several brethren called and we had a long talk on the sinking of the Evanelia. I learned, first, that a verbal contract (which with Saints should be as good as a written one) was entered into with Mr. Peterson, of Papeete, to build the boat. Second, that the boat when completed at San Francisco was a very handsome boat. Third, that it was a great benefit to the mission and would now be more so, as the traders refuse to carry the missionaries, and the government is stopping the brethren and sisters from going to the conferences in their small boats. Fourth, that as a trading vessel there was smoking and chewing and swearing and drinking on board. Fifth, that she was probably overloaded. Sixth, that the supposition of some is that as so many changes were made in it after it was started in building, that some point was weakened and she sprung a plank. Seventh, that she might have been bored full of holes by our enemies. At any rate, she is greatly mourned and greatly missed.

I administered to one child broken out all over in putrid sores about the size of a dime, the result of the sins of the parents. The child was less than a year old. Also wrote an article on James being the successor of Jesus, in reply to the letter gotten up by the Protestants and Mormons. Intend to continue the subject of "the presidency" from Christ to our day. Bro. Janssen is to translate it and read it Sunday evening in native. Thus I kill two birds with one stone. If the judge won't let me talk, I can write. Attended church in the evening.

Thursday, November 9. — Studied language in the forenoon. Am feeling quite well. We had chicken, sweet potatoes, and green peas for dinner—to help the sick man. Thermometer seventy-eight degrees. One of the Saints brought us in a box of the finest confectionery I ever ate, both as to flavor and richness, made at 77 Monmhane street, Constantinople. What a surprise on such a desolate island!

Friday, November 10.—Administered to one sick in the forenoon. Thermometer eighty-five degrees. Studied history, also wrote some letters in the afternoon. This writing letters and getting no answer is getting tiresome. Can the Saints (I was going to say friends and relatives, but I guess they are all dead) imagine our feelings here among strangers who talk a foreign language? Almost five months and only three letters! It is hard to console each other when each feels worse than the other. Attended prayer meeting. Was called up out of bed twice to administer to the sick. If we do not have rain soon, I don't know what will become of us. We won't have moisture enough in our bodies to shed tears when we get no letters, or to weep for the death of our friends and relatives in America. We are of the opinion, too, that the government stops our mail.

Saturday, November 11.—Will some one please tell us if there are such places yet in the United States as Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, or Missouri, or whether there is such a place as the United States any more? Judging by the letters we get, those places have ceased to be. My wife and I took a walk to talk over the contents of our many letters from America, and met a brother who had not been feeling well of late for want of something to eat. The last he ate was two two-pound cans of meat, twenty biscuits, and drank three pitchers of tea last Sunday, fast day.

Bought some writing paper, twenty cents a fold, also some ham. Coal oil is one dollar twenty cents per gallon. We met several young men with large peacock feathers, four feet long, on their hats. Here men put more feathers on their hats than women. Also saw dogs in the water chasing and catching fish. Saw also a boy on whose head a cocoanut had fallen from a tree and split the skull in three places. Was told that a man was killed last year by a falling cocoanut. It is quite an interesting sight to see the natives climb a cocoanut tree. Had a talk about the natives and the traders. The latter keeps the former in debt to them so as to get their shells. Some one has said that the Paumotu people are six hundred thousand dollars in debt to the traders, and from observation of native extravagance and merchants' high prices, it may be true.

Sunday, November 12.—At seven a. m. Bro. Taneterau preached from John 14: 6 on the subject of "Christ the author of our faith." At nine a. m. one was baptized. At ten a. m. Bro. Tapuni preached from the text in Matthew 16: 19; subject, "Keys of the kingdom." His argument was that they must be where the truth is taught, and therefore neither Mormons, Catholics, nor Protestants have the keys, for "he whom God has sent speaketh the words of God." A good effort, as was also the morning sermon. After preaching, Sunday school convened with four hundred and twenty-two scholars. Very warm in morning. As no rain had fallen for nearly two months, and sickness was increasing everywhere, the people looked with wistful eyes toward a dark cloud rising in the northeast. Weather looked quite threatening about church time in the afternoon, but most of the Saints came to church. The opening exercises were scarcely completed when the storm burst upon us, and the roar of waves and wind and the sound of the rain on the tin roof, together with thunder, (the first we had heard since we left America,) broke up the meeting completely. About that time some of the houses were seen going by the church windows, and the church began to heave to and fro. Everybody rushed out to see to their houses, for many of them were covered with tin roofing and not nailed or fastened. In some of them were sick folks. Our house was rather stronger built than others and stood the storm very well. No damage was done greater than getting goods and household furniture wet. They seldom have a storm like that here. At seven p. m. the Saints gathered to hear a letter read from myself on the presidency, showing that James, and not Peter, was president of the church, thus answering both Catholics and Mormons. I concluded that if I could not speak, I could write and the interpreter could interpret it. Was just retiring for the night when I was called to administer to a sick maid about twelve years old. When I arrived at the house I found her sound asleep and apparently well. Returned and had retired, when a sick man sent for me to come and see him; that he wanted to say something to me. I went, taking the interpreter along. Arriving at the house, I found the sick man to be one of our members, but very sick. He said he wanted to confess before me and the Lord that he had said and done many things that were not right, and that he sincerely repented. I told him that I had no power or right to forgive sins, but that he should pray to God for forgiveness, and that God would forgive him if he never again did those wrong things. I told him if he would resign himself into God's hands to live a good life, if God spared him, or to go to a nice home if God wished him to, then the Lord would do that which was best for him. I helped him to lie down, and told him to keep his mind calm and rest in the Lord. This seemed to cheer him up. I had administered to him during the previous week, but the thoughts of his wrongdoing had kept his mind in a fever heat. Now he appeared much relieved. If my listening to his confession did him any good, it certainly did me no harm.

Monday, November 13.—The Arutua branch desired us to go with them this week across the lagoon and camp out and watch them dive. So, bright and early, we packed such things as we could get along with, and about nine a. m. got aboard Bro. Tapu's boat, and in three hours were at our destination. Bro. Tapu is president of the Sunday school association. A real jolly and good elder is he. His boat has carried all the missionaries on a similar trip. On the way they asked us a great many questions about America, Lamoni, Independence, Nauvoo, etc. Also about the Saints in America and the size of the branches and church buildings. They have about the same idea of America as Americans have of them, so opinions are about evenly balanced. We were domiciled with Bro. Tapu. Three families in a house twenty feet long, eight feet wide, and six feet high in the center and four on the sides, built of cocoanut boughs throughout. On our way up we saw several men diving. As we left Bro. Janssen to take care of the house, we are here compelled to talk Tahitian or else keep still. In the evening we talked about the falling of the stars that was to occur that evening, so the astronomers say. Also sang several American songs and listened to several of theirs, after which the president of the branch called for one of the brethren to sound the gong for prayer. After prayer we retired with the thought that we must wake early in the morning (about 1: 30) to see the stars fall.

Tuesday, November 14.—Awoke about 1: 30 a. m. to behold the sky cloudy all over, and soon retired again, as nothing could be seen. Arose at five a. m. for prayer. After breakfast, I observed that disappointment was pictured on every face in not seeing the stars fall. At 8: 30 the Saints were called together for prayer before going to their diving. A solemn time is this. All feeling that they are taking their lives in their hands when they go down so far for shells, and when every week some one is drowned. As I stood and listened to the prayer and tried to imagine their feelings, I, too, felt solemn. Did some writing and reading, after which we went sight-seeing. We discovered that away off here in one corner of the universe on a little coral island, pussley [purslane] grows. Will have to trust to the editor to correct my spelling, as I have no English dictionary with me. We were presented in the morning with several cans of meat, vegetables, jams, and fruit. We suspected that they had given us all they had, and so we kept a close watch on their table and saw them take a little bread and coffee for breakfast and go without anything for dinner, and at supper about the same as breakfast. Our feelings were not very smooth, but we could afford to be partly as generous as they, so we presented them with part back again, and will continue to divide as long as we have anything. Their generosity creates a feeling of love for them, and at the same time a desire to be no better favored than they. Oh what a difference from white folks! (though I have no reason to complain nor do I.) I only wish to show how deeply these people love the gospel. I think I hear some say, "What fools!" Yes, fools for the gospel's sake. I wish we had more of them. Our work would grow much faster. These people put to shame many others in their charity.

In the evening we took a walk along the shore to gather sea shells. Found several, but they were inhabited. It looks rather queer to see a shell running away at a quick gait. Catching them you will discover a hermit crab in each of them. These crabs find a shell and crawl in and fasten themselves to it and grow to fit it. After awhile when it gets too small they leave it and enter another. When they get larger, they climb trees, etc. Rather queer to see a shell running up a tree isn't it? Seems so to me. When small, if you blow on the shell they will come out, and if you are real quick you can get hold of them and pull them out. The nicer the shell the quicker they are. They seem to appreciate their house. Returning, we were presented with a few pearls. These pearls grow in small sacks inside of the pearl shells. Most of them have small insects in them that soon destroy them. If they are perfectly sound they are valuable; only a few are sound. Common pearl shells per pair are worth about $1.10. A good diver will get sixty in a day. There are some very pretty black ones and some prettier pink ones that are worth $50.00 per pair. But all this in Chili coin as well as all other prices mentioned, which is worth less than forty cents on the dollar, either French or American money.

During the day about every man I met said, "Well, John, the stars didn't fall." In the evening I gave them the letter to reread that was read Sunday evening. I found that they had been talking it all over and had divided themselves into three classes; Saints, Catholics, and Protestants, and had talked and discussed it every day. The Catholic side had presented some objections that they wanted straightened out such as Christ building the church on a rock which they said was Peter. Also the Great Shepherd, Christ, making Peter the shepherd to feed the sheep and lambs. I promised to answer it for them next Sunday, also referred them to a few passages to study on till then. I am surprised to know how well these men know the Bible. It is their only reading, aside from a few tracts and papers. We are getting so we can understand quite a little Tahitian. The gong sounded for prayer, after which we retired.

Wednesday, Nov. 15.—At five a. m. the gong (an old dish pan) sounded for prayer. After breakfast the pan sounded again for church. Bro. Tapu preached from texts found in Matthew and Galatians on the sin of adultery. That is the greatest sin of these islands, and our civilized (?) sailors from America and elsewhere do not help matters when they visit these shores. The French, with their wine, are a curse in this direction also. The natives are dying off by hundreds with diseases introduced by civilization (?). Hundreds of others and their children suffer untold misery. I have seen little children less than a year old literally covered with sores. O Lord, come and put an end to such wickedness. My mind revolts, and my heart is sick at beholding such corruption. From T. W. Smith down to the last missionary sent here from America, all have puzzled and puzzled to know just how to act with regard to this sin. We have forbidden any but married folks to be baptized unless there are good reasons for believing them pure. Many children are baptized, but most of them are expelled before they get married. No unmarried man is sent out on a mission. With all their goodness, with all their faith, with all their charity, this sin nearly swamps the young of the whole church here, and many, many of the older ones too. After the sermon an earnest prayer was uttered for the preservation of the divers, then they were off in their hewn-out canoes for the diving, leaving ye missionary and wife and a few sick to care for the camp till evening. The divers do not return for dinner. The president of the branch is counseled about everything. Was amused this morning at a little two-year-old whose older sister had taken an onion away from him. After crying awhile he said he would tell Tapu (president of the branch). When Tapu came in a few moments after, he told him with as much earnestness as an older one would in a lawsuit involving life, and the president listened as attentively and as gravely as a judge, too, and soon straightened out the difficulty. That simple circumstance left a deep impression on my mind. Some amusing circumstances occur here. One will serve to show how quick they lose their wits when excited. A first-class boat builder was putting up a fence and finally came to a post that was too short. Immediately he thought of it being too low for the gate, and then he lost his reason it seemed, and he came running in to ask what he would do as his post was four inches too short at the bottom, but the top was all right. One ought not to laugh at them, but patiently instruct them. What we need here are good, kind, fatherly men to instruct them, for in gospel matters they are the same as in temporal ones. During the day we studied and talked Tahitian. About two o'clock there was a bustle about camp, and when we inquired the cause, we were told that a man was drowned. On further inquiry we learned that he was not a Saint, but belonged to a small society called the Sheep. He was drunk when he went down. Bro. Taneterau went down after him. We took a walk in the evening and noticed that with all their weaknesses, our people are by far the best people on these islands. Returned and answered many questions about America and American cities, and size and height of buildings. Also some gospel themes. After prayer we retired. Thus ends the month of our diary. We are too busy to continue it.

RISE AND DECLINE OF THE POPEDOM.

So he carried me away in the Spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.—Rev. 17: 3.

It is quite evident and generally conceded that the woman referred to here is the church in apostasy. And it further appears that she has control of the beast on which she sits. Acquiring control of the beast was not the work of a day or year, but it required centuries.

From Revelation 17: 9 we learn that the seven heads are seven mountains or hills, and the many waters referred to in verse 1 are peoples and multitudes and nations and tongues (v. 15). And by reference to Revelation 18: 10, we find that these mountains and peoples are called a city. Early in the Christian era there was a strife among the eastern cities as to which should furnish the woman—church—a seat. Rome and Constantinople shared mainly in this rivalry, and not until the beginning of the seventh century was this controversy brought to an end by Emperor Phocas conferring upon Boniface III., Bishop of Rome, the title of ecumenical, or universal, bishop.—Marsh, in Presidency and Priesthood, p. 302.

We now have the head of this apostate church located in the city of Rome, the seven-hilled city. We will now look after her temporal authority,— for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.—Rev. 18: 7.

From the foregoing we see that there was a time in the history of this church when she would boast that she sat a queen, and none of the sorrow, death, and torture the true church was called upon to meet in its early rise would ever be experienced by her. That what she boasted of as being a queen was true, I offer the following in proof:—

In 755 A. D. Pepin, King of France, "readily agreed to the prayer of Stephen III., . . . added the conquered exarchate of Ravenna and the Pentapolis to the patrimony of St. Peter."—White's Elements of History, p. 248.

And it is at this point . . . that the proper history of the papacy begins. Charlemagne and succeeding princes added other provinces to the papal government, . . . and under the pontificate of Gregory VII., towards the close of the eleventh century, the claims of the Roman pontiffs to supremacy over all the sovereigns of the earth were boldly asserted as the base of the political system of the papacy.—Wilson, in Presidency and Priesthood, p. 304.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

It is historically stated that in the eleventh century the pope arrogated to himself godly titles and attributes, King of Kings, Universal Father, Master of the World; set himself above all laws, human and divine; [he introduced] new modes of worship, . . . and supported himself by the most infamous frauds. . . . The most powerful monarchs were powerless before him. Emperors led his horse and held his stirrup. Kings were stripped by him of their honor and power.

That he dethroned kings and emperors, and subjected them to the most humiliating and excruciating punishment at his will and pleasure may be seen by reference to Presidency and Priesthood, pages 304, 305, and White's Elements of History, page 304.

Pope Martin V. is quoted as saying he—was Arbiter of heaven and Lord of the earth, master of the universe.

And Pope Gregory VII.,—

All princes should kiss the feet of the pope. . . . To him it belongs to dethrone emperors. . . . He alone may annul the judgment of all mankind. The pope cannot be judged by any man. The Roman church never erred and never can err.

When this proud, murderous, apostate, benighted church had reached this position, well might she boast,—

I set a queen, and am no widow.

But she was not to enjoy the political power she had acquired through fraud, infamy, and unprecedented cruelty very long,—

For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.—Rev. 18:5.

And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.—Rev. 17:16.

Verse twelve says the ten horns are ten kings. That these ten kings are the ten separate forms of government that grew out of the desolation of the Roman Empire is quite clear and is the opinion of most eminent authors. (See White's Elements of History, p. 194; Compendium, p. 232; Facts for the Times, p. 34, 35.) That these ten kingdoms have been inflicting on the popedom—the apostate church—the punishment the Revelator mentions in verse sixteen, I think quite clear, for the following reasons: Early in the fifteenth century, disputes arose between the pope and Henry VIII., which resulted in the latter putting himself beyond the power of the pope and assuming to be the head of the church in England. This may be considered the entering wedge to the downfall of this hydra-headed monster.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century, the pope saw himself involved in difficulties with Rome and France that almost drove him to idiocy, and to give him a deeper wound the Governor of Rome made the official announcement that the people had reconquered their rights and he was no longer an officer of the government. Berthier took the pope prisoner, February 10, 1798. He was conveyed to France, and died at Valence, August 29, 1799. Thus Rome and France threw off the papal yoke. The vacancy in the pontificate was filled by Pius VII. But the power of the pope was on the wane, and kingdom after kingdom rejected him as a temporal ruler.

And shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

The revolutionary torrent which was thus set in motion destroyed law, government, and religion in France, and laid waste the Roman church, both there and in neighboring countries. Her priests were massacred, her silver shrines and saints were turned into money for the payment of the troops, her bells were converted into cannons, and her churches converted into barracks for soldiers. From the Atlantic to Adriatic she presents but one appalling spectacle. She had shed the blood of saints and prophets, and God now gave her blood to drink.—Goodrich.

Mr. Bickersteth says:—

The pillage of the papal states in 1797 was such as to drain them of specie and to take away all precious stones and jewels they could find. The French ambassador wrote to Napoleon, stating, Discontent is at its highest in the papal states. The payment of 30,000,000 francs stipulated by the treaty of Tolentino at the close of so many losses has totally exhausted the old carcass. We are making it consume by slow fire:

The Home Journal, Detroit, Michigan, December 25, 1875, gives statistics of the spoliations of the monastic establishments that testify to the fulfillment of prophecy. The statement is to the effect that in all, 18,453 ecclasiastical houses had been suppressed and $220,000,000 worth of property confiscated.—Extracts from Facts for the Times, pp. 46, 47.

It is apparent from the foregoing that the ten horns have made her desolate and stripped her of all her temporal power, and a great deal of her wealth, and as Gilmer, the great Catholic of America, in 1883 said, "The holy father is virtually a prisoner in the Vatican." That he is reduced to the level of an ordinary citizen is evidenced in the fact that he pays tax as other men in his country. Says Gilmer:—

His revenues are reduced to the offerings sent to him from the different parts of the world and known as Peter's pence. I have an idea that the papal establishment is none of the richest, but on the contrary, is hampered by poverty.

While these judgments are being visited upon the great, arrogant, papal institution, the cry is going forth,

Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

May those upon whom the Father has laid the burden of carrying this warning to the people be faithful and diligent, is my prayer, for the time is near when that great spiritual Babylon will fall completely, sink as a great millstone cast into the sea, and shall be found no more at all, and all that have not come out of her must receive of her plagues.

ARCADIA, Neb., Feb. 16, 1900.

ON MAN'S AGENCY.

It is a common belief that the spirits of men had a preëxistence; but there is little in the revealed word as to what that existence was. We learn from section 23, Doctrine and Covenants, that the Devil rebelled against God. There was war in heaven.

And also a third of the hosts of heaven turned he away . . . because of their agency; and they were thrust down, and thus became the Devil and his angels.—Sec. 28, par. 10.

An agent is one who acts for another, as we understand the word.

I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself.—D. C. 28: 9.

Thus, then, we learn God gave unto man the right to will. So men can will to do good, or will to do evil. That men may know the right, God gave them his law and commands through Jesus Christ our Lord. God so much respects the right of man to will, that he will not take it from him; hence man's right to choose. There is no rule for wrong; there is but one right, that is found in God's word, in truth, justice, and mercy. There are no halfway measures. That which is not right is wrong. That which is not true is false. That which is not just is unjust, what is not good is evil.

Men will in accord with their love and desires. As they think, they will. It is the spirit that rules the body. The spirit is the reasoning power. Just why thought comes, is in dispute; but as they are admitted into the mind, they may be accepted or rejected at will. If we love the thought, it is accepted, and becomes part of ourselves to enable us to act; for without thought there is no action, and the will has always to give consent, in order that we may act. If we love the law of the Lord, we will to obey that law; and in so doing, will to do God's will, and thus live in unison with his Spirit, and be at peace with him.

The lusts of the flesh and the love of wealth, honor, and power over their fellows, lead men aside from the law of the Lord. Men are born innocents, and in childhood the good has most power with them; but when they give way to the lusts of the flesh, having pleasure therein, their will power weakens, till at last they lose control over their own bodies, then the passions rule. This is seen in the smoker, drunkard, gambler, and libertine; many of them, who in after years, having seen the foolishness of their ways of life, would fain change for better action, but have had to confess that they could not resist the least temptation, notwithstanding many good resolves to do evil no more. Then they who would be wise must never give way to the passions, but let reason rule, and take the law of the Lord for their guide; having truth, justice, and mercy as their rule for action.

The question is sometimes asked, If there was no Devil before the war in heaven, who tempted the Devil to rebel? We think it must have been his love of honor, power, and an ambition to rule, hence he sought to obtain by force what he could not gain by truth or justice; and as he and the host who went with him,—knowingly, intentionally, and willfully,—did rebel, they were cast down, because the Great Eternal would suffer no evil to dwell in his presence. The Devil is a denier of truth, a destroyer of knowledge, whenever and wherever he can.

"It is wonderful strange how few there are among men who will reason," the learned professor said; "there is no such thing as angels nowadays." Had he but reasoned he would have said; "What? an angel has appeared again? Surely he has brought good tidings to mankind." And why reason thus? because the holy book, that men say they love so well, tells us that all down through the ages, when the Lord God had aught to say for good to men, he always sent an angel.

Thus it is that the most wonderful book of the age has been cast aside, despised as an idle tale, because men love a lie and believe it true, and in so doing have closed their minds to a most wonderful book of great worth, because of the knowledge contained therein. Men are not willing to receive knowledge; but of their own free will deny the truth, and suffer great loss to themselves. Men say, if they are condemned to eternal punishment, Where then is God's mercy? And since he knows all things, he knew what men would do before they came here; but men see not that while God knows what they would do, they do not know, and many of them would be like unto the man who stood before the prophet, and when the prophet saw him he wept. The man says, Why dost thou weep? The prophet said, Because the Lord has shown me what great evil thou wilt do to Israel. And when the prophet told him the cruel things he would do, the man said, What; is thy servant a dog that he should do such things? Yet in years afterwards the man did just such things as the prophet said he would.

Thus it is all men are given the opportunity to prove themselves, that they may know themselves. Men condemn themselves by taking pleasure in wickedness, seeking not to cultivate their minds in the ways of righteousness; but permit themselves to be drawn aside by the lusts of the flesh, and so are enticed of the Devil, for the Devil has power over such. As a man who looks upon a woman to lust after her, his thoughts are turned that way. He then thinks evil, and the evil grows. If he heeds not the word of the Lord about such things, his mind becomes darkened, and he sees not the light of truth.

A man is in a place of trust; he has a chance to steal; the thoughts may come, Take it; no one shall know. He may be in need. It would do him a worldly good to take it; but he thinks, Nay, it is not mine; besides I shall know it, God shall know. There are two witnesses. This man shall have resisted the temptation of evil; over such, the Devil has no power. Hence we may well conclude, The whole duty of man is to fear God and keep his commands, and give heed to the old proverbs. Guard well your thoughts, for thoughts are heard in heaven.

To be truly great is to govern the passions. To be truly wise, is to be wise unto salvation. All that pains is but a moment; all that pleases, is but a moment. That only is important which is eternal. The wisdom of it all is seen in the fact revealed in section 76, Doctrine and Covenants, that the wicked, disobedient, and all lovers of evil lose their agency, no more having a free will; for they shall be subdued, and shall be servants of the Most High; but where God and Christ dwell they cannot come, worlds without end.

In view of these facts, who can tell the great depth of the importance of right thinking and right living.

FROM WHAT PLATES WAS THE BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATED?

The editor of Herald, in "Questions and Answers," June 13, 1900, pages 382 and 383, makes statements with which we can hardly agree.

In particular, the second and third paragraphs, on page 383. We quote:

> We conclude from this digest that the Book of Mormon is a digest made from the plates of Nephi, both sets referred to in the question. . . . The plates hidden by Moroni were evidently the ones on which the abridged record was made; and as those found were all of one size it is evident that we have not had access direct to either set of the two referred to in the question, but only to those on which the abridged account was written.

The question was:—

> Are these sets of plates mentioned in the two books of Nephi among the people today, or is one written and the other one to come in the future?

It is clear that Nephi made two sets of plates—both were named "Plates of Nephi" (1 Nephi 2:27, small edition). We will call them plates of Nephi No. 1, and plates of Nephi No. 2, to avoid confusion. Plates of Nephi No. 1, were the first ones made by Nephi (See 1 Nephi 2:27; 5:46) and upon which Nephi wrote the civil history, that is, the account of secular events, genealogy of his father, wars, etc. Plates of Nephi No. 2 contained the "more part of the ministry," prophecies, revelations, quotations from brass plates, and exhortations by the prophets, priests, and teachers. (See 1 Nephi 2:1, 28; 5:46, 47.)

We learn from Jarom 1:6, that the historical plates (No. 1) were kept by the kings, and we conclude that the ministerial plates (No. 2) were kept by the line of prophets and teachers. (Jacob 1:1.) The line of kings, it seems, went in Nephi's family, while the prophetic strain was through Jacob. The plates kept by the kings were larger than those kept by the prophets. (See Jacob 1;1 with 2:11, and Jarom 1:6.)

Now, plates No. 2 were kept by the prophets and those to whom they were delivered, until they fell into the hands of King Benjamin, to whom they were given by Amaleki, the last who had them of the family of Jacob. Benjamin evidently was of the family of Nephi, and his progenitors kept the secular record. At this juncture in their history the two sets of plates come into one man's hands and plates of Nephi No. 2 are deposited in the archives of the palace (Words of Mormon 1:4), and we believe nothing more is added to them. This is the last we hear of these plates until we find Mormon telling us (Words of Mormon 1:2, 3) that he found them among the records that had fallen into his hands.

King Benjamin and all who followed him kept but the one set of plates (plates of Nephi No. 1), which reached from the days of Nephi to those of Moroni, a period of 1,020 years. The records of Zeniff, the Jaredites, and of Alma were incorporated into their history and became a part of it. In about the year 350 A. D., Mormon, by command of God (Nephi 2:11), commenced to make an abridgment of the larger or secular plates. At the start that set was all he knew of, it seems; and when he had got down to the reign of King Benjamin with the abridgment he searched among the pile of ancient records in his hands and found the plates of Nephi No. 2. These so pleased him that he decided to put them in as the first part of the Book of Mormon. (Words of Mormon 1:2, 3.) These were the original plates. The abridgment of the first part of the secular plates (No. 1) he laid aside. Mormon then proceeds to finish the account by abridging the secular plates, down till he gets to his own time, when he gives a brief mention of what occurred then, and his son Moroni does the same in his day.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Moroni in his preface to the Book of Mormon had the idea that the whole book would appear as an abridgement, for he states.—

The Book of Mormon, an account written by the hand of Mormon upon plates taken from the plates of Nephi, wherefore, it is an abridgement of the record of the people of Nephi, etc.

But all the circumstances connected with the translation of the book were not known to Moroni. The Lord alone knew the purpose in having Mormon abridge the record down to King Benjamin's time, and then to supplant it by putting in the original plates of Nephi No. 2.

It all comes out clear and plain when we take into consideration what is said in sections 2 and 3 (9 in old edition) of Doctrine and Covenants. The Lord gave Joseph Smith, through the angel Moroni, the entire abridged record from Nephi to Moroni, also the plates of Nephi No. 2, and other things. (See D. C. 15:1.) These were all unsealed—there were others, sealed, which he should not attempt to translate. (See D. C. 4:3; 2 Nephi 11:17, 18.) The Lord had Joseph Smith translate from the abridged plates down to King Benjamin's time. Then Martin Harris asks for and finally secures the manuscript of this, and takes it home and it is lost. The Lord then tells Joseph not to retranslate these plates, but take the original plates of Nephi (No. 2) and translate them and put that account in as the record. After which he resumes the abridged plates again, and finishes the record. There is no question about the plates of Ether being an abridgment by the hand of Moroni.

If our conclusions are correct, the Book of Mormon as it now appears contains the original plates of Nephi No. 2, which make up the first one hundred and thirty-eight pages. Then follows the abridgment made by Mormon of the plates of Nephi No. 1, with what Mormon and Moroni wrote from personal observation, and Moroni's abridgment of the Book of Ether.

Another point: The statements found in the fore part of the Book of Mormon are written in the first person, that is, the person writing is speaking of what he has seen and heard, and what has occurred in his day. For example: "And now I, Nephi, proceed to give an account;" "Behold, I am Amaleki, the son of Abinadom," etc. While from the fifth verse of the Words of Mormon on to the Book of Mormon—page 140 to 482—the statements are in the third person, except where the abridger quotes the author.

So we have Book of Mormon partly unabridged, and partly abridged. From the beginning to the end of the Book of Omni was taken direct from the original plates of Nephi; while the fifth verse of the Words of Mormon to the end of the Book of Nephi was taken from the abridged record made by Mormon.

Yours for truth,

GRINNELL, Iowa, July 8.

Editors Herald:—The work in Grinnell and vicinity is still moving onward. This morning, as I sit on the porch writing, I glance up to find the clouds of darkness closing down upon us. A storm is nearing. Over such as this we have no control; but over the spiritual darkness which comes around us, we may have control, if we will but put our trust in God, and then live prayerful, humble lives. The very familiar hymn has it, "Darkness flies at thy command." Now, dear Saints, if this be true, will not God cause it to leave us, if we but ask, in faith believing, for him to rebuke the power of darkness? How it makes my very heart yearn with pity when I see an individual claiming to be a Saint of God, welcoming this evil power of darkness and virtually, yet unconsciously saying, "Come, take up thy abode with me." O! how we should watch and pray that we might not be suffered to be led into such condition.

Never could there have been more discouraging times to any one, I believe, than what we have experienced in the past. When we moved to Grinnell, about eleven years ago, there were only four Saints living here. One by one we began to move in, until in a few years we thought we might start a little Sunday school, even if there were only two children. Previously, however, to the organization of our Sunday school we had endeavored to hold prayer service, but the members soon became as the sleeping virgins, and were not to be found at their posts of duty. However, after our school was organized we began to feel the necessity of devotional services, and once again we started our little prayer meetings. We also organized a Religio society, and though we were few, and without a leader, we met each week at private houses. We extended a hearty invitation to our friends to come and meet and study with us.

Soon a large class of little folks came as well as a few adults, not members of the church. There was a growing interest, which continued until we found it necessary for us to move into a hall, which we rented and prepared for a house of worship. The paper only partly covered the walls and was badly soiled and smoked, the floor was rough and bare, and the woodwork was in a bad condition, yet in it we met, three times each week for a year. Then we were able to make the room cozy and neat. Through the kindness of Sr. Thomas Shackley, we received carpet, pulpit, and seats.

In the first year of our Sunday school work only one united with us; but this, to us, seemed quite encouraging, and we began to see the darkness moving gradually away. We could not but believe we could see the hand of God in the silver lining behind the cloud. The interest never died out, but continued until in the last ten months we have had the pleasure of seeing nine souls laid within the liquid grave. Others are interested, and we hope to see them within a year also take this step.

We are members of both Religio and Sunday school association. Who can say God has not had a hand in this work? Not until we put our shoulders to the wheel and did our part did the darkness roll away, or God do his part.

We have no branch here, but hope God may see fit to raise one up some day. Until then we hope to keep ourselves alive and active, until the elders kindly come and feed us on food required by the spiritual body.

So, Saints, do not wait for God to do it all. Move out and do something yourself. Start the wheel to rolling, and if you are faithful and prayerful in the work God will not see it fall back. Although the seed you sow may seem of great insignificance to you, yet God will not suffer it to be lost. In time this seed, according to his word, must spring forth to his name's honor and glory and bring forth fruit. What cause the Saints have to rejoice! How much enjoyment is found in their association! We held our first picnic on July 4. Through the kindness of Mr. Frank Lyke we had secured the use of a hayrack. Early on the morning of the 4th he gathered us all up. It did not take long, and of course we did not forget our well filled baskets. About 6:30 we were off, and reached our destination about eight a. m. Hammocks were hung, swings put up, ice cream frozen, then the dinner was prepared. Though not quite noon, I can assure you we all did justice to the well loaded table. It certainly was an hour of solid comfort.

Dinner over, we repaired to our seats on the ground, and for about three fourths of an hour we enjoyed a program, though of quite an extemporaneous nature. Hymns were sung; then games were indulged in which carried us back to our childhood days. All too soon came supper time, for we knew that this meant, "homeward bound." But the time had come, so we gracefully submitted. Our homeward ride was enjoyable, for our driver took plenty of time, while we all sang, etc. We landed home before dark, and one by one we dismounted from the hayrack and soon all the good byes were said. Thus ended our first 4th of July picnic.

Ever striving in human weakness to do God's will, I am, Your sister, Editor Saints' Herald:—I reached this city, the "objective point" in my mission, Saturday, July 7, and preached twice on the 8th, with liberty, to fair sized, attentive audiences, being assisted in the forenoon by Bro. Genero, and at evening by Bro. Liddy, who has lately been ordained an elder, and seems energetic in the work. The sisters here are pushing the Sunday school work, assisted by some of the brethren, and the "Religio" is moving.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

We are now expecting President Joseph Smith, westward bound from Canada, to be with us from the 12th to the 15th insts. Shall be glad to see him, and will do what we can to notify the city of his presence, and hope he may be privileged to tell some of them of the great work. Rain here quite often lately. Yours hastily, ACORN RIDGE, Mo., June 29.

Editors Herald:—No doubt some of you would be glad to hear from southeastern Missouri. This is a new field, and the few Saints living here are very scattered. Bro. C. J. Spurlock and myself are the only missionaries of our faith in this part. This is not in an organized district, and there are no local preachers to help us. A part of our field is very rough and rocky, and part in the low or swamp lands. Farmers living in the lowlands are quite discouraged, because of the great amount of rain this spring and summer. Most of them are poor, and cannot lose a crop without it distressing them considerably. The land is quite fertile, the worst objection being that the climate is insalubrious, because of standing water, and the great amount of decaying timber. Nearly everybody who has lived here long has chills. We hope to so keep the Lord's commands and the Word of Wisdom as to escape this dreaded affliction.

People are more sociable in this country than many other places. We have been well treated, though among strangers and sometimes among those not of our faith. We have a horse and buggy, but the roads have been so bad that it is necessary for one of us to walk in many places. Our buggy is now at the shop for repairs. We are holding meetings in a Christian (Campbellite) church, four miles northeast of Acorn Ridge. There are no Saints in this immediate neighborhood. We came here strangers to everyone, and people seem a little slow about asking us home with them. Thus far, however, those who did not want to see us left in the churchhouse would linger till most of the people had gone, then come and ask us to go home with them.

The boys in this community behave badly. Last night some of the boys herded a bunch of sheep about the churchhouse. One sheep had a bell on. Thus they prevented the people hearing what was said. They tell us it is not uncommon for the boys to act this way. We have some friends here, but it seems no one wants to be first in trying to enforce good behavior.

Bro. A. Haws is respectfully remembered here by several, he being the first of our preachers in this country.

There are two Saints living about six miles from here, both heads of families; also two or three more in Stoddard county whom we have not met yet.

If any of the Saints have relatives or friends living in southeastern Missouri, where there can be an opening effected, we would like to have their names and addresses. Address Bro. C. J. Spurlock, Acorn Ridge, Stoddard county, Missouri.

We hope to sow the gospel seed unsparingly on good ground, that this country may develop a goodly harvest in the future.

Yours in gospel bonds,

GEORGE W. BEEBE, JR.

ARODISE, N. S., July 4.

Editors Herald:—The conference of the Nova Scotia district convened with the Saints in South Rawdon, June 23 and 24. A very pleasant and agreeable good time was had. Not a large delegation in attendance. Peace and harmony prevailed throughout the session. The Sisters Clara and Tamza Newcomb were in from Delhaven; Bro. James Ripley, from Cumberland; and Sr. Davison and two children were in from Lockhartville. The house was comfortably well filled with seemingly eager listeners, most of the time during preaching services. The testimonies were very good at the social services, and all went out in a seemingly satisfied mood.

This district holds but one conference a year, as the Saints are very much scattered, thus making it inconvenient and expensive to meet.

It has been very dry during the month of June, so the old fields look scathe and dry, as does also the grain, thus holding out but little encouragement to the husbandman. Of late the rain has been falling copiously, and an occasional burst of sunshine is felt and seen, which offers hope and cheer to the farmers.

On last Sunday, July 1, just as meeting commenced, Bro. and Sr. Cameron Roberson, from Massachusetts, came in, thinking it the time of our conference. All were glad to see them, as they were former residents of this place.

It is hard to say what can be done to advance the work in and about Rawdon. Many of the young people have gone into the States and other places, and some of them were our best singers. This will serve to make our congregations small; yet the few left are good and willing workers. This gives the the missionary courage to try to help them.

July 9.—Since writing the above we have come on to Williamsdale. Our meeting last night was quite largely attended. Some in that have never been in the church before. The best of attention was given the speaker while he discoursed upon the kingdom of God and the need of being established in its righteousness.

We shall hope to advance the work as best we can; yet at the best cannot expect to do justice to the work in all Nova Scotia, being alone. The country is large, and the Saints very scattered. Expect Bro. Blanchard soon. This will greatly expedite the work.

Best wishes to all in the faith,

S. O. FOSS.

NEWARK, S. D., July 6.

Editors Herald:—Elder G. W. Thorburn was with us, and preached some excellent sermons. The gospel was never made plainer. He has good wisdom, and I very much enjoyed hearing him. He promised to visit us again next fall. Hope he will.

GUY, O. T., July 5.

Editors Herald:—On June 15 I was asked to return to the Advent settlement I spoke of in my last, as they had sent for their preacher. I went on the 19th; but he did not come, but was expected the 23d. He failed to come, and I preached upon Advent errors, and upon the restoration of the gospel. My wife went with and greatly assisted me. Returned home the 26th, and found Voice of Warning and tracts at post office, and returned the 27th and distributed them among those apparently most interested. One Adventist said my wife was a better preacher than I; had converted his wife "to be a Mormon."

I went on, fifty miles from home, to the Advent tent in Woodward. Heard them preach on the "Pope changing the Sabbath." Got privilege to state my objections. They soon stoped me, declaring controversy "must stop." It was all of the devil. Denounced me as trying to prove something from the Scriptures that I knew I could not do. I then asked permission to speak in their tent upon my reasons for keeping first day, as they had denounced all such as being the "mark of the beast." My request was refused. Invited him to discussion, which he refused. I then told him I was the one who had been troubling his flock at Elm Grove, thirty-five miles away; that I was informed that seven of them had turned away, four that I knew of, and many of them and all the other people were very anxious to have him come down and defend what he had taught, saying if he did not his cause was dead there. This he refused to do. He had sent me a written challenge for me to affirm that the first day was the Sabbath. This I told him I would accept rather than have him deceive the people, and to give him a chance to defend his faith. He said he would have nothing to do with me.

I returned home after preaching several times on the streets, having good attention. Am to preach the 7th and 8th in the Advent settlement.

Brn. Hubert Case and Wm. Aylor will begin to preach here in the branch tonight. The brethren built an arbor today, it being very hot here now. In the faith, BAY CITY, Mich., July 10.

Editors Herald:—I have felt it would not be amiss for me to write a few lines as to my labors and experiences since I have been in the mission assigned me. I went to Detroit and met with the Saints in the hall they have rented and neatly furnished. We had some pleasant meetings, and the Lord blessed us by his Holy Spirit's presence. Two were called to offices in the church,—an elder and a teacher. They were so ordained.

By invitation I crossed the line over into Canada and preached in the home of our brother and friend, William Lively. Felt well in presenting the gospel to those present. I went to Coldwater to attend the conference. Elder Durand went with me. We had a pleasant trip. Were met at the station at Coldwater by Bro. Bradford Corless, who took us home, and we were made welcome by Sr. Corless.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

At the conference we met many of the Saints of the district, and I also met with a number of my associate laborers in the mission. Without naming them all, I will say I felt I had met with those who had taken hold of the plow not to look back but to press on to victory. The conference was a peaceful one. The good Spirit prevailed. Three were ordained—one elder and two priests. The gifts of the Spirit were manifest, and the Saints were comforted and encouraged in the warfare. The conference was good from commencement to close.

From here I went to Reed City and met with Bro. J. J. Cornish at the station. He was just returning from the Eastern district. He went there to attend their conference held at Bay Port. He says they had a good conference, and peace and good will prevailed. Bro. John took me to his home, and I was made very welcome by all—Sr. Cornish and the children. Bro. John said: "Bro. Lake, feel at home when you stop with us." I remained with them two days. Bro. Cornish was very busy preparing his report for the conference of the Northern Michigan district. He was well assisted by his daughter Bertha. He is the Bishop's agent of the district, and I would judge from his report that he is a good one, and that the Saints were alive to duty.

We went to Boyne City to attend the conference of the district to be on the 23d and 24th of June. Met with a band of good Saints, and the conference was a specially good one. Six were baptized and confirmed, and the Spirit of the Lord was felt and enjoyed by many, and the gifts were manifested to the comfort of many. Here I met with some of the missionaries that I never met before. All seemed alive to duty. The conference was all that we could reasonably ask for.

After the conference I went with Bro. Thomas Hartnell, in his carriage. It was about thirty miles, and we had a pleasant trip. We stopped on our way at a brother's (I have forgotten his name). We were refreshed by dinner, and rested and visited by relating some of the experiences of life. We then went on our way rejoicing, and felt thankful that we were Saints of latter days. We reached Bro. Hartnell's about nine p. m.

While I remained in that neighborhood I had three meetings in their schoolhouse, and I met with the Saints in the Star branch. Bro. John Hartnell is president. We had a pleasant time.

From there I went to Prescott, to attend a two days' meeting held on the 3d and 4th of July. We reached there on the 2d at nine p. m. The next morning we met at nine a. m. to enjoy a prayer meeting. We had preaching at 2:30 and at 7:30 p. m. Quite a number of the Saints and friends were in attendance, and we had a pleasant day.

On the morning of the Fourth we could hear the rumbling of the salutes at Prescott, but the Saints prepared to meet at their church at nine a. m. for prayer and praise to the God of Israel, and him who had raised the ensign to the nations. We had a sweet and enjoyable time, rejoicing and praising God. At 10:30 the writer spoke. I felt well while addressing those present and the Saints who had come from different branches, some distance of thirty and forty miles to spend their Fourth in rejoicing with the Saints rather than meet with the world. We had a time that will be comforting to remember, that we met and rejoiced and praised God, on the one hundred twenty-fourth anniversary of the nation. To me it will be a bright spot in life's history.

I have met with a number of the Saints of Michigan. So far, I am well pleased with their acquaintance. Some I had met in Canada in years past.

I am now at Bay City and we are holding meetings on the street corners. We met with a number last evening, at 7:30, but the Salvation Army tried to freeze us out. We got a hearing, however.

The Saints here met with a loss. The hall that they had rented was burned, and their organ with all the furniture was burned. They are getting a new tent for the district, and are to have it here for awhile.

So far as I have been through the mission, I am well pleased. Most of the Saints seem alive to duty. I feel hopeful that good will be done and many added to the church this year by baptism. So far as I am informed, there is no serious trouble. Hope none will arise.

Truly yours as ever,

J. H. LAKE.

PALMER, Pa., July 9.

Editors Herald:—I am cheered and comforted every time I take up the Herald and read of the good success of the brethren in the field, and how God is blessing them with the Holy Spirit of light and liberty attending. There is nothing which gives such solid comfort and lasting peace to the struggling missionary as the recognition of God while standing to declare his name. All the sacred ties of this world which bind us so dearly to father, mother, wife, and child, have but second place.

Since conference I have been laboring in this vicinity, opening up new places and seconding the efforts of others in several places. Most of the time, Bro. Richard Baldwin, who is on his mission of love, has been associated with me. He cheerfully leaves all and enters into the arena with commendable zeal and humility; and if he continues in the spirit in which he has begun, will reach the work of his ambition. He is perfectly willing and anxious to learn. Expect to be yokefellows the conference year. Two by two is the order of the Lord, and I firmly believe if observed accordingly much greater results for good will follow. I also believe that this order became binding upon the church as soon as she sent out her second missionary.

Have just received a letter from Bro. and Sr. Forbes, of Beaver Falls, containing an agreement to put their names on my blank for the cancellation of the college debt. Now brethren, we only need 999 more such saints and the church will breath much easier.

While I was one of the few adventuresome who voted to close the college, but was overruled by the majority, I enter heart and hand with them to accomplish the laudable design. Although a movement may be antagonistic to my personal feelings, and I may never be able to conscientiously indorse it, you will never find me antagonizing that which has been done by an honorable majority decision.

Bro. H. N., your turn comes next. I shall try to raise the amount you ask, and hope you will have no trouble in liquidating your church debt, and thereby be free to worship God in his house, instead of the bond holder's.

I extend greetings to Brn. Blanchard, Barmore, and Goodwin, my room mates at the comfortable home of the congenial Lamoni post master.

Farmers are quite busy putting up their hay, consequently our meetings are not so very well attended, but in the midst of all the clash and tumult for human existence, we find some who have a little time for religious reflection. Bro. Baldwin baptized three about the 20th ult.

Many calls for preaching and some flattering ones to open up in new places. We shall begin a thorough canvass of them shortly.

Hopefully yours,

F. J. EBELING.

ABERAMAN, Wales, July 2.

Editors Herald:—I now for the first time try to write a few lines to your columns, as I know that this is the work of God. What a vast difference there is between this glorious work and the different denominations surrounding us. The chief difference to my mind is the different amounts of charity among the people of God and the different religions. Charity undoubtedly is one of the greatest and grandest gifts of the gospel. There are different kinds, such as in the gospel and worldly charity. The Apostle Paul speaks a great deal about it.

Charity in the world is to do a kindness one for another or to do a favor; here we find that charity is Godly love. The apostle says, in 1 Corinthians 13:3, that if he gave all his goods to feed the poor, and even gave his body to be burned, and have no charity, he is as nothing in the sight of God. What does Paul mean by using these words? Supposing I was worth a great deal of money as a brother in the church of God, and there was some poor among us in the branch, and I gave some of my money towards the poor in said branch or church and only gave it for shame, because I had plenty. Now, I would not be giving from my heart with love. The Apostle Paul meant that if he gave all he had and had not charity he would be as nothing in the sight of God. We will be none the better for helping each other unless we do it in love and have charity. Charity is a great gift if we could only realize it.

In 1 Peter 4:8, it says: "And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins."

What a grand thing it must be! Suppose that a brother or a sister should commit wrong. If we have charity of the love of God in our souls we can easily forgive. Charity comes not by itself. We must exercise it by doing good and being prayerful. Prayer is the entrance into the doors of heaven.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

When we pray, let us ask God for his Spirit, because the Spirit of God is love or charity. The apostle says charity is kind; "charity envieth not, . . . seeketh not her own; . . . thinketh no evil; . . . endureth all things."

Again: Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

We can thus see what a grand thing it is to have charity or the love of God in our hearts. It is worth striving for, to gain and to keep. It says in 1 Corinthians 13: 8:—

"Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall fail."

These blessings shall all vanish away when our Savior will come to reign on earth; but as for charity, it never faileth. We shall possess it as long as we are in existence. So let us exercise it here on earth and have charity one towards another, and towards God and his Christ, so that we may reign a thousand years on earth in peace and love is my desire. Yours fraternally,

HOWELL JONES.

MALAD, Idaho, July 10.

Editors Herald:—I arrived at this place June 31, after an absence of five months, and was pleased to find the work in good condition, all things considered. The Saints under the care of Bro. William John are working nicely, and are to be commended for their efforts to improve their chapel by adding certain desirable fixtures, including an organ. We feel gratified to note that the young people have labored faithfully in the Sunday school and are manifesting improvement in their work.

Two chief barriers to success confront us in this mission wherever I have been. First, the lack of interest and energy on the part of many of the older members who could wield an influence for good if they would; and, second, the social condition, for which the predominant church is chiefly responsible, so influences the rising generation that a very large majority are unwilling to receive pure gospel teaching and put it into practice. I think I am quite safe in asserting that the saloon and dancing hall catch at least ninety-five per per cent of the younger class. Yet we have some noble workers, both young and old, who set bright examples of diligence and spirituality. Surely a bright reward awaits them if they faint not. I sincerely hope and pray that our people, amidst the pleasure and revelry of the day will see the necessity of avoiding amusements that draw a questionable class of society.

The same day of my arrival here, Elder B. H. Roberts also came in, and the next day preached in the tabernacle. The occasion was the Malad stake conference of young peoples' associations, and the subject of his sermon was Succession, which naturally brought forth references to our positions. At the conclusion of his remarks I secured permission to ask a question providing it should not be one of a controversial nature. I then asked Mr. Roberts if he or any representative of his faith, would meet at any suitable time and place a representative of the Reorganized Church, whom we might select, in public discussion on the question of Succession. The answer came quickly, but decisively, "For myself, I respectfully decline." In our own chapel last Sunday night I reviewed his lecture in the presence of a crowd that more than filled the house.

The incident has caused quite a stir and I am informed that some of their people are not pleased with his refusal. However, that's about all the effect it has upon them, besides putting a quietus on their boasting. For my own part, I desire to see the supremacy of truth, but realize that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." As I understand it, our duty is to warn the people and leave results with God.

Prospects throughout the mission are not particularly discouraging, neither are they of such a nature as to make one sanguine of great results. Brn. Parker and Condit at last reports were having fair interest in the tent at Richmond, Cache Valley, Utah. Bro. Gomer Wells in western and Bro. Reese in eastern Montana are conducting the work in that state. The tent, in the vicinity of Provo, is in care of Brn. W. S. Pender and Peter Anderson, the latter also having charge of city work. Bro. Dana expects to reach Ogden soon. Bro. Albertson reports work done in the east, and expects to reach his field in Idaho in the near future. The Salt Lake branch has been reorganized, with Bro. Peter Anderson presiding elder; Bro. George Chrestensen, late of the Council Bluffs branch, priest; Brn. T. Thorson and C. C. Larsen, teacher and deacon. The last two brethren mentioned were formerly missionaries in the Mormon Church, baptized last winter by Bro. H. N. Hansen, and are taking hold of the work in a way that will do good if they continue faithful. The Ogden Saints expect to build a chapel this fall. Their effort in this direction, if successful, will undoubtedly be of great benefit to the work there.

I have a deep and increasing interest in the college, and was made sad when the clouds overhanging its success grew somewhat heavy. However, I realized that every institution for good has its crisis, and we could hardly expect Graceland to be an exception to the rule. I shall pray and work for its success, and believe the future will see the college a power for good, if we do our part.

We hope to meet many of the Saints at our reunion to be held in Pleasant Grove, Utah, the first week in September. We had an enjoyable time at Provo last year, and trust we shall have another pleasant gathering this year.

At Pleasant Grove some familiar faces are missing. Sr. Johnson, an effective helper in the Sunday school, concluded to go east, and seems to think too much of her Iowa home to return. Sr. Sterrett's death, previously noted, leaves a vacant place that cannot be filled. Bro. Richens also passed to his rest during the latter part of the winter. He came to Utah in an early day ('56 I believe), and later on became identified with the Reorganized Church. He remained till death a faithful member, respected both by Saints and friends.

My faith in the gospel work grows brighter, and I hope to consecrate what little I have, without reserve, to its interest.

In gospel bonds,

D. W. WIGHT.

MANCHESTER, Texas, July 10.

Editors Herald:—The work in northeastern Texas is progressing some. The honest in heart are seeking the truth. We have in the last few days baptized two men. One of them heard only one sermon. I went in his vicinity to preach, and they locked the church house against me, and this man invited me to his house, where I preached one sermon and went on my way. One week from that day that man walked twenty-four miles to get me to baptize him. The other man came ten miles to be baptized. So the honest in heart are seeking after the truth. I met some very bad mobs this spring, but I have baptized some noble men and women in the kingdom.

I believe in the final triumph of right and believe that justice will yet rule the earth; also that the white banners of universal peace shall supplant the blood-red flags of war. False doctrines may rise and fall, teachings of men come and go, force and fraud may yet rule the day, but yet and ever yet I believe that right men will sit on the throne of the world and rule the hearts of men. The gospel of Jesus Christ, with its wings of inspiration, will rise high above all the dark clouds, and with one loud and fierce cry speak justice to all mankind.

Bro. D. D. Babcock is with me at present. He is a noble soldier in the cause, and it is good for him to be here. Although he has seen a sample of the mob work, he is too old to be frightened.

We are anticipating a large crowd at district conference, which convenes the 28th of this month, and we pray for a spiritual feast.

Yours in bonds,

E. A. ERWIN.

PIN OAK, Ill., July 12.

Editors Herald:—Since coming to this field, May 12, I have with my colaborer, Bro. F. M. Slover, been quite busy. Have lost but little time, though the busy season (with short nights) is usually somewhat restrictive of missionary effort. We have labored mostly in the branches thus far, though one of these, Brush Creek, including as it does numerous schoolhouses and several churches open for preaching, is almost a mission field of itself. Truly "the laborers are few," when we consider some of the branches, almost without officers. I am not ready to say, "all is well in Zion," but am cheered and encouraged as I meet faithful Saints and those of the priesthood striving to do all in their power to advance the great work we are engaged in.

The signs of the times and the affairs of nations signify to the wise that the time is short, and all should arouse to a faithful performance of duty.

Bro. Slover and myself have put in most of our spare time while going the rounds in studying the books of the church, Bible, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants, specially the two latter, forming sort of a miniature "school of the prophets," and I acknowledge having been greatly benefited. Expect to keep it up, according to the commandment in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, "Teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom, teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you," etc. The General Conference made manifest a great lack of unity on some lines, and the necessity of more familiarity with the book of Doctrine and Covenants. I hope by diligent study between now and next April, that the ministry or quorums may meet more nearly united in their understanding of the law than ever before. I believe as we do our part in studying the revelations that the Lord will do his part in pouring out his Spirit upon us that we may understand them, for it is written, "Thy watchmen shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion."—Isa. 52: 7. While we pray brethren and sisters everywhere, "thy kingdom come," etc., let us see to it that we do all we can ourselves to answer the prayers we offer. Your brother,

M. F. GOWELL.

P. S.—My address for the present is Zenith, Wayne county, Illinois.

ROSTOCK, Ont., July 5.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place on the 20th ult. Have been assisted by the Master. Have baptized one, and others are near the kingdom. The Saints have enjoyed spiritual blessings, and have thereby been brought nearer the Christ. Peace and unity are enjoyed by this little band—eighteen in all. Last night eight hundred dollars were subscribed for the building of a church, which will be completed as soon as possible. Thus Zion prospers, and all is well. I expect to go from here to the McKillop branch.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"The times want scholars—scholars who shall shape
The doubtful destinies of dubious years,
And land the ark that bears our country's good,
Safe on some peaceful Ararat at last.

"The age wants heroes—heroes who shall dare
To struggle in the solid ranks of truth;
To clutch the monster error by the throat
And lead a universal freedom in."

HOMEWARD BOUND.

May 8, 1900.

This is our eighth day at sea. Crossed the "line" yesterday. Therefore those acquainted with the distance will know we have had a good fresh breeze all the time, which of course makes our track too hubbly for good writing, but it will be all right in print, and I thought perhaps the "Column" readers would like to hear some of the doings and sayings generally about conference time; and since I wrote some time ago of how things were and were to be, some may be interested in knowing how they are. But where shall I commence? Oh, yes; with the month of March! That is when the rain commenced, and with the exception of a few days, continued the entire month. It did seem as if the prince of the powers of the air was trying either to frustrate the work, or make it as disagreeable as possible. But our native brethren are accustomed to much rain, so it made little difference with them, personally. They simply doffed all unnecessary clothing, and went right on with their work.

Quite a number had gathered for the work, and after the church at Papaoa had been taken to pieces and floated down to Tarona, and the old cookhouse—where the first cooking was done for the Evanelia crowd—was taken away, and the Papaoa church was reconstructed, setting so the front was just a few steps back of Haroatua's house (I write names for the better understanding of those who have been here, and who will likely be the most interested), the grounds took on the appearance of a game of "puss in the corner" being played by all the small houses, seeing they had to be started and sidetracked to make room for others to pass. But finally by means of rollers—logs from the cocoanut tree—and much prying, pushing, and shoving, all were squared around in systematic order, and that too by man power only. The missionary house being the largest, was the most troublesome to handle. We were a week on the road. True, there were other houses moved, and cocoanut trees cut down during the time, by way of clearing the track.

Sr. Peterson and I improved the opportunity while the house was empty * to clean the walls. And when the house would take a start on those uneven rollers, it was like riding on an earthquake. The rain continued, and O such mud we never had before, while part of the grounds were under water! Some portions are naturally sandy, but the continuous tramping of so many, got the mud and sand badly mixed.

When the house reached its destination, and was yet on stilts about four feet from the ground, there came the heaviest squall of rain and wind we have witnessed since we came to the islands—a prolonged squall too. The roar of the rain on the iron roof was something terrifying, at least deafening. We had to shout at the top of our voices to be heard by each other. What an opportune moment for the opposing power, if in reality such were at work. The front porch and porch roof were off; no window glassses; no weather boards under the eaves; no sill under the front door, nor screen over the ventilator above the door, and night was coming on apace. I think it would have been amusing to a looker on, had he seen John, Lillie, and Joseph with broom weapons, opposing with their most lively movements the flood of water that came in under the door, over the door, and through the slat blinds, and a dozen or more places in the roof. Joseph was rushing the main pool of what came in the bedroom, out into the front room—both doors being near together—John was directing the scattered pools and streams towards the front door, and Lillie was forcing what she could of all combined out under the door, while I was strewing our bed with basins and dishpans, bits of oilcloth, and whatever I could find, to keep it from being saturated. The bedroom being a part of the front of the house also. The rain was being driven with such force under the eaves and slat blinds, that it not only saturated the tester canopy, so that it was coming through in streams, but wet the walls on the opposite side of the house clear up to the beams, and alas, my lawn dresses too, as well as maps, and everything else that hung against the walls.

When the squall was over, only one small corner of dry floor appeared in the whole house, and nearly everything else in the house was wet, ourselves not having escaped. All this were not very much when there is a prospect for getting dry again; but in this country one has to wait for the sun to do the drying, for there are no fires. So in that mirth-provoking, forlorn condition, and at a belated hour too, as women folks sought to prepare supper, with the additional difficulties of finding just when needed, that the greatest part of our food, dishes, and cooking utensils were over in the church. Well, they would have to stay there, at least for the night, seeing it was still raining, though more quietly, and dark too, and we had no lantern. Supper being over, we turned our mattresses upside down, and end for end, to get the dryest places to lie on. Our covers were not all dry, and the netting curtains were every stitch wet, but there was no help for it, so we made the best of the situation and went to sleep.

We were suddenly wakened in the night by a bang of the door, the roar of the rain, and Lillie's voice in a high key saying something about the house blowing over. Added to this Bro. John thought the ocean was coming in, and both of them were scampering about the room, fighting the rain again. But the ocean did not come in, nor the house blow over; neither was the squall so bad as the one in the evening, so we were soon settled down to rest again.

"And this," said Bro. Peterson, "is missionary life in the South Sea Islands!"

"Yes, a portion of the damp side of it," was the reply.

Fortunately the sun came out for an hour or two the next morning. But it was not my intention to enter into details, but simply sketch the leading features. Here is the position the houses are now in, those that were moved. Tapuni's two houses set back to the Frenchman's line fence, towards the west end, one occupying a portion of the ground on which the church stood. Keavea's house sets close in line with Tom's old house on the west side; and Haroatea's sets where Keavea's did. The missionary house on the front corner, back far enough from the road to be in line with the church or conference building. I think I said in my last that the church intended to buy the Tapuni house and reconstruct it into a printing office, but Tapuni concluded not to sell. The conference house is built thus, first the Papaoa church minus the back end, and the Tarona church setting directly in line, but sixteen feet back of it, minus the front end. This intervening space is floored and roofed over level with and connecting the two buildings, but was not walled in, it being the main entrance from either side. The dimensions of both these churches were forty-two by twenty-four, thus with the added space, making a building one hundred feet long. The shutters were taken off of the church at the back, also the boards beneath the window frames, leaving an open space the width of the window frame clear to the floor on each side. This after building, including the additional sixteen feet, had porches fifty-two feet wide (fifty-eight feet being their length), all nicely roofed over with iron roofing. This part where the porches were, was the feast house, the Papaoa church being for worship only. A curtain was made the width of the church and height of the ceiling, which was dropped during mealtime and raised again for services, or the matutus. This was only intended for the time being, it was the original design to take away the piece between the two churches as soon as conference was over, and close in the ends of both buildings; the one in front to be the permanent church, and the other a part of it at least was to be a home for the Saints who came from the Paumotus from time to time. But when it was decided to have conference again next year, Papeete was the chosen location, so the house remained as it was.

I must not forget to mention the pretty little belfry, with a spire, built over the square platform in front. I think the natives took more pride in that belfry, and the flag pole, than in all the rest. They took much pains in making and painting the pillars that upheld it, with pale blue and deep blue, skillfully cut the arches over the front and two sides, there being steps leading up to each, and ceiled it overhead, thus shutting the bell from sight in a dainty house with tiny green blinds on each side. One would scarcely believe how much more clearly and musically the ringing sound peals forth to call the people to church, than when it hung to the cocoanut tree.

The cook houses were put as far back from the church as the grounds would permit.

While these works were slowly progressing in Tarona, there was a commotion in the minds of the people of Papeete, and the government, and an increasing anxiety about the spread of the bubonic plague. The steamer from New Zealand had not been allowed to come to the dock to land her cargo for the two last times, fearing some of the cargo had been sent from Honolulu or Australia. And her last coming brought the depressing and unwelcome news, and untrue too; but we did not know it at the time, that the plague had broken out in San Francisco. The steamer had orders not to return if there was any plague in New Zealand, and word was circulated that the governor was going to close the port for six months, not even allowing free intercourse between Tahiti and the Paumotus. Forthwith there was a "carun" on all the flour in Tahiti. Individuals could not buy any. Most of it was being sent to the Paumotus, because the people there would only have fish and cocoanuts to eat, when they of Tahiti would have various fruits and vegetables. SR. EMMA BURTON.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Hersld, Lamoni, Iowa.")

Several persons were asked to "name the first twenty books for a Sunday school library in the order in which they should be purchased." We suppose that the necessary Bibles, song books, etc., have been supplied. We give below the lists with the accompanying explanations.

I send you the following list of twenty boooks:—

1. "The Silver Thimbles," by Mrs. Stebbins.
2. "A New Baby World," by Mary Mapes Dodge.
3. "Friends in Feathers and Furs," by Olive Thorne Miller.
4. "With the Church in an Early Day," by Frances.
5. "Boys of '76," by C. C. Coffin.
6. "Boys of '61," by C. C. Coffin.
7. "Hesperis," by David H. Smith.
8. "Maurine," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.
9. "Little Men," by Louisa M. Alcott.
10. "Little Women," by Louisa M. Alcott.
11. "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," by Ian Maclaren.
12. "The Story of Patsy," by Kate Douglas Wiggin.
13. "Footsteps of Jesus," by Mrs. Stebbins.
14. "Stories Mother Nature told her Children," by Jane Andrews.
15. "Pattie, or Leaves from Life," by Eleanor.
16. "Drumbeat of the Nation," by C. C. Coffin.
17. "Kathrina," by J. G. Holland.
18. "Beautiful Joe," by Marshall Saunders.
19. "Madam How and Lady Why," by Chas. Kingsley.
20. "A Song of Life," by Margaret Morley.

Numbers 1, 2, 3, 12, 13, and 14 are books for children under nine years; numbers 5, 6, and 16 are historical; numbers 7, 8, and 17 are poetry; numbers 3, 14, and 19 are scientific. The arrangement is miscellaneous, since I think a variety in starting a library will give an opportunity to the local librarian to observe which books are read mostly, and thus in what departments of literature it would be well to make additions to the library.

MAMIE A. ALLEN.

After those supplies necessary to a well conducted school as Bibles, song books, etc., those works that will enable the teacher to prepare the lesson well: Concordance, Bible dictionary, church history, etc., etc. The librarian should seek to build up the library in these respects first, I think. Supposing a library well supplied with these essential works first, I give the following list:—

For children:—

SCIENTIFIC. ILLUSTRATED.

1. "Wonders of the Vegetable World;" Wonder Library for Young Folks.
2. "Half Hours in the Tiny World;" Half Hour Series.
3. "Half Hours in the Deep;" Half Hour Series.
4. "Frolicsome Frisk and His Friends," by Mrs. Tenny.

BIOGRAPHY.

5. "Poor Richard's Story," by Henry C. Watson.

PATRIOTIC.

6. "Young Invincibles," by I. H. Anderson.
7. "Dora Darling and Little Sunshine," by Jane G. Austin.

CLASSIC.

8. "Little Lord Fauntleroy," by Mrs. Burnett.
9. "Little Women," by L. M. Alcott.

TRAVEL.

10. "Zigzag Journeys Around the World," by Butterworth.

For Intermediates and Seniors:—

11. "Successward," by Edward Bok.
12. "Pushing to the Front," by Marden.
13. "Self Made Men in America," by Grover Cleveland.
14. "Poor Boys Who Became Famous," by Mrs. Bolton.
15. "Girls Who Became Famous," by Mrs. Bolton.
16. "Westward, Ho!" by Kingsley.
17. "Scottish Chiefs," by Jane Porter.
18. "Life of George Washington," by Henry C. Watson.
19. "Intellectual Life," by Hamerton.

SCIENTIFIC.

20. "The Story of Earth and Man," by Sir John W. Dawson.

It is hard to stop at twenty, but I have chosen books of story, biography, science, and travel, inspirational books, that teach high ideals and noble thoughts, for I have always believed that one reason so many people are content with the material things of life is because their minds were not fired with high examples in childhood and youth. Boys, for instance, naturally like stories of adventure and heroism. Give them lives of true heroes to read, examples of patriotism, etc., and they will not seek the false excitement of dime novels. LOUISE PALFREY.

"I send you list of books, but I hardly know which to select, there are so many excellent ones."

1. "Child's History of England," by Charles Dickens.

To the Saints and Friends of Central Illinois District:—Upon the organization of the new district known as the Central Illinois district by members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the further recommendation of the appointment of Elder J. D. Stead as Bishop's agent for said district, all parties interested will please take notice of the appointment of Bro. Stead as agent of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church in and for the same. Very respectfully,

REUNION NOTICES.

A spiritual feast is anticipated by those who are making preparations for the Independence, Missouri, district reunion, to be held at Washington Park, from August 24 to September 3. Beautiful grounds, shade, pavilion, abundance of water, and very reasonable rates for provisions for both man and beast. Four miles from Independence, and right on the electric line running from Kansas City to Independence, and a magnificent place for camping, with every desired convenience within easy reach. Tents of most any size can be secured if the committee is notified in time, at very reasonable rates—from two dollars to three dollars per tent. Some of the most able ministers of the church will be present to interest and instruct, and there is no reason to doubt that an unusual time of refreshing will be enjoyed. No pains will be spared, by the committee, in seeking to promote the comfort and gospel entertainment of all who attend.

It is believed that all the Saints within a large radius should feel a special interest in the annual reunions that are held in the Independence district, and especially those that are held so near to Independence and Kansas City, where, if a special effort is put forth by the Saints, thousands of people can be attracted to these meetings; so let the adjoining districts, and the members scattered throughout Missouri and Kansas, and elsewhere, keep their minds on the date and make arrangements to attend and participate in, and it is hoped it will prove one of the most enriching spiritual seasons ever enjoyed at such gatherings. Your little or big sacrifices to come may find ample remuneration in blessed recuperation of spirit and body. Do not allow trifles to keep you away. Come with consecrated minds, and uplifted, expectant hearts, and you will surely be nourished and made glad. There will be an abundance of room for those desiring to come in wagons and camp. For further particulars that may be desired, address Bishop R. May, Independence, Missouri.

Reunion committee, I. N. WHITE.
R MAY.
ELLIS SHORT.

The annual reunion of Rocky Mountain mission will be held at Pleasant Grove, Utah, September 1 to 9 inclusive. Saints are invited to bring teams, tents, and sociability, and enjoy the week together. The Saints of this mission do not enjoy the privileges accorded to our people in many places, and hence should make an earnest effort to so arrange their affairs as to be present at the annual gathering for a season of worship and encouragement. A portion of the time will be devoted to Sunday school work, and secretaries of the different schools are requested to send reports in sufficient time to Miss Hilda Andersen, Provo, Utah. We hope that brethren laboring in the mission will be present if at all practicable.

D. W. WIGHT.

The reunion of Northwest Kansas district will be held on Sr. Malinda Sloan's farm, seven miles southeast of Minneapolis, Ottawa county; will commence August 9, and last till the 19th. There will be a boarding tent, where meals can be had at cost, not to exceed ten cents a meal. Missionaries provided for free. All that can possibly do so, come prepared to keep themselves. Those having meals in charge wish to attend all the services. Plenty of wood and straw furnished free. As before, stoves have been procured for use of campers. Pasture convenient. Special effort will be made for comfort of all attending. As location is convenient to all parts of district, we hope for a good attendance. There will be speakers from abroad, besides our own missionary force. One of the general officers of the Sunday school association will be present to instruct in Sunday school and Religio work of especial interest to the young people. Any who will come by train, notify Mr. Orestas Resch, Minneapolis, Kansas; he will meet any trains night or day. Committee: William Landers, Stockton, Kansas; Mrs. Zelona Smith, Idylwild, Kansas; C. D. Carson, Vining, Kansas.

Important notice concerning reunion for Massachusetts district for 1900. Everybody come and bring their Book of Mormon to attend children's services on illustrated Book of Mormon lessons, that it is expected we shall have. Lesson outline for each day to be had on the grounds.

SR. L. A. BROWNE.

CHURCH RECORDER'S REQUEST TO REUNION OFFICERS.

I make this suggestion and request of presidents and secretaries of the various reunions held throughout the church, namely, that they see to it that a record is made of all baptisms that take place during their gatherings. By arrangement with the brethren who officiate in baptism, a copy of all names and items of birth, baptism, and confirmation (including who acted as speaker in each case) can be had by the secretary of each reunion, and this can be forwarded to me after it is past. Because of lack of this care, some names have been lost to record, and in other cases only imperfect records could be made, those from memory. Therefore I call attention to the need of care being taken, and if the presidents and secretaries will attend to it, the interests of the cause will be served.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 16. 2t

MISSIONARY APPOINTMENT.

To Whom It May Concern:—This is to notify all concerned, that Bro. O. H. Bailey is hereby appointed to labor in Eastern Iowa district as a general missionary. The Bishop concurs with me in this appointment. I bespeak for him the confidence of all.

J. W. WIGHT.

BOUNDARY LINES OF DISTRICTS, ETC.

It is necessary to have on record a description or statement of the boundaries of every district, for the use of the Presidency and other church officials. District presidents and secretaries are therefore requested to forward statements of the boundaries of their respective districts. They are also requested to give lists of names of branches in their districts. If boundaries have not been closely defined, or not specified at all, kindly so report, and as promptly as possible. If your district contemplates action on boundary lines, please report its present status, also its further action when taken. It is necessary to complete the record as soon as possible. District officials are requested to be prompt, that unnecessary correspondence may be avoided. Please do not omit list of names of branches in your district.

True Succession in Church Presidency

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

DR. M'GIFFERT ON CREEDS.

Founder's day was celebrated at the University of Chicago yesterday afternoon. Professors and students assembled in Kent Theater to listen to the founder's day address delivered by Dr. Andrew C. McGiffert, professor in Union Theological Seminary, New York City. So large a crowd came to hear him that many failed to gain admittance. He spoke for character as against creed.

Dr. McGiffert took for his text. "Follow Me," and spoke in part as follows:—

"'Follow me.' This is the great summons of the gospel to the twentieth century as well as to the first century. Much is said about creeds in these days. It is important to remind ourselves that not creed, but character, is the aim of Christianity.

CHRIST NOT PATTERN BUT GUIDE.

"What does it mean to follow Christ? Many now think it means to take Christ as a pattern, doing always what he would do in our place. This is not the genuine gospel idea of following Christ. Not only Paul, but Christ, declared faith to be the fundamental, all-controlling element in the Christian life. Faith means giving ourselves over in self-abandonment to be molded and controlled by him—allowing his spirit to take possession of us and transform us.

"This is genuine Christian character; to do his will not because we are commanded to do it, but because we have Christ's character. There is too much effort to copy Christ's deeds—too little effort to possess his spirit.

"There was a time when the church believed that every man not a Christian was a bad man; but that is past. Christians have grown saner and fairer. They honor virtue wherever they find it, and do not poison their moral sense and that of those about them, as they were prone to do, by throwing suspicion on the good man who is not a Christian.

BECOMING AN AGE OF DOGMA.

"I am inclined to think that the emphasis which so many are laying in these latter days upon creeds and ritual is due to the widespread loss of the old sense of the thorough difference between Christians and non-Christians. There should be some radical difference; and, not finding it so clearly as they once did in character, they are putting it in doctrine and ceremony. And this enlightened age is strangely enough becoming more and more an age of dogma and form.

"The cardinal difference between the Christian and the non-Christian is that the one follows Christ and the other does not. It is not that the one believes certain things which the other rejects and practices certain forms of worship. It is not that the one is like Christ and the other not. Conduct may be the same in both cases, but the spirit is different.

"Self-surrender involves humility. It is not hard for the weak and fallen and those who have failed in life to be humble and to yield themselves to Christ, but to the strong and courageous it is not easy. It is easy enough to condemn such a man and tell him that his virtue is a mere sham, but that is not always true. Moral strength is good in all circumstances."

ASSAILS FALSE HUMILITY.

"The Spirit of Christ makes men humble, not with the false humility which binds a man to his virtues and makes him think that he is worse than his neighbor, when perhaps he is not. There is a false humility masquerading in the guise of Christian humility which makes it necessary for a man to think himself the meanest of creatures. It is just as proper for a pure and honest man to know that he is pure and honest as for the impure and dishonest man to know that he is impure and dishonest. The Spirit of Christ makes a man humble by showing him larger opportunities. A great deal is put before him and discloses new depths and heights."—Chicago Tribune, July 2, 1900.

SPIRITUALISM.

F. W. (Williamsburg, Ky.): Is it true that the French astronomer Flammarion has forsaken Spiritualism? And if true, what made him renounce it?

It is true. The celebrated astronomer, the former light among the Spiritualists, today disowns their doctrines, disclaims even a book which he himself had presumably written under the guidance of Galilei, and in short declares that no living being has a right to claim having received any communication from the spirit of a deceased person. The cause of his change of opinion is this: Some time ago his master, Allan Kardec, had published a work which he modestly called "Genesis," and which the Spiritualists actually regarded as a kind of Bible of their faith. This work, he asserted, had been inspired to him by the spirit of Galilei, manifesting through a medium which was no other than M. Flammarion. A great part of "Genesis" was devoted to a description of the heavens, and among others contained also the statement that Jupiter had four satellites and Saturn eight. Now, since the the publication of "Genesis," astronomers discovered that each of these planets had a satellite more than announced in the book. M. Flammarion cannot imagine that Galilei should have committed such a big mistake, and consequently concludes that the great astronomer could not have dictated that statement. He supposes, therefore, that it was his own spirit, the "exteriorized" spirit of M. Flammarion, which only expressed the opinions held by his contemporary scientists with regard to those two planets, and which he himself had shared at the time of writing the "Genesis." M. Flammarion furthermore believes that all so-called spirit communications can be explained in the same manner. Professed spirits, for instance, have often dictated before him some poetry and music. After investigation he found that this poetry and music was always similar to that which either the medium or some of the attendants of the séance already had known, liked, or composed. From this he concludes that the spirits of the dead have nothing whatever to do with the phenomena attributed to them, and that these are due only to the "exteriorations" of the Spiritualists themselves. The admission of this theory destroys, of course, all the religion which the Spiritualists founded upon assumed spirit communication.—New York Tribune.

ETHNIC VIEW OF COLLEGE EDUCATION.

By I. W. Howerth, Professor of Political Economy in the Chicago University.

When we come to consider the increments of knowledge provided by higher education they are so numerous and important that it may seem in this respect to be completely fulfilling its function. It would be easy to name a long list of academic discoveries which have proven to be invaluable. There are two criticisms, however, which are at once suggested by an ethnic view of the subject. In the first place, knowledge is accumulated without regard to its possible social utilization. Much of it is, therefore, not appreciably dynamic. All knowledge is valuable, but all is not equally valuable. Higher education seems to proceed on the assumption that one discovery is as good as another. An illustration of what I mean may be found in the doctors' theses of our various universities. Many of them are on such subjects as the finale in Chaucer or the dative case in Sallust, which, however important from a linguistic standpoint, are not of present and pressing importance to the race. Some of them represent toilsome pursuit of insignificant bits of knowledge which, when found, are about as valuable to society as the individual acquirement of the power to balance a straw on one's nose. In the second place, higher education over emphasizes the importance of original investigation in comparison with intellectual organization and distribution. Its rewards are for the investigator. It is almost as much as a scholar's reputation is worth to undertake to popularize his knowledge. And yet the successful distributor of knowledge performs a vastly more important social service than the average original investigator. Many college and university professors hold their positions, not because they are teachers but because they have hunted down some more or less important bit of knowledge. This is why some of the worst possible teaching may be found in our universities. Some of us know by painful experience that this is true. These two defects in higher education an ethnic view will tend to remedy.

Among the progressive elements rightfully to be expected from higher education were cultured personalities specially adapted to the task of elevating the race to a higher plane of civilization. Here again much might be said in regard to what has been done. The roll of names of college men who have helped the world along is a long one. But after all it has been largely unconscious and incidental. These personalities have been developed primarily for themselves and not for the race. The spirit of higher education is still individualistic. The 150,000 young men and young women now in our higher institutions of learning are being trained not primarily for social service but for success, and if statistics show that the majority of them succeed higher education is content. But success is sometimes the opposite of social service. The fact that so many college men succeed may be a severe reflection on our colleges. It may indicate that they are merely trained to exploit their fellow-men. The race is not interested primarily in any one's success, but in the manner of his success. Does he produce heathful commodities? Does he increase wealth or illth? Does he promote life or death? Does he make the world a better place in which to live? These are the questions in which the race is interested.

The whole criticism of higher education from the ethnic point of view may be summed up in a few words. It is loosely organized from the standpoint of social economy. It is too conservative in everything but religion. It grinds out knowledge with almost contemptuous indifference to its social timeliness and use. More time is given, for instance, to the study of entomology than to the study of anthropology, to the study of bugs than to the study of men. Domestic science and sociology are of less importance than Latin and Greek. It turns out men and women with highly trained powers, but often without the spirit to use these powers in conscious service of the race. It is significant that the church is expected to provide this spirit by conversion. In evolutionary terminology the variations emphasized and produced by higher education are socially advantageous only when they happen to be so. There is too much waste. In a word, higher education acts unconsciously as an ethnic force. It is still under the sway of natural evolution. It illustrates the economy of nature and not the economy of mind.—Chicago Tribune, July 15, 1900.

THE WORD OF GOD.

I hear a Babel, an alarm of tongues,
And a wild whisper on the lips of Fear:
"Say, will the ancient Refuge of the Soul
Be broken down by rude irreverent hands?"

Nay, fear not, for God's truth is secure—
The Truth, the high Truth of Humanity.
It is the Light behind our broken light,
The fire whereat men warm their wintry hearts.

After the tug and roar of centuries,
The Word will still endure, immutable—
Still through the shadow of the letter shine,
As fire in ashes, as a star through cloud,
As soul behind the body. Rest in peace.

It will endure: no power can break or bind
Its inaccessible majesty and might.
It was anterior to Aldebaran;
And will endure, impeccable and strong,
And seraphs will climb onward in its light,
When Earth has faded as a whirl of smoke,
And the last sun withers in the wrinkling skies.
—Edwin Markham.

In an exhaustive and clearly written analysis of "Child-Study and its Relation to Education," in the August Forum, Prof. G. Stanley Hall, of Clarke University, makes a strong plea for paidology. He examines the objections advanced against the subjecting of children to research, and points out that if the data needed are gathered by parents as an office of love, that in paidology, as in natural science, love and research strengthen instead of interfering with each other. He cites the help which the mispronunciations of children have given to the clearer understanding of phonic laws and vowel changes, and points out various easy methods of gathering valuable data.

THEY have had a dispute in England this year in regard to the date of Easter. The astronomical full moon falls on April 15; the prayer book calendar says that if the full moon falls on Sunday, the following Sunday is Easter; so say the wiseacres, the legal Easter is April 22. But the prayer book table, distinguishing between the ecclesiastical and the real moon, puts the full moon on Saturday, the table making no pretense to astronomical exactness. Hence the perplexity of the moonstruck bankers, especially, who are in trouble to know which Monday is the legal bank holiday.—Chicago Tribune.

"MORMON CHURCH TO REUNITE."

We have received from two sources clippings from the Seattle, Washington, Post Intelligencer. It is similar to what occurred in the Chicago Record sometime in March last. We quote the one from the Intelligencer of July 5:—

MORMON CHURCH TO REUNITE.

An event of as great importance to the Saintly Mormon church as anything that has happened since the followers of Brigham Young were driven from Nauvoo to Utah, is about to take place. The church split is to be healed; the seceders are to be taken back within the fold and the parent body of the organization, so it is said, is about to absorb all the off-shoot organizations, some ten in number, that split away from the orthodox church just before the killing of Prophet Joseph Smith. In these outcasts, as they have been called for years past by the head organization in Utah, are about 30,000 souls. They are scattered in little colonies in the western states and across the line in Canada. Themselves not given to explaining the details of their creed or the troubles of the church, it is not to be wondered at that it is not generally known there is a difference between the Mormons scattered about in little groups on the western plains and the giant body that holds rule in the state of Utah. Yet it is said that hardly can it be found where any two of these scattered colonies can agree upon all points of their religion, and so they have made settlements distant from one another where they can practice and follow the dictates of their own consciences.

Some five months ago a movement was started in Utah, having as its object the cementing together of all the branches or stubs of the church. First came an order from President Snow, of the orthodox church in Utah, forbidding the practice of polygamy by any members of the church. This caught the eye of the Reorganized Church and of the sect known as the Hendrickites, the two strongest offshoots of the old church, and a correspondence ensued.

A month ago five commissioners from President Snow were appointed to visit in person the different colonies in the United States and Canada and endeavor to bring about a reconciliation. The work has progressed far enough at the present time, it is said, to warrant the assertion that a reunion will be had.

Among the five commissioners delegated to the work was Maxwell G. Boardman, of Salt Lake City, Utah, who arrived in Seattle yesterday en route to pay a visit to two colonies in British Columbia and one at Cardston, Alberta. Mr. Boardman is armed with full authority from the head of the Mormon church to settle the differences. He has been through Wyoming and Montana, where he says the branches of the Reorganized Church are ready and willing to flock back to the fold.

Mr. Boardman is a man past 60 years of age and has been a Mormon all his life. He is not a polygamist, however, he says, and never has been. Neither is he in sympathy with such practices. At the Hotel Seattle yesterday he talked freely of his mission, which he says he feels sure will be successful.

"There are nearly 30,000 seceders from the orthodox Mormon church," he said, "These are divided into many small branches, but with the exception of one sect known as the Hendrickites, all are of what is known as the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints. Joseph Hendricks is the leader of what is generally considered the most important branch of the seceders, and his following is especially strong in Missouri. All branches seceded because of the revelation Joseph Smith claimed to have had, directing him to establish the practice of plural marriages.

"Five months ago President Snow, the head of the orthodox church, issued a manifesto forbidding the further practice of polygamy. The people of Utah did not take the matter very seriously, for proclamations of a similar nature have been made before. However, I wish to say that polygamy is not generally practiced in Utah. A few exceptions may be made among the older Mormons, but among the younger it has become a dead letter.

"When this manifesto reached the eyes of the Hendrickites they sent two representatives to confer with representatives of the other branches of the Reorganized Church, and the result was that commissioners were sent to Utah to confer with President Snow and the twelve apostles with a view to securing a coalition.

"The commissioners were given encouragement. They were assured that polygamy was to be permanently eliminated from the faith and that church officials would not countenance its resumption. The dissenters then asked that in case they should return to the fold they be given a representation in the apostles' quorum and the first presidency. This demand has retarded negotiations somewhat, but will eventually be settled satisfactorily.

"There are something like 350,000 Mormons, and the seceders figure that with a representation of 30,000 they should be recognized in some material way.

"This reunion has long been sought by the orthodox Mormon church. One of the main reasons, outside of a union of strength, is a little square of land owned by the Hendrickites in the town of Independence, Missouri. It fell to them when the main body of the church came West, and it is the one spot hallowed by Mormon tradition. The Mormon church of Utah is desirous of securing this tract, which can only be done by getting the Hendrickites back into the church.

"If a prophecy made by Joseph Smith is ever fulfilled a Mormon temple will be erected on this square, and around it will be built a city of Zion. The Mormon authorities in Utah are very anxious to have it for their own, and on its account will grant more to the seceders than otherwise.

"The Hendrickites are aware of this prophecy and also of the desire of the orthodox church to fulfill it, and, therefore, are prepared to make their demands. As long as they hold on to this hallowed land they have it in their power to fulfill or not fulfill the prophecy. At the present time they are too poor as an organization, to carry out the will of the prophet, even should they desire to do so, and therefore the Utah church is the only one that can do it.

"In spite of the attacks that have been made upon it, and in spite of the disfavor it has fallen into away from home, the Mormon church was never so prosperous as at the present time. The tithing system, which was allowed to lapse during the times of depression, has again been called into action, and a large amount of money is flowing into the ecclesiastical coffers.

"A new and vigorous set of men are in charge of affairs, and they are seeing to it that the people yield one tenth of all their substance to the church, with the result that prosperity is abundant. This being true, it is possible for the orthodox church to take back the seceders and fulfill the prophecy of Joseph Smith by building another city of Zion at Independence. This, I believe, will all eventually be done, and during its progress the Mormon church will continue to grow. It will never be a political body, and was not during the Roberts campaign. It is for a Mormon first, of course, but that man must be worthy."

Mr. Boardman expects to complete his work by August 1, by which time he says the other commissioners will be through, when all will report to President Snow, and in all probability a proclamation to a united Mormon church will be issued shortly thereafter.

Anyone acquainted with the underhand methods pursued by the Utah church to get before the world false impressions which are intended to place that church in a favorable light could readily guess the source of the Intelligencer's information, even if the reporter had not said that it came from a "commissioner" from the Utah faction. The article abounds in misrepresentations and false statements. We will notice a few briefly.

In speaking of the "offshoots" of the "orthodox" church, the article says there were "some ten in number, that split away from the orthodox church just before the killing of Prophet Joseph Smith." Here history has been misrepresented. The "factions" did not come into existence until after the death of Joseph Smith. When Joseph Smith was killed the church was intact. The factions were created by influential men rebelling against the usurpation of power by Young. Strang, Hedrick, Rigdon, William Smith, and others, refused to follow Brigham Young, and each had followers. Every one of those men were staunch supporters of Joseph Smith the Prophet when he was at the head of the church, and factions came into existence because Young and his adherents corrupted the doctrines and practices of the church. And for this "commissioner" from Utah to represent to the reporter of the Intelligencer that the splits occurred before the death of Joseph Smith is but in harmony with the underhanded methods of the Utah church to represent to the world that the Utah faction is the "orthodox" church.

Not content with such distortion of the facts of history we are next presented with another misrepresentation when the article states that the scattered factions are not given to explaining the "details of their creed or the troubles of the church." In this way is it accounted for that the fact is not well known that there is a difference between the other factions and that of the Utah church. The untruthfulness of this will be seen, when it is known that since 1860 there has been a paper published, one of the main objects of which has been to offset the pernicious doctrines presented by the church in Utah as religious principles. That paper is the official organ of the Reorganized Church, the HERALD. The elders of the Reorganized Church have for years tried to get the elders of the Utah church to debate in public the differences existing between them. Until recently they have been unsuccessful, the Utah people absolutely refusing to meet us. We have nothing to conceal, they have. That is why they will not meet our men.

