PRESIDENT SMITH AT WASHINGTON PARK.

President Smith, after attending the Tabor reunion, went to Independence, where he was in attendance at the reunion held in Washington park. He preached there on the 30th ult., and the papers of Kansas City and St. Joseph gave him a fairly good representation as he explained the differences between us and the Utah people. The St. Joseph Gazette-Herald quotes him as follows:—

"In the Doctrine and Covenants of Joseph Smith, published in 1835, and published again and again after that, plural marriage is forbidden," said President Smith. "The covenants are unmistakable. No one of us at that time ever thought of plural marriage until Joseph Smith, founder of the church, died. Then, a few years later, that branch of the church which had gone to Utah proclaimed its belief, through revelation, in plural marriage. The Doctrine and Covenants were published in Utah with that section eliminated which forbade plural marriage. The section forbidding plural marriage is contained in every edition until the Utah church published its own edition.

"We Latter Day Saints are heart and soul opposed to plural marriage. We believe that bigamy forms no part of the teachings of our church. My father has been dead fifty-six years. I have consistently followed my father's teachings.

"I am here the representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I am also here as the son of my father. I am trying to follow out the doctrines of my church and to rescue my father's name from obloquy. My father was not a law breaker, neither was he a polygamist. It is for me to say this, that the American people may not injure the church and do my father a wrong."

WHAT OF POLYGAMY?

There may be some who object to seeing so much in the HERALD about polygamy, cohabitation, and other things of a like nature, discussion of which is brought into our columns because of our opposition to the church in Utah. To discuss polygamy and its concomitant subjects is not pleasant to us, for to us it is an abomination, and we would be glad if it would never again be necessary to bring the subject into the columns of our church organ.

One of the chief objects of the HERALD is to keep our ministers informed on matters of which they have a knowledge,—things that will help them in the battle for the gospel's sake. The elders from the valley of salt are active, and it very often happens that our elders come in contact with them, and are obliged to stand in defense of the truth as we see it, and to do so our men must be posted as much as possible in what the church in Utah is really doing. The Utah elders advance all kinds of specious arguments, and often claim that the only difference between them and the Reorganized Church is the doctrine of polygamy. Then they say that as the doctrine of polygamy has been abolished or eradicated from their church there is really no difference now. Such statements must be met by our men. The Utah people have repeatedly refused to meet our men in discussion, so it is sometimes difficult for our elders to offset some of the things presented by the Utah representatives unless they are in possession of the real facts in the case.

We have before stated that we did not believe that the doctrine of polygamy has been abandoned by the church in Utah. Continually do we see things in their papers which ground us more firmly in the belief that they still continue to hold that abominable doctrine to be God-given. One of the latest that has come to our notice is the following from the Vernal [Utah] Express, of August 18. It is from a two column report of the conference held there, and is a synopsis of a speech delivered by Apostle M. F. Cowley before the Mutual Improvement Association:—

Apostle M. F. Cowley said that the first step in the Mutual Improvement is obtaining the companionship of the Holy Spirit. Gave wholesome instruction regarding the forming of connubial ties among the young people, and other things pertaining thereto. Described the condition of people at the resurrection and pointed out the path in which Saints should walk. He gave the origin of secret organizations and their power and defects, showing that the gospel of Christ embraced all that was necessary for sustenance and mutual protection, counseling the Saints not to join them. He discoursed at some length upon spiritualism, giving its origin and some of its mediums and their workings, referring to instances that had come under his notice of professed communion with spirits beyond the grave and said that he wished the Latter Day Saints to write it down and remember, that those who indulged in that practice would dwindle away both physically and spiritually. The law of plural marriage is God given and as eternal as any law ever given by the Father, and that any person who disbelieved it or sought to hide behind the government restriction or the manifesto, or were afraid to advocate its principles were not Latter Day Saints.

It is the last sentence to which we wish to call special attention. It is unequivocal. It comes from a man who is certainly representative.

Similar statements or statements having equal significance have been made by other missionaries from Utah, so that we are firm in our belief that the people of that church as a rule still believe polygamy or the law of plural marriage to be a principle of great importance to them, that they will, by its operation be "exalted beyond the angels."

We present the above so that our men will have matter at hand so that when the elders from Utah say polygamy is a dead issue, it can be shown that they are trying to deceive.

GRACELAND COLLEGE OUR SCHOOL?

Graceland College opens September 10. President Harkness has been at work in the interests of the institution this summer, and it is to be hoped that the attendance will be better than it was last year. There seems to be a better feeling throughout the church in regard to the college this year than ever before, and it should be better supported by the church members in the way of sending their children here to school rather than sending them off to other colleges.

The curriculum offered by Graceland is as good as can be desired, and as far as it takes the pupil the work will be as good as in any school, so that our members need have no hesitancy in sending their young men and women to Graceland for an education. In fact, the attendance having not been very large, it gives the student a much better chance than if he was where the classes were larger. In the small classes the student comes in closer touch with the instructor, receives a greater amount of his personal attention, and the results are beneficial to the student in the way of more rapid and thorough work. The instructor is enabled to better understand the needs of the student, can locate mental difficulties better, and knows better what remedy to apply. In the small schools the advantage is undoubtedly in favor of the student.

The work that has been done in Graceland so far in its course has been fully up to standard, and will compare favorably with that done in any schools in the land. While it is in its work nonsectarian, it is essentially a

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Latter Day Saint school in that it is supported by the Saints, and as such it must look principally to the membership for its support in the way of attendance. It was founded for the purpose, principally, of affording the young of our church a place where they can acquire an education as good as any, and yet be under such influences as will not be detrimental to their development as Saints or good church members. Graceland fills the bill nicely, and as it has been founded by the people of our church and so far supported by them, it surely behooves us to see that it has a chance to fill its mission. It is not a Lamoni institution, it is a church institution. Its interests should be of personal interest to every member who is active in the development of the church and its work, and we trust that the management this year will have no reason to complain of not being supported in its efforts, both in the way of financial aid and in attendance. Let us second its every effort! We can well afford to, for Graceland is our school, and its success will be our pride—its failure our disgrace.

BISHOP C. J. HUNT'S BOOKLET.

The Board of Publication has put another booklet on the market. It is by Bishop C. J. Hunt, and is entitled, "The Opinions of Sixty-five Leading Ministers and Bible Commentators on Isaiah 29: 11–24, and Ezekiel 37: 15–20." In this little work of fifty-six pages Bro. Hunt has collated some matter which will be of much interest to our ministry and laity. It is now ready for distribution, and will be mailed to anyone for the small price of ten cents.

Bishop Hunt has presented the matter in a fair and unbiased way, and follows the wise plan of allowing the reader to draw his own conclusions, largely.

It is evident from what is presented in the little volume that there is a great diversity of opinion among the ministers of this country on these two important portions of scripture and after the opinions have all been presented, Bro. Hunt presents a few remarks calling the attention of the reader to certain things and points of especial interest, and leaves the matter with the reader and the various ministers whose opinions have been given.

To secure the opinions of the various ministers, Bro. Hunt addressed a set of questions to each minister whose opinion he desired, and the little book contains these answers. The questions he asked are as follows:—

On Isaiah:—

1. What or where is the "book that is sealed"? (Isaiah 29: 11–24.)
2. Who was the "learned man," if any, to whom the "words of a book" should be delivered? (Verse 11.)
3. Who, or what "unlearned man," if any, received the book? (Verse 12.)
4. What "marvelous work and a wonder" is referred to in verses 13 to 16, which "book" and "work" seems should precede the fertility of "Lebanon" (Palestine)? (Verse 17.)
5. Is the book of verses 12 and 18 the same book?
6. Are they who "erred in spirit" to come to an "understanding" and "learn doctrine" out of the sealed book? (Verses 11–24.)

On Ezekiel:—

What is meant by the "stick of Judah" and the "stick of Ephraim, or Joseph?" (Ezek. 37: 15–20.) Does the first refer to the Bible, and the second to a record?

After giving the answers to these questions as given by the ministers and commentators, Bro. Hunt says:—

It has been with a degree of satisfaction that we have sought for, secured, and compiled the foregoing replies to the questions named, together with extracts from many leading Bible commentators. In the varied and multiplied answers it will be observed that the Israelitish prophet was inspired of God when he wrote, "The wisdom of their wise [worldly wise] men shall perish [fail to understand the true and literal meaning of this chapter], and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." (Isaiah 29: 14.) We have, then, proven it to be true beyond the possibility of a doubt.

Then follows a discussion of the Book of Mormon and its history, and the last two pages contain an epitome of our faith or "what we believe."

The work will be valuable in the hands of the ministry, and Bro. Hunt is to be commended for his zeal and enterprise. The spirit manifested by Bro. Hunt is also commendable, when in a letter to the editors he said, as he submitted the manuscript:—

I am glad to be able to put them [the opinions] on record.

Bro. Hunt gets nothing for his labor. He gives that to the good of the cause, and offers to buy a large part of the edition. The Board appreciates his zeal, and is offering the booklet at a very low figure.

THE Daily Iowa Capital, in its issue for August 31, has the following to say of the assistant editor's visit to the State Library:—

The grandson of Joseph Smith, who has been spending state fair week in Des Moines, was a caller at the state library this week. His wife was with him, and the two enjoyed a chat with State Librarian Brigham over the books of the day and some of those of a past day. The grandson of the famous Mormon is Frederick M. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa. He is an anti-polygamist Mormon, and entertains broad, liberal views. He and his father are associated in editing some of the Mormon periodicals which are issued from the headquarters of the colony at Lamoni, and Frederick is the editor of the "Lamoni Chronicle." He and his wife are well educated and conversant upon themes of the day.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, of Deloit, Iowa, wrote August 23:—

At this writing I am doing gospel work in the north part of the state.

Bro. W. A. Goodwin, Condon, Oregon, wrote the 23d ult.:—

Five baptized here on the 12th.

Bro. J. W. Adams, Moline, Illinois, August 28:—

We are here with tent. Are having good attendance, and interest is growing.

Bro. Thomas G. Whipple, writing from Greenville, Conn., August 25, says:—

We would be glad to have the elders call upon us. I have a nice horse and buggy that can be used for gospel work. Bro. Bullard, cannot you and Bro. Bond or Robley come down this fall? I am alive in the work, and while everything does not go to suit me, yet I am striving to live up to that law which will give us the right to dwell in the presence of our Savior.

Business Manager Smith, under date of the 28th ult., writes from Independence, Mo.:—

The meetings here are fairly well attended. Today is very warm. Yesterday forenoon we had a thunder shower. The preachers are having good liberty.

Bro. E. A. Erwin, under date of August 28, writes from Manchester, Texas, in a happy vein, rejoicing over the good times had at the Northern Texas and Choctaw district, held at Manchester on July 28. He speaks in commendation of the officers of the district and the mission. He says:—

The preaching at the conference was done by Brn. H. O. Smith, J. D. Erwin, Ellis Short, J. Cole Moxon, and D. D. Babcock. The Lord blessed them in their efforts. About five hundred were in attendance, and about one hundred Saints camped on the grounds. We feel that good was done. Since conference I have held two meetings, both in new places, and had good audiences. Quite a number are interested, and some are ready for baptism. The outlook for the gospel in this country is good. Laborers are greatly needed, and we are glad to see a number of our good men stepping out with their Bibles in hand.

Bro. J. B. Roush, writing from Wray, Colo., August 30, says:—

Our tent meetings have been in progress here since the 18th inst. Fairly good attendance and some interest manifested. Think considerable good is being done. A much better feeling is obtaining among the people here in regard to our faith. Bro. Luff was with us a few days, and gave a couple of sermons, which will be long remembered by the Saints and friends of this place.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. H. A. Stebbins returned on the 28th from his trip into Kansas. His objective point there was the reunion at Minneapolis. He reports that he was gone twenty days and preached seventeen sermons, besides doing other ministerial work. Besides Minneapolis he visited other points in Kansas and Missouri.

Bishop Kelley returned last Thursday from the Independence reunion, and left Sunday for the Stewartsville reunion.

The Herald Office has in press a Danish tract by Bro. Peter Anderson which will be of great interest and use to our Scandinavian brethren, as it treats of the leadership of Brigham

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Young in a conclusive and emphatic way. It is entitled: "Brighamismen Aflorët; eller Brigham Young som Leder og Profet." We expect to have it ready soon.

Business Manager Smith was in attendance at the Independence reunion representing the Herald Office.

Elder F. A. Smith left home last Friday to attend a two days' meeting in the Des Moines district. He went in response to a call from Bro. J. W. Wight, who is also there.

Bro. N. C. Enge, late of Liberty, Washington, accompanied by his fourteen-year-old son, Axel T., arrived in Lamoni, Sunday, the 26th ult., remaining until evening, the 30th, when father and son left for the Atlantic coast. The two expected to be joined at Boston by Bro. M. P. Hansen, of Plymouth, Massachusetts, and the trio would embark on the steamer Ivernia the 8th inst. for Arendal, Norway. At last General Conference Brn. Enge and Hansen were appointed to the Scandinavian mission, where they now go to prosecute gospel work. We understand that both brethren have been in correspondence with friends of our work in Scandinavia, and that some are waiting admission into the fold of the Good Shepherd. Bro. Enge hoped to be at his father's home on the birthday of the latter (the 27th September) and then and there preach his first sermon in Norway. We bid these brethren Godspeed, and hope to hear of their labors resulting in great good.

It is the season of reunions. For some time the "miscellaneous" columns of the HERALD and Ensign have contained numerous reunion notices. Over all the land are they being held, from the east to the west. We do not believe the Latter Day Saints have ever held so many as are being held this year. It almost looks as though every district is trying to hold one. It is well, too, for encouraging reports are coming from all held so far. The Saints are naturally gregarious. They love to gather and tell of the good things they enjoy and of the blessings of the Master. These reunions truly reunite. Old friends meet again to exchange friendly greetings, and new friendships are formed. Then, too, others see the peace and joy of the Saints, listen to the "good news," and are desirous of being one of the "household of faith." Let the work of the reunions grow apace, but not too rapidly.

Dr. J. H. Hansen preached to the Saints in Lamoni last Sunday morning, on the subject of "healing." He holds peculiar views on this subject, and he presented them in a forceful way. It was his farewell sermon, as he will move his family to Roswell, New Mexico. The HERALD wishes him well in his new sphere of action.

MORE LIGHT, PLEASE.

I most earnestly desire to call the attention of all the readers of the Herald, and especially the ministry, to the Word of Wisdom, and particularly to the part which says "strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies."

"Strong drinks;" what are strong drinks? We want light, and that badly. Has the church collectively, or the Presidency, ever defined what is meant by the term "strong drink"? Some say it means alcoholic drinks, while others contend (and they have a right to, in my opinion, unless it is defined) that strong tea, coffee, cocoa, ginger beer, etc., is meant as much as alcoholic drink; while others go farther still and claim that this Word of Wisdom is strictly essential to spiritual salvation. This, of course, has caused a lot of contention, and this is unseemly and unprofitable to one and all alike. What shall we do, then?

The first thing required is to have the term "strong drink," as contained in the revelation, defined. If this has been done, I do not know it; and therefore I say, until it is defined, any drink, whether alcoholic or not, is included, if it be strong in any sense. I do not consider it wise to silence a man because he will have a glass or so of strong drink, or alcoholic drink if you please, for his supper or dinner, as the case may be. These men, in some cases, are men who will labor diligently and faithfully in all branches of the work, and how great is their loss, and how trifling their offense.

Again, in America, where fruit is so plentiful and cheap, it is an easy matter to do without these drinks, when you can sit under your own vine and pick grapes until you are satisfied, and where you can obtain peaches, melons, oranges, figs, apples, pears, and all kinds of choice fruits very cheap, if you do not grow them yourselves. To keep the Word of Wisdom under these conditions, is easy. But how different in this country! Here these fruits are so dear that people who work for their living cannot afford to buy them, and scarcely if ever get any. Imagine a man working from ten to twelve hours per day in a tin mill, or chemical works, or on a railway, and coming home to find a repast spread before him consisting of bread and cheese, or butter, or jam, with no fruit whatever. Can these men exist and follow their occupation on such food, with the addition of a little milk and water, or water alone to drink with it? Does the Lord expect it? Could they but obtain plenty of nice fruit they could work hard and obey the Word of Wisdom with ease and a cheerful heart; but this is denied them, and what can they do? They are told it must be obeyed, otherwise it is amen to their spiritual salvation.

If this is so, why did not Joseph teach it as such, and why do not the presiding elders of the church enforce it today?

I understand the Word of Wisdom was given for a temporal salvation, and not made an essential of spiritual salvation. I read faith in God, repentance, baptism, for the remission of sins, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the gifts of the gospel as seen in first Corinthians 12th, and Ephesians 4th, for the perfection of the Saints (nothing said of the Word of Wisdom); the fruits of the Spirit, as seen in Galatians 5: 22, 23, such as love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, are the essentials of spiritual salvation.

On the other hand, if man will obey the Word of Wisdom, he shall be saved temporally; that is, I understand the Lord will save him from disease, and pain, and affliction, etc., if he will not obey it he must suffer, and it is left for the Lord to do with him as seemeth good unto him, there being no promise.

But some will urge that if he obeyed the word he would find hidden treasures of knowledge. I admit this, for God has spoken it; and if he does not obey it, he will not find this treasure. But this fact does not prove that he will lose his salvation in God's spiritual kingdom. God hath said "Inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good," etc. I personally believe this, for this reason: There never was a drunkard who was not once a moderate drinker. To be drunk is to sin, and drunkards have no part in God's kingdom. Others say if a man drink alcoholic drinks, even in moderation, the Spirit of God will gradually leave that man, until it is gone forever; for, say they, the Spirit cannot dwell in an unholy temple. This last assertion I admit, but Christ said it was that which proceedeth forth and cometh out of the man which defileth, and not that which went in. How are we to destroy this plain statement?

Still for a man to go to a public place for drink, or to put a pipe into his mouth to smoke, is a bad example. I believe these actions are unfruitful, unprofitable, and cannot assist in any way to forward the work of God. Therefore I say, Saints, until such time as the presidency or the quorums of the church, or the General Conference shall define what is really strong drink, or until such law that governs this Eastern District of Wales be rescinded, honor the law, avoid these things, and much contention and strife will cease, and we shall have unity and love in our midst, which will lead us to perfection, without which we cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven.

If we will give heed to the counsel of God we shall be wiser and better laborers, and shall in this life obtain a greater knowledge of all things pertaining to his church and kingdom; but I cannot be so bold as to say, if you do not these things you will lose your spiritual salvation; but one thing is certain, you will lose your temporal salvation and thus suffer with the world.

I pen this with one object in view, that is, to get more light, in order that we may come to a proper and correct understanding of all things the Lord has spoken. May he bless us for his name's sake. Your brother in Christ, J. E. HOLFORD.

LYDNEY, England.

[WE had never supposed that it was needful that the officers of the church should define the term "strong drink" as it is used in the Word of Wisdom. "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging." "Give strong drink to him that is ready to perish."

In these expressions it is understood that neither wine, nor any other mild drink is meant; but that drink that would intoxicate, is.

Until the church chooses to designate what particular liquors may be classed as strong drink, it should be understood that the "strong drink" referred to in the Word of Wisdom, is that which intoxicates—all intoxicating liquors, of whatever name.—JOSEPH SMITH.

DON'TS FOR CHURCH GOERS.

DON'T

Wear to church clothes conspicuous for either oldness or newness of style.

Be punctually half an hour late, especially if your shoes have the "wealthy squeak."

Forget your hymn book, collection, fan, etc., then send the children home for it after you are seated.

Push past the usher to another seat, but take the one he assigns you.

Wet thumb in mouth to turn leaves in hymn book or Bible.

Wait until second or third line of each stanza before joining in singing.

Try to always lead in singing, etc.; we cannot all be "bell sheep."

Whisper, giggle, eat candy, etc., or turn around to see who is coming in.

Take the sacramental bread in gloved hand.

Pass the wine cup to the one next you, but back to the priest or elder who is passing it.

Work so late Saturday night you cannot stay awake during the services. "The Lord giveth his beloved sleep," (at the proper time.)

Let the dog follow you.

Let the children form a stampede for drinks, if there is water in or near the church.

Put on gloves, adjust clothing, etc., but make your toilet at home.

Open your watch and shut with a snap half a dozen times during the sermon.

Show lack of interest and attention.

Look around, but IN, if the elder mentions faults and shortcomings during his discourse.

Gather up hymn books and other property, or put on wraps and overcoats during the benedictory prayer.

Forget to tell the elder you liked his sermon if it pleased you. Truth is no flattery.

Be boisterous and talk loudly as soon as benediction is pronounced. "The place whereon thou standest is holy ground."

CREDIBILITY OF TESTIMONY.

Testimony, like all other essential means, has for its basis certain fixed principles by the correct use of which the truth or falsity of the ends desired may be easily ascertained. If a man employs the relative principles in working out a problem in geometry the proper results will inevitably be reached.

No one should dispute the right of anyone to closely scrutinize the testimony offered to support alleged theory or fact, let that come from whatever source it may; but such scrutiny should be done in the light of coherent principles with a consideration of circumstances surrounding similar testimony.

In admitting the credibility of the first cause, or the basic principles of one's testimony, it virtually carries with it the acknowledgment of the thing testified to, providing such testimony is in harmony with the nature of the case, and the prescribed methods employed. When these conditions all obtain, the verity of the testimony cannot be successfully disproved.

Credibility of testimony depends upon the existing facts behind such testimony, and the method of calling them into requisition. If, by a philosophical examination, based upon a true premise, carried to its legitimate conclusion, we determine a statement absurd and in conflict with the fixed and immutable laws governing the cause and conditions, we need go no further in our investigation, but are justified in rejecting it at once. For instance, if a philosopher and a friend were looking upon a bursting volcano, and the friend should remark that the cause of the belching of the volcano was the attractive force of gravitation, the philosopher would very likely smile, because he had studied and proved that the principles of gravity acted to the opposite.

Principle and prejudice are opposed; nevertheless, there are thousands who will disregard principle and install prejudice as the main factor in reaching conclusions. Please keep this in mind, for we wish to apply it to our religious students who acknowledge the cause but deny the effects if anyone should be bold enough to lay claim to them.

This would be an excellent rule to test the statements of Joseph Smith. If the facts from which he claimed to received his revelation do not exist, or by some philosophical deduction the premise is proven false, no further argument is necessary to justify anyone in declaring his testimony a base fabrication; but, to the contrary, his testimony has been rejected by the very ones who unreservedly acknowledge the existence of the fixed and unalterable laws governing the cause from which he claimed to have received his revelation.

What would you think of a professor of mathematics who, while admitting the correctness of the rules, would ridicule a student who, by applying the admitted rules, reached the desired result? That is just what the Christian professors are doing today, while admitting the infallibility of the rules laid down in the word of God for obtaining correct answers to faith, prayer to an unchangable God, which presupposes an answer; and if some poor, hungry, thirsty soul, desiring to hear from God upon questions too deep and perplexing for the human mind to fathom, humbly and earnestly applies the rules that he might receive a correct answer, they are the very first ones to hold him up to the blaze of ridicule. The philosopher above mentioned rejects the statement of his friend because not in harmony with natural laws; but the religious philosophers (?) rejects the statement of Joseph Smith because not in harmony with their peculiar prejudice and conflicting dogmas.

If Mr. Smith had given his revelation to a people who never heard of God, knew nothing of the nature or laws of such a being, for them to reject, persecute, and ridicule him would not appear so strange; but coming from a people who tacitly believe in the Bible, which reveals to us a being unchangeable, infinite in love, truth, and goodness, and sending petitions to him daily, seems more than passing strange. When the Dutch traveler told the king of Siam that in his country water froze so solid that an elephant could walk across it, it does not seem strange that he replied in these words: "I have always thought you to be a man of truth, but now I perceive you lie." This was contrary to all his experience, and he knew absolutely nothing of the laws of heat, in the icebound regions of the north; but had he been a philosopher, understanding the laws affecting such unheard of change, he would have accepted the traveler's testimony upon the principle, whether he had ever seen ice or not.

If those modern teachers had honestly examined the principle and conditions obtaining when Mr. Smith made his remarkable announcement to the world, and had not condescended to ridicule the bare statement, and had found it out of harmony with all precedent, and had rejected it, it would have been more in keeping with their calling, instead of turning Pharisee and persecute, simply because not in harmony with their preconceived notions.

We shall now examine some of the conditions obtaining when Mr. Smith asked and received his wonderful revelation, and associate them with the immutable nature of God. 1. He was an unlearned boy, and greatly in need of Divine wisdom. 2. Failing to receive it from the wisdom of the world, he sought God, the eternal embodiment of all wisdom. 3. He took up his Bible and read, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." 4. He believed God meant just what he said, and would hear him. (I here ask the religious professors, if there is anything wrong with that. They will be compelled to say no; for outside of the Catholic Church they all admonish their flocks to become acquainted with the Bible. The only difference between the Protestant and Catholic is that the one will not allow their people to read the Bible at all, and the other advises to read it but not believe it. Where is the difference? Who is the more consistent? The ones who never read it and believe it all, or the ones who read it and believe only half?) 5. He took God at his word, and verily believed he would receive an answer. 6. In that answer God told him to join none of the churches, for all the creeds were an abomination in his sight; and authorized him to establish the church after the original pattern. 7. The primitive church had gone into Roman apostasy, which all the Protestant world admit. 8. He went forward as commanded, and received all the bitter indignities which an unbelieving and jealous world could heap upon him, and finally met his death, as have all the prophets of God, for the testimony he bore.

Now, if the above cannot be successfully contradicted, why should it be thought a thing so strange and incredible for anyone to have their prayers intelligently answered when the necessity existed and conditions are complied with? Will any of our opponents deny Mr. Smith the right to go to God in prayer? If not, why ridicule an answer to that prayer?

As a very fitting place, in this article, we introduce that most excellent little work entitled "Intellectual Philosophy," by John Abercrombie M. D., F. R. S., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in Edinburg, etc., and first physician to his majesty in Scotland, which seems to have been specially written for the vindication of the early characters of this latter-day philosophy. Note carefully as you read the grand and honorable rules given by which is to try one who dares to give to the frowning world something out of the ordinary. Note, also, that an individual's claim is not to be judged and rejected by its miraculous nature, but by the motive prompting, his previous character, pecuniary considerations, his unyielding fortitude in the face of all apposing forces, the existing necessity for such a claim, the basic principles upon which they stand, the manner of calling them into requisition, and the success attending.

On pages 60 and 61 the author discourses at some length upon the fallacy of rejecting testimony not in harmony with our experiences, as follows:—

> A very small portion of our knowledge of external things is obtained through our own senses; by far the greater part is procured through other men, and this is received by us on the evidence of testimony. But, in receiving facts in this manner, we usually proceed with more caution than when they come to us by personal observation. We are much influenced, in the first place, by our confidence in the veracity of the narrator, and our knowledge of the opportunities which he has had of ascertaining the facts he professes to relate. Thus if he be a person on whose testimony we have formerly received important statements which have turned out to be correct, we are the more ready to receive his testimony again; if he be a stranger to us we receive it with greater caution; if he has formerly misled us, we view it with suspicion or reject it altogether.
> But there is another principle of very extensive application in such cases, and which is independent in a great measure of the character of the narrator. In receiving facts upon testimony we are much influenced by their accordance with facts with which we are already acquainted. This is what, in common language, we call their probability; and statements which are probable, that is, in accordance with facts which we already know, are received upon a lower degree of evidence than those which are not in such accordance, or which, in other words, appear to us in the present state of our knowledge to be improbable. Now this is a sound and salutary caution, but we should beware of allowing it to influence us beyond its proper sphere. It should lead us to examine carefully the evidence upon which we receive facts not in accordance with those which we have already acquired; but we should beware of allowing it to engender skepticism. For, while an unbounded credulity is the part of a weak mind, which never thinks or reasons at all, an unlimited skepticism is the part of a contracted mind, which reasons upon imperfect data, or makes its own knowledge and extent of observation the standard and test of probability. An ignorant peasant may reject the testimony of a philosopher in regard to the size of the moon, because he thinks he has the evidence of his senses that it is only a foot in diameter; and a person, holding a respectable rank in society, is said to have received with contempt the doctrine of the revolution of the earth on its axis, because he was perfectly satisfied that his house was never known to turn with its front to the north.

> When the King of Siam was told by a Dutch traveler that in Holland, at certain seasons of the year, water became so solid that an elephant might walk over it, he replied: "I have believed many extraordinary things which you have told me, because I took you for a man of truth and veracity, but now I am convinced that you lie." This confidence in one's own experience, as the test of probability, characterizes a mind which is confined in its views and limited in its acquirements; and the tendency of it would be the rejection of all knowledge for which we have not evidence of our senses. Had the King of Siam once seen water in a frozen state, he would not only have been put right in regard to this fact, but his confidence would have been shaken in his experience as the test of probability in other things, and he would have been more disposed for the further reception of truth upon the evidence of testimony.
> Thus, progress in knowledge is not confined in its results to the mere facts which we acquire, but has also an extensive influence in enlarging the mind for the further reception of truth, and setting it free from many of those prejudices which influence men who are limited by a narrow field of observation. There may be cases in which, without any regard to the veracity of the narrator, a cultivated mind perceives the elements of truth in a statement which is rejected by inferior minds as altogether incredible. An ingenious writer supposes a traveler of rather doubtful veracity bringing into the country of Archimedes an account of the steam engine. His statement is rejected by his countrymen as altogether incredible. It is entirely at variance with their experience, and they think it much more probable that the traveler should lie than that such a thing should be. But when he describes to Archimedes the arrangement of the machine, the philosopher perceives the result, and, without any consideration of the veracity of the narrator, decides upon the evidence derived from the relation of the facts themselves, and their accordance with principles which are known to him, that the statement is unquestionably true.

We sum up the foregoing as follows:—

1. Most all we know is from the testimony of others.

2. We are much influenced by our confidence in the veracity of the narrator, and our knowledge of the opportunities which he has had of ascertaining the facts he professes to relate.

Of the things Mr. Smith testified to, he had the very best of opportunity of knowing, for he went direct to the great fountain head of all knowledge, as directed in the text book for all Christian philosophers.

3. Some of the most remarkable predictions of the age were made by him which had their literal fulfillment, hence another spoke in the wheel of evidence, that the testimony he bore was true.

4. We are much influenced by their accordance with facts with which we are already acquainted.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Mr. Smith's testimony perfectly agrees with all the ancient worthies with whom the Bible acquaints us. Did not Moses, Abraham, Lot, Jacob, Daniel, Zechariah, Joseph, Peter, Paul, John, and many others, all have angelic visitation? Did they not all receive communication from the eternal Spirit? Did not some of them receive commandments to usher in a new dispensation and establish the church? Further, I presume our critics will agree. Hence, another spoke in the wheel of evidence.

5. We should use caution in making our own observations the test of evidence, lest we be like the king of Siam, reject some grand truth; for, remember, "An unlimited skepticism is the part of a contracted mind which never reasons nor thinks."

6. Like Archimedes, we should examine a testimony upon the relation it bears to the acknowledged principles calculated in their nature to produce the results stated by the narrator.

Page 63 gives "Hume's celebrated argument against the resurrection of Christ," and of course against the Christian religion. Stated a little more fully, it is this:—

"Twelve witnesses," he says, though not exactly in these words, "I admit, agree in testifying that a man rose from the dead. I am, consequently, compelled to believe one of two things, either that twelve men agreed to tell a lie, or that a man rose from the dead. Either of these suppositions is, I confess, very extraordinary; but as one or the other must be true, I must admit the one that is least extraordinary. Now it seems to me more probable that men should lie, than that one who had been several days dead should return to life again; for it is a very common thing in this world for men to testify falsely; but it is contrary to all experience that a man should rise from the dead."

To this Christian writers reply, in substance, as follows: "We admit the alternative; viz, that we must believe that twelve men testified falsely, or that one man rose from the dead; and we also admit that we must believe the least improbable of the two. But we deny that the former is the least improbable. For it is not very improbable that the Creator should wish to make a communication to mankind, and if so, restoring to life the messenger who brought it, would be a very suitable and very probable mode of authenticating it. But it is contrary to all experience, and all probability, that twelve men, without motive, should conspire to fabricate and disseminate a lie. In regard to the mode by which the Creator would authenticate a message to men, we have no experience; and there is certainly no presumption against the one in question. In regard to men's falsifying their word, in the cause of virtue, and against their own interests, we have a great deal of experience, and it is all against it."

The above brief and clear-cut answer to Mr. Hume's deeply deceptive argument against the resurrection of Christ is as grand and logical as has ever been our privilege to enjoy reading, and from it we deduct the following:—

1. This being a shield used by the Christians in protecting themselves from the attacks of the infidel world with regard to the resurrection of Christ, the very base of their hope, why will not the same rule of vindication hold good with regard to some recent characters who figured in events more or less improbable.

The Book of Mormon had twelve witnesses testifying to its divinity, whose last breath was spent in reaffirming their testimony. I hold it does not tax one's credulity any more in believing these witnesses of latter-days than those of eighteen hundred years ago.

2. We think it no more improbable for God to raise up twelve witnesses to the Book of Mormon than twelve witnesses to the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Cannot men tell the truth today as well as then?

3. The witnesses to the resurrection of Christ suffered all kinds of persecution for their testimony, and finally met death rather than deny it. So did the Book of Mormon witnesses, and thousands of others who believed their testimony, and many suffered death.

4. They did it without the least hope of gain in this world. So did the Book of Mormon witnesses; and some gave all they had of earth's riches to send its precious contents to gladden the hearts of others.

5. If it is less improbable for twelve men to conspire to tell a lie, without hope of compensation, relative to Christ's resurrection, would it not be just as improbable for twelve men, without motive, "to conspire to tell a lie" relative to the Book of Mormon? If one falls, so must the other, for both are standing on the same grounds.

The reception of facts upon the evidence of testimony must therefore be considered as a fundamental principle of our nature, to be acted upon whenever we are satisfied that the testimony possesses certain characteristics of credibility. These are chiefly referable to three heads: that the individual has had sufficient opportunity of ascertaining the facts; that we have confidence in his power of judging of their accuracy; and that we have no suspicion of his being influenced by passion or prejudice in his testimony,—or in other words, that we believe him to be an honest witness. Our confidence is further strengthened by several witnesses concurring in the same testimony, each of whom has had the same opportunity of ascertaining the facts, and presents the same characters of truth and honesty. On such testimony we are in the constant habit of receiving statements which are much beyond the sphere of our personal observations, and widely at variance with our experience. These are the statements which, for the sake of a name, we may call marvelous. In regard to such, the foundation of incredulity, as we have seen is generally ignorance; and it is interesting to trace the principles by which a man of cultivated mind is influenced in receiving upon testimony, statements which are rejected by the vulgar as totally incredible.

1. He is influenced by the recollection that many things at one time appeared to him marvelous, which he now knows to be true. And he thence concludes that there may still be in nature many phenomena and many principles with which he is entirely unacquainted. In other words, he has learned from experience not to make his own knowledge his test of probability.

2. He is greatly influenced by perceiving in the statement some element of probability, or any kind of sequence or relation by which the alleged fact may be connected with principles which are known to him. It is in this manner that the freezing of water, which was rejected by the king of Siam as an incredible falsehood, might have appeared credible to a philosopher who had attended to the properties of heat, because he would have perceived in the statement a chain of relations connecting it with facts which he knew to be true.

3. He is much guided by his power of discriminating the credibility of testimony, or of distinguishing that species, and that amount of it, which he feels to be unworthy of absolute credit, from that on which he relies with as implicit confidence as on the uniformity of the course of nature. The vulgar mind is often unable to make the necessary discrimination in this respect, and therefore apt to fall into one of the extremes of credulity or skepticism. Mr. Hume, indeed, himself admits that there is a certain amount of testimony on which he would receive a statement widely at variance with his own uniform experience, as in the hypothetical case which he proposes,—the account of a total darkness over the whole earth, continuing for eight days, two hundred years ago. The evidence which he requires for it is simply the concurrence of testimonies,—namely, that all authors in all languages describe the event; and that travelers bring accounts from all quarters of traditions of the occurrence being still strong and lively among the people. On such evidence he admits that philosophers ought to receive it as certain.

From the above we give the following digest:—

1. The testimony of Mr. Smith contains all the characteristics of credibility, and perfectly in harmony with God's unchangeable laws.

2. As already stated, Joseph Smith's opportunities for ascertaining the facts were the very best.

3. We have heard many hard things said of him, but have never heard him called a fool; hence, our "confidence in his power of judging of their accuracy."

4. We are certain that he was not "influenced by passion or prejudice" in giving his testimony, because he could have had no personal object in making issue with the unbelieving world, knowing, as he did, it meant universal execration, and a life of sacrifice of all that was most near and dear to him of earth's sweetest communion.

5. Many witnesses have concurred in the same testimony.

6. The cause of rejecting testimony is generally ignorance, as in the case of the king of Siam.

7. If a person has once acknowledged the principle of communication from God to man ever being in operation, however contrary it may be to their schooling, it would be a part of a "cultivated mind" to honestly examine, and, if found in harmony with the principles governing, accept it in the light of "a chain of relations connecting it with facts which he knew to be true."

8. Mr. Hume admits there is certain testimony he would receive; namely, if an event was certified to by "travelers bringing accounts from all quarters of tradition." Mr. Hume certainly then would have to believe the narratives in the Book of Mormon, for every traveler, from whatever part of the globe he came, who has ever examined the ruins of that long-lost people of whom the Book of Mormon accounts, all concur in their testimony, in some degree, at least. The wonderful corroborative evidence, coming in almost daily from witnesses from far and near, is most gratifying to the advocates of this remarkable book.

Something more appears to be necessary for fixing the distinct belief of a miraculous interposition; and this is an impression of a moral probability. This consists of two parts. (1.) A distinct reference of the event to a power which we feel capable of producing it; namely, a direct interposition of the Deity. (2.) The preception of an adequate object, or a conviction of high moral probability that an interposition of Divine power might be exerted in such circumstances, or for the accomplishment of such an object. Such are the miracles of the sacred writings. As events opposed to the common course of nature, they are, by the supposition, physically improbable in the highest degree. Were they not so, were they in the lowest degree probable, according to our conceptions of the course of nature, they could not be miracles, and consequently could not answer the purpose for which they are intended. But, notwithstanding this species of improbability, they carry with them all the elements of absolute credibility; namely, the highest species of testimony, supported by a moral probability which bears directly upon every element of the statement. This may be briefly referred to the three following heads.

1. The human mind had wandered far from truth respecting God; and on the great question of his character and will, a future state, and the mode of acceptance in his sight, the light furnished by reason among the wisest of men was faint and feeble. On points of such importance there was the highest moral probability that the Deity would not leave mankind in this state of darkness, but would communicate to them some distinct knowledge.

2. It is further probable, that if such a communication were made to man, it would be accompanied by prodigies or miraculous events, calculated to show beyond a doubt the immediate agency of God; and thus to establish the divine authority of the record.

3. There is no improbability that the power of the Deity should produce deviations from the usual course of nature capable of answering such a purpose. For what we call the course of nature is nothing more than an order of events which he has established; and there is no improbability that for an adequate end he might produce a deviation from this order.

4. An important branch of the moral probability of the whole statement of the sacred writings arises from the characters of the truth themselves, challenging the assent and approbation of every uncontaminated mind. This part of the subject resolves itself into three parts; namely, the truths relating to the character and perfection of the Deity; the high and refined morality of the gospel; and the adaptation of the whole provisions of Christianity to the actual condition of man as a moral being. The former carry a conviction of their truth to the mind of every candid inquirer; the two latter fix themselves upon the conscience or moral feelings of all classes of men with an impression which is irresistible.

The striking parallel which existed in the condition of the religious world when Joseph Smith made the bold announcement that all the creeds were wrong, and mankind "had wandered far from the truth respecting God," farther than those when John the Baptist was "crying in the wilderness, saying, make straight the paths" will hardly go unnoticed by the most casual. Accordingly, therefore, we claim the mission of Joseph Smith (or some similar character) was as much demanded as that of John the Baptist.

We submit the following from the quotation just made:—

1. As to the capability of the power producing the manifestation which was received by Mr. Smith, no one will question it.

2. The moral probability which existed when he made his wonderful announcement to the world was, in the highest degree, favorable to such "a divine interposition;" because, (a) the human mind "had wandered far from the truth respecting God;" (b) they were worshiping a mythical god, absolutely unable to hear or answer any petition that may be intended for him; because, logically considered, meant nothing, as declared in all the leading creeds and disciplines of the day.

Church of England, article 1:—

There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions."

Methodist idea of God:—

There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts; of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness.

Baptist Church, contributed to the Saints' Herald, by Elder R. C. Evans:—

We believe that there is but one God. . . . We believe that God is revealed to us as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Each with distinct personal attributes, but without division of nature, essence, or being.—Manual of Baptist Church, Port Colborne, Catechism.

The God of the sects is no better than the Hindoo god, which is thus represented:—

Being immaterial, he is above all conception; being invisible, he can have no form, from what we behold in his works we may conclude that he is eternal, omnipotent, knowing all things, and present everywhere. —Contributed to the Saints' Herald by R. M. Elvin.

(c) As to his character and will. Many believed that only a few, by his eternal decree, would be saved; all the remaining teeming millions to be consigned to endless torment in literally burning ovens, and would sing:—

There is a never ending hell,
And never dying pains,
Where infants must with demons dwell,
In darkness, fire, and chains,
Have faith, the same with endless shame,
For all the human race,
For hell is crammed with infants damned,
Without a day of grace.

In regard to our darling babies, Calvin misrepresents God in those horrible and unhuman words:—

Reprobate infants are vipers of vengeance which God holds over the flames of hell, until they turn and spit venom in God's face.—Calvin's Institute, vol. 1.

This was the prevalent idea of God's character when Mr. Smith made his debut to the Christian world. He found them worshiping a vindictive fiend instead of a loving Father, and rescuing Friend. Were the sects of eighteen hundred years ago any farther removed from the "truth respecting God" than the sects of today? Hence, an absolute necessity for a modern prophet, inspired of God, to call the wandering nations back to the true idea of God, and the primitive mode of worship; and, therefore, compatible with a most urgent "moral probability."

3. No reformer this side of Jesus Christ has taught truth more beautifully blending with the truths relating to the character and perfections of the Deity; the "high and refined morality of the gospel;" and the adaptation of the whole provisions of Christianity to the actual conditions of man as a moral being" than those taught by Joseph Smith. The Christian world has been trying for three quarters of a century to find some discrepancy by which they might condemn his work; but, like all genuine metal, the more you rub it the brighter it becomes. Allowing the "high and refined morality" of this latter-day philosophy to speak for the "credibility," or "probability," the thunders of Mount Sinai spake no louder to the Israelites in evidence of Moses' mission than the work of Joseph Smith in evidence of his mission, for every word, line, phrase, and dictum is redolent with moral beauty.

We come now to the strongest spoke in completing the great wheel of evidence. I quote from pages 71 and 72:

Thus, if we find a man who in other respects shows every indication of a sound mind, relating an event which happened under his own inspection, and in such circumstances that he could not possibly be deceived; if his statement be such as contributes in no respect to his credit or advantage; but, on the contrary, exposes him to ridicule, contempt, and persecution; if, notwithstanding, he steadily preseveres in it, under every species of persecution, and even to the suffering of death; to suppose such a testimony intended to deceive, would be to assume a deviation from the established course of human character, as remarkable as any event which it could possibly convey to us.

Again on pages 73 and 74:—

But there is also a principle of uniformity which applies to the whole species; and in which we confide as regulating every man of sound mind. Thus, if the statement of a narrator contain circumstances calculated to promote his own advantage, we calculate on the probability of fabrication, and reject his evidence, except we had previously acquired absolute confidence in his veracity. But, if on the contrary, his statements operate against himself, conveying an imputation against his own character, or exposing him to contempt, ridicule, or personal injury; without any previous knowledge of his veracity, we are satisfied that nothing could make him adhere to such a testimony but an honest conviction of its truth.

The distressing persecution, ridicule, contempt, and vituperation to which Joseph Smith, all through life, was subject by fallen mortals and enraged demons, is too well known to need comment; therefore, we conclude "that nothing could make him adhere to such a testimony but an honest conviction of its truth."

On page 74 is given another infallible proof of the divinity of the gospel of Christ, which can be nicely applied to the restored gospel of the last days:—

Much corroboration of testimony may often be obtained from our knowledge of facts of such a nature as, without directly bearing upon the statements to which the testimony refers, cannot be accounted for on any other supposition than the conviction of these statements being true. This principle applies, in a remarkable manner, to the miraculous histories of the sacred writings. We know, as an historical fact, the rapid manner in which the Christian faith was propagated in the early ages, against the most formidable opposition, and by means of the feeblest human instruments. We are told that this was owing to the conviction produced by miraculous displays of divine power; we feel that the known effects correspond with the alleged cause, and that it cannot be accounted for on any other principle.

In the short period of fourteen years the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints made the phenomenal growth from six obscure members organized in the backwoods of western New York, to 250,000; and that, too, in the midst of the most unrelenting persecution. No fair-minded person can look at these facts and say Joseph Smith was an impostor. If the remarkable growth of the membership of the church was due to divine recognition; then, certainly, Mr. Smith must have been thus favored. And to make the testimony doubly strong; since the "dark and cloudy days," when the church was riven asunder by evil designing men, the body which remained faithful has been steadily gaining in numbers and influence, while the others continue to dwindle. Can all this be done by purely human instrumentality? Nay, verily. There must be something divine behind it from beginning to end.

I believe I have examined and compared about all the points of evidence which this learned gentleman has given in support of the Christian religion against the attacks of the skeptic, and which is just as applicable to the devotees of this latter-day work as those of former days.

The turbulent billows of hatred may foam, the howling winds of persecution may rage, the jealous tongues from the pulpit may speak, the vindictive pens from press may write, but as long as the sun gives light and the moon illumes the earth by night, God reigns in the heavens above and man lives below, the work begun by Joseph Smith will march from victory unto victory, until the glorious consummation, when perfect peace and righteousness shall sit enthroned from eternity to eternity. And to this end shall your humble servant ever pray. F. J. EBELING.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD.

Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.—Rom. 10: 1–3.

From the above we learn that there are two kinds of righteousness: one is of God, the other is of man. And it is possible for man in his ignorance and blind religious zeal to become self-righteous, and still not be in possession of the righteousness of God. But being established in his own righteousness, he may even be found fighting against God and the means he offers for man's salvation.

Consider the case of Enoch. Under the law given to him by our heavenly Father, he and his city became so perfect that holy angels continually visited them, and God walked the streets of that city and conversed with Enoch, as one friend talks with another; and eventually the inhabitants of the city became so good under the teachings of Enoch, that the entire city was taken away from the earth. Those people were in favor with God. They were inspired by his Spirit. What shall we say for the rest of the world at that time? What spirit inspired them? Surely it was the spirit of the adversary! for had they been inspired by the Spirit of God, they would have served him as Enoch and his people did. But the spirit that led them blinded them to the righteousness of God; and in their opposing the people of Enoch, they were fighting against God.

Noah was a preacher of righteousness. He preached to the people one hundred and twenty years, and prophesied of future events. He foretold the flood and the destruction of the wicked. He was commissioned of God to preach the righteousness of God. He was led and directed by continual revelation from him. God was with Noah, aiding and inspiring him. What spirit was it then that inspired the world to persecute him and hinder him in his work? It was the spirit of the evil one. It led them to ridicule Noah, and oppose him in all that he did. It caused them to overlook the righteousness of God; and it made no difference how much of their own righteousness they may have supposed they had, they were fighting against God. The flood came and they perished.

Moses was called of God, instructed of him, and sent to deliver the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. The inspiration of the Almighty was continually with him, but when he went down into Egypt he met an opposing power. What spirit could have inspired that? It tried to frustrate all the plans of Moses, and overthrow his work, and still his work was God's work, and he was doing God's will. The opposition he met was inspired by the enemy of truth. The preaching of Moses did not convert the heathen or idolatrous, but still he was presenting the words of God. This was the religion of God. They had religion of their own; and while endeavoring to establish their own righteousness they overlooked the righteousness of God. And while fighting against the truths taught by Moses, they were fighting against God.

Jesus the Christ was sent of God. He came to do the will of the Father. He lived in continual revelation from heaven; angels continually administered to him, and he had the Holy Spirit given him without measure. He went about doing good, and harmed no man. He was pure and without sin, but still they persecuted him in every way, even putting him to death. He was doing God's work. God inspired all he did. What was it that inspired those who persecuted him? It was surely Satan. Who was it that thus hindered his work? It was the religious people; the scribes, Pharisees, Sadducees — the high priests and elders. Those who were trying to establish their own righteousness and neglecting the righteousness of God. Jesus was teaching the people what they must do to be saved. He was preaching the gospel to them, and these self-righteous people in opposing him and his work were fighting against God.

After Christ's death the disciples preached the gospel all through Judea, and God was with them in their work. The Spirit was with them, working miracles and confirming the word. Angels also visited them, and they had great power given them of God, and he inspired their work. What spirit was it that inspired Paul to persecute and oppose them? Surely it was not the Spirit of God, for he was with that little band of saints, and he would not inspire them to do his work and also inspire Paul to try to overthrow it. Paul was honest in what he did, and he says his "conscience was void of offense toward God and man." But that did not make him right. In all he did in persecuting the saints and opposing their work, he was fighting against God, and his honesty in purpose in thinking he was doing right cuts no figure in the matter. He was trying to establish his own righteousness, and failed to see the righteousness of God. But when Jesus appeared to him, and he was set right in religious affairs, he joined with those saints he had persecuted, and began to preach the gospel he had opposed, and then he realized that in his previous work he had been inspired by Satan, and was not serving God, but was fighting against him.

The church in the first century was organized according to the wish of our heavenly Father. Under his inspiration the officers of the church were "set" in their places by him: apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, deacons, etc. These same officers are mentioned as the "gifts" that Christ gave to the church, before he ascended to his Father. If then they were placed in the church by our Savior, through the command of God, what spirit was it that inspired the removing of them and placing others in their stead? Surely it was the evil spirit, and those influenced by him in thus doing were fighting againt God.

Paul says "the principles of the doctrine of Christ" are faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. If these form Christ's doctrine, and that is God's doctrine, as Christ said it was, what spirit was it that inspired men to cast aside nearly all of these principles and substitute others? and that later gave the world all kinds of doctrine as the doctrine of Christ? Again, it was the opposing spirit. And in making these changes, men were fighting against God. They were attempting to establish their own righteousness, and they failed to see the righteousness of God, which is revealed in the gospel composed of these principles.

Jesus told his disciples that the Jews should be scattered in all the world, and that Jerusalem should be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the fullness of the Gentiles should come in—or the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled—or the end of the Gentile dispensation. That is a set time. In God's providence the time is arranged by him, when the power the Gentiles hold over the Jews is to come to an end, and that end is to come at the time God has set. Jerusalem is to be trodden down by them until that time comes. Jesus also told them that there should not be left one stone of their beautiful temple that should not be thrown down. About forty years after this, Titus and Vespasian, the Roman emperors, laid siege to the city, razed it to the ground, slew over a million Jews, sold thousands of them into slavery, and drove the rest into banishment. The temple was entirely destroyed, even the foundation stones being dug up; the ground whereon they stood being plowed, and grain sowed there. Thus was Christ's prophecy fulfilled to the very letter, showing that God had inspired it.

In the fourth century the emperor Julian permitted the Jews to return to Jerusalem and rebuild the temple. They commenced the work by removing the rubbish, but could proceed no further because of the horrible noises they heard, and great balls of fire issuing out of the ground, accompanied by earthquakes, filled the workmen and spectators with terror. Jesus had said that Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled. That time had not yet come, so the rebuilding could not be accomplished. All these Jews, regardless of their honest intentions, were working against God's wishes in trying to do that work before the time appointed; and in thus unintentionally trying to prove Christ's prophecy false, they were fighting against God.

In the tenth century the crusades, or holy wars, began. They continued two hundred years, costing millions of dollars and the lives of five millions of the most able-bodied men of Europe. The object of these wars was to reclaim Jerusalem and wrest it from the hands of the Mahommedans. Jesus had prophesied that the work should not be accomplished "until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled." All these millions of people—supposed to be Christians, were doing all in their power to prove Christ's words false. They were unintentionally fighting against God. Although the Pope sanctioned the work, and all entered into it with honesty of purpose, it was a miserable failure in every sense of the word, and Jerusalem continued to be trodden down of the Gentiles for hundreds of years after. As God had inspired Christ to utter the prophecy, what spirit was it that inspired all these people in their work against it? Surely it was the spirit of the evil one—notwithstanding their honesty of purpose and good intentions.

In the days of Jesus and the apostles there was only one church acknowledged by our heavenly Father as his. Salvation was to be found in no other. The New Testament plainly teaches that there is only "one Lord and one body," "one faith, one hope, and one baptism," "one fold and one shepherd," and "by one spirit are we all baptized into one body." This claim is the direct teaching of the Holy Ghost, and of Jesus, through the inspiration of God, and they arranged that man could not be "saved" in any other way than through this one church. This then being the direct teaching of the Godhead, what spirit is it that inspires men, in our day, to teach that we can be saved in any church we wish, or in the Salvation Army, which is not a church at all? As God has decreed that we can only be saved in the one church, is not man, today, fighting against God, by teaching that we can be saved in any other church?—or society, which is not a church? And as they do this in sincerity and honesty on their part, "they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge," and they being "ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."

In regard to the mode of entering the church, Christ taught that "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not [and is not baptized] shall be damned;" and that "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." Peter, while inspired by the Holy Ghost, on the day of Pentecost, taught the same doctrine. So did Philip and Paul, and all those early servants of God, and they did it under the inspiration of heaven. If then those were the teachings under that hallowed influence, what spirit is it that inspires men now to teach that baptism is not a saving ordinance, and that it is not necessary to be baptized? It is the spirit of the evil one, leading them to fight against God and his truth.

Jesus taught the people in his day that certain spiritual power should be given to all who embraced the gospel, saying, "These signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Peter said, all who would repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; and Jesus says this Holy Ghost will take of the things of the Father and reveal them unto the believers, and show them things to come. Paul says this same Spirit will give to them wisdom, knowledge, faith, gifts of healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, divers kinds of tongues, and interpretation of tongues. All these were promised by our heavenly Father, that men might know of the doctrine, whether it was of men or of God.

As all this was promised and taught by those holy ones, under God's direction and inspiration, what spirit is it that inspires men now to deny these things, and teach that they are no longer necessary? It is truly the spirit of Satan, the opposer of the truth, and all who so teach, no matter how zealous they may be, are fighting against God.

In Revelation 14th chapter, Isaiah 29, and Ezekiel 37, we are clearly shown that God was to perform a wonderful work, and restore the gospel in the last days.

That work was begun in 1829, as we can abundantly prove. The fertility of Palestine and the gathering of the Jews in evidence, teaches that the fullness of the Gentiles is now about at an end; and the fullness of the gospel now being preached is a proof that the angel has brought the ancient gospel to earth again. As all this was foretold by the prophets under the inspiration of God, and as the same spirit witnesses to the fulfillment of these statements in our day, what spirit is it that inspires men now to oppose the work and do all they can to hinder its progress? Again, it is the spirit of Satan, leading men to fight against God, and to go about trying to establish their own righteousness, but not yield to the righteousness of God.

We learn from the scriptures that our heavenly Father is going to send a prophet—his messenger—to prepare his way, in the last days. That he will be chosen for that work while he is a young man, and that he will be unlearned, as far as this world's wisdom is concerned.

As Joseph Smith filled all these predictions, and as the work he did proves that God was with him, what spirit is it that inspires men to oppose his work, reject him, and teach that there are to be no more prophets and that the world does not need them? Is it not the same spirit that led men to persecute and kill God's holy prophets ever since the world began? and in doing this, are they not fighting against God?

Angels have always been sent to the earth to communicate with men whenever God was about to perform any important work upon the earth. Instances are too numerous to need mentioning. Revelation 14:6 states that one is to be sent in the last days; and Zechariah 2:3, 4 says it will be just before Jerusalem is inhabited. As that angel has already come and restored the gospel, giving men authority to build the church of Jesus Christ, and reëstablish the kingdom of heaven, and all this under the direction of our heavenly Father, what spirit is it that inspires men to teach that angels' visits ceased with the apostles, and that no more are to visit the earth? Is it not the opposing power leading men to fight against God?

What spirit is it that leads men to deny revelation from God—the gifts of the gospel as enjoyed by the ancient saints, and the signs to follow the believers now as they did anciently? the gift of the Holy Ghost to operate now as it did then, and the necessity of authority to act in the name of God? What spirit is it that inspires them to teach that all these things are done away and no longer needed? Is it not the spirit of Satan leading men to fight against God and his work? and are not all church members who are so teaching trying to establish their own righteousness and failing to heed the righteousness of God?

WHAT FAMOUS PEOPLE HAVE SAID ABOUT MOTHERS.

All that I am my mother made me.—John Quincy Adams.

Nature's loving proxy, the watchful mother.—Bulwer.

The mother's heart is the child's schoolroom.—Henry Ward Beecher.

All that I am or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother.—Lincoln.

Let France have good mothers, and she will have good sons.—Napoleon.

Unhappy is the man for whom his own mother has not made all mothers venerable.—Richter.

The future destiny of the child is always the work of the mother.—Napoleon.

I would desire for a friend the son who never resisted the tears of his mother.—Lacretelle.

If you would reform the world from its errors and vices, begin by enlisting the mothers.—C. Simmonds.

If there be aught surpassing human deed, word, or thought, it is a mother's love.—Marchioness de Spodara.

Who can fathom the depth of a mother's love? No friendship so pure, so devoted. The wild storm of adversity, and the bright sunshine of prosperity are all alike to her; however unworthy we may be of that affection, a mother never ceases to love her every child. Often, when alone, as we gaze up to the starry heaven, can we in imagination catch a glimpse of the angels around the great, white throne, and among the brightest and fairest of them all is our sweet mother, ever beckoning us onward and upward to her celestial home.—R. Smith.

"How McGrath Got an Engine" will be the title of Frank H. Spearman's railroad story in the September McCLURE'S. Mr. Spearman has already, in the August issue, written of "Conductor Pat Francis;" later he will tell stories about the switchman, the yardmaster and so on; in the September number he will relate the daring adventure of a young and inexperienced "wiper" in the face of great danger.

OAKNOOK, Manitoba, August 23.

Editors Herald:—At last writing I had just commenced labor in Carberry. Since then I have finished, and came on to this place. Carberry is a hard place to work; the people seem very much interested in farming and appear to have little or no interest in religion. With them it is good enough for the aged and the sick. However, I preached twenty-two sermons in the town. Some were interested but none obeyed. Two gave me their names for baptism, but when the time agreed upon came they for reasons best known to themselves, thought otherwise. Others believe thoroughly but lack the courage to obey. My only regret is that I should spend so much time teaching them the way of the Lord and they after acknowledging it to be the right, refuse acceptance, but such is missionary life.

I wheeled sixteen miles to Arizona and obtained use of schoolhouse for three nights, but had to cancel each service as the nights came. Mostly indifference I think, yet some prejudice exists. My comforts were not many, I assure you, but after my time had been put in I wheeled back to Carberry. Yesterday I came here and am kindly cared for by Bro. and Sr. McCrea, formerly of Monmouth township, Ontario. I was met at Dauphin, the nearest town and railroad station, some twenty miles distant, by Sr. McCrea's son, Bro. Burton.

We left Dauphin Tuesday night after tea, and had just got started nicely when it began to rain, and it did rain, hard and long. When about midway we thought best to turn in and stay over night in some farmhouse, there being an occasional one along the trail. It was so dark that we could not see the horses, trail, or anything else, and having got into a hole, nearly causing an upset, beside being wet, we turned into a farmhouse for shelter. Our host did not care to entertain us over night, but we were just determined enough not to care whether he did or not, so long as he did not put us out by force. Four men constituted the household, but if they ever knew or heard anything of civilization they most certainly had forgotten it. We helped ourselves to chairs and talked together while the others sat reading. Soon all rose at once and went off into one room to bed without a word, but one of the younger men first threw down an old deer skin for us to lay upon, which we did, having for a covering a heap of rags, but which many years ago served as a bed comforter. Our pillow was of like material. We lay with our head almost under an old home-made bookcase, consisting of a number of plain board shelves nicely filled with musty smelling books. In addition I lay with my head next to an old bedstead, under which it was apparently too much trouble to sweep. The smell was quite ancient, but in good harmony with the rest of household effects. I tried to do without breathing, but you know how hard that is. Then I put my hand to one side of my nose to draw air from the east, but

I was doomed to breath that stench, or stay out in the cold rain. Bro. Burton said he slept but I had too much company. Unlike my host, they were giving me a right royal welcome. The elders will know my appreciation of daylight, which seemed a long time in coming.

At 4:45 a. m. the alarm clock sounded, which we took as a quiet hint to arise and vacate the premises. Bro. Burton was out trying in vain to locate some hay or grain, but I took the hint good-naturedly, put on my coat and hat (for I slept in other garments), seized my valise and umbrella, and walked out. The horses during the night got cast and one of them injured her eye and knees seriously. Taking our departure I left the following note where it could be seen: "Mr. McNeil, Dear Sir:—Before leaving we have to thank you for the kind and generous hospitality shown to both man and beast," and to which I signed our names. Finally I got here, six miles from post office, and mail once a week. Glorious! but if one soul in this neighborhood hears and obeys the gospel through my feeble ministration along with the angels', I will try to rejoice and count as naught the sacrifice made. I commence preaching Sunday, the 26th, in schoolhouse. In the struggle,

FREDERICK GREGORY.

SEATTLE, Wash., August 24.

Editors Herald:—I am a subscriber to the Herald and have been watching for a letter or notice of reunion from this district, but so far have been disappointed.

I do not know what I would do for spiritual food if it were not for the very valuable Saints' Herald, away out here in the far west. It has to supply both food and water; in other words, it is the spiritual refreshment, and when one takes up the various subjects discussed, both pro and con, and withdraws or digests, so to speak, the information to be gleaned from the writings, one has the valuable food so necessary to retain the vitality which so soon weakens from the absence of the husbandman, the teacher, or minister of the gospel. I have not had the opportunity to hear the gospel since last May. Here in this city of over fifty thousand people one cannot find the true gospel as Jesus Christ would teach it. I have attended other so-called churches of manmade creeds, but they are only like so much mockery to me that I do not like to attend them, and that is why the Herald is so much food and water to me, and I believe I voice the sentiment of many other scattered Saints.

Seattle could well be called a city of churches, as one can stand in any part of the best parts of the city and look about and count from one to six church buildings within one mile around. Every denomination of any importance is represented here, and still they cry out that this is a wicked city. I have been in smaller ones that were worse. When I came here I looked about for the gospel in its purity. I did not find it. Why not? Can it be that the Latter Day Saints have heard so much of the wickedness here that they believe it beyond salvation? No, no, brethren and sisters, as long as there is life there is hope, and there is life abundant here; but the hopes—where are they? I have met no one here with the pure gospel, and why not? It is true that the harvest is great but reapers few, and the few are conspicuously absent here. This city may be likened to a grand central depot where the traveling public concentrate in countless numbers and take passage for China, the Philippines, Honolulu, all parts of Alaska, and all parts of the Pacific coast south, and most all stop over here for a short time. Furthermore, this is the gathering place for numberless smaller towns on the sound and inland from where people come to pass the Sunday. Seattle has received such prominent advertisement throughout the world that a vast population is settling here and building rapidly, so now is the time to plant the banner of God. Let us be up and sow the seed now that we may be ready when the harvest comes.

The Herald contains many letters from the middle states, but nothing from the borderland. God has not forgotten to bless this country with good crops, but the spiritual blessings, where are they? They are left with his servants to scatter the seed. Let us look to parts where the seed has not as yet been sown, for certainly the people need the gospel here. Shall we have it? The question may be answered. What will be the answer? I do not believe I am the only one here that has received the truth. I will pledge to give five dollars per week to the support of a missionary while here if one is sent, and would like to see one here soon. Shall there be one? My heart fairly aches when I read of the work in other places and nothing being done here, although I am happy to know that the work is prospering elsewhere. I find a great deal of pleasure in reading the letter department, and I hope if this is published that Saints who live here or in near by towns who may read this will be kind enough to write to me, as it is very lonesome here with no one of the same faith to communicate with. It seems that I have been completely forgotten. Even my sisters do not write me any more since I became a Latter Day Saint, so if it was not for the Herald, life would be indeed lonely.

I have just realized what I have missed in the three years I have been a believer in the latter-day work. I was seven years a Campbellite, and first learned the truth in San Jose, California, but am sorry to say that the person who was instrumental in changing me afterwards apostatized to the Salvation Army; but hope she will sometime realize the mistake and return to the fold. I will not be again without the Herald as long as I can get the money to pay for it, as it does me as much good as the old-fashioned Methodist camp meetings would do a backsliding member, when they would jump and shout, "I have got salvation again." It is the match to make the light when the light is on the wane, so just keep the matches moving, Bro. Joseph, and the Saints will keep the light burning, or endeavor to, at least.

I would like to exchange notes with some of the young sisters or brethren of the East if any can spare the time to write, as I have no communication with any Saints here, being a stranger from San Francisco. I intend to locate here permanently, hoping to see the good work started here soon and that I may be a great help to the continuance of the gospel when once started. I shall wait patiently for the coming of the messenger which I believe will come in God's own due time. May that time be soon. I will close by asking the prayers of the Saints in my behalf that I may be steadfast in the faith. My heart is with you all at your reunions, and may you breathe one prayer for me. I am faithfully your brother in bonds of love and light and truth, J. O. GREGORY.

LEHIGH, I. T., August 27.

Editors Herald:—By invitation I came into this part of the field from the Manchester conference and have been laboring among the Saints at Coalgate and at Lehigh, Indian Territory. Most of labor done was to build up and strengthen the Saints, which was needed, and I believe has been appreciated. Was unable to procure a house from any of the different sects for our purpose. Finally we got the use of the opera house three evenings, including a Sunday. Very few came out and no interest of any consequence manifest by outside people, although our meetings were well advertised. Cause, principally, bad conduct of the Saints, which has almost entirely destroyed the work in these parts.

Came to Lehigh and tried for a house here, with about the same results, with the exception of getting the privilege of addressing a congregation of colored people yesterday, the 26th. It may be some of the brethren in the south may want to find fault for so doing. But that makes no difference to me, as I understand the gospel is to all people, no matter what color or race. Text, Acts 17:26: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." After the introduction by the presiding elder and a few preliminary remarks I introduced the text and proceeded with the discourse, presenting the gospel principles, its powers, prerogatives, etc., that they were for all people and time, and as I proceeded, having excellent liberty, you could hear from one part of the house, and then from another, "Dat's natural bo'n gospel." "Dat's so." "Amen." 'Come on." "Dat's so." "Ha, ha; just right." "Give us more," and so on to the end of the discourse for an hour and a half. They had a basket dinner, and so it was that after dinner, about three o'clock, I addressed them, after which I distributed a lot of tracts. These people are very religious, but lacking in knowledge. In their religious services they sing many songs after the manner of those which used to be sung on the plantations in slavery times. What effect the discourse will have, time will tell. Somehow I was not impressed to make any further effort at this time.

Yours for truth,

D. D. BABCOCK.

Editors Herald:—Sunday, August 5, I attended reunion at Porth, of the Eastern and Western districts of Wales, and gave the first address to conference, of fifteen minutes duration, with good effect. After the morning meeting I was introduced to many of the Saints, this being my first conference in the Western district. Missionary A. N. Bishop then proposed that a few elders should preach in the open air, in four different places in Porth. Elder Evan Lewis, Aberaman, said he could not preach in the open air, so I was appointed to take charge of meeting to commence at five p. m. and finish by six p. m., so as to attend inside meeting. We took our stand by a river bridge, and preached the first principles of the gospel, and enjoyed a great degree of the Spirit.

After I had spoken for about thirty minutes, it seemed that all of my brethren were filled with the power of the Holy Ghost. The moment I finished my address the brother who had never spoken in the open air commenced preaching in the Welsh language, and I received the interpretation of it. The power of God rested upon the large assembly of people, who listened to the message of salvation with rapt attention.

Monday morning attended business meeting, at which I was appointed one of the committee of four brethren, two from each district, to more closely unite the districts, that our coming reunion would be of great success to Wales.

Attended Saints' meeting from two to four p. m., at which assisted in administering the sacrament. The sacrament administered the meeting was opened for prayer, praise, and testimony, the Holy Ghost rested upon the whole of the assembly. The Saints spoke in tongues and prophecy. It was the grandest Saints' meeting I ever had the pleasure to attend.

At night Bro. Bishop gave a lecture on "Ancient America," which was very appropriate, very ancient, and yet new to the people of Wales. He brought such proof of the ancient race that the congregation was edified and interested.

Thus ended the most enjoyable reunion ever held in Wales.

Yours for the truth,

ALFRED W. TRENCHARD.

PITTSBURG, Pa., August 20.

Editors Herald:—We want to talk to all former Pittsburgers and others interested that we can reach, in regard to a church building we are making an effort to put up. We find that meeting in a hall, located right in the heart of the business part of the city, situated on the last floor, is becoming more and more of a drawback to the development of the work here. People think we have only located temporarily; but when we tell them we have met here in halls for over a quarter of a century, they think we are a non-progressive people, and likewise our religion must be lifeless. The facts are we have paid out in rent and sent enough money away from this branch in the form of tithing and free will offerings to put up a half-dozen churches, and it does seem unjust that there is no provision made whereby the church can help as faithful a branch as the Pittsburg organization has been. The strength of the church may not be confined exclusively in one particular channel, but the financial and spiritual condition of the branches reflect largely the condition of the whole church, so its fostering care should be over its branches; but while we don't expect the church to help us any, we do hope any individuals who have received any benefit from the Pittsburg branch will avail themselves of this opportunity to reciprocate. We are practically the mother of the branches around us and here is a fine opportunity for them to show some appreciation of that fact.

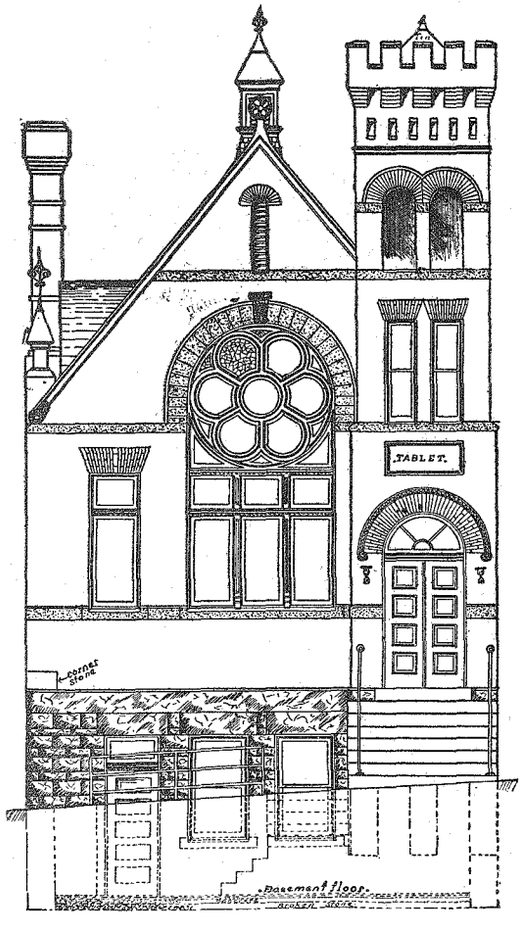
We have sent away thousands of dollars since the branch was organized, are still paying money as regular as we always have in tithing and offerings, and expect to do so right along as the church requires; but it would seem more just if there was some kind of a provision made whereby we could more fully help ourselves. With hall rent, tithing, freewill offerings, and this effort to raise enough money to put up the church building, we are carrying a burdensome load, nearly all of it, out of a membership of about one hundred sixty, resting on thirty persons, all of whom are only working people.

We often wonder if souls are not as precious here as anywhere on earth. If so, why should there not be some provision made whereby we may be supplied with facilities that will be some inducement to people to come and hear. A third floor hall don't give us much prestige with the people. We have to deal with people as they are and not as they ought to be.

We have been asked if it would not be wiser to "help build up Zion" than erect a church in Pittsburg; but what definite knowledge have we when Zion is to be built up? If it depends upon the people reaching a certain condition, the rich and the poor, what prophet will predict when that will be? But in the revelation quoted hereafter, provision is made for building houses of worship and the New Jerusalem at the same time.

We may have different notions just what is meant by section 42:10 of Doctrine and Covenants, which reads: "Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the new Jerusalem." Here it is recognized that it is the duty of the church at some time to build "houses of worship" somewhere, out of the same fund that the poor and needy are supplied with. Whether this is inside of Zion or not it looks more like justice than our present system of a branch putting up a church without any help whatever from the church and then the church owning it after it is built.

It seems that the Lord, in the revelation of 1894, referred to section 42, in the following passage: "Nor was it designed that the high council should dictate in the matter of purchasing lands, building houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people, these last named being within the province of the presidency, the twelve as a quorum, the councils or other officers of the branches or stakes where houses of worship are to be built, the conferences and the general assembly of the church, and the direction of the Lord by revelation." It would seem from this that "branches" had the authority to put up houses of worship if they saw fit and if the revelation is in force today, and it is good sense to put up a church, why should they not do so, and why should not the church help, under circumstances stated above?



The cut above was made from the plans for a brick church that will cost about three thousand dollars, not including the basement, which would be dispensed with. The branch owns a lot, free from all incumbrances, and we want to get a building on it, but we don't want to go over two thousand dollars in debt. The present revenue of the branch is sufficient to pay the interest on two thousand dollars and giving an annual balance of two hundred dollars that could be applied to the principal, but with the church up I believe our revenue would almost double.

We propose to have a rally meeting of the branch, Sunday, September 16, to try and boom the matter, so any former Pittsburgers who can give us the "glad hand"—why, we are waiting for you. Our present effort is to raise a thousand dollars so we can go ahead. Who will help us?

C. EDWARD MILLER,

TEMPLE, Ohio, Aug. 24.

Editors Herald:—Will you allow me a little space as I wish to say, Ho! to the watchmen and fellow laborers along the mission line. All is moving fairly well in southern Indiana. Bro. G. A. Smith and I have had a short visit in that part of the mission, and met with the missionaries and district officers and Saints and friends in conference at Byrneville branch on the 11th and 12th of August. We had a peaceful session, and I trust it may be profitable to all that were present. We met with Brn. Jenkins, Marshall, Kelley, and a host of Scotts, and others (that I cannot name, for my memory will not serve me) of the missionary and local force. All seem quite alive to the work. Some met with us from Louisville, Kentucky, from Bro. T. C. Kelley's mission. The preaching was said to be good, and the singing was good and animating and cheering, and the prayer and testimony meetings were peaceful and spiritual in true worship. We had a council with the officers of the Byrneville branch and the district and some others, to talk over some points of law and its application, and I hope good will result therefrom. I can say I learned some new thoughts from the exchange of ideas. Bro. G. A. Smith acquitted himself as a man of God, worthy to be intrusted with the watchcare of the missionary work and to care for the Saints, by his practical teachings and patience manifest, and his wise counsel given. Hope he may be successful in his labors.

Bro. Smith and I went over to Louisville and had meeting in Bro. Metcalf's house. Quite a few out for the short notice they had. Felt well in telling the old story to those present. Hope Bro. T. C. Kelley will excuse us for crossing the mission lines, for I wanted to see Louisville. We did not call for any old rye or bourbon, but we saw signs that indicated that it was kept there.

From there we went to the branch where Bro. Marshall lives. We had three meetings. Not many out. A camp meeting near there was the excitement, and the weather was, oh, so warm! I have said I could stand more heat than cold, but I felt like saying, Let us get north, and I shall be more inclined to warn the people to keep from the warm place than I have heretofore.

We then started for Clear Lake, Indiana. We hope to return there when the weather is some cooler.

Good reports come to me from the brethren in Michigan of tent work and of some two days' meetings. One watchman says it seems harder to get the people to hear the gospel now than it did twenty years ago; more for pleasure than to hear the glad tidings of a crucified and risen Redeemer. But, brethren, there can be no furloughs granted until his summons home are heard. Therefore let us be firm and diligent and move out into new places much as we can. Care for the districts and branches when it is necessary and the officers think it would be well to have a series of meetings in their branches. Honor and respect all the officers in their several places of duty, as the Lord has counseled his servants to do.

I have felt well in the discharge of duties in mission work. Brethren, I will soon be out with you in the harvest field of the Lord. All feel free to write to me to cheer me on in the great warfare. But make your reports to the one in charge where you labor. Let the watchword be, "Onward and upward."

Yours as ever,

J. H. LAKE.

DENVER, Colorado, August 28.

Editors Herald:—The conference of this district, held at Wray, on the 18th and 19th inst. was a season of peace, pleasure, and profit. The tent was moved from Colorado Springs and raised in the town and the meetings were well attended, the audiences being nearly as large outside as within. The preaching was by Elder E. F. Shupe and the writer. Brn. C. R. Duncan and A. B. Hanson (formerly of Herald Office force) remained to continue tent meetings as long as interest may warrant. Bro. Hanson is making a good impression, and is developing well. His initial labors as a field man are commendable. The absence of Bro. J. B. Roush was cause for regret, but the word received from him was assuring, accompanied, as it was, with a promise to be back within a week, which promise he has made good. Sickness of his father had occasioned his trip to, and delay at, Fulton, Iowa.

The work of the brethren named has been all that could be expected under the circumstances attending in this field. More workers are needed; but as this year is being monopolized by politicians, and people generally are more anxious over campaign issues along that line than over religion, we will wait till next conference before pressing the demand.

Sunday, the 12th inst. was spent by me in preaching to the congregation at Conifer, about forty miles from here, up the mountain course. My home while there was with Bro. and Sr. James Kemp, who, with a few others are struggling to keep the banner flying in that region. The trip was much enjoyed by me, though my physical condition was not all I could have desired. The Master was present with help, however, in the preaching of the word as has been the case here and at the conference.

My home here has been, and is, with Bro. and Sr. Joseph Schmutz, whose hospitality and saintly worth have become proverbial. Bro. Schmutz is at present in the hospital, a sufferer from a chronic and distressing ailment. His recovery is a question of grave doubt with the physicians, but of hope with the Saints. With him it is resignedly left for God to decide, and without any expressions of strong preference.

The climate here, while very helpful to invalids of a certain class, shows but little consideration for the victim of nervous prostration or the nervous dyspeptic. My return to the home region, will, therefore, likely occur in the quite near future, where I hope to carry out a program aiming at physical good to myself and greater good to the cause later on, should my life be spared. Elder J. B. Roush, whose address is Wray, Colorado, will remain in charge of this mission, including Colorado, New Mexico, and eastern Wyoming, and to him all communications regarding active work should be addressed.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., at his request, on account of failing health, has been released from this mission, and will, doubtless, be heard from in Indiana.

With unfaltering trust in the wisdom of the Author of our faith, and with hope of a blessed outcome,

In the service, yours,

JOSEPH LUFF.

MT. PLEASANT, Iowa, August 21

Editors Herald:—The tent arrived here July 23 after the meeting at New London, Bro. Daniel Tripp, of Montrose, and myself holding the fort for the first week. The Lord did not forget Bro. Tripp, for he was wonderfully blessed, and preached some grand sermons, and the people were well pleased with them. But it was necessary for him to go home, as his little girl, Susie, fell and broke her arm. Bro. J. R. Evans, our old stand-by, came to our rescue on Sunday night, the 29th, and preached some fine sermons. Tuesday, the 31st, Bro. Tripp baptized his convert and then went home. The next day Bro. J. S. Roth arrived, and then the fun began, as there were a number of Adventists in the congregation. The second night Bro. Roth preached, one of the Adventist brothers handed me an envelope with four sheets of paper full of questions for Bro. Roth to answer, which he did. The next night the Adventist came back with five sheets of foolscap paper full of questions, so Bro. Roth took the next night to reply to them, and I never saw anybody get such a whipping as those poor people got. The congregation (except the Adventist part) was well pleased with the reply. One man who favored the Adventists (in fact, his wife is a member) told me that was the best thing he ever heard. He said, "That old evangelist is a giant."

Well, the people were well pleased with our ministry. They said they were the best and smartest preachers that ever came to the town. You see it is all man here; they don't give God any credit. I don't blame them, for a God without body, parts, or passions needs no credit.

We had a fine hearing here. When Bro. Evans came to look up a location we went all over town and were refused every place that would do. It looked very much like Satan was going to beat us out. So we went home, and Bro. Evans sized up my lawn, and said: "There is room for the tent." So we put it in my yard, right up against the house on the north, and it was a fine place, too. It beats going eleven miles to meeting, as I have to do.

The tent is standing it well. They moved from here and went about three miles south of New London. It was to go to Lowell, Iowa, but they could not get a location; but since it has been put up where it now is, Bro. McComas reports a location at Lowell. Bro.

Snively is with the tent. Some of the people told me Sunday night that that shotgun preacher shot the hardest and best of anyone they ever heard. Well, the tent has done a grand work here which we could not have done without it. Then why argue some that tents do no good? As ever, your brother in the one faith, F. M. McDONALD.

THE LAMB OF CALVARY.

My Savior, 'tis of thee,
Dear Lamb of Calvary,
Of thee we sing.
Thou who for sinners died,
Who conquered death and pride;
We in thy word abide,
Dear Lamb of God.

My Savior, 'tis of thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary,
Of thee we sing.
We love thy doctrine, Lord,
Thy truth, thy precious word;
O save us now, dear Lord,
Thou Lamb of God.

My Savior, 'tis of thee,
Who died on Calvary,
Of thee we sing.
Let all the world awake,
The hills and valleys quake,
And praise thy holy name,
Dear Lamb of God.

My Savior, 'tis of thee,
Source of salvation free,
Of thee we sing.
O, may this world shine bright
With gospel, holy light!
O, save us by thy might!
O, God our King!

STRAY SUNBEAMS.

While riding along through a beautiful country I was not noticing the beauties on every hand, but was looking at the ground, which was nothing but dust. It was a lovely day in August, very warm, and everything sadly in need of rain. I had always been able to gain help and comfort by noticing the beauties of Nature; but at this time, while not having my eyes closed, still they did not see. I was feeling sad, and was busy thinking. I was aroused from my reverie by hearing these words, "As we are riding along, I want you to lift your eyes now and then, and look around at the beautiful country." The words startled me, as I was not thinking of looking for beautiful scenery. My friend said she saw I was missing so many beautiful things, and she wanted me to see all I could of their beautiful country. She called my attention to certain things she thought worthy of notice.

I now looked and realized what I had been missing before. It was a beautiful day, though very warm. There was not a cloud to be seen; the sky was one vast expanse of blue, and all seemed calm and quiet. I looked first in one direction, and then another, and thought she did not need to call my attention to any special things, as all were beautiful. I had been passing along, not noticing the woods, the rolling land here and there, and all covered with grain. It was a new road and all strange to me. I thought how often it is thus in life. We pass along with our eyes open, but not seeing the many wonderful things around us; things beautiful, too, and intended by our Maker to make us happy. There are so many lessons we might learn by having our eyes open, and our minds ready to appreciate the good and beautiful.

It was too late now to see what we passed; but after this I was quite observant, and thought how unwise we are. We become so absorbed in thinking of the unhappy, that we do not notice the blessings, the gifts that surround us. Our eyes, our minds, our hearts do not appreciate the great love and care God has for us, and recognize the worth of what we have.

There are so many beautiful and good things, that as I heard one say lately, "we ought not to look at the bad, or that which is not beautiful, nor think about the sad and unhappy things." How often though we look for a thorn every time we find a rose. Better 'twould be to look for a rose every time we find a thorn. Since that day have I often thought of these words, "Lift up your eyes;" and when feeling sad and discouraged these words have helped me.

It was a bright, sunshiny morning, just the kind of a day that makes one feel happy, and makes people rejoice and praise the Giver of all good gifts. I had just finished sweeping a room, and the sun was shining in through the windows of another room into the one where I had been sweeping. We were busy doing the housework, as we were to have preaching service that morning, and wanted the work done early. Just as I had finished sweeping, Elder —— stepped into the room and spoke about it being such a pleasant morning; but said he,

"Why do you let the sunshine come into the room in this way."

At first I was a little surprised; but soon thought his object was to gain some lesson from this, so I replied, "That is just what I want. I like to have the sunshine come streaming into the room."

"Yes," was the reply, "but see how it shows the dust. Where the sun does not shine, the dust cannot be seen so plainly. See how plain it shows where the sun shines; and in other places you don't notice it."

"Yes," said I, "but it is there just the same, even if it does not show so plain."

Then came the lesson to be learned.

He said, "This sunshine reminds me of the Spirit of God. When the light of the Spirit is thrown upon the life, upon our actions, we can see our faults and our sins, and they show very plainly. Without the Spirit they are not noticed, but they are there, the same as the dust was in the room, but not noticed."

Dear readers, shall we not let the blessed light of the Spirit shine in upon our hearts and minds, showing us the defects of our nature, and thus help us to conquer the evil. The Spirit will purify our lives, even as the sunshine purifies the room.

"The same hand governs in April that governed in January." Only a sentence in a grammar lesson for parsing and analyzing. To me it was more, it was a sentence full of beautiful thought. The cold, stormy winds of January, how different from the warm breezes of April, which call the flowers out from their hiding places. The stormy, blustering days of January, when the whole earth is mantled in white, how different from the balmy days of April, when the earth is being carpeted with green, and the flowers are peeping from their hiding places; everything seeming calm and quiet, except now and then a shower which only aids the earth to don her beautiful robes of summer. Still it is the same hand governing all the time, and giving to the earth what is needed.

The sentence made me think of a day a few years ago. It was one day in May. Everything was suffering for the want of rain. Farmers said if rain did not soon come, the oats would amount to nothing. The corn was up, and much of it would not grow if we did not have rain before long. One day the hearts of all were made glad by the long wished for rain being sent. By the way the rain poured down it would seem that the clouds had been gathering and storing up rain for some time, and were now giving the thirsty earth an oversupply of drink. Nor will I soon forget the day. I was in the schoolroom, and it seems as if one gets the full benefit of a storm there. The children seemed frightened as the rain did not come quietly; but the wind fairly shook the building, and the roar of the thunder, and the flash of the lightning, was terrible. For their sake I endeavored to be calm, and we all tried to keep at work, as work is a remedy for a great many troubles. At last, however, I had to dismiss all thoughts of hearing classes, as with the raging of the elements out of doors nothing else could be heard.

The storm lasted not only that day, but two more; though its fury was decreased. The last two days it was only a quiet rain; and at last the sun shone bright again, and we were all happy. Often during that term of school did we stand at the door and notice the field across the road. Before the storm it was thought that there would be no corn to amount to anything in that field. After this, how it did grow; and as the children used to say, "We can almost see it growing." The rain had done its work, not only with that field, but with others as well. Yet what a storm it had been to accomplish the work; and all the time God was ruling.

Thus, I think, it is in our lives. He rules

during the sorrows as well as the joys of life; and when the storm seems hardest, and everything seems at war with each other, then it is still a loving Father's hand directing. The result may be, if we but patiently submit and bear the storm, a life better prepared to do good, and better prepared to gladden the hearts of those around, by possessing a patience born of suffering, and a purity of heart and nobleness of character that is the result of storm and not of sunshine. ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

WHILE the general superintendent was operating with the Sunday school workers at Oklahoma reunion, and the first assistant superintendent, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, was at Clinton, Missouri, district reunion at Nine Wonders park, pushing the interests of the Sunday school and Religio work, our ever live and energetic general secretary, Bro. W. N. Robinson, was at the St. Louis, Missouri, reunion, to make stronger the strong, to encourage the weak, and to inspire the indifferent with a new zeal for work in the Sabbath school cause. We asked him for a "few items," that we might the better understand what was done at the reunion last referred to. We take the following from a letter of August 22, which we think will be read with interest by all:—

"I have your request to send a few items for information regarding the St. Louis reunion. Without going too much into detail, the following is about what we found. The St. Louis district reunion was held in a grove about two miles from the limits, in the northwestern part of the city, called Normandie grove, the camp being situated upon high and dry ground, with sufficient shade to make the surroundings very pleasant. On account of the number of young people engaged in mercantile puruits in the city, it was thought best to have no afternoon meetings whatever. But on Friday, Bro. W. N. Robinson, general secretary, arrived, and at the morning service a meeting was called for all who could attend that afternoon to discuss the Sunday school work. A fair-sized audience was present to discuss the needs of the Sunday school workers after the institute plan of discussion, and a goodly interest was aroused. Especial attention was devoted to the duties of the Sunday school officers and the need for coöperation of teachers, it being decided that without cowork in all departments, a school would not be a complete success.

"The subject of the teachers' meetings was discussed, and it was decided that teachers' meetings, of a necessity, should be held in the Sunday school: First, for the better acquaintance of the lesson; Second, for the interchange of thought regarding disputed points of a lesson; Third, to enable pupils throughout the school to be taught uniformly; Fourth, to enable the superintendent to review the school intelligently; Fifth, to better fit the teachers with methods to handle different cases arising while the teacher is in charge of class; Sixth, to enable the officers, who should be present to share the responsibility with the teachers in conducting classes.

"Although the time allotted for the meeting had been reached, it was unanimously decided to continue the discussion of these important subjects for thirty minutes over time.

"Saturday was the day set apart for joint meetings of the Religio and Sunday school. At nine o'clock a joint prayer service was had, in charge of Brn. J. C. Hitchcock of Religio and W. N. Robinson of the Sunday school. A goodly portion of God's Holy Spirit was manifest. After this service the balance of the morning session was devoted to Sunday school work, one of the features being a very interesting paper by Sr. Burgess on the relationship of the home to the Sunday school, the especial plea being made that more visiting be done among the homes by teachers and officers, that a more thorough acquaintance with the conditions of the pupils and their environments be had. 'The aim of the institute' was a topic for discussion, in charge of W. N. Robinson. This was shown by a practical illustration of institute work, the duties of the district officers, and especially that of the district librarian in conjunction with the local school librarian as outlined in the constitution, being dwelt upon. In the discussion it was strongly urged that the local librarians take more advanced interest in their work along the line of, First, know what books are in the library. Second, suggesting to pupils what books to read. Third, securing the interest of those who are not readers in reading some of the useful books of the library.

"The afternoon session was devoted to Religio work, which no doubt will be reported.

"In the evening of the 'special day' a very interesting program was rendered, and that part especially relating to Sunday school work being an intellectual treat in the way of a paper by Bro. Samuel Burgess on 'library work,' and an excellent paper on 'district work' by Bro. J. J. Billinsky, district superintendent.

"Sunday morning at eight o'clock an interesting session of the Sunday school was held, being superintended by Bro. J. J. Billinsky, all the little ones and teachers who were at the camp being in attendance.

"Good work is being done by Sr. Hitchcock, Brn. Randall, Dawson, and a number of others of the faithful ones, besides those mentioned above and the desire of the different schools in the district seems to be to 'Come up higher.'"

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Massachusetts District:—At your late district conference the appointment of a president for the district was referred to the missionary in charge, for the reason that the conference was not in possession of a sufficient knowledge as to who was available for the position, and relieved from secular duties so as to serve. After making due inquiry, Bro. F. O. Coombs was chosen, and received the appointment to act for the remainder of the present term. All who may wish to consult him may do so by addressing him at his home office, Plainville, Massachusetts. Bro. Coombs can give his time to the work on Saturday afternoons and Sundays until holidays, when he expects to be more at liberty. I hope this appointment will be agreeable to all interested, and he prove to be a profitable and acceptable servant.

WM. H. KELLEY,
Missionary in Charge.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Annual conference of Ohio district will be held at Vales Mills, beginning Saturday, October 6, at ten a. m. All branch officers are requested to have full reports made out on proper blanks and bring or send them to the undersigned at Vales Mills not later than October 5. We desire to see the district well represented, as there will be some important business considered. W. H. Kelley and a number of the ministry will be present. All come on the 5th. Those wishing to be assisted from the railroad stations please address S. J. Jeffers, Radcliff, Ohio, or Jasper Bowen, Vales Mills, Ohio.

JAMES MOLER, Pres.

CHANGE OF TIME.

Having received a favorable reply from most of the branches as to their willingness to have the date of the Northern Michigan district conference changed, we therefore announce that it will be on the 13th and 14th of October, instead of the 6th and 7th as per conference resolution.

J. A. GRANT, Pres.

Kirtland district conference will convene with the south New Philadelphia, Ohio, branch, October 6 and 7, 1900. District Sunday school convention will convene on Friday, October 5. W. H. Kelley and one of the Bishopric are expected to this conference, and we trust that ministry of Kirtland and Pittsburg districts will be present. In connection with conference there will be a church dedication. Let the Saints and friends turn out and make this conference a success, and that we may enjoy a spiritual feast. A cordial invitation is extended to the Saints and friends of the Pittsburg and Wheeling districts to be present. Business will be transacted at two p. m., Saturday, October 6. Branch secretaries, get out your branch reports in good time and have them correct. All branches that failed to report to district conference at Sharon, March 5, 1900, please make out your reports for one year, and address them to W. J. Baldwin, 95 Elm street, Sharon, Pennsylvania, so we can correct all errors, if there be any.

J. W. BALDWIN, Sec.

Conference of Nauvoo district will meet with the New London branch, October 6 and 7, about two miles southwest of New London. A committee wearing white badges will meet trains both east and west. Those coming by team inquire for Loren Willey; almost anyone within several miles around can tell or direct one to his place. Branch presidents and clerks are notified and asked to send their reports to the secretary in time so he can look them over, and if any mistakes, send them back for correction. Send all reports to 3025 Shawnee street, Fort Madison, Iowa.

J. R. EVANS, Pres.
J. W. STOBAUGH, Sec.

Conference of Northern Nebraska district will meet with the Saints at Blair, September 28, at 7:30. We desire to have a good attendance, as business of importance is to come before conference, and especially do we want reports from all members of the priesthood in the district.

F. A. SMITH. Pres.
JAMES HUFF, Sec.

REDUCED RATES TO REUNION.

By the assistance of Bro. George N. Derry, Woodbine, Iowa, we have been enabled to secure reduced rates of one and one third fares, on the certificate plan, over the lines of the Western Passenger Association, to those attending the annual reunion at Dow City, Iowa, from September 28 to October 7.

Those attending the reunion should come early, as we must have at least one hundred certificates by the third day of the session, Sunday not included, before the certificates will be available for reduced fare on the return trip.

Procure certificates from the local agents of each line over which you pass, in coming to the reunion. It will be necessary for you to pay full fare in coming to the reunion, but if you are careful to procure certificates, as directed above, and see that at least one hundred are in the hands of our secretary, Bro. A. H. Rudd, by Monday, October 1, you will be able to purchase your return tickets for one third fare. There will be no reduction for tickets of fifty cents or less.

In behalf of committee,

JAMES M. BAKER,
C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

TWO DAYS' MEETINGS.

Two days' meetings will be held at the following places: Joyfield, Benzie county, Michigan, September 22 and 23, and Freesoil, Mason county, Michigan, September 29 and 30. Those coming to Joyfield, by train, take Toledo and Ann Arbor railroad to Beulah, where train will be met Friday evening and Saturday morning. Take P. and M. railroad to Freesoil. We hope Brn. Cornish, Berve, and all others of the ministry who conveniently can will attend.

J. A. GRANT, Pres.

A two days' meeting will be held at Millersburg, Illinois, September 15 and 16. Come all who can and have a good time, and hear the gospel. Hope to see the Saints in the district turn out well.

J. W. ADAMS, Pres.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In ordering supplies for schools much inconvenience and positive annoyance to the office results from carelessness, which may be avoided by following these suggestions: (1) If there is a branch agent for the Herald Publishing House in your branch, let all supplies be ordered through this agent. (2) When ordering for the Sunday school, whenever a new person orders, be sure to give the name of the person to whom the supplies have been previously sent. This will prevent the frequent annoyance to both the office and schools of sending duplicate orders. (3) Be sure to sign your name to every order. If the order is not signed it will not be filled. (4) Send cash with order when at all practicable and save book accounts. (5) Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa,

NOTICES.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The new catalogue will be ready for delivery by September 1, and all persons doing business with the Publishing House are requested to note carefully the changes in prices and otherwise, all books will be sold by number, and persons sending orders will find what the title of the book is, but order from the office by number only. This done to lessen mistakes if possible, and to make it easier for those who do business with the office.

The Herald Publishing Department will be represented at the Stewartsville, Mo., and Dow City, Iowa, reunions by an authorized agent, who will have books for sale, and will give his personal attention to the business of this department.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

A CENTURY'S PROGRESS IN CHURCH METHODS.

Aside from changes in our conception of religion itself, including a vast shifting of the attitude of the human mind toward dogma and eschatology, the past century has been marked by multitudinous and almost revolutionary changes in the external details of church administration and worship. Some of these are recalled to our attention by Rev. Dr. J. H. Ecob, in Harper's Magazine (August). He writes:—

"Consider the single item of church music. Wellnigh the distance of a diameter lies between the church music of the beginning and the end of the century. Recall the dismal hymns, lined out to more dismal tunes, and the dreary fugues, as dull and involved as an Indian medicine-dance. Our fathers did not rise up on a certain day and say, 'Henceforth we are done with them!' But as the musical cultivation of the people advanced, church music perforce shared in the general movement. It is sadly true that bigotry has succeeded in holding the church pretty steadily to the rear of the advancing column, but no institution can live wholly outside its own generation. The bigotry which has piously shut the best music out of the church is a survival of that asceticism which nipped, like a killing frost, everything vernal in the religious life. But as the rigors of bigotry have softened in the growing warmth of general enlightenment, and the love and culture of music have steadily advanced, the church has quietly dropped its old methods and has unconsciously taken on the new, until today it may be truthfully said that the best music of the world is laid under tribute for church services. Even the wicked music of the heels is sometimes so judiciously 'slowed up,' and subdued in color, and punctuated with solemn pauses, that staid deacons decorously, innocently pace to their pews to strains from an opera. . . .

"Whatever esthetic feeling might have existed found expression as difficult as early flowers in the rigors of a New England spring. The church simply shared the fate of the common life, except that it may have been somewhat belated by the prevailing asceticism in religious thought. As wealth increased, the ideas of the people blossomed into richer and more varied forms. Leisure, travel, culture, the multiplication of beautiful objects, came like verdure after rain. We have reached a warmer climate, and the ideas of church architecture and adornment partake in the general enrichment of life.

"Perhaps in no one particular has there been such marked advance as in the social life of the church. One can easily believe that a century lies between the bare uncompromising individualism of 1800 and the commanding social ideal of 1900, with its attendant warmth of atmosphere and variety of method. The church parlor and clubroom and kitchen are not the exponents of a passing fad, but the legitimate fruitage of a great movement in religious thought. The church has advanced from the governmental idea of God to the paternal. From King to Father is a distance in thought quite astronomical, and the present generation has yet to measure it. The divine Fatherhood is brooding, like the Creative Spirit, upon the chaos of human society. Under its mighty influence a new world is gathering its forces and shaping its forms. Not only do men now see that the church is a true home, but that the world itself is simply a household of the children of God. Everything human must be vitalized by the Spirit and cast in the mold of the common family life."

The Sunday school, the numerous young people's associations, and the settlements are a further extension of the idea of the divine Fatherhood and his nearness to the human family, says the writer. They can no longer be called "outside agencies," and soon it will be clear that "nothing pertaining to the family on earth can be called 'outside.'"

The Christian missionary movement, Dr. Ecob believes, is responding more slowly to the logic of history. The didactic, doctrinal idea is still dominant: "Our missionaries still go forth not as heralds of the cross, but as heralds of a particular kind of cross. Perhaps a few more rebukes like that from Japan will weed us of our folly: 'We want no more doctrines. We want Christ.'"

The most characteristic and important movement of our own day, says the writer, is federation. Denominational intolerance, with our fathers, was not "a sin to be repented, but a virtue to be cultivated." But now men's minds are turned toward the advantages of a common social and religious ideal—that of brotherhood—and we see that we are "all of one blood," and "one family in heaven and on earth." The compelling power of that ideal "holds and carries like gravitation."—The Literary Digest.

FINDS MISSING LINK.

Charles City, Aug. 29.—Professor Clement L. Webster, an archæologist for a long time in the employ of the government in New Mexico, and a thoroughly reliable gentleman, has found in Iowa what he considers is the missing link. Professor Clement's startling discoveries have been made in ten mound builder mounds near Old Chickasaw, Chickasaw county, Iowa, from which he has exhumed no less than fourteen well-preserved skeletons of a race whose skulls were almost flat on the crown and whose forearms compare very favorably in length with the legs. The mounds are located on the west side of the Little Cedar River, about one mile and a half below the town, at the border of a terrace twenty to forty feet above the flood plain at its base. The important discovery was made by Webster himself. About 360 yards to the southeast of the mounds is a spring. The mounds are from two to five feet apart, they are circular, round-topped and measure from twenty-two to fifty-one feet in diameter and from one and three-fourths to five feet in height.

The first mound opened measured twenty-two feet in diameter and about one foot in height. A few inches above the original surface was a thick bed of charcoal and a large thoroughly burned oaken log eight feet long and twelve inches thick. There were no skeletons in the first mound, but the second yielded a find which excited even the staid scientist, who has been inured to strange and valuable finds all his life. The mound had been graded almost level years ago by the husbandman, the site of the mounds being on the farm of R. H. Gordon. These mounds and the scientific find made by Professor Webster are sure to attract archæologists from all over the country. Professor Webster is devoting his life to scientific research and has headquarters in this city.—Iowa State Capital.

BURIALS ALIVE AND HOW TO PREVENT THEM.

BY ROBERT H. BABCOCK, M. D.

The daily press occasionally prints grewsome accounts of persons having been buried alive. Such reports are generally based on the discovery when the coffin is opened of the body having turned over and of signs of the hair having been torn out and the clothing rent, supposedly in the agony of the person having awakened to consciousness and found himself pent up in his narrow quarters. Such accounts lead naturally to the query whether or not it is possible and of frequent occurrence for people to be interred during a trance.

That such things are possible no one will deny; that they take place frequently can be safely denied. As recently as 1883, and it may be even now, travelers in Bavaria, notably in Munich, used to be shown in the cemeteries certain buildings in which the dead were exposed to public view for several days before burial. Each body lay on a table and had connected with one of its fingers a wire which led to an adjoining room and there was fastened to a bell in such a manner that if the dead person proved to be in a trance and not really lifeless, he would on awakening move his hand and ring the bell. This would be heard by the janitor, who would at once hasten to the assistance of the reviving individual. The custom of so exposing the dead was said to have been instituted some centuries ago in consequence of the discovery of some one having been actually buried while alive when supposedly dead. Nevertheless, although such extraordinary precautions were observed, no instance of the revival of a supposed corpse had been recorded in Bavaria since the previous century. This illustrates how infinitely rare must be instances of interment before death. Again, it has been argued by non-believers in the possibility of such occurrences that the evidences of a struggle in the coffin are in a reality only indications of the body having been moved by the action of gases of decomposition formed after the coffin has been laid in the ground. Granting, however, the possibility of burials during a trance and not actual death, the probability of its happening is so slight that one need not be disturbed by the fear of its occurring to himself or one of his friends.

It may be prevented by having the fact of death verified by some of the reliable signs of death. These are for the most part based on the fact of the cessation of both circulation and respiration when life leaves the body, whereas in trance or fainting they are feeble but not wholly abolished. If the heart continues to beat at all, even though it does not send a pulse-wave along the arteries, auscultation of the heart will detect its feeble pulsations by faint rhythmic sounds familiar to every physician. If a string be tied rather tightly around the finger of a corpse the end of the finger will not change in color, while in the case of simulated death the extremity beyond the ligature will grow either of a reddish or bluish hue.

A far more certain sign is obtained upon an ophthalmoscopic examination of the eye. So soon as death causes the cessation of the blood-flow to the eye the retina becomes pale and its central artery disappears; in simulated death, on the contrary, the retina is seen to retain its rosy hue and the blood vessels are still visible. To detect signs of respiration it is customary to hold a feather in front of the nostrils or a mirror before the mouth. If the person breathes, however lightly, the feather will be gently waved or the surface of the mirror will become slightly moist.—Tribune.

CIVILIZING INFLUENCE OF RAILROADS.

BY GEORGE R. PECK.

It cannot be doubted that railroads are the most important, or at least one of the most important civilizing influences in modern life. This is true in the United States perhaps more than in any other part of the world, although everywhere the railway is a potent force in the advancement of intelligence and civilization. Our great transcontinental roads have opened vast areas of country to settlement, and regions which forty years ago were inhabited only by the Indian and the buffalo are now the homes of industrious, prosperous, and educated people. Towns in the interior of the continent are placed in easy communication with both oceans. The wants and necessities of the people are supplied, newspapers, magazines, and books are brought daily to their doors, and, in short, all the appliances of civilization are placed within the reach of every family in the land.

Much has been said recently, and particularly within the last two years, of the reconciliation and good understanding between people North and South.

Every Northern man who travels in the South and every Southern man who travels in the North can bear witness to the benign influence of railways in bringing the two sections into closer relations. All history has shown that civilization follows lines of communication. The magnificent Roman roads, penetrating all parts of the empire, were the great civilizing influences of antiquity. I beg to quote —for the language is far better than any I can use—from an opinion delivered by Justice Byron Paine of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in 1870 on the subject of railroads. He said:—

"They are the most marvelous invention of modern times. They have done more to develop the wealth and resources, to stimulate the industry, reward the labor, and promote the general comfort and prosperity of the country than any other, perhaps than all other mere physical causes combined. There is probably not a man, woman, nor child whose interest or comfort has not been in some degree subserved by them. They bring to our doors the productions of the earth. They enable us to anticipate and protract the seasons. They enable the inhabitants of each clime to enjoy the pleasures and luxuries of all. They scatter the productions of the press and of literature broadcast through the country with amazing rapidity. There is scarcely a want, wish, or aspiration of the human heart which they do not in some measure help to gratify. They promote the pleasures of social life and of friendship; they bring the skilled physician swiftly from a distance to attend the sick and the wounded, and enable the absent friend to be present at the bedside of the dying. They have more than realized the fabulous conception of the Eastern imagination, which pictured the genii as transporting inhabited palaces through the air. They take a train of inhabited palaces from the Atlantic coast and with marvelous swiftness deposit it on the shores that are washed by the Pacific sea. In war they transport the armies and supplies of the government with the greatest celerity, and carry forward, as it were, on the wings of the wind, relief and comfort to those who are stretched bleeding and wounded on the field of battle."

This language is perfectly true, and it can be said without exaggeration that it sums up the whole question of the civilizing influence of railroads. —Chicago Tribune.

The Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR
FRED'K MADISON SMITH ASSISTANT EDITOR.
JOSEPH LUFF, D. W. WIGHT } CORRESPONDING EDITORS.

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPT. 12, 1900.

THE ASSISTANT EDITOR AND WIFE IN DES MOINES.

Week before last the assistant editor and wife had the pleasure of spending a few days in Des Moines. We were domiciled while there at the pleasant home of Sr. Polly Allen, whither we were piloted by Bro. G. W. Johnson. Thanks to Sr. Allen and Bro. Johnson, we were well cared for.

Two places we visited will, we believe, be of sufficient interest to the Saints to justify space in the HERALD. One is the Historical department, the the other the State library.

The Historical department we visited first. The building stands north and west from the capitol, and has been finished lately. Entering, we made our way directly to the office of the curator and secretary, Mr. C. S. Aldrich. We had often read of him, and had corresponded some with him, but never had met him, so we were somewhat curious to know if the real Mr. Aldrich would correspond to the ideal we had formed of him from his writings, etc. As to his physical appearance our ideal was wrong; in the intellectual or mental line it approximated the real. We found him a pleasant, elderly gentleman, a good conversationalist, possessing a pleasing liberality of thought. He seemed pleased to meet us, and under his guidance we went through the building. His concise descriptions of the things seen added greatly to the pleasure of viewing the many things of interest stored in the building. We were compelled to hurry through, for time with us was scarce.

The part of the building which seemed to please the curator most to show, and which to us was the most interesting at the time (because hurrying, no doubt), was the art gallery, or portrait gallery. Here was collected oil paintings of the governors of Iowa, from the first down to recent date. Other characters prominent in the history of Iowa were also represented in oil colors. The curator's pleasant face looked out from a gilt frame high on the wall, and we could not but look from portrait to original as he stood near us and note that future generations would see him as we do. The artist will have permitted them to know his face, while his ready pen has left on record many things by which the student and reader may know his mind, his intellect. The closeness of the representation by the artist of the man before us caused us to look with added interest at the other faces we had not seen in life. Iowa's greatness was reflected from the portraits of the men who in their times had been leading and representative men. And we were not surprised, for Iowa's history and achievements have been such as to make us feel proud to be citizens of such a commonwealth.

As we looked upon the excellent group of oil portraits of notable men that Curator Aldrich's zeal had collected and displayed, it was with peculiar feelings of pleasure that we saw among them one that has been familiar to us from early childhood. It was a good copy of an oil painting which hung in the sitting room at home, looking silently upon all our family circle gatherings. It saw us at times a happy, peaceful gathering. Then again the quiet face seemed to smile upon the pranks of boisterous, fun-loving boys and girls as they romped noisly in and out the family room, or had their childish fun while the patient mother assiduously toiled at never-ending work. It has looked upon scenes when its silent soul was moved by melancholy grief. It has seen some of those romping boys and girls laid, cold and white, in the chill coffin. It has seen the grief stricken family weeping round the bier of that patient mother—a mother whose unselfish zeal for her family and others brought pain and suffering to her kind soul. Death to her was rest, sweet rest, and merely took her from part of her family to another—nearly as many were on the other side as remained. It was with pleasure, we say, that we saw among the pictures of other notable men the portrait of our grandfather, Joseph Smith the Martyr. It was placed at the disposal of the Historical department by our present president, by invitation from Mr. Aldrich. It is the work of Bro. V. Cress, of Independence, copied from one which has been in Pres. Smith's family for many years.

Mr. Aldrich has been very liberal in his treatment of us as a people. As editor of The Annals of Iowa, he has opened his columns to us for fair representation, and has proven himself to be a man who is willing to let everyone represent his own side. He was most considerate in his conduct towards us in our visit to his department, and we shall remember him kindly.

Leaving the Historical building and its courteous curator, we wended our way towards that magnificent structure, the Iowa State building, in which is housed the State library.

We introduced ourselves to the librarian, Mr. Johnson Brigham, and again we met with kind and courteous treatment at the hands or one who impressed us with his generous and liberal thought. We conversed pleasantly with him as he showed us through the book rooms of the magnificent library, about books of the day and of past times. We found him to be a connoisseur of books, and as we have a great love for books, we listened to him with satisfaction as he told us of those on the shelves. It was a pleasant hour that we spent with him, and were sorry that time would not permit us to linger longer among the "lights of other days."

Mr. Brigham is probably known to many of the readers of the HERALD as the founder of the Midland Monthly, a magazine which was published in Des Moines for a few years. While he was its editor and proprietor there appeared in it a fairly accurate article descriptive of Lamoni and the Latter Day Saints. Afterwards he extended to President Smith the privilege of correcting some errors that occurred in the article, a privilege which was accepted.

After leaving the library we left the capitol, for the time we had allowed ourselves was gone, and regretfully did we go, for there was much to interest and instruct.

GROWTH OF THE REUNION IDEA.

In the early days of the church it was the custom to hold semiannual conferences, one in the spring and the other in the fall. After some time the fall conferences were discontinued and only annual conferences were held. This has now been the custom for many years.

The discontinuance of the fall conferences was what gave rise to the idea of reunions with us. The Saints missed the fall gatherings, and in attempting to substitute something that would take the place of the conferences, and would give the Saints an opportunity to assemble in large numbers for meetings, prayer, preaching, and social, the plan of having a big "reunion" was hit upon, and we have had reunions ever since. For some years only the one "big" reunion was held, and it was usually held in central and western Iowa. It took the place of the fall conference.

So good have been the results of these big reunions of the Saints, that the idea has gradually spread among the members of the church, and now there are reunions and reunions. And while there are so many, yet there are some of them that approach in size the so-called big reunion of western Iowa.

We think these reunions are prolific of good results, and we also believe that the holding of several reunions is better than the holding of one big one. The Saints are so scattered that it is almost impossible to hold anything like a general reunion, for there would be many who would be totally unable to meet the financial demands requisite to attend such. These very ones are often the ones who receive the most good from reunions and like assemblies, and the holding of district reunions enables them to gratify the longing to meet with many Saints.

Hence we are glad to note the number of successful reunions that are being held this year. We trust, however, that the Saints, in their zeal to make the best of everything, will not overdo, and take to holding so many that the interest will die out. Better underfeed the people on reunions than to overfeed.

AN EXAMPLE OF CARELESSNESS.

The business department does not mind being put to some extra trouble; but the clerks in that department object seriously to being asked to handle an item of business like the following:—

John Smith, dear brother, you will find ninety-five cents inclosed for Quarterlies that were not paid for, and I send it to you, and you can hunt it up and mark it paid.

That's all there was in the envelope except the ninety-five cents worth of stamps. It was not signed, bore no date, and there is absolutely no clew as to where it came from, as the postmark on the envelope was so blurred that it was illegible.

Such carelessness is inexcusable. The business department cannot in any way know where to give credit, nor how to trace the account. Had we an expert chirographist, one who was an adept at recognizing individual peculiarities in handwriting, it might be possible to locate the writer of the above letter, providing we had ever received letters from him before. But it would be expensive to keep such expert and would take lots of time to trace the letter.

This is an extreme example of the carelessness of some of our patrons, but the business department has continually to wrestle with similar problems. Letters come in unsigned, others undated, others with nothing to indicate from where written. Some contain money with no directions, as to how the sender wants it applied. Others order goods and do not send directions. Some order change of address and do not give the former address.

There is no excuse for so many and oft repeated errors, for our patrons have been told time and again how to order things, how to address their mail, etc. We should assist our brethren in the business department to avoid errors by being careful to make everything clear and definite in ordering from there. They can make some pretty good guesses at times, but if they happen to guess wrong, then there is trouble. We should not compel them to guess. Tell them plainly what you want, where you are, when you write, and who you are. In other words, write your letters as they should be written, with name of place from where written, the date, etc., and when you have written careful orders for what you want, sign the letter properly, with your full name.

Not long ago the clerks opened a letter which had only the town given, the state not being given. It was signed "F." Who do you suppose would have received the goods if they had been sent to "F," at "Banks"?

Brethren, be careful and explicit in ordering goods or change of address, etc.

HERE is a chance for some good brother to win a church building. The following appeared in the Chicago Tribune for August 31:—

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 31.—A frame church of modern architecture, with a seating capacity of 400, entirely new, and all paid for, will be given to the denomination whose representative sets forth most convincingly and attractively the articles of his church government and creed.

The church is located in the thrifty and populous community at Steele, near Decatur, Ind. It is being erected by farmers who live near it. The neighborhood is composed of the members of many religious denominations, but they have put aside doctrinal differences for the upbuilding of the community and have subscribed liberally to the fund for the new church.

As soon as the building has been completed the various denominations represented in the neighborhood will each send one of the best speakers to the church, and these will, in their turns, argue the merits of their respective sects and will plead with the church members for the ownership of the edifice. After all the speakers have been heard the denomination receiving the largest number of votes will receive a deed for the property.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. M. Walker, editor of Autumn Leaves and Zion's Hope, has been enjoying a much-needed recreation, visiting among old friends, schoolmates, and relatives, in St. Louis and other Missouri points. Sr. Walker's devotion to her duties as editor of the Leaves and the Hope has been close, and her vacation will do her great good. Under date of September 4, she wrote from St. Louis:—

I am having a lovely visit here among old schoolmates and friends. Have not seen the Saints yet, but will meet with them on Sunday.

Bro. J. M. Baker writes from Moorehead, Iowa, just prior to the convening of the district conference there, and speaks of the good times they hoped to have. He also explains the matter of the Utah elders challenging him and Bro. Mintun, and explains it much the same way as does Bro. Mintun in his letter in another column. Speaking of the work with the tent, Bro. Baker writes:—

Bro. Mintun and the writer closed tent meetings in Sioux City last Sunday night, after an effort of nearly six weeks. Eight were baptized, and about twenty Saints found in the city and vicinity. A committee was appointed by the Saints to obtain a place where religious services can be held. I hope that those Saints will be remembered by the members and ministry of the district in a practical as well as spiritual way, at least until they become able to stand by themselves.

I expect to go from here to Pisgah for a week, and then home to assist in completing arrangements for reunion. Please all note the date and the notice regarding tents. Send your orders promptly, and all come prepared to have a good and spiritual time before the Lord.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Deseret Semi-Weekly News for August 3 contains about the same thing as we quoted last week from a St. Joseph, Mo., paper. The News, however, has it under the heading, "He Misstates History. Josephite Leader's Reference to Bible Doctrine of Plural Marriage." It does not attempt, however, to show wherein history has been misstated.

Bro. F. M. McDonald writes from Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, saying that he baptized two on August 29.

By the Whitesville Banner, of Whitesville, Mo., in issue of August 31, we see that Bro. D. C. White has been there, and has been preaching to large audiences. We also note that he has explained the difference between the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah.

By the program supplement to the Wray Rattler, of September 8, we learn that Elder J. B. Roush is on the program for "preaching," Sunday afternoon, September 16, at 3 p. m. The program is for the "Beecher Island Celebration."

We notice also that Priest A. B. Hanson was using his printing knowledge by helping the Rattler out during a rush of business. Tent meetings are still being held there.

Decatur Sunday school and Religio associations held a joint convention of nine sessions at Evergreen chapel, six miles southwest of Lamoni, Sept. 7–9. Special features: Unique way in which interests of both organizations were blended; discussion of "Our conditions," church, Sunday school, and Religio; "Our needs;" and a sermon on "Charity." Large attendance.

CHRIST, THE SIMILITUDE OF MOSES.

For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.—Acts 3:22 23.

That Prophet was Christ. Just as absolutely essential to do "all things whatsoever" one said, as the other. The utter cutting off of Israel by the Romans, A. D. 70, for refusing to "hear that Prophet," was a fearful fulfillment of Moses' prophecy concerning Israel as a nation. As all things whatsoever Moses said must be strictly and literally observed in order to obtain temporal salvation, even so "all things whatsoever" Jesus commanded must be strictly observed in order to obtain eternal salvation. This Jesus taught in John 3:14, 15:—

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

This was to illustrate to a "ruler of the Jews" the necessity of being born again, "of water and of the Spirit," in order to enter God's kingdom, or be saved. He being well versed in Jewish history recorded in Numbers 21, knew that it was absolutely necessary for every Israelite bitten by the fiery serpent to look at the brazen serpent raised upon a pole by Moses at God's command in order to be saved from temporal death; that avowed faith alone in what Moses said would avail them nothing, but that they must also do what he commanded or die. "Even so" must all men do "all things whatsoever he," Jesus, "shall say unto you," in order to enter God's kingdom or be saved from eternal death. All his queries, "How can these things be?" availed him nothing, as the immutable decree was,— Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

His query about being born the second time of his mother shows that he well understood the nature of a birth; that a man could be born again only by being brought forth the second time. Hence in order to be born of water he must be enveloped in that element and be brought forth therefrom. Then and not until then would he be born of water. Jesus, having taken upon himself flesh and blood, became a man, and must be born again in order to enter his Father's kingdom, giving us an example that we should follow in his footsteps; hence he demanded baptism of John, saying,—

Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness, or do all that is right because his Father commanded it. And not until he came up out of the water was he publicly owned by his Father, by the descent of the Holy Spirit, and the proclamation,—

This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him.—Matt. 3:46, I. T.

After "the Son of man" had been "lifted up," then he sent forth "into all the world" his Father's everlasting decree,—

He that believeth [the gospel] and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not [consequently would not be baptized] shall be damned.—Mark 16:16.

As Moses no doubt taught, He that believeth (that God has given you a ransom) and doeth what he commands, looks at the brazen serpent, shall live; and he that believeth not (consequently would not look) shall die. Just as absolutely essential to do all that Jesus said (as, "him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you") in order to obtain eternal life, as it was for Israel to do all Moses said in order to obtain temporal life. In vain do men teach, as we so often hear, "Come up and confess faith in Christ, and through our prayers God will wash you white as snow and fill you with the Holy Ghost," when even Moses, nor the "Prophet like unto" him, never had power to prevail with God to confer blessings without implicit obedience to every law given for the purpose of obtaining the desired blessing. A notable instance of their failure is recorded in Numbers 12, when Miriam, Moses' sister, was stricken with leprosy, when in the anguish of his great, loving heart he cried out,—

Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee.

Yet notwithstanding he had power with God to bring all the plagues on Egypt, divide the waters of the Red Sea, smite Horeb's rock and the waters gush forth, etc., as all this could be obtained through the prayer of faith, as there was no other law governing the matter, yet when asking something contrary to law, God merely called his attention to the fact that a law had been given for the healing of leprosy which in every case must be strictly complied with, otherwise die a leper. In Leviticus 14 we read that law, which Colonel Ingersoll greatly ridicules, as so-called orthodoxy does much of the gospel law. The leper must go out of the camp seven days; no less would do. Two clean birds must be caught; cedar, scarlet, and hyssop must be obtained. No other kind would do. One bird must be killed in an earthen vessel over running water. A silver or gold vessel would not do, neither still water. Then the priest must take the living bird, the cedar, scarlet, and hyssop, dip each of them in the blood of the dead bird, and sprinkle the leper seven times. Six would not possibly do. Then let the live bird loose into the open field, and a score of other particulars too numerous to mention here. Read them. "O, what silly nonsense," says the skeptic; and yet every professed Bible believer must admit that every requirement of that law had to be strictly complied with in order to be cleansed from leprosy. Moses' prayer availed nothing with God because the law given in order to obtain what he prayed for had not been complied with. Even when the dying Savior in his infinite love and pity for his murderers prayed,—

Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do, we have no evidence that God did so until his law was honored; but to the contrary, on Pentecost Peter tells those who had crucified the Lord to repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins, showing that God had not forgiven them in answer to Jesus' prayer, neither would he until they had complied with the law given for that purpose. Peter and John prayed God to give baptized believers the Holy Ghost, yet he did not do it as in the other cases referred to until they had complied with the law given for that purpose. Not until they had submitted to the ordinance of the laying on of hands did God confer the Spirit. (See Acts 8.) Who gives ministers more power to obtain blessings from God today through prayer than Peter, John, Moses, or even the Savior possessed? Yet those who admit that all Moses' law had to be observed in order to obtain the promised temporal blessings will say there is no need of complying with all of Christ's law in order to obtain eternal life, claiming salvation by faith alone in Christ without works, when this same Jesus says,—

Man shall not live [be saved] by bread alone [faith, we might say], but by [obedience to] every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—Matt. 4:4.

Again:—

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, [confesses him as Lord,] shall enter the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will [keepeth the commandments] of my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 7:21.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

But says one, "We cannot believe in water baptism as essential to salvation. How can it cleanse from sins?" Just what the "master in Israel" asked of Christ, "How can these things be?" What can the birth of water, or water baptism, have to do with admitting a man into God's kingdom? Just as well might the poor, wounded, dying Israelite have asked of Moses, How can looking at the brazen serpent heal this deadly bite? What intrinsic efficacy or peculiar virtue can exist in that, to heal us? Moses could only answer as we, Because God commands it; promises to heal you, if you obey him. They proved God by obedience, as in days of old, and found he never lied. Then, and not until then, did or would God heal them. "Even so must the Son of man" be honored "in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you." Hear him:—

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.

Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God [or be saved].

And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

Be condemned. No intrinsic efficacy whatever in the water, no more than in the brazen serpent, yet as it was absolutely necessary for the poor, wounded, dying Israelite to look at the brazen serpent in order to live because God commanded it, even so must we be born of water as well as the Spirit, or be baptized, or we "cannot enter into the kingdom of God" because he says so. But why the necessity of baptism? Because Jesus has said,—

Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, . . . that repentance and remission of sins [or the means of remission] should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. — Luke 24:46, 47.

And the means of obtaining "remission of sins," as begun at Jerusalem by Peter on Pentecost, was, after producing faith in them by introducing evidence that Jesus was the Christ, and they—were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter, . . . Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins;

hence repentance and baptism was the means of obtaining remission of sins that "should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." John the Baptist, in making the crooked paths straight, "did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" (Mark 1:4) to the Jews. Jesus extended the great commission to "all nations" after he was "lifted up." (Mark 16:18.) The same to Jew and Gentile, as Peter who was to tell Cornelius, a Gentile, "words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved," (Acts 11:14,) "commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10:48.) The same as he commanded the Jews at Pentecost, as this everlasting gospel command "should be preached in his name among all nations [the same], beginning at Jerusalem." Where do we find more penitent believers today than Saul of Tarsus? Hear him:—

Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?

He would have given his life, then, for the Lord's sake.

And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.—Acts 9:6.

And after "three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink" (v. 9), a man of God was sent to him who put his hands upon him "and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized" (v. 18). In Acts 22:16 we are informed what he was baptized for, Ananias saying,—

And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins [or obtain their remission], calling on the name of the Lord.

Could he have been saved in his sins? If Cornelius was to be saved by the words of Peter, as the angel told him, how could he be saved without doing what Peter "commanded them," which was "to be baptized?" In 1 Peter 3:20, 21, where he speaks of Noah being "saved by water" by the act of obedience in building and entering the ark, he says:—

The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

It does not cleanse the flesh, but the conscience, because of obedience to the command. In Enoch's great gospel sermon, in the Inspired Translation, God answers Adam, who asked,—

Why is it that men must repent, and be baptized in water? And the Lord said unto Adam, . . . I give unto you a commandment, to teach these things freely unto your children, saying, that . . . inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so became of dust a living soul; even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin: and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come; even immortal glory. For, by the water [by baptism] ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified. . . . And, behold, all things have their likeness; and all things are created and made to bear record of me; both things which are temporal, and things which are spiritual; things which are in the heavens above, and things which are on the earth. . . . all things bear record of me.—Gen. 6:54, 61–63, 66.

Compare this with Paul's writing in Romans 6:4, where he shows repentance and baptism to be the likeness of Christ's death, burial, and resurrection:—

Buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.

As he says in Colossians 2:12:—

Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him, etc.

He calls it "that form of doctrine which was delivered you" (Rom. 6:17), when after thanking God that although they had been the servants of sin,—

But ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you [being baptized for remission of sins]. Being then made free from sin [not before], ye became the servants of righteousness.—Verses 17, 18.

O, what a stinging rebuke this should be to those poor, blind leaders of the blind, who are vainly deluding themselves and others that they have been made free from sin without ever having obeyed that form of doctrine, or been baptized, directly contradicting Paul's teaching to the Roman saints, that after having obeyed, after being "buried with him by baptism into [the likeness of his] death;" "being then made free from sin," etc. Instead, those poor blind guides have it that, being made free from sin by faith, then if you are inclined so to do, you may be buried with him by baptism, etc.; or otherwise have water sprinkled or poured on you, as it is not essential to salvation anyway; only "an outward sign of an inward grace;" "the answer of a good conscience," etc., etc. And, as we read that the "Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of" John (Luke 7:30), so will men now reject God's counsel against themselves, not being "baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins" (Acts 2:38), which Jesus said was his counsel "among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:47).

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will [counsel] of my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 7:21.

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly.—Psalms 1:1, but in the counsel of God.

Him [Jesus] shall ye hear in all things.—Moses.

His disciples were to teach "all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. 28:20); and after Peter had taught repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, on Pentecost, with the promise of the Holy Ghost to all—afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word [including the "many words" that he spoke, besides what are recorded] were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.—Acts 2: 39–41.

Added to the church or kingdom by baptism, being "born [or baptized] of water and of the Spirit; for otherwise they could "not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body [church], whether we be Jews or Gentiles.—1 Cor. 12: 13.

Hence at Jerusalem they must have been all baptized for the remission of sins, then baptized "by one Spirit" into the "one body," as Paul said. As only a very brief synopsis of the wonderful events of Pentecost are recorded, we have to go elsewhere to learn what transpired there. From Mark 16: 20, we learn that the Lord worked with his disciples who baptized on Pentecost, "confirming the word with signs following," "everywhere." And in order to learn how the three thousand at Jerusalem received the Holy Ghost, as the same gospel message was to be preached everywhere (Luke 24: 47), "beginning at Jerusalem," we go to Acts 5: 32, where Peter tells us that God had given the Holy Ghost "to them that obey him." And in Acts 8 we learn that Philip preached the same gospel at Samaria as Peter did at Jerusalem; and that after both men and women had been baptized, and had great joy, yet God had not been obeyed in all things, for they had not yet received the Holy Ghost. This state of affairs was reported at Jerusalem, and Peter and John were sent down, who prayed for the believers,— that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 15, 16.

Who can for a moment suppose that God gave those baptized at Jerusalem the Holy Ghost without the laying on of hands, and yet some of the same men who helped baptize at Jerusalem had to be sent to Samaria to lay hands on them, after water baptism, in order that they might receive the Holy Ghost?

Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given.—Acts 8: 18.

Who so destitute of the sense of logic as to doubt that the laying on of hands was therefore the last act of obedience required by the Lord in order that he might give them the Holy Ghost? And as he "is no respecter of persons," could he in justice withhold his Spirit from the baptized believers at Samaria, until men were sent from Jerusalem to lay hands on them (Philip evidently not holding that authority), and yet confer it upon those baptized at Jerusalem without the laying on of hands, when all the apostles were in their midst? The very idea is altogether unreasonable, and would be charging God with injustice and partiality; and so in every other place, because there is no record made of it, as at Samaria.

Some lay great stress upon the fact that God gave to the household of Cornelius a manifestation of his Spirit without laying on of hands or even baptism; claiming therefore that the Gentiles were to obtain the Spirit, and consequently salvation, without either baptism or laying on of hands; ignoring the fact that the Scriptures teach this as a special interposition of Providence in order to convince the Jewish saints who accompanied Peter, that the Gentiles were also entitled to salvation. This is evident by reading Peter's defense when brought before the council by those brethren for going to the Gentiles. (See Acts 11.) When they "spake with tongues" and magnified God, then answered Peter,

Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?—Acts 10: 47.

"Then answered Peter." Who did he answer? Those who had forbade "water, that these should not be baptized," and gave his reason why they should be baptized, which was, they "have received the Holy Ghost as well as we. And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord" (verse 48) "for the remission of sins" (Acts 2: 38). I have placed this in connection as this was what Jesus had said baptism should be preached for, "among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Who will dare accuse Peter of preaching baptism for one purpose at Jerusalem, and not for the same purpose elsewhere? Hence, Cornelius, although receiving a manifestation of the Spirit for a special purpose, when that purpose was accomplished, must enter the kingdom as all others, by being "born of water and of the Spirit;" i. e., baptism for the remission of sins, and laying on of hands for continuation of the promised abiding Comforter. No more evidence that because of the Spirit manifesting itself through Cornelius for a special purpose that it would continue to do so, than in the case of the ass that received the same special manifestation as recorded in Numbers 22: 28: "And the Lord opened the mouth of the beast." And as in 2 Peter 2: 16, speaking of Balaam,—

But was rebuked: . . . the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbade the madness of the prophet.

Surely no greater miracle in Cornelius' case than that of the dumb brute. And if, as many teach, Cornelius would have been saved in heaven without doing what Peter commanded, without baptism or the laying on of hands, because of having received the spiritual manifestation, from the same parity of reasoning, the animal Balaam rode would be found saved with him for the same reason. If this was the pattern as claimed for Gentile conversion, why did Paul not only rebaptize the Gentile "disciples" at Ephesus, but after that lay his hands on them that they might receive the Holy Ghost? (Acts 19: 6.) Why not, as in Cornelius' case, give them the Spirit manifestations before baptism and laying on of hands, if that was the pattern? If baptism and laying on of hands were not essential to their salvation, why did Paul not only baptize them the second time, but also lay hands on them after baptism? The truth is, their baptism was of no worth in the sight of God because unauthorized by him. By reading chapter 18, it is presumable that Apollos had baptized them,—

An eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, . . . fervent in the spirit [his own spirit], he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord [as he understood them, being unauthorized of God], knowing only the baptism of John [water baptism].—Verses 24, 25.

For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God.—John 3: 34.

Not part of them, only. No man was ever sent of God to preach who taught only water baptism. Apollos, after being "more perfectly" instructed in "the way of God," became a minister of Christ (verse 28). After Paul had baptized those disciples, then—when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.—Acts 19: 6.

Paul instructed to "lay hands suddenly on no man" (1 Tim. 5: 22), meaning to first instruct them in regard to its purpose. Would he not do so before laying on hands? In Galatians 1: 12 Paul says that he received the gospel "by the revelation of Jesus Christ." That neither men nor angels could preach any other than what they had preached without being "accursed." This was written to profit and instruct all saints (2 Tim. 3: 16). At Samaria, Ephesus, and elsewhere, as recorded, they had received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, hence any other plan of receiving the Spirit, only what they received, was contrary to what Paul preached. In Hebrews 6: 1, 2, he enumerates the principles of the gospel, or doctrine of Christ, revealed to him by the Savior as "repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection from the dead, and of eternal judgment." Jesus says:—

What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.—Mark 10: 9.

This was said in regard to husband and wife, but will apply equally to all things God has joined together, and in 2 John 9–11 we read:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. . . . If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.

From this we learn that anyone, no difference how honest he may be, who brings not this doctrine, preaches any other, or leaves out any part of it, as Apollos did, though ignorantly, John says he is an evil-doer. His labors are not acceptable to God; are productive of evil. How much more displeasing to God are those who oppose this doctrine? James says in 2:10 that—

Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

This seems harsh until we understand him from his illustration. Hear him:—

For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law.—Verse 11.

This we know to be correct, that a man might have kept every precept of the ten but one, and yet be a law-breaker, and death be the penalty, the same as if he had broken the ten. Now hear his application to us:—

So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty.—Verse 12.

The gospel law, and not the ten commandments, that he qualifies as a law of bondage in contradistinction to the "law of liberty."

The one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, . . . which answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children.—Gal. 4:24, 25, because of still contending for that law of bondage "from the mount Sinai," by Moses, instead of the law of "grace and truth [that] came by Jesus Christ" (John 1:17), even so, although "whosoever shall keep the whole law" of liberty, the gospel law, or doctrine of Christ, except one precept or principle, "he is guilty of all," and a law-breaker the same as though he rejected all. Or as is more generally the case, profess to believe, repent, and be baptized for remission of sins, and as some, because they claim their sins to have been previously remitted, believe in or accept the principles of resurrection and of eternal judgment, and yet reject the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and all other purposes for which it was given, has not fulfilled the law, "is guilty of all," as though he had rejected all, and as temporal death was the penalty for breaking even one precept of the law of bondage, even to death, eternal death will be the penalty. James can mean nothing else by his illustration; for,—

He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, etc.—Hebrews 10:28, 29.

Despised his law; as from Numbers 15:31 we learn that some "despised the word of the Lord" given through Moses; as Paul said, "despised Moses' law," "gathered sticks on the sabbath day," and was stoned to death without mercy (verses 34–36). Even so in regard to Christ's law.

For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me [whose law must not be despised, but observed in every particular]; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

Be condemned. As temporal death was the penalty for rejecting the least requirement of Moses' law, even picking up a few sticks on the sabbath day, even so will eternal death result from rejecting either principle of the "everlasting gospel" law, that "came by Christ." In 1 Corinthians 10 Paul reasons that all the Jews' wanderings from Egypt to Canaan, strict laws, and judgments for breaking them, being destroyed by serpents, etc., all "happened unto them for ensamples [types], and they are written for our admonition" (verse 11). Again in Romans 15:4:—

Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, etc.

O, that all would be "admonished," and learn by reading them, that Jesus Christ and his law are the "same yesterday, and today, and forever" (Heb. 13:8). That as Israel had to do "all things whatsoever" God required through Moses in order to obtain temporal salvation, even so must we hear and obey the "Prophet like unto" Moses "in all things whatsoever he shall say [or has said] unto" us, in order to obtain eternal salvation.

"BIND YOURSELVES."

JESUS, DOC. AND COV. 43:3.

Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—Matt. 4:4.

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.—D. C. 81:3.

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their father's kingdom.—D. C. 83:8.

And all they who receive the oracles of God, let them beware how they hold them, lest they are accounted as a light thing, and are brought under condemnation thereby; and stumble and fall, when the storms descend.—D. C. 87:2.

After considerable study of the revelations of God, ancient and modern, and after having noted the effect of an intelligent and strict observance of the same upon individuals, the writer is thoroughly convinced that much more importance attaches to such admonitions as the above than is generally appreciated, even by the Saints themselves. He therefore invites a rereading of them, believing their value merits especial consideration.

These texts are applicable to every part of the entire system of salvation devised by our heavenly Father, as defined in all the revelations which he has given to his church.

In this article we only care to discuss briefly the possibility of applying them to the injunction of the Savior, which constitutes the title of this article; namely, "Bind yourselves."

And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given; and thus ye shall become instructed in the law of my church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me, that inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received. Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken, even that which ye have received. —D. C. 43:3.

By reading the introduction to this revelation, "O, hearken, ye elders of my church, and give ear unto the words which I shall speak unto you," we learn it was addressed to the eldership. At times of district conferences, and at reunions, the elders "are assembled together," in some instances a few of them, and in others, many. At such times, the elders frequently hold priesthood meetings and "instruct and edify each other;" but, so far as the writer knows, no effort of any kind has as yet been made to carry out in any way that part of the divine injunction, "Bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me." The importance of doing this is made enticingly clear by the clause which follows, "That inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received." But the voice of warning immediately added, "Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken, even that which ye have received," strikingly and startlingly emphasizes the necessity of intelligent and strict compliance therewith.

Should it be thought by any that the pronoun this, though singular in number, may be properly applied to other matters referred to in former parts of the sentence, such as "instruct and edify," "be sanctified," as well as to "bind yourselves," it certainly includes, as antecedent, the latter. If we cannot or do not "bind" ourselves "to act in all holiness before" the Lord, as required, is there a probability we can successfully to ourselves and acceptably to the Lord, carry out the balance of the instruction, namely, "instruct and edify each other," "be sanctified by that which ye have received"? If this question can be consistently answered affirmatively, are we even then justified in treating "lightly" and neglecting to comply with the requirement, "bind yourselves"? If we do treat this admonition thus "lightly" by neglecting to comply with it, are we living by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"? Are we doing what he has said? If not, have we any "promise" that "glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received"? Or, are we not rather standing beneath the shadows of the threat, "Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken, even that which ye have received"? We, therefore, set ourselves at once to the inquiry: "What is meant by the expression, 'Ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before' me; and how may this be done"?

There are different methods by which persons may bind themselves "to act in all holiness before" the Lord. In the act of baptism they really "bind" themselves thus to do, and in the most solemn manner.

> What have you against being baptized in the name of the Lord, as a witness before him that ye have entered into a covenant with him that ye will serve him and keep his commandments? . . . And he [Alma] said, Helam, I baptize thee, having authority from the Almighty God, as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him until you are dead; as to the mortal body.—Mosiah 9:7, 8.

But the "binding" referred to in the title of this article was separate and distinct from baptism, for it was addressed to the elders, and they had already been baptized. Also, by personal vow to God, privately made, one might "bind" himself to do certain things. This commandment, however, could hardly be thus complied with, for the "binding" of the elders "to act in all holiness" was to be done, "when ye are assembled together." Hence, we infer this "binding" was to be done in a collective capacity, in some kind of an open, formal manner. So far as the writer understands, this revelation makes no reference to the school of the prophets. But when that school is organized, there is a "salutation" by which every person is accosted as he enters the house, which is a covenant by which he binds himself "to walk in all the commandments of God blameless."

> When any shall come in after him, let the teacher arise, and, with uplifted hands to heaven, yea, even directly, salute his brother or brethren with these words: Art thou a brother or brethren, I salute you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, in token or remembrance of the everlasting covenant, in which covenant I receive you to fellowship, in a determination that is fixed, immovable, and unchangeable, to be your friend and brother, through the grace of God, in the bonds of love, to walk in all the commandments of God blameless, in thanksgiving, forever and ever. Amen. And he that is found unworthy of this salutation shall not have place among you. . . . He that cometh in and is faithful before me, and is a brother, or if they be brethren, they shall salute the president or teacher, with uplifted hands to heaven, with this same prayer and covenant, or by saying Amen in token of the same. Behold, verily I say unto you, This is a sample unto you for a salutation to one another in the house of God, in the school of the prophets.—D. C. 85:40-44.

Now, while section 43 does not enter into details as to how the elders should "bind" themselves "to act in all holiness before" the Lord, nor does it have any reference to the school of the prophets, as in section 85, just quoted, yet might we not learn from this latter section a very good method by which the elders, when "assembled together," could properly carry out the instructions given to them in section 43 concerning this matter, and thus receive greater approbation of our heavenly Father for "doing" what he has "said," surely the instruction to "bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me" should be carried out in some way.