We are told that when President Snow abolished (?) the practice of polygamy that "correspondence ensued" between the Utah church and the Reorganized Church and the Hedrickites looking to a union. We cannot say whether the Hedrickites did or not; but as for the Reorganized Church, we can say that we have had no correspondence whatever on the question with the Utah people. And we can say farther that polygamy is not the only issue between the Reorganization and the Utah people. We do not believe that polygamy is a dead issue; for, from statements made by their elders and in their official organs, we are of the opinion that the doctrine is held to yet, though not openly, as a sacred institution. If it were abolished, forever abolished, the differences between that church and this would be far from settled. The Utah church has taught and does yet teach many things other than polygamy which we believe to be diametrically opposed to the teachings of the Bible or of Joseph Smith. Polygamy is one of the issues, but not the only one contested by the Utah people and us.

Joseph Hendricks, we are told, is the leader of the strongest branch of seceders. That's a new one on us. We never heard of the man.

"All branches seceded," we are told, "because of the revelation Joseph Smith claimed to have had, directing him to establish the practice of plural marriages." That's exactly one of the points our elders have been anxious to debate publicly with the polygamists. The elders of the Reorganization are confident they can show that Joseph Smith never claimed to have had such a revelation, that the "claim" was made first about eight years after Joseph Smith was killed at Carthage. If Joseph Smith ever went on record on the question of polygamy, it was in opposition to the condemnable practice. He did condemn it in unmistakable language.

As to the statement that the Hendrickites (Hedrickites) "sent two representatives to confer with representatives of the other branches of the Reorganized Church," with the result that commissioners were sent to Utah to confer with the authorities there we will say this: The Hedrickites did send representatives to us, and they also sent representatives to Utah. The Reorganization, however, conferred only with the Hedrickites. This church sent no commissioners to Utah with a view to securing a coalition. We have sent elders to Utah, but they have gone as missionaries with the object of converting those people by preaching to them, not to negotiate terms of coalition.

Now as for the numbers of the Reorganized Church. The article says there are in the aggregate outside the Utah church 30,000; but the Reorganized Church alone numbers about 44,000 actual members. The Recorder's books showed last March an actual membership of 43,824, as shown by his report to conference in April. Thus one can easily figure that by the most conservative estimates the Reorganization wields an influence among not less than 100,000 people, and we believe that such estimate is more conservative than that which places the numbers of the Utah church above 200,000.

We have touched but a few of the misrepresentations of the article in the Intelligencer. There are many others which we will not take the space to answer. We have presumed that the Intelligencer was misinformed by the wily commissioner from Utah; but does it care to make matters right by presenting to its readers the true situation?

PRESIDENT SMITH IN DETROIT.

President Joseph Smith has been quite well received by the press of Detroit. In the Detroit Evening News, for July 14, is printed an "interview," which quite fairly represents him in his views. It also contains a fairly representative cut of President Smith. The News says in part:—

"We are known as Josephites, while the people of Utah are called Brighamites," Elder Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, told the News. He is in Detroit to proselyte for his church, and says the Latter Day Saints are the descendants of the original church. "We differ from the Mormons in that we do not believe in polygamy," he explained to a News reporter. "In the doctrine of covenants it states: 'We declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband.' This was the original Mormon belief, and was accepted by all until August 29, 1852, when Brigham Young declared for polygamy. The first sermon was preached in its favor the same day by Orson Pratt. None of my family accepted this teaching, and I soon began to work as a missionary against the spread of the obnoxious creed.

"I was born at Kirtland, Ohio, November 6, 1832. My family moved to Illinois in 1839. I was educated in the public schools. In 1844 my father, the originator of the Mormon faith, was killed. A press was destroyed at Nauvoo, and father with sixteen others were arrested for riot. They obtained bail, but were soon after arrested for treason. They were confined in the Carthage jail. Before being tried a mob assembled, and both Joseph Smith and his brother were shot. When I came of age I took up the crusade against polygamy. My followers then numbered 300. Now there are 50,000 baptized believers. I live at Lamoni, Iowa, where I have been editor of the Saints' Herald for 30 years. I have been to Utah four times as a missionary against polygamy."

SCHWEINFURTH HAS RECANTED.

George Jacob Schweinfurth, the Rockford Messiah, has concluded that he was a much deluded man, and has turned squarely about on many of the doctrines advocated by him, and is now a disciple of Mrs. Eddy. His "heaven" he has abandoned, and his community will follow him into Christian Science. In telling why he left the "church triumphant," he says, as reported by the Chicago Tribune:—

I am naturally a man of revolutionary ideas, especially as to social and commercial questions. I believe in the order that existed in the early Christian church—they had all things in common. I do not believe the Holy Ghost made a mistake. Worldly minded men cannot conceive such a condition as Jesus and the apostles sought and found. Whereas I lacked respect in a great degree for the social institution of marriage, I came to view it in a different light and regard marriage as the most nearly heavenly thing on earth. As to the question of community of goods, that is something that will have to be worked out by society. It is a state where selfishness is at the lowest possible ebb. It seems the highest possible attainment of the spirit of altruism. To insist on such a spirit now would shut one out from the world at large and minimize one's usefulness.

I never have claimed to be the Messiah. My people have had a way of speaking of me in that sense, but I never have claimed it or taught it, except in the sense that it is given to all men to be divine. Our plan was that of the early Christian church—of having all things in common.

Although we were a large household, we had few incidents to mar the general happiness. I changed my ideas because I saw that the animosity of the community towards what was wrongly considered our standard of conduct brought many painful experiences. It is easier to be wrong than right.

This is a day of "Messiahs." Many come forth claiming to be Christ or some of his angels, as Gabriel, etc. Usually their influence is not extended; but in the case of the "Rockford Messiah," the influence wielded by him was quite powerful to an extent. He held his followers with peculiar force.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

So great is his influence among them that they have swallowed their pride and have followed him into a new religion. Those people cannot but feel wounded and ashamed to think how they have been deluded in paying divine homage to a man, one who now claims to be a man of "revolutionary ideas." They have quite unitedly admitted their error, yet their confidence in the man is such that they follow him even now.

It is well that the Bible has told us so plainly how the Savior will appear at his second coming, else we might be deceived by some of the pretenders. Well grounded Bible believers, however, are not usually imposed upon.

It is easy for us to see by such as the Schweinfurth movement, how easy it is for people to be deluded. It also aids to appreciate somewhat the position of the Jews in rejecting the Christ. They believed him an impostor, as we believe and know Schweinfurth and others are who claim now to be Christ. We can better realize, too, by these incidents how beautiful was the faith of those who through the garb of humanity perceived the divine in the Savior of man, who came as did other men.

These instances of the pretenders bring the matter right home, and we grasp material facts. In thinking back into the past the happenings and things of those old times become somewhat ethereal in our minds, and we think of Christ as a divine and all powerful being, one who unfailingly bore the impress and face of undeniable divinity. We are inclined to forget that he was a man like as are we, and we wonder why it took faith and a revelation from above to ground those of his time in the belief that he was Christ. Then we are reminded of his human garb, his flesh, even his temptations, and understand why many thought him an impostor while few saw his divinity. Being of the flesh and subject to human conditions, it indeed took a faith strengthened from above to recognize his heavenly attributes and mission. It enhances the beauty of the faith of the old time saints to thus see it, and our own faith is at the same time increased and our hopes strengthened. Surely he guards his people and will come to them soon.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

President Joseph Smith, under date of July 16, writes from Detroit, Mich., as follows:—

The papers of the city forecasted my probable course as a preacher and divined that I would measure some of the differences between our Utah friends and ourselves as churches. So, my work being cut out for me, at 10:30 yesterday morning I proceeded to show our attitude toward the church in Utah, by presenting our reasons for holding to monogamous marriages rather than to plural. There were six Utah elders including Wood, Adams, Condie, and Dotson, in line to hear me. I felt well, had excellent liberty, and my effort was well received. How received by the Utah contingent, I do not know.

I spoke again in the evening to a house full. Among the auditors was Prof. McChesney, professor of languages in one of the leading universities of the state, now retired from active teaching. He was passing, dropped in, became interested, and stayed to hear. I was introduced to him at the close. He stated he would attend tonight.

It was very warm all day. The hall was crowded.

Under date of July 4, Bro. A. N. Bishop writes from Cardiff, Wales, as follows:—

We have had large congregations listening to us on the highways with good attention. We have sown the seed, and leave the result with our heavenly Father. I hope in due season we may reap. What I need very badly is a good supply of tracts on "The First Principles of the Gospel," to give to the multitudes on the street. Is it possible to get a supply? I believe there may be some people in the church in America from Wales who, in their love for the land of their birth, will be willing to send me a good supply for the summer months. It is rather hard to reach the people, and the only successful way is by out-door preaching; and if we had a good supply of church literature to distribute freely among the people it might bear some precious fruit.

On July 16, Bro. C. J. Hunt writes from Deloit, Iowa:—

I have been cheered and blessed in my labors as bishop. As a general rule I find the Saints prospering and feeling hopeful in the Master's cause. Letters of substantial worth and abiding faith and confidence in the final triumph of the great latter-day work reach me from many points of the district.

Bro. E. L. Henson writes from San Antonio, Texas, July 15, as follows:—

On July 5, bade farewell to loved ones, and with a sad heart left for my mission field, southwestern Texas. Though sad to leave loved ones, yet I was glad that we could make the sacrifice of separation for the gospel's sake. I met Bro. Sheppard on the train, and we had a pleasant journey to Ft. Worth, where we arrived about five p. m. We met Sr. Jenny McFarland, and could not resist her pressing invitation to supper. Met Bro. McFarland, of St. Louis, and spent the evening pleasantly with him. In the evening we left for Coldwater, Texas, near where the Texas Central district conference convened next day. On the tenth went to San Antonio, where I met Bro. I. P. Baggerly. Rain has hindered our meetings, but we will labor together in this mission, and desire the co-operation of the Saints and friends, that the work may prosper.

Elder H. E. Moler writes from Pecatonica, Ill., July 18:—

Bro. A. J. Keck and myself are at this point engaged in tent work, and are having fair interest. We will continue as long as the prospect is encouraging. The rains have hindered us some.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We wish to call the attention of the readers of the HERALD to Bro. Kelley's article in this issue on "Clark Braden's Indorsements." He shows up the weakness of Mr. Braden's position, in strong language. Bro. White also has something to say on the question in his letter.

A clipping from the Beardstown, Ill., Illinoian Star, sent us by Elder I. N. White, indicates that he has succeeded in announcing his lectures and sermons in the daily edition of that paper. It also indicates he is "at work."

In the letter columns, our readers will see a letter from J. W. Whitley, who says he has looked in vain for an elder to come his way. He thinks there is a good place for an opening where he lives. Elders in that field, please take note.

We have received a marked copy of the Vincennes (Ind.) Commercial, for July 13, in which is the notice of Bro. M. Ulmer, who has started a free reading room in that city, wherein he has some of the standard church literature. He is to be highly commended for his enterprise and zeal, and any who have good literature to spare might help him out some. No doubt he will be pleased to receive anything in the line of church literature. As a reason for establishing the reading room, the notice says: "Our aim is the betterment of man and to advance the Christian religion to help to point to the Lamb of God. All those who are seeking salvation to their soul are invited to come, the ministers as well as all others."

The Chautauquan for July is full of good things; but one article especially was of more interest to us than the others. It was "The Story of the Little Bighorn." It is a description of Custer's last fight, and was written by a full-blooded Sioux Indian.

By a clipping sent us, taken from the Boonville Advertiser, we notice that Bro. J. A. Tanner has gone into print in that paper to refute the statements that the "Latter Day Saints are a branch of the Mormons and they have discarded polygamy." He gives the readers of the Advertiser plainly to understand that we are in the direct line of succession, and gives a brief but concise history of the church and points out some of the difference between us and the Utah Mormons.

THE August issue of the Arena, which is now published in New York and edited by N. O. Fanning and John Emery McLean, contains an article on "Cromwell and Chamberlain." by the Rev. Geo. Walters. "The Fallible Physician," by W. T. Larned, and "New England Girl Graduates," by M. E. Blood, are also prominent features. Among the other articles are: "Failures in English Temperance Reform," by James Dowman; "Natural Selection, Competition, and Socialism," by Herman Whitaker; "Early Retirement from Business," by Townsend Cushman; "The American Psychic Atmosphere," by Charles Johnston, M.R.A.S; "Some Antiquity in America," by Frances Hart; "The Expansion of Farm Life," by K. CLARK BRADEN'S INDORSEMENTS.

If there was before any doubt on the part of the readers of the Herald as to the Rev. Clark Braden receiving the indorsement of his people as asked by Elder I. N. White of the Reorganized Church, certainly such must be dispelled by glancing over the attempt of Mr. Braden to meet Mr. White's demand as shown in Mr. Braden's circular of himself now upon our table. In this circular is found the opinion of Mr. Braden of himself to be that he is a very great man and a wonderful debater, sound in Christain doctrine and honorable in his methods; but the difficulty seems to be in getting anybody else to say so.

Elder White, who has held several debates with Clark Braden and learned at the conclusion of these debates that the Christian (or Campbellite) people whom Mr. Braden claimed to represent, were in the habit of turning around at close of the debate and saying that Braden was not sound in the faith in their church anyway, and that they were not responsible for what he taught, last January made an attempt to stop this child's play work, and demanded that before he could recognize Mr. Braden further as a proper opponent, that he present an indorsement from the accredited representatives of his own church as follows: "1. That he [Braden] is sound in the faith as they hold and teach it. 2. That he is a Christian gentleman to an opponent." Had not Mr. Braden attempted to comply with this demand, the claim might have been made with some show of propriety that White did not care to debate, and therefore made this demand. But Elder White seems to have measured his man to exactness. Of all the attempted efforts at indorsement published by Mr. Braden, not one states that he is sound in the faith as that church holds and teaches it; or that he is a Christian gentleman to an opponent. If Mr. Braden undertook to comply with the demand of Elder White, why this failure, if he is sound in the faith as the Christians (Campbellites) hold and teach it, and is a Christian gentleman to an opponent? It is entirely too weak for the editor of the Christian Evangelist, as Mr. Braden represents him, to say: "There is no doubt but that the church to which he belongs would give him a certificate of Christian character as good as any Mormon elder or representative Mormon could secure." Well, if they would do so, why don't they do it, Mr. Editor of the Evangelist, and end the matter. A certificate of Christian character would require him to be "sound in the faith as you represent it," and that is what Elder White asks for. Nor is it sufficient to indorse your man, Braden, "As a proper representative of the Disciples of Christ in such discussions." The question is, Can you indorse him as a Christian gentleman to an opponent, and sound in the faith as your church holds and teaches it. The fact that Elder White stands ready to meet your man anywhere and everywhere on fair propositions if you will make the indorsement is sufficient on his part. Why should Elder White discuss with Mr. Braden, or anybody else, if such are not sound in the faith they represent. Mr. White as a professed representative of the Christian faith as it is in the Bible, cannot afford to require less than he has. Indorse your man if he is your representative; if he is not, say so. E. L. KELLEY.

PARADISE: WHERE IS IT?

Where is heaven, who can tell it?
Answer, ye who only know;
Where abides the Holy Spirit,
Where the Christian graces grow.

The foregoing verse from the Saints' Harp speaks only of conditions, not of location. The writer of this brief article has frequently been requested to write for publication his understanding of the Bible concerning the location of paradise, and as many times promised to do so, but has never before even tried to make the promise good. He wishes at the outset to confess to a sense of neglect of duty in this regard.

There may be, however, one or more good reasons for such delay. One at least is, that while there are differences of opinion on this and a few other topics properly belonging to the study of God's word, particularly that portion setting forth the happy conditions consequent upon acceptance of, and obedience to, the terms of reconciliation between God and man, as well as those of unhappiness, as the penalty for disregarding them, and one ventures to write his views, as gathered from the word, he is sure to run counter to those of some one else, predicated upon the same divine word, who feels that justice to these, and the common welfare, demand the presentation of the other side, that the correct conclusion may be drawn, and "the unity of the faith" be secured. Controversy follows, which is of necessity unpleasant to the editorial staff and many readers as well; when, after all, each writer holds to his former views, and many of the readers are as unsettled as ever. And yet, we expect the advocates of any religious belief which does not agree with ours to "reason together" with us, hoping they will certainly see that we have the truth, and willingly accept it. Then why not reason together among ourselves? Perchance we may "see eye to eye."

The other reason is, that so far from desiring notoriety is the writer of this brief article, that he has more than once resolved to let his promise go by default, and take the consequences, and has there let it rest, till another sermon on the subject has called forth new resolve, and upon repeated request, repeated the promise to write. As often have the promptings of the Spirit been felt, to write, and as many times quenched. After some years of such procrastination we humbly make the attempt. Not courting controversy, nor seeking notoriety, but subject (as all writings are) to criticism, and willing to surrender erroneous views for correct ones.

While at the late General Conference, in conversation with a fellow-servant, we expressed a desire that such instruction could be received, by consultation or otherwise, as would enable all to "speak the same things" on, Where is paradise? Which day of the week was the crucifixion? When was the mission of Christ to hades? and a few other such questions differently answered by different ones. The other replied, "There is no importance attaching to those things. What we want is light on consecration, the gathering, and the redemption of Zion. Something relating to what we have to do." While the church is a solid unit on "what we must do to be saved," so far as "the principles of the doctrine of Christ" are concerned, the organic structure of the church, the spiritual gifts, etc., it seems to us that while one holds that paradise is "the third heaven" (2 Cor. 12:1-4), and another that it cannot be, because Jesus said to Mary, "Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended," etc.; while one regards the scripture to warrant the conclusion that when Jesus said, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit," he descended to paradise with the repentant thief, rather than ascended to the "third heaven," "paradise;" and another recognizes the language of Jesus to Mary as speaking of his bodily ascension, after his resurrection, thus not conflicting with his statement to the thief, which is also the view set forth in "What is Man?" by Bro. J. R. Lambert, it may well be said of us, that we are no more in the unity of the faith than other Christian people; that we are not all speaking the same things. Some good brother will say, "Let those things alone; do not talk of them; they are of no import."

Let us see: As many as fifteen years ago the writer was assisting a brother, who, while pressing the necessity of baptism, resorted to the center of the earth theory for the location of paradise, in order to reconcile Jesus' words to the thief with those to Nicodemus in John 3:5, and then turned to the writer, and said to the audience, "Bro. Thomas will tell you that that thief was a baptized follower of Christ." What was to be done? To keep silence, would be to surrender honest convictions. To reply in the gentlest manner, would be to leave the hearers (mostly of the world) to say, "Dissension." And yet these things of no importance?

It may be said that was so long ago that it does not need any attention now. Twice since have we listened to a discourse, on district conference occasions, when the speakers located paradise in the heart of the earth, next door to hell, in order to excuse Jesus from taking the thief to heaven without baptism; also to make possible the conversation recorded in Luke 16 as having taken place between Abraham and the rich man, as well as to reconcile his words to Mary; and what is still more, not to allow his call at paradise to interfere with his three days' mission to hades. On these occasions, silence was wisdom, nor yet would it be permissible to make use of any subsequent opportunity to publicly antagonize these brethren, which was never done. Neither is this brief writing for the sake of contention. We only ask the privilege to give a few reasons why the position of paradise adjacent to hell, to harmonize all these passages of scripture, is not necessary. The one concerning Jesus' words to Mary is already given. In "What is Man?" (not having one at hand we cannot give page) Bro. Lambert sets forth the thought, that Christ took the thief (both in spirit, the bodies left hanging on the crosses) to paradise (up, not down, 2 Cor. 12:2-4), left him there, "received his divinely appointed mission to hades," and quickly descended to the heart of the earth, and began his work in the prison house. It may be urged that even this would require time enough to destroy the truth of—

Three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

Acts 8 declares that after the baptism of the eunuch,—

The Spirit caught away Philip, and he was found at Azotus.

I wonder how long time the Spirit required for this transportation of Philip, and how much might the velocity be accelerated when both were spirit entities. It is much easier to comprehend such a possibility than to reconcile Christ being three days and three nights in the earth (Matt. 12:40) with the popular mistake that Jesus was crucified on Friday, expiring at three p. m., and rising early on the first day of the week.

Some one will say, Bro. O. B., you'd better go slow, for those in high authority, as well as all history, are against you on the day of the crucifixion. That doesn't matter so long as we have the New Testament story and the President of the church behind us. We were in the Herald Office one morning after a General Conference a few years ago, a number having gathered in, when Bro. Joseph came in. Some one asked him, "On which day of the week was Jesus crucified?" He replied, "Evidently on Thursday," as he passed through without stopping. We have also been asked to write up the evidences on this subject, and partially consented, though with no positive promise. We would not have alluded to it at all in this, only that it incidentally came in as bearing on the subject under consideration.

Only one thought more, relative to the conversation between Abraham and the rich man. We plainly lay down the proposition that distance is no barrier to spirit communication. Take the claims of Christian Science, for example. We hope none will judge us as heterodox for admitting that instances of visible healing do occur by the power of mind over body, and possibly the agency of one mind over another may be first employed in this theory. Nor can we accuse the advocates of this system of falsifying when they declare that the healing influence of the mind of the science healer in Chicago, is simultaneously felt by the patient in California. If such a possibility exists among minds dwelling in the flesh, how much easier to comprehend and believe the account of the conversation between Abraham and the rich man, though as distant as is heaven from hell. If any reader doubts the reasonableness of this last thought, please read Bro. D. R. Baldwin's article on telepathy in Herald for June 13. Paul says in Philippians 1:23,—

Having a desire to depart and to be with Christ; which is far better.

To be with Christ is to be in paradise. (See Luke 23:43.) Second Corinthians 12:2-4 makes the third heaven and paradise the same place, and Revelation 19:1 makes heaven the place where John heard much people saying,— Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God.

Having answered all the reasons given for believing paradise to be in the earth, more scripture is unnecessary. While our individual belief on these abstract subjects does not in the least affect our salvation upon the terms of the gospel, this one thing does follow as an injury to the work on account of expressed difference of opinion. It gives the world, Christian and unchristian, a chance to say the same thing of us that was expressed by the representatives of what we are pleased to call heathen religions, at the world's congress in 1893:—

Christians of America, agree among yourselves, and then come over and convert us heathens.

Jesus said,—

Father, . . . I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me . . . out of the world, that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee.

But you say, "These are non-essential." Baptism is considered a non-essential by nearly all the Christian world. We must be one as God and Christ are one. Who ever read of the Father and the Son disagreeing on nonessentials? In bonds,

O. B. THOMAS.

THE ROCK.

In the Saints' Herald of June 13, I find an article under the above caption. One reason why I presume to notice this, in this manner, is because in times past I have read in the Herald at least two articles bearing upon the same subject, which ran in the same strain. The subject matter of our theme — "the rock" — is one that should not be lightly handled, because our eternal salvation depends entirely upon our feet being firmly placed upon the rock, upon which Jesus himself built He most assuredly did not build upon himself, further than the position he occupied as the chief corner stone of the foundation of the church he built.

The chief cause for this writing is based upon the fact that in the articles above referred to, the eternal Father appears to get no credit for anything farther than his revealment to Peter "the divinity of Jesus Christ." This was one of the objects Jesus had in view upon the minds of his apostles with whom he held this conversation, as shown by his closing request. But it was not the only one, which may clearly be observed by reading and noting the full expression of the language used; and to my mind it does not need any deep grammatical construction, from the fact that the minds of those he was speaking to were looked upon as the most ignorant class of the Jewish nation. The other impression Jesus wished to and did eventually make was, that the church he was about to build would be built by him in full accord with the revealed will of his Father unto him; and I am somewhat surprised at the manner in which those are spoken of who dare believe that the revealed will of God the Father is the rock upon which Jesus the Christ built his church, and that he, Jesus, as the divine builder, was the chief corner stone in the formative structure of that church.

Jesus was not the rock spoken of in the answer to Peter, upon which that structure was built. Jesus never made such a claim, neither did his apostles, who received their instructions from him; nor did the Apostle Paul, who was as one born out of due time. The Apostle Paul's language is this:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord.—Eph. 2: 20, 21, I. T.

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.—1 Cor. 3: 11, I. T.

Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build my church," and he became the chief corner stone in the foundation of that building. What is a foundation? The basis or lower part of an edifice. This is the primal meaning. Jesus was going to build a church. The basis or foundation of this church was eternal principles. The first basic principle, or in other words the first course in this foundation, is faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. (Acts 16: 31.) And this first course in the foundation is one solid stone, extending beneath all the walls and corners of the building to be erected, thus becoming in fact the chief corner stone. The remainder of this foundation is composed, in the several courses, of the principles of repentance from dead works, of baptism in water for the remission of sins, of the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, of the resurrection of the dead, and of the eternal judgment (Heb. 6: 1, 2), six fundamental principles or courses in this foundation.

This foundation was laid upon a rock, which cannot be shaken. The revealed will of God, the great architect of this building, in whom we must place implicit faith, for "without faith it is impossible to please him" (Heb. 11: 6) who revealed his will to his first begotten Son who became the great builder of this church. The above described foundation built upon this rock became the foundation of the apostles and prophets.

We are given to understand by the revelations of God, given to us, that away back in the eternities, when the formation of this earth was projected and its purposes formulated in the mind of God as a residence for man, in the council that was called, Jesus, "the brightest and best of the sons of the morning," was chosen to become the great builder, supervisor, and finisher of the firmament, as we now observe it, and of the earth in all of its past and present beauties, and eventually to bring the whole up to that perfection that it shall be in that finished condition, suitable to present to his Father, the great Architect. Jesus then will have finished the work he had been given to do, and all this for the benefit of man and the glory of God. Speaking of this Son of God, I read:—

All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made which was made.—John 1: 3, I. T.

During all the formative part of this work, and indeed until the time appointed for his coming to this earth to perform the work which would become necessary for the redemption of mankind from the effects of the fall of Adam, he, Jesus, had had the companionship and counsel of his heavenly Father. The question then naturally arises, when Jesus came to earth for the purpose of redeeming man from the effects of the fall, and also to establish a plan by which mankind might by obedience to the requirements of that plan be brought back to the presence of and an eternal inheritance with God, did Jesus do all that he done here entirely upon his own volition, based upon his remembrance of that which he had learned before? The answer comes through the voice of prophecy, the history of events as they transpired and his own word, he did not. God, speaking of the coming of Jesus to Moses, said:—

I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.—Deut. 18: 18, I. T.

When Jesus began to be about thirty years of age, and had passed through the door into the sheepfold,—

Then Jesus was led up of the Spirit, into the wilderness, to be with God. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, and had communed with God, he was afterwards an hungered, and was left to be tempted of the devil.—Matt. 4: 1, 2, I. T.

And Satan found himself completely nonplussed.

For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.—1 John 3: 3, I. T.

We discover that Jesus held communion with God for forty days and forty nights. In this time we have a right to presume he had received his instruction in regard to his mission here and its final outcome, as may be discovered from his teachings to his disciples and others,—

For I can of mine own self do nothing; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father who hath sent me.—John 5: 31, I. T.

For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.—John 6: 38.

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory; but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him.—John 7: 16–18.

And the Father himself who sent me, hath borne witness of me.—John 5: 38.

Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of Man then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things. And he that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.—John 8: 28, 29, I. T.

Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye love me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father; for my Father is greater than I.—John 14: 28, I. T.

These are the words of Jesus the Christ, as given us by John the beloved disciple, and there is no evidence in them that he was the original of anything he either said or done; but gave all the glory to his Father, God. All power has been given to Jesus by the Father, that he may accomplish all that his Father gave him to do.

For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed. For he saith, When it is manifest that he hath put all things under his feet, and all things are put under, he is excepted of the Father who did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.—1 Cor. 15: 25–28, I. T.

It would be superfluous for me to follow the writers farther, merely for the sake of argument, because the revealed will and purposes of God are firm, and steadfast as the rock of ages, and never can be thwarted nor set aside; but will be accomplished in his own due time, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

THE COLLEGE.

While my anxiety is not in the least abated concerning the liquidation of the college debt, as well as the needed increase of patronage which would put it in a situation to be self-sustaining, or more nearly so, I must confess that so far as the little I had hoped to do in the way of getting $25 subscriptions, or even less, my courage is waning. I have as yet met with so few who are in a financial condition to help, and still fewer (among the able ones) who are in sympathy with it, I am fearful that the report which I shall be able to make will do little toward lifting the burden.

It is strange to me that those who profess so great love for the work of the Lord in these latter days would rather see the college fail, after the outlay that has already been made, allowing what has been paid and done to be a total waste, or loss, than to make an effort to assist in something they have not approved.

I have met but one young man who intends to take a college course since the conference. I solicited his patronage, not only for the sake of strengthening the college so far as the patronage of one would go, but gave as still more considerate reasons, the great benefits to be derived for this life, as well as for eternity, from the most excellent religious privileges and spiritual influence found in La-

moni. While this young brother expressed a ready willingness to consider this opportunity while making choice of a place to complete his already well begun education, the decision would very naturally and properly, too, rest with his father, who, though a warm friend and helper of the church work, is not himself a member. I felt it wiser to leave the suggestion for the brother himself to present to his father. So can only hope for the best.

I have yet only one $12.50 subscription on my paper. Of course I shall keep trying. It is possible better success may attend before the year ending March 1, 1901, shall roll around. Shall send in the very small personal donation promised soon as possible. I can, further, only pray our heavenly Father to move upon the hearts of his people to awake to a sense of their whole duty.

It is with this as with the "redemption of Zion." While many would like to see the work accomplished, and are praying for it, and expect to be there, few seem to realize the portion of the work that rests upon them. Nor is this to be so much wondered at, when we behold the lamentable lethargy in the church. So many are passive members only, not seeming to think that anything is required of them as workers in the kingdom of God. Content with having obeyed the gospel. Safe within the fold, with nothing to do. In 1 Corinthians 3: 8–15, we learn that "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor," and that there is such a thing as mere salvation in the great day of final accounts without any reward. "But he himself shall be saved so as by fire."

I know that many feel that they took no part in the voice of the church in General Conference, by which the building of the college was provided for, and hence nothing should be expected of them toward sustaining it. While, in a sense, this may be strictly true, they seem to forget that their allegiance to God, and consequent affiliation to the church, places them under any obligation. They seem to forget that the precious promise of the Savior, that the giver of a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple, should be rewarded, covers also the ground of reward for every gift to the cause of Christ and the interest of humanity. They seem to forget that their reward will be according to the work done, both in kind and amount. Instead of thinking, "How much can I do?" the inquiry seems to be, "How little may I do?" Actions speak louder than words.

Again, many of us seem to think that it is not required of us to give more than that we can conveniently spare after our own wants are all supplied. In Psalms 50:5, we read: "Gather my saints together unto me: those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." If we make no sacrifice, will we be gathered? No wonder the Savior represented the "kingdom of heaven," (not the world,) as "five wise and five foolish." I wonder sometimes if those whose generous hearts so abundantly give, not only to church work, but to suffering humanity, not knowing the truth, will not finally receive a greater reward than the children of the kingdom, who are making no sacrifice.

O that God would send the convincing power of the Holy Spirit into the heart of every one of his Saints, until there shall not be one who does not realize the responsibility resting upon him.

POND CREEK, Okla., July 12.

Editors Herald:—We closed our tent meetings at Morrison, Oklahoma, fore part of June, and through the kindness of Bro. S. T. Button moved to Blackwell, where a pressing invitation had been extended for more than a year by Brn. W. H. Bivens and W. D. Mc Knight. Five were baptized at Morrison.

A two week's stay in Blackwell resulted in one baptism, Mrs. Grace Taylor, Shawnee, Oklahoma, an excellent lady, and one whom we believe will be useful to the cause. Others there are "not far from the kingdom."

A liberal advertising by Bro. McKnight placed our position before many. The epitome appeared in each issue of the Daily Spoon for one week. It was in one of the weeklies besides other items of favorable mention. Bro. and Sr. A. F. Lambert added to the comfort of our stay by their characteristic hospitality.

While there had the pleasure of meeting Bro. E. L. Baskett and family, formerly of Knob Noster, Missouri, but now of Nardin, Oklahoma. Found them firm in the faith, and zealous for the spread of the gospel. He had secured the Christian church for a series of meetings, but a revival by the M. Es. necessitated a postponement till after our reunion in August.

We removed to Pond Creek, June 27. Brn. Case and Aylor had held a meeting in the country near here, baptizing four. Brn. Andrew Crofford, A. E. Shaw, and Jos. Cooper live near here, and Bro. Shaw had made a good impression for the work by replying to an attack on the faith made by Rev. Monday of the Campbellite Church. Bro. Shaw made a good defense of the faith, and offered to furnish a man to discuss, but the Reverend gentleman refused.

Brn. Case and Aylor went west into Dewey county, leaving Bro. R. W. Davis and writer with tent, we were joined later by Bro. S. S. Smith.

The ministers of Pond Creek made a house to house canvas, telling the people to stay away from our meetings. It was very effectual, but we repaired to the street and told the story there. Had good hearing. Rev. Mr. Laird of the M. E. Church pitched into us, and went away, no doubt, convinced that controversy don't pay. He was so offensive in his methods that the police invited him to hush. As a result of the skirmish the Christian minister told his congregation we routed the M. E. Reverend, and said, "Those boys are on to their job." Our first street preaching, but we enjoyed it, and feel well in the conflict.

We moved the tent on the 7th five miles southeast, near Bro. Shaw's, where we are having small but interested congregations.

Our hearts were made sad indeed, Friday the 6th, when we received a telegram calling us to Kingfisher to preach the funeral of our beloved and faithful brother, Elder Stephen Butler. With the death of Bro. Butler the church loses one of its most faithful, devoted members. Nowhere will this loss be more keenly felt than in Oklahoma. When there was means needed to sustain the work, Bro. Butler was the first to come to the relief. When there must be some one to take the elders to the extreme east or west of the Territory, Bro. Butler was ready with horse and buggy to respond to the demand, in cold or heat. When there was some one needed to fill an appointment, far or near, Bro. Butler was ready to go. For months he kept up a regular appointment twenty miles from home. Bro. J. R. Lambert opened the work fifteen miles southeast in '93, baptizing a few; and from that time till his death, he missed but few times filling his appointment there the first Sunday in each month. He filled his regular appointment just five days before his death, preaching from 1 Thessalonians 4: 13–18, his favorite theme. Death came unexpectedly. He was well and cheerful till one p. m., July 6, when he complained of a pain in his stomach and laid down on the sofa. A physician was summoned, kind hands did all in their power, but the messenger had come to bear his noble spirit away. He passed peacefully away at 1: 30 p. m.

Don't forget time and place of our reunion, four miles east, two and one half south of Hennessy, Oklahoma, on Rock Island railway, August 3 to 13. A boarding tent will be on ground to accommodate all who come, at actual cost.

In bonds,

W. S. MACRAE.

Editors Herald:—I have been looking in vain for five or six years for an elder to come. I have done all circumstances would permit to set the gospel before the people. We have here a large, prosperous country in which the gospel has never been preached. I understand that the gospel is to be preached to all nations before the Savior comes. I am not an elder, but if one of our men comes I will do all in my power to start the work here.

I am not ashamed of the gospel of my Lord and Savior. Have not heard a sermon for years, and am getting lonesome. I have had great evidence of the latter-day gospel. It is a great source of comfort to me to hear of souls being born into the kingdom of God.

If an elder comes to Spokane he can come by rail to Coulee City, and thence by stage to Bridgeport.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful and be the means of bringing many souls into the kingdom of God.

Your brother,

CAYUCOO, Cal., July 11.

Editors Herald:—Since my last appointment I have been in new territory where the gospel has never been preached, and the only thing the people have ever heard about the Latter Day Saints is "Mormonism" as taught by the Brighamites. The first thing I have to do is to show them that Brighamism is no part of the restored gospel, and that we have no connection or affinity with them. Now, this may sound strange to people in the East, for I thought before coming here that the Herald was giving the Brighamites a great deal of free advertising; but now I see that the people do know of but one Latter Day Saint Church. To be sure there has been so much published that everybody ought to know the difference between the Reorganization and Brighamism; but I find hundreds of people who have heard of but one "Mormon" church, and that was Brighamism.

The Lord has opened the way for me to enter in and occupy. I have found open doors everywhere. Although prejudice is very strong against me, there are those that have the courage of their convictions, and will stand by me in my defense of the truth. They say that I come to them with an open Bible, and only ask them to believe just what they have always professed to believe, the Bible. The reason the reverends warn their flocks to stay away is because they are afraid of the open Bible, and fear that the weakness of their creeds will be made manifest. One man, an apostle of the "Holiness" faith, challenged me to discuss the differences between us, he to affirm that church organization was not necessary, and that water baptism was not essential to salvation. We agreed for six nights discussion, Bro. R. R. Dana acted as time keeper and moderator for both of us. The reverend was so sure of his position that he did not want anybody to represent him, he was able to take care of himself. At the close of the second night he failed to fill out his time, and acknowledged to the audience that he was "knocked out," and would not continue the debate any farther.

I perhaps exceeded my authority in accepting a challenge without conferring with the missionary in charge, but it was such a good chance to get the truth before the people that I accepted his challenge and took the chances of being reprimanded by my superior.

I am now in the coast range of mountains, and I find them full of people who are willing to hear. It will be necessary for me or some one else to go over the same territory again, for the gospel seems so new to them that they want a little time to investigate. Wherever I have been the people are anxious for me to come back. I have promised that I would or send some one else.

Before starting out on my mission this time I had a very impressive dream. I was fishing alone, and caught so many fish that I could not carry them. I had them strung on a rod of iron about a quarter of an inch in diameter. I brought the ends of the rods together, and then could not carry them. I called to a young man who was passing to come and help me, he came, and together we walked away with the fish. I will know the young man when I see him, but I have not caught the the fish yet. Feel confident that I shall, for I have never dreamed of catching fish that I did not baptize some, and the prospects are good for a realization of my dream.

The newspapers are giving me favorable comment. My daily prayer is that God will hasten his work by sending more laborers to the front, for here is room for young men to develop in the ministry if they are not afraid to walk and put up with rough fare.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

E. KEELER.

Editors Herald:—What a plea from the far off land of Australia,—three missionaries for an area of country of three million square miles. Concerning Australia's Ensign, the writer says, "We have set our hearts upon launching a larger craft, but we want a propelling power sufficiently strong to keep it clear of that dangerous shoal—advertisement," and thinks that five hundred subscribers at seventy-five cents each, per year, would prove an effectual preventive to that dangerous shoal. Continuing, the writer says, We believe that the stranded Ensign was propelled by one hundred and thirty subscriber power only. No wonder that struggling Ensign went aground.

"If we," says the writer, "could get about five hundred of the American Saints to help us, we could publish a sheet about the size of Zion's Ensign each month, and for each paid subscriber we could distribute one copy free to outsiders." Surely such a plea to forty thousand members of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints ought not to go unheeded. We ought to encourage the few struggling Saints in that far off land.

Three missionaries to an area of country of three million miles. It should not be. Why not two thousand; aye, five thousand come to the front, planking down seventy-five cents per year, that those struggling and talking on such an economical plan, may circulate five thousand copies of the prospective Australian Ensign free, instead of the paltry number of five hundred. Are there not five thousand Latter Day Saints with sufficient gospel love in their hearts for those sitting in the valley and shadow of death, in a spiritual sense, willing for instance to sacrifice the gratification in attending big reunions for two or three years, to help start the contemplated project outlined in that plea?

Who can estimate the thousands of dollars spent in attending reunions and General Conferences held in localities where the gospel is an old song to the people and the general leaders as common to the people as the policeman that parades the streets of a big city; and who can justify this expenditure when thinking that half or less of this money thus annually spent might send the gospel sound to hundreds of thousands in a short time, who have never heard it.

This outlay does not end with the expense of going to and returning from the fashion gatherings, for frequent additions to the already stock of dresses, shoes, etc., greatly augments the expense.

Let us think on these things, and by no means turn a deaf ear to this Australian plea for preaching and spreading the gospel, or the adoption of measures therefor, should be first, all things else secondary. Are we sacrificing for the gospel's sake? or failing to properly utilize time and money? Which?

JAMES CAFFALL.

BEARDSTOWN, Ill., July 16.

Editors Herald:—I have been busily engaged in a series of meetings at Beardstown, Illinois. On Sunday, the 8th, at 2:30 p. m., dedicated their new church, having a crowded house and fine interest. The brethren and sisters are to be congratulated for the pluck and energy put forth to build and finish in such complete style a church 28x40, with a ten foot vestibule in front, and a 6x10 alcove for pulpit, with a nice cemented font beneath. Finely lighted and seated, and a large blackboard put upon rollers, etc., etc.

I closed my meetings last night, having had excellent attention and good liberty in presenting our work. On the night of 14th, after service, I dedicated the new font by baptizing Albert B. Abbott, Henry F. Reynolds, and Leah Alice Shoemaker. We hope these will prove to be excellent Saints, and an honor to the work at this place.

I leave today for Taylorville, Illinois, where I commence meeting tonight to continue for a week.

The renewal of the street railway strike in St. Louis, may greatly hinder the reunion to be held there from August 2 till 13. We are living in "troublesome times." I note a prediction in my diary for December 2, 1899, while I was at Jefferson City, Missouri, that trouble was soon to arise in China, and the United States would send troops there to assist in quelling the disturbance; and the end is not yet. How true! We are the children of the light (if living right), and why should we be in ignorance of the signs of the times? There are yet wonderful things before us, which will soon come to pass. I hope our people will not be asleep, and will keep themselves free from the many secret organizations that are "binding themselves into bundles to be burned." The admonition is: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

"Our gospel" opens an avenue to meet every and all the emergencies of life; we want nothing better. Every addition will be a hindrance. Our people should not be so absorbed in politics as to forget that they must render unto their neighbor the same privilege to think for themselves as they demand for themselves. God has not forgotten this nation yet, and we will do well to not wound our neighbor with radicalism in our political views. We are not to the place yet, where we can see "eye to eye." Be patient, longsuffering, and brotherly. God still rules. Some are writing and asking me about Braden. Well, Braden's big knife is broken at the hilt. My circular challenge demanding him to be indorsed by the chief editors of the Christian Evangelist and Christian Standard, as being "sound in the faith as they hold and teach it," an "accredited representative of their church, has placed Braden before the public in his true light. The editors have been pumped and inveigled by Braden and his admirers for such an indorsement as my challenge calls for, till it has stirred the inside circle of Campellism, and yet no such an indorsement has been furnished me. Braden has put out a sickly pamphlet of indorsements (?) and then asks: "Has Clark Braden more than met the demands of the printed circular of I. N. White?" Well, he knew that the demand had not been met. Let these editors say: "Braden is sound in the faith as we hold and teach it;" that "Braden is an accredited representative of our church," then will he have met some of the demands of that challenge. When this is done I expect to prepare a creed for Campbellism from the writings and sayings of Braden. But Braden's rusty blade to destroy Mormonism is broken at the hilt, and he will go down to his grave in dishonor and shame because of his unfair way of meeting the truth.

I. N. WHITE.

VINCENNES, Ind., July 13.

Editors Herald:—I came here Wednesday. Commenced looking for a building to preach in, but have not yet succeeded. I gave a talk at the Christian Church Wednesday night on the necessity of studying the Bible more—and to learn more about its teaching. Maintained that creedism was abroad in the land today as it was in the apostles' day, hence the necessity to know what the Bible teaches and what God wants us to do. Those present were somewhat interested. I will know on Sunday morning if I can get their house. Last night I went to the Free Methodist church to see if I could get the use of their house. The pastor refused on the ground that I was a stranger; so tonight I go to the Holiness meeting to try.

Yesterday I advertised our free reading room in the daily, so this morning a reporter called on us for information, he promising me he would notify others of our work. He seems to be fair, promising to do all for us he could; so if we do not get a church to preach in we can do a good work at our reading room. If I could remain at the room all the time to answer the calls that are made, we could get our claims before the people. It will take lots of patience and hard work to get the work in here; but once established it will be an honor to our cause. The reading room is at the Ulmer residence, on the corner of Eighth and Scott streets, No. 802. If anyone can send us any reading matter, send it to the above address, to Sr. M. Ulmer.

Sister Ulmer is one of Bro. M. T. Short's converts—a good work, Bro. Short. She was baptized in March, 1877, and is one of our faithful workers who does not propose to give up the fight until the victory is won and she is permitted to wear the crown. I wish we had more earnest and zealous workers like her.

I shall endeavor to do all I can to get the work before the people. Shall try through the press as well as from the pulpit and the street corners. Let the watchword be, "Don't give up the ship."

I am in the conflict for victory over the enemy of truth.

G. JENKINS.

PERSIA, Iowa, July 14.

Editors Herald: — Although not a subscriber, I enjoy reading the Herald, especially the letters that come weekly. We have many a laugh over Bro. Peterson's letters from the islands. Oh! no; we do not wish ourselves there; although if we were sure the Lord wanted us for any particular work, like Bro. Peterson, we would put our hand to the plow and say, "Here am I."

Here in Persia we have a branch of, I think, 154 members. The third Tuesday of every month is Prayer Union, with Sr. Atkinson as leader, as earnest a worker in the cause as can be found anywhere, and I want to tell the sisters, if you are blue, puzzled, in doubt, on any subject pertaining to the warfare of life, just go to Sr. Atkinson's when she is alone; and while she is resting on the couch, and Uncle Jimmy swinging in the hammock on the east porch, all you have to do is to rest easy in the rocking-chair and listen, listen quietly, and if you don't go home feeling as though you had advanced one step on the road to Zion it is your own fault.

There is one thought forcibly impressed on my mind all day. Why should we doubt? We are sick, send for the elders, they administer to us, and we pray God to forgive our sins and heal us, and all the time our mind is on our ailments, watching for another pain to rack our bodies. The watching for pain expresses a doubt. It would be much better, if when we ask our heavenly Father for anything, we would leave it all with him, and watch for his blessing, knowing that he doeth all things well. Respectfully,

M. T. K.

YOUNGSVILLE, Pa., July 14.

Editors Herald:—We are still in the one faith and are trying to live a Christlike life. We are the only ones here who bear the name of Saints, so we have much to fight to keep the narrow way; yet we strive to live humble and prayerful lives. We desire to get where there is a branch as soon as the Lord will permit, which I hope will be soon.

Some time ago I saw in the Herald that some Saints were coming east from the far west, to Johnstown, Pa., or near there, to obtain work. I wish to say to those, if you came, and see this letter, please write to me, as I wish to go there myself if there be any of the same faith; or if any are living there please write to me.

May God bless all his children, wherever they are, in their efforts to do good. May we all so live that we will be permitted to reign with Christ when he shall come.

CLEAR LAKE, Ind., July 19.

Editors Herald:—Left home July 5, for the two-days' meetings at Summerville and Baroda, Michigan. I stopped at Coldwater, and was accompanied from thence by Bro. S. W. L. Scott, Bro. Granger having preceded me two days on the way. We started on the 7th, but failed to make regular connections at Niles, Michigan, and had to walk out on Sunday morning. However, arrived in time for morning services. We found Brn. Lake, Granger, Shook, and Weston, of the ministerial force, all on the watch tower of Zion. Well, we occupied in the forenoon, and Bro. Scott after dinner.

Bro. Tritt had arranged for meetings in a beautiful maple grove on his farm; but the weather being rainy, the meetings were held in his farmhouse, it being quite a large brick building. We were royally entertained. Bro. Scott gave us a good talk again in the evening, at the conclusion of which our hearts were made glad when our Bro. and Sr. Tritt announced that they were ready for baptism. After a good night's rest we arranged for baptism the following Sunday, at the two-days' meeting at Baroda, and Bro. Granger remained to hold meetings on Monday evening. Brn. Granger and Tritt landed us at the depot, Pokagon, where we boarded Nahum's chariot for Lawton. From thence to Hartford, where we held meetings until Thursday evening, included, when we held a sacrament service with the good Spirit's influence present.

On the morning of the 13th, I left Bro. Scott to continue the meeting until Saturday evening, and went to Watervliet. Was entertained by Bro. and Sr. Hodgson, and distributed (or rather Bro. Hodgson's little boy and girl did) some bills announcing preaching by S. W. L. Scott in the pavilion at Paw Paw lake, at 2:30 p. m., the 15th. On the morning of the 14th, I started for Baroda, via St. Joseph, arriving on the a. m. train. Found Bro. Peak had occupied on the street the evening previous, and meeting announced for the evening of the 14th at same place. Bro. Peak occupied Saturday evening with unfavorable environments, — very disagreeable indeed,—but he preached an excellent sermon on Sunday morning. We occupied at two p. m., Bro. Peak in the evening, and we again in the hall in Baroda, the ten a. m. and two p. m. meetings being held in the dooryard or lawn of Dr. Royce, also the morning social meeting in the doctor's commodious house, many of the Saints coming from Galien, among them Bro. E. A. Blakeslee, Bro. and Sr. Green, Mr. and Sr. Clark, Sr. Jackson, Srs. Emma Wheaton and Iola Green, and Sr. Field of Chicago. All assisted in making the meeting a success.

Another sister from Chicago, a friend of Sr. Royce, was with us, and furnished the lobsters for dinner, all being nicely entertained by Bro. and Sr. Royce, over seventy eating at the table for dinner. If Bro. W. H. Kelley should see this, he can know she was a queen bee then and is one now.

The meeting was a success in every way, and we rejoiced when we were permitted to bury two excellent ones, husband and wife, in the waters of baptism, not far from Bro. Royce's home. The day was fine, and a goodly number were witnesses of the covenant entered into. The brother and sister have been investigating for some time, I believe. Bro. John Shook first called their attention to the latter-day work. They are going to form a nucleus for an opening in their neighborhood. May the Lord bless them with wisdom on their way.

Am getting ready for our conference in southern Indiana August 11 and 12.

Your brother in bonds,

G. A. SMITH.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, July 20.

Editors Herald:—We are moving along in this part of the Lord's moral vineyard slowly, doing the best we can under the circumstances. Weather being warm, and nights short, everybody busy. It is not the most encouraging time of the year for preaching the gospel. What we fail in preaching we make up in visiting the Saints and friends in their homes, teaching and instructing them in the things of the kingdom of God, and always finding ample opportunity to defend our glorious work, which thousands love and admire but have not the moral courage to come out of Mystery Babylon and obey. All our coworkers are doing, as we believe, the best they can, both local and general appointees. We are truly a unit in our labors together for the good of the cause.

The debate between Bro. J. W. Wight of our faith, and Elder Otteson of the Utah faction, held in the Saints' church at Council Bluffs, as already stated by Elder J. R. Lambert, had a tendency to open to view satisfactorily to the minds of our own people, and others as well, that the position occupied by the Reorganization is a correct and true one, and that all lovers of truth may, if they will, know the difference between us and them. "Truth is mighty and must prevail."

We hope to make our camp meeting, reunion, to commence August 24, in the grove of Bro. Frank Green, three miles south of Tabor, Iowa, one among the best of the many we have held in the years passed, and earnestly hope that the Saints of the Fremont and Pottawattamie districts will do their best to this end. We cordially invite our friends of other districts to come and partake with us the rich blessing promised. Our ministers are of the best, J. W. Wight, missionary in charge, I. M. Smith, and three or four other missionaries in our own field, and other leading ministers of the church, with all of our local force which is up to date. Sunday school work conducted in an able, and interesting manner by our general superintendent and assistants. We feel safe in promising all who attend a joyous, good time. Commit your temporal interest to the care of the Lord for a few days, and come up to the help of the Master once more, and receive his approbation, and the spiritual blessings which he surely will bestow. God speed the work in all the earth, is our continuous prayer. Yours in bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

DETROIT, Mich., July 18.

Editors Herald:—After my return from Texas, and a week's work at home, on June 4 I left home for the mission assigned me,—Michigan and Detroit. My first stopping place was at Galien, whence we removed to Lamoni, 1892, and had not returned since. After an absence of eight years our meeting with Saints and friends there was cordial, indeed. Of our brief and numerous visits I cannot write in detail, but was glad to find the Saints, most of them abiding in the faith of the gospel restored, and others had been added to our numbers since we left eight years ago. We were happy. We laughed and we wept as we visited. Surely there is no relationship so strong, so high, so grand, as that formed of our Father by the gospel.

I met with Sr. Blakeslee for a few moments only, but our visit at Mr. Charles Clark's was pleasant. Brethren R. B. Wheaton, J. D. White, Charles Greene, R. Alcott, and their wives, who have stood by the work at Galien so long, yet stand, and their children are joining the ranks and joining in the Sunday school and Religio work. This makes us to rejoice greatly. Bro. W. E. Peak, with his little family (for his wife and three children are all small), had arrived, taken their abode, and he was ready for his work in the mission to which he has lately been appointed.

I had time to preach at Galien but once, and had good liberty. Bro. E. A. Blakeslee was on hand at the service, being at home at the time. Looks well, and seems to be feeling well, and alive to the work.

Our visit of two days at Galien was cut short, for on Thursday, June 7, hastened on to Coldwater, to attend the Sunday school convention and district conference to occur on 8th to 11th, Bro. Peak accompanying. On arriving at Coldwater, my mother, now more than seventy years of age, yet standing erect as in other years, was the first to grasp us by the hand on arrival. The greeting of all at Coldwater was as cordial as those at Galien.

The interest in the Sunday school work was warm and stiring on the part of both old and young, and the subjects relating to the work were discussed with ardor, and investigation was animated and fruitful. May it ever so continue, that the end sought may be attained. The conference was presided over by the missionary in charge, John H. Lake, and the district president, G. A. Smith. The sessions were very peaceful and spiritual. Nothing occurred to mar the peace and great grace was upon the Saints. Bro. Samuel Stroh was ordained to the office of elder, and Brn. Otto Story and William Schaub to the office of priest. Brn. Lake, G. A. Smith, Peak, S. W. L. Scott, Granger, B. Corless, and others of the ministry gave encouraging reports. Dinner was served in the basement of the church, on Sunday, of which all attending were invited to partake. So far as I know ample justice was done to the repast, and all seemed joyous. The power of God was present in all the sessions, and the joy and consolation of the Holy Spirit was upon all the Saints as a mantle of peace divine.

Conference over, arrangements were made for two or three days' visit, before entering upon the missionary work. The time thus occupied goes by almost unnoticed, and so the time to go is upon us. Arrangements having been made by those in authority, we went to Clear Lake, Indiana, Thursday, June 14,—a ride in a two-seated surrey, with the driver and four other passengers, a distance of twenty-two miles. Bro. and Sr. Delancy Kelley, of Lansing, and Srs. Carry White and Ola Greene, of Galien, being our party. The weather was warm, and we were crowded, but we tried to keep up good spirits.

We began services at night at the Saints' chapel at Clear Lake, continuing over Sunday, baptizing a very estimable lady, in the Clear Lake, where I had baptized quite a nnmber years ago when laboring in this now the John H. "Lake" mission.

Bro. G. A. Smith joined our labors here,—taking charge of services, insisting that I do the preaching.

We next went to "South Scott," a large brick church southwest of Clear Lake some ten miles, where the Braden-Scott debate was held some five years ago, and where a number have since embraced the gospel, and are strong and sound in the faith. Here reside Brn. Frank Dellar, Maxton, Castler, and others. Country rich and well developed. I might here add that such a poor crop of wheat has not been known before as this year in Michigan and northern Indiana. Much of it did not pay for saving.

The opening and stand for the work was made at this point and immediate vicinity by Bro. I. M. Smith. And "Leonard" and "I. M." tumble around at the top of the half-bushel among the big potatoes, with the people, till, if ye little missionary were inclined to be jealous, he would be able to see but little difference between the beautiful green meadows and other material.

A good people have found the gospel at South Scott, and I wish we had many more such good laborers in the Lord's harvest. And I pray God for his truth's sake and the people's salvation sake, to continue to empower his faithful ministry and send many more faithful ones into his great harvest. I, Clark, is of no reputation among the people of any society thereabout. A week at this place, good, blessed liberty in preaching, Saints cheered, some near the kingdom, and Flint, ten miles west of Angola, is the next point to visit. An old town, nestled among beautiful lakes, no railroad. A beautiful stream, Pigeon river, fourteen feet wide—average—and five feet deep, drains the country. Water clear; a beautiful sight. Saints hungry for the living bread and water, and here we stay from the 25th to the 29th of June, and preach each evening but one. Bro. G. A. preached on Wednesday evening,—the only time he handled the oars while I was with him; but he does quite effective work at helm.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

July 1 found me at Coldwater again. Preached twice. But I must not forget to say that a number of kind, warm-hearted Saints, who love the work,—and some of whom take the Herald, some the Ensign, some both, while some take neither, reside at and near Flint. How any of the Saints can do without the Herald and Ensign, in these stirring times and days of strange events that are moving the world as never before, is strange to me. The political upheavals, wars, revolutions, great famines, as now raging in India, and in parts of Russia, and undefinable spirit of unrest that troubles nations, that eager expectancy that something, they know not what, is going to come, ought to rouse all the Saints to diligence and faithfulness to God and his cause, as never before, and put them on their watch tower, cause them to be looking forth for the signs of Christ's coming in glory, (Doc. and Cov. 45:6,) being those found faithful before him. Our books and church publications sent out to the church membership and the world by the agency of the church of God, will enable the humble, faithful Saints to see in the strange events of the times, that which the world, looking only from the natural standpoint, are not able to see in them. The old world could not see in the building of Noah's ark the destruction of the world by a flood, but Noah could. The Jews did not see the destruction of Jerusalem by the army of Titus, but the faithful disciple of Jesus did. The world now does not see the near approach of the overthrow of nations and the end of Gentile times, and the end of the world, but Saints should. Saints, do we discern the signs of the times? If so, what is our duty? Is the church as a church in duty bound to "owe no man anything," on the same moral principle as the individual is in duty bound to "owe no man anything"? Reader, stop here! Look at this! Are you a part of the church? Do you feel resting on you any part of the responsibility that the church owes? If not, why not? Are you expecting any of the glory that is to be bestowed on the church for well doing? If reproach comes to the church for a failure to do right, are you responsible for any part of that reproach? Are you going to fail even if the church does? Are you going to share in the glory of its success, if you stand idly by and bear no share in the labor necessary to its success? If so, what for? Because you did nothing to this end and purpose?

In the light of these interrogations, think of our Graceland College debt, and efforts of the church to liquidate it before the end of the century, and, the relation that you bear to that effort! And then, when this debt is blotted out, and passes out of our way, then let us consider how much obligation we are under to the gospel cause among our fellowmen because our Father has sent the gospel to us and saved us. I believe I owe to mankind all I can do by God's help, as a gospel laborer. Do we owe it to our children, when we pass along to the other side to leave to them the church free of debt, and in good running order? Or will we have to leave to them a doubtful faith, a church not (to us) worth redeeming from debt, a clouded hope, a night without a star of hope? Think, brother, think, then act promptly.

I arrived at this, the objective point of my mission, on the 7th of July. Since which we have had a visit from Brother Joseph, made profitable to the Saints and others of the city, by his efforts in setting the work before us in three public efforts, and the hearing we had in the city papers consequent upon his visit to Detroit.

The spirit of unity and good-will now seems to prevail among the Saints here. We hope for its continuance, and a forward movement of the work. Bro. N. F. Liddy was ordained to the eldership recently, and Bro. P. G. Hager, a teacher, and both are at work and will accomplish much if faithful to duty. They were ordained by Apostle J. H. Lake, whose recent visits to the city have done the Saints good.

Anxiously for the spread of the work,

C. SCOTT.

ALDRIDGE, Mont., July 17.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place last week and have been preaching every night to a fair and attentive audience. I am staying at the home of Bro. E. E. Williams, formerly of Marceline, Missouri. It is due to his untiring efforts in behalf of the cause that we have an opening here. He and family have the respect of the community, and undoubtedly have been the means of removing much prejudice. The people here seem very friendly to us, as they gave substantial evidence of it at my last meeting. When they bid ye missionary good-night, some placed money in my hand, and others would leave some money on the stand as they passed out. I must confess to the credit of those friends that I have never received kinder treatment at the hands of our own people. May God abundantly reward and bless them.

This is a coal camp, located near the National Park line, and is away up in the mountains. I hope some day to see some gathered into the church here. There is a large field in this part of the state that has never been touched. Montana is suffering much from the prolonged drouth. There will not be over half a crop.

BOONVILLE, Mo., July 16.

Editors Herald:—I feel it a duty as well as a pleasure to let our many friends know that we have been enjoying a shower of blessings at Boonville. Bro. J. A. Tanner, of Bevier, made us a ten days' visit and preached the word in its purity and with much assurance. We did not have large audiences but those who did attend were interested. It may take years to reveal the amount of good done; but we know the good seed sown will bring forth fruit to His name's honor and glory.

The Saints here feel encouraged and are trying to live their religion. The people of Boonville are more for style and popularity than the truth, as Paul preached. At present the Salvation Army is holding tent meetings in our town. It draws quite a crowd to hear the sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

We hope the time is near when some of our dear friends will be led to accept the pure gospel. Bro. Tanner did his part well, and those who would not come to hear had the privilege of knowing that we were not Mormons through the columns of the paper. The Holy Spirit was present in every meeting, and we have truly been blessed.

Your sister through love to Christ and his work,

"Shall I wrench from my finger the ring
To cast to the tramp at my door?
Shall I tear off each luminous thing
To drop in the palm of the poor?
What shall I do to be just?
Teach me, oh, ye in the light,
Whom the poor and the rich alike trust:
My heart is aflame to be right."

HOMEWARD BOUND.

Among other upheavals, our conference was to be stopped, and the people not allowed to land. This was two weeks or more before the time for the setting of conference. So Joseph visited the Governor and held a long interview with him, Lawyer Bonett being interpreter, and got permission to go on with the conference and feast. And not only that, but the governor generously proffered the use of the government grounds, opposite Tarona, or such portion of them as the Saints needed to camp on.

It was under the above specified gloomy outlook, when a bread famine was the general topic of conversation, that the first of April dawned, but preparations were not sufficiently completed to commence the feast, so it was postponed until Thursday, the 6th. I do not think the brethren ever thought of giving it up, even if they would have to live on fish and cocoanuts the rest of the year. Our convention was very poorly attended, and consequently lacked the usual interest. The flagpole—forty feet in length—was being raised that morning, which required the assistance of quite a number, and took the attention of many whose assistance was not really needed. And again, the bulk of the people had only arrived the day before, and had not then got their cookhouses in order, and were otherwise occupied.

The afternoon session was better represented than the morning. In the early part of the afternoon the French flag was hoisted; the people all gathered around the pole; a French air was sung by the Niau branch, the flag run up, and a round of three cheers given.

I believe the number of saints on the grounds, including those of Tahiti, were six hundred. The Mayor, the Prince, and the Queen, that is, the wife of the Prince, she is now called the Queen, together with other members of the royal family, honored us with their presence at the feast; also a number of our English speaking friends. All had been invited. The tables looked pretty, and the food was good. The two guest tables were next the curtain between the church and feast house. On the day of the opening of the feast, as soon as breakfast was over, and while all were yet at the tables (ten o'clock breakfast), the curtain was raised, revealing a crowd of prettily dressed children, and some adults, in class form. They went through with their exercises of the day previous. This was gotten up especially for the entertainment of the mayor and the prince, who had not attended the "Mahana oaoa," and some others also. Many spoke their surprise that native children could do so well. One lady who had always held the position that time and money spent in missionary work among the natives was all lost, it would never do any permanent good, said to me at that time, "Well, you may make something out of them yet, in a generation or two." But it was the evenings, the singing, and the Matutus that drew the crowd. The grounds were well lighted, and it was moonlight besides. Not only was the house crowded, and lots all around it, and as many as could crowd on the front platform and steps, but from the church to the broad open gate, and all along in front of the place outside the fence was a moving mass of people. It seemed as if all Papeete was there. The men who keep fruit stands about the market square forsook their old haunts and followed the crowd, and put up their stands on the side of the road opposite the grounds. After the first evening the most perfect order was maintained about the grounds and out on the street among the stands. Several temporary policemen were appointed from among the brethren for keeping order about the grounds, and the real police manifested a most friendly interest.

The Matutus were good; to a great many the subjects were new and interesting. Their subjects were all scriptural, some on doctrine, some on the restoration of the gospel or the apostasy, consequently much instruction and knowledge of the faith of the Saints were imparted that caused some to become quite interested in the subject of the gospel. Each year shows an improvement in the knowledge of the scriptures, and in their manner of speaking. Here again men of understanding —merchants and lawyers—expressed themselves as being surprised that natives could stand up before such an audience and speak as they did, and also were surprised at the clearness of their reasoning.

True their Matutus were all learned by heart, but they had first reasoned out the matter themselves, backed up with quotations from the scripture, and no one would ever know they were reciting. Much prejudice was allayed, and good done for the cause by having the conference at Papeete. The government officials could no longer be deceived by misrepresentations concerning motives and doings at our conference gatherings. People had seen with their own eyes, and heard with their own ears, and given their approval. Even Mr. Rawlix, who was the most unrelenting enemy to our conference gatherings, expressed himself thus,

"I was your enemy once, but I am not an enemy any longer."

Resuming the thread of local matters, the Galilee arrived the last day of March, having a clean bill of health, and reporting no plague in San Francisco. But the news that came by way of Auckland was later from America than that of the Galilee, consequently she was detained in quarantine waters, and the passengers after remaining on board a few days with the hope of being soon permitted to land, were transferred to a small island a little way around the northeast side of Tahiti, to serve out their fourteen days of quarantine.

Many had been the rumors before the arrival of the Galilee as to what would be done with her and her cargo, and various places had been named where she was to be sent; but when the proposition, request, or command whichever it was to go elsewhere was communicated to Captain Dinsmore, he coolly replied that his ship was chartered for Papeete, and if they wished him to go elsewhere, they must charter again, and maintained his position, while the government officials and the merchants were in daily counsel contending about the landing of the cargo, which resulted in permission to land on a small island near the quarantine grounds, all except the flour. That much needed article was forbidden to be handled lest the sacks may have been made in an infected Chinatown. And that that was landed must needs go through a fumigating process. I will leave it to some more ready pen than mine to give a digest, providing it ever is given, of the art and skill (?) attained by those French officers in disinfecting goods. Suffice here to say, that the things of an explosive nature that went into the heating oven never came out again; while others, such as canned milk and potatoes, came out half cooked; and shoes showed their teeth, the uppers having turned up, and the soles turned down.

Time being one of the things that cannot be detained, it continued to move steadily onward, bringing in its train the appointed time for the arrival of the New Zealand steamer, if all was well. And with the time came the ship, the sight of which sent a thrill of joy to the hearts of the English speaking people at least; for it foreshadowed no plague in New Zealand, and she reported none in San Francisco, nor ever had been. San Francisco was declared an open port. Yet, while the steamer was allowed to go to the dock and land her cargo, the Galilee was still kept in quarantine, her crew not allowed to go on shore. Why, is not yet known. And only after much difficulty, and vigorous efforts on the part of the consignees was she allowed to come farther up the harbor and land her flour on a small motu in the harbor. But on shore the usual tranquility was again established, and all fears of a bread famine vanished away.

I have given this sketch of local matters, thinking some may be interested in the varied phases of experience in the far off islands.

Saturday, May 19. Nine days have glided pleasantly away since I commenced this article, and we are gradually getting nearer San Francisco. On the 15th, two weeks from the day we left Papeete, we were beating past the Hawaiian Islands. A fine run. Too far west, to be sure; but we hoped to get, and are now getting the wind a little more westerly; but it is lighter and the sea is smoother than in the Southern Pacific. There are ten cabin passengers; all are social, courteous, and pleasant, with the exception of one poor unfortunate, who scarcely retains the balance of his mind. I had thought, with all the perplexing annoyances the captain had been subject to while being detained thirty-one days in port without being ashore except to clear his vessel, he would likely be as cross as two sticks; but was agreeably surprised to find him kind and obliging, ever seeking in his quiet way the well-being of his passengers. The Japanese steward is ever ready to render service, no one is sick, and all moves on peacefully.

Tomorrow will be my birthday, a day I had anticipated spending with children and grandchildren; but perhaps we will enjoy another day as well when the meeting takes place, to which we are counting the days. Mr. Burton was well all the time during conference, and during the voyage, so we hope the trouble, whatever it was, has left him.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE new edition of the Constitution and By-Laws is now ready for mailing. Prices same as advertised in Quarterly,—one cent each or ten cents per dozen, postage prepaid. Everyone should procure the new edition and then destroy the old one, as it is not wholly reliable now. This new edition contains all the amendments of 1898 and 1900, and is therefore correct up to date. Send your orders to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE reunion season is now about to open upon us. They are many and not very far between. We have seen notice of five for one date. This is as we think it should be. Let them come and let the Saints of each district or section turn out enmasse and enjoy ten days of spiritual feasting, for such it really is. But while we are feasting, let us not forget the work for the children—the Sunday school.

We believe that every reunion should devote a few sessions of the meeting to the advancement of the Sunday school work and the teaching of the children. Experience has taught us that these few sessions can be made very profitable to the cause in general. While we are benefiting the Sunday school cause directly, we are helping the whole church work indirectly if not directly. There is no better place to train teachers and officers. We can reach new workers and get them started on the right track, when they will then go it alone. We hope to get a good report of good work done at every reunion held in 1900.

The general superintendent has arranged to attend some six of the reunions in the interest of the Sunday school work, and the first assistant superintendent will attend about four others. The second assistant and general secretary will attend two or three each, as circumstances may permit. We trust that opportunity will be afforded them to do justice to the work they come to represent. Several of the committees of our best or largest reunions have very kindly offered us the afternoon session for four or five days in which to do our work. We hope to occupy in a profitable manner.

We believe that at every reunion there should be held not less than three sessions of real Sunday school, for the benefit of both the workers and the children. Thus the children are being taught and the officers and teachers are getting actual experience in conducting Sunday schools. If they are not in charge they can observe what is done by other officers or teachers. Many of our best points for work we gain from others. Make these sessions as nearly like the regular Sunday school as is possible under the circumstances. Make them interesting, keep them full of life, and get everybody to attend them.

In addition to the sessions mentioned above, there should be as much institute work as time will permit. Select such subjects for consideration as are most needed in your particular locality. Discuss them fully but not at such length as to become wearisome. If you have a paper upon a subject, discuss the contents of the paper, but it is not necessary to confine yourself to the paper if there are other good points on the subject that the paper does not touch.

SR. EMMA BURTON, who has lately returned from the South Sea Islands mission, has sent us an account of the progress of the Sunday school work in the islands, which will be of interest in many ways. Read and contrast, bearing in mind that they are working with "grown up children" all the time, and in a strange land, with a strange tongue and strange customs. We are indeed surprised that they have done as well as they have. Laboring as they do with so many things against their progress or to overcome, isolated and without the help of the association, practically, their progress evidences their untiring efforts and unflagging zeal for the work at hand. Let those who think they have a hard task here in America to keep the Sunday school moving where they have all that could be desired to make the work pleasant and profitable, and much to encourage them, "think on these things."

THE SABBATH SCHOOL WORK IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

Thinking it would be well to put on record a synopsis of the rise and progress of the Sunday school work in the South Sea Islands, I have gathered some information for that purpose. Metuaore says: "The Sunday school was first started by Thomas." (T. W. Smith. It will be remembered his mission to the islands commenced in 1884, and ended in 1890.) "He organized one on as many islands, as he visited, but they were not divided into classes. All took part in reading the lesson verse about, and he asked questions, and explained the lesson to them.

"After his Sunday school question book was printed in the Tahitian language, the schools learned the questions and answers from it, and Thomas would explain the answers more fully. They learned many verses to recite. Maui (a sister), at Tiputa, learned eight chapters in Luke, so that she could recite the whole without making a mistake. Also Tuana, the wife of Metuaore, twelve chapters in Matthew, from the second to the thirteenth, inclusive. And the father of Roo, of Rairoa, ten chapters. These all learned these verses, and Thomas would give explanations on them."

These were the first steps in the Sunday school work, and the sum of progress made during Bro. and Sr. T. W. Smith's mission. The questions and answers in his book were not confined to any scriptural lesson, but on topics containing more of "strong meat" than the "milk of the word," calculated for elders in advanced knowledge.

Concerning Bro. and Sr. Devore's work Metuaore says: "Luther held not his schools on Sunday, but Monday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings, after the same manner as Thomas' Sunday schools. But when Mareko (Bro. Forscutt) came, he organized the schools for the Sabbath, and was the first to divide them up into classes, and chose Sr. Devore as superintendent of the Sunday school work in all these islands, who put away Thomas' book and made a new one after this manner. Gathering all the Saints and elders together, she would ask a question, and all would give their views of it, then conclude upon the proper answer, whether quotations from scripture or otherwise. These were written down, and became the question book."

It will be seen farther on that Sr. Devore had a purpose in view other than simply forming the question book, viz., that of preparing her teachers for their class work. Again, we can readily understand her reason for putting that book away and forming one of her own, having been in the same position ourselves. The book was in the Tahitian language, of which she had a limited knowledge, and having no English for it, was not in a position to teach and explain it understandingly; possibly not even able to read it understandingly.

How many of those schools continued after Bro. Smith left their islands, or whether any of them did, save the one at Anaa, I do not know.

Sr. Devore says: "Bro. Devore had them to hold one Sunday school at Papeete. Whether they had departed from the original or not, we could not learn; but it was very much like their matutus; it was not a Sunday school. Then Bro. Devore organized like we have been taught, and with our help it did well enough till we went to the Paumotus; then it went down, to rise no more."

It will be seen that there is a difference in the foregoing statement and that of Metuaore's. It is probable that Metuaore was at another island during that period, and either had not learned of the school being organized on Sunday, or had forgotten it. Sr. Devore further says: "Just before Bro. Forscutt left, he started a Sunday school at Tarona [Tarona is often used interchangably with Papeete, for the reason that it is within the limits of the city of Papeete. Yet it is not Papeete proper; but the locality of the Saints on the outskirts of the town] as near like those in America as circumstances would permit. . . . After Bro. Forscutt left, I sought the Lord with all my soul, to instruct me to reach their understanding, to make them capable to fill a teacher's place. I began to get up questions and answers with their help, and found that that course was bringing out their best talent and equipping them to fill that position. . . . With this start at Papeete, I went to the April Conference, (held at one of the islands in the Paumotus writer,) with a few chapters of Matthew cut up into questions and answers, and two witnesses to testify that I had been set apart for the Sunday shool work by the laying on of the hands of the missionary in charge, M. H. Forscutt, and a written recommendation to Brn. Devore, Newton, and Gilbert, and the conference. And in order that the natives might see my method of procedure, I asked permission to call a gathering for a sample Sunday school so that they could all vote understandingly for or against me. It was a unanimous vote in favor of me going on with my work. Then came the cry from every island represented there, for me to go to their island."

In this gathering we discern the germ of the Sunday school convention in these islands. It is apparent that Sr. Devore applied herself diligently to her work, for she accomplished much. She says: "The schools I organized were at Tiona, Makatea, Tikehau, Rairoa (two, one being at Avatoru and one at Tiputa writer), Niau, Kaukura, Arutua, Apataki, Manihi, Takaroa, and Takapoto. The only new method I adopted was that of getting up questions and answers on every verse, (nothing else would do them,) and bringing all the proof from the scriptures we could find bearing on the subject presented. Writing the answers became a necessity, and writing them for all the teachers, so that all might teach alike, and holding these teachers' meetings on all the islands that all might be instructed alike."

THE TEACHERS' QUARTERLY, NOW READY.

At the last General Convention steps were taken toward a Teachers' Quarterly, and the editor of the quarterlies was authorized to prepare it. The association takes pleasure in announcing that this Quarterly is in course of preparation and will be published with the next quarter, beginning with October.

It will contain all the lessons of the three grades now in use, with such other matter as will be helpful and suggestive to teachers, both in the preparation of the lessons and in teaching them. The editor has spared no pains to make them of use to the teachers. Teachers having this Quarterly will not need any of the others, for the text of the other grades appears in this just as it is in the others. Of course this Quarterly will not take the place of the teachers' meetings, but to such teachers as cannot attend teachers' meetings, and to such schools as do not find it convenient to hold such meetings, it will go a long way to supply this lack.

Although this Quarterly contains much more than the present Senior Grade, the price is within the reach of all, being but slightly in advance of the Senior. The price is ten cents per quarter, or thirty-five cents per year. Every teacher of any grade ought to have this Quarterly, and it is hoped that teachers will avail themselves of this opportunity to make their work more effective, as well as more easy, and send their orders promptly.

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., June 15.

MRS. MACGREGOR, Chilliwack, B. C.,

Dear and Much Loved Sister:—At the semi-annual convention of the London district Sunday school association, held at St. Thomas, June 15, it was by resolution ordered that a collection be taken from the association present, to be sent as a token of respect and esteem, in which is held by the Sunday school workers, to Sr. Maggie MacGregor, for her untiring skill, patience, and fidelity in the discharge of the duties of secretary of the association.

It was further ordered that Joseph Smith, Floralice Miller, and Euphemia Gerrie be a committee to draft a letter to Sr. MacGregor, expressive of confidence and respect, to accompany and explain the material token therewith sent.

We the said committee do therefore on our own part and on behalf of the London district Sunday school association, hereby express and convey to our sister, Maggie MacGregor, the thanks of the association for the faithful service rendered to the Sunday school cause in the district, and declare the unwavering confidence of the Sunday schools and members of the convention in her entertained by all.

SECOND QUORUM OF SEVENTY.

Dear Brethren:—Do you wish your proper addresses placed in the new circular letter that you have authorized your officers to get out? If so, then please give this matter your immediate attention. Only two of our number, so far, have responded to our former notice. We desire the present address of all those who have been taken into the quorum since April, 1897, and also the addresses of those who have made changes since the aforementioned date. If you desire the letters soon, then please assist us by being prompt. Address me at Plano, Illinois, care box 142. H. E. MOLER, Sec.

SOUTH MISSOURI.

Our conference held in the new Saints' chapel, east of Ava, was a success, and quite well attended. The Saints are gathering into the regions round about, buying up homes, building houses of worship, etc.

On the 4th inst. a business meeting was held at this place, and we passed a resolution to build a church here. The writer and Bro. J. E. Swegart were chosen as a building committee, with authority to choose a third man, solicitors, etc. This being about the center of South Missouri district, we intend to build as large and respectable a house as incoming means will permit; hence we herewith extend a general invitation to all to contribute moneys, etc., towards the building of this church, with the understanding that it shall contain a free pulpit and an open Bible to all denominations when not in use by the Saints.

We make this request because most all of us are poor in this world's goods, but we need the house and are willing to undertake the task, knowing quite well that the sacrifice upon our part will be great at best. All moneys may be sent to the writer, or J. E. Swegart, who will keep an accurate account of same, and give due credit to all for moneys, labor, or material furnished. Small favors will be thankfully received, and larger ones in proportion. As Beaver is not a money order office, orders may be drawn on Granada, Missouri, but sent to our home address.

We are determined, by the assistance of our great master builder Jesus Christ, that the work in this district shall move upward and onward to victory, regardless of various hindrances, and with Elder D. W. Thomas at the head and in command, we are hopeful of success. This hope will be strengthened by the missionary brigade, who are now all in the field of battle. Ever laboring and praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain your brother in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

BEAVER, Mo., July 16.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA REUNION.

The annual reunion of Southern California will convene in Sycamore Grove, one of the best natural groves in the state, and situated within the incorporate limits of the city of Los Angeles, and about three miles from the post office.

All facilities for a ten days' sojourn outdoors are here afforded. Plenty of water, unexcelled shade, and a pavilion for general service, with ample room for as many campers as may desire to come. Past experience has revealed the fact that the first day is invariably consumed in getting ready, so we have announced the meetings proper to commence on Saturday, August 11, and to continue over Sunday, the nineteenth.

The following brethren of the general missionary force will be in attendance. Missionary in charge G. T. Griffiths, associates J. F. Burton, T. W. Chatburn, D. A. Anderson, Elbert A. Smith, William Gibson. These will be assisted by numbers of the local force: Albert Carmichael, A. E. Jones, C. W. Earl, George Wixom, and others.

Best of all, we are able to announce that one and possibly two of the Presidency will be in attendance. We fully expect Brn. Joseph and Alexander, and have the assurance that if it is possible they will both be here. Here is an opportunity which may not come soon again to the Saints of the Pacific coast. I trust that all the Saints will appreciate this and, as many as possible can do so, will attend this reunion. We hope to make this one of the largest attended reunions ever held in the State. You, by a coöperative effort and a complete trust in God, can make it the very best.

Forego something which is not of so much vital interest as the development of your spiritual nature, and come and unite with many others of your brethren and sisters in singing praises to your God.

Tents can be secured at the following rates: 10x12, $1.95; 12x12, $2.30; 12x14, $2 60; 7x9, $1,40; 10x14, $2.20 This includes putting up and taking down. You will have nothing to do save to move in and out.

Provisions will be delivered on the grounds. Grocery, meat, milk, and vegetable wagons will visit the ground daily. There will be an abundance of city water. The grounds are lighted with electricity.

Parties coming should in no instance fail to secure from the agent where they purchase a ticket a certificate to the effect that they have paid full fare one way. If fifty parties are in attendance it will entitle the holder of each certificate to return at one third fare. Please remember this. It was the failure to secure said certificates which lost to us the rebates at our last conference. Get certificates on whatever line of road you travel. We shall endeavor to make arrangements with the Santa Fe railroad to stop opposite the grounds. Those coming direct to the city will take the Pasadena car and get off at "Sycamore Grove."

Those desiring to participate in the "community table" should notify the undersigned to that effect at their earliest convenience. Some of the objectionable features which necessarily could not be avoided last year from lack of experience, will be entirely eliminated this time.

Come, brethren and sisters, one and all, and make this one of the grandest reunions ever held in the State.

On behalf of the committee,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

1014 Alpine Street, LOS ANGELES, California.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In ordering supplies for schools much inconvenience and positive annoyance to the office results from carelessness, which may be avoided by following these suggestions: (1) If there is a branch agent for the Herald Publishing House in your branch, let all supplies be ordered through this agent. (2) When ordering for the Sunday school, whenever a new person orders, be sure to give the name of the person to whom the supplies have been previously sent. This will prevent the frequent annoyance to both the office and schools of sending duplicate orders. (3) Be sure to sign your name to every order. If the order is not signed it will not be filled. (4) Send cash with order when at all practicable and save book accounts. (5) Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa,

SCATTERED MEMBERS.

To the scattered members of Oakwood branch, which was disorganized by the February conference of the Southwestern Texas district, Greeting:—All those who have not received letters of membership, nor joined other branches, will please send me their names and addresses, so that letters may be forwarded to them. Address me at Bandera, Texas.

W. H. DAVENPORT, Clerk.

CHURCH RECORDER'S REQUEST TO REUNION OFFICERS.

I make this suggestion and request of presidents and secretaries of the various reunions held throughout the church, namely, that they see to it that a record is made of all baptisms that take place during their gatherings. By arrangement with the brethren who officiate in baptism, a copy of all names and items of birth, baptism, and confirmation (including who acted as speaker in each case) can be had by the secretary of each reunion, and this can be forwarded to me after it is past. Because of lack of this care, some names have been lost to record, and in other cases only imperfect records could be made, those from memory. Therefore I call attention to the need of care being taken, and if the presidents and secretaries will attend to it, the interests of the cause will be served.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 16.

BOUNDARY LINES OF DISTRICTS, ETC.

It is necessary to have on record a description or statement of the boundaries of every district, for the use of the Presidency and other church officials. District presidents and secretaries are therefore requested to forward statements of the boundaries of their respective districts. They are also requested to give lists of names of branches in their districts. If boundaries have not been closely defined, or not specified at all, kindly so report, and as promptly as possible. If your district contemplates action on boundary lines, please report its present status, also its further action when taken. It is necessary to complete the record as soon as possible. District officials are requested to be prompt, that unnecessary correspondence may be avoided. Please do not omit list of names of branches in your district.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 29.

PASTORAL.

To the Officers of Branches, and all Saints of Northern Michigan District, Greeting:—You will notice in the minutes of the conference which convened at Boyne City, June 23 and 24, that your humble servant was chosen to preside over the district, assisted by Bro. R. W. Hugil. I can truly say that I feel my responsibility has been increased. We therefore do earnestly solicit your coöperation, as well as your faith and prayers in our behalf, that we may, by the grace of God assisting us, be enabled to acquit ourselves as true servants of Christ. And we do humbly pray the good Lord to bestow upon us the spirit of wisdom, faith, patience, and discernment, that by these necessary qualifications we may preside with equity and justice.

There is a work for us all to do, and I trust we may arise in the strength of Israel's God, and work while the day lasts, as we are admonished by our blessed Master. For he has said that when we have done all that is in our power to do, we have but done our reasonable duty. Can we expect the promised blessings unless we place ourselves in a proper condition to receive? Can we expect the Master will use us as instruments in his hands unless we place ourselves in a proper attitude? Nay, verily; unless we are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, unless we offer our bodies as living sacrifices to him, unless we keep his commandments, we cannot hope to receive anything from the Lord.

I trust that the officers in each branch will labor in love together for the building up of the great work which is intrusted to our care.

In section seventeen of Doctrine and Covenants the duties of the various officers are plainly given. Let us each strive to labor in the calling whereunto we have been called, honoring each other in their office and calling. By so doing we thus honor God and his law. We as his servants are admonished to see that his law is kept.

I have visited Prescott and Whittemore branches since conference, and I am in hopes to visit all or nearly all the branches in the eastern side of the district before the fall conference. It was an understanding between Bro. Hugil and myself, that he would visit as many branches as he possibly could over on the west side, and I was to do likewise on the east side. I should like very much to visit every branch in the district, but I am satisfied I will not have time to do so in the short space of time between now and the fall conference. I attended a two days' meeting at Prescott, July 3 and 4. It was indeed a very pleasant and profitable time to all present. Bro. J. H. Lake was in attendance and gave us some timely counsel and instruction. I would suggest that if two days' meetings are desired in various parts of the district, that you notify me at once, that is if you desire us to appoint them.

Well, dear brothers and sisters, let us watch, and fight, and pray. The battle ne'er give o'er until Zion is redeemed and our Savior comes to reign. I would be pleased to hear occasionally from the officers of branches; and I assure you I will be glad to assist you in all that is right as best I can.

Very respectfully your brother and coworker in the gospel of Christ,

J. A. GRANT.

True Succession in Church Presidency

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

VALUE OF MANUAL TRAINING.

By Frank O. Lowden, President of the Pullman Manual Training School.

One cannot realize until he begins to study the subject and gather the opinions of others, the full extent and possibilities of manual training as a part of the modern educational equipment.

There was a day when the idea was fostered and encouraged that the honorable occupations were limited to the professions, the law, medicine, etc., but now happily that notion is no longer a prevailing one. I believe that it will not be long before the manual trades will be given the same respect as was formerly accorded only to the professions.

It can be stated as a general proposition that training the mind and the hand to work together will be of immense benefit to a great many, and will of a certainty injure no one. That is a fact which no one can question, so it is evident that systematic manual training is a step forward in the advancement of education. The regular college courses are good. They fill entirely the requirements for which they are intended, but there is many a splendid artisan and many a splendid mechanic lost for lack of the peculiar teaching best adapted to develop his inherent faculties.

It does not necessarily follow that a manual education commits the student to the artisan's trade. It is a splendid adjunct to any education, and even if never pursued further places its possessor in a better position than one not so equipped. Today the value of the kindergarten is unquestioned. It is the basic form of manual training and of almost incalculable benefit in its results. It was only a few years ago that a child was confronted with the alphabet in large letters on a blackboard and made to commit it to memory. Now it is taught in conjunction with a multitude of little practical arts and suggestive associations.

The only hard question presenting itself is the limitation to be put upon a manual training course. The possibilities cover such a wide range that it is difficult to say where to mark the boundary line.

It only needs the manual branch of education now to perfect the system; to make the individual a complete all round utility to himself and the community. He learns how to use his hands intelligently and to deal in realities; to do things instead of simply theorizing upon them.

Knowledge is of several kinds. One may know a subject perfectly and yet not know it in a way to be able to impart or teach it to others. Likewise one may possess a vast amount of knowledge on a particular subject and not be able to apply it to the creation of anything.

Manual training in its generally accepted form will complete the connection between theory and practice along certain lines that are now broken at intervals.

In permitting a youth to choose his career in life it provides a view of the field more clearly than a college course does. It more nearly represents the occupation as it really is than does the classical course.

A college graduate in law, medicine, or architecture has a hard term of something akin to manual training in the interval between his college days and his established practice, but under a properly devised manual course the student leaves the school almost, if not entirely, equipped to assume his place with little additional training. It makes the transition from the school to actual practice far more easy than it would be otherwise.

Aside from providing a career suitable to the student's disposition manual training cares for the physical education often too much neglected. It affords an intelligent mental direction of the physical faculties so that they can be used to the best advantage and with the least possible loss of usefulness. The entire subject is a fascinating one from every point of view, and is growing more popular every day. Every investigator of it becomes its advocate as soon as he begins to look into it. As I said at the outset, it is of vast benefit to many and can harm no one. With that alone to its credit it would need no further advocacy.—Chicago Tribune, July 22.

OLDEST BOOKS IN THE WORLD.

The oldest books known have been translated. They are Egyptian. The work of translation has been difficult, and it is within the century that a key was found to the old writings that made the whole body of Egyptian records available to scholars, whether cut on stone, impressed upon bricks, or traced with reeds or brushes upon papyrus or cloth. This key once known, the task before those who sought to lift the dense veil that separated them from the distant past was defined. Ancient letters were enriched with many translations of the first importance. But although the way was thus opened, it was not made clear and easy for those who trod the different paths with hopeful persistence. In those old days no system of record was made as to times and dates except by naming the king or ruler, and the genealogies were kept in such varying terms that to some degree they remain sources of disagreement among the most accurate and careful students. The spellings also were without law and remain so to this day. Each savant chose a preferable one for such reasons as he saw fit, rejecting others from a number that successfully appealed for support with many. This condition presents a difficulty to those who read the works that have issued on the vast subject which the early history of Egypt presents, and their knowledge taken from these intermediary sources is harrassed by apparent contradictions which the savants themselves are not entirely able to reconcile.

Descriptions of and the translations of the three oldest books have been made by Dr. Isaac Meyer. The oldest is known as the Prisse Papyrus or Book of Ptah kotep, which is supposed to have been written about 2800 B. C. It contains eighteen pages of writing, being a treatise on manners and morals supposed to have been composed by one of the Pharaohs about 3766 B. C. The maxims deal with a great variety of subjects. The proper treatment of a wife by a husband is thus indicated:—

"Fill her stomach with food, clothe her back; these are the cares to be bestowed upon her body. Caress her and fulfill her wishes during the time of her existence; it is a form of well-doing which does thee honor. Be not brutal; good manners will influence her better than force. Give her what she longs for. It is these things which make steadiness in the house; if thou repellest her it is an abyss."

The Book of Ptah-hotep was first made known in 1858 by M. Francois Chabas. According to him, M. E. Prisse d'Avennes, who gave this papyrus to the National Library in Paris in 1847, had acquired it from one of the fellahs whom he employed in making his excavations in the Necropolis of Thebes. It was found in the tomb of one of the Entews (also named by some Egyptologists Antufs or Antefs, Kings of the eleventh dynasty). The large and solid character of the writing on this papyrus leads to the opinion that its date is before rather than after the twelfth dynasty, circa 2778 2563. He divided it into pages and plates; the original was written on a long sheet, which was rolled up. In its present state it contains eighteen pages of magnificent hieratic writing. The characters are large, full, and assured, approaching closer to the hieroglyphic type than any other known test. As the hieratic writing, which is a simplification of the hieroglyphic, became more and more cursive, it departed from its primitive type, and these pages use a type the least cursive.—Chicago Tribune, July 22.

RICH FIND IN NEW MEXICO.

Santa Fe, New Mexico, July 24.——Important discoveries from which the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., will benefit have been made by a party of scientists which reached this city today.

A building of 1,200 to 1,500 rooms, only one of which was excavated, was found in Pajarsto Canon. The structure is 560x450 feet, and constructed entirely of carefully dressed stone. It is situated between Bland and Espanola and is only one of a large number of similar ruins.

The structure was two or three stories high originally, but now only walls six to ten feet high remain standing. The upper story evidently was open to the sky, and upon this the dwellers of the building probably spent both night and day.

CONTENTS OF THE ROOM.

But it is the finds in the room nine by twelve that was excavated, that are the most suggestive of the civilization of the ancient people. An old furnace or smelter was found, near which was a large iron bar deeply incrusted with rust; also pieces of rich copper ore, as well as gold ornaments and a piece of beautiful turquois. Twenty-five pieces of pottery of great beauty and brilliancy of colors were in the room. They were heavy, fully one quarter of an inch thick, and decorated inside and out with unique designs showing some degree of uniformity. One of the designs represented the picture of three frame buildings, with a smokestack and smoke curling out of it. Each communal building had a different set of designs for their pottery. Some woven cloth was found. It was woven in spirals almost like a huge spider's web.

Around the fireplace in the room which was excavated stood a dozen large pots, each with buffalo bones in them, showing that the inhabitants abandoned the room while preparing a meal. Near some of the smelter slag was found scorched corn, together with the bones of birds and other animals. Several baskets in the room were more beautiful than those woven by the Navajos of today, but they crumbled to dust when touched. Iron knives, stone battle axes, polished stone reflectors, awls, several musical instruments, including fifes, were in evidence and well preserved. Many human bones were found in the regulation burial mounds.

The scientists who made the discoveries are: Dr. George I. Cole and Fay C. Cole of Los Angeles, California; Professer R. W. Buller of Greeley, Colorado, and the Rev. G. S. Madden of Bland. They announce that the relics found will be sent to the Northwestern University.

MANY SIMILAR RUINS.

There are hundreds of similar ruins in the twenty-five miles from Bland to Espanola, showing that in that district at one time lived more people than are in New Mexico today. The region has not yet been touched by scientists and explorers The Rev. Madden's theory is that about 500 or 600 years ago the dwellers of that region who left their records in numerous hieroglyphic inscriptions had been driven out either by an earthquake or by the invasion of a stronger race.—Chicago Tribune, July 25.

REVISION OF PRESBYTERIAN CREED.

Creed revision discussion among Presbyterians has now progressed far enough to make it certain that the creed will be revised, or that a new creed will be formulated. The matter has gone too far to be dropped. It is said that the Rev. Dr. John DeWitt will be put on the revision committee to represent Princeton in place of Prof. B. B. Warfield, who resigned. So far as can be judged the sentiment seems to be in favor of a short statement of faith, one that may be used in the public service when desired, leaving the old confession stand as it now does. So far fourteen presbyteries have named committees or taken other action looking to the furnishing of the general assembly committee with the required information. This year's assembly moderator, the Rev. Dr. Charles A. Dickey, of Philadelphia, is chairman of the committee, and other members of it are: Clerical the Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson, Chicago; the Rev. Dr. S. J. Nicolls, St. Louis; the Rev. Dr. William McKibbin, Cincinnati; the Rev. Dr. S. W. Dana, Philadelphia; the Rev. Dr. S. P. Sprecher, Cleveland; and Presidents Stewart of Auburn, and Fisher of Hanover; Elders Hon. Benjamin Harrison, Indiana; Justice Harlan, Baltimore; John E. Parsons, New York; W. R. Crabb, Pennsylvania; Elijah Fraser, Michigan; E. W. C. Humphreys, Kentucky, and D. R. Noyes, Minnesota.—Iowa State Register, July 22, 1900.

The Hon. Charles Denby, late minister to China, recounts most interestingly in the August Forum "How Peace Was Made Between China and Japan," and sets forth the difficulties that beset the American officials who were generously acting as intermediaries in the negotiations between the resp ctive antagonists. Coming at the present time it is a pungent comment on Chinese diplomacy and its devious ways.

Two articles in the August number of the Review of Reviews have to do with phases of municipal art. Mr. Ernest Knaufft describes the new Appellate Court Building in New York City—an imposing architectural creation; and Mr. Archibald Hadden tells how a half million has been expended, in recent years, by Mr. Charles H. Hackley in beautifying and otherwise improving the lumber town of Muskegon, Michigan. Mr. Hackley's efforts should be object-lessons to other American millionaires.

In the Review of Reviews for August, Mr. William Ordway Partridge, the sculptor, makes a plea for an annual national art exhibition in this country, on much the same lines as the Paris Salon or the English Royal Academy, but comprehending allied branches of art.

OUR WORK IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS BLESSED.

It is with considerable pleasure that we give space to the letter from Bro. J. F. Burton this week. He tell news that will bring joy to the hearts of all who are so earnestly watching the work in the South Sea Islands. It will be especially good news to those who have labored so hard in those islands to upbuild the natives, and we wish to congratulate the worthy missionaries on the good results of their work.

It is gratifying to know that the real intents of our labors there among the good natives is at last being understood by the government in power there. For many years have our missionaries been sent there and kept in the mission, when to many it seemed that it was a waste of time and money. Many obstacles have been met and only overcome by dint of arduous work and much sacrifice. Some of our people have returned from there broken in health. Sr. T. W. Smith practically sacrified her life for the sake of the work there. Sr. Devore's devotion to duty and the cause of Christ in those far away lands has cost her nearly as much. Many of our men have gone there strong men and returned injured in health. Has all that been undergone from selfish motives or for personal gain? No. The mission of our men there has always been one of love. Love for the natives and for the cause of our Master.

Glad, then, are we, to see such fruits of the self-sacrificing labor done by our men. It is not because some of our people have been raised into places of power and honor that we rejoice; for such brings added responsibilities and cares. It is because our people there have been brought up into a condition where such honor can be placed upon them worthily. It speaks volumes for the work of our missionaries. The natives have been educated, taught, drilled, disciplined, until at last some are worthy to fill the highest position in their islands. Surely, God is with us, and is opening up the way so that the right may be speeded.

We, wish, too, to congratulate our brethren in the South Sea Islands, that our Lord has so signally blessed them, and we trust that the blessed Spirit may guide them in their new places of trust. We pray that they may always have a spirit of humility, yet withal a firmness and strength in the right. They should not become proud, for pride "goeth before a fall." Trust in God.

SELFISHNESS.

There is probably no one thing that mitigates more against the progress of the work than selfishness. No missionary can do the work for which he is sent into the world in an entirely acceptable way who is in any way selfish. Just so much as he lacks in control of his selfishness, just so much will he lack in being what the Master desires him to be. Self must be put down entirely. He is out to work for others. To learn self-abnegation is to approach the perfection of the Master. There is no other attribute of the Master which so preëminently places him above all mankind as his complete control of self, his perfect self-abnegation.

Our most beloved men are the ones in whom there is the least selfishness to be seen. There is nothing which will so quickly lower a man in the estimation of the people as an exhibition of selfishness. There is nothing which makes a man's memory so pleasant to people as to know that he was entirely free from selfish motives.

The work of a missionary, especially one in our church, is necessarily one of sacrifice and love. Christ entered upon his work for the benefit of mankind. "I will go, Father, and thine be the glory," breathes the very opposite of selfishness. We should be like him. We should not work because of any glory that might accrue to us because we are engaged in such work. Our first thought should be, "How much good can I do; how much will the cause of Christ be benefited?"

We have many men who are imbued with the spirit of the Master, and the result of their work is good, has been, and will be. In nearly every case where trouble has come to the cause it has been through the selfishness of some who should have been imitators of the divine example of Christ but who had not the moral courage and strength to subdue self and give the glory to the one to whom glory is due.

When our ministers are working for self or in the interests of personal gain, they are not doing work for Christ. We cannot serve two masters, we are told, and when self is being served, Christ and his cause is being neglected. We must be preëminently altruistic in religious work. It is the spirit of our cause. What so purifies and sanctifies the love of a mother if not the absence of selfishness in it. What makes the memory of mother so dear to us? What causes a mother's love to shine so brightly to all mankind? It is because it makes that dear mother unselfish. Her love eradicates her selfishness and makes her solicitous of the welfare of others. Blessed be our mothers in their love and self-abnegation!

THERE is a great need for us to pray the following prayer of Canon Wilberforce:—

Lord, for tomorrow and its needs
I do not pray;
Help me from stain of sin
Just for today;
Let me both diligently work
And duly pray,
Let me be kind in deed and word
Just for today;
Let me be slow to do my will,
Prompt to obey;
Help me to sacrifice myself
Just for today.
Let me no wrong nor idle word
Unthinking say,
Set thou thy seal upon my lips
Just for today.
So for the morrow and its needs
I do not pray,
But keep me, guide me, hold me, Lord,
Just for today.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it not the duty of an elder in the field when he baptizes where there is no branch of the church to send the names and items of those baptized to the general Church Recorder, that he may have on the records the names of all those baptized?

Yes. The Church Recorder has repeatedly called the attention of the elders to this, and holds himself ready to furnish blank forms to the elders who need them to report such baptisms. Where members are baptized into a branch, the elder need not report them to the recorder; but where the members are not in a branch, the baptisms should be reported to the recorder.

Is it or is it not the duty of such members to join the branch nearest to where they reside?

Yes. That question has been answered lately. See HERALD for June 20, 1900.

Would an elder be in the line of his duty if

he refuse to go and administer to the sick because there was not another elder to go with him?

We would not so consider it. In our opinion an elder should go at the call of the sick if he is situated so that he can go, irrespective of whether he is alone or not, or whether it is in accord with his wish or not. We have heard of elders who refused to go because they did not think that the sick ones need such administration. In our opinion it is not for the elder to so decide. We believe that he should go and leave the merits of the case and the results with Him above.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Charles Derry writes from Woodbine, Iowa, July 25:—

Today is the 74th anniversary of my birth. My health is fairly good, and my desire for the onward cause of God, and the coming of his glorious kingdom, is unabated. My wife is far from well, but not entirely down. If she is so improved that I may deem it wise to leave, it is my intention to start for Mallard and other places north tomorrow.

Bro. J. M. Baker writes from Sioux City, Iowa, under date of July 21:—

Bro. Mintun and myself have held five weeks' meetings in the tent at Sergeant Bluff, seven miles south of here, with but little interest and through some very hard storms of wind and rain. We have held two meetings here. Had a good audience last evening. Seems to be some interest and we hope to put the work on a firmer basis. Find Bro. M. P. Berg a very liberal brother in a financial way. We are finding members every day in different parts of the city who did not know that there were other Saints in the city. Hope that we can get them together and make some kind of an organization, so that they will come together once or twice a week. My family is with me, and we are tenting near the large tent.

Bro. J. C. Vaughn, of Rea, Mo., under date of July 23, writes:—

The work is in a fair condition here. Saints as a rule are striving to live the gospel.

Mrs. C. Ralston, writes from Servado, Oklahoma, under date of July 22:—

I am not a member of the church but expect to be at the first opportunity. We are among the isolated ones of Oklahoma. Have been here only a short time—not quite a year. Hope to be a good Saint some day.

A few days ago the Herald Office received a letter from Louisa M. Oliver, dated July 20, and written in a very legible hand. She ordered several books, etc., and sent the money, too. She closes her letter thus:—

I am eighty-nine years old today. I thank God for his watchcare over me.

Under date of July 23, Bro. R. C. Evans wrote:—

Fred Gregory started for Manitoba one week ago today, and I passed through London and remained over Sunday to see him off. I wish we could give both him and Dan more help in British Columbia and Manitoba. Since leaving London I have preached at Cherry Grove, St. Marys, Rostock, and Arthur. Lizzie is with me. We travel on our wheels. Get up five a. m., and are off. One day made sixty-five miles by noon. Preached every night on the way.

Bro. John Shook, writes from Buchanan, Mich., July 28:—

I always want to take the Herald. Saints all well. The work is moving along slowly. Three baptized lately.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Pres. Joseph Smith returned from his Canada trip Wednesday morning last week, and left Friday last for St. Joseph, Mo., returning Monday.

Sister Alice Corson of Richmond, Virginia, contributes some excellent songs to the HERALD to which we hope our music writers will furnish notes. Sr. Corson thinks she might write to music if the ordinary meters were written, but does not feel competent to write music, or arrange harmonies. Who will try it?

We have received a complimentary ticket to the Allerton, Iowa, Chautauquan Assembly, to be held August 16 to 23. It has arranged a good program, copies of which will be mailed upon application to Wm. Murchie, Sec. These Chautauquan assemblies are becoming very popular, and worthily so, as they are elevating and educational in their nature, and usually present fine programs to the people.

Mrs. C. Ralston submits a piece for the music committee's use if desired. See another column.

Sunday morning the Lamoni Saints had the pleasure of hearing the presiding priest, teacher, and deacon. The presiding elder had set that service apart for them to tell what they considered their duties were. It was a pleasant innovation. Bro. M. J. Danielson, presiding priest, first occupied, A. K. Anderson, presiding teacher, next, and Daniel Anderson, presiding deacon, closed.

We wish to acknowledge the receipt of a complimentary ticket to the Iowa State Fair, to be held August 24 to September 1. It promises to be the best State Fair ever held. The attractions are good, and the secretary informs us the demand for catalogues was never before so great.

Sr. Clara Hilliard, daughter of Bishop Hilliard, was married one week ago tonight, to Mr. Leonard Dickey, of Lamoni. The HERALD extends congratulations.

On Friday the First Presidency and the Bishopric went to St. Joseph to meet with the St. Joseph branch.

Brn. G. H. Hilliard and E. A. Blakeslee met with Bro. E. L. Kelley some last week. They as a bishopric were disposing of some case appealed to them.

The First Presidency returned Monday from their St. Joseph trip, and they reported that a good time was had. Bro. Hilliard went from there to his home in Independence, and Bro. Blakeslee to Galien, Michigan.

AS I SEE THE PERFECT LAW.

Everywhere our elders go they herald the "perfect law," "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul." Here are shoals upon which wrecks are stranded on every hand. "Converting the soul" to the wisdom of the "perfect law" of Christ. How far-reaching in its application is this law? Is it not to govern by its converting power all that we think, say, or do? "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," evidently of the application to all our desires of this "perfect law." There is a disposition widespread in the Christian ranks to modify the law to our convenience. It is easy to talk about it, but to apply to our salvation now, to crucify the natural cravings of carnal desire, and prove what this good, perfect will of God is, appears to be the "dead line" of carnality which few, even of professed Saints, approach with a firm, elastic step. The dividing line between saint and sinner must exist somewhere, or who can ever prove the perfect will of God for themselves, and he be able to walk in holiness before the Lord? As an ambassador for Christ, it is my duty to live it, and teach it by voice and pen. "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge," —feed the people on knowledge,— "for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts." When the soul is converted, the whole man or woman is converted, and if it be by the Spirit which gave the perfect law, then its sanctifying, saving, healing balm will be felt from the soles of the feet to the crown of the head; bringing into captivity to the Lord of glory every desire of the heart and graciously desiring to honor him with the firstfruits of lips and deeds. As untold war is visited upon the body through appetite, or strictly speaking, the "living soul," it should be a Saint's duty to prove the perfect will of God in eating or fasting as they may elect,—to learn the law of life through the "eternal spirit," as it relates to eating, drinking, or fasting, or in all that we put our minds or hands to perform. Jesus says today, as he said centuries ago,—

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect, and he means just what the words imply, to learn and apply to our lives the perfect law of life and liberty as Christ taught in days of old, and still continues to teach to all who are "taught from on high."

The word of the Lord is given to the upright.

The gift of the Holy Ghost is conferred for the express purpose that those who will hearken to and heed its words of truth and wisdom may prove what the perfect will of the Lord is. When saint or sinner from the least to the highest treat lightly the wisdom of the Lord for the temporal salvation of man, they simply betray the fact that they are slow to learn and apply the law of life—the perfect law. As a servant of the Most High, I want to take special pleasure to "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" by counsel or command. I know professed Saints have said so often to me, "We might as well use tea, coffee, tobacco, and liquor, if we choose, as to leave these things out of our fare, and pay the money over to other families who will do so. We might as well have the use or misuse of our money. If the Lord says they 'are not good for man,' it means them as well as us." How often have I looked wistfully towards the eastern horizon as if to catch the first glimmer of the day when man shall not teach his fellow man and say, "Know ye the Lord." For those who truly know the Lord unto "eternal life," no such inconsistencies will be truthfully preferred against them.

And every man that hath this hope [of eternal life] in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

He wants to be worthy to associate with the Lord of glory, and can only be so by abstaining from any appearance of sin, and we must know the source of every thought or desire we cherish. It should need no argument to prove that perfect obedience to the perfect law of love, in two or three generations, at least, would extinguish the seeds of disease from those affected.

But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength.—Isaiah 40: 31.

People say, "I do not know about that;" this is parried and mollified by gainsayers and stiff-necked people in every way. Still, that is what is written for our comfort in the scriptures. Testimonies are in order, sometimes, so I will offer one; nor do I claim to be more than ordinary mortals, nor of finer clay, neither do I believe that the Lord is a respecter of persons, as that word is generally received. When I quit toiling in "the affairs of men" as a keeper of cattle and gardener, I had the advantage of a little schooling in the way and counsel of the Lord, which roused into activity a relish to satisfy to the utmost of my powers of body and mind what the law of life and peace in the Redeemer's love might work for my good in the present life; that I might be helpful to my fellows. I am a convert to "what is written," that the Lord honors those who honor his advice, and accept it as the law of life, fully as much as if he had said, "Thou shalt." I know some dull students and stiff-necks will say I am a favorite with the Master. Well, I dare say the "holy men [all should be] of old" who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" were favorites, too. Yet there is no good reason known to me why all the human race should not be holy men or women, the only hindrance being a willful disposition to have their wishes satisfied in desire and carnal appetite gratified instead of learning the voice of the Good Shepherd and walking in his counsel. So many have hands laid upon them for conferring the gift of the Holy Ghost and go on from year to year, and apparently never hear its words of admonition, warning, or comfort; indeed, the perfect law, its saving power to the "living soul," is a sealed book, or page, at least. Years ago I concluded if the Comforter was actually conferred by the "laying on of hands," there must develop in me a force not possessed by those not accepting that ordinance, or there was no virtue in the imposition of hands. I remembered Paul's injunction to Timothy and to others, "that thou stir up the gift of God [blessed thought] which is in thee by the putting on of my hands," (no mere form or sign was this,) something not in the wisdom of the world, was so graciously conferred in the Lord's own simple way. First Timothy 4:14-16 is another earnest appeal to Timothy to diligence, to honor the gift and truth of God. Many times have I pondered over these and the Savior's words, (John 14:15-17, 21; 16:13, 14; 1 John 2:27,) and many other scriptures, "able to make" me "wise unto salvation."

I was never of a disposition to construe what was written to mean something else than what was said, and concluded as I had become an adopted son, if I were a son indeed, then my body should be the temple of the Holy Ghost, and if I could live pure and keep myself circumspect, the Comforter would direct my mind to understand what the will of the Lord was for my good, and for others as well; for we must live for the good of others, if we fulfill the promptings of divine love. Many incidents occurred from time to time to confirm me that the Lord was gracious enough to use my tongue to express his will, as on one occasion the voice of the Spirit, after repeatedly chiding me for lack of diligence and zeal in the Master's cause, admonished me that unless I was more faithful, the Spirt should be withdrawn and my bodily vigor and strength should wane. I thought over this much, for in my circumstances I did not see many good openings to show my zeal for good works. Several times I was reminded of my apathy to step up and improve opportunities which presented themselves, apparently special privileges, and I often felt ashamed to follow what my heart prompted to. Time flew swifter and swifter, apparently, and as I had been naturally strong, I felt a weakness creeping upon me which I strove with all my powers to withstand, but when I thought over the matter, words would force themselves into my mind: "Have I ever spoken to you in vain? Will you not accept my gift and improve your time in righteousness, and use all your powers to turn the hearts of sons and daughters unto me? An open door is before you; come, now, and take your place in the ranks where you listed to serve when I adopted you as my son. Can you not serve my cause with the same fidelity and zeal that you served your country's flag?" This appealed so strongly that I wept bitter tears over what seemed so clear, a need for willing workers. A most bitter experience wove its story in my life, along these years, and still I was somewhat indolent in spiritual work, but seldom for a day did I not feel I was losing virtue in spiritual and physical strength. I was reminded many times of this, and yet was cheered with the words that a most blessed pathway was open for me if I would only shake off all allegiance to every influence but love for truth, and obey the voice which would lead me into a light which would captivate every impulse of my being. Rheumatism in hands and feet, lumbago also troubled me, and I thought, sometimes, Surely these troubles must be shaken off by some means, and I felt in my heart there must be a pathway out of such entanglements of the flesh; when the voice of the Spirit, which thrilled through my being and always gave such sweet sensations of peace and assurance when I yielded myself to its influence, would say, "Let go of the cares of the world and give your time and energy to my service, and I will heal you, and you shall again feel the buoyancy of youth, and you shall know that I am your Redeemer and the Holy One of Israel. I will manifest myself to you, to delight your eyes and heart. I will be with you by day and by night, and you shall feel my hand in love. Study my word and appeal to me in spirit continually, and you shall tread the land as if in a new world; for the shackles of disease shall be loosed and you shall be free indeed." How fully these words have been verified, especially in the last year, so far as bodily vigor is concerned, none can know so well as I. I will say, Never could words be more truly confirmed.

I never could believe this life was ever intended to be other than a joyous existence. I meet with two classes of people in my rambles, those desiring to be followers of the Lord, and multitudes of uncircumcised in heart. If either of these parties choose to open their ears to what the Spirit says, they may become wise unto salvation in this their day. To-day is the day of salvation to me. To you as well as myself the scriptures are open to make us "wise unto salvation."

I started this letter with the intention of appealing to the reason of all who read it not further advanced. "Keep your mouth shut and live," is a very trite saying, rich in wisdom. It is better to eat to live than live to eat. How much we learn from these thoughts depends on what we read between the lines, as well as the lines themselves. Some say, "I cannot fast." To these I say, Then eat what you please. In all kindness I say this, but I pity all such Saints. It might do no good for me to write at length on eating and fasting, for today as in all ages, carnal appetite has been pandered to, fed, and gorged, as if life consisted in a continual round of eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Nor do I oppose these needfuls when we can gratify them in honor to the Lord. Some have intimated I am indifferent to womankind, or that I do not feel that affinity for the gentle sex common to man. No greater a mistake could be made. When I consider the actual difference in what I see of the sexes, it seems to me that woman is the crowning work of God. The question, though, as to the part fasting occupies in the economy of the "perfect law," must be largely learned by the individuals themselves. Several instances of fasts of forty days are recorded in scripture. Daniel refused the king's dainties and wine, preferring his pulse. This would appall devotees of appetite, as it stunned Melzar, who was to provide for Daniel and his fellows. Says Daniel,—

> And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes.

Again:—

> In those days I Daniel was mourning three full weeks. I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, etc.

What comes the reply to this self-denial and earnest entreaty?

> Fear not, Daniel: for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard.

After all that is written concerning fasting, the object was and is to completely subjugate the will of the flesh to the will of the spirit, to subdue every fleshly desire in honor to the Lord. All along the line the battle rages, and victory is won or lost as in firmness we stand or yield.

> Each vict'ry will help you,
> Some other to win.

To be able at all times to discern the true source of every inspiration, and accept or reject,—thrust it from us,—is the office work of the Comforter.

> Whatsoever is not of faith is sin, so if we have doubts as to the source, it is safe to reject it.

> But godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

What we cherish in the heart affects us for weal or woe, as well as our eating and fasting. One great trouble with mankind is outlined by Paul. (Rom. 8, I. T.) The carnal mind is enmity against God. To be spiritually minded is life and peace. To live and walk in the spirit is the whole lesson to be learned. Much wisdom lies hidden up in this chapter. But those who must have a command may stand aside, please. Inasmuch as—> the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned, therefore the wisdom of the Lord adopted a very simple plan to be born of the Spirit, and induction into the kingdom, and the way of life lies not in the way which man's wisdom teaches, "but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." So many are very easy in life, very little concerned as to the great importance of delving to the bottom of this most important of all lessons. Some will bring forth thirty, some sixty, and some one hundredfold. Which will you choose? Will we learn to eat to live? Shall we be first, second, or third rate fruits when assorting season comes? We are more concerned in this matter than most people realize.

> Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good, can be made most valuable advice, if we truly heed it every day, in proving "what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God," that we be able to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service.

Because some write on gathering, some on consecration, etc., it does not occur to me a special hobby is made of these topics, but from the least to the greatest, our manner of life concerns us as individuals and the church in general far more than all other matters. Let this be our hobby. Paul says it is our reasonable service to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, to the Lord. Pure within and clean without. I know the uncircumcised heart quibbles over such stringent entreaty to apply the remedy for sin,—the perfect law of life and peace with God,—as the sick person demurs to swallowing remedies prescribed by the physician, when judgment overtakes them for outraged laws of the health of the body, when there might as well have been no occasion for the remedy had they learned to keep their mouth shut and live, or learned to eat to live. I am as certain the Lord will offer true wisdom to keep and preserve the body, as for any other cause. Disease is the result of sin, immediate or remote, and attuned to the divine law disease is unknown. Love is a healing, developing agency, and if kept above the sensual plane, in time has a most salutary influence on every one under its influence. As divine love is true platonic, it becomes an active tonic to every soul, young or old, as a restorative. Who walks the earth with so elastic a step as those under its control? Verily, it pays a hundredfold every day to love the Lord with the whole heart and never let its fervor wane. Then how great the reward to those who will turn fully to the Lord in the days of their youth. How highly should these bodies of ours, which are so precious in the sight of our Creator, be prized by us, seeing we shall possess them again in eternity. How careful we should be to keep them in honor for the Lord, and never misuse our powers for any unhallowed purpose, for so doing, we dishonor the crowning work of the Creator. No night revelry to weary and exhaust their normal powers. Nothing taken into the stomach which is not proper food or proper drink, well ordained in God's clear sight. All our clothing selected with jealous care for comfort, and to honor him who wrought us so wondrously and would have us use every power of body and mind to serve his pleasure, for it is his pleasure that we live long and be happy in his love, through loyal love for all his precepts and counsel. No food nor drink should be indulged except with the clearest faith that the Lord would indulge with you, time, place, and quantity included. In such use of all our powers we serve our own good in the highest sense, and "shine as lights in the world." Anything less than this diligence to learn how to apply the perfect law of life and peace with God shows ignorance of the "way of holiness." No night feasts to overcharge the internal machinery of the temple of the living God, with "extra duty" that chokes down the organs of nutrition and brings the distress of judgment for outraged laws of life and perfect health. Let us learn the "perfect law" and hide it in the secret chambers of our hearts, that they be before our eyes always. No more sifting out the vital portion of the grain "ordained for the use of man," and feed the best to our domestic animals, while we rob ourselves and helpless innocents intrusted to our care. No more to pollute and pervert the fountain of strength to gratify lust. Let us learn the truth as it is in Christ in the light of the Comforter, applying the square and plumb, the written law, to all our work. To learn our mission in this world of preparation, for a long and happy life on earth, and a life on the sanctified earth, clothed in the glory of the Father and the Son.

If thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God.—Prov. 2: 3-5.

To seek after understanding of the wisdom of the Lord for our guidance in all that we do will bring us to the love and favor of the Prince of Peace that we may be taught from on high. The most useful gift of the Spirit is wisdom. Properly understood, it comprehends all that pertains to godliness; to life in this world and eternal life in its fullest sense, and encircles the whole economy of God. We are here solely to learn and apply the wisdom of the Lord as taught by the Spirit of the Lord. Wisdom is needed in all things and in all the affairs of life. Charity, or pure love, is the fruit of divine wisdom. No influence on earth or in heaven is so blissful as love; yet wisdom must direct or the best fruit of love will not mature, or will be dwarf fruit. The Lord is preparing a flock of lambs and sheep for the world's fair—the millennium. All who are appointed overseers of the flock should look well to their wedding garment and not try to remodel, but wear it gracefully. It is modeled to order, and should fit all alike. If the garments and armor do not fit us, we are deformed, and not the garment. If we can wear the garment gracefully, great shall be our reward on earth; even peace, quietness, and assurance, and eternal shall be our glory in the sweet by and by.

Ever and ever for Zion's weal,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

WHO IS THE "ONE MIGHTY AND STRONG?"

And it shall come to pass that I the Lord God will send one mighty and strong, holding the sceptre of power in his hand, clothed with light for a covering, whose mouth shall utter words, eternal words, while his bowels shall be a fountain of truth, to set in order the house of God, and to arrange by lot the inheritances of the Saints whose names are found, and the names of their fathers, and of their children, enrolled in the book of the law of God; while that man, who was called of God and appointed, that putteth forth his hand to steady the ark of God, shall fall by the shaft of death, like as a tree that is smitten by the vivid shaft of lightning; and all they who are not found written in the book of remembrance, shall find none inheritance in that day, but they shall be cut asunder and their portion shall be appointed them among unbelievers, where is wailing and gnashing of teeth.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 260.

The "one mighty and strong" is to perform such an important work among the people of God, and its results will be so far reaching, that we should be interested in him, and prepared for those events, so we will not be disappointed "in that day." When he comes he will hold "the sceptre of power in his hand," indicating "regal or sovereign authority." The sceptre was used to denote the authority of the ruler or king before the crown was introduced. See how this harmonizes with,

And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you.—Acts 3: 20.

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—Matt. 28: 18.

When Christ returns, he will be "sent," and as "all power is given" to him, he will hold "the sceptre of power in his hand." After appearing, in the glorious condition described in this letter and New Testament, he is to "set in order the house of God." The house of God evidently refers to the church or kingdom of God. He recognizes it as the "house of God," yet it is not "in order," in some respects. Certain changes should be made, which shall be immediately attended to. To what extent it may be necessary to change the condition of the church, to set it in order, we may not know, but it is reasonable to presume that every man who occupies an office that he does not properly fill will be removed. Men who preside over branches or districts, whose spiritual and moral developments are such that they fail to magnify their callings, will be relegated to their proper spheres, while those who are prepared for these, as well as other positions, will be placed in them.

I will take, therefore, the talent from you, and give it to him who hath ten talents. For unto every one who hath obtained other talents, shall be given, and he shall have in abundance. But from him that hath not obtained other talents, shall be taken away even that which he hath received. And his lord shall say unto his servants, Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. —Matt. 25: 28-31, I. T.

As long as men fail to magnify their calling, and wicked and slothful members are found, order in the proper sense cannot exist in the church. But when—

The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.—Matt. 13: 41, 42, order will then prevail in his house. Notice the similarity between the expression at the close of the quotation from Joseph's letter and the last of the verses quoted.

And to arrange by lot the inheritances of the saints whose names are found, and the names of their fathers, and of their children, enrolled in the book of the law of God; . . . and all they who are not found written in the book of remembrance, shall find none inheritance in that day.

This is another duty devolving on him which calls for great wisdom and power. Just the kind of work our Savior will do when he comes.

And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds. And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.

But there was an unfaithful servant among them, and while he was favored at the beginning equally with the rest, having received one "pound," this was taken from him and he found no inheritance in that day. Those who were to receive inheritances from the "one mighty and strong" had their names "enrolled" "in the book of the law of God." How are we to have our names thus "enrolled?" is a very important question. It is answered in the fore part of the letter, as follows:—

It is contrary to the will and commandment of God that those who receive not their inheritance by consecration, agreeably to his law, which he has given that he may tithe his people to prepare them against the day of vengeance and burning, should have their names enrolled with the people of God; . . . their names shall not be found, neither the names of the fathers, the names of the children written in the book of the law of God, saith the Lord of Hosts.—History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 259.

From this we learn that only those who receive "their inheritances by consecration" can have their names enrolled "in the book of the law." These receive their inheritances "agreeably to his law" before the "one mighty and strong" comes to "arrange by lot their inheritances." The inheritances they receive "by consecration" which entitles them to have their names "written in the book of the law" are given by the bishop, and they are to possess them till the coming of Christ. See Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1:—

Wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy by the voice of the church, according to the laws and covenants of the church, to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.

This is the first inheritance to be received by the Saint, and is the result of the means God has ordained that he may tithe his people to prepare them against the day of vengeance and burning." By complying with the law thus given, we have our names "written in the book of the law," and the one mighty and strong will give final or eternal inheritances to those who have received them "by consecration." This thought is clearly expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4:—

And I have made the earth rich, and, behold, it is my footstool: wherefore, again I will stand upon it; and I hold forth and deign to give unto you greater riches, even a land of promise: a land flowing with milk and honey, upon which there shall be no curse when the Lord cometh; and I will give it unto you for the land of your inheritance, if ye seek it with all your hearts: and this shall be my covenant with you, Ye shall have it for the land of your inheritance, and for the inheritance of your children for ever, while the earth shall stand; and ye shall possess it again in eternity, no more to pass away.

The gospel is calculated to remove the effects of sin from both man and the earth, and when that spot is redeemed by faithful Saints, the curse will be removed and there will be such a place when the Lord comes. How large a territory will be included in this glorified condition, we are not informed, but the land given for the inheritance of the Saints shall have "no curse when the Lord cometh."

In the present condition of the church the president has the regulating power of the whole body, and the bishop the giving of inheritances, and as Christ is to purify his people (Mal. 3: 3) and is to reward every man "according to his works" at his coming, (Matt. 16: 27,) I conclude that the "one might and strong" spoken of by Joseph Smith, in his letter to W. W. Phelps, November 27, 1832, is Christ.

May we be prepared to obtain an "inheritance in that day" and enter into our "everlasting habitations."

DUNSEITH, N. Dak., July 18.

Editors Herald:—The present writing finds your correspondent in company with Bro. Thorburn, battling for the truth, on what may appropriately be termed "the frontier." Am glad to report to Bro. T.'s many friends that his earnest, cheerful deportment commends him to all, and we hope to return him to Lamoni perhaps a little "tougher" but "large" as ever. Results at Leeds did not meet our anticipations; however, three were bold enough to step out from the world and acknowledge Christ, and we can only pray for another half dozen hesitating ones, who have advanced so far as to say they are convinced of the "truth" of the doctrine.

We arrived at Bottineau on the evening of the 13th and put up at the "Anderson House," and for the first time in our ministerial career had all our necessities supplied, free of charge, at a public house; thanks, Mr. Rodney. May God reward him at the final account. Next morning, fresh and vigorous, we took a four mile constitutional, most of the time the scribe two rods in the rear. After due time the genial voice of Bro. Stowell greets us, we partake of dinner, teams begin to arrive from all points of the compass, and we are invited to preside at the "annual branch meeting." Bro. Salu Stowell was reëlected president; Bro. L. Trowbridge, teacher; Sr. Addie Spaulding, clerk. A total membership of forty reported, and a good prospect of additions by baptism and otherwise, the opening of the "Turtle Mountain Reservation" having attracted a number of scattered Saints.

This week we are holding forth in the Methodist church, attendance meager, the one word dead expresses the situation fully. Sunday next we "flee to the mountains." We expect a little fight. Well, so be it; anything but stagnation.

By letter from Bro. Houghton, he is hoeing a hard row. Let us cheer up, brethren, all along the line. Let us "look upward" and not "downward." We can accomplish more.

Yours hopefully,

WM. SPARLING.

SHARON, Pa., July 20.

Editors Herald:—Some three months have passed since leaving the scene of the late General Conference. During that time I have labored in Missouri, Illinois, and Ohio. Time and space forbid a detailed recital of all that has occurred in the busy weeks of missionary life. Suffice it to say there is a host of kind, faithful, and noble Saints all along the line striving to live and preach the gospel. There are a few "don't cares," "slothfuls," and "headys" who are no help to the work, and who will sooner or later "peter out." But the Saints as a people are the best in the world. Of late I have been playing "second piano" to A. H. Parsons, who is president and missionary in charge of the Ohio district. He is a faithful, earnest, wise, and energetic soldier, and withal an all around good man to be with, and is held in high esteem by the Saints in the district. I think they did well to hold him another year.

About one more week will finish up my labors in this field, then on to Massachusetts and Maine, where, as has been announced, I am placed in charge. Let me say to the Saints of that region, that if all goes well I expect to reach you soon after the Massachusetts reunion, possibly in company with the president of the Eastern mission, W. H. Kelley. Hope so, at any rate. Address me at Silver Lake, Plympton, Massachusetts. I shall endeavor to learn your requirements as soon as possible, and will try as best I can to arrange for them. Would ask the hearty coöperation of every live Saint in the district, especially the officers of the church.

There is good material in Maine. Let us make the cause grow like the mustard seed and plant, that there may be many birds of the air lodging in the branches thereof.

To all those who so kindly ministered to my necessities in all the places where I have been of late, as well as those who would have had they the opportunity, I wish to say that it is all appreciated and if their names do not appear on these pages, remember there is another record kept, upon which even the cup of cold water will not be overlooked. With a prayer for the welfare of the church, I am still striving to fill the place of,

A brother,

H. J. DAVISON.

LAUREL, Neb., July 19.

Editors Herald:—I claim an interest in Zion's weal, and as a worker with all others, am watching and praying for her upbuilding. After conference I visited Independence, Missouri, for a few days, also Bolivar, Missouri. Some good faithful Saints are needed in Bolivar who can and will let the gospel love and light shine brightly, that those who hunger and thirst for righteousness might feel and see the warmth and light, and be won from the idolatry of this generation. There is good material in Bolivar for Latter Day Saints. There is some beautiful country, and the people seem thrifty between Kansas City and Bolivar. So near "the center stake," and yet the people as a whole know little of the doctrine of the church intrusted with the message of "the everlasting gospel" to preach to men of "every nation, kindred, tongue, and people" "in the hour of God's judgment."

I have not yet reached my own field (western Idaho), but shall get there shortly. The first General Conference I ever attended was last April, and as I had not seen the home of my boyhood for over ten years, and some of my home folks for thirty-five years, I concluded to tarry among relatives awhile, and tell them the story of the cross as committed to the children of men, for the last time before the coming of Zion's King. It may seem as a dream to some who are kindly warned to repent and obey the "gospel of the kingdom," but to do so acceptably to him who sent me on this errand, is my first duty, whether the people say aye or nay. It is a most solemn mission, to call upon saint and sinner to hearken to the voice of him who "stands at the door and knocks," and knocks. Throw wide ajar the door to the citadel of the heart, the parlor door, and in your most welcome tones invite the royal guest to come in and make thy home his abode forever. I have not tarried from my appointed field for pleasure or ease among friends, as time will tell, for my Master's friends are my friends, but blood relatives are dear, too. A desire to sow the seeds of truth and offer the bread and water of life to them has been the constant desire of my heart. I found Bro. Daniel J. Dierks, of Amber, Iowa, ever willing as escort, and assistant in services, and to the warm hearts about Amber, Viola, Stone City, Center Junction, Green Valley, Canton, and Fulton, one and all, "God be with you till we meet again." Dear Saints, let us wake up and be worthy to be "His jewels," putting on the whole armor of righteousness, and as good soldiers of Jesus Christ ever stand upon the watchtower.

There must be no sleeping soldiers,
In the army of the Lord.

He is calling now to battle,
Both the aged and the youth.

If any Saints who may read these lines have friends, or know of Saints in western Idaho, Caldwell or Payette country, I would be pleased to have addresses, if agreeable to them, or about Boise City, Idaho. This is a new field and needs visiting, and I feel that there are sheep and lambs there who need seeking after. In so many places where I go, there seems a strong disposition to class all Latter Day Saints as peas of the Utah variety. No chance should be lost to get the true condition before the people through the press, by at least getting our literature on their desks, in reading rooms, public or private. Let us take lessons from the ants, the bees, and the English sparrow, which, though hated and despised, written against and shot at on every side, its chatter and bustle is everywhere, and to bless. When we begin to understand our true errand and possibilities under the favor of Israel's God, every energy of body and mind is enlisted to reach the highest excellence in the gift of heaven's King. Earth and heaven become one vast schoolroom under the care and instruction of the great Teacher. "I will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is staid on me," says the still small voice which whispers through, and pierces all creation. The Saints have scarcely begun to wake up to their possibilities in the flesh. They are looking for a glory in the "sweet by and by," which is largely within their grasp today. We are in the strife to win; to weaken and scatter the powers of darkness before us, and eternity but restores to our vision, our life record, and it will need no one to read it, for or against us.

Life's privilege is a most precious blessing —when used in the wisdom of the Lord. What an Eden is before mankind, if he would only live according to the "perfect law of liberty." So many who are called Saints there be who abide not in their first love, but allow the cares of life, pleasure of the world, and lust in its multitude of forms to enter in and crowd the precious tree of life. So many grow cold or lukewarm because of various offenses, in and out of the family of Saints. Many run well for a season—while nothing hinders, but convenient sins are not washed out of the heart that does not love righteousness and hate iniquity or sin. In our first newborn love in the Spirit, the world is a dear little paradise, and the family of Saints, where our love lies at anchor. The Sun of righteousnes has cast his rays around our pathway, and we walk freely justified, in the true light of its glory. We see naught but "beauty all around," because love sees no motes in the eyes of those we love, and sweetest of all is the ecstasy of "peace with the Lord." We bathe in a sea of love, and drink an elixir of which the worldly mind may only dream, but they awake to realize a taunting dream, of a "river of pleasure." If we stand not in our integrity before the Lord day and night, in love for the graces which mark the perfect son or daughter, we cannot overcome and wear the crown of life promised the "tried and true." If we grow weary and shun the battle's strife, we are not "valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord." The fruit we bear as a branch will be second or third grade, for some seed which fell on good ground only produced thirty to sixty fold. Beware, think well, and be not overcome. Return to your first love, quickly too. None of us will have too much time to perfect holiness. Let us not become reprobates by allowing any root of bitterness to spring up and defile ourselves or others.

Man was created and his agency given him that he should cultivate and educate himself up to the divine standard and thus be prepared and worthy of the fullness of the glory of the Father and the Son, and be one with them. Anything short of this standard is below our privilege, and assuredly we will have a long time to repent of our apathy in this the greatest privilege that God can grant. Life is but a great school, in which move all grades of students, from the dullest to the brightest. Here are students in training and education for the lowest depths and the highest heights. Who but an all-wise and loving Father could have thus provided for his children "sons and daughters unto God?" "Darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people," concerning their former estate; why here, (to them a world of darkness and trouble,) and whence they tend? Christ prayed the Father to glorify him with the same glory he enjoyed before the world was. It is for us as his children to keep our vessels in sanctification and honor to the Lord of glory, that we may "awake in his likeness." We dwellers in the flesh, are here of our own choice, and are not destitute of knowledge of the bliss we left, for we long to be clothed with immortality. There is in us a spark of the divine nature which needs feeding on our part to cause it to grow into a fiery flame as a refiner's fire, purifying all our inward parts. This fiery love element, which loves purity, longs to reunite with its fountain head, in Christ.

As ever, for Zion's weal,
CHARLES ALBERTSON.

FULTON, Iowa, July 19.

Editors Herald:—June 2 I went to Denver to assist in getting the gospel tent started. After considerable red-tape in getting permits from the different authorities, we erected the tent on the corner of Curtis and Thirtieth streets and began meetings the evening of the 5th. Bro. R. Etzenhouser, enroute to California, spent a few days with us and preached the first sermon in the new tent—laying a foundation strong and deep for the discourses to follow.

I remained over Sunday the 10th and assisted with the services, and departed the first of the week for Cripple Creek, leaving the tent in charge of Brn. C. R. Duncan and J. F. Curtis. While at Cripple Creek I was kindly cared for by Bro. Herbert E. Merryman and his estimable wife. Preached a few times in private houses there and at Victor. Administered the sacrament to the few scattered Saints of the Cripple Creek district, also blessed a child of Bro. Merryman's and administered to him for his eyes. His wife does not belong to the church but is giving the work a careful investigation and seemed quite well pleased with her research. Cripple Creek is about ten thousand feet above sea level; but I do not know that its proximity to heaven causes the air to be any more sublime, or righteousness to thrive any better, for the usual amount of drunkenness and immorality seemed prevalent there as in other mining camps. The effect of the altitude on me while there rather discouraged me in the ambition of trying to get any nearer to heaven under present conditions. Perhaps when this body shall have been divested of its blood and supplied with a newer and better element I may be able to endure height better, but under present conditions, Cripple Creek is about as high as I can stand.

After thirty-six hours spent on the road, most of the time spent in waiting for trains to make connections, I arrived at Monte Vista the 21st, where I was domiciled with Bro. and Sr. G. O. Kennedy. We obtained the use of the Christian church there and I preached about a half dozen times to rather small audiences, the effort being not altogether satisfactory to me, still I think it was not made in vain. The evening of the 27th, invited guests arrived at Bro. Kennedy's to the number of about forty to witness the marriage of Sr. Jessie M. Kennedy to Mr. George H. Chase. The writer was master of ceremonies. The brevity, neatness, and yet comprehensiveness of our marriage vow always attracts attention. I received some pleasing compliments at the close, and a handful of silver to replenish my purse whose sides were clinging close together, all of which was duly appreciated, especially the latter.

I was programed for an address July 4, at my home town, but could not be present, but with other speakers and the omnipresent small boy and the firecrackers to entertain, I suppose their patriotic zeal blazed just as brightly as if I had been there. I went out with a picnic party and got caught in a rain, ate our dinners under difficulties, builded a fire to keep from chilling, and did a little fishing without getting even a "bite," save by mosquitoes. Uncle Sam may have felt gratified by the effort we made to celebrate his birthday, but we plodded homeward through the mud, singing with the spirit and the understanding, "Home, home, when shall we get there?"

Bro. C. E. Erickson kindly took me by buggy to Antonito, a distance of forty-five miles, where I spent one Sunday with the scattered Saints and administered the sacrament. Antonito is situated in the southern part of the San Luis valley and presents a very promising field for labor. Bro. C. B. Moyers, who is engaged in the mercantile business there, and who seems to enjoy the confidence of the people, is a good and willing helper to the missionary who goes there. Brn. M. R. Scott, Jr., and J. J. Boswell will likely reach that locality in a few days.

Called on Bro. and Sr. W. E. Wolfe at Pueblo on the home route. Found them firm in faith and active for the good of the work. They are deprived of church privileges, but take all the church papers and the Sunday school quarterlies.

I reached home at Wray the 11th and made hasty preparations to leave for Iowa the next day, to visit my aged father and mother. Found my father in a very bad condition, with but little hope for recovery. Aside from an adopted girl who is married and away from home, I am the only living child. Three boys who reached manhood having succumbed to the dread disease, consumption, hence I feel a greater obligation toward my parents. From the window where I am writing three graves are plainly visible on the hillside. As I visit at the old homestead, every place of which is linked with some tender memory, I seem to live over the past and seem to be with the boys again under the parental roof. In my fancy I almost forget that summer winds and sun and rain and winter's blasts and frost and cold have whispered, smiled, moaned, and wept above them, biting and blighting the tenderly planted flowers with which affectionate hands have decked their tombs, for once, aye for twice and thrice since my fancies were realities, I am consoled by the thought that they died in the faith to which my life has been consecrated and to which my best days have seemingly been given.

I cannot say now just how long I may be detained here, but will return to my work as soon as circumstances will justify my leaving here. My health has been better this year than for five years before, for which I am very thankful. Bro. Thomas will, no doubt, be reminded by this of the promise to me by the Spirit at our last district conference.

MANCHESTER, Texas, July 19.

Editors Herald:—The present finds me at this place. I came into this region of country the last of June, arriving at the home of Bro. Brannon, about eight miles from this point, where I sojourned until the 5th inst., when Bro. E. A. Erwin came along with a two-horse rig. Having previously notified him of my whereabouts, also having learned that he was intending a trip into the southeast of the county to visit among the Saints and preach, I decided to accompany him. On the afternoon of the 6th we bade Bro. Brannon and family good-bye and proceeded on our way, arriving at Bro. G. H. Rathbun's, where we remained over night, holding preaching services in the Presbyterian chapel—first services ever held therein by any of ye "Mormons." Only a few out, and opposition strong in the air. The 7th, bade goodbye to Bro. Rathbun, (after administering to a sick son,) and arriving at the Shawnee branch about four p. m., we held preaching services at night, also held social meeting on morning of the 8th. Preaching at eleven a. m., and again in the evening. But the evening services were cut in two by an approaching storm, the place of meeting being under an arbor.

We had appointments ahead for Monday night and all the coming week at a place called Ward's Creek, about fifteen miles from the Shawnee branch and three miles from a notable watering place called "Dalby Springs," the waters of which are impregnated with some kind of mineral. About eleven a. m. we arrived at the house of Bro. J. Hervey. His son James met us at Shawnee and rode home with us. Bro. Hervey and some neighbor friends had arranged an arbor in which to hold meetings, but on Saturday previous to our arrival the Missionary Baptists had started in with a protracted meeting. This we were not aware of until our arrival in the neighborhood. We had an appointment out for Monday night, which was filled by Bro. Erwin and an appointment left for Tuesday night for the writer. But during Tuesday whisperings were floating about of a threatening nature that the Mormons must stop their preaching. Our place of meeting was near a mile from where the Baptists were holding their meetings. Had we known of the protracted effort by the Baptists we would have postponed our meetings. Of course our meetings were sparsely attended, but those attending were our friends. We held the meeting Tuesday night and left an appointment for afternoon of next day, and went home to Bro. Hervey's. Just after prayer service, as we were retiring, some three or four persons appeared at the gate and called Bro. Hervey out, wanting to know if we intended continuing our meetings. These parties pretended to be friends who had come to inform us that threats of violence had been made and we had better stop our services. Only a few attended, and these we felt sure were friends whom we could reach in their homes. So we concluded that discretion was the better part of valor and postponed further services for the time being. During the Tuesday evening meeting three young men put in an appearance when the meeting was about half through, staid a few minutes, and then went as they came. Next day the information came to our ears that these same young men had been scouring the neighborhood for stale hen fruit,—rotten eggs,—to be presented to us after the manner in which mob courtesy generally proceeds to do such things. But we were spared the presentation on account of the scarcity of that kind of fruit. Of course we were not sorry. As there are some Saints and friends living about nine miles further to the southeast, Bro. Erwin thought to go and call on them and hold services a couple of days, while the writer stayed, visiting and presenting the gospel story to the friends in their homes, also attending the Baptist meetings. I took notes of the wonderful teachings of the reverend divine, Elder Selmann, of Oklahoma, who in one discourse took particular pains to show to his audience that baptism was of no consequence; could not be a saving ordinance; and that God did not command it; man could be saved without. In the evening another elder followed Elder Selmann in the same strain, quoting Peter's command which he gave to the people on their inquiry, "What shall we do?" "Be baptized for the remission of sins." This the elder denied; it was not to remit sins. Remission and remit had different meanings, he said, and proceeded to explain a case in court where the word remit was used which, in that case meant to set aside, but remission, he said, could not set aside, did not remit sins. The burden of their preaching was, only believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you shall be saved. They quoted Paul's teaching to the jailor to believe, but took pains to leave out the baptizing. Should we get back into that vicinity again, we shall try to show what the Bible does teach about baptism, provided a hearing can be had.

Saturday, 14th, started on return trip. Arriving at the "Springs," by invitation we took dinner with Mr. Dalby, proprietor and friend, and visited until about five o'clock, when, accompanied by his son we proceeded homeward to hold a meeting in the neighborhood of the younger Dalby, who is very friendly to the cause, and with whom we staid over night. A goodly number came to hear, it being the first meeting held by any of the elders in that vicinity. We had strong invitations to return, which we will do if nothing prevents. Sunday morn, came on to Shawnee, expecting to meet the Saints in social service, but they were slow to be there on time, so we turned the meeting into preaching service. Appointed preaching at four p. m., but the meeting was cut short by wind and rain.

Monday, 16th, started homeward to Bro. Erwin's place. Had a good deal of black soil road to travel over, which was now bad and sticky on account of recent rains. Arrived at Bro. Erwin's about five p. m. Found all well. Several of the brethren had come to fix an arbor to hold the coming conference under. If the weather is fair we are expecting a large gathering, and hope to have a general good conference. Hope that all Saints coming will bring a good portion of the Holy Spirit, and may we have a time long to be remembered.

My home post office is Cove, Polk county, Arkansas. In gospel bonds,

D. D. BABCOCK.

COOK'S POINT, Texas, July 18.

Editors Herald:—About the middle of last month I went to Chilton, Falls county, this state, and commenced meetings in a large schoolhouse. Small turnouts at first, but continued to increase until I closed the meetings on account of a Baptist meeting commencing in same place. This preaching was the first that had been done by any of our preachers here. Interest good. Bro. D. A. McAllister lives here. It was through him and family the opening was made. They are whole-souled Saints and know just how to make a missionary feel at home.

I went out in the country east about two miles and preached once to a small turnout but good interest, then I went north to Dallas county, to where Bro. B. F. Spicer, Sr., lives. They are another family of good Saints. Here I preached several times to small turnouts but good interest. People very busy in crops and some sickness in that section.

I then went with Bro. Spicer and family on Sunday to visit a family by the name of McGraw, near Eagle Ford, on Trinity river.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Here I found a sister that had been a member of the church for some time but had been isolated from the church, but still faithful. Her husband is not a member, but a strong believer in the doctrine we teach. He told me he would die before he would deny it.

I left them and returned to Chilton and stopped a few days, and then returned home to attend district conference near our house at Cook's Point. We met on the 7th inst. with a good number of the Saints, among them a number of preachers, three missonaries, Brn. H. O. Smith, T. J. Sheppard, Ed Henson. We had a good conference, and nearly a week's meetings followed. We hope for good results. The missionaries then left us for Central branch, except Bro. Henson, who went to San Antonio.

I am left at home a few days, and then away to Waco on the 21st inst. to commence a meeting about seven miles south of said city. I hope to have a successful meeting. I expect Brn. Hay and Renfroe with me. I expect to be at Philadelphia branch in Falls county while in that section. As I am president of the Texas Central district, I expect to visit all the branches of the district before the next conference. I desire the members in the district to coöperate with me in the work in the district, especially the officers in the several branches. Make openings for preaching, and preach and let me hear from you occasionally. Let us do all we can for the advancement of the good cause in this section of Texas, so that we can have a good report to make at our next conference. We will notify you as to where and when it will meet in due time. Now let each one move forward looking to the great Captain for help, and use that help received as he desires you should, and then leave the result with the Lord.

Yours as ever,

E. W. NUNLEY.

VIOLA, Ill., July 25.

Editors Herald:—I am still on duty, F. A. Russell and myself have been with the tent most of the summer. Held forth in Galva two weeks to small congregations and little interest. Came from there here four weeks ago. Have had good attendance here, and interest has been quite good. However, the factory made preachers have been actively engaged trying to keep their flocks away, and of course they have kept some from attending. Bro. J. C. Crabb came in about ten days ago and has been taking his turn since. He and the writer were in charge of a meeting at Eliza, Illinois, Saturday and Sunday, July 14 and 15. Had a good attendance, and two were baptized. We had the pleasure of seeing F. A. induct two into the kingdom last Sunday, Srs. Pine and McIntire, both of whom heard Bro. Short preach at Gilchrist a few years ago. The two baptized at Eliza were the fruits of the labor of others. Others here are believing, but it takes courage to stem the tide. May God be pleased to grant them strength enough to come out of Babylon.

We expect to close here Thursday, the 27th, and go to New Windsor, where Bro. C. went yesterday, and will preach in the hall till the tent arrives. Expect to go from New Windsor to Moline, as the Saints at that place are asking for it, and have informed us that they have the money raised to pay the freight.

There will be a two days' meeting at Pleasant Valley, six miles east of Moline, August 11 and 12. All are invited.

Your brother in bonds,

J. W. ADAMS.

DOW CITY, Iowa, July 22.

Editors Herald:—It has been a long time since I penned a few lines for the letter department of the Herald, though I have often felt as though I would like to do so. Sickness has been the hindering cause. I am just recovering from a relapse of ten days duration, during which time I suffered much. This makes about twelve weeks that I have been confined to my bed too full of pain to read or enjoy listening while others read. However, all the way through my illness I felt as though the divine power was ever present to speak peace to the soul. It is good to feel when one is thus afflicted that many of the Saints are importuning the Lord in his behalf and to know that God is pleased to bestow a blessing upon his people when they are worthy. Upon one occasion, during my recent illness, when my feet and limbs up to my knees were swollen very tight with the dropsy, there seemed to be special faith given to me that if I was administered to for that trouble I should be healed. I sent for four of the brethren, who came and anointed my feet and limbs and head, and administered to me. By the next morning, if my memory serves me right, the dropsy was all gone and has not returned since. The attending physician said: "It seems like a miracle the way that dropsy has left your feet and limbs." With these facts looking one in the face, it seems strange that I could not muster faith to be healed from other ailments that kept me confined to my bed. Yet such was the case. Why it was so I am not able to say. I was administered to many times, and benefited each time, and I feel very grateful for the blessings thus bestowed, and also for the prayers of the Saints which I know ascended daily to God in my behalf. I am still very weak and need your faith and prayers.

Three times since I have been a member of the church I have been brought so near to death that either in vision, dream, or by the impression of the mind, have I seen myself die, placed in the coffin, and laid to rest. From these experiences I have learned this important fact: The restored gospel, which has brought us so much peace, joy, and satisfaction while in health, will do to live by and it will do to die by; for the gospel of Christ, believed, obeyed, and lived by, removes the sting and bitterness of death. The Lord said: "And it shall come to pass that those that die in me shall not taste of death, for it shall be sweet unto them.—D. C. 42:12.

It seems hard to be kept out of the ministerial field when there is so much to do, yet good brethren who are older and wiser than myself have admonished me in kindness to be very careful and not undertake to preach until I have recovered my health and strength to a large degree, at least. Evidently it is best that I should do so; and all that I can say is: I am in the Lord's hands and am ready to work as he shall furnish me with health and strength to perform my part. I have no doubt or fears but what the work is of God.

In looking over the conference minutes since I have been able to be up, I notice that a goodly number of brethren were added to the High Priests' Quorum, and as a member of said quorum I wish to say to each and all of those brethren, I bid you welcome to our number, and pray that God may give you faith, wisdom, charity, and grace sufficient to enable you to properly discharge your duties as shepherds of the flock of God "which he has purchased with his own blood."

The saints of the Dow City branch are giving their chapel a thorough repairing inside and out at the cost of something over three hundred dollars, which will make it the neatest house of worship in town. The repairs were much needed, and their effort in this direction is a commendable one. Those who have directed the work deserve much credit for the good judgment manifest. With kind regards and best wishes to all Saints, I remain, Your brother in Christ,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

LARISSA, Mo., July 20.

Editors Herald:—Two years ago there were only two Latter Day Saints here, and they were sisters. We came here, and there was much prejudice; but now we have a church of our own. There have been some baptized, making four families. Our church is not finished, but we had conference in it, and I think we had a good time; all, or most all, seemed to enjoy it, and much prejudice was removed. One was baptized by Wm. T. Roach and confirmed by Henry Sparling, a little boy of Bro. Taylor's, a fine little lad; we hope God will always be near to guide him in the way of truth. Others are near the kingdom; we hope to see them come in in the near future.

Bro. Taylor came here from Oregon, and seems to be well pleased with the country. Two others are here looking for homes; but have not settled yet I think. We are looking for more before the summer is gone. There are still plenty of homes to be had here, and cheap. Some that wrote to us last spring did not get their letters, for they returned to us "not called for." We did the best we could. We answered all that came, forty-six in all. We want to see the Saints come, but prefer that they come and see for themselves and not depend on what we say, or what anyone else says, but to come and see, and if not satisfied go where they can be satisfied.

We have a Sunday school organized at our church. The name of our branch has been changed from Sweden to the Ava branch, the Saints have moved from Sweden. We have three families from other parts here now, in all seven families, all seem to be wide awake in the work.

Bro. Sydney N. Grey, Junior, and Bro. W. T. Roach, priests, are here. The rainy

www.LatterDayTruth.org

weather has kept them from holding meetings this week; but expect to commence Sunday next. We hope to have a good time.

E. W. ANWAY.

VIOLA, Ill., July 23.

Editors Herald:—Just a few words from this part of the field, that you may know we are at work. After a short series of meetings in Millersburg in May, we turned our attention to tent work. We decided to make an effort to reach the people of Galva. Apparent results were not flattering, to say the least. Handbills, personal invitations, and articles in the city paper proved to be of but little value in bringing the people out. We told them, those who came, the gospel story plain as we were able, bore our testimony, and pulled stakes. Here we felt the need of an organ very much. Accordingly I boarded the train for Chicago, leaving Bro. Adams to ship tent to Viola, our next objective point. I staid in the city over night, being very kindly cared for at the home of Bro. F. M. Cooper. Having purchased a Bilhorn telescope organ, and after attending to some minor matters of business, I find myself at the Union Depot with a company of the Chicago Saints, ready to start to Mission conference. And let me say, Bro. Terry, that while I was pleased to meet with your noble band of workers, yet I do not think I have any feeling of envy, for we have some good workers in Kewanee district also. But I shall not soon forget my very pleasant trip to the Mission conference. Arriving at Sheridan we transfer, and after about a ten mile drive find ourselves at Mission. So far as entertainment is concerned, the Saints at this place know how to make one feel at home. The writer was domiciled a greater part of the time at the home of Sr. Hansen, sister of Bro. Eli Hayer, and my acquaintance with the latter makes me feel doubly "at home." But this is no place for details. Suffice it to say, the new church, a monument of love, sacrifice, and industry, was solemnly dedicated to God. May the worshipers at its shrine ever remember the sentiments expressed by the speaker of the occasion.

Our tent having been shipped to Viola, we opened fire on the city on Tuesday night, June 26. The enemy had exploded some mines ere we had begun, and false reports were numerous. The wife of a United Presbyterian minister warned her "Junior League" not to go near the tent, as those men were bad, and would catch little girls and send them out to Utah to be servants, and several of them wives of one man. Well, you will likely not be surprised if I tell you those "little girls" haven't much confidence in what that woman tells them now. We have done our best to get the ministers of the town to attend our services, but not yet succeeded. The husband of the above woman has heard four or five sermons, one night venturing within five feet of the tent. My! isn't the enemy brave? Several holes have been cut in the tent and seats, presumably by boys. Two were baptized on Sunday—Mrs. McIntire and her niece, Mrs. E. H. Pine. Guess Bro. Short will remember them. Others seem to be deeply interested and near the kingdom. Expect to move to New Windsor this week.

Yesterday we were permitted to attend the meetings of the Mercer County Ministerial Association. Judging from the manner in which they discussed "church union," we are impressed that that is something scarcely to be mentioned. The prophet has well said that "gross darkness shall cover the minds of the people."

Bro. J. C. Crabb has been with us for the last ten days. We appreciate his counsel, and as one man said concerning his sermons, "He is no disgrace to any man's platform." May each of us so live, whether preacher or laymember, that we may be no disgrace to the cause we love.

With many discouraging things to meet, both inside and out of the church, yet ever trusting that God will lead us to final triumph over the enemy, I remain,

Yours hopefully,

F. A. RUSSELL.

JOPLIN, Mo., July 25.

Editors Herald:—I left Waco early Monday morning, for "Tuckahoo" mining camp, where I have been preaching since Monday night in the Presbyterian "mission church," with good crowds and splendid interest. A family of outsiders has been caring for my necessities. I expect to continue till over Sunday and part of next week if the "council doesn't turn me out." I haven't as yet secured their consent; but the Sunday school superintendent, who held the keys, said he would open the doors, if I would preach.

SLOAN, Iowa, July 24.

Editors Herald:—I have just finished reading in the Herald the names of so many good books for the Sunday school. Many of them I have read, and I love to read them; and as I desire to see the Sunday school work advance in God's own way, I want to encourage the young people to read good books, that their young minds may become enlightened by reading and seeking for that which is good and be led to seek for eternal happiness. I desire to tell you, dear saints, of the best books I have read. They are, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. They teach me how to live in this life and how to prepare for eternal life. These books are the only ones that work, others sparkle, but these lift. Put yourself under the influence of these books. There are no tyrants among spiritual truths. In these books there is more that finds me than in all others put together. The truths that are from God through his Son Jesus Christ find me at the greatest depths of my being, and whatever finds me brings with it an irresistible evidence of its having proceeded from the Holy Spirit. God appreciates honest searching for truth; but there is no hope for anyone who comes to these books searching for errors. What these books bring to you will depend in large measure upon what you bring to them. You may have a crumb or a loaf, just as you please.

I desire to see the best books read more commonly. Let us as Sunday school teachers and parents teach the young to read these books in their homes. It is not enough to read and study them one hour each week.

I believe it is the earnest desire of every true Saint to look up and lift up; so if we lift up the ones that have strayed away and the ones in darkness, let us earnestly read these books that God has given us. We know that many others are good, but these are the best. Ever desiring to do God's will,

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. MARY DRIGGS.

WHEELING, W. Va., July 21.

Editors Herald:—Pitched tent here 10th inst.; began a series of meetings on 11th. Attendance quite good, as also interest. Bro. V. M. Goodrich, of Ohio, arrived on the 17th to assist in ministering the word. Think we shall go to Bellaire, Ohio, from here. The brethren there have secured a location for the tabernacle. Saints assisting in music and in other ways. Of course the ministry eat food, and we expect the members to supply it.

J. F. MCDOWELL.

KINGSTON, Mo., July 21.

Editors Herald:—A Rev. Mr. Hessenflow, living near Chillicothe, Missouri, a preacher of the New Light Church has been saying often of late, that he wanted to debate with a Mormon minister, and that he'd bury Mormonism in thirty minutes. Bro. R. S. Parker, Chillicothe, informed me of him. His great desire was to get a good rap at "Joe" Smith. So I sent to Bro. Parker the following propositions for debate, for the gentleman to sign, and I would meet him, and measure swords: First, Was Joseph Smith a true prophet of God? J. C. Foss affirms, Mr. Hessenflow denies. Second, is the church that Rev. Hessenflow stands identified with, in fact, the church of God, harmonizing in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice with the Church of Christ set up by divine authority eighteen hundred years ago.

Mr. Hessenflow not being in the city, a Rev. Mr. Johnson signed the first proposition for him, thinking in the meanwhile they would cut the Mormon balloon loose and let it burst in the air. To the second proposition, Mr. Johnson signed the word, refused. I sent the papers back, and after two weeks' trial, the Rev. Hessenflow arrived in the city, and after the threatened storm of destruction, the reverend gentleman would not sign the propositions. Said it was against his conscience belief to sign them, but would debate as long as I wanted to. Bro. Parker says that's an easy way out of the battle.

Yes! Bro. Parker, Latter Day Saintism is not buried. It's alive, and will live on, and on, when all other isms are a thing of the past.

I will be here over Sunday the 22d, and on Tuesday will go to Chillicothe for a few days. The cause is onward.

Your brother,

J. C. FOSS.

CARBERRY, Manitoba, July 23.

Editors Herald:—Being appointed to labor and if possible establish our work in Manitoba, I write to ask the Saints of Canada and elsewhere who know of Saints living in this province, or neighboring districts, to please send me the full name and address. Since coming here I have by inquiry through the mails learned the whereabouts of over fifteen Saints, scattered for the most part. What I wonder at is that they move away from Ontario and other places, and remain so quiet and require hunting up. This mistake can be obviated if Saints intending moving out into some new part would communicate that fact to the president of the mission, who has charge of the Canadas. I emphasize the last word, for some think only of Ontario. Our missionary in charge is a pusher, and wishes this gospel of the kingdom to be sounded from one end of Canada to the other.

I left home and loved ones Monday, the 16th inst., reaching here Friday last. Same day I secured the best hall in town for what we have a mind to give. Bro. and Sr. Jordan, with whom I am domiciled, think the proprietor has forgotten himself; but if he has, amen to it. May he never be himself till the people of Carberry become tired of our errand. Yesterday (Sunday, the 22d), we commenced operations by two services. About fifteen of a congregation in afternoon, fully one hundred at night. I am announced for tonight and tomorrow night. May the Lord give me the honest, for his name's sake. Carberry has one thousand five hundred inhabitants. FREDERICK GREGORY.

SANTA ANA, Cal., July 24.

Editors Herald:—I received a letter yesterday from Metuaore, dated May 16, from Tahiti, in which he tells me the good news that the French Governor had dismissed eleven Catholic governors of the different tuamotus (islands), and had appointed the following men as governors in their stead, everyone of them members of our church: Tahuhu, governor of Makatea; Kchauri, of Tikahau; Tuteirihia, of Panau; Tane, of Apataki; Temanu, of Niau; Teiho, of Rotoava; Maiti, of Tetemanu; Harotea, of Temarie; Tehiki, of Tuuhora; Tumatau, of Tematahora; and Parepare, of Takapoto. These changes were made about the time we left Papeete, which was on May 1, and were made because the governor from France believed the heads of the Catholic Church in those islands interfered in the proper administration of the laws, and, Metuaore says, because he did not see or find any trouble in our conference in Papeete.

The president of the highest legislative council in Papeete told me at our conference that our enemies could not again persecute us as hitherto, as the government and the citizens of Papeete had learned by what they had seen at the conference, the business performed, as well as the preaching, and the matutus, singing, and Sabbath school exercises, that the missionaries of our church had not been idle, nor were they there to exploit the natives, to get money from them, but to help them, to teach them truths, and to make them honorable men and women, and what had been witnessed at our conference and Sunday school convention far surpassed anything which had ever been witnessed in the South Sea Islands. The intelligence displayed by men, women, and children was to the Tahitians most remarkable, and when the mayor of the city, Monsieur Cardella, listened to the children's classes reciting their pieces, carrying on their dialogues, singing, and uttering a prayer while kneeling with their hands clasped, and uplifted head, the tears coursed down his manly cheeks and he murmured, "Wonderful! excellent! remarkable!"

One of the matutus lasted nearly an hour and a half. Metuaore was the leader. It was divided into five classes, the object being to prove that young Joseph was in the direct lineage of the seed of the woman which was to bruise the serpent's head, following from Eve to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, Christ; then from Jacob, Joseph, Ephraim, Joseph the Martyr, and then Joseph the son. Each class had its division of the subject to tell, and proved the points by many quotations from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Each class had its teacher, who asked questions of his class, and farther elucidated the answers as he was led.

One full day and six or more evenings were fully occupied with such matutus and singing, and our conference house, 100 feet long, 56 feet wide, for 58 feet of the length and 24 feet wide for the other 42 feet was filled with attentive listeners, besides many hundreds in the yard, and so Papeete was captured from our enemies and God blessed the Saints, and now has turned the officers of the government towards us. May God in his infinite love and mercy bless with wisdom, understanding, and humility those brethren who have been thus promoted and placed in such honorable and responsible positions. How glad will be the hearts of Bro. and Sr. Devore, Bro. and Sr. Case, Brn. Gilbert and Newton, and all the missionaries who by their patient toil and prayerful labors have assisted in bringing the Saints up to such a happy and honorable condition. And I know they will unite with us in asking the great God to especially endow those governors with meekness, wisdom, and firm integrity in performing their duties under the law.

May peace abide with the good, noble, intelligent, faithful Saints of the South Sea Islands mission.

J. F. BURTON.

FAIRBANK, Iowa, July 26.

Editors Herald:—Some time has elapsed since I wrote to your valuable columns. I began labor with Bro. J. R. Sutton, July 11, at Lamont, Iowa. Good interest was manifest throughout our entire stay at that place. Last two services held there were exceptionally well attended; tent being filled to its entire seating capacity. We believe much good has been done, and are certain much prejudice in the minds of the people has been removed. Some are near the kingdom. Others are studying and thinking over the matter. One wants baptism soon, and so we move along, sowing the seed. Let others water, and God will give the increase.

While at Lamont we stopped with Elder Wm. Weston, who with his good-hearted companion, made it pleasant for us. May God bless them and theirs.

We struck tent at Lamont, Monday the 23d, and moved to this place. Had meeting on Tuesday, the 24th. Had good attendance the 25th. Interest good. Bro. C. E. Hand will be with us soon, so he writes.

We believe the tent is the best way of presenting the work in new places. People will come to tent meetings before they will go to church buildings, at least it has been so in our experience. And by short sermons and good management can get them to stay by us till we give them the whole gospel. Then they must judge for themselves.

Will continue here two or three weeks or as interests may lead. Expect to attend the Sunday school convention at Clinton, Iowa.

May the Lord bless us all in our efforts to present his word.

Your brother in Christ,

THE BEAUTIFUL STORY.

BY A. R. CORSON.

Oh! have you ne'er heard
The beautiful story?
How Jesus, our Lord,
Left the mansions of glory;
Took an infant's frail birth,
Took humanity's sorrow,
That this sin-cursed earth
Might attain a glad morrow?

Yes; the blest Son of God,
So pure and so holy,
Took up his abode
With the poor and the lowly;
And he marked out the way
To the kingdom of heaven,
And none need e'er stray,
So plainly it is given.

At his word lived the dead,
And his touch carried healing;
For the life that he led
Was the Father revealing.
Though by cruel men slain,
Yet a conqueror glorious;
For in rising again,
He o'er death is victorious.

'Twas for love he came down—
Oh! the wonderful story—
For the cross left the crown,
For the shame left the glory,
Left the throne for the tomb,
Drained the cup of man's anguish,
That no longer in gloom
Without hope need he languish.

Oh! what wonderful grace;
What sweet condescension,
To a lost, ruined race;
Love beyond comprehension;

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Yet we know it is true,
For the Spirit he giveth,
Bears witness to you
And to me that he liveth.

And he cometh again.
Yes, the glad day is nearing,
When the children of men
All who love his appearing,
Whose hearts are made pure,
And who walk in the Spirit,
In His kingdom secure
Shall there a portion inherit.

Let us strive, then, to keep
Our lamps trimmed and burning,
Nor so carelessly sleep,
While we wait his returning.
Signs in sun, moon, and sky,
Are betokening his nearing.
"Go ye out," sounds the cry,
"Watch ye for his appearing."

A MORNING HYMN.

Lord, safely through the night's dark hours,
Again thy love has kept
Its watch; and from all harmful powers
Safe sheltered have I slept.

In gratitude for all thy care,
My thoughts to Thee I raise;
And lift my heart in humble prayer;
My voice in songs of praise.

Lord, what am I that thou shouldst be Thus mindful, day by day?
Such loving watchcare keep o'er me,
Who am so prone to stray?

O, let me feel it more and more,
The wonders of thy love;
A full and never-failing store,
As every Saint doth prove.

And as the morning light I greet,
I would renew each vow;
And lay my offering at thy feet,
As worshiping I bow.

Of worldly wealth I have no store,
All I can bring to Thee
Is my poor life; I can no more,
Thine henceforth shall it be.

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

BY MRS. C. RALSTON.

Oh, how happy are they,
In this great latter-day,
Who know of a surety and truth,
That the gospel's restored
Through Jesus our Lord,
And is free to both aged and youth.

There are gifts from our God
That we learn through the word,
Of prophecy, tongues, and of power,
Which will lighten our cross
And consume all our dross,
As a bee drains the sweets from a flower.

There are blessings of love
Sent to us from above
By our Father, all-wise, great, and good,
In return for good deeds
Wrought by Saints, and our needs
Are supplied and our wants understood.

So, then, let us with prayer
Give heed and great care
To the gospel set forth by our Lord,
That his Spirit may dwell
In our hearts; we can tell
It will strengthen the power of our words.

KEEP NEAR YOUR CHILDREN.

I think parents lose much of pleasures to themselves and in influence over their children, by assuming when in their presence, too great a degree of dignity. Exclusiveness is a bar to all confidence, and the child that experiences a feeling of awe in the presence of its parents will withhold its confidence from them, and will soon learn to deceive. I do not believe in encouraging children to tell each little incident, or to relate all their chats with their playmates or friends. Such a course, I think, would tend to excite them to gossip, which is a habit that all should guard against in their children. Its tendencies are low and debasing—leading oftentimes to its sister evil—lying. Gossips are almost universally flatterers, and are anxious to please and gain the confidence of those around them, and do not hesitate to sacrifice truth, if by so doing they have hopes of pleasing you while they deceive.

Manifest an interest in children's sports—their joys and sorrows. Speak to them freely of all that interests them. Show them that you sympathize with them in their little troubles. Encourage them in their good endeavors, and by those means prove to them that you are indeed their friends, and you will win a response from their young hearts that will gladden many an hour of life.

I pity the man or woman who cannot remember a little petting or a few kind words when they were children. The hunger of the childish heart exercises an influence over its whole life—giving coloring to its experiences. It feels its lonely, unloved condition, and carries with it all through life a too vivid memory of its want of love and trust. Alas, that there should be so many into whose childhood hour entered those sad experiences, these little wants. Kind words and acts will mould the child's mind and develop its nature into the desired shape, just as warmth softens the wax and renders it pliable to your purpose. Who shall tell how many children there are whose hearts have starved for sympathy until the unsatisfied want has made them become reckless, and they have ceased to try, try again, for the reason that they have no incentive to try? When we have grown too old to remember how we felt when we were young, we shall no longer be fitted to guide one of those little ones. Many fathers and mothers might have been happier had they remembered this. Trifles make up our lives, and one half of our sorrows come to us because we are not fully understood. Little attentions are dearer to the heart than costly presents.

Join in your children's games; encourage them to express their preferences and wishes. Never laugh at a child for relating its simple thoughts; nothing checks frankness so much as ridicule. Give them your love and it will bring you a rich reward. Be not too impatient with their play; the time may come when you would give all that you possess to have your house troubled by their little hands. Encourage them in their undertakings, whether they be great or small in your estimation.

In conclusion, keep nearer your children. Let the tendrils of your heart twine around them, and in old age their love will be your support and comfort. A SISTER.

THE CHURCH.

Thou, Church of God, go on thy way,
Fill all the earth with truth divine,
And with a never faltering ray,
Like yonder sun in splendor shine.

Go forth in power to sin's domain,
Wrest from its coils the souls sincere,
Who earnestly have sought in vain
For freedom from its bondage there.

Fear not, but know thy Monarch reigns,
In truth and righteousness above;
The power is his to wipe thy stains
Of sin away, through his great love.

By him sustained, thy victory's sure,
Thy enemy shall vanquished be,
Eternally thou shalt endure,
From sin and bondage ever free.

Then let thy righteousness shine forth,
For Christ thy Monarch soon will come,
And gather from the south and north,
Thy children to his glorious home.

CHARLES FRY.

A MOHAMMEDAN makes confession with the utmost readiness and fluency, but the expression he uses is "Achtana," we have sinned, not "Achtet," I have sinned. Some one has said that the collective pronouns are like moral umbrellas which shelter us by shedding off the blame on others.

GOD'S ANSWER.

The cry of man's anguish went up unto God,
"Lord, take away pain!
The shadow that darkens the world thou hast made,
The close-coiling chain
That strangles the heart, the burden that weighs
On the wings that would soar—
Lord take away pain from the world thou hast made,
That it love thee the more!"

Then answered the Lord to the cry of his world;
Shall I take away pain,
And with it the power of the soul to endure,
Made strong by the strain?

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Shall I take away pity that knits heart to heart
And sacrifice high?
Will ye lose all your heroes that lift from the fire
White brows to the sky?"—Sel.

LYING TO CHILDREN.

The Rev. Robert Hall had so great an aversion to every species of falsehood and evasion, that he sometimes expressed himself very strongly on the subject. The following is an instance, stated in his life by Dr. Gregory: Once, while he was spending an evening at the house of a friend, a lady, who was there on a visit, retired, that her little girl of four years old might go to bed. She returned in about half an hour, and said to a lady near her, "She is to sleep; I put on my night-cap, and lay down beside her, and she soon dropped off." Mr. Hall, who overheard this, said, "Excuse me, madam; do you wish your child to grow up a liar?" "Oh dear, no sir, I should be shocked at such a thing." "Then bear with me, while I say, you must never act a lie before her; children are very quick observers, and soon learn that which assumes to be what it is not, is a lie, whether acted or spoken." This was uttered with a kindness which precluded offense, yet with seriousness that could not be forgotten.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Mrs. Mary C. Bastian, of Washington, wishes to have her name presented to the Prayer Union for special prayer. She was thrown from a buggy four weeks ago last Friday, and had her left shoulder dislocated and broken, her left leg broken, and her right hip broken. She wishes to be healed if it is the Lord's will.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL WORK IN THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

(Concluded from last week.)

According to what we have learned here, this question book when completed was placed in the hands of the missionaries then in the mission for their inspection, correction if needful, and sanction. Then translated into the Tahitian language by a professional translator in Papeete. Then copied into nicely bound blank books. And each branch paid a certain sum for the books, thus the money was collected to defray the expense of translating. The book thus bought was held by the superintendent of the Sunday school. In time all the schools were supplied with one, and many teachers also. Some who had not the whole book had portions of it. Sr. Devore wrote a number of them, but I am persuaded that Sr. Case wrote—or copied—a far greater number, she being a swift and ready writer, and applied herself to that work almost exclusively from April, 1896, shortly after her return from Raratonga, until October when they went to Hikueru, and a great deal afterwards, but not so steadily. She says, "I cannot tell how many books and parts of books I wrote. Honestly, I do not think people would believe me if I knew and could tell." But it is not my purpose here to state the amount of work done by those sisters, nor the disadvantages under which they labored; neither the privations they endured, or seasickness they suffered while performing their labors; that is best known to themselves and the Master who sees and knows all, and the reward is sure. My purpose is to note some of the leading features, and give the result of the labors of each in the Sunday school work when they left the mission.

The mahana oaoa was also instituted by Sr. Devore; i. e., a day set apart during the time of conference gathering -- the 5th of April — for class exercises and recitations, and she did the first work of drilling and preparing the natives for those recitations, which was not an easy task to do without offending some or becoming wearied in patience.

I will here digress, and add a scrap of personal knowledge. Sr. Case and I, with others on the Evanelia, accompanied Sr. Devore to Makatea when she first undertook to prepare them to march in a procession bearing a Sunday school flag. It was the first attempt at Makatea. It was like trying to get young colts to stand still and be harnessed. She had to place them again and again. It seemed as if they could not stand still. The smallest were in the lead and were so curious to know what was going on behind them they not only turned around, but ran back to see. Sr. Case and I lent our assistance. Some we fairly had to hold to keep them in position till the line was formed. But when they—the grown-up people—once understood what was required of them, and became somewhat accustomed to the routine, each year would develop some small addition of their own in position, step, or movement. And they also selected their own exercises and did their own practicing, where there was no white missionary.

After Sr. Devore left, Sr. Case being then in charge of the Sunday school work, chosen superintendent of the Sunday school association, went right on with the good work as it had been started. In answer to my inquiry if there were any changes or additions made by her in the developing of the work, she says, "I made no changes in Sr. Devore's methods. They were as nearly like what they were here in America as was possible with the lack of books, etc. I instituted the Christmas offerings. . . . I organized schools at Raroia, Marutea, and Taenga; reorganized at Hao and Amanu, and at several diving places, but those of course would not be taken into account."

True, those at the diving places were only to continue during the time of the diving,—where no branch of the church existed,—but it was a part of the establishing and developing of the work, such being altogether new to some at those places, and not a small part either. Not merely the organizing of those schools, but the staying with them; the continual watchcare over a school of two hundred or more, and where in most instances the teachers needed as much looking after as the scholars; with the added difficulty of their being of so many different islands, which difficulty is best known to the workers in the mission—they do not like to assimilate and soon get into a quarrel. We were eyewitnesses, for the space of three months, to her big school at Hikueru. It was an interesting school, at least to look upon; that is, each class appeared to be giving itself to its work, and splendid order was kept, though Sr. Case would often feel like throwing herself on the bed and panting when she got home.