In the early rise of the Reorganization, there is an illustration of two brethren only, Z. H. Gurley and Reuben Newkirk, making a covenant with each other similar to that mentioned in these revelations, which was productive of fruitful results. I quote Bro. Z. H. Gurley's account of it, from the Advocate, vol. 2, pp. 10, 11, as follows:—

> At this time I was laboring with Bro. Reuben Newkirk, a young and worthy brother. I explained my views to him, and he endorsed them at once. The Spirit of God was with us, and day after day was spent in holding council about the matter until one day (being at work together in a lone place) we joined hands, and in a most solemn manner entered into a covenant, calling God to witness, that we would from that hour renounce all that claimed to be prophets, and take the Bible, the Book of Mormon, Book of Covenants and the Holy Spirit for our guide. . . . A few days after we had entered into this covenant, while Bro. Newkirk was in secret prayer, the Holy Spirit rested upon him. He arose and spoke in tongues, starting homeward, speaking in tongues and praising God. His wife heard him and met him, and shortly afterward she received the same gift and blessing. These gifts were the first fruits of the reformation.

To enter into such a compact as these revelations imply, would be fraught with disaster to all who afterward so violated its conditions as to break the covenant made. To fail to reach such a standard of individual righteousness, integrity, and stability before God, as would justify us in attempting to carry out the provisions of this revelation fully, to "bind" ourselves "to act in all holiness before" the Lord, is equally disastrous in its consequences to the work we are engaged in, and which we all hope to see triumph. "Inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received. Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken, even that which ye have received." Can we not, therefore, among the eldership, find a few who are willing to assume the responsibility of such an obligation now? If not, for the present, we are "in a straight betwixt two," having a desire for the promised added "glory," but no disposition or ability to "do" what the Lord has "said."

AMANTE LUCE.

THE BIRTH OF THE SPIRIT.

> Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit. Nicodemus answered and said unto him, How can these things be?—John 3:3-9.

From the above basis we propose to set forth what we understand the scriptures to teach upon the subject of the birth of the Spirit. This subject is one of paramount importance to us, and to understand it correctly is very necessary. I know that on account of the way some of the elders have presented this subject our enemies have made a point against us.

In order that there be a birth there must be a child to be born, and in order that there be a child there must be a generation, and in order that there be a generation there must a generator. We will proceed to give an explanation as set forth in the Holy Scriptures. James, the apostle, said:—

> Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth.—James 1:18.

And again, Paul said:—

> And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and in sins.—Ephesians 2:1.

We understand these quotations to be synonymous. When a man is begotten by the Spirit he receives life and light. Then and there commences his being a child of God. From that point he commences to develop by a prudent use of the means which the Lord has appointed, which is faith and repentance, being drawn to God by his Holy Spirit, for it is written, "No man can come unto me except the Father . . . draw him." "Having received of the Spirit unto the remission of his sins," he is then prepared to be born of the Spirit by the Lord's appointed means, which is water and Spirit. Not that there is a birth of water and another of Spirit, for there is but one birth in connection with the fleshly birth to put a man into the kingdom of heaven, for Jesus said, "Except a man be born again." That is, one time more in connection with his natural birth, so he told Nicodemus that except a man was born of water and of the Spirit he could not enter into the kingdom of heaven. This explains how a man is born again, not a birth of water and then a birth of Spirit. One birth by water and Spirit in connection. Jesus said,—

That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

This is the modus operandi by which a man's spirit is born of the Spirit of God.

Next question. When is a man born of the Spirit? We answer: At the time he is baptized, if he is a proper subject, and is baptized by a legal administrator. We see that the Spirit comes to the individual that is baptized like a gentle breeze, so the birth is complete.

But, says some one, the birth of the Spirit is received through laying on of hands.

I ask, Where did you learn that? Jesus said,—

Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

Then again he said,—

The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.

This shows us that the kingdom was in existence from the commencement of John's ministry. Then we see that there was a kingdom which was called the kingdom of God. Of course there had to be members in it, because there could not be a kingdom without members, and they could not be in the kingdom without being born of water and the Spirit, and we know that John the Baptist did not have authority to lay on hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, so we see that the members of the kingdom were not born of the Spirit by laying on of hands, but they were saved in the kingdom without laying on of hands. So we see that the laying on of hands is not for the remission of sins nor for the birth of the Spirit, but for a different purpose, which we will explain later on.

Jesus told his disciples, just before he left them, to go and preach the gospel to every creature, that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Saved from what? His past sins, of course. He did not say that they should have hands laid on them in order that they should be saved, for laying on of hands is not a condition of pardon of sins or an entrance into the kingdom. I have searched the standard books of the church, and I fail to find a single intimation that the laying of hands is for the birth of the Spirit. If any brother can find such, he will do me a great favor to write me, or write an article for one of our papers.

According to the holy scriptures contained in the three books above referred to, the laying on of hands is for the reception of the Holy Ghost by those who have complied with the prerequisites as we find by reference to Acts 8:17; 9:17; and 19:.6. We could refer you to many other places in Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, but this will be sufficient.

Paul said—

Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.

We think this operation of the Spirit is given through the laying on of hands. Then again, Paul said, "You are sealed unto the day of redemption of your bodies." We understand this to be done through the laying on of hands.

The laying on of hands is just as essential for the purpose intended as any other ordinance given by the Master to his church, but let us not misapply it. Let us not confound the operations of the Spirit of God. They are many, but it is the same Spirit. One operation is to reprove the world, one is to regenerate sinners, one is to draw sinners to Christ, another is to give birth to the penitent spirit, another is to take up its abode in the heart, another is to baptize or overwhelm people that are proper subjects, another is to give unto God's people a multitude of gifts, such as tongues, interpretation of tongues, prophecy, gifts of healing, etc. All these operations and administrations are given by the one Spirit.

If men will obey the gospel in its order, this Spirit will lead them into all truth eventually; and they will live by every word of God. God is no respecter of persons, so just what he required men to do in his day upon the earth he requires them to do now. He required men then to hear, believe, repent, and be baptized that they might be born again, and then be confirmed by the laying on of hands by those in authority. After this, keeping all the commandments given of the Lord while they live, and he will save them from sin and its effects in the end.

E. W. NUNLEY.

TESTIMONY.

Forasmuch as many have thought, as did Gideon of old:—

Where be all his miracles that our fathers told us of?—Judges 6:13, it seemeth good to me for the sake of the elders in the ministry, and the doubtful outside as well as inside the church, to tell how God's hand is not shortened, neither is his ear heavy. Yet he doth not parade for the sake of pandering to the morbid or sensual, but out of a merciful goodness doth he hear the prayer of faith, when his people come before him with a pure heart.

During my young married life, and before it, I was raised a Methodist. I was as confident of the divinity of the Methodist Church as I was the sun was shining in the heavens. With this confidence, and inspired by a love for a good mother, I went forward to the mourner's bench; and for seven long years, in summer and winter, I tried to make myself believe that something had happened to me that I knew in my soul had not happened; namely, that God, for Christ's sake, had spoken peace and pardon to my soul. I could not deceive myself, therefore I withdrew from the Methodist Church, and tried to become an infidel. I had a good, praying wife. About the year 1866 I overheard her praying: "O God! if you have a people on earth you acknowledge as your own, or a church of your own, lead me to them, or send your servants to me, so that I can become identified with them." She had been an Adventist, but discovered that they could not be the church. Infidel as I tried to be, I felt to sympathize with her, and comfort her, by offering to unite with Christian, Baptist, or any other to satisfy her cravings for companionship with the people of God. She continued to steadily pray thus, I occasionally hearing her sentiments.

In the summer of 1869, two elders, John H. Lake and Joseph Snively, came to our town, seeking for some who were inquiring for the church. (We were then living in Brampton, Ontario.) Wife met them, and a running fire of questions and answers was had, until I heard they were "Mormons." I forbade wife to be baptized, so great was my prejudice that I would not allow the elders to enter our house. Time passed, wife prayed; light had come to her, and with it hope and confidence in God that he would open the way so she might unite with the church, and he did.

A spirit of going west took hold of me. I had very little money. As I now believe, in answer to her prayers, I was also inspired to work, so that I did the work of three or four men, until in a three months' labor I had sufficient money to take us west. Every muscle and fiber of my body was like a piece of steel; never was the same amount of work done by me before or since, and I never heard of man doing anything like it. Should any Canadians wish to know, I will personally write them—it seems too extravagant to write here. Suffice it to say I purchased tickets for Keokuk, Iowa. I knew nothing of the country or its resources, but ventured to reach the Mississippi. When I arrived in Burlington, Iowa, I could not think of stopping there, so on to Keokuk I would go. We were only well seated when a gentleman addressed us.

"You are strangers, traveling?"

"Yes, going to Keokuk."

"Got work there?"

"No."

"Relatives?"

"No."

"Seeking a location?"

"Yes."

"My advice would be," said he, "to stop off at a small town, say Montrose, locate your family, then look around and get properly settled, finding what is suitable to you."

We heeded the advice, got off at Montrose, Iowa. At once fell in with one of the elders, Joseph Snively, who took us to his home and made us welcome. I hated to be in the hands of or under obligations to a hated Mormon, yet his goodness won my esteem so far that I was glad.

Now to the point. Wife had prayed to get among the people of God; a stranger directed us to Montrose. About that time the little town had a band of about one hundred Saints, and what was best, they were living their religion. God's Spirit was abundantly poured out in tongues, prophecies, healing, miracles, visions, and the other various gifts of the Spirit.

Now as I look back, after a quarter of a century has passed, I see old Father Doty rise in his place to testify of the goodness of God and his knowledge of the work, and, while under the influence of the divine Spirit, break forth in tongues. As soon as he sat down, Father Burley, of blessed memory, his face shining with the light of the Spirit, would give us in our own language the interpretation of the tongue. Another would speak in prophecy; another would sing a hymn by the Spirit, and perhaps give the interpretation also. I now look back and see Sister Newberry, Sisters Simpson, Ruby, Burley, and many others; Bro. William Anderson and others,—all earnest, humble, and prayerful.

Wife had received an answer to her prayer. She found "God's church." How she could get consent of her prejudiced husband to unite herself with the church, was a question! During the meetings she was promised by the Spirit I should relent and allow her to be baptized, and that I should join the church and preach the gospel. Bro. Joseph Snively ventured to tell me I should not seek to rule her conscience, as she wished to be baptized. Next day I consented upon the following conditions: she should never ask me to attend her meetings, never teach our children her doctrine; if an elder came to visit her he should not talk his religion in our house, in the hearing of any except herself. To all this she gladly assented—anything so she could obey the gospel. "Won't you come and witness the baptism?" she meekly asked. No; I could not consent to witness the humility of my wife uniting with that despised people.

Time passed; I would drive her to church, meet her at the door and drive off; after service was over would come for her. Finally I was prevailed upon to take dinner at Father Burley's. "Hattie," now Mrs. Daniel Lambert, of Lamoni, always attending; then stay for afternoon meeting. So prejudiced was I that one morning, in the fall of the year, Bro. Joseph Smith was going to preach in Montrose. Wife ventured to ask me to hear him. "No. I go and listen to the son of the Mormon prophet? No."

"O, Papa, I wish you had heard Bro. Joseph, it was the best sermon I ever heard," wife said after the sermon. I listened with a sneer.

The following summer, our little girl, Belle, not two years old, well known to the readers of Herald and Ensign through her reporting the sermons for publication, caught a disease which settled in her eyes. A cataract, or white something gathered on or over the sight of the eyes, the left eye was the worse. Three times we had a doctor cut it off. This he did with, I think, nitrate of silver. We did all in our power to restore her to sight for about five months to no purpose. She got worse and worse; putrid erysipelas set in; her face became a mass of rotten corruption. In my heart I wished for death to come and take her away from such a fearful life, disfigured and blind—no ray of hope. Even if she was cured, her face must show marks of the disease. Then a girl to go through this world blind—death would be a pleasure.

We were living in Fort Madison, Iowa. The second Saturday in February, 1871, we called on Mr. and Mrs. Pruden—the latter was a member of the church and a fast friend of wife, of course—and invited them to take Sunday dinner. A visitor was present.

"Permit me to introduce you to our friend, Elder Harson, of Rock Island, Illinois," was the statement of Mr. Pruden.

I gave him a cold stand off shake—you may have seen that kind before. I could not ask our friends without their guest, and so I said, "Elder, you come also."

We visited the State Penitentiary. I was asked to teach a class. The lesson was first Corinthians twelfth chapter. For the life of me I could not help seeing Mormonism in every line of that chapter. I had heard little by little. Now it just poured a whole chapter on me where I least expected it.

That Sunday evening Mrs. Pruden came to me and said, "Mr. Robinson, would you have any objections to having Father Harson administer to Belle for her blindness?"

I thought a moment—I wished her healed with all my soul; but to be humiliated to have it done this way was more than I could stand. I gruffly answered, "You can go ahead—the old fellow cannot bewitch the child anyway."

Father Harson retired for ten minutes, I judge, and after entering the house he said, "Let us bow before the Lord in prayer." All knelt down except the writer. A plain earnest prayer was offered. Said he to wife, "Have you any oil?" This was the first I knew of wife having consecrated olive oil in the house. She handed him a bottle. He anointed the child. Wife says he put a little oil on the lids of the eyes. I did not see that. He poured a few drops on her head in the name of Jesus Christ; put both hands upon her head and asked God in the name of Jesus Christ to remove the dreaded blindness and restore her eyes to perfect sight. "And in the name of Jesus Christ, whose servant I am, I bid you receive your sight; and O God, to thee and thy Son Jesus Christ we will give the thanks. Amen."

This was about 8:30 p. m. The child was put to bed. Next morning I heard a rap at five o'clock. Answering same, the voice came, "It is Harson. I have to go home by first train. Tell Sr. Robinson to fear not, for her child will be well, and she shall see again."

"Mother," said I, "that old man says Belle's eyes will get better." At noon I came home from work. Under the skylight—for wife was taking photographs—came our little girl, both eyes wide open. No appearance of anything wrong, only the left eyelid was not quite as high as the right. This got all right in a day or two. I looked and felt thankful in my heart; but pride—O, that miserable obstacle to everything that is good—would not let me express it to the glad heart of my wife! Two weeks passed, but no change in the corrupted face. I began to say to wife that if the Lord had a hand in healing the child of blindness, why did he not heal the disease of her face at the same time.

Her glad heart responded, "We only asked him to heal her blindness. We will see him heal her of this also."

The first Sunday in March was district conference. It was held at Montrose. I invited Mr. and Mrs. Pruden to accompany us. Hired a surrey, took little Belle with us. For the first time I attended a meeting of the Saints. One or more offered prayer. Several testified they knew the work they were engaged in was divine. Two people, a man and woman, spoke in tongues. Father (Elder) Burley interpreted both tongues. Meeting closed and preaching by Elder David H. Smith. I did not give it much attention. Afternoon meeting, Elder John H. Lake in charge. Contrary to usual custom, as I afterward learned, the brother for one hour preached to me. I know it was to me. Never did twenty minutes pass quicker. I there saw for the first time why it was I could not get God for Christ's sake to speak peace and pardon to my soul when I bowed the Methodist knee—because God had never promised any such thing to a sinner. The dear brother presented the principles of the gospel as did God's servants anciently, calling upon the people, John the Baptist-like (Mark 1st), Jesus-like (John 3 : 5), Peter-like (Acts 2 : 38), Philip-like (Acts 8: 38), Ananias-like (Acts 22: 16), buried with Christ in baptism Paul-like (Romans 6: 3-6), receiving the Spirit through the laying on of hands Jesus-like (Luke 24: 50; John 20: 22), Peter and John-like (Acts 18: 17, 18), Paul-like (Acts 19: 6). And while he was counting on his fingers the principles of the doctrine of Christ as found in Hebrews sixth chapter, laying on of hands one of them, Bro. Alexander H. Smith held up his watch so that Bro. Lake saw it. He then came to his senses that he had overstepped the bounds of time.

Sacrament was administered. Testimonies like the morning service were enjoyed. At the close of services wife came to me and said, "I would like to have the elders administer to Belle for this dreadful disease."

I said, "Alright."

I will here state that never did I see a more corrupt face than this child presented. No weak person, man or woman, could look upon it. We kept it covered as much as possible. Wife said, "Brother Lake, will you administer to my child?"

"Yes, sister, let us retire to a private house."

Accordingly we went to Elder Frederic Burley's. There was present of the elders, Father Dunham, of Burlington, now gone to his rest; Father Burley, also gone; Father Lambert, of Rock Creek, Illinois (the father of Joseph and Daniel Lambert); Joseph Lambert, of Lamoni, Iowa; and John H. Lake, now president of the Canada mission. I do not remember who anointed the child, but Bro. John H. Lake prayed after the anointing. He seemed to argue the case before the Lord; this child never sinned; it was diseased because of an epidemic that the summer before had left it afflicted. Jesus said, "Of such was the kingdom of heaven." He then pleaded for God's favor to be given to the child, as he was calling on the same God that all holy men of old called upon, and he desired a blessing for the good it would do, as they desired in their day. "And," said he, "in the name of Jesus Christ, whose servants we are, we command this disease to depart from your system, and be thou whole from the crown of thy head to the soles of thy feet. Thou shalt be a ministering angel to my people, and shalt do much good in the church. We seal this blessing, with perfect health, upon you in the name of Jesus Christ. Even so. Amen."

These are as near the words of the brother as memory can call up. I said to myself, "I will watch that." I hitched up, started home; it was about dark. Next day a scab formed over the sore, the first in five months. The second day it was quite hard; the third day it was like a bone. The fourth day it commenced to fall off under the right eye. I said, "Wife, it looks like the disease had dried up; but there must be a terrible scar there sure."

"We will see," was her meek answer.

The fifth day it was almost gone; a pink flesh or skin, like a new born babe's, covered where the sore was. The sixth day the scab had entirely disappeared, the face sound and well; no scar, nothing to mar the facial expression, as perfect a face as the day the child was born. From that day to this she has been healthy and well, eyes and face sound, and hundreds made to bless God for the light of the gospel through her efforts to get the sermons of the elders before the people, thus fulfilling the prediction, "You shall be a blessing to many in your day."

Now I had heard the doctrine of Christ, and I knew the signs did follow them that believed. I discovered that in organization the church was as that of old; that the restoration of the church was a fact as Peter said (Acts 3: 19), and John said (Revelation 14: 6) that the ministry was authorized of God. (Hebrews 5: 4.) This ministry called of God as was Aaron, and finding that the sealed book of Isaiah twenty-ninth chapter was to come forth, a marvelous work and a wonder; that Lebanon was being made fruitful, Palestine being inhabited. Ezekiel's two sticks united, Bible and Book of Mormon as a sign to Israel that God would bring them from the north country and gather them from the coasts of the earth.

I bowed to the ordinance of baptism on the evening of August 13, 1871. I was led into the Father of Waters by Elder John H. Lake, and there baptized for the remission of my sins; afterwards was confirmed for the gift of the Spirit, which I have received inasmuch as I was worthy by purifying my life, so this body of mine might be a fit temple for that Spirit to dwell in.

Having received grace, I continue until this day, testifying to small and great as opportunity offers, that God has restored his church as at the first and her officers as at the beginning, with all the gifts and blessings promised by Christ.

Many times and oft the confirming of this has come to me and I have witnessed it in others. Thanking my heavenly Father for past blessings, and trusting him for future I am yours in gospel bonds,

J. A. ROBINSON.

BEVIER, Mo., Sept 3.

Editors Herald:—We were much pleased in having the privilege to discourse to a goodly attendance of Saints Sunday at our home, notwithstanding it is said a prophet is without honor in his own country. The branch here is ably presided over by Elder F. T. Mussell, assisted by the ever energetic Priest D. L. Morgan, and Deacon J. W. Rudkin, Elder F. A. Evans being recently elected presiding teacher. The zeal of these young brethren is commendable. They labor six days a week in the mines, and frequently on week evenings and Sabbath morn they are seen out on duty visiting the Saints, trying to reclaim the wayward ones and strengthen and confirm all. Surely the Lord will reward this kind of work. They also have the confidence of their flock, and are well spoken of.

On the 18th ult. we were called to Booneville to administer to Sr. Cochran, who was very low. I was very much pleased to see the kindness and patience of her daughter, Rosa, who nursed her mother night and day, fasting and praying for her. Such love and attention is commendable. Through good nursing and the heavenly Father's assistance, Sr. Cochran was on a fair way to recovery when we left.

There are but four Saints in Booneville, but they are an honor to the church.

The once lively Higbee branch is now in a weakened condition, many of the staunch Saints having left to seek employment elsewhere, because of poor work. Another shaft is being sunk there now, and there is talk of starting one that is shut down, so we hope things will be favorable for Saints to return. Elder Wm. Chapman and Priest Wm. Kelso are laboring hard to keep the branch together, and we pray the Father to bless them in their work. They are worthy brethren. Our trip to Hannibal was a profitable one. Some who were in background were revived, and friends won to the cause. There are some noble Saints there.

The work in some parts of the district is not as we would like to see it, the main trouble being that there is no one to feed the flock. We look for better conditions in the future.

While this is my first year as a missionary, I can say that God has blessed me in preaching the word, and assisted me in my administering throughout the district. I find many noble, self-sacrificing Saints. May God bless them to the good of his work, and help us all to magnify his cause. J. A. TANNER.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, August 31.

Editors Herald:—This is to notify the readers of the Saints' Herald, and Elders Otteson and Hansen of the Utah or Brighamite Church in particular, that Elders Baker and Mintun never refused to meet them or anyone else in public discussion in Sioux City. The facts are briefly these: Elders Hansen and Bickmore attended one of the services we held in the tent in Sioux City, and at the close asked me two questions, viz.; Why do you call us "Mormons" and yourselves Latter Day Saints, and, What became of the 190,000 members that were in the church in Nauvoo if only about 10,000 went to Utah? In replying to these questions I said that which caused Elder Hansen to say in substance: "I would like to have these matters examined more fully in public." I understood him to indirectly request to use the tent with us in a public exchange of views. I told him we did not feel free to use the tent in that way, and he replied he did not intend to be understood thus, that he did not request the use of the tent. I then asked him what he did mean. He said he only meant that they could publicly represent their side and we could ours as we were doing, but did not wish to be understood as asking for this to be done in the tent. At the close of our conversation Elder Baker asked Elder Hansen what he meant by his expression, whether he meant it as a challenge, or as an invitation to a public discussion.

He answered: "No; for," said he, "we do not challenge anyone, but we will discuss if we are challenged."

Elder Baker said we were not out to challenge anyone unless especially necessary; but if they wanted a discussion they could be accommodated.

Elder Hansen said he did not wish us to understand that he had invited us to discuss him by any thing he had said.

Elder Baker said: "We only wanted to understand you, and if you meant what you said as a challenge or invitation to discuss the issues between us, you can be accommodated."

Elder Hansen said, "I did not wish to be so understood."

Elder Otteson was not present; and could know nothing but what he heard. We will now say to Elders Hansen and Otteson that if they or either of them wish to discuss the issues between us, or now will say that what Elder Hansen said in our conversation at Sioux City was an invitation to discuss the issues between us, we will accommodate both or either of them, and enter at once into such arrangements as will be mutually satisfactory, as to proposition, time, and place. Send on your proposition if you wish to discuss, and we will consider it, just as Elder Hansen was invited to do at Sioux City by Elder Baker.

Yours for the truth,

J. F. MINTUN.

Editors Herald:—In this Herald will be found an obituary of a child who died in Rushville, Buchanan county, Missouri, August 26, and I call the attention of the president of Far West district, or of the missionaries therein, to the fact that two members live at Rushville, a brother Johnston and Sr. Sarah Alice Dykes. At the funeral there was manifest a very serious and earnest attention to the word spoken, and the probabilities are that a good hearing can be had. Sr. Dykes writes me since, that they will be very glad to have ministers come, and will care for them while they stay and preach. Will some one in authority please take this up as soon as may be?

Your brother in Christ,

LARISSA, Mo., Sept. 3.

Editors Herald:—A few of us here are trying to keep our lamps trimmed and burning. We would like to have more preaching, but cannot complain very much. We have Sunday school every Sunday.

We would like to get some Latter Day Saint to rent a farm if we can. A house and everything that a man needs to work with, such as farm tools, etc. If anyone wants to try this country before buying, let them write to us. This fall is the time to rent to put in wheat, and if any of the Saints want to get home-dried peaches and apples cheap, address us at Larissa.

SMITHLAND, Iowa, Sept. 2.

Editors Herald:—We are still in the faith, though accomplishing little or nothing in the way of church work. We seem somewhat isolated here, surrounded by wooded hills, our only companions the wild songsters; but wild as it seems in our woodland home we are only a little over a mile from civilization.

While on a visit at my old home at Soldier recently, we were privileged to attend meetings at the schoolhouse. It seemed natural to meet with the Saints there again; but some of the younger attendants at the Sunday school who were mere children a few years ago are now young men and women, while those who were then babies now take part in the class work.

We also attended services at Moorhead, and there met many old and dear friends. We were grieved to find Sr. Thompson suffering severely from a fall caused by the horse she was driving becoming unruly.

Our hearts were saddened on receiving the last Herald to read of the illness of Sr. Ella J. Green, and our hearts went out to God, pleading that she might be spared, as the church as well as her home circle would sadly miss such a noble worker. May she long be spared to carry on her work for the advancement of the cause. Let us unite our prayers to this end.

Your sister in bonds,

REA, Missouri, Sept. 5.

Editors Herald:—On August 16 I open up at this place with the gospel tent. Brn. M. F. Gowell and Peter Anderson remember this place. They were here some two years ago with the tent, but could not get the people to come out to hear. A change has come. The first evening I had the tent about full, and tonight will make three weeks, and every night the tent has been full, and a number of times not more than half of the people could get in. A young man cut one of the guy ropes one evening, and the postmaster had him arrested, and he was find one dollar and costs, making $7.95. The order since then has been the best ever had at any protracted meeting in this place, so I am told.

The tent is located right at the side of a "union church" (?), but not union enough to permit Latter Day Saints to preach in it. The trustees have refused to open the church for us, and there seems to be quite a division among the people. Mr. Watson, the Methodist preacher, wanted them to open the church for us, but, no, we are not "orthodox."

It looks a little queer to see the tent right at the side of the church. When the time came on Saturday and Sunday to hold meeting (both of our services were at the same hour) I had most of the crowd, tent being full. The next Sunday, meeting was announced again in the church, but they found they could not get the crowd, and only preached at three p. m. I went to hear the preacher and he came to hear me. He seems to be a very nice man and was sorry I could not occupy the church. Wanted to know if I would go in if they would open it up. I said, "No, unless the trustees say so." So the matter stands. It will be a "death blow" to some of their membership in closing us out.

We have baptized four and others are almost ready for the water. Bro. J. Arthur Davis came just a week ago to help me, and his assistance was timely, too. I was almost worn out. Tent work is too much for one man.

Tonight will close our meetings here. Our closing subject is on the Book of Mormon. We go from here to Rosendale to continue from the 6th to the 16th.

Men tell us that there has never been meetings held in this section of country that have enlightened the people on Bible doctrine as much as these, and prejudice, almost like a mountain, has been moved from the minds of the people. May the Lord bless the seeds of truth that have been sown in the hearts of good, honest ones.

I am your colaborer in the gospel,

Editors Herald:—The reunion held in the Spring River district is a thing of the past. It passed off nicely. The preaching was grand, and the prayer services could not have been better. The good Lord made his will known to his Saints. The Sabbath school work was very good. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley is the right man in the right place.

A professed Christian has said to me that the doctrine taught could not be gainsaid.

Praying for the advancement of Zion's cause, I remain, yours for the truth,

MINDEN CITY, Mich., Sept. 3.

Editors Herald:—We have been having some good two days' meetings, and good preaching, in the eastern Michigan district, and also grand fellowship meetings. Fourteen were baptized at the different places. I believe, also, that much prejudice has been removed in many places, and many are looking upon us with favor now, when in the past they were opposed to us and our work.

Those of the ministry are in good faith and hope, and the cause is gaining in many places.

J. J. CORNISH.

PICKERING, La., Sept. 3.

Editors Herald:—It has been months since I have written to your paper. Some find fault with my letters and say I write such awful things; but if my letters accomplish good, I care nothing about who objects. People have told me I was a good preacher if it were not for that awful Mormonism. The awful Mormonism, as they call it, is the best doctrine ever offered to the human family.

I arrived here Saturday night, September 1. Began meeting Sunday, eleven a. m. Fine congregation out last night. Prospects bid fair for us to have a fine meeting. One person gave in her name for baptism, which will take place at three o'clock today. This makes two I have baptized from the Utah church, and I have never been on a mission to Utah, either.

The state of Louisiana needs a missionary. A man should be located here, and the opportunity is fine to open up the work all up and down the line of the P. G. Railroad. I see Bro. W. S. Macrae is appointed to Arkansas and Louisiana. I hope he will reach Pickering by October, anyway. What we need in this mission is men to push out and get the gospel before the people. There is not much to preside over in this country yet.

I learn or hear Dr. W. B. Tony will be at Cove, September 25, to annihilate Mormonism. I have written him I would be there, and if he comes and will debate fair propositions, we will have a debate in Cove, Arkansas. However, I don't look for him. I've met other men than W. B. Toney, and never saw the doctrine of Jesus Christ annihilated yet. Some Saints say to fish for the big fish and let the chubs go. But these kind of fishermen never catch any fish. All we can do is to let down the net and ask God to give the increase, and if eels, turtles, gars, crawfish, and a few snakes get in the net, we can't help it. Do our duty, preach and live the gospel, and God will bless us. In bonds, DAUGHTERS OF ZION AT INDEPENDENCE REUNION.

Tuesday, August 28, the Daughters of Zion met in the pavilion at Independence, Missouri, reunion, held at Washington park. "O Jesus, the giver," was sung, prayer was offered by Bro. E. L. Kelley, then hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee," after which the president of the advisory board, Mrs. M. E. Hulmes, opened the meeting by remarking that it was not with any desire to infringe upon the time which the Saints had set apart for worship, but because of an earnest wish that a better understanding of our work should obtain among the people that we had asked of the reunion management a brief portion of time in which to present its claims, and earnestly requested of any who felt an interest in it that they feel free to express their views, and if there should be those who perhaps were not in full sympathy with us, that they would not hesitate to state their objections or ask any questions which will lead to a mutual understanding, and if any had a word of cheer or encouragement, we would be glad to hear it.

A spirit of courtesy and kindness, breadth of purpose and depth of thought characterized the speeches made by the different sisters and brethren present.

Sr. M. Walker, of Lamoni, was first to respond, remarking:—

"As it is the desire of the mothers and sisters, whose cause we are here to represent, that the church should more fully understand the nature of the work we are trying to do, I can think of no better way in which to present it to you than by referring you to our constitution. And I trust you will permit me to say just here that I know personally in regard to the origin and inception of each work which is now moving on as helps to the church,—the body of Christ, which has many members, but is one body,—and I can testify to you today that the same Spirit which moved to the organization, first of the Prayer Union, afterward the Sunday School Association and Religio, moved also to the organization of the Daughters of Zion. If one is of God all are of him. If one is a mistake, all are mistakes. And will it not be a happy day for the church when all who are working for the common cause—the common good—will be content to labor each in the sphere to which they are best adapted and in which their labors are crowned with most success, without jealousy or envy one of another, but realizing in its fullest import that we must be one if we would be Christ's."

Then, reading the first clause of the constitution, she added:—

"It is a day in which many influences combine to destroy the sacred altar of family and home life. It is our aim to defend our homes from those influences and do all in our power to render them attractive, that our children may love them, and to educate them in the principles of the gospel, that they may love all which is pure and beautiful in the world and shun that which is evil. It has been said, 'The limit of a civilization is bounded by the aspirations of its motherhood,' and believing this to be true, let me ask you, What limit ought there to be to the aspirations of the motherhood of the church of the living God? Is it not our hope—our aim—to obtain a celestial glory? To inherit the kingdom of God and enjoy the companionship of Christ and his angels, as well as of the just and holy ones who have entered into the rest prepared for the people of God? There should be no limit to the aspirations of the motherhood of the church. For the purpose of helping to make our children instruments of good this work was planned, with the end in view that as they go out into the world they might be the means of lifting up and saving others. It is God's world, and each child born into it has a claim to a birthright of purity, and for this purpose Christ commanded the gospel to be preached in all the world."

Sr. B. C. Smith followed with a few well-chosen words, expressing the thought that the gospel is all-sufficient; but is the gospel lived up to in our homes? Let us search into these things.

Sr. Ida Stewart saw the necessity of such an organization, and she greatly rejoiced in its existence, although she was not a member.

Sr. Mina Cook Hart, a student under Prof. Oscar Chrisman of the State Normal University of Kansas, and editor of the magazine, Paidology or Child Study, said:—

"There is nothing more beautiful or more profitable than the study of the child. God has permitted the child to have parents, that they might guard and guide him while he is not capable of guiding himself; and therefore these parents will be held responsible to God for the way they guide and guard him. To effectually do this they must study him carefully, that they may know the meaning his every look and act, encouraging the good, discouraging the bad." Her remarks upon this subject were very interesting.

Bro. E. L. Kelley said:—

"My wife is a Daughter of Zion, and I am as much in sympathy with them as she is (or more so if possible). I thank God that he has raised up the Daughters of Zion, that while I am away preaching the gospel they may assist my wife in caring for my children, and that when they see them doing anything contrary to the laws of God they, as mothers and Daughters of Zion, may have an interest in them, and go to them as though they were their own, and warn them of their danger. I thank God for your organization, and pray his blessing upon you."

Sr. Harrington said that she had received great encouragement and help from the Daughters of Zion, and that she had recently received word from her son, who is away from home, assuring her that its teachings had helped her in her work with her children. She felt a great interest in its progress, and wherever she could say a word for it she intended to do so.

Swen Swenson:—

"My mother was a Daughter of Zion, and my wife is a Daughter of Zion. I have much to thank my mother for, because she taught me in my early years to be pure in body and in mind, and she said, 'Swen, keep your body pure, and when you want a companion for life, ask the Lord and he will give you one who is pure, because you have kept yourself pure.'"

Bro. R. M. Elvin said:—

"It is without hesitation or an apology that I respond to the request to speak before and for the daughters of Zion, for I believe this association to be a part of God's work. The reason for accepting is, because an ancient American by the name of Moroni said, 'Whatsoever inviteth and enticeth to do good is of God.' And I believe that the Daughters of Zion are an organization for good.

"Mock modesty is a fruitful cause of sin in the world, for fathers and mothers fail to properly teach their children. The children are therefore not prepared to meet and resist the invitation and allurements to wrongdoing. My teaching to my children has been not to speak a word or do an act that they would be ashamed to say or do in the presence of father or mother, or any good person. Judge ye if I have rightly taught!

"There is a law for our moral nature as there is also provided a law for our spiritual nature, and likewise a law of our physical nature, and a full redemption is that we return both spirit and body pure to our God. There is ample room in this field for the Daughters of Zion to accomplish a great work.

"I met a minister of another church. He made inquiry relative to a sister of the church—a Daughter of Zion; and with tears in his eyes he thanked God for the influence of that sister in her youthful life upon him, which had kept him from many wrongs.

"If the young sisters of the church would accept of my advice they would become a power for good, namely; let them pledge themselves: The lips that use tobacco or liquors shall never touch mine.

"May God bless, guide, and aid the Daughters of Zion, is my prayer."

Bro. Columbus Scott said:—

"Daughters of Zion is an organization, an auxiliary of the church, designed to develop the true method of building up the home, the instruction of the children and youth of the church (and others) in the principles of life; teach them how to avoid the evils and to be prepared to meet emergencies arising, and not be overtaken by their evil consequences.

"Some of the problems to be solved relating to this grave subject are, How to make home the most desirable place for the children. How to develop to a supreme degree the moral and spiritual faculties of the children, and lay such a foundation in their character that they will incline to the truth and right rather than to the evil. How to instruct them to avoid the reading of dissipating and poisonous fiction, and other literature that is ruining the lives of millions in this age in the home and abroad. How to develop lives of purity as against the crying, corrupting, degrading sin of the age, that carries so many of our young annually to untimely and unhonored graves—sexual crime. How to husband the time and renew the strength of life, and give ample time for service to home and God, by learning to give our life-energies to the study and practice of that only which contributes to the necessary and practical — the really needful — to life and its true and legitimate ends. How to avoid the mistakes so common in the consummation of holy matrimony, through incompatible unions formed, and the wormwood and gall-like trouble and sorrow consequent upon such matrimonial unions.

"All of which, with much more, that is all-essential to successful, upright, holy, and Godly lives. To suggest these dangers now so common among earth's children is to appeal to the membership of the Daughters of Zion, to set about the application of the measures to the end sought. Their work is one of the greatest relating to the welfare of home and earth's children."

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley gave forth one of his pithy epigrams: "The Lord couldn't be everywhere, so he made mothers." He said while the brethren are seeking to teach the pure principles of the gospel, the Sunday school, the Religio, and the Daughters of Zion are furnishing materials in this the hastening time wherewith to bring about the redemption of Zion.

Space will not permit us to quote the remarks of several of those present: Sisters Stetler and May spoke in earnestness of the good done by the auxiliary organizations of the church. Truly a hallowed influence seemed to rest over the meeting, and at the hour appointed for closing, all seemed to feel that it had been a profitable and enjoyable session.

After thanking the brethren for the kind words of encouragement, a dismissal hymn was sung, and Bro. Elvin pronounced the benediction. MRS. ABBIE A. HORTON.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Anna Lacy, of Nebraska, requests the prayers of the sisters in behalf of Bro. Walter Lacy, her son, that he may be made whole and strong. He has been afflicted for over a year.

Bro. D. H. and Sr. Mary B. Whetsel request the prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union, and also of the church, in behalf of their two boys, aged three and five years, who are subject to convulsions, that if it be God's will they may be healed.

Sr. Mary Britain writes: "I request the prayers of the Prayer Union and of the Saints in behalf of Sr. Agnes Britain, whom they have taken to the hospital at Topeka."

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

WHAT ARE YOU DOING TO ASSIST IN THE BUILDING UP OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK OF THE DES MOINES DISTRICT?

Read before the Sunday School Convention of the Des Moines District held at Colfax, Iowa, August 31, 1900, by Sr. Elsie Russell.

To me this is a very important question. First let us take a brief review of what the Sunday school is. Certainly there is no one who would say it was not an auxiliary of the church. Neither do we for one moment consider the Sunday school work of a minor character in any respect, but we consider it a work which should be the closest companion of the mission field, for we believe "the Sunday school of today is but the church of tomorrow."

It is during the Sabbath lesson that the Bible story is enthrilled into the students' minds. It is in the Sunday school where many are taught to pray. Then, too, we would say it is here where all the true principles of Christ and his gospel are taught in their greatest simplicity, endeavoring thus to adapt ourselves to the child's mind.

Above all, it is a home. Yes, a home, not merely to the children, but for the young folks and older people as well. It is a home where we all have a work to perform. Not a work for a human master, but for the Master divine. It is not here that we are working for hire, but for more than that; we are working for souls. Then as we see them enter into the door of his kingdom we can feel that we are "laying up treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, neither thieves break through and steal." What a blessed privilege to have such a home to work in, and to know we have such a loving Father to assist and reward us.

But we think we hear some one saying, "Yes, it would be grand if we only had a Sunday school to work in, but as we have not, we must wait for God to build up one." To those individuals we would say, "Why stand ye idle waiting for reapers more to come?" Why not "thrust in your sickle" and do your share toward building up a school in your vicinity? And though your harvest may be but small, just remember what was once recorded, "Paul sowed, Apollos watered, and God giveth the increase."

You cannot do your brother's nor your sister's work, neither can they do yours. Each one must work out his own salvation, and be his allotted work great or small, he must do it or lose his reward and thereby fall short of the glory every Latter Day Saint should be striving to obtain. We have no time to spare. Our lives are given us for a purpose, so let us be careful and not spend them carelessly.

Some say, "The Sunday school work is all right for the young, but I am too old to be engaged in a work of that kind." We are afraid those very people have forgotten the fact that they might assist the younger ones, and we are sure we are always made to feel a sense of encouragement when we are granted their presence and assistance. Parents, if it is worthy of your children's consideration, is it not worthy of yours? We feel assured that in every other case you would never fail to ask your children not to go where you could not be present. Now if your assistance is needed in every other case, why exclude simply this one and say they don't need you there? They do.

When Jesus was here among men, he forgot not the little ones, but said, "Suffer the little ones to come unto me and forbid them not." Again we read of him even stooping to take the little ones up into his arms and bless them, and then he tells us that we must become like unto them or we cannot enter into his kingdom. Now, how dare we say that they are not worthy of a portion of our time, talent, and interest, when they were worthy of our Savior's time.

Some say, "I don't know how to make a start." Perhaps a few suggestions might assist you in knowing how to enter into this work of the Sunday school. First, Do not deceive yourself and say, "I cannot," but put your shoulder to the wheel and say, "I will try." Second, Seek God's guidance and assistance, for if we wish to promote the spiritual growth of a Sunday school we must first seek and obtain from the fountain head a portion of the Spirit of our Master before we can diffuse to those around us any portion of it.

Now the question is, after receiving this, "How are we to impart it to others?" Being once in possession, we can no more retain or keep to ourselves this God-given quality than can the rose absorb all the light she receives. Our very natures will beam forth and run over with kind words, actions, and deeds to those around us, who in turn cannot help being imbued with the same spirit, causing them to look up higher and seek to receive of it more abundantly. To do good in any cause we must be earnest workers, letting our light shine that thereby others may be benefited.

Patiently and earnestly does the gardener work day after day among the plants, loosening the moist earth around them and removing any obstacle which might retard their growth, and destroying any insect which would be apt to mar their development and beauty. Should we not work as diligently as does he? Are the plants we have in charge of less consequence than his? Christ said the Spirit of God would not dwell in unholy temples. Then to your task and remove everything of an evil nature which will prevent the entrace and growth of the Spirit, and in so doing become soldiers in our Master's great "army."

So then, dear Saints, we who have enlisted in this great Sunday school work, and who have proven the joy and comfort that is to be obtained by working in it, I do beseech of you, Be not slothful. If you never have enlisted in this work, do not delay, but firmly resolve this moment that by God's assistance you will make a start and do what you can. Then upon returning home do not forget the resolution, but put it into practice. Let us endeavor to remember that it is our duty to "Lovingly, tenderly watch o'er the children,

Dear little lambs of the fold;
Never reject them, but always receive them
With kindness as He did of old."

A CHRISTIAN woman said: "My highest ideal in life is to help somebody up." Do you think there could be a more exalted mission? What is yours, dear primary teacher? Is it to have the largest primary class in your village? Is it to teach beautifully illustrated lessons, so that you shall establish for yourself a reputation as a brilliant teacher? Is it to win the love of the children that you may fill your heart with this sweet joy, and surround your life with its sunshine? Is it to be an efficient aid to the superintendent whom you esteem and honor? Then you have not found the true aim, the highest ideal of the primary teacher. Your aim, your one ever-present purpose should be, to win the children to righteousness. The word means, not only a true life but the one righteous life. Lead the children to know and love that life.

We need Christian manhood and womanhood; teachers, preachers, citizens, who have been "kept unspotted from the world." We have them all in our primary classes. Dear teachers, let our prayer be that of the Master's: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil."—Sel.

Sunday School Associations.

MANCHESTER AND SHEFFIELD.

Sunday school association convened at Manchester, England, Saturday, June 2. S. F. Mather superintendent, reported and the same spread on the minutes. Secretary's report: 12 schools, 430 scholars, 50 teachers, 67 officers. Sunday, June 3, at two p. m., a procession of Manchester and Salford schools marched to Hulme town hall, headed by the concertina band. Service in the hall was devoted to short speeches and singing. At the close the procession was re-formed and returned to South Manchester room for tea. At six p. m. the procession was again formed and marched to Hulme town hall for evening service. Presiding brethren Elders S. F. Mather and H. Greenwood. Solo by Bro. H. Palmer, "Our life is like a stormy sea;" trio entitled "Knocking," was given by Bro. and Sr. Green and Bro. Mather. The meeting was then addressed by Elder J. Dewsnup, Sen. He was not ashamed to present his views of Sunday school work, but felt he had not had much experience with little ones. Sunday school work of the church was in its infancy, and the Manchester district had been one of the first to take it up. Push and doing were required; talking and doing works good, and the church is considering the Sunday school work as it is part of God's work, and his Spirit prompted it. Building character was to teach principles of character, as obedience to the commands of the law. It is the duty of Latter Day Saints to teach their children, and mothers should know and be able to teach good principles. Children learn quick, and are difficult to change. We should consider our duty to God. Precept and example has something in it, for like begets like. The Jews show more filial affection than us, and if we cannot honor parents we cannot honor God. Children were stoned for disobedience. Parents should attend Sunday school and learn God's law and teach their children. The present gathering was a testimony of work done. Zion is the pure in heart. Hymn, "Will your anchor hold," was sung, and the meeting closed by prayer, after which two verses of the English national anthem was sung. Monday, June 4, the following schools reported by letter: Clay Cross, Farnworth, Leeds, London, East Manchester, North Manchester, South Manchester, Salford, Sheffield, Wigan. The report of Northeast Manchester was given verbally. One school, Hunslett Car, had not reported. The report of banner committee received and committee retained. East Manchester school received as a member of the association. A discussion and review respecting the relations of the Sunday school and the church districts (Manchester and Sheffield). After which, two questions were presented by Sheffield Sunday school: 1. Is the Sunday school an altogether independent organization? It was resolved to give the following answer: By rule, "Yes" (article III. Constitution of General Association); but the opinion and desire of this meeting is, that Sunday schools recognize the authority of their branches. 2. Can local laborers be appointed to represent the district association. They were referred to rule (Article IV. Constitution of District Association). The officers for ensuing year were: Superintendent, S. F. Mather, assistant H. Greenwood, secretary W. R. Armstrong. Financial secretary H. Palmer. Treasurer J. W. Taylor. Resolved that the officers of the association meet and confer with the officers of the Manchester district respecting the harmony of the association and the district.

FIFTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

To the Fifth Quorum of Elders; Dear Brethren:—I have lately mailed you each a copy of our circular letter, and have made some requests of most, if not all, of you in regard to our work. I now make the following general requests: Do all in your power to make a success of your work. Look on page 266 of the General Conference minutes for 1900, and keep accurate account of your labors according to that blank—never get a day behind. On March 1, 1901, sit down and compile your report from the date of your last report, or from March 1, 1900, and forward to me at Lamoni, Iowa. I will send you a blank report previous to that time.

I solicit your correspondence. Inquiries will receive careful attention; and any information which you think will tend towards the advancement of our work will be duly considered by the officers.

If any have failed to receive the circular letter, inform me, and one will be mailed you immediately.

The circular letter, besides the list of names of the members, contains the following, which is of interest to all the members of the quorum:—

The principal resolutions that are necessary to be observed are the resolution governing reports, the resolution concerning the use of tobacco and strong drink, the one requesting report of historical items, and the one regarding fees.

The resolution governing reports, adopted in 1897, is as follows: "Resolved, that if any member of the quorum fails to report annually, as prescribed by quorum rules, the secretary shall notify him of this resolution, and if he fails to make proper explanation or send report to quorum at next annual meeting, the quorum shall be at liberty to drop him from membership."

In regard to the use of tobacco and strong drink, the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, that from now on, we neither receive, nor retain, as a member of this quorum, an elder who is known to use tobacco or strong drink."

The Church Historian desires information on all items that might be of interest to the church. The quorum passed the following resolution, which requires members of this quorum to report to our Secretary, Bro. D. A. Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa, all items of news that in their judgment may be deemed of interest to the church. "Resolved, that we request the members of the Fifth Quorum to report all items of news of sufficient import to our secretary, he to transmit the same to the historian."

The resolution regarding fees to the effect that fifteen cents be requested from each member, each year, as dues for current expenses. This was passed in 1898.

In regard to applications for missions; the rule is that all applications for missions shall be made to the missionary in charge of the field where applicant resides. Particulars should be given as to number of dependents, amount required for family, and preference, if any, of fields.

Dear brethren of the quorum, let us labor during the coming year so as to receive the approbation of the Master, and make our life work of that character that will bring us nearer to God and in closer fellowship with each other in the spirit of love and unity.

Address me at Lamoni, Iowa, or Santa Ana, California.

Yours for better work,
D. A. ANDERSON, Sec.

SANTA ANA, Cal., Sept. 1, 1900.

INDEPENDENCE REUNION.

Second Reunion of Independence district was held at Washington park from August 24 till September 2, Pres. Joseph Smith and Apostle I. N. White presiding, having the appointing of all meetings and speakers. Police, janitor, ushers, and rules for the government of the camp, were left to the reunion committee. Robert M. Elvin secretary and press committee. Orville L. James in charge of the music. Elder Floyd C. Keck in charge of administration to the sick. Preaching was by Elders Columbus Scott, Swen Swenson, Henry Sparling, Morris T. Short, E. L. Kelley, Floyd C. Keck, Joseph Smith, John A. Robinson, Alonzo H. Parsons, and R. M. Elvin. The following brethren assisted in the preaching services and had charge of the prayer meetings: F. C. Warnkey, S. F. Cushman, W. N. Robinson, W. H. Garrett, Henry Resch, Swen Swenson, Henry Sparling, Roderick May, R. L. Ware, M. T. Short, Nelson Abrahams, F. M. Pitt, John Smith, C. Scott, F. C. Keck, S. J. Madden, J. A. Robinson, G. H. Hulmes, C. DePuy, Ellis Short, William Newton, and John D. White.

During the meeting six were baptized, and three children blessed. The weather was quite warm during the whole session and had two rain storms, nevertheless the campers seemed cheerful and happy.

By motion and vote it was decided to hold another reunion in 1901, time and place left to the executive committee.

Missionary in charge and Bishops Short and May to constitute the executive committee.

The Sabbath school, in charge of W. N. Robinson; Zion's Religio-Literary Society, in charge of J. A. Gunsolley; Daughters of Zion, in charge of Mary E. Hulmes; and The Sisters' Prayer Union, in charge of Margaret Windsor, occupied the afternoons.

The general health of the campers was good, and notwithstanding the opposing influence of the world, the flesh, and the Devil, the preaching was earnest and uplifting, and the prayer services calm, peaceful, and soul-cheering. Kansas City papers were fair and manly in reporting the reunion.

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Sec.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Northern Nebraska District, Greeting:—We have been looking over the field the past summer and find there is great need for a more earnest and determined effort upon the part of each member to live as becometh a follower of the Christ. There is a disposition to become so wrapped up in the things of this world that we cannot spare the time, energy, or means that might be required of us to give to God some little tribute of praise, and a small but reasonable service in the interest of his work.

Now, Saints, this should not be! We should be active! This work is worth all the labor we can bestow on it; and when we find a branch too indifferent to hold services, and where they do have services only two or three come out when there should be sixty or more, it is evidence of coldness in the work and of a very poor condition, very discouraging to the few active workers.

For shame on such a condition.

Blessed with the grandest work in the world, and the greatest privileges of any people, we should find no effort or sacrifice on our part too great to make in the interest of our fellow beings, and the furthering of this gospel hope. Besides, we cannot afford to stand still, but should progress and grow in grace and knowledge, virtue, and the power of the Holy Spirit for good. God has said, "Come up higher;" and the Apostle Paul said, "Be not conformed to this world;" and again, the Lord spoke to us through the seer of latter days, saying, "And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High."

Now how little heed is paid to these commands; and if we become careless and indifferent as to these things God has given us, how can we expect to have any claim on him, or that he would answer us when we call upon him? And how can we ever expect to get in suitable condition to be gathered together, or to enter the presence of our God and Savior? Jesus said his disciples should be the salt of the earth, and if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted? It (the salt) is good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under the feet of men. Now if we are alive and active, we are as good salt; but as sure as we become careless, indifferent, and negligent, we cease to be good, and are fit for nothing but to be cast out—to be trodden under the feet of men. Shall it be said of us that we have lost our savor?

Again: while we should be a light to the Gentiles, an electric light tower set upon a hill that cannot be hid, we by our carelessness and slothfulness become as a lamp with a very small and smoky chimney, and it is with great difficulty that we are able to penetrate the gloom sufficient to find the small flickering light that may be there.

It is essential for every member to be thoroughly alive in this work, and especially every officer. They should be diligent and active in their office. The offices in this church were not set there for the purpose of honoring some men by giving them office, but to perfect the Saints and edify the body of Christ. And we should seek to honor the office by diligent effort to perform the duties belonging to the office we may hold in great humility and prayerfulness before God, that it may be effectual unto the purpose whereunto God gave it.

It has been our desire to have every one of the priesthood who can do so to be at work. Where not engaged in branch work, seek for places in your near vicinity, and warn your neighbors as the Book of Covenants directs. The laity can be of great help in this also, if they will in wisdom and humbleness of spirit make the effort. You should study to use wisdom and patience in all your efforts.

There is another thing we desire to call your attention to. In the immediate past you have paid too little attention to the district conference. How can you expect the missionaries to do this work for you when they are not members of the district, or take very much interest when you do not manifest sufficient interest to come yourselves, or even send representatives in many instances? You should manifest an interest in the business that may come before these conferences, and they should be made times of refreshing, rejoicing, and instruction; helps along the way to mutually benefit one another and help on this great cause we profess to love. And some effort should be made to attend, even if it does require some little sacrifice of time and means. Can you count the benefits of this gospel in dollars and cents, or in time spent here? Think it over seriously. Can you think it is pleasing to God to have his people so careless in transacting the business he has intrusted to our care? Do you think it would encourage you to trust anyone with more when they manifest so little interest in that already given them? We think not!

We hope you will arouse yourselves to the necessity of being more energetic and active than in the past; and as our district conference is near, try and have each branch send a good representative, and be sure and send all reports promptly and properly made out.

Now, Saints, we plead with you to wake up and take hold anew, and let us put our shoulder to the wheel and roll the work forth as it should be, with an earnest zeal that will evidence faith in the work, active faith, that our light may shine brightly like an arc light, in which the electric current flows uninterrupted, for where the Spirit of God flows among his people, there is light, and it will shine. May God bless you and help you in this warfare of life, that you may come off more than conqueror is the prayer of your humble servants in gospel bonds.

TWO DAYS' MEETINGS.

There will be a two days' meeting held at Davis City, Iowa, September 15 and 16, in charge of J. R. Lambert and M. M. Turpen.

At Lucas, Iowa, September 22 and 23, services in charge of Duncan Campbell and J. C. Clapp.

Pleasanton, Iowa, September 29 and 30.

District conference at Lone Rock, near Pawnee, Missouri, October 6 and 7.

Two days' meeting at Evergreen, Iowa, October 13 and 14, at which time their new church will be dedicated; Joseph Smith to deliver the dedicatorial sermon.

Saints, these meetings have been appointed by request of the different branches, with a view to build up and encourage the work; let as many as possibly can attend every one, and if you cannot attend all, attend all you can. F. M. WELD, Dist. Pres.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of London district will meet at Toronto, October 5 to 7. Sunday school convention meets 2:30 Friday, October 5, the day before conference. We hope all Saints will put forth an effort to attend this conference and convention, as the Lord has said it pleases him to see the Saints so assembled. Branch secretaries will please accept this notice and get statistical reports made out and sent in. Secretaries, please be very particular in making out reports, as even one mistake causes a lot of writing, and makes work for everybody. Let us try to have it said that at Toronto conference there was not one report turned back for correction. Will the priesthood take notice and prepare reports for conference. Sunday school secretaries, please send reports of Sunday schools and avoid mistakes as much as possible; a secretary cannot be too careful in making out reports. I trust all will accept this notice, and every one that possibly can try to attend convention and conference. After October 1, address reports to 758 King street, West Toronto. JOHN L. BURGER, Sec.,
G. T. R. Roundhouse, St. Thomas.

Northeast Missouri district conference will convene at Pollock, October 6 and 7. We desire all who conveniently can to attend; bring your talents with you and let us use them harmoniously for the good of the conference. Branches and ministry, please forward reports to clerk, George A. Tryon, Huntsville, Missouri.

J. A. TANNER, Dist. Pres.

Fremont district conference will convene at the Saints' chapel, Thurman, Iowa, October 6, at ten a. m. Please send branch and ministerial reports to Charles Fry, in care of William Leeka, Thurman, Iowa, by October 4.

Conference of Northeast Kansas district will convene at Fanning, Saturday, October 6, at ten o'clock. We sincerely hope all will be present, especially all the officials with their reports, letting love abound in our hearts.

P. CADWELL, Pres.
J. W. BURNS, Sec.

Conference of Northern Minnesota district will convene with Audubon branch, October 13 and 14. Send branch reports to T. J. Martin, Detroit City, Minnesota, by the 10th of the month. Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, please report in person. Come, Saints and all, and let us have a good conference.

I. N. ROBERTS, Pres.
T. J. MARTIN, Sec.

BORN.

COHRT.—At Smithland, Iowa, November 6, 1899, to Elder F. E. and Sr. Cora B. Cohrt, a daughter. Blessed February 10, 1900, by Elders Hubert Case and F. E. Cohrt, and named Muriel Bethine.

WIGHTMAN.—To Bro. Sherman and Sr. Cora Wightman, of Lake Park, Washington, (formerly of Lamoni,) a daughter, March 10, 1900. Blessed August 20 by Bro. N. C. Enge.

SAWYER.—To Mrs. J. A. Sawyer, a son, May 5, 1900, near Albion, Idaho. Named Raymond Clay. Blessed by Elder Charles Albertson, August 19, 1900.

DIED.

MURRAY.—Irene Olivia, daughter of A. F. and Alice Murray, at Sixteen, Montana, August 24, 1900, aged 6 months and 1 day. Funeral service at the Saints' church at Reese Creek, in charge of G. Reese.

DYKES.—At Rushville, Missouri, August 26, 1900, Bessie, daughter of Mr. George and Sr. Alice Dykes, aged 9 years, 23 days. Bessie was not a member, but she believed the gospel and had faith in God's healing power. But the elders were so far away none were obtained for her. Word was sent to Atchison, Kansas, and Brn. R. Warnock and H. A. Stebbins (the latter happening to be there) went over. The former offered a feeling prayer and the latter preached of the atonement of Christ, the resurrection, and the hope of eternal life. The face of the child bore witness to the reputation given that she was in life an obedient, loving, faithful, and truthful one; pure in heart, and ready for the land of the blessed, wanting to be baptized, but having no opportunity till death came.

TEAKLE.—At Runnells, Iowa, August 30, 1900, Mrs. Cordia Laughlin Teakle. She was born December 30, 1866, in Stark county, Ohio; was baptized in 1883, and since that time has lived as a prayerful, consecrated Christian, ever ready to defend the faith she so dearly loved. Through all her suffering she was not heard to murmur. A husband, an aged mother, one sister, and two brothers mourn her departure. Funeral sermon by Elder J. C. Clapp in Saints' chapel. The body was taken to Olivet for burial. An immense throng met the corpse at the depot.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

TRACES OF ANCIENT AMERICAN RACE.

The whole scientific world is interested in vast and extensive ruins recently unearthed in New Mexico and southern Colorado. In all parts of Europe, as well as among students and members of the faculty from many of the colleges and institutions of learning in this country, the matter is receiving so much attention that archæologists flock to the region.

Sleeping 'neath a forest of pinon and cedar, acres in extent, on Montezuma mesa, are the thrice ancient ruins of a gigantic hostelry, which from gathered data must antedate hundreds of thousands of years. The busy hands and active brains which planned and created this building, as well as many of the smaller ones which have been imbedded so deeply and so long down in mother earth, must certainly have existed ages and ages prior to any time that scientists have supposed that man inhabited the earth.

There are hundreds of rooms in this great hotel and the interior partitions are of stone a foot in thickness. These builders possessed some knowledge of architecture, for the walls of their several storied houses are vertical; the greater the strength of the walls, when the several courses of stone formed overlaping joints, was also known. Their stone partition walls join the exterior ones at true right angles.

They had fireplaces with plastered flues extending from base to summit and they were made on as true principles to insure draft as we have today. That they used beams in their great houses showed that they also had a knowledge of the tensile strength of timber. These silent walls tell so much, and the accumulated tons of debris are mute but positive witnesses of the advancement of these early people on our continent.

The way in which the base of these houses was constructed exemplifies that they also knew of the force of pressure, inasmuch as each story was made of less thickness as less pressure was exerted. The mortar which was used is now almost as hard as cement where it is now exposed to the elements and seems to have been from a soil containing much peroxide of iron and infusorial shells of marine origin, as they did not know the properties of burnt limestone.

Their cutting tools were made from igneous rocks and with these they dressed the hardest sandstone; thousands of square yards of which may be found in a single ruin. In a ruin at Aztec, New Mexico, there are at least 10,000 tons of stone brought by patient toilers from a quarry two miles distant, for at this time there were no beasts of burden on this continent and the shoulders of the men were the bearers of the quarry dressed stones. In a width of fifty feet every stone has been cast aside and these now form two great ridges of rocks, between which these sandle-shod home-builders paced their way to and from work with their loads of stone.

With such a few primitive tools it is wonderful what they accomplished. A civil engineer of today would not now locate any better than they did, those cycles of years ago, their miles of ditches through cemented gravel, or lava, and sandstone rock and with such a uniform grade. Many of the large reservoirs which they constructed are now used for the storage of water.

In one of these old ruins a smelter was found, and near this old furnace was a large iron bar covered with rust, also some copper ore, some gold ornaments, and a piece of beautiful turquoise. Some pieces of cloth were also found, and one piece was woven in spirals something after the manner of a huge spider's nest. Wild flax and the plumage of birds were used in their primitive looms. Feather cloth generally wrapped the departed, and this shroud was varicolored.

Probably the highest attainment of these early people in art is shown in their pottery, and they were their most treasured possessions. In their graves were found over a hundred different shaped vessels, and these bowls or pitchers were placed therein by loving hands containing food for the support of the spirit on its journey to another world. So they did not believe in utter annihilation, but in the immortality of the soul.

The great mesa rock where these ruins are located rises about three hundred feet above the bed of what was once a great inland lake. On its eastern side is still a belt of the old lake bed about one and one half miles in width and five miles in length. From its opposite base, extending some fifteen miles toward the southwest, is a deposit of lava having a depth of over a hundred feet and covering more than four hundred thousand acres.

There is a theory that these builders lived prior to the time of the lava overflow and that the heat and noxious gases arising from the molten rock caused their destruction. Such would follow, had they then lived, during the tertiary period, for then the overflow occurred. There is no evidence of the great glacial epoch; there are, however, some traces of a merely local glacial deposit.—Chicago Tribune, August 26, 1900.

A SERMON BY WILHELM II.

Delivered on board the yacht Hohenzollern, off the coas of Heligoland, July 29, 1900. Translated by the Rev. J. F. Dickie, D. D., pastor of the American church, Berlin.

And it came to pass when Moses held up his hand Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand Amalek prevailed.—Exodus 17:2.

. . . Who does not understand what our text seeks to say to us today? Once more the heathenish Amalekite spirit uplifts itself furiously in far off Asia. With great power and cunning craftiness, with fire and sword it seeks to bar the passage and the progress of European commerce and civilization, and to stem the victorious tide of Christian faith and Christian morals. Once more sounds out the command of God, "Choose out men, go out and fight against Amalek." A fierce and bloody conflict has begun. Already many of our brethren stand yonder in the fire; many are journeying towards the enemy's coast, and ye have seen with your own eyes the thousands, who, at the call: "Volunteers to the front! Who will be the defenders of the empire?" have assembled themselves together, that with banners flying they might enter the arena of the strife.

But we who must remain behind in our homes; we, who are held back by many sacred duties . . . tell me, hear we not the call of God that comes to us, and says even to us: "Go up into the mount. Lift up your hands to heaven. The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much." Well, then, yonder, in the distance, the host of warriors . . . here at home the army of intercessors. Such is the sacred war picture of today.

Let this quiet morning hour remind us, let it admonish us of the holy duty of intercession, let it remind us of the sacred power of intercession. . . .

Christians! in order that our brethren out yonder may remain cheerful in their most pressing need, may remain faithful in the severest duty, undaunted even in the greatest danger . . . for this they need, more than munitions of war and deadly weapons —more even than youthful courage and flaming enthusiasm, . . . for this they need blessing from on high; otherwise they can neither secure nor retain victory. And that world on high opens itself to prayer alone. Prayer is the golden key to the treasure house of our God. But he who has this has also the promise, "He that asketh, receiveth." Or shall we lay our hands idly on our bosoms? Woe to us; woe to us should we be thus lazy and sluggish whilst they are passing through the hard and bloody trial! Woe to us if we only look upon the great tragedy with eager curiosity from behind the scenes, whilst they are engaged in deadly conflict! That would be Cain's spirit with the cruel cry, "Am I my brother's keeper?" That were indeed treachery to our brave brethren, who have put for us their lives in jeopardy. Never! Never! We will not merely set battalions of warriors in battle array. . . . No, but also a holy legion of praying people.

Verily, how much there is to be petitioned for on behalf of our brethren going forth to battle. They are to be the arm of strength, which metes out punishment to the murderous assassin; they are to be the mailed hand that cleaves for itself a pathway into the chaotic turmoil; sword in hand they are to go forward in defense of our most sacred possessions. Therefore we will give them convoy with our prayers across the stormy sea, upon their long marches, into the thunder of the battle, and into the stillness of the hospital. We will pray God the Lord, that they may manfully stand at their posts, fight their battles with the courage of heroes, all undaunted, that bravely and silently they may endure their wounds; and that God may give to those who fall under fire a blessed end and the reward of the faithful; in a word, that He may bring them home with laurels upon their helmets and the badge of honor upon their breasts, to the land of their fathers.

Have we no faith in the sacred power of intercession? Well then! what saith our text? When Moses held up his hand Israel prevailed. The earnest prayer of a Moses makes the sword of the enemy blunt. It thrusts itself as a wedge into the serried ranks of the foe. It caused them to waver and it made victory to light on the fluttering flags of Israel. And if the prayers of Moses accomplished all that, shall not our prayers also likewise prevail? God hath taken back no syllable of His promise. True prayer can, even today, lay the Dragon banner in the dust and plant the banner of the cross upon the enemy's ramparts. Nor does Moses stand alone in his intercession. Look forth! there, upon the heights above Sodom, stands Abraham interceding with God, and with his supplications he prays Lot out of the burning city. And shall not our intercessions succeed in praying our fighting comrades out of the fire of battle?

Look yonder! there in Jerusalem lies the young Christian church upon its knees; their leader, their father lies imprisoned and in fetters; and behold! with their prayers they summon the angel of God into the prison, and he leads Peter safely out. And shall not our prayers have power to burst open the doors of the oppressed, the imprisoned and the persecuted, and to set the angels of God at their side?

Yes! the eternal God liveth still. Our mighty Ally still reigneth. The Holy God, who cannot allow sin and wickedness to triumph but directeth the things that are holy in his sight, will rise against an ungodly nation. The Almighty, who can pierce through the thickest walls as though they were spiders' webs and can scatter the strongest hosts as though they were sand heaps—the merciful faithful God, who bears the weal and woe of his children upon his fatherly heart, hears their every sigh and sympathizes with their every need. Holy prayers open his fatherly hand and it is filled with blessing. Earnest prayers open his fatherly heart and it is full of love. Yes, faithful, persevering prayers bring the living God down and set him in the midst. And if God be for us, who can be against us?

. . . Moses held his hands on high until the going down of the sun. Then had Joshua already smitten Amalek with the sharpness of the sword. Our conflict will not be brought to an end in a day; but let not the hands grow weary; let them not sink till the victory is won. Let our prayers be a wall of fire around the camp of our brethren. How will the thought strengthen, inspire, inflame them—the thought, thousands, nay millions at home bear us upon their praying hearts.

The King of kings is calling: "Volunteers to the front. Who will be the intercessors of the kingdom?" Oh! if it could only be said here also, "The King called, and all, all came." Let not one of us fall. He is a man, who can pray.

The history of the world will one day describe the war of these days. But man sees only what meets his gaze. He can only tell what the wisdom of the leader, the bravery of the troops, and the sharpness of the weapons accomplish. Eternity will one day reveal much more. It will make manifest the mighty factor, which the secret prayers of the faithful became in this struggle; how the promise was again fulfilled, "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee." And therefore continue instant in prayer. Amen.—Ex.

The House of Commons ordinarily sits five days in the week. During the entire session of 1898 it sat but once on a Saturday. On Wednesdays the Speaker takes the chair at twelve o'clock and remains until half past five, when the business in which the House is engaged ceases, and the other business proper for that day is postponed to the next day unless the House orders another day for the next action on any of the pending questions. If at 5:30 p. m. the Committee of the Whole is sitting, it rises and the Chairman reports.

On Mondays, Tuesdays, Thurdays, and Fridays the House begins its sessions at three o'clock and may work until midnight, except during the short period when the Speaker retires informally for tea. At midnight the business, whether in House or Committee, ceases, and if in Committee, the Committee rises and reports. The remaining business appointed for that day is postponed to the next day unless the House selects another day for any measure. No opposed business can be taken up, and usually in three or four minutes the House adjourns. If when midnight arrives, or half past five comes on Wednesdays, and the debate on a measure is interrupted, any member may move the "closure," and the Speaker or Chairman must remain in his place until all the motions needed have been put.—Hon. Thomas B. Reed, in The Saturday Evening Post.

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPT. 19, 1900.

Among others we were permitted to be at, and participate in, the opening exercises of Graceland for the school year of 1900–01, and like others who are interested in the welfare of that worthy institution, we were pleased with the outlook as it was presented at the opening of another year. In another column will be found a description of the opening from the pen of Professor J. A. Gunsolley, hence it will not be necessary for us here to say anything of that, so we will present some thoughts that have come to us regarding Graceland and its mission.

As an alumnus we have a peculiar and strong interest in Graceland—an interest which is only strengthened and intensified by reason of our being a Latter Day Saint. We glory in its success and become happy when the sun of prosperity shines upon it; we deplore there being any obstacles in its pathway of progress and are saddened by any shadow cast upon it by any cloud blown up by the winds of adversity. Graceland, we believe, has a distinctive mission in the world, and we also believe that there was wisdom in the movement that was inaugurated to bring it into existence. Believing thus we cannot but feel that as the Saints as a church are responsible for its existing now, they are morally responsible for its support. Being brought into life by the Saints, it is of necessity dependent upon them for the means to keep it in existence until it will have fulfilled its mission. Are we, any of us, prepared to say that Graceland has already done that? If we are, then can we rest upon our oars and decline to give it our financial and moral support. Its mission incomplete, its support must be assured, else the work will suffer loss.

Graceland's work is being appreciated, and the young of the church are coming from far and near to enjoy its blessings. Some of our young brethren now in attendance have passed excellent schools on their way here. They have been attracted by the conditions surrounding our school which make it pleasant and profitable for our young to be at Graceland in preference to other schools.

When it was decided by the church that the time had come to found a church school, a number of men were selected, and upon them was placed the burden of founding such institution. Zealously did they work, and in good faith. Believing, as we do, that men working for the interests of the cause of our Master are entitled to a degree of inspiration proportionate to their devotion and faithfulness, we cannot but believe that the zealous and devoted first-workers in the Graceland College movement were divinely led in their work. Do we not, then, owe it to them, to their devotion to the good of the work, to the inspiration which was undoubtedly in the college movement; do we not, we say, owe to those men and their faithful zeal our earnest and untiring support?

The men who now have the burden on their shoulders are also God-fearing men, men whose very souls are in the latter-day work, and we owe to them our unflinching and willing support. It would be grossly wrong for us to appoint a body of men as trustees for such an institution and then leave them to make the fight alone. We must help them!

The conditions surrounding Graceland now are such that if it makes a success as an institution of learning, it reflects upon us as a church great glory and honor. If it fails it leaves to us what cannot but be considered an everlasting disgrace and a shame. Graceland is distinctively a church institution, and its success is a matter of interest to every Latter Day Saint.

We have heard some of our men make the statement that the Graceland movement was premature, and we have heard them persist in such statements after the school was started and busy fulfilling its mission, when to us the statements sounded like crying over spilled milk. Conservatism is a good quality in men and leaders; but ultraconservatism has always been an obstacle to the progressive spirits, though it may have acted as a balance wheel to steady the movements of those impelled by the spirit of blind innovation.

We do not believe that the college movement was premature. The question of a church school was early agitated, as will be shown by the following resolution introduced at the Annual Conference of 1869, held in St. Louis, in April:—

Resolved that this conference recommend for the consideration of the Twelve and the general church authorities, the feasibility and advisability of establishing a school for the education of our own young men, with a view to the ministry; and that the question be brought up at the next sitting of the General Conference.

In a somewhat lengthy preamble to the above resolution, occurs the following somewhat peculiar "suggestion":—

A quarter section of land could be purchased, a building erected, the land fenced and broken, professors elected, and the land worked conjointly by professors and students. Four or five hours a day of close study is sufficient, six or eight hours a day of farm labor would contribute to the health of body and mind, and by this means a school could be made both efficient and self-sustaining.

From this it would seem that the "college" idea has existed in the minds of the Saints since 1869 or before, and it certainly seems as though the idea has had plenty of time to mature. Had the suggestion above noted been followed out, it is our opinion that the church today would have had a self-supporting school surrounded by a well-improved tract of valuable land.

Be that as it may, it is evident Graceland was founded as a result of the cumulative effect of the "college" idea which has been in the minds of our people for many years. Graceland College now is! It is a Latter Day Saint school; and we have enough confidence in the movement to believe that it will be a Latter Day Saint success.

It has now fully entered upon another college year under brighter prospects than ever, and we trust our college debt will be entirely wiped out before the year closes!

ONE OF JOSEPH SMITH'S MURDERERS.

We have indulged the hope that the actual murderers of Joseph and Hyrum Smith would live and die without making any sign of their complicity in that crime. But from what we publish below, taken from the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, Missouri, for September 10, 1900, we are informed that there is one who has told the record of shame on himself. We pity the fate of such a man, for the Lord said a long time ago, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay."

DEATH OF CALVIN COLE.

Calvin Cole, aged 84 years, died at four o'clock yesterday morning at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Carrie Messenger, 3326 Bell avenue. He has been living in St. Louis since 1893, but was one of the pioneer settlers of Hancock county, Illinois. He was in the dry goods business at Warsaw, Illinois, during the trouble with the Mormons, then at Nauvoo, Illinois, and bears the distinction of being one of the six men who killed Joseph Smith, the Mormon leader, while he was climbing out of the jail at that place. The party drove to Nauvoo, and on the way back the horses gave out when two miles out of Nauvoo and the party narrowly escaped being captured by the Mormons. The name of the man who fired the fatal shot has never been divulged!

Mr. Cole was born in Penn Yan, New York, December 18, 1815, and came West when he was 21 years of age, settling in Palmyra, Missouri, where he remained six months, when he removed to Warsaw, Illinois. In 1839 Mr. Cole married Miss Jane Hill, who died in 1865. He leaves three children, namely, Mrs. Messenger, Mrs. A. M. Danely, wife of Rev. A. M. Danely, president of Craddock College, Quincy, Illinois, and a son, Mr. Ed Cole. The funeral services will be held at noon today at the residence of Mrs. Messenger, 3326 Bell avenue, by Rev. William Bardens, of Trinity Episcopal Church. The remains will be interred at Warsaw, Illinois.

THE FLOOD AT GALVESTON.

One of the things for which we of the latter days were to look as having been foretold by prophetic utterance was the "sea heaving itself beyond its bounds." One of the most disastrous and appalling of this sort of happenings has lately occurred at Galveston, Texas. Situated on an island of sand off the south coast of the state separated from the main land by a bay, and exposed to the Gulf of Mexico on the other side, the city is peculiarly exposed to the ravages of those storms for which the extreme south is noted.

On the evening of September 7, such a storm came, and by a terrific wind drove the waters of the gulf and the bay upon and over the low island until the city was buried to the depth of ten to thirteen feet. The waters lashed to fury beat on the foundations of the devoted city while the fierce tornado tore to pieces the superstructures built on them until more than half of the buildings, public and private, were either swept away, or utterly ruined. It is estimated that five thousand lives were lost in the city, more than an eighth of the population of forty thousand with which it is credited.

So great indeed was the destruction of life, that all effort to secure an authentic statement of the number of the dead was abandoned, and the corpses of men, women, and children, and animals were burned in the debris of ruined buildings, and loaded on barges were towed out to sea and thrown overboard, to be the prey of the fishes, to sink to the depths whence the trumphet call shall summon them at the last day, or to drift back to the shores to again confront the living with the awful nature of the storm that took them out of life.

Newspaper men, tired of the effort to describe the effect and ruin of this most memorable storm, gave it up in despair, for do as they would, no words were sufficient to picture to the living who did not see the havoc wrought by the wind and the waves.

Not only did Galveston, the city, suffer, but the entire reach of coast counties were storm swept, over seventy-five towns being devastated, some swept clean out of existence, other partially destroyed; while families by the thousand are left homeless, crops ruined, and starvation staring them in the face.

Besides the loss of life at Galveston, the loss in the path of the tornado will likely foot up into the thousands.

The Governor of Texas, the Mayor of Galveston, and the authorities of the government are all engaged in an endeavor to secure aid for the suffering living, to prevent further disaster by the occurrence of an epidemic caused from the putrefying of the dead bodies of man and beast, and resuscitate the business of the stricken city. So great and so strange destruction has been wrought that there is serious question whether the city should be rebuilt or the site abandoned entirely.

It is surely a visitation worthy of comment as one of the signs of the times.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. A. Whitehead writes from Cadillac, Mich., September 5:—

The good work is moving on in this place. Eleven more have found it their duty to obey the gospel here. My prayers and my labors shall ever be for this cause that it may advance.

Bro. S. W. Tomlinson, under date of August 18, writes from Tory Hill. Ontario:—

The work is progressing slowly in these parts. There is lots of opposition. The enemy is hard at work. Two schoolhouses closed against us. Here two were baptized last Sunday; one a promising young lady, a school teacher. We expect to baptize two more tomorrow.

Some time ago Bro. Eben Miller sent us copies of some hand bills he had distributed. They were arranged in the shape of a warning against the Utah deceivers, and invitation to come and hear the truth. Concerning them, Bro. Miller wrote:—

We have five thousand of these dodgers after these Utah elders. It will make it interesting for them as they move along. We do not desire to go to sleep or take a vacation while life lasts. The evil one never takes a vacation during hot weather, and why should Saints?

Patriarch A. H. Smith, wrote from San Francisco, Cal., September 10, as follows:—

The reunion is a thing of the past. There was a profitable gathering, and the preaching was of an unusually high order. The speakers acquitted themselves in a masterly manner. The Spirit was present in power, and all enjoyed themselves, so far as I could judge. There were six baptisms at the reunion, and more promised. I gave about forty blessings, and nearly as many more wanted them, but time, want of strength, and inconveniences hindered. We will stay here a week or ten days and visit in the neighborhood, and then we may go to San Jose and Tulare to attend the conference of the Central district beginning about the 5th of October. Am in good health.

Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths, writing from San Francisco, California, September 8:—

We are having a good reunion. A very large gathering of Saints here, for this country.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By letter from Bro. N. C. Enge to Bro. Heman C. Smith, Boston, September 8, we learn that he and Bro. M. P. Hansen were that day starting for their mission, Hombergsund pr Lillesand, Grinstad. Success to the missionaries is our prayer.

Bro. Heman C. Smith's report for July 1 shows twenty-five baptisms in his field, the ministry being fairly active. Report delayed and partial from probably unavoidable conditions.

We note by the Ottumwa Courier that September 25–27, the Christian Endeavorers will hold a convention in Ottumwa, Iowa. Over five hundred delegates are expected to attend.

President Joseph Smith, Business Manager J. Smith and wife, and Elder Columbus Scott returned from the Stewartsville reunion on the 11th. They report a good and pleasant time enjoyed by all.

Bishop Kelley spoke to the Lamoni Saints Sunday morning. He reminded them that it was not right for Saints to indulge in gossip and backbiting.

R. M. Elvin came home last week to see to some of his duties as a member of Graceland board of trustees. Sunday night he delivered a discourse on the subject of Graceland College, giving some of his experiences in soliciting, etc.

Elder H. A. Stebbins left last Friday for Wisconsin to do some missionary work and to recreate awhile. His wife accompanied him as far as Burlington, Iowa.

The St. Joseph Record recently noted the fact that President Smith passed through that city. It gave a fair interview held with him, and noted quite accurately some facts concerning church history and Lamoni. The press, generally, is becoming more inclined to give us fair representation.

Rev. John Alexander Dowie is not well received by the London press. It is of the opinion that this professed healer of men's woes is quite too anxious for converts who have money to aid his mercenary schemes. His followers in the persons of Elder Bassinger and a Mr. Leiby have been run out of Mansfield, Ohio, and the house of the latter wrecked by a mob.

ADMINISTERING TO THE SICK.

It is seldom we see anything of late touching spiritual gifts, as set forth in the revelations, or the signs designed of God to follow the believer, —notwithstanding their prominence and importance in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and to the children of God.

The spiritual gifts are among the gospel promises relating to this life, made to those who obey the gospel. They are to follow the believer. This is so set forth by our Lord, and must not be lost sight of. The gospel is based on principles. Principles are basic, all essential and eternally immutable. Principles are the elements of law. We read of "the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom," and "the principles of the doctrine of Christ."—D. C. 102:2; Heb. 6:1, 2.

And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions.

This is an important statement, and bears its truthfulness on its face. Principles and laws are arbitrary and absolutely unyielding in their nature. Hence, we read:—

And again, verily I say unto you, That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still.—D. C. 85:8.

All laws have conditions. To go outside of these conditions is to break the law. To break the law is to go beyond the reach of mercy, justice, or judgment, according to the foregoing statement of God. It sometimes occurs that it is sought to get around these conditions by citing the statement: "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient." A statement that with a moment's thought carries falsehood on its face. It was no more lawful for Paul to lie or steal, or break any other law, than for any other person to do so, and that which is unlawful cannot be expedient. Paul's real statement is,

All these things are not lawful unto me, and all these things are not expedient. All things are not lawful for me, therefore I will not be brought under the power of any.—1 Cor. 6:12, I. T.

Paul never departed from the divine law for any purpose whatsoever (1 Cor. 9:21), "being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ."

Our Savior says:—

For verily I say unto you, heaven and earth must pass away, but one jot or one title shall in no wise pass from the law, until all be fulfilled.—Matthew 5:20.

After saying this of the law of Moses, a temporal, a law not designed to save men hereafter, what did he say of the divine law of life?

Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 5:21, I. T.

He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people.—Heb. 10:28-30.

A degree of mercy, so-called, that brooks the law, is an attempt to abuse that divine attribute, and diverts it from its divinely intended avenue, and through a pretense causes it to look upon sin with impunity. And policies that seek justification at the expense of the law will as surely come to shame in the end as that fire burns those who wade through it regardless of the conditions governing. God appoints the way he wills his work to be done, in all particulars, and does not sanction devising of human ways of doing that work, by human wisdom under the specious plea of expediency. Human expedients as substitutes for God's way of accomplishing his purposes have always ended in failure and disgrace, and it is right that it should be so, for all such attempts reflect upon the divine wisdom and will.

Man's eminence among men, among the servants of God, matters nothing to Deity, as witness:—

Remember, remember, that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men: for although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, yet, if he boasts in his own strength, and sets at naught the counsels of God, and follows after the dictates of his own will, and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him.—D. C. 2:2.

The history of the world from the days of the Tower of Babel, through all the ages down to the Babylon of latter days that shall fall, afford lessons teeming with information showing the utter futility and folly of man attempting to do works for God, that he never appointed, and in ways differing from his expressed will.

Man has not only walked differently to God in regard to the teaching and application of his law and ordinances, and the way of building up his church, but they have taken license to exercise a censorship over his holy word. (Deut. 12:32; Jer. 36:32.) And the long list of workers whose works have come to naught were considered great by those among whom they labored. God's complaint is, your ways are not my ways. (Isa. 55:8.) They have transgressed the laws and broken the everlasting covenant, changed the ordinance. (Isa. 24:5, 6.)

Why do ye make void the law of God by your traditions?

But in vain do they worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.—Matt. 15:1-9

Ye have said, It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?—Mal. 3:14.

David the king, while viewing prophetically the deplorable state of affairs to characterize the world religiously in latter days, declares:—

It is time for thee, Lord, to work: for they have made void thy law—Psalms 119:126.

THE ORDINANCE MADE VOID.

After citing the foregoing as a basis in general, and as foundational to the subject of this paper in particular, we now consider the subject of the ordinance of administering to those ailing,—more directly. The ordinance which men say it is "vain" to observe, and that men have strayed from is thus divinely stated:—

They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16:18.

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.—James 5:14, 15.

This law, ordinance, has for its basis, faith in God and his Son, Jesus Christ, and therefore implies positive, active faith in the gospel of Christ, of which it is one of the gracious ordinances. An acceptance of the administration of the ordinance implies faith in the divine calling or authority of the elders who administer; and its acceptance further implies faith on the part of the recipient in the divinity of the church of which the elders are members and ministers. Anything short of this is inconsistent.

This like all other laws, has bounds and conditions. This law does not, as given above, generally apply to those out of, not members of the church. James addresses his language to the church, as may readily be seen by reference to his epistle, and Jesus says: "These signs shall follow them that believe," the gospel he was then authorizing the eleven apostles to declare to all the world. The elders who administer in this ordinance cannot in righteousness transcend the bounds of his authority. I would not be understood as asserting that the elders may not administer to those out of the church, providing such have faith, but the law in the premises does not authorize it. Healing is a "spiritual gift" (1 Cor. 12:9), and is a bestowment through the Holy Ghost on those administering, and can only be exercised in harmony with God's will.

But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

Can any one of the spiritual gifts be exercised righteously contrary to God's will? As a protection against all imposition, this "gift of healing," in its administration, carries with it the recognition of Deity, being done in the name of the Lord Jesus, recognizing him to be all the gospel claims him to be,—not only a perfect man, but "God with us;" "the Lord from heaven;" "Prince of life;" our Mediator, Redeemer, and Savior, and our atonement, the only one through whom eternal salvation can come to man; "The way, the truth, and the life;" "the resurrection and the life;" the only door to the fold of glory. The administration of this ordinance of healing recognizes the Holy Ghost as one with God and Jesus Christ, in operation and purpose. It recognizes the gospel of which it is a part, as being "the power of God unto salvation to all who believe," and it becomes a witness to the truth of all these propositions.

The administration of this ordinance implies the existence of the Church of Jesus Christ as divinely set up and of that nature and form of organization, as described in the New Testament, as otherwise; the elders to be sent for would not be at hand to occupy in this function of their office. Evidence of this is manifest in the absence of this ordinance in many forms of religion now extant. So we see that to hold to this ordinance in its consistency is to hold to all the Scriptural teachings that relate to the whole system of religion, of which it is a part. Anything short of this is absolute inconsistency.

By the later revelations given to the church we are taught that,— in both those who administer to the sick, and those to be administered to, in order to realize the end sought,—a restoration to health. And the faith to heal or to be healed is a gift from God, as see:—

And again, to some it is given to have faith to be healed, and to others it is given to have faith to heal. . . . And all these gifts cometh from God, for the benefit of the children of God.—D. C. 46:7.

For reasons known to our Father he does not always will to give the faith to heal and to be healed. And this is not peculiar to the latter-day work alone, but has characterized God's work in all ages past. Jesus says to Jews in olden days:—

Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself; whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country.—Luke 4:23.

But our Lord met this predicted reproach by the history of the Jewish people, thus:—

And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country. But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land; but unto none of these was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.—Luke 4:24-27.

And in his own country Jesus "did not many mighty works there, because of their unbelief." (Matt. 13:58.) Unbelief among those outside forbids the reception of the blessing; but for some divine reason or other God's people must sometimes be denied. As example see the multitude of illustrations cited by the Apostle in Hebrews, chapter eleven. To many it was given to have faith, to "subdue kingdoms," "escape the edge of the sword," "quench the violence of fire," out of sickness were made strong, "turned to flight the armies of the aliens," raze to the ground the walls of cities, have their dead raised to life, and work righteousness, and have all emergencies met, while others, through faith, endured cruel mockings, stonings, scourgings, wander in sheepskins, goatskins, and inhabit dens and the caves of the earth. Faith to endure all reverses, while the prayer seems to us not to be answered, is a most wonderful faith. Who has it? Who can glory in tribulation now?

And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children. My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

Suppose the Lord laid his hand on one of his children to chasten by affliction of body, and they summon the elders to administer? Will the Lord change his intention concerning the matter because the elders pray? Will he lift his hand short of the accomplishment of his purpose? Paul argues, as above, that he chastises for his children's good. Will he stop his work short of bringing about that good, because of the prayers of the elders? Some get out of patience waiting on the Lord, and send for the doctor. Will the doctor get through with the work sooner than the Lord could? Will our Father permit the doctor's work to intervene between the Lord and his purpose in the matter in hand? I know of nothing in our faith to prohibit Saints employing the physician,—but should the Lord "raise him up," in a period of six months or less, as soon at least as we think the doctor will, has not the Lord fulfilled his word? Or, if the appointed time has come to lay the armor by and put aside the earthly tabernacle,—should we not be resigned, if called to go? Read:—

And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me.—D. C. 42:12.

This statement is most obviously reasonable, viewed in the light of all human conditions,—mortality, sinfulness,—the experience of men, and the present character of their existence. But the administration to the ill is only to be fulfilled to those who are needing, ask for, or request it, and, hence the following:—

Require not miracles, except I shall command you; except casting out devils; healing the sick; and against poisonous serpents; and against deadly poisons; and these things ye shall not do, except it be required of you by them who desire it, that the scriptures might be fulfilled, for ye shall do according to that which is written.—D. C. 23:6.

It is plain from this passage of the divine law that the service of administering to the sick is only to be tendered when requested. It is not to be urged upon those who do not request or desire it. Further, it appears from the foregoing, that anything of a miraculous nature is not to be "required" by us, by which I understand we are not to ask God for it,—unless we may know by commandment and revelation from God that it is his will that we do so, and that he will grant the miracle to be done. It may be that a lack of knowledge of this particular point has caused some of the Saints disappointment, and has perhaps caused some of them to censure some of the elders on some occasions. We hope Saints will note and investigate this particular point, and the passage of law cited from the Doctrine and Covenants.

I can remember distinctly that on one occasion while they were preaching in southern Indiana, Brethren W. W. Blair and E. Banta were called on to administer in a very serious case, one of long standing affliction. No branch of the church existed there at that time, but numbers were seriously considering the gospel as by them being declared. They considered this call, took it under advisement, and fasted over the matter, accompanied with prayer for twenty-four hours, and at end of the period, had liberty of the Spirit to respond to the call. God heard their prayers with others, recognized the faith of the long afflicted, raised her up, and she lives today to attest the verity of blessings received from heaven. But suppose the brethren had gone without divine sanction under the circumstances, and the administration been without results, who could tell what results might have been? It is divinely wise to heed the counsel, "Require not miracles except I command you." And the cases permitted only as desired by the afflicted. By reading carefully the biography of our Savior, we find him our example in this particular. Those who came humbly to him seeking his divinely merciful aid he never denied. The principle is, when really feeling the need of divine help,—

Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

Divine healing, so called, is growing very popular now-a-days, and some of the supernatural work done is not of God. How escape delusion and deception? Were Saints only called on to answer, the reply would be easy: but our answer is this: The Latter Day Saints Church has preserved the ordinance of administering to the sick, including its laws, bounds, and conditions.

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8: 20.

Jesus says:—

I am come in my Father's name.—John 5: 43.

For I have not spoken of myself [on my own authority]; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting.—John 12: 49, 50.

And backed by the authority of God's command, states, in the great gospel commission, that of believers—

In my name . . . they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 17, 18.

James says that "elders of the church," are to be called to do this, as before cited. God, the Father, and his Son Jesus, and the elders divinely authorized, are the lawful ones to officiate. The believer in God and Jesus Christ is the subject, and the Holy Ghost, by his gifts of healing, is the almighty active agent by which the work of healing is done.

In latter-day revelations we are thus instructed and warned:—

Wherefore, beware, lest ye are deceived, and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given; for verily I say unto you, they are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments, and him that seeketh so to do, that all may be benefited, that seeketh or that asketh of me, that asketh and not for a sign that he may consume it upon his lusts.—D. C. 46: 4.

A further safeguard against deception is given in the revelations, reading:—

And again, I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations; wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances. He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek, and edifieth, the same is of God, if he obey mine ordinances. And again, he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise, and wisdom, according to the revelations and truths which I have given you. And again, he that is overcome and bringeth not forth fruits, even according to this pattern, is not of me; wherefore by this pattern ye shall know the spirits in all cases, under the whole heavens. And the days have come, according to men's faith it shall be done unto them. Behold this commandment is given unto all the elders whom I have chosen.—D. C. 52: 4, 5.

God's laws, ordinances, and gospel truth must be believed and taught, and the spirit of humility, of Christ, must be accepted, taught, and carried out in the lives of those administering in the ordinance of laying hands on the sick and afflicted, and anointing them with oil in the name of Jesus Christ, according to the pattern above given, or it is not of God. To be safe is always to abide, and be on the side of the law, that we be not deceived.

For ye shall do according to that which is written. C. SCOTT.

"BE YE PERFECT."

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.—Matt. 5: 48.

This command was given by Jesus Christ, the Lord of light and glory. What importance attaches to it? might be asked. That will depend on how we receive him. If we receive him as God intended, it will have very great weight with us. If we examine God's word we find that he—

So loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16. (See also Rom. 5: 8 and 1 John 4: 9.)

If God gave his Son to the world that they might have everlasting life, he must have designed a means by which it should come to them. The means is through the Son, for he said:—

I am the way.—John 14: 6.

I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved.—John 10: 9.

We gather from these testimonies that God designed to save the world through the agency of his Son. Hence we read:—

Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.—Isaiah 55: 4.

If that be true, his words and acts are far above any who may assume to be teachers. He also has said:—

All that ever came before me who testified not of me are thieves and robbers.—John 10: 8. I. T.

We discover that the greatest weight attaches to the words of Jesus, even that his word shall judge us in the last day (John 12: 48.) We therefore reasonably conclude that when he gave the command we quoted at the commencement, that there must be a way or means by which that perfection may be reached. It is not said that man shall attain that perfection in this mortal probation. No time is given, only that it is to be man's aim. Paul alludes to it thus:—

Let us go on unto perfection.—Heb. 6: 1.

God the Father had said so, long ages before, in these words:—

Walk before me, and be thou perfect.—Gen. 17: 1.

So we see the Father and Son agree, and that it was their intention that man should be perfect. It would not be reasonable to suppose that man would be told to be perfect and not tell him how it could be accomplished. From the nineteenth Psalm and seventh verse we learn that "the law of the Lord is perfect." And—

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8: 20.

They are in darkness, hence without God, for—

God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.—1 John 1: 5.

Application to God's law brings light, and finally perfection. Notice, God gave to man a perfect law or rule of action. What for? That he might become like the law; hence we discover the means by which perfection is to be reached. It is nonsense to talk about believing himself into a perfect condition, for if the law makes man perfect it will be when he has made application of it as a whole. Supposing the law is represented by one hundred per cent, if you obey ninety-nine per cent, will you be like the law? No. Why? Because you lack one per cent of having observed the law.

Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, . . . this man shall be blessed.—James 1: 25.

It is not the person who looks into the law or obeys part of it, but the one who continues to observe its teachings until he is like it—perfect.

Blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.—Luke 11: 28.

No use to hear the law, and not keep it.

He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayers shall be abomination.—Prov. 28: 9.

Condemnation rests on those who refuse to hear and keep the law. God's law relates to man in all the conditions, from birth until he shall stand before his Maker, the law having done its perfect work.

And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.—Gen. 2: 7.

And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.—1 Thess. 5: 23.

I quote the first to show that the man entire, is a living soul," and the second to show that man has a body and spirit; and Paul prayed that both might be preserved. Now God knows all this, and as he has designed to save man entire (and the body is to be resurrected) is it not reasonable to suppose that his perfect law shall relate to both, and have the ultimate salvation of both in view? And also that both may be fed and cared for until the end in view has been accomplished.

This life is the time of probation; we are proven in it; that is, we show what we are, whether we are willing to be guided by the all-wise One or be rebellious. God offers a test to the people in these words:—

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts.—Mal. 3:8, 10.

The tithes and offerings are offered to the people as part of God's law to be observed, for by not doing so they "rob" him. "Render unto God the things that are God's." "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." We are shown more of his purposes in the following:—

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work: and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine.—D. C. 101:2.

As a logical sequence of these claims we have the following strong words in the same paragraph:—

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—D. C. 101:2.

God has made all things, and it is his purpose to "provide for his Saints." For this reason he says to his adopted sons, brethren of Christ, what we have last quoted. He wants us to work according to his purpose. He is wiser than we. We are commanded to "impart according to the law of my gospel." And what is that?

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—D. C 70:3.

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.—D. C. 106:1.

Observe, this is (in connection with the quotations going before, and many others of similar character) a part of God's perfect law for the perfection of man. The law as a whole relates to man entire; that is, spiritual and physical nature. The more light we turn on, in the examination of the law of the Lord, the more beautiful it appears. Saints, let us all strive to be perfect, and remember it can only come in the one way, God's way.

WHICH IS RIGHT?

The seventh day advocates lay great stress upon the words for ever, while trying to prove their seventh day sabbath; but when they run onto the words in trying to prove their soul-sleeping theory, they say, O, well, that don't mean that way! And by changing the punctuation marks, such as a comma or period, they can prove their points. For instance in the case of the thief on the cross. They say the comma ought to be placed after the word today, instead of after the words unto thee. That would let the thief's request be granted; namely, to be remembered when he (Christ) comes into his kingdom, 3,000 years or so after that time. So you see the thief would have a good long sleep.

Now, as to that word for ever I will quote the last part of verse 6 of Exodus 21:—

And his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for ever.

Does that mean that that servant shall serve his master worlds without end? or does it mean just during his natural life? That view should be taken in seventh day observance, as it was to Israel a schoolmaster, only to be observed as a memorial day unto them of the time the Lord led them out of bondage from the land of Egypt, or until he had made unto them a new covenant, which was in Christ. I quote Galatians, which says:—

But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.—Gal. 3:23-25.

Can anything be plainer? Now as to the proof that the Lord gave them the old covenant as a memorial to the day of their deliverance from bondage and from the land of Egypt, I quote:—

And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel.—Exodus 34:27.

I am the Lord thy God which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.—Ex. 20:2.

Also in Deuteronomy we read:—

Therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day.—Deut. 5:15.

And to show that that day was not observed prior to that time, I quote Deuteronomy which says:—

The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day.—Deut. 5:3.

This shows that it was especially meant for Israel, and only a similitude to the sabbath at the creation. Again:

And to offer all burnt sacrifices unto the Lord in the sabbaths, in the new moons, and on the set feasts, by number, according to the order commanded unto them, continually before the Lord.—1 Chron. 23:31.

Behold, I build a house to the name of the Lord my God, to dedicate it to him, and to burn before him sweet incense, and for the continual shewbread, and for the burnt offerings morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts of the Lord our God. This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.—2 Chron. 2:4.

This is Solomon talking, not God. I quote the above merely to see how long the words for ever were to stand, which will be seen farther on. While the above is sufficient to show that the sabbath spoken of then was only for Israel, there is also just as much proof that they should observe the first day as a sabbath. Read Exodus 12:16, and Leviticus 23:7, 11, 16, 21, 31, 32, 35. Some may say that the first days spoken of here were only the first days of the feasts of weeks, but if you will notice in verse 11 it was the day to make a wave offering, and that it followed next after their regular sabbath. Evidently the Lord got displeased with that kind of worship, for in Isaiah we read:—

Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken; I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider. . . . Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting.—Isa. 1:2, 3, 13.

Now we turn to Hebrews eighth chapter, and we see God did do away with that old covenant and made a new one. Notice more especially:—

But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. . . . In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish.—Isa. 8:6-9, 13.

And further, I quote Hebrews:—

For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.—Heb. 7: 12, 19.

Now read in connection with this Galatians 4:21–31. But notice:—

Which things are an allegory [figurative speech]: for these are the two covenants; the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar.—Gal. 4: 24

Conclusion. Now as I was not born an Israelite, I am not therefore bound to observe their memorial days; but being born a Gentile, am a branch grafted into the true vine, which is Jesus Christ. (See John 15: 1–6.) I ought therefore to observe the day in which our Savior conquered death, hell, and the grave, and arose to newness of life, being the new covenant, in which it is said:—

I will put my laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people.—Heb. 8: 10.

One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.—Rom. 14:5.

Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.—Col. 2:16, 17.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

ARE THEY APPROVED OF GOD?

In the sixth chapter of Matthew we have a valuable lesson, which will lead us to trust in God rather than mammon, the things of the world, if we would but heed the teaching. Christ's answer to the young man, as to what the greatest commandment is, gives us to understand that we are to be devoted to God; we are to love him and him alone. The word comes direct from the fountain of all knowledge, and says, "I am a jealous God." Why jealous? We may truthfully conclude that it is because God wants us to love him more than we do the things of the world; and that, too, for the reason that by so doing it will bring us back to him, thereby securing for ourselves salvation in his kingdom.

We often hear the remark, "It takes all kinds of people to make a world." Yes, it takes as many different kinds of people to make a world like this we are in as there are people in it. But we do not need to conclude that it takes all these different kinds of people to make the "ideal world." We say "different kinds of people" because of the different principles they are governed by. They would be the same kind of people if they were governed by the same principles. And if all the principles that govern in this world were the pure principles of the gospel of Christ, we would have a different world than the one we have. But by reason of man having his agency, God has left him to do as he feels disposed. God will not force us to come to him, but has left it so, "whosoever will may come." Therefore it remains with man whether he comes or not. And so far as the written word is concerned, we have been "given all things pertaining unto life and godliness," and need not be in the dark or in the back ground, regarding anything affecting our salvation.

If it does not matter in whom we trust, why do we find the thought underlying every sentence in the revealed word that we are to put our whole trust and confidence in God? What would have been the fate of Daniel had he belonged to some "secret order" when the decree came for him to bow in submission to the King? He would have given the distress signal to some of his "fraternal friends," calling on them to come to his rescue to change the decree of the king or stop the mouths of the lions. But it was not so! Daniel had been educated to observe the principles taught in the first commandments, "Him only shalt thou serve." What folly it would have been for the three Hebrew children to have depended upon "lodge members" to come rushing in with sufficient number of barrels of water to extinguish the burning flames when they were threatened with sudden death. Where is the man who has become acquainted with this latter-day work who will give expression to the thought, that we are not living in the days of Daniel, or the three Hebrew children, and therefore cannot afford to trust in God as they did? Some may try to excuse themselves in belonging to "the lodge" because of hard times, when in fact these same "institutions" have to a great extent been the cause of hard times. It is a flimsy excuse and a weak remedy.

We have only to glance back to the age of the world when God wrote upon "tables of stone" to see there the weak condition of humanity! They couldn't endure a better law, so they were given the law of Moses as a schoolmaster to be educated by, until they were able to receive a higher and more glorious one. Then when it came they were not able to receive it. Just so it is with many, yes thousands today. They are not able to put their trust in the sublime principles of the gospel of Christ; so they unite with some "secret order," thinking the ritual of the lodge is furnished with principles sufficiently pure to guide and govern in the affairs of life, and furnish friends who will supply all their earthly wants.

If that thought does not give the reason for belonging to the secret order, may we try another, which is: "There are afforded opportunities by belonging to the lodge that will bring us in closer relationship with our fellowmen—make us more popular in society, among the business circles of life, and when in need of friends, in case of sickness or financial depression, the demand is met and our wants supplied." Then if that be it, the world will love us; for that seems to me to be living in favor of "the world." Now we need no "interpreter" to give the meaning of these words:—

If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.—John 15: 19.

Does the world love us because we belong to the lodge, or does it hate us? What child could not answer that question? Sure no one who has received the angel's message, as spoken of by the beloved apostle in Revelation 14: 6, 7, will say, that he belongs and remains in the lodge because of the unbounded friendship and love for his brothers in the secret work.

Shift the scene, and find yourself in a congregation of Saints, where the spirit of this latter-day work is thrilling the heart. See the tears start from the eyes, as they sing with trembling voice the words of the poet,—

The friends that most cheer me on life's rugged road,
Are the friends of my Master, the children of God.

Let us not only tell the truth, and sing the truth, but let us live the truth; for the truth alone will save us. It is written, "Ye cannot worship God and mammon." Would belonging to "secret orders," and that, too, because we love them, be called worshiping mammon? Paul says, "Without faith it is impossible to please God." If we have implicit faith and confidence in God, it doesn't seem to me that we would have time to think of trusting in the "combinations of men," when we can look up to the God of Israel and receive of his protecting care.

These institutions have upon their face the promise that they will protect a man, his family, and all that pertains unto him, from loss or from danger of any kind, and will assist him to be more honorable, and shield him and his family from disgrace. I have no objections to men being benevolent toward their fellow man. I wish they were more so. But I do not see the consistency in a man claiming such wonderful love and regard for his neighbor, that he says he would die for him—make any sacrifice in his power, by reason of his unbounded love—then walk down from the lodge room and get beastly drunk before he gets home. That man simply don't know what common sense is. If he ever knew, he has forgotten how to handle the truth—he has overlooked the cause. I am not, in this, making a fight against intemperance; but against the principles that govern these institutions called "secret societies."

Now some one may say that this manner of getting drunk, unrighteous lives, bad conduct in any way, is forbidden by the lodge rules. Suppose so. Does that make the principles of the lodge the ones inculcated in the gospel of Jesus Christ—those which if we obey will claim for us celestial glory? For my part I have no use for "lodge," nor any other cunning picture that has been drawn to lead men's minds from God and get him to follow after the ways of the world. And I do not see how others can live for years in actual service in this latter-day work without finding out the damaging effects of putting their trust in the "combinations of men."

One of the greatest drawbacks we find to the spread of the gospel, is that men have become established in their own ideas, and are unwilling to give them up, no matter how plain and positive the scriptures speak to the contrary. "It don't mean this, and it don't mean that. It means just what I thought it meant," comes the answer from all quarters; and when those believing in divine guidance are met with a new idea, no matter how true it may be, they are just as unwilling to yield, get just as indignant as others when crowded too closely. And when the scripture plainly declares, "Cursed is the man who trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm;" "be not conformed to the things of the world," and many other references upon the same thought, why are men so slow finding out the true spirit of the word? The good man Job didn't have his house or goods insured by some "secret society," so far as the written word is concerned. Yet he had an insurance that was worth ten thousand times more than all the insurance companies and lodges of the world combined.

Attachment is a wonderful power in the world. We become attached to ideas and notions, till we think our salvation depends on our holding to them. I find that to be a fact in the sectarian world. It is no less a fact among those who deny being sectarian. As a body of people we claim to be followers of Christ; not only by observing the first principles of the gospel, but in all things. The words are often repeated, "When the scriptures speak, we speak; where they are silent, we are silent." It is written:—

Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.—Rev. 22: 14.

We may glean another thought to discourage us in belonging to "secret societies" by reading the words of Christ in St. John 18: 20:—

Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

Our infallible guide and lawgiver spake openly—did not work in secrecy; and why should we? We are instructed to be like him in all things. Paul writes to the Romans 6: 16:—

Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?

I fail to find one line of scripture where it says that God has authorized these "secret institutions" to be organized. And if our Supreme Ruler had wanted his children to be mixed up with such things as the lodges of our day, he would have said something about it. The instructions come quite to the contrary.

Please read in Book of Mormon, Helaman 1: 9, 10; 2: 29, 30. No one need be misled as to the author of these combinations. No one will dare to offer the excuse for belonging to a secret order because they are not as corrupt today as they were in the days of Gadianton and Kishkumen. Yet that is brought as an excuse. Improvements are always commendable! These people out in the west come with the same pitiful cry, and say, "Oh, we don't believe nor practice that doctrine that was so prevalent in Salt Lake Valley some years ago. It was all right for awhile; but we believe in revelation and 'our church' received one, [under the caption of the Edmunds–Tucker bill, however, and signed by Uncle Sam,] stating that that doctrine was not to be allowed any longer."

I wonder! It would seem that "blindness in full had happened to Israel." How can we be mistaken when we read from the sacred word, that those "secret combinations" originated from the author of all sin.

There is relief in the scriptures for every ailment in life; and for this one it comes from our Lord and Master, in these words: "Can a bitter fountain bring forth pure water?" Let us go to the fountain head to find out regarding what society we should join, and seek to serve God in Spirit and in truth.

If our homes are in danger; if our lives are in danger, or our families in want; anything that this world could give any assistance that could be obtained from belonging to all the "secret orders" in the world, can we not remember that all these things are in the hands of the great God who rules the worlds and holds them by the word of his power, and that he will grant unto us all that we need in life, if we can but put our faith and confidence in him.

In the language of the apostle I can truthfully say, "The things that I once loved I now hate."

GRACELAND COLLEGE OPENING.

Tuesday morning, September 11, amid the thrilling blasts of the rear guard of the Texas hurricane, young men and maidens were seen hurrying on their way to the eastward of town, up College hill towards the beautiful structure of brick and stone which graces the summit. The time announced for the fall opening of Graceland College had arrived, and with it had come to many young hearts questions the solution of which is calculated to materially affect their life's course. Some, for whom every arrangement had been made by loving parents or kind friends, animated with the prospect of an education, are wondering just what studies to pursue. Others, with inquiring anxiety, are going to see whether they can be permitted to enter, not possessing the necessary amount of means to pay tuition and other necessary expenses. Many others, not present, having read the catalogue are wishing that by some kind providence they might be favored with opportunity to take advantage of the liberality of our noble Graceland.

Inside the building all is life and activity. Students discussing their proposed work with each other and with the teachers, and teachers advising students, and enrolling them for their various courses, all give an air of life pleasant to behold.

At the hour appointed for chapel service a nice little congregation gathered in the auditorium, a number of visitors being present, among whom were several members of the Board of Trustees. Mrs. Audentia Anderson, teacher of piano, presided at the piano, and "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" was sung. F. M. Smith, former Professor of Science and Mathematics in Graceland, and her first Alumnus, read a scripture lesson in Provebs, and Wm. Anderson, president of Board of Trustees, offered prayer, after which all joined in singing "Ho, Reapers of Life's Harvest." The earnest determination depicted upon each singer's face (and all sang) needs to have been seen to be appreciated. The various teachers present made announcements of work, and all dispersed to their several duties. When all had registered it was noted that a larger number had been enrolled than at any time for the first day, there being about forty in the regular literary and business departments, twenty in music, and fifteen in elocution and oratory, aggregating seventy-five.

Thus opened the sixth year of Graceland, with prospects for a successful year's work. May fondest anticipations be realized.

Editors Herald:—We are still pursuing the usual course in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and find by past experience that it is far more beneficial to the cause of Christ to be slow and sure than to rush matters and excite people in order to get a few baptized and then have the most of the work to undo or do over again, to the shame of all concerned. "The foundation of God standeth sure," and I am fully satisfied that if people are fully instructed in the plan of salvation and have a knowledge of just what is required of them in order to "make their calling and election sure," there would not be half the trouble to keep them in the line of duty that there has been in the past.

The Lord has said that the burden of this work rests upon all, and in order that the unction from the "Holy One" may rest equally upon all, they will certainly be required to observe all things, or in other words, live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God.

We have often been warned concerning our present and future welfare, but being sometimes careless and prayerless, have fallen among briers and thorns, from which it has been most difficult at times to extricate ourselves. I find that the nearer we live to the mark of "our high calling," the less are the complaints and faults seen in others, and greater is the peace of mind and blessing that pervades the soul. Faultfinders as a rule I have found to be transgressors, and greatly have need to remove the "ship's mast" from before their eyes, in order even to see any one else.

Well, I am pleased to say that the work is gradually gaining ground, and we hope for a good harvest in the future. Some remarkable prophecies have been given of late, which comfort the Saints very much in these trying hours. Also a few cases of healing, through the ordinances of the gospel. To God be all honor and praise, for from him all blessings flow!

Of late the brethren have been making an opening in the city where there are about half a million people, and things have been pretty lively the last two Sunday evenings. With Ex-Priest Slattery entertaining about fifteen hundred upstairs, and second day Adventists, temperance lecturers, and Latter Day Saints down stairs in the same building, there is quite a stir among the people. Slattery is guarded to his lodgings by about twenty-five police, with plenty of "Orangemen," while we have found the armor of righteousness to be sufficient thus far along life's journey.

One has been baptized and others are investigating, but the cause moves very slowly. In my visiting I have found about six Utah Saints, one an old elder, who often talked to Bro. Rodger when he was here, and I find their polygamous shell uncrackable, and have thought best to leave their case to the instruments of the next world. Their strong point is "I know, and can testify that President Snow is a prophet, seer, revelator, and translator." By what power this is known is a mystery to me, for John says, "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." To believe the testimony of people who believe in, and practice what the Lord says is "abominable," and "which thing I hate" is more than I am prepared to do. If having a score of wives before the "manifesto" was given was polygamy, and punishable in the eyes of the law, it certainly would be the same after, and of latter they are guilty. See! John Henry Smith said in his address in the Tabernacle at their last April conference, speaking with reference to the work of the officers: "Which shall so distribute their labors that my wives, and my children," etc. Again, in speaking of the sires of the church, he said: "They believed it was true [the gospel]. I believe they were right. I not only believe, but I know they were right; and if I can write this knowledge upon my wives and children," etc. This is plain English, and law-breakers ought to be made to feel their position.

Ex-Priest Slattery said the Catholic children were taught that "the priest was another Christ," and I see that the Utah people have President Snow in the same box; for Pres. G. Q. Cannon says (page 12 of conference minutes): "Now we have a man who has taken the same place, by selection and appointment of the Almighty—Pres. Lorenzo Snow. . . . He stands in our midst as the prophet of God, the man holding the keys, the man who can bind on earth and it will be bound in heaven, the man who can loose on earth and it will be loosed in heaven, the man who has the power (which, however, he exercises very rarely, if at all) to forgive sins, to curse and they shall be cursed, to bless and they shall be blessed." Hence, if I am to judge every tree by the sample of fruit produced, I must confess that this polygamous bush of Utah produces a kind of which I care not to partake. I think that vengeance and remission of sins should be left with the Almighty, and let him repay.

I am still in the latter-day work and am confident that the Lord will accomplish the building up of Zion and the salvation of his people in his own due time. I wish to be true to the end. In bonds,

GLADSTONE, Ill., Sept. 11.

Editors Herald:—Elder J. S. Snively and I are on the Mississippi bottom opposite Burlington, six miles southwest of Gladstone, in Illinois, holding tent meetings, in a new place to us, but it is a familiar place to the mosquitoes. They blend their music with our songs, add points to our sermons, and give exercise to the audience so that none get sleepy. We began here September 8, and so far have had good interest. Today the wind has been blowing a severe gale, so we lowered the tent to the ground and put weights on it to prevent the wind wrecking it. Will remain here about a week yet, guests of Brn. Lawrence Willey and Allen Prier.

Yours truly,

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

Bent View, Burnblea Street,
HAMILTON, Scotland, Aug. 29.

Editors Herald:—It will doubtless be interesting to some of your readers to know how we are progressing in this land. I have been here now six weeks, and find that one elder is not capable of startling one city or town, much less a whole country. The opportunities for presenting our work to the people are not many. We have not sufficient members to have a branch organized, and so all the preaching we can do is in the open air and in the room of Bro. and Sr. Cairns. The great obstacle in the way of progress is the profound indifference with which most people seem to treat all religious questions. If only we had opposition we could then advertise more effectively our claims. Perhaps this will be best illustrated when I tell you that Brn. Miller and Cairns (the only two brothers here besides the writer) hired a hall and advertised it in the local papers. We also had printed one thousand circulars on which we advertised some lectures; and though we tried it for a whole month, not a single person came to hear us.

We have been a number of times to Glasgow, and occupied on the green, in entering into discussion with different men of as many different views, and have always been well received; but the trouble is we are getting known now, and as a consequence are avoided by those whose reputation and craft would be in danger if they were too venturesome. Still we get occasionally one or two interested.

We have met a quantity of Utah elders who are diligently proselyting this country, and have had one or two encounters in public; but they have never yet had the courage to meet us on the issues between us in a fair and open manner. A few Sundays ago after occupying on the green we hurrying away to get the train for home when we came across a company of them holding open air service in the main thoroughfare. We waited and listened to them, and after they had held forth quite a time they closed their meeting and did not tell the crowd who they were; so before the crowd dispersed the writer stepped into the audience and told them that these men had been assailing our churches and chapels of the present day, denouncing them all as apostates from the truth because, say they, "They have transgressed the law, broken the everlasting covenant, and changed the ordinance." It is only right and just to the public that they know that these people hail from Utah and are representing a body of people who are the worst of apostates, for they have broken the law of God and changed his ordinances and dragged the name of God and Christ and the man we revere as a prophet in these days through the mire of iniquity by preaching and practicing under the name of religion that detestable crime of polygamy, and have also introduced the system of ecclesiastical murder known as "blood atonement;" also "Adam-God worship."

Well, their five elders stood right by all the time and never uttered a word in defense. The crowd closed in and waited for a reply and asked if they had anything to say, and their reply was that they were not going to discuss on a Sabbath—that was not their business. We felt sorry, and so expressed ourselves, and did not desire to be thought as persecutors of either men or churches, but it was certainly our duty to tell the truth and warn people of so base a deception.

It would consume too much space to tell of all the incidents and experiences with this people up here, but I can truly say that I never met a people before who were so afraid of confronting the truth and public investigation as the Utah people. They are as bitter toward us as the Roman Catholics are toward the Protestants. One of their people followed me one day this week and told me I was "an apostate," "fighting against God," "doing the Devil's work," "a liar," and everything else that was bad.

We have found that going from door to door with tracts has been the best way to introduce the gospel to the people, but this takes money, and if you will permit me I would like to solicit financial help of the Saints who are interested in this land of Scotland. We only have two brothers here who are able to contribute, Brn. Cairns and Miller, and they are only working men, so their means are limited, though they have done nobly for the work up to the present; so if any of the Saints can help us in this matter we shall be very grateful if they will forward to us at the above address what they can. If any of the members have any relatives and friends in Scotland I should be glad to know of their whereabouts, so that we could acquaint them with the work.

We have had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. Black, of Edinboro, a fortnight ago, in the River Clyde. He is a brother of Sr. Hanna, in Pittsburg, I believe. Praying that God will bless his work and people in all the world, Yours in bonds,

JOHN WM. RUSHTON.

Editors Herald:—I have been trying to keep alive in the gospel work, which requires quite a struggle and effort to what it did when I first obeyed the gospel. The Lord has blessed me in many ways, and given me many evidences of the truthfulness of this being the work of the Lord, and these evidences have strengthened me in the hour of temptation and have helped me thus far on life's journey to find it one of my greatest pleasures to be mingled with the people who try to be Saints of God.

Time is hastening on! Only a few weeks and we will meet in convention and conference with the Saints in Chatham, to give a report of our work since last we assembled. The summer has come and gone, the harvest is nearly over, "what have we done?" Have our weak efforts all been in vain? We hope not, and press on.

A week ago last Sabbath, Elder George Green led four precious buds of promise into the waters of baptism on the shore of Lake Erie. They were children of Bro. and Sr. Fred Smart, Allen and Johnny, and two of Bro. and Sr. John Dent's children, Olive and George. We hope they may be spared to accomplish much good in their day. Let our Sabbath school workers be cheered with this thought that the lambs well cared for make good sheep. Your sister in the gospel,

MARY M. GREEN.

COLDWATER, Mich., September 13.

Editors Herald:—While recuperating for a day or two, preparatory to autumnal campaign, perhaps justice demands that I report progress. If name and minutes of work have not emblazoned your columns, I trust it will not be received as evidence of silence in the matter of work, which goes to make up the final record.

The cause seems to be maintaining its own in this region of the Lord's vineyard, and I dimly discern that it is surmounting and overcoming, to an extent, the difficulties which have retarded hitherto. But we ought not to overlook the fact that each wall of difficulty that falls down reveals a higher one behind; and let not the glamor of one victory in the rear make us blind to the fact that there are battles yet to be fought. When the Cumberland was crushed, the Monitor was just behind her. But in it all, "our sufficiency will be of God." Sometimes there are spiritual famines as well as temporal or physical ones. And as we lean on the replenished bin during physical want, so should we lean on the never-failing treasury of heaven in times of spiritual drouth and perplexities, remembering that all power, all glory, and all victory cometh through our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

But to itemize: Paul, speaking of faith, says: "By it the elders obtained a good report."—Heb. 11. And it seems that if my "report" should fall below it would evince a lack of proper faith, or an insufficient quantity, if the proper kind.

Be this as it is, on July 7, in company with the district president, we visited Pokagon, Michigan, where I was permitted to talk twice, with that liberty which to me is always evidence that "there's fish in the stream." So it proved to be. Two baptisms on the following Sunday.

July 9, in the afternoon, found us at Hartford, where we preached till the 16th, occupying with fair liberty, we trust to the good of all. One service we will ever remember. Not because of the overwhelming audience, or the overshadowing of the mantle of inspiration, nor the light which dawned upon the speaker's mind, for all was muchly limited. The scenery was sylvan and delightful, the environments lovely and tasteful to eye, and ear also, for ravishing chords from string, harp, voice, and lute were wafted far over the waves. Evidences of the Apostle Paul's seeric powers were noticeable. He penetrated the dark and webby curtains of the modern apostasy and saw that "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" would swarm to the gilded palaces of vice. This appointment was advertised by three hundred posters to be occupied in Forest Beach Pavillion, at Paw Paw Lake. We met with a few. One from Milwaukee, Wisconsin, two from Chicago, one from Benton Harbor, and about one dozen Saints from Hartford and Watervleit. We preached, or attempted it, and with what good or evil results, futurity will disclose.

July 21, boarded cars and landed in Angola, when after riding in company with Bro. George Maxton and wife three and one half miles north of Braden-Scott battle ground, we lectured to a crowded house on the subject of "Utah Mormonism" contrasted with the Reorganization, continuing for four services. Many surprises were evoked.

July 28-30, filled appointments at Hall's Corners, where I met Mr. Musser eight evenings in debate, some three years ago. At this appointment I rode over to Clear Lake on Sunday p. m., and buried with Christ by baptism unto death, Bro. William Monlux. He is a young man of whom we expect good things, if faithful to his trust. We preached there three times, and presided at a prayer service.

August 4-6, I filled appointments at same place. We have about one dozen good, staunch Saints there, seals of my ministry, mostly after the peculiar conflict with Musser.

August 17, again at Angola. Traveled west of that place eight miles to Flint. Held five services there and returned to Scott Center (where I lectured July 21) to begin a series of meetings, beginning Thursday evening and concluding the following Wednesday evening. Nine sermons, one each evening, and three on Sunday. These services were largely attended. House packed nightly. That the speaker enjoyed liberty and light can be attested. Indeed, such a spirit of power and joy was present on Saturday evening, that some of our brethren could not sleep "till 'way in wee hours," and no service that we did not see the tear course down the cheeks. Audience was mixed, as to religious proclivities, but largely Campbellite, as they are quite strong in Steuben county, Indiana, and conduct the Tri-State Normal College at Angola.

One man—a skeptic—whose hospitality I shared one night and one day, said: "Well Bro. Scott, I bid you Godspeed, you have agreeably surprised the people. While I cannot see the supreme authority of the Bible, your doctrine strikes me as most reasonable, and is bound to revolutionize society. And I should think those who attempt to oppose it, would have a very difficult task, from a common sense standpoint." I was glad to hear this expression, even from the lips of an infidel. He is an elderly man, and an unprejudiced investigator. My candid belief is, there are future Saints at that point.

Returning to Flint, we resume the thread of work, and after six sermons to large and increasing crowds we were permitted to lead

into the beautiful waters of Pigeon Creek, four persons, heads of families—Bro. Henry Bodie, Sr. Mary Chamberlain and her two daughters, Srs. Lue Phillips and Lillie Compton. The scene was solemn and beautiful, as mother and two daughters moved off by the bath of regeneration into the kingdom of God. May their lives be ever as adorning as their baptism was beautiful. Four others promised to obey at the two days' meeting, October 6 and 7, I believe.

Northern Indiana is an "open door" to the preaching of the word. We only wonder why the missionaries go so far away from this part of the district, incurring a big expense, and their stay so brief that so little opportunity for good is granted. But I presume the gospel must be preached in all the world ere the end come. And it does seem that the end is near, taking for evidence the preaching of the gospel, and that other large, irresistible class of evidence—latter-day judgments. The voice of modern prophets yet echo words of warning—voice of thunder, voice of lightenings, voice of hurricane and "waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds"—see Galveston, Texas, devastated by waves of gulf and bay, singing the requiem of five thousand dead! Note the increase of deaths by the lightnings the past summer! Note the universal embarrassment—"All things shall be in commotion." Let us pray to abide. As ever.

In Hope's beautiful embrace,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Editors Herald:—As an answer to the question, Are we Mormons? I say Yes! and will point you to the statement of Pres. Joseph Smith to Elder Littlefield, of Utah, as an affirmation, if others are not sufficient. "That Book of Mormon is one of the essential features of 'Mormonism.' It should be to you and all other 'Mormons' what the Koran is to the Mohammedans, the Bible to the Christians, the ends of dispute. Without it the 'Mormon Church' had not been born. It is the Golden Bible to the 'devout Mormon.' From it I have the undoubted right to select those portions of the text that confirm and sustain my faith in Christ as 'primitive Mormonism' has revealed him." ("So Mormonism is a reality after all.")

This ought to answer the question if sound arguments and language can be relied upon. No sophistries can change the import of the same. My belief in the Bible caused me to accept the Book of Mormon, and of course Mormonism this last forty-six years. I went to Utah, found out my error, and accepted young Josephism so-called, which I advocated to the best of my ability by preaching, until temporal circumstances compelled me to desist; and to find out now that "Mormonism" is only a hoax is rather tough.

The converts to the Book of Mormon are Saints, and as "Mormonism and Christianity" are synonymous, the repudiation of one is also the repudiation of the other, caused by the spirit of pride, the hankering after popularity, prejudice, and ignorance. The admission that through the "Book of Mormon" the "Mormon Church" was born, clears good old Mormon from being the originator and head of the same, and no man-church was ever organized or enjoyed the peculiar gifts and blessings of the true Church of Jesus Christ. But with this church these blessings existed from the very beginning, neither did I find them in the Utah Church, and therefore it is a libel on the "name and Book of Mormon" to refer to them as Mormons in their apostate condition, strengthening thereby the belief that there is no difference between us and them.

In 1884 two of my articles were published in the Herald in the defense of the name of Mormon, and favorably received; but times and sentiments have greatly changed since then, for then the being a "Mormon" was not denied when preaching "Mormonism or Latter Day Saintism," and no doubt ere long the preaching and accepting of the Book of Mormon will be left optional, which will greatly please and satisfy Lucifer, who is very partial to and assumes the garb of a Saint to commit his hellish purposes and cruelties as in the persecutions and destructions of Joseph, Hyrum, and their compatriots, who all sugered and died for "Mormonism," which is of course for "Christ and Christianity," thereby setting a bright example for candidates of glory to follow, even to the laying down of their lives for "Mormonism," as they did, and thereby prove to the world the truth of the same, for we want no cowards in our band, but those that will stand firm for the ensign and standard, the "Book of Mormon," and not be ashamed of the name.

Lucifer's fall was caused through pride or undue ambition, as also of individuals and nations, and the Saints will not be excepted if their lives and actions do not correspond to that of their file leader, Jesus Christ. If the "name of Mormon" is so repugnant or objectionable to the members of the Reorganization, why is the same so invariably and often used by them to denote by it the apostate Utah church? who is no more Mormon than Satan is angelic or godly. It is inconsistent and discreditable to them, while thereby the belief is confirmed that the Book of Mormon is responsible for the Utah abominations. For the disproving of this the Saints ought to be proud in upholding the purity and importance of the "name" which would enhance the circulation of the "book" when soon its claim and true value would be found out and appreciated. Consistency dictates the contending for the faith so amply tried by me and others, for St. James is correct, that "double mindedness is very unstable," and therefore unreliable; or, as Bro. Paul expresses himself, "they are ever learning, but never come to the knowledge of the truth."

A ten years' schooling in Utah convinced me of their error. I hope thirty-six years experience in the Reorganization will not be attended by the same results; but as we are liable to err, if sound arguments, backed by the law and the testimony, prove me to be wrong, I would capitulate, I hope with honors of war, or unconditionally.

Please publish this on comments made on my letter, and oblige, Yours for truth and consistency,

CARL W. LANGE.

[The Mohammedans were not called Koranites, nor their religion Koranism, but Mohammedans, or Mahometans after Mahomet, or Mohammed, just as the name may be spelled. But we let the matter rest here without further controversy, preferring the term Saints, or Latter Day Saints, in token of recognition of the former day Saints, accepting as our distinctive title the name Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; honoring Christ thereby, rather than any man.—ED.]

SLOAN, Iowa, Sept. 7.

Editors Herald:—On the 1st and 2d inst. was held one of the most spiritual conferences experienced, two business sessions, one prayer service, and three preaching services. Five children were blessed, and one name given for baptism, which ordinance was attended to immediately after adjournment of conference.

Made a twenty-four hours' visit at home on Monday and Tuesday, finding family in the best health they have enjoyed for months. Called on Bro. Alma Fyrando and found him improving.

Held services at Moorhead, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, and came here and held services last night.

Crops are looking quite well; and unless the Saints have too much to care for they should be happy this fall, and enter into reunion services with hearts full of gratitude for the bounteous giver.

A great many deaths are occurring of late, and some affliction that is very trying.

Looking up the scattered ones, efforts to purge out iniquity being made, and the correcting records in this mission seem to be a few of the hopeful signs of a preparation for Zion. Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

LYDNEY, England, Sept. 2.

Editors Herald:—The writer had the pleasure of being present at Western Wales conference on August 5 and 6, on which dates a reunion had also been arranged, which proved to be successful in many ways. Self and wife, Bro. Trenchard, of Cardiff, and Bro. A. N. Bishop and family were present of the Eastern district, and memories of those happy days will linger long with us all. Before this is penned the secretary will have reported all business items, and it remains for me now as an eye-witness to give a brief outline.

On Sunday morning we had quarter of an hour speeches by four of the brethren, two in the Welsh language and two in English. The afternoon session was again devoted to preaching, as had previously been advertised and Elder David Lewis, district president of Llansamlet, was the preacher (in Welsh) for upwards of an hour, followed by some appropriate remarks by Bro. Bishop. In the evening Elder Bishop was the speaker.

On Monday morning business was on the agenda, and if all topics opened up in business are put into practice, Bro. Stebbins will receive accurate reports from the above district at no distant date. Monday afternoon a prayer and testimony meeting at two p. m., in which Bro. David Edwards was ordained to the office of deacon, and the prayers offered were not a few, neither were the testimonies of a weak nature. The good Spirit was present, and we had a realization of the fact that by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we are Welsh or English, bond or free, for our God hath made of one blood all nations upon the face of the earth, and hath determined the bounds of their habitation. In that assembly was the promise sealed which Jesus made. God was not slack in his promise. The blessing followed the believers as in days of old, and all were again confirmed in the faith and a renewed desire to press forward.

At all the before-named services the district president and Bro. A. N. Bishop were in charge. Porth was the place where the Saints had secured the commodious town hall, also an anteroom, where that to supply the needs of the inner man was laid out in fine style. In fact, the arrangements on the whole far surpassed anything the writer has yet witnessed. I should think they believed the command, "Come up higher," for my humble opinion is, some have a long way to go to get as high in many directions as those in that corner of God's vineyard. I should not forget to mention that Bro. A. N. Bishop delivered an interesting and instructive lecture on Monday evening, August 6, which was well received. The subject under consideration was the ancient inhabitants of America.

On the Sunday at five p. m., four companies were organized and went out in different portions of the town and sounded the gospel trump to large concourses of people in the open air. Surely the spirit of inquiry is amongst the people, or a certain longing or reaching out for that which they have not yet obtained.

We are pleased to inform you more tracts have arrived on first principles, for which we are very grateful, also a packet of Hopes from a young sister in Blackfoot, Idaho. The tracts are grand for distribution and cannot fail to do a great deal of good, and there is no doubt in my mind but that we shall all reap if we faint not. The object of all Latter Day Saints to my mind should harmonize with the words of the poet; namely:—

Sound the battle cry! See! the foe is nigh;
Raise the standard high for the Lord!
Gird your armor on, stand firm every one;
Rest your cause upon his holy word.

Strong to meet the foe, marching on we go,
While our cause we know must prevail;
Shield and banner bright gleaming in the light,
Battling for the right we ne'er can fail.

Oh! thou God of all, hear us when we call;
Help us one and all by thy grace;
When the battle's done and the vict'ry won,
May we wear the crown before thy face.

A special word of praise is due to all who took any prominent part or assisted in any way to make the Western district conference and reunion a success. Especially would I mention Srs. J. G. Jenkins, Roberts, L. Bishop, of Dinas, and Edwards, of Penygraig. Last, but in no way least, Bro. David Edwards. May God's peace be upon all, and may all soon come to a unity of faith and see eye to eye and be of a kindred spirit, is my prayer in Jesus' name. And may the day soon arrive that all will arrive at a good and proper understanding of God's laws, which convince me we are all members of one another, and that there should be no schism in the body, but that all the members should have the same care one for another; and may we so live that being engrafted into Jesus, the living and true Vine, we may and shall partake of his divine nature, and receive strength and vitality to equip us and to enable us to perform the duties which may fall to our share, not aspiring and conspiring and trying to be lords over God's heritage, but being servants of each other and seeking each other's interest and welfare, always endeavoring to establish righteousness and peace upon the earth. Still yours in the conflict,

HENRY ELLIS.

NEARING.

I am nearing the end of the race,
Father, dear;
Thou settest me so long years ago;
My trembling hand and faltering pace
Admonish I'm nearing the goal.

E'en my friends are noting the change,
Father, dear.
I can tell by their looks askance;
My fast ripening locks are getting more white,
By father Time's tireless advance.

The songs of my youth leave me now,
Father, dear,
And memory is sluggish, I trow;
Yet the little that's left of life's pleasant sail,
Bids me look o'er the ship's pointed prow.

The haven of rest will soon be in sight,
Father, dear;
I may count the days o'er and o'er;
While anticipating the joyous acclaim—
When I reach to the "life evermore,"

Where all of our songs of youth or of age,
Father, dear,
Will blend in the light of thy love;
And the cross and the crown, the smile and the frown,
Will merge in the pleasures above.

JOHN CHISNALL.

AS I VIEW IT.

Wanted in God's kingdom,
Presidents of purity and power,
Who will never flinch or falter
In temptation's darkest hour.

Apostles, ever bearing
On their face the sign of peace,
Who can point the burdened sinner
To the One who gives release.

Seventies, whose light is ever shining,
Spite of scoff and sneer;
And who dare to preach the gospel
Without a thought of fear.

Bishops, who in their daily duty
Prove the keeping power of Christ,
Knowing much of Satan's lurings,
Though ne'er by him enticed.

Elders, who work their hardest
On full salvation lines,
Who'll win the praise of Jesus
When the working day declines.

Priests, laboring in the vineyard,
Filled with holy love and fire;
The Savior's glory ever being
Their supreme desire.

Teachers, filled with wisdom,
And with courage to express
Their safety in Christ Jesus,
Helping others to be blest.

Deacons, whose lamps are always burning
With a steady glowing light;
Proving to God's whole creation
That the truth will win the fight.

One small life in God's great plan,
How futile it seems as the ages roll,
Do what it may, or strive how it can,
To altar the sweep of the infinite whole!
A single stitch in an endless web,
A drop in the ocean's flow and ebb!
But the pattern is rent where the stitch is lost,
Or marred where the tangled threads have crossed,
And each life that fails of its true intent
Mars the perfect plan that its Master meant.

CAN HEREDITY BE MODIFIED?

It has been well said by Herbert Spencer and others that the question involved in the discussion of heredity is not a temporary issue, and that "its solution will affect all future thought." Whether or not acquired character is transmitted to children is the most important question that confronts the human race, for it is upon the character of the race that depends and will depend the condition of the race—its prosperity, its development.

No school of scientists questions the fact of heredity; but there has been a warm and greatly misunderstood contest over the exact method used by nature in the transmission. Now so far as the general public is concerned, so far as the sociological features of the case go, so far as personal conduct is involved, it does not matter a straw's weight whether the theory of heredity held by Lamarck and Darwin, or the one advanced recently by Weismann, be correct.

It matters not whether a man's drunkenness, for example, is transmitted to his children directly as plain drunkenness, or as "an undue appetite for stimulants," or whether it descends to him as a merely weakened and undermined "germ plasm," as Weismann held, which "will tend to inebriety, insanity, imbecility" or what not. It matters not a farthing's worth, from the point of view of the laity, whether the transmission is direct via "pangenesis," or whether it is indirect via a weakened and vitiated "germ plasm," as per Weismann, or whether the exact method and process may not still lie in the unsolved problems of the laboratory. Whichever or whatever the exact process may be (which is the province of scientists only) the facts and results are before us, and concern each of us more vitally than does the question of what we shall eat or what we shall drink, or wherewithal we shall be clothed. . . .

One sometimes hears, also, from these half-informed jubilators that "Weismann does not believe in heredity; that the old theory is quite exploded." Now the fact is that Weismann is particularly strong in his belief in heredity—so strong as to give almost no weight to any possible process of intervention in its original workings. He simply holds that the transmission of "acquired character" is not proven, and he doubts the facts of these "acquired" transmissions. In his illustrations he deals chiefly (when in the higher animals) with bodily mutilations, and in the human race shows that the most proficient linguist, for example, does not produce children who can read without being taught. All of which is readily granted by his opponents. This type of "acquirement" has to do with knowledge and not with character in the fundamental sense of blood and nerve, condition and quality.

Of course, there are many and varied points in his theory of heredity with which only the biologist is capable of dealing. But, as I intimated at first, the Lamarck-Darwin-Weismann controversy, so far as the sociological aspect of the question is involved, does not touch us. It belongs to the laboratory—to how and not to the fact of transmission. But since the opposite impression has taken root in even some thoughtful minds, it is well to meet it in a direct and easily grasped form. There is a simple and direct method: I undertook it. I went to a number of well-known biologists and physicians and asked questions.

I thought it best to go to specialists in brain and nerve disorders, and to those who had had large hospital or asylum experiences. One of these, Dr. Henry Smith Williams, replied that there could be no doubt of the fact that such "acquired" characters or conditions are transmitted. One case which he gave me, however, from his private practice, will illustrate the point most clearly. B, a healthy man with no hereditary taint of the kind, acquired a certain disease at a given time and in a known way. Before this time he was the father of one daughter. Several years later another daughter was born to him. The first girl is, and has always been, absolutely free from any and all taint. The other one has all the inherited marks of her father's "acquired character" and condition, which even went the length in her case of producing the recognized change in the form of the teeth due to this disease. Now for all practical purposes it does not matter, in the faintest degree, whether that transmission was in accordance with pangenesis or by means of a vitiated environment of the "germ plasm." The fact is the appalling thing for parents to face. And I give this case only because it was one of a vast number of similar ones which came to me in reply to my questions addressed to different practitioners and specialists.

Among other places, I went to the head of a New York maternity hospital. This is what I got there: "If anybody in the world doubts for one second the distinct, absolute, unmistakable transmission of acquired disease of a kind which will and does modify 'character,' both mental and physical—if he doubts its results on humanity—he has never given even a slight study to the hospital side of life. I can give you hundreds of cases where there is no escape from the absolute proof that the children are born with the taint of an 'acquired character' from which they cannot free themselves. Sometimes it is shown in one form, sometimes in another, but it is as unmistakable as the color of the eyes or the number of the toes. To deny it is to deny all experience. I am not a biologist, and I do not undertake to explain how it is done," the doctor went on to say, "but I will undertake to prove to the satisfaction of the most skeptical that it is done. Come in this ward. Here is a child whose parents were robust, healthy, strong country folk until," and then followed the history of the parents who had "acquired" the "character" which they transmitted — which had made the mental moral and physical cripple in the ward before me. "Now here is what they transmitted," he added. "Do you fancy that if that half-idiot should ever have children of its own that they will be 'whole?' No argument but vision is needed in a case like this. That child's condition is the result of acquired character. Its children and its children's children will carry the acquirement—for we are not wise enough yet to eliminate even such as that from among active propagators of the race. If it were possible (which, thank heaven, is not likely) that the other parent of this half-imbecile's children, should it ever have any, would be of a sane and lofty type there might be a modification upward again in the progeny, but even then we would not soon lose the direct, undeniable, patent 'acquirement' which you see here."

It was the same story from each and every practitioner. The hospital and asylum experts, the specialists in diseases of mind and body, which were due to direct acquirement (such as drunkenness, acquired epilepsy and certain other diseases of an even less pleasant nature to discuss) were particularly strong in their contempt for even the theory that acquired character and condition are not transmitable. One doctor, himself a famous surgeon, laughingly said: "I'll grant if I cut off a man's leg or a few of his fingers, his children will not be likely to be deformed because of that operation. This is not a permeating constitutional condition, it is a mere local mutilation. But if I were to take out a part of his brain so as to produce (acquired) epilepsy upon him, I believe his children would be affected, and if he is badly diseased in a certain way (acquired) I know his children will be. Mind you, I don't say exactly what they will have, and they may not all have the same thing, but I do say that their 'germ plasm,' or whatever they come from, absolutely will carry the results of the acquired condition and character."