Sr. Case also visited as many islands where schools had already been organized as opportunity would afford, to assist, strengthen, and encourage them. For it must be remembered that the work was so new to them that when left to themselves they soon drop back into an easier way. Whether they will overcome that practice or not remains for the future to reveal; some islands are making progress in that direction.

I have never learned whether it was in the year '95 or '96 that the Sunday school association and convention was fully organized. Neither do I know who organized the schools on the islands of Tupuai, or under whose auspices. Have understood that there were three schools on that island, one in each branch. Have had reports from two only.

Now this is the sum of the development of the work during the mission of Bro. and Sr. Devore and Bro. and Sr. Case. Seventeen permanent schools organized by them and four others in the mission, one organized by Bro. Forscutt, and those three on the island of Tupuai. I will here state that the Tiona school had ceased to be before we came, the leaders having moved away. Therefore there were twenty schools, an association and yearly convention, with mahana oaoa, the custom of Christmas offerings, and a number of books written and placed in the schools. A good work indeed! The bulk of which was accomplished within four years, dating from the time Bro. Forscutt left the islands.

I have not mentioned the names of the husbands of these sisters in connection with the Sunday school work, neither those of the other white missionaries. I have no doubt but all helped in one way and another, but not having the record, am not able to state in what way. Those schools are organized and conducted after the manner of those in the church in America before the memory verse, golden text, and responsive reading were introduced, with the exceptions I shall mention. There are no treasurers or librarians here, there being no need for those officers. There are no funds to handle. No expense is incurred in running the schools except that of the lesson books, and that is provided for in other ways, consequently there are no collections in the Sunday school. No books for a librarian to care for. Those books provided by Srs. Devore and Case were held by the superintendents and teachers as though they were personal property. At Tarona there are some six or eight Testaments that belong to the school in general. These remain on the stand, or steps, leading up to it, when not in use. Most all bring their own Bible or Testament. But says one, have they not song books? The songs are carried in their hearts or memory. Natives seldom sing from a book. In church the leading singer has a book. But the children lead in the Sunday school and use no books. There is also one difference in the routine of the school. We will say there are fifteen questions and answers in a lesson, and five classes in a school. The superintendent copies the questions—or perhaps only the answers—each on a separate slip of paper with each one numbered corresponding with those on the book, and distributes them equally among the classes, in order. The first class would have numbers 1, 6, and 11; the second class would have numbers 2, 7, and 12, and in the same order all through. Of course those slips would be distributed a week in advance, so those who had them could commit them to memory. During class time, questions are asked on the lesson as it is read. When all are through with their classes, the superintendent reads the questions from his book, and those who have learned the answers stand up and recite them one in each class, going the round three times. Such were the schools here on our arrival. During the mission of Bro. and Sr. Burton, all these remain as they were, and have in addition the memory verse, responsive reading, and the golden text before closing. There has also been an addition of fourteen hundred lesson books printed and distributed among the Saints in these islands; not altogether after the order of the Quarterlies; that would be too great a stride. "Sidelights," "home study," and all those other helps found in the Quarterlies, are omitted in these books. This is the order of them: First, the number of the lesson; the method of opening the school; where the lesson will be found in the Bible; the memory verse; then the lesson, consisting of twenty questions and answers; then the golden text. Such is the order of each department. Twenty-five lessons completed the first book. Those lessons are not copied verbatim from the Quarterlies. Our lessons are larger and we only had one number of the Senior Grade. Bro. Peterson formed the lessons for the present year, fourteen only, since they seldom have more than one lesson a month, and the first book had not been gone through with. Since those books have been printed it is no longer needful to copy from the question book for the scholars. There being a book in each family, all can learn from it. We have also the addition of what we are pleased to call the "review." This takes place on the first Sunday of every month, when it is supposed that all the school know the whole lesson by heart. Upon that day the scholars do not answer by routine. When the question is read out, all who know it raise the hand, and the superintendent calls upon who he chooses to give the answer. If there is only a small showing of hands, they are very apt to be given the lesson again for another month.

As for my own part in the farther development of the work, I have little to say. From choice I accepted the position of first counselor in the association instead of superintendent, and had all the freedom of action that I would have had as superintendent. It was my great desire to bring more children into the exercises of the mahana oaoa, since the Sunday school is preëminently for the benefit of the children. I did not wish to crowd anyone out, as I told the sisters, but to bring the children in, and to this end I worked with pleasing success, as will be seen by the minutes of the different conventions. I feel deeply grateful to the Saints for their ready response to my suggestions, since the bulk of the work was theirs. I gave suggestions, wrote letters of encouragement, got up simple lessons for the children, and taught them hymns. During the past year I wrote a series of questions and answers on the nativity of Jesus and John the Baptist, making nineteen lessons in all, and sent one to each Sabbath school, and can say that the little ones added greatly to the interest of the mahana oaoa. Have organized, or caused to be organized, a new school on the island Raiatea and at Faaone on the island of Tahiti; reorganized at Tiona and Anaa (and instituted the "review"). The second associate counselor, Pou, of Manihi, organized one school at Fakarava, making five permanent schools. The introduction of the memory verse, responsive reading, the golden text, and the review, with the addition of fourteen hundred lesson books marks the sum of increase or expansion during the past three years. There are now twenty-five permanent schools in this mission. I omit those organized at diving places or bufa rahuis since they are made up of the members of other schools. There remains now but three islands without a Sunday school where there is a branch of the church. Those are among the far windward islands. I know not when they have been visited by a white missionary. Sr. Peterson rendered valuable service in the Hikueru Sunday school by reëstablishing and maintaining order during her stay at that island.

There is a work to be done now in connection with the convention, in making known to the native Saints the object of the convention, other than simply to choose officers for the year and read reports. At the convention of 1899 I made the proposition that at our next convention there be an hour or so granted for general talk on Sunday school work. The proposition was readily accepted. But our "next convention" was a disappointment. The interest was elsewhere, so I said nothing about it. The work is onward. May God bless it and the workers; and all those who will in future labor and pray for its continuance and farther development.

Conference Minutes.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

Conference convened at Beardstown, Illinois, July 7 and 8. Elder I. N. White chosen to preside, M. R. Shoemaker secretary. The names of twenty-one counties set apart by last General Conference, namely, Morgan, Scott, Adams, Brown, Pike, Schuyler, Christian, Coles, Douglas, Edgar, Macon, Moultrie, Shelby, Cass, Champion, Dewitt, Logan, Mason, Menard, Piatt, Sangamon, and Vermillion, were read by the presiding officer, and a motion to adopt them as forming the Central Illinois district was carried. On motion, the Rules of Order and Debate were unanimously adopted to govern in the deliberations of the district. On motion the delegate system is not to be enforced during this conference, as the branches have not come prepared for it. Report of Taylorville branch was read, showing a membership of 30; 2 priests, 2 teachers, 2 deacons; certificate of baptism 13, letters from other branches 18, total 31; by letter of removal 1, total loss 1, with net 30, as approved by said branch July 1. Report of Beardstown branch showed a membership of 24; certificate of baptism 20, by vote on evidence of membership 4; 2 marriages, 2 moved away still holding membership, otherwise no change. The secretary was instructed to make an effort to find names of officers in the scattered Alma branch and Pike county branch. Report of priests, teachers, and deacons were read and approved. Bro. I. N. White suggested a prayerful consideration of the names of Thomas Broad to the office of priest, and Luther Simpson and M. R Shoemaker to the office of elder; he also gave a spiritual talk concerning the advisability of honoring the Lord for all the gifts and blessings we receive, and thereby be in a position to please God and receive more, which was cheering and comforting. It was then decided to take up an offering to defray the expense of buying a district record and minute book, and incidentals, at next meeting. Prayer and testimony meeting was announced for thirty minutes by M. R. Shoemaker, who was presiding; but the Spirit was present with such power that the meeting was prolonged for an hour. Cheering testimonies were given; Bro. I. N. White had an open vision of peculiar note, while Srs. Shoemaker and Alice Simpson were speaking. Sr. Simpson spoke in prophecy, giving some cheering promises to those living in obedience to the covenant. At the close, Bro. I. N. White took charge of the meeting, and the following business was transacted. Bro. J. D. Stead was chosen presiding elder of the district until next conference, also commended to Bishop Kelly to act as his agent for the district. Sr. Alice M. Simpson was chosen secretary by unanimous vote; M. R. Shoemaker, treasurer. Adjourned to meet at Taylorville, Saturday, October 27, at ten a. m. Conference adjourned, leaving remaining meetings under the supervision of the Beardstown branch.

Sunday School Associations.

SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

Sunday school convention of the South Sea Islands met April 3, in Tarona, Papeete. Officers chosen: Tapu, president; Pou, assistant; Teuira, secretary; E. Burton, foreign secretary. Reports from all the officers of the association read and received; showing an increase of four new schools being organized during the year. Nine schools reported. Officers chosen for the ensuing year: Tapu, superintendent; Pou, Haroatea, and Lillie Peterson, associates; Teuira, secretary. Lillie Peterson, foreign secretary. Christmas offerings handed in $53.40. By vote this was put into the hands of Metuaore, the Bishop's general agent for these islands, together with $34.90 of offerings sent from Hikueru, which was already in the hands of Metuaore; total $88.30. All the officers of the church in America were duly sustained in their quorums, and individually where quorums did not exist. After which the president of this mission and the missionaries of the church in this mission were in like manner sustained; also the superintendent of the association in this mission, and each officer individually. A vote of thanks to Emma for her labors in behalf of the Sunday school; also to the secretary and associate officers, superintendents, teachers, and secretaries of all the Sunday schools in all these islands for their work. Announcement for the Mahana oaoa for the following day from eight to eleven, and from one to five. Saints were requested to sustain the officers for the coming year, with their help and their prayers. Singing, then prayer by Tapu closed the session for the year 1900.

The Mahana oaoa dawned clear and bright, and the usual pleasing excitement characterized the early preparations and the day throughout. There were seventy-five exercises on the program, of which thirteen classes consisted entirely of children, and some other classes were partly of children. As usual, they acquitted themselves well.

When sending the lessons to the various branches, we suggested that a child lead each class, since it was the design that all should join in a children's prayer at the close of those lessons. Much to our surprise as well as amusement, some selected the smallest child in the class. The Niau class was led by a little girl not over four years old—the adopted child of Pohemiti's daughter. And the Arutua class by the adopted son of Tapu, perhaps a few months younger. The maiden was somewhat bashful, so her papa walked with her, though she asked the questions promptly; but not so the little man of Arutua. He walked his class around the arena like a young general, and when in the proper position, he suddenly wheeled on his heel and called a halt, by throwing up his tiny hand at arm's length in such an earnest matter-of-fact way that his class could not quite keep their faces straight; but not the shadow of a smile flitted across his face. He resolutely called out his "Uiraas" (questions), six of them, which were as long as ordinary Bible verses, and were promptly answered. When through with the questions, he led off in singing a hymn. All were amused to see the American-like manner in which he opened his mouth, making his baby voice heard above the rest. Then all dropped on their knees, in a reverent attitude, and repeated a prayer. Although the children held the most riveted attention, I would not overlook the larger classes or withhold due credit.

Among other exercises a French air was sung by the Niau Saints, quaint, soft, and melodious, much to the gratification of the visiting French people. And the Saints of Hao and Amanu sang in the Manareva language. All, both young and old, did well, remarkably well; but for method and variety, the general class of Anaa was the "banner class." It consisted of a captivating effusion of recitation and song, a variety of attitudes, leaders taking the place of scholars, and scholars of leaders. The easy grace of those young leaders was remarkable, although it was something quite novel. Haroatea being the originator and teacher. When it is remembered that only a very few of those children who took part in the exercises of the day are able to read, one can form an estimate of the time and pains taken by their parents and teachers. Since the answers were simultaneous, each child learned the whole lesson. So far, all have been New Testament lessons simplified. Sr. Peterson had a class of adults well prepared to sing, very plainly, an English hymn, "Take it to the Lord in prayer;" and the other missionary's wife had a class of children prepared in like manner to sing the Australian tune of "Roses and lilies are his." But on account of some previous trouble with the governor in regard to Bro. Peterson preaching in English, those exercises were abandoned.

THE TEACHERS' QUARTERLY.

At the last General Convention steps were taken toward a Teachers' Quarterly, and the editor of the quarterlies was authorized to prepare it. The association takes pleasure in announcing that this Quarterly is in course of preparation and will be published with the next quarter, beginning with October.

It will contain all the lessons of the three grades now in use, with such other matter as will be helpful and suggestive to teachers, both in the preparation of the lessons and in teaching them. The editor has spared no pains to make them of use to the teachers. Teachers having this Quarterly will not need any of the others, for the text of the other grades appears in this just as it is in the others. Of course this Quarterly will not take the place of the teachers' meetings, but to such teachers as cannot attend teachers' meetings, and to such schools as do not find it convenient to hold such meetings, it will go a long way to supply this lack.

Although this Quarterly contains much more than the present Senior Grade, the price is within the reach of all, being but slightly in advance of the Senior. The price is ten cents per quarter, or thirty-five cents per year. Every teacher of any grade ought to have this Quarterly, and it is hoped that teachers will avail themselves of this opportunity to make their work more effective, as well as more easy, and send their orders promptly.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In ordering supplies for schools much inconvenience and positive annoyance to the office results from carelessness, which may be avoided by following these suggestions: (1) If there is a branch agent for the Herald Publishing House in your branch, let all supplies be ordered through this agent. (2) When ordering for the Sunday school, whenever a new person orders, be sure to give the name of the person to whom the supplies have been previously sent. This will prevent the frequent annoyance to both the office and schools of sending duplicate orders. (3) Be sure to sign your name to every order. If the order is not signed it will not be filled. (4) Send cash with order when at all practicable and save book accounts. (5) Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa.

FAST DAY FOR RELIGIANS.

The prayeful consideration of all the Religio members is invited to the following proposition:—

The Lord has graciously answered our prayers and fasting a number of times in the past, in behalf of our convention work, and in some of the locals in behalf of our sick. This should inspire us with faith to come to him in every time of need, especially when the need is of that character that it is impossible for us to supply it of ourselves.

One of our active workers, both as regards local and district work, is very sorely afflicted, and unless he shall receive material help from the Lord, and that soon, his days of usefulness in the church are about numbered. Bro. E. E. Johnson, of Chicago, is rapidly declining, and it is desired that we should all unite our faith and prayers in his behalf that the Lord may see fit to prolong his days, and spare him to the work which is in such need of efficient helpers.

The day of the first meeting in August is hereby set apart as a day of fasting and prayer in behalf of Bro. Johnson. Let the following order be observed so far as practicable: Abstain from morning and midday meals, so far as wisdom will admit, and then all the local societies meet at accustomed time and place, for a season of prayer. In case of this arrangement not being considered wisest, locals can make such arrangements as will be most convenient to them, observing this order as nearly as practicable. Let Home Class members join in this also, praying at home at the stated hour, if not convenient to assemble. In the meantime let us as members, and as societies, remember him in our prayers.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.

REUNION NOTICES.

Ho! singers and musicians who expect to attend the Dow City reunion, beginning Friday, September 28, to run ten days. We have received notice from the committee that we have been chosen to take charge of the musical department. We will urge all to bring Winnowed Anthems No. 1, and practice in your home choirs all you can, so when we get together we can soon render good music. All who can assist in this department owe our services to this gathering just as much as do the elders who shall declare the word. Let us prepare and go to sing with the Spirit and understanding also, that the song service may be beneficial.

S. B. KIBLER.
JAMES PEARSALL.

Northern Missouri reunion will be held in the beautiful city of Stewartsville, twenty-one miles east of St. Joseph, fifteen miles west of Cameron, Missouri. The committee will spare no effort to make you feel at home. Tents are cheaper this year: 9½x12 feet, $1.45; 12x14 feet, $1.65. Straw free. Make up your minds now to attend Stewartsville reunion. Board can be obtained on the ground at reasonable rates: 15 cents for regular boarders, 20 cents for transient. Order tents from the secretary as soon as possible, so he can send for them in time for you to occupy.

CHARLES P. FAUL, Sec.

The annual reunion of Southeastern Illinois district will be held in Brushcreek branch at the Saints' chapel, in our large district tent, September 6 to 13. The place selected is beautiful and healthful; plenty of wood free; good water on the grounds. In addition to our splendid missionary and local forces, we expect Bro. I. N. White to be with us. Feed furnished will be at reasonable cost; pasture free. A restaurant will be run by one of the brethren, where board by the week or meal can be had at the very lowest rates. Anyone wishing tents, write to I. A. Morris, Zenith, Illinois. Let all the Saints of this district feel that this is their meeting and come pre-ERICKSON.—To Bro. Carl E. and Sr. Charlotte Erickson, at Monte Vista, Colorado, January 20, 1899, a son, named Ormar Hjalmar. Blessed July 2, 1900, by Elder J. B. Roush.

DIED.

CHUTE.—Joseph S. Chute departed this life July 2, 1900. He was 30 years old the 14th of April last. He was baptized March 4, 1891, at Bay Minette, Alabama; died of consumption at the home of his father, G. T. Chute.

BUTLER.—At his home, near Kingfisher, Oklahoma, July 6, 1900, Elder Stephen Butler. He was born November 10, 1832, in Madison county, New York; was baptized in 1865; ordained an elder August 4, 1867. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn their loss. His remains were laid to rest in Kingfisher cemetery, to await the first resurrection, a part in which his labors have entitled him to. Funeral sermon by Elder W. S. Macrae.

YATES.—On last Friday, July 13, 1900, we gave up to the care and keeping of the Lord, our brother, Miles Yates. Bro. Yates was only an infant in the faith, but was as strong as if he had been in the work for years. He suffered for several months with that dreaded disease, consumption. This notice was sent from Walker, Missouri.

WHITAKER.—Catharine H. Marquart was born October 22, 1824, in Fairfield county, Ohio; was married to Samuel H. Whitaker, August 15, 1841, in Indiana; she was baptized May 29, 1870, at Osseo, Wisconsin. In 1883 they came to Plano, Illinois, where she died July 13, 1900. She had suffered a great deal, but departed strong in the faith, leaving an aged husband and eleven children to mourn her departure, she being the first to break the family circle. She was 75 years, 9 months, and 21 days old. Funeral services at the Saints' church, sermon by Bro. T. A. Hougas, assisted by Bro. H. Southwick.

JARVIS.—Sister Caroline Jarvis was born in Leeds, England, December 28, 1823, and died in Boston, Massachusetts, July 18, 1900, aged 76 years, 6 months, and 20 days. Her maiden name was Rowling. She married Mr. Henry J. Jarvis in June, 1844. To them were born eleven children, two of whom survive, the son Harry E., in Burlington, Iowa, and son Walter, in Boston. She and her husband united with the latter-day work in the days of B. Young's supremacy; came to America in 1854, and in Utah suffered great wrongs. Came out in 1857 to Burlington, where he died in 1878. Bro. Charles Derry was acquainted with them both in Leeds, and in Utah. Sr. Jarvis finally became satisfied that truth was with the Reorganized Church, and united April 1, 1888, being baptized by Bro. Frederick Johnson. She was noble and upright in character, devoted to truth and purity in all her ways, and though life was saddened by what they suffered in the west, yet she maintained faith in God and in the right. Her body was brought to Burlington, and laid by the side of her husband. Bro. H. A. Stebbins was called to preach the sermon on Sunday afternoon the 22d, Rev. Dr. Salter, a friend for forty years, assisted in the service.

STANNARD.—At Denver, Colorado, July 13, 1900, Sister Bettie, wife of Mr. Albert Stannard, aged 26 years, 6 months, and 21 days. She was baptized May 7, 1899, and manifested great love for the gospel. The Sunday before, with Bro. J. W. Gilbert, we blessed her two little ones; she seemed to have a premonition of the near approach of the end, and made preparation for it. She leaves two sisters in the church. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." Funeral services at the Brighton cemetery by E. F. Shupe.

THOMAS.—At Malad, Idaho, July 14, 1900, Sr. Caroline H., wife of Bro. James Thomas, formerly the wife of Bro. P. Hearth, who died some years ago. She was born in Switzerland, March 7, 1827, and came to America about the year 1863. She united with the Reorganized Church in an early day, being baptized by Elder E. C. Brand, and remained a faithful member until death. Her memory is respected by those in and out of the church. Funeral services from Saints' chapel in Malad, Elder William John in charge; sermon by Elder D. W. Wight.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

MAMMOTH REMAINS.

The evidences of life belonging to the preglacial age are rare in California; still a specimen has been discovered near the coast in San Mateo county, if the statement contained in a Halfmoon bay dispatch may be relied upon, says the San Francisco Chronicle. A well-preserved skull of the mammoth is said to have been recently taken out of the bed of Pilarcitos creek by some boys who were employed in hauling sand at a point about a mile east of Halfmoon bay. The skull is reported to be about five feet in length and portions of the tusks a foot long are attached to it and are six inches in diameter at the junction with the bone. These extend into the cerebral cavity. Bones of the mammoth were also found in the neighborhood some years ago.

The discovery of these remains is no proof that the mammoth ever wandered at large during life in these parts. The evidences are, of course, indisputable that great herds of these preglacial beasts pastured in the valley of the Yukon and on the shores of Siberia and the Behring sea. During some violent convulsions of nature great ice sheets enveloped the far north, and many of their carcasses have been preserved therein up to the present time, hides, hair, flesh, bones and tusks being found in perfect condition. Mines of mammoth ivory were profitably worked in Alaska long before the territory became a field for the search of gold. These mammoth remains have been discovered in the placers of the Klondike and at other points in the frozen banks of the Yukon and its tributaries. There would be nothing improbable in the assumption that the mammoth remains now unearthed on Pilarcitos creek near the shores of Halfmoon bay had been deposited at the point where found by a stranded ice floe brought down from the far north at some remote period by the ocean current which sweeps down the western coast of the continent.

The only evidences of the mammoth life which once inhabited the earth found anywhere in the vicinity were the footprints of the mammoth sloth which were uncovered in the Carson (Nev.) sandstone quarries. Wyoming is the most fertile field on this continent, outside of Alaska, for the fossil remains of the gigantic animals which existed here in past geological ages. The University of Wyoming has secured from the sandstones of that state the largest and most perfect and complete collection of these fossils in existence.

If any of these gigantic animals ever had their habitat in California, the changes which ice and flood and other agencies have since produced have swept away all traces of them. The Calaveras skull of prehistoric man which Bret Harte immortalized in verse belongs to the world of fiction, not of fact. Even though we are short on fossil remains, it might not require much straining of the imagination to assume that the diminutive horned toad of the southern counties is the degenerate descendant of the horned dinosaur, which ranged from twelve to fifteen feet in length, and whose fossil remains have been excavated from the plains of Laramie, or that the nimble lizard found everywhere in the state is the direct descendant of the gigantic saurians of the reptilian age.

THE CHURCH'S VACATION.

The Rev. Dr. J. Everest Cathell, in his pulpit at St. Paul's Episcopal church Sunday evening, in announcing that the service would be the last to be held on a Sabbath evening until the autumn time, stated that he did so with a heavy heart; that he in common with all clergymen deprecated the thought that so many people should become imbued with the idea that the opening of the heated term should be accepted as a signal to relinquish churchly activities, and feel that absence from the sanctuary was absolutely essential to a perfect summer's rest. The good doctor called attention to the fact that the summer time was especially adapted to the duties of Sabbath evening church attendance; that it is a period in which every one can easily get out of doors and find the way to the house of worship; that the gentle pealing of the Sabbath evening bell should be looked upon as a call, the heeding of which would be a pleasure; that the hymns of praise floating out upon the night air should be an inspiration and in which it should be the wish of all to join with "the spirit and with the understanding, also."

With Dr. Cathell's thoughts fresh in mind we have just picked up Sam Clark's Keokuk Gate City of Sunday morning, and read with much interest an editorial entitled, "Vacation for the Churches." The article in question is characteristic of the writer, and therefore interesting, and we reproduce it. It reads as follows:—

"Today ends, in most of the churches, the services for the season. The pastor will now begin his well deserved vacation. The people will arise on Sunday morning and seeking the open air will find their sermon in nature. Or preferring the easy chair at home will find in it—the Sunday newspaper.

"It is well that there should be these interstices during the heat of the summer. Not that our religion should be allowed to lapse, for it cannot, with the true man. Nor heat of summer, nor cold of winter can come between us and our ideals. But aside from the consideration of the deserved rest of the godly man who has spoken words of comfort and cheer to us during a season, aside from the enervation that a sweltering morning in a crowded church would bring, the idea of a vacation is a good one.

"There is growth in a change. Growth for both the flock and its advisor. The minister, if he be a wise one, does not betake himself to some summer school or the lecture platform. A wise man will seek perfect rest. His tastes may lead him to the city, to the seashore, to the mountains, but he will find other occupation than brain work. It is by the exercise of that organ that he has satisfied his parishoners, and it can best be freshened and renewed by perfect rest. For many ministers feel that they are not keeping abreast of the times and that some theological halls must be haunted to gain what has been lost while they have been attending to their Master's business. They do not seem to feel that the time to gather in these much desired ideas is during their every day work. A minister is a student, it is true, and his natural bent is study. But that minister who would look to his own best interest, will rest during his vacation.

"And the growth that the flock may gain by the absence of the minister is no stigma upon him. It has been faithful Sunday after Sunday and each week it has taken home food for reflection that has made the whole week better. To sit during the summer season perspiring and sticking through twenty minutes or an hour of sermon, as it may be, would be likely to take away the inspiring effect of the minister's words, and instead of going home with new and noble thoughts, ill humor would be more likely to be the companion.

"So a change is good for all. Let us all rest, and when the work starts in anew in the fall, let it be with a fresh inspiration to accomplish the highest that our religion teaches us during the following months."

Thus we have the view of the pulpit and the view of the pew concerning the churches summer vacation. Both are expressions of honest hearts; both contain food worthy of our deep reflection.—Iowa Capital.

CONGREGATIONALISTS CONFLICT.

New York, July 21.—Appearances point to serious differences among Congregationalists. The trouble is over the administration of that religious body's benevolences, and affects almost every Congregational church in the country. Discussion that is not always unmixed with criticism is general. It is from the churches, and is directed toward the six missionary societies. It is not new, but there is a new phase of it. It is called the committee of nine. In order to understand the matter some history and more explanation is needed. Both are interesting, however, and the interests affected are large and far reaching.

The committee of nine represents the six boards. There is a committee of fifteen which was appointed by the national council, and presumably represents the churches. As far as anybody can find out the objects of these committees are not identical, or if they are so, they indicate a desire on the part of the boards to do what the churches have expressed a desire that they should do, but to do it, not precisely in the way or the time of the churches, but according to the notions and opinions of the executives of the boards.

The national council's committee of fifteen was appointed at Portland two years ago. This council voiced the churches in saying that while it is true that larger contributions are demanded, it is also true that the churches ought to have the largest possible voice in the administration of the boards. Protest was entered against the absurd method of having two to four organizations at work in the same fields. Some discussion was also had about the cost of administration, especially of the expense of maintaining from five to forty field secretaries who draw salaries from mission funds to go to the churches and beg the gifts.

This latter point has long been pregnant of discussion by the congregations. Too many officers for the amount of work accomplished has been the charge. A salary and expense list running a long way above $100,000 a year has been claimed to be excessive. Criticism, in so far as it has taken definite form, has been aimed at the executives of the principal boards; namely, the Congregational Home Missionary, the American Missionary, the American Board and the Church Building Society. The secretaries have not escaped, the claim being general that there are too many of them, too many secretaries, and too much office and field machinery.

The committee of fifteen, which represents the churches, started out with enthusiasm. The Hon. S. B. Capen, of Boston, was made its chairman, for he more than anyone else set the agitation on foot which resulted in the naming of the body. St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, Boston, New York and other Congregational centers were represented. One meeting was held and a report made upon finances. It was not a radical report, but was one looked upon as a good beginning. People said that at last the churches were in a fair way to gain control over their own boards, to correct wrongs in administration, and to lessen cost and increase results.

The retirement of the late Rev. Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, and the death of the Rev. Dr. Lamson, of Hartford, made necessary the election of a new president of the American board. The man selected was the Hon. S. B. Capen, of Boston. He was the father of the committee of fifteen and its president or chairman. Soon after his election to the board his resignation from the committee, not its presidency, but the committee, was announced, and a few months after that he was found wholly to have changed views upon the advisability of such a body as the committee of fifteen undertaking administration or even advisory functions upon the same level of authority, much less higher authority, of the executives of the various boards.

A point of attack on the part of the churches, an attack started two years ago, was the succession in executive membership of the boards. These boards, having headquarters, three in New York and three in Boston, have of necessity members who live in or near these cities, in order that they may attend without too great inconvenience. The churches began to wonder whether, as years go by, the boards have not become self perpetuating bodies through the election of the same men over and over again. When it was sought to accomplish certain things in one of the boards the discovery was made that nothing could be done because the board opposed, and that the churches which contribute the funds are powerless to change the executives.

Last February there was a conference of executives of the six boards. It made as a conference certain recommendations and they being accepted, a committee of nine resulted. It is made up as follows: Judge J. H. Perry, of the Home Missionary Society; Chas. A. Hull, the American Missionary; A. E. Dunning, editor of the Congregationalist, the Sunday School Society; R. T. Hall, the Building Society; W. H. Wilcox, the Education Society, and S. B. Capen, the American Board. These six named three more; viz.: Dr. L. C. Warner, New York; W. H. Strong, Detroit, and H. H. Proctor, Boston. This committee had one meeting recently and made a report which has not yet been published. It decided to select no chairman, but to let each serve in turn.

It represents the six boards, and appears to be in conflict with the committee of fifteen which represents the churches. If it is not so, its existence, many say, is unnecessary, since the fifteen committee is already in existence and must remain in existence until the next meeting of the national council. It is known that prominent members of the executive committee of at least one of the boards is working night and day to defeat the proposition to change the membership and secure some sort of rotation. If successful in this organization, the annual meeting of which is soon to be held, the contest will be pushed to other societies and constitutional enactments requiring such rotation, already adopted, will be repealed if possible. The committee of nine has adjourned to meet again in September.

Government of Congregational affairs is by conference and committee. Interests affecting a membership of 600,000 and $2,000,000 a year are involved.—Iowa State Register, July 22.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR
FRED'K MADISON SMITH ASSISTANT EDITOR.
JOSEPH LUFF, D. W. WIGHT } CORRESPONDING EDITORS.

LAMONI, IOWA, AUG. 8, 1900.

FROM THE EDITOR ABROAD.

It was a chill ride that the editor had from the hospitable home of Bro. Alexander Clark, in "Gara," to Fergus, in Erin township, to reach the rails of the Grand Trunk road. Bro. Clark took him over the country in his buggy. It was a dark, cloudy, misty morning, and overcoat, mittens, and fur laprobe were essential to forbearance of the weather, to say nothing of enjoyment. It required an early start, so that ordinary breakfast time found the two, the editor of the Herald and the teacher of the Garafraxa branch, on the road.

The crops were at their finest, the road runs through a picturesque region skirting the Grand River, and, but for the chilliness of the air, the ride would have been very pleasant. Bro. Clark's knowledge of the localities and those living along on either side of the road made him a pleasant companion. His running comment on places and their former and present occupants gave spice to the way, and one was almost sorry when at last we drew up beside the track at the station.

The way by Guelph, Stratford, Port Sarnia and under the river that separates Her Majesty's domain from Uncle Samuel's cities, villages, and farms, through the tunnel to Port Huron on the Yankee side, ended in a wait of nearly three hours, including the change of time from eastern to central time. But as time waits not on man's will or his convenience, the wait ended at last, and the iron courier was harnessed, and with a mixed lot of humanity the editor was off for Detroit.

Friends of the Master and the cause met him at the station, and by a ride over one of Detroit's handsomest streets the home of Bro. N. F. Lyddy, (commonly called "Nap,") was reached, where greetings were extended from Bro. C. Scott, missionary, Bro. Robert McDonald and wife, Bro. Robert Monroe and wife, Brn. Shinnick, Mellich, Hager, Jr., Srs. Woodworth, and Hunter, and the host and hostess Bro. and Sr. Lyddy. It was a happy group.

The Religio on Friday evening, and Sunday school picnic on Saturday afternoon on beautiful Belle Isle filled the week full, including a visit to the city waterworks, where ponderous engines pump the water supply from the grandest of nature's reservoirs, which will never be exhausted until the rivers are dried and the lands married according to Holy Writ.

The grounds about the works are beautifully laid out. There is a water clock, the face of which is covered with green verdure, while its hidden mechanism was run by the water. How? Don't ask the editor. It stands anent the entrance way to the park, and is seen by all passers; and while it does mark the time of day it keeps its secrets hidden under a green but smiling face, a thing of beauty and of usefulness.

Prayer service, preaching, Sunday school, and preaching at night filled the Sunday hours.

The editor's work had been foreshadowed, if not predetermined by the press of the city papers, his coming heralded, and his subject mapped out; it may have been presumptuously, but what could be done.

There is a corps of elders from Utah at work in the city, Adams, Condie, Dotson, and three others, names not secured; and by the ironies of fate—and the press—all were at our meeting Sunday morning.

The subject named by the journals was, The attitude of President Smith and his church toward the Utah Mormons. Taking this as the suggestion of the providence "which shapes our ends," the editor proceeded to his task.

Taking a personal card given him by one of the Utah elders, on the reverse side of which is printed "Articles of Faith," and signed at bottom by Joseph Smith, the editor proceeded to show where and how and by whom said articles were given to the world.

They were first published in 1842. At the time an effort was being made in Congress to secure national recognition and Congressional redress for wrongs inflicted by lawless mobs in Missouri and consequent protection in Illinois from the same sort of violence, Hon. John Wentworth, commonly called "Long" John Wentworth, because of his extreme height, was a member in Congress. He was at the same time publishing a newspaper in Chicago, called the Democrat. In order to satisfy himself in regard to the people at Nauvoo calling themselves Saints, he sent his man of business to Nauvoo to make inquiry as to the people and their faith.

This man of business went to Nauvoo, made the necessary inquiries of the proper authorities, and received the "articles of faith" which were published in the Democrat and in the Times and Seasons, at Nauvoo.

Subsequently, in 1844, the same authority, Joseph Smith, wrote a chapter for the work of a Mr. I. Daniel Rupp, then being published in Pennsylvania, the title of which was, "History of Religious Denominations in the United States." In that chapter these "articles of faith" were substantially repeated. So that by public declaration in 1842, and again in 1844, the articles of faith constituting the doctrine of the church in Nauvoo, under the presidency of Joseph Smith, were unmistakenly given by him.

When in attendance at a mass meeting in Farwell Hall in Chicago, held in February, 1882, the editor took occasion to ask Hon. Wentworth, also present at the meeting, whether he did send such commission to Nauvoo, and did publish such articles of faith in his paper in Chicago, to which questions the honorable gentleman replied that he did. The editor then asked him whether he would tell the audience if there was any provision for polygamy or plural marriage in such articles of faith. To this the Hon. John Wentworth replied, with a voice like the roar of a lion, "Not a line, sir."

The editor then showed that such "articles of faith" was the faith of the church at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, that it was the faith into which his father had baptized him, and from which he had never apostatized, or been deprived of his membership in the church and under the faith into which he had been baptized, by any church tribunal whatever. Hence had an indisputable right to defend that faith from being changed, or corrupted, no matter who should make the attempt to do it.

He then showed that the articles of faith agreed with the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, as the same had been published from 1835 to 1876.

He showed still further that the command in section 49 of Doctrine and Covenants which made it lawful for a man to have one wife, was in keeping with the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, and agreed with the facts of creation,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

the flood, the flight from Jerusalem by Lehi; and the physical fact that there were more men born into the world than women. This was enforced by the fact that in Utah the ratio was about as 12 men to 11 women, as shown by the census.

Whether edifying to the Utah men, the effort of the editor was quite satisfactory to the Saints and their visitors, some of whom were informed for the first time as to how the Reorganized Church justified their antagonism toward the Utah church. It is all easy enough when understood.

The editor spoke in the hall again on Sunday evening and the Monday evening following on topics kindred to the faith.

The editor will not soon forget the untiring kindness of the Saints in Detroit, the kindly attentions of Bro. Lyddy, who did all he could to make the stay one of instruction regarding the city and of pleasantness in personal comfort.

Bro. Columbus Scott was in the city, and was expecting to make a vigorous effort for a hearing.

The city hall force has a system of electric lighting by which a welcome is given in words of fire strung across the front of the city hall. Just on the arrival of the editor, Archbishop Gibbons, and a division of the Columbian Catholic Schools had been accorded a WELCOME to the city by this electrical display of pyrotechnics, Bro. Lyddy solicited of the city board of aldermen a similar welcome to "Our President." The audacity of the request and the force with which the asked for concession was seconded by some in the aldermanic ranks, staggered the mayor, who refused to put a motion to this effect, claiming that Mormonism should receive no such courtesy from the city.

But, the wedge was entered. The proposition was laid on the table, and the murmur amid the throng was, "Accord equal privileges to all Protestants, Catholics, or Saints, or deny all alike."

What the result may be remains to be seen. But the incident served to advertise us, and the press of the city showed us favor.

One of our Utah friends complainingly said, that we were heard where they were not received, were shown respect where they met opposition. We could not object to this because it had been said that if we would do as commanded we should find favor in the eyes of the people, and so it must be.

Bro. Lyddy came out of the Catholic Church, and while he makes no war on that body, he is thoroughly in earnest that equal privileges are the right of all; and for this he contended. May his shadow increase, his devotion to truth never grow less.

"Uncle" John Lake was expected in the city the day the editor left it, so that these brethren, Lake, Scott, Janro, McDonald, Lyddy, Monroe, and a whole host of others, of the older and newer stock, such as Brn. Shaw, Shippy, Hager, and the good working sisters, will form a banner bearing corps not easily repulsed in the warfare.

May the Lord give the victory.

THIS from the Indianapolis Press for July 19 will account for Bro. George Jenkins, of the Indiana field:

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Vincennes, Ind., July 19.—Elder George Jenkins of Plainville, over six feet tall, intelligent, earnest, and impressive, is attracting attention in this city to his religious faith, that of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This creed, with 50,000 followers, is fighting the polygamous Mormons on the ground "That the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman."

The general head of the church maintains an elder's family and pays his expenses while he is doing missionary work. Elder Jenkins claims to have refused high-salaried pastorates in other denominations in Indiana in order to stick to his convictions. He has preached to large audiences in this city at the Christian and Free Methodist churches and in the Salvation Army camp. He expects to spend a month here in missionary work and to establish a church. After that he will return twice a month to hold services.

Mrs. Jerre Ulmer, the wife of a retired butcher, is the only member of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints in this city. She became a member in 1877.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

What priesthood did Christ confer upon the Nephites when he appeared to them on this continent, as told in Book of Mormon, large type edition, page 393?

When Christ called Nephi unto him, also the others on whom he bestowed the priesthood, the record narrates as follows what he said to them:—

And the Lord said unto him, I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people, when I am again ascended into heaven. And again the Lord called others, and said unto them likewise; and he gave unto them power to baptize.

Then followed directions as to how the act of baptizing should be performed, as well as other matters. From this it is impossible to tell just what priesthood was bestowed, for holders of either have the power to baptize. So that in this instance he might have bestowed either.

In verse 31, of the same chapter, we learn that the number of those whom he called at this time was twelve, and were it not from what appears subsequently, we might here conclude that it was the Melchisedec priesthood that he had conferred and that these were to be the twelve apostles. That they were the twelve apostles, we have no doubt; but as to the priesthood, let us see.

After he had thus ordained them, and after he had given them a course of instruction, we learn that he administered to the multitude, his people, the sacrament, and that these twelve men served in ministering to the audience. In chapter 8, verse 24 (large edition), he says:—

Behold, there shall be one ordained among you, and to him will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, unto all those who shall believe and be baptized in my name.

It seems from this that there had been none as yet ordained who had this power. In verse 51, chapter 8, is the following, which forms another link of the chain:—

And it came to pass that when Jesus had made an end of these sayings, he touched with his hand the disciples whom he had chosen, one by one, even until he had touched them all, and spake unto them as he touched them; and the multitude heard not the words which he spake, therefore they did not bear record; but the disciples bear record that he gave them power to give the Holy Ghost.

It seems then, that he bestowed first the Aaronic priesthood, and that after he had given them instructions, and administered the sacrament to them, and had them serve the people, and listen then to further instruction, he bestowed upon them the Melchisedec priesthood, and made them special witnesses to the word.

In chapter 9, verses 38–40, Jesus commanded the twelve whom he had chosen as follows:—

And it came to pass that he [Jesus] brake bread again, and blessed it, and gave to the disciples to eat. And when they had eaten he commanded them that they should break bread, and give it unto the multitude. And when they had given unto the multitude, he also gave them wine to drink, and commanded them that they should give unto the multitude.

Those who claim that only one was to be ordained to the office work of administering the bread and wine ought to see that all of those whom Jesus chose upon the occasion referred to could and did administer in the sacramental service. If those disciples were ordained at first to the Aaronic priesthood, which has the right to baptize, as they were instructed on page 393 to do, they administered with him as will be seen in verse 24 page 404, and this occurs before the statement that he touched them, one by one, as found on page 406.

In the history given in the Book of Alma, chapter 4, it is stated that—

After Alma had made an end of speaking unto the people of the church, which was established in the city of Zarahemla, he ordained priests and elders, by laying on his hands according to the order of God, to preside and watch over the church.

We understand the eldership to hold the Melchisedec priesthood. and in the verse quoted the two officers being named it may be presumed that both of the priesthoods had existence at the time.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And further it is evident that Alma was also of the high priesthood, as found in verse 6, book of Alma.

And Alma went and began to declare the word of God unto the church which was established in the valley of Gideon, according to the revelation of the truth of the word which had been spoken by his fathers, and according to the spirit of prophecy which was in him, according to the testimony of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who should come to redeem his people from their sins, and the holy order by which he was called. And thus it is written. Amen.

DO NOT WRITE ON NEWSPAPERS.

Brethren must remember that the United States mailing laws forbid writing on newspapers which are to be sent through the mails. Whosoever does it, subjects the paper he so writes upon to a charge at letter postage rates. We believe that the person sending may write his name on the paper, but must not write any information, or other communication whatever. Whosoever does it is guilty of a breach of the mailing laws. DO NOT DO IT, any of you.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. H. O. Smith writing of his field the Southwestern mission, under date of July 14, states:—

All the men are now in the field so far as known. No serious trouble of any nature prevails anywhere. . . . Two debates have been held, one at Beaver with the Baptists; and one at Oklahoma, with the Christians. Both with good results.

Bro. Smith reports thirty-one baptisms for the quarter ending June 30.

Bro. D. W. Wight, Rocky Mt. mission, July 11, reports eight baptisms. He states:—

I reorganized the Salt Lake branch thinking it wise to recommend Bro. Peter Anderson as presiding elder there on account of conditions past and present. The work there is more encouraging than usual.

Bro. T. J. Martin writes from Detroit City, Minn., July 24, that three young men had been baptized at Perham, who were the fruits of the labors of Brn. Shockow and Conway. These young men were anxious to have the word preached in their neighborhood, and had arranged for an opening, which was filled by Brn. I. N. Roberts, Martin, and Shockow. Of the meetings he writes:—

The Spirit was present to inspire the preacher, and the audiences were interested. We continued nightly until the 20th. Good interest. Congregations numbered about 40. Baptized Sr. Lanphear, and made many friends. Were invited to come again. There is more work to do there yet, and if looked after, more will come into the kingdom. Saints all well.

Bro. E. F. Shupe writes from Denver, Colo., recently, as follows:

The weather has been very warm, but is more pleasant the past few days. Our missionary force is very limited. Bro. Luff has not yet arrived. Bro. Roush has been called to Iowa on account of sickness of his father. Brn. Scott and Boswell arrived in the city Friday, the 13th, and left for home on the 16th. I do not know why. As to the success of the tent work in Colorado Springs, I am not informed. Bro. Alma Hanson is doing nobly in eastern Arapahoe county.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert reports, July 9, 1900, having done all the labor possible. Branch at Mondamin doing well, but at other places not so well. Of the new branch at Cleveland he writes:—

The new branch at Cleveland, has splendid opportunities before it for a good work, or so it seemed to me when there in May.

Bro. D. R. Chambers, under date of July 23, writes from Fontanelle, Iowa:—

The work is moving along nicely in this district. Have baptized seventeen or eighteen since June 1. Praying for the success of the cause.

Bro. W. S. Pender, under date of July 28, writes from Heber, Utah:—

Tent services are being well attended. Sufficient opposition to incite interest and keep us feeling well. Expect to begin at Heber next week, but return to Provo for Sunday.

Bro. T. C. Kelley, in charge Southeastern mission, under date of July 30, states:—

Much rain and busy season has made it very hard to do work that will show up to any great advantage on paper. . . . All is peace and harmony among the missionary forces, and hopes are entertained that good will be accomplished ere the year has flown.

Take courage, Bro. Kelley; the victory is not always to those who are the noisiest combatants. Do your work well, and the Lord will look after the results.

Bro. A. H. Adams writes from Jasper, Minn., July 29:—

Brn. Hayer and Stedman closed tent meetings at Pipestone, Minn., a week ago today. There has been a number of efforts made there, but with little success. Wife and I enjoy reading the church papers, as it is the only gospel food we get here that satisfies.

Bro. W. S. Pender, on July 31, wrote from Provo, Utah:—

I go with tent to Heber, Utah, tomorrow. We are having splendid attendance and interest in tent work. Don't feel in the least discouraged. One gentleman told me last night, at close of the tent services here, that he would go to our reunion at Pleasant Grove, and would unite with the church soon.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Under date of July 4, Bro. A. N. Bishop, of Wales, writing from Canton, Cardiff, states that he had baptized six.

Bro. W. H. Kelley, in a late letter gives quite a comprehensive digest of the work in his field. His forces are engaged and are active all along the line from Ohio to Maine. Prospects fair, a number baptized.

Bro. I. N. White reporting for the quarter ending July 1, states that there have been sixty-five baptisms reported to him, all of his men reporting but five out of forty-two. Pretty good work this, thirty-seven out of forty-two, in the field not being prevented by untoward events. He states, "All of the other laborers are doing quite well, and the work is in fair condition."

Bro. Quincy Anderson has written a reply to Elder Sparling's letter regarding the letter of the editor of Deseret News to him. He corrects Elder Sparling in some statements, feeling that he was misunderstood and consequently misrepresented. With Elder Sparling's letter and Bro. Anderson's reply it must be a closed episode so far as the HERALD is concerned.

The Toronto Evening News is making a terrible howl over the effort that Bro. A. C. Barmore is making in a tent pitched on Spadina street, off Queen, in that city. The News is very untruthfully uncomplimentary as to the personal appearance and diction of Bro. Barmore. But we suppose that it was intended to be sensational. Its virulence will defeat its object with sensible people.

HERALD patrons have in the month of July contributed to the India famine relief fund, $33.96.

Good reports come once in awhile from Bro. E. A. Smith, who is on a mission to California. Herald office employees are especially interested in his success, because he was so long employed here as a binder. Regrets at his leaving are counteracted by the confidence we have in him to make a success as a defender of the faith.

Bro. C. I. Carpenter, of Mississippi, is now busily at work in the Recorder's office. He has been there for some weeks now, and seems to be enjoying his work as assistant recorder.

Bro. D. J. Krahl, formerly of St. Joseph, is now busy in the Bishop's office, at work as bookkeeper. He has moved his family to Lamoni and has located on the west side, near the church. We have not yet learned how Sr. Grace likes the change.

Bro. F. R. Tubb informs us that he has removed from No. 12 Paragon Road, South Hackney, where he had lived for eight years, to No. 31 Chatham Place, Hackney, London. Those having business with him as clerk of the London branch, please note.

In one of our extracts from letters, it is stated that Bro. Luff was not yet in Colorado. From other sources we learn that he reached Denver on the 28th ult., and occupied there on the 29th in the morning services.

Rev. Baumgartner, a Congregationalist minister of Newton, Iowa, made the Herald office a pleasant call last week. On Sunday morning he was invited to occupy the stand with President Smith, and did so, offering the opening prayer.

Patriarch A. H. Smith and his stenographer, Bro. Leon Gould, left August 2 for Omaha. From there they went to California. He will ordain, while there, a bishop and a high priest.

"AND THE KINGDOM SHALL NOT BE LEFT TO OTHER PEOPLE."

The above heading is found in Daniel 2: 44. It is part of the description Daniel gave of a kingdom which the God of heaven should set up in the latter days. In my opinion it is difficult to find a scripture which has been more misunderstood. A few elders —though a very few I am glad to say —understand this scripture to refer to the American Republic. The world in general has understood it to refer to the church that Jesus Christ himself set up. As to its reference to the American Republic it could be dismissed with a single sentence, but as some may be misinformed, we will enter into an investigation of it. The argument made is, that the other kingdoms referred to are political kingdoms, namely, Babylon, the Medes and Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans; therefore, the kingdom which God would set up should be political also, and it shall break in pieces and consume all these other kingdoms and stand forever. To prove the argument it is noted that kings are trembling and thrones are being cast down, and the republican form of government is gaining favor. These are facts we are willing to admit, but unwilling that they shall be misapplied.

1. If God sets up a kingdom, it must be God's kingdom, and God be its king and lawgiver. The framers of the Constitution of the United States were probably guided, but it does not follow that God is either king or lawgiver of the United States. Christ is the light of the world, and lighteth every man that cometh into the world; and when men are guided by that light they are blessed and do good things. But notwithstanding this, it is not right to say that some good act they do is the kingdom that "the God of heaven would set up." That kingdom "shall not be left to other people, and it shall stand forever." We read:—

> But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever.—Dan. 7: 18.

The kingdom of the saints is to be forever; but the American Republic and all the earth shall be given to another people. So it is written, "the meek shall inherit the earth." Even the kingdom, "and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High." Surely no one, when they look at the facts in the case, will conclude that the American Republic "shall stand forever," or that "it shall not be left to another people."

2. "Is it the church that Jesus set up?" We answer, it is not. Christ foretold an apostasy. The prophets and apostles expected one, and warned the saints against it. The attitude of the reformers plainly tells us that an apostasy has taken place. If there had been no apostasy, no reformation would have been necessary. The religion of Jesus needed no reforming. It was "Romanism" and other "isms" that needed reform, if indeed any good can come out of reformed "isms." (I am of the opinion that it is not the reformed "ism," but the principles of truth, when they were carried into effect, which did the good that was done.)

It is frequently the case that sectarians, in defending their claims, lose sight of the prophecies relating to the apostasy—or twist them so that they do not apply. When reviewing their history, origin, and antecedents, they think that a corrupt tree can bring forth good fruit; or in other words, Protestants agree that Rome is a corrupt tree—a bitter fountain. But say they, the kingdom was not to be left to other people. "It was to stand forever; therefore, we must be the kingdom of God, for we are a continuation of it." When they are driven from that position they take refuge behind Matthew 16: 18. Christ said he would build his church on a rock and the gates of hell should not prevail against it. We answer that the rock referred to is the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God—a truth that can only come through revelation; and when one has received this knowledge, the gates of hell could not prevail against it. It was that represented by the pronoun "it" that was not to be prevailed against. Church is not the antecedent of "it." A pronoun must agree with its antecedent in number, person, and gender. The word "church" is of the feminine gender, while "it" is of the common gender. If in the face of this it is contended "that it is the church that was not to be prevailed against," we call attention to the fact that the church is Christ's body—his bride—and when in the early centuries she departed from the faith, he no longer recognized her as his bride—the "woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars;" but he called her the "mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth," and the Scriptures teach that her reign was over all "kindreds, and tongues, and nations" (Rev. 13: 7). So in any case the church as an organic body ceased to exist. The church was a visible organization, having a head composed of three, called "the First Presidency."

The next in office were the twelve apostles. Then followed the prophets, then the high priests, then the evangelists, next came the elders. The bishops came next in order, then the priests (or pastors), teachers, and deacons. When this organization ceased to exist, the church was prevailed against. Thus we see that the church Jesus established was not the kingdom spoken of by Daniel. A text is to the point, as follows:—

> Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.—Matt. 21: 43.

It should be given to another nation, or in other words be left to another people. The very opposite was to happen in this case, as compared with the kingdom of which Daniel spoke. It was not "to be left to other people." We must look elsewhere for that kingdom. In America we have many privileges that some nations do not enjoy—"a land where all have the equal right to life, protection, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." In this land we will look for that kingdom that shall stand forever.

Not wishing at this time to trace out the prophecies, for that would make too long a paper, we will trace events backward and come to the same thing. All you have to do is to see that there are no breaks in the chain of evidence, and you will not be deceived.

In the second epistle of Peter, the second chapter, an apostasy is foretold. The apostle says:—

> There were false prophets also among the people, and there shall be false teachers among you —2 Peter 2: 1.

The "you" refers to the saints, or to them who had obtained like precious faith. Then the apostle tells us what these false teachers would do:—

1. Bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. 2. Through covetousness make merchandise of the brethren. 3. Presumptuous, self-willed, speak evil of dignities. 4. Speak evil of the things they understand not. 5. Having eyes full of adultery. 6. Beguiling unstable souls. 7. Exercising their heart after covetous practices. 8. Cursed children. 9. Forsaking the right way. 10. Followed the way of Balaam. 11. They allure through the lusts of the flesh. 12. They "escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," and were "overcome," and their "latter end is worse with them than the beginning."

We will look at some of the things resulting:—

1. Many shall follow their pernicious ways." 2. "It should cause the way of truth to be evil spoken of." 3. "Those who were clean escaped from them who live in error."

We here see a partial apostasy, but the "clean ones" should escape

from them who live in error; and the way of truth is the way represented by those who escaped—not only escaped—from these false teachers, but also from the pollutions of the world, and they know the right way—the way of truth. They were found "clean," or in accordance with the right way. This apostasy being only a partial apostasy, cannot refer to the church Christ set up. That was overcome; but Peter says some of these "were clean and escaped." Then it would seem to refer to another work.

There is a movement that has challenged the attention of the world, and calls for investigation. The movement to which I refer is in Utah; a church claiming to be the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Let us see if this extraordinary claim agrees with the extraordinary things the Apostle Peter talks of in this chapter?

1. "Bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them." Brigham Young, speaking of Adam, said:—

> He is Michael, the Archangel, the Ancient of Days! about whom holy men have written and spoken—He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 50.

He put Adam in the place of God, and so denied the Lord who had bought them.

2. Through covetousness they made merchandise of the brethren; they coveted the wealth of many of the saints—and got it.

3. They were presumptuous and self-willed, in that, contrary to all usages and laws of the church, they assumed power and leadership, and sacrificed principles of truth to their own selfish wills.

4. They spoke evil of the things they understood not. In the Millennial Star, vol. 17, p. 195, March 31, 1855, the statement is made concerning Abraham, Isaac (who only had one wife), and Jacob, and concerning the polygamic revelation (so called):—

> And because they did none other things than that which they were commanded, they have entered into their exaltations, according to the promises, and sit upon thrones; and are not Angels, but are Gods. . . . Thus we have a succession of gods from Adam down to Christ and his Apostles at least.

Yes, Brigham, you agree with Paul; he says, "there be gods many and lords many;" and you also disagree with him, for he also says:—

> But to us there is but one God, . . . and one Lord Jesus Christ.—1 Cor. 8: 6.

Mr. Brigham, if you had understood as Paul did, you would have known he referred to idols who are called gods and you would not then have "spoken evil of the things you understood not."

5. "Having eyes full of adultery." Their lust and polygamy answers to that.

6. "Beguiling unstable souls." Many who followed Brigham and his associates were unstable souls, and so by him were beguiled.

7. "Exercised their heart after covetous practices." They coveted the highest seats and exercised their heart (affections) after them, and when they took these seats, practiced things that brought riches to them.

8. "Cursed children." When children born of polygamy understand things correctly, they consider that their parents put a curse upon them.

9. "Forsaken the right way." They forsook the way that said, "the truth shall make you free;" for they declared things that were false.

10. "Followed the way of Balaam." The way of Balaam contains fornication (see Rev. 2: 14), and it is not difficult to connect this with "Utah Mormonism."

11. "They allure through the lusts of the flesh;" and in this manner they made many converts, both in the States and in Europe.

12. They had escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; "and were [afterward] overcome—and their latter end was worse than the beginning."

They had once been God's servants, and their heart had departed from him. Summing up, we may say: 1. They trusted in man. 2. They were led captive through the lusts of the flesh. 3. Their heart departed from the Lord; and therefore the way of truth was evil spoken of, and those that were clean and escaped from those who lived in error, were despised because of those who had done wrong. Jeremiah speaks of this partial apostasy. He says:—

> Thus saith the Lord: Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord.—Jer. 17: 5.

The Utah Mormons filled these conditions. They trusted in man (in Brigham Young and others) and were led astray. They made flesh their arm, when they forsook God for polygamy. Their heart departed from the Lord. But whoever fulfill these conditions, the last clause shows that they were once right. It says, "whose heart departeth from the Lord." If the heart had not been with the Lord, it could not depart from him; so at one time they must have been God's people; and the next verse shows that it was the Utah Mormons who fulfilled these things. The sixth verse reads as follows:—

> For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.

From this we see that some religious people, who had departed from the Lord, should inhabit "a salt land and not inhabited." The great Salt Lake valley is inhabited by some people who have departed from professed principles. It was not inhabited before those people went to inhabit it. It is a salt land, both the lake being salt, and salt is found there. It was a parched place in the wilderness, and it would grow crops only by the process of irrigation.

The Utah Mormons are that people, "and their hearts have departed from the Lord." The verse says, "They should not see when good cometh." That is equal to saying that good would come. How would the good come? It would come through the "clean ones," through them who escaped from error; and the Reorganized Church goes forth today and says to them that they are clean, but they don't believe it; they can't see when the good cometh. But the world is largely ignorant that there is a difference existing, and yet the scriptures show that a part of the church in the last days should apostatize, but that the church should not be prevailed against, for it should be reorganized.

Let us examine the seventeenth chapter of Jeremiah, beginning at the fifth verse. The fifth and sixth verses show a partial apostasy; the remaining part of the chapter indicates "a reorganization."

> Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is.—V. 7.

While false teachers had bruised and smitten them, they still hoped in the Lord, and surely he would deliver them. (See verses 14 and 15.) They that trust in the Lord cry unto him and say:—

> Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise.—V. 14.

God speaks now and says:—

> Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now.—V. 15.

Surely the good Father in heaven would answer that prayer! He says he heard it, or words implying that he heard it, and John says:—

> And if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desire of him.—1 John 5: 15.

So we are assured that God would hear his church. What did he do? He told them that Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph, should take his place at their head. In 1860, Joseph did take his place as God had said. But he did not come till God called him to come, and that is what the Prophet Jeremiah foretold. Joseph prayed unto the Lord, and waited till God directed. Hear what Jeremiah says:

> As for me, I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee, [or as the marginal reference has it, "after thee."]—Jer. 17: 16.

It would seem that some had hastened from being pastors to follow

www.LatterDayTruth.org

him, i. e., they had hastily departed from being pastors (the proposition "from" implies departure), but the one in the text did not hastily depart after the others. He did not follow Brigham Young. He did not act hastily, but waited until God called him, and directed him. Hear his words:—

Neither have I desired the woeful day; thou knowest that which came out of my lips was right before thee.—V. 16.

This clearly refers to the son of Joseph, who is now the president of the church. He did not hasten; he waited till the Lord directed. And the Lord directed him to those who were still "clean"—to them who had said, "Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now"—to the Reorganization, and God had said to them that Joseph should come to lead them. (Did you know you were fulfilling prophecy, Bro. Joseph, when you were waiting for God to direct you?)

In conclusion I call your attention to the fact that notwithstanding a partial apostasy, the authority still remained with the clean ones "who did not go to the salt land, and the power that could at first organize could afterward reorganize (when God commanded); hence, "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints;" and the kingdom was not prevailed against, nor left to other people. It seemed as though Jeremiah prayed in behalf of the "pastor who should not hasten," and said:—

Let them be confounded that persecute me, but let not me be confounded: let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction.—Jer. 17: 18.

The pronoun "them" has its antecedent in those who should inhabit the "salt land" (the Brighamites). There is no wonder in them not debating the question with the "Reorganization." Why? Because "they are confounded"—"they are dismayed;" that is why. Jeremiah's prayer is destined to be answered, and Daniel's prophecy must be fulfilled, and as we review the history of the past, note the present happenings, and are guided as to the future success of this work, we feel to rejoice and know that before long the world will begin to realize with us that the kingdom shall stand forever; then we shall rejoice to know that we are numbered with those who have said, "And the kingdom shall not be left to other people."

THEATER GOING.

What about those elders who go to theaters? I am surprised that men claiming to have been called of God to teach his gospel, both by precept and example, should be guilty of attending such places. I say guilty, for I regard it as a crime against the church. It may be said that there is no law against theater going—nothing in the Bible forbidding it. No; nor is there against card playing, horse racing, and dancing; but there is an unwritten law forbidding all such that is recognized by the Christian world. Are we not commanded, and is it not time, that we should come out from the world and be separated from it? And not only shun evil, but the very appearance of it. How an elder can sit in one of our modern theaters and think he is shunning evil, is a mystery to me? Or how men can feel happy in such a place; men called to be ministers of heaven seeking the powers of heaven with these words so recently spoken to him is a mystery:—

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor of speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.—D. C. 119: 2.

Can he feel happy in such a place? Does such a place and scenes help an elder to fit himself for this great work the Lord here says we have to do? The influence of such a place is exactly opposite to the condition we are here commanded to strive for.

No, brethren; if we wish to do this great work, we must keep away from theaters. Time is too short, and our calling too sacred, and our example far too potent for us to attend such places of amusement. It is time the church should settle this theater-going question—if it is a question. If the church indorses it, then there is no use in some of us teaching against it; if it does not, then elders who go to such places should be regarded as doing wrong, no matter if they are considered leading men.

While conversing with a sister over this matter, a few days ago, she made this remark: "Well; if I did go, I had the elders for company. As soon as I was seated, I looked around, and who should I see there but Elder ——. I just thought if some did not think it a good place for Saints, we had the elders with us anyway." Now, who was most to blame? The elders, of course. I have had them say: "O, it did not cost me anything; Brother so and so paid my way in, and he is able to." It does not make any difference if Vanderbilt paid your way; you have no business there. If it is not a good place; if its influence is not productive of good we should not go there, no matter if some other man's money is spent. Our example is just the same. It was not a question with the above mentioned sister as to how the elder got there; whether he spent the money some one gave him, or if some one spent it for him. The question was, "Is this a good place?" "Yes; for here are the elders;" and that is the way our elders should be regarded. We are before the world as examples. That is so whether we want it so or not; and it is setting a poor one when we do things that ministers of other churches will not do. We are quick to find fault with them about their teachings; they could well find fault with some of our doings.

It may be said that some of the plays are not hurtful. True. The same is said of horse racing, card playing, and dancing; but can we as a church indorse such practices? When it is learned that an elder has been in attendance at a dance, do people usually inquire who all was there, how late they danced, or if it was a select affair? And if they so decide that it was all right for him to be there, or if seen at the race course, whether he bet? Not usually, as betting is the business at such places, it is taken for granted that in some way he was financially interested. Bicycle racing is little better than horse racing. But some one will say, Why condemn the elders so? Is it not wrong for the members? Yes; but where they lead, the rest will follow, be it up or down.

I do think that drinking tea, coffee, and wine, and going to theaters, to be wrong practices for men of God, called to be messengers of truth and examples of good. I know some will call me a crank for writing this, and it may cause the forming of a company to defend such doings; but I am satisfied if we ever obtain the power of the Spirit, we will have to be more holy; there must be a greater difference between us and the world.

Trusting that we will heed the admonition to "Come up higher," I remain as ever, HIRAM L. HOLT.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., July 23.

Editors Herald:—No doubt there are some, especially in the Colorado mission, who would like to hear how we are getting along with the gospel tent. Bro. J. Frank Curtis and myself were appointed by the missionary in charge, Bro. J. B. Roush, to operate the tent during the season. The tent was first pitched in Denver for a few days, an account of which has been given by others through the church papers, hence need not be repeated here. On June 15 we took the tent down and shipped it to Colorado Springs, and on the 17th we pitched it again, on the corner of Oak and Stillman streets. We continued at this place for four weeks, holding services each evening and twice on Sunday. Sometimes we had quite good congregations and sometimes we had very small attendance. While the effort was hardly what we had reason to expect, we are satisfied that it was not in vain by any means. Probably six or seven persons are really interested in the work from the effort, and we think that it would not be unreasonable to expect some of them to obey the gospel in due time. I consider that Colorado Springs is a hard place to establish the church, yet I believe that it can be done, but it will require persistent effort. Such effort should be made. We are now "breaking the ice, "and that is no small thing to do, in view of the conditions that exist here. The Utah people have preceded us and have accomplished nothing for themselves, and have succeeded in disgusting most people until it makes it much harder for us to reach the people. On the 17th inst. we moved the tent to Roswell, a suburb of Colorado Springs, and began services the same evening. Thus far we have found the people quite sociable and ready to listen to our message. We have had quite good attendance with the exception of one evening. Last night the largest attendance greeted us that we have ever had in the tent. We have street car connections with the city, and several persons came out to attend the services yesterday. We now have ten Latter Day Saints in the city, including Sr. Grace Overcash, of Grinnell, Iowa, recently arrived.

Elder W. T. Bozarth and wife rendered acceptable assistance in the meetings during their sojourn at Manitou, Bro. Bozarth preaching several times. Bro. E. Curtis also came in and preached several times with good effect.

On May 23 our little Maude (aged three years) fell from the porch and broke her leg. A surgeon was called and the fractured limb was set. For five weeks she lay on her back, causing us great anxiety at times. After the removal of the cast an X ray photograph was made which showed that the bone was not in proper position, but was considerably bent from the natural position, causing some shortening. A heavy weight was attached to the limb, and after two weeks' time another photograph was taken, which showed much improvement over the first. We think that in time the limb can be made nearly straight. I make mention of this for the reason that many desire to know her condition, and also to call attention to the usefulness of the X ray. No wonder that the ancient prophet said that "knowledge should be increased" "at the time of the end."

Unless some one or several persons shall come to our help financially, we will soon be under the necessity of storing the tent for lack of means to carry on the work. Don't ignore this appeal, brethren, and then find fault with the missionaries for not continuing the work. We are now occupying "new fields," just as we have been commanded to do. No one should refuse to assist in the work simply because it is not being done in their own vicinity. We have moved according to our judgment and in harmony with the counsel of the missionary in charge. We shall do our best to succeed. We have our seasons of encouragement and discouragement. We hope, however, that in writing an account of our labors that we shall be able to state facts as they are. Brethren, let us avoid making "big I" too prominent in our writings. Our church papers could be greatly improved by the omission of things complimentary to ourselves.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

C. R. DUNCAN.

P. S.—Latter Day Saints visiting Colorado Springs are invited to call on us at 429½ East Willamette street.

OZARK, Missouri, June 1.

Editors Herald:—In a late issue of the Herald is a letter from Elder Henry Sparling, of Springfield, Missouri, concerning a letter of Mr. Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, to me: I wish to correct Elder Sparling. First, he says, if any one is in blame for Mr. Penrose's letter being published, it was I. He says, he and I had some controversy in our correspondence about the Adam-God theory, and that I wrote Mr. Penrose about the doctrine, and that Mr. Penrose answered me, and that I gave him Mr. Penrose's answer. In reply to this, I will say, that last winter or fall I came to sympathize with the Utah church, and as Elder Sparling was a friend of mine, I wrote him explaining my reasons for believing in the Utah church, and that I thought Brigham Young was misrepresented, like Joseph the martyr was. Elder Sparling and I had considerable correspondence. He quoted to me from the Journal of Discourses, which contains the sermons of Brigham Young and others. He quoted to me from vol. 1, page 50; like this: "The Virgin Mary was not overshadowed by the Holy Ghost, but by Adam." I did not believe Elder Sparling quoted it right, and I wrote him in answer that if he could prove Brigham Young said these very words then I would believe Brigham Young taught false doctrines, and not before. He wrote me again and told the same thing. Not telling Elder Sparling, I wrote the Editor of the Deseret News, asking him if Brigham Young ever said the Virgin Mary was not overshadowed by the Holy Ghost, but by Adam; I also asked Mr. Penrose, if Brigham Young ever said Adam was our only God. When I wrote Mr. Penrose, I did not dream of sending the answer to Elder Sparling, or anyone else and it was several days after I got my reply from Mr. Penrose before I sent the letter to Elder Sparling. My reasons for sending that letter was because it answered the last two letters of his in regard to Adam-God and other things, then I told him he quoted from the information I got from Mr. Penrose, and inclosed him Mr. Penrose's letter to me, telling him to send the letter back, as I wished to keep it. To this letter I received no answer, neither the letter. After a week or so I wrote again asking him to forward Mr. Penrose's letter.

Elder Sparling says he has all the letters I wrote him, if he has, he has this one. I did not receive any answer to this letter. A few days after, Elder Sparling stopped at our house on his way to quarterly conference. I asked him, in the presence of my mother, if he had that letter, he replied "I sent it to Bro. Joseph" (editor of the Herald). He said also that Brigham Young did use those very words, and the sermon of Brigham Young in full, with Mr. Penrose's letter was going to come out in that week's Herald (March 15th). Mother said: "Is that so? I am glad. Good," or words to that effect. I then said, if the sermon would come out in full, and Brigham Young taught such that Adam overshadowed the Virgin Mary, then I would be forever done with the Utah church. But where he says that I said, "Good, I am glad of it," namely, Penrose's letter to me coming out in print, I did not say it. It was mother that said it, and not myself, and I asked mother before writing this, if this was correct. She said it was.

Two days after Elder Sparling told me he had sent the letter to the Herald, the Herald came out, with a part of Brigham Young's sermon on Adam-God, and also Mr. Penrose's letter to me, and comments under it.

Of course, I knew the letter would be in the Herald, as he told me it would be, but he did not tell me, or write me so until two days before the Herald came to me, and by then it was already in print.

So you see, Mr. Editor, I did not know anything about that letter being published until it was already in print. Elder Sparling did not ask me if he might send it to the Herald, and I did not know when he did send it.

My reasons for sending Mr. Penrose's letter to Elder Sparling was because we had our private correspondence, and I sent him the letter to prove to him that Brigham Young did not teach that Adam overshadowed the Virgin Mary, and that Adam was not our only God; and I placed confidence in Elder Sparling as a friend, and a brother in the church. When I told him when he read Mr. Penrose's letter to send it back to me, or to keep it until I came up to see him, as I expected then to do; or to bring it when he came to see me, I expected him to do so; and if I had had the least idea he would have done otherwise I would not have sent him that letter. While there was not anything in the letter I was particular for people to see, I wrote Mr. Penrose a personal letter with no intention of letting anyone see it. Mr. Penrose gave me an answer to the questions asked. As you editors have explained that you didn't know that Mr. Penrose's letter to me was private, I do not have any kick against the editors of the Herald.

Elder Sparling says he supposed I was satisfied, as I walked over twelve miles to conference to be baptized and bore my testimony there that I had a thousand times greater testimony to the divinity of the restored gospel. Yes, this is so; but I did not bear my testimony to the Reorganized Church, that I knew it was the only true church. But I thought it, or I would not have been baptized. What made me change so quick was that Elder Sparling gave me a tract I never saw before. Quotations from the sermons of Brigham Young on lying and stealing and playing cards. When I was convinced that he taught such, I then thought probably Brigham Young taught other false doctrines and for this reason I walked twelve miles to be baptized; but even after I was baptized I had lots of doubts. While I did not doubt the restored gospel yet I doubted whether or not Brigham Young taught false doctrines.

As to the sin Elder Sparling said that I said I was in, and thought I had done enough sin to be baptized again. Yes, I thought I did do enough sin to be baptized again; and think so yet. I had no reference to sinning in that I thought the Utah church was right, for it is foolish to suppose a person does wrong in believing in any church. The sin I had reference to was renouncing the angel's message after I knew it was right. I was discouraged because some elders tore down the church. This led me to renounce Mormonism; and, after going off into divers beliefs, such as hypnotism, magnetic healing, Christian Science, Millerism, and seeing as I did the humbug in these things, I took back my renouncement of Mormonism. After I renounced Mormonism I did other wrongs, and this was what I had reference to when I told Elder Sparling I had done enough sin to be baptized over.

Hoping I have explained myself on these points and that I was not responsible for Mr. Penrose's letter being in print in the Herald, I remain, in the restored gospel,

QUINCY ANDERSON.

BLACKWELL, O. T., July 24.

Editors Herald:—I think it is the duty of the Saints to subscribe for the church papers. When they once take them I don't see how they can get along without them. We take all the church papers except the Hope, including the Gospel Quarterly.

This is a lovely country, and Oklahoma is coming to the front fast. Our people here as a general thing are prosperous. I believe I am safe in saying, they are above the average. They are, so far as my observation extends, at least. The Lord has blessed them bountifully in this world's goods. This is a splendid year for Oklahoma, one of general good crops. Have had abundance of rain and all things seem on the advance. Now, in the face of these facts, let me make a few statements: I had the privilege of looking over the Bishop's agent's books, and what did I find there? I found there had only been $185.77 paid in tithes and offerings since last November, in all Oklahoma. Just enough to supply one missionary's family, and that a small one, and there are four missionaries' families to live out of that. How many of us would be willing to divide that sum among three other families and be obliged to live on it for nine months? That might do very well for India, but not for America under her present prosperous conditions. We read in Malachi 3:8–12:—

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts."

Those are grand promises. We could not ask more. In this country the law is, if we pay one half our taxes by December 20 there is no penalty, and Saint and sinner alike swarm to the treasurer's office, fall in line, do without their dinners, and stand, and stand, until worn out, in order to pay their taxes and miss the penalty. That is all right, pay your taxes; but don't altogether forget your tithes.

We read in 1 Corinthians 9:13: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar?"

I have heard some say, "They (the missionaries) will just have to stop preaching and go to work." Dear Saints, it is not left to their option whether they preach or stay at home and work. If it were, I assure you Oklahoma would be left without one missionary in the field; but their calling makes it necessary for them to go and preach. Let me read you what Paul says in 1 Corinthians 9:16: "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" Saints, do you see the position they are placed in?

Then we have the will of the Lord concerning tithing in a later dispensation, even in the latter days. You will find it in Doctrine and Covenants 64:5: "Behold, now it is called today (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned."

I will here relate a dream my husband had a few years ago, at the time we had only paid a small amount of tithing. He dreamed a gentleman came into the room where he was with a large grip or valise, and sat down opposite him, and opened it, and it contained papers of a legal nature, notes, mortgages, deeds, etc. He picked up one after the other, telling what paper was good and what was not, until he came to one Hinkle. "That man," he said, "is good. He is straight, and is noted in particular for paying his debts except the debt he owes the Lord. That debt he won't pay." That was just the condition of things. We could have paid our tithing, but just didn't, as the man said, "wouldn't." I wonder how many Saints are in just the same condition, "pay all their debts but the one they owe the Lord?"

I think I have said enough on tithing and probably more than some would like to hear from a sister.

Our Oklahoma reunion convenes August 3 and continues ten days. Six miles southeast of Hennessy, Oklahoma Territory, is the place. Come, Saints, and bring your tithes and offerings up to the reunion. There will be someone there to receive them, and the Lord will surely reward you.

Your sister in Christ,

ANNA HINKLE.

AVATORU, Rairoa, May 23, 1900.

Editors Herald:—I have not written much to the church papers since coming here, for the reason that we scarcely understand the situation yet, and do not care to write of that we do not understand. Of course we might write as we see or as things appear to us, but that would not be very reliable, though it might furnish some notes so that those coming after us may have some idea of their experience before them. We could form no idea whatever of the mission before we arrived, and what we read in the church papers was rather on the comical side. One can scarcely be blamed, however, for writing a few of the comical things that occur, and besides, to relate such things rather relieves the ever present lonesomeness a little.

A few days ago we received the mail from America for March, and the last week of February. We are interested in many of the articles appearing in the church papers of late. Gathering and consecration does not bother us so much as it seems to some others, though we think some of the brethren may have been lead to stir up thought on the matter. A letter on all things common from a brother in Kansas City seemed to fit my idea very well, entitled something like "Charity, Brotherly Kindness, and Consecration." His idea seems to be scriptural in part, at least; and if adopted divides the responsibility, placing it upon the branches in part, and thus relieving those already heavy ladened from such a mighty care and responsibility. The centralization of power in the church will doubtless work harm, and is opposed to the law as I see it. In a multitude of council there is said to be wisdom, which if true would mean, the larger the council the greater the wisdom. The law says repeatedly "All things shall be done in this church by common consent." Whatever else this expression may mean one thing appears to be certain, all have a right to voice and vote, and should share the responsibility. Each should learn his duty and do it. One duty being to create equal right of speech, and responsibility according to calling. Perhaps it may yet be discovered that all have something to say about all things common. I do not feel quite so willing as some to leave it all to one or two quorums as some do, stating that they are willing to leave it entirely in the hands of a few to direct. If that were the law I would gladly submit, and I think the leading quorums are not willing nor anxious to shoulder the burden.

If the quorums would discuss these matters of law and compare ideas in their quorum sessions it is just possible they may accomplish the work they were called into existence for, rather than bothering about conference resolutions one year, to be laid on the table next, or forgotten entirely. At least that is my thought, without complaining or finding fault, but as I see it, stating facts.

We do not see at all according to an article of Bro. Winning, of St. Joseph, Missouri, on all things common. To us it does not seem to alter the present condition of affairs at all, but seems to aim at excusing the present evil. A comparison with the following quotation seems to justify me in my conclusion: "Ye shall be equal in temporal things." I think I have given the quotation about correct.

For the praise of the brethren whose hearts have been stirred in this matter, and the hope of the future, it might not be out of place to say that after rereading the many passages in respect to equality we seem not to have taken one step in advance of the time when the commandments were given. Think of it; fifty-nine years ago we were told to be equal in temporal things, and we haven't done it yet or attempted it. But I must stop, or I will reveal the fact that I am more interested than I thought.

We were quite a little interested in the Roberts case, though we are of the opinion that our Protestant enemies will use it against us, and make it harder for us to obtain places to preach in, in America. The Mormons here are very mum about it. Two Mormon elders sailed for America in the same boat with Bro. and Sr. Burton. I expect to hear of lively times aboard. Elder Isaac L. Willie was one of them. He and I talked debate here, but the government would not allow it in English, and he would not debate with a native. I transfer the matter to those in charge of Utah. Mr. Willie's home is in Bountiful, Utah. Have heard but very little from my relatives in Utah since the debate.

The conference passed off much as other conferences do. We sent the minutes to the Herald. Hope they will not get lost.

My wife and I are both well, except that I have about the worst cold that I ever had. I suppose that sounds queer to some. A cold in that hot climate? Yes, I have seen hotter weather in Wisconsin than I have yet seen here. The quarantine at Papeete has shut off our flour supply. We have had no bread for two weeks. Yesterday we had for dinner one sweet potato, some hard tack, and rain water. For supper we fared better. We had fried chicken and fish to go with our hard tack and rain water. There is plenty of tea and coffee, but we did not come out here to break the word of wisdom. The Saints and even Catholics are very kind to us. They are most distracted over our not having any bread. We tell them aita peapea (no trouble), but they know our feelings pretty well.

I have preached each Sunday since coming here, and when I get to understand native a little better I intend to preach every night. We are to spend this year traveling from island to island, but get our mail at Papeete.

We had a fearful storm coming up on the steamer. The captain and all the crew were sick; and as for me, well, we'll just draw a line here.

Provisions having raised in price since the quarantine, we were charged $5 extra for our board, but did not eat a bite during the entire trip. We go from here to Tikehau and return, and go from here to Manihi and adjoining islands. Expect to be at Aratua in October during the rahui (open season for getting shell).

For the benefit of those who desire to pronounce the words properly that are sent from here, I will say: The pronunciation of the letters are the same as in the German alphabet, only the letters here have but one sound. Thus a is ah; e is exactly as our a first sound, and i is exactly as the first or long sound of our e, u has but one sound, and is like the German, uh. With these few explanations, and remembering to accent most frequently on the first syllable, except proper names, you can read Tahitian all right, that is, to be reading it in America.

Many of the Saints have not yet returned from conference. The wind has been very boisterous since. We expect the voyage of Bro. Burton and wife was delayed on that account. We left Papeete before they did, and heard that they left five days afterward. Hope we have good help sent us soon. We will do the best we can till then. Am interested to know the results of the debate of White and Braden at Viroqua, Wisconsin. Have traveled on foot all around that country, and lived on one can of sardines a day, and am satisfied that nothing short of a debate would call out a crowd; and even then I am not sure but the people would rather believe the other side. Will venture the guess that Bro. White will think the home of his Satanic majesty near.

J. W. PETERSON.

NEW LONDON, Iowa, July 23.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Dan Tripp and I closed a very interesting meeting here last night. Good crowd every night when the weather permitted. Today the tent will go to Mt. Pleasant for a time; then we expect to go to West Burlington. I like Bro. Tripp as a colaborer, he is congenial and careful. Keeps in shallow water, and does not speculate on theories. I will go to Amber to marry a couple, and to baptize one at Marion, then back to tent work again.

J. S. ROTH.

SKIDMORE, Mo., July 27.

Editors Herald:—On the 18th, J. Arthur Davis and myself visited this place to arrange for tent meeting, Davis remaining and preaching at the house of E. C. Wildermuth, and I returning to Maitland and seeing to getting the tent brought up, which was done, and on the 21st we set it up in the yard of Bro. Wildermuth, and have been holding forth each evening with the best of interest. Our audiences are not large, but the best of order prevails. Our tent is located about one mile out from town. We had to do this because the Free Methodists are holding a tent meeting at the same time in the west part of town. This, no doubt, is one reason why our audiences are only fair; but I believe we are "holding our own," and it gives the people a good chance to compare this work with the "isms" of the day.

Davis and I have made a new departure for us, to get the business men of town to hear. The mayor gave us permission to preach on the streets, so we opened at about five p. m. on the 25th, with a good hearing; and on last evening they lined the streets for almost a hundred yards, and with the best of order, and we placed before them some of the facts of the coming forth of "a marvelous work and a wonder." There seems to be a "buzz" and a "stir" among the people, and no doubt good is being done.

We expect to continue here up to August 1, and then to the Barnard reunion of August 4 to 13. Everything looks bright now for a grand, good time at the reunion. Everybody come that can. Yours in bonds,

D. C. WHITE.

PLAINVILLE, Ind., July 27.

Editors Herald:—Since General Conference I have been associated with Bro. George Jenkins. I find him agreeable and desirous of doing much good for the work. We began our work at Greensburg, Decatur county, on May 3. We looked for a place to hold some meetings, but did not succeed, owing to a prejudice existing there caused by the Utah elders who had been there a short time previous. We proposed to canvass the difference between the Brighamite and Reorganized Churches, but the people would not listen.

However, we commenced meeting in Bro. H. H. Montgomery's house, about one mile from center of the city. Held four services. Meager attendance, but some very good, influential men and women were quite a little interested. One placed some money in our hands. His father, a very kind old gentleman who has passed three score and ten, treated us in the same courteous manner. May God bless these dear brethren.

From there we went to Rushville, Rush county, did not succeed in holding any services, having no acquaintances. From there we went to Haner, and succeeded through the influence of Bro. J. D. Porter in giving a lecture on Sunday school work, in the Baptist church, Sunday morning. Bro. Jenkins preached in the M. E. church in the afternoon at three p. m., the writer occupying the Baptist church again at 7:30 p. m. Many invitations to return. We shall so do as soon as opportunity affords. To our knowledge the Utah elders have never visited that place as yet.

From there we returned to Greensburg, preaching three times. Thence to Osgood, Ripley county. Thence to White Hall, where we held meetings over the next Sunday, and the next Sunday found us at this place to preach funeral sermon of Bro. Stites' daughter Dora.

On Tuesday following, May 29, we went to Union to combat the efforts of the Utah elders, who commenced meetings there on that date. They labored hard to establish the Adam-God theory from Book of Covenants, admitted their belief in polygamy, but on account of the laws of the land were not practicing, believing it right to be law abiding citizens. They also admitted blood atonement to some extent, all of which we think were timely answered. Anyone that desired could see a vast difference.

Sunday, June 9, found us again in Ripley county, remaining a few days; thence to Byrneville, Harrison county, to turn over books to the new and worthy Bishop's agent, Bro. Daniel Hurbaugh, who is certainly the right man in the right place. Sustain him, dear brethren and sisters, by your prayers, as well as by contributions. He certainly means to have all moneys paid to missionaries' families under his care duly earned. I received a letter from him recently in which he says: "No work, no pay; little work, little pay." To the mind of the writer this is certainly right. Wish such a plan to be universal. May God bless all in doing right and restrain us from error.

Preaching twice at Byrneville, returned to Greensburg, expecting to occupy the court-house yard; but, on account of the busy season, our friends thought it advisable to postpone for a time. Thence we returned home, spent ten days in assisting, not preaching, but in the harvest field.

We came to this place the 20th, in defense of the cause we love. One Rev. Covert began a series of lectures here the 21st, on the subject of spiritualism, an exposition. The first lecture he struck a slight blow at the Book of Mormon, but at close of service stated he was referring to Utah book.

We are looking forward to the coming conference with delight, expecting Brn. Lake and Smith to be with us, praying for the Master to be there also by his Spirit. Ever praying that we may all be ready when Jesus comes, I am, in bonds,

W. C. MARSHALL.

LADD, Ill., July 31.

Editors Herald:—We are still in the line and we are going to stay. Though we are few and not very strong, still we struggle in the strife. Several from our ranks have gone to other fields and we believe are yet alive, but we feel the loss, for we do not like to get left or be left (as you please), for we feel there is too few of us now. We have good meetings and our share of the Spirit. We have just started with our new officers, and hope we may have another good term with them. One of our brothers, T. F. Turner, has received a good testimony of our faith, being given up for death by our best medical men, but we held a men's meeting, administering and prayer, and he has been blessed so he is again making up his mind for work. Our election resulted as follows: President, Bro. Frank Izatt; presiding priest, Bro. T. F. Turner; clerk, Sr. Sadie Boswell; treasurer, Bro. T. F. Turner; corresponding secretary, Bro. Leon Snow; janitor, Bro. Tom Weise. Our attendance is good.

We hold our meetings out of town. Brn. Southwick and Midgorden will be with us August 11 and 12 for the good of the work here, and we wish that all of our absent members and our friends might also be here to enjoy a good time. Our ladies give a supper tomorrow, August 1, for the good of the church, and expect a good turnout. How we would like to see Sr. Jeanette and the others of our list here to enjoy the evening with us; but if we cannot enjoy such here on earth, let us strive to do so in another and better world. With love to and prayer for all, we are with you in the work,

L. S.

MOUNTAIN GROVE, Mo., July 26.

Editors Herald:—The writer is at present at the home of Bro. and Sr. Schofield. It seems like old times to get back here and visit the Saints again. The Campbellites are holding a tent meeting here, and are having large turnouts. Many are asking when our tent will be here. I suppose we could get a good hearing yet, but the tent has become so damaged now that it is almost past fixing.

The work is not dead; but for the last four years the country and the branches with two exceptions have gone down; but I think with a change of district officers and four missionaries we ought to be able to give all the scattered Saints a call, and I trust there will be a general awaking all along the line. Bro. Thomas, our new district president, comes to us highly recommended as a faithful laborer. I trust all branch officers will consult with him as to their needs; and also all scattered Saints, please write me if you can secure openings. We have some good men in this field who are anxious to preach. Help them all you can. You will find Brn. Roach and Grey excellent workers, and than Bro. Walters there is no better preacher. I am billed for Grove Springs, July 27. My home address is 1862 Springfield avenue, Springfield, Missouri. I am still Bishop's agent; send your mites along.