So I beg of you to remember that, while the fact and law of heredity is as certain as death itself, its course of action, its variability of operation, is as the March winds. To say that the constitutions and characters of your children will be determined, in great part, by the condition of your body and mind is but to utter a truism; but to say exactly how—in what given channel this effect will flow—is not, in the present state of biological and medical knowledge, possible.

Therefore, I repeat that so far as the public is concerned, so far as the sociological features of the problem of heredity are involved, so far as the Weismann theory relates to conduct and to physical and mental condition and their transmission, this controversy belongs wholly to the laboratory—to the how and not to the fact of hereditary transmission, as I trust the above illustrations (which might be multiplied a thousand times), will serve to show.

Again, to me it is a strange thing to find people looking upon this discussion or theory as something new. "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation" is not new. It comes from a book which most of you accept as having authority. It does not, and it never did, apply to a mere theological punishment in some future life. It was a recognition of the facts of hereditary transmission which the ancient Hebrews understood, and which the race illustrates within itself in all lands. The persistence of inherited condition, character and type—as to race—cannot be better shown than to point to the Jews.

A Jew is in no danger of being born a Mongolian. American or English parents will not give to the world Hindu children; Negroes are not born white and with straight hair. These are race types. This is racial heredity. But family heredity is just as certain, just as absolute. All Jews do not look and act exactly alike. Neither do all Englishmen or Germans, but the race type persists and continues the same. All members of a family are not exactly alike. There are a thousand modifying reasons and conditions. The same parents are not always in the same physical, mental, or moral condition. I could tell you of certain records that are now being kept, and which were never before kept scientifically, that is, not until the last thirty years—that would show you, as do the guinea-pig experiments—how even moral traits and conditions are transmitted, and how and why they do differ in the same family.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Belle Wisdom, of Inman, Nebraska, secretary of Central Nebraska district Sunday school association, writes: "It is earnestly desired that the Saints will remember in prayer Bro. Lewis H. Downey. He is seriously ill of typhoid fever in the Emanuel hospital in Omaha. Sunday school workers are especially requested to make him a special subject. Bro. Lewis is our superintendent and formerly district secretary."

Sr. Lena Christenson of Henry, Idaho, writes: "I ask the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of my husband, that if it be the will of God he may be restored to health. We have six children living. My husband is not a member of the church, and we hardly ever see a member—have not seen a missionary since Bro. Anthony was here two years ago. We were very sorry to hear of his death."

THE NEED OF VARIETY IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

In considering this subject, "The need of variety in the Sunday school," let us first think what the word variety means. Webster defines it as "change or difference." In every work or duty in life we find that the mind becomes tired of the same thing continually. The most pleasant occupation, or even recreation, if constantly performed becomes drudgery. 'Tis an old saying, "Variety is the spice of life." We find this as true in the Sunday school as in any other work. Therefore, Sunday schools, (not Sunday school superintendents only but Sunday schools, including officers, teachers, and scholars,) study to show yourselves approved of God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed.

Be progressive. It is so easy to keep on in the same old way. But to go onward requires an effort. True progress will always mean something overcome. Don't get into a rut and stay there Sunday after Sunday, year after year. Don't conduct your Sunday school so nearly the same each Sabbath that the secretary can write the minutes as well before as after the session. Everything in nature teaches change. As the poet has said,

> All things must change,
> To something new to something strange,
> Nothing that is can pause or stay.

It is indeed true, "Nothing that is can pause or stay." Wherever there is life, there must necessarily be change. Does not each day bring to us something new? Who can say that this morning was exactly like any other morning of our lives, or that the changing clouds of today or the sunset tonight ever have or ever will again present the same picture.

Everything in the life and teaching of Christ gives the same thought. I do not think in all his teaching we can find that he used the same illustration, the same parable twice. To the fishermen by the sea of Galilee he said, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." As he stood 'neath the brilliant lights of the temple he declared himself to be the "light of the world;" at the waters of Siloam, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." At other times he referred to himself as the "Good Shepherd," the "Resurrection and the life," the "Son in the Master's house," and many other ways. He always adapted himself to the place, and to the character, temperament, and occupation of those whom he taught. To be successful Sunday school workers we must also learn to do this. He had many different ways of illustrating one great principle. So it should be with us. I do not mean that the whole plan or outline of the Sunday school should be changed each Sabbath, for that would produce confusion rather than understanding. Have a definite object in view, a definite plan or outline to follow, then frequently change the minor details to prevent monotony.

Superintendents, don't always have the same opening or closing exercises. Teachers, don't always conduct your classes in just the same way. For opening services, we might sometimes have some special responsive scripture and song service. This could be prepared and written out by the superintendent or some one chosen by the superintendent, and distributed at the opening of the school. Again we might have prayer by one person or have school repeat Lord's prayer, and sometimes have it sung or chanted. Sometimes prayer might be dispensed with at opening of school and have scripture reading instead. For closing exercises we could sometimes have benediction, at another time repeat the Lord's prayer, at another have responsive dismissal service. The twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth verses of Jude are very appropriate for this, the superintendent repeating the twenty-fourth verse and she school responding with the twenty-fifth. Other good selections are found in 1 Corinthians 16: 23, 24, also Romans 16: 27. Some special song or song service might sometimes be prepared, or a talk on Bible history or archæology given. Of course some subject in connection with the lesson should be chosen.

In changing the way of conducting the recitations, we could one Sunday have the Quarterly used in class, another the Bible only, again recite without any reference at all. Sometimes have the class ask the questions on the lesson (without any reference of course). Give them certain subjects to look up or Scripture verses to learn. Sometimes give a Bible drill.

Of course this idea of variety in the Sunday school, like everything else, can be carried to extremes. Be careful not to do this. Make no such decided changes that your school each week will wonder what you are going to do next, but vary your exercises just enough that the work may not become monotonous, and that those who come to the Sabbath school simply for the enjoyment they find there may not lose interest, but be led to a higher purpose. To the thoroughly interested, live, wide awake, Sunday school worker, many new ideas will present themselves as needed. May God help us all to become this kind of workers.

In the Sunday school work let us strive to go on unto perfection and remember that "all things are possible to him that believeth."

NETTIE C. JOH.

DISCOURAGEMENT.

Disappointing facts do not warrant discouraging conclusions. It is not likely that Caleb and Joshua were delightfully exhilarated by the sight of the giants, and the walled cities, any more than the other ten spies were. The giants were actually no bigger, and the walls actually no higher, to the ten, than to the two. The facts were the same, but Caleb and Joshua concluded differently. Why? Because they included differently. The ten faced the situation by themselves; the two faced it with God. The "ten judged God in sight of their difficulties, and said, It cannot be done." The two judged the difficulties in the sight of God, and said, "We are well able." If, in the bright lexicon of youth, there is no such word as fail, so in the records of our lives as Christians, who trust in the living God, there never should be written, "And they brought back a discouraging report." Let the odds be against us, and obstacles seem insurmountable, we have but to include the Almighty in faith, and ourselves in fidelity, and let God draw conclusions. "He shall not fail, nor be discouraged," is the Divine intention concerning every soul, trustful and true.—Sunday School Times.

Conference Minutes.

LONDON.

Conference convened at St. Thomas, Ontario, June 16. Elder R. C. Longhurst chosen to preside; assisted by Pres. Joseph Smith and Elder R. C. Evans; Brn. John L. Burger and John Shields secretaries. The elders' reports were read; all were encouraging, and expressed a desire on part of the writers to continue in the good work to which they are called. A lot of new members have been added to the church, and several new places for gospel work have been made in the past nine months. Branches reporting: Arthur, Corinth, Ellice, Egremont, Garafraxa, Humber Bay, Kinglake, London, Masonville, McKillop, Oliphant, Proton, Selkirk, St. Marys, Stratford, St. Thomas, and Toronto. District treasurer's report: On hand last report $23 60; October conference collection $37.72; total expenses $15.89; balance on hand $45 43. Prayer and testimony meeting Sunday morning. Many testimonies and prayers were offered, showing a determination to press onward and upward for that great prize that is laid up for the faithful. It was encouraging to those who did not take part to listen to those who were telling how finely the work is progressing in every locality. Our beloved president, Joseph Smith, spoke many words of encouragement to the Saints and counseled to try to live pure and righteous lives before our fellow men that many others may be permitted to enjoy this great and glorious gospel. Preaching in the forenoon in the opera house by Elder A. C. Barmore. In the afternoon Pres. Joseph Smith spoke to a large audience in the same place; and Apostle R. C. Evans spoke to another large audience in the evening. On Monday morning the Saints again assembled for prayer meeting, and all enjoyed a good spiritual blessing. Three were baptized at this conference by Pres. Joseph Smith, and four children were blessed. Bro. R. C. Longhurst was sustained as president of district, Bro. John H. Taylor vice president, Bro. John L. Burger secretary, Bro. Samuel Pope treasurer. Vote of thanks was tendered Sr. Maggie McGregor for past services as secretary. Adjourned to meet at St. Thomas the first Saturday and Sunday in Octoober.

MOBILE.

Conference convened at Bay Minette, Alabama, September 8 and 9; W. L. Booker president, G. T. Chute secretary. Visiting brethren invited to take part. Branch reports: Bay Minette 77; E. A. Bankester recommended for ordination to office of teacher. Three Rivers 98; 17 received by letter from Pascagoula. Elders reporting: W. L. Booker, G. T. Chute, W. J. Booker, F. P. Scarcliff, and G. W. Sherman. S. D. Allen, missionary from Florida, had labored some in district. Tent committee report received and committee discharged. Tent was put in hands of Bishop's agent, he was authorized to make early examination, and if found fit for use to make some disposition of it and report to next conference. Bishop's agent reported from January 1 to September 1: Received $84.92; paid out $20; on hand $64 92. Audited and found correct. It was resolved that the Mobile district as it now stands occupies too much territory, and that we ask missionary in charge to take proper steps to have it divided. That Baldwin and Escambia (west of Big Escambia creek) counties, Alabama, and Escambia county, Florida, comprise a new district to be known as Bay Minette district. At seven p. m., S. D. Allen, from Florida, gave an able and instructive lecture from his chart of Jaredite and Nephite settlements in North and South America. Prayer meeting at 9:30 a. m. Preaching at eleven a. m., by W. L. Booker. Prayer and testimony at three p. m. E A. Bankester was ordained a teacher. Some were administered to and some children blessed. At seven p. m., preaching by G. T. Chute. The conference was quite well attended and was of a spiritual and instructive nature. Adjourned to meet at call of W. L. Booker, president.

EASTERN IOWA.

Conference met with Muscatine branch, September 8 and 9: district president, C. E. Hand, in the chair; J. R. Sutton secretary. Branches reporting: Osterdock, Fulton, Powersville, Clinton, Grove Hill, Green Valley, and Muscatine. Elders reporting: C. E. Hand, J. R. Sutton, T. J. Sheldon, O. H. Bailey, W. B Weston, John Heide, and Jesse F. Rulon; Priests D. J. Dierks and C. G. Dykes. Bishop's agent's report: On hand February 12, $351.11; received since $649.45; total received and on hand $1,000 56; expended $770; on hand September 6, $230 56. Audited and reported correct. A motion prevailed that the "Rules of Order and Debate," as published by the church, be adopted as the rules to govern the proceedings of our conferences henceforward. The reports of the brethren laboring with the tent were received, and ordered spread upon the minutes. The report of C. E. Hand showed that the district was indebted to him to the amount of $3.73, he having paid the freight of the tent to different places. Report accepted and an order for the amount on the district treasurer granted. A program committee was appointed, consisting of W. LaRue, C. G. Dykes, and J. L. Terry. A resolution was adopted, providing for a reunion, to be known as Eastern Iowa district reunion. A committee was appointed, consisting of Brn. O. H. Bailey, J. R. Sutton, W. B. Thomas, C. G. Dykes, and T. J. Sheldon. This resolution provides for the reunion to be held sometime during the month of September, 1901. Officers elected: C. E. Hand, president; O. H. Bailey, vice president; J. R. Sutton, secretary; C. G. Dykes, treasurer. Preaching by T. J. Sheldon, John Heide, J. W. Adams, J. R. Sutton, and C. E. Hand. The conference was a very spiritual and profitable one to all present. Adjourned to meet with Fulton branch sometime in February or March, 1901.

NORTHWEST KANSAS.

Conference was held August 11, on camp ground at Minneapolis. District president, J. F. McClure, in charge; assisted by H. A. Stebbins; Ella Landers clerk. Ministry reporting: Elders W. H. Mannering, J. A. Davis, A. Kent, William Landers, and J. F. McClure; Priests L. G. Gurwell and W. S. Hodson. Branches reporting: Blue Rapids, Idylwild, Rural Dale, Solomon River, Beloit, and Scandia. Branches not reporting: Norcatur and Homestead. Bishop's agent, A. Smith, reported: Amount on hand last report, March 17, $132 75; received $224.95; paid out $158 25; balance on hand, August 10, $199.45. Books audited and found correct. Officers elected for ensuing year: A. Kent president, Ella Landers clerk, E. Sandy treasurer. Motion carried to buy a horse and buggy for our missionaries. Presidents of branches appointed a committee to solicit money for this purpose. Clerk and missionaries to ask help from scattered members of district. Money, when collected, to be sent to A. Smith, Bishop's agent, Idylwild. Adjourned to meet at Idylwild in light of moon in November.

Sunday School Associations.

DECATUR.

Sunday school and Religio convention of above district convened in Evergreen chapel, six miles southwest of Lamoni, Iowa, September 7–9. There were two prayer and testimony services, three sessions devoted to the consideration of topics of interest to Sunday school and Religio, one session devoted to short speeches, one sermon, one Sunday school session, and one business session. Our conditions, our needs, the library, and the visiting committee were discussed. The attendance and interest were good, the Holy Spirit being present in a goodly degree, and we believe good was accomplished. Adjourned to meet at call of district officers.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

District Sunday school association convened at Hazel Dell, Iowa, August 24; D. R Chambers, superintendent; Jennie Scott, secretary. Short speeches by D. R. Chambers, George Underwood, J. A. Hansen, C. Rasmussen, H. N. Hansen, Frank Hough, Sam Roberts, Minnie Underwood, C. Wright, and J. S. Strain. The following schools reported: Council Bluffs, Creston, Underwood, Hazel Dell, Carson, Wheeler, Honey Creek, Grand View, Fontanelle, and Ransom. District officials and superintendents from the schools reported. By motion the secretary to return the school reports that are incorrect to the secretaries of the various schools for correction. The Ransom school to be received as a member of the association. By motion when this convention adjourns it does so to meet as two days of normal and institute work, at Underwood, the second Saturday and Sunday in December. Moved and carried, when this convention adjourns it does so to meet as a convention at Cresent, the first Saturday in February, 1901. Paper, "Benefits derived from a district organization," by Sr. George Underwood. Paper, "Sunday school libraries," by Julia Hansen, which were open for discussion. Adjourned to meet at Crescent.

NORTHWEST KANSAS.

Sunday school convention of above district met at Minneapolis, August 17. General superintendent, T. A. Hougas, in charge; Ella Landers, secretary. Schools reporting: Gaylord, Beloit, Greenleaf, Blue Rapids, Sterling, Minersville, Idylwild, and Minneapolis. Homestead not reported. Reports from superintendents and treasurer. Sr. Stella Hart elected district librarian. Vernie Nelson, O ive Grout, and Nettie Joh appointed program committee for next meeting. Adjourned to call of superintendent.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SESSION AT INDEPENDENCE REUNION.

The Sunday school work at the Independence reunion began August 25 at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, when the workers met in the large pavilion and an organization was effected as follows: W. N. Robinson superintendent, assisted by the superintendents of the various local schools present; F. M. Pitt secretary, Sr. Ballanger treasurer. Following this Brn. W. N. Robinson, J. A. Gunsolley, and William Clow were elected a committee to arrange for future meetings and programs for the same. Although the day was rainy, there was a goodly number present, and all felt quite happy in the short talks that followed by different ones suggesting the outline for the future meeting for the benefit of the program committee.

Sunday, August 26, a regular session of the Sunday school was held composed of nine senior, eleven intermediate, and nine primary classes. The total attendance for this Sunday was 449 with a collection of $5.93. The school was very nicely superintended by Bro. Robinson, and it was an inspiring sight to see such a large gathering working together so systematically. Almost if not perfect order obtained. The music and singing was conducted by Bro. O. James. Sr. O. James played the organ, Bro. John Robinson the cornet, and Bro. Bachelder the violin. This part of the program was simply grand. The burden of the secretary's work fell to the lot of Sr. Flo McNichols, who is very apt in that line of work, and who is the present secretary of the Independence Sunday school. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley conducted a short but very interesting review of the lesson, "True Riches," using the blackboard to illustrate and bring out the different points. Good attention upon the part of both teachers and scholars was paid, and it was quite evident that the lesson had been learned because of the prompt and correct answers to the questions that were asked. I was not able to remain until the following Sunday, but have learned that the attendance at the Sunday school on September 2 was 564 with a collection of $6 35. At this session Sr. Nellie Chatburn played the piano, Sr. James the organ, and with several stringed instruments and cornet the music was said to be inspiring indeed, and the march, no doubt, was a beautiful sight.

On Monday, August 27, two hours of the afternoon were spent in the consideration of two important subjects as follows: 1. The use of blackboard and object lessons in the Sunday school; 2. Home work department. The latter subject was conducted by J. A. Gunsolley, and the former by the undersigned.

August 31, Sr. Mina Hart, of Kansas, gave some very valuable instructions under the heading of, Kindergarten work in the Sunday school. We were very favorably impressed with the ideas presented, and believe that this is a step forward and in the right direction.

September 1, a short business meeting was held, at which regulation votes of thanks were tendered and an appropriation of five dollars was made to help pay the expense for the use of the park. We were pleased and encouraged with the interest manifested and counsel given by the traveling missionaries. I can truly say that it was a rare treat for me to be able to meet with so many good earnest Sunday school workers, many of whom I was acquainted with in my boyhood days, while many other faces were new to me; but this great and grand work made us feel as though we had always known each other. All who attended this reunion no doubt will go back to their different localities with a renewed zeal and energy, and a stronger desire and determination to accomplish good than they had when they came.

Your colaborer in gospel bonds,
F. M. PITT.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

Convention of Northeast Missouri district will convene with Pollock school, October 5, at two p. m. for business. Remember, there will be an election of a superintendent at this meeting for the remainder of the term. At 7:30 representatives from the schools, together with the Pollock school, will give a literary entertainment, consisting of recitations, papers, and songs. Let all attend that can, so we may have a profitable time, and let superintendents of the schools not forget to send reports to Bro. George A. Tryon, secretary, at Huntsville, Missouri.

MARY RICHARDS, Asst. Supt.

Clinton district Sunday school convention will meet at Rich Hill, Missouri, Friday, October 12. The presence of the teachers in the district is requested, as the work of the convention will be principally devoted to their instruction and the need of more thorough consecration to duty. Do not excuse yourself if you are not a teacher, you may be some day. Come praying for the success of the work.

MINA KEARNEY, Supt.
WARREN MCELWAIN, Sec.

Miscellaneous Department.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

St. Louis district conference will convene Saturday evening, September 29, at seven o'clock, in the Rock church, Glasgow avenue and Dickson street, St. Louis, Missouri, for the transaction of business; and on following Sunday for worship.

J. G. SMITH, Dist. Sec.

Conference of Eastern Michigan district will convene October 6 and 7, at Flint. Branch presidents and secretaries will please make out reports, and address them to Elder W. Davis, Flint, Michigan. Elder J. H. Lake, president of mission, is expected to be with us. All others are cordially invited to attend.

A. BARR, Pres.

CHANGE OF DATE.

For reasons which will be explained at the proper time, the date of holding Ohio district conference is changed from October 6 to September 29, just one week earlier than formerly announced. Branch officers will please prepare their reports accordingly.

JAMES MOLER, Pres.

Conference will convene at the Saints' chapel, Galland's Grove, Iowa, Saturday, October 27, at ten o'clock, continuing over Sunday. We hope that every branch will forward reports to secretary, Sr. Nellie Rudd, Dow City, Iowa, at least five days before conference. All local ministers and branch officers will please send individual reports in due time. In addition to your reports to conference it is necessary that every minister and branch officer should send an itemized report of labor to C. E. Butterworth, Dow City, Iowa, by the first of October, January, and March, in order that he may be enabled to make a full report to the missionary in charge, J. W. Wight, in harmony with instructions received. We have prepared and sent you blanks on which to make out your reports, hoping that all would report promptly.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.
J. M. BAKER.

Conference of Decatur district will convene at Lone Rock, Missouri, Saturday, ten a. m., October 6, continuing over Sunday, the 7th. Branch officers will please see that their respective branches are correctly and fully reported. The ministry are required to report in writing, so please see to it that your reports are in. Come prepared for a good and profitable time.

B. M. ANDERSON, Sec.

TWO DAYS' MEETINGS.

There will be a two days' meeting September 22 and 23, near Arlington, Iowa, in Arlington branch. All are invited to come, and bring the Spirit of the Master with you, that we may have a good time, not of a worldly kind, but a spiritual good time.

C. E. HAND, Pres.

RELIGIO NOTICES.

Northeastern Illinois district Religio association convenes at the stone church, Plano, Friday, October 5, at 3:15 p. m., for business. An instructive program will be rendered at 7:30 p. m.

ADAM J. KECK, Vice Pres.

REUNION NOTICES.

At the general reunion which will be held at Dow City, Iowa, from September 28 to October 7, there will be preaching services only in the forenoon and evening from the 1st to the 5th of October, arrangements having been made by the Sunday school and Religio committees to use these afternoons in their work.

Board without lodging can be had at hotel and private residences at three dollars per week. Board with lodging $3 50 per week.

The reunion committee will be running a boarding tent on the ground, where single meals can be had for twenty-five cents, five meals for one dollar, or three dollars per week. All who can are requested to patronize the boarding tent, because any profits derived therefrom will go towards defraying the expenses of the reunion. The committee will donate all their labor and will do all in their power for the satisfaction of its patrons.

Board for teams can be had at livery barns, where they will be fed and cared for at fifty cents per day; barn room without feed twenty-five cents per day.

Bed springs can be rented for twenty-five cents during the session, and cots for twenty cents.

The grounds are in good condition, and the citizens and their committee are doing all in their power to make our meetings a success, and the town council have especially favored us.

We especially urge all who want tents, springs, or cots to send their orders at once to A. H. Rudd, Dow City, Iowa; and all who have any business with the committee in any other way to either write to A. H. Rudd, secretary, or J. M. Baker chairman, Dow City, Iowa.

NOTICES.

To Scattered Members of Northwest Kansas District:—We have not names of all, so take this means of asking you to help in buying conveyance for our missionaries. We have been offered a buggy or road wagon at reduced rates, or at cost. Now is our chance to give in a much needed cause. It will be a great saving for us all, as well as provide a way for our missionaries to travel without depending on railroad trains, and enable them to reach points that are now somewhat neglected. Please read action of district conference as reported, and send remittances to Bishop's agent, A. Smith, Idylwild, Clay county, Kansas.

The following-named persons are requested to report to Atchison branch: James W. Jones, Bertha Quick, Joseph Stawpert, Adah Stawpert, John W. Ard, Theodosa Stawpert, James R. Thatcher, and Anna Estella Buck.

ALICE E. SPRAGUE, Sec.
ATCHISON, Kan., 1114 Walnut Street.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In ordering supplies for schools much inconvenience and positive annoyance to the office results from carelessness, which may be avoided by following these suggestions: (1) If there is a branch agent for the Herald Publishing House in your branch, let all supplies be ordered through this agent. (2) When ordering for the Sunday school, whenever a new person orders, be sure to give the name of the person to whom the supplies have been previously sent. This will prevent the frequent annoyance to both the office and schools of sending duplicate orders. (3) Be sure to sign your name to every order. If the order is not signed it will not be filled. (4) Send cash with order when at all practicable and save book accounts. (5) Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa,

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

THE SAME YET DIFFERENT.

We are requested by a friend to explain the difference between predestination and foreordination. There is a philological and also a theological meaning of those terms. In the strict word signification they express the same idea. To predestine an event and to foreordain it, are merely different terms for the same thing. But predestination has obtained a theological signification which conveys a different meaning to foreordination. It is that, we suppose, that our correspondent wishes explained.

According to the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination, the Almighty, before the foundation of the world, determined that a certain number of the souls he would create—the children whom he intended to bring forth—should be everlastingly saved from sin and perdition, through the merits of his Son Jesus the Christ alone, and all the rest should be eternally doomed to ceaseless torments in hell-fire. The few to be "saved from the rubbish of nature," not for any good that they themselves might do, and the majority condemned not for evils of which they might be personally guilty, but their fate was fixed beforehand, all for the praise and glory of God in the exercise of his sovereign power.

This being predestinated of course it may be argued that it was foreordained. But the scriptural doctrine of foreordination does not necessarily imply the awful human theory known as predestination. It declares that certain individuals were ordained before they were born, for a station, and a work to which they would be adapted, at given times and places on earth. They were to be "raised up" for the special purpose divinely intended, with environments and circumstances tending to favor their development and action on the lines required. But this does not imply their salvation or condemnation irrespective of their merits or demerits, or interference with the exercise of their individual agency and will.

The great leaders of mankind in religion, in science, in art, in colonization, in exploration, in war, in peace, in statesmanship and in all other departments of human life and progress, were thus foreordained to be born when and where they would be needed, in the plans and purposes of the eternal Father concerning the human race. As Jeremiah was known to God before he was formed in the body, and ordained by him to be a prophet to the nations (see Jeremiah 1:5) so other prophets were similarly selected. Napoleon was thus, as he said, a "man of destiny." So was George Washington. The same may be said of Lincoln and many others of modern times, also of Abraham, Moses, David, Cyrus, Alexander and the grand heroes, poets, sages, and seers of former ages, as well as of the latter days. They were chosen from the beginning, but not predestinated to be saved or damned on the Calvinistic principle.

Foreordination to a given work on earth, was predicated on foreknowledge of what they would do when placed in their several spheres of action. No compulsion was or is exercised upon them from above or beneath. They were and are left to their own volition, and will be judged "according to their works." Their merits and demerits will count for what they are worth. In eternity they will be what they are, and will occupy that position for which they are fitted, determined by their earthly acts, and their adaptability for a higher, or lower, or intermediate place in the "many mansions" of the Father of all.

Salvation is attainable to every soul who will receive the Savior and obey his word and will. None will be lost that can possibly be saved. In the body or out of the body the opportunity to receive the truth and serve God will be afforded them, and redemption will come even to the relieving from punishment, when they freely and gladly accept the means of salvation. Christ died for all, and all may be redeemed if they will.

The foreknowledge of God is often confounded with predestination. It does not follow because he foreknew that Adam would sin, that our first earthly parent was predestined or foreordained to sin. It was the foreknowledge of his transgression that prompted the foreordination of Christ to be the Savior, "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." He came and performed his mission voluntarily, and gained the reward of free obedience. His example is offered to others who if they choose may "follow in his steps."

Thus, as we have shown, while the terms predestination and foreordination have technically the same signification, their meanings in the sense in which they are often religiously used are very different. God's foreordination and some men's notion of predestination, are as wide apart as the heaven prepared for the righteous and the punishment reserved for the wicked.—Deseret Evening News, Sept. 15, 1900.

THE RIGHT USE OF MONEY.

By the Rev. Charles Gore, D. D., Canon of Westminster.

In the parable of the unjust steward religious people have their attention directed to the extraordinary intellectual activity and promptitude of worldly people, in order that they might be stirred up for shame to no less intellectual activity. We have no exact information in regard to legal property or the duty of stewards in those days. Details, therefore, are more or less obscure, but the main principle is clear. This county property was managed by a steward, who, like the Queen's Viceroy in India in our days, had almost plenipotentiary power. When about to lose this position he declared he had not the physical strength to become a laborer, and, having always been in a respectable position, he was naturally ashamed to beg. But, wringing his hands in despair, he determined to ingratiate himself with the tenants, and so gain time to look around. There were still a few days or hours before his loss would be known. He would use that time by lowering the rents suddenly. In course of time he was found out. Apparently, however, it was too late to alter what he had done, for he had put the agreement in writing. This man was a rascal, but a clever rascal—he was an unscrupulous man; but we are struck with the intellectual faculty so quickly brought to bear upon his one chance. Well, we profess to belong to a different world. Why did we allow the children of this world to exhibit so much more intelligence and cuteness? Why were they so much wiser and sharper than the children of light? That was the main point. Our Lord applied it to mammon, or money, addressing his disciples, who had no personal possessions except what was given to them for their own support, and other people (especially charitable women).

But our Lord has observed a tendency to take too much satisfaction in what was supplied. Judas kept the bag. Judas was thoroughly worldly. Our Lord recalls religious people to a sense of responsibility in the use of money, which can be used to make bad men good and good men better. It can be used to knit the bonds of friendship closer and to arouse grateful and friendly relations generally. Money is a little thing, but it is something. We live in a commercial age. There is no question at all that our faculty for intelligent calculation is directed in an extraordinary degree to commercial methods.

Commerce is to a great extent unscrupulous. It leaves God out of sight, and it is the duty of religion to point out that God is the judge of the world; that for no end will he tolerate injustice or wrong.

Look at men who are using all their cleverness and ingenuity, employing all their splendid human faculties in considering how rapidly they can acquire wealth. What extraordinary trouble we take to understand the methods of business, and how little to understand that volume containing the message of God, which we all acknowledge to be the most interesting book in the world! Yes, the sons of this world are infinitely wiser than the children of light.

Let us apply our money so that it shall help bad men to be good and good men to be better. There was an admirable lay sermon in a newspaper recently in the form of a letter on the use of money among the middle classes and the growth of luxury. The things we use but which we could do without increase, and the amount we spend on our holidays becomes greater and greater, and we value plain living and high thinking less and less. A tendency in this direction has rotted nations. It is a question for individuals. We could bring up our families to live a simple life, which alone dignifies a man. We are not without splendid examples of people who, though possessed of ample means, have yet brought up their children far more strictly and frugally then men with one tenth of their income; people who have lived simple, unostentatious lives in order that they might have more to spend on others. We know there are children who must go to ruin, body and soul, unless they be taken away from their present surroundings at home and abroad.

The question of questions is, "Will we do it?" Will we deny ourselves and economize in order to save the children? Religious people must remember that they are richest when they can say, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee." —Chicago Tribune, September 7, 1900.

THE PITHECANTHROPUS.

The Vanderbilt millions have several times been diverted from the field of finance and commerce to enrich the interests of art and science. They brought a Cleopatra needle to New York, they established a university in the South, and they contributed to the Art Museum of New York some of its rarest treasures. Now George Vanderbilt of Biltmore has applied the necessary funds for the fitting out and dispatch of an expedition under the auspices of Yale College to discover the Pithecanthropus, who is reported to be somewhere in the Island of Java, and bring him or her to this country.

The Pithecanthropus is the missing link between man and the lower animals and all the evolutionists from Darwin down have been "up against it." It is an agile creature. The evolutionists have many times been close upon its track, or rather the track of its bones, for the breed is extinct, but it has eluded them. They believe now, however, that it has been definitely located and cannot make its escape. They are so sure they have it cornered that Professor Haeckel of Jena, the most eminent of the German evolutionists, will also start for Java in quest of Pithecanthropus, but as he does not sail until October 1 the Yale University expedition will be on the ground before him, and it is to be hoped will secure the first specimen, if there be more than one Pithecanthropus, and thus add another feather to the cap of American enterprise and "get there."

If Pithecanthropus shall prove to be "the missing link," young Mr. Vanderbilt's money will not have been thrown away. All the great scientists have searched for it most assiduously and "mourned because they found it not." Its discovery may tend to humiliate proud man by confirming his simian ancestry and will make sad havoc with the current biographies of our supposed progenitor, who dwelt in the Garden of Eden and at whose grave Mark Twain wept so profusely. It will settle, however, many moot points in natural history and perhaps explain some of the attributes that pertain to human "cussedness." Perhaps, also, it will throw light upon the question why some men have plenty of backbone and some have none at all. Incidentally, this expedition in quest of Pithecanthropus suggests that even millionaires are of some use in the world, and that they are not altogether heartless is shown by Mr. Vanderbilt's desire to find the tie that binds us to the humble beasties of the earth, so that we may all rejoice in a common brotherhood.—Chicago Tribune, September 9, 1900.

MINING ACTIVITY IN THE BLACK HILLS.

There is considerable mining activity in the Black Hills, and a number of new mines are being opened up. Comparisons made between the present condition of mining in the Black Hills and that of Colorado, Idaho, and other western precious metal states are not at all unfavorable to the former. Last year upward of $8,000,000 was taken from Lawrence County mines, one of them being the Homestake. There is said to be not more than one stamp mill standing idle in the county. And yet the Black Hills mining industry can be said to be practically in its infancy, for there are great areas which will ultimately prove of great productiveness that yet remain unnoticed and unexploited.

TO TELL FRESH FISH.

The signs of freshness are the same for all fish; and let it be borne in mind that fish, unlike other meat food, must be fresh to be good. A stale fish is a spoiled and unwholesome one. "From water to pot" expresses the ideal of freshness, but few are they who can get their fish for cooking so soon after they are caught. If, when taken from the water, a fish be immediately buried in fine ice it will be good for several days—ten, fish-dealers say; but this period should be "shaded." Frozen fish will keep all winter—that is, they will not decompose—but they lose everything that makes them good.

To tell a fresh fish, see that the flesh is firm—too firm to admit of pressure leaving a dent—that the eyes are full, scales bright, fins stiff, gills bright—not pale or dark liver-colored—and that there is no marked odor. When it will stand these tests it is both fresh and in its right season for eating. As a general rule very large fish should be boiled, medium-sized ones baked or broiled, and small ones fried, from which they take the name of "pan-fish."—Ella Morris Kretschmar, in the October Woman's Home Companion.

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPT. 26, 1900.

REUNIONS.

TABOR, INDEPENDENCE, AND STEWARTSVILLE.

The editor was absent from home some three weeks, beginning with August 23, attending reunions held at Tabor, Iowa, August 24 to September 2; Independence, Missouri, for same dates, and Stewartsville, Missouri, from August 31 to September 10; and taking a more or less active part in each of them, as opportunity and duty demanded.

The reunion at Tabor was noted as one of the most satisfactory in its general results ever held in the region. We were in attendance during the first four days; the business of the session being under the supervision of Brn. J. W. Wight, Henry Kemp, I. M. Smith, and Daniel Hougas. Bro. Wight arriving on the ground Tuesday, August 28, Brn. Kemp and Smith in charge till his arrival, he having been delayed at Benan by a previous arrangement. None were baptized while we remained, nor have we heard whether any baptisms occurred after we left.

The outside attendance was large, all the country side turning out to the Sunday meeting of the 26th.

From Tabor, we went on the 29th to Independence, where we found a large company of the Saints and outsiders holding possession of a one time pleasure resort, Washington Park, the services being held in the pavilion.

The editor was made one of the presiding authorities, but his associates, Brn. I. N. White and R. May, did the chief part of the work, in pleasant and effective way. Here, as at Tabor, the Sunday services were largely attended. Six were baptized.

At one of the sessions when the editor spoke, there were six of the elders of the Utah church present.

The services closed on Sunday, September 2, Bro. Columbus Scott preaching an excellent sermon on the second coming of Christ. On the 5th, in company with Bro. Scott, we reached the camp at Stewartsville, which we found in charge of Brn. J. C. Foss and Temme T. Hinderks, missionary and president of district respectively. Here we aided what we could, and found that great spiritual peace and unity prevailed, quite in advance of any reunion held in the district before. It is the Far West district, and emphasized the fact that in the waste places the gospel work is being revived. The services on Sunday, September 9, were largely attended, the tent being full and overflowing.

We had the benefit of the labors of Brn. C. Scott, J. S. Roth, and J. M. Terry from their respective fields. Thirteen were baptized.

The services closed on Monday evening, the 10th, under the visitation of a storm of wind and rain, which abated, however, in time for the people to get home and to their tents without getting wet.

We are pleased to record that so far as we are able to see and weigh what transpired at these three reunions, they were the source of renewal of strength to the Saints, and attractive and instructive to those of the outside. The best of order prevailed at each, and the attention was profound, respectful, and sincere.

REUNION IN LIEU OF FALL CONFERENCE.

Referring to that portion of Bro. James Caffall's letter in which inquiry is made as to "when the church discontinued the semiannual conferences and ordered big reunions in lieu thereof;" we note as follows: Extracts from the minutes of the April session of conference for 1883, held at Kirtland, Ohio. The first action occurred April 12; the final action was on April 13. See Herald for May 5, 1883:—

Brn. Charles Derry and John Hawley presented preamble and resolution, authorizing the holding of annual reunion meetings:—

"Whereas, in consequence of the church dispensing with the Semiannual Conference, the Saints in the Western States feel there is a great void, and also one great means of spiritual strength taken from them; and believing as we do, that not only can the Saints be strengthened in their faith and hope, but also that the people of the world will be induced to attend such meetings, as shall be hereinafter named, and that thereby much good may accrue to the cause of God in general. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this General Conference does authorize the holding of yearly meetings in the fall of each succeeding year, at such time and place, or times and places, as shall be deemed wisdom in the mind of the conference, such meetings to be called Annual Reunion Meetings of Latter Day Saints. Be it further

"Resolved, That this privilege be extended to all sections of the church wherever it may be desired; and further, that a committee be appointed, as may be deemed proper, to select such time and place, or times and places, for the holding of such meetings as shall be most convenient for the section or sections where such meeting or meetings may be held."

Moved by E. C. Brand and G. Hicklin, That we adopt the preamble and resolution. Spoken to by W. H. Kelley, C. Derry, and J. Hawley. Brn. Z. H. Gurley and C. A. Beebe moved as a substitute, "That the chair appoint a camp meeting to be held this coming autumn in Western Iowa, and that he be authorized to associate with himself a sufficient number of the eldership to perform said work." Spoken to by E. C. Brand, J. H. Lake, E L. Kelley, G. Hicklin, C. A. Beebe, H Kemp, and R Etzenhouser. Brn. W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs moved as an amendment to the substitute:—

"Resolved, That this conference recommend that mission or district authorities of the church arrange to hold the reunion meetings each autumn within their respective limits for religious exercises."

Moved by F. G. Pitt and G. S. Yerrington to refer the whole matter to a committee, appointed by the chair. Motion to refer prevailed.

The chair appointed on said committee: W. W. Blair, Charles Derry, John Hawley. . . .

Brn. W. W. Blair, Charles Derry, and John Hawley, the committee on reunion meetings, reported:—

"The committee to whom was committed the papers in respect to reunion meetings by the church, beg leave to report that they respectfully recommend that this conference advise that mission and district authorities arrange for such reunions for religious services, when and where it may be by them deemed best."

Moved by Brn. G. H. Hilliard and G. T. Griffiths, that the report be approved. Motion prevailed and the committee was discharged.

The last semiannual conference was held at Lamoni, in the fall of 1882, and in 1883 the first so-called general reunion was held, in pursuance of the above recited action of conference. This reunion has been succeeded every year since then, its perpetuity having been provided for by each recurring session, by regular action through motion, discussion, and vote.

The conference action not only provided for the one reunion, but gave permission for others, wherever the proper mission and district authorities should deem it practicable or proper to hold them.

We presume that there is no practicable way to ascertain the aggregate amount the several reunions held throughout the church have cost, including the costs incurred by individuals in attending them; but it is no doubt considerable. But it may, we think, be safely left to the discretion of those who choose to attend, whether they will forego the pleasure and the good they take and receive in attending reunions and place the estimated cost of such attendance in the church coffers to be used as suggested by Bro. Caffall, sending elders and literature where such may be needed.

The editor has attended several of these annual reunions each year, and is quite prepared to state that, with a few exceptions the good wrought by them has largely compensated for the individual and collective outlay incurred by holding them. Especially is this true of those held in western Iowa, which replaced the fall, or semiannual conference.

MOTIVE.

Doubtless many of the actions of men, that to outward observation are apparently righteous, would seem quite different were we able to view the motive by which they are prompted. An act, which in itself seems to be right, appears detestable when we discover that the motive underlying it is a selfish one.

The purpose of the gospel is to develop faultless characters, and the only way we can reach such a condition is by doing right because it is right. Thus only can we completely eliminate selfishness from our minds; for so long as an improper motive exists, there must remain a degree of selfishness.

The Prophet Mormon offers the following excellent thought upon this subject:—

For behold, God hath said, a man being evil, cannot do that which is good; for if he offereth a gift, or prayeth unto God, except he shall do it with real intent, it profiteth him nothing. For behold, it is not counted unto him for righteousness. For behold, if a man being evil, giveth a gift, he doth it grudgingly; wherefore it is counted unto him the same as if he had retained the gift; wherefore he is counted evil before God. And likewise also is it counted evil unto a man, if he shall pray, and not with real intent of heart; yea, and it profiteth him nothing; for God receiveth none such; wherefore, a man being evil, cannot do that which is good; neither will he give a good gift.—Moroni 7:1 (Small Ed).

Thus it appears that when our acts are weighed in the balances of God's justice it will not be altogether what we have done that will justify us. The motive as well as the act will be taken into consideration. Isaiah, also, in speaking of Christ says that "he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears." The outward act, the outward appearance, will not alone constitute the criterion by which God will judge the characters of men.

This being true, it follows that the self-examination which Paul admonishes the Saints to make, should be an internal as well as an external one. Fortunately we are not left without the ability to make such an examination. Much as we may lack the power to sit in righteous judgment upon the actions of our fellow men, the inmost recesses of our own souls are open to our inspection, and if we neglect to examine, we do so at our peril.

When we pray, then, is it "with real intent," from the heart, or merely as a form? When we sing hymns of praise to God, do we do so that God may be glorified, or that we may be heard of men? Whenever we labor in our respective callings, ostensibly for the purpose of doing good, are we sure the incentive is a righteous one?

A self-examination in the light of motive may be severe and oftentimes humiliating, but it will work wonders in the transformation of character. All affectation will disappear from the actions of one who persistently does right because it is right. A character so formed is a light to the world, an honor to God, and a menace to evil wherever it may be found.

SUCCESSION IN CHURCH PRESIDENCY.

The following, which was sent to the Ensign by Bro. W. S. Pender, will be of sufficient interest to our readers to justify its reproduction here. It appeared in the Ensign for September 20:—

AFFIDAVIT OF MARTIN HARRIS' NIECE, MRS SOPHIA K. COOK.

PROVO CITY, Utah, Sept. 13, 1900.

With no other motive than that the truth may be known by all men to whom this affirmation may come, I, Mrs. Sophia K Cook, do hereby solemnly swear that I was born near Pontiac, Michigan, July 28, 1828. I was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Missouri, in my girlhood, my parents having previously united with that church; that I am now a member of the Church of Latter Day Saints, the headquarters of which is located at Salt Lake City, though I do not indorse polygamy; that I was present in a meeting held in a bowery in Nauvoo, Illinois, the date of which, to the best of my recollection, was the spring or summer of 1843 or 1844; I was sitting west from the speaker's stand, only a few feet; at this meeting I heard Joseph Smith, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, say, in substance: "I have often been asked who would succeed me as the prophet to the church; he is here in the stand." He then turned and led his son, Joseph, before the audience and said: "My son, Joseph, will be your next prophet." Approximately, I should say there were several hundred people present at this meeting. SOPHIA K. COOK Subscribed and sworn to before me this 13th day of September, A. D. 1900.

SEAL. JOHN U. BUCHI, Notary Public.

My commission expires February 5, 1904.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Will you please give space to interpret section 4, p. 9, in Rules of Order and Debate, which reads: "Organizations [of branches] may be effected by the missionary in charge, or by the district president, with the consent, knowledge, and direction of the missionary in charge, when circumstances prevent the latter from being present; or by order of the conferences." Question; Can the missionary in charge (of the twelve) delegate authority to the submissionary to organize a branch?

He can so direct, if need be.

Have members who have refused or neglected (having been requested to do so) to put in their letters of removal and become members of a branch a right to a vote in a business meeting of said branch?

No one who is not a member of the branch can vote in its business meetings, except by the courtesy of the branch expressed by vote.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. W. Wight writes from Mt. Pisgah, Iowa:—

Bro. Derry and self are having fine hearing here in tent. Steps taken last night looking to the erection of church building here.

Bro. J. F. Patton, under date of South Dakota, September 12, writes:—

I am glad some one has had the courage to state the condition of the graves and the home of the Martyr Joseph and his brother. I will give ten cents, for a start, to protect the spot once so dear to the Saints.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

It was with feelings of sorrow and grief that we learned on Saturday morning of the death of Bro. John C. Hitchcock, president of the St. Louis branch. He died at his home in that city September 21, at ten o'clock p. m. Although quite a young man in the work he was an energetic and earnest worker, and in the St. Louis branch and district he has long been looked upon as a pillar of strength, always ready and anxious to give his time and attenion to the good of the cause. In the Religio he will also be greatly missed, as he was one of the fathers of the society, and always an active worker therein. He has been tried in many positions of responsibility and always proved worthy of trust. To his bereaved wife and family the HERALD extends sympathy and condolence. We grieve with the bereaved ones.

Mansfield, Ohio, has been making a most unenviable record of late in its treatment of the Dowie elders. The town seems to be suffering from an anti-Dowie monomania, and the elders who have gone to the town have been run out continually. On the 24th the Mansfield citizens added a most disgraceful page to their history. Two of the elders were tarred, beaten, hooted at, pelted with missiles, and sent out of town. Such work is highly condemnable, and smacks loudly of the spirit of ignorant intolerance. It is disgusting that there should be such contemptible work practiced in this day of enlightenment and free thought, and reminds one of the days of Salem witchcraft, the destruction of the press at Independence, and the tarring and feathering of Bishop Partridge and Elder Allen, at Independence, Missouri, and Joseph and Hyrum Smith at Hiram, Ohio.

SERMON BY R. M. ELVIN.

Delivered at Washington Park Reunion, Saturday, September 1, 1900.

"Wise men lay up knowledge." You will find this statement in the 10th chapter of Proverbs and the 14th verse.

Prior to my baptism into the church, I might say that if there came to me any aspiration in life it was that I might become a politician and a lawyer—that was the profession that seemed to have attracted my youthful attention; and after I had accepted of the gospel, it was but a very short time until I was requested to submit to an ordination, and the first question I asked of those who presented this proposition, "What will be my duty?" The elder kindly brought to me the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and on a piece of paper marked out the pages pointing to the duty of the office to which they proposed to ordain me.

I asked for time to study and to seek for divine guidance, that if it was the Lord's will that I should take this office and responsibility upon me that I might feel that it was right, and before I had given my consent, there came a direct revelation to appoint me to another office, that of elder, and with the revelation came the evidence that it was my duty to accept, so that before I was twenty-one years of age, I had begun in the active ministry as an elder in the church.

From the time of my entering into the work there settled upon my soul the conviction that the thought suggested in the text was the all important one, that I should acquire knowledge. I do not believe there has ever been a time that has come and gone since the time of my uniting with the church but my soul has thirsted, and my prayer has gone up to my heavenly Father for more knowledge, and for that divine knowledge that will assist me in accomplishing good for others. The crowning glory that comes to man is a manifestation of divine knowledge; it is that which should be the passport into the circle of the redeemed ones and will take away the veil from off our faces, that we may stand in the presence of our Redeemer and Mediator and the holy angels, and that without fear or shame.

It must be apparent to the thoughtful ones that a disparagement in knowledge here is a barrier to those who are further advanced in education and the science of life and the affairs thereof. I have had some lessons, object lessons, that taught me clearly; I could not misunderstand that fellow-feeling that is in our hearts, of a diffidence that we experience in the presence of those whom we consider our superiors. I remember that for five years while serving the government, that men far in advance of me in education and with wealth beyond everything that I have ever had any thought of, that those men would come in, remove their hats, pay respect to me, that I could not under any consideration expect of them, and the only reason that I can now assign for it was that it was not to me, but to the position that I occupied. If you should enter into the presence of a judge, a governor, a senator of the United States, or the President of the United States, there would come from your heart feelings of deference for the position that the individual occupied, and you would pay respect and deference to this individual that you would not did he not occupy the place that he does.

I have heard many, very many of our elders express themselves that they would rather take a good sound threshing than to stand up and preach in the presence of President Joseph Smith, or in the presence of some of the twelve apostles, and I remember my first experience of this stage fright that came over me in 1869, in returning from the Galland's Grove conference. I was the companion of the president of the church, and as we went to the schoolhouse he says: "Robert, you will have to preach tonight." It frightened me, and I protested that I possibly could not do so. Years have come and gone, and there has come to me this conviction, while I may have the same respect, the same love for men and office now as I had then, a refusal to discharge my duty will not excuse me to my heavenly Father, and I have reached the conviction that I am not the servant of the president of the church or of any leading man in this church. I am their fellow colaborer, and the servant of God and the Lord Jesus Christ; and while I recognize them in their places, and ofttimes think, as I have this morning, that that which I have to present to you might be presented better by some one else, that does not for a moment release me from the responsibility that rests upon me.

I have heard the president of the church say that no man was excused until he had first made the attempt to do that which was required of him; so remember, you who are younger in the ministry than your speaker, if the president of the church ever asks you to do any thing, go and try to do it, and if you fail, let me tell you, you will never find a kinder or more sympathetic friend than in him who requests you to do that work; and I believe that this is but a manifestation of Him whom we seek to serve, that when He asks us to discharge a duty and we shall make the effort, then He will help us, and our infirmities will be an appeal to His sympathy to give us strength that we need in the hour thereof.

Simplicity, to me, is the strongest evidence of a desire to do right, and I have thought often of the poor colored man who was tempted, and an effort made to discourage him in his religious efforts when the infidel said to him: "Sambo, you are very religious, you believe in God. Now what would you do if God commanded you to jump through that stone wall?" The poor black man looked at the wall and looked at the one who had made the proposition, and said: "Massa, afore God, if God commanded me to jump through that wall, it would be my business to jump; it would be God's business to put me through that wall."

If God requires me to do anything, it is my business to try, and leave the results with my heavenly Father. Now, "Wise men lay up knowledge."

I am glad this morning, glad from the deep recesses of my heart, that I can look up toward my heavenly Father and say, As wide and as far as my association with the Latter Day Saints has gone, there is a universal testimony that rises up from all directions, that our people desire to become wise and acquainted with all the duties that God has imposed upon them. Somewhere back in the tradition of the elders—I do not know when, where, and how it came about, but I can remember it in my early youth—I hear but very little of it at the present time—it was so frequently said to us that all we had to do was to go out and open our mouths and God would fill them. There is a degree of truth in this, there is a degree of what is right in this; but it is my understanding that I shall not go with an empty head, that there shall be stored up in the storehouse of knowledge that which will be for good and the good of my fellow creatures, that I have laid to heart the lessons of the past, and I have been studiously engaged in gathering together a goodly store of that which shall help me in the discharge of every duty; and then when the hour and the necessity comes, and I stand up, trusting to my heavenly Father, the Spirit of God will go to that storehouse of knowledge that I have laid up and he will bring out of that storehouse, and bring on the tongue such words as shall be words of comfort, and cheer, and instruction to those who shall hear.

For one, I pledge you this morning, that I refuse to become as a fledgeling in the nest and open my mouth to receive bug or worm as the mother bird may bring them without first knowing what it is. I have reached that stage of manhood that I do not propose to receive and adopt as a part of my belief and life-work the statement of any man, nor any set of men, until I am satisfied that God will set the seal of his approval thereon, and when I have that seal, then I shall abide thereby.

This requires study, it requires consideration and prayer. It requires an acquaintance with that which is contained in our text-books. It is an astonishment to me when I come in contact with those in any form of what is called Mormonism by the world, that they shall go out to preach the gospel and manifest their ignorance of the text-books and the history of the church. And permit me to counsel you people of the Reorganization present this morning, that in your getting knowledge—and above all things get knowledge—let me urge upon you that the foundation, that the leading text-books of your acquiring knowledge shall be as God directed, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and then add to it the history of this church from its earliest incipiency to the present time, and if you have time to acquire additional knowledge, then go out according to the direction that is laid down in these books that you may acquire that knowledge, and you will discover that there is a cherishing fountain that will spring up unto eternal life in accepting God at his word and doing that which he has commanded and directed you to do.

You will have the strength and confidence that when your faith is assailed, you will have right away in the knowledge-box that God has intended that you shall keep well filled, the answer to give to every man in the hour that he shall demand of you. You will not be at a loss, for the Spirit will come instantly and tell you what will be the proper answer to the question that is presented.

Now there is a work in this, and while our subject this morning is not strictly of a religious character, there is a religious business connected with it, and you will discover already that there is something at the end of Brother Elvin's talk to you that points in that direction. We wish to read a little notice in the Herald for August 29, 1900, on page 571, being this week's Herald.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NOTICE.

Graceland College will open on the 11th of September. Current expenses will have to be met. Bro. R. M. Elvin has been requested and authorized by the trustees to visit the different branches and solicit subscriptions to help pay the running expenses, which will be at the lowest calculation three hundred and fifty dollars per month. We cannot afford to borrow any more money to run the College. We have about forty yearly twenty-five dollar subscribers. We need sixty more. Will the Saints and friends of the College come to the rescue? Trusting that the Saints will receive Brother Elvin in a friendly, practical spirit, that this branch of the work may be a grand success, Yours for the triumph of every church institution,

WM. ANDERSON,
President Board of Trustees.

This clearly sets before you why we have chosen wisdom or knowledge as the theme of conversation, and that this may be spread wider and more helpful to others, that there is an undertaking in the church and that work is the work that we shall present to you this morning. I ask your attention to the Book of Covenants, and perhaps the most of my time will be occupied in this book on this particular subject. Section 122, paragraph 13, page 373 of the Book of Covenants as I hold it in my hand reads as follows:—

The Spirit saith further: The twelve should remain in Lamoni, and continue in council with the presidency and the bishop, and his counselors if practicable, a sufficient time after the adjournment of conference to counsel together, and agree on the things of the law and the general affairs of the church, so that when the traveling council shall separate for their several fields, there may be no longer reason for distrust, suspicion, or dissension; and if these officers will so counsel together in the spirit of moderation and mutual forbearance and concession, my law will be more perfectly understood by them and a unity of sentiment and purpose will be reached by them. It is the will of your Lord and your God that this should be done. It should have been done before, but the adversary hath hindered, desiring to prevent the success of my work in the earth.

The adversary had prevented the culmination of a certain work that was not brought about until 1894, and as wise men, as a church, we should have the guidance of God's Holy Spirit. We should not permit that there should come within our breasts or within our ranks anything that may bring about a recurrence of that of the past when the wrong or the misfortunes that the Lord speaks of should recur to distress or harass the people of God; we should be wise that there should not again come to us any distress, any suspicion or any dissension, and we ought to be wise in laying up the knowledge, that whenever there comes to us a difference of views, that at once we accept the counsel of God and in moderation and with mutual forbearance, and making needed concessions, not compromising God's law in that which is right, and concessions of the radical positions perhaps that we may have occupied, that there may be no "sprag in the wheel," as a coal digger would say, that the cause of God may not be hindered, but that it may grandly and in all its parts move steadily upward to the accomplishment of that whereunto God hath directed it.

I turn next to section 123. I read paragraphs 1 to 6, and 29, and on pages 375-6, and 381. You will see the reason for reading these.

In compliance with the requirement of paragraph thirteen of the revelation received during conference and by agreement between the quorums affected, the first presidency, the twelve, and the bishopric met in joint council in the editor's room of the Herald Office at nine a. m., Friday, April 20, 1894. There were present: Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, of the first presidency; Alexander H. Smith, E. C. Briggs, James Caffall, W. H. Kelley, J. H. Lake, J. R. Lambert, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, and Gomer T. Griffiths, of the twelve; E. L. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard, and E. A. Blakeslee, of the bishopric.

President Joseph Smith was chosen to preside, and E. A. Blakeslee to act as secretary. A. H. Smith offered prayer, after which the president made a few remarks bearing upon the object of the council, and advising forbearance and toleration in speech and feeling, regardless of the distance between those present in their judgment upon the matters under discussion.

A number of questions were named and noted for discussion, and considerable informal talk was indulged in, after which resolutions were presented, discussed, and adopted in the following order, all decisions being finally made unanimous, with the sole exception noted:—

LAMONI COLLEGE.

Resolved that we look with favor upon the effort to build a college at Lamoni, to be controlled by the church.

Resolved, further, that we believe it should be a purely educational institution and free from sectarian influences or bias.

Resolved, further, that we give our hearty support to the present movement looking in the above direction.

Thus ended the work of the council convened in accordance with the requirement of the revelation which had been formerly accepted by the church. All present were convinced that the appointment had been wisely made and that the results were and would be such as would fully attest the divinity of the call.

One of the things that was considered by that council that we have this endorsement from, was the college at Lamoni, and this was to be an institution of learning. And we turn now to section 85, paragraph 36, page 226 and in that section we read:—

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, Call your solemn assembly as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God; that your incomings may be in the name of the Lord; that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord; that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High.

With all the work that we should do for the church, we are not permitted to neglect this house of learning where education may be furnished to the youth of the church. Let no one here understand that the college was built by the church with the intention that it was to furnish to the leading men of the church a place at which they might educate their children at the expense of the church, for the college was built that every one coming knocking at the door might receive the same opportunity and the same privilege. It is to be a house of learning, not a house in which preachers will be made—far be it from the church that we should reach the conclusion that we must have a place after the manner of the world to prepare our ministry in the college and send them out. That would be incompatible with the teachings of the church for the past seventy years. Do not for a single moment think that the church is changing from its position, that God has the right to select his ministers wherever he sees fit to select them, whether the man is incapable of reading a single verse in the Bible, or whether he may be a graduate from the best college in the land. That is not the condition or status of qualification. The qualification that God looks at is the purity of the individual's intention and his desire to serve God and his willingness to work for God; but if God shall select him while he is unable to read "A B C," it is no reason in the world that he should remain there. God expects him to become a student and to advance steadily.

The world has said that the putative founder of this church was an ignorant man. Possibly in a certain sense that was true; but if true when God first called him in his youth, it was not true at the time that he laid down his life for the testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ. It was true that your speaker never had the opportunity of the school room more than eleven months of his life; but because the location of my father's family prevented me in attending school, that was no reason why I should go through this life and not be able to read and write, and be able to speak plainly to people, and tell them of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Just so long as life remains, I am a student at the feet of every man who can bring intelligence, and knowledge, and light to me, and I expect to progress forward steadily; and after I have laid down this life in the higher school I expect still to be a student at the feet of the great teachers in that sweet bye and bye.

Now this book tells me that we are to seek for this knowledge. I turn to section 90, paragraph 12, page 239. I find here an additional encouragement for my thus seeking knowledge:—

> And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion.

My view of Zion and her work, is to lift it up and make it a cosmopolitan work, a world work. I believe that the eternal God foreshadowed in the thought presented by the Lord Jesus Christ to his apostles when he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," is a component part of the mission that we have to perform, and there came to me a beautiful lesson of the necessity of this knowledge. I once heard Representative Dolliver, of Iowa. He sits in the halls of Congress, and was a possible candidate for president or vice president of these United States. In that speech he told us that when Dewey went down to Manila and sank Montejo's fleet, and the question was, What was the Government going to do with Manila and the Philippine, Islands, the next question was, Where are they? He says, "I took the atlas and I looked around Cuba and those southern islands in the Caribbean Sea and Gulf of Mexico, and I found no Philippine Islands, and then I looked up and down the shores of the Pacific and I saw no Philippine Islands, and I wondered what about my geography. Where are these Philippine Islands? I thought they lay right at our door; but," he says, "I hunted and I searched, and after I got ten thousand miles away, I found them, and to my astonishment I found more than a thousand of these Islands and more than ten millions of people occupying them there."

I do not know how many elders if they had been pressed to tell when this Spanish-American war first broke out, had they been asked concerning the whereabouts of the Philippine Islands, would have been prepared to answer. But here is a commandment given away back there in the early history of the church, and is binding upon you and me, that we are to have a knowledge of history and countries and nations. And the object or reason why this knowledge is to be entertained, retained, and preserved by the church is for the welfare of Zion.

There is the reason for it. God never spoke a vain word to his people; but we have perhaps been neglectful for all these many years in acquiring the necessary knowledge. I believe that it is a matter of duty that rests upon the church that individual members thereof make a study of every nation, her laws and the governments thereof, of every island, and wherever the face of man is found, that we should become acquainted and be well prepared to answer when God shall say, Go hither with the gospel.

Now the college has fallen into the misfortune of fighting debt, and some have thought that this debt was in the building of it. Part of this debt has been accumulated by reason of borrowing money for the running expenses and the increase of interest. I believe in round numbers the church is paying about fifteen hundred dollars a year interest upon the indebtedness, and the effort was made last April, and it was a wise movement, I think, in which there were sent subscription lists throughout the church that you should subscribe twenty-five dollars, and only a thousand of these subscriptions would meet the entire indebtedness of the church upon the college, so your twenty-five dollars pays the entire indebtedness. I was talking with Brother Kelley the other day about this, and he told me that he was going to call these subscription lists in the first day of next month and make an immediate effort to settle the indebtedness; Bro. Kelley will take care of that, but there is something else that we trustees have to look after, and that is this: the college will have to be run, and we will have to raise money from the Saints. We have nowhere else to go, and as you read in this notice, about three hundred and fifty dollars per month, for ten months will be thirty-five hundred dollars per year we will have to raise.

The raising of the twenty-five thousand dollars to pay the debt embarrasses the Board of Trustees for the reason that those that contribute to the paying of the debt do not feel like paying for the running expenses, and the embarrassment for this year will be the hardest year that Graceland College perhaps will ever have. We have here blank contracts. These contracts propose to you that if you will take one of these contracts running for five years, paying twenty-five dollars annually, that you have a five year scholarship in the school, and this is transferable. If you haven't a child of your own, you may select a child and the contract is good until the scholarship is received, until the work is received by the scholar. If you do not feel that you are able to meet that, confer with one of your brothers, and if you can unite, two of you may subscribe. This is payable twenty-five dollars annually. This is one of the means by which we may expect to meet this immediate demand.

We further plead with you for immediate help, donations right out, if you can afford it. Every college in the broad land receives these donations from those who can afford it. We have not received a proposition from any individual for a million dollars, more or less, but we will be satisfied with the twenty-fives or the fifties or the hundreds as they may come to us. But this is a work of the church. The responsibility rests upon you, and as a trustee, recognized of my fellow brethren of the trustees, I feel the responsibility resting upon me to present this matter plainly to you and tell to you that I believe it will be disastrous to the church if you fail and allow that college to go down. I believe it is to the interests of the church, to the interests of our work now and for all time to come that it shall be sustained and made a success. We need more than your money, we need your words of encouragement and cheer. We have a library, we need what books you may feel able to donate to it. We have there a museum, we need what curiosities you may send there to attract the attention. I found a very beautiful one, a corn cob in shape of a complete hand, thumb and four fingers, the complete hand of a man at the end of the corn cob. I am going to place it there in the museum. We have many curiosities and these are attractive.

We have a herbarium there, and we need the selections of vegetation from all parts of the world. I have written to England, to the Sandwich Islands, and the Philippine Islands, California, and elsewhere asking for help in that direction. We want to make it a success; we want our young men and women that shall go in there, shall come out bright people, not only in the affairs of life and equipped to battle with the affairs of life, but we want that when they come out of there, if God shall so direct them, that they shall be grander and better able and fitted to represent this glorious work,—this truth of heaven.

FOR THE REMISSION OF SINS.

Many seem lost when asked, "How can water baptism effect the remission of sins?" and, like a clever Yankee, answer it by asking, How could dipping seven times in Jordan cure the leper? or marching around Jericho seven times cause the walls to fall?

Some people are not satisfied with that kind of an answer, so I venture another solution.

Webster says baptism is a religious ceremony or ordinance. The latter is a rule established by authority. Now as no immunity can be conferred by either church or state without a ceremony, I will present for an object lesson a few particular privileges, prefixed by the ceremonies attending them, or by which these privileges are conferred:—

1. Oath of allegiance. Naturalization.	Suffrage; a right to vote.
2. Coronation.	Sovereignty.
3. Inauguration; oath of office.	Official rite.
4. Official pardon.	Freedom. Release from incarceration.
5. Marriage ceremony.	Legal union.
6. Baptism by immersion.	Remission of sins.
7. Laying on of hands.	Gift of the Holy Ghost.

I have placed the physical first, not because of their superiority, but that the casual thinker by contemplating them may be prepared to see more easily that a ceremony is as needful to confer spiritual benefits as it is to give earthly rights. Where is the man who will say that these "rules established by earthly authority" should be ignored? Can he be found among the clergy? O, no! They are too patriotic, too level headed. But is it not passing strange that these patriotic lovers of earthly order become so belligerent when as we present to their neighbors the fact that these ceremonies and ordinances of the gospel, these "rules established by authority" of the almighty God should be obeyed?

I think that any child who can understand why a marriage ceremony, or official pardon, or the oath of office, or coronation, or naturalization is necessary unto the conferring of their respective blessings should be competent to answer the question, How can baptism wash away our sins? I ask again, Where can we find one opposed to all law and order in state affairs? We must go into the haunts of vice and search for one whose honor, morality, and philanthropy is blunted by selfish and sensual appetites. I will carry the comparison no farther.

SAN ANTONIO, Sept. 17.

Editors Herald:—I love this glorious work I am engaged in, although I feel that I make mistakes daily, and at times feel as though my feet were slipping from under the burden they have to bear. But I thank God that I can realize my condition before I have drifted too far from shore, and redouble my efforts to return and pray more earnestly that I may not go entirely astray. If we could all realize when we become careless and pray the more I feel sure that the Lord would take us by the hand and gently lead us back to the right path, that we may continue on in the way he has marked out for us to follow.

Yesterday I met with Bro. and Sr. North who were reported to be drowned in the overflow at Galveston Island, about a week ago. Their names appeared in the paper among the dead and we all sorrowed for about a week as we were acquainted with them and they had met with us in meeting, at this place. But what was our joy yesterday morn when we learned that they were within a quarter of a mile of us. This strengthens me and makes me feel that the hand of God is over his people.

It seems that Satan is desirous to overthrow the work entirely at San Antonio. A few Saints have been meeting with us in prayer meeting for over a year at our house, as we have no church, and the few that did meet were pressed financially and couldn't rent a house. Satan has tried to influence me to ask the Saints to discontinue meeting at our house, as there appeared to be so few who were trying to keep up the little spark. But I thank God that he let me see this was the wrong spirit before I had acted upon this resolution. I ask all to remember the Saints at San Antonio, for we need your prayers.

Your sister in Christ,

RUTH GIFFORD.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 30.

Editors Herald:—We are doing what we can to keep the "camp fire blazing." Think there is something more than smoke. Bro. Chatburn has been warming up the Brighamites, as you will see by the inclosed clippings. Compare the charge made by the "elder," and then read the "vindication" by the Santa Ana city marshal. Have the Utah people reformed? I have been crossing swords with a Rev. Houze, of Riverside, through the columns of one of our leading dailies, the Evening Express. Do not know how long we will be permitted this courtesy, but think I am entitled to the last word—why not?

Our ten days' meeting was a success in every way.

Brn. Griffiths, Burton, and the Patriarch, A. H. Smith, and "scribe," Bro. Gould, have gone north to attend the reunion at Oakland. Bro. Chatburn is at Santa Ana. Brn. Elbert Smith and William Gibson are doing what they can at San Bernardino. Bro. Anderson is with Bro. Chatburn. Some indications of an early fall here. The last two days the wind has been rainward. The Saints of southern California need the prayers of the Saints everywhere that God may come to their relief this year, for, if we have another dry year, nothing but God's intervention can save many of the people from actual suffering.

Yours, pledged to establish confidence and good will among the brethren,

FOR FREE SPEECH.

Latter Day Saints Complain of Treatment at Santa Ana by Reorganized Church.

Editor Evening Express:—Through the kindness of the Express we wish to present to the public the following account of an attempt to drive two elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from the streets of Santa Ana. For some months past these or other elders have been holding meetings in that city, placing before the people in a quiet, unassuming manner the principles of their faith.

On Saturday evening, August 4, Elders R. S. Sutton and Harvey Ross held a meeting, at the close of which they were accosted by the Rev. Chatburn, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The gentleman intended to ask questions of the elders and enter into a general controversy before the people on the street, but the elders refused to enter into any discussion in that manner. However, they did invite Mr. Chatburn to their headquarters, where they promised to talk with him. This proposition failed to suit Mr. Chatburn, who at once began an exhibition of his "Christian love and good will to all men" by abusing the characters of the elders and vilifying the people they represented. He further announced that he would appear again next Saturday night to continue his exposure of the doctrines of "Mormonism," making everything vile, low, degrading, and criminal a synonym for "Mormonism."

On the following Saturday night the two elders held their usual meeting and, as appointed, Mr. Chatburn appeared and continued his abuse and slander. He was surrounded by all the people of his own faith and belief that could be present, there being two hundred or more present. The crowd prevented the elders from leaving, which they desired to do, as they had closed their meeting in peace and did not care to enter into any controversy.

Mr. Chatburn was able to so prejudice the people (his own followers) and even affect the police so that they went up to the elders and told them they must hold no more meetings on the streets. Knowing they were not responsible for the confusion created, the elders appealed to the mayor, who requested them to appear before the city council. They did so and laid before them the facts in the case, which were agreed to by the same officer who had ordered them to discontinue their meetings. The unanimous conclusion was reached that the elders were not in any way to blame for the confusion and they were praised for their orderly manner of conducting meetings and preventing arguments on the streets. They were accorded the same privilege as others of holding meetings on the streets, and promised protection in the same. Now we ask, "Who are the cowards?" Who exhibited the most "Christian"-like spirit? Who ever heard of a true minister of Christ who would stoop to calling men such names as "liars," "thieves," "seducers," and the like? H. W. DERRICK.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Santa Ana's City Marshal Gives His Version of Alleged Persecution of Mormon Elders.

Editor Express:—Your issue of the 24th inst. contained an article by H. W. Derrick, headed "Free Speech," in which that gentleman makes statements which are far from correct, although it is quite probable that his ignorance of the facts had quite as much to do with his blundering attempt to justify an offense as did his prejudice.

His statement, "The people prevented the elders from leaving, which they desired to do," is absolutely false, as the "elders" could have walked away at any time they might have desired to go. They were surrounded by the chance passers-by and not by Chatburn's followers.

As to Mr. Chatburn's prejudicing the police, I have only this to remark: I am one of them and do not care a fig for Mormonism in any of its varieties, although I rather like to hear the elders tell their tale of woe. I was the officer who warned Mr. Chatburn to hold no more meetings on Fourth Street, for the reason that it caused the street to become blocked, and when I told him he agreed to hold his meetings on a side street, as I suggested. The city marshal accosted the "elders" and warned them against holding meetings on Fourth Street, but told them they were at liberty to hold all the meetings they desired on any of the side streets. However, they appealed to the mayor and city council and were promptly turned down by having the whole controversy referred to the city marshal and the committee on police.

Now, I do not take sides with either of the parties, but condemn both for disturbing the order of the city and interfering with the traffic on the main thoroughfare. Business is business and right and justice had full sway in the matter, and the wail that goes up from these abused and "persecuted elders" comes from souls so small that a broad-minded man rather hesitates to hold them other than in contempt. All I desire in a criticism of any of my official acts is the truth. I am willing to face anything I do, either in public or private life, and I do not hesitate to say that neither I nor any of the police of this city desire to abuse or mistreat anyone, or to allow anyone to be mistreated inside of the limits of our city.

So now, Mr. Derrick, let's be fair and honest in this matter and if you cannot receive sympathy from a truthful statement of facts, go without it. O. P. PAYNE.

SANTA ANA, Aug. 27, 1900.

South Dakota, Sept. 15.

To Those Concerned:—In view of the partial arrangement made at 1900 conference, in behalf of Bro. W. M. Rumel, it is possible some may have anticipated the benefits of his labor during the fall and winter seasons. But I have just been informed by him as to the impracticability of making the requisite arrangement to leave his family, and my confidence in his veracity after years of acquaintance is such that I believe he talks advisedly and truthfully. Bro. Rumel will continue to labor and travel as his circumstances allow. And I may assure the body he will miss no opportunity to do good for the cause. The latter-day work is the religion of his youth, his parents watched over him while in the slippery paths of youth, not in vain. He has done much labor in Omaha and the Northern Nebraska district in years past.

While at the Central Nebraska district conference I learned that Bro. W. W. Whiting had located his family in Gregory county, South Dakota, and it may be some time, how long I don't know, before he will again be active in the Lord's harvest field, but I am satisfied he will waste no time. Bro. L. Gamet (probably assisted by Bro. W. C. Prettyman) will see to those places in Nebraska where Bro. Whiting's labors have created an interest pushing their labors in new localities, as far as possible. Christ commanded his disciples, if the people failed to hear them in one city to go to another, which shows that he desired they should properly utilize their time, evincing some discretion and judgment. I believe some of the old beaten tracks should be abandoned for a time at least, and new ones sought, with less inclination to consume time in traveling around to conferences and big reunions.

There is no reason for anticipating the conversion of the world ere Christ comes the second time, but the gospel is to be preached for a witness.

I notice in the second Herald I think for the month of September a claim of an increased interest in reunions; but the writer didn't know but it might be carried too far, but I did not catch on, in what sense. If this be the Lord's method of spreading the gospel among men, the zealous ones therein engaged could not go too far. And then, I wondered if anyone would assume the task of demonstrating the fact that the many thousands of dollars spent the last ten years for reunions has done half as much good for the spread of the gospel as if one half of the money thus used, had been spent in sending elders and literature where ignorance and darkness prevail among men. Then, too, it would be interesting to know when the church discontinued the semiannual conferences and ordered big reunions in lieu thereof. But perhaps I am digressing.

I wish to inform the body that self and Bro. S. K. Sorensen are at our posts, whereunto by act of General Conference we were sent. Where else should we be? If annual conferences are so vital, surely their legislative acts should be practically observed.

If a public appointment be a public trust, how shall those who voluntarily accept such appointments show themselves worthy of the confidence of those appointing them unless giving evidence of the needed diligence, etc.? In view of the fact of my acceptance of such an appointment, by the exercise of my will power, it thus being voluntary on my part, I only show a consistency by keeping an agreement or covenant thus made inviolate.

God's everlasting gospel and everlasting covenant are one and the same.

"Old covenants have I caused to be done away . . . and this is a new and everlasting covenant."—D. C. 20:1.

"And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people, and for the Gentiles to seek it and to be a messenger to prepare the way before me."—D. C. 45:2.

Then, in our acceptance of the gospel, we enter into this everlasting covenant, and "I will bring into the bond of the covenant." (Ezekiel 20:37.) And being brought into this covenant, at our induction into the kingdom, our subsequent labor as citizens of the kingdom, our willingness to evince the requisite diligence must be tantamount to making, . . . or [evidently page of manuscript gone here.—ED.] and no less diligent, in taking observations. We have striven to open several new places, but our success thus far has been meagre, attributable to busy times among farmers, and strange, though true, the little pestilential housefly should have contributed to this hindrance, but so it is, on this wise: 'Tis claimed that the number of this pest has been much in advance this season in numbers than former seasons, and some have claimed that in consequence of this they have been necessitated to wait long after dark before they could milk their cows, therefore could not come to meeting. Then the stolid indifference evinced by the masses on the vital question, the intensity of the love of pleasure, and the facilities afforded to participate in the coveted pleasure in games of baseball and excursion trains running to grounds where stalwart men are engaged in throwing, striking and catching a ball, and others scrampering in a pell mell fashion, perhaps, and all this in a Christian land on Sunday. Nor has a superabundance of rain for the past two months proved advantageous to missionary work. But we survive, ready by the grace of God to preach the gospel, to few or many when coming together, being always ready for duty, performing the same as best we can, leaving God to take care of results, in the far off and somewhat inhospitable region, South Dakota.

After several attempts we have the promise of the Seventh Day Advent church, for two nights, possibly longer, possible not, at Madison, Lake county, South Dakota.

My colaborer seems at times ready to pass over into the realm of impatience. He thinks when the gospel, the only method of salvation is offered and explained it should be accepted. And at times soars and delves having something to say about big salaries, Sodom and Gomorrah, etc. Then I suggest the wholesome advice of Paul, viz., "Let your moderation be known among men," and Bro. Kris looks sober.

I suppose Bro. W. Sparling is at home, he being by virtue of an understanding due in the field but nine months in the year. Bro. Thorburn wrote Bro. Sorensen a few days ago from North Dakota. His experience is similar to our own. I have heard nothing from Bro. Houghton since July, but suppose he is doing his best.

The political campaign is on, and corresponding excitement is evinced, which will not help us. In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

P. S.—We are having a cold snap, September 15, South Dakota.

QUINCY, Mo., Sept. 11.

Editors Herald:—This afternoon while I am comfortably situated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Bridges, I pen a few lines to your columns. Most of the time since June 1, Bro. J. N. Stephenson and I have labored together. We attended the June district conference held at Veve church, which was a spiritual one. We met there our much esteemed young missionary brethren, Lee Quick and A. C. Silvers, and a goodly number of brethren and sisters who were in attendance.

Conference over, we, the missionary force, started out feeling better prepared to push the work before us. We had not been out long until word reached us that Bro. Quick had dropped out of our ranks, because his family needed his assistance, for which we felt very sorry.

At our reunion held August 3 to 12, we again met each other, excepting Bro. Quick. We enjoyed another spiritual feast at this reunion, so much so, that it was decided to have another one next year. Nine were baptized. By the assistance of Bro. R. T. Walters, of the South Missouri district, for about three weeks, we were enabled to start out the district tent, he and A. C. Silvers in charge. They report their tent meetings at Walker, Missouri, largely attended, also with same result at Bro. Kinnicut's, near Ohio, Missouri.

We learned that Bro. C. P. Welch has been sent to our assistance, for which we feel very glad. Bro. J. N. Stephenson and I have been busy preaching in the counties of Benton, Bates, Cedar, St. Clair, and Hickory. We began meetings in the last named August 31, in a grove belonging to Mrs. Palina Paxton, four miles north of Wheatland, in the Wheatland branch, and continued up to September 5, holding four services on Sunday, prayer at 9:30, preaching at 11, basket dinner at 12:30, preaching at 2:30 and at night. Two promising young people, Miss Laura May and Willie, children of Bro. and Sr. Wayne Paxton, were baptized and confirmed the day following. Others were near entering the kingdom. The Wheatland Saints are a warm-hearted people, and gave us a hearty welcome to return. We are at present at Square Prairie schoolhouse, preaching. Will close here tonight. A Mr. Isaac Eldridge gave his name for baptism. Will attend to it this evening or in the morning. There is a lady ready for the water, but her husband is not at home, so she has decided to await his return as she thinks he will follow her, as he is favorably impressed. A Mr. J. W. Hobbs, not a member of the church, has offered to fit up a grove (and it is in a place where churches and schoolhouses are locked against our people) if we will come and preach for them. He said we could have his house, but it was too small. We told him we would try to accommodate him about the last of September or first of October if the weather was not too cold. So you see we are not standing still. God bless the work. T. R. WHITE.

Golden Gate Station,
OAKLAND, Cal., Sept. 14.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you last we have been hard at work. I think I never worked harder and with as little visible results as I have the past four months. Since putting the tent in operation we have held meetings with it at San Jose, Encinal, Mountain View, Gilroy, Sea Bright, Capitola, and Santa Cruz. At the first six places I was assisted by Bro. D. L. Allen. While at Capitola Bro. Holt joined us, and Bro. Allen went to Monterey to join Bro. E. Keeler. I found Bro. Allen a very pleasant companion. From Santa Cruz we moved to the reunion at Oakland. There we had a busy time, and had the pleasure of seeing and helping the Sunday school workers carry on a daily Sunday school. This was called the "children's hour." It was an effort to obey the injunction, "Feed my lambs," and to demonstrate practically the utility of that branch of the "helps" which "God hath set in the church." Why should not our little ones and older young people be entitled to an hour out of our everyday service at such places? They are there, surely they have the right to be fed. I am of the opinion that an early hour of each day should be so devoted at these places. This, we think, would be infinitely better than doing parade work in our especial days allotted to us.

Well, our work here was not all Sunday school work. We were placed as chorister of the meetings, and tried to make that feature of the meetings (the music) a success. Here we wish to thank those of the local talent who so cheerfully helped us in that work.

Well, "the powers that be" have seen fit to take us out of the Central California district, and the remainder of the year I am to be associated with Bro. Phillips with the tent in this district, and then am to go north into Oregon. Expect to reach Oregon about November 1 to 15. Have written Bro. Harris for direction for the campaign there. I will be pleased to hear from the Oregon Saints also.

With Bro. Phillips we opened the battle here last night. Bro. H. L. Holt was with us, and as we always use (or try to) the best material at hand, we gladly listened to him instead of occupying ourselves. Brn. Holt and Allen leave for operations with the Central district tent today. I believe their first point of operations is Hanford. Brn. F. B. Blair, Price, and Parkin, and Sr. Parkin from San Francisco were with us last night, also Bro. and Srs. Day and Williams, of Berkeley.

The reunion, in most particulars, we vote quite a success. However, will let others describe it. Well, I am in California. My address is Oakland.

As ever, in the battle for truth,

A. M. CHASE.

September 15, 1900.

Editors Herald:—Once more the joy and gladsomeness of reunion experience are things of the past for the Des Moines district, so far as the mingling of people is concerned, and the village of white canvas that sheltered Israel of latter days thus assembled. But the effect of that animating and all pervading influence of the Holy Spirit so preeminent throughout the entire assembly will stand in evidence of the event until the sands of life are run out, and the feet of them that trod the shaded ground made sacred by the presence of God through the Spirit stand on the more blissful and sacred ground of his eternal realm. God was in the camp and his best gift as found among the gifts of the gospel, "Charity," ruled supreme, so that the effulgence of her brightness rendered the reunion in every feature a soothing balm to the tired soul of spiritual pilgrimage. The word of truth was declared, not with enticing words of man's wisdom, or by the excellency of humanly acquired eloquence, but in the demonstration and power of the Holy Spirit, and left the heretofore inimical persons with broader and deeper conviction of the truth, and friendlily disposed. So we have every reason to believe that good was accomplished through the name of the holy child, Jesus. And let me gently say to you who were there and who were made the happy recipients of divine light and glory, your responsibilities are increased. Walk in that light and have fellowship one with another, and not with the unfruitful works of darkness. And let me say further to the Saints of the Des

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Moines district, you have made one soul rejoice at your ready and willing response to the call when a tent was needed. Of the one hundred and twenty-seven dollars it cost there are but ten dollars yet to be paid. You can guess who it is, no doubt, and by your glad faces and hearty handshakes your confidence thus reposed in God and this latter-day work was so apparent as to furnish that one material for a more studious and careful reflection of individual responsibilities.

Our conference passed pleasantly and profitably. Two of the brethren of the Perry branch were ordained to the office of elders who were before priests. They were H. A. McCoy and Elber E. Earhart, and were ordained by Elder D. M. Rudd and High Priest M. H. Cook. Those men both promise by appearance to be useful workers in the vineyard of the Lord.

Elder H. A. McCoy and Priest C. J. Peters both received district appointment. McCoy, who for years has acted as district clerk, will devote his entire time to the work both of the Sunday school and ministry, and will be found a willing and useful worker in his calling.

The next reunion will be held at Rhodes, Iowa, on the Milwaukee railroad. Our next conference at Des Moines, in February, 1901.

I am yet feeling sore and somewhat weakened by the exertion of reunion labor, and if it were not for the strength received by the inner man I would feel doubly worse. We moved the tent off the camp ground the 11th of this month, and with a feeling expressed by the poet thus:—

With all the joy and gladness we had known,
There comes a tinge of sudden sadness that our parting must be shown.

And shrouded by sadness on our taking leave, we turned our faces and hearts to meet the stern realities of active missionary life. Accordingly we pitched our tabernacle and hoisted the banner on the 13th, at Baxter, Iowa. Two nights we met a small crowd of outsiders and broke the bread of life as best we could. Elder William Kephart is with me and we expect other help also. In bonds,

BEATRICE, Nebraska, Sept. 14.

Editors Herald:—Conference of the Southern Nebraska district convened with Hebron branch, the 9th of September, at eleven a. m., Bro. Waldsmith in the chair. Bro. Porter was the speaker for the hour, at the end of which one promising young man offered himself for baptism. The Saints brought their dinners with them, and we had quite a reunion and enjoyable time, the good Spirit being present. At three o'clock Bro. Caleb Blodgett was the speaker and we were encouraged and strengthened. Bro. Caleb is feeling well in the work. After the services we went to Little Blue river, a distance of six miles, and in the liquid wave Bro. Waldsmith buried our worthy brother, Oscar Larratt. May the blessings of God be with him always. At eight in the evening our young brother was confirmed by Brn. Porter and Blodgett. Your humble servant was the speaker for the hour, with good liberty, the house being full. An Advent came forward and gave Bro. Porter the subject of the beast to preach upon the following evening (Rev. 13). Monday at ten a. m., met again at the residence of Bro. Porter Robertson for business, perfect harmony prevailing. The Saints of Hebron branch were cheered and comforted, and are better prepared for the work intrusted to their care. With love to all God's people, I am, as ever,

Your brother in Christ,

W. M. SELF.

GLOVER, Mich., Sept. 17.

Editors Herald:—The two days' meeting advertised to take place here on the 15th and 16th inst, was well attended, and the Spirit of the Master was with us throughout. Elders J. J. Cornish, J. A. Grant, and Willam Dowker were with us, and being blessed with the splrit of their calling and good liberty, the Saints enjoyed a real spiritual feast. The only drawback and sorrow felt was the parting of the Saints at the close of the meeting, when our brothers and sisters left for their homes; but we feel to thank our heavenly Father that the time will come when the faithful in Christ Jesus will meet where parting will be no more, where we may ever be with our brothers and sisters basking in the sunshine of our Older Brother and blessed Savior, who died that we might live. Let us be faithful, dear Saints, and give heed to the beautiful sermons and admonitions of the servants of God who have so plainly told us our duty that we may be profited thereby. Hoping the Saints may enjoy at all their meetings what we have enjoyed for the past two days, and that God will bless his people everywhere, I am,

Your brother in the faith,

THOMAS MCNAMARA, Clerk.

STEWARTSVILLE, Mo., Sept. 11.

Editors Herald:—The Far West, Missouri, district reunion which was held at Stewartsville, from September 1 to 10, was a grand success, under the presidency of T. T. Hinderks and J. C. Foss. The preaching was by Pres. Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, Ephraim Summerfield, Swen Swensen, J. A. Gunsolley, J. S. Roth, J. C. Foss, S. F. Cushman, J.M. Terry, John Smith, C. Scott. Brn. T. A. Hougas and J. A. Gunsolley represented the interest of the Sunday school and Religio work. Thirteen were baptized. God's Holy Spirit was present to aid in presenting the word of life. Tongues and interpretation, and several prophecies were given, which greatly helped to cheer us on our way. Many that were sick were administered to and received the blessing. We had the pleasure of listening to the Stewartsville brass band two days on the camp ground.

Brn. Head, Ben Dice, and their noble saintly wives did well to feed the multitude that came on the ground. C. P. Faul acted well his part as usual, to collect money to pay expenses, and seeing that the elders did not leave the ground without enough to purchase their ticket. (That's right, Charley.)

Pres. Joseph Smith was made the choice to deliver the closing sermon on Monday evening, and delivered a fine sermon on spiritual gifts—true and false. As it commenced to rain, and the wind blowing hard, only about one hundred were present to hear the wise instruction given. Thus closed the best reunion ever held in the old Far West district.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

WEST BAY CITY, Mich., Sept. 18.

Editors Herald:—The two-day meeting at Glover passed off very pleasantly. It was fairly well attended, all seemed to enjoy themselves, and many expressed themselves as being glad they are Saints in latter days. Brn. J. J. Cornish, William Dowker, and the writer did the preaching. May the Lord water the seed sown is our prayer.

Yours for the final triumph of Zion,

J. A. GRANT.

JUSTICE.

Editors Herald:—In a late issue of the Herald the statement is made that G. T. Griffiths declared the Southern California reunion off. In justice to Bro. Griffiths we wish to correct the statement. The reunion was declared off by the concurrent action of missionaries and district officers. The matter of finance was considered, and because of the drouth the Saints were very hard up; therefore it was agreed to by all the officials and missionaries in the district.

Yours,

T. W. CHATBURN.

ORCHARDVILLE, Illinois, Sept. 15.

Editors Herald:—The Southeastern Illinois district reunion, which was held from the 6th to the 13th inst., was a success. The preaching was by J. T. Davis, M. F. Gowell, Arthur Allen, F. M. Slover, I. A. Morris, J. F. Henson, and J. E. Bozarth. The prayer services each day, at nine a. m., were good. The Sunday school exercises were interesting and instructive, each of those of the priesthood who spoke giving good words of encouragement to this department of work. The congregations that assembled were orderly and attentive. Those who were attentive at all the exercises and took part in the Lord's work were blessed. Voted to have a reunion next year. F. M. Davis, David Hoover, and the writer were chosen as a committee to select time and place. We hope for better results next year, and the committee has decided to do what it can to have it so. You will hear from us later on. If we want good results to come, let each individual do what he can to bring them to pass. This is a day of sacrifice, and the Lord will not do it all. We are workers together with him, and must do our part of the work if we get the benefit promised. There are a great many things for us to do after we get into the church by faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands. We get the Holy Ghost by complying with those principles and are then commanded to go on to perfection, and if we stop we are not keeping the commandments, but are transgressors, and sin is the transgression of the law. Keep the commandments, or, as the apostle says, "Go on unto perfection," should be the watchword all along the line; and all those who fail to heed the above admonition will fail to get the great reward. Jesus is the great leader and commander, and he has said to come and follow me. "Live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Doing the things which God has commanded brings us near to him, and failing to do the things which he requires separates us from him. Darkness comes through disobedience.

The Lord said to the church in 1832: "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief and because you have treated lightly the things you have received which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation."—D. C. 83: 8.

They were to "remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments," "not only to say but to do according to that which" God has "written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion."

The Saints failed to heed the Lord's admonition, and in 1833 they were driven out of Jackson county, Missouri, and finally out of the State into Illinois, because they were slow to hearken to the voice of the Lord. "In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel."—Sec. 98: 3. We claim that the church has been reorganized by command of God, and we as Saints of the Reorganization should profit by whatsoever things were written aforetime, and not make the same mistakes which were made by the church from 1830 to 1844. We as the Reorganization claim to be the true and lawful successor to the church organized in the days of the Martyr, and we have placed ourselves upon record and pledged ourselves to take the three books, Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Covenants, with the Holy Spirit, for our guide.

God is no respecter of persons; and if failing to keep the law brought the old church under condemnation, the same failure would bring condemnation to the Reorganization in like manner. And if keeping the law, the whole law, will bring greater blessings to us as a church, the sooner we get at it the better. No use for us to sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet, to guide us in these latter days," unless we as a church are willing to keep the revelations and commandments which that prophet has given. That is the only way that we could be guided by a prophet; that is, by keeping the word of the Lord through him; and that is just what we as a church are instructed to do. Listen: "Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory."—D. C. 19:2. Wonderful, indeed, to have such grand blessings—the powers of darkness dispersed from before us, and the heavens to shake for our good and his name's glory. But how is the church to be the recipient of such blessings? Listen, dear reader, while I repeat: "Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you." All, in this case, does not mean a part.

Now, as the church is commanded to give heed unto all his words and commandments, I now refer to some of those words which the church has been told to give heed unto: "Again, verily I say unto you, I will show unto you wisdom in me concerning all the churches, inasmuch as they are willing to be guided in a right and proper way for their salvation, that the work of the gathering together of my Saints may continue, that I may build them up unto my name upon holy places: for the time of harvest is come, and my word must needs be fulfilled. . . . Therefore, a commandment I give unto all the churches, that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed; nevertheless, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, let not your gathering be in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you; and in order that all things be prepared before you, observe the commandments which I have given concerning these things, which saith, or teacheth, to purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my Saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about. . . . And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands: and every church in the eastern countries when they are built up, if they will hearken unto this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion."—D. C. 98: 9, 10.

In section 45: 12, we are told: "With one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion."

Here we are told in plain words what to do in order to establish Zion; that is, gather together our moneys and appoint wise men and send them to purchase the lands as God has commanded, and after they are purchased that "my saints should possess them according to the laws of consecration which I have given." The Reorganization has been in existence for more than forty years, and if Zion has been established it has not been done according to the word of the Lord through the latter-day seer. Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom (sec. 102: 2); and one of those principles is for the Saints "to gather together their moneys and send wise men to buy the lands;" and secondly, gather together upon them and keep the law and thereby sanctify the land of Zion. "Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words and commandments." And we have certain men who have already been chosen and ordained whose duty it is to govern the affairs of the property of this church. (Sec. 38: 8.) Bishop Hilliard has already placed himself upon record concerning the above law already referred to, in the following words, in Saints' Herald, January 4, 1899.

Therefore our duty is clearly to call on the Saints in all the world to comply with this law, and send in their moneys, that we may buy up lands in Jackson county, or the counties round about, as wisdom may direct, and our ability permit, and in this way obey the instruction given in 1873. Now, as we have a number of other bishops we would be glad to hear from them also along this line. "A land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of God" cannot be established except by the church giving heed unto all his commandments. Tithing, consecration, and gathering is a part of the things to which we are told to give heed and should be observed. Zion cannot be built up only through the means which God has ordained.

Yours in hope of final success for all departments of the work,

F. M. SLOVER.

Editors Herald:—I have seen so much in the Herald about dancing that I will say a few words. I was baptized years ago by Bro. T. W. Smith, but have always looked upon Bro. Charles Derry as my father in the church. He by his wise counsel and Christian deportment set me to thinking and reading and at last to believing. Bro. Derry has not forgotten his visit to our home in Buffalo, Iowa, I am sure.

I was young when I joined the church, and dancing was my delight. I danced even after I became a member of the church. I had danced in my girlhood days, and it was hard for me to give it up, for I had never looked upon it as being wrong.

The position my husband held on the boat as "pilot," threw me into the company of pleasure-seekers, I spending much of my time with him the first years of our married life. There was hardly a trip made without an excursion aboard. They came for recreation, and pleasure, and dancing was the order. And as a natural consequence they expected the officers of the boat and their friends to join in helping to entertain, the boat being our "little world," as it were. Our "cabin boys" carried a "string band," and every night, as soon as the last meal was out of the way, they would clear the cabin and take their places and begin to play, and the dance was on. My dear husband did not approve of my dancing, but being ever kind and indulgent, gave his consent.

Since writing the above I have read an article on dancing by Bro. C. Scott. I am with him in the main. His article is full of truth; and while I cannot see the wrong in the dancing itself, it certainly is wrong for "Latter Day Saints" to dance, for we are told to come out from the world. He asserts that dancing arouses the evil propensities of the human nature. That may be so in some cases; but such I would not like to trust in any company.

When I danced I did it for the enjoyment of the dance, and I judge others by myself. I seemed to be lost to everything around me only the sweet strains of the music.

But what does he think of those detestable "kissing" parties? There is where his "Satanic Majesty" enters in. I know Saints who will allow their sons and daughters to go to them when they would hold up their hands in "holy horror" at the thought of a dance. I think a well regulated dance is creditable to them. Between two evils it is best to choose the least. I have wondered why I have never seen anything in Herald about it.

SINCE I HAVE BEEN REDEEMED.

BY SISTER ALICE.

How precious is my Savior's name,
Since I have been redeemed;
His goodness would I e'er proclaim,
Since I have been redeemed.
His loving kindness dries my tears,
Since I have been redeemed;
His smile dispels my foolish fears,
Since I have been redeemed.

CHORUS:—

Since I have been redeemed,
Since I have been redeemed,
I will glory in his name,
Since I have been redeemed,
I will glory in the Savior's name.

Oh! would I had a trumpet voice,
Since I have been redeemed
To bid the world make him their choice,
Since I have been redeemed.
To tell to all his matchless worth
Since I have been redeemed,
And sound his goodness over the earth,
Since I have been redeemed.

CHORUS.

His love is all my song by day,
Since I have been redeemed;
My meditation by the way,
Since I have been redeemed.
The pillow of my rest at night,
Since I have been redeemed;
My food, my drink, my chief delight,
Since I have been redeemed.

CHORUS.

Though earthly wealth I may not gain,
Since I have been redeemed,
Nor worldly honors e'er attain,
Since I have been redeemed,
Yet I can count them all as dross,
Since I have been redeemed,
And glory in the precious cross,
Since I have been redeemed.

CHORUS.

Farewell, earth's follies, all farewell!
Since I have been redeemed;
I go with Christ, my Lord, to dwell,
Since I have been redeemed.
Toward his throne I have set my face,
Since I have been redeemed;
And in this strength will win the race,
Since I have been redeemed.

CHORUS.

A SONG OF PRAISE.

Come ye that love the Lord, indeed,
And join me in his praise;
Whose souls from bondage have been freed,
Your grateful voices raise.
Oh, were the power but mine to sing,
My wondrous joy to prove,
Loud should the vaulted heavens ring
With anthems of his love!

He heard my cry of deep distress,
While wand'ring sad and lone;
He sought me in the wilderness,
And he will lead me home.
When mists of doubt hung o'er the way,
And the path seemed dark and dim,
He lit the lamp of faith, whose ray
Guided my steps to him.

While travel-worn, heartsick, and faint,
No rest or succor nigh,
He quickly caught my feeble plaint,
And from his rich supply
Brought wine to cheer my fainting heart,
And balm to make it whole;
With oil he soothed each sting and smart,
With manna fed my soul.

His sweet voice quelled my rising fears,
He bade my doubtings cease;
With tender hand he dried my tears,
And gave me rest and peace.
My cup of mercy runneth o'er,
My table is supplied
With bounties from his heavenly store;
What need I ask beside?

To sing my love if power were given,
Methinks the angelic throng
From o'er the parapets of heaven
Would lean to catch the song.
And answering back the rapturous strain,
Would strike their harps of gold,
Till o'er all heaven's shining plain,
The echoing anthem rolled.

THE BANNER OF LOVE.

I have taken my stand 'neath the banner of Love,
With Christ for my Captain and King;
His sweet call I heard, and accepted the word,
And my all to his service I bring.
I have taken my stand 'neath the banner of Love,
Too long have I lingered, but now
I have made him my choice, and my soul doth rejoice,
As in humble submission I bow.

CHORUS:—

I have taken my stand 'neath the banner of Love,
I'll desert its fair colors no more,
And no foe need I fear with my Captain so near,
Soon, soon will the conflict be o'er.

I have taken my stand 'neath the banner of Love,
And here will I ever abide,
With naught to alarm, for safe from all harm,
Is the soul that keeps close to his side.

I have taken my stand 'neath the banner of Love,
And the armor of Faith have put on,
At the word of command to go forward or stand,
Keeping guard till the vict'ry is won.

CHORUS

Neath the banner of Love is my shelter and shade,
My refuge when danger is nigh;
All my wants I may bring to my Captain and King,
And my needs he will freely supply.
'Neath the banner of Love there is rest, peace, and joy,
Unshaken by conflict or storm;
No cares can oppress, nor griefs long distress,
The soul that doth lean on his arm.

CHORUS.

And while I abide 'neath the banner of Love,
And walk with my face to the light,
No enemy's dart can enter my heart,
Through the breastplate of righteous bright.
While onward I march 'neath the banner of Love,
Whatever the powers that assail;
With Truth's keen-edged sword in the strength of my Lord,
O'er my foes I will surely prevail.

CHORUS.

For the battle we fight 'neath the banner of Love
Is a conflict with Satan and sin;
And though fierce the war wage, though all hell should engage,
Yet Christ will the victory win.
Then why not enlist 'neath the banner of Love,
Since Christ is our Captain and King,
This warfare to wage 'gainst the powers that engage
Your souls into bondage to bring.

CHORUS.

Who would not enlist 'neath the banner of Love,
And to the end bravely endure
And on Canaan's fair shore when the conflict is o'er,
A home everlasting secure?
Who would not enlist 'neath the banner of Love,
Since the Captain stands ready to pay
In heaven's pure gold every soul that's enrolled?
Oh! why should you longer delay?

CHORUS.

Oh! come and enlist 'neath the banner of Love,
That floats from the ramparts of heaven;
Rich bounties to all who answer his call,
The Captain has said shall be given.
Oh! come and enlist 'neath the banner of Love,
And angels thy helpers shall be;
And a bright crown of life at the end of the strife,
The Captain has waiting for thee.

CHORUS.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

One stitch dropped as the weaver drove
His nimble shuttle to and fro,
In and out, beneath, above,
Till the pattern seemed to bud and grow
As if the fairies had helping been—
One small stitch which could scarce be seen;
But the one stitch dropped pulled the next stitch out,
And a weak spot grew in the fabric stout;
And the perfect pattern was marred for aye
By the one small stitch that was dropped that day.

A PRODIGAL'S RETURN.

Low on the crimsoned waters hung the ocean sun, shedding its glory on the surrounding heavens, and far out on the calm, wide sea, tipping the crests of the dancing waves with gold, till the somber deep seemed transformed to a thing of splendor. Overhead the sky was cloudless, and, as far as the eye could see, stretched the beautiful horizon, where sea and sky seemed to meet. The whole scene was a perfect eventide, that hour that turns the traveler's heart, wherever he may be, to his native land; that hour when the fond mother pauses to wonder where her children are now that have left the old house to wander over land and sea.

So, what wonder, then, that the music of that immortal piece, "Home, Sweet Home," rang out in the great homeward-bound vessel that was steadily plying its way to the harbor, that now appeared like a low cloud on the horizon; what wonder that the crew joined their voices in singing those loved words with all the vigor of manhood, all of them but one, a tall, sad-faced young man, who stood apart from the rest, looking out on the waters over which night was fast closing.

He had caught nothing of the light-heartedness that filled his companions as they thought of meeting friends once more; but indeed, turning from them, he sat alone. He was noted for his steadiness, and the captain admired the lonely youth who, though quiet, was the best worker on board; so, crossing over, he laid his hand on the lad's shoulder.

"Robert," asked he, "why are you so silent, and especially tonight, when we are all so joyous at the thought of meeting home and dear ones again?"

"Home and dear ones?" repeated Robert. "I had them once, sir, but cannot claim them now, for one night, seven years ago, I left the home, where I had lived so happily, for sea, against my parents' will, with a captain whose character one can judge by his consenting to take a boy of thirteen without his parents' permission from a good home where there was plenty of everything to make a boy's life happy. He proposed and I accepted, though I would never had I not read a book my father had forbidden me to handle; one of those books that wrecks a structure of character the parents have tried to build, and fills the young mind with impossible glories and escapes; so out of the evil of reading this book at night, when all were supposed to be asleep, came that of running away with a bad man from my good home. So now tonight you are all going home, but I —I know not whether I am to be received or refused," and he burst into tears.

"Poor boy," said the captain; "Robert, you are like the prodigal son, but are you so truly repentant as he?"

"Indeed, sir, I am willing to go back as a servant, only to have their forgiveness, for I have God's pardon and trust in him ever since I first wanted and missed the care of my parents; but God was so merciful he has kept me through all," and his face lighted as he thought: no man need be without One to care for him.

The great ship glided steadily on, till now, as the moon shed her white light over the waves, the welcome harbor lights began to glitter and sparkle in the distance, and warned all to prepare for separation, each a different path.

"Now, Robert," said the good captain, "may God be with you, and may you be welcomed home; go to the dear ones, confess all, and humble yourself. Live, with God's aid, a good life; and now good-bye; we may never meet on earth again, but strive to meet in heaven. May the Lord keep you, Robert. Farewell."

And they parted amid the bustle of reaching the port and landing; everyone was soon on his own way. Robert, with a heavy heart, passed on out through the city, and started on a long, quiet road. He remembered the captain's words, and the Lord was with him.

The road was so long and the night was so still that Robert's spirits fell still lower. Above, veiled by the fleecy clouds, the moon looked down and the stars twinkled brightly in the dome of the heavens, while the delicious breeze of a beautiful summer night stirred the leaves of the trees that cast grotesque shadows on the path.

As he reached an opening, Robert paused and looked through. There miles and miles of green fields and low hills lay in the moonlight and far off he saw a silvery stream, it was the river, he knew it well. How often in boyhood's sunny days he had lain in the shade beside it and listening to its gurgling, imagined it was a magic tongue that told of all the scenes it passed and how, though its beginning was a thread of a brooklet, it ended in the boundless main.

And Robert wept as he thought of those hours that perhaps would never come again.

Hark! From some distant tower came the sound of a bell. Nine clear strokes broke the silence, then all again was still.

Nine o'clock, the traveler hastened, though foot-sore and hungry, for he had not refreshed himself since he left the ship, but had hurriedly gained the path and pursued his way.

He reached the top of the hill he had been ascending and looked down into the valley. Here and there stood a farmhouse or barn, just as he had left it that night long ago. And there, just at the end of the valley, across the river, near the bridge, nestling among the trees he saw his father's house. A choking feeling came in his throat as he looked.

"I'll hurry," thought he, "they used to go to bed at ten, and it is better I know my fate tonight than bear the suspense longer," and he quickened his pace till he reached the bridge.

Here he paused again and stopped to listen to the murmur of the tireless stream. It seemed to say, "Go no farther, rest here, cast your weary self into the depths of these cool waters and over you they shall close, no man ever knowing."

Not having strength to listen to the river voices beckoning him, he unwillingly walked away, saying to himself, "If I am not welcomed there, here is a near grave," and with tottering steps the prodigal son walked up the path that led to the rear farmhouse door.

Here the sight of rose bushes and woodbine climbing affectionately around that low, wide door cheered the lad's heart, for how could anyone entering through that door be but welcomed?

And Robert crept up to the window and peered through the lattice.

There was the whole family at prayers; but O, how changed they all were. His mother's hair was white as the snow, his father was a wrinkled, gray-haired man; the children were all grown now and he would never have known them had he met them anywhere but home.

He crept to the door and knocked softly, and trembling in his heart as he heard some one approach the door; it opened and there stood his father and behind him his wife.

"Have you shelter for a poor wanderer tonight?" he asked timidly.

"Why, yes, come in and refresh yourself and stay with us till the morrow," answered his father, "it is so late we are just about to retire," and they brought him in, and poor Robert was seated in the old rocker he had fallen asleep in so often when he was a boy. "Hurry, wife," said his father, "our friend here must be hungry," but "wife" only stood and stared at "our friend."

Suddenly she cried, "James! Children! it is our Robert."

Then what a clamor there was, what embracing, what hastening to prepare the dainty meal for the returned prodigal! How glad they all were to see him, why had he stayed away so long? Robert confessed all and was freely forgiven, and as soon as refreshed was shown up to the same little room, and sinking in the pillows, after thanking the One who had guided him safely home, sank into the sweetest sleep he had known for many a year.

And if earthly parents can give such a welcome to their children returning home, what will the welcome be in heaven when weary of the world we turn to our last and eternal home to our waiting Father?

METHODS OF PRIMARY WORK.

(For Northwest Kansas District Convention.)

What does the word "primary" mean? We will see what Webster says: "Primary, first in time, dignity, or importance; preparatory to something higher; that which stands first or highest in rank or importance." So primary signifies something very important; the preparatory steps to "come up higher." Then we should not consider the primary department of the sabbath school merely the "little tots," but the most important part of the school, remembering "as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined." We should obtain the very best teachers for this department. When we have secured the right kind of teacher, they should be kept as long as possible; and as long as they remain in the line of duty, they should be sustained by parents and superintendent.

The class should not be too large, better have two or three primary classes. It seems useless to state that the Gospel Quarterlies should be used, as they are supposed to be in all schools of the Saints. The class should be so formed that the teaches may gather the children about her and talk to them in a friendly manner.

When addressing the class the teacher should speak in a low but very distinct tone; by so doing she will keep their attention without disturbing the other classes, for there are very few schools with separate class rooms; and we must remember that others have rights as well as ourselves. The class offering should be taken as soon as the pupils are all in their places, so their minds may be free from all care, so fitting them to more fully enjoy the lesson. Then, too, there will be no danger of pennies being dropped, for often as small a thing as that creates great confusion in the class, and so for the time draws the mind away from the lesson.

During class work the superintendent should especially visit this department of the school, and thus encourage both teacher and pupils. He should see to it that the little ones take an active part in the general review. It is a pleasure to all, but especially to their children to watch the eagerness with which they listen to every question. How their little faces beam with pleasure when the superintendent says, "Let some of the little folks answer this question." And if parents and teacher have done their duty they will be ready to answer. They may not give as complete an answer as some of the older ones, but if they try to do their part, and do it the best they can, the superintendent himself could do no better. Of course to conduct such a review successfully, the lessons from all grades should be prepared by the one conducting the review.

The teacher should be with her class each sabbath, and be there on time. A tardy teacher will soon ruin the best class. The teacher should strive to fully understand the lesson before trying to teach it to her class. She must not expect to make a success of teaching others what she does not know herself. Do not pretend to be interested in the lesson when your thoughts are far from it. A real live teacher will love her work. She will let the children see that she has an especial interest in them. She will make them feel as the lad said when asked why he was going to Sunday school, "I'm part of the concern. My teacher says it wouldn't seem like Sunday school if I wasn't there to say my text. I just have to go." If they know they are needed, they will be interested in going, and will try to be in their places each sabbath. Pray to God that his Holy Spirit may direct in teaching these little ones, that they may "remember their Creator in the days of their youth." Pray earnestly for them; teach them the necessity of prayer; have them repeat the Lord's prayer in concert; explain to them the meaning of the words they use, and little by little they will learn to ask God for what they desire, and to thank him for the blessings they receive. Help them to realize there is much depending upon them.

Always notice if any are absent, and if possible find out the cause of their absence. Let them know you missed them. Encouage them to study by allowing them to tell (in their own language) what they remember of the lesson. If the parents have an interest in the spiritual welfare of their children they will encourage them to study, by helping them all they can. When explaining a lesson to them, try to compare it to some event in their own lives; for instance, the travels of the apostles in former days was very much like our elders as they travel from place to place, today. Always use a large, bright colored map when possible to obtain one; the bright colors will attract their attention, and they will enjoy looking at it as most children love bright pictures. Point out the places you study about, as you come to them in the lesson. Then as a kind of review, let them find the places as you ask about them. They may not be able to read or even know the letters, but they will soon learn the location of the different places, and that will help them to remember the names.

Encourage them to learn the golden text, it will strengthen their memory. Never make light of their little mistakes or odd speeches. They will soon learn to place a great amount of confidence in their teacher, and if she is the right kind of a teacher, her influence will go with them all through life and help them to overcome a great many difficulties that would otherwise seem almost impossible to them.

I think the method to pursue in primary work first, last, and all the time is, love the work and the cause you are working for. We should always kee p in mind the thought, I am teaching these little ones how to fit themselves for life here and hereafter, and that we are responsible for many of their thoughts and acts. They think, my teacher said or did so and so, and it must be all right for me to do the same. So it requires constant thought and care on our part that we may not lead the little ones astray. We must at all times practice what we teach.

Conference Minutes.

EUROPEAN MISSION.

Annual conference met in the South Manchester meeting room, Denton street, Hulme, at six p. m., August 4. Elder Thomas Taylor in the chair, assisted by Elders J. Dewsnup, Sr., and C. H. Caton, W. R. Armstrong and S. F. Mather secretaries. It was resolved, "that in the opinion of this conference of elders in assembly, we have full powers and privileges as heretofore when presided over by an appointee of General Conference in America." Reports of missionaries. A. Bishop and J. W. Rushton. Bro. Bishop stated that he had preached in Cardiff, Newport, Lydney, Aberaman, Porth, Gilfach, Goch, Llanelly, and Caermarthen. Church matters were at a low ebb, owing to the bad conduct of the late missionary to Wales. It was hard and embarrassing work following up with a character. The Saints had received him kindly and he hoped the work would revive. Bro. Rushton said he arrived in Scotland, July 21, and had commenced open air work, also house to house visitation. He had found three Saints in Hamilton. The district presidents' reports were now read: Eastern Wales by Elder Thomas Gould who said the district was in very fair spiritual condition with few exceptions. Birmingham by Elder C. H. Caton, who said that the work of his district was in a good condition. No serious trouble existed in any of the branches and the ministry were doing their best. Since last report Elder Charles Tyler, an aged brother, full of earnest faith and zeal, had passed away. Sheffield, by Elder John Austin, who said that the spiritual condition of Sheffield was low, but that of Clay Cross was fair, with good prospects. The latter place had purchased land on which to build a meeting house. Manchester was reported by Elder J. Dewsnup, Sr., who said that there had been many disturbing influences militating against the progress of the work during the past year, but hoped by exercise of faith that good would ultimately be done. One branch had been organized at Leeds, called Burley branch, with apparently good prospects. Its president is Walter Aveyard. Of the other branches he said the majority of the officers and members were trying to advance spiritually. Several members had been added by baptism during the year, and some of the ministry were putting forth renewed efforts. Western Wales was reported by Elder Alma Bishop hopefully, although the work was at a low ebb. The Bishop's agent's report was here presented and referred to an auditing committee.

On Monday morning the conference catering committee of 1899 presented its report.

The total receipts were £9. 10s. 7d. and expenditure £4. 18s. 7½d.; leaving a balance in hand of £4. 11s. 11½d. This report was presented to an auditing committee. Report of committee on revision of rules called for, when C. H. Caton said the calling together of the brethren appointed was found impracticable, and therefore nothing had been done. This report was received and the committee discharged. With reference to report of committee on "missionary labor," it was resolved to receive the report of members of the committe present, after which the committee was discharged. Report of auditing committee on catering received and adopted: We report our labor for conference of 1900: We received £7. 12s. 10d. and expended £8. 11s. 2d., leaving a deficit of 18s. 4d., which we made up from balance of last year. London branch was reported by R Clift for Thomas Bradshaw. It showed the spiritual condition "same as at last report," hopeful. Some were living faithfully. Eight names had been taken off the books; they were those who had not attended service for years. At eleven a. m. the question of Sunday school organization was considered. Elder John Taylor gave a synopsis of the business affecting the question. Bro. Mather briefly placed the matter for consideration before the conference. Resolved, that in the opinion of this conference it is desirable that Sunday school work, in connection with the branches of the church in this country, be placed under the control of the branch and district organization. At 2:20 p. m., the auditing committee on Bishop's agent's account reported account correct; but find no receipts from Bro. and Sr. Pitt for amounts they received, which we consider not businesslike or fair to the Bishop's agent. Report adopted, spread on the minutes, and committee discharged. Resolved that conference proceed to a temporary organization consequent upon General Conference not having appointed an official in charge. Whereas the church in America has not appointed a missionary in charge of the work in this country; therefore, be it resolved that we request High Priest and Bishop designate Thomas Taylor as the highest authority in this country to take charge of the interests of the work in Great Britain, and that we give him our full confidence and assistance. That Bro. W. R. Armstrong be appointed secretary to Elder Thomas Taylor appointed in charge of the interests of the work of Great Britain. The resignation of Elder Mather, assistant secretary of European Mission, was accepted. A vote of thanks was awarded him for past services. Resolved that the balance from conference committee's account of 1899 be handed over to conference committee of 1900. The secretary's expenses account was presented and payment authorized. Resolved that we support the general and local authorities of the church. Resolved that the conference express its pleasure and great gratitude at the appointment of High Priest Thomas Taylor as Bishop to this country. Resolved that a vote of thanks be awarded the brethren and sisters, the catering and locating committees for the way they have attended to our wants during conference. Resolved that a copy of the resolution of the conference of 1899, with reference to the appointment of a bishop and quorum of elders, be forwarded to the general church authorities. Notice of motion by Elder Meredith: that at next conference he would move that the time of holding conference be changed. Resolved that this conference now adjourns, and that a conference of the elders of Great Britain is hereby summoned to meet on the Saturday preceding the August bank holiday of 1901, continuing over the two following days, and that the place of holding conference be left in the hands of High Priest, Thomas Taylor in charge. And be it further provided that the secretary under the direction of Elder Taylor notify the districts, branches, etc., as usual.

On Sunday morning at 9:30 met to partake of the sacrament. The meeting was a profitable one. At 10:30 the Saints met in Hulme vestry hall for preaching; an attentive and appreciative audience was present. At 2:30 p. m. a fellowship meeting was held. At 6:30 preaching by Elders Caton and E R. Dewsnup. On Monday evening a closing fellowship meeting was held. There was a good attendance and some very good testimonies were born. An enjoyable conference was then brought to a close.

DES MOINES.

NORTHEAST MISSOURI.

Convention of above district met in Higbee, June 14 and 15. District superintendent, Sr. Louise Palfrey, being absent, assistant superintendent, Sr. Mary J. Richards, very ably superintended the meetings. George A. Tryon was secretary. Bevier and Higbee Sunday schools reported. Superintendents' reports were had from Brn. Robert Thrutchley and David L. Morgan. Treasurer's report was read, referred to an auditing committee, and found correct, as follows: Balance February 8, $5.86; receipts $6.84; expenditures 20 cents; balance on hand $12 50. Librarian of the district, William Chapman, reported. The report was adopted, and on motion his reqest to get report books was granted. Bills of expense were allowed: of superintendent 75 cents, assistant superintendent $2 40, secretary 71 cents, and librarian 12 cents. Resignation of Sr. Louise Palfrey as superintendent of the district was accepted, and election of one to take her place was deferred till next convention. Bro. Frank J. Chatburn was chorister, with Sr. Pearl Davis as organist. The local choir with the assistance of Sr. Thorburn helped in the convention to the pleasure of all present. Considerable time was spent in institute work in discussing questions of interest to workers in the district. School on Sunday morning was well attended. All the district officers were present except one. The school was divided into six classes; there were fifty in attendance. After class work, the school was reviewed by Bro. I. N. White. Although the work in some parts of the district was slow the convention was an enjoyable and profitable one. Adjourned to meet at Pollock, October 5.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.

Sunday school association of Southern Nebraska district convened with Hebron branch, September 9, at ten a. m. An interesting session was held. Our district paper was read by Sr. Myers, of Fairbury, who gave us a very good recitation; and also short speeches by Bro. Myers and others. At three p. m., business session. Bro. Barss chosen secretary pro. tem. Four schools reported; after which we proceeded to organize a Sunday school. Bro. Edward Robertson was chosen superintendent, and Sr. Mary Duncan assistant. Secretary and treasurer chosen also; and we named this new school Good Hope. Adjourned to meet with Wilbur Saints in January. The schools in this district are in good condition, and the work is onward and upward. To all the superintendents and officers, let us be faithful to the work intrusted to our care, for it is worthy of our best efforts. The Sunday schools of today are the church of tomorrow.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICES.

To the Saints of Central Illinois District, Greeting:—In the conference minutes of Central Illinois district I notice J. D. Stead was recommended to E. L. Kelley, Bishop, to act as his agent for that district. And in the Saints' Herald of July 18 appears his appointment by the Bishop.

For this recommend of the Beardstown conference of July 7, and the appointment of our Bishop, I have no apology to make; it was all done without my knowledge or consent. I would have been glad had you chosen some other man to look after this part of the Lord's work; howbeit, since I have been your choice, I will endeavor to prosecute this work as faithfully as any other part of my work which has been entrusted to me.

To as many of the Saints and friends of Central Illinois district as have received the gospel, I appeal, to give as the Lord has prospered you; or in other words, give up the Lord's part, one tenth. The prophets of the past accused a people who called themselves the people of God of robbing him (Malachi 3), and makes himself understood by saying they were withholding that part that belonged to the Lord, and goes on to tell them for so doing they were cursed; and in order to have the Lord remove from them this curse, they must return unto him and keep his orders, obey his commands. What were they? Bring into my storehouse all the tithes, that there may be meat in my house; and prove me herewith, and see if I do not remove the curse from off your ground.

Dear Saints, if God changes not, and it can be shown from the commandments given in these last days that the same conditions exist now as did then, would it be out of place for a servant of God to call your attention to these facts? Let me quote a commandment or two, which seems to be right in point: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support."—D. C. 42: 8. Again: "Verily thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, . . . and this shall be a beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord. Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you."—D. C. 106: 1, 2.

Do we want the Lord to remove the curse from us and our ground? If so, Malachi tells us how we can find favor with God, return unto him, and keep his commandments. What were they? The same that was given through our modern prophet (Joseph Smith) that I have first quoted above. In taking away the curse, what were some of the things he would do? He would rebuke the devourer that he will not destroy the fruit of your ground. We discover by comparing the prophecies of the past with what has been revealed to us in these last days, the law relating to the gathering of God's people is now just what it has always been; there have only been a few of all the people that have inhabited this globe who were willing to keep the law by which they could be gathered, according to the scriptures. Enoch and a few of the people who lived in his day kept this law. (D C., Sec 36)

Christ wept over Jerusalem and said he had often wanted to gather the Jews, but they would not let him. He could only do so by their obedience to a fixed law, "the celestial law," which includes the law of gathering, "the law Enoch and his people observed." He says he had sent unto them the prophets (Heb. 1: 1, 2), evidently for the purpose of revealing his law to them, and they had killed them, and were now ready to kill him.

The people of today are no exception to the rule, in disregarding the commandments of God. We can never make a success of the gathering until it is done in the Lord's own way; the Jews never made a success of the gathering, for the reason they were not willing to keep his commandments. They rejected the law when it was given to them through the prophets. And when Christ came to them, for this reason, they were always scattered (not gathered), and the curse is still hanging over them.

With the history of the past before us, both Jewish and that of this church, will we continue to do as they have done, disregard the law, continue to live under the curse, and then at last be cut off from the presence of the Lord? Or will we rise in our might and keep the whole law, letting others do as they will.

Let the Saints of Central Illinois district, in the very formation of this new district, begin right and keep right, all along. I am willing to make the effort on my part; will you do your part? My permanent address will be Lamoni, Iowa. Who will be the first to have their name on the new book? I will try and receipt you promptly for all the moneys sent in. Ever praying, hoping, and working for the redemption of Zion,

J. D. STEAD,

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS REUNION.

The sixth reunion of Southeastern Illinois district was held at Zenith, Wayne county, September 6 to 13. John T. Davis and F. M. Slover were chosen to preside, M. F. Gowell secretary, Arthur Burroughs chorister, Martha Bing organist. F. M. Davis, John Phillips, and James Brown were chosen to act as finance committee. The following brethren did the preaching and presided at the prayer meetings: John T. Davis, F. M. Slover, M. F. Gowell, Arthur Allen, I. A. Morris, J. F. Henson, J. E. Bozarth, M. R. Brown, John Thomas, Louis Brown, James Brown, J. Kurtz.

Two sessions were devoted to Sunday school work; profitable and interesting talks were made by the elders and some of the lay brethren and sisters.

A Religio service was also held, in charge of Bro. Arthur Allen, and considerable interest aroused.

A spirit of unity, peace, and love prevailed during this reunion, and it was enjoyed by all. Some doubts of success existed in the minds of the promoters, but foreseeing obstacles, those who had it in hand and in heart, by centering and uniting their efforts, made this reunion a blessing to themselves and others. The weather was perfect, the preaching was excellent, the prayer meetings strengthening; the outside attendance good on the average, and at times large. It is the experience of those who attend reunions, that if full enjoyment and benefit is gained, Saints should prepare themselves to camp on the ground and remain throughout, if possible. Solomon's advice will apply to reunions—"whatsoever thy hand finds to do, do it with all thy might," or in other words do it with all thy heart, doubt not, fear not, and full satisfaction will be realized. Half-hearted efforts mean partial results. It is hoped that Saints throughout the district will begin to prepare their minds for the next year's reunion (time and place of which was left to the committee appointed: D. Hoover, F. M. Slover, and F. M. Davis treasurer) and by so doing receive a blessing beyond computation in dollars and cents. A tent committee was appointed, consisting of Lester Burroughs, Louis Brown, and Will Clements.

M. F. GOWELL, Sec.

PASTORAL.

To Whom it May Concern:—This will give notice that the appointment of Elder A. J. Layland, referred to the Bishop and the missionary in charge of the Rocky Mountain mission, has received their concurrence, and he is hereby recommended to the Saints among whom he may labor. His field of labor will be eastern Idaho and western Wyoming, and his address, Thomas Fork, Idaho.

D. W. WIGHT,
Missionary in Charge.

This is to certify that Bro. Earl Corthell is appointed to labor in Clinton and Independence, Missouri, districts, in the stead of Bro. Lee Quick, who has been released at his own request.

Also that Bro. R. T. Walters has been transferred from South Missouri district to Central Illinois district, to meet an urgent demand. We cheerfully commend Bro. Walters to the confidence of all those whom he may labor among.

I. N. WHITE.

NOTICE TO AUDITING COMMITTEE.

LAMONI, Iowa, Sept. 19, 1900.

BRO. F. M. WELD, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Sir:—Yours making inquiry as to proper time when books would be ready for auditing committee received, and replying, will state that we expect to be ready by the close of the Dow City reunion. I think that closes about the 6th or 8th of October; so that any time that your committe sees fit to arrange for between that time and the 15th would, I think, be suitable to us. I notified the members of the committee, who were away in July, that they could come the first of August if they so desired, but received a reply that it was preferable that all the posting be done first, so we have taken time to do that. I have also notified the other members of the committee that they could come in October if they desired to do so, as both of them had written me to give them notice in the matter.

Very respectfully yours,
E. L. KELLEY.

Having received the above from the Bishop, I publish this notice in harmony with section 134, page 115, Book of Rules.

Will Brn. R. M. Elvin and M. F. Gowell of the committee please take notice and arrange their work so as to meet me at nine o'clock a. m., October 15, in Bishop William Anderson's office, Lamoni, Iowa, to make all necessary preparation for our work.

If this date is not satisfactory to all, please notify me at once. Any others having anything to present to the committee relative to their work please take notice.

F. M. WELD, Temporary Chairman.

REUNION NOTICES.

South Missouri reunion, which was to convene October 5, will be postponed for this year. Circumstances over which the committee have no control have made this change necessary.

D. W. THOMAS.
HENRY SPARLING.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

CHANGE OF TIME.

South Missouri district conference which was to convene October 10, will be changed to meet on Saturday, October 13, at nine a. m. A report from all the priesthood will be expected, branch officers included. So all come prepared to have a spiritual time, and leave the spirit of faultfinding and private grievance at home, if you have any.

D. W. THOMAS, Pres.

Kewanee district conference will convene at Canton, Illinois, October 6, at ten o'clock. Prepare branch reports and send them in. Hope to see a good representation present.

G. W. ADAMS, Pres.

Clinton district conference will convene at the Saints' chapel in Rich Hill, at ten o'clock, on Saturday, October 6.

T. R. WHITE, Pres.
VINA H. GOFF, Clerk.

Northern Michigan district conference will convene at Beaverton, October 13, at ten a. m. We hope there may be a good representation, both of officers and members. Branch secretaries, please see that statistical reports are properly made out and sent in. Elders priests, teachers, and deacons, send in written reports, as the laws and usages of the church require, and if convenient be present in person. Please send all branch and ministerial reports to C. B. Joice, South Boardman, Michigan. After October 6, to Beaverton, Michigan, care of J. A. Carpenter.

J. A. GRANT, Pres.

District conference will meet in Chatham, Ontario, October 13, at ten o'clock. We hope all secretaries of branches will see that their reports are correct, and that every item required by the district secretary and church recorder are on them. Arrangements have been made with the C. P. R., G. T. R., L. E. and D. R. R., and the Wabash, to give the usual reduction in passenger rates. In order to secure the reduction, persons on starting must inform the ticket agent that they are traveling to Chatham conference. Pay full fare to Chatham and get a certificate for the same. This is called a standard certificate, and permits the traveler to return to the starting point at reduced fare. If you are traveling over two lines of railway and have to purchase a ticket over each, get a certificate with each.

GEORGE GREEN, Pres.
RICHARD COBURN, Sec.

Conference will convene at Plano, Illinois, October 6 and 7. Branch officers will please see that the respective branches are correctly and fully reported. The ministry are required to report in writing. We would also extend an invitation to all to come and bring the Spirit of the Master, that we may have a time of refreshing from the Lord.

HENRY SOUTHWICK, Pres.

Visitors to Eastern Michigan district conference at Flint, October 6 and 7, will be met at the depots by the branch reception committee, who will wear a white ribbon. All cordially invited. By order of branch,

BERTA H. JOHNSON, Clerk.

GRACELAND COLLEGE SUBSCRIPTION LISTS.

All persons having in their hands subscription lists for cancellation of Graceland College debt are hereby requested to make return of the same by the 15th of October next. It is desirable to get the full number in and ascertain how many, if any, of the one thousand subscribers are lacking. Any parties who have lists in their hands and who have not presented them to branches and individuals as requested, please do so at once and then forward subscription list to the undersigned and oblige. We have on lists already returned a goodly number of subscribers, and if those to come in do as well it will place our educational work where it should be.

To those who have not subscribed to this fund already, we hope you will do so at once, and if subscription list is not presented to you by local agent, please send your name to the undersigned at Lamoni, Iowa, and oblige. Do not delay this a day. We will give due notice when the lists are filled to the amount of one thousand $25 subscriptions, and subscribers will have due notice and opportunity to fulfill the obligations.

Desiring to hear from one and all by the 15th of October, 1900, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric, Very respectfully,

ON TRUTH.

"What is truth?" said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer. Certain; there be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bond to fix a belief; affecting free-will in thinking as well as in acting. And though the sects of philosophers of that kind be gone, yet there remain certain discoursing wits which are of the same veins, though there be not so much blood in them as was in those of the ancients. But it is not only the difficulty and labor which men take in finding out of truth; nor again that when it is found it imposeth upon men's thoughts; that doth bring lies in favor; but a natural though corrupt love of the lie itself. One of the later schools of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand to think what should be in it, that men should love lies, where neither they make for pleasure, as with poets, nor for advantage, as with the merchant; but for the lie's sake. But I cannot tell; this same truth is a naked and open daylight, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle lights.

Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that sheweth best by day, but it will not rise to the price of a diamond or carbuncle, that sheweth best in various lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt, that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to themselves? One of the Fathers, in great severity, called poesy vinum daemonum, because it filleth the imagination; and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in and settleth in it, that doth the hurt; such as we spake of before. But howsoever these things are thus in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the love-making of wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature.

The first creature of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and his Sabbath work ever since is the illumination of his spirit. First he breathed light upon the face of the matter or chaos; then he breathed light into the face of man; and still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of the chosen. The poet that beautified the sect that was otherwise inferior to the rest, saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and to see a battle and the adventures thereof below; but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of Truth (a hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always clear and serene) and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests in the vale below," so always that this prospect be with pity and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

To pass from the theological and philosophical truth, to the truth of civil business; it will be acknowledged even by those that practice it not, that clear and round dealing is the honor of man's nature; and that mixture of falsehood is like an alloy in coin of gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent; which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be found false and perfidious. And therefore Montaigne saith prettily, when he inquired the reason, why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace and such an odious charge? Saith he, "If it be well weighed, to say that a man lieth, is as much to say, as that he is brave towards God and a coward towards men." For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood and breach of faith cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men; it being foretold, that when Christ cometh, "he shall not find faith upon the earth."—Francis Bacon.

THE TEMPLE LIBRARY AT NIPPUR.

The remarkable discoveries made by the Pennsylvania University expedition at Nippur under Prof. Hilprecht have awakened great interest, as by these discoveries the history of Babylonian civilization has been carried back to a period more than 7,000 B. C. Prof. Hilprecht has now returned to Constantinople, and has described some of the chief results of this year's work in the old city. The library of the great temple was the most important discovery which was made. Prof. Hilprecht stated some eleven years ago that the remains of the library would be found at the very place where the discovery was made. In three months no less than 17,200 tablets bearing inscriptions in cuneiform characters had been found. They relate to business contracts, conveyances, letters, etc. The latest discoveries disclose the fact that the tablets are historical, philological, and literary, treating of mythology, grammar, lexicography, science, and mathematics. It is thought that when they have all been deciphered, they will enable us to obtain a very adequate idea of life in Babylonia. None of the documents bear a later date than 2280 B. C. It is probable that the library was destroyed during the invasion of the Elamites, which occurred at this date.

Prof. Hilprecht considers that at the present rate of working, five years will be necessary to excavate and examine the contents of the great library. He considers that the unexplored part will yield 150,000 tablets. We know that the library was of great importance in early Babylonia, and was the chief college for instruction in law and religion, as well as in all other studies. It is probable that no example of a literary treasure trove in the world's history, not even in Egypt, will result in so complete a recovery of the records of ancient civilization. The work of exploration has been stopped on the library in order to continue the work at the temple and to complete the examination of the southern and eastern lines of the walls of the fortifications. The numerous weapons were found along the fortifications in the lower strata. This affords material for determining the methods employed by the besieging armies in the bloody early period of Babylonian history. In the course of the present excavations the palace belonging to the pre-Sargonic periods was uncovered beneath an accumulation of 70 feet of rubbish on the southwestern side, which divided Nippur in two parts. Prof. Hilprecht considers that this palace, which has a frontage of 600 feet, will probably be found to be the palace of the early priest-kings of Nippur. The few rooms excavated have given valuable results in the way of tablets, cylinders, and figurines. It is hoped that statues will also be found. A large building with a remarkable colonnade, which was discovered in the first campaign, has been completely excavated.

An important tomb has also been discovered. The French expedition has done good work at Tello, on the southeast side of the great canal connecting the Tigris with the Euphrates. The chief finds of the year are about 10,000 inscribed tablets. A third expedition that Germany arranged has been at work in Babylonia since they spring of 1899. The greatest success of the year is that made by the American expedition.—Scientific American, September 22, 1900.

THE GREAT ARARAT ASCENDED.

The Ararat Mountains in Armenia comprise two peaks situated seven miles apart. They are known as Great and Little Ararat, and are respectively 17,260 and 14,320 feet above the plain. They partially belong to three countries, Russia, Turkey, and Persia. The mountains are covered on the tops with perpetual snow, ice, and glaciers. The summit of the Great Ararat was reached in 1829 by Prof. Parrot, and on September 2, 1900, a member of the Russian Geographical Society named Peoggenpohl ascended the peak with a considerable party. The difficulties of the ascent are very great, and his successful expedition will be welcome news in geographical circles. Ascents are rare, having been made in 1834, 1843, 1845, 1850, and 1856. Little Ararat is even more difficult to climb, as its declivities are greater and steeper, its form being almost conical. It is believed to be the spot where the ark rested, but there is a tradition that Mount Judi in southern Armenia was the spot. The mountain is of volcanic origin and was in eruption in 1785, and in 1840 there was a vast discharge of sulphurous vapors from its sides, and a tremendous earthquake shook the surrounding country. There is considerable literature devoted to the mountain.—Scientific American, September 15, 1900.

"GOD AT GALVESTON."

The Rev. J. Clayton Youker, of the Euclid Avenue Methodist Church in Chicago, preached last Sunday on the subject of "God at Galveston." He began by saying that this waning century has brought to the United States no more terrible object lesson of the destructive power of wind and wave than desolated Galveston, and how to reconcile such a horror with the superintending of this world by a God of love is an unsolvable problem to the generality of men. He says, however, that God never sent that storm, that natural conditions produced it, and that instead of saying "What a providence!" we should say, "This is a penalty. What is the violated law?" Galveston had her home near the cradle of the hurricane and it was simply because man ignored natural law that the city suffered. Dr. Youker said:—

"Much of so-called providence is human improvidence. Some men have a way of placing themselves in the care of God which blasphemous. Man must sow to reap, he must bolt to protect—God is neither a farmer nor a policeman. Waves are calmed by oil, not by prayer, and the providential refuge from the wind is a storm cellar. An ounce of common sense is worth a pound of providential nonsense. Famines indicate not the wrath of God, but the culpability of men. The pestilence teaches that cleanliness is next to godliness. Wrecked Galveston is not a sign of the disfavor of God; but an evidence of the unwitting foolishness of those who founded her upon the sand.

"God is in the midst not to alter nature's courses, but to keep them certain, and thus contribute in the highest degree to human welfare. The immutability of God expressed in unchanging nature is the providence to which man should cling. It enables him to make brick, weave cloth, and raise grain. By it he imports and exports. It is infinitely better that nature should be controlled by God's changeless representatives, cause and effect, than by divine caprice."

Dr. Youker said that the statement "God is everywhere" is something that should make every man select his view point carefully, and it should be as impossible to see God in the desolation of Galveston as it is to see him in the deeds of the ghouls who robbed the bodies of the dead and dying. No one thinks of saying that God had anything to do with the awful work of those brutes, and no one should think that he had anything to do with the storm. Dr. Youker believes that man has no one to blame but himself for the disaster that came upon him by that storm.—Iowa State Register.

FENELON'S INTERPRETATION OF RELIGION.

There is no explanation of Fénelon's character apart from his religion. True, he was natively modest, amiable, refined, and high-minded, but others have been similarly endowed who never achieved that special elevation of character we call saintless, and which was Fénelon's distinguishing characteristic. It is sometimes charged against Fénelon that his idea of religion was effeminate, mystical, and impracticable. But Fénelon's own character is the unanswerable demonstration of its consistency with exceptional manliness, sagacity, and successful achievement. "True piety," he says to his favorite royal pupil, "has in it nothing weak, nothing sad, nothing constrained. It enlarges the heart, it is simple, free, and attractive. The kingdom of God does not consist in a scrupulous observance of petty details, but in a due performance of the duties which belong to every condition of life." The avowed defender of Madame Guyon and of the principles of Quietism, Fénelon's interpretation of that system is altogether rational, scriptural, and practical. The three things for which he contends are very simple and fundamental. He contends that the gospel has made it possible for every human being (1) to love God with all the heart; (2) to subdue and expel every untoward and rebellious temper and affection, and (3) to accept God's direction implicitly in all the affairs of life. His exercises for the achievement of this condition are the commonplace exercises of prayer, meditation, the study of scripture, holy living, and unceasing benevolence. However the metaphysics of Quietism may be expounded and however they may have been stated by himself, for dialectical purposes, this was Fénelon's practical exposition of the system, the one which he accepted as the rule of his own life.—Charles M. Stuart, in the Chautauquan for October.

Perhaps there is not one woman who is not honestly trying to better herself, to leave the world from a higher level than the one on which she entered it. But they are deadly tired as they work. You can tell an American woman in any country before she speaks by her anxious, eager eyes. Even the baby on her breast faces the world with a nervous, knowing look, while the beautiful English and Italian children are but fat, mindless, happy animals.—"An American Mother," in the October Ladies' Home Journal.

"MORMONISM," NOT MOHAMMEDANISM.

"The administration should go slow in its condemnation of 'Mormonism,' so long as it keeps the Sultan of the Sulus on its pay-roll, and provides for the maintenance of his harem," says the Sacramento Bee.

Our contemporaries should go as slow in drawing comparisons where there are no points of resemblance whatever, lest they injure their own logic beyond repair. There is nothing in "Mormonism" that justifies anyone in branding it as Mohammedanism. There never was. Celestial marriage, as formerly taught by the "Mormons," was, both in principle and practice, as different from Mohammedan polygamy, as is heaven from earth.

"Mormonism is not polygamy. It existed before the principle of plural marriage was given by the Prophet Joseph. It lives and flourishes now, although the rules founded on that principle have for years been abrogated. There was at one time an erroneous impression that "Mormonism" would go if one of its peculiarities were abandoned, but the reports from the missionary fields should convince all the world of the error of this supposition. "Mormonism" is a message from God to man. It is not affected by nonessentials any more than are the contents of a letter by the color and texture of the paper upon which it may be written.—Deseret Evening News, Sept. 21, 1900.

We have long contended that "Mormonism," using the term as applying to the system of faith introduced through the angel's message by Joseph Smith, as used in the foregoing, taken from the News, is not and never was "polygamy." We have further contended that polygamy was not and could not properly be made "Mormonism," or any part of it. So that when the organ of the Utah church now assumes the ground taken in the extract we see it as an encouraging omen of a return to better things on the part of those once misguided.

The period when the church flourished best was before the introduction of polygamy, and if it is now once more flourishing it is since the rule founded on the principle of polygamous marriage has been abrogated, which we sincerely hope has been done once for all time.

The government may deal with the Sultan of the Sulus as conditions may require; but, as suggested in the extract, there is no similarity, for one is the exercise of a barbaric right attaching to a ruler, the other the exercise of a supposedly religious dogma; the only resemblance, if any, being that in either case the few were permitted the enjoyment of the right.

FAMILY PRAYER.

Prayer is one of the safeguards of the soul. It is the key to the favor of heaven. Whoever sincerely prays is within the reach of safety. Whether prayer is vocal or is the silent invocation of the spirit within, it demands the ear of Deity and is heard, unless the petition is made amiss. Whoever neglects to pray is near the line of danger to himself and his hopes of heaven.

The Savior impressed the necessity of prayer upon those whom he taught, and suggested the nature of the petition. "In this manner shall ye pray."

There is nothing selfish in this prayer. It identifies self with all within the care of God. "Our Father," is the aspiration of a soul having a desire for the good of all. No selfish heart can breathe that prayer in its truest meaning.

"Who art in heaven." This is a direct acknowledgment of the source to which men should look, and whence they may and do receive help in the time of their necessity, and should always be borne in mind by him who prays.