H. SPARLING.

STANBERRY, Mo., July 31.

Editors Herald:—Having obeyed the angel's message, I thought perhaps some of my old acquaintances would like to hear from me. I am thankful that this message makes an individual consider the greatness and power of God, and that thousands are rejoicing in the precious rays of light revealed to them on life's rugged pathway.

I am now back in the Advent settlement where I used to take part in church work and where I listened to them expose what they called "Mormonism," but I am so glad that the truth, which is mighty in pulling down strongholds, overpowered me so that I had to give up my own ways and submit to the "gospel of Christ." I used to think there was nothing better than Adventism, but now since obeying the gospel I believe that I have found something that is eternal—something that brings life and happiness to mankind. My experience in this work so far is grand, for there seems to be an enlarging of the mind, enabling one to comprehend the great things of God. Though I am isolated I am receiving light. To God be all the praise!

I had the privilege of being in Lamoni for two months, where there is an excellent body of Saints, and where one has an opportunity of receiving light and instruction, both in the Sunday school and prayer meetings. Since returning home I haven't heard a gospel sermon preached, so today I thought that I would go and hear the Christian (not Campbellite, for it makes them mad to call them that) minister preach, and I didn't hear one word of gospel, though they claim to "speak where the Bible speaks, and where the Bible is silent they are silent."

This work is beyond the comprehension of man. It is more than a great work, and the more our enemies oppose it the brighter it will shine. I never have had yet what we westerners call a "set to" with any of these "devout worshipers," but I trust to be able to give a reason for the hope that I have.

I am glad that the "unlearned man" was instrumental in the hands of God in bringing forth the "sealed book" containing the "everlasting gospel"—the truth that should spring out of the ground. I am glad that Jerusalem is being inhabited without walls, and that the Jews are gathering home; that Lebanon has become a fruitful field—the result of the early and latter rains; and that Jacob's face no longer needs to wax pale,—showing clearly and intelligently that God remembers his ancient covenant people—Israel. Surely, "it is good to be a Saint in latter days." Hoping and praying for the rapid spread of the gospel and that we may all attain unto that perfection as revealed in the law, I am,

Your brother in the true gospel,

JAMES SCHOFIELD.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, July 26.

Editors Herald:—We are in hopes that the Lord may so work with us that there may be an organization effected here before we leave that will bring the Saints together as a band, and that they may receive that spiritual food that is so needed everywhere. How are the different branches and the scattered members to receive this spiritual food; and what are we gaining to convert and baptize individuals into the church when we leave them starve? I known some one will say the law of God provides for caring for the flock, and it is the duty of the local officers of the church to keep them alive. I well know that is true; but how many of the local officers are doing this as the law provides? How often do we hear it said, I have not the time or I am not prepared. For example, I know of organized branches that have preaching services only when some visiting brother happens along and preaches for them. I know not a few cases of trouble that have existed for years which the local officers have failed to settle according to the law of God. I know when the missionaries have labored hard and long to plant the gospel and some have been baptized, and yet there is no one to look after them, and they are actually starving to death, spiritually, I mean. Please some one give us the remedy.

Again, how often do we hear it said, "Well, I wish Bro. so and so would come and preach for us, he is such a good man, and he is such a good preacher." These same parties are members of an organized branch, and have a band of officers who under their circumstances are doing the best they can, and are having regular meetings; yet it is a rare thing if at any time there is over half of the available members out to meeting, unless that good man or that great preacher comes along. When he comes he never says a word about the duties of our officers, nor does he tell the members anything about their duties towards their officers. Again, please give us the remedy.

Now do not think that I am faultfinding just to find fault, nor think that I cannot look on the bright side. I know there are many good and faithful local officers, and a great many good and faithful members; but we all need to be taught so we will know what and how to do.

To the Saints of the Little Sioux district I will say, that so far as I have received your calls for preaching I have tried to consider all of them, and will respond as fast as we can. Remember, at present there are but two of us, and as long as the tent runs that will keep the two busy, and I do not think the tent can reach more than one place after this, and it has been promised to the people of Pisgah after the meetings close here. We are expecting Brn. J. W. Wight and C. Derry to do tent work at Pisgah. Sr. Baker is with me. We are tenting. She is cooking for ye missionary and presiding at the organ, being assisted by Bro. Mintun's daughter, Ruth. All going well.

WAUKOMIS, Okla., August 1.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Aylor and the writer made a trip to Dewey county to assist building up the work in western Oklahoma. After staying over night with Bro. and Sr. Butler, near Kingfisher, June 30, we left that staunch man of God, seemingly in good health, expecting to return in a month and meet him again. But life is uncertain. Only six days later our beloved brother was called from this life of cares, to one more blissful to him. We went thirty miles west on the hack to Watonga. Here we stayed with Sr. Cochran and her large-hearted son Claud Russel, who provided a way for us to get twelve miles farther on our way, where we met Bro. Maloney at Bro. Cochran's, and then began our first experience riding on a freight wagon across these western prairies and over the sand hills. Our team was quite unlike those little mules that Bro. Kelley so vividly describes, and especially that one that would roll his eyes and "swell his muscles," etc.; for, notwithstanding the little Irishman used all the persuasive powers at his command, Jack stood at the foot of a hill, ears drooping, and seemingly unconscious of the fact that Sr. Maloney was patiently waiting, and been for about three years, for that load of lumber to make a floor in their house. Finally we unloaded part of our load, and a neighbor came along and helped us up the hill; but we had to leave part of that lumber, and about sundown of the second day we arrived at the settlement of the Saints in Dewey county.

On July 5 we began a series of meetings in an arbor, which we erected same day. We continued meetings every night through the week and held three services on Sunday, for three weeks. Saints were very much interested, and all coöperated with us to make the meetings a success. Eleven were baptized, one baby blessed, and several sick administered to. Bro. Aylor and the writer did most of the preaching and were ably assisted by Brn. Maloney, Crawley, Rhodes, Durfey, Vrooman, Pickering (branch president), and several other local brethren.

Our reunion begins at Hennessey, Oklahoma, on the R. I. railroad, August 3, and lasts ten days.

Your brother in the conflict, cheerful and hopeful, HUBERT CASE.

P. S.—If any of the Herald readers know where John H. Smith and Sarah Smith live, I wish they would let me know. The last I heard of them they were in Minnesota. I have their baptismal certificates, and would like to send them to them. My mission address is Okarche, O. T.

CORREL, Minn., July 30.

Editors Herald:—We in this vicinity are hungering and thirsting after righteousness and want to be filled, and there is no one to prepare the food for the repast. It appears as if some of the elders might make it a point to come here after the reunion in the Des Moines district, on the 31st of August, at Colfax, Iowa. It will not be far from there here. Many undoubtedly will attend conferences and reunions at farther distances where they have the gospel preached continually, and none here but myself know what it is to hear it.

Congregational church is open and ready for all denominations to preach the gospel. A Dowieite came in, but after the first night, when the house was crowded, he had no hearers. Where sound doctrine is preached good attention and interest will be manifested. I have done what I can to set them to thinking, but I am a poor stick to set a fire to blazing. I have only given texts of scripture to study out and present a few ideas which have been seemingly well received.

Bro. I. N. Roberts is in this mission but I do not know his address. I will help to pay expenses as far as I can.

Hoping to hear from some one, I am,

Yours in the love of Christ,

JAMES M. BLOOD.

OGDEN, Utah, July 30.

Editors Herald:—I left home for my field of labor on the 10th, intending to stop at Sacramento until the 16th, but the intense heat there caused me to push on. I got there on Wednesday and attended the weekly prayer meeting that evening, and by request took charge. Those present were mostly young married people, brothers and sisters, who all took part by prayer and testimony, speaking of the goodness of God to them in confirming their faith by strong evidences in proof of the work. They also stated their willingness to make any sacrifice necessary to assist in pushing the work to completion. I was forcibly impressed with the determinations of those young sisters who attested their willingness to sacrifice their worldly ambitions for pleasant homes and the companionship of husbands, and assume all of the responsibilities and cares of the family; accept of the ratio of help from the church which can be afforded, and be satisfied; while their husbands go and preach the gospel to a perishing world. I felt to say in my heart, Thank God for such noble aspirations in the young men and women of the church, for of this class,—young or old,—are they who will move the cause of Zion, and bring the reign of "peace on earth, good will to men."

On the 13th, at 12:25 p. m., the train left the depot for Ogden, and at 5:30 p. m. next day I found myself on ground trodden over many times when a boy. A peculiarly strange feeling took possession of me because of the remarkable change that had spread over the whole face of this country, where, forty-six years ago a few log and adobe houses composed the only habitations of the early settlers. Now, a modern city of fifteen to twenty thousand inhabitants, full of life, and busy with the affairs thereof, has grown up. A great railroad center, constantly extending its lines, and adding millions of dollars to the wealth of this intermountain city and country, now occupies an important and central plat of ground, near the center. Large business blocks, with modern schoolhouses, academies, high school, Catholic and other sectarian church buildings, also the Mormon tabernacle and several ward meetinghouses, help to adorn this city of broad streets and avenues and sidewalks, beautifully shaded by box elder, poplar, and other native trees.

Washington avenue, one hundred thirty-two feet wide, is the chief thoroughfare, connecting with all other streets and avenues of the city; also leads to all of the outside settlements, north and south. On this avenue, at No. 1509, is the commodious home of Bro. and Sr. Wells Chase and their family, consisting of himself and wife, their oldest daughter, Sr. N. D. Cooper and her son, also their youngest child, Geneveve, an excellent young sister in the church, and three grandchildren, Pauline, Edna, and Wells, the children of a deceased daughter of Bro. and Sr. Chase. Five other daughters, all members of the Reorganized Church, are married and have families and homes of their own, and five sons the same; but none of the latter have yet identified themselves with the church.

How peculiar it is that the gentler sex, as a rule, have more reverence for spiritual things than the male portion of humanity. Mary and her sister Martha were among the most devout and close friends of the Master. The large parlor of Bro. and Sr. Chase, at present, as in the past, has been the principal place for holding meetings and Sabbath school of our people; but a building has been purchased, torn down, and the lumber is now on the lot (donated by Bro. Chase), and a suitable building for a place of meeting will be erected before the winter sets in, when it is hoped and believed that a larger representation of outsiders and the membership will come to listen and take more active part in the church work and the investigation of gospel truths. At present, Sabbath school and branch meetings are held on alternate Sundays. Sr. N. D. Cooper is superintendent of the former, and also Bishop's agent for this mission, and a thoroughly active and interested worker in the church, while Elder James Toombs, is the president of the Ogden branch. Bro. and Sr. Chase have been the "power behind the throne" in keeping the work alive in this place. Their home has also been a home for the various missionaries sent here to labor. One room of their house is especially set apart for this purpose, and the writer is now in full possession of that room, with the privilege of going and returning (while in this city) as he pleases.

Since my arrival I have visited among members, relatives, and friends, and occupied as speaker the two last Sundays, and assisted in Sunday school. Am well suited with field of labor and hopeful for the accomplishment of good and final triumph of the truth. In bonds,

R. R. DANA.

DEER LODGE, Mont., July 31.

Editors Herald:—Since arriving in this field in April, have occupied as opportunity afforded, and with much pleasure, specially at my birthplace, among my own kin and early schoolmates in Gallatin valley. Most of them remembered me only as a boy, and I could discern a sympathetic interest, sprinkled with curiosity, in the excellent attention granted me, the times I spoke in their midst.

We had an excellent conference at Anaconda, in June. Met and dined with a niece of Apostle G. T. Griffiths, and in her album saw his photo when a young man, which I looked at with interest. The next conference will be in Bozeman, the 8th of September, when we hope to see a branch organized there, and a good attendance from all parts of the district.

We feel cheered at the prospect of having help sent up from the force working in Idaho or Utah. Montana has plenty of field not yet touched by our workers.

My visit in the home circle was very pleasant and enjoyable after so long time away. They thought I was much older and "worn looking," and I could return the compliment regarding some of them.

Myself, wife, and baby are now located in Deer Lodge for the winter, where there is a branch of forty-five, mostly living in the country parts. They have a nice little chapel, as approved in design as any I have seen. It needs paint, it is warping for want of oil. It has stood some four years with not even a prime coat. Everybody is busy, and weather unusually hot. Can preach only on Sundays during this harvest time. I will pull off my coat and go to painting tomorrow. Painters usually ask three dollars per day, and a small branch cannot afford it. We hope to see the building free from debt and dedicated at no distant day. Through the kindness of a sister, the paint is placed at our disposal. "A friend in need is a friend indeed."

Not far from here there are two large cities, the chief industry of which is mining and smelters: Butte, with fifty thousand people, and Anaconda with fourteen thousand, some twenty-five miles apart. The largest smelters in the world are here. They are notoriously wicked — especially Butte. They need the gospel very much, but their wants are not in harmony with their needs. The very atmosphere is vile, and vegetation dies for ten to fifteen miles around. We are glad Deer Lodge is some twenty-seven miles away; yet the poisonous smoke skirts our hills. On approaching these cities on the train one thinks of the traditional teaching and pictures of hell. The moral and spiritual atmosphere reminds one of Sodom and Gomorrah.

We have a small branch near Anaconda and the Utah people claim a large branch of sixty or seventy, with a bishop—organized as a "stake," I understand.

Deer Lodge is a place of twelve hundred population, and several colleges (sectarian), also waterworks and electric lights.

I am pleased to see one of our leading American elders lately speaking a word for a paper in Australia, which is better than if I spoke it; for that would be quite an expected thing. I like to see an apostle's interest world-wide,—not localized. They do need a mission paper in that far-off country. The Saints' Herald does not meet the demand, by reason of distance and local requirements. Hope all will help who can. "Go ye into all the world." GOMER WELLS.

HAMILTON, Scotland, July 23.

Editors Herald:—I reached my field of labor on Saturday morning, July 21, at eight a. m., and the brethren here, namely, Brn. Cairns and Miller, found me a room, which I shall make my home until such time as better arrangements can be made. Since receiving my official notification I have continued laboring in the Manchester district, preaching eighteen times in Burley, Hunslet, Bradford, Whortley. Had charge of one meeting. Administered once to the sick.

I gave notice to leave my employment on Monday, May 14, having received appointment on the 8th. Left my employment July 14, and arrived here as stated.

Sunday, July 22, I met with Bro. and Sr. Cairns, and Bro. Miller, in the former's house, where we had a meeting, the Saints testifying to the love of the church and pleasure that the church had appointed some one to labor here, and expressed their willingness to help all they could. In the afternoon we held an open air service in the center of the town, and also another in the evening, at the same place, at which we had a good hearing, and distributed a number of pamphlets. I have written today to a Mr. Black, of Edinburgh, who has expressed his belief in the work, and has purchased a good number of the works of the church, and desired to be baptized. I have informed him of my arrival and readiness to supply him with any information within my power. I purpose commencing today a house to house visitation, leaving literature for the people to peruse and shall continue as opportunities present themselves to occupy in the open air until we can meet with a suitable room.

The Utah Mormons are strong here. Indeed, they seem to be gaining prestige very rapidly in Britain. Quite a number of elders from Utah are proselyting both in England and Scotland, but take great care to avoid us as much as possible. In Bradford a fortnight ago I met a young man who had only been here six weeks from Utah. He did not appear very intelligent, being ignorant of the Book of Mormon denunciation of polygamy. He stated that the president of the European mission, Platte D. Lyman, testifies that his mother was a wife of Joseph Smith, but did not stay to confirm his allegation. Asking for your prayers in behalf of the work here, with best wishes, J. W. RUSHTON.

PREPARED READING FOR SEPTEMBER MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCALS.

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand, an awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime.

. . . . . .

"Will you play then, will you dally
With your music and your wine?
Up, it is Jehovah's rally!
God's own arm has need of thine."

. . . . . .

If there ever was a time since the coming forth of this latter-day work when the above stanzas would seem to be applicable, is not that time the present?* But one thought stands connected with this selection to which we wish to call your special attention, namely: "GOD'S OWN ARM HAS NEED OF THINE."

Have you thought of it, mothers? Have you fathers considered it? You are longing and praying for the redemption of Zion! Do you realize that it largely depends upon you to bring to pass this redemption? Why? Because God must and will have a people prepared to meet his Son before he permits him to return again to this earth. This declaration, that a people must be prepared to meet Christ before he can come to earth again, was made through the Prophet Joseph Smith in an early day of the church, and this preparation must begin in the home.

In every properly organized home, father and mother will be found working in harmony for the accomplishment of the desired end: the raising up of a pure family; sons and daughters who shall go forth from its shelter to contribute their full share towards the purification of the world. As the years roll by, the Father is permitting his spirit-children to enter into tabernacles of flesh. Pure, spotless, innocent babes they are, given into your care. You are the heaven-appointed guardians of your children. In many ways you are seeking light and knowledge to guide you—seeking it because you feel your need of it. Are you seeking it as parents, or do you not feel your need of it here?

*We suggest that some member of each local be appointed by the president of the same, to prepare a paper, giving a brief summary of the leading events now making history among the nations of the earth. The appointment can be made by note from the president to the sister selected.—Ed.

Looking forth upon the world today, we see so much of honor, nobleness, and truth; so much of genuine philanthropy, of loving self-sacrifice, that we cannot help questioning: is it really to be at Christ's coming as it was in the days of Sodom? And while the answer comes back to us, the Savior has spoken it, there are times when we cannot realize the fact. But these times are when we look only upon one side of life. They are when we see it at its best. It is a day of large enterprises, a day when many things are done upon a colossal scale; but in order to arrive at correct and just conclusions, it is necessary for us to remember that this scale applies not only to that which is good, but to that which is evil as well. The one seeks the light, the other avoids the light and works in darkness; hence we are more liable to be deceived in regard to the extent of its power, and this should lead us to greater watchfulness.

All which is best in life is bought with a price. You wish to aid in the establishment of Zion? Are you willing to pay the price? By this I mean, are you willing to cultivate within yourself everything which is pure, noble, and morally right, in order that you may transmit the same to your children? Willing to wage an earnest and unrelenting warfare against all which is evil, in order that they may not enter the race of life handicapped by the mistakes and sins of their parents?

In an address before the National Congress of Mothers, Prof. Elmer Gates, of Maryland, makes the following earnest appeal:—

"And now I would like to utter an appeal through you to all mothers: The incoming generation looks to you to be well born. It is seen to be a fearful responsibility to bring into the world a human being, when we realize that we have it in our power to direct for weal or for woe the intellective and emotive character and moral disposition of the child yet unborn and uncreated. Therefore it falls to the duty of parents to make adequate preparation for the creation of a child; the whole question of hereditary transmission and mind-building, and allied subjects, should be studied systematically and exhaustively in biological and psychological laboratories, the data carefully verified and the knowledge diffused in such shape that parents can apply it. . . . Let this be done, then will the next generation have less sorrow, war, crime, and disease, and the number of defectives will be less.

"I wish to reiterate that every conscious experience creates in some part of the brain a definite structure, that every evil emotion creates in you poisons, and that good emotions create nutritive products, and you can regulate these conditions at will. Those emotive and intellectual activities of your mind, which you have not systematically exercised so as to create structures in your brain before the creation of a child, will not be transmitted to that child; and what is transmitted will be arrested or augmented according to the kinds of products thrown into the blood by the mother's emotions. A mother knowing this dare not harbor in her heart any of the evil emotions, and knowing that happiness, serenity, and love, and all pleasurable emotions create nutritive products, do you think she will neglect to bring into her mind daily and systematically all of these conditions? She will go by herself an hour or more each day, in quiet and silence, and away from all distracting influence, and call up each one of these desirable emotional conditions to the fullest possible intensity and joyousness and worshipful adoration; and oh, mother, if it be your privilege to cultivate your good emotions one year before the creation of the child, excluding all wrong and selfish emotions; and if it be your further privilege to have created in your brain all kinds of intellectual structures from a study of the sciences, you will then have a fair chance to create a better child.

"Our country demands and your mother-love craves such a child, and I believe that in bringing about such a state of things we must look most to the influence of the mothers.

"A wife's love is something for which a man will strive; therefore, let the wife give her creative love only when a man is worthy of it, only when he has for some months at least, been leading a noble, courageous, unselfish life. O, do not create a child during the months of dark despondency and wrong-doing, if such come into your life, but wait until life is cheerful and morally clear! A wife can control this fountain of life; she can grant her privileges only for worthy motives and any man worthy of them will lead such a life as to deserve them.

"Produce great persons—great persons and all other things follow. To create great persons is the divine task of parentage—to give to the world greater and better men and women. America asks for such men and women, and in the words of the poet she says:—

> " 'Bring me men to match my mountains,
> Bring me men to match my plains,
> Men with empires in their purpose,
> Men with eras in their brains.
> " 'Bring me men to match my prairies,
> Men to match my inland seas,
> Men whose thoughts shall pave a highway
> Up to ampler destinies.'

"Oh, the great and glorious task of parentage! It seems to me that the most responsible position in which a man and woman can be placed is that of begetting and rearing a child. It requires the most preparation, the highest knowledge, the greatest self-control, the supremest patience, self-sacrifice, and love. It seems to me that the religion of the future will center closely around the conjugal life and the cradle, and that art and philosophy will be content to bring their fairest gifts to the hymeneal altar. The mother must not be enthroned merely in our love, but she must sit enthroned over the weal of the incoming generation; she has the making and training of the fathers and mothers of the future.

"I believe no possible training after the child is born can equal in importance what can be done before birth.

"Oh, mothers of America, my appeal is that you study the laws of life and mind, the laws of transmission of character, and learn enough about your own minds to enable you to eliminate all undesirable emotions and bring into activity the desirable ones! I believe that only by experimental study can we arrive at the knowledge of parentage we desire. . . .

"Let me repeat, that mind activities build brain structures, and according to the systematic character and emotive qualities of those activities will be the character of the structures which you will transmit to your child; and after the creation of the child the growth until birth will be promoted or hindered according as the mother throws into her blood the nutritive products of the good emotions, and keeps out of her blood the poisonous products of the evil emotions. According to your skill in doing this will you convey to your child the best and the noblest of all legacies—a capable and moral mind."

If America—Joseph's land—demands men and women to watch her spreading lakes, far stretching prairies and lofty mountains; men and women filled with lofty purpose, and brains enabling them to put those purposes into execution, answer me, What does the living God demand of his people? If such are the demands of this land choice above all other lands, what are the demands of the fullness of the gospel restored by the angel and sealed by the blood of many martyrs?

You mothers of Zion who are standing regarding this work, regarding the few, comparatively speaking, who are struggling along, laboring with all the energies of soul and body God is giving them to move it forward, can you feel, do you indeed feel that you are excusable in the sight of God for this position of apparent indifference? Let us again say to you that we need you—yes let us repeat it—we need you—and what is infinitely more to the purpose, God needs you, and the church needs you. You know the importance of this work, you do not oppose it; but that is not enough. We need the encouragement of your presence at our monthly meetings, and to receive there the benefit of your experiences and the inspiration which comes from the consciousness of your sympathy and support. We need—and you need—all the light which can be thrown upon these matters, whether it be furnished by science or drawn from your own experience.

And you fathers who will read this, yes you young men, (especially those of you called to the ministry,) who are not yet fathers, but hope to rear sons and daughters who will be pillars in the Church of God, do you not need to study these things and conform your lives strictly thereto? Do you need that I, with my gray hairs and the weight of years upon me, should bear witness to you that I know from my own experience there is truth—solemn and awful truth—in what the writer whom I have quoted has said; and that I know he does well when he includes the father, for while none of his lifeblood goes to feed the unborn babe, yet the concentrated essence imparted in the life germ will and has often out-weighed many of the noble emotions of the mother as well as much of environment after birth.

Fathers, the church needs your influence, and today she is calling loudly for the influence of her ministry, that her sons and daughters may be educated in regard to those things which pertain to the redemption of Zion and the ultimate salvation of the human race.

"To cure, is the voice of the past;
To prevent, the divine whisper of today."

Do you feel your weakness, struggling and overburdened mothers? As one whose feet have passed over the way (and many times stumbled therein), let me warn you against placing anything above the care of your children and for their sakes—if for no other—the care you owe yourself. Live plainer, dress plainer if need be, that you may feed your mind and clothe your soul, thus fitting yourself to be companions for your children, directing their minds, weaving about them as it were a subtle web of thoughts, stories, and songs, which shall enclose them in the world in which you live, and by its chords woven and interwoven, shield them from the evil influences of the world without.

You have no hours for retirement and leisure! I have been there. Been where the cares of life pressed heavily; and toil, incessant toil from early morn till late hours of the night was my portion. I did not see it then, but looking back, I do see clearly today that much of this toil might have been, should have been lessened. In the midst of it I found time to commit to memory many a little poem, many a story, which while my hands were busy with other things, I told my little ones, or recited to them as I put them to sleep at night. But ah, the heartache comes that I did not do more, far more of this! Do you not see, weary, busy mother, the double, yes treble purpose this is serving?

For instance: you are busy at your ironing; select and lay upon the far corner of your table a poem—one which your children can understand and enjoy—and while your hands move the iron rapidly, commit this poem to memory. Your labor has by this simple act been removed from the realm of drudgery; the time has seemingly been shortened, and if perchance you bear beneath your heart another throbbing life, that precious life is being fed and nourished by the very food you are preparing for those who are older. You need strength and help! Oh, thank God for the mercy seat, but especially thank him that prayer may go up from the heart when there is not time to bend the knee and fold the hands in supplication; and that you may make every trial, every hardship (with perhaps one exception) by the heroic cheerfulness with which we meet them, stepping stones for yourself and the children God has given you, to a higher, nobler life.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Minda Carsner, of Wagner, Oregon, desires your faith and prayers in behalf of her little grandson, Eddy Gee, who is suffering from spinal trouble. She is isolated from the Saints and needs your sympathy.

Elder P. Cadwell writes: "Will you kindly request the Prayer Union to remember Sister Eleanor S. Cadwell in their devotions that she may be restored to sight as one eye is blind and the other nearly so."

A lady of the Methodist faith (Mrs. Taylor) requests your prayers in behalf of an afflicted cousin. She claims her children were healed through your prayers a few years back. God's Spirit be with you. Your sister in the one faith, SOPHIE FERGUSON.

I would like the prayers of the Saints that I may be healed of cancer.

DILIGENCE.

Read before the Des Moines District Sunday School Convention, June 8, 1900, by Mattie Hughes.

Every person who truly loves God has a desire to see his work progress, and every institution and organization which has for its object the elevation of man and the bettering of the human family prosper. And all true Christians have a desire (or should have) to bear some part in such work. But the question arises, how can I do this? What is required of me in the great work of evangelizing the world?

Let us not look too high nor too far away for a field in which to labor. Perhaps our work lies very near us, and is of such a nature that many would consider very insignificant. It might be well to first make a self-examination and ascertain if the place to begin is not in our own hearts and lives. Paul's admonition to Timothy was to study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Then if it was necessary for Timothy to study to prepare himself for the work before him, that he might stand approved before God, can we do the work required of us in an acceptable manner without study? How often do we hear the complaint from Sunday school superintendents, teachers, and scholars, "I have no time to study."

Who gave you physical strength and mental powers to labor from ten to fourteen hours per day for the things which perish? Can we not devote one little hour each day in preparing ourselves for that work which will bring not only to ourselves, but to many others, perhaps, those riches which time cannot destroy. In six hours of diligent study much may be accomplished. But let us not wait till all other duties of the day are done, and then when wearied in mind and body think to accomplish any very good results in the way of study. Let us give our very best thought to the Lord's work, and be assured that time thus spent will not be lost. It is written: "Cast thy bread upon the waters and thou shalt find it after many days." And the poet beautifully expresses it thus:—

Cast thy bread upon the water,
Waft it on with praying breath,

(O, how much may be accomplished by earnest prayer.)

You may think it lost forever,
But as sure as God is true,
In this world or in the other,
It will yet return to you.

One great hindrance to progress of the Sunday school work is incompetent teachers. As it requires close application to study to fit one for the position of teacher in our public schools and colleges, so also does it require study and prayerful study, to fit one to teach correctly the things of God. You must be a studious scholar before you can be a competent teacher.

BE PUNCTUAL.

Another hindrance to the Sunday school work is a lack of punctuality on the part of both officers and scholars. Why not be on time? Why not go about the Lord's work as diligently as we do about our own? If there was to be a prize given every Sunday to every member of the school who was present five minutes before the opening of the school, how many think you would be absent.

I once heard an elder say, "If you make an appointment to meet at a certain hour, and invite the Holy Spirit's presence, be assured he will be there at the appointed time; but if you are not there, he will very likely take his departure."

There is truth in this!

I believe we often grieve the Holy Spirit by our slothfulness.

The superintendent should set the example of punctuality, and open the school on time, if there be but one present besides himself, and also close on time. Should the superintendent chance to be late, let the assistant superintendent begin the work; and should both superintendent and assistant be late, let some one of the teachers open the school and proceed with the exercises. Do not think because your school is a small one that punctuality and order are of minor importance. If you come together late, and hurry through the first exercises, omit singing save it be a verse or two perhaps, omit responsive reading, hurry through the lesson and close without a review, who is benefited? How much of spiritual strength have you obtained? How much knowledge?

I hope there is no school represented here like the one described above; but if there should be, let us when we return from this convention begin anew, and try to make our school, however small, a model school. Do not spend time in discussing unimportant topics, and on the other hand do not overlook any important truth without trying to impress it upon the minds of your class.

Be patient, persevering, and prayerful. It is said that patience and perseverance conquer all things. Then if things do not move as we should like to see them, let us not become impatient or discouraged, but move quietly along in the line of our duty, faithfully performing our part, that we may stand approved before God. And remember that by prayer and persistent effort difficulties may be removed, obstacles surmounted, and weaknesses and imperfections overcome. Therefore, let us ask God's blessing upon our efforts, and then not forget to make the effort. We may by proper effort do a great deal toward answering our own prayers.

The Sunday school work is moving and we must be wide-awake and very studious, if we keep pace with it. Let us be colaborers in deed and in truth, helping one another in the work. None of us can stand alone; we all need all the help we can get from every possible source. It is written: "Iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend."—Prov. 27: 17.

Then let us unite our forces, for in union there is strength, and in counsel there is safety. Let us not be content to remain away in the rear of this work, or deprive ourselves of the benefits of this unity and counsel by remaining outside of the General Sunday School Association. But let us hasten to place ourselves where we can aid by our counsel and influence in discovering the best ways and means of promoting this part of church work.

Some of the best talent in the church is engaged in the Sunday school work; but do not think because you are not talented there is nothing you can do. God will require an improvement of the one talent just the same as he does of the five or ten.

"If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say he died for all.
If you cannot rouse the wicked,
With the judgment's dread alarms,
You can lead the little children
To the Savior's waiting arms."

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

NEBRASKA THE LAND OF PLENTY.

I wonder why it is that so many men spend their days working hard on rented farms, barely making enough to get along, with no great prospect ahead of owning their own homes, when within a few hours' journey is a land of plenty—Nebraska—where all kinds of grain and fruit can be raised with the least amount of labor; where cattle and hogs fed on corn bring a handsome profit; where the climate is healthful and churches and schools abound; where land is cheap and can be bought on very easy terms.

Think of this, and if you want information about the country send to me for "The Corn Belt," a beautifully illustrated monthly paper that tells all about Nebraska, and also for "The West Nebraska Grazing Country," an interesting illustrated booklet containing a large sectional map of Nebraska.

On the first and third Tuesdays of each month during the balance of this year cheap excursion tickets will be sold over our road to Nebraska, so that people may go and see for themselves. Ask your ticket agent about this.

AMERICAN CRITICISM AND THE DOCTRINE OF EVOLUTION.

Evolution the watchword of so much of our nineteenth-century philosophy, has not left untouched the sphere of letters. Having given us a new biology, a new geology, a new sociology, and a new psychology, it is quite natural that evolution should pave the way to a new criticism of literature. Mr. William Morton Payne, writing in The International Monthly (July), propounds the question: "Has it [evolution] shifted the emphasis from the deductive to the inductive aspect of literary study, thus making criticism essentially the natural history of literary productions, rather than the application of rigid standards to every work upon which judgment is to be passed?"

The question, thinks Mr Payne, could be more readily answered in Europe than in America. While with us the critical energy is strong, it is not yet a creative energy, nor is it concentrated into determined channels. The work of Professor Child in the study of English balladry, of Dr. Furness in the "Variorum" Shakespeare are instances of critical editions rather than independent critical movements; and the reason of this is, says Mr. Payne, that "there are few Americans who have pursued literary criticism with sufficient singleness of aim to achieve results of definite and commanding significance." It is the difference between the general practitioner and the specialized authority; it is the difference between a defective and an evenly balanced equipment. The writer continues:—

"Criticism, in the highest sense of the term, is a serious matter. It must rest upon the broad foundations of a generous culture, and must also exhibit that intuitive insight into the real relation of things which is the attribute of genius. In the first place, it must know the method of science and seize the full import of its message. Goethe was a better critic of art and literature because of his researches in optics and morphology, and Lowell, frankly confessing that he 'hated science,' confessed also, however unconsciously, to a weak point in his armor. Few of our critics have had the scientific discipline, and the lack of its salutary restraints is marked in the loose logical texture of their thought."

Impressionism is not criticism, and it is important, continues the writer, to realize that ethics and esthetics rest upon a bedrock of science, and herein many of our critics have failed. But, on the other hand, their intellectual equipment has been of the best; Emerson, Lowell, Lanier, Stedman, Professor Norton, Professor Matthews, and others are and have been experts in special fields, and thus "our criticism assuredly does not suffer from the provincial outlook, and the tendency of our education to separate, and even to bring into antagonism, the scientific discipline and the humanistic culture, may at least be counted upon to keep our horizon free, although perhaps at some cost to the stanchness of our scientific and philosophical moorings."

From a critical standpoint, America is too young to have had many characteristic phases. Only when considered in relation to England is a larger field and more significant one opened to investigation. Mr. Payne writes:—

"American literature before 'Thanatopsis' is so obviously a belated imitation of English models—and for the most part of arid and worthless models—that its examination reveals nothing more than persistency of type in a changed environment. 'Ought one to wonder,' asks Professor Tyler, 'if in the American literature of the seventeenth century he shall find the distinctive traits, good and bad, which during the same period characterized English literature? How could it be otherwise? Is it likely that an Englishman undergoes a literary revolution by sitting down to write in America instead of in England; or that he will write either much better or much worse only for having sailed across a thousand leagues of brine?' What is here said of our first century of detached life applies with equal force to our second, and it is not surprising that Professor Tyler's exhaustive history of our colonial literary period should be made up of a succession of studies of individual writers, chronologically arranged in the groups suggested by an elementary classification of their subject matter."

In our own age, continues the writer, there has been a revolution of the human spirit, produced by the evolutionary theory; it has transformed, it has circumscribed, it has settled disputed philosophic questions, it has been an onslaught upon the strongholds of irrationality. In the same spirit in which an Englishman exclaimed, "We are all socialists now," we may exclaim, "We are all evolutionists." Hence, says Mr. Payne, we may take a priori ground in declaring that American literary criticism must have been influenced by the doctrine of evolution. But, to apply an evolutionary treatment to literature, we must look into it a little more closely. Literary criticism has been divided into the general heads of subjective, depending more or less upon the individual, and objective, depending upon fixed principles; and we shall see that "fixed principles are more lasting than individual impressions, and the more completely the personal element is eliminated from criticism, the more enduring its influence will be." But, adds Mr. Payne, "what we find in practice . . . is that critics of one class hold the objective aim chiefly in view, while those of the other class, with frankly subjective intention, take the reader into their confidence and endeavor to persuade him into their own likings and dislikings by the claim of their manner rather than by the cogency of their reasoning." The late J. A. Symonds divided critical methods into types of the judge, the showman, and the natural historian, corresponding to the classic, romantic, and scientific. The critic as judge umpires; the critic as showman elucidates; but, wrote Mr. Simonds, the critic as natural historian is one who "must become the natural historian of art and literature, must study each object in relation to its antecedents and its consequents, must make himself acquainted with the conditions under which the artist grew, the habits of his race, the opinions of his age, his physical and psychological peculiarities. Only after having conscientiously pursued this method may he proceed to deliver judgments; and these will invariably be qualified by his sense of relativity in art and literature."

Herein lies the evolutionary principle, a method anticipated in part by Taine, who foresaw "the evolutionary philosophy as applied to literature before that philosophy had been developed by its acknowledged sponsors." The "individuality of the writer," Mr. Payne claims, is the psychological analog of the biological terms of "spontaneous variation." He writes: –

"The evolutionary critic of literature, for his part, closely follows the line of reasoning thus given him [by the biologist] for a model. He accepts the many spontaneous variations that arise in literature, discerns the fitness of some particular variation to survive, and proceeds to show how, by virtue of that superior fitness, it displaces its competitors in the struggle for existence, until in the end, either by reason of a changed environment of the emergence of a variation still more fit to meet the existing conditions, it becomes transformed into a new species, or disappears altogether. . . . One further principle needs to be mentioned before closing this examination of the essential aims and methods of an evolutionary criticism. In dealing with the history of any literature, it must be recognized that some writers express far more fully than others the inmost ideals of their nation. 'Writers of the center,' Matthew Arnold styles these faithful exponents of the genius and aspirations of their race. Such writers in English literature are Chaucer, Shakespeare, Gray, and Tennyson. Such writers Swift, Byron, and Carlyle are not. In French literature, M. Brunetiere makes much of the similar distinction between Bossuet, Pascal, Racine, on the one hand, and Rousseau, Lamartine, and Hugo, on the other. It thus becomes an important function of the evolutionary critic to emphasize what is racially or nationally typical in writers of the former class, and to trace the alien influences that have shaped the thought of writers of the latter class."—Literary Digest, July 28, 1900.

The September number of The Delineator touches upon the infinite pathos of the life of Charles Lamb. Clara E. Laughlin, of "The Interior," who is making fame for herself by this series, "The Stories of Authors' Love," brings the utmost delicacy to bear upon the subject of Charles Lamb and his Dream Children.

DR. G. L. COLE FINDS OLD RELICS.

Further traces of cliff dwellers, this time in the vicinity of Parajito cañon, New Mexico, have been found. The news comes in a letter received yesterday by the Rev. R D. Sheppard of Northwestern university from Dr. George L Cole, of Los Angeles, Cal., who was sent to that section by authorities of Northwestern.

While working in the cañon near the site of his first discovery Dr. Cole unearthed a temple of similar appearance to the one first found, but of a much more massive build.

Continuing his investigations Dr. Cole located several other buildings similar in size and appearance to the one which he found on July 20. Among the things which were found within the temples were ten polishing stones, fifteen stone axes, four stone hammers, seven mortars with pestles, stone knives of all sorts, stone drills, two mortars with pulleys, rasping stones, a perfect stone door, stone pipes, bone musical instruments, mostly flutes, and human bones.—Chicago Record, August 9.

COMMON DEFECTS OF VISION.

The three defects of eyesight which are most commonly encountered in otherwise healthy persons, and which can be more or less perfectly overcome by means of glasses are near-sightedness, far-sightedness, and astigmatism. These are all important, for, besides the discomfort and annoyance of imperfect sight, the involuntary effort which the sufferer makes to see better strains the eyes, and not only injures them, but also gives rise, through reflex action, to headaches and various nervous disturbances.

Near-sightedness, short-sightedness, or myopia, as it is variously called, is a condition of the eyeball – usually a lengthening—in consequence of which the rays of light are brought to a focus in front of the retina, and so the object is blurred.

This condition may exist from birth, but is usually the result of too much and too early use of the eyes, as in the case of students, engravers, women who do fine sewing, and so forth. Thus we may say that putting children to work at some of the kindergarten exercises, such as perforating and drawing, is in a double sense a short-sighted procedure.

Many near-sighted people refuse to wear glasses, preferring to deprive themselves of sight for everything beyond the nose rather than to injure their personal appearance, as they think. This is another short-sighted policy, for, besides losing much of the joy of existence which comes from seeing the beautiful things about and above us, such persons are very liable to suffer from inflammation of the eyes produced by constant strain.

A less common defect is long or far sightedness or hypermetropia. This is the opposite of myopia, the eyeball being flattened or shortened and the rays of light consequently not coming to a focus by the time they reach the retina.

In this case the eye often corrects the defect more or less successfully by making the crystalline lens more convex, but it does this at the expense of the sufferer's nervous force, and so we often find tired and congested eyes, headaches, indigestion, and even serious nervous affections. The effort to correct the vision is entirely involuntary and can be overcome only by the fitting of suitable convex glasses.

The third and most common defect is astigmatism. In this condition there is some irregularity of the surface of the eye or the lens, by means of which the image as it reaches the retina is distorted. Untreated astigmatism is a frequent cause of headache and other nervous disturbances. The only relief is the wearing of glasses, at least while reading, writing, or when near objects are looked at.—Youth's Companion.

APPRECIATION OF ART IN AMERICA.

The first of a series of Art Articles by E. Valise, a conscientious critic on original lines relating to pictures, reproductions of which connoiseurs will be glad to preserve, appears in the August issue of "The National Magazine." Many of the pictures which appear in this series have never before been reproduced in any magazine. Such as are more familiar are plates which cannot be too often repeated. Something interesting about every artist represented will be developed in every instance. Future subjects under contemplation for early insertion are: "Flight in Art," showing beautiful specimens of winged figures; "Music in Art," "Dancing in Art," "Laughter in Art," "Tears in Art," "Chess in Art," etc., etc., treated in a popular and not too technical way, proving that the editorial management is willing to undertake expensive forms of entertainment for readers of "The National Magazine.

MOOSWA OF THE BOUNDARIES.

The possibilities of the "animal story" are remarkably well shown by Mr. W. A. Fraser in his new tales, entitled Mooswa of the Boundaries. These are stories of Rod, the Boy, and the fur-bearing animals of the Northwest and the half-breed trappers who hunt them. Each of the tales teems with curious bits of wood-lore and little-known facts about the moose, beaver, bear, lynx, fox, and wolf.

Mr. Arthur Heming, who has illustrated the stories, is a sportsman and naturalist, as well as an artist.

The first of the Mooswa stories will appear in The Saturday Evening Post of September 1.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR
FRED'K MADISON SMITH ASSISTANT EDITOR.
JOSEPH LUFF, D. W. WIGHT } CORRESPONDING EDITORS.

LAMONI, IOWA, AUG. 15, 1900.

FROM THE EDITOR ABROAD.

The run from Detroit to Chicago over the Wabash road was made by the editor Tuesday, July 17, from 7:40 a. m. to 3:35 p. m., a hot, dusty ride for the most of the way, relieved by passing through a rain belt in the afternoon.

Brn. J. M. Terry and Frederick M. Pitt, son of Bro. F. G. Pitt, met the editor at the station and escorted him to the home of Bro. W. H. Deam, at 36 N. Paulina street, where he was to stay during his visit to the great city. The editor hunted up some cousins on the maternal side of his house during his stay, besides visiting some of the Saints, and attending the weekly prayer meeting, at their hall, 716 W. Van Buren street, where he was pleased to meet the earnest band so well known to the readers of the HERALD through the pen of Bro. John M. Terry, the hard laboring John M.

Whatever else the editor found in his visits to the places where the Saints are living and working, he noticed that the devotional exercises of the Chicago branch were quite markedly spiritual. There were a greater number of prayers offered during the session at which the editor met the Saints in the hall on Van Buren street, than at any other meeting of a similar character, at which he was present while on his trip east. They were fervent, spiritual prayers indicating strong desires for the better life, and a greater usefulness in the Lord's work. Brn. J. M. Terry and S. C. Good were in the stand and presided with due dignity and care.

At this meeting the editor met Bro. Simeon Townsend and a Sr. Steele, old time Saints.

Chicago is a very large city. To go from one home of a Saint to another often requires a walk or ride of several miles, and from one place of ministerial labor to the others is a long, long ride. However, on Sunday the 22d of July, under the kind care of Bro. F. M. Pitt, the editor visited the West Pullman branch, to which an appointment had been sent by Bro. Terry for the morning hour of 10:45.

The branch is in charge of Bro. Francis D. Earl an earnest and faithful worker, who presided at the services.

The editor here met a number of the former members of the Plano, Illinois, branch, with a number of the citizens of the little town where the years intervening between 1866 and 1881 were spent by the preacher in an endeavor to honor God and keep his garments unspotted from the vices of the world.

The editor confesses that for a little time he was overcome with the emotions which the sight of so many old time friends called up, and in spite of attempted strong control the tears did flow.

The reception was a flattering one. It was encouraging to longer continuance in the gospel economy and life, so far as strength and wisdom should be granted.

The reflection would come that members of the church and people outside of the church to whom the life and daily walk of the editor had been known for fifteen years in one town where he could always get an audience if it was known he was to occupy the pulpit, remembered him for his occupation's sake, and were pleased to once more greet him as a preacher, confidence unbroken, faith still unchanged. The editor praised God in his heart and gave thanks with his lips, and presented the words of life as best he could, and as he was led.

From West Pullman back to the city, where at evening time in the hall, Bro. Terry in charge, the editor again essayed to speak in defense of the Reorganized Church.

In this visit to the great city of the West the editor was much pleased to note the special activity of the younger element. Bro. F. M. Pitt is in his Sunday school work a specialist and a power, fertile in resources and of a pleasing address. Others, too, are coming to the front rapidly. We sincerely hoped while there that the Chicago branch had seen its darkest days.

We met Bro. George H. Graves, who said he was getting on nicely with his mission work.

Returning to Lamoni found that death had been busy with the aged ones, but a greeting home was cheerfully accorded to the wandering editor.

A visit to St. Joseph, Missouri, on business ordered by the April Conference occupied the time from the 27th to the 30th July, making for the editor ten successive Sundays away from home services, in ten different places, and speaking from once to twice each Sunday and of week nights occasionally between times.

ARE WE MORMONS?

The reading of the letter of Bro. Carl W. Lange, found elsewhere in this issue, suggests the inquiry, Are we Mormons?

The doctrines which the church teaches did not originate with Mormon, whoever he may have been, nor however good a man, he was not the one to whom we are directly in moral debt for the doctrines we teach.

The writings of the prophet Mormon cover about nineteen pages in the large type edition of the Book of Mormon, including the "Words of Mormon." His book is more a history of the troublous times immediately preceding his death than it is a digest of doctrines of faith.

Moroni, the last of the writers of the Book of Mormon, has eleven pages in the same book. The first six chapters are descriptive of church work, manner of baptism, formulas of words, etc. Chapter seven repeats the teaching of Moroni's father Mormon upon the subjects of faith, hope, and charity. Chapters eight and nine are epistles to Moroni written by Mormon upon the principle of baptism, the inutility of baptizing of children, the office work of the Spirit, and a lamentation for the evils that had fallen on the people and their depraved condition of heart. Chapter nine is a closing up of the whole book, and an exhortation to faith and constancy in Christ.

The First and Second Books of Nephi occupy ninety-eight pages of the large type edition, which, taken with the Book of Nephi, the son of Helaman, which has fifty-three pages, makes a whole of one hundred and fifty-three pages of history and doctrinal teaching.

Alma, justly considered by some as being the greatest teacher who wrote and whose writings are found in the Book of Mormon, has one hundred and fifty-five pages. It may be said of Alma that he was the writer on developmental issues par excellence.

The doctrine of Christ is given in Second Book of Nephi, and if we were to take on the name of a man as indicative of doctrine it would be more consistent to be called Nephites or

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Almaites than it would be to allow ourselves to be called Mormons.

Jesus stated, in the seventh of John's gospel, that his doctrine was not his, but was the Father's who sent him.

> My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me.—John 7: 17.

It would be quite out of character for us to call ourselves Godites as a distinctive name or familiar appellation. But we may submit to being called Christians, as this means followers of Christ.

To permit ourselves to be called Nephites might be construed an indorsement of that particular dogma for the practice of which they were condemned by the prophet Jacob as being more unrighteous than the Lamanites. To be called Lamanites and not remonstrate might be consenting to the curse put on them because of their wickedness.

Nephi, first and second, Mosiah, Alma, Mormon, and Moroni were all good men, and in their way able men; and one of them, Nephi, wrote thus:—

> Ye must take upon you the name of Christ, which is my name. . . . For if a church be called in Moses' name, then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man, then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel.—Book of Nephi, 12: 16, 17.

Arguing in this strain, if we adopt the name Mormons, as applying to us as a band of believers, then are we Mormon's church, or the church of Mormon, and by so doing we discredit Christ's name, thus repudiating his doctrine and dishonoring him by evading his name.

It is far safer for us to disgrace the name of Mormon, or in a sense to disrepect the Book of Mormon, than to show disrespect to the one through whose divine revelation the book has come to us. His teachings should be ours, his doctrines ours, his name our name. We should prefer to be known as believers in Christ first, then believers in whatever appertains to his work on the earth. We can well afford to disown the name of Mormon, or any other man; but the name of Jesus Christ we cannot afford to disregard, or disavow, or put another in his stead.

The president of the church did say at Detroit that he was not a Mormon, that we, meaning the church, are not Mormons. He so writes now. And does so having not one whit less faith and confidence in the Book of Mormon than those profess to have who care to be called Mormons and their faith Mormonism, rather than, Christianism, or Christianity.

Pres. Joseph Smith used the words, "This was the faith of the original church," in respect to the one wife system. The words, "This was the original Mormon belief" were the words of the reporter when making up his article from his notes after leaving Pres. Smith at the close of the interview.

Bro. Joseph has not at any time admitted the correctness of being called Mormons until 1852, or to any other time. He has never admitted that the title was a correct one, and does not so admit now. If at any time Bro. Joseph has used the word Mormons as applied to the Reorganized Church, or Mormonism as applied to the doctrines of the church, it has been done with the provisional statement that the terms were used as the world uses the terms and not as correctly applying to either members, the church, or the doctrines of the church.

The world calls the whole system "Mormonism." But is it? It was known and called by the early elders the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, The Great work of the Latter Days. Later on the name has stood for a system that we fully believe Joseph and Hyrum Smith did not institute, and we are not under obligation to accept the appellation, because to do so is to partly admit that the world is right in classing us with the church in Utah, which is a grave mistake.

Bro. Lange is at liberty to accept the appellation of Mormon as applying to himself because of his belief in the Book of Mormon if he chooses; and the same privilege belongs to all others who may choose so to do; but for ourself, and the church for which we have the right to speak, we do not accept the name; notwithstanding we believe in the things which Mormon and the other writers of the Book of Mormon have written in that book.

THE SPIRIT OF VIOLENCE.

The killing of Humbert, king of Italy, by an assassin, the attempt to kill the Shah of Persia, by another, and threats made against the Czar of Russia and other crowned rulers, all point to the unsettled condition of human affairs, the presence and rule of evil in the hearts of many.

The slaughter of white men by the negro Charles in New Orleans, the disfranchisement of the negro in North Carolina, the killing of Goebel in Kentucky, which legal inquiry seems likely to prove was the result of political plotting, all go to show that our own land is not free from the taint of bloodguiltiness, in which men's lives are taken by unauthorized violence, a thing to be deplored and deprecated.

The President of the French Republic, President McKinley of the United States, and many other rulers of men, both those chosen and elevated to office by the voice of the people and those reigning by reason of the supposed divine right of kings, are threatened by "violent and bloody minded" men.

It does not matter whether these assassins in fact and would-be murderers act upon their own volition without accomplices, or accessories, or are but the chosen instruments to carry into execution the will of plotting schemers political, or otherwise, the principle is wrong, the acts condemnable and wicked.

The objects sought to be accomplished by such assassinations, and unlawful killings, cannot be reached by those plotting them or those carrying them into execution; for the reason that provisions are made in each government deprived of a ruler, for a succession to the throne or chair of office; and so soon as one king, or ruler is killed, the cry of the heralds who proclaim the news is, "The king is dead! Long live the king!" A change is wrought in the administrators, but none in the principles of the government, or the principles of administration. Nothing is gained to the assassin but a legal death if he be without aiders, or abettors; and death for the principal, and death or imprisonment for associates if the work is the result of associated conspirators. There are mourning and temporary delay in governmental affairs, after which the current of public events flows on as before. The government has lost a ruler, a citizen, executed a murderer, been put to some unnecessary expense, which is paid out of the treasury of the people in whose fancied interest the murder was done. The dead ruler is praised, the assassin is denounced and demonized.

What a mistake these misguided, warped-minded men are making. Legalized murder in open warfare, or for the protection of society, and the suppression and punishment of crime is bad enough, but assassination for selfish ends, to do the bidding of a secret order or society, or a political party scheming for ascendancy in power are inexcusably evil and should find no voice so vile as to defend them.

Intimidation by threats of violence to persons of rulers, or to society with a view to bring to pass economic, social, or political changes, are but the unlawful measures of over-zealous, misguided men, blinded by false estimates of what they deem to be existing wrongs, for which remedies are sought by them. They misunderstand the conditions and wrongfully conclude that by the putting certain leading men out of public life by death they will right those wrongs, or avenge those suffering from them. They mistake, for neither result follows. The wrongs still exist, the victims still suffer, and the act of murder done in misguided zeal to better the condition adds to the wrongs the additional burden of being partners to the crime. Men pity, but condemn as well.

The killing of King Humbert, the attempt upon the life of the Shah, the threats uttered against the Czar, the Prince of Wales, Presidents Loubet and McKinley may be the work of a band of associated anarchists, of native or of foreign birth, whose acts are intended to mean war on law and order in society; if so there can be but one end and that is swift and sure discovery and adequate punishment of the wrong-doers.

Whatever the moving case there is no palliating circumstance. Murder is reprehensible and not to be tolerated.

The wars in the Philippine Islands, South Africa, and the peculiar condition of things in China are sources of grave anxiety to all classes of American citizens, not only because of the shedding of blood and the cost of each and the loss to the commercial world through interruption of trade conditions, but because of the uncertainty as to what the end will be. Whether the United States will be able to keep out of any general war between the nations remains to be determined, but it must be the hope of all. As things appear at present writing the national horizons show red and lowering imports of war, the "abomination that maketh desolate."

The allied forces of Japan, England, Germany, France, Russia, and the United States of America, are on the march to Pekin, China; the ambassadors of these nations are beseiged in their various legations at Pekin, either by the forces of the Chinese government, or by insurrectionary hordes of religious fanatics bent upon driving the "foreign devils" out of the country or killing them with the intent to close China to all foreigners.

Whatever the cause for Chinese hatred towards foreigners, or who may have been in blame for the origin of this outbreak, the evidences in possession of the public are too fragmentary to permit a decision. But Christian missionaries and their converts are being killed, if reports be true, with but little prospect for better conditions, until the smouldering fires of international strife have broken into flame and the fires of war have been quenched in blood.

Russia, according to some traditional teaching one of the forces to be engaged in the battle of Armageddon, is fighting China in the north, Manchooria district, and driving the local Chinese forces before them. The southern provinces are being roused into insurrection. The Queen Dowager is unable, or unwilling to control affairs, and it would seem that there is no really fixed administrative government in existence, but that there is nearly a condition of anarchy prevailing. But so meager are the reports, and so unreliable the sources of information, little is known of the real situation. It is to be hoped that the climax is reached, and the news that the ministers of foreign powers will indeed be permitted to communicate with their respective governments, and the truth be that China has really not been in the fault for the insurrectionary movements and bloodshed that have already occurred.

And, although we may be looking for the occurrence of war, bloodshed, famine, pestilence, dread diseases, and "distress of nations," let us hope that out of it all when it does come the Lord may bring to pass good for Zion.

INTOLERANCE AT MANSFIELD, OHIO.

Three of the elders of John Alexander Dowie, general overseer of the Dowie Zionite movement at Chicago, lately visited Mansfield, Ohio, and procuring a hall proceeded to enlighten the citizens of that place. But, some intolerant spirits raised a cry about them and they were mobbed out of the city, being pretty roughly handled. They persisted, however, and sent notice that they would visit the place again and expected to be heard. Mr. Dowie notified the mayor of Mansfield of the matter and demanded police protection, and ordered his elders to renew their effort. This they did, or tried to do, but were prevented. Some three thousand of citizens waited at the station to watch the elders come in, determined to mob them again. The police boarded the train, and by blocking the passageway prevented the elders landing, and advised them to go home and stay there, or they would be severely handled. The elders determined to hold their ground, tried to get into the city by a return train, but the police again interfered and prevented their getting off in the city, when they returned to Chicago.

Mr. Dowie is incensed, and has called the mayor and officials hard names, called his elders cowards and ordered them to return to Mansfield, at all hazards, while he goes to Europe for six months.

This is the situation at present writing, August 7.

We have little sympathy for the Dowie movement, it having taken on the form of a huge monetary speculation on the part of John Alexander Dowie, but we have no word of commendation for the methods pursued by the Mansfield authorities to prevent Mr. Dowie's elders from preaching in that city. It is proscriptive intolerance on the part of the mob who assaulted the elders and threaten violence for them, if they return, this intolerance being winked at and fostered by weak kneed officials who do not dare to enforce the law.

Mr. Dowie and his people have the right to the use of their privilege of free speech. No one needs to hear them who does not want to, and none is compelled to believe who chooses not to. So, what have the citizens of Mansfield to fear? Dowie's elders should have the right to be heard in their own defense. But, so it goes. The citizens of Mansfield condemn the Boxers for the proscription and killing of Christians, Catholics, and Protestants in China by the Chinese, but mob men who are white men, believers in God, and that sickness is evil, who desire to preach their religion in Mansfield. Surely inconsistency could hardly do worse than this. Dowie should have the right to be heard if any want to hear.

CHINA.

We have received a copy of an atlas of China, published by Rand, McNally and Co., of Chicago, which is of interest at the present time, because of the concentration of the public attention on that country now because of the war which is being prosecuted there. The atlas not only contains some good maps and illustrations, but the maps and illustrations are accompanied by concise descriptive and historical reading matter, which to the majority of the people of the United States will be new and interesting.

According to this atlas, the Chinese Empire is divided into districts or dependencies, Manchooria, Mongolia, and Thibet. These dependencies are each inhabited by various races, so that the Chinese dynasty controls a people composed of many distinct types. We are inclined to think of the inhabitants of the celestial empire as more or less homogenous, but such seems not to be the case.

The atlas says:—

> The population of the entire country has been variously estimated, but cannot fall far short of 402,700,000, which with an area of somewhat over 4,000,000 square miles, gives an average of about 100 inhabitants to the square mile, in some provinces the proportion reaching 400 or 500.

Again it says:—

> It may be noted that the contemplative philosophy and spiritual exaltation of the religion expressed in Brahmanism and Buddhism have been the theme of admiration as well as of study among Christian scholars, many of the tenets embodied in the practical essence reflecting, together with much that to modern ideas is purely fanciful, a moral sublimity scarcely conceived by those unfamiliar with the sacred writings of the East. A striking instance of mysticism and ascetic meditation upon Buddha, combined with active exercise of priestly control, is found in the secluded monasteries (Lamaseries) of Thibet, where the devotees of Lamaism constitute a hierarchy of no little influence, even in affairs of ordinary importance; strengthened by imposing ceremonials and a studied display of power, to which the popular mind is readily susceptible.

The government is an absolute monarchy, the present dynasty being of Manchu or Tartar origin. This Manchu dynasty has flourished since 1644, the present ruler being the ninth in succession. The late "Boxer" movement is said to have for its object the overthrow of this dynasty and the expulsion from the country of the foreigners, who number in all about 12,000.

Of the system of government, the atlas says:—

The system is, briefly, a patriarchal despotism, in which the interests and welfare of the sovereign and his subjects are reciprocal, the emperor being theoretically the father of the people, whose happiness is his first care and whose preservation from harm is his paramount solicitude. This paternal principle is derived alike from the teachings of Confucius and those of the Mencian philosophy—the latter even asserting the rights of rebellion and penalty of death should the monarch prove recreant to his obligations as "a minister of God for good."

The religion of the country is a sort of ancestor worship, and is universal. The domestic life of the Chinese is noted for its filial piety and affection, the possession of children being accounted the chief blessing of life. The enforcement of the criminal code forms a marked contrast to the domestic relactions. The code sanctions horrible torture and final decapitation.

Korea once acknowledged the suzerainty of China, but by the late war between China and Japan, this dependency was made an independent government.

A TRUE PROPHECY.

Last September, while at the dedication of the church building built by the branch at Creola, Ohio, a prophecy was delivered that the influence of the meetings then being held should be productive of great good to the work of the church and the church should increase in numbers and in power.

Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, writing from Creola, to Bishop Kelley, under date of August 6, states:—

I inclose you appraisement of our church here. I do not know that it is necessary to send to you, but it will do no harm, and you can see how we are moving out. Bro. James Moler baptized two precious souls last evening. A teacher, formerly county school examiner, and his wife. Just an increase of one hundred per cent since September 10, '99. No froth in the increase; all solid body."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Eliza Maxwell, writing from Central Lake, Mich., under date of July 31, says:—

We are isolated from other Saints. There are only three of us, and we have a nice little Sunday school. My three children and grandchildren and a few others make a nice little school. We take up a collection every Sunday, but it takes quite awhile to get enough to get our supplies.

Bro. J. W. Waldsmith, writes on August 9, from Nebraska City:—

Elder M. H. Forscutt and I were at Brownville last Saturday and Sunday. Held some very interesting meetings there. Had a fair turnout, and good attention.

Brother John Hinderliter, writes from Lancaster, Ill., under date of August 3:—

Nothing but man-made creeds here. It seems strange to me that none of our elders come here to preach the pure gospel. Lots of good people here, whom I believe would gladly hear the gospel.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. H. A. Stebbins left last Wednesday for Atchison, Kansas, where he preached Thursday, leaving Friday for Minneapolis, Kansas, to attend a reunion.

F. A. Smith writes from Omaha, August 6, that he baptized four on the 5th.

President Smith was slightly "under the weather" the first of this week.

We note a "special edition" of the Fremont County Journal, published at Rexburg, Idaho. It is a "boom" edition, printed on book paper, and is illustrated by portraits and views. The Journal has been on the HERALD list for a number of years, and is, we believe, a journal published in the interests of the Utah Church. Their "special" is a good one.

"THE HOUSE OF THE LORD."

"The House of the Lord" at Kirtland, known to us as "The Temple," being one of the salient points in the history of the church; and around which cluster the reminiscences of the labors, trials, and sorrows of that industrious, zealous little band of workers known to the world as the followers of Joseph Smith, is now commanding the respect and admiration of many people.

When its walls, sixty feet high, are examined and found so straight and true, its dimensions so proportionate, its stately appearance and local beauty so unquestionable, its design and architectural beauty so easy to the eye, so symmetrical in its order, so sublime in its character and general outline, that in many instances the viewers are led to express surprise and astonishment, even divine reverence; so that we take pleasure in stating the source of the structure to be the God of heaven, the instrument, the unlettered young man of twenty-seven years to be Joseph Smith, and that the design and object of its erection had been accomplished (in part at least); that the endowment promised to the humble followers of the Christ in days of old had been received from the same source within these walls; that the same signs that were promised to them, were also promised to these latter-day disciples; and the result was, they went everywhere preaching the word, and there were added to their numbers for the first fourteen years at the rate of about thirty-three per day, ten hundred per month, or about twelve thousand per year.

That this work of building the temple had been done by hand labor, was finished to completion in the short space of two years and eight months, or, from July twenty-three, eighteen hundred thirty-three to March eighteen hundred and thirty-six, architects who view it say, "There is no machinery now used that can do this work;" others say, "There is no building in Cleveland superior in architecture to this." So we are constrained to believe it to be one of the brightest evidences of divine favor and personal recognition to this generation; and we here feel to congratulate the bishopric and the church for the effort in recovering the title and placing in repair this worthy structure which now commends itself and the people who builded and repaired it to the thousands who visit it; yea, to the whole world, as the only house of worship built by divine command on this land, and the fame of this house has reached around the world.

But a few weeks since we received a letter from a gentleman in Calcutta, India, nearly opposite to us on the globe, wishing us to send him the Book of Mormon, and his superscription was a novel one. Here it is: "To the one in charge of the Smithite Mormon Temple, Kirtland Hills, Ohio, U. S. A." It took the letter thirty days to reach us.

Many people on leaving the house remark, "I am happily disappointed in what I have seen and heard today;" and some remark, "I have been here three or four times before, but everything seems fresh and new, and am more pleased with my visit than before;" and very many remarks showing an appreciative public.

Clergymen visit us often, and some, two and three times, and seem quite anxious to talk and draw out ideas suggested by the character of the house; even the Catholics, etc., would like to have us to say that our President and Prophet is infallible.

We are not a little surprised as well as amused to hear the following questions: "Have you any secret rooms about the house where you do not allow visitors?" "Do you allow strangers to attend your meetings?" "Does your Prophet wear robes?" "Do you kneel when you pray?" "Do you consider your prophet infallible?" etc., etc.

We find this to be an excellent place to advertise our work. In July we had two hundred and sixty-three Temple viewers, and we hardly ever let one go away without carrying some of our literary works; the Bishop has our thanks for the bundle of tracts just received. We keep many of the church books for sale, also photos of the Temple, cabinet size, by mail, twenty-seven cents. We have also Bro. Albert Haws' most excellent little work, "Sabbatarian Theories a Delusion," on sale at fifteen cents.

One thing we need in connection with this "House of the Lord," and that is a good hotel. I think it would add much to the interest and progress of the work. HENRY C. SMITH.

"INTERPRETATION OF REVELATION 13"

I read in the Herald for June 14, 1899, an article entitled, "Interpretation of Revelation 13," in which the writer claims the following: "The first beast" is the church of Rome. "The deadly wound" was the imprisonment of the Pope by Charles V., emperor of the Roman empire in 1525, which caused "all the world to wonder." "The second beast" is the kingdom of England under Henry VIII., who espoused the cause of the Pope against Luther, and caused the people to worship the Catholic Church, and wrote a book on the subject, receiving for this the title of "Defender of the Faith," etc.

I do not purpose entering into a polemical correspondence re the interpretation of the chapter, any further than to state that "the facts of history" do not accord with the statements of the writer of the article referred to.

First. I would correct the mistake made in designating Charles V. as the emperor of "the Roman empire." The Roman empire had long ceased to exist, for after the death of Theodosius (395) the empire was divided into two parts, the eastern and the western empires, which was a fatal mistake and materially hastened its downfall. Successful invasions of the barbarians followed in rapid succession. Alaric in Italy, of the Alani, Suevi, Burgundians, Franks, and others in Africa, Spain, and Gaul, and of the Saxons in Great Britain. In 476 Romulus Augustulus laid down the insignia of the empire before Odoacer, king of the Heruli, who claimed the east sovereignty of Italy with the title of imperial regent; Rome, during this period being taken by Alaric, king of the west Goths, and by Genseric and the Vandals. The eastern, which had its capital at Byzantium (the modern Constantinople), lasted nearly a thousand years longer, until the taking of that city by the Turks in 1453.

The Charles referred to in this article was Charles V., emperor of Germany and king of Spain, the most powerful and illustrious potentate of this time, whose army did in 1527 (not 1525) storm the city of Rome and imprison Pope Clement VII., because of his intrigue with Francis I., of France, Henry VIII., of England, and the Italian princes, against him, and was kept prisoner until he would submit to the Emperor's demands. This was not an extraordinary event to cause wonder in the world, for since the year 590 when Gregory the Great ascended the papal throne and laid the foundation of papal Rome's future greatness as one of the world's greatest political powers, by his executive genius (doubtless acquired when he served Rome as prefect) there was more or less continual warfare with the papal authorities against kings, emperors, and nations, sometimes the fortune of war, or more often the diplomatic duplicity of the Pope, turned events in his favor and sometimes against him. The event of 1527 was one of the papacy's reverses, an omen presaging the near approach of the downfall of this pretentious hierarchy, which had long ruled the consciences of nations and individuals, and had trumpeted the thunders of excommunication against all who dare oppose any scheme propounded by its immaculate (?) pontiff.

At this period (1527) England was most emphatically Catholic. In 1521 some books had been surreptitiously imported into this country, written by Luther, the German reformer; they were publicly burned at St. Paul's. Assuming the writer of the article named be correct in his interpretation, we shall have a contradiction of accepted chronology and reversal of historical facts. For, as I read it the comment on verse 12 infers that prior to 1527 England was not Catholic, but "was caused to worship the Catholic Church" after the "second beast," Henry VIII., had taken lead of ecclesiastical affairs in England, just subsequent to the imprisonment of Pope Clement VII.

The facts, as recorded by the most authentic historians, relating to this period, are as follows, of course time and space necessitating a concentration.

When Henry ascended the throne, in 1509, all Britain owned the sway of the Roman pontiff, hence were essentially Catholics, believing and practicing all the tenets peculiar to the Catholic Church; the pope being recognized as the spiritual lord and ruler of all the worlds as vicegerent of Jesus Christ; and Henry, who, with all his faults, was well versed in the theology of the day, and was very zealous in the defense of the religion of his fathers, having discovered that heretical literature of Luther and Zwingli was percolating into England, rigidly set his hand against the innovation, and set the machinery of civil and ecclesiastical law in motion to root out the evil. He himself took up the literary cudgels and wrote a book supporting the claims of the pope and advocating the doctrines of Roman Catholicism. The disagreement between Henry and Rome was not caused by her theology, but because the pope could not, for politic reasons, see his way clear to divorce Henry from his legal wife, who was a virtuous woman, so that he might marry one of his mistresses, Anne Boleyn. Catharine of Aragon was sister to Charles V., and in 1527, just when an important embassy was leaving England to discuss the divorce, which had been negotiated for in 1526, the imperialist army stormed and sacked the city of Rome, Clement VII. being made the prisoner of Charles V., brother to the wife of the regal petitioner for divorce. This at once altered the complexion of the whole case. Clement, no longer a free agent, had to issue commands and decisions dictated by the emperor, and as might be expected, were opposed to sanctioning such an actrocious deed as illegitimatizing his own sister's marriage, and more especially when Henry had been in league with Clement and others against him.

On July 13, 1529, Clement, still under the domination of Charles, advoked the cause of Rome to be tried and decided in his own court. On hearing this, Henry, in his passion, struck down all authority of Rome, disrobed Cardinal Wolsey of all his honors, who died under the overwhelming disgrace; and in December of 1530, all the clergy were incriminated, and on the 16th of the following month, the terrified convocation of the southern province met to learn the terms of their pardon. After much discussion it was agreed that the convocation should pay the king £100,000, and submit to the following formula: "We acknowledge his majesty to be the singular protector only and supreme lord, and, so far as the law of Christ will allow, the supreme head of the English church and clergy." A few weeks later the convocation of York had to pay £18,000, and submit to the same formula. Thus was laid the foundation of the Episcopal Church of England in opposition (not indorsement) of the church of Rome; and slowly and cautiously the doctrinal, as well as ceremonial, worship was changed into its present form.

In 1535 the first alteration was made, by erasing the name of the pope from all the service books. In

www.LatterDayTruth.org

1536 Coverdale's translation of the Bible was permitted by the king to be circulated through the country; the "Ten Articles" were then drawn up; after which, there was published in 1537, by the king's authority, the book of religious instruction, known as the "Bishop's Book," which in turn was followed by the King's Book" in 1543; which in 1545 was supplemented by "The Primer," compiled by the king, and authorized by him and the church. With unnecessary cruelty and rapacity, Henry destroyed Catholic monasteries, robbed the churches of their tithes and revenues, slew and imprisoned many papal dignitaries and clergy in England; indeed, it is recorded that 70,000 perished by the law during his reign.

Henry died in 1547, and was succeeded by his son, Edward VI. Being but a boy of weak health, and lacking decision of character, his uncle, Duke of Somerset, made himself lord protector, and in reality governed the nation. The whole reign was one of misery for the people, because of the insatiable struggling and fighting among the nobility for wealth and position, and vacillation, and change for the church. To suit more radical Protestantism, one by one the old dogmas of Romish origin were being eliminated from the Episcopal liturgy, and the "Book of Common Prayer" was made to supersede the "King's Book." Orders were given for the destruction of images and stained glass in the church windows.

In July, 1547, the Book of Homilies was drawn up, still more radical in tone. But another change was at hand. Mary, who ascended the throne in 1553, was a staunch Catholic, and she swept away with ruthless hand all, almost all the labors of the English reformers; and once more Catholicism reared up its head supreme in the land, not because the people desired it, but tired and disconsolate because of the long continued turmoil of nobility, church and state fondly hoped for peace, now that Mary, the legitimate child and rightful heir, occupied the throne; but alas, they were doomed to disappointment, for the pusillanimous nobles, whose greed for gold and position caused them to stultify their noble qualities, played the sycophant; "principle," "honor," and "sincerity," being almost unknown qualities among them, veered their views and ideas to suit the queen, encouraged Mary once more to open the sluices of sorrow, and deluge the people with grief, by bitter persecution of those who retained their integrity and still maintained their Protestant principle. The bonfires of death were ignited, and while many were being burned to death, the lurid glow of the flames scintillated on the axe of the headsman, as it rose and fell to wreak the vengeance of Mary, the papacy's royal advocate. So many died by "violence, sword, and fire," who fell under the displeasure of the Anglo-Spanish queen, that she earned for herself the ghastly title of "bloody Mary."

But, still again there is a change in the tide of events; this time in favor of Protestantism; for on the broad bosom of its irresistible flood, the cause was borne to victory and permanency with the ascension of Elizabeth in 1558. The Book of Martyrology opens now at the page of Catholic devotees, who paid the penalty for the adherence to the cause of the pope, and by the strong will and passionate nature she inherited from her father, Henry VIII., Elizabeth grasped the questions of the age in her land and established the Episcopal Church upon a firm, immovable basis, and England continued amid many changes to be a Protestant nation, and still as such remains.

The Tractarian movement, with its undoubted Romish ritual tendency, is practically a modern development, which had its birth in 1833, and was aided by such as Busey and Newman, and though the Oxford movement (as this element is now called) has labored assiduously, secretly, and publicly to bring in the mediæval ritual of the church, they have failed, for the general public will not tolerate such degrading innovations which have, we trust, been forever erased from the ecclesiastical and civil law of the land. The severe agitation of the past year in the Episcopal Church gave evidence that Protestantism was not now comprehended in the Church of England, but all the different shades and factions of nonconformity was a power to reckon with of no mean dimension and force. The people have learned (at least to some extent) the value of liberty of conscience and the blessings accruing therefrom; have been and still are too pronounced and manifold for them to forget that their fathers have waded through fields of gore to liberate themselves and posterity from the chains of sacerdotal slavery and ignorant superstition, which served the place of religion in their experience, and have won for themselves the position and esteem that they have for generations occupied.

Therefore, I conclude that the interpretation of Revelation 13, as given by M. L. Sory, does not harmonize with the statements of facts, for Henry VIII. did not cause the people to worship the Catholic Church after the imprisonment of Pope Clement, but the restoration of liberty to the popes two years after was the very time of Henry's active opposition and intense hostility to Rome, and he made the people worship, not the Catholic Church, but a church of his own creation, of which he was the recognized head, and executed or imprisoned all who would not so do. The English Church does not in any way claim to be the imitator or an image of the Church of Rome, any more than the Lutherans, Wesleyans, Methodists, or other sects do. For in reality the English Church received all the life she possesses (?) that is, priestly authority, from the Church of Rome, and only recently there was much discussion between Catholics and Episcopalians, in which the pope himself participated, as to the validity of Anglician orders. The English Church, "as by law established" in the reign of Henry VIII., absolutely declared idolatrous and of Pagan origin the use of altar lights, candles, and all or nearly all the so-called miracles, were not believed in or accepted; and today they are not believers or teachers in or of supernatural manifestations, etc. In the reign of Edward VI. the doctrine of transubstantiation was erased from the liturgy, and any one conversant with the Prayer Book, containing the doctrines and rubrics of the church, know that their teaching is rigidly opposed to all the peculiar and unscriptural tenets of Roman Catholicism.

A THOUGHT ON THE SABBATH AND ITS OBSERVANCE.

In number 16, volume 47 of the Saints' Herald, Bro. Maddock writes on the subject of the sabbath day. He says he is an unlearned man and asks that he may receive light. Now while I am also an unlearned man, yet Bro. Paul tells us in his first epistle to the Corinthian saints,

> But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty.—1: 27.

I take courage by this to write a few words, believing that what shall be revealed to me through the scriptures is directed by the power and will of God. Now it seems to me that in order to keep the sabbath as a day of rest as commanded, it is necessary that we understand perfectly the exact time of its beginning and its ending. God in the creation says that the evening and the morning were the division of time that constituted a day. In order to divide the twenty-four hours of our time into the evening and the morning, we commence at twelve o'clock, noon, and follow the declining rays of the sun until the sun is hidden from our view by the earth coming between it and us, and so continue until twelve o'clock midnight, and then from midnight it is called morning until twelve o'clock,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

noon. Thus we see that it was not called day and night as called by our sabbath keepers of the present day. So we see that they by commencing the sabbath at six o'clock in the evening, have been laboring six hours of the time they should have been resting. Others commence at sundown. In this case, a part of the year they would begin to rest a few minutes after four o'clock, and then again not until nearly eight o'clock in our latitude, and a still greater variation in other latitudes. Moses tells us:—

> And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made.—Genesis 2: 2.

Now does not this indicate that God labored on the seventh day, as we see that on that day he ended his work? Now if he finished his work on the sixth day, what did he have to do on the seventh that he might end his work on that day? We are not told that he did not do any work on the seventh day, but that he ended his work on that day and rested from all his works which he had made. He does not tell us that God rested throughout the entire seventh day, but that he blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work. He does not tell us the exact length and division of the seventh day as he has in the six days that God was employed in the creation of the generations of heaven. Now as it is given to me, God in the creation of the six days' work was dealing with heavenly or spiritual things. But after he had rested for a season from the labor of creating heavenly things, then he took up the task of producing earthly things, for Moses tells us that every plant and herb of the field was created before they were in the earth and before they grew. Thus it is shown that it was a spiritual rest that God had rested, but earthly work had not commenced yet, as we find in the 5th verse that God had not caused it to rain on the earth. So we see that the first work he did on earth was to cause it to rain and he did this by causing a mist to go up and water the whole face of the ground. Then he was ready to plant the seeds of plants and herbs of the fields.

After he had done this, we find there was need of having something more than the spiritual man to care for these plants and herbs, as the ground would need tilling in order to complete the work of the earthly formation. So God took of the dust of the ground and formed a machine wherein God's Spirit could operate and do this earthly labor, and that machine was called man, and he was to have dominion over all things that God had created and would cause to grow out of or upon the face of the whole earth. And when God had breathed into him a portion of his Spirit, or the breath of life, and he became a living soul, then we find that God showed forth his earthly work by planting a garden and placed man in it to care for it by tilling the ground. Then we find that God did not stop his work there, but went on and caused to grow out of the ground everything that was to be used for the comfort of man, and caused it to increase so that as man would multiply, they would not lack for anything, if they do their part which God had designed, which was the earthly labor of caring for the earthly things which God had given them. After supplying all kinds of vegetable matter for the benefit of man and beast and the fowls of the air, he still continues his work of formation of beasts and fowls (see verse 19), and also woman, whom he did not form out of the ground, but took a part of the man which he had formed out of the dust of the ground and formed her that they might be joined together as one, being the same flesh, and that she might be a more refined or purified being. For this reason she was given into the hands of man for protection from the baser things of the world, and to become a helpmeet for him in bringing forth the beings whereby they were to multiply and replenish the earth.

We are not told just how long God was employed in the completion of forming all the things which he had created, but I think it would be safe to conclude that it would have taken him as long to form them as it did to create them and speak them into existence by his power. Yet we have no account of his ever resting from the labor of the formation of things. Are we to conclude that God caused everything of the earthly formation to take on the complete form by his word as he spake them into existence at the creation and spoke all things into full form in a moment of time? or was he six literal days? or was he six thousand years or days of the Lord, and then ceased from his labor of formation? or is he still laboring and forming things out of the ground as we now behold them on every hand, every day and every year? In either case we find no account of his resting again. Neither do we find where he has ever said that man should observe a day of rest since he received his literal body and was placed in the garden and commanded that he should dress and keep it. We find no mention of a day of rest for man through the generations from Adam unto Moses. Neither do we find anything to show that man during this time ever observed a day of rest. But we find that the people wandered away from God and his holy law and refused to have God to govern them. So God appointed Moses to govern the children of Israel, and wrote for him a code of laws to keep them in subjection, and affixed such penalties as he saw fit, which laws were to serve as a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come we are no more under a schoolmaster or law, thus showing that those laws were only intended to apply to Moses and the children of Israel. Among those laws the first rest or sabbath day was made for man, as we find in Mark 2: 27. The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath. Now the power of the law is not in the law itself, but in the penalty attached and the execution thereof. We find that this sabbath law, as well as others of the code, had the penalty of death affixed for the transgression of it. We find in Exodus 35: 2, 3 the penalty was death for doing work therein; no mention of necessary work, but the kindling of fires in their houses was forbidden. Now if this law and penalty were given for the observance of the people of the whole world, how many of the northern latitude could obey the commandment and survive the inclement winters? Thus we see that Christ came and fulfilled the law, and made us free from the law, thereby becoming our Savior, by us becoming obedient to the glory of the Christian economy as found in Colossians 2. We find in the 14th verse that as many as obeyed he forgave all their trespasses. Then we find that he blotted out the handwriting of the ordinances (which according to Webster means law) that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross. This shows conclusively that the laws that were given to Moses were not to be binding on those that accept Christ as their law and Savior. But all that were under the law were to submit to the law (even Christ). Thus we find him observing the sabbath until he had fully established the new covenant and sealed it with his own blood, then he was freed from the power of the law, and so all were freed from the law that accepted the risen Savior. This we find recorded in Colossians 1: 20, 21.

Now we find in Mark 16 that Jesus, after he had risen from the dead, met with the eleven and upbraided them, not for the nonobservance of the ten commandments, but for their unbelief in his resurrection and for their not believing the report of those that told of his appearing to them. Here we also find him commanding them to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, but not a word about the observance of the sabbath. But he says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Thus we conclude that the sabbath was not a saving law to the people that would believe in the gospel of Christ. We find in John 20 that of all the times that Jesus met with his disciples to break bread or worship after his resurrection, he never observed the seventh-day sabbath. So we conclude that his commandment to observe the sabbath day and keep it holy was to the children of Israel under Moses. But the first day of the week seems to be the one chosen for the worship of the disciples of Christ. But at no time after his resurrection did Christ speak of a sabbath day.

We pass on now down the stream of time, and we find the Lord talking to his people through the prophet, Joseph the Seer, promising a blessing upon them insomuch that if they come up unto this land with an eye single to his glory, according to his commandments, one of the blessings promised is those who live shall inherit the earth, and those who die shall rest from all their labors, and their works shall follow them, and they shall receive a crown in the mansion of the Father. (D. C. 59: 1.) These are not the commandments he gave to the children of Israel under Moses when he brought them up out of the land of bondage, but they are the commandments and promises given through Joseph for the people that came up unto the land of Zion, who have obeyed the gospel. In them the Lord promises a rest, but not in this world. Also he appoints a day in paragraph 2 in these words:—

> And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High.

Here he calls it the Lord's holy day, not the seventh as was named to the Israelites. Thus we have another proof that the seventh day sabbath was not for Christ's people in these last days. Now it seems that the sabbath became a bone of contention, not only in the different churches, but among the Latter Day Saints, and inquiry was made unto the Holy Spirit, and in Doctrine and Covenants 119:5 the Spirit saith concerning the partaking of the sacrament on a certain day,

> For whether it be upon the first Lord's day of every month, or upon the Lord's day of every week.

And then again, paragraph 7:—

> And the Spirit saith further: Inasmuch as there has been much discussion in the past concerning the Sabbath of the Lord, the church is admonished that until further revelation is received, or the quorums of the church are assembled to decide concerning the law in the church articles and covenants, the saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected.

Thus we see that the Lord's teachings are the same in these last days as they were in the days when he was teaching among the scribes and Pharisees. I have written this with a desire that it may enlighten some one on this subject, and not only that, but that it might cause some one with a more susceptible brain than mine to give instructions on the subject. As we are all to come to perfection as Saints for the greater work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body or church of Christ, and become a unit in the faith and knowledge of the Son of God, we should labor to enlighten each other in love, that we may become one in thought and mind. While I believe that it is necessary for us to keep the Lord's day as a day of rest and worship, I cannot believe that the sabbath that was given the Israelites is binding on us at the present time.

KING OF GLORY.

Good thoughts are a light to the mind, as the sun is a light to the earth; they are to be prized as treasures from the storehouse of God. The light from many good thoughts soon dies out, for the reason that the thoughts are not recorded. We can thank God for the inspired writers of the Scriptures, whose thoughts still shine as the stars in the heavens. Although they have entered into their glorious rest, yet their works do follow them, for their works are as works of gold, silver, and precious stones, that cannot suffer loss, for they are grounded on the rock, where no storm can beat them from off the eternal shore.

The carnal mind is at enmity with God. To be carnally minded is death; to be spiritually minded is life and peace. To have our mind on spiritual things is to be alive to the interests of God's work.

It is life eternal to know God and Jesus Christ whom thou has sent. O, mortal man, open wide the windows to thy soul and let the light from the King of Glory come in, and the day star will arise in thy heart!

Who is the King of Glory?

He is the Lord of Hosts, the Bishop of our souls, with power to save. He is the only mediator between God and us. He is our High Priest, who is not entered into a temple made with hands, but into heaven, to appear in the presence of God for us. He is plenteous in mercy, and long suffering towards us all, not willing that any should perish; but desirous that all might be partakers in a full salvation.

The glory of God is intelligence; or in other words, light and truth. It proceedeth forth from him, and fills the immensity of space. The earth, the heavens, the sun, the moon, and stars. (See Doctrine and Covenants, sections 85 and 90.) The light of the world is Jesus, King of Glory.

Jesus said,—

> He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.—John 8: 12.

Simeon said,—

> A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.—Luke 2: 32.

He is the only begotten of the Father, who is full of grace and truth. He is the root and offspring of David; the bright and morning star. He is Jesus our Savior, the Prince of Peace. He shall reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. He is the great chief Judge whom the heavens must receive until the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouths of all his holy prophets since the world began.

Then he will come with Zion from above to meet Zion of earth, who must be fair as the sun, clear as the moon, and glorious as an army with banners. His judgment shall sit, and he will judge, and reward every one according to their works. He is worthy! Worthy to be crowned King of kings and Lord of lords. Jesus our King of Glory; glory be to his name.

IGNORANCE OR MISREPRESENTATION—WHICH?

The Sabbath Advocate, of July 31, the official organ of the Church of God, has the following under the heading "Editorial Notes:"—

> There is talk of the Salt Lake Mormons and the Reorganized Mormons uniting. Why not? There is but little difference between them. Both parties believe in the Book of Mormon as a guide to the church, and both parties believe that Joe [this shows that he is prejudiced] Smith was a true prophet. Polygamy has been set aside by our lawmakers and can no longer be practiced. Hence we say again, Why not?

This editor seems like one who beateth the air, or like a drowning man grabbing at a straw. He starts out by saying there is some "talk," and before he gets through he arrives at definite conclusions by saying "there is but little difference between them." If I was an editor, and placed at the head of a church, and knew no better than that, I would let my pen remain silent. The Reorganized Church has never talked of uniting with the Salt Lake Mormons, and have repeatedly invited them to discuss the differences between the two churches. And, I want to remind you, Mr. Editor, that there is a vast difference between the Reorganized Church and the Salt Lake Mormons. You seem to think that because "polygamy has been set aside by our law-makers" that the Reorganized

Church ought to say, "Come, let us unite!" How does he know that polygamy can no longer be practiced? It is practiced yet, according to the courts of the land, for they have fully established that fact, and arrests have been made, too; yet it "can no longer be practiced," says this editor. And it is a surprising fact that these would-be teachers of the law don't know it.