"Hallowed by Thy name." That is to say, I remember thee, thou Divine One, with reverence of spirit, and hold thy name sacred, recognizing thy might, thy majesty, thy goodness, and thy love. And in this spirit do I address my petition to thee. Saints should be admonished by the teaching of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the later revelations, that there is efficacy in prayer. No one should fail to be impressed with the obligation to observe the service of prayer, at home, and always when it can be done; and no trivial excuse should prevent it. The Book of Mormon enjoins the disciples to pray over their flocks and herds; their every possession, in fact, all in which they have an interest.

Prayer brings relief from mental trouble; and gives strength to the fainting spirit and body, ofttimes recreating the failing nature so that the man is renewed in courage to continue the struggle before all too hopeless in prospect, and provides for victory at last.

As we write we cannot help feeling the suggestion, why write of the duty of prayer, Mr. Editor? Do not all Saints pray?

To this thought we reply that we fear not. We hope all do; but it is to be regretted that now and then there is a family in which no altar has been reared, for reasons which may not be known. It is sometimes neglected in families in which father, or mother is of the faith, the other is not; hence, what one would do the other would not, or if acquiescing would do it in such a way as to make it irksome to the prayerful, if prayer was openly offered.

Sincere devotion in such case is almost out of the question; for the coldness or indifference of a companion is never felt so keenly as when one kneels in such presence to pray, if the prayerful is sensitive. But in such case the closet or secret prayer is left, and should be employed.

Among the duties of the elder and the priest is that of teaching and exhorting to pray vocally and in secret, to erect the family altar and offer the incense of grateful prayer thereon, that the favor of God may come to the household. It is the priest's duty especially to warn and exhort members to this duty of prayer. And in cases where it is neglected or denied, the priest should report to the presiding elder that he may absolve himself from blame. There the duty of the priest ends. He may not make trouble by attempting to force men to pray. That must be left to the promptings of the Spirit, and the communings of the soul with its God.

None can long resist the promptings to pray who feels that he has a soul to save, a pathway to be made smooth, or help to carry a burden. "Pray always," is a safe injunction, meaning that one's life should be a prayer to God constantly.

A RELIEF SCHEME FOR GALVESTON.

Clarence Oustey, publisher of the Galveston Tribune, has some three or four thousand volumes of a work entitled "Picturesque Galveston," which was gotten up before the terrible storm devastated and destroyed that city. It was said to be one of the most beautiful cities of the world. It is a book of over a hundred pages, printed on eighty pound paper, filled with views of the city as it was before it was destroyed. These are offered to the public for sale at $2.00 a copy, the proceeds to go to the relief fund of the city. Those wanting a souvenir of the city can get one and help the victims in their trouble at the same time. If you send for a copy mention the HERALD, please.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

THE NEED OF TEXAS.

We give place to the following sent us by the governor of Iowa with request to publish. Those who can with propriety help the cause of the citizens of Galveston now have the opportunity to do so.

AN APPEAL

To the People of Iowa:—I feel it incumbent on me to call upon the people of Iowa to contribute of their abundance to the help of the communities that are today suffering because of the calamity which has, with appalling effect, recently swept over parts of the state of Texas, destroying thousands of lives and millions of dollars' worth of property, and leaving the survivors in pitiful destitution. There is urgent need of help for the afflicted localities Shall not the people of Iowa render liberal assistance where there is such demand for it, and render it promptly? How can we better manifest our thankfulness that we were not similarly visited than by freely remembering the afflicted communities which have passed through such horrors of storm and flood?

The following gentlemen in the city of Des Moines have kindly consented to act as a committee for receiving and transmitting contributions to the afflicted district: Hon. Frank D. Jackson, David F Witter, Isaac Brandt, Very Reverend Michael Flavin, Reverend J Everist Cathell, Hon. William L Carpenter, William W. Witmer, James G. Olmsted, J. D Whisenand, Hon James G. Berryhill and Rev. Dr. Horace L Stetson.

Contributions may also be sent direct to the Governor of the State of Texas, at Austin.

B. B. TYLER'S VISIT TO LAMONI.

Not very long ago there was a reverend gentlemen of the Christian Church who made Lamoni a visit, sight seeing. He had read somewhat of our people and Lamoni, and so improved the opportunity, while visiting in Leon, to see Lamoni and the "peculiar" people who live there. He came and spent a few hours in our town, visiting the "Home," the College, the Herald Office, the church building, etc. The gentlemen was Rev. B. B. Tyler. Since leaving Lamoni he has given the public through the columns of the Christian-Evangelist, of September 20, the benefit of what he learned about "Mormons" while here. It is found in an article headed "B. B. Tyler's Letter," which is signed with the initials, B. B. T. After speaking of Leon and the country surrounding, he says:—

The principal churches in the town are Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Christian. There is no Roman Catholic Church in Leon. Some miles from town there is an Irish settlement and a church owing allegiance to Pope Leo XIII. There are small Advent and Mormon churches in Leon. Lamoni, a Mormon headquarters, is in this county about fifteen miles distant. In fact, Lamoni is the headquarters for the "Josephite Mormons" or the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." A son of Joseph Smith, the original Mormon prophet, is a citizen of this place. I have heard that "he is a better prophet than was his father." The "Josephite Mormons" are opposed to polygamy. Mormons of this variety seem to be about as well thought of here as any people. The uniform testimony is that they are good citizens and good neighbors. I have been told that Mormons are teachers in the public schools in Leon. The county treasurer is a Mormon elder. Usually the people when speaking of the Mormons use the words "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," or simply "Latter Day Saints." Their printing house is located at Lamoni. A grandson of Joseph Smith, Frederick M. Smith, is the editor of the Lamoni Chronicle. The "Saints" in Lamoni do not like the Salt Lake City "Saints" a little bit. Mormonism is a power to be reckoned with in the United States. R B Neal, of Grayson, Kentucky, and others who are fighting this system, are not engaged in a bout with a windmill. This remark applies especially to the Utah Mormons.

THE following may be of interest to some of our readers:—

SUES HEAD OF MORMONS.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Sept. 27.—A sensational action was begun in the courts here today by three sons of Lorenzo Snow, president of the Mormon Church, who charges that their father has refused to support his legal wife, their mother, and that she is in need. They also declare that the favorite wife with whom the Mormon leader is living is using every effort to induce him to deed his property to her and leave all his other wives and children in poverty. The action has caused a great sensation among church officials.—St. Joseph Gazette-Herald.

MANSFIELD, Ohio, if one is to judge from the reports that continually come from there, is made up largely of a lot of mobbers. The Dowie elders who have attempted to go there have met with violent opposition, and have been forcibly ejected from the town. Besides thus maltreating the missionaries of Mr. Dowie, some of the citizens of the place have met with the same kind of treatment, and other residents of other states have been forced by mobs to leave the town. The authorities (?) seem both unable and unwilling to control the mobs. The Philadelphia Times speaks thus of the matter:—

Once mob rule is established it has no limit. The same persons who are now mobbing the Dowieites may themselves be mobbed should a more numerous mob take it into its head to undertake the job. The idea that mob rule can ever be or ever has been a reformative agent is dangerous humbug. It is quite time for the governor of the state to interfere in this matter.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. S. G. Cunningham, under date of September 24, writes from Mountainville, Maine:—

The work is moving on nicely this way. All are trying harder than ever since Bro. Hilliard left. He did the people good. Several have quit the use of tea and coffee and tobacco and are trying to keep the "word of wisdom." The interest in this place is good. Have been here ten days with good crowds, and I think some will obey before I leave. The work is truly onward.

A brother who signs himself J. W. V., writes from Oakland, California, September 20:—

We had fine times at our reunion, Bro. A. H. Smith giving the Saints patriarchal blessings and fine instructions. Brn. Griffiths, Etzenhouser, Chase, and a host of others did well.

W. H. Pease writes from Kansas City, Mo., September 20:—

Everything is moving along nicely at the Armstrong branch, and we are just on the verge of opening up tent work this evening in Kansas City, with Elder J. D. White in charge. We hope to accomplish some good. Am well and feeling good in the work.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. N. C. Enge, writing to Bro. R. S. Salyards, under date of September 16, from Queenstown, Ireland, less than eight days from Boston, states that he and Bro. M. P. Hansen had a pleasant passage across the Atlantic, and were well and quite pleased with the prospect for getting to their field of labor. They would soon sail for Norway. Brn. Enge and Hansen ask interest, sympathy, and prayers of the Scandinavian Saints, especially, for the success of their mission. They will be pleased if Saints having relatives or friends whom they can reach to send the names and addresses to Bro. N. C. Enge, Homborgsend, Portadbneri, pa Lillesand, Norway.

Elder I. N. Roberts reached home on the 27th, for a few days' visit with his family. He reports favorably for the work in his field.

Mrs. Celesta Baty, of Grantsburg, Indiana, would like some of the elders to call there. Some of the Brighamite elders having been laboring there; hence her desire for men of our faith to come.

President Joseph Smith left last Wednesday for Dow City, where he will attend the reunion.

Bishop Kelley and Elder R. M. Elvin left Friday night for Dow City, to attend he reunion.

The Herald Office is being represented at Dow City by Business Manager Smith, who left for there last Friday.

Elder I. N. Roberts returned Tuesday to his Minnesota mission field. Elders Stedman and Hayer also recently returned there, having spent a few days at home with families.

The pulpit in Lamoni was occupied Sunday morning by Bishop Wm. Anderson, and in the evening by Bro. G. J. Whitehead, while Bro. C. I. Carpenter preached to the folks at the Saints' Home.

Services were held at Pleasanton Saturday and Sunday, in charge of the district president, F. M. Weld. R. S. Salyards assisted him, as well as local laborers.

BAPTISM.—NO. I.

BY R. M. ELVIN.

Webster gives the following definition of baptism:—

The application of water to a person, as a sacrament or religious ceremony, by which he is initiated into the visible church of Christ. This is performed by immersion, sprinking, or pouring.

Both Blackstone and Greenleaf tell us that words are to be received in evidence as they are locally understood. To illustrate: should I enter a Baptist church and ask the meaning of baptism, they would answer me promptly—immersion. Whereas, if I should go to a Catholic church, they would inform me the manner of administering the ordinance was by sprinkling. Should I choose to knock at the door of a Methodist church for admission by baptism, they would give me the choice of sprinkling, pouring, or immersion. S. M. Merrill, D. D., Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says:—

It is known that, as a Church, we practice three modes of administering the rite; namely, pouring, sprinkling, and immersion. —Christian Baptism: its Subjects and Mode, p. 172.

Education and religious teaching are responsible for the opposite views and opinions in relation to this principle of the doctrine of Christ. The object of this paper is not a defense of the views of any man or church, but an earnest effort to set forth clearly and authoritatively the will of God as revealed in his word. Paul wrote:—

One Lord, one faith, one baptism.—Eph. 4:5.

The same author said:—

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever.—Heb. 13:8.

While James, the Lord's brother, said:—

Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1:17.

Baptism was a gracious and perfect gift from God, the especial ministry of John Baptist was the preaching of baptism; and when he was interviewed upon the subject, his answer was:—

A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.—John 3:27.

A baptism that is not from heaven, will not avail in our salvation. The testimony of the Apostle James was that with God there is "no variableness." It is with the understanding of the unchangeability of God, and his laws given for the redemption of man that this compilation is made. As foundation texts of scriptures I here cite:—

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.—Ps. 19:7.

To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isa. 8:20 and was incorporated in the great preaching commission of our Lord:—

Baptism is a

SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINE,

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 28:19.

Again:—

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Mark 16:16

The language of the commission does not circumscribe the ordinance to either time or locality; its universal and divine character makes this ordinance of considerable importance to all those who desire to do the will of God, and obtain the crown and the palm, with eternal life. The high and holy nature of baptism is manifested in the following:—

He that sent me to baptize with water.—John 1:33.

This man confesses to his appointment from God to practice the rite. The Great Teacher said:—

If ye love me, keep my commandments.—John 14:15.

This is a plain test of our love for Christ. Now, as anciently, may people prove their confidence and love for saving truth, and of those of the present age it may be written:—

Then they that gladly received his word were baptized.—Acts 2:41.

Kind reader, to you I can say in relation to this ordinance in the language of the Bible:—

Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works.—James 2:18.

The foregoing Bible proofs must convince all careful readers of the

that the privileges of both the church militant and church triumphant may be obtained. God never requires of any of his children anything that is nonessential unto their salvation. In the case of Cornelius, a praying man, God sent "an angel" unto him, directing that Peter be sent for, and the words of the angel were:—

He shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.—Acts 10:6.

And when the apostle came and learned what had transpired in the house of Cornelius, he at once "opened his mouth" and preached the truth to all present, and closed the sermon with:—

And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.—Acts 10:48.

Stronger is the proof of the necessity of baptism in the act of Christ:—

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him.—Matt. 3:13–15.

Here is the exhibition of that child-like submission and obedience that was so characteristic of the Son of God, for his affirmation was:—

For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.—John 6:38.

The deduction seems clear that Christ understood that it was his Father's will that he should comply with the ordinance of baptism, and in so doing "fulfill all righteousness."

Reader, let me ask you: If it was a duty imposed on our Savior to submit to baptism, how do you expect to enter the "holy city, New Jerusalem," and have a right to the "tree of life," if you refuse or neglect the means God hath given that "all righteousness" be fulfilled? Can we expect to be more favored than was the "Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus"? No! and for that reason it would be well for all to give heed to the counsel and advice of our "advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous" (1 John 2:1). Hear what he says:—

Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.—Matt. 16:24.

Let none set up in their heart an idol of worldly wisdom or pride that would treat lightly the ordinance of baptism. Our companionship with Christ and God depend on our following their word:—

If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor.—John 12:26.

Let not thy lips say, I "follow him," while your actions speak contrariwise. Anciently, one evening a wise man came to Jesus saying: "We know that thou art a teacher come from God." Jesus in the conversation said:—

I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3:5.

This most assuredly teaches of the new birth, and the elements thereunto are: first, "water;" and second, the "Spirit;" and the word of God teaches that the Spirit is obtained after immersion. Paul inquired of the "certain disciples":—

Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?—Acts 19:2.

After some explanation to these people, "about twelve" men were baptized, and afterward received the "Holy Ghost."

I next present some evidence as to who are proper

SUBJECTS FOR BAPTISM.

The reason for so doing lies in the fact that a large majority of professors of religion, at the present time, never consented and have no remembrance of the act called their baptism, which is both unreasonable and unscriptural.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Faith and repentance—which are also principles of the doctrine of Christ—must always precede the act of baptism. To constitute a true baptism, the following is required.

1. An intelligent candidate who shall comport with the following:—

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.—D. C. 17:7.

2. Water sufficient in which to immerse the whole body of the subject.

3. A God-appointed and duly ordained minister to officiate. Calvin says:—

Because Christ requires teaching before baptizing, and will have believers only admitted to baptism, baptism does not seem to be rightly administered, except faith precede.—Poed. Exam., vol. 2, p. 272.

Mosheim, writing of the first century, says:—

In the earliest times of the church, all who professed firmly to believe that Jesus was the only Redeemer of the world, and who, in consequence of this profession, promised to live in a manner conformable to the purity of his holy religion, were immediately received among the disciples of Christ. This was all the preparation for baptism then required.—Part 2, chapter 3, verse 5.

He writes in the same verse:—

Then none were admitted to baptism, but such as had been previously instructed in the principal points of Christianity, and had also given satisfactory proofs of pious dispositions, and upright intentions.—Ibid.

In harmony with the above is the statement found in the "First Apology for the Christians, to the Emperor Antonius Pius," by Justin Martyr, who said:—

As many as are persuaded and believe that what we teach and say is true, and undertake to live accordingly, are brought by us where there is water, and are regenerated in the same manner that we were ourselves regenerated.—Chapter 61.

By implication and our knowledge of the order of the gospel, we are led to the conclusion that Cornelius was "instructed in the principal points" of the doctrine of Christ before Peter "commanded" him to be baptized; therefore it is not strange—

When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.—Acts 11:18.

Repentance follows faith, and goes before baptism. This will explain the action of John in sending away the "Pharisees and Sadducees" from his baptism,—they gave no evidence of faith, and were lacking the proof of true repentance, hence he said to them:—

Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance.—Matt. 3:8.

These, unlike Cornelius and his household, had not been "instructed," and were therefore not proper subjects for baptism. Belief precedes baptism in Mark 16:16, and the want of belief brings condemnation. The minister that instructed the people of Samaria was sound in the doctrine of Christ, for it is written:—

When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.—Acts 8:12.

Here we have manifested the true rule of action; people hearing and believing the truth and then complying with its requirements. Guided by the Holy Spirit, Philip preached unto the eunuch, and when the latter asked for baptism,—

Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.—Acts 8:37.

No one can doubt that the eunuch was a properly prepared subject for the ordinance of baptism. Next comes the conversion and baptism of the prison keeper, who asked:—

Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway.—Acts 16:30–33.

This man, with his household, at midnight, heard the "word" preached, and they rejoiced, as does every one who loveth righteousness, for they believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, and were baptized. Without doubt Paul taught as he received the gospel; and in explanation he said:—

Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision: but shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.—Acts 26:19, 20.

The relationship of repentance and baptism is fixed and sealed in the statement of Peter on Pentecost day, when he said unto them:—

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ.—Acts 2:38.

At the beginning of his preaching the Savior said:—

Repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1:15.

Repentance, as well as baptism is a factor in the gospel, and the object of believing the gospel is the inspiring hope of improving the spiritual condition here, and to be entitled to the full fruition of rest, peace, and glory in the unending hereafter.

I close this part of the subject with an extract from Alexander Campbell. He writes:—

So that, in the Four Gospels, and in the Acts of the Apostles, reaching down to the year of our Lord 63, in which we have the accounts of many myriads of converts, comprising Jews, Samaritans, and Gentiles, we have no example of the baptism of any other than believing and professing persons. May we not, then, say with the utmost assurance, that, so far as all sacred history deposes, there is not any evidence whatever that a single infant or non-professing person had been admitted to baptism during the lives of the Apostles?—Christian Baptism, p. 234.

It would be difficult for a careful reader of the Bible to arrive at a different conclusion.

Having ascertained who are proper subjects for baptism, the next consideration will be the MODE OF BAPTISM.

Perhaps no item of ecclesiastical economy has been so fruitful of controversy as the mode of baptism; and no wonder, for men of marked ability have championed the issues upon the question, until churches and nations have taken sides, and adopted or sanctioned modes. The authorities are divided and the common people are distracted, resulting in some thinking that baptism is not essential unto salvation, while others are of the opinion that one mode is just as acceptable to God as another. That widely-read and wellnigh universally accepted church historian, Mosheim, says:—

There is no institution so pure and excellent which the corruption and folly of man will not in time alter for the worse, and load with additions foreign to its nature and original design. Such, in a particular manner, was the fate of Christianity. In this [second] century, many unnecessary rites and ceremonies were added to the Christian worship, the introduction of which was extremely offensive to wise and good men. These changes, while they destroyed the beautiful simplicity of the gospel, were naturally pleasing to the gross multitude.—Part 2, chap. 4, verse 1.

With the above we connect the prophecy of Isaiah, which reads:—

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.—Isa. 24:5.

This historical statement and Bible citation will prepare the reader to be on the lookout for, and calmly consider the attempted or accomplished change in the ordinance of baptism. During the times of John Baptist, Christ, and the apostles, applicants for baptism were immersed wherever sufficient water was found, and the only preparation was of the heart and mind, by being instructed in the principal points of the doctrine of Christ. Tertullian, A. D. 204, says:—

There is no difference, whether one is washed in a sea or in a pool, in a river or in a fountain, in a lake or in a channel; nor is there any difference between them whom John dipped in the Jordan and those whom Peter dipped in the Tiber.—Campbell's Christian Baptism, p. 182.

The violent opposition that Christianity met with in the first century gave an occasion to adopt some changes, and the first change permitted was but the entering wedge

for many other changes that followed in rapid succession. The first noted took place in the first century. Mosheim, in part 2, chapter 4, verse 9, says:—

The sacrament of baptism was administered in this century, without the public assemblies, in places appointed, and prepared for that purpose, and was performed by immersion of the whole body in the baptismal font. Those adult persons that desired to be baptized (among the collegiants) received the sacrament of baptism according to the ancient and primitive manner of celebrating that institution, ever by immersion.—Tracts for the People, pp. 3, 4

This account explains the change from the sea, pool, river, fountain, lake, or channel to the "font." Also the exclusion of the public, so that only the church members and candidates were permitted to be present. Dean Stanley tells us of another change of those early times:—

There was, as a general rule, but one baptistery to each city, and such baptisteries were apart from the churches. There was but one time of the year when the rite was administered—namely, between Easter and Pentecost. There was but one personage who could administer it—the presiding officer of the community, the Bishop. There was but one hour for the ceremony; it was midnight. The torches flared through the dark hall as the troops of converts flocked in. The baptistery consisted of an inner and an outer chamber. In the outer chamber stood the candidates for baptism, stripped to their shirts; and turning to the west as the region of sunset, they stretched forth their hands through the dimly lit church, as in a defiant attitude toward the Evil Spirit of Darkness, and speaking to him by name: "I renounce thee, Satan, and all thy works, and all thy pomp, and all thy service." Then they turned, like a regiment, facing right around to the east, and repeated, in a form more or less long, the belief in the Father, the Son, and the Spirit, which has grown up into the Apostles' Creed in the West, and the Nicene Creed in the East. They then advanced into the inner chamber. Before them yawned the deep pool or reservoir, and standing by the deacon, or the deaconess, as the case might be, to arrange that all should be done with decency, the whole troop undressed completely as if for a bath, and stood up, naked, before the Bishop, who put to each the questions, to which the answer was returned in a loud and distinct voice, as of those who knew what they had undertaken. —Dean Stanley on Baptism, pp 5, 6.

After reading the foregoing it must appear clear that more attention was given to the ceremony and preparation of the person than to instruct the mind and abide in the simplicity of the ordinance. This was nothing strange when we consider that:—

The public teachers and instructors of the people degenerated sadly from the apostolic character. They seemed to aim at nothing else than to sink the multitude into the most opprobrious ignorance and superstition, to efface from their minds all sense of the beauty and excellence of genuine piety, and to substitute, in the place of religious principles, a blind veneration for the clergy, and a stupid zeal for a senseless round of ridiculous rites and ceremonies. This, perhaps, will appear less surprising, when we consider that the "blind led the blind;" for the public ministers and teachers of religion were, for the most part, grossly ignorant.—Mosheim, cent. 6, part 2, chap. 3, verse 1.

Sad indeed becomes the heart when examining the havoc wrought during the dark ages, when the divine and pure principles of the gospel became humanized by the admixture of anti-Christian ceremonies. We will let in a little more light, by running up the curtain of history. Eusebius says:—

The first law for sprinkling obtained in the following manner: Pope Stephen II., being driven from Rome by Adolphus, king of the Lombards, in 753, fled to Pepin, who, a short time before, had usurped the crown of France. Whilst he remained there, the monks of Cressy, in Brittany, consulted him whether, in case of necessity, baptism poured on the head would be lawful. Stephen replied that it would. But though the truth of this fact be allowed—which, however, some Catholics deny—yet pouring, or sprinkling was admitted only in case of necessity. It was not till the year 1311 that the legislature, in a council held at Ravenna, declared immersion or sprinkling to be indifferent. In Scotland, however, sprinkling was never practiced in ordinary cases till after the Reformation, (about the middle of the sixteenth century.) From Scotland it made its way into England in the reign of Elizabeth, but was not authorized in the established church.—Tracts for the People, p. 52.

Thus we have traced the change from immersion to sprinkling, from Rome to France, thence to Scotland, and to England, where it was not favorably received, if we are to judge from the following by John Wesley:—

Mary Welch, aged eleven days, was baptized according to the custom of the first church, and the rule of the Church of England, by immersion The child was ill then, but recovered from that hour. . . . I was asked to baptize a child of Mr. Parker's, second bailiff of Savannah; but Mrs. Parker told me, "Neither Mr. P. nor I will consent to its being dipped." I answered, "If you certify that your child is weak, it will suffice (the rubric says) to pour water upon it." She replied, "Nay, the child is not weak, but I am resolved it shall not be dipped." This argument I could not refute; so I went home, and the child was baptized by another person.—Tracts for the People, p. 19.

Mr. Wesley was far more tenacious, conscientious, in regard to the original mode of baptism than many of his professed followers are.

Dean Stanley, one of the ablest churchmen of the present age, writing upon the changes in baptism, says:—

We now pass to the changes in the form itself. For the first thirteen centuries the almost universal practice of Baptism was that of which we read in the New Testament, and which is the very meaning of the word "baptize" (it is also the meaning of the word taufen "dip")—that those who were baptized were plunged, submerged, immersed into the water. That practice is still as we have seen, continued in Eastern Churches. In the Western Church it still lingers amongst Roman Catholics in the solitary instance of the cathedral of Milan, amongst Protestants in the austere sect of the Baptists. It lasted long into the Middle Ages. Even the Icelanders, who at first shrank from the water of their freezing lakes, were reconciled when they found that they could use the warm water of the Geysers. And the cold climate of Russia has not been found an obstacle to its continuance throughout that vast empire. Even in the Church of England it is still observed in theory. Elizabeth and Edward the Sixth were both immersed. The rubric in the Public Baptism for Infants enjoins that, unless for special cases, they are to be dipped, not sprinkled. But in practice it gave way since the beginning of the seventeenth century. With the few exceptions just mentioned, the whole of the Western Churches have now substituted for the ancient bath the ceremony of sprinkling a few drops of water on the face. The reason of the change is obvious. The practice of immersion, apostolic and primitive as it was, was peculiarly suitable to the Southern and Eastern countries for which it was designed, and particularly unsuitable to the tastes, the convenience, and the feelings of the countries of the North and West. Not by any decree of Council or Parliament, but by the general sentiment of Christian liberty, this great change was effected. Not beginning till the thirteenth century, it has gradually driven the ancient Catholic usage out of the whole of Europe. There is no one who would now wish to go back to the old practice. It had no doubt the sanction of the Apostles and of their Master. It had the sanction of the venerable Churches of the early ages, and of the sacred countries of the East. Baptism by sprinkling was rejected by the whole ancient church, (except in the rare case of deathbeds or extreme necessity,) as no baptism at all. Almost the first exception was the heretic Novatian. It still has the sanction of the powerful religious community which numbers amongst its members such noble characters as John Bunyan, Robert Hall, and Havelock. In a version of the Bible which the Baptist Church has compiled for its own use in America, where it excels in numbers all but the Methodists, it is thought necessary, and on philological grounds it is quite correct, to translate John the Baptist by John the Immerser. It has even been defended on sanitary grounds. Sir John Floyer dated the prevalance of consumption to the discontinuance of baptism by immersion. But speaking generally, the Christian civilized world has decided against it. It is a striking example of the triumph of common sense and convenience over the bondage of form and custom. Perhaps no greater change has ever taken place in the outward form of Christian ceremony with such general agreement. It is a greater change even than that which the Roman Catholic Church has made in administering the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in the bread without the wine. For that was a change which did not affect the thing that was signified; whereas the change from immersion to sprinkling has set aside the larger part of the Apostlic language regarding Baptism, and has altered the very meaning of the word.—Dean Stanley on Baptism, pp. 21-23.

No more historical proof is needed to establish the fact that a great change has taken place in the ordinance of baptism. When the divine law in relation to the rite of baptism was proclaimed to the world, it was universal in its application unto all men. The word of Holy Writ is: "Teach all nations." "Go ye into all the world." "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." "To every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." But what if the word of the Lord shall come unto the people:—

Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.—Jer. 6: 16.

Dean Stanley, answering for the people, would say: "We will not walk therein." "We will not hearken."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"There is no one who would now wish to go back to the old practice." Wonderful how Jeremiah prophesied of religious conditions of the present time. The following scriptures indicate the true mode or action of baptism. Speaking of the people who accepted the gospel under the preaching of John:—

And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.—Matt. 3: 6.

It was in the river Jordan that John did this baptizing, a fit place to immerse those people.

And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water.—Matt. 3: 16.

Think of it, reader; the Son of God was in the river Jordan when he received baptism.

Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

Fathers! Mothers!! and all Ministers!!! Think of this beautiful simile employed by Christ to typify the ordinance of baptism. The coming out of the water into the air, is as complete a change of environment of element as takes place at time of birth.

And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.—John 3: 23.

Had sprinkling been the rule of practice, there would have been no necessity for "much water."

And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip.—Acts 8: 38, 39.

In this instance both the minister and the candidate went "down into" and "came up out" of the water. This is perfectly natural in the action of immersion, but wholly unnecessary and inconsistent if sprinkling had been the rule or practice.

Another type is employed by Paul as follows:—

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin.—Rom. 6: 3-7.

Archbishop Tillotson says:—

Anciently, those who were baptized were immersed and buried in the water, to represent their death to sin; and then did rise up out of the water, to signify their entrance upon a new life. And to these customs the apostle alludes, Romans 6: 2-5.—Christian Baptism, by Campbell, p. 162.

Bishop Nicholson says:—

In the grave with Christ we went not; for our bodies were not, could not be buried with his; but in baptism, by a kind of analogy or resemblance, while our bodies are under the water, we may be said to be buried with him.—Ibid., p. 163.

The world-known John Wesley says:—

Buried with him—alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion.—Ibid., p. 163.

The able lawyer and great apostle to the Gentiles wrote:—

Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead.—Col. 2: 12.

Say, pilgrim to eternity and candidate for eternal life, can you expect to wave the palm and wear the crown in the kingdom of our God and his Christ, if you neglect or refuse to be buried in baptism with him? Archbishop Secker says:—

Burying, as it were, the person baptized in the water, and raising him out again, without question, was anciently the more usual method; on account of which St. Paul speaks of baptism as representing both the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and what is grounded on them,—our being dead and buried to sin, and our rising again to walk in newness of life.—Christian Baptism, by Campbell, p. 162.

Whitby says:—

It being so expressly declared here, Romans 6: 4, and Colossians 2: 12, that we are buried with Christ in baptism, by being buried under water; and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death, by dying to sin, being taken hence; and this immersion being religiously observed by all Christians for thirteen centuries, and approved by our church, and the change of it into sprinkling, even without any allowance from the author of this institution, or any license from any council of the church, being that which the Romanist still urges to justify his refusal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wished that this custom might be again of general use, and aspersion only permitted, as of old, in case of the clinici, or in present danger of death.—Ibid., p. 163.

Whitby seems anxious to have immersion restored, while Stanley thinks no one would desire to return to the ancient practice.

On several separate scriptural texts on this subject, Wall says:—

As to the manner of baptism then generally used, the texts produced by every one that speaks of these matters, John 3: 23, Mark 1: 5, Acts 8: 38, are undeniable proofs that the baptized person went ordinarily into the water, and sometimes the baptist too. We should not know from these accounts whether the whole body of the baptized was put under water, head and all, were it not for the two later proofs, which seem to me to PUT IT OUT OF QUESTION: One, that St. Paul does twice, in an allusive way of speaking, call baptism a burial; the other, the customs of the Christians, in the near succeeding times, which being more largely and particularly delivered in books, is known to have been generally, or ordinarily, a total immersion.—Ibid., p. 162.

of the word baptism, let the scholarly men of several denominations testify in an impartial manner, as to the meaning of the word in the early times, or primitive church.

John Milton answers:—

Under the gospel, the first of the sacraments, so-called, is baptism, wherein the bodies of believers, who engage themselves to pureness of life, are immersed into the water.—Tracts for the People, p. 60.

Milton was a Baptist; but the next witness was a Quaker, and they do not believe in ordinances.

2. Robert Barclay:—

The Greek word baptizo signifies immergo, that is, to plunge, and dip in; and that was the proper use of water baptism among the Jews, and also by John and the primitive Christians who used it.—Ibid, p. 61.

The next witness was a Universalist preacher and scholar.

3. Samuel Scarlet:—

Tell us how he rendered baptizo, in his version of the New Testament, published in London, 1796? Answer, "immerse."—Ibid p. 62.

4. Dr. Tholuck, Professor of Theology in the University of Halle, of the Lutheran Church, gives this exegesis of Romans 6: 4, "buried by baptism:"—

For explanation of this figurative description of the baptismal rite, it is necessary to call the attention to the well-known circumstance, that, in the early days of the church, persons when baptized were first plunged below, and then risen above, the water; to which practice, according to the direction of the Apostle, the early Christians gave a symbolical import.—Ibid., p. 62.

5. Rev. Lyman Colman, of the Presbyterian Church:—

Immersion or dipping. In the primitive church this was undeniably the common mode of baptism.—Ibid., p. 68.

This is valuable testimony coming from one who believes in sprinkling. Here is another of equal value, and for the same reason.

6. Moses Stewart, of the Congregational Church:—

It is, says Agusti, a thing made out; namely, the ancient practice of immersion. So indeed all the writers who have thoroughly investigated the subject conclude. I know of no usage of ancient times which seems to be more clearly and certainly made out. I cannot see how it is possible for any candid man who examines the subject to deny this.—Ibid., p. 68.

Amen to the testimony of Mr. Stewart.

Rev. E. T. Hiscox, D. D., in his "Star Book on Christian Baptism," gives the following authorities, who all agree and unite that the meaning of baptizo is to immerse: Scapula, Schleusner, Schrevelius, Parkhurst, Greenfield, Green, Donnegan, Robinson, Liddell, Scott, Stevens, Alstidius, Passow, Schoettgen, Stockius, Stourdza, Sophocles, Anthon, Stuart, Rosenmuller, Wetstein, Leigh, Turretin, Beza, Calvin, Witsius, Luther, Vossius, Wilson, and Campbell. Mr. Hiscox, gives the words of each of these witnesses and cites the books from which he copies, and then writes thus:—

Very many other competent scholars and critics familiar with the Greek language might be cited to the same effect. Can there be any reasonable question that the true, indeed, the only proper meaning of baptizo, is to dip, to plunge, immerse, or bury in water —and that baptism can only be performed by burying the candidate in water?—Star Book on Christian Baptism, pp. 9-12.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

OBJECT OF BAPTISM.

Through the transgression of Eve and Adam in the garden of Eden, the whole race of mankind fell into the deplorable condition of—

Being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world.—Eph. 2: 12.

One of the enabling acts by which amnesty is granted unto all those returning to their allegiance to the government of God, is this provision:—

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.—Gal. 3: 27.

It is impossible to put on Christ and abide in sin; hence, one of the objects of baptism is that the individual may obtain a pardon of sin, "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (Mark 1 : 1) contained this provision of pardon:—

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1: 4.

The scheme of salvation, and the means of forgiveness of sin, is outlined in the words:—

Wash ye, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Isa. 1: 16-20.

The foregoing may be interpreted and understood by the following:—

How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him.—Heb. 2: 3.

The beginning of the gospel was preached by John.

And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Luke 3: 3.

The responsibility placed upon the apostles by the Master was:—

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.—Matt. 28: 20.

In compliance with these instructions the apostles in opening their gospel campaign to evangelize, that there might be "added to the church daily such as should be saved," taught, when inquired of:—

Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—Acts 2: 37, 38.

The answer given by Peter is as true now, and as binding upon those seeking to serve God, as the day it was uttered. Ananias had the same understanding of what was required of those coming into the church, and the object of baptism, for he said to Saul of Tarsus:—

And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22: 16.

If the sin of an individual is washed away, pardon surely has taken place. Paul in speaking of what Christ did for the church, said:—

That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word.—Eph. 5: 26

The word of the gospel is, that people should repent and be baptized; upon their so doing, the promise is made that they shall obtain a forgiveness or remission of sin. Again, in explaining the folly and sin of those in the world, and how the change of heart or life is accomplished, we are told:—

Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost.—Titus 3: 5.

Baptism is not a work of righteousness upon our part, but quite frequently a work of humiliation and pardon of sin granted to us through the immersion of our person, is by the "mercy" of God, and thereby works for us a salvation in the kingdom of God. For indeed it is to us a "regeneration," going down, as we do, into the water in the likeness or nature of the "first Adam" to "die unto sin."

Often those who oppose the ordinance of baptism take refuge in the statement: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin." But those who make the claim of pardon fail to inform the inquirer as to the mode or method of the application of the blood. Man does not possess the ability to administer the blood of Christ to his fellow man; neither can man give to his fellow the Holy Spirit, and yet we are told,—

There are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one.—1 John 5: 8.

All must concede that it is God that grants the pardon of sin to the individual, and the pardon takes place at the abode or throne of God. Christ has left the earth and is "set down with my Father in his throne," (Rev. 3: 21). In this connection read:—

For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments.—1 John 5: 3.

Baptism is a commandment. Jesus further said:—

If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.—John 14: 23.

It would not be a very great stretch of either faith or imagination to accept the thought that the blood of Christ meets us, and works our pardon in our baptism. Notwithstanding we go down into the watery grave in the nature of the "First Adam," we arise—are resurrected, in the life or nature of the "Second Adam," for we were buried with Christ in baptism:—

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.—2 Cor. 5: 17.

The church is composed of the aggregation of individual members, and the "washing of regeneration" must apply to the individual, so that each member separately obtaining a pardon of sin, the church fills the description:

That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.—Eph 5: 27

This grand result can only be accomplished when the individual membership, for themselves, obtain and retain a remission of their sins. Men of wide experience and learning express themselves freely that baptism is for the remission of sin. Martin Luther, the great Reformer, says:—

This is not done by changing of a garment, or by any laws or works, but by a new birth, and by the renewing of the inward man, which is done in baptism, as Paul saith, "All ye that are baptized have put on Christ." Also, "According to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost" (Titus 3: 5). For besides that they who are baptized are regenerated and renewed by the Holy Ghost to a heavenly righteousness and to eternal life, there riseth in them also a new flame; there riseth in them new and holy affections, as the fear of God, true faith, and assured hopes, etc. There beginneth in them also a new will, and this is to put on Christ truly and according to the gospel. Therefore, the righteousness of the law, or of our own works, is not given unto us in baptism; but Christ himself is our garment. Now Christ is no law, no law giver, no works, but a divine and an inestimable gift, whom God hath given unto us, that he might be our justifier, our Savior, and our Redeemer. Wherefore to be appareled with Christ according to the gospel, is not to be appareled with the law or with works, but with an incomparable gift; that is, with remission of sins, righteousness, peace, consolation, joy of spirit, salvation, life, and Christ himself.—Luther on Galatians: Phili. 1801, 8 vo., p. 302.

Of equal worth is testimony of John Calvin, as follows, on the object of baptism:—

From baptism our faith derives three advantages, which require to be distinctly considered. The first is, that it is proposed to us by the Lord as a symbol and token of our purification; or, to express my meaning more fully, it resembles a legal instrument properly attested, by which he assures us that all our sins are cancelled, effaced, and obliterated, so that they will never appear in his sight, or come into his remembrance, or be imputed to us. For he commands all who believe, to be baptized for the remission of their sins. Therefore, those who have imagined that baptism is nothing more than a mark or sign by which we profess our religion before men, as soldiers wear the insignia of their sovereign as a mark of their profession, have not considered that which was the principal thing in baptism; which is, that we ought to receive it with this promise, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." Mark 16: 16.—Christian Baptism, by Campbell, p. 261.

Timothy Dwight, president of Yale College, says:—

To be born of water here means baptism, and in my view it is as necessary to our admission into the visible church, as to be born of the Spirit is to our admission into the invisible kingdom. It is to be observed, that he who understands the authority of this institution, and refuses to obey it, will never enter into either the visible or the invisible kingdom.—Ibid., p. 263

Remission of sins by baptism is conceded by these wise men, as they read the word of God.

BAPTISM OF ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Perhaps the following account taken from the Millennial Harbinger, vol. 5, pp. 280–283, and written by Alexander Campbell himself, might be of interest and use to some of the brethren. I have in my possession volumes 4 and 5, published in 1847 and 1848, respectively. Mr. Campbell was proprietor and conductor of the paper.

Under the heading, "Anecdotes, Incidents, and facts connected with the origin and progress of the current reformation, some of which have never been before published," I find the following:—

I will go no farther back than my arrival in the United States in 1809, and note a few matters very trivial in appearance, but important in their bearing and results.

The first proof sheet I ever read was a form of my father's DECLARATION AND ADDRESS, in press in Washington, Pennsylvania, on my arrival there in October, 1809. There were in it the following sentences: "Nothing ought not to be received into the faith or worship of the church, or be made a term of communion amongst Christians, that is not as old as the New Testament. Nor ought anything to be admitted as of divine obligation, in the church constitution and management, but what is expressly enjoined by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ and his Apostles upon the New Testament church; EITHER IN EXPRESS TERMS OR BY APPROVED PRECEDENT. . . .

While reasoning with myself and others on these matters, I accidentally fell in with Doctor Riddle of the Presbyterian Union church, and introduced the matter to him. "Sir," said he, "these words, however plausible in appearance, are not sound. For if you follow these out you must become a Baptist."

"Why, sir," said I, "is there, in the Scriptures, no express precept for, nor precedent of infant baptism?"

"Not one sir," responded the Doctor.

I was startled, and mortified that I could not produce one. . . .

And entering into conversation with my father on the subject, he admitted there was neither express terms nor precedent. But, strange to tell, he took the ground that once in the church, and a participant of the Lord's supper, we could not "unchurch or paganize ourselves;" put off Christ and then make a new profession, and commence again as would a heathen man and a publican. . . .

At length I told him, with great reluctance, I must dissent from all his reasonings upon that subject and be baptized. I now fully and conscientiously believed that I never had been baptized, and, consequently, I was then, in point of fact, an unbaptized person; and hence could not consistently preach a baptism to others, of which I had never been a subject myself.

His response was: "I have, then, no more to add. You must please yourself."

On leaving, in the morning, he asked me when, where and by whom I intended to be immersed. As to the place, I preferred to be baptized near home, among those who were accustomed to my preaching; as to the time, just as soon as I could procure an acceptable Baptist minister. The nearest and, indeed, the only one known to me was Elder Matthias Luse, living some thirty miles from my residence. I promised to let my father know the time and place, as soon as I obtained the consent of Elder Luse.

Immediately Mr. Campbell went to visit Elder Luse, and after having made known his errand and reasoned some with him on the subject, persuading the elder to dispense with the regular formula and ceremonies observed by Baptists in this case, that gentleman asked Mr. Campbell:—

"Where do you desire to be baptized?"

"In Buffalo Creek, on which I live, and on which I am accustomed to preach. My Presbyterian wife," I added, "and, perhaps, some others will accompany me."

On the day appointed Elder Henry Spears, from the Monongahela, and Matthias Luse, according to promise, met us at the day appointed. It was the 12th of June, 1812, a beautiful day, a large and attentive concourse was present, with Elder David Jones of Eastern Pennsylvania. My father made an elaborate address on the occasion. I followed him with a statement of the reasons of the change of views, and vindicated the primitive institution of baptism, and the necessity of personal obedience.

To my great satisfaction my father, mother, and eldest sister, my wife and three other persons besides myself were that same day immersed into the faith of that great proposition on which the Lord himself said he would build his church. The next Lord's day some twenty others made a similar confession, and so the work progressed, until in a short time almost an hundred persons were immersed. This company, as far as I am yet informed, was the first community in the country that was immersed into that primitive, simple, and most significant confession of faith in the divine person and mission of the Lord Jesus Christ, without being brought before a church to answer certain doctrinal questions, or to give a history of all their feelings and emotions, in those days falsely called "Christian experience;" as if a man could have Christian experience before he was a Christian!

Italics are all Mr. Campbell's.

PETER ANDERSON.

INTERPRETATION OF DANIEL, SECOND CHAPTER.

The writer, who has himself been a close student of prophecy for the last half century, having observed in the Saints' Herald of May 16, 1900, a brief exposition of Daniel second chapter, agrees with the writer of the article that the mountain was no part of the metallic image. The question then to be answered right here must be, What and where is the mountain here spoken of?

In turning to the second chapter of Isaiah, I find it thus written:—

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.—Isaiah 2:2.

"The mountain of the Lord's house" I understand to be the kingdom of God upon earth, which is to be established in the top of the mountains or the kingdoms of this earth, and exalted above the hills or smaller powers. "And all nations flowing unto it," shows that it has reference to a time yet in the future.

And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.—Isaiah 2:3

This also has reference to a time in the future, when the law shall go forth out of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Isaiah 2:4.

This is also a prediction which remains to be fulfilled in the future. In reference to the stone kingdom, it is universally admitted that Nebuchadnezzar's image represented the kingdoms that were to govern our earth from that time down to the second coming of Christ. The first four parts of the image have had their accomplishment in the rise and fall of the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires, each of which has in its turn borne rule over the leading nations of this earth. We are now in the feet of Nebuchnezzar's image, a time of comparative peace and safety among the powers which formerly comprised the Roman empire. It is said that the empire was never equally divided into exactly five kingdoms on each division, but it is distinctly shown in Revelation 17:12 that there will be but ten kings who are to make war with the Lamb at his coming. These ten kings are identical with the ten toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image; and the stone which falls upon them represents Christ at his coming, when the kingdoms of this world are to be destroyed by him and utterly done away with as is here compared to the chaff of the summer threshing floors, which is to be carried away by the winds. (Dan. 2:35.) The stone is here represented as becoming a great mountain and filling the whole earth, showing conclusively that the kingdom of Christ must eventually prevail and cover the whole earth, during the first one thousand years, of which Satan is to be chained and shut up in the bottomless pit (see Revelations 20:3), after which he must be loosed for a little season. He then goes forth to deceive the nations, and to gather them together to battle.

And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the Saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.—Rev. 22:9, 10.

In short, the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image are not yet developed, as they are to be the last ten kings who are to govern the ten Roman states.

These shall make war with the Lamb [Christ at his coming] and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings.—Rev. 17: 14. I. S. H.

Editors Herald:—Received account of Herald subscription just previous to the Galveston flood. Will see to same as soon as able. Wife and I and three children went down in the old Col. Baker residence on the corner of Thirty-third street and Avenue Q, with fifty-two in number, counseling the people to trust in the power of God; and we were saved, only five of our number being lost. Quite an ordeal, I tell you! And right here, for the benefit of Bro. James W. Bryan, of Texas, and all Saints and friends interested in my welfare, I will say, I and family are at 2002 So 1th Flores street, San Antonio, penniless but not friendless. Expect to locate here. Please give this space, as we have been reported lost in the flood. As ever, MILLERSBURG, Ill., Sept. 25.

Editors Herald:—The two days' services held here recently were pronounced a success by all those who attended. I arrived here on Friday evening, and went with others to the beautiful little church where we found quite an audience mostly of Saints eager for the success of the meetings ready to begin. Elder J. L. Terry, the branch president, invited me to preach, but I felt that it would be perhaps more beneficial for us all to engage in a social service, and we noted marked evidences of increasing spirituality and devotion to the cause of Christ, many earnest prayers being offered for the success of the services. Brn. Frank A. Russell and John W. Adams, of the missionary force, were in evidence, as well as a host of local brethren from this vicinity, who did all they could to contribute to the success of the meetings. The preaching was begun on Saturday afternoon, at 2:30, Teacher William Allen, of New Windsor, being the speaker.

After this service we adjourned to the Edwards creek, where Elder Russell inducted three souls by baptism into the earthly kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. At 7:30 we met for confirmation services, in which we enjoyed the Spirit's presence, after which the writer spoke from the words, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man."

Prayer and sacrament services at 9 a. m., Sunday morning, in charge of Brn. Terry and Adams. At 10:45, preaching by Elder Russell, assisted by J. W. Bean. Both of these brethren took occasion to mention in prayer, as also in preaching, the improved condition of the building, its clean, bright appearance and new alcove addition which the Saints here have annexed and turned the seats and pulpit right about face, which adds wonderfully to its appearance. We felt indeed that the building was thus consecrated anew to the service of God.

At 2:30 Bro. Adams discoursed with good liberty, assisted by J. M. Keck. At night Bro. Russell again preached, assisted by Bro. W. P. Terry.

Thus ended a very profitable gathering of the Saints, and all seemed to be refreshed and renewed in determination to strive onward and upward in the building up of the kingdom of God. May we day by day renew our desires and take courage to press on in the conflict until we gain the crown; and that the Lord may now move Zion to diligence and duty is the prayer of your brother in Christ, WILL E. LA RUE.

ST. LOUIS, Missouri, Sept. 25.

Editors Herald:—The church in St. Louis feels almost overwhelmed by the crushing blow that has fallen upon us. Our beloved president, John C. Hitchcock, has been called to the world beyond, and the first feeling of unbelief, a feeling that the sorrowful fact could not possibly be true, has been followed by anguish of heart and an almost unbearable sense of oppression. Yet with it all such a blessed feeling of sympathy and love has drawn us together, for grief is a bond that unites more strongly than anything else.

Of his life, to know him was to feel that it was one of purity, of self-denial, of tireless energy in working for all that is good and noble. The example he gave us by living his belief so thoroughly speaks to us even more eloquently than did the sermons which were wont to encourage and inspire us. This example will always remain in our minds, urging us on to ambitions of the noblest sort.

He was born on December 19, 1867, at Ancona, Livingstone county, Illinois; and the never-to-be-forgotten night when he passed away from us was Friday, September 21, of this present year, 1900, at his home in this city. Between those dates how much to tell! and how impossible to tell it all in words! He united with the church in 1888, on February 5, at Lamoni, Iowa, and came to St. Louis about nine years ago. We are so thankful for the privilege of having known him during these years.

Seven years ago, when the Religio, which has spread so well, was first thought of and begun, he was one of its originators, being its first general secretary, the office he still held at the time of his death. It will serve to show how great was the growth he helped to accomplish in the society, and also his own ceaseless labors in that direction, to say that in those seven years this young people's work had grown to such size and importance that during his last term he sent out 1,628 letters, and 160 postal cards, besides Constitution and By-Laws, leaflets of instructions, sample programs, and the like.

He was ordained a teacher in the church on November 5, 1893; a priest on December 13, 1896, and an elder on March 13, 1898, all at St. Louis, Missouri. Two years ago he was chosen as presiding elder of our church, and not long past was superintendent of our Sunday school, perhaps the most thorough and earnest we ever had. All of this, too, while he was filling a rather important position as one of the most trusted employees of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas railway, and was in daily attendance at his work there. To think of it all is to be filled with wonder at his determination, his strength of mind and spirit.

And now, just as we have obtained, with him at the lead and mainly through his efforts, a beautiful rock church, so much larger and better equipped than the little chapel we used to have, he is taken from us, and at first we feel as though our rejoicing is all turned to bitterness. On the first Sunday in the new church he was so pleased and happy; on the second he was feeling ill, but preached in the morning and evening notwithstanding, as our missionary elder was away; on the third Sunday he was not able to be out; and on the fourth Sunday, sorrowful congregations with bowed heads met throughout the day, and wandered between the services to his home, to gaze in a sort of dazed wonder at his face, so beautiful and peaceful in its last sleep.

The next day, Monday, September 24, the funeral was conducted from the church which he obtained for us, and from which (Oh, the crushing irony of the contrast!) he was the first to be carried to rest. The sermon by Elder Arthur Allen was a touching as well as comforting one. It included the dates we have given in his life, and also the fact that on January 9, 1895, he was married to Etta M. Izatt. A son blessed this union, who, with his mother, survives him.

Besides his own consoling words, the preacher read us the poem, "There is No Death," which is said to have been our dear brother's favorite poem, and which therefore seems to come as a blessed message from his lips. The church was full, as he would so love to see it; the scene was one of impressive and solemn majesty: The interior draped with black, the awe-struck crowd, the minister whose voice would falter even as he spoke words of cheer, the flower-laden casket, and himself the most peaceful and most majestic figure of all.

And now, since first the sense of his departure was borne in on our unwilling and unbelieving hearts, the question uppermost in our minds has been, "The Religio! the Sunday school! the church!—what will they do without him?" Yet we feel that we must not give up, we know that he would not wish it so if he were here, that he does not wish it so. And thus there comes a strong determination to be brave, to be far more diligent than ever, and carry on the Master's work after the manner that he did, as nearly as possible.

Things that he said are so apt to come back to us now with renewed force, and there comes to me the remembrance of a sermon I once heard him preach, in which he spoke of the different degrees of glory, the celestial being the highest, and the one which aspiring souls would aim to reach. He described, too, a vision he had had, representing the beauties of heaven. The ending of that sermon clings in my mind—it was so impressive. The last words were: "As for me, I shall never be satisfied until I see the gates open, and hear the Great King say to me, 'Enter, into thy celestial rest.'" Oh, we feel that he is sure of that entrance now, and so he is satisfied. And if he is satisfied, why should we mourn?

At another time he read in the pulpit that beautiful little poem called "Sometime." The words I cannot quote, but it expresses the thought that sometime the clouds of mystery and darkness will be swept away and we shall understand; and then, so the last stanza concludes, "I think that we shall say, 'God knew the best.'" How appropriate that is now and how comforting, when we are so puzzled in our grief as to what good reason there could be for his departure being so sudden and sorrowful. We pray that some enlightenment and comforting assurance may be given us, clinging to this hope that, even if not given soon, we shall know all "sometime."

I wonder if Whittier ever wrote anything prettier than those lines:—

"Alas for him who never sees
The sun shine through his cypress-trees!
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
That truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own."

It is true that we cannot lose him, we have not lost him, we who loved him as pastor, as friend, as brother. He is only waiting for us in those shining realms of glory he spoke about.

And so we hope that the spirit of love which has come to us and drawn us together, and also the resolve to strive to the utmost in the gospel cause, may never grow less than now; that our sorrow may be accompanied by peace instead of bitterness, but that that love and that resolve which are born of our sorrow may never alter, except to grow even stronger. Then we can hope to meet him ere long in that place of which it is written, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

Editors Herald:—After the General Conference the writer came immediately to his field of labor, in company with Bro. R. M. Maloney. After partaking of Bro. Butler's hospitality for a day or two, we proceeded to a place east of Okarche, to hold a two days' meeting which had been previously appointed, thence to Dewey county, the next Saturday and Sunday, for the same purpose, remaining until the reunion of August 3 to 10. Afterward we assisted Bro. R. W. Davis in holding a few meetings in the Christian church at Nordin, with fair attendance considering the excessive dust and the hot winds which were prevailing at that time.

We next moved to Pond Creek, near where the writer held six services, Bro. Davis being unable to do anything on account of his ill health, and also receiving a telegram of the death of his sister. Bro. Aylor came to my assistance one week ago, and through the instrumentality of Bro. A. M. Crofford we are occupying in new ground with good interest so far. Expect to continue this week yet, then move east about nine miles to occupy in Sr. Stulls' neighborhood. She is an old time Saint. Was baptized when she was twelve years old; is now seventy-two, and quite active. Expect to return again to Bro. Cooper's, southeast of Pond Creek, to hold a series of meetings. So we have work planned ahead for some time.

I have been enjoying a good degree of the Spirit since coming here, and thereby have had good liberty in presenting the glad tidings to the people. Ever praying for the triumph of Zion, I am, Editors Herald:—As I feel somewhat disappointed this morning I will write to you and let my wants be known. I was expecting Bro. Jenkins. I just received a letter from him and he did not say anything about coming, and is going to build him a house at Plainsville. Now what I want is some one who will stay here all winter. We have a large house with eight rooms, and we are alone. We have a free reading room, and a good supply of reading matter. Thanks to the donors.

A word to the missionary in charge. Cannot some one come here and help? I will keep an elder as long as he will stay, if it is till the April conference and longer. We live on Eighth street, No. 802, not far from the union depot; so please some one come soon, and come to stay if you can, for there is surely a great work to be done here by some one.

September 23.

Editors Herald:—This afternoon dark clouds hang heavy and thick around me. I feel that all is dark within and around me. I am called to pass through many trials from time to time, and I ask my dear brethren and sisters to remember me in their prayers that I may have strength to bear my trials with more patience, and that I may have more faith, so that when I go to call upon his holy name I may receive comfort and satisfaction. I am a sister young in years and in the work, yet I know this work is of God, for he has blessed me many times, and I know that he will not forsake me now if I but have faith in him.

O for a faith that will not shrink,
Tho' pressed by ev'ry foe,—
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe.

I often wish I had such faith as this. Soon after I came in the church I was at a little prayer meeting and my brothers and sisters were all bearing their testimonies. How I wished that I could rise and speak, if it were but a few words! I felt as though I would be blessed. All at once I felt as if a strong arm had clasped me about the waist and I was raised to my feet. Since I have always prayed for strength to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of this work, and pray and trust that the Spirit will rest upon the faithful, and that we may live to be bright and shining lights to those around us and be the means of helping others to see the light of the one blessed gospel, although at times the way seems very dark; yet we have one dear Friend in whom we can trust, and the nearer we draw to him the nearer he will draw to us, and that to bless.

Ever praying for God's people,
A YOUNG SISTER.

GATEWOOD, Mo., Sept. 22.

Editors Herald:—Priest George W. Beebe and the writer have been laboring in Ripley county for some four weeks. While holding a series of meetings at Gatewood, Bro. George took the chills, and was quite sick for a few days; but by the blessing of God in prayer and the use of that which wisdom directed, he is now well. While preaching in the Christian church at Gatewood, I was challenged to debate. I accepted, and so we had a debate on church propositions, which lasted for four days. We did not have a large crowd out to hear. We are all very well satisfied with the results of the debate.

Would love to see more letters from the South Missouri district. Brethren and sisters in Christ, let us not become weary in well-doing. We should not boast, but we should be meek and humble, watchful, and prayerful always, and truly we shall be blessed. I praise God for his goodness to us in this mission, and trust we shall be wise servants and do much good while here.

DURAND, Mich., Sept. 23.

Editors Herald:—For some cause the Pastor of the Baptist church of this place has been making an onslaught on the Latter Day Saints, making no distinction between the Brighamites and the Reorganization. I presume it is because we have one family in this city trying to hold up the true gospel. They have been here several years. Bro. Carpenter and family have ever endeavored to carry the truth with them, and are noble workers. There being no branch here, they usually go to the Baptist church. Sr. Carpenter has taught the Bible class for several years. Was relieved of her position by the pastor taking her place. He then commenced a tirade of abuse in his sermons. I just happened to drop in here and purpose to go and hear him tomorrow morning. It seems that the W. C. T. U. have been circulating a book among its members called, "The False Star." It purports to be an expose of Mormonism. It has raised quite a breeze here. I am after them in the name of the Lord.

There are several places in this part of the district that are almost ripe for work. Many are becoming dissatisfied with their churches, and I think the time is not far distant when there will be a reaction.

WETUMKA, I. T., Sept. 23.

Editors Herald:—I have been here, about ten miles from Wetumka, I. T., for the last seven years. Myself and wife, and Bro. T. N. Smith and wife and daughter who came here last fall, are the only members here; but we never had any preaching until the first of this month, when Bro. W. H. Smart came and preached a week, and the people are well pleased with it, so far as we have heard. I think there can be some good done here if the effort of Bro. Smart is properly followed up. We have a railroad running through Wetumka now, and if any of the elders are passing through and can stop with us a few days, please drop me a card, and we will meet you at our town and bring you out. As ever, your brother in gospel bonds.

NEWPORT, Mo., Sept. 24.

Editors Herald:—This is a lonely place without any Saints here. No elders have ever been here that I know of. I think it would be good for some elder to come and preach the pure gospel. There are some honest in heart here. Could get church or schoolhouse. Most of the people are Adventists. When they ask me what our church believes in, I tell them our doctrine. They say they never heard it preached. I ask the brothers and sisters to pray for me alone here with my family, that I may ever be faithful to the end. A sister in the Little Sioux branch, L. B. DAVISON.

CENTERVILLE, Iowa, Sept. 24.

Editors Herald:—I want to fill the promise I made to the Saints at the Stewartsville reunion, that is, to write after I get well again. I never so fully realized the truth of the 26th verse of the 12th chapter of 1 Corinthians as I did when I was sick at the reunion: "When one member suffers all the members suffer with him." Even our worthy president included; for he and a large number of others came to Bro. Dice's to see me before they left for home. That did me more good than medicine. By the good care of Sr. Dice and her noble daughter, Minnie, I was ready to start out Saturday morning; but they insisted on my staying over Sunday. As I had no appointments ahead I consented, and preached in their church in Stewartsville at eleven a. m. and 7:30 p. m., to good sized and very attentive congregations. I was blessed in presenting the word, and a number expressed themselves as being edified.

On Monday I started for Iowa. Got to Cameron in good time for the train north. With two hours to wait, left my grips in the Q baggage room, and went to Bro. J. C. Elvert's for dinner. Got back to depot in time for my train on the Rock Island, but my grips were locked in the Q. room, and the agent did not come till thirty minutes after my train had gone. Got my grips and went back to Bro. Elvert's to wait for next train. I can see the broad smile on Sr. Elvert's face yet when I told them I got left. The first thing she said was, "Now we will have preaching tonight." I said: "You get the crowd, and I will do the preaching."

They both started out, and at 7:30 Sr. Layton's two rooms were well filled with people, and in the nineteen years of my ministry I never met a congregation who seemed so eager to drink in the truth. God blessed me in telling them the old, old story. One lady of the Christian (Campbellite) faith of more than ordinary intelligence said she learned more of the plan of salvation in that one sermon than she ever knew before. (Not so flattering for the Christian Church.) She said that many things which were dark to her were explained clearly in that sermon. I believe she will yet come out of Babylon into the Church of Jesus Christ. I left Bro. and Sr. Elvert feeling happy, and I felt well paid for missing the train.

Tuesday I came here. I was impressed that I must stop here for a short time at least. When I got here, Bro. D. Archibald said he had been praying God to send some one to aid and strengthen them, and we concluded I was there in answer to his prayer. There is a fine band of Saints here, although some few are asleep, and I fear unless they wake up soon, will not have oil enough to light up.

I had the great pleasure to be in company of eight Angels some two or three nights while here, and we had a nice time sure. Bro. George, his noble little wife, four frolicsome little boys, and two nice little girls, are the family of Angels. May God bless them! There is good interest here. Some are investigating. Last night had a good crowd out, but the weather is so against us. Rain every night; so I will close tonight, and wait for a more convenient season. I will wend my way toward the New London conference. May our God bless the Saints and friends here for their kindness, for all seemed to vie with each other to do honor not only by word, but by deed also to the preacher. Bro. D. Archibald, president of the branch, seems to have the respect of the branch, and also of the outsiders, as have most all the Saints here.

Saints everywhere please remember me at the throne of grace. I am scarcely able to travel. If my work is not done, I would like to be healed of some or all of my afflictions.

GALIEN, Mich., Sept. 26.

Editors Herald:—As I was appointed by the last General Conference to labor in the Southern Michigan mission, I concluded to move my family from Netawaka, Kansas, into my field. I soon had the arrangements completed, and arrived with my family in Galien, May 1. We were met at the depot by Bro. E. A. Blakeslee, who conducted us to his uncle's, Bro. R. Alcott, who gave us a royal welcome, and to understand that we were to stay with them till our household goods arrived. The clear, running streams and tall, beautiful trees were greatly admired by my little girls, who were used to broad, rolling prairies, but not to such timber as we find in Michigan. We tried to adapt ourselves to our surroundings, and soon began our work as a missionary.

There has been but little preaching here for several years and as a result, the work is not in as flourishing a condition as might be desired; yet we have a number of faithful Saints in this region and we hope to see a revival of the work before long. The interest in Galien is on the increase, as we had the largest audience last Sunday evening we have had since we came. The missionaries in my charge have done nobly and they have been well sustained by the Saints. My labors have been mostly confined near home, but I expect to be able to open up a more extended campaign soon.

On Sunday, the 16th inst., a daughter came to enliven our home. Mother and child doing nicely, while I have been promoted to general manager of affairs. This afternoon, while I was warming some catnip, a knock was heard at the door and on opening it Bro. Charles Green came in carrying a large box covered with paper. He sat it down and handed me an envelope. On opening it I found a card containing these words: "Compliments of the Social." By examining the box, found that it contained a set of one hundred and fourteen dishes. We were not accustomed to such treatment, and to say we were surprised hardly expresses it. Well, we were glad Bro. Green had left the house before we found out what the box contained. We have three little girls learning to wash dishes, and this will account for the fact that we needed a supply. If my little girls develop the same spiritual qualities that have been manifested by their mother and grandmother (Sr. J. T. Davis), Elder Peak's home, some day, will not be a bad place for a young missionary to come, when looking for a companion. See!

We are glad to see such favorable reports of Graceland College. We believe it will succeed and become a power for good. I never was so much impressed with the fact that the rising generation needs a thorough education as now. The young man who fails to obtain an education makes a mistake, and a great one.

But, by the way, why not have a theological department? I am of the opinion that the time will come when Graceland will not be a "nonsectarian" school. It is just as important, yes, more important, to have an understanding of the gospel than the sciences. If I should ever send my girls to Graceland, nothing would suit me better than to have a course of study on the principles of the gospel. Let a boy or girl obtain an understanding of the gospel as it is taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, and when they go out into the world they will be prepared to teach and defend it. If the Lord should call some of the young men, who have thus been trained, they would be far better prepared to enter into the work of their calling because of having this training. This would not be educating men for the ministry as the world does, for they ordain the students, when they are able to pass a certain examination; while with the Saints we wait till God calls. It is just as pleasing to God for our children to obtain a knowledge of his word in the college as it is in the Sunday school, Religio, or meeting house. If some experienced elder had charge of a class in Graceland, I believe he would do more good than in the field, and it would create a greater interest among the Saints in favor of the college and greatly increase the number of students. But say some: "The world would not send their children." Possibly not; but this is not an institution of a worldly character. It is a Latter Day Saint College. For the especial benefit of Latter Day Saints. Why not arrange it so it will help Saints to the fullest extent. But this, as everything else, must be done in its time. "Be not in haste." But the school once established in Kirtland, Ohio, and the revelations and everything else point to the fact, to me, that our children should have the principles of the gospel taught to them in Graceland.

I am feeling well, physically and spiritually, with more reasons for loving this great work than ever before.

May God bless and prosper Zion.

W. E. PEAK.

WOODBINE, Iowa, Sept. 28.

Editors Herald:—Having rested from my northern tour in the Galland's Grove district, I went in company with Elder J. A. Donaldson to conference at Moorhead, Monona county. Elder Geo. M. Scott, assisted by Bro. Donaldson, presided. We had a fair representation of officers and members, and unity prevailed. Submissionary in charge was present, and declined to occupy the chair, desirous of honoring every man in his calling, which spirit is commendable in all. A desire to display authority is unseemly, and brings down contempt on the head of those who manifest it. "He that would be the greatest among you, let him be your servant." True greatness is not manifest in the desire to rule, but is manifest in willingness to perform even the humblest part, so that we can bless others and advance the interests of truth. The general desire for the success of the Redeemer's cause was evident among all present. The Saints at Moorhead kindly cared for all visitors.

From the conference I was conveyed down to Pisgah, (a new town on the Mondamin and Wall Lake branch of the C. N. W. railroad) by Bro. Julius McDonald, of Magnolia branch. I had been invited to assist Elder J. W. Wight in a series of tent meetings in Pisgah; but as prior appointments hindered him from being there at the time set for meetings to begin, Elder James M. Baker kindly consented to assist until Brother Wight could come. On the 3d inst. the brethren turned out and assisted Brother Baker in putting up the tent, I acting, mostly, as looker on, lending a hand when I could. On the 4th we commenced our meetings, each of us occupying alternately. We had good audiences and splendid attention; and the Holy Spirit's power was manifest in the preaching of the word. Bro. Baker remained with me until the 10th, when his duties as a member of the reunion committee called him away. I found Bro. Baker a very helpful companion in tent work; in fact, he bore the heaviest of the burden. When tent was down or torn, as it frequently was by the winds, he was always on hand to repair and replace whatever was out of order; and his ministry of the word was quite acceptable. He won the hearts of the people by his plain, straightforward manner.

On the 11th, Elder Wight came. He had been requested to carry on these meetings and myself to assist him. He was well received by the people, they having known him in his earlier days, and they had frequently heard him heralding the story of the cross.

The interest continued unabated, and the Holy Spirit's influence remained with the speakers, and, I believe, with the hearers; but what the result will be remains to be seen. I found Bro. Wight, like Bro. Baker, a pleasant and helpful fellow-laborer. No assumption of authority; no dictating as to what, when, or how the work was to be done; no claiming the best opportunities for preaching, and ignoring his fellow laborer, but willing to be in harmony and prefer another before himself. Such is the Spirit of the Master, and this course endears a man to his fellows and begets confidence on all hands.

I would to God all our brethren would learn the lesson! Humility is one of the brightest gems in the gospel character. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." How weak is the man who thinks he possesses all the wisdom! "A fool is wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason."

Please tell Sr. Pauline Ruby that I have not forgotten my visit to her hospitable home in Buffalo, over thirty years ago. Nor have I forgotten Jerome's generous treatment when it was necessary for me to travel on the Father of Waters; how he would furnish me with means, and give me a share in his bed as he acted as pilot on the steamboat. I love to be grateful! But what pleases me better than all, is to learn from her pen that my humble instrumentality was used by the Master in leading her into the kingdom of God. How sweet to realize that our labors are not all in vain! May God grant that all my work may be acceptable in his sight. May Sister Ruby find in her declining years that God is her stay and staff, and that the "Everlasting Arms" are around her to uphold her in the way of righteousness to the end!

I had almost forgot to tell you that the people in and around Pisgah desire the Saints to build a church there, they offering to assist liberally to that end. Bro. Wight presented the matter to the meeting. It met the approval of all. A soliciting committee was appointed, a locating committee, and a building committee. Outsiders cheerfully consenting to act as well as to contribute. It was stipulated, however, that we should build in accord with our means—a wise proviso. A lot has been secured, I believe, from the railway, and the intention is to push the work to completion at as early a period as possible. The motto at the head of subscription list: "A free pulpit and an open Bible." The church is to be owned and controlled by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. May God speed the work!

CHARLES DERRY.

WATERFORD, September 27.

Editors Herald:—I cannot say that there is any special news in this vicinity in regard to getting the message before the people. We had a few sermons by Bro. E. Compton sometime in July which the Saints appreciated very much. He is a very forcible speaker, and was well liked by the Saints and the few outsiders who attended. Had the interest been good we should have been delighted to have had him remain with us for some time; but the weather was very warm and it being a very busy time of season we concluded to close the meetings until later. With the majority of people their occupations fill their minds more than the desire to attend church, and circumstances have to be about right to bring them out. "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." To the wide awake Saints this state of the world is quite evident.

I am sorry to say (nevertheless it is a fact) that it takes a very small matter to keep many of the Saints away. This should not be, when we know what is at stake. We should put forth an effort to attend the different meetings of the branches. Some will attend when there is to be preaching, but will absent themselves from prayer and other meetings. Since Bro. R. C. Evans held a series of meetings last fall our prayer meetings have been well attended. There has been a slight falling during the hot weather, but a little cool weather will revive them.