Polygamy is not the only issue between us. They believed that it was necessary, in case one should apostatize, to shed his blood to atone for his sins. They believed and taught that Adam was God, blood atonement, polygamy, that Brigham Young was a prophet of God. We differ from them on succession, and many other points of doctrine, and yet this editor says "there is but little difference between them." Why not this so-called Church of God unite with the Seventh-Day Adventist Church? Of course there has been some "talk" of it, and "there is but little difference between them." They came out from the Seventh-Day Adventists during what was called the "Iowa Rebellion," and organized it under the name "Church of God," and then read with great solemnity, "Unto the Church of God which is at Corinth." Not a word from God commanding them to organize such an institution. Are they honest enough to say with Alexander Campbell, "If the Lord should behold it [the church] he would doubtless weep at it"?

Now that I am identified with the true Church of Christ, organized by divine authority, I intend to defend it. May the truth prevail and the scales fall from this editor's eyes, enabling him to see the beauty of it is the the prayer of the writer,

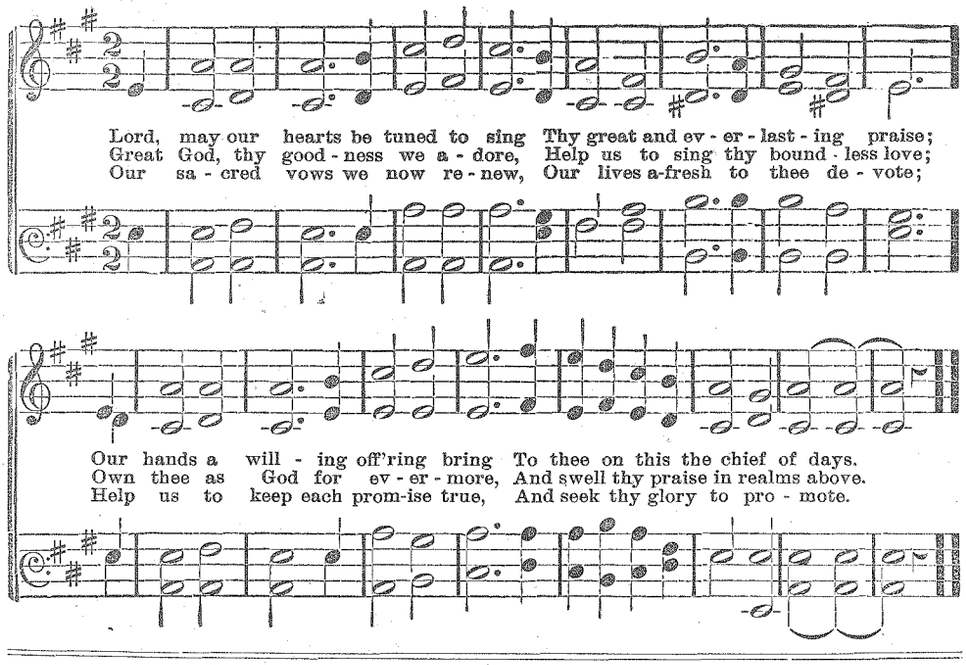
JOY, Ill., August 2.

Editors Herald:—I notice in the Editorial Items, last issue of Herald, that Sr. Alice Corson will write words if some one will write music. I have repeatedly offered my services, and believe I can write music for Sunday school use or for hymns; at least I will do my best, and the music committee can judge; but I would rather have the words written first because I believe that is the proper way. The committee on music sent me some words which I set to music about two years ago, but they gave me such short time to do it in that I did not have time to do my best. Accompanying this you will find a specimen of my work. The words are from Saints' Harp. It was sung in the M. E. Sunday school here, and every one thought it good. Respectfully yours,

W. M. KECK.



BOX 28, CLEVELAND, Ohio, August 5.

Editors Herald:—The Saints here are endeavoring to keep the ship afloat. Some are as they will be found when Christ comes—asleep on their oars. Others are wide awake and progressing on spiritual lines. Since district conference I have done the best I could in visiting other branches and dispensing the word of life, more especially on tithing. Last Saturday evening, after business cares were somewhat laid aside, I journeyed to Toledo, to ascertain why their names were not recorded on my tithing book. The trip paid both ways. Those I met with listened to the temporal law, asked questions, became satisfied, and were in the faith. I inquired of them how much better were they than the Pharisees, who had paid tithes and were not saved, and those who had obeyed the spiritual law and not obeyed the temporal law. How long will it be before the Saints awaken to the fact that the temporal law is an important factor in purchas.ng them an inheritance in the thousand years reign?

When I left Toledo I received tithing, with the statement that I should hear from them again, and that I had done good to them. It is a satisfaction, sometimes, to know one has done some good. I am not able to do much, but am a willing coworker.

We are fortunate or unfortunate to have six Utah elders in our city, making a house to house canvass, with literature and Joseph Smith's name attached to it. It's a glaring falsehood they lay the foundation of their work in, and how they expect to reap it in truth is a conundrum. We shall keep a close watch on them and inform their hearers, if they speak on the street corners, who they are.

We have a struggle to keep going. Our president of the branch followed in the line of the last one. The first one went to Canada, the last one to Kansas City. Some are awaiting to preach our funeral sermon, here in Cleveland, but I suggest they had better stay away, as we are quite alive yet. We can live until R. M. Elvin comes. We hear he is to come—the word echoes in our ear, When? However, we intend to keep our guns loaded and trained on the enemy. With good wishes and Zion's weal at heart, I remain, A coworker,

VIOLA, Wis., August 4.

Editors Herald:—A certain elder and missionary handed me a card with his name and faith printed upon the same, indorsing the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, winding up with, "I am a Saint, but not a Mormon." This idea of being looked upon as a Mormon seems to become a great bugbear to the members of the Reorganization who repudiate the name of that system called "Mormonism" for which Joseph and Hyrum and many other noble souls laid down their lives. Pres. Joseph Smith, in an interview at Detroit, stated that in the Doctrine and Covenants the declaration is made, "We believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman one husband. This was the original Mormon belief, and was accepted by all until August 29, 1852, when Brigham Young declared for polygamy." Here Joseph Smith acknowledged the correctness of being called Mormons until 1852; then why not any longer, even until 1900?

Does not the repudiation of the name cast a stigma upon the book and system as unfit for recognition, when at the same time the Book of Mormon and its importance to mankind is set forth more strongly than ever, but apparently without much success? And no wonder, when the people are under the impression that the Book of Mormon is the originator of the Utah abominations.

The question, "What's in a name?" is easily answered, as by the name you judge of the article represented by the same; therefore the successful introduction of the Book of Mormon depends upon the restoring upon that "pristine purity and import" of the "name" so highly honored of God, and preeminently due to the Book represented by the same; and the disrespect shown to the same is a disgrace and a device of the Devil, who, after instilling disgust for the name will do so for the book also.

I am now seventy-six years and six months old, and have been known as and called a Mormon for these last forty-six years; and I am willing to be called so as long as I indorse "Mormonism," for consistency is a jewel und worth living up to. I am confined to my bed. Yours respectfully,

C. W. LANGE.

COLFAX, Iowa, August 5.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place the 31st of July to look after some matters relative to our prospective reunion to be held here from August 31 to September 9, on the Epworth park grounds. To my surprise, the Methodist ministers of the Epworth League committee had found a clause in their law, where they hung out the sword against the "not Christian people," as they were pleased to call the Saints, which cut off our claim as per contract. Immediately upon learning the decision of this Methodist committee, I went post haste to their headquarters, as the Epworth League association was in session, to learn the real cause of the objection from their own lips, and it was this: We do not consider you people a fit class to allow on the grounds. I reasoned for possession according to contract, but they had spoken, and all reasoning seemed to intensify their stubbornness. I then gave up the contract, and we proceeded to issue some bills of public challenge, distributing about eight hundred in and around their camp. The bills are as follows:—

"PUBLIC CHALLENGE!

"The Des Moines district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints did, on the 23d day of June, 1900, enter into a written contract with the Iowa State Epworth League to have and occupy the Epworth Park at Colfax, Iowa, for a ten days' term of religious services. Said contract is signed by P. H. Cragan, on the part of said League, and by J. W. Morgan, on the part of said church. Now,

"Whereas, The above contract was objected to by members of said League, 'Ministers of the Methodist Church,' upon the grounds that the above Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is not considered by them a religious body sufficiently moral to be allowed on the grounds; and,

"Whereas, Rev. Day, a Methodist Minister, Member of said League Board, did state to the undersigned, J. W. Morgan, that our people are polygamists, and that the Book of Mormon teaches polygamy, and that our theology throughout is but manology; and notwithstanding that we had, in good faith in our contract, advertised our expected reunion to begin on August 31, 1900, and had made all necessary arrangements therefor, the Ministers of said League did, in possession of the above facts, positively refuse us peaceable entrance into and occupancy of the grounds on the above false charges, thereby compelling us to cancel said contract to avoid litigation, and maintain on the part of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints their moral character and dignity. For this reason the committee of this church having the utmost confidence in the honesty and sincerity of the local committee with whom we contracted for said grounds and who are among the leading men of the city of Colfax, Iowa, do hereby exonerate them; now,

"Therefore, because of such erroneous and false charges we, the elders and committee of said district and church, do hereby challenge any minister or ministers of said League and church they represent to meet us at Colfax, Iowa, in an honorable public debate, each disputant to affirm his respective church to be in harmony with the Church of Christ set up by divine authority as found in the New Testament, in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice.

"W. C. NIRK,
"J. W. MORGAN.
Committee.

"COLFAX, Iowa, Aug. 4, 1900."

Now beloved Saints of the Des Moines district and others who may be interested in our reunion, let us now try harder than ever to make our meeting on August 31 to September 9 a grand success. The citizens of the town are on our side. One storekeeper said: "Well, I am a red hot Methodist, but I do not approve of any such work." The mayor and banker and other prominent men all protest and express their sympathy for us and their objection to such a course.

The majority of the people around here will be looking forward to our reunion with an intensified ambition to see for themselves what we are. This little eruption has aroused them. We have procured other grounds here, and a nicer shade and grass, but no buildings. So we desire to purchase our district tent large enough for an assembly tabernacle, so please send in your donations, quickly and liberally, to help the cause now assailed.

J. W. MORGAN, Treasurer.

FAIRBANKS, Iowa, August 7.

Editors Herald:—We pull up stakes here this morning, and will move from here to Cedar Rapids. We have not accomplished anything here to speak of. The people would not come to hear; but the warning cry has been sounded, and this people are left without excuse.

Elders C. E. Hand and O. H. Bailey will be with the tent at the Rapids. I must needs attend the Sunday school convention to be held at Clinton, August 18 and 19.

I will say to the missionary force of the district: Please be present at our conference to be held at Muscatine, September 8 and 9, and we will try to lay our plans for future work in the district. And further, I request the brethren that they leave such matters as oblation, consecration, and these side issues out of their discourses. Please preach the plain principles of gospel truth, and leave mooted questions alone. For an elder to go into a branch and stir up the minds of the Saints over the "gathering," "consecration," and the like, leaving nothing but confusion behind him, that will take the branch president weeks and months to settle, is wrong, and we hope will not be further indulged in by the brethren of the field in this district. Ever in the faith,

J. R. SUTTON.

WEBB CITY, Mo., July 28.

Editors Herald:—I have been a member, so far as joining the church can make one, for near four years. Have done nothing but try to learn the will of God, and perhaps have not tried as I should have done. Have been negligent; but for the last two weeks have been feeling like new life had been given me. I am praising and trusting our divine parent as I never have before. I realize I have not been as prayerful as I should, but with renewed hope I can do much more now.

I rejoice in this work sincerely since receiving the blessing on Sunday, the 22d inst., when I was administered to.

Secret prayer is the keynote to success in this good work. I know this is of God. I am striving to do all the good I can for my Master. I am very thankful I followed this glorious plan of salvation. I hope this year may be a greater harvest time than ever has been in the past.

Saints, let us try to live such pure lives that we may be able to overcome the great trials we will have to undergo in the near future.

Last Sunday, while Bro. Macrae was speaking to the Blendsville branch, he warned them to be faithful, that they might be prepared for the sorrowful time spoken of. The was with us, truly.

Children, don't get weary,
The work is going on;
Keep your lamps trimmed and burning,
For the work is almost done.

A sister in gospel bonds,

DUNSEITH, N. D., August 2.

Editors Herald:—Since I last wrote you I have been laboring with Bro. Sparling, and find him to be of a kind and generous disposition, and an able defender of the work. I joined him at Leeds, where he had been holding meetings every night for about three weeks. We continued one week more. We baptized three, and left others who, I think, will come in soon.

Taking Nahum's chariot for Bottineau, arriving there in the evening and finding none of the brethren there to meet us, we concluded not to be like Brn. Caffall and Swenson last fall, who started out and got lost, so we went to a hotel. After eating, I offered to pay for supper; but to my suprise the proprietor would not take a cent, and insisted we should stay all night, saying it would not cost us a penny. I feel to thank God for his goodness in opening up the way all along the line.

Next morning we walked out to Bro. Stowell's, where we held three services with good attendance. Leaving there, we came to Dunseith, and held one week's meetings. Poor interest. The people are mostly Catholic.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Shaking the dust off our feet as a testimony, we wended our way up into what are called the Turtle Mountains. This is the country that was held as a reserve, but was thrown open for settlement on the third day of July last. The mountains are about forty miles in extent east and west and about fifteen miles north and south. Parts of the mountains are covered with thick timber, and there are dozens of beautiful lakes.

We held meetings for a week, with good interest and good congregations. Yesterday Bro. Sparling buried six honest souls under the liquid wave, and we feel that they will be a credit to the church. Bro. Sparling left for home yesterday, to take care of his crop. I intend to stay here for a while and do what I can. It is harvest time, and quite hard to hold meetings.

The Saints are all good and kind, and seem to want to do what they can for the advancement of the work.

Your brother in Christ,

GEO. W. THORBURN.

ADA, I. T., July 31.

Editors Herald:—Myself, husband, father, mother, and sister-in-law were baptized into this church five years ago, at the Shawnee branch, Red River county, Texas, and moved from there to Wilburton, I. T., where we lived two years. If any of the elders ever come to Ada, inquire for J. S. Reed. The people here need the gospel. All kinds of preaching except the gospel.

It is the first time I have been isolated from the Saints, and it is very lonesome; but by the help of God I will try to live my religion and let my light shine.

Your sister contending for the faith once delivered to the saints,

TANNIE REED.

IMOGENE, Iowa, August 8.

Editors Herald:—As soon as possible after General Conference we finished up our temporal affairs and made ready to enter into our "Father's business." For several weeks we labored at or near home, preaching in our home branch at Tabor, also at Bartlett, Thurman, and McPaul. June 14 we packed our grip and started forth into the harvest field, preaching at Hamburg, Riverton, and once at Shenandoah. Bro. Henry Kemp came to our help at Riverton, and we believe that good was done, one being baptized and others near the kingdom.

Last Friday we commenced meetings at the Keystone schoolhouse near this place, with fair audiences and good interest since. Brn. George Kemp and W. W. Gaylord drove eighteen miles from Tabor to lend a helping hand, which they did, to the comfort and satisfaction of all, Bro. Gaylord administering the sacrament and Bro. Kemp preaching once on Sunday. Meetings will be continued over next Sunday with an omission of two nights. We trust good may be done.

In entering upon the work to which we have been appointed we look forward with bright hopes for the future, knowing that the promises of the Spirit made to us at our baptism fourteen years ago, and at various times since, have begun to be fulfilled. There have been times when it seemed that those promises could not be fulfilled, but our faith in them has never wavered, and now that some of the obstructions have been removed we are willing to trust God still for the future, that others may be moved away, and that we will be able to accomplish the work we have undertaken.

Recognizing the fact that this is God's work, it is our desire to keep self in the background. If humility shall go with diligence, and faithfulness with our prayers, then God may be able to work through us to the accomplishment of his designs and the fulfillment of his promises. Not for worldly honor but for the salvation of souls and the glory of God do we wish to labor, and so long as we are worthy do we hope to so work.

Joy and peace have come to us in our administrations thus far, because of the Spirit's enlightening influence, which has sustained us while presenting the truth, and under its tutorship we hope to develop into an efficient worker for the Lord.

We feel to express here our appreciation of the fatherly counsel and brotherly cheer of our beloved missionary, Bro. Henry Kemp. His faithfulness is a worthy example for all to follow. May God sustain him through his remaining years as he has in the past. May God be with all his people.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES FRY.

FORT WORTH, Texas, August 7.

Editors Herald:—Wife and I attended services at the Mormon tabernacle in Salt Lake City, Sunday, July 29, and while we enjoyed the singing, we did not take the same interest in the preaching services. The services occupied two hours, and three persons held forth during that time, two being missionaries just returned from their mission, and who related their experiences while out in the field, so that their preaching partook of the nature of a testimony meeting. The other speaker was John Henry Smith. While the preaching of the last-named gentleman might have been edifying to the members of that body, it certainly was not so to us, and we were not sorry when he finished. He did not seem to have much use for the Bible or any other church work, at least we did not hear him quote from them. The laity seemed to be devout and very sincere, but we cannot so think of the leaders.

Leaving Salt Lake Sunday evening, we traveled in company with one of Brigham Young's daughters, Susie Young Gates, and one of his granddaughters, a Miss Gates, as far as Provo, and spent the time canvassing our respective doctrines. Mrs. Gates strenuously upheld the doctrine of polygamy, but failed to impress us that it was a good or true doctrine; but she did make an impression on us in another direction, namely, too much controversy in our church papers. She said some one was sending her the Autumn Leaves, and she thought there was much truth in that magazine, and liked it very much, but was surprised to see, or rather read, of so much backbiting and controversy going on in its pages, and made the remark, "A house divided against itself cannot stand." Then she went on to tell how it was utterly impossible for such things to be allowed in their church papers, or magazines, drawing the comparison between the respective organizations.

Like Mrs. Gates, we think there is too much controversy allowed in our publications; and many a time I have held back a paper from going the rounds, circulating, for that very reason, not wishing outsiders to see there was any contention among us. While we do not believe it is wise to arbitrarily refuse the privilege of discussing any article or letter appearing in our publications, still it would not hurt to limit or curtail the desire to appear in print so much; the desire to make some one feel little and others big.

The writer met with the Saints at Salt Lake City, and was sorry to see so few out at services, as I cannot bring myself to think that the twenty-two that were at church comprise the total strength of our people in that city.

We admired Salt Lake City very much, and the many handsome buildings there. Very wide streets, too wide, when the question of paving them comes up.

We arrived safely at home last Friday, and would be pleased to see any of the ministry or Saints passing through our town.

Your brother,

J. E. NICOLL.

MILO, Iowa, August 8.

Editors Herald:—I have been trying to get acquainted with the needs of the field, so the labors of the missionaries can be placed where the greatest need exists.

In the latter part of June I had four nights discussion with Elders Hawkeswood and Mortensen, of the Utah church. They were carrying around a certificate copy of some parts of the Nauvoo Expositor, that was declared a nuisance by the city council and ordered destroyed, and heralding it abroad as an "official document." That it had the "Seal of the State of Iowa" upon it. The seal was a natorial seal to the effect that the paper thus exhibited was a true copy of what was in the Expositor. It was pronounced official, for it had a ten cent revenue stamp upon it. They also declared that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, and that they could give names of his wives and dates when they were married. I challenged them repeatedly to do so, but they did not. They evidently had met some of our elders upon that question before, and they didn't want the testimony of those women examined. I believe one of them said he had met H. N. Hansen and had been abused by him. I suppose Bro. Hansen told him some things he knows, and possibly told some things Brigham or some of the rest have said, and that would be abuse. The truth looks brighter the more it is contrasted with errors. I am thankful that there is no history of our past that makes us feel bad if the curtains are drawn aside and our past is brought to the light.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The district conference held at Richland Creek branch was a pleasant, peaceable, and profitable one. All seemed to feel well, spiritually. The preaching all seemed to be of the practical kind, exhorting the Saints to a closer walk with God.

I have been with Bro. Kephart for nearly four weeks, preaching to the Saints and friends where he had opened the work. I have done most of the preaching, as he insisted that the people have heard him so much. Bro. K. has done a good work in opening new fields, and I believe that is his especial calling. I find noble Saints trying to let their light shine, all through the district; but in places there are some who are a hindrance to the work. We are sorry that it is so, for their own and for the work's sake.

It will be my aim to reach Eagle Grove about December first, and open up new work southwest of town, where I had a good hearing and a pressing invitation to return, last June. July 30 I preached the funeral sermon of Bro. Weldon, at Oskaloosa. He had been a helpless invalid for, I believe, about six years, and his good wife, who was loved for her own worth and highly spoken of by all the Saints, had broken down under the strain of constant care of husband and family and had been taken to the hospital for insane a few weeks before. It was, indeed, a sad family of bereft children that surrounded the bier. Text for the sermon was, "O death, where is thy sting." It seems that under such circumstances death would not have a bitter sting, but would be "swallowed up in victory."

Baptized one at Oskaloosa, Sr. Maggie Baxter. I am sure she will be an honor to the work if she is raised under the influence of Sr. Young, with whom she was then staying. She is an orphan fifteen years old. Sr. Young is one of God's noble women—a woman with a heart to sympathize with, and hands to help, the needy at all times, day or night. It is very wearing on the body, but she can truly say, "I have done my duty." Would to God there were many more like her, then it would not be so hard on anyone.

I hope to see Saints from all parts of the district at our reunion at Colfax, August 31 to September 8. Your brother in Christ,

D. M. RUDD.

SILVER LAKE, Mass., August 6.

Editors Herald:—The Massachusetts reunion opened here last Saturday. Twenty-five tents and a commissary, assembly tent on the ground. A number of persons are occupying houses. The attendance is not large; rather tame for a Massachusetts reunion. The grove is large and beautiful, lying along a delightful, fresh water lake. The fresh water is the only disappointing part. It detracts from the enthusiasm of bathing. Salt water is preferred, both for pleasure and health. There are no attractions but the grove and lake. The community knows but little of us, hence a chance for missionary efforts.

Of the missionary force, Brn. M. H. Bond, F. M. Sheehy, George Robley, U. W. Greene, Holmes J. Davison and wife, George Gates, George Smith, F. G. Pitt and wife, Richard Bullard (Calvin Rich) are present, together with the brave workers of the district, both brethren and sisters. Yesterday's services were good. Two were baptized. The Fisher boys, Bro. Busiel, etc, are in evidence. Saints are well and all goes finely.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, August 8.

Editors Herald:—Owing to sickness in my family I was unable to leave home for this field until June 1. I visited and preached some in Council Bluffs and Hazel Dell, Iowa, reaching this city June 12.

I was placed in charge of the work here, but, so far, have spent but little time in the city, excepting on Sundays. For several weeks I assisted Bro. Pender with tent down in Utah county. As a rule we had good attendance and a lively time generally. People seem more willing to investigate and reason upon the points of difference. Last week I went to Sandy and spoke several times to the Scandinavian people. In the city we have three preaching services on Sunday, two in English and one in Scandinavian.

During my absence of nine years from this field conditions, so far as I have been able to observe, have changed materially; but as yet they do not do like we have done to their elders—invite them to preach in our churches. Some of the bishops even refuse to read our notices.

I have it from good authority that polygamy among the old stock is in a flourishing condition; but there is but little danger of the younger generations perpetuating that crime. Not long ago I heard a young lady make the statement that she was raised in polygamy, that she "just hated it," that her father was a regular old fanatic religiously, and that if she ever married a man it would be with the understanding that he should have but one wife. A young man, born and raised under similar conditions, upon being asked to state candidly what he thought about polygamy, said that he did not need to give his opinion, but simply state that his mother upon her deathbed, called him and his sister to her side and made them promise that they would "never enter into it." Strange that a people claiming to believe in the Book of Mormon would allow the history contained in Jacob 2: 2, to be repeated among them.

On the 24th of last month some additions to the Brigham Young monument were made and unveiled, consisting of bronze figures of an Indian and pioneer. The crowd was not very large on this occasion, nor was the enthusiasm very great. George Q. Cannon, among others, made a little speech, praising B. Young in particular, for his wonderful feat in leading the people to this desert place. He iterated the silly statement, that nothing in history could compare with this wonderful work of B. Young. The one approaching the nearest unto it, he said, was Moses leading the Israelites out of Egypt; but even that was comparatively insignificant in many respects. Listening, I wondered if Cannon and others, who talk so foolishly, ever read carefully the account of Moses and the Israelites. Comparing the two events, one can hardly avoid the conclusion that George must be getting weak-minded.

A biographical sketch of Brigham Young and his wives has lately been published here, according to which he had in all twenty-six wives. Ten of those women had no children, six only one child each. I mention this for the reason that the socalled revelation on polygamy says, respecting the "muchly" married man: "They are given unto him to multiply and replenish the earth" (paragraph 63). Either those women were given to the wrong man, or else the lord who revealed this arrangement was unable to accomplish his purposes.

This strange report comes from a late conference held in Logan: "He [G. Q. Cannon] went into a detailed explanation of the failure of the church to elect a president of the Quorum of Apostles. He told of Brigham Young's claims and said they were submitted to the full quorum, the result being that while Brigham was known to have been ordained an apostle before Joseph F. Smith, there had been no public notice of it served upon the people, and hence Joseph F. was ranked above Young. The latter, he said, had agreed to abide by this decision.

"Two points in this speech strike me as being very peculiar, and can be explained only upon the hypothesis that a change of policy respecting succession in the presidency is imminent, for which leading men are now preparing the minds of the people. First, it is a well known fact that according to the precedent established by this institution, it is the right of the present B. Young to be president of the Twelve, and, when Mr. Snow dies, to become president of the church. And still they failed to elect him. Second, why should Joseph F. Smith be mentioned at all in connection with this affair, being that he is not now, and has not for many years been, a member of that quorum? He has acted as counselor to John Taylor, W. Woodruff, and L. Snow, the quorum of the twelve being full without him. It is said that the people do not want a second Brigham Young. But why not? If B. Y. number one was such a great man, why not have another, he being "a chip of the old block?" Are they going to go back on the only rule, on the strength of which alone Young, Taylor, Woodruff, and Snow, have been made presidents of their church? Have they decided to have a Smith next? And is that Smith going to be Joseph F.? We shall see. But why not take another step, and acknowledge the right of the literal descendents of the chosen seed to whom the promises were given. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 18.)

Another encouraging feature of the situation here is that the people are taking more kindly to the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures, by Joseph Smith, it being quoted in their magazines, etc. We used to be told, when presenting that work, that it had been "perverted by the Josephites."

The Scandinavian population here seem to take hold of our work more readily than others, and I think that Sandheden's Banner should be started again. The paper would now be read by many who would not look at it before. The Scandinavian membership having increased in the church considerably since its suspension, I think the paper would be sustained and do good service in this and other states.

It is generally supposed that the Brighamites have done wonders in the Scandinavian countries in making converts, but their own statistics show that, notwithstanding they have had hundreds of missionaries over there right along, only 12,317 from Denmark, 2,312 from Norway, and 6,942 from Sweden have come to Utah the last fifty years. These figures were brought out in a speech during the Scandinavian jubilee held here in June in remembrance of what they term the introduction of the gospel in Scandinavia fifty years ago.

Bro. Albertson spoke for us last Sunday evening. Elders coming this way, please inform me in time, and stop and give us a sermon. Address me P. O. Box 168, or No. 118 Center street. Hopefully in the work,

PETER ANDERSON.

Editors Herald:—Some may be wondering what I am doing, or have been. On returning home from General Conference, I found Sr. Devore almost prostrated. She grew worse and worse until we called in a doctor, and she is still under his care. Thus I have been prevented from doing any missionary work in my field. Though she is slowly improving, we think it will be several weeks before she will have so rallied that I can leave her. We ask the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, In hope, as ever,

CHEROKEE, Iowa, August 9.

Editors Herald:—At Mallard, one week ago today it was my privilege to lead four precious souls down to the waters of baptism; and there they entered into solemn covenant with God to serve him with all their heart, might, mind, and strength, and then in token of that covenant they submitted their entire beings for burial in the water, thereby signifying their entire consecration to God and his Christ. They were also confirmed in a meeting of the Saints at the house of Brother Truog, near Mallard, that they might receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which, undoubtedly, they will be able to enjoy, inasmuch as they seek unto God with all their hearts. It was indeed a pleasant sight to behold, an intelligent man and woman, with two intelligent daughters, grown to womanhood, thus bowing in obedience to the divine law, "Ye must be born again." "Born of water and of the Spirit." May God help them to keep their covenant to the end, then eternal life is theirs. I have no right to claim these converts as the fruits of my labors. Other ministers had broken the ground, planted the seed, and tended it. I had only watered it, but I felt it an honor to discharge that duty. Brethren Ford, Butterworth, Hunt, Whiting, and Baker and perhaps others had done the bulk of the work, and I am glad to let them know their labor had not been in vain.

I preached six sermons in the Saints' chapel at Mallard. I would have preached more, but the farmers were all busy in the harvest field, and I do not like to overtax the people. I visited among them, and sought to give encouragement to all. Audiences were not large. The Saints seem in earnest and very desirous to see the work spread. They have a good Sunday school, in which all, young and old, seem to take great interest. If the Saints remain true to their covenants with God, they will yet see a good ingathering of their children into the gospel fold, and they will come understandingly, and devotedly to the work.

Parents, do not let your anxiety overbalance your wisdom. Never make religion a bore to your children. Seek proper opportunities to present the claims of God and Christ upon them. Let your examples illustrate the truth, and your lives be continual, living, gospel sermons; and your prayer will not be uttered in vain. Then your children will call you blessed.

Religio friends will be glad to know that every Sabbath evening they have a Religio meeting; but as they gave way for preaching services. I did not witness their doings, but from the general expressions I judge they are interested, and I trust good will result. I was treated with great kindness by all the Saints, and I truly appreciate the same, and may, if God wills, visit them again, when it will be more convenient to hold meetings than now.

May God in his kindness bless them and give them grace to endure to the end, for, "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." CHARLES DERRY.

THE ORIGIN, OBJECT, AND DESIGN OF THE PRAYER UNION.

ITS HISTORY.

Dear Sister Walker:—To write upon this subject has long been upon my mind, and of late there have come urgent requests that I do so. Twenty years ago the writer left the Baptist Church and became identified with the Latter Day Saints. I had not previously had any association with the Saints, and that which struck my attention most when I came among them was what seemed to me a great lack of spiritual religion. I do not mean emotionalism, but a calm abiding realization of the divine presence—a realization that puts restraint upon frivolity and a watch upon our daily conversation and conduct; that rejoices in the service of the Lord's house, and the study of his word. It seemed to me there was almost an entire absence of these things among the sisterhood, and the young of both sexes, even among the priesthood to my discernment, it was not remarkably great for, how can a man be spiritual minded when that which is esteemed the better half of him is engrossed in worldliness and frivolity?

Sunday school in those days among the Saints was very crude, where any existed, and very difficult to maintain an interest in, with either the young or the old. While in the homes little or nothing seemed to be done towards spiritual instruction or moral training. There were exceptions of course in all of these respects, but exceptions are said to prove a rule. This state of things seemed strange, and disappointing to me, in a people who believed in a continuance of divine communication with men, and the association of angels. About five years later the Mothers' Home Column was started in the Herald, in the effort to awaken both the church and the home to the needs of the children. While this was largely blessed in its appointed work, it did not reach all the evil. Then came the call of the Spirit to the church to "Come up higher," and the question presented itself, What can be done to bring the sisters to a higher plane of thought and enjoyment in the Christian life? As the result of this thought, this question which was borne in upon the deepest consciousness of two of the sisters, myself being one and the editor of the Home Column being the other, came the desire to labor to this end. Accordingly being one in heart, and both feeling most keenly the need above referred to, we agreed to make this question one of private and special prayer, each at her own home, and as the result of much earnest prayer and consultation, a plan was formulated for the purpose of bringing the sisterhood everywhere into a closer union and more active coöperation in training and instructing their children and leading them to the fountain of living waters. This plan contemplated the study of the three standard books of the church in the form of memory verses, which it was intended the sisters should commit to memory, and in this way would be storing the mind with gems of divine truth, elevating their thoughts above the groveling level of every day gossip and drudgery, and cultivating their higher nature in obedience with the divine injunction to "Come up higher."

In accordance with and carrying out the above plans a list of subjects for prayer was written and published in leaflet form, to be distributed on application. This was done in order to save space in the Home Column by the necessity of constant republication.

The subjects for prayer and the plan of operation as then outlined met the approval of both Bro. Joseph Smith and his associate, Bro. W. W. Blair,—the latter affirming that he believed it to be an inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

The plan was that all sisters, young or old, but especially the mothers of families, should unite in reading the books, the lessons to be selected and published each week, and in prayer for the subjects named on the leaflets; for one hour in one day in each week. These subjects were divided into four parts, one for each Thursday in the month, and one extra when there should be a fifth Thursday; but each month should begin with the first and proceed through the month in the order in which they appeared, so that there should be a union of petition and study. They were as follows:—

"First Thursday. For the church; its ministers and membership. That righteousness, love, and zeal in the work and spread of the gospel may increase, and to this end the Saints with one heart and mind bring their tithes and offerings into the Lord's storehouse. That God will continue to reveal his mind to his servants in the direction of the affairs of the church.

"Second Thursday. Prayer for our families by name, and for the families of each other, and those of the ministry; for the youth of the church in general.

"Third Thursday. For missions and Sunday school work, and the church publications; also for the poor, sick, and afflicted.

"Fourth Thursday. For Zion, our country, its welfare and prosperity; and its speedy purification by the reception of the truth; that the scattered remnants be gathered in, and the kingdom of Christ be established.

"Fifth Thursday. The gathering of Israel to their land, and the restoration to them of the pure gospel in its fullness, and its acceptance by them to their everlasting peace."

In addition to these subjects which each one uniting with us obligated herself to pray for, all special requests for prayer coming from the sick and afflicted, were to receive attention, and the passages of scripture designated as "memory verses" were to be committed to memory.

A REVIEW OF RESULTS.

In these it will be seen that it was sought to embody all that is nearest and dearest to the hearts and the faith of true Latter Day Saints. They were written twelve years ago; let those who have been in the church long enough compare those times with the status of the church at the present time and see how far those prayers have been answered. Has not righteousness, love, and zeal in the work increased wonderfully, among the sisterhood at least? And the consequent spread of the gospel has followed. The law of tithing was then but little understood or observed, though it had been a law of the church from the beginning. Now this is a systematic part of the work, and only now the Lord has anything like a "storehouse" in any place.

More care is now taken in the families of Saints in proper training of their children, and more responsibility realized. The youth of the church have been blessed by the establishment of the Religio, and in many other ways the church is showing its care for them which then it did not. Who then foresaw the present proportions and systematic order of the Sunday school, and its associations? Our poor have been provided with a home and care. Our hearts have been more sympathizingly united in bearing each other's burdens, and love for each other has resulted.

In these times of wars and rumors of wars, how have our prayers for our country been answered in her preservation, and as the dangers increase about her, how important that she bear a part in our petitions.

THE DESIGN.

Something of this will be understood from the preceding; but further we would note that there was no organization contemplated, each home and each family was to be as an altar to God. But many sisters found it inconvenient to keep the hour at home, being subject to interruptions, and such desired that they have the privilege to meet together, and that proposition was made in the Home Column, but met opposition from some few of the priesthood. The opinion of the heads of the church was asked, who decided that there was nothing in the law to prevent the sisters, or any other lay members from assembling for such purpose as set forth in these articles.

Acting on this decision, those sisters who found it most convenient to do so, met together and organized local unions, while others who so preferred, continued to observe the time alone in their own homes, with such of their families as were able to join them. A general organization was proposed, or suggested, in the Home Column, so that the sisters attending General Conference would be enabled to hold meetings, but no such organization was ever effected to my knowledge.

In conducting the local unions they were distinctly instructed that no question affecting branch governmental affairs should be discussed or brought before the Prayer Union in any way. The last clause of the first subject containing all that we need to pray for regarding such matters; "That God will continue to reveal his mind to his servants in the direction of the affairs of the church." Observe, we are not told to ask the Lord to reveal his mind to us, but to his servants who have direction over the affairs of the church.

As long as sisters in the church are recipients of the Holy Ghost, in common with the brethren, it will be their privilege to enjoy spiritual gifts which are likely to be manifest; but let wisdom be one of those gifts. If the Lord is pleased to reveal his mind to them, in the Prayer Union, let it be used for their own instruction and not as usurping authority, and it should be especially borne in mind that our meetings are for prayer and not for testimony.

Instruction in the settlement of branch matters should be given in the branch meetings alone, if the Lord is pleased to speak through a sister, for there the priesthood have opportunity to judge of the spirit that moves the speaker.

That which is given us in private, whether it be by answer to prayer, dreams, visions, or the word of prophecy, should be considered private instruction to the individual for their own guidance; it is not always the part of wisdom to relate; just so it may be in the Prayer Union. In any case nothing so given imparts authority to the one to whom given.

It is my opinion that if the Prayer Union is continued, it should confine itself to the subjects given, as they have been approved; and embrace everything which makes for righteousness, harmony, and peace; and the work outlined by them give full scope to all the energies that we have to spare. The permission and approval given by the heads of the church to the subjects of prayer for the objects named, should not be made to cover all the innovations that may be brought into the local unions. To my own knowledge there are organizations calling themselves Prayer Unions, which are wide apart as the poles from its object. This should not be, for it does harm to the union, and creates disorder while they act under the sanction given to the union.

THE following list of books is furnished by a boy of thirteen years, and is the product of his own mind. He is almost a prodigy in the history line. It will be remembered that he had a "History of the United States" running in the Hope some time ago. We give his list as food for thought for the thoughtful.—ED.

"My list of books is given below. It may not be anything like the others, for mamma would not let me look at the lists published in the Herald until mine was made out. SOME WAYS OF INTERESTING SUNDAY SCHOOL PUPILS.

In our Sunday school we have tried many ways to induce the pupils to study their lessons, but have not been as successful as we desire. The plan which has worked best is as follows: We have had badges printed with the words, "Banner Class," and if all the pupils in the class have studied their lesson, the teacher is accorded the privilege and pleasure to wear this banner during the last march and the remainder of the session. This seems to interest the pupils, as they take pride in having their teacher wearing a ribbon banner, as it advertises their class. (By the way, Miss Jennie Page, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, care of Brice Hospital, painted our banners, and we consider the work very nicely done. For Sunday school work she will paint six or more ribbon banners at ten cents apiece, when the ribbon is furnished. She cannot paint on satin ribbon, but desires a sleek surface, as watered ribbon or many other kinds that are furnished at the stores. The ribbon should be two inches wide, either white or cream, or light yellow, pink, or blue, and each banner should be one third of a yard in length. We consider this a good investment; and it will also help our invalid sister, as she is not possessed of much wealth and she enjoys painting. Please try this scheme, and see if you will not profit by it. In our Christian work let us reach out and help those who are suffering, and the Lord will reward us. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and it will return after many days.")

Now let us return to our Sunday school. We think one of the principal reasons children grow tired of the Sunday school is that the work is not varied enough. Many of the older ones grow tired, also. Their instructors do not realize that they must have a change. They cannot be staid and dignified like old folks. Make just as much of the special days as possible, Easter, Children's Day, and Christmas. We considered our Children's Day entertainment a success this year from the compliments we received. We had an exercise for some of the primary pupils (some are too little and timid to speak) entitled, "A Few Nevers," as, "Never chew gum in Sunday school or church," and "Never whisper or rattle your pennies in Sunday school when some one is offering prayer." We also had an exercise entitled "Children's Day" for larger pupils, where each letter was represented by a verse in the Bible recited by that number of pupils. Two of our young men, each wearing a white ribbon bow, acted as ushers, and escorted the children in their march down the aisle and up to the platform. The children enjoy anything out of the ordinary, and it is remarkable how well they perform when on dress parade. What seemed to please most of all was the "Flower Drill" by eight girls, ranging in ages from ten to thirteen all dressed in white. Each girl carried six paper roses in each hand, made in the design of a dumbbell. Some were all red, some all pink, and others mixed red and pink. The girls went through a number of calisthenic exercises, and the effect was very pretty in the evening. We had the platform enlarged so there was plenty of room for marching. The girls marched with their partners, singly, diagonally across the platform and crossed each other, or rather passed in front. The ushers also escorted them on to the platform.

We also have marching in our Sunday school before and after class. We think the superintendent should not offer prayer half of the time, have some of the teachers, other officers, have different ones to review the lesson. Any one who could not make a short prayer under any circumstances, should never be asked to pray for the little folks. We believe if we would follow the example of our Master, we would not make the little children weary. We also have a birthday box to receive all the pennies for our Christmas offering.

Trusting that this paper contains some good thoughts, and asking God's blessing in our Sunday school work, I am

Yours in the best of causes,

ALICE C. SCHWARTZ.

REUNION WORK IN 1900.

The General Superintendent left his home August 7, en route for the reunion at Hennessey, Oklahoma. And after a long, hot, and dusty journey, reached the camp ground in time to hear the exercises of the "Religio." We found a nice, shady ground, on which were encamped about one hundred happy Saints. They were feasting on spiritual things from the stand and on worldly things from their "community table."

The afternoon session was devoted to Religio work, which was good and well received. We are glad to note the progress made in that line. The Sunday school work will open up at eight a. m. tomorrow, with a teachers' meeting in charge of the General Superintendent. Sunday school in the afternoon at four o'clock. A good representation was had and considerable interest manifest. Institute work and Sunday school each day till Sunday is the order arranged.

The following officers were chosen: D. W. Thomas, district president; S. N. Gray, Jr., clerk; Charles E. Gray, treasurer. A decision was granted to change the name of Bruner branch to that of Johns Mills. A committee was appointed, consisting of Brn. H. Sparling, R. T. Walters, and D. W. CONVENTION NOTICES.

The Des Moines district Sunday schools have arranged to meet in convention at Colfax, Iowa, August, 31, the first day of the district reunion. Let those who are interested in this part of the Master's work be on the grounds Thursday evening preceding the convention. A great deal of special work has been planned along Sunday school lines to be accomplished during the reunion. Let each one discharge his personal responsibility and our schools will receive such impetus as never before known in the district. Among the questions to be discussed during the reunion are: "Is the Sunday school work as important to the church as the preaching of the word?" "The pupil's part in the Sunday school." "Would a good library increase the interest and attendance of the schools?" "Is it right to hold festivals, suppers, and sociables to raise money for Sunday school purposes?" There will be a literary and musical entertainment Friday evening, August 31. Let each one come prepared to as-

TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In ordering supplies for schools much inconvenience and positive annoyance to the office results from carelessness, which may be avoided by following these suggestions: (1) If there is a branch agent for the Herald Publishing House in your branch, let all supplies be ordered through this agent. (2) When ordering for the Sunday school, whenever a new person orders, be sure to give the name of the person to whom the supplies have been previously sent. This will prevent the frequent annoyance to both the office and schools of sending duplicate orders. (3) Be sure to sign your name to every order. If the order is not signed it will not be filled. (4) Send cash with order when at all practicable and save book accounts. (5) Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa, CATHER.—To Bro. W. C. and Sr. Mattie Cather, at St. Joseph, Missouri, July 7, 1900, a son, named Homer Ellis. Blessed July 27, by Bishops E. L. Kelley and E. A. Blakeslee, at the Saints' church.

DEWALD.—To Bro Milton and Sr. Lilly Dewald, a son, July 29, 1900, named Oren. Blessed August 6, 1900, by Elder C. E. Hand.

MARRIED.

ELLIS—WINDOWS.—At Lydney, England, July 28, 1900, Bro. Thomas, youngest son of Mr. Thomas Ellis, of English Bicknor, and Sr. Margaret Phylis Windows, only daughter of Mr. Maurice Windows, of Lydney, were united in marriage. The happy couple first presented themselves in the Church of England and honored the law of the land, and then returned to the Saints' church, Lydney, where Bro. A. N. Bishop performed the final ceremony according to the faith and practices of the church of the living God. We all wish the brother and sister a happy, prosperous, and useful life.

DIED.

PRYOR.—At Gladstone, Illinois, July 25, 1900, Elnore Pryor, aged 14 years, 10 months, and 20 days. Was baptized August 24, 1898. Funeral in charge of F. M. McDonald. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Surely she was one of those.

MCGALLIARD.—Isaac Everett McGalliard was born July 20, 1867; married to Sarah A. Price September 3, 1890; baptized January 16, 1894; died at his home three miles south of Fanning, Kansas, July 26, 1900, leaving a wife and an eight year old son to mourn. Thus has passed from us the fond and loving husband; the tender and devoted father; the noble and beloved brother; the earnest, steadfast Christian, and the honorable and upright citizen. A true steadfast worker in the cause of Christ, whose beacon light of love and compassion was cast athwart the tempestuous sea of faint and weary brothers and sisters, guiding them into the safe and secure harbor of the Lamb of God. Few were the days of his labor in the field of his Master, but abundant will be the harvest. Though death has intruded and consigned his gentle form to the cold earth, rudely sundering the cherished bonds of affection and leaving the hearthstone desolate; and Time may obliterate the impressions of friends and bury them deep beneath the rubbish of perplexing cares,—still the soul-cheering thought that his name is engraved in letters of gold in the imperishable Book of Life.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

NEBRASKA THE LAND OF PLENTY.

I wonder why it is that so many men spend their days working hard on rented farms, barely making enough to get along, with no great prospect ahead of owning their own homes, when within a few hours' journey is a land of plenty—Nebraska—where all kinds of grain and fruit can be raised with the least amount of labor; where cattle and hogs fed on corn bring a handsome profit; where the climate is healthful and churches and schools abound; where land is cheap and can be bought on very easy terms.

Think of this, and if you want information about the country send to me for "The Corn Belt," a beautifully illustrated monthly paper that tells all about Nebraska, and also for "The West Nebraska Grazing Country," an interesting illustrated booklet containing a large sectional map of Nebraska.

On the first and third Tuesdays of each month during the balance of this year cheap excursion tickets will be sold over our road to Nebraska, so that people may go and see for themselves. Ask your ticket agent about this. P. S. EUSTIS.

HOW DID JUDAS DIE?

Doubt as to whether Judas committed suicide is expressed in an article in the American Journal of Theology, edited by the divine faculty of the University of Chicago. St. Matthew says that after the betrayal of Jesus the traitor "went and hanged himself," but the writer of the article does not accept this statement as conclusive.

The man who casts this doubt on the Biblical account of the fate of the traitor is an authority on Biblical exegesis. He is J. Rendel Harris, a professor of Cambridge University, and well known to Biblical scholars as an authority in his particular branch of theology. He finds several reasons for discrediting the generally accepted story of the traitor's suicide. One of these is that in another part of the Bible, in the Acts, it is asserted that he bought a field with the pieces of silver, and then, "falling headlong, he burst asunder," which Professor Harris believes means that Judas died of dropsy. Another reason given by the scholar is that the suicide is not in keeping with Judas' character, and in this opinion he is supported by the opinion of many neurologists.

Taken as a whole the Cambridge authority thinks the story of Judas belongs largely to folklore. The means adopted by Judas to take his own life do not harmonize in the various books of the New Testament, and the attempts of men to harmonize them he regards as bordering on the ridiculous, especially in those "rationalizing" methods employed by Papias and Cosquin. The professor establishes the fact that the legendary death of Nadan, nephew of Ahikar, the Grand Vizier of Sennacherib of Assyria, was in accordance with St. Luke's story in the Acts of the death of Judas.

This similarity between the story of Judas and Nadan seems to have been the chief cause of leading to Professor Harris' investigation. This, he declares, leads to the "conference" that the one story has been the model for the other, or, at least, that the method adopted by the narrators of the two stories is a conventional one, in which case the latter series of legends becomes as unhistorical as the former.

MAY HAVE BEEN BORROWED.

"When, therefore, we say that Judas is a legendary imitation of the fictitious Nadan, we mean either that the first narrator of the horrible death of Judas actually imitated the story of the end of Nadan—a legend which may be shown to have been well known in New Testament times—or that he imitated the early story in an unconscious and indirect manner by using the same conventional method of getting rid of the villain of his tragedy. We can see, however, that there is so much parallelism between the two characters in question—the traitorous Nadan and Judas—that it is extremely probable that the question is a direct one. In any case, the value of the early Christian traditions with regard to the manner of death of the traitor is reduced almost to zero."

WHERE DOCTORS DIFFER.

Drawing conclusions in the final paragraph of his article, Professor Harris says:—

"It appears, then, that all matter of this kind is pseudo-historical and requires to be treated with extreme caution. The historical nucleus, if one exist, is for the most part microscopically small. Nor is it safe for the historian to make an idol out of either Josephus or St. Luke."

As between the New Testament versions and Professor Harris' opinions, Dr. Eugene S. Talbot, of Chicago, authority on degeneracy, accepts the story of the suicide as told in the Bible.

On the other hand, Dr. Oscar A. King, neurologist, considering Judas as a mere literary figure, speaks out of his experience with the criminal neurotic to say that if such a character as was Judas' commits suicide it is never from seeing the results of his plotting and conniving; that such types justify themselves, rather in all cases; that judged by the Bible story of the betrayal, Judas did hang himself, but because he had expected in the betrayal, that Christ in the last moment would have exercised his divine power to save himself and confound his enemies.

DID JUDAS BETRAY JESUS?

Nowhere does Professor Harris touch affirmatively or negatively upon the truth of the story of the betrayal. It may be that he takes all the rest for granted though he does not say so. Of the two stories of Judas' death, he says that after all the fantastic efforts at harmonizing them had failed, writers might have let the subject alone and waited.

"But," he writes, "a continuous stream of fallacious exegesis has flowed on, nor does there seem to be any prospect of its intermission."

Professor Harris thinks Matthew may have heard the story of Judas' bursting upon the ground and written it "hanged" in order to avoid the repulsiveness of the picture.

STORY OF NABAN.

Then, assuming that the account in the Acts is correct, he traces the story of Naban, nephew of the Grand Vizier Ahikar of the court of King Sennacherib in Assyria. Sennacherib, it appears, was worried at the growing age of Ahikar, and the fact that he had no son upon whom to impress his wisdom and statecraft. Accordingly the King told Ahikar to adopt Naban, son of Ahikar's sister, and rear him for a future Vizier.

Naban grew in wisdom and in viciousness in proportionate degree. One day he wrote treasonable papers, stamped them with the seal of the Grand Vizier, and caused his uncle to be deposed, imprisoned, and finally sentenced to be beheaded. It chanced that Ahikar had befriended the executioner on one occasion, and the man secreted Ahikar until occasion rose when the repentant king had need of Ahikar's counsel. The executioner confessed that the vizier was living; he was brought out of his retreat and saved the kingdom. Then, just when vengeance was to have been wreaked upon Naban, the seditious one "swelled up and burst asunder."

Professor Harris marks the unusual mode of death ascribed to the two men as pointing to the fictitiousness of both deaths. He makes no suggestions as to how Judas did die, but throws out every effort of later writers to show that Judas may have hanged himself, and burst, too.

RECONCILING THEORIES.

Among these "rationalizing" efforts to make harmony of the two stories, Professor Harris points out the theories in general that the rope broke, letting the body fall, and that the rope was cut, letting it fall.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Especially Professor Harris singles out the theories of Theophylact and Papias for contravention.

Theophylact has assumed that Judas, in betraying Christ, had a sublime confidence in Christ's power and willingness to save himself from his enemies, and that when he saw preparations for putting Christ to death, disappointment was more the cause of suicide than remorse could have been.

LIKE HEROD'S DEATH.

Professor Harris goes further and brings in Josephus, not to bulwark Scripture, but his own reasoning. Josephus' story of the death of Herod the Great was that the man "swelled and burst." All these kindred stories of death by bursting the professor shows to have been of conventional form, and he refers to Cosquin's finding, which is that the story of the suicide was "canonical, but not historical."

Writing of M. Cosquin's harmonizing of the story, Professor Harris says:—

"If he wishes to say that this story is a romance with a moral intention he may obtain our assent at the expense of our faith in the documents, but to apply an apologetic method of this kind to the New Testament is to introduce a critical factor that is disturbing to something more than the decrees of the councils. Clearly, we shall have to interpret the New Testament, with allowance for possible folklore throughout. Nor is it even certain that all the cases that may turn up will show a moral intention as the kernel of the non-historical incident."

Between the lines at least Professor Harris has said that Judas did not commit suicide. He attempts no analysis of the traitor's character to disprove the story. He expresses no opinion of Theophylact's argument that Judas himself was disappointed in the submissiveness of Christ to his murderers. He argues only that because "swelling and bursting" was a common means of death ascribed to semi-mythical characters in history, the death of Judas by that improbable form is of folklore origin.

ST. MATTHEW'S VERSION.

According to St. Matthew the story of the scene in the temple after the betrayal reads:—

"When the morning was come all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel of the people to put him to death.

"And when they had bound him they led him away and delivered him to Pontius Pilate, the Governor.

"Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders.

"Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood. And they said, 'What is that to us? See thou to that.'

"And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed and went and hanged himself."

AS TOLD BY PETER.

In the Acts of the Apostles Peter is made to tell of the death of the traitor:—

"And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples and said (the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty):

"Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus.

"For he was numbered with us and had obtained part of this ministry.

"Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder.

"And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood."

REMORSE UNLIKELY.

As a neurologist, having experience of criminals in many types, Dr. Oscar A. King was asked as to the likelihood of the Judas of popular fancy killing himself from remorse.

"I should say that he would not," said the doctor, emphatically. "If a man can deliberately plot to sell the life of another for money, knowing that the life will be sacrificed, he is not likely to experience remorse. Almost without exception the criminal blames some one else for his acts or his condition.

"In my experience of neurotic types, where men have come to me blaming themselves for some wrongdoing, they have been, almost without exception, guiltless of any wrong.

"The question as to whether Judas committed suicide is a question sprung at the wrong end of the proposition. If Judas lived and followed Christ, finally to betray him as he is supposed to have betrayed him, the further Bible accounts as to his death should not be questioned."—Chicago Tribune.

Lucy M. Garnett, a writer well known in the Cosmopolitan, writes an interesting sketch of Salonica in the Catholic World Magazine for August. She calls it "A New Jerusalem" owing to the great number of Jews which have settled there. It is old Thessalonica, to whose people St. Paul wrote one of his Epistles.

THE MODERN JERUSALEM.

Bote aus Zion, a mission journal published in Jerusalem, gives an account of the modernizing of the ancient Jewish capital, which is of special interest in connection with the Zionist congress. During the present century the sleeping city has been thoroughly modernized, and it is since that time that Christians have been given the right to acquire property, for, until recently, even in official utterances Christians were designated as "dogs." Recently the city has prospered greatly, the population having increased from 23,000 in 1851 to about 60,000 in 1900. Pilgrims from all parts of the world go there and there has been a great revival of trade and business. Modern hotels followed the construction of the railroad from Jaffa, and during the last five years telephones, telegraphs, and other modern inventions have been installed in the City of David. Some of the more conservative people, not only Mohammedans but others with a Ruskinian longing for the discomforts of our ancestors and a despising of modern things, regard these changes as vandalism. Yet they are to be commended if only because they make the ancient city the Mecca of more pilgrims from all over the world.—Chicago Tribune, August 20, 1900.

SONG.

As a lark with broken wing,
Fluttering in the lowly grass,
Ne'er may soar, yet still may sing
To the dream-white clouds that pass,
Scorned of fate, and maimed by wrong,
Still to thee I lift my song.

As a star with faithful light,
Hidden by the glorious day,
Keeping still its lustre bright
Till the glory dies away,
If thy happiness should flee,
In the darkness turn to me.

HEALINGS. BY WHAT POWER?

So many queries arise concerning healings among the Saints and the power or powers through which the healings are had, that no one general answer seems to cover all cases.

For instance. It is held by some that healings are wrought by magnetic force; that some are more largely endowed by nature with the magnetic forces than others, and that these are healers. To us, as we understand the subject, mesmerism, personal magnetism, hypnotism, faith cure, and Christian Science, so-called, are all of one and the same origin, and are not parts of the "anointing with oil and laying on of hands" provided for in the scriptural injunctions.

"They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

This is a part of the Divine economy; and, so far as is known, there is no warrant in Holy Writ for tampering with any minor and merely human agency humanly directed and controlled, such as magnetic, mesmeric, and hypnotic undoubtedly are.

As to Christian Science, it is a conjointure of human faith and an apparent faith in God, proceeding in methods not laid down in Scripture, and apparently assumed to evade plain provisions of the word itself.

We know something of mesmerism, magnetism, both of the human body and of the mechanical, biology, or the science of the mind, hypnotism and health science, and are quite sure that none of these are in any wise related to the scriptural method commanded in Mark 16, and the statement of James 5.

Having had some acquaintance with the methods of those first named, long before engaging in the spiritual work of the church, we have for forty years now been able to contrast those methods with those last named and recognize the dissimilarity existing between them.

The results which follow anointing with oil and the laying on of hands, are not traceable to the arts of either mesmerism, magnetism, or hypnotism, or the exercise of human will, though human agencies are employed as a means to an end.

A brother writes us to state that some of the Saints go so far as to pay money to learn the lessons of healing, professing to endow inanimate articles, handkerchiefs, cloths, etc., with healing virtues to be sent to the ailing and the sick.

This has a sound of compliance with apostolic usage; and instances have occurred in the later history of the church in which articles have been blessed under priestly hands, sent to sick persons at a distance, to whom there was neither time nor opportunity for an administration by elders in person and good resulted therefrom.

The operation of mesmerism, magnetism, and hypnotism is largely that of human powers alone, while that of laying on of hands is of the spiritual, and its presence and employment under the control and direction of the Divine mind, exercised according to the divine knowledge of the subject and his surroundings and conditions.

Upon no other hypothesis than the above can we account for the fact that some are healed by administration, while others are not, under conditions which seem to be alike to human eyes, but may be widely different in the eyes of God.

Hypnotism, magnetism, mesmerism, are all exercised upon professed knowledge on the part of those who practice them. There is no claim to divine direction, no trust to divine wisdom; it is human power under human control, exercised at the direction of human wisdom. In the one case it is man's will, in the other it is the Divine will.

The Saint who pays money to learn the mode of operation in either of the three named influences, may obtain a species of knowledge of human possibilities, within human reach. But, as our experience has proved to us, no permanent or lasting good has come from such knowledge, it is to us of doubtful propriety to become learned in this direction. It is better to know of the things of God, so far as these have been revealed.

That Christian Science has done some wonderful things may be admitted, but that success follows the ministrations to the diseased in any extraordinary degree is very doubtful. That success does not always follow the administrations of those who believe and practice the laying on of hands may be admitted, also, for it is true. But, the failures are exceptions, while benefit and recoveries are the rule.

We are impressed that "the spirit" by which healings are accomplished in cases where magnetism, mesmerism, hypnotism, health science, and Christian Science methods are employed is practically one and the same, and is the "spirit of man which is in him," and is neither the Spirit of God nor the spirit of the Devil. We do not believe that all disease is of the Devil by instigation, or a direct interference with the powers that be to inflict annoyance, distress, pain, sickness, and death upon man. Much of the sickness among the Saints is due to departure from the rules of health and right living, for which the sufferers are alone to be blamed. We know of numbers who have succumbed to death because of violated laws, for whom no intervention was had through administration, for the reason that the causes which brought upon them the condition of sickness were continued by a persistent following in the course of conduct which created the conditions at the first. Healing given of God under such conditions would be in effect an indorsement of the evil producing cause.

Of course such conditions do not exist in all cases. Many women and some men are compelled to live in sickness-producing surroundings, and under conditions imposed upon them for which they have no means of alleviation. It is hard in such cases to be reconciled to the results which follow; but, where no responsibility can be fixed and a remedy applied to alleviate the conditions those who suffer to the limit of death "die in the Lord." So states the word.

There is absolute safety in the method appointed in the word. There is spiritual danger to a greater or lesser degree in every other, no matter what its name, or however specious its promises.

Instances in which the Devil is responsible for the sicknesses of man are rare. None such may come, except for cause, or for trial of faith and integrity. If for cause it is when men open the avenues of their being to the incoming of adverse spirits and deliberately invite them to come in and possess their tabernacles. Such will pay dearly for their temerity, by loss of faith, by loss of control of themselves, by created mischief to others and by final loss in spiritual life here and hereafter. A man may possibly invite other spirit than his own to enter and occupy his body, in pursuit of knowledge, once; but should he do this the second time he does a foolish thing to his sorrow, to be manifest soon or late.

There are some who are constantly seeking for manifestations of promise for good concerning the sick when loved ones of their own or others are afflicted, and by reason of importunity besiege the Lord, for signs corroborative of their desires, and becoming impatient if their implorings and pleading do not meet with favorable replies. Such lay themselves liable to imposition from themselves in misleading and misunderstood or misapplied manifestations. Many of these, we believe the greater part of them, are the result of personal solicitude and enthusiasm—prophesying out of their desire rather than the voice of the Spirit. These prophecies are hurtful, because so many of them fail. Paul's instruction in 1 Corinthians 13, that, "Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail," is aptly applicable to these mistaken and misapplied prophecies. Faith, hope, charity, these are of the best. Faith and hope may abide; but charity is the best and the greatest, for it endureth forever—the love of God.

It is better that in the practice of administering to the sick the elders confine themselves to the anointing with oil and the laying on of hands, "praying over them," who ask for the ordinance, exercising all the faith needful so far as they can, and then just leave the matter with Him whose wisdom directs his own acts of power in earth or heaven. Do not seek to know what God may do, and let patience and faith have their perfect work. "If they live, they live unto the Lord; if they die, they die unto him." So, whether they live or die they are the Lord's. To seek by importunity at the throne to force a manifestation of promise from God is an evidence of little, or weak faith. To go about one's business after having kept the law by administration, and to trust the issue in the Lord's hands is evidence of strong faith and trust more effective and worthy of blessing than an importuning spirit would be; and we believe such is more acceptable with the Lord.

Several instances are known to us where persons have been sick and have been administered to, and in which prophecies have been made that the sick would live and recover, and instead of recovery death has occurred. We have been asked, Were such prophecies from the good Spirit? We could hardly say, yes. Well, then they were of the evil one! We think not. They have been the untutored declarations of weak, human nature struggling to lead, or force divine power and wisdom to accept and indorse the desires of the prophets. Let us take heed how we permit ourselves to be led into such lapses of personal spiritual failure. It is enough to suffer, to know that "whether there be prophecies, they shall fail," and to be compelled to endure sorrow and grief, and, therefore, let us keep our faith that it fail not.

B. H. ROBERTS, ON "DOCTRINE DEVELOPMENT IN NAUVOO."

During all the trying experiences of the church while in New York, Kirtland, Ohio, Missouri, little or no rest from troublesome enemies had been possible, but in Nauvoo there was a period of about two years of comparative peace enjoyed by the people, and this time the Prophet used marvelously well in the development of the doctrines of the church. Prior to this period we knew but little concerning the Holy Ghost; the mysteries of the Godhead: Salvation for the dead; the eternity of the marriage covenant, and plural marriage; the resurrection, and the final destiny of man and the earth upon which we live. These and many other advanced principles of the gospel were given to the world by the Prophet Joseph at about this time. . . .

It was here that the Prophet gave forth that elevating doctrine. "That God once was as man is, and man may become as God is." Among some of our people there is an impression to the effect that this did not emanate from Joseph Smith. "Let me correct this error, because," said the speaker, "the idea was first enunciated by him if it was not couched in the above language."

The speaker said many of the discourses and sayings of the Prophet which have come down to us were taken down in long-hand and consequently are only a synopsis of what he said on different occasions; and while we accept his sayings and discourses along with the other standard works of the church, as to the doctrine of the Church, we should say that we accept only "the well established sayings and discourses of the Prophet Joseph," and not every rumor that is said to have come from him.

Again, it should be remembered that the Prophet had a sense of humor, and that he was a man; and many times he manifested this side of his nature by speaking in a jocular strain. For instance, he was once asked the cause of the ebb and flow of the tide. He at once replied, "Why, the earth breathes, and in the expansion and contraction of the earth, causes the rise and fall of the tide." But misunderstanding arose because too many people think that a prophet is always speaking as such, and should never speak as a man, or be humorous, and hence took what he said on such occasions too seriously. In studying the manual this fact should be kept in view.

The foregoing extracts are from a discourse by Elder Brigham H. Roberts, before the Mutual Improvement Association, in Social Hall, Salt Lake City Stake, July 11, 1900, as given in Deseret News of the 12th.

It is news that prior to the socalled "period of peace" passed by the people at Nauvoo, but little was known "concerning the Holy Ghost," "the mysteries of the Godhead," and other doctrines.

The Lectures on Faith, priesthood, and other topics, elaborated and published presumably under the immediate supervision of the Prophet Joseph, Sidney Rigdon, and others, deal with the mysteries of the Godhead, the Holy Ghost, and a variety of other subjects connected with the instituting and establishing of the church in 1830, the gospel of salvation, and the promulgation of the doctrines and theories of organization and government of the church so organized.

Joseph Smith reached Commerce, afterward Nauvoo, in 1839. It was in September, 1842, that the letters on the baptism for the dead were written, and 1841 when the last revelation on church organization was given. When was this period of rest? The clouds of opposition began to rise in the Harrison campaign of 1840, and in 1842 the hunt against the Prophet began.

During the persecution in Missouri, the destruction of the press, the tarring and feathering of Bishop Partridge and layman Allen, at Independence, in 1833, the driving out from Jackson county, that year and the succeeding one, the subsequent troubles in Davess and Caldwell counties, and the arrest and imprisonment of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, their escape, and the expulsion from Missouri, the church was under a constant stream of instruction by revelation from God. Included in the revelations given during this period of storms, is the vision, one of the grandest ever given, and section 85, (88 Utah edition of 1876), in which the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, is made the especial topic of the Divine communication.

Just when Mr. Roberts would locate the beginning of the "period of peace" is not clear, but the revelation of January 19, 1841, is the last set revelation by date, given by Joseph Smith and published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in 1846, under John Taylor, and in 1852, in Liverpool, by S. W. Richards, for the church in Utah. This revelation of 1841 is not the last section in these last named editions, for the letters on baptisms for the dead, the articles on marriage, and laws and governments, and the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith occur in the book after, but in point of date it is the last given and published.

There is nothing authentic from the sermons and writings of Joseph or Hyrum Smith known to the public, or accessible from which their connection with the doctrine "That God once was as man is, and man may become; as God is," "the mysteries of the Godhead; salvation for the dead; the eternity of the marriage covenant, and plural marriage, the resurrection, and the final destiny of man and the earth on which we live," as their putative authors, may be discovered as those dogmas have been held and taught by Mr. Roberts and the men of Utah whom Mr. Roberts represents. Mr. Roberts may therefore well say that we should, "accept only 'the well-established sayings and discourses of the prophet,' and not every rumor that is said to have come from him."

Mr. Roberts states that the idea that "God once was as man is, and man may become as God is, 'was first enunciated by the prophet' if it was not couched in the above language."

From what "well-authenticated sermon or discourse of Joseph Smith was this idea taken? The King Follet sermon? If so, what was the King Follet sermon? It was a long hand report of a sermon said to have taken two hours and a quarter in its delivery. It was not published until after Joseph Smith's death, was never revised by him, and may be read in fifteen minutes. By whom is this sermon authenticated? The dogma built on it is not well grounded in the "established sayings of the Prophet Joseph."

The promise that men may in some future time be where God and Christ are, is clearly given in the Scriptures. Some who are worthy shall "be caught up" to meet the Lord, "come with him," and so be "forever with the Lord." Other classes cannot come where God and Christ are "worlds without end."

The doctrine of eternal progression for God, if it involves the proposition that if man may become what God now is and God be removed from man as far as he now is, then where God is man may never come; which instead of being an "elevating doctrine," is a distracting and a disheartening doctrine, for as immeasurably distant as God now is from man, so will he be from man when man attains to what he now is. Man will not know him then better than he does now, hence he will not, cannot be with God.

It is proper for us to have the ambition to emulate Jesus, to become like him, a god if need so be, but in the absence of that, a man "in the fullness of the stature of a man in Christ Jesus," is open to us all.

If there is no hope to be where God and Christ are, that is, in the realm where Christ is to have the rule and reign over subjects made righteous through the gospel ministration in the continued and friendly relation of king and subject, with a personal interest in the government and a direct access to the throne, if this hope be eliminated from the Christian economy by this transcendental progression theory, then it would be as well that we stop where we are and cease striving for the prize of a rest and reign on the redeemed earth.

This dogma which Mr. Roberts styles an elevating doctrine, is neither "wholesome, nor very full of comfort." Nor is it based upon the well attested discourses, or sayings of the Prophet Joseph.

For the doctrine of baptism for the dead, or as Mr. Roberts puts it, the "Salvation of the dead," there is a better warrant, for Joseph Smith, the Seer, wrote two epistles on the subject dated respectively September 1 and 6, 1842.

In the first of these the Prophet wrote at the beginning of it thus:—

> Forasmuch as the Lord has revealed unto me that my enemies, both of Missouri and this state, were again in pursuit of me; and inasmuch as they pursue me without cause, and have not the least shadow, or coloring of justice or right on their side in getting up of their prosecutions against me: and inasmuch as their pretensions are all founded in falsehood of the blackest dye, I have thought it expedient to leave the place for a short season, for my own safety and the safety of this people.—Doctrine and Covenants 109. (Utah edition 127)

The period could not have commenced then, or the Prophet mistook the revelation; for he gives the church to understand that the Lord had shown him the beginning again of persecutions against him.

It could not have been during the time from 1839 to 1842 that these doctrines referred to by Mr. Roberts were given to the church, as there is no mention of them in the covenants or the history, for the first written teaching of baptism for the dead began in 1842.

From the date of the revelation that his enemies were in pursuit of him till his death the Prophet had no peace. Beside this the date of the teaching that "cursed doctrine" "plural, or spiritual wifery," is given by Mr. Roberts and others of his fellows as 1843, a period when the Prophet was annoyed by prosecution after prosecution and was obliged to keep away from the public eye to avoid persecution. It was during this stormy period which finally ended at the tragedy in Carthage Jail and the expulsion of the church from the state that the thing which was called by the Lord as "abominable" was conceived, secretly taught and still more secretly practiced, if the tales of polygamists and defenders of the dogma are to be believed.

It was not until such alleged secret work had continued for over eight years after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in Carthage jail that Pres. Brigham Young brought into the light of day the alleged copy of an alleged revelation on celestial marriage as a basis for Utah polygamy. And in an effort to account for the silence of the Prophet from the alleged date of the revelation, July 12, 1843, President Young asserted that Joseph Smith did not make it known earlier because his life would have been in danger, had he done so. Unfortunately for the integrity of this tale, told though it may have been by the leading polygamist in the church, Joseph Smith, nor his brother was neither a physical nor a moral coward. His life had been in danger from the hour that he stated that he had received an angelic message. His life was in danger, and was taken while yet no knowledge of plural marriage was had by those who slew him. If known to any, it was but to "very, very few of his most intimate friends," as we once heard Bishop A. O. Smoot state in the tabernacle at Provo. Did these secret friends kill the Prophet Joseph because they knew this awful secret?

Joseph Smith had not up to September, 1842, neglected or refused to declare the counsel of the Lord given to him by revelation, and the statement that he suddenly turned to be a moral coward and refused to put a revelation received from the Lord before the church because his life would be in danger, comes with extremely bad grace from a man who, if his word on the subject should be believed, kept the same thing secret, locked up in a desk with a patent lock on it, from which desk no whisper of its awful contents was ever heard, for eight years after Joseph and Hyrum Smith's death. How could Joseph Smith's life have been in danger from the publication of said alleged revelation, at any time from June 27, 1844, to August 29, 1852, a period eight years and two months? Was the life of Pres. Brigham Young in danger by reason of such publication when it was made? Was not Pres. Brigham Young a moral coward for over eight years? A worse coward than Joseph Smith, for Pres. Young had not the enemies to hate and persecute him that Joseph had. He was in the heyday of his rule in Utah long before 1852. His word had become law. His policies had shut men's mouths and tied men's hands. Many had become his partners in crime past concealment, and yet, he waited eight years before he appeared with an alleged copy of an alleged revelation, the original of which he alleged a "jealous woman" burned. The copy, if it was a copy of an original, was surrepticiously obtained. The "jealous woman" who Pres. Young declared burned the original always, and on every occasion when inquired of persistently denied having seen, heard, known of, or burned any such document. And now Elder Roberts comes to the front with a statement that it was a "period of peace" when this delectable, pernicious doctrine was given to the church.

We are thankful that we do not have to believe Mr. Roberts, either as to this alleged period of peace, or as to the dogmas said to have been evolved in it. There are no "well established sayings and discourses of the Prophet Joseph," challenging us to belief in this which the church in 1835, when the pathway of the believers was blazoned by revelation and the teaching of the Holy Ghost, solemnly declared to be a "crime."

We do not believe Mr. Roberts' statements, in regard to what he is pleased to call "advanced principles of the gospel." For there is not a line in the standard works of the church, nor the "well established sayings and discourses" of the Prophet Joseph Smith, that proves him to have taught them, as parts of the gospel, referring of course to the Adam God idea and plural marriage, named by Mr. Roberts.

SOME PERTINENT QUESTIONS.

It is a principle in nature that the accomplishment of any work depends upon the application of the rules governing. All things are governed by means of law. (See D. C. sec. 85.) Certain definite bounds and conditions being established, no one can reasonably expect to reach a desired end without first applying the principles governing the attainment of the object sought. And much as we might desire at times to avoid the effort requisite for the accomplishment of any desired result, we are always met with the stern decree that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." We believe this to be a just principle, although men often become discouraged when the difficulties confronting them are greater than they anticipated.

The wise laborer, however, will ascertain, so far as he can, the nature of the work he undertakes, the results to be reached, and if the end sought justifies the effort necessary, will persevere in reaching it. With reference to the plan of salvation, Latter Day Saints present such argument as this to the world. We are often led to wonder if we consider the import of such teaching when applied to our work after having identified ourselves with the body of Christ.

A careful reading of Doctrine and Covenants, sections 36 and 83, will present to us something of the sacred nature of the work in which we are engaged. Here we are told, in substance, that the city of Zion, the New Jerusalem, is to be built, and a people prepared to meet Enoch and his holy band, with Jesus Christ and his servants when he shall come to reign with his people on the earth. Believing that we are engaged in this work, as great as any ever committed to man, we think the following qustions are pertinent:—

To what extent can we mingle with the world, indorse their pleasures, and partake of their ways without endangering our success? Can we frequent resorts where the society is questionable, and the rude jest and profane word greet our ears, and retain the spirit of our work? Can we gossip, backbite, entertain jealousies, evil surmisings, etc., and progress as we should? Are we awake to the necessities of the hour? Do we know what it really means to be a Latter Day Saint? Can we continue to be light minded and frivolous, follow the ways and fashions of the world, its pride and vanity, and be ready to meet our Savior when he comes?

These questions and many others in regard to our manner of life and service to God must be answered by each individual separately, and by the church as a body. God has given us many plain instructions both in former and latter days in regard to holiness of life, which we think it will be well to study and heed. If we wish to be a light to the children of men, we must rise above them, that the character of our work may be seen and the world attracted by its beauty. The task before us is a great one, a glorious one, but one that will require unremitting energy, and complete devotion to the right.

Shall we not heed the repeated admonition of the Spirit to "come up higher," by laying aside all that might in any way hinder our progress, and making an earnest resolve to persevere in the right?

We earnestly pray that God may give his people strength to resist the evil, and choose the good, that they may not fail this time in accomplishing the redemption of Zion.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. R. C. Evans, writing from Toronto, Ontario, August 10, of the work in that city, said:—

We arrived in Toronto one week ago tonight. Found Bro. A. C. Barmore preaching in the tent. He is doing nicely here, and is well liked.

I found the people still in the house, ordered them out, and Monday morning at six o'clock the house was being torn down, and good lumber piled away and old stuff carted to old Bro. Hatty's to burn. Since then we have been at it from seven a. m to nine p. m.; all but Alma and the women who attend to the tent. Alma works in day time. All free labor but one man. We have furnace room dug out and foundation in, and start on walls today. The building will be 26 by 60, with a lean to 18 by 15 We paid four hundred and seventy dollars for the lot; that is paid for. We have raised two hundred more, and secured a loan of eight hundred, to build with. We will have no trouble paying out.

Sister Maggie McGregor wrote from Chilliwack, B. C., of late date: —

Dan has obtained the tent, and it is all paid for. It is a nice tent, 22x45, with 7 foot wall and round corners. He was preaching in Nanaimo when last heard from. We trust greater good will now be accomplished, though the spirit of money-making is very prevalent in this province.

F. A. Russell, under date of August 13, writes from Canton, Illinois:—

We begin tent work in Moline this week.

Bro. Wm. H. Kelley, of the Quorum of Twelve, in a note, under date of August 14, wrote thus cheeringly:—

The Massachusetts reunion and conference closed yesterday. Some have gone home; others remain, and meetings will be continued on the ground for a few evenings. The reunion gained in interest from the beginning to close. Rose to the height of an ideal Massachusetts reunion. Cheerful faces, peace, and unity prevailed everywhere; and I think there was not a case of sickness on the ground. We hear nothing but praise from the neighbors regarding the Saints. Not a single criticism; but greetings, "Glad I met you;" "Sorry you are going;" "We enjoyed the meetings;" "will be sorry when they close." Bro. Hilliard took up a good subscription yesterday in favor of the college. Though so far away, I think some of attending the big reunions in the West next month. Brn. F. G. Pitt and George W. Robley go to the Philadelphia district; Bro. F. M. Sheehy to Western New York; U. W. Greene to the New York district; Brn. Calvin Rich and Holmes J. Davison to Maine; Brn. G. H. Hilliard and W. W Blanchard to Maine; the latter to Nova Scotia in a few weeks; Brn. M. H. Bond and Bullard in the Massachusetts district. We are thus deployed out for the fall campaign.

Bro. D. W. Wight, on August 13, wrote from Perry, Idaho:—

Bro. Parker and I have a great interest here. It is new point.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By letter from Bro. Alexander H. Smith of August 8, we learn that Bro. Griffiths had called the reunion at Los Angeles off, for reasons supposed to be good to him; and that the branch would hold a ten days' meeting in the grove where reunion was to be held. Two days' meetings are to be held in the three southern branches.

Bro. Alexander called on Bro. E. Barrows and Rigdon. He also called on Patriarch John Smith and wife, but found them not at home. He called at the tabernacle and left word to Presidents Joseph F. and John Henry Smith, cousins, that he was in the city enroute to California.

The Silver State, published at Deer Lodge, Mont., in its issue for August 8, makes mention of the work and past history of Bro. G. R. Wells.

Bro. W. A. McDowell reports well of the work in Wisconsin and returns a good list of subscribers to Graceland College. Glad the Wisconsin Saints are alive to the interests of the educational work of the church.

Bro. J. W. Wight's report shows eighty-four baptisms in the last quarter, twenty-five of these in the old Fremont and Pottawattamie districts, by Bro. D. R. Chambers. Pretty good work in old districts. But why not? The better the truth is known the more it should be appreciated.

Prayers are requested for Bro. Edward La Moore, Princeton, Millelacs county, Minnesota. He is longsuffering, is isolated, and desires the sympathy of Saints.

We received some time ago some press clippings which indicate that our young brother, James Baggerly, is at work. He appeared in the West Superior Evening Telegram in a five column article in refutation of the claim that we were affiliated with the Utah church. In the same issue he also had notice of preaching services. The Minneapolis Times also noted Bro. Baggerly's work in West Superior.

Bro. Geo. H. Hilliard of the Bishopric reports the Saints' reunion in Massachusetts a success. Along with other encouraging work at the reunion a subscription of $310 for college was secured, part of which was from outside the church membership. The eastern Saints are far away from the place where our college is located and the best of schools and colleges at their doors as it were, and yet they readily lend a helping hand to the educational work of the church. This is in keeping with the progressive and wideawake spirit of the New Englander. We expected as much. Bro. Hilliard has appointments ahead as follows: Sunday, August 19, Boston; 26th, Dixfield, Maine; September 1 and 2, conference at Lamoine, Western Maine; September 8 and 9, Indian River, Eastern Maine district conference; Stonington, Deer Isle, Maine, September 16. After September 16 he will return to Massachusetts and Rhode Island, visiting Providence, Fall River, and other points as per future arrangements.

Elders F. A. Smith and Columbus Scott have been home from their missions some of late, visiting family and looking after business matters.

Bishop Kelley went Monday to Stewartsville and St. Joseph.

The extremely hot weather of late does not seem to hamper our local ministry much, as the usual number of appointments near Lamoni were filled Sunday.

GOD'S METHODS AND UNCHANGEABILITY.

Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.—Matt. 18:18.

He that receiveth you receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.—Matt. 10:40.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.—John 13:20.

The foregoing is the warrant which Christ gave unto his disciples when he was with them in the flesh, and sent them to preach his gospel, and Paul bears this testimony of him:—

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever.—Heb. 13:8.

This language represents the immutable character of Christ in the eternal past, in the present, and in the eternal future; hence it follows that whenever he has sent, or shall send a servant or servants, he stands at their back, and whatsoever they teach or do in harmony with his undeviating word, he recognizes by his divine seal and sanction; but if they deviate from his word and ordinances, he is not bound by their acts, and their works will be burned. (John 15:6; 1 Cor. 3:12, 15.) God's method of working, in the past, among men has been to call men by his own voice, or by the ministry of angels, or by his Holy Spirit, by vision or dreams, as in the instances of Moses, Samuel, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel, and the other prophets and servants of God, to be his messengers and coworkers; sometimes he appeared to them in person, as to Abram, Moses on the mount, Jacob on the plains. But he always revealed himself unto them by some of these means, and made known unto them his will and purpose, for he always chose members of the human family to be his messengers to the nations, and he authorized them to act in his name, and to be instruments in his hand to bring about his eternal purposes on the earth. Bear in mind, God's ways are not as our ways (Isa. 55:8, 9); and Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 1:26–29:

Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence.

The above truth cannot be too deeply engraven on the human mind, because it is so contrary to the ways of men (Isa. 55:8, 9), that in all ages of the world the masses have rejected the prophets of God, because, in their eyes, they were the least and most insignificant, instead of being great and mighty as men call greatness. As an example of God's working, Paul, speaking of Christ, says:—

For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.—Heb. 2:16.

He was born of a lowly virgin, who was espoused, or betrothed, to a carpenter, which fact led the Jews to brand him as a bastard, or one illegitimately brought into the world, as they do to this day. The disciples whom he chose to bear his message to the nations were humble and unlearned fishermen. Their Master was despised as a Nazarene, and the question, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" was asked. But it was decreed that "he shall be called a Nazarene" (Matt. 2:23). Thus we see, God's ways are not as man's ways. And yet it is true, the mightiest men of the earth have been of the lowliest origin. But they were not selected by their fellows because of that origin, but God who "setteth up the basest or humblest of men" has called them to carry out his will among the kingdoms, and has endowed them with power to accomplish his purposes; so we see God's ways are equal both in affairs of earth and in spiritual things. But the ways of men are inconsistent and unequal, for while they are ready to honor and applaud the men who seemingly, have pushed themselves to the front by their own prowess and power, they reject and treat with contempt those who come in the name of the Lord, with his word upon their lips, and humbly seek to bless their fellow men, thus proving the words true:—

If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.—John 15:19.

Now it is evident from Holy Writ that God's purpose in the creation of this earth, and placing man upon it, was to establish his kingdom here. To this bear all the prophets witness; but I would especially cite you to Psalms 2:8; 72:8; Daniel 2:44; 7:27; Matthew 6:9–12; Revelation 5:9, 10. This purpose was not to be accomplished in the morning of time, nor in the meridian of time, but in the fullness of times, when the earth shall have been "filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was," when all the human family shall have had the privilege of choosing or rejecting God as their king. For this purpose the Spirit of God has been striving with men in all ages, to prepare them for the glory which shall be revealed, when the prayer which Christ taught his disciples to pray shall be answered: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." For this purpose prophets have been sent to call upon mankind to prepare; and Christ and his apostles preached the kingdom of God. The Apostle Paul said God had—made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullnes of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth; even in him.—Eph. 1:9, 10.

Isaiah tells of "a marvelous work and a wonder," and of a book coming forth; and—

The deaf [shall] hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness. The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. For the terrible one is brought to naught, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off.—Isa. 29:18–20.

This prayer and these prophecies will all have been fulfilled when that

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan," is bound and cast into the bottomless pit for a thousand years (Rev. 20). But before all these things are fulfilled, Christ says:—

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matt. 24: 14.

As an evidence that the churches have not been preaching the pure gospel of Christ, compare their creeds with the word of God, and then see the divisions among them; and the contention and overturning of nearly every creed in christendom. Paul and the other apostles foresaw the great apostasy. Paul declared:—

That day [the coming of Christ] shall not come, except there come a falling away first. —2 Thess. 2: 3.

Again,—

The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.—2 Tim. 4: 3, 4.

Peter says:—

But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction.—2 Peter 2: 1, 22.

God showed John upon the Isle of Patmos that the gospel should be restored:—

And I saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Rev. 14: 6, 7.

This is to be preparatory to Christ's second coming. (See Matt. 24: 14.) God told Malachi:—

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.—Mal. 3: 1–5.

This prophecy could have no reference to Christ's first coming, for the following reasons: 1. The Lord did not then suddenly come to his temple. 2. All men could abide the day of his first advent; they could mock, deride, and persecute him. 3. He did not then come as a "refiner's fire," he did not "purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver;" they were his greatest enemies. 4. They did not then "offer untc the Lord an offering in righteousness." With "wicked hands they crucified and slew him." 5. "The offering of Judah and Jerusalem" was not "pleasant unto the Lord, as in days of old." 6. He did not then come "to judgment." 7. He did not come then as a "swift witness against the sorcerer," etc. He came to "call sinners to repentance." Hence the messenger spoken of by Malachi as preparing the way before the Lord was to come just prior to Christ's second advent; when, as Paul says, when speaking of that advent, "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Bear in mind the fact that Jesus mentions the preaching of the gospel in all the world for a witness, as one of the signs preceding his second coming; and also the further fact that John saw that in the hour of God's judgment an angel would bring "the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth." This gospel is the means of preparation of mankind to receive the coming Lord—the only means whereby man can be saved. We have seen the Christ and the apostles foresaw that there would be a general apostasy from the true faith, hence the necessity for its restoration.

On the 23d day of December, one thousand eight hundred and five, there was born to Joseph and Lucy Smith, a son, whom they named after his father, Joseph. This son was born in the town of Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont. When this boy was about ten years old the family removed to Palmyra, Ontario (now Wayne) county, in the state of New York; they afterward moved into Manchester, in the same county of Ontario. When Joseph was about fifteen years old there was an unusual excitement on the subject of religion; his mind was greatly exercised thereby. His parents were of the Presbyterian faith. The youth was led to seek unto the Lord for light, because of the confusion of creeds and doctrines; and while thus exercised, his mind was directed to a passage of scripture in the epistle of James, the first chapter and fifth verse, which reads:—

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

To use his own words,—

Never did any passage of scripture come with more power to the heart of man than this did at this time to mine. It seemed to enter with great force into every feeling of my heart.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 8.

He obeyed the injunction, feeling his great need of divine guidance. After humbling himself before the Lord, and while pouring out his soul in earnest prayer, he tells us that he saw "two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) 'This is my beloved Son, hear him.'"—Church History, vol. 1, p. 9.

Joseph inquired which of all the sects was right. He was answered that they were all wrong, and that he must join none of them, that all their creeds were an abomination in the sight of the Lord—that "the professors were all corrupt," and the personage said:—

They draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 9.

Gentle reader, startle not at this declaration as coming from the divine lips, but look abroad and see the multitudinous divisions in the so-called Christian world, and ask yourself, Can they be of God? Is God the author of confusion? then read the God-dishonoring doctrines of Popery, Calvinism, etc., which have permeated the whole professedly Christian world, and against which there is a general revolt in nearly all of the churches. What does this remodeling of creeds mean which is going on throughout christendom? If their creeds were once divine, are they not so still? If they are corrupt now, were they not always corrupt? Does the truth of God change with the rolling seasons? Has God varied in his plan of salvation? Or did he fail to comprehend the true condition of humanity?

The only correct answer is, The sectarian creeds are not of God. "He is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind." He would not subject humanity to peace-destroying and strife-breeding creeds that have deluged the world with blood. He seeks to "gather together in one, all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on the earth." Division, confusion, and strife are from beneath. I know the professors of religion raise their hands in holy horror when told the creeds of the day are corrupt, but let us see what Alexander Campbell says of these matters:—

We are fully convinced that neither popery nor any of its protestant reformations is the Christian institution delivered to us in the Holy Scriptures. What is popery but the extreme of deflection and apostasy? What is prelacy but a reformed modification of popery? What is Congregationalism, but a reform of Presbyterianism? What is Wesleyan Methodism but a popular emendation of English episcopacy?—Campbell Baptism, Introduction, p. 16.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Mr. Hopkins says:—

There is no reason to consider the anti-Christian spirit and practice confined to what is now called the Church of Rome. The Protestant churches have much of anti-Christ in them, and are far from being wholly reformed from corruption and wickedness.

Dr. Guthrie says:—

Three hundred years ago, our church with an open Bible on her banner, and this motto, Search the scriptures, on her scroll, marched out from the gates of Rome. Did she come clean out of Babylon?

Spurgeon says:—

The Church of England seems to be eaten through and through with sacramentarianism; but non-conformity appears to be as riddled with philosophical infidelity. Those of whom we thought better things are turning aside one by one from the fundamentals of the faith. Through and through, I believe the very heart of England is honeycombed with a damnable infidelity, which dares to go into the pulpit and call itself christianity.

(The latter utterances are copied from "Great Controversy," p. 384, E. G. White.) In view of these statements, and many more which might be given from men whose names stand foremost among sectarian leaders, is it any wonder that the divine being should tell the earnest, anxious youth, seeking divine direction to "join none of them," that "all their creeds were an abomination in his sight;" that "those professors were all corrupt, they draw near me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me?" Why should the followers of Campbell raise their hands in holy horror because Joseph said the Lord declared this was the condition of things in professed christendom, when Alexander Campbell, as we have seen, testifies to its truth? If the church which Campbell founded stands for anything, it stands as a protest against all Christendom outside of its narrow boundaries, hence is an emphatic denial of the divinity of all creeds but its own. Was it any less a truth as it fell from the lips of the Savior, and recorded by Joseph Smith, than when uttered by Campbell and the other professed divines? The majority of the churches are testifying to its verity, by throwing aside their old creeds, or they are guilty of apostasy today in their departure from them. If they are false and corrupt now, they were always so. If they were true in the beginning, they are true today; but God's word is against them, because they are from beneath.

But to return to the testimony of the youthful seeker after wisdom. He tells us that upon another occasion while engaged in prayer a heavenly messenger appeared to him in his room, who called him by name and said:—

That he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and . . . that God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues. — Church History, vol. 1, p. 12.

Reader, don't you think it would have been presumption for a boy of eighteen years of age, then only known to a very narrow circle, and considered of no standing in society, to have conceived the idea that his name was to be known among all nations? Would he be likely to have the audacity to declare that an angel of God told him so? especially if he was the base and thievish character that his enemies declared he was? If he was such a character, none would know it better than himself, and would he be likely to tell his neighbors that an angel of God had condescended to visit him? He would know that they knew his character, and consequently would treat him with the utmost contempt; and if his story was false, he would not have dared to tell it to those who knew him so well. But he told the story, and persisted in its truth to the day of his death. But if the statement originated in his own brain, and was not told him by an angel of God, how does it happen that it comes to pass? Can you point to any land where modern civilization has gone, where the name of Joseph Smith is not known? Can you point to any land where that name is not had both for good and evil? for good by those who have honestly and fairly investigated his prophetic claim, and rendered obedience unto the fullness of the gospel as taught by him; but for evil by the hireling clergy, and all who are too bigoted to honestly investigate his claim? And be it remembered that against this man, and the church, under God, founded by him, the professedly pious and the avowedly impious—the minister in sacerdotal robes, and every grade of filth and debauchery that is found among men, all unite together to brand this man, Joseph Smith, as an impostor, a false prophet, a thief, a whoremonger, and guilty of every crime their unhallowed tongues can give utterance to.

How is it, gentle reader? Can you find a better answer than that given by the Savior?

If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.—John 15: 19.

Again:—

Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God.—James 4: 4.

The world is and always has been corrupt; therefore, if Joseph had been the corrupt person that the professedly pious and avowedly impious proclaim him to be, they would love him and applaud his name to the skies. But as God hath chosen him out of the world, therefore the world hates him as it did the Master and his servants in every age.

This boy testifies that the messenger declared that "great judgments were coming upon the earth in this generation, with great desolations by famine, sword, and pestilence;" thus harmonizing with the cry of the angel seen by John in Revelation 14: 6.

Reader, was the statement true? Look around, and read the terrible panorama of events as they pass before your astonished vision, and fill the hearts of men and nations with fear, because of those things that are coming on the earth; then compare them with Christ's predictions, as found in Matthew, Mark, and Luke concerning the signs that should precede and presage the coming of the once crucified but now risen Redeemer; when as Paul says:—

When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—2 Thess. 1: 7, 8.

It was an easy matter for anyone to say that this was the generation in which Christ said these things should come to pass; but it required more than human power, wisdom, and cunning to bring these terrible events about—to place signs in the sun, moon, and stars which Jesus foretold, and which this youthful seer declared were now at hand, and which scientists of every civilized land have been and are recording as almost everyday events, but which were not visible in such degree as they have been since this youth declared the heavenly message. Mark the terrible famines, the devastating pestilences, the desolating wars, the numberless destructive earthquakes, the devouring fires, the dread cyclones, the vivid lightnings, the dreadful commotions among the nations, as well as the disruptive elements that are dividing the churches and tearing the time-honored creeds to fragments and hurling them away as filthy rags, then ask yourself if anything less than the inspiration of the Holy Ghost could have enabled him to foresee and foretell so clearly what would be the state of the world in this generation; and remember, that Christ says:—

When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.—Luke 21: 31.

While you are reading, throw away prejudice, judge as you would be judged, and be assured, "whatsoever measure you mete unto others shall be measured to you again." Then take the doctrine that he declared was delivered unto him from heaven, compare it with the teachings of him who "spake as never man spake;" and if you find in it that which is contrary to Holy Writ, you are at liberty to reject it; but so surely as it agrees with

www.LatterDayTruth.org

God's unchangeable word, just so surely you will be condemned if you reject it. Do not measure it by the unequal creeds of men, nor by your own traditions; measure it by the unerring word of God.

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isa. 8:20.

This is the divine rule by which all must be tried.

None have fairly examined the doctrine taught by Joseph Smith without being impressed with its perfect harmony with all that God has revealed to man, and with the teaching of Christ and his apostles; and many have declared they could accept it, but they cannot believe Joseph Smith was a prophet. That was the case in nearly every age of the world. The generations among whom prophets appeared could acknowledge the divinity of the mission of the prophets whom their fathers slew, but when prophets appeared in their day they rejected and persecuted them, as their fathers had done before them, even to the immaculate Son of God, and he said, "The servant is not greater than his lord; if they have persecuted me, they will persecute you also." Every generation that has rejected the prophets whom God has sent has, and must, bear the terrible consequences of that rejection.

Joseph Smith never claimed to be anything greater than a humble messenger of Christ. He never demanded that the world should believe in him as the means of salvation to man. He presented Jesus the Christ, as that prophet foretold by Moses: "The Holy One of Israel." Book of Mormon, large edition, pages 15, 45, 64; that "There is none other name given under heaven, save it be this Jesus Christ of which I have spoken, whereby man can be saved," page 84, and a thousand other statements bearing similar testimony that Jesus, the Christ, is the only Savior of men. But this same Jesus has declared, as written at the beginning of this article, "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me."

Kind reader, if you reject those whom Christ sends, can you receive Christ? Is it not implied in the above language that if we do not receive the servant we cannot receive the Master, and we consequently reject God the Father? "But he was an insignificant boy!" Do you not remember how it was written, 'Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?" What was the little despised dreamer whom his brethren hated and sold into Egypt? The little Samuel whom God called to be his prophet, empowered to anoint kings? What of the shepherd lad whom God called from the sheepcote to be his prophet king? And of Jeremiah whom God ordained to be a prophet unto the nations, who said, Ah! Lord God, I cannot speak; for I am a child? Littleness of fame, humbleness of birth, and insignificance of standing in society are no barriers in the eyes of the Omniscient God against being called into his service, nor are they any excuse for rejecting those whom God has chosen. "But he has a bad name!" Who gave him a bad name? Did you ever hear his friends speak evil of him? Did you ever know a disinterested person who knew him, and knew his life, and hence a really competent witness, speak evil of him? I have known many who professed great piety, and professed to be well acquainted with him, slander his character, claiming to know that their charges were authenticated facts; and when they came to be closely questioned they had never seen the man, had not even been in the neighborhood where had lived, but they had heard some pious (?) minister tell what some dear old pious (?) sister stated she had heard some one else declare, who had gone to school with him.

If time and space would permit we could give hundreds of contradictory stories that are told of him, but they have no foundation whatever. One of the latest was published in the New York Tribune, said to be "told by an old woman," "who once lived in the vicinity where 'Joe' Smith first started on his religious campaign." "At that time," she said, "he was zealous and devout, attending all the protracted meetings for miles around in the winter, and the camp meetings in the summer, and yet his wife and six children were left for days and weeks in a cabin on the edge of the wood, frequently without food or fuel, when neighbors would come to the rescue." It would be a great pity to spoil this pious old lady's story when it is just as true as hundreds of other stories told about him by both press and pulpit.

But the facts are Joseph Smith was between fourteen and fifteen years old when in answer to prayer he received his first vision, and by this time he had ceased attending revival meetings.

On the eighteenth of January, eighteen hundred twenty-seven, he was married to Miss Emma Hale, he being then twenty-two years old. In that same year he "fairly began his campaign," receiving and translating the Book of Mormon.

Reader, was he not rather young to be the father of six children? Besides he was only just married! And he was not quite thirty-nine years old when he was cruelly murdered; and only five children had been born to him then. The dear "old lady" must have had a strong, imaginative mind! But what minds they must have who gulp down and take pleasure in peddling the ridiculous story! "O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly; be not thou united, for in their anger they slew a prophet of the Most High!"

In conclusion we challenge the world to compare the revelations received by him and given to the world, with the stupendous events that have taken place during the last seventy-five years; namely, The lifting the Gentile yoke from the neck of the Jews, who were sorely oppressed by all nations, the preparation of the land of Palestine for the return of God's ancient covenant people, by the return of the "former and latter rain," which had been withheld for many centuries, and the commencement of the return of the Jews to their own land, which the Book of Mormon declares shall take place in the generation in which that book should be brought forth. Then the terrible condition of the nations of the earth from wars and rumors of wars; pestilences, famines, earthquakes; signs in the sun, moon, and stars, presaging terrible events; "blood, fire, and smoke," the abounding of iniquity in high and low places, and "the love of many waxing cold," as evidenced by the universal loss of confidence both in men and nations. These events filling the hearts of men with fear, as declared by the Savior (Luke 21). Then compare the order of the church which under God he founded, with the church of the New Testament; the doctrine and ordinances thereof; the promises declared by him to be the rightful heritage of the sons and daughters of God in this as in days of old, and then ask the hundreds of thousands of men and women, who have received his teaching, if those promises have been fulfilled in proportion to their faith in and faithfulness to God. And I hear one vast shout from the dead and the living Saints, declaring that God has honored his word through the Palmyra Seer, as he did in all ages through the prophets, and that as many as have received this man despised, devil hated, but God honored prophet, have in their own hearts the realization that they have received both God and Christ. Thus it will be found that God's warrant to his servants is no idle word, that it remains unchanged, and that "no weapon formed against them shall prosper;" and though he was permitted to be slain as Christ and his apostles and prophets were slain in their day, yet his work, like theirs, remains, and cannot be thrown down, for it is sealed and ratified by both the Father and the Son, both in the heavens and on the earth.

Then, kind reader, be careful how

you treat the mission and message of this latter-day prophet. If you reject him, you reject the Christ who sent him, and thus you reject both the Father and Son. Heed not the idle stories told from press and pulpit and echoed in the slums and brothels, but investigate for yourself, seeking wisdom of God, who will not turn you away. CHAS. DERRY.

Editors Herald:—So far this year I have not contributed to your columns; but because silent it does not necessarily follow that I have been idle.

As soon as practicable after returning from conference I went to our capital city, Madison, where I joined Bro. W. P. Robinson, who had preceded me a few days. We continued in the city until May 27. On the 21st I preached a funeral sermon which I believe did much towards removing prejudice from the minds of some.

On the 25th four were baptized and we closed there with a good interest. The following week we returned home to attend district conference, June 2 and 3; and a few days later, in company with Bro. Peter Muceus as a traveling associate for the summer, took our way northward to Twin Lakes, Chippewa county, to attend the Northern Wisconsin district conference.

Our old soldier brother, George Clark, was in waiting for us at Chetek, and after supplying the wants of the inner man at the table de hote, stowed us away in his carriage, and we were soon enroute for branch headquarters at Twin Lakes, which was reached in due time, and we soon discovered we were not the only ones interested in the proceedings there. Other arrivals were soon announced; and visiting Saints to the number of forty or more, coming by team across the country a distance of from sixty-five to seventy-five miles, showed their love for gospel truth and communion of Saints. And if we are competent to judge in this matter, we believe that before the good-byes were said and the journey homeward begun, each one could have said they had been amply repaid for the efforts made, and additional strength had been gained and renewed determinations made to press on in the struggles and conflicts of life, looking forward with joyous hope to the meeting time where no partings will be.

Ye missionaries remained in Chippewa county until the last of the month, and then to meet a previous appointment we shipped ourselves to Durand, Pepin county, and from thence to Porcupine, the scene of former day missionary labor, where in years gone by, in company with Bro. H. P. Curtis, we raised our voices in defense of gospel truth and for the first time the sound of the restored gospel was heard in their valleys. It is needless to say we found a warm welcome, and perhaps it would be difficult to say which felt the greater benefit, the visited or the visitor.

After spending a few pleasant days and preaching a few sermons there, we moved sixteen miles further north, to Ono, where a week's grove meeting had been provided for. There, again, we found old time friends. The grove meetings were not all we had hoped for. Outside attendance was not as large as it might have been, but we can only hope for the best and leave the work in the Master's hands. Three were baptized, all young people, and our prayer is that their faith and example may be one worthy of the name they have taken upon them.

From Ono we went to Lost Creek and put in a few days there, and from there to Brasington, where we hoped to gather sheaves, but only found thorns and thistles; hence our stay there was necessarily short, preaching but twice, and at the close of the last service walking out of the town by night to find shelter in a friendly haymow until the morning light revealed the road to Ono. And last Thursday morning, August 3, leaving Bro. Muceus to fill appointments here, I boarded the train for Minneapolis, to visit Saints and friends there, and hoping, yet little expecting, to find some of the missionary force in the city. In this case, however, our hopes were happily realized, for no sooner had I found the Saints than I learned that Brn. E. A. Stedman and Eli Hayer were there conducting a tent campaign in the city. When we began to inquire where we would be likely to find them we learned that the much used and much abused name of Smith was quite common in the city and that we would find one at Bro. Jack Smith's, and one at Bro. Jay Smith's, which we take as evidence that the Smiths are a hospitable people, and during our stay in the city we proved it to be true.

Well, to cut the story short, we soon found Bro. Stedman under the shade of a tree, trying to endure life and a temperature up in the nineties. Later on, Bro. Hayer's genial countenance smiled upon us.

We found the brethren busy, happy, and hopeful in the work and on the alert to improve every opportunity to further the interest of gospel work. We presume it was to carry out this principle that they pressed the writer into service and nearly compelled him to occupy a greater portion of the time while there. Well, that's all right, boys, but just come over on the east side of the big river, and we will "git aven wid yees."

However, we had a very pleasant time and are glad we went; and if we did no good our prayer is that we may have done no harm.

Tomorrow we expect to go again to Porcupine and hold a two weeks' series there, and then bid the Northern Wisconsin Saints what we expect will be a last good-bye in this world, unless we may meet some of them in the land of Zion. We expect to move on towards the southern part of the state and to attend the Southern district conference which convenes at Buckwheat Ridge church, September 8; and from there go to home and loved ones.

So far as we are able to judge, we can say the work is onward. Not so fast, perhaps, as some would like to see it move; but we think the growth if slow is sure, and a healthy one, which to our mind is to be preferred to a more rapid and yet uncertain gain.

Ever praying for Zion, and desirous of doing what I can for the interest and advancement of the truth, I am,

Your brother in bonds,

CHAS. H. BURR.

DIAMOND, Parke county, Indiana.

Editors Herald:—I was baptized at Bevier, Missouri, by Bro. R. M. Elvin, on June 19, 1899, and since then I have been trying to walk in the right and narrow way, but have met with many obstacles and temptations, some of them very hard to overcome.

Owing to the work getting slack in Bevier, I went to Keb, Iowa, a place I thought among strangers, but was greatly pleased when I learned there were a few Saints there. I had a few hard trials where I stopped; but I wasn't ashamed to own that I was a Latter Day Saint.

Work getting slack again, I returned to Missouri where I stayed a few months and then came to Indiana to see relatives, where I am now.

I am not sorry that I became a member of this church. I'm proud of it. Am sorry that I did not join sooner, for I firmly believe it is the only true Church of Jesus Christ, for I've never before received so many blessings.

There are no Saints within miles of me that I know of. I miss the church meetings very much, especially the Religio, and I have none of the church books or papers to read. I ask an interest in each of your prayers, that I may hold out faithful and improve.

If any of the missionaries or elders, or any of the Saints, will call on me, I shall be very pleased to give them a warm reception.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN L. JONE

BEEVILLE, Texas, August 11.

In Faith to the Latter Day Church. Dear Church:—I now say that which, poorly said as it is, I certainly hope may benefit some one. In 1893 I had two children in very bad health, and had different physicians with them, but it seemed that all had done but little good. I had at that time a dear friend, a member of your church. She would often say: "Why don't you send your children's names up to our church? Don't you believe that the prayers of our church, united with yours, would be a great help?" I would say, "Yes, I certainly believe in the prayers of all Christians." Yet procrastination too often gives trouble; I went on until my baby boy had a very bad place on his limb. The physician, after treating it for some time, said that if it was not better in a few days the child would have to be put under the influence of chloroform, the limb split to the bone, and the bone scraped. Oh, how could he stand this? The physician said many disheartening things.

The next day I sent the names of my two children to your church, asking that they pray for them. The physician did nothing more for them, but they mended from that day until they were well. The oldest one is eleven years old now, and is one of the largest, finest boys for his age that I ever saw. The youngest appeared to be in perfect health for three years, since which time he has been sickly part of the time.

I truly believe that the dear God blessed them through your prayers, united with ours. I now, just I have often before, deep down in my heart, bid every Christian of your church Godspeed. May we meet you all in heaven.

Now I bring to you the name of my cousin, Sammie Norfleet, asking your most sincere prayers that God may spare him, a well Christian man. Seems he is needed so badly. Now will you please remember me and my two little boys, and pray that I may keep and raise them to be good, Christian men.

I wish you all Godspeed, that we may all meet around the great white throne, where there will be no strangers, is the prayer of

Your Methodist friend,

MRS. L. E. TAYLOR.

WEYERHAUSER, Wis., Aug. 10.

Editors Herald:—We are still at work, and are trying to keep the banner of King Immanuel afloat, so it may not be trampled under foot by the cunning craftiness of men. Bro. A. L. Whiteaker and the writer came to Chetek about a month ago. We held several meetings at the Reed branch, at Tillinghast; also a few meetings at the Rice schoolhouse, about fifteen miles from the central part of the Reed branch, where the work had been newly opened up the year before. As a result of our labors, Bro. Whiteaker baptized three, all heads of families.

We are now in the great logging regions of northern Wisconsin. Last week we took a fifteen mile ride on the running gears of a wagon, with Bro. Hewett, to Weyerhauser, little lumbering town, where we secured the use of the M. E. Church. It is a new place, and the people seem interested. We are preaching each evening to fair audiences. Just what the results will be we cannot tell, but here and there we find some of the "lost sheep," that are willing to obey the gospel.

So the good work rolls on. We hope to open up many other new places.

In the faith of Christ,

J. B. WILDERMUTH.

LADD, Illinois, August 13.

Editors Herald:—I come again to tell of the blessings we are receiving in our little corner. At a special meeting on last Friday evening it was our intention to transact business for the branch; but there seemed to be too much of the spirit of worship among us, so we turned it into a prayer meeting, arranging at the close for a council to be held on Sunday morning.

Brn. Southwick and Henley were with us, and we determined to make the best of it. Bro. Henley made a few remarks, but was overpowered by the spirit of tongues and prophecy, and spoke to Bro. Turner who had been so signally blessed, as I wrote in a former letter. Afterwards the interpretation was given, and Bro. Turner was told that he had been healed, and that inasmuch as he would be faithful he would be blessed.

Then Bro. Southwick made some remarks that were very interesting. As he finished, Bro. Henley was again filled with the spirit of prophecy. This time he spoke to Sr. Snow, warning her to humble herself, for the Lord had a great work for her to do. Then he turned to Bro. Snow telling him that if he would humble himself his tongue would be loosened, for the Lord had a special work for him that no other could do.

Bro. Southwick said in his remarks that he felt that this would be a meeting never to be forgotten, and I believe that all agree with him, for there never has been such a display of the Spirit here before. I am sorry that our brothers and sisters who are absent were not here to enjoy this time with us, but we hope that they have the same where they are. We never hear from them, but they have our prayers, and we trust that we are not forgotten by them.

On the next Saturday evening Bro. Southwick addressed the friends at the church. On Sunday forenoon we held our council, and had a lively time. We all had a good time at the prayer meeting in the afternoon. One child was blessed in tongues by Bro. Henley. In the evening Bro. Henley spoke to us from the text, "What shall I do?" His talk was grand. We wish we might keep him and Bro. Southwick with us always, but it will not do to be selfish.

LEON SNOW.

DELOIT, Iowa, August 14.

Editors Herald:—Eight weeks ago last Saturday I was called home to find my wife prostrate, sick of typhoid fever. This was on Saturday. On Monday my youngest son went to a neighbor's to help shell corn and accidentally caught his fingers in the gearing, cutting all the fingers off his right hand.

My wife has regained her health, and the boy's hand is about healed, so I have resumed my work. Came to Deloit last Saturday, and met with the Saints yesterday, and will continue here a short time, and then proceed elsewhere in the district.

My troubles have seemed very grievous; but I suppose others have their share, and the Lord has said that he will have a tried people, so I will try and not complain. Am in hopes to so live and labor that when Christ comes I will be worthy to sit down to the great marriage supper.

Your brother,

CLEAR WATER, Neb., August 13.

Editors Herald:—Last night closed our district conference. Elders Caffall and Prettyman of the conference appointees were with us. The business, although somewhat tedious in part, was transacted without friction, and with a decidedly brotherly feeling. The Sunday morning prayer meeting was a peaceful, enjoyable session. The morning preaching hour was occupied by Bro. C. W. Prettyman. Then followed Sunday school service. Then a basket dinner and all-round visit, interspersed with the songs of Zion. At three p. m. Elder James Caffall addressed the house full of Saints and friends in an effort characteristic of the man, in which he sought to show the utility of the Book of Mormon as another witness to the divinity of Christ. At night the writer sought to present the financial system of the church.

All the Sunday sessions, except the 9:30 prayer and testimony service, were well attended; and the general verdict was that the conference was a success.

I would not be fair not to mention the fact that on the 10th, at 1:30 p. m., the district Sunday school convention met in business session, and at night an entertainment consisting of music, songs, recitations, and papers, occupied a house nicely filled with attentive listeners, all of which gave evidence that the Sunday school arm of the church is still active, and bids fair to be more so.

In gospel bonds, your brother,

LEVI GAMET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., August 11.

Editors Herald:—Since May 2, I have been associated with Bro. E. A. Stedman most of the time here, in tent work, except that I was at Pipestone for two or three weeks in July. Cannot say any great advancement is being made, but am quite safe in saying we think good has been done all along the line. A better understanding is being had by those who have attended our meetings, and the difference has been seen between us and those of the Utah faith. Bro. Stedman has from time to time discussed that point, and made it clear, to all thinking minds at least.

Five have obeyed the Master's voice and taken upon them his name. We hope his Spirit may guide them along the pathway of life, so the great reward may be secured, even eternal life. Some of the Advent faith are attending our meetings now, and express themselves favorable; but the Sabbath is still in the way. We trust all may be made clear to them. Bro. S. will speak on that subject tomorrow evening. I hope that God's Spirit may guide the speaker in his effort.

In tent meetings we cannot tell how many are listening. Outside the tent, often as well as at the houses, can be seen people who are listening, and who have a desire to know what we are telling the people, but seem to be timid in coming to the tent. We hope sufficient may be heard that it may be a witness unto them of the restored gospel in this day of confusion. The pleasure of this world seems to prevail here, the most of any place we have been.

We were made happy last week by a visit from Bro. C. H. Burr, of Wisconsin, who stayed over Sunday with us, and spoke three times, to the satisfaction of all. We were all sorry to see him leave us. Come again, Bro. Burr; we need aid and encouragement.

The Perham reunion was a great feast to me. I met many of the noble Saints of that part of Minnesota whom I had never met before. All seemed to come to do their part, and therefore made it enjoyable, indeed. Bro. A. H. Smith gave us some good instructions I trust we shall never forget. He truly is a faithful servant of the Lord. The meetings there were spiritual and strengthening to all and all felt well.

At present the rain is hindering our tent meetings some, but we feel hopeful. To all the Saints in Southern Minnesota I wish to say that we will reach them as soon as possible, and when we can do work among farmers. Trust our faith and prayers may be united that good may be done. May we realize the statement of the Master more fully day by day, "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." Christ evidently knew the weakness of man and the possibility of forgetting his duties and obligation to his Maker. I desire to continue in good. Lest I worry you shall close.

Hoping and praying for the establishment of truth among men,

Yours for truth,

ELI HAYER.

LYDNEY, England, July 30.

Editors Herald:—I take pleasure in adding a few lines more to your interesting columns, more especially to reply to kindness exhibited by some your side the blue waters in sending tracts and Ensigns. First two years' numbers of Ensigns and a large packet of Hopes arrived in answer to our recent appeal. On label attached was the name, Mary Lewis, Saints' Home. I presume that is the kind sister who sent them. Yet again we received five dollars' worth of tracts which were paid for by Sr. Martha Woods, widow of late Elder Stephen Woods. They are the best assortment we have ever had, and while Ensigns and Hopes have good articles, yet to my mind tracts on first principles and Epitomes, etc., are much the best. We convey to Sr. Woods our heartfelt gratitude and all the good wishes one Saint can have for another. Our prayer to Israel's God is that he will bless the silent messages of salvation, and may the seed thus sown germinate and produce an abundant harvest. May his blessings also be enjoyed by the sender, and if it be his divine will to give her length of days, may her latter days be the brightest of all. If, on the other hand, the time is short (as sooner or later all of us will go to meet our beloved ones in the great beyond), may the end be peaceful, even a sweet transmission.

A few weeks ago your writer visited Llannelly in South Wales. The words of the Savior repeated themselves to me again and again: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" There is a little branch in that place of about seven members, and one of them, the president, lives about six miles out. Sr. Treherne has passed her seventieth milestone in life's journey and is quite bright and active, and as firm as the rocks of Gibraltar. She has been in the church over fifty years; believes like some others that we ought to obey God rather than man, and consequently she never accepted any Brighamism nor any other ism contrary to the truth as written. All this sister's family are brought up in the faith of the Nazarene and are endowed with fortitude of character. Sr. Elizabeth A. Lloyd performs a portion of the deacon's work (don't think she has been ordained) in the way of opening church doors, etc., as they have a fine place of worship in the place, and there is room for a good work to be done there. Let Him who has promised to remember the islands of the sea be heard and in his own due time. My prayer is that at least two of the leading quorum will be delegated here, for the field is white to the harvest and the laborers are few.

Bro. A. N. Bishop is doing a good work in this mission. He distributed all our literature in Lydney and Aylburton from house to house, and has been successful as an exponent of God's truth in the open air. In the various places where he has lifted up the ensign, hundreds have stood and heard the angel's message, and it now rests with those of the local ministry to heed the commandment, "Be without blame in word and deed," remembering God has said by the Psalmist, My people shall be willing in the day of my power, and the word he has spoken will surely prevail. As Latter Day Saints we are all fond of singing the little hymn asking God to speed the right. Unto all, myself not omitted, I give another few lines of poetry, and pray that the Lord of the harvest will give us grace as our day shall be, and qualify us for the work he has designed for us to accomplish, giving to each one the necessary grit and integrity, and teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom, that our wisdom may be of the Lord and our strength be of the Spirit, that our ministrations may be approved and as ministers all may win souls unto Christ. God help us all not to be harsh in judgment but to be merciful in this and not make a man an offender for a word, but to cultivate that gift of charity which will enable us as members of one family to seek each other's interest and welfare. May his peace be over all.

Sound the battle cry!
See! the foe is nigh;
Raise the standard high
For the Lord;
Gird your armor on,
Stand firm every one;
Rest your cause upon
His holy word.

Oh! thou God of all,
Hear us when we call;
Help us one and all
By thy grace;
When the battle's done,
And the vict'ry won,
May we wear the crown
Before thy face.

Still yours in the one faith,

HENRY ELLIS.

LAMONT, Iowa, August 8.

Editors Herald:—We are still in the one faith, and are trying to live a Christlike life. We are the only ones here who bear the name Saints, so we have much to combat to keep the narrow way, yet we are striving to live humble. Elder Sutton preached thirteen discourses in Strawberry Point in June last. Elder Hilliard preached one. It was time well put in. Left a good feeling in the town with some. Baptized four noble souls. They feel joyous in the restored gospel.

I helped to pull up tent stakes and hauled tent to Lamont, and set stakes. Brn. Sutton and Sheldon went to work preaching. Had a fair turnout each night. Bro. Sheldon was called home by telegram, his wife being very sick. O. H. Bailey took his place with Bro. Sutton and they preached about two weeks. Left a good feeling, and some near the kingdom. Two or three are to be baptized this fall, when they can return to preach.

I helped to pull up stakes again at this place and move to Fairbanks. The interest there was good, but the turnout was not so good. I was with them part of the time. Bro. Hand joined them there, where they preached about two weeks, when they went to Cedar Rapids, Iowa. After Bro. Sutton shipped the tent he came to my place and we went to Strawberry Point to see some of the Saints he had baptized. He had a holy conversation with them and they greatly rejoiced. My love is in the work.

AUGUSTA, Ind., Aug. 20.

Editors Herald:—I came here yesterday from our conference and began work. I feel lonesome after having been in such a good conference. It was one long to be remembered by the writer, because of the many good instructions given the Saints and all present by the worthy colaborers, Lake and Smith. Truly the right men in the right place and at the right time and the right things done. When I see with what grave firmness, serene calmness and humility of heart and zeal Bro. Lake moves, it only reminds me of the "Lake" of Galilee, when Jesus said, "Peace be still." As the sea thus obeyed the voice of the Lord, so also Bro. Lake moved in his work. He was calm and submissive unto the voice and command of God. Oh! how I wish we had more such Smiths and Lakes in the work. We have seen lakes surging to and fro with here and there a white cap rolling and bubbling up and bursting as its mad waves with its foam heaved and rolled on, but not so with J. H. Lake. Our conference passed off quietly. Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., was elected district president, because Bro. Luff had released him from his Colorado and New Mexico mission. J. T. Scott was sustained as clerk of the district, and Bro. D. Hurbaugh Bishop's agent. We hope and trust that all the Saints will assist all those brethren in their work, as they will need "coöperation." Do not forget to send your tithes and offerings to Bro. Hurbaugh. He will do all he can for this department of the work, as well as these other brethren; but as members we must do our duties. We cannot afford to set down and let some one else do all the work, for the Bible teaches us we will be rewarded for what we do, and not for what some one else does. We cannot say, Let this brother do so and so. If they do the work and we do not they will get the reward and we not. Let each of us do all we can, so we can all receive a reward. This is a glorious work we are engaged in; no time for idleness. "Let the watchman in the tower keep his post with sleepless eyes." We have the devil to meet on all hands. As I was receiving change for two dollars yesterday from the book agent on the train, he counted out to me five quarters and fifteen nickles. I saw it was correct, so he put the money into my hand. I put it in my pocket loose. He said I'd better put it in my pocket book; but I did not do this, so he walked out. I took the money from my pocket to put it into my pocket book; but on counting it saw he had slipped seventy-five cents back, leaving me only $1 25. When he came through the coach again I stopped him, and told him to tell the conductor to come in. He wanted to know what I wanted with the conductor, and I said I had some important business with him. He went forward into the next coach, then returned with the two dollars, saying that the conductor had gone out on the engine. He said if I did not care he would give me the two dollars and take the change back. I took the two dollars and handed him the $1.25, telling him he had stolen the seventy-five cents. He had been trying to sell me some books, so I handed him the books, they being the sermons of Moody, Spurgeon, and Talmage. I told him to take them and to get away, and to say no more to me. When the conductor came in I told him and the brakesman what he had done, so they stopped him from selling any more of the books and papers, and assured me they would put him off at night. So the rough was caught, and I got my money. I give this, as it will help others to be on the lookout, for this trick was done so quickly that one could hardly see how it was done. I was watching him closely.

Be careful how you take change from such fellows. Let them count out the money, then you pick it up. If they pour it into your hand it is so easy for them to hold back some of it.

Ever watching "now" and praying for the advancement of the cause of Christ, I remain,

Your humble servant,

G. JENKINS.

EAGLE CORNERS, Wis., August 15.

Editors Herald:—I am sure there are lots of Saints in the world who will be glad to know that old Bro. "E. M." is still laboring in the vineyard of the Lord. I believe I have the honor of being the only one left of the charter members of the Reorganization who is actively engaged in the ministry—out in the front on the "picket line." This is my eighth summer in gospel tent work. I am hale and healthy, and enjoy my work real well, and so far as I know will be able for eight more years of this kind of work. I always feel well when I am busy in the Master's work.

The gospel work here in Crawford and Richland counties was never so encouraging as at the present time. We are having our tent filled each evening with interested, intelligent people, who seem to be seeking more gospel light. There is quite a large church building in this village; but no pastor—no meetings, till we reared our gospel tent in their midst. Brn. Peterson and Pender I know will be pleased to hear that their pioneer gospel work of ten or twelve years ago, here among the hills and valleys of Wisconsin was not in vain. The boy preachers have many friends here; among them I might mention Mr. Garner. We have baptized eight, all adults, since we set up our tent, the 20th of last June; and the best of all, we have left a splendid impression and interest wherever we have been, and many are very near the kingdom of God, and will no doubt come into the fold of Christ if the work begun is followed up properly.

Elder Sawley is a very pleasant as well as an able and useful associate and worker in tent work. We regret very much that Sr. W. (my wife) was compelled to leave the tent work and return to her home in Plano, Illinois, a few days ago because of rheumatism contracted by living on the damp ground in the tent for six summers. Well, she stuck to her post faithfully, as long as it was wisdom for her to do so. The people here have decided to hold their Sunday school in our tent while we remain here, although they have a good church building right here in town.

May the Lord bless his people and prosper his work in the land, is the prayer of Your colaborer in the gospel,

ELI M. WILDERMUTH.

ROCKVILLE, Mo., August 14.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps some would like to know how our reunion came off in Clinton district. The Saints went into camp at the Nine Wonders park, on the 3d inst., and broke camp on the 13th. There were about two hundred in the camp. We were all pleased to see Bro. I. N. White come among us on the morning of the 11th. The meeting was, to the mind of the writer, a grand success. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley gave us some valuable instructions in Sunday school and Religio work. The principal speakers were Apostle I. N. White, Elders J. A. Gunsolley, R. T. Walters, T. R. White, G. W. Beebe, Sen., A. Lloyd, William H. Lowe, and J. N. Stephenson.

There were nine who yielded obedience to the angel's message.

All went away feeling greatly benefited, and with a greater determination to press forward in this grand and glorious work of the Master.

May God bless all the Saints assembled in reunion as he has us.

Your brother in Christ.

SHABBONA, Mich., August 14.

Editors Herald:—Our two days' meetings held at Grant and this place are over. They were fairly well attended, and we were much blessed by the good Spirit of the Master, especially so at this place. I am to attend the next one at Five Lakes, to be held next Saturday and Sunday. The following Saturday, Riley Center, and on the first Saturday and Sunday, one in Minden. After attending those and helping what I can, I am to return in time to attend the one to be held in the Northern district, at Gilmore, September 8 and 9.

Many have been and are attending these two days' meetings, both members and non members. Much good is being done, and prejudice is fast giving away. Four were baptized here yesterday by Bro. Wm. Davis. So the work moves on.

Brn. Davis and F. C. Smith go with the tent to Ubly. Others are working elsewhere to good advantage. New places are being opened up, and the work is widening. Our faith is being better understood; and as a consequence prejudice is falling, and the cause advanced. In the true faith,

J. J. CORNISH.

HEBER CITY, Utah, August 15.

Editors Herald:—For nearly two weeks Bro. W. S. Pender and the writer have been occupying in the tent set up in the courthouse yard in this city, known as the "gem of the Wasatch." Population is about two thousand. Interest has been splendid. From one hundred to three hundred have gathered in and about the tent each night.

As usual, the opportunity to ask questions and talk has been used by the Mormon elders, to our advantage, and to the interest of many as indicated by the usual remarks, "It is better then a theater," etc. One young lady, who undoubtedly will be with us ere long, says she has fun enough each night to last her two days.

Our meetings were largely advertised at the stake conference, 12th and 13th inst. Apostles Lyman and Smoot endeavored to establish their work by testifying that the apostles were continually led by inspiration, and they alone had authority to select and ordain a president; that there was no rejection, etc. Apostle Lyman said they (the church here), only, were doing the important work required for the dead, and that his "father had taken one of the many wives of Joseph Smith, and had raised up a beautiful family to him, by her," and that Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball had in like manner proven faithful to the prophet Joseph, in that they had taken of his wives and raised families.

However, they and stake president, Abraham Hatch, especially the latter, dealt very courteously with the Josephite matter, and told the people to go and hear, President Hatch suggesting that we were within one of being right, and if one couldn't be a Mormon he had better be a Josephite. Monday night the acme of interest was reached, when, according to prearranged plans and announcement in their conference, Elder Cummings, of Salt Lake City, took up the question of rejection with Bro. Pender, and in two half hour speeches each, the evidences pro and con were presented to perhaps three hundred or many more listeners, as the tent seemed to be quite as full outside as in. Bro. Pender scored some good points that will no doubt be remembered by many. Reading from Doctrine and Covenants section 42:7, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith," etc., he made the application in Brigham Young, who, having taken many women, had denied the faith, and substituted for it "Adam-God," "blood atonement," Christ not begotten by the Holy Ghost, etc., these being evidences of a rejection.

Having agreed on ten minutes added talk each, Elder Cummins closed by an examination of the Spencer interview with Joseph Smith, as reported by them. We had, on a previous evening, denied the truthfulness of their statements, and so simply dismissed them with the promise to examine that instrument for just what it was worth the next night, but, we were greeted with about a dozen hearers. They apparently thought this the opportunity they had been looking for to honorably (?) discharge themselves from services against the enemy, and turn their backs upon them.

Well, we don't feel that our efforts have been in vain here; but as our bait seems to have been taken, in harmony with a dream of Bro. Pender's, we will likely try another pool to fish in. Charleston people five miles south, have tendered us their chapel, and we will begin there Friday night. We expect to return to the Idaho district after the reunion at Pleasant Grove, in September, and desire to visit the scattered Saints in Idaho as largely as practicable after the fall conference. Will be pleased to hear from any one desiring ministerial labor.

Editors Herald:—As the waves of the great deep toss to and fro, so the mind travels from one thing to another, and in its extensive travels there are things that transpire that the mind cannot quite comprehend. Just a few days ago, we, as a branch, with the loved ones, were made to mourn because of the departure of our dear sister, Winifred Grim. Though she was just in the budding time of life, God, in his infinite mercy and love, saw fit to take unto himself this dear one. We know not the reason; but we feel and realize that we mourn not as those without a hope. The thought that has greatly been impressed upon my mind is this: Although we are young (and because of this the thought may enter the mind that we have many years yet to live), yet how quickly can our young lives fade away, just as the rose withers and fades from the heat of the noonday sun. It behooves young as well as old, to prepare for this departure, for we know not how soon it will come to each of us.

While some of us have not filled out many pages in our great book of life, and as each day is a page, no doubt we can each see much room for improvement. When thinking of the perilous times that we are living in, we cannot thank our heavenly Father enough for the wonderful kindness that he bestows upon us. While we are needy creatures yet we rejoice that we have a Father who will hearken unto the cries of his children. There are trying times that come, when seemingly life is almost crushed. When such times come, let us at least "try" to turn the eye heavenward, and say:—

Be thou near us, blessed Savior,
Still at morn and eve the same;
Give us faith that cannot waver,
Kindle in us heaven's own flame.

What a grand reunion it will be when all the redeemed of earth will be gathered home.

As for myself, I want to press onward and upward, and never grow weary in well-doing. How sweet are these words to us as Saints:—

The straight and narrow way we've found,
Then let us travel on;
Till we in the celestial world,
Shall meet where Christ has gone.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, August 17.

Editors Herald:—Inclosed find notice of the books of the church placed in the public library of this city, which notice was published also in the Tribune and Times, both dailies. The books were received with thanks by the librarian, and cheerfully accorded a place on the shelves of the library. Here is the notice:—

CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Sioux City, August 11.—To the Editor: Through the kindness of the bishop and president of the board of publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the librarian of the Sioux City public library, I have been privileged to place at the disposal of the reading public of Sioux City six volumes, representing the faith, doctrine, polity and history of the church organized in 1830 by Joseph Smith and others, and showing the doctrinal and historical claims made that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the legal successor to such church. These volumes have been listed in the public library by name and number as follows: "The Inspired Translation of the Bible," 220-Bs; "The Book of Mormon," 298.07-B; "The Book of Doctrine and Covenants," 298 07-S; "The True Succession in the Presidency of the Church," 298.01-S; volumes 1 and 2 of "The History of the Church of Jesus Christ. Organized in These Latter Days," 298 09-S.

I, as a general representative of said church, kindly urge all who are for any reason interested in becoming acquainted with the works and history of this church to call at the library and secure these books to read.

Yours respectfully,

J. F. MINTUN.

—Sioux City Journal, August 12.

The papers here have accorded us the privilege of publishing notices daily of our meetings, and also articles representing our faith and the special distinction between us and the Brighamites, who style themselves Latter Day Saints.

The tent meetings at Sergeant Bluffs previous to our coming here were not fraught with any apparent good, unless it was to allay some prejudice, and convince some few that we represented a theory that could be defended. 'Tis true the few Saints living near received beneficial instruction, and, it is to be hoped, spiritual development. The attendance here has been small, about an average of thirty; but the best of attention is paid and some little interest is manifest on the part of a few. Some three or four are to be baptized on Sunday, the weather permitting, and we have good reason to hope that others will follow soon.

The condition of the Saints in this city represent the result of not being fed the bread of life, neither in word nor through the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. Once there was an organization here, now in a latent state; some moved away, others became offended at what they saw in their brethren or sisters or were led astray by the social conditions, and their experience has been a trying one; and the habits contracted and subjection to conditions existing are hard and somewhat unpleasant to correct; but we have hopes that with the instructions given, and our associations with them, that spiritual strength will be given so they may unite their efforts, and overcome all conditions displeasing to the heavenly Father, and by partaking of the emblems of the body and blood of the Christ may become a means of good to others in leading them to see what the gospel has done and will do for God's creatures. But they need a located pastor who can give all his time to the work in this city and in this vicinity. It has never been my lot to minister where so many praying, and seemingly honest, earnest people live, who are members of no church, and most of them advocate against all church organizations, claiming they are all of human origin. These same people believe in the spiritual gifts, especially healing, and claim they enjoy this gift. I cannot but believe that God has a few in this city of about forty thousand inhabitants, but on the account of social conditions, and previously contracted habits, it will take time to turn their attention to us, as the people, whom God has raised up to offer an asylum to the tried and struggling one's on life's ocean who have neither compass nor rudder to direct.

We continue here something more than a week, when the conventions and conference of the Little Sioux district occur at Moorhead, to which place we will go.

Ever hopeful of final triumph,

J. F. MINTUN.

PRAYER.

How often in the mountain
Christ spent a night in prayer;
Struggling with unseen troubles
Till strength came to him there.

How oft in early morning,
Before the break of day,
That busy burdened Son of Man
Would take an hour to pray.

Could we but see the mountains
Of troubles roll away,
When mortals follow Jesus
And take an hour to pray,

We'd often go in secret,
And tell our toil and care;
And come away encouraged
From that sweet hour of prayer.

PLAINT OF THE PINE.

I found a pine that shot its solemn bole
  Twice fifty feet against the summer sky,
From out a sunless gorge. And sad of soul
  It seemed, until I sought to question why;
Whereat the tree moaned darkly, made this strange reply:—

"I am troubled betimes, I am sad in my sleep,
Foreboding the day I shall stagger and leap
And tremble through tempests o'er seas that are deep.

"They will fashion me forth for a ship, they will make My stature and girth but a mock, they will break
My branches and rend me for merchanting's sake.

"Eternal unease shall be portioned to me,
A creature firm rooted and fair so to be,— Eternal unease on the shifting, loud sea.

"For each to his nature; and mine is to grow
Tall, somber, and stedfast, and gravely a-row
With brothers as grave, while the centuries go.

"I am troubled betimes, I am sorely oppressed,
As I ponder and dream on my mother-earth's breast,
With a fear of the ocean, that knoweth not rest."—Sel.

ARE there not many of us, dear Saints, who may take home to our hearts the lesson intended to be conveyed in this poem? Do we not climb the hills so far removed from us, that but for our own anxiety our feet would never have touched its base, and may we not truthfully say that at least, one half the petty anxieties and cares of life we go forth to meet, when had we but abided in our tents they had never come to us.

This is not as it should be. It is not seeking for neither is it claiming as a part of our divine inheritance, that peace which the Savior left as his richest and best legacy to his disciples, and the "eternal unease" of the restless, moaning pine of the forest, becomes our self-sought portion. In view of truths like these—truths which come under our observation almost every day of our lives—is there not much in the following to command a careful reading and prayerful application?

When you work, work with all your might, says the Christian Herald; but when the measure of one's duty is done, then thoroughly relax. There is as much virtue in refreshing soul and body by yielding up all responsibility and care, as there is in the courageous meeting of active obligations. When we have done our best, says a thoughtful writer, and worked to the limit of our capabilities, then we should rest upon the laws of life, and with the faith of a little child, feel assured the Father is all good, and what is, or must be, is best. If we faithfully do our duty, and repose in peace upon the will of the Father for results, we may have the freedom from anxiety that gives each moment of rest thorough relaxation and pleasure. It is the useless worry that ages, and robs mature life of its beauty and power. Fretting and worrying never turned a wheel or brought sustaining help in any crisis. We are but children in the arms of an infinite Father, and rebellion breaks our powers upon the wheel of the law but does not change the turning of the wheel. In harmony with the law we are carried onward and upward. Resistance is our own destruction. That we cannot make or break is not our care. When our daily duty is done to the best of our cheerful ability, we must rest in heart and brain, in soul and body, and feel the wisdom that produced the marvel of life has a crown for its brave fulfillment. Thus petty trials are forgotten, and great ones dignified.

THE NIGHT EXPRESS.

Out through the hills of midnight,
  Hurtling and thundering on,
The night express from the outer world
  Speeds for the open dawn.

Out of the past and gloom-wrack,
  Out of the dim and yore,
Freighted as train or caravan
  Was never freighted before;

Built when the Sphinx's query
  Was new on the lips of peace;
Hurled through the aching and hollow years,
  Till time shall have release;

Stealing and swift as a shadow,
  Sinuous, urging, and blind,
Unpent as a joy or the flight of a bird,
  With oblivion behind;

Down to the morrow country,
  Into the unknown land!
And the Driver grips the throttle-bar,
  Our lives are in his hand.

The sleeping hills awake;
  A tremor, a dread, a roar;
The terror is flying, is come, is past;
  The hills can sleep once more.

A moment the silence throbs,
  The dark has a pulse of fire;
And then the wonder of time is gone,
  A wraith and a desire.

Demonish, toiling, grim,
  In the ruddy furnace flare,
While the Driver fingers the throttle-bar,
  Who stands at his elbow there?

Can it be, this thing like a shred
  Of the firmament torn away,
Is a boarded train that death and his crew
  Consorted to waylay?

His wreckers, grinning and lean,
  Are lurking at every curve;
But the Driver plays with the throttle-bar;
  He has the iron nerve.

We are traveling safe and warm;
  With our little baggage of cares;
Why tease the peril that yet would come
  Unbidden and unawares?

The lonely are lonely still,
  And the friend has another friend;
Only the idle heart inquires
  The distance to the end.

We pant up the climbing grade,
  And coast on the tangent mile,
While the Driver toys with the throttle-bar,
  And gathers the track in his smile.

The dreamer weary of dreams,
  The lover by love released,
Stricken and whole, and eager and sad,
  Beauty and waif and priest.

All these adventure forth,
  Strangers though side by side,
With the tramp of time in the roaring wheels,
  And the haste in the shadow stride.

The star that races the hill
  Shows yet the night is deep,
But the Driver humors the throttle-bar:
  So, you and I may sleep.

For he of the sleepless hand
  Will drive till the night is done—
Will watch till morning springs from the sea,
  And the rails grow gold in the sun.

Then he will slow to a stop
  The tread of the driving-rod,
When the night express rolls into the dawn;
  For the Driver's name is God.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

My mother (Mrs. M. Spauswick of Omaha) desires me to ask you to request the prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union in her behalf, and also the prayers of the church in general, believing that "the prayers of the faithful availeth much." She has been suffering for years and has tried many remedies, all of which have failed. She is now far advanced in years, and does not expect to live much longer, but she desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, that her pain of body may be lessened and that the few remaining days of her life may be spent in peace.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

AS WAS mentioned last week, the general superintendent attended the reunion of the Saints near Hennessey, Oklahoma, which closed Sunday, August 12. The program as then given was carried out, and much of good was accomplished.

Our brethren and sisters there are scattered over a large area, and this is a great obstacle in the way of their work. But, notwithstanding this, they manifest such a zeal for, and interest in, and a determination to do, the work needed to be done, as we do not find in all sections of the country. We heartily commend their zeal and pray for their success.

There were more than one hundred persons encamped on the grounds all of whom had come for the good of the meeting rather than for an "outing," as is often the case with some. At our opening session of Sunday school work, we earnestly requested all to come, and stated that we would be glad to see 100 per cent of the entire camp at our meetings. At the close of our first session thereafter, Bro. Maloney arose and stated that we had the desired 100 per cent. And so we had. This is the first time that we ever saw every person in camp out at any service in an experience of fifteen years with reunions. At one other session our attention was called to the fact that we again had our 100 per cent out. This is indicative of an interest that will lead to much good.

One session was devoted to the "Religio" work, and a good program rendered. We are pleased to see the work of our sister society finding favor in the new fields.

The time of the Sunday school work was spent upon subjects that were of especial interest to the workers there. Many expressed themselves as having a deep-seated love for the work, and renewed their determinations to do something to build up the work. The meetings were of a very spiritual turn throughout, well attended and enjoyed. Those acquainted with the reunion pronounce it the best yet held in the territory. Truly, Oklahoma is a fertile and promising field.

On the Monday afternoon following we arrived at the camp of the northwest Kansas Saints located near Minneapolis, Kansas, and opened up work the next day. The camp is not large, but it does not require a great number to make a profitable meeting.

The general order here will be institute work and Sunday school each day till Saturday. Interest in the work is good, and the work well appreciated.

THE following is an extract from a letter of Bro. Joseph F. Burton to Bro. Hubert Case. It will be remembered that Bro. Case and wife were once missionaries in those islands, and that Bro. Burton has very recently returned therefrom.

We give place for it here, as it is the immediate result of the Sunday school work as established by Bro. M. H. Forscutt and Sisters Ella Devore, Alice Case, and Emma Burton, into whose especial care the work has been intrusted in turn. They will think of these things with a great deal of satisfaction and thankfulness to God. Until very recently the work of our missionaries has been seriously interfered with. They have been forbidden to preach in public or even to post public notices of their meetings. And in many other ways have exerted an injurious influence against our work. But now the conditions are changed, and we are truly grateful for what God has done for us. We may plant and "God will give the increase."

Speaking of the work in the Society Islands, Bro. Burton says:—

"Metuaore tells me that inside of two weeks after we left, the governor removed eleven Catholics from the governor's offices in the Tuamotus [group of atolls] and put in eleven of our brethren. That was a great thing for our work. He and all the officials and people generally in Papeete were captured during conference by the "matutus" and "himenes" [religious dialogues and hymns]. Mayor Cardella, while listening to the childrens' classes, kept murmuring, "wonderful," "astonishing," "beautiful," and the tears coursed down his cheeks at what he saw and heard. It was like a revelation to all Papeete. They did not believe the natives capable of such intelligent exercises.

"Lawyer Bouet, the governor's legal counselor and president of the great council said to me: 'Mr. Burton, your enemies can never again persecute your people. These exercises have opened their eyes. The whole city is amazed at the intelligence of these people, and at the pure sentiments taught in all their matutus and himenes.'"

"The governor sent for me and complimented me very highly for the stand I took in favor of the natives and against the robbery of the traders, and also in my church work. And told me that although some of the enemies of the foreigners among the French officials might persecute some, yet he would immediately redress any wrong our church might receive from such persons.

"It needs a strong, firm, elderly, fatherly man to take care of that mission, and I hope that God will bring to the front such a man and make him known to the presidency."

PASTORAL.

To Whom it May Concern:—Whereas, after frequent solicitation, by the members of Shelton branch, Nebraska, to be detached from Central Nebraska district, desiring annexation with, or to Southern Nebraska district, the brethren of Central Nebraska district, in conference assembled, on the 11th day of August, 1900, did unanimously agree to submit the matter to the missionary in charge. I, therefore, decide to grant the request of the above branch, by which grant they are detached from Central Nebraska district, referring the matter to Southern Nebraska district, for their action. Further, with this grant Buffalo and so much of Hall counties as has been a part of Central Nebraska district is ceded to Southern Nebraska district. All of which, as I suppose, will be ratified, or set to one side, as per action of General Conference, 1901.

JAMES CAFFALL

To the Officers and Members of Southern District of California, Greeting;—I herewith give notice that Bro. T. W. Chatburn, of the seventy, has been appointed in sub charge by me of the above-named district. Please refer all matters requiring the attention of the missionary to said brother. His address is Santa Ana, California.

G. T. GRIFFITHS.
Missionary in Charge.

This is to inform the Saints and ministry of Arkansas and Louisiana that I have appointed Bro. W. S Macrae as missionary in charge of Arkansas and western Louisiana, and I hereby commend him to you as a minister for Christ worthy of your esteem and confidence, and trust that you will by your faith, prayers, means, and deeds sustain him in all righteousness in the performance of a duty that is at the best arduous, and without the sustaining influence of Saints doubly so. I trust that no jealousy or enmity may be shown in consequence of the appointment, but that all desire for place or precedence may be swallowed up in our great love for the work, and time, which tests all things, will I believe, show the wisdom of the appointment.

Bro. Macrae's address is Blendsville, Missouri, where all communications will reach him, and all letters in regard to the needs of the work in the field named should be sent to him.

I have only received reports of two of the conference appointees for Arkansas—Brn. Erwin and Jackson; Brn. Baldwin and Ward having failed to report on June 30. All reports hereafter will be sent to Bro. Macrae. The two brethren last named will please make full report from March 1 to October 31, to Bro. Macrae.

We also failed to get reports from Brn. L. L. Wight, A. J. Moore, S. R Hay, and C. E. Belkham. Let these brethren take notice that a report is expected, though they have done nothing. Bro. E. A. Erwin has received appointment for northeast Texas and is recommended to the Saints and friends of that mission.

CHESLING —Ralph Dewey, aged one year, eleven months, and twelve days; the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Chesling, of Eagle Grove, Iowa, died on August 1, 1900. Funeral service at Head Grove church, in charge of Bro. V. W. Gunsolley.

BELL —Barbara Lee was born in the state of New York, March 9, 1829: was married to Thomas Bell, with whom she emigrated to Illinois in 1867, where she has since lived. Her husband preceded her in death nine years. Her residence since coming to Illinois was in and about Wilmington. Twenty-five years of her life was spent in the Reorganization, leading a faithful and consistent life. Five of the nine children remain to mourn the loss of mother; all of whom were present at the funeral, which was at the home of Bro. L. W. Kahler, Wilmington, Illinois, July 31, 1900; sermon by Elder J. M. Terry. A large attendance attested the high esteem held for the deceased. Peace to her ashes.

KELLOGG.—Edward Kellogg died July 29, 1900, aged 49 years. Has been a member of the Reorganized Church about five years. Was baptized by Bro. Parsons. This notice was sent from Norwalk, Connecticut.

WELLS —Near Woodruff, Idaho, July 28, 1900, Erastus N. Wells. He was born in Pennsylvania, February 18, 1835, and emigrated to the west in 1850 Though not a member of the church, he had been a believer for years, and had already requested baptism. His death came suddenly, circumstances in the meantime having prevented a compliance with his request. Funeral sermon by Elder D. W. Wight.

TANNEHILL —Lavina, infant daughter of Bro. Clark and Sr. Anna Tannehill, born May 17, died July 12, 1900. Blessed by Elders Joseph Emmett and M. B. Williams. Buried at Blairstown, Missouri. Bro. and Sr. Tannehill are members of the Second Kansas City branch. All that could be, was done, and the parents and friends unite in saying, "Lord, thy will be done," and live in the hope of meeting the little one in a purified body, when she comes with the Redeemer in power and great glory.

YANCEY.—At the home of her daughter, Sr. Annie Milgate, [no town given,] May 12, 1900, Sr. Mary R. Yancey. She was the mother of ten children, seven of whom are living. She was born in New York, September 21, 1812; baptized in New York, in 1835, by Benjamin Winchester. Thrice married. All of her husbands preceded her to the grave. She knew old Joseph and nearly all of the leading men of the church in those days. She was a true-hearted woman, and a faithful Saint until the hour of departure. She was beloved by all who knew her. Funeral sermon by Bro. George Daley. Our loss was her gain, for her spirit rests in the paradise of God.

GRIM —Another spirit has entered into the rest prepared for the righteous. Sr. Winifred Grim, after a lingering illness of several months, passed away at the home of her parents, in Canton, Illinois, on the 7th of August, 1900. She was born near the same place, August 14, 1878. On the 4th of September, 1899, she made her covenant with God, being baptized by Elder F. A. Russell, and confirmed by Elder J. S. Patterson. The same night she bore a beautiful testimony regarding the truth; and from that day till she was summoned home, her faith ever grew stronger. Many are the blessings she received confirming her hope, even to the end. Her kindly acts and ministrations, her highly developed sense of right, and the pure motives which had ever guided her, beamed with exceeding brilliance when touched by the Spirit of her Maker, all of which witness that her page of life, though short, was well written. On Friday, August 10, a large number of relatives and friends assembled at her former home to pay the last loving tribute. The beautiful floral emblems attested the esteem in which she was held by all. Funeral services conducted by Elder J. S. Patterson, assisted by F. A. Russell.

"Still let her mild rebukings stand
Between us and the wrong,
And her dear mem'ry serve to make
Our faith in goodness strong."

MORGAN.—Bro. John W. Morgan was born August 21, 1854, in Wales; baptized in 1867, at Mineral Ridge, Ohio; married September 21, 1880, to Miss Sarah Ann Lewis, to this happy union four children were born. On February 22, 1900, he was hurt in the mines, by a large rock falling on him. Since that time he has been a great sufferer, but bearing the burden with much Christian patience and fortitude; and on August 6, 1900, he passed to rest until the resurrection morn. He was a faithful, consistent brother, true to the faith, and always ready to assist in any possible way. He leaves a wife and three children. Funeral services at the church, conducted by Elder J. A. Tanner.

STONE. — Waldo Reynolds, son of Bro. Ralph and Sr. Maud Stone, was born at Henderson, Iowa, April 15, 1900; died April 23, 1900, and laid to rest in Henderson cemetery. Blessed the day of his death by D. Hougas.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

NEBRASKA THE LAND OF PLENTY.

I wonder why it is that so many men spend their days working hard on rented farms, barely making enough to get along, with no great prospect ahead of owning their own homes, when within a few hours' journey is a land of plenty—Nebraska—where all kinds of grain and fruit can be raised with the least amount of labor; where cattle and hogs fed on corn bring a handsome profit; where the climate is healthful and churches and schools abound; where land is cheap and can be bought on very easy terms.

Think of this, and if you want information about the country send to me for "The Corn Belt," a beautifully illustrated monthly paper that tells all about Nebraska, and also for "The West Nebraska Grazing Country," an interesting illustrated booklet containing a large sectional map of Nebraska.

On the first and third Tuesdays of each month during the balance of this year cheap excursion tickets will be sold over our road to Nebraska, so that people may go and see for themselves. Ask your ticket agent about this.

ARE WOMEN DEGENERATING?

BY LADY JEUNE.

The tendency of life today has been to elevate the professions in which women embarked, and the most sweeping change has characterized the conduct and life of women in some of the less intellectual professions. The standard of morality for women on the stage, in music, in artistic life, has risen enormously. We welcome as our friends and companions the actresses of today, and the Queens of Song in England are some of the most enchanting and delightful of England's daughters. In every class the cosmopolitan spirit of English society has spread, while many women, who thirty years ago, either from indolence or indifference, were never seen except in their professional capacity, are now the ornaments and centers of some of the most exclusive and agreeable circles.

It is the seriousness and earnestness of women's work that has placed them in this position, and has elevated their profession, whatever it may be, into a definite calling. No one objects to any profession a woman adopts, provided she does so meaning to attain the highest perfection, and that her ambition is to excel in what is an honorable and decent way of earning her livelihood. There are many struggling ballet girls and circus dancers whose lives are examples of courage and endurance, but who have been forced to earn their living in that way because circumstances were against their being able to do so in any other, and who have conquered the natural horror that all women have of being obliged to appear in public in the dress they must necessarily wear. There is many a girl on the stage whose cheeks burn with shame, and whose whole soul revolts against what she considers to be a lowering and degrading position, but which she pursues because she is likely obliged to be the partial, if not the sole, bread-winner of a dependent family; and the cry of the hungry brothers and sisters, or the pale face of the anxious mother, urges her on in a calling which she would give much to abandon, but which she can only renounce at too great a sacrifice for others.

Gibbon points out that one of the signs of the decline and fall of the Roman empire was the adoption by women of the pursuits and occupations of men, and their desire and alacrity to show themselves in public as actors in the shows and amusements of that pleasure-loving and licentious age. One of the most impressive and interesting portions of his history is that in which he describes the amusements and occupations of the highborn Roman women, and the connection he drew between their conduct and the fall of the greatest empire of the world. He tells us how they rode, drove, fought, and fenced with men; how they entered the arena and took their part in the games and pageants of their day, and how, with the disappearance of the modesty and reserve which are natural characteristics of women, they lost whatever influence of an elevating or purifying nature they possessed. We do not want to draw a parallel between that era and our own, but there are signs, and significant ones, that women are in a great measure divesting themselves of the dignity and reserve of their predecessors.

There are, however, indications that there are women who, not from necessity but from choice, wish to enter the lists, and that they are crowding into professions which hitherto no woman has chosen except from the pressure of competition in those from which she found herself shut out. Some time ago there were paragraphs in many papers announcing that at certain music halls in London a large number of women in society (well born, we imagine, and comfortably off) had applied to be engaged as ladies of the corps de ballet. The story went further on to say that the unfortunate managers, distracted by this sudden invasion of beauty and fashion, had asked for time to consider the position before accepting the services of these ladies. There was no question of their being obliged to take this step from necessity or want, because most of them asked for no salary, or, at best, only a pittance, to make some show of excuse, we imagine, for their request. We also hear that the applicants were all fair and divinely tall, some of them being over six feet. The cause of their desire to appear was the occasion of a new ballet which, it is said, was to give them an unusual opportunity of displaying their charms. It is not yet known what the managers' decision is, and the ladies are still waiting, and let us hope they will ever wait in an agonized uncertainty. One cannot but treat the story as a myth, and yet it is so currently reported and believed (and it has never been contradicted) that one has a melancholy feeling it may be true, though the idea is so repugnant as to be disgusting. Can it be doubted that genuine talent stands a poorer chance of recognition today, when nearly all that is necessary is that the performers or actors on any stage or in any capacity of life should be possessed of a name, or be in some way known to the public?

We cannot imagine either that the foolish eccentricities of a few empty-headed girls are to destroy the reputation of the women we know and respect, or that their stupid escapade meets with any feeling of sympathy among their sisters. In these days of sensationalism, of searching for new excitements and interests, a few may have been led away, but that English women have altered in the essentially great qualities they have always possessed we refuse to believe.—Chicago Tribune.

It is stated that of a thousand volumes of travel which Dr. Edward Leigh Pell examined in the preparation of his latest book, "The Bright Side of Humanity," scarcely two hundred dwelt at any length upon the virtues of the people whom they profess to describe, while most of them faithfully mirrored all the vices in sight. "The Bright Side of Humanity," is the first serious attempt that has been made to present the distinguishing noble traits of all races. It will be published by the B. F. Johnson Publishing Company, Richmond, Virginia, and will be ready September 15.

INTERNATIONAL ZIONIST CONGRESSES.

By Leon Zolotkoff, Delegate to Three Zionist Congresses.

"There was an opening and there was a closing—the fourth congress."

If there ever shall arise a Jewish historian to describe to future generations the almost miraculous movements gone through by Israel resurrected in its attempts to rise out of the chaos of dispersion he will, in all probability, paraphrase a Biblical verse in the manner indicated; for everything relating to creation of order out of chaos would suggest itself to his mind by the association of ideas. The annual Zionist congresses, the fourth of which adjourned last week at London, England, subject to the call by the Executive committee, will have to be considered by that historian as being of such paramount significance to Israel's regeneration as were the newly born days in the first week of the world's creation.

Zionism represents the national idea of Judaism, the fervent longing of the Jews to become united once more into a nation, inhabiting the land that, according to the scriptures, had been promised them by God. That longing was for many centuries the keynote to their prayers and of their songs; it was their only thought and dream. As the process of disorganization of the Jewish people progressed that longing lost much of its intensity and its practical significance, but perpetuated itself in the Jewish prayer book.

The marvels of intercommunication of the nineteenth century which conquered space and brought the continents nearer to each other, and the bitter hatred which characterized the attitude of the world toward the Jew during the second half of the nineteenth century, brought the painful consciousness to the Jewish masses that the majority of their people is still without a home.

What was more natural for the Jewish masses under the circumstances than to make another attempt toward the realization of their ancient dream? History repeats itself and heredity is a potent factor in directing human thought and energy. At first only a few pioneers proceeded to Palestine, under the most trying difficulties, and as "farm hands" entered there into competition with the native fellahs, whose needs in life are exceedingly limited. Others followed suit. Several agricultural and vinocultural colonies have been established; schools and libraries opened; an attempt to revive the language of the prophets proved to be a success and the younger generation of Rishon-le-Zion, f. i., is now expressing modern thought and joys and sorrows of life in the language of Isaiah. Models of civilized agriculturists, they outdo the wild Beduins in all the sports of the free life of the desert. A type of a Jew has thus been produced who never experienced the demoralizing feeling of humiliation and homelessness, and who combines in his nature Maccabean daring with modern culture. The idea of creating a home for the Jewish homeless masses had naturally suggested itself to the mind of many a philanthropist, but it waited for the champion who would utilize the national feeling of the people for that purpose and give it expression and form.

That champion appeared in the person of Dr. Theodor Herzl, whose name will indelibly be associated with the great Zionist movement.

When Dr. Herzl called the fourth Zionist congress to order last Monday at the Queen's Hall, at London, he placed Zionism in a position more critical than any it has occupied, even since he first introduced it in its present form. It was putting Zionism to a severe test. London is a place unfit for dreamers, and were Zionism not equipped to appeal to the verdict of the world instead of to the judgment of the Jews only it could not have survived the fourth congress.

Dr. Herzl pointed to Zionism as an important factor in the new Asiatic problem, and London understood him well; he spoke of a "legally secured home" for homeless Jews in Palestine, under the suzerainty of the Sultan, and London was impressed with the earnestness of the assertion. It thus becomes evident that Zionism has now taken its place among the definite political agitations of contemporary history; it has become a movement which not alone the Jewish people but the world must take account of.—Chicago Tribune, August 19, 1900.

GIRL FINDS ANCIENT IDOLS IN TEXAS.

Images of the gods of the prehistoric inhabitants of the valleys of the Colorado and Rio Grande rivers have been unearthed recently near Marble Falls, Texas, by Miss Alma Ney, an enthusiastic young explorer and archæologist of St. Louis. Traces of the existence of at least three different types of men at three different epochs in the world's history have been found there by her, and the sacred images are believed to have belonged to the latest, or about the time of the Aztecs.

That these three different types of men existed is shown by the radically different types of abodes that have been unearthed in the explorations. There are some which are entirely subterranean, in ramifying burrows like enlarged rabbit warrens. Others which were probably the homes of people of Aztec or Toltec blood were built of sun-dried brick or roughly dressed stone, and were fairly substantial houses. The third, which are to be found in the greatest numbers—in endless number wherever in the State there is trace of an early watercourse or pond—were built over excavations perhaps three feet deep.

While making her explorations Miss Ney discovered what is believed to have been the palace of a king and which consisted of a mound nearly forty feet high. On top of it were oak trees at least 400 years old. In the mound were many broken dishes, and a number of small images believed to have been gods. They are ugly, repulsive in appearance, and rudely carved from stone.

Close at hand was another mound nearly 100 feet high, believed to be a temple. In the top of it was found a room that contained a big sacrificial slab of granite seven feet long by four wide lying across an altar four feet high. Near at hand lay an image of a god, hooknosed and with enormous ears. A figure representing the sun was carved on the forehead. Beside this lay a sacrificial knife of pure bronze, and there were stone bowls on the floor supposed to have been used for catching blood. In another building was a solid gold head, believed by Miss Ney to have been intended to represent Montezuma.

All about these settlements the streams are rich in gold and the hills are full of goldbearing quartz. Miss Ney believes that somewhere there must be a vast accumulation of gold made and hidden away by these prehistoric peoples. She has searched for this, but so far has found only here and there rich golden ornaments or valuable statues of the precious metal. She has found a negro woman, blind now, who lived for fifty years a captive among the Comanches, and this old woman tells wonderful tales of the gold that is hidden where the Comanches can find it. Miss Ney believes the tale and will continue a search for it.—Chicago Tribune, August 19, 1900.

DIVORCE.

There are so many queries arising in every quarter where the HERALD is taken in reference to the "law" of divorcement that a little upon the subject may be pardoned, notwithstanding the much already written upon it.

There is in the Scripture but one justifiable cause for divorce given, fornication or adultery. No one need be in doubt in regard to this.

Under the Mosaic code, under which it is stated polygamy flourished and was provided for, there may have been several causes for divorce. In Deuteronomy 24:1-4 it is provided thus:—

> When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favor in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

She could then be married to another; and if the second husband hate her and divorce her, or he die, the first husband could not again marry her.

One of the schools which existed before the Savior's time, held that a man could not be lawfully divorced from his wife unless she should have been guilty of infamy, or a crime against virtue. But another school taught that any reason which the husband might deem sufficient warranted the giving of such divorce.

1. If she were not agreeable to him. 2. If he found any uncleanness in her, i. e. anything disagreeable to him. 3. Or if he found a woman whom he liked better.

It would seem that under the law and in the practice of polygamy wives were subject to divorcement upon the mere whim of the husband, a very inconsiderate and unwholesome arrangement, one totally inadequate to the keeping the state free from immorality.

Both Matthew and Mark give the saying of the Savior against divorce except for the one cause.

In order to keep within the lines of just and honorable dealing it is necessary to put such a rendition on the statement as will free it from cruelty and injustice to the innocent of wrong doing.

It is evident that under the law a divorced woman could marry again, the only restriction being against her first husband. Now, if a woman guilty of wrong doing is made to be free to marry again, by what rule of right is a divorced woman, put away for no act of wrong doing on her part made an adulteress and prohibited from marrying again? Yet this is the usual attitude taken by extremists from the Savior's words, Matthew 19, Mark 10. It is to us a very improper rendition and full of opportunities for mischief.

The position of woman under such a rendition of the law, that any failure to please a husband, either from natural defect or from disability the result of environment and education, would be sufficient cause for a bill of divorce written by the husband, is a travesty upon the marriage relation, and could not fail to result in a decline of value of woman as a wife and companion. It is clear that no such estimate was put on marriage by Jesus, for he distinctly affirmed that "in the beginning it was not so." And further that,—

> For the hardness of your hearts Moses suffered you to put away your wives.—Matt. 19.

These considerations fully establish the sacred nature of the marriage relation as shown by the Bible.

This is fully corroborated by the revelations to the church. "Marriage is ordained of God unto man." The church indorsed this in 1835, when it enacted that "All legal contracts of marriage entered into before persons are baptized into this church should be held sacred and fulfilled." The terms of this sacredness are "keeping yourselves wholly for each other and from all others, so long as you both shall live."

To the truly wedded, the law of divorce means nothing. To them there is neither desire for its intervention for them, nor fear of its consequences. They appreciate the sacredness of the bond which they have entered into and cherish neither intention nor desire to lessen the term of its continuance. Neither will by word or act render the keeping of the bond irksome for the other. Each will strive to enrich the life of the other in the dearest of all fellowships, and the name husband or wife will convey to either the tenderest, truest, most faithful and sacred emotions of which the human heart is capable. Anything which in itself or its results is calculated to hurt, disturb the peace and happiness, or annoy a companion will be studiously avoided by both husband and wife. It is a part, a vital part, of the covenant, based upon the true meaning of "keeping yourselves for each other and from all others, so long as you both shall live," "observing the legal relations of this covenant."

From such consideration as this, it is easy to draw the conclusion that when persons have entered into the marriage relation, if either husband or wife does that which annoys, disturbs, distresses, or destroys the peace and pleasantness of the mutual home, or that which puts a companion in hazard of health, bodily comfort, and produces injury to person or life; such person is guilty of a violation of his or her part of the contract; and if the offense is persisted in it is a direct breaking of the bond, which not only destroys the peace of the offender, but prevents the one offended from keeping the bond on his or her part.

All of the foregoing may be done and yet the one offending be not guilty of the one designated crime, adultery. But, when a long continued course of such conduct, finally drives the tortured one from home to seek among strangers what is denied him or her at home, is not the putting away as complete in spirit as it is possible for it to be in fact? Is not the offender guilty in the truest sense of such a putting away as should make the bond void as to the one put away? In such a case the offender should be the one punished and not the offended. The one thus putting away, whether husband or wife, should be adjudged as guilty as of the crime of adultery, which should make the other free.

Such course of conduct makes it impossible for the innocent one to keep the covenant, however desirous such one may be.

Jesus said, in Matthew 19, "whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrieth another, commiteth adultery;" and Mark adds the words "against her," referring to the husband. Mark, also, makes the same statement to apply to a woman who puts away her husband.

We do not believe that Jesus intended to make persons innocent of offense in the rupture of the married bond to be criminals or to impose unjust disabilities upon them. Hence when either husband or wife makes the keeping of the bond according to its holy institution impossible, then the innocent one should be held to be free.

There are probably very few married couples living in such conditions that one is entirely innocent, the other alone guilty. There are doubtless some instances, but they are very rare. The conditions of which we have written apply only to these rare cases; so that what we have written cannot be properly construed as giving license to any to misunderstand the law, or yet to misconstrue the conduct of a companion and seek to justify them in misapplying these thoughts and conclusions.

The Catholic Church rules make no allowance for divorce, and it is not an easy matter for Catholics to be rid of a companion, no matter how badly said companion may behave, if the one act is not committed. Yet many doubtless are divorced by the courts for causes statutory but not recognized by the church.

The Book of Covenants has a provision by which those guilty of the major offense may be forgiven for the first offense. If the offense is repeated then the church may not forgive. An injured husband, or wife, may condone the crime of crimes against himself or herself, both in the law of the church and the law of the land. Both laws permit and provide that the offended one is justified in seeking to be free. So that such absolute rendition as some give to the word, as it stands in Matthew and Mark, must be ready to concede that there is some latitude for an injured husband or wife.

The church is also warned not to receive those who have left their companions for the sake of adultery, themselves being offenders. But, the conditions are so varied, the complications so different, and in many cases so complex, that there is no single rule of law that will fit each and every case. For this reason the church has been obliged to leave the decision of cause to the courts of the land; and unless there is grave reason to question the validity of the inquiry in any given case, it is to be assumed that divorce is granted for cause. More especially is this the case where persons have been divorced before hearing the gospel and being baptized into the church.

MISTAKE IN LARGE TYPE EDITION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Bro. A. J. Keck writes:—

In our family reading we just discovered that in Romans 9: 8 the Large Type edition of the New Testament has it: "These are the children of God," while the small type edition has it: "These are not the children of God." Please note in Herald which is correct.

The large type edition is at fault, and the error is one of proof reading. It should read, "These are not the children of God." We are glad that Bro. Keck has called our attention to this, as we do not believe that it has been noticed before. Those who have this edition of the Inspired Version in their possession will do well to note this error, and make the correction.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

We dislike to answer questions like the following, for the reason that we think our people with the works of the church in hands and the Good Spirit to lead them should gather sufficient idea of how to proceed without a set direction.

If a brother feels in his heart he has done wrong and wishes to confess the same, how should he be treated by the church?

He should be treated as one who, having done wrong, desires to make the wrong right, and shoud be permitted to do so.

How does he stand in the church when there is no charge preferred against him?

He stands as one in good fellowship.

How should he be treated?

In a kind and brotherly manner, by officers and members.

Is there any special place of meeting, or any special meeting when this brother should make his confession and be forgiven?

No. Unless by his request a meeting has been appointed for his being heard. It is usual in some branches for confession to be made in any prayer and testimony meeting, or at the regular business meeting of the branch. Either will do, with the understanding that if it is done in a prayer meeting, and controversy or discussion occurs over it, the matter should be at once deferred to the next business meeting, or a meeting specially called to consider it.

Should it be at any meeting of the church, or must it be on sacrament Sunday only?

See answer to No. 4.

How do you understand Matthew 5: 23–25 and Doctrine and Covenants, page 217, pars. 8, 9; and page 149, par. 2, in regard to this brother?

Thus. If a man knows that a brother has just cause of complaint for injury done such brother he should make every exertion to settle the matter, make the wrong right before he partakes of the sacrament as if all was well between himself and his injured brother. (There are no citations on the pages named, in our Doctrine and Covenants referring to the query. Ed.)

How can he make himself right?

By making proper apology, restitution, or reparation for injury done, in a proper place and time, to the brother injured, and to the church if it is a public offense.

Can a brother or sister be tried for neglect of duty to the church when he or she has not been visited by any of its officers first?

Either brother or sister must first be visited and labored with by proper officers before being tried for any offense.

In a case of this kind (neglect of duty) would it be considered personal or public?

It would be owing to what the duty imposed was. If it was a personal or private duty it would be considered personal. If a public duty, public.

A thousand questions might be asked along these lines, and still some loophole be left for another, before the subject of personal duty to private and public persons and society be wholly covered. But it seems to us that if a man really wanted to make a wrong done by him right he could easily find the way.

First. Seek the person injured with an honest intention to make proper reconciliation.

Second. Approach such injured person in such a way as to give him to understand that you want to make the wrong right.

Third. State the matter fairly. Don't whine and excuse yourself, or justify the wrong; but frankly acknowledge it and ask pardon.

Fourth. If the injury requires compensation in money, or goods, make it just as frankly and fully, and you have gained your brother.

Fifth. If he refuses to hear you, or to be reconciled, after you have done all, go your way, let him alone, and go about your business the same as if you had not offended, or as if reconciliation had been made.

Sixth. If you want to make a public confession, do so with an understanding with the officer in charge of branch and let that suffice.

Is it a position of the church that a commandment of the Lord is authority? Was the commission given unto the apostles by Jesus himself when he said unto them, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel? Was this authority?

There can be no question that the commandment of God to his servants and people is authority to do what is commanded.

The commission given the apostles, as stated in Mark 16 and Matthew 28, was their authority for the work they subsequently did in the gospel mission. We have never heard this disputed.

If there should be trouble between two of the church members, and the one offended goes to the offending party seeking adjustment, according to the law, and by the second visit is not able to effect an adjustment, will a written apology from the offending party, be in harmony with the law, sent by some official member to the offended and the way to seek forgiveness? When the two parties live in the same branch at time apology is sent.

We believe that in such a case as stated above a written apology would be proper, and if proper, legal. Especially so as no specific manner of procedure is clearly defined in the law. The main point is this: Is the effort to seek a reconciliation an earnest and honest one? If it is, then any effort which the one seeking to become reconciled and to apologize may make in kindness should be considered as proper and open to him. Written apologies should be accepted if made in proper time and in proper language. They are better than verbal ones in this, that they do not vary from first statement, and are always susceptible to the one interpretation, and cannot be denied.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Does the word counsel, in section 160, of Book of Rules, mean that a non member of the church can appear as counsel, in and before an elders court? Do you know of any ruling of this kind?

There has been no ruling upon the point referred to. It would turn somewhat upon the nature of the case. But as the Rules of Order could be made binding on church members only it should not be considered as provided for in our Book of Rules where it is made permissible for the accused to appear "by counsel, or by some other member of the church."

It is probable that such a course as appearing by counsel who is not a member should be left to the discretion of the court of elders to which the request should be made. Should such counsel be permitted by the court, it must be with the direct understanding that such counsel should be subject to the rules and orders of the court and the church.

Is it the duty of branch officers to attend elders' court while members of the branch are being tried?

No, unless they are members of the court, counsel, or witnesses in the case.

Has the teacher of a branch the authority to prefer charges against a member without the knowledge of the branch officers?

Yes. But in case he does so it is a personal matter and not a branch affair. It is better that he should act with the knowledge and direction of the branch, or its officers.

Is it right that a lay member, new at that, should be called upon by an elder to close a meeting?

Yes. If the presiding officer be so led to do.

PUBLIC BEAUTY CLUBS.

We publish below what is certainly unique in design, a movement looking to the villages and hamlets where people live to be beautiful to the public eye, as well as mere places where people live, or stay, as the case may be. It is well to conserve the beautiful and the useful, and where both may be accomplished at the same time it is certainly wise to do it.

A National Convention is hereby called to meet in the city of Springfield, Ohio, Wednesday and Thursday, October 10 and 11, 1900, for the purpose of organizing a national league of village improvement associations and other societies which devote their energies wholly or in part to the promotion of public beauty. The first session will be held on Wednesday morning, October 10, at ten o'clock.

Every village improvement association in the United States, and every other society working to promote outdoor art, will be entitled to two delegates in this convention. All persons who are interested in the success of the wider movement for public beauty are cordially invited and respectfully urged to attend this convention, in the deliberations of which they will be cheerfully accorded the privilege of participating.

Further announcements as to program and other particulars will be made at a later date.
THE SPRINGFIELD IMPROVEMENT LEAGUE,
Springfield, Ohio, by Clifton M. Nichols, Secretary.

What is the meaning of the movement for public beauty? Wherein lies the reason for its phenomenally rapid growth? What does its progress promise in the development of the higher interests of humanity?

A study of these inquiries, with a view to their answer in a comprehensive manner, must inevitably disclose the existence of a deeper significance to the public beauty propaganda than would be suggested to the casual observer.

The public beauty movement covers the latest developments of progressive thought as applied to the practical needs of mankind. Its widespread growth means that men and women are at last taking advantage of Nature's assistance in the solution of life's problems. It means that humanity is to be redeemed, in the widest, best sense of the word, through environment.

In the evolutionary processes of time, it was once the case that integrity and morality were regarded as possible only when one's surroundings were of the most austere character. The human heart was considered to be utterly depraved. Man was taught that inward grace was coincident with outward environment in which there entered no degree of beauty or attractiveness.

A less repulsive and more reasonable philosophy now rules the thought of the world. It has come to be generally recognized that in every heart there is a spark of good, however hidden it may be by depraved habits or unfortunate circumstances. At this time there is almost universal acknowledgment of the power of environment to develop the good in every man and woman.

The public beauty movement is the natural result of the progress in thought which has so completely changed our philosophy. In scores of ways the every-day life of the period evidences the disposition to develop humanity through its environment. Thinking reformers no longer waste their efforts on repressive legal measures as a means of changing the tendencies of mankind. The aim now is to overcome the evil desires by the inherent good of the human heart, strengthened and developed by surroundings of a salutary character.

A MARKED copy of the Okarche, Oklahoma, Times for August 17 has reached our desk. It contains this kindly notice:—

Elders Hubert Case and W. M. Aylor, of Moorhead, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri, respectively, have erected their tabernacle near the schoolhouse and will preach every evening beginning at 8:15 o'clock. These gentlemen are sent out as representatives of the Latter Day Saints' Church whose publishing house, college, and home for the poor are located at Lamoni, Iowa, and are in no way connected with the sect in the west bearing this name. (See Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 16, page 828.)

Following this, the epitome of our faith and doctrine is printed in full, the whole occupying one and one half columns on the first page of the Times. This reflects enterprise on the part of the brethren and fairness on the part of the editors of the Times.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. A. H. Smith, San Bernardino, Cal., writes August 17:—

The reunion was declared off by Bro. G. T. Griffiths, but the Los Angeles branch concluded to have a protracted meeting anyhow, so they announced it and went ahead with it, and we have been holding meetings just the same as at a reunion, and have been having good meetings with good attendance. I left this morning, Friday, to open a two days' meeting here, beginning tonight, but left Bro. Griffiths and Williams to carry the meetings over Sunday at Sycamore grove. There was a general disappointment when it became known that you were not coming, but of course it did not last long for I made it so interesting for them that they did not miss you very much. Of course the reporters were very much put out because they did not get to interview Joseph Smith the Prophet.

Next week I go to Garden Grove to hold a two days' meeting down there, and on the 29th we go to Oakland to the reunion there. Bro. Burton is here. He feels very much like going back to the islands. I presume he has written to you about it. He represents those people in a different light than anyone I have heard speak of them. Not even Bro. T. W. Smith gave so good an account of them. I was very much pleased with his account.

The work is in fairly good condition in California. I called upon A. B. Wise today, and he did not know me till I spoke to him a time or two, then he knew my voice. He inquired about you, and seemed very glad to see me.

Bro. J. M. Stubbart, under date of August 23, writes from Harlan, Iowa:—

I arrived in my field of labor August 18. Since then I have been laboring at this place. On the 21st I baptized five. Will start tomorrow for Audubon; a new place; no Saints, I think, in the county. Expect to help run the district tent there.

Bro. J. F. Mintun, from Sioux City, August 22:—

Four baptized Sunday. Others much interested.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

President Joseph Smith left last Thursday for Tabor to attend the reunion there. He expected to be gone about ten days or so.

The Herald Office will be represented at the Independence reunion by the business manager, Bro. John Smith.

Brn. Hubert Case and William Aylor were in Okarche, Oklahoma, lately, as we see by the Okarche Times of the 17th inst. After speaking of the brethren the Times gives about a one and one half column synopsis of our belief.

WILL THE GATHERING TAKE PLACE WITHOUT FURTHER REVELATIONS FROM GOD?

It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.—D. C. 117: 11.

As the church increases in numbers, and advances in spirituality, we can expect a gradual fulfillment of the promises made by our Lord. Among the most interesting to the people of God we find this:—

And truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem.—D. C. 36: 12.

The Saints are expecting the coming of our Savior in glory; but the above gives us to understand that we need not expect this glorious event till after the Saints are gathered to a place which the Lord shall prepare. When the Saints are gathered, and the events spoken of by the prophets are taking place, they will know that the time is drawing near, and shall "be looking forth for the time of" his "coming." And as we are not in a gathered condition at the present time, and have no authority to appoint "stakes," or places of gathering, nor will any be appointed till the Lord speaks from heaven and "commands that they be established," all the rights we have in the matter is to "gather into the regions round about," and this is to be done by "the counsel of the elders" of the "church." At least one of the commandments here referred to is found in section 58: 12, and reads as follows:—

And let the privileges of the lands be made known, from time to time, by the bishop, or the agent of the church; and let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight, but let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time.

This informs us when the "counsel of the elders" is to be had—"at the conferences." The bishopric may be included with the elders, but we doubt that it refers to them only. The work of the "bishop" is definitely pointed out in this verse, which was to make known "the privileges of the land," while the counsel of "the elders" "at the conferences" was to prevent the Saints from gathering in "haste." While this referred to the gathering before the Saints were driven from Jackson county, yet it throws light on the way the elders are to counsel and "guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of" the Lord.

We may be very anxious for the gathering to take place, and as a result of this anxiety, formulate theories as to the way to bring about this condition; but we need not expect any change in procedure "until it shall be otherwise given of" the Lord. The instructions here promised will be given as soon as we, as a church, are prepared for an advanced step in this direction. So let us be patient and faithfully perform the duties required of us in the present condition. There are many statements in the Doctrine and Covenants which, to me, convey the thought that we must wait till further instructions are given by the Lord before the gathering will take place, so let us notice a few.

Zion shall be redeemed, although she is chastened for a little season.—97: 4.

The promise of Zion's redemption is cheering, but it will not take place till after she has been "chastened for a little season." When will this "little season" be passed? Has it passed? How can man tell unless God reveals it? One may say, "I am satisfied it has passed, and we can now proceed to gather and carry out the provisions of the law which shall obtain when Zion is redeemed." But we have one through which such information is to come. When he presents us with a revelation of such vast importance, it will be examined and adopted as the law directs. It can be readily seen that it was useless to endeavor to "redeem Zion" while she was under the chastening hand of the Almighty; and as she was to be in that condition for "a little season," when did that time expire? The same thought is expressed in the following:—

And the servant said unto his lord, When shall these things be? And he said unto his servant, When I will: go ye straightway: and do all things whatsoever I have commanded you. . . . And his servant went straightway, and did all things whatsoever his lord commanded him, and after many days all things were fulfilled.—Doc. and Cov. 98: 8.

This is a part of the parable that the Lord said he should "show" unto his people, that they might know his "will concerning the redemption of Zion." (See Doc. and Cov. 98: 6-8.)

The servant desired to know when this redemption was to take place, and the time when they were to proceed to move into the land lost to the enemy, and the lord said, "When I will." Is it his will now? If so, who knows it? There is one important feature of this servant's work—he did what "his lord commanded him." They were instructed in the same revelation—to purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson county, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand. Now, verily I say unto you, Let all the churches gather together all their moneys; let these things be done in their time, be not in haste; and observe to have all things prepared before you.—98: 9, 10.

We desire to call attention to the fact, that "these things" are to be done in their time, be not in haste." There is a "time" when it will be opportune for this work to be done; but if we proceed before this time, we will be "in haste." Some have concluded that we as a church are neglecting our duties in regard to the gathering; but are we sure that if we should proceed now, we would not be hasty in the matter? If it should be shown that the time has come for this work to be done, then every exertion within our power should be made.

And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands; and every church in the eastern countries when they are built up, if they will hearken unto this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion.—98: 10.

As this land is to be "purchased for money, in the region round about the land" which the Lord has "appointed to be the land of Zion," it may be necessary to learn how far this "region round about" extends from Independence, Missouri. The president of the church has repeatedly informed us that if we were within one day's travel, by the best means afforded, to Independence, we were in the "region round about." One can leave Detroit, Michigan, and arrive in Kansas City, Missouri, in about twenty-two hours. Less than one day. You can calculate the boundaries in other directions.

There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—98: 10.

This was given shortly after the Lord permitted "the affliction to come upon them wherewith they have been afflicted in consequence of their transgressions" (98: 1), whereby they had been "cast out of the land of their inheritance." They did not fail at first, because there was not a sufficiency to carry on the work; nor did they fail to redeem Zion because of their inability for lack of means, but because of "their transgressions." They failed to "redeem Zion," by not being "willing to hearken" to the voice of the Lord. And as a result of being in that condition, the Lord would not permit them to remain in Zion.

For, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay.—D. C. 83: 8.

The church was not in a condition to "establish Zion no more to be thrown down," then, and the all important question comes at the present: Are we prepared now? Are we sufficiently willing to hearken to the voice of the Lord at the present time? If we are, I believe the Lord is sufficiently near that he can tell us of the fact. Then we will be not only worthy to make a success in the undertaking, but will have the proper desire to do the work. "Be not in haste." Again:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Therefore, in consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly, concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands; and this cannot be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high; for, behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them, inasmuch as they are faithful, and continue in humility before me; therefore, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season, for the redemption of Zion.—D. C. 102: 3.

The "transgression" of his "people" made it necessary for the elders to "wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion;" and this "little season" was allowed that they themselves might "be prepared." This work was of such a character that it could be accomplished in a certain way only, and the elders must "have experience, and know more perfectly, concerning their duty" than they knew at that time. "And this cannot be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high." Have they had the necessary "experience" to give us the required knowledge of our "duty" that is demanded, before Zion can be redeemed? Who but the Lord himself can tell? The elders of the Reorganized Church have never received such an endowment as is spoken of in Church History, volume 1, page 475, to my knowledge. "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom;" and as the articles which have appeared in the Herald and Ensign on this subject, and the speeches made by several of the elders have differed so widely, that one is forced to the conclusion that the necessary "experience" and "endowment" have not been enjoyed by us as a church; and if this is the case, then, it is "expedient" in the Lord that his "elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion."

This harmonizes with what was given in 1894:—

Therefore, the law given to the church in section forty-two, over the meaning of some parts of which there has been so much controversy is as if it were given today; and the bishop and his counselors, and the high council, and the bishop and his council, and the storehouse and the temple and the salvation of my people, are the same to me now that they were in that day when I gave the revelation.—D. and C. 122: 6.

Turning to section forty-two we find:—

Thou shalt ask, and it shall be revealed unto you in mine own due time, where the New Jerusalem shall be built. . . . And ye shall hereafter receive church covenants, such as shall be sufficient to establish you, both here [Kirtland] and in the New Jerusalem—D. and C. 42: 18.

It was afterwards revealed that "the city New Jerusalem" was to—be built, beginning at the Temple Lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri.—D. and C. 83: 1.

But the revelation known as section forty-two, in the Doctrine and Covenants, does not authorize the Saints to proceed to build up Zion or "the city New Jerusalem;" but they were informed that they would "receive" instructions by revelations from time to time, such as should be "sufficient to establish" the Saints, "both here and in the New Jerusalem." They could not have proceeded and "built up Zion," or "the New Jerusalem" without further revelations than the one in section forty-two. It gave them to understand that they must have additional instructions, pointing out the location, the time for commencing of the temple, and the nature of its construction. "Therefore, the law given to the church in section forty-two . . . is as if it were given today." Again,

And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests.—D. and C. 42: 8.

This should settle the question in our minds as to whether the Lord requires us to "consecrate" all our property or not. The plain statement is, "thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate OF thy properties," instead of consecrating all thy property. The first statement shows that a portion is required, but not all. This portion, that those who love the Lord will consecrate for the poor and the needy, is understood to be the tenth. This is not a temporary law, one to be observed for a few years and then discarded, for we are told:—

And this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.

Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you.—D. C. 106: 1, 2.

As we shall pay one tenth of all our "interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever;" and if we "shall not" "observe this law," we will not be permitted to remain, I see no place this side of "forever" for abandoning the law of tithing.

There were certain laws to govern in the gathered state, and certain commandments to be observed, and we are instructed to—

Let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption.—D. C. 102: 10.

We should be careful not to confound the laws and commandments which are to be observed and enforced after Zion is redeemed, with those that should prevail in her scattered condition. The Lord said in 1834 that "my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer." And one of the things that they had failed to learn to obey is expressed in the words, "and do not impart of their substance as becometh saints." (D. C. 102: 2.)

The great need at the present time is for us as Saints to "learn to be obedient to the things which" are required of us, and develop in such a way that we will be qualified to assist in carrying on this great work.

And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.—D. C. 11: 4.

When we as a people have those traits prominently manifested in our characters, we will be prepared to live in Zion, or her stakes, which the Lord in his own time will "command that they be established." This will necessitate additional revelation.

HONORABLE WARFARE.

There can be no higher or nobler calling for any man than to be called to represent the work of God in the world. His mission is to not only stand as an exponent of the purest and noblest of principles, but to furnish the world, as did his Master, an example in his own life of the practical application of his own teaching. The principle underlying his calling is that which underlies the whole work of redemption, and that which moved the great mind of Deity to make the provision he did for the race of mankind—"good will to men."

Whoever looks at the life of a representative of Christ on earth, has a right to expect something of a reproduction of the Christ character; to find his actions prompted by the same spirit; his mode of warfare to be honorable in every sense, and above deception or anything that resembles trickery for the accomplishment of his purposes. Can he then as a representative of the truth, striving to have men and women acknowledge the truth and live in harmony with it, consistently act out an untruth himself in an effort to bring his mission to the attention of the people? To appear to be what he is not for the purpose of deceiving people for the time into the belief that he is an opposer of the latter-day work is to tell an untruth by action as plainly as if it had been told in words. What is the difference in the principle of telling an untruth and acting one? Is it honorable warfare?

We go to other churches sometimes and hear the minister refer to us or speak in a way that we infer means our church, and we are ready to resent the attack at once and carry the war into South Africa; yet we many times mention denominations by name and hold up their creeds to ridicule as though the success of our work depended on the tearing down of theirs. Would it not be better to preach the gospel in the affirmative and let other denominations alone; to build our spiritual house up along side of theirs and show it to be so much superior and more attractive that they would want to move into it? Sometimes the missionaries from the Utah church go into cities and hold meetings on the street, and manifesting a zeal that might be worthy of a better cause, by an earnest effort in singing and instrumental music, succeed in gathering a little crowd of listeners. They perhaps talk mostly on the first principles, closing with their testimony to the truthfulness of their preaching and to the mission of Joseph the Seer, making no reference to the Reorganization or the work being done by it. At the close, when they have dismissed, some elder of the Reorganization seizes upon the opportunity and gets up before the crowd which they gathered by their effort and attacks them and in telling the difference between them and the Reorganization proceeds with a wholesale denunciation of Brighamism and its kindred evils. Is it honorable warfare? If we want to preach on the street, would it not be better to select a convenient corner and go about it in an orderly way, and get our own crowd? And if we cannot get a crowd ourselves, let us not disturb their meetings. The sympathy of people is quite invariably turned toward the one attacked, especially when the attack is unprovoked.

It is well that we make the differences between us and the Brighamites known wherever we can; but we need not do it in a manner that is questionable nor in a spirit that is vindictive.

It seems to me the success of our work depends upon our living and acting in harmony with the spirit of our calling, which means love to God and love to our fellowmen—recognizing the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

OFFICERS OF THE CHURCH AND THEIR DUTIES.

BY WALTER T. GOULD, AGED 14 YEARS.

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand.—D. C. 104:44.

The names of most of the officers of the church may be found in the fourth chapter of Ephesians, eleventh and twelfth verses, where it reads thus:—

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.

Apostles' duties:—

An apostle is an elder, and it is his calling to baptize, and to ordain other elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, and to administer bread and wine—the emblems of the flesh and blood of Christ—and to confirm those who are baptized into the church, by the laying on of hands for the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, according to the scriptures; and to teach, expound, exhort, baptize, and watch over the church; and to confirm the church by the laying on of the hands, and the giving of the Holy Ghost, and to take the lead of all meetings.—D. C. 17:8.

The twelve traveling counselors are called to be the twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world; thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned.—D. C. 104:11.

It is the duty of the twelve, also, to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church.—D. C. 104:30.

It is the duty of the twelve, in all large branches, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated unto them by revelation.—D. C. 104:17.

The twelve "hold the keys to open up the authority of my kingdom upon the four corners of the earth, and after that to send my word to every creature." (D. C. 107:40.)

Elder's duty: William Nicholsons defines an elder as "being an eminent saint or patriarchal believer."

The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelation of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 17:9.) They are also commanded to pray for, and lay their hands on the sick; then if the sick die, they die unto God; but if they live they live unto God. The elders are also to "baptize, confirm, ordain, administer the bread and wine, teach, and exhort."

Blessing of children:—

Every member of the Church of Christ having children, is to bring them unto the elders before the church, who are to lay their hands upon them in the name of Jesus Christ, and bless them in his name."—D. C. 17:19.

Two or more elders may constitute a court to try transgressors.

Administer in spiritual things: The high priest and elder are to administer in spiritual things. D. C. 104:7.)

To enforce the law:—

Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: . . . and I will be your ruler when I come; and, behold, I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept.—D. C. 41:1, 2.

Elders belong to the Melchisedec priesthood. It is called the Melchisedec priesthood "because Melchisedec was such a great high priest: before his day it was called the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God; but out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days, called that priesthood after Melchisedec or the Melchisedec priesthood." (D. C. 104:1,)

Priest's duty:—

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties: and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of all meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.—D. C. 17:10.

That he [the priest] may preside is shown by the fact that Israel mourned when there were no "teaching priests;" by the fact that "priests" were consecrated by Nephi over the land; by the fact that Alma established churches and ordained priests and teachers over them; by the fact that the twelve were to ordain priests to declare the gospel of Christ; by the fact that he is made a visiting, teaching, standing minister to the church; by the fact that he may administer the sacrament, even in the presence of elders and high priests; by the fact that he may preside over those who are of the office of priest; and by the further fact that in all these duties he is to assist the elder if occasion requires.—Saints' Herald, vol. 36, p. 452.

Lesser priests may travel:—

And, behold, the high priest should travel, and also the elders, and also the lesser priests; but the teachers and deacons should be appointed to watch over the church, to be standing ministers unto the church.—D. C. 83:22.

It is called the lesser priesthood "because it is an appendage to the greater, or the Melchisedec priesthood, and has power in administering outward ordinances." (D. C. 104:8.) Priests belong to the Aaronic priesthood.

The power and authority of the lesser, or Aaronic priesthood, is, to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, agreeably to the covenants and commandments.—D. C. 104:10.

It "is called the priesthood of Aaron, because it was conferred upon Aaron and his seed, throughout all their generations." (D. C. 104:8.)

Teacher's duty:—

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking, and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ.—D. C. 17:11.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

They are standing ministers.

The fact that the teacher is given authority . . . to take the lead of meetings; the fact that paragraph 22, section 83, Doctrine and Covenants, provides that teachers should be appointed to watch over the church, to be "standing ministers to the church;" the fact that King Mosiah granted Alma authority to "establish churches," and to "ordain" teachers over them; the fact that Nephi did "consecrate" "teachers over the land" of the people; the fact that God "gave teachers" to the church; the fact that God hath "set" teachers in the church, and the fact that there were "teachers" in the church, as before cited, are all evidences that teachers may preside over churches, watch over and teach them, care for them, counsel them, rebuke them, reprove them, cherish them, strengthen them, comfort them, and build them up." "His duties differ slightly from the duties of a deacon, and are still so closely allied to them that he may require the deacon as an assistant."—Saints' Herald, vol. 36, p. 402.

Deacon's duties:—

The teacher . . . is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have autority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ.—D. C. 17:11.

Deacons . . . should be appointed to watch over the church to be standing ministers unto the church.—D. C. 83:22.

AN INQUIRY ANSWERED.

Some months ago I received a copy of the Buffalo Evening News, containing a very misleading article on the "resurrection," contributed by some one from Chippewa, who only gave the initials of his name. The paper was sent to me by a person, still unknown to me, and opposite the article in question I found, "Please answer." Accordingly I wrote out a reply and sent it in for publication. Not being a subscriber to said paper, and knowing of none in the regions where I reside, I had no means of ascertaining whether my production was honored by the Buffalo editors till I received the following letter:—

SALAMANCA, N. Y., March 23, 1900.

Dear Brother:—I saw an article in the Buffalo Evening News, on the spirit nature, from your pen, and as the views you hold are in accord with the scriptures of truth, I would like to correspond with you relative to other Bible topics. I send you some copies of our paper, the Restitution, hoping you will look them over and let me know if you indorse the doctrines advocated in them.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain,
Yours in love,

Box 323. J. B. LENT.

To the above, I answered as follows:—

SELKIRK, Ont., July 26, 1900.

Mr. J. B. LENT, Salamanca, N. Y.;

My Dear Sir:—After the lapse of several months, the time has seemingly arrived when I can answer your letter of inquiry. Soon after its receipt, I believe, I acknowledged it by postal card, asking you to watch the News on my behalf, and to send me any copies that might contain an attack upon my article, as published therein. I also promised to answer your letter at length in the future. But having been so long about it, you have no doubt ere this concluded yourself forgotten. Happily, however, I can assure you that such is not the case, and that I am anxious to render you any possible aid to a better understanding of the scriptures, and to impart unto you any truths of which you may not already be in possession.

Together with your letter you sent us two or three copies of The Restitution, a paper published in the interest of the "Church of God," which leads me to believe that you are a member of that society. You ask me to let you know whether I can "indorse the doctrines advocated in them." To this I might say that I am somewhat acquainted with the Restitution, and have a limited acquaintance with the society it represents. I believe that it contains many precious truths, some of which are rarely found in the religious journals of the present day. But I cannot indorse everything it teaches; and allow me to say that I believe it omits to teach some true principles of equal importance with the true ones it does teach.

To merely teach no error will not constitute any society the church of God. By this statement I desire to be understood that a society is not necessarily the church of God simply because it upholds for the belief of mankind nothing but scriptural principles. Every church has both its affirmative and negative teachings. To make myself clear allow me to illustrate by referring to one or two of the popular churches. Take the Baptist Church; it believes in baptism by immersion, but it does not believe in the washing of feet. I should then classify baptism with its affirmative teachings, and washing of feet with its negative teachings, for the former it affirms should be practiced, and the latter is not necessary.

As to whether either baptism or washing of feet is necessary now, I consider it quite inappropriate here to advance any position, as that is not my purpose in introducing them. But if it be true that washing of feet is obligatory on Christian people of the present day, then the Baptist Church is wrong and Godless, no matter how correct they may be in regard to baptism.

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God.—2 John 9 v.

Then there are churches that are wrong in their affirmative teachings. Take for instance the Mohammedans, and the Mormons of Salt Lake; they teach the principle of polygamy, and affirm that it is right and pleasing in the sight of God for a man to have more wives than one. Inasmuch, therefore, as this affirmation is incorrect, the churches are incorrect who make it. And no matter how correct they may be in all their other teachings, the incorrectness of this one principle proves most conclusively that neither of them is the Church of Christ. Because if one principle of error be upheld, and the society be recognized who upholds it, how many more principles of error may be incorporated before such society be worthy of rejection; and will some one please tell us where the limitation is to be placed. If the Lord is willing to condone any error, it would be important to know how much he is willing to condone.

On the other hand, if a church claiming recognition from God omits one essential principle of truth, how many more true principles may be omitted before we are justified in believing that God is not pleased with that church—that it is not his. Where would we place the limitation again, unless we repudiate all error and the churches who teach error? Why should error be accepted or sanctioned? Where and when, if ever?

The churches cannot all be right. It is easily conceivable how they can all be wrong; but how they can all be right, and differ from one another as they do, is something that has not yet been explained. There is nothing more absurd than to claim that several principles may all be right, when they are all antagonistic to one another. Baptism cannot be both a saving ordinance and not a saving ordinance at the same time; neither can sprinkling be both right and wrong. The doctrine of election or foreordination is either right or wrong, but not both.

All churches believe they are right; that their doctrines are perfect, and that doctrines which are conflicting with theirs are wrong. Hence, each church as a church, holds that all other churches are wrong. They cannot do otherwise, because there are no two churches alike, and no church but what differs in some respect from all others. This makes the matter of ascertaining which is the right church a very important one indeed, one which affects the salvation of all people now living.

With the remarks already made, I think, sir, that some progress has been made as well, in relation to the methods by which individuals are to obtain this most incalculable satisfaction. One method is, by proving that a church contains unscriptural principles. Another is, to prove that one or more scriptural principles or ordinances are omitted.

Now you will be likely to inquire: If a church teaches no error, and leaves out no essential truth, is it the church of God then, and am I safe in becoming a member of the same? My answer is, not necessarily. This will involve another method still, and one which I fear I shall not be able to explain in this first letter to you. If I come to treat this, it will doubtless be more interesting than anything I have hereunto written; and if you will only be kind enough to acknowledge receipt of this (if only by postal card), I shall have much pleasure in continuing the subject and in sending to you the grand sequel I have led up to.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

THE ROCK.

As we examine the words of Christ to find their real meaning, there are four considerations to be especially borne in mind.

First. The poetic eastern style common to the Hebrew prophets, and their bold and symbolic figures of speech; and that Jesus' style is exactly the same, in fact could not be any other, for the same Spirit spake through them and inspired their minds. "I am the door." "I am that bread of life." "I am the vine." "My sheep hear my voice." If we would understand Christ's language we must not overlook the characteristics of the figurative language he so largely used; for it is written, "he spake to the multitude in parables, and without a parable he spake not unto them." But to his disciples he explained himself.

We must not regard Christ's teachings as those of a dry scholastic, or a metaphysical moralist, but as those of a profound poet, and a grand Master in the realm of things spiritual.

Secondly. We must remember that we have but fragmentary reports of a very small portion of Christ's teachings. He was engaged in active missionary work about three years, yet all the various words of his teachings found in the New Testament would not occupy more than five hours to read. Only a small portion of what he said has been transmitted to us; for the Evangelist declares, "There are also many other things which Jesus did, which if they should be every one written, I suppose that the world itself could not contain them." The ark wherein was kept the scroll of the law could not contain them.

Thirdly. Jesus adopted and applied to himself and kingdom the common Jewish phraseology concerning the Messiah and the events that were expected to attend his advent and reign. But he did not use these phrases in the perverted sense held by the Jews in their corrupt opinions and earthly hopes. He used them in the sense which accorded with his messianic mission and the messianic dispensation.

Fourthly. Every investigator of the scriptures should observe this fundamental rule of interpretation; namely, that the student of a book, especially an ancient, obscure, and fragmentary book, should imbue himself as thoroughly as he can with a knowledge of the spirit, of the opinions, events, circumstances, and influences of the time when the book was written, and of the persons who wrote it. Only in this way can we distinguish between what the speaker or writer really meant, and what his reporters and hearers thought he meant. It is certain that the Savior was often misunderstood, and sometimes not understood at all. Even the apostles frequently failed to appreciate his spirit and aims. "How is it that ye do not understand that I spake it not to you concerning bread, but that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees." Jesus uttered in old established phrases new and profound spiritual thoughts. The apostles educated in and full of the dogmas, prejudices, and hopes of their age and land, would naturally misapprehend his meaning to some extent.

In the days of Jesus the Jews were looking for an earthly sovereign to appear, who would rise up in the line of David, and by the power of Jehovah deliver his people, punish their enemies, subdue all the earth, and rule and reign a greater than Solomon in magnificence, and than Nebuchadnezzar in power. By the terms, "kingdom of God," "kingdom of heaven," they understood the personal reign of the Messiah in Jerusalem, and evidently the apostles cherished these ideas and expressed them in the terms common to their countrymen. But Jesus employed this and kindred language in a purer and deeper sense. At one particular time the Master wishing to know if the twelve really understood the full import of his claim that he was indeed the Son of God, asked them the question, "Whom say ye that I am?" for he had all through his ministry professed himself to be the Son of God, and the redeemer of the world. Others had appeared before him, claiming to be the Christ. But a short time before, one had appeared who called himself, "Bar co Chebah," the son of the star—meaning the star that was to arise out of Jacob. He and many of his followers perished miserably, so also had many other false Christs. Jesus proclaimed himself "the way, the truth, and the life," the "Son of Man," and when called upon by the high priest, "I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God? Jesus said unto him, Thou hast said." Again, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am."

Some of these were spoken after the question had been asked of the disciples, but doubtless the Master had instructed them concerning himself and mission before that time. All through his missionary life he proclaimed himself to be the Son of God, but very few believed him. Many thought he might be one of the old prophets risen from the dead; perhaps Elias, perhaps Jeremiah, or it might be—John the immersor, but all regarded him as a great thaumaturgist.

Some accused him of being an ambassador of Satan, and of casting out devils by the power of Beelzebub—their prince; but they never believed or thought him to be that which he declared he was, the Son of God. Hence the question to the twelve, "Whom say ye that I am?" Not you Matthew, not you John, nor you James, but all of you, whom do you believe me to be? For many months ye have been with me, and have heard me declare myself to be the Son of God and redeemer of mankind. What say ye? Do you believe me to be that which I say I am, or an impostor? Then up spake Peter, saying, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." No impostor are you, but indeed that which you represent yourself to be, and the answer comes, "Blessed art thou, Simon, son of Jonas, —for flesh and blood hath not made it known unto thee but my Father which is in heaven, and upon this rock," this fact, this truth, that I am in every deed, what I say I am, "I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Nevertheless, Peter nor the other disciples, could never have known the truth, had it not been revealed to them by the Father. Neither can any know it unless they receive it in the same way, as it is written, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself," for none can know that Jesus is the Christ, but through the testimony of the Holy Ghost. Evidently then the church is founded upon the truth that Jesus is indeed that which he proclaimed himself to be, the Son of God and Savior of men; and just as evidently this great truth can only be known by revelation, for "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." This being the case, that none "can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost," we can see at a glance that without revelation the church cannot endure; nevertheless do not imagine that this testimony, this revelation by the Holy Spirit, must come in a wonderful or miraculous way by audible voice and wonderful sights, as with Paul for instance. In his case it was a necessity, for he was an unbeliever in, and persecutor of Jesus the Christ. No, far from it; it comes silent as the falling dew;

Not spake in words, nor blazed on scroll,
But borne and graven on the soul, is the glorious confirmation from God to the truth of the gospel of Christ. Grander than the midday sun is the sublime enlightenment. Greater than words can tell, is the inexpressible, unutterable, unsurpassable feeling of the testimony of the Spirit, and the eye while dimmed with tears of gladness sparkles with the light of the life to come and glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will to all men. Jesus lives and I know it, is the happy heart and soulful cry of our whole being.

"We know what we know," and none can deprive us of that knowledge; we cannot deprive ourselves. This glorious testimony is also a pledge from the heavenly Father that the purchased possession will most certainly be redeemed, and an assurance that "Though worms destroy this body, yet in the flesh shall I see God, and my eyes shall behold him."

It is also the signing or ratification by our heavenly Father of the covenant between you and him at baptism, and which you alone can break, that you will receive back through Christ, that which you lost through Adam, a body endowed with perpetual endurance of life, in which you will dwell forever. The church then is founded upon the Rock of Truth, the grand fact that Jesus is indeed the Christ, the Son of God, and is sustained by revelation, for "without revelation the people—church—perish."

"NAUVOO THE BEAUTIFUL."

VINCENNES, Iowa, Aug. 17.

Editors Herald:—Embracing the opportunity to gratify a desire of years, in company with Bro. J. S. Snively as guide, I crossed the Father of Waters by ferry from Montrose, and spent an afternoon in visiting this historic place. From the wharf eastward a half mile or less, and we are in the street (Main) upon which stands many of the historic buildings constructed a half century and more agone. We turn westward and make our first stop at the Mansion House (the name as a hotel). To view the inside and take a peep at the "secret closet" meant the lessening of individual exchequer to the tune of ten cents. A belligerent risability made itself apparent in our guide, and more especially so after an uncalled for exhibition of volubility from the female side of the house far more expressive and emphatic than polite. Desirous of approbation as a peacemaker, we jocularly interfered, and the rising storm abated. Our guide opposed the principle instead of the amount; but his ready exhibition in favor of principle convinced me that a defender was at hand while in his company. We did not go in. Our credulity was not sufficient to be taken in by secret closets! The harness thrown in the hallway; the poverty-stricken mules in the dooryard; the trees in the lot to the eastward broken and gnawed; the high weeds in the back lot; the unkempt and indolent looking household—the entire exterior, in fact, all betokened the need of a change of tenants.

We next wended our way to the graves of the martyrs, and found them overgrown with straggling lilac bushes, and upon the very spot pointed out as Hyrum's grave lay a sow giving nourishment to her litter! We are not, or try not to be superstitious; but the sight was so repulsive to the soul that it haunts us still. The old house is tenanted, but Oh! such tenants! A cow lay peacefully by the house, the inner gates stood ajar—half broken from their hinges, all betokening not carelessness alone, but indolence. The lot in which the graves are found was covered with the locust, and all showed the want of care.

Superstition has wrought its destructive influence in all ages, but we should not go so far to the other extreme as to become palpably careless in our negligence. Mentally we problemized. A membership of 40,000 at one cent each, and we have $400. Enough, Mr. Editor, to place a good iron fence around the lot, and put it in repair. For the sake of the memory of the men who laid their lives upon the altar of what to them was the truth of God, if for nothing else, we should see to it that this matter is taken in hand. For their sons to lead in the movement would be to place them in an embarrassing position. I believe if the bishopric would take hold of it, the accomplishment would be assured.

Our visit to the Nauvoo House convinced me that in its design and the evident intent of its final accomplishment there was an inspiration worthy of so great a cause. Its keystone fittings, and the wear of stone and brick through all these years, cannot fail to convince one of the honest workmanship in its construction.

From here we visited the still well-preserved residences of the more "noted" ones of the time, and could not but remark the aristocratic "distinction," even in construction, which unfortunately was and is, but should never be found among the people of God.

We tramped on up the hill; saw the graceful sweep of the majestic river around the beautiful curve; stood on the now barren but once consecrated spot where the "temple" was reared—unfortunately never to its final completion. We traversed the streets of the modern town, and while there is no apparent reason why it should be so, yet the tourist cannot fail to note its listlessness. Where vintage and other cultivation do not exist, tall weeds are found in vast profusion. Why, the broad river with its rippled bosom and dotted here and there with cute little islands, is a very inspiration in itself to incite to energy, as it gracefully curves around what must once have been a location of beauty for the "weary traveler," and yet there is a languid air even bordering to indolence. The mighty stretch of water afront the Nauvoo House is dotted here and there with the boats of fishermen, and the entire picture of today seems but the fateful consequence of a failure to listen to the voice of God and the "servants" whom he had appointed to "lead" his "people."

TORONTO, Ont., Aug. 14.

Editors Herald:—Since coming to this mission, and especially to this city, I have been very busy, preaching thirty sermons a month, besides performing other gospel work. However, local officers have administered in the baptisms which I have attended.

Our tent meetings have been well attended on the average; but recently there has been a decrease in the attendance of Saints, because the brethren work in the evenings on the new church now being erected. I work on it also, most of the day, but lay off in the evening on account of the preaching.

Bro. Evans is here, and is a busy man. He is chairman of the building committee, and works on the church as well as attends to all work that comes up in his line. He mixes talk with his work, and says in his humorous way something to or about everybody on deck. The man who gets the worst of it enjoys what is said, knowing it came from R. C. He seems to be a privileged character. He can say with impunity what would call forth bitter resentment if said by some. There is more in who says a thing, and how it is said, than in the thing itself. Joking, for instance, is a good thing in the hands of those who are adapted to it, but if a person is not a natural joker the sooner he finds it out the better.

When I undertake to joke, there is too much gravity and truth about what I say to be well taken. It sometimes gives offense. What one is best adapted to he is usually practiced in and can do it well. When he gets out of his usual line he soon betrays it by his awkwardness. For this reason I shall not insist upon any man doing things as I do. If he "sticks to his own bush" he can command greater confidence and gain more prestige.

I notice in your last week's issue a reference to the representation the Evening News of this city has given us. Sensible fair-minded people will not give credence to it, and besides the News is not considered a reliable paper. However, people will sometimes believe things about Latter Day Saints which they would not accept if told about anything or anybody else. Like the church of Christ in ancient times, we are everywhere spoken against (Acts 28: 22); not, however, by everybody, for some have too much regard for the truth. In evidence of this, I inclose a clipping from the Toronto World of July

30, which breathes a very different spirit from that of the News.

Some of the Canadian Saints say I remind them of Bro. John Shields, and others of Bro. Fred Gregory. To these two brethren I shall put the question, Is this complimentary?

Everything is going well here. Praying that God's blessings may rest upon his children, I am,

Yours in hope's brilliant clasp,

TEMPLE, Ohio, July 2.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday was a good day here. There was held a Sunday school, a prayer meeting, and two preaching services. A goodly number of outsiders, together with the Saints, were in attendance at the preachings, and a spirit of cheerfulness and interest was manifest by those present.

Temple visiting is active and interesting. Some thirty persons were shown through yesterday. Bro. Henry C. Smith has his part of the work well in hand, and is finding out what some others are slow to see, that Kirtland is of importance to the cause, that there is an opportunity to do effective work not found elsewhere with people who come to you.

A week ago yesterday I tarried over at Wheeling, West Virginia, with Bro. O. J. Tary, the president of the branch. Sunday's meetings were good, including those of the Sabbath school. Their numbers have increased of late, and I think I was never present in a prayer meeting before of the same size numerically, where so many real young Saints took such an active part. Things seemed to be going well with the Saints.

Bro. Joseph F. McDowell was present, and discoursed effectively on Sunday morning. Thanks to Bro. and Sr. Tary for kindnesses, with others of the Saints, including the pleasant farewell send off by Srs. Brewster, Betty, Clyde, and Bro. J. Frank on Monday morning. We spent an hour pleasantly together just before the train started for Blakes Mills.

At noon, I met Brn. A. H. Parsons and Holmes J. Davison at the last named place. We counseled over the propriety of purchasing a tent with which to do missionary work in the district. Decided to purchase provided the other committeeman was in harmony with the movement, and the Pittsburg district would sell their tent as proposed. It was a roasting hot day. We dined together at the liberal table of Bro. Warner. Late at night I arrived in Cleveland, and stayed over night with Bro. and Sr. Smith, No. 180 Clenton street, where field laborers always find a welcome. The following day I visited committeeman, E. Miller, who concurred in the move to purchase the tent. Brn. A. H. Parsons and J. F. McDowell, representing the respective districts, were appointed to perfect the deal; but finally the Pittsburg district refused to sell. It now being late in the season the tent business was abandoned for the year.

While at Creola, Ohio, Bro. O. B. Thomas and the writer, along with Bro. Aaron Kirkendall, held several services in the church. The Saints are doing fairly well. Quite a change has taken place since the church was dedicated there last fall. The Methodists have erected a church building just across the street in the rear of ours, and of nearly the same size and pattern now nearing completion.

A tent meeting was going on, of the exciting "halleluiah" kind. "Come to Jesus." "All who want to be saved rise up." "There are but two steps into the kingdom, faith and repentance." "Come on friends." "If I can only get you through dog days, you will be safe," etc. Judging from the present temper of things, they will accomplish but little there. The conflict is on, however, between light and darkness. Bro. Kirkendall and associates are keeping the work alive, of whom Sr. Kirkendall is an animating factor. Bro. O. B. Thomas was introduced into the mission here, and was well received. Filled the bill as a preacher.

While in this section, by appointment, I met Bro. James Moler, V. M. and J. L. Goodrich, with officers of the Byer branch to adjust some matters pending, that bade fair to become injurious to the work. The brethren came together in a good spirit, however, and after two or three hours of investigation the matter was explained and settled, to the satisfaction of all present, and they went away in a good spirit. I spent the "glorious Fourth" in Cleveland, Ohio, with brethren, by the lake side.

July 11, I was in Brooklyn, New York, and in the evening united in marriage Bro. William White and Sr. Ellen Squire, at the residence of the bride's father, Bro. Joseph Squire, No. 247 McDougal street. Over fifty guests sat down to a bounteous repast. The bride and groom looked their best, and their many friends gave them a pleasant send off on the matrimonial road in the way of gifts and cheering words.

The 14th, I joined the Brooklyn Sunday school in a picnic in the park. It was a perfect day, the surroundings ideal, food supply good, and young and old joined in the merriment until near sundown. Bro. U. W. Greene arrived in his field of labor. All went well, except for sore muscles a few days following.

The next day, Sunday, Bro. Greene, Elder George Potts, and the writer led the meetings at the Saints' hall, and an excellent feeling prevailed during the entire day. Bro. Greene's discourse was well delivered.

Capt. Geo. Potts and family, together with Sisters Anna Bon and Ethel Tison, were ready for an outing among the high copjes in Pennsylvania, one hundred and fifty miles to the westward, and urged that the writer join the party for a week at least. Not feeling well physically, and hot weather being on, the invitation was accepted. So that evening, the 17th, found us at Equinunk, Pa., on a high hill, with Mr. Hankins, the farmer, where cool breezes swept through the leafy trees. Entertainment was enjoyable, and napping in hammocks, football, lawn tennis, promenades, bathing, etc, were the order. It was haying time, and the golden-rod decorated the hills in profusion; hence at the end of the week a cold and a touch of hay fever and grippe. I returned to the city, worse for wear. Cough! cough! sneeze! which has hung on, unrelenting, up to the present, though modified in intensity.

Sunday, the 29th, I was in Philadelphia, at the home of Bro. John Zimermann. Two days before, Bro. Stone, having run his race, at a good old age was laid away in the cemetery, Bro. F. G. Pitt officiating at the funeral.

The Sunday services were good, including that of the Sabbath school, although the attendance was not large. The weather was very warm. Bro. Pitt preached a good discourse at evening. There are staunch supporters of the work here, and signs of success. The Saints are supported by the truth, which nerves them for the conflict, while they are confronted by an overwhelming opposing force. Their progress must necessarily be slow, but, we trust, sure. An animating interest was manifest at the Religio meeting held at the house of Bro. J. Zimermann on the evening of the 31st.

Friday, August 3, in company with Bro. F. G. Pitt and wife, Bro. U. W. Greene, I arrived on the reunion grounds at Silver Lake, Massachusetts. The reunion was a success. The Massachusetts saints usually arise to meet the demands of an occasion, and they did this time. Bro. F. G. Pitt was put in charge of the singing department, and it was a splendid success. We grew in favor with the people as the reunion held on.

The evening of the 14th, Bro. G. H. Hilliard and the writer met with the Saints at their business meeting in Plymouth, Massachusetts, Bro. Nehemiah Nickerson in charge. By vote of branch Bro. M. P. Hansen was ordained a priest under the hands of Geo. H. Hilliard, and N. Nickerson, and W. H. Kelley. A hopeful feeling seems to be animating the Saints here, and there are signs of success. We were made comfortable at the pleasant home of Bro. Nickerson, and cheered by his friendly and devoted family.

Yesterday I came to Boston, from the reunion, in company with Sr. Florence Fisher, and at evening, along with Bro. Pitt, took charge of the Saints' prayer meeting.

A desired activity and earnestness was manifest in the meeting. After which in company with others, I returned to Bro. E. H. Fisher's to receive kind care, and where I conclude this communication, August 16. Begun July 2, pigeonholed to date.

WM. H. KELLEY.

CINCINNATI, Iowa, August 19.

Editors Herald:—Your weekly visits are appreciated. You are our most constant preacher, as there is no branch of the church here, the nearest branch being Centerville, and it is nine miles away. I make the trip every Sunday when the weather is fine. The Saints at Centerville have rented a hall in town and commenced to hold Sunday school and social meetings and preaching every Sunday. The officers are working hard to bring about a renewed activity, and the prospects are bright for the future progress of the branch.

This town is growing fast. The gospel

should be planted here and I should like to see a branch organized here.

I will say to those brethren who are located at mining camps and wish to change location, that this is a good location for a miner who likes the low coal field, as this coal is not mined with powder. There is good schooling for children, which prepares them for college if they desire. I have been here since last October, and have done better than I have done for years before. Any desiring more information will write me at this place, and I will assist them to get work.

The prospects for crops here are good. The Lord has poured out his blessings on the earth, and the people are reaping the benefits; but how few return thanks to the God of heaven for the same.

"'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light." How glorious will be the morning when Christ will come to earth again. May we all be ready to receive a home in Zion for keeping the whole law, is my desire and prayer.

BARNARD REUNION.

BEDISON, MO., Aug. 20.

Editors Herald:—As this, our first reunion in Nodaway district, has come and gone, we thought a few lines from this part of the field would not be amiss. Of course we all feel that this meeting was grandly successful; and, as the question of reunions seems to be an experiment with some, we feel to give our reasons why this one was a blessing to us all.

Nearly all of the Saints in the district were in attendance, and they were all built up and made stronger in the cause of Christ. Every one seemed filled with joy and reverential delight. One old sister went around to say good-bye, telling all that these were the best and happiest days she had spent since she came from far over the waters many years ago. And so it seemed with every one.

But this is not all. While it may be conceded that reunions are for the Saints chiefly, this one was undoubtedly a "missionary reunion." The way the people came for miles and miles around was surprising. Our crowds ranged from four to six hundred, generally; and the best people from the surrounding towns and country were represented, some coming a distance of thirty miles to attend. With one exception the ministers of Barnard called in their regular services so that they, as well as their people, might attend on the closing day, August 12. In our walks among the crowd we heard some remarks which form a good index to the effect of the meetings on those who are on the outside. Here they are. "There seems to be quite a difference between so-called Mormonism and Latter-day Saintism." "These people are so kind and friendly; they know you wherever they see you, and can speak to you, too."

Only one, a very promising young sister, was baptized; but there were several who were thinking seriously, and we hope they will choose the right. We think the amount of prejudice removed from misinformed minds was the best work of all. It will aid our two noble missionaries in opening new places in the district, and make every Saint in the district proud of the good cause that has brought such pleasant things to all who have stood by the post of duty.

The preaching was mostly done by Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Elders M. T. Short, D. C. White, J. A. Davis, Henry Kemp, C. P. Welsh, H. N. Snively, and H. N. Hansen. All committees did their work well, and when the finance committee went around there was enough and to spare. The Saints and others did their part in this respect.

At the close another committee was appointed to locate time and place and make all necessary arrangments for a reunion next year. So we are now looking forward to the time when this our first meeting shall be exceeded by a better one. And while we do so we want to labor, watch, and pray and try to water the good seed that has been sown.

Dear Saints of Nodaway district, may God bless you and give you the power to carry into effect every good resolution that has been formed there. That you may win the crown, is the wish of your brother in the good cause,

E. S. FANNON.

HOWARD, S. D., Aug. 21.

Editors Herald:—We are alive and on duty. Have been laboring together with Bro. Caffal for some time, until the last two weeks, when he left me to fight the battle alone. Hope, however, he will be back again. Have considered it quite a treat and privilege to be permitted to labor with one of our chief pioneers, one who has stood the scorns and frowns of an opposing foe for so many years, and is so well qualified to cope with existing conditions and give timely advice to the younger and rising ministerial force, which I know is at least appreciated by one.

Our work has been rather of an up hill character. There are many things to discourage, which only those who are actively engaged in the work can possibly know. I thought sometimes prior to entering the field that my imagination was far reaching enough to penetrate the yet unexplored fields of difficulties and trials that lies before the missionary; but I soon found that in order to receive a full realization thereof one must be an active participant. No imagination, no matter how far-reaching, can possibly present a true picture. Realizing the importance of the message we bring and the responsibility attached to the acceptance or rejection thereof, one is naturally made to feel very sad when confronted with such indifference and carelessness as is manifested on every hand, regarding the vital question of life, that by which the salvation of our immortal souls is at stake. Many times we have traveled twenty miles and over to invite people to come out to service, and have distributed tracts, and then only two or three and sometimes half a dozen would come. Such things are discouraging. But while we meet with such conditions there is another side to the picture which we must not lose sight of, and that is the brighter side. The Lord has raised up kind friends to us everywhere we have gone, and may God abundantly bless them for it! He will do so. That is encouraging, and stimulates us to renew our energies.

One week ago, while holding service about twenty-five miles southeast of here, a family invited me to be sure to call on them. Not long since I made an opening in a small town west of here, and after service the hotel proprietor and his wife came to me and invited me to come and stop with them, which invitation I accepted later.

A few days ago, while stopping in Madison a couple of hours, I availed myself of the opportunity of calling on Mr. and Mrs. Hubbell. Mrs. H. is a cousin of Sr. R. S. Salyards, of Lamoni, and was very much pleased to have me call on them, and extended an invitation to me to come and stop there if I ever came there to preach. So you see, dear readers, that the Lord is opening the way all along the line. We have not lacked for friends nor places to preach in, but we are short of congregations to talk to. The Saints and friends of Howard, likewise, have done all in their power to make it pleasant for us, for which we feel grateful.

In this country people are very busy in the summer time, as farming and dairying are carried on on a large scale, and it is very hard to get any one out during the week evenings, hence our work is largely hindered for that reason. The only seemingly consolation we have is that we feel no compunction of conscience for not having done the best we could according to our circumstances and limited ability.

In gospel bonds yours,

S. K. SORENSEN.

ATLANTIC, Iowa, August 17.

Editors Herald:—Am now in Cass county, near Atlantic. Came here the 9th, and made my stopping place with Bro. G. H. Wells. So far as I know there are but one or two families of Saints in the whole county. Bro. Wells and I at once essayed to make an opening in Atlantic, but hall rent was too high. The park, where several of the churches hold union meetings every Sunday evening, would be an excellent place to hold services, but the commissioners when we asked for its use said "no." I do not know whether they refused because the name of our church grated on their ears or because they were determined to have our church the same as the one that has advocated what the Lord says is abomination before him.

We then went to Marne, a small town not far from Atlantic. Here we found as in Atlantic, hall rent very high. Before we left town we called on Rev. Voorhees, the M. E. minister. He was not in touch with the idea of us using his church. Said he would not like for a Baptist or Latter Day Saint to preach immersion from the pulpit and then himself preach sprinkling. Thought when people could not see alike they ought to "agree to disagree."

"You people believe in probation after death, do you not?" he asked.

I answered: "What becomes of those people who have died having never heard the gospel?"

"Oh, oh, they are in the Lord's hands."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"That is the kind of probation we believe in," I replied.

We then called on one of Marne's well-known citizens. Found that he has, like many others around here, been sickened and disgusted by the religions of men, creeds which men claim sparkle with divinity, but which instead are fading with mortality. He has a hall well seated, and told us we could have it without a cent of expense. The day following, when we stepped in, he told us his wife was opposed to the meetings being held in the hall, said his wife was a member of one of the churches that closed their doors against us, and that would explain the barring out. He felt very sorry that this opposition was shown, and did for us all that he could, for which he is to be commended.

People here know nothing of our faith. Some are so superstitious that to touch our tracts would be awful; while others believe in going in and out and finding pasture. When I saw by the actions of the ministers that they wanted us to move on, I firmly made up my mind to stay. I concluded I would preach on the streets to the people before I would move on. Having been shut out from Atlantic and Marne, we went over all the country telling the people that the "Latter Day Saints" not the "Brighamites" would hold meetings over in the house of Bro. Wells. Two meetings were held here and but few attended.

All the while my eyes were turned toward Marne, and finally decided if Marne would not hold us in her parlor we would hold meetings on her doorstep, so moved out and soon got the permission of a schoolhouse near the edge of town. Notices of the meetings were put up in the town, tracts were distributed here and there, and this, together with the people hearing of the churches closing their doors against us, caused the people to ask, "Who are these persons who have come to turn the world upside down?"

Considerable interest is awakened, and the attendance is growing stronger. One very intelligent young lady has said, if her father does not forbid, she will be baptized when our ministry again calls around. Others are very favorable. They invite us to their homes and say our doctrine is from the Bible.

Yesterday a Dunkard minister invited me to his home, and I soon learned that our church is an apostate church because we follow a wrong mode of baptism.

"All the teachings of Christ," he said, "teach men to go forward. Nothing in the whole Bible teaches that men should go backward; everything teaches a forward action, not a backward one."

He said, we baptized with a backward action, and, consequently, are wrong. When I called his attention to the fact that when they baptized with a forward action, face foremost, the first thing they did when coming from the burial to "walk in newness of life" was to come forth with a backward action, and then start with a forward action toward the Christian life, silence reigned.

"But you are most awfully out of harmony in your church, because you haven't feet washing! Didn't Christ wash his disciples' feet, and say, "If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet?"

When I reminded him that in that day it was the apostles who practiced feet washing, not Dunkards, and that now it is the Dunkards and not their apostles, I could only wonder in silence, What next?

Some of the neighbors here were advised by the minister at Marne not to attend our meetings; "for," said he, "you might influence others to attend." No wonder there are so many sickened and disgusted. No wonder so many non-church members and semi-Christians. "Babylon is fallen" will soon be a thing of the past. We can already hear her walls creaking and see her tottering to her fall of death. Will any Saints be found amidst her ruins? "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

Bro. Wells has taken an interest in setting up the work here, in distributing tracts, and in trying to live an exemplary life that is not too often done by the Saints. God has blessed what he put his hand to.

I am encouraged. God has not forgotten me. Am saying to the Saints, the infants of "Zion," "Thy God reigneth!" To the world I say that God has spoken from on high, and that men are everywhere called upon to throw away their soiled clothes and put on the garments of Christ. In doing this God has stood divinely near. His promises to me have been verified, and surely the God of the Saints is to be adored.

Why not begin now in making our souls pure, so that Zion may be our habitation? Who will enter Zion? The vain, the sensual, the passionate, the worldly? Or will the humble, the meek, the self-denied? Those who adopt the maxims of the world? or those who live by the principles of the gospel? 'Tis good to be engaged in a work in which the still small voice says, "Go on, the work it is divine."

Hoping to endure and be saved,

P. M. HANSON.

Camp Grounds near

SHERWIN JUNCTION, Kan., August 20.

Editors Herald:—The Spring River district reunion began on Friday, August 10. By the energetic supervision and labor of the committee on arrangements, Brn. Taylor, Richards, and McCall, the pleasant grove of tall oaks and hickory was made in readiness to receive all who were willing to come. The large pavilion was reared in a convenient location, and although it covers a large area it would not accommodate all the attendants at all times. The services were in charge of Bro. E. A. Davis, our district president. The arrangement of the services was such as is usually followed at reunions. After the arrival of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, on Tuesday morning, from eight to nine o'clock, we held a Sunday school session, and repeated the same program on Wednesday, Thursday, and Sunday mornings.

Thursday afternoon was occupied by the Sunday school workers. Brn. E. A. Davis, M. S. Frick, and J. A. Gunsolley occupying most of the allotted time in talks calculated to instill interest and arouse action in this line of work among members of the church. Sessions of institute work was taken up at the conclusion of the afternoon preaching services, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley taking charge. His services and instructions in teaching and general management of Sunday school and Religio work were gladly received and highly praised by teachers and members generally.

Friday afternoon was taken up by Z. R.-L. S. A program was introduced consisting of numerous subjects which related to the Religio work, and were profitably discussed by Sisters Mollie Davis, Rebecca Bradley, and Sherwin, Brn. M. B. Love, F. C. Warnky, E. E. Davis, A. M. Baker, J. C. Severine, E. A. Davis, and M. S. Frick. A new feature of the Religio work—"the Home Study department"—was explained by Bro. Gunsolley. At the conclusion of this service the baptism of William Sherwin and Maud Thomas occurred, Bro. F. C. Warnky officiating. The presiding and the preaching was done by the following of the priesthood: Brn. E. A. Davis, T. S. Hayton, F. C. Keck, F. C. Warnky, J. M. Richards, W. H. Pruit, J. A. Gunsolley, W. S. Taylor, S. D. Love, M. A. Love, A. M. Baker, E. E Bradley, Noah Karahoo (Lamanite elder), E. W. DePue, John Thomas, W. B. Hillan, H. Thurman, J. W. Thorp, J. T. Davis, J. C. Severine, W. E. Hayden, J. T. Riley, M. S. Frick, W. S. Macrae, J. Briggs.

The preaching throughout the entire ten days was stamped with latter-day thoroughness. Brn. Keck and W. S. Macrae arrived on Monday, the 13th, from the Oklahoma reunion, Bro. Macrae leaving for home on Thursday on account of sickness of wife and child, Bro. Keck going home Friday. On Thursday Brn. J. T. Riley and W. E. Hayden, from Indian Territory, and S. W. Simmons, of Arkansas, arrived. The latter was sick on arrival; he was relieved by administration but did not feel well enough at any time to fill his appointments. On Sunday, the 19th, he returned home.

The Saints were immeasurable built up through the inspiring character of the prayer and testimony meetings. The word of the Lord being confirmed to his people by speaking in tongues, singing in tongues, interpretation of tongues, prophecy and revelation; the melting influence being present in great dower. At one session at least I believe that every one of the large audience was shedding tears. Many persons present exclaimed that they never before saw such evidences of the divinity of this latter-day work.

We were warned against the results of the ineffective discipline in homes of his people; that he was pleased with our good desires, but was grieved that our actions were not more in harmony with our desires—that on the rising generation depends a great work and upon the present fathers and mothers rests this great responsibility. Another confirmed this in speaking by the power of the Spirit that parents should see to preparing their children, for it would be the children of this generation that would have to meet the great and trying events just preceding the coming of the Savior. Another declared that the children of this generation would be those who would be tried as by fire.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

These were indeed joyful sessions and the outpouring of the Spirit of God at the different meetings was like showers in a very drouthy season. The sermons preached were highly instructive, and never more enjoyed. The weather was all that could be desired throughout. It is too dry for the farmers' best interest—roads are very dusty.

The attendance was good, about forty families camping on the ground. Some of our Lamanite brethren from Indian Territory were present, and to our Lamanite Bro. Karahoo was delivered a great promise through prophecy.

I will not forget to mention that the sisters did not fail to remember the prayer union on Thursday afternoon, when they had a good spiritual feast. Sunday evening, the 19th, closed one of the best reunions ever held in the southwest. A resolution was passed that we ask next district conference to take into consideration the time and place of a reunion next fall. On Sunday, at one p. m., ten more were baptized. By a vote of the congregation this Sunday p. m., the district president, E. A. Davis, was requested to preach the closing sermon. The whole community for miles around came out.

Truly yours,

A BROTHER.

WESTON, Iowa, August 20.

Editors Herald:—I see in letter from D. M. Rudd, in Herald for August 15, that elders of the Utah church have complained of being abused by me. I wish to say that I do not believe in abusing anyone, but wish to treat others as I would like to be treated in return. I did meet Elder Mortensen a little over one year ago at a two-days' meeting held at Boomer, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, in charge of Bro. D. R. Chambers and myself. Learning that Mortensen and his then associate, Elder Rasmussen, had been at work among the scattered Saints and those friendly to the Reorganization, I improved the opportunity to show up the difference between Utahism and the true church, quoting largely from their own works. But desiring to be fair with the strangers, they were given a chance to speak for themselves, which they did. They both expressed themselves then as thankful for kind treatment, and it seems strange that Mortensen should now regard it as abuse. If it was abuse, I hope their people will abuse our elders now laboring in Utah the same way. Should I be permitted at any time to labor among that people again, I shall be thankful for that kind of abuse every day.

Elders Otteson and Hansen, also representatives from Utah, were in this neighborhood lately. They did no preaching with the exception of making short speeches at our Sunday night meeting, being invited to do so by Bro. Christensen, the presiding elder. I wonder if they will also complain of treatment received. They told me that Brn. Baker and Mintun had refused to meet them in discussion in Sioux City. Otteson also said that he remembers well a couple of years ago when I was trying to obtain a house in Provo for Bro. J. W. Wight to speak in, that the authorities had said, in their report regarding the matter, that they had refused on the grounds that they did not consider it proper to open their houses to men who had been cut off from the church for crime. How is that, Bro. Wight?

I hope that our ministry as well as the laity will continue to treat the representatives of that church, as well as all others, both with kindness and all the liberality consistent. We can afford to be liberal, yet need not compromise truth with error.

I think, with Bro. Anderson, that Sandheden's Banner should be started again. I was sorry that it was discontinued, and believe it was a mistake; but I am anxious to help revive that work again, and believe that it can be done. One brother told me recently that he was willing to give ten dollars a year to keep it going. Will the Scandinavian Saints unite once more to have a small paper in their native language? It is one of the opportunities wherein we can help the work onward. Your brother,

H. N. HANSEN.

Editors Herald:—For the first time I write you. We are still moving onward in Cardiff. I inclose for publication, if you think worthy, a paper prepared by Walter T. Gould, a scholar of fourteen years, and read before our Mutual Improvement Class. There are other papers I would send to follow, if worthy. Brother Pitt will see his work was not all in vain. I have great hopes of seeing some of the Cardiff Sunday school scholars come out good defenders of the faith restored in these last days. I am pleased to say there is at present a good spirit among our young. We have not a very large school, but some bright, intelligent scholars, who, I think, are a credit to our church. Sister Lilly Bishop teaches the primary class. She is very faithful in her duties, and is a model Saint. I wish we had many more such noble-hearted, self-sacrificing workers. To be always present in all winds and weathers, takes a little grit and manifests a spirit of something more than human. I teach the intermediate. May our Father in heaven bless all such is my prayer.

I feel proud of this work, and hope to be able to overcome, although we have our share of difficulties and troubles. The Saints in Cardiff are passing through some trials. For some I fear, lest the evil one will overcome. As an elder in Israel I desire to do my duty and prove worthy of the trust committed to my care. Yours respectfully,

THOMAS GOULD.

THE SAINTS' JUBILEE.

How blest are the dead who have died in the Lord,
For they rest from their labors and are free, and are free.
They have fallen asleep in the Master's arms,
There to rest till the great jubilee, jubilee,
They'll awake at the great jubilee, jubilee;
They have fallen asleep in the Master's arms,
There to rest till the great jubilee.

When the times are fulfilled and the trumpet shall sound,
They'll come forth from the earth and the sea, earth and sea,
For to meet their dear Lord as he comes in the clouds,
At the dawn of the great jubilee, jubilee,
They'll awake at the great jubilee, jubilee;
They have fallen asleep in the Master's arms,
There to rest till the great jubilee.

Then the earth will be blest, and will bloom as a rose,
And from sin, pain, and sorrow 'twill be free, 'twill be free,
For the Bridegroom will come, and will take home the bride,
At the dawn of the great jubilee, jubilee.
They will meet at the great jubilee, jubilee,
For the bride shall prepare and the Bridegroom shall come,
At the dawn of the great jubilee.

Lord, hasten the time when the truth will be spread
O'er the face of the earth as a sea, as a sea;
When the church of our Lord will be gathered in one,
Called home for the great jubilee, jubilee,
Gathered home for the great jubilee, jubilee,
When the saints from all lands shall be brought to their home,
There to rest through the great jubilee.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Home is the sweetest spot on earth,
Though far our feet may roam,
All thoughts come back to home at last,
All paths, they lead to home.
The little cot is dearer far
Than castle old and grand,
And who forgets, with seas between,
The touch of mother's hand.

HAMBURG, Iowa, June 4.

Sisters of the Home Column:—While reading the excellent article of Sister May Horten, and the request of the editor that the sisters should help to sustain the Home Column, the thoughts came forcibly to my mind, Am I one of the number failing to let my light shine, or will I be held accountable for folding my talent away in a napkin, because but one has been given. If not folded away, will it become lost in the cares and toils of everyday life? It is the tendency of the age for the mother to become a mere household drudge in her endeavor to educate her children, and before she is aware of it, her boys and girls have outgrown her mentally, and she has in a manner become a stranger to them. Would it not be much better to interest the girls in all the household duties, and thereby have them better prepared to fill the place of home makers when this duty falls upon them? In this way the mother's cares will be lightened, and she will have more time to read and study and keep pace with the times, and be better prepared to be a companion to those of her own household.

With this close companionship with her children she has a better chance to know them and to guard their footsteps from the snares of the enemy, and the pitfalls that beset their pathway. Then, again, we see the mother devoting the greater part of her time to the never-ending demands of fashion, for her children must appear just as well or a little better dressed than their associates. "Let your adorning be not that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible." (1 Peter 3; 3, 4, I. T.) Here we are admonished to adorn the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible. When we spend the whole of our time on this outward adorning, it is like trimming a taper that will shine but for a short time and then go out forever, while the adorning of the hidden man which is the intelligent part of our being is like preparing a light that will shine brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

How then can the mother who devotes the whole of her time to the perishable things of this world, when called upon to deliver up the jewels that have been intrusted to her care, say to the Master, Take them, I have done the best I could to polish and adorn them; or can they expect the plaudit of well done good and faithful one.

SARAH MORTIMORE.

HE DOETH ALL THINGS WELL.

Cheer up, poor suffering heart,
The allwise God knows best;
The body in the ground is laid,
The spirit is at rest.

Cheer up, poor suffering heart,
While we journey here below,
We all must bear the heavy cross—
The Father wills it so.

Be cheerful, precious one,
A brighter day will dawn;
We'll meet our loved ones gone before,
On the resurrection morn.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, August 8.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union:—I write to tell you how much dear old Grandma Kuykendall has been relieved. Although her eye has not been opened, she says to tell you all that her mind and body is better every way than it has been for a long time, and she is still hopeful that she will be permitted to see in God's own due time. Please continue to pray for her, and also her aged companion, who is very feeble and suffers a great deal with bodily pain. Pray that he may have more peace and rest of mind, as he told me this morning that this was the most he had to contend with now. He has a great desire to help build up the work here, and he has been working to that end; but it seems that the enemy has crept in for his share, and claims a big portion at that. Surely there must be a good work to be done here, or we wouldn't have so much to contend against.

By the timely aid of Bro. A. J. Moore we have secured a lot on which to build a church, which is very much needed. We are expecting Bro. Moore to visit us next month, and will certainly welcome him, as he is the only one that has given us any encouragement in regard to building a church. Let us have your faith and prayers, that we may come out victorious on the Lord's side.

Your sister in the strife,
JULIA V. NEAL.

IDAHO, July 24.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I feel that I would like to say a few words. Your letters are a comfort to me, and also the letters from the brethren. The little verse or sentence that always heads the Home Column is a treasure in itself; don't you all think so? Some time since there appeared a good little letter from a sister Julia Ross. I had been feeling discouraged, and when I read her letter it did me so much good. O how good I felt that night when I called my family together for prayer! When we are impressed by the Spirit to write, I believe we should make the effort, no matter how simple the words may be, as no doubt there will be a message in it that will do somebody a great deal of good.

Dear brothers and sisters, will you all join me in prayer, that if it be God's will my husband may be led, through the influence of the Spirit, to pay tithing; also that my family may all unite with the church. Ever praying for the spread of the truth, I remain,

A SISTER.

REUNION WORK OF 1900.

The General Superintendent arrived at the camp grounds of the Northwest Kansas Saints near Minneapolis, Kansas, Monday, August 20. We found there, in a cozy little spot on the Solomon river, a small band of Saints, who, as one family, were there for the worship of God and the upbuilding of the work and for mutual benefit. We say a "small band" because local hindrances had prevented many from coming and the attendance was not as large as usual. But being comparatively few in numbers does not often discourage Latter Day Saints. Some may have felt disappointed that there were not a multitude there; but whatever there may have been of disappointment in this way was fully retrieved by the blessings enjoyed in the course of the meetings.

The Sunday school work was opened up Tuesday afternoon by a formal organization followed by institute work. The reunion committee, realizing the necessity for the Sunday school and "Religio" work, very kindly proffered us the whole of the afternoon sessions therefor, and gave all of Friday for the district convention and other Sunday school work. This enabled us to present the work in a way and in sufficient quanity to be of lasting benefit to the workers of that district. And the way they stowed away the "good things" in mind and with notebook and pencil, showed that they expected to make use of them in their future work. And may they be enabled so to do.

The work of the "special day" was introduced with a Sunday school prayer and testimony meeting. The fervent prayers and encouraging testimonies and songs of praise made it a profitable and enjoyable season. The eleven o'clock hour was devoted to a lecture by the General Superintendent on the "duties of parents to their children," and "what shall we read, and what shall we provide for our families to read?"

The business of the district convention was transacted as quickly as could be done consistently, and the remainder of the afternoon was devoted to the reading and discussing of papers prepared for the occasion. The night session was devoted to work partaking as much of the "Religio" nature as of the Sunday school. After the session had been closed, they were again called to order, and a short address was made by the General Superintendent in interest of the "Religio" work. Questions and answers followed.

Upon the whole, the work was very satisfactory to the Saints and, we trust, pleasing to God.

Saturday morning we clasped hands and parted from the dear Saints whose associations we had enjoyed so much, and hastened to other fields of labor. Thus ended our second visit to the Saints of this district. May the good Father of all be to you a father and his Spirit attend your every effort for good.

THE following is a paper by Bro. W. H. Mannering, a missionary in the Northwest Kansas district. Being a missionary he speaks from his own standpoint of view, and gives us a few clear cut, and, we believe, correct views upon "what the missionary can do for the Sunday school." We sincerely hope that every missionary will read it and reflect carefully upon each point. It is replete with good thoughts.

WHAT THE MISSIONARY CAN DO FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Everybody having a degree of influence, the conduct of the missionary toward the Sunday school work cannot be without effect. His very presence at the services is encouraging to the members; and by getting his lessons he can enter the spirit of the work and become a useful factor. When invited, he can often give instruction on some part of the lesson to my good advantage.

By reason of his calling, the missionary is esteemed a worthy leader in divine things, and his example of prepared lessons and prompt attendance, when possible, cannot but be followed, by parents and children with good results or gaining their confidence through entertaining the younger students at other than Sunday school hours, they will take increased interest in the lessons he recommends to them.

He can advise the indifferent parent on his duty to the Sunday school with more than usual effect. In his correspondence to Saints on church work he can do good by mentioning what should be their attitude toward the Sunday school cause.

When he acknowledges the student's superiority to his own on the answering of questions, the effect is uplifting. He can help much by rendering all possible aid in Sunday school conventions and entertainments.

In many places where there is no Sunday school, he can induce Saints to organize one by teaching them the importance of the work. Among scattered members he can benefit the cause by introducing the study of the Quarterly.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NOTICE.

Graceland College will open on the 11th of September. Current expenses will have to be met. Bro. R. M. Elvin has been requested and authorized by the trustees to visit the different branches and solicit subscriptions to help pay the running expenses which will be at the lowest calculation three hundred and fifty dollars per month. We cannot afford to borrow any more money to run the college. We have about forty yearly twenty-five dollar subscribers for this purpose. We need sixty more. Will the Saints and friends of the college come to the rescue? Trusting that the Saints will receive Bro. Elvin in a practical, friendly spirit, that this branch of the work may be a grand success, yours for the triumph of every church institution,

WM. ANDERSON,
President Board of Trustees.

BISHOP'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Galland's Grove, Iowa, District, Greeting:—Every member of the church ought to feel glad and give praise to God for the substantial growth the Reorganization is making, and never decline to accept added responsibilities when they are assured the Lord wants their service. Our cause will bless mankind, so let us be persevering in our work, then victory will come to us by and by.

This district is large, comprising the counties of Osceola, Cherokee, Crawford, Audubon, Sac, Clay, Emmet, Pocahontas, Greene, Webster, O'Brien, Ida, Shelby, Carroll, Buena Vista, Dickinson, Palo Alto, Calhoun, Guthrie, Humboldt, and Kossuth. I have chosen Elders David Brewster, of Harlan, and James O. Sheldon, of Cherokee, as counselors, who have been duly ordained, and now recommend them to the esteem of the Saints.

By a careful study of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants all may become acquainted with the duties of the bishopric of a district, also the duties and responsibilities of the Saints. Let us "have faith in God" and awake to our privileges,—keep the gospel law in all things,—not forgetting to pay into the Lord's treasury the tithes and offerings which belong to him. Do not put off till to-morrow what you can safely do today. If you can pay something today, don't wait, but send it along. We have about one thousand Saints in this district and we want every name upon our books before this year closes. "Is my name written there?" Where? In that new set of books the bishop of the district has opened up? We think it should be, for we are assured that the Lord is pleased with the "doer of the word."

The bishop of the district and his counselors will receive and receipt for tithes and offerings wherever they may be; but as the district is large, and for the convenience of Saints in branches I have appointed (they having been recommended by their respective branches) the following solicitors or agents who will receive and receipt for tithes and offerings and report to me at stated times:—

Salem, James H. Bullard. Union, Charles L. Carmichael. Harlan, David Brewster. Coalville, John Jordison. Benan, Orman Salisbury. Dow City, A. H. Rudd. Pilot Rock, James O. Sheldon. Galland's Grove, John Pett and Thomas F. Jones. The Deloit and Auburn branches may remit their tithing as before until agents are recommended and appointed.

With profit we can take counsel from the following: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men and of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—D. C. sec. 119: 8.

Also, the bishop "should travel round about and among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their wants by humbling the rich and the proud."—D. C. sec. 83: 23.

Ever praying and laboring that good may continue to come to the Master's cause, I am, your servant and co-worker,

CHARLES J. HUNT,
Bishop for Galland's Grove District.
DELOIT, Iowa, August 23, 1900.

NEW ENGLAND REUNION.

The reunion of Massachusetts district and New England Saints was held at Silver Lake, Massachusetts, August 4 to 14, the meetings continuing, however, until the 16th, when lease of tents and heavy rains closed services, but with a large and increasing attendance of strangers up to the very last; and so far as this feature goes, it was by far the most successful of any reunion held in this country. The weather was fine, preaching excellent, and well received by Saints and strangers. Many friends made for us and the cause, and a large amount of prejudice allayed and misunderstanding corrected. The place was beautiful, centrally located for Saints in district, and the general verdict must be that of satisfaction and success.

Pres. W. H. Kelley, R. Bullard, and M. H. Bond were chosen as presiding officers. Brn. Kelley, Sheehy, and Bond as committee on press report. Bro. F. G. Pitt as chorister and leader of singing forces needs especial mention as a factor in the success of our meetings. The singing was excellent, fully enjoyed by Saints, and spectators and strangers delighted. Sr. Ashton's work at the organ needs no praise. Altogether the music was a success, of which we all felt proud, and grateful for as well.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard's arrival upon the grounds the Thursday following the opening of reunion was a welcome surprise, and his forceful and timely work as a preacher and adviser was enjoyed and appreciated. Bro. W. H. Kelley, though not feeling well, gave us characteristic sermons and timely service. Other ministers present occupied the preacher's place during reunion. Brn. U. W. Greene, F. M. Sheehy, G. W. Robley, H. J. Davison, F. G. Pitt, R. Bullard, M. H. Bond of missionary force, and George Smith of local workers. The burden of tent service, looking after wearisome details of commissary work, providing shelter and accommodation for Saint and stranger, falling almost altogether upon the shoulders of the committee, brethren Bullard, Busiel, and Simpson: not to forget Bro. Myron Fisher's good service in the work of the commissary department.

The number of baptisms are not recorded, four or five I believe, but the work of seed sowing, and of getting the latter-day work before strangers has never been equalled. The Spirit's presence and aid in preaching, the excellent social service proved again for us the divine recognition of effort to become "workers together with God" in the spread of the glorious latter-day evangel. The order of service was: Prayer and testimony meeting nine a. m.; preaching 10:45 a. m., and 7:30 p. m. The afternoons were largely occupied by a session of children's Book of Mormon exercises, Sunday school and Religio work, respectively—all good and profitable sessions. Some took advantage of the time and opportunity to visit historic Plymouth, eight miles away. Bathing, boating, and pleasant social intercourse filled all the time, and forced the hours past us so rapidly that ere we were aware almost, the time for separation had come. Back to our homes, or away and out to the missionary field, or wherever called, or to whatever task—pleasing or painful the Master may assign, lies the work for the coming year or until another reunion. May his divine power and grace preserve us unto a good and faithful service. M. H. BOND.

I am thankful for the support I have thus far received as Bishop's agent. The grounds are in good condition, and we think there will be room for all who may come. An effort is being made to secure reduced rates over the lines of "The Western Passenger Association." BORN.

ORTLEB.—To Bro. and Sr. William Ortleb, at Burlington, Iowa, June 22, 1900, a daughter; named Melva Johanna. Blessed August 19, by J. S. Roth.

DIED.

WEBSTER.—At Toledo, Ohio, June 28, 1900, Mrs. Mary E. Webster, aged 80 years, 3 months, and 12 days. Mother Webster was born in eastern New York, March 16, 1820. She united with the Methodist Church when quite young. She first heard the restored gospel about four years ago and obeyed it, and was baptized by Elder John Davis at Orting, Washington.

WELDON.—At the hospital for the insane, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, August 8, 1900, Sr. Sarah Ann Weldon, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, wife of Bro. Alexander Weldon, aged 42 years, 1 month, and 16 days. The circumstances surrounding her death are sad and pathetic in the extreme. Being a devoted wife and a loving and unselfish mother, she sacrificed her life for her invalid husband and dependent children. Being unable to longer bear the strain of mind and body, her physical and mental strength gave way some time ago, which finally resulted in her removal to the hospital, where her poor tired spirit took its departure a little over one week after the death of her husband. The cloud which settled over her mind we cannot but believe was a cloud of mercy to her, sent by the merciful hand of our heavenly Father, relieving her mind of the terrible strain which she endured so many years. She was faithful and steadfast in her belief in the gospel, and was a consistent member of the church; was baptized in 1898 by Bro. W. H. Kephart. Interment in hospital cemetery for the time being.

FOX.—At Providence, Rhode Island, July 11, 1900, Elizabeth Kate, daughter of Adam and Sister Kate Fox. She was born in Chicago, Illinois, November 17, 1876. Though not a member of the church, Sr. Kitty was a good girl, and was moving toward a union with us; she called for the administration of elders, and the Spirit's presence in power was to us a confirmation of the gospel hope to those who are doing the best they can under the circumstances. Her mother and brother Edwin are sadly stricken at this loss. The room was filled with floral tributes of esteem and affection from the church and from friends, and a large attendance at funeral services, which were conducted by Elders M. H. Bond and U. W. Greene.

JOHNSON.—Sister Sallie Johnson, wife of Thomas Johnson, was born in Yazoo county, Mississippi, May 14, 1880; at death was 20 years, 2 months, and 16 days old. She united with the church about seven years ago, was firm in the faith, and never doubted the latter-day work. She retired at night as well as common, but her husband was awakened in the morning by her struggling for breath and in a few moments she was dead. She was the mother of four children. A husband and three children, father and mother, brothers and sisters mourn their loss.

A French naturalist quoted by Popular Science News asserts that, "if the world should become birdless, man would not inhabit it after nine years' time, in spite of all the sprays and poisons that would be manufactured for the destruction of insects. The bugs and slugs would simply eat up all the orchards and crops in that time."

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

CAUSES OF ANARCHY IN ITALY.

By Camilo de Volini.

The bloody anarchistic exploits of the last ten years, such as the assassination of Canovas del Castillo by Angiolillo, of President Carnot by Caserio, the attempt of Acciarito to kill King Humbert, the riots of Sicily, of Apulia, of Milan, of Tuscany, of Carrara, and Raggio Emilia, all in Italy; the assassination of the Empress of Austria by Lucchini, and the recent murder of King Humbert, one might believe that Italy is the country where anarchist principles are more widespread and diffused, and where anarchists are more numerous than in any other country in proportion, and that Italy is the soil most adapted to the development of such idea.

While one must agree that Italy has followers of the anarchistic doctrines, it should not be believed that it has more in proportion than other countries. It is a matter of fact that while the anarchists of other countries are in the majority more doctrinary, the Italian anarchists are most violent followers of the propaganda by deeds, and Malatesta and his frends have been those who proposed it and carried it at the anarchist congress held at Capolago, Switzerland, in 1893.

If one tries to find out the causes of the propagation of the anarchical ideas in Italy, and especially in relation to the extreme means that have been accepted and enacted, he must take into consideration the ardent temperament of the Italian people, which becomes enthusiastic and passionate in what it undertakes, and therefore the Italian when affiliated to anarchy is ready to make for it the sacrifice of his own life. The Italian people have been educated in conspiracies by the same unfortunate political conditions in which they found themselves since the middle ages. Since then their great statesman, Macchiavelli, taught the people the famous maxim that the end justifies the means, which saying, though dangerous to morality, proved efficacious in the political conditions of Italy in those times.

All the Italian patriots since Macchiavelli have accepted this doctrine, and when Joseph Mazzini took upon himself to educate the people of Italy to revolution for the redemption of the country, his password was pensiero ed azione (thought and action). Mazzini understood liberty as the equilibrium of rights with duties; rights without duties lead to tyranny; duties without rights lead to servitude. Unfortunately in the society in which he lived he found of the terms of liberty only the second which he used to the advantage of his great idea, and taught the Italian people that the highest of duties was civil sacrifice. Civil sacrifice led him to conspire, and to this purpose he founded the Society of Le Giovane Italia (Young Italy). The Italian people having become impassioned with the Mazzinian idea gave to the cause of freedom of the country a long list of glorious civil martyrs.

The purpose of the Italian independente having been accomplished, the social problem confronted the Italian people, and when anarchistic ideas commenced to make their way into the minds of the workingmen, the Italian people had not yet forgotten the education of conspiracy, and with the same passion which they had secretly plotted against tyrants, today, blinded by an extreme idea, the Anarchists plot and conspire secretly against those whom they believe responsible for the present social order.

The fact that the spreading of anarchistic doctrines in Italy is not due to the misery and lack of instruction is clearly shown by the fact that they ferment almost exclusively in the wealthiest centers of the peninsula.

One must also add that Italy being a state of recent formation and having to meet great difficulties in order to consolidate the new government against the Clericals and the Republicans, the Anarchists have concentrated their efforts on Italy, believing its government the easiest to upturn.

The excessive zeal of the authority of the kingdom in suppressing the printed anarchistic propaganda must also be taken into consideration. The persecution forced the Anarchists to resort to the clandestine propaganda which become more and more violent and was never refuted.

Thus the reader will form an opinion of the cause which has led anarchy to sprout so unfortunately in some regions in Italy. Finally, if the public spirit of the great majority of Italians, who are for order, had undertaken to discuss and refute the absurd anarchical theories, most certainly those theories would have lost the fascination by which they hold the masses.—Chicago Tribune, August 19, 1900.

"THE SKIN."

There's a skin without and a skin within,
A covering skin and a lining skin;
But the skin within is the skin without,
Doubled inwards and carried completely throughout.

The palate, the nostrils, the windpipe, and throat,
Are all of them lined with this inner coat,
Which through every part is made to extend—
Lungs, liver, and bowels, from end to end.

The outside skin is a marvelous plan
For exuding the dregs from the flesh of man;
While the inner extracts from the food and the air
What is needed the waste in his flesh to repair.

While it goes well with the outside skin,
You may feel pretty sure all's right within;
For if anything puts the inner skin out
Of order, it troubles the skin without.

The doctor, you know, examines your tongue
To see if your stomach or bowels are wrong;
If he feels that your hand is hot and dry,
He is able to tell you the reason why.

Too much brandy, whisky, or gin,
Is apt to disorder the skin within;
While if dirty or dry, the skin without Refuses to let the sweat come out.

Good people all: have a care of your skin,
Both that without and that within;
To the first you'll give plenty of water and soap,
To the last little else beside water, I hope.

But always be very particular where
You get your water, your food, and your air;
For if these be tainted, or rendered impure,
It will have its effect on your blood—be sure.

The food which will ever for you be the best,
Is that you like most and can soonest digest;
All unripe fruit and decaying flesh
Beware of, and fish that is not very fresh.

Your water transparent and pure as you think it,
Had better be filtered and boiled ere you drink it,
Unless you know surely that nothing unsound
Can have got to it over or under the ground.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

But of all things the most I would have ye beware
Of breathing the poison of once-breathed air
When in bed, whether out or at home you may be Always open your windows and let it go free.

With clothing and exercise keep yourself warm,
And change your clothes quickly if drenched in a storm,
For a cold caught by chilling the outside skin,
Flies at once to the delicate lining within.

All you who thus kindly take care of your skin,
And attend to its wants without and within,
Need never of cholera have any fears,
And your skin may last you a hundred years.
—Sir Alfred Power.

DIVINITIES IN INDIAN ART.

So benign was his religious system that each department of the animal kingdom was provided with a little divinity to look after its affairs. Thus the Spirit of the Great Swan looked after all swans, the Spirit of the Great Turtle controlled all turtledom, and so on through the list, every kind of an animal having its own protecting spirit to guard its interests and punish its enemies. These divinities—who were under the control of the Great Spirit—felt a great interest in the human race, and any one of them might become the protecting genius of any particular man.

To find what one of these spirits was thus concerned in him, the youth in all the tribes went apart to fast and pray. He chose some secluded spot and constructed for himself a bower, or place of concealment, by tying together the tops of a few saplings and covering them with green boughs. Here he sat in meditation, fasting for two days—sometimes for a longer period—and from time to time calling on the Great Spirit. When his fast was done, he stepped forth from the bower. If the first animal that appeared to him was a rabbit, then he knew that the Spirit of the Great Rabbit had sent this representative of his kingdom, so that the youth might understand that this particular spirit would be his presiding genius through life. If possible, the youth secured the rabbit that had brought this message and preserved its skin, and this he kept near at hand while he lived. At times, some other characteristic part of the animal was preserved, as the rabbit's foot. And this may have been the origin of our superstition concerning the pedal extremity of that creature, the southern negros deriving the belief from the Cherokees. Henceforth, the rabbit would be to this youth a sacred animal, and he must neither harm it nor partake of its flesh. In after years, when on the war-path, the youth and his companions would not set out guards at night, except under conditions of extreme peril. Such precautions would be superfluous and irreverent; for the youth commended himself to the Spirit of the Great Rabbit, while the others appealed to their tutelary divinities, and all reposed in the ample security of ghostly guardians.—Charles H. Bartlett, in the Chautauquan for September.

SUGGESTIONS FOR AMERICAN PARENTS.

The attitude of American parents and children toward each other always surprises a Chinaman, and impresses him unfavorably. His whole nature is imbued with filial ideas so radically different from those current here that it is almost impossible for him to appreciate the American point of view. The Chinese parent expects implicit obedience on the part of his child, and he is not disappointed in his expectations. American children are sometimes obedient, but not always. The Chinese parent governs by authority, the American by affection. The Chinese parent says solemnly to his child: "It is your duty to obey me. All the authority of law and custom demand it. You must!" The American parent says: "I shall be displeased if you don't obey me, and you shan't have any more sugar plums." Both systems have their advantages and disadvantages. The American way allows more personal freedom, and is consistent with the spirit of the American Constitution; but I sincerely believe that the Chinese method makes children more obedient and respectful. Respect to elders is one of the cardinal virtues inculcated by our great sage Confucius. In our eyes, it is a sin to disobey one's parents; a breach of duty not to support them in old age.—Hon. Wu Ting-fang in Frank Leslie's for September.

China may now be included in that class of problems popularly known as "burning questions," and the September Forum contains two articles thereon that are as timely as they are interesting. Prof. Paul S. Reinsch considers the question from the point of view of "China against the World." He examines the rise and progress of the present Boxer Movement, surveys its course down to the present time, gives details concerning the three political parties in China, deprecating any possible division of that ancient Empire by the Powers. Supplementing this article is one by Mr. D. W. Stevens, the present Counsel to the Japanese Legation at Washington. Mr. Stevens has had wide experience in both Chinese and Japanese politics, and from his position he is entitled to speak with authority on the question of "Japan's Attitude toward China." He ridicules the idea of the "Yellow Peril" which has been so harped upon by a certain portion of both the English and American Press; shows that the very genius of Japan's policy and progress is unalterably opposed to any union with China; cites the unselfish attitude of Japan at the end of the late Chino-Japanese War as a guarantee that Japan has no feeling regarding China that differs in any degree from the feeling of the United States herself toward that ancient Empire, and declares that Japan's best interests do not lie in the direction of territorial aggrandizement in China, but that the truest exposition of her policy is to be found in those portions of her late treaty with China that provide for commercial expansion.

KING HUMBERT AND VERDI.

He was a man without any literary tastes, who seldom or never read any books, and took absolutely no part in the intellectual movement of modern Italy. Neither had he any taste for the drama. It was said of him that he never entered the theater in his life; but this is an exaggeration, for upon ceremonial occasions he has entered the royal box. One of these rare visits was made recently when the production of Signor Verdi's "Falstaff" was made the occasion of a national demonstration. The King was present in the royal box, and the performance from the beginning was an immense success. When the second act was over, the King said: "There is now no doubt as to the success of the piece; let us send for Signor Verdi" (an act of homage which was usually paid to the successful author only at the end of the play). Verdi was duly sent for, and when he appeared in the royal box the unprecedented honor of a summons before the close of the performance was enthusiastically applauded as testifying to the honor in which the King held the composer. The approval which signalized the summons to the royal box was considerably abated when the curtain rose for the third act and it was discovered that the King had left the theater. He had anticipated the call to the author simply in order to escape from a performance which bored him.—American Monthly Review of Reviews for September.

KNOWLEDGE of the Bible will refine, enlarge, and elevate the vocabulary of any one, and the girl who studies her Bible daily and reads Shakespeare, Scott, Macaulay, and Ruskin will be a better talker than she who limits her reading to the daily newspaper or the latest agreeable book. Dickens, Thackeray, William Black, Blackmore, Barrie, Crockett, Mrs. Oliphant, and George Eliot are all helpful to those who would be good, bright, varied, and entertaining talkers, because in all these authors you continually find wholesome thoughts expressed in forceful and strenuous English, and bit by bit you receive of the wealth these masters of English have so carefully bestowed upon their work. —September Ladies' Home Journal.

AN IMPORTANT RAILROAD EXTENSION.

Announcement has been made that the Burlington's new line between Alliance, Neb., and Brush, Colo., will be formally opened to general traffic September 15. The new branch is 149.69 miles long, and is laid with 85-pound steel rails. It will make a short route between Denver and the rich mining districts of South Dakota and Montana.

The new line connects with the system's Guernsey extension at Northport, Neb., and practically opens up a new transcontinental railway between Colorado and points in Montana, Washington, and the North Pacific Coast. Under existing conditions the Burlington's traffic between Denver and the Black Hills must be handled by way of Lincoln. The new cut-off will reduce the present distance 673 miles. A passenger will be able to leave Deadwood in the morning and reach Denver the same night.

The new line will be of marked importance to the lumber and shingle interests of the Puget Sound district, as it will open up a new market. This trade is now to a great extent shut off from the Colorado markets because of the long haul.

ABOUT NEBRASKA.

Nebraska has no bonded debt.

The last bonds outstanding were redeemed and canceled June 2, 1900.

During the past twenty years the wealth of Nebraska has increased 155 per cent.

Statistics show that in Nebraska only 31 people out of 1,000 cannot read or write. This is the best showing made by any state.

Eighty per cent of Nebraska farmers own their own farms.

In Nebraska originated Arbor Day. In a single year Nebraskans planted 66,937,494 forest trees.

In the whole United States, 722 out of every million inhabitants are convicts. In Nebraska alone the ratio is only 369 in every million.

In 1898 1,100,000 sheep were fattened for market in Nebraska.