We have started a Bible class Sunday afternoons, and we hope it will be a success, and it will be if we are diligent.

We have one of our old time members back with us in the person of Sr. Likins who joined the church when the work was first opened up in Waterford. She moved to London sometime after, and now has moved back in our midst. We are truly thankful for it, for she is a true Saint, and is a good church worker, and will be a splendid help to the branch.

We have been waiting patiently to secure the Presbyterian church of this place. It is a nice building, and if we get it this branch will have one of the finest places of worship in the country; so I have heard from those who are in a position to know. Then we expect more preaching, and hope a good work can be done.

Until a year ago this branch had been seriously neglected; but by the untiring zeal of a few of the faithful ones the fire was kept alive. Of course, when we know what a large field the ministry have to go over we cannot expect them to do much in one place.

I joined the church in November, 1899. Was baptized by R. C. Evans, and his word has proven true to me that I would never regret the step. So far it is true, and hope it always shall be. Though I am a weak Saint, yet I have tried to live up to my privileges, and have been blessed. We must be on the watch continually. In hopes,

ST. THOMAS, Ont., Sept. 28.

Editors Herald:—Dear Saints of the Chatham district: I was appointed by the General Conference to labor in your midst as a missionary, to commence the 15th day of June last. I was sent by our worthy president, R. C. Evans, to labor with Elder St. John in tent and other work as the Master led us. I have done so to the best of my ability. We had the tent working in Tilbury, Cambell's Side Road, and Bothwell. The tent was at work about seven weeks. We have had some good interest. I have visited Ridgetown, Blenheim, Cedar Springs, Buxton, Dentville, Tilbury, Bothwell, Chatham, Longwood, St. Thomas, Glencoe, and Appledore. The last named place is the home of our worthy president of Chatham district, Elder Green. We also visited Bro. and Sr. Traxler, the son and daughter of Sr. Traxler of Lamoni. Bro. St. John went to more places than I did, because he had his horse and buggy. He would go to different places on Sundays, while I worked the tent with local laborers. We did the best we could to encourage those in the faith, also tried to win others not of the faith to see the truth of the gospel. Bro. St. John has baptized six. I have baptized six, and expect to baptize five or six more at Longwood in a few days. Three more are waiting for me when I go back.

I thank the Saints of the Chatham district for kindness to me everywhere I have been. Don't think any of you are slighted, but take this as my heart's love to you all. You have cared for us both. If any have seen me do anything unlawful, or said anything to hurt, I hope they will pardon me. I do not wish to hurt anyone, but my desire is to do you all good. If it is God's will for me to be returned to Chatham district again, I will try to do my best for you. I see room for improvement in some things along the line of church work. We must go as best we can, that our faith fail not. I hope God will keep us in the hollow of his hand.

In the Longwood branch God has been good to us. A few more honest souls have been added to his kingdom. I thank you all for your goodness and kindness to me, and I can vouch for Bro. St. John also, I am pretty sure. Pray for us. Come all who can to Chatham conference, and have a good time in the Lord, on Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, October 12, 13, 14, and 15 next.

Your brother in Christ,

T. A. PHILLIPS.

Original Poetry.

TO THE MEMORY OF GEORGIE.

God in his infinite wisdom
Has taken our little son,
And we in the depth of our sorrow
Would say, "Thy will be done."
Those whom he loveth he chasteneth,
And we meekly pass under the rod;
The pure, white soul untarnished,
We have given again to God.

They have taken the dear little body
In the little white coffin away,
'Neath the snow, on the dreary hillside,
In the cold, dark grave to lay.
A treasure has slipped from our hand,
Over death's shadowy brink,
And left, in our little band,
Forever a broken link.

A pearl has silently dropped
Out of life's diadem,
And unto the crown of glory
Is added a priceless gem.
A beacon is set on high,
To lead us gently on;
We will not question why,
But trust. Thy will be done.

Let this and every dawn of morning be to you as the beginning of life, and let every setting sun be to you as its close; let every one of these short lives leave its sure record of some kindly thing done for others—some goodly strength or knowledge gained for yourselves.—Ruskin.

"HOME."

Home; what does this mean? Just simply a place for shelter when tired, hungry, or sleepy! Ah, no; to me it has a far greater meaning than this! In my judgment, if we would make home as God intended it, then it would be a paradise on earth. First, in choosing a companion for life, we should choose one whom we love and respect, and whom we believe loves and respects us in return.

Never marry for money or fame, for money never made a happy home; but love one another, and be kind and pleasant to your husband and family. By so doing, the honeymoon never ends; and if the father and mother are loving and kind to one another, the children will follow in their footsteps, and will all join in unison and make home happy.

Do not go about finding fault, and grumbling and growling about every little thing, but strive to make home happy. Too many homes are mere places for shelter, and I know it is all for the want of love. Was it not love that called our Savior to leave the realms of glory and come to this earth to save fallen humanity, and give them a perfect home in eternity? In order to obtain that home, we must live the gospel law; but to make our earthly homes what they should be, we must do as God commanded us, love our companions with all our heart, and cleave unto them and none else, or our home can never be happy. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am your sister,

THE BIBLE IN LITERATURE.

It is safe to say that there is no other book which has had so great an influence upon the literature of the world as the Bible. And it is almost as safe—at least with no greater danger than that of starting an instructive discussion—to say that there is no other literature which has felt this influence so deeply or shown it so clearly as the English. The cause of this latter fact is not far to seek. It may be, as a discontented French critic suggests, that it is partly due to the inborn and incorrigible tendency of the Anglo-Saxon mind to drag religion and morality into everything. But certainly this tendency would never have taken such a distinctly biblical form had it not been for the beauty and vigor of our common English version of the Scriptures. These qualities were felt by the people even before they were praised by the critics. Apart from all religious prepossessions, men and women and children were fascinated by the native power and grace of the book. The English Bible was popular, in the broadest sense, long before it was recognized as one of our noblest classics. It has colored the talk of the household and the street, as well as molded the language of scholars. It has been something more than "a well of English undefiled;" it has become a part of the spiritual atmosphere. We hear the echoes of its speech everywhere, and the music of its familiar phrases haunts all the fields and groves of our fine literature.

It is not only to the theologians and the sermon makers that we look for biblical allusions and quotations. We often find the very best and most vivid of them in writers professedly secular. Poets like Shakespeare, Milton, and Wordsworth; novelists like Scott, and romanancers like Hawthorne; essayists like Bacon, Steele, and Addison; critics of life, unsystematic philosophers, like Carlyle and Ruskin—all draw upon the Bible as a treasury of illustrations, and use it as a book equally familiar to themselves and to their readers. It is impossible to put too high a value upon such a universal volume, even as a purely literary possession.—The Century.

"THE BRIDGE OF TROUBLE."

Do not cross the Bridge of Trouble
But stay this side, I pray;
The burdens are so heavy,
Just rest awhile today.
And smooth out all the wrinkles,
Pack frowns quite out of sight,
And tuck the little worries
Into their beds, for night.

Don't cross the Bridge of Trouble,
So insecure its piers,
Built on the weak foundations
Of sighs and groans and tears;
Oh, bide this side, I pray you,
Lest others follow on Unthinking, in your footsteps,
Till joy and hope are gone.

Don't cross the Bridge of Trouble,
Just on the other bank
Lies Care, a town most dismal.
Whose mists so dark and dank
Are sure to breed the dolefuls,
And cause attacks of blues,
That make life seem a picture
Of most funereal hues.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Don't cross the Bridge of Trouble,
A heavy toll you'll pay,
Just take the narrow footpath
That leads the other way.
O'er meadows bright with sunshine,
Through sweet fields of content,
Where streams of peace, like mirrors,
Reflect a life well spent.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Knowing the efficacy of united prayer, I desire to ask the Prayer Union to pray for my son, who has epilepsy, that the Lord will heal him if it be his will.

Sr. L. B. Davison, Newport, Missouri, writes, requesting prayers in behalf of a lady friend, not a member of any church, that if God so wills, she may be healed; and that she might hear the gospel and obey it.

The request for prayers for Bro. Wilson, of Blendville, Missouri, coupled with a request for a fast day and setting a date for the same, came too late for the announcement to reach our readers in time.

THE NAME OF JESUS.

Sometimes a name represents a memory, and sometimes it represent a hope, and sometimes a principle. Some names are degraded. They have been tarnished by those who once bore them, and the stain clings to the name as it descends to the generations following. The name of Judas is the synonym of treachery. We seldom write it, or speak it, or hear it without thinking of the man whose sole distinction is his treason; and if anyone should be so unfortunate as to be called by that name, he would always feel that those who gave him the name placed on him a stigma.

There are many honorable names which have been made noble by the conduct and character of those who once bore them. These great, good men and women have transmitted a halo of glory with their names. The name of Washington suggests patriotism; the name of Harvard, philanthropy; the name of Grace Darling, heroism. These are honorable names, exalted, fragrant names.

What a splendid list of names the Bible furnishes! Each one of these names represents some worthy principle. The name of Abraham represents faith; the name of Moses, meekness; the name of Joseph, purity, the name of Solomon, wisdom; the name of Nehemiah, heroism; the name of Jeremiah, tenderness; the name of Daniel, fidelity; the name of Samuel, integrity; the name of Paul, courage. But the name of Jesus outranks them all, for he exemplified, not one great virtue, but all the virtues, and that, too, in the highest conceivable degree of development. This name stands for faith, courage, tenderness, fidelity, heroism, and every noble quality that can enter into the character of a great and good man.

Write down the names of all the great and good, whose deeds are recorded in the Bible and in all history, and opposite each name write the peculiar feature of goodness which distinguished him; and then above them all, far above them, you may write the name of Jesus, for his name represents every good principle known to man. Besides all this, there is no spot on his name. While the best names recorded in the Bible and in history represent many good qualities, each one represents some weakness. Every one had faults. But Jesus was singularly free from sin and weakness. He was altogether lovely. His name is above every name in respect to the character which that name represents. It is like ointment poured forth.

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds,
In a believer's ears!"

SUNDAY SCHOOL ON CAMP GROUND.

J. A. Gunsolley, First Assistant Superintendent.

The writer of this sketch left home August first for a campaign in the interests of Sunday school and Religio work in particular, Graceland College also, and all church work in general, to represent same at various reunions.

After a stopover at Independence, Missouri, of two days, the camp ground at Nine Wonders Park, near Eldorado Springs, in Clinton district, Missouri, the first object point was reached Saturday afternoon, August 4. This is a beautiful location, and though small in numbers, an earnest band of genuine Saints was found sojourning in some dozen or fifteen cotton houses, which number was increased by several in the close of the meeting. Though everyone tried to keep up appearances, and tried to be cheerful, it did not require a prophet to discern that there was a feeling of sore disappointment at first by many who had an idea that for a reunion to be a success it was highly necessary that certain "big guns" should be on the grounds and it had been learned that though some were invited none could come. This feeling did not long continue, however, for realizing that the artillery of lesser caliber must be depended upon, the Saints began to pray earnestly for the Lord to bless the "little guns," and as a result the strongholds of error and tradition suffered a ten days' seige of very telling marksmanship.

Sunday school work commenced, Sunday morning, the 5th, with a good attendance and a fine interest. The writer was chosen superintendent, Sr. Ida Keck, assistant, the latter being assistant superintendent of Clinton district Sunday school association. The fine park-pavilion afforded excellent opportunity for marching, and it was a pleasing sight, as well as a striking one, to see the veterans of '61 and the little children in the same line of march, the one enjoying it quite as much as the other. The feelings entertained by some that our work would be a failure owing to so many not being able to attend, were soon dispelled by the earnestness exhibited by those present. Sunday school sessions were held each morning for several days, and some kind of institute work the balance of time and also in afternoons, occupying from eight o'clock to nine in the morning, and from four to five-thirty in the afternoons.

Thursday was set apart as special Sunday school day, which began with Sunday school prayer meeting at eight a. m, Sunday school at nine. A miscellaneous program of addresses and music at ten forty-five, a program of recitations and music at two-thirty, and preaching in the evening. Friday, and what time was at our disposal on Saturday, was devoted to Religio work, so that our Sunday school ended with a fine session at eight a. m., the last Sunday.

A very enjoyable, and certainly profitable, time was had. A more earnest and efficient band of Sunday school workers it certainly would be hard to find than lives in the Clinton district, and it makes the heart glad to see the radiant cheek and glistening eye speaking volumes of appreciation. At seven p. m., we boarded the train, and turned toward our next point of operation, Sherwin, Spring River district, Kansas.

Bro. William Jordan, of Nevada, Missouri, was our host during the night of Sunday, and Monday morning, at about ten o'clock, found us upon the beautiful grounds of the Spring River camp, a little distance from Sherwin, Kansas. Our coming was expected, so we did not surprise anyone.

The reunion committee had been very liberal, indeed, having voted us five afternoons, provided so much time were needed, leaving us to make our arrangements. After consultation with local workers, a visiting committee was appointed to visit each tent on the ground and notify them of the fact that there would be Sunday school the next morning, and to solicit the attendance of all children and as many of the parents as could do so. So Tuesday morning, August 14, at eight o'clock, we introduced the work with an interesting session of Sunday school work. Willing helpers were found here, also. The writer was chosen superintendent, and Bro. M. S. Frick, secretary of Spring River district, was chosen assistant superintendent. We also had Sunday school on Wednesday morning, also sessions of institute work in afternoon. Thursday was special Sunday school day.

A program of addresses had been arranged for by the local workers, which was carried out with interest and profit to all. Another session of institute work was held at four o'clock.

Friday was Religio day, and much interest was manifested by those present, and prejudice gave way.

Had another session of Sunday school Sunday morning, which ended a season of work both pleasant and profitable.

The spirit accompanying the work here was of that convincing and confirming kind, which undermined opposition and beat down prejudice. Some who had not hitherto been active workers determined now to become so, and some who had labored under discouraging conditions were renewed in spirit. District and local officers gained light on methods. All learned, who had not before known it, that the Sunday school is a necessary auxiliary to the camp meeting as it is auxiliary to the church.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

HOW AN ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT CAN ASSIST.

Read before the Northwest Kansas district convention, by J. E. Soderstodt.

The office of assistant superintendent is not generally considered very important or necessary, although to my mind it is as necessary as any office in the school. The duties of the office are generally supposed to be to take charge of the school in the absence of the superintendent, and when he is present there is nothing to do. This should not be the case. The meaning of the word assistant is, "one who assists or helps." A good, active assistant can find plenty of work to take up his time if he will only launch out and try to work wherever a chance shows itself. What we need is more active officers in Sunday school work who will fill their places the best they know how, those who will be enthusiastic and desirous of seeing the work progress. In many schools the officers do not launch out and establish new methods, but follow in the steps of their grandfathers. Because the assistant never used to this and that they will not do so now. They simply hold the office, and that is all.

A good active assistant is only preceded in authority by the superintendent, and should help to control the school. He should be ready to give the superintendent advice in all matters pertaining to Sunday school work. He is a counselor to the superintendent, and the superintendent should confer with him in all business matters. If in a large school he should have control of part of the classes, see that they have teachers, visit classes, give advice, invite visitors to take places in classes, greet all strangers and find seats for the same. In the opening of school he can give very valuable assistance in leading the responsive reading for the audience. He can visit absent members, also sick members, and recruit the school by inviting new scholars.

The constitution gives us to understand that the assistant should aid in selecting teachers for the primary and intermediate classes. This I find, is not practiced in many schools. The superintendent simply appoints a teacher and does not ask the assistance of the assistant. This should not be so. He should seek aid from the assistant, and in doing so he will get the good will of him and also make him feel he is really a factor after all, and so get him to work and help him in many ways. And in so doing will make the old saying true, "two heads are better than one!"

What we need to do is to get the assistant interested. Make him feel that his work is needed and his office is important and you will soon be able to work together; and doing so you will find the school will be better and grow faster.

We further find in the Constitution and By-Laws the duties of the assistant are "to assist the superintendent as occasion requires and take charge of the school in the absence of the superintendent." I believe that the superintendent in charge should at different times let the assistant take charge of the school so that he will be able to run it in absence of the superintendent.

GROVE MEETING.

The annual grove meeting of the New Marion branch, Ripley, county, Indiana, was held September 1, continuing over the 9th. The district president, M. R. Scott jun., being present, presided. W. C. Marshall was chosen chorister. M. Anna Camron secretary. Sunday morning the stand was occupied by W. H. Kelley, assisted by George Jenkins, subject, "Two Covenants." 2:30 p. m., M. R. Scott jun., assisted by David Hurbaugh, taking up the subject of "The Plan of Salvation." 7:30 p. m., W. C. Marshall and J. J. Boswell addressed the audience, speaking on the duty of the "Creature to the Creator" — "Narrow Way." Monday eve, George Jenkins and J. J. Boswell were the speakers. Subject, "Duty of the Creature to the Creator."

Meetings were held each evening during the week with increasing interest. On Sunday the crowd was immense. The work was nobly defended, and the banner of King Emanuel did not suffer loss. In all it was a profitable meeting, and has made a bright page in the history of Ripley county, which time cannot erase. There were many visiting Saints from other branches, whose cheerful faces were gladly welcomed, but space will not permit us to give their names. We would like to give subjects and speakers during the week, but our article would be too lengthy; at all events the work did not suffer loss.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In ordering supplies for schools much inconvenience and positive annoyance to the office results from carelessness, which may be avoided by following these suggestions: (1) If there is a branch agent for the Herald Publishing House in your branch, let all supplies be ordered through this agent. (2) When ordering for the Sunday school, whenever a new person orders, be sure to give the name of the person to whom the supplies have been previously sent. This will prevent the frequent annoyance to both the office and schools of sending duplicate orders. (3) Be sure to sign your name to every order. If the order is not signed it will not be filled. (4) Send cash with order when at all practicable and save book accounts. (5) Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa,

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Semiannual conference of Southern California will meet October 26, at ten a. m., in the Saints' chapel, Garden Grove. Branches, please take notice and thus be properly represented by delegates. The Sunday school association will meet on Saturday afternoon. Come, Saints, bringing the Spirit of the Master, and thus keep in touch with the latter-day work.

A. CARMICHAEL, Pres.

Conference and Sunday school convention of London district will be held at Toronto, Ontario, October 6, 7, and 8, instead of October 5 to 7, as announced by Secretary John L. Berger in Herald of September 12, page 604.

BORN.

GREEN.—To Bro. O. E. and Sr. Ella J. Green, a boy, July 28, 1900. Blessed September 20, by Elder J. R. Sutton, and named Paul Raymond.

MARRIED.

JONES — MORRIS. — At Nantyglo, Monmouthshire, England, August 27, 1900, Sr. Alice Jones, third daughter of Elder J. Jones, to Bro. George Morris, also of Nantyglo. The ceremony was first enacted at the established Church of England, according to national laws. The bridal party then returned to the home of the bride's parents, and there Elder A. N. Bishop performed the impressive rite according to the laws of God. The happy pair, with parents, brothers, sisters, and friends, then partook of a wedding breakfast, at which all enjoyed the good things of the earth. Many presents were received, both useful and ornamental. Bride and bridegroom have the best wishes of the household of faith. May their lives be long and happy.

MEREDITH—JONES.—At Aberaman Glamorganshire, Wales, Sr. Elizabeth Meredith to Bro. Howell Jones, both of Aberaman branch. The ceremony was first performed according to the law of the land, then at the home of the uncle of the bridegroom, Elder Evan Lewis, the ceremony was performed according to the law of the Church of Christ by Elder A. N. Bishop. A happy time was then enjoyed by friends, and the presents to the happy pair were useful. They have the good wishes of all, and may God bless them.

DIED.

ALLEN.—Near Paige, Texas, Eppie Belzora, oldest daughter of Bro. W. W. and Mary E. Allen, aged 7 years, 4 months, and 26 days. Funeral service by Elder Mobley of the Baptist church.

BEIRLY. — At her home, near Seligman, Missouri, September 7, 1900, Sr. Martha J., wife of Bro. Solomon Beirly. Deceased was born June 19, 1849; united with the church in 1886, being baptized by Morris T. Short, during a series of meetings held at that place. Sr. Beirly was among the first to unite with the church at Seligman amid bitter persecution. She ever afterward was a staunch and able defender of the faith, sparing neither time nor opportunity to try to assist those around her to see the beauty and grandeur of the latter-day work, and was instrumental in bringing quite a number into the church. The home of Bro. and Sr. Beirly was the home of all the elders doing missionary work in that locality. Although her sufferings were great, they were borne with patience and fortitude, and she rejoiced in the thought that she was going to her reward which had been so richly earned, and which to her seemed so certain. Just a few moments before her spirit took its flight, some of the brethren on the outside of the house heard heavenly and angelic music, which seemed to come and rest directly over the house and over that portion in which she was lying; and she seemed to comprehend it fully, although life was rapidly passing away; and now as life's scene closes with her, can anyone say that her spirit's rest will not be most glorious? She leaves a devoted and faithful husband, also three daughters and one son. Funeral sermon to a large and interested audience by Bro. James Grimes.

HORTON.—At Manistee, Michigan, August 28, 1900, Bro. Wesley B. Horton. He had lived in Manistee for thirty-three years; was an elder in the church, but did no active service as such for a number of years. He was superintendent of public schools in Manistee for two terms. Has held the office of supervisor, then superintendent of the poor. Keeper of Manistee county poor farm for nineteen years. He was also county agent of the State Board of Charities. He was widely known and respected. Leaves a wife, one daughter, five grandchildren, and one brother, George Horton, of Independence, Missouri.

MAXWELL.—At Cadillac, Michigan, August 30, 1900, Bro. E. Maxwell. He was born in Canada, March 8, 1865. With his parents moved to Michigan in 1879. On April 25, 1888, our brother was united in marriage to Sr. Jessie Kennedy, who survives him. Funeral services from the residence, conducted by Elder J. R. Beckley.

ROYCE.—Dr. J. H. Royce was born in Cayuga county, New York, June 3, 1831; died at his home near Baroda, Michigan, August 31, 1900. He came to this State in 1850; studied medicine and became a practicing physician soon after, which profession he followed till death. His first wife died about fourteen years ago, and his second marriage was with Sr. Bell Babcock, which union was blessed with one son. He was baptized about two years ago. His love for the work was strong, and his greatest desire was to advance it; always willing to help to make a meeting a success. His beautiful and pleasant home was always open to the Saints, and especially for the elders, who always felt at home when under his roof. He was well known throughout the county, and an immense crowd attended his funeral, which was conducted by Elder E. A. Blakeslee. Brn. F. Granger and W. E. Peak preached the funeral sermon. He leaves a wife, son, and a host of friends to mourn his departure.

IS THERE A DECREASED DEMAND FOR BIBLES?

BY THE REV. R. A. TORREY, PASTOR OF MOODY'S CHURCH.

Much is being made of the fact that the American Bible society in its recent report tells of a great falling off in the demand for Bibles from that society. It is said that "over 400,000 more Bibles and Testaments were sent out by the American Bible society five years ago than are sent out now, and its receipts in money have fallen off nearly one half." From this fact the inference is drawn that there is a great falling off in the demand for Bibles. This inference is entirely unwarranted by the facts. Many other societies have risen as competitors with the American Bible society. These other societies have taken to popular methods for the sale and distribution of the Bible, and so have left the American Bible society far behind in the competition. The International Publishers, the Oxford Bible society, Bagster, Holman's, Eyre and Spottiswoode are selling Bibles by the hundreds of thousands; besides these, many newspapers have taken to the selling of Bibles as premiums. A single religious paper in the City of New York disposed of several hundred thousand Bibles last year as premiums. Bibles are now sold in the great department stores, one firm alone in one of our Eastern cities selling far more Bibles than any bookstore in the city.

So far from there having been a falling off in the sale of Bibles in the last five years there has been a marvelous increase. It is true the one society mentioned has fallen behind, but it is simply due to the fact that people have not thought wise to contribute to a society to sell Bibles as a matter of benevolence when equally as good or better Bibles could be secured elsewhere for less money.

The reduction in the price of Bibles has been amazing. Editions that a few years ago could only be secured for $9 or $10 can now be secured for $3 or $4, and serviceable imitation of them for even less than $1. Never has the Bible been in such demand; never has it been so much studied as during the last year. It has been said that "this present neglect of the Bible, however, cannot be called surprising. It is a natural consequence of the discredit thrown on the scriptures even by clergyman and teachers of theology. The Bible is no longer distinguished by them as the infallible word of God, but is apologized for as mere 'literature,' disfigured by human errors, the guile of priestcraft, and the ignorance and credulity of semi-barbarous compilers." Now, it is true that the views of the scripture stated in this quotation are held even by men in the ministry, but there has not arisen a neglect of the Bible from that—for the Bible is not neglected. These views might naturally be supposed to produce a neglect of the Bible, but the truth is that the men who hold these views do not get much of a hearing from students of the Bible. Those who really desire to study the Bible, and do study it, are perfectly aware that these views are arrant bosh, and that, while men seek to foist them upon the public as new truth, they are simply the old exploded notions of Tom Paine and other infidels revamped. The falling off of the business of the American Bible society is not due to them but to the competition of other societies that have seen fit to adopt the business methods of the day.

Conferences for Bible study are springing up all over the land, and have a large attendance. Men who preach the Bible are demanded for pulpits, large and small, as never before, and the men who believe in the Bible and preach it, and not their own theories, are the men who have the crowds to hear them.—Chicago Tribune, September 23, 1900.

M'CLURE'S FOR OCTOBER.

The October number of McClure's opens with an article on "The Strategy of National Campaigns," attractively illustrated by Jay Hambidge. The frontispiece, showing Governor Roosevelt and Senator Hanna in conference at Republican National Headquarters, and the strikingly original portraits of Cleveland, Blaine, Quay, Croker, Bryan, and others, lend especial interest to this paper on the tactics of party managers in the Presidential campaigns of the past twenty-five years. The author has been in the thick of the fight and has evidently been brought very closely into contact with the great leaders in the battles which he describes.

CHAUTAUQUA.

Chautauqua has become an America Institution and an household word. From a little beginning it has attained a greatness which has not yet stopped growing. Chautauqua has high ideals and has had the practical wisdom to make them real and operative. Chautauqua has touched and broadened the intellectual life of many a community—nay more, it has given to many a community its first intimation that there is an intellectual life. Of the Summer Chautauqua everybody who knows anything knows. Of the Winter Chautauqua Course of Home Study not so many know, although over two hundred and sixty thousand readers have taken advantage of its instruction. Its social influence has penetrated almost every city, town, village, and many foreign countries. During the past summer one hundred and twenty Chautauqua Assemblies were held in thirty-four different states and territories, the attendance at which aggregated a million of people. The season at the Mother Chautauqua, N. Y., was one of the most successful in its twenty-five year's history. Over forty thousand people attended the lectures, concerts and entertainments, while two thousand six hundred and fifty students pursued one hundred and six courses under seventy-two instructors in the summer schools.

The Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle was organized at the Chautauqua Summer Assembly in 1878. Its purpose is to provide a systematic course of reading in history, literature, science and art. It secures to those who have been denied college opportunities the college student's general outlook upon the world and life. It also gives college graduates an opportunity to review the studies of earlier years. The Circle is not a college either in its courses of study or its methods. But its influence in thousand of homes has been to awaken an interest and enthusiasm in the higher education among young and old.

A regular four year's course is provided, each year being distinct from the rest. The member does not bind himself by any pledge. The individual reader may pursue the entire course alone, but circles of three or more are recommended. These circles or clubs hold weekly meetings and pursue regular programs of readings, discussions, papers, etc. Over forty supplementary courses are provided for special students. A monthly magazine called The Chautauquan is published with readings, notes, programs, and announcements. The Chautauquan is considered by many to be unsurpassed for contents of current interest and for permanent literary, educational, and historic value. Special review outlines are given in the books and required readings. Twenty minutes a day will cover the required reading, and the total expense entailed amounts to $5.00 a year, less than fifteen cents a week for a period of nine months. A diploma is awarded at the end of the four year's course, and seals are bestowed for written review work and for extra reading. The advantage of a systematic plan of study is apparent to anyone who has had occasion to compare the results of a year of desultory reading with the outcome of a twelve month in which the books and magazine articles read, whether few or many, have been chosen with a definite aim in view.

The general subjects of The Chautauqua Four Year's Course are as follows:—

1900–1901.

French History and Literature.
Greek Lands and Letters.
World Politics of Today. Psychology.

1901–1902.

German and Medieval History.
Nature Study.
Roman and Italian Life and Art.

1902–1903.

English History, Literature, and Art.
Nineteenth Century History—Geology.

1903–1904.

The Expansion of the American People.
Socialism, Nature Study, American Literature.

The editor of the Catholic World seems to find some consolation in the failure of the American Bible Society, as is evidenced by the following editorial paragraph in the October number of that magaz ne:—

"Another chapter in the history of Higher Criticism closes with the sale and demolition of the great Bible House, the home of the American Bible Society for fifty years. The American Bible Society is the direct outcome of the Protestant Rule of Faith: that the world is to be converted by the reading of the Scriptures. It began its work with the beginning of the century. It has had an immense income, amounting in 1875 to $577,569 a year. It has done a tremendous work. Since its foundation it has printed and disseminated 31,893 332 Bibles, enough probably to sow the world knee-deep with Bible leaves.

"But the love for the Bible has been killed in the hearts of the people, and the reverence for its sacred pages has withered under the chilling blasts of Biblical Criticism. The fountains of revenue have been dried up, and the American Bible Society is obliged to seek more economical quarters.

"Of course we know that there has been a ruinous competition in England between the Oxford and International societies, but when there is a big plant for the making of Bibles, and when there is no demand for the output, so that the society cannot actually give its Bibles away, there is only one alternative—to go out of business. There is no better evidence of the decay of Protestantism than the demolition of the old Bible House."

THE MONGOOSE IN JAMAICA.

The agricultural features of Jamaica cannot be disposed of without due reference to the part played by the mongoose. Some years ago, the cane-fields became infested with snakes and rats to such an extent that drastic measures had to be employed in order to rid the country of the pests. It was decided that the mongoose would do the work, and accordingly the mongoose was imported. The animal went to work with a will, and soon there was scarcely a snake left on the island. The rats, likewise, were driven from the fields; but, taking refuge in the cocoanut trees, the rodents began to do that damage to the nut which ever since has been such a drawback to the raising of cocoanuts. But the mongoose did worse than this. The moment the animal found no more snakes and rats to feed upon, it attacked the ground-laying birds, destroying them and their eggs as well. These birds had heretofore been invaluable to the country, because they lived upon the pestiferous tick which was such a nuisance to man and cattle. With the disappearance of the birds, the ticks increased enormously, and now, in their turn, they are attacking the mongoose. Raisers of poultry in Jamaica would consider it a blessing if every mongoose were swept off the island. When the animal had succeeded in doing away with the snakes, and made the rats seek safety in the cocoanut trees, it went for the chickens. Naturally, prices rose skyward, and it was considered a luxury to have poultry on the table. With the destruction which the tick now does to the young mongoose, it is said by those who know that the ground-laying birds are once more appearing, and it is further suggested that more birds should be imported. The cattle owners will welcome the feathered agency that formerly minimized the effect of the ticks by feeding on these insects. With the introduction of sugar-cane in Cuba and Porto Rico, the identical destructive conditions are likely to confront the planters there; but since Americans, with experience bought in Jamaica, are at the head of the enterprises in the other islands, it is unlikely that the mongoose will be imported, even though rats might appear numerically strong enough to warrant drastic measures of extermination. Care will be exercised in the selection of an antidote. As far as the mongoose is concerned, a recent act of Congress prohibits the importation of the animal into the United States or its colonies. Hawaii, where the mongoose was introduced in 1881, passed a similar law in 1892 The history of the mongoose in the British colony may stand for some lesson in agricultural experience.—American Monthly Review of Reviews for October.

THE FUTURE OF CHINA AND OF THE MISSIONARIES.

In any résumé of the elements that have contributed to the progress of China, it is simply just to allude to the labors of the missionaries of all nations and all denominations. Truthful history must say of them that they preceded commerce, that their literary and educational labors have instructed foreigners as to China and China as to foreigners, and that their exalted philanthropy has begot among the poor and the rich a great measure of respect and confidence. While it is proper to give to the Imperial Maritime Customs, to the ministers and consuls, and to the great commercial houses full praise for their labors, we should not forget gratefully to remember those unobtrusive, but influential, agents of progress, whose inspiration came from a holier source than a desire for gain.

The question of the future of the missionaries is clear-cut now, and it lies outside of any consideration as to the intrinsic value of their work. It is this: Conceding all the good that is claimed for missionary work, should it, in view of the present condition of China, be abandoned? That question is to be answered. In the beginning we must recognize the undoubted fact that the Catholic powers—the Pope, Spain, Italy, and especially France—will never consent that the Catholic missionaries shall be driven out of China. Their interests there are immense. There are twenty-eight Catholic bishops in the Empire, of whom three are in the province Chihli. There are vast establishments over the country with schools, colleges, and asylums. Curiously, the Catholics have not gone into medical or surgical work, but they fill all other fields, covering industrial schools, carpenter and other shops, and all the forms of labor. The great cathedral at Peking was built mostly by the native Christians. The wealth of the church is enormous. The chief religious societies, the Jesuits, Benedictines, Augustines, Christian Brothers, Lazarists, and Franciscans are found at many places. You cannot turn the dial of progress back. You cannot revoke all the treaties. You cannot undo the work of three centuries. If the Continental Catholic remains in China, his Protestant colleague will go thither. It is not human nature to stand back and see others occupying fields of danger or of venture, and it is not in Christian nature to disregard the divine command to go into the world and teach all nations.—Hon. Charles Denby in October Forum.

A PUEBLO LEGEND.

Through all the grotesque darkness of Pueblo superstition, writes Marion Hill in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for October, runs a bright thread of poetic legend; and one legend, since it is woven around the ruined estufa in the ruined Pueblo of Pecos, has a right to be told here.

Pecos was founded by the man-god, the great Montezuma himself, and he therefore probably felt a protective interest in it; at any rate, when the usurping Spaniards lay upon the conquered Pueblos a cursed rule of restraint and wrong, Montezuma invoked against them the aid of his brother gods in heaven. These told him to plant a tree upside down beside the chief estufa of Pecos, and to light a holy fire upon the altar, and if the fire were kept burning until the tree fell, then would there come to the rescue of the oppressed a great pale-face nation, and deliver them from the Spanish thrall.

So the fire was lit, and a sentinel was posted to guard its sacred flame: and the tree was planted—under the circumstances the planter would be excusable in planting the tree as insecurely as possible. But year after year passed and the tree remained standing. Sentinel succeeded sentinel, and the flame lived on. Generations withered away, yet deliverance seemed no nearer. One day there came a rumor from old Santa Fé that the city had surrendered to a white-faced people. Was this the band of deliverers? That day at noon the sacred tree toppled and fell. Spanish rule was no more. The prophecy had been fulfilled.

If there be an unbeliever of this legend, let him go to the ruins of Pecos and see for himself that whereas the city was built upon a mesa so barren that no trees are there nor ever have been there, yet across the crumbling estufa lies the fallen body of a pine of mighty growth. The like of it is not for many miles around. Whence then did it come?—Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for October.

HEALING BY HUMAN AND DIVINE MEANS.

Referring to the article, "Healing; Defense," found elsewhere in this issue, we state. In his zeal to defend himself and his methods, the writer does his cause an injury in the following statement, referring to the motive, or incentive for employing one or the other of the means intended for healing, he writes:—

> That we engage in one as a part of our religious duty to God and the Saints, but in the other as a part of our business obligations to suffering humanity; in one for spiritual and physical benefits, but in the other for the good of the physical and financial.

He thus eliminates from the ordinance of the laying on of hands the sympathy of the eldership and the desire on their part to alleviate the distress and sickness of "suffering humanity," the very cause for which the ordinance was instituted.

Further than this he broadly states that in the employment of the other methods there is in view the possible good of the physical and the actual good to the financial; that is to say, that an appeal to the divine method may result in relief from physical distress and impart spiritual good, strength, and vitality without cost to the sufferer; but that in the human only, good may be received by those administered to, but it is attended with the element of cost. In the divine plan is no reward in pecuniary gain, in the human there is—the first does not pay, in the latter there is money.

In our former article we wrote of our own personal experience and observation only, touching permanent results, hence, do not presume to state what the result of others' experience may be; but assure the writer and our readers that though our acquaintance with mesmerism, magnetism, hypnotism began over forty years ago, that acquaintance has run through the years since that time, during which the advancing researches referred to by the writer have been going on; and while quite ready to admit that there may have been an increased knowledge touching the application, there has been no change in the forces or power through which mesmerizers, magnetizers and hypnotists have operated. The very things done on the public stage by hypnotizers today, in their lectures and experiments to prove the influence of mind over matter are those wrought in our presence from 1850 to 1865, by those whom we heard lecture and read after during those years. Of these we remember well Professor Griffin, who was one of the most successful operators of his day. Some of the effects wrought by him then by the way of suggestion are standard experiments today; and he then taught biology, or the science of mind, as his bills read. We spent weeks with the Professor attending his lectures, conversing with him, reading from spiritist works and studying the phenomena; and we were then no more disturbed by the alleged superstitions supposed by the writer to attach to the study of psychology, as related to soothsaying, conjuring, sorcery, necromancy, witchcraft, magic, legerdemain, enchantment, the black art, etc., than we are today. The writer erroneously classes spiritualism with the before named, for spiritualism itself claimed then as now, to operate through the "influence" which he attributes to the practice of mesmerism, magnetism, and hypnotism, distinctly relying on the occult forces of nature, not assuming that either was the result of interference with human affairs by God, or the Devil, claiming only the presence of spirits and the exercise of forces known to them, but operative through human agencies.

It is this that formed the danger line then, and we are strongly of the opinion it is the danger line now.

It is true that "knowledge is power," but it is a mistake to say that all "knowledge and learning walk hand in hand with civilization and godliness."

Paul wrote long ago:—

> For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

This is as true now as it was then. Much of the knowledge and learning of this world has little to do with civilization and less with godliness. Men know the things (knowledge of this world) of the world and the things of man by the spirit of man which is in him; but the things of God are to be known by the Spirit of God which may be given of God.

We stated clearly in our article that our conclusion had been the result of our experience and observation; hence, arrived at by the processes of common deduction from things seen and felt. And whether we could or could not make the modus operandi (method of operation) by which we reached our conclusion plain to the satisfaction of the writer, we reiterate our statement, "it is to us of doubtful propriety to become learned in this direction."

Whether departures from the rules of health are made in ignorance, or are willful, the result of deliberate and unjustifiable carelessness, or from enforced conditions, the result is much the same, and health is disturbed and broken; if because of willfulness or carelessness, the sufferers are in fault; and to ask divine interference and afterwards to continue in the same courses is to forget prudence and disrespect divinity. The writer both misstates and misapplies what we wrote in regard to the above.

The writer misunderstands and misstates us again when he writes "they are solemnly warned and officially cautioned against making any scientific investigation of the 'rules of health and right living.'" No such warning, no such caution was given by us. We simply stated a truth, and the writer misconstrues it. We were writing of healing by the plan given in the word and contrasting it with other forms of healing in which faith is supposed to be a factor; and we wrote no word that can be justly taken to discourage the study of physiology, the rules of right living. We wrote nothing of the practical methods of health clubs, hydropathic or water treatment, the laws of hygiene, osteopathy (the study of the bones, etc.), physical culture, or mental science. The different authors on the rules of health do not agree, except on some few points.

There are no "exact rules" of health known to the scientist. Most of them are theories, which have had human origin. Many flourish for a time and disappear. Dio Lewis, the "strong man," taught a system of hygiene and right living, yet died of dyspepsia. A system of right living is taught at Battle Creek, Michigan, yet the husband of Mrs. White died while yet a comparatively young man. But it is needless to pursue this line of thought further.

The writer again misconstrues what we wrote, when he, quoting from us, stated: "There is spiritual danger" in every health method "no matter

www.LatterDayTruth.org

what its name," except the church ordinance."

We did not use the words "in every health method," nor "except the church ordinance."

We were writing of "Healing, by what power," and, referring to what the Lord had given, stated: "There is absolute safety in the method appointed in the word. There is spiritual danger to a greater or lesser degree in every other, no matter what its name, or however specious its promises." And we repeat that statement.

We quote not a word about "defective teeth, neuralgia, chills and fever, or broken bones." Neither did we write in the passage referred to in regard to there being physical danger in employing other means for healing than the one provided in the word. The writer has caught up the sentence and sought to break its force by an appeal to the physical suffering phase, of which the sentence called by him a "broad sweeping asseveration," stated nothing.

A man with defective teeth, neuralgia, chills and fever, or broken bones, "giving disease," would be just as bad off and helpless a "hundred miles" from a mesmerist, a magnetizer, a hypnotist, as he would be if so far away from an elder; and would be just as near to God as if surrounded by dozens of elders and hypnotists. There is plenty of power conceded to the Devil if it is conceded that he can create a "lie," a "negation of the truth." This being conceded then every truth is, or may be subjected to the Devil's negation, and that lie exist in the "imagination." This is the spiritual danger to which we referred. Whoever endeavors to substitute the merely human for the divine is within the possible reach of that danger. Whoever stands with the divine is safe.

The proverb has it:—

> There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.

The Devil makes it his business to disabuse the minds of believers of their trust and confidence in God and his word, to create an imagination in their minds contrary to God's promises. To do this he employs agencies sometimes harmless in their outward seeming, but dangerous in their final tendency to the spiritual well-being of those misled by him. It is well for Saints to be on their guard always lest possible deception overtake them.

We are indeed commanded to "do good to all men, especially to those of the household of faith;" but we are not commanded, nor will we be excused if we choose doubtful ways in which to essay to do supposed good.

There may be "no sentence in Holy Writ that can be twisted into a prohibition of the use of all good measures to do the much good we are commanded to do of our own free will, and by the power there is in us."

This is undoubtedly true. But, and we regret that the writer so easily placed his cause in jeopardy, there are several sentences in Holy Writ directing what measures men should employ for the alleviation of the pain and distress to which humanity is subjected. The Master said, "They shall lay hands on the sick." James wrote:—

> Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church: and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

By "modern revelation," to which the writer referred, there has been given several commands and directions on the subject.

> They shall heal the sick.—Sec. 34, par. 2.
> And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me.—Sec. 42, par. 12.
> And again, to some it is given to have faith to be healed, and to others it is given to have faith to heal.—Sec. 46, par. 7.
> Lay your hands upon the sick and they shall recover.—Sec. 66, par. 5.
> In my name they shall heal the sick.—Sec. 83, par. 11.
> He shall heal the sick.—Sec. 107, par. 30.

It is an axiom that whatever is prescribed in rule or law as lawful is right, that which is different to that prescribed is not provided for and is not lawful; and for that reason is not good. Paul recognized the fact that what was commanded in the law was "good."

We regret that the writer concludes that we loudly denounced the three methods for which he writes. We were giving the divine as compared with the human. And by the "ray of light" which he "flits across" our pathway we discover that the three methods referred to by us are confessedly human, and the writer so rates them.

The statement that anyone having any one of the five senses left is using magnetic force, or personal magnetism; that hypnotism "is used in all branches and avenues of life;" under the guise of calling it influence; and that mesmerism "is only an inferior, or limited degree of hypnotism;" are all of the same class as the argument made by the defender of the liquor traffic, because that there was "free alcohol in every blade of grass, in every grain of wheat or kernel of corn; hence, as the Almighty had put the element of alcohol in the grass and grain, man is authorized to extract it by distillation and use it as a beverage; notwithstanding intoxication and social ruin follow in the wake of the use of the emancipated spirit.

Besides this, it will be seen that under the flitting light thrown upon the subject of hypnotism, the writer shows that hypnotists do not agree; some claiming degrees in influence, while others, himself included, deny that there can be fixed degrees. He then states some of the differences existing between hypnotists as to what it is, and claims to hold views contrary to some of them. It is too soon to ask us to accept a system as proved by scientific processes to be a science before those professing to be scientific exponents of the science are agreed as to what it is.

The statement made by the writer that "there is no known dividing line where influence ends and hypnotism begins, for they are one and the same thing," marks the danger line, the spiritual danger line. And the next statement, sweeping every influence, "good, bad, or indifferent," into the realm of hypnotism, as it does, confirms our suggestion that such knowledge is of "doubtful propriety," and that "it is better to know of the things of God, so far as these have been revealed."

The writer states that "there is practically no end to the methods by which hypnosis may be induced." He then follows this up by citing a list of things that the bold, "strong, well balanced mind" may do by the employment of hypnotism upon the "average mind." Classing salesmen, orators, commanders, and revivalists, with swindlers and sharp bargain drivers, calling them all "hypnotists, or influencers," is a sorry refuge and ought not to deceive anybody; and reveals the possible evil that lurks in the system.

According to the writer's statement, patients are influenced into "a passive state," in which passive state the subject is plied with "suggestions," and these suggestions may be "good, bad, or indifferent," at the will, intent, and purpose of the operator making the suggestions. If he be a good, noble man, such suggestions may be good; if he be evil-minded and designing, the patient becomes a victim to evil suggestions. There is no such risk in the method of which we wrote in our former article.

We make no war on the acquisition of valuable knowledge. We concede every man's right to delve deep, soar high, and go far abroad in search of truth. We believe that man should make himself acquainted with himself, the laws of his being and how to keep himself in health. We wrote not a line in disparagement of the study of the laws of life and health. There are plenty of health teachers, practical seekers after the elixir of life as possibly found in creation but hid hitherto, who are not mesmerizers, magnetizers, or hypnotists, or even religionists, and we certainly do not concede that health wisdom is found in the three classes of philosophers named only.

POOR BOYS IN COLLEGE.

Some people have the idea that only rich men's sons can have the benefits of a college education. It is believed by many that in order for a young man to get education in one of the institutions of higher learning a large supply of ready money must be had. It is more than likely that such idea has kept many young people from making the attempt to get such education, when if the truth was known about the cost of procuring the benefits of a college training many more would be found in the higher schools of learning who are now out because they see no chance.

The average cost of a college education is rather high; but for an average to be found there must of necessity be a maximum and a minimum. There are many young men who go to school who do not know the value of a dollar, simply because dollars have been at their disposal for the asking. Such young men when in college do not know the necessity of economizing, and the dollars roll through their hands in a surprisingly rapid manner. These men help to make up the average cost, and through their folly and extravagance the average is greatly raised. Many rich men's sons are found in college, as a matter of course. Because of this the average cost is raised considerably. These things must be taken into consideration in figuring the cost of a year's schooling.

In the National Magazine for September is found an interesting article on "Self Support in College," written by Leonard K. Smith. In the article he gives his experience in making his way through Harvard. Harvard has been called "the rich man's college," because of the idea prevailing that one must be rich to attend it. Mr. Smith, however, shows how it is possible for a poor boy to attend and pay his way as he goes. He arrived in Boston with twenty-eight cents in his pocket, though he had a capital of $500 to draw on for his expenses. His first year passed, and he found he had $225. The second year he did some better, so that at the beginning of the third year he had again the $500, so his two years had cost him nothing from his capital. Thus he went on, finished his course, and, as he says, found himself "at the end of four years with a clear record, an honorable degree and no debts to speak of." He had gone through four years in "the rich man's college" on an original capital of $500.

He tells of another, a friend of his, who entered the school with an indebtedness of $50, and graduated with a bank account of $1,000. After telling of some others, he says:—

But why enumerate? There were in my time about 3,000 students in Harvard. If I were to make a mere guess I should say fifteen or twenty per cent of these were more or less self-supporting,—let us say, for the sake of moderation, ten per cent. Very many of these, too, passed for the well-to-do men of the college, are taken into the Hasty Pudding Club and others, and are elected class marshals on Class Day, though of course these latter instances are not usual.

Mr. Smith's experience has been similar to that of many poor boys who have gone through college. The first requisite is determination. That comes ahead of capital. A boy with plenty of determination and pluck can get through a college course, even if he has no capital. Not having money should not discourage our young people. It is sometimes best not to have.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. F. Mintun writes from Magnolia, Iowa, September 26:—

My labors at Sloan in grove meetings resulted in two baptisms. A few were convinced of the vast difference between us and the Brighamites, which removed prejudice and strengthened and encouraged the Saints. A report came to me from there last night that they enjoyed one of the best prayer meetings last Thursday eve that they had ever enjoyed.

The meetings at Mondamin last week from Monday eve to Sunday eve were not largely attended, but we trust some good was done. A few of the young there are persuaded of the way of truth, but feel timid about being baptized, which feeling I hope they will overcome ere long.

The Sunday school here is doing well, there being a deep interest shown on the part of pupils and teachers.

Returned home Monday last to rest an hour or two, then to seek to minister comfort to a bereaved husband and to children and grandchildren of Mrs. Harry H. Lockling, who, while not a member of our church, was one of the noble women of earth, one kind to the poor and needy, and a keeper at home, and of whom no reproachful word has been heard.

It was with great sorrow that I learned of the death of Bro. J. C. Hitchcock. How much he will be missed from church circles! May God give comfort to the bereaved ones!

Sr. S. A. Johnsons writes on September 24, from Merced, California:—

The Herald is the only preacher I have. I have not heard a sermon for years, and cannot live without the Herald.

The senior editor writes from Dow City, Iowa, October 3:—

The camp is being rained on by passing clouds; but, from appearances, it will soon be over. The weather has turned quite warm, which favors the rain. Our big tent was badly torn by the storm of Sunday night; but was repaired yesterday between the services, with but a little loss of time. The meeting series have all been excellent, though the audiences for the first two days were small as compared with some former reunions. The long continued rains with threatening for more have kept many away, who are usually here.

The grounds on which the camp is located is the public square, which covers two whole blocks and the intervening street between, is at the foot of the bluffs, beautiful for location, and covered with a heavy growth of blue grass, making a fine carpet of green on which the tents, including the tabernacle, are pitched. There is no dust, and few mosquitoes. The ground is nearly level, so that the whole array of canvas houses is on the level, no one having a better, or more eligible site than another.

The water furnished by the city, is good, clear, cool, clean, and easily accessible to all on the grounds, the horses being watered away from the camp altogether. Indeed the horse corral is quite away from the camp, so that no one is offended by the nearness of it. The location is in some respects the best the reunion has ever had.

Dow City is small, so that there is not so large an attendance of the outside people, but those who do attend are quite attentive.

The elders in attendance and who have spoken have had good liberty and good hearing.

There is to be a marriage in the tabernacle at the close of this morning's service, which will be a relief to the monotony of the routine of daily procedure.

All are good-natured, and prepared to make the best of conditions as they are.

Bishop Kelley is the preacher this morning, the editor for the evening.

Bro. F. A. Smith, under date of October 1, writes from Dow City, Iowa:—

Rained hard this forenoon. Better now; clear. Crowd small so far.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By a portion of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of September 16, sent us by Bro. John Davis, we note that a man by the name of Peter Olstad has recently found a collection of prehistoric bones on the Pensacola River, 110 miles northeast of Nome. In the collection is found a mastodon's skull with eye apertures twenty-two inches in diameter, several mastodon ribs, and the upper part of a big bone thirty-six inches in diameter. Also the skull of what is supposed to be a prehistoric bird. Mr. Olstad thinks it probable that he will place his collection in the Smithsonian Institute.

Brn. James Caffall and S. K. Sorensen have a characteristic article in the Madison [South Dakota] Daily Sentinel for September 28. They give a good outline of our church history, and invite investigation.

Decatur district conference was held last Saturday and Sunday, at Lone Rock chapel, the business all being done Saturday. The attendance was rather small, which is undoubtedly due to the fact that Lone Rock chapel is inaccessible except by wagon road. We believe conference in districts as large as is the Decatur district should be held at points readily accessible from all parts of the district, and hence should be held at some place on a railroad.

President Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Manager Smith returned from Dow City Tuesday.

BAPTISM.—NO. 2

BY R. M. ELVIN.

The next part of the subject considered is the practice of

INFANT BAPTISM.

The following scripture leads the religious teachers to the conclusion that infants had some place in the church:—

And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee in their generations. This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee: Every man child among you shall be circumcised —Gen. 17: 9, 10

Rev. Daniel Baker, D. D., of Texas, in his little book, "A Plain and Scriptural View of Baptism," says:—

Our argument is this: Infant membership formed a part of the original constitution of the visible church of God. Infant membership has never been abolished, and therefore infants have a right to membership still. Baptism has taken the place of the ancient initiatory or recognizing ordinance, and therefore infants are to be baptized."—View of Baptism, p 8

No misunderstanding the above statement, that "Infants are to be baptized." Again he says:—

Indeed, we have reason to believe that there was a church organization from the period when the first promise was made to the human family, touching the "seed of the woman that should bruise the serpent's head;" and from what is said about the connection which existed in the earliest ages of the world, between parents and their children, it would seem that they were linked together by some bonds and ordinances of a sacred character, even from the time of Adam.—Ibid. p. 9.

While truth exists in the thought that "parents" and "children" were "linked together," it is wholly an imagination and an assumption to conclude that that forms a justification or authority for infant baptism. The hint at "initiatory" ordinance is plainly told in the following:—

That baptism has taken the place of circumcision is also evident from the fact, that if baptism be not now a seal of the covenant, as circumcision formerly was, then we have now no seal of the covenant at all. And if baptism be not at the present time the initiatory or recognizing ordinance of the church; then, at the present time, we have no such ordinance whatever.—Ibid. p. 21.

Reader, the question is fairly before you, that infant baptism takes the place of circumcision. But do not overlook the fact that the command of God was that "every man child" was to be circumcised, whereas those who practice infant baptism or sprinkling receive both male and female children to their practice without any additional commandment than that given to Abraham to circumcise "every man child."

Alexander Campbell has formulated "a hundred and thirty-four questions and answers on infant baptism, here are a selection of them for your consideration:—

Q—Had Jesus been circumcised when an infant? A.—He was circumcised the eighth day.

Q.—Had all those that John baptized been circumcised? A—Yes; they were all Jews.

Q—What do you infer from this fact? A—That baptism did not come in the room of circumcision; otherwise no Jews would have been baptized.

Q—Had all the males baptized by the apostles on this occasion been circumcised? A.—Being Jews, they must have been circumcised; for the Jews were called "the circumcision."

Q—And what would you infer from this? A.—That baptism was not a substitute for circumcision, as some vainly imagine; for, then, how could the apostles have baptized those who had been circumcised?

Q.—Did you ever read of the baptism of any infants in the Scriptures? A.—No.

Q—Did you read of the sprinkling of any infants in the Scriptures? A—No.

Q—Why do you sprinkle water upon the face? A.—Because thus the Clergy have ordained.

Q—Why do they not sprinkle the foreskin, seeing the Jews circumcised it? A—Because it would be indecent and impolite.—Christian Baptism, pages 422, 423, 424, 427, 430

In the New Testament is the following:—

Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.—Matt. 19: 13–15.

Some pretend to find authority for infant baptism in the foregoing, while there is not a single word that is indicative of any such ordinance or practice. If such scripture would prove infant baptism, nothing assumed by man as a religious rite but what could be sustained in the same way—namely, by untrue interpretation; it is even now as it anciently was:—

There be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.—Gal. 1: 7.

If changing the ordinance of the laying on of hands for a blessing, to that of infant sprinkling is not a perversion, then we ask what would constitute a perversion of gospel truth? In a work on the defense of infant baptism, Bishop Kenrick, of Philadelphia, adroitly admits that the practice cannot be satisfactorily sustained by the inspired writings. He says:—

Without the aid of tradition, the practice of baptizing infants cannot be satisfactorily vindicated, the Scripture proofs on this point not being thoroughly conclusive; yet we do not, on this account, neglect the arguments which it furnishes, and which have considerable force.—Treatise of Baptism, p. 129.

"History repeats itself," is a trite saying. Christ had this to say of tradition:—

Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?—Matt. 15: 3.

Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.—Matt. 15: 6.

Paul said:—

Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ.—Col. 2: 8.

Infant baptism rests not on any direct commandment from God, but upon "tradition," "philosophy," "deceit,"—that is a perversion of the original ordinance, or as Isaiah has it, "changed the ordinance," which is nothing more nor less than a deception, a regular counterfeiting of the original plan as given by the Almighty for the salvation of those that would hear, believe, and obey. Our citadel is to abide within the provisions of the divine law, as given by the Holy One of Israel. Martin Luther, whose followers sprinkle children and call it baptism, said:—

It cannot be proved by the sacred Scriptures that infant baptism was instituted by Christ, or begun by the first Christians after the apostles.—Pæd. Exam., vol. 2

This confession upon the part of Mr. Luther is equivalent to an acknowledgement that the practice is without divine authority, sanction, or appointment; therefore, is purely and simply a makeshift, a substitute for the blessing of little children, as instituted by Christ.

John Calvin, whose followers also practice infant sprinkling, has this to say:—

Because Christ requires teaching before baptizing, and will have believers only admitted to baptism, baptism does not seem to be rightly administered, except faith precede.—Pæd. Exam., vol. 2, p. 272.

Chambers, who wrote neither in favor nor against the practice, says:—

It appears that in the primitive times none were baptized but adults.—Cyclopedia, art. Baptism.

Neander says:—

It cannot possibly be proved that infant baptism was practiced in the apostolic age.—Apost. Age, vol. 1, p. 140.

Curcellæus says:—

The baptism of infants, in the first two centuries after Christ, was altogether unknown; but in the third and fourth was allowed by some few. In the fifth, and following ages, it was generally received. The custom of baptizing infants did not begin before the third age after Christ was born. In the former ages no trace of it appears, and it was introduced without the command of Christ.—Religious Institutes.

No matter how strongly the people may resist an innovation of a religious principle, time will reconcile them to every change, until the zeal of those who strive for the perversion, completely obliterates the original doctrine or practice.

Our liberty-loving citizens of Virginia may not look back with pride at the zeal of their forefathers when they enacted the following penal statute:—

Copy of a law, found in Henning's Statutes at large, vol. 2, page 165. December, 1662, 14, Charles II.

Article III.—Against persons that refuse to have their children baptized.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Whereas, many schismatical persons, out of their averseness to the orthodox established religion, or out of the newfangled conceits of their own heretical inventions, refuse to have their children baptized;

Be it therefore enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That all persons that, in contempt of the divine sacrament of baptism, shall refuse, when they may carry their child to a lawful minister in that county, to have them baptized, shall be amerced in two thousand pounds of tobacco—halfe to the informer, and halfe to the publique."—Christian Baptism by Campbell, p. 197.

Had the Episcopalian Church been as successful in each of the commonwealths as they were in Virginia, long ere this infant baptism would have been popular and universal in our loved and free America. The following, which seems to possess plainness, common sense, and inspiration, will close this part of the topic:—

And now my son I speak unto you concerning that which grieveth me exceedingly, for it grieveth me that there should disputations rise among you. For if I have learned the truth, there has been disputations among you concerning the baptism of your little children. And now my son, I desire that ye should labor diligently, that this gross error should be removed from among you; for, for this intent I have written this epistle. For immediately after I had learned these things of you, I inquired of the Lord concerning the matter. And the word of the Lord came to me by the power of the Holy Ghost, saying, Listen to the words of Christ, your Redeemer, your Lord, and your God.

Behold, I came into the world not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; the whole need no physician, but they that are sick; wherefore little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin; wherefore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me, that it hath no power over them; and the law of circumcision is done away in me. And after this manner did the Holy Ghost manifest the word of God unto me; wherefore my beloved son, I know that it is solemn mockery before God, that ye should baptize little children.

Behold I say unto you, that this thing shall ye teach, repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children, and they shall all be saved with their little children: and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism.

Behold, baptism is unto repentance to the fulfilling the commandments unto the remission of sins. But little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world; if not so, God is a partial God, and also a changeable God, and a respecter of persons; for how many little children have died without baptism. Wherefore, if little children could not be saved without baptism, these must have gone to an endless hell.

Behold I say unto you, that he that supposeth that little children need baptism, is in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity; for he hath neither faith, hope, nor charity; wherefore, should he be cut off while in the thought, he must go down to hell. For awful is the wickedness to suppose that God saveth one child because of baptism, and the other must perish because he hath no baptism. Woe be unto him that shall pervert the ways of the Lord after this manner, for they shall perish, except they repent. Behold I speak with boldness, having authority from God: and I fear not what man can do; for perfect love casteth out all fear; and I am filled with charity, which is everlasting love; wherefore all children are alike unto me; wherefore I love little children with a perfect love; and they are all alike, and partakers of salvation. For I know that God is not a partial God, neither a changeable being; but he is unchangeable from all eternity to all eternity. Little children can not repent; wherefore it is awful wickedness to deny the pure mercies of God unto them, for they are all alive in him because of his mercy.

And he that saith that little children need baptism, denieth the mercies of Christ, and setteth at nought the atonement of him and the power of his redemption. Wo unto such, for they are in danger of death, hell, and an endless torment. I speak it boldly, God hath commanded me. Listen unto them and give heed, or they stand against you at the judgment seat of Christ. For behold that all little children are alive in Christ, and also all they that are without the law. For the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law; wherefore, he that is not condemned, or he that is under no condemnation, cannot repent; and unto such baptism availeth nothing. But it is mockery before God, denying the mercies of Christ, and the power of his Holy Spirit, and putting trust in dead works.

Behold, my son, this thing ought not to be; for repentance is unto them that are under condemnation, and under the curse of a broken law. And the first fruits of repentance is baptism: and baptism cometh by faith, unto the fulfilling the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart, cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God."—Book of Moroni 8: 2–29.

Thoughtful reader, can you afford to ignore, neglect, or reject such plain evidence on so important a subject as is set forth in this paper? The happiness of your immortal soul in the unmeasured and the unending eternity is a matter of your personal and present consideration and preparation. Will you give heed to the counsel of God, receiving and complying with the demands made in the ordinance of baptism, and be at peace with God in the hope of eternal life? Or will you resist the loving kindness and counsel of God, and thereby bring upon yourselves condemnation? The same loving Father that spoke anciently:—

Therefore I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord God. Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin. Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye.—Ezek. 18: 30–32.

In closing this paper on baptism, the following is submitted for your consideration.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.

Do not be startled at this, as its presentation is suggestive, and not put forth as a commandment requiring your immediate compliance, for it is a doctrine of permission, under the rule of immediate revelation in the fullness of the restored gospel, preparatory to the fulfilling of the prayer:—

Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.—Matt. 6: 10.

There is meaning and importance in the following:—

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.—Mal. 4: 5, 6.

The fulfillment of this wonderful prophecy lies in the future, but is sure of being fulfilled as God has appointed, and in his own way. In the light of the gospel being presented to those who have passed through the change called death, read:—

For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.—Rom. 14: 9.

The logic of this text is that Christ died for the dead and the living, as preached to both. No proof will be required that he preached to the living, and his statement was:

The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. . . . Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice.—John 5: 25, 28.

The above are the words of Christ before his crucifixion, and here is the testimony of Peter, after his cruel death upon the tree:—

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quicked by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison.—1 Peter 3: 18, 19.

The idea that Christ preached to the dead is confirmed and explained in the following:—

For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.—1 Peter 4: 6.

The object of preaching the gospel is that those to whom it is preached may be reformed thereby, and the only proof of their being benefited or blessed thereby, is in their accepting and obeying the same. Christ preached to the disembodied spirits, or those who once lived and by death went hence, for them was provided a proxy administration of the means in which their peace with God may be assured:—

Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?—1 Cor. 15: 29.

Paul wrote about baptizing for the dead as if it was generally understood, and a doctrine neither strange or new.

Baptism for the dead was a practice formerly in use, when a person dying without baptism, another was baptized in his stead; thus supposing that God would accept the baptism of the proxy, as though it had been administered to the principal. . . . If it can be proved (as some think it can) that this practice was as early as the days of Paul, it might probably form a solution of those remarkable words in 1 Corinthians 15:29.—Smith's Bible Dictionary, p. 74.

He further informs us:—

Tertullian tells us of a custom of vicarious baptism as existing among the Marcionites; and St. Chrysostom relates of the same heretics, that, when one of their catechumens died without baptism, they used to put a living person under the dead man's bed, and asked whether he desired to be baptized; the living man answering that he did, they then baptized him in place of the departed.—(Chrys. Hom, XI on 1 Cor. 15.)

2. Chrysostom believes the apostle refers to the profession of faith in baptism, part of which was, "I believe in the resurrection of the dead." The former of the two interpretations above mentioned commends itself to us by its simplicity; the latter by its antiquity. Many other explanations have been given."—Smith's Bible Dictionary, p. 74.

That such an institution as "baptism for the dead" was in the primitive Christian church cannot be sneered away; that the precise use thereof may not now be properly understood does not militate against or disprove either the ancient practice or truthfulness of the doctrine. Christ went to heaven; there to remain until all that has been lost shall be restored, that a perfect salvation shall be accomplished. The word says:—

Whom the heaven must receive [retain] until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.—Acts 3:21.

Without baptism for the dead there seems no adequate possibility of a fulfillment of the following:—

Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things [people] in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him.—Eph. 1:9, 10.

Tertullian says:—

But inasmuch as "some are also baptized for the dead," we will see whether there be good reason for this. Now it is certain that they adopted this [practice] with such presumption as made them suppose that the vicarious baptism would be beneficial to the flesh of another in anticipation of the resurrection; for unless it were a bodily resurrection, there would be no pledge secured by this process of a corporeal baptism. "Why are they then baptized for the dead," Paul asks, unless the bodies rise again which are thus baptized? For it is not the soul which is sanctified by the baptismal bath.—Comp., p. 217.

In the preparation of this paper, there has been no attempt at sensationalism, nor yet an appeal to your prejudice or emotional nature. Think carefully and prayerfully the following in Bible language, in favor of baptism:—

And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John.—Luke 7:29.

NEGATIVE

against the ordinance of baptism:—

But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.—Luke 7:30.

Freedom of choice is left with you, whether you accept the ordinance of baptism, and obtain justification from God, or you are free to reject and receive the Pharisees' companionship in suffering punishment commensurate for rejecting proffered opportunities of making your peace, calling, and election sure.

To close, the following plain and inspired declaration is submitted:—

Therefore I give unto you a commandment, to teach these things freely unto your children, saying, that by reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death; and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so became of dust a living soul; even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin; and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come; even immortal glory. For, by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified. Therefore it is given to abide in you, the record of heaven, the Comforter, the peaceable things of immortal glory, the truth of all things, that which quickeneth all things, which maketh alive all things, that which knoweth all things, and hath all power according to wisdom, mercy, truth, justice, and judgment. And now, behold, I say unto you, This is the plan of salvation unto all men, through the blood of mine Only Begotten, who shall come in the meridian of time.—Gen. 6:61-65, I. T.

HEALING.

D. R. BALDWIN'S DEFENSE.

EDITORS HERALD:—Inasmuch as your editorial for August 22 calls in question certain methods which the writer has for some time been using in giving treatment to the sick, and as previous articles from my pen along the line of healing seem to have left the impression with many that I would in some way connect these methods with the gospel ordinance, I think it proper that I explain my position. And I may also be pardoned for defending what long, careful observation has proven to be both good and helpful. The larger portion of your editorial hits the nail squarely on the head, drives it in a sure place, and brings from the writer a hearty amen. Your clear, lucid, statements that "the operation of mesmerism, magnetism, and hypnotism is largely that of human powers alone; . . . it is human power under human control, exercised at the direction of human wisdom," "while that of laying on of hands is of the spiritual, and its presence and employment under the control and direction of the divine mind" seem to me to be the right thing at the right time and in the right place. I have from time to time set this distinction forth, and drawn the line clearly, so that the Saints, as also the world, may see that the two are separate and distinct; the one divine, the other human; that we engage in one as a part of our religious duty to God and the Saints, but in the other as a part of our business obligations to suffering humanity; in one for spiritual and physical benefits, but in the other for the good of the physical and financial. In one it becomes our duty to speak as agents, by the authority and in the name of Jesus Christ. In the other while engaging in things exclusively human, we have no right to speak in his name.

There are some exceedingly peculiar things in this editorial. For instance: "The Saint who pays money to learn the mode of operation in either of the three named influences, may obtain a species of knowledge of human possibilities within human reach. But as our experience proves to us, no permanent or lasting good has come from such knowledge, it is to us of doubtful propriety to become learned in this direction." Now I want to say: First. The editor's personal experience may have proven that he or certain others under his immediate observation received "no permanent or lasting good" from such knowledge; but how his personal observation can justify so broad a conviction and assertion as that "no permanent or lasting good has come from such knowledge" is one of the hidden mysteries. Can his lack of observation disqualify hundreds of testators who have seen and do know? The writer has before him many qualified statements of leading citizens of various localities to the end that they are the happy recipients of permanent and lasting good, and that the same came from the above-named source. Now I cannot believe that our beloved editor would wish me to give all these the lie simply because he has failed to see such things with his own eyes.

Second. We are told that we "may obtain a species of knowledge of human possibilities within human reach." Now, as all truth runs parallel with the gospel, as no two truths were ever known to conflict, as "knowledge is power," as knowledge and learning walk hand in hand with civilization and godliness, I should be pleased to know by what modus operandi the editor reached the conclusion that "it is to us of doubtful propriety to become learned in this direction." Is it "folly to be wise"?

But since he informs us that his acquaintance with the things he calls in question was formed "long before engaging in the spiritual work of the church," or over forty years ago, I begin to see a solution to the enigma. In those days nearly every student of psychology was in some way or another supposed to be connected with soothsaying, conjuring, sorcery, necromancy, witchcraft, magic, spiritualism, ledgerdemain, enchantment, the black art, etc., etc. So it is easy to see the condition of a mind that in those days commenced an investigation and became so disgusted as to conclude it to be "of doubtful propriety to become learned in this direction." Whoever will now take up the study of mental science, or the new psychology, "prove all things and hold fast that which is good," will learn that wonderful strides are being made, that thoroughly competent, unprejudiced individuals are sifting it to the depth, disrobing it of undue dogmatic assumptions, bringing it out of the long night of mystery, detaching it from all forms of evil human conjuring, and placing it on broad scientific premises.

I read again: "Much of the sickness among the Saints is due to departure from the rules of health and right living for which the sufferers are alone to be blamed." The first clause of this statement I know to be true; but I am convinced that ninety per cent of them are entirely ignorant of when or where or how the "departure" was made, or what it consists in, or how to retrace their steps or make amends for said "departure." So I cannot say with the editor, "the sufferers are alone to be blamed." How can I, since they are solemnly warned and officially cautioned against making any scientific investigation of the "rules of health and right living" in the following words: "There is absolute safety in the method appointed in the word. There is spiritual danger to a greater or lesser degree in every other, no matter what its name."

The last clause of this quotation surprises me beyond measure. The practical methods adopted by different health clubs, by hydropathy, hygiene, health science, osteopathy, mentation, mental science, physical culture, etc., are to teach the exact "rules of health and right living;" but we are now confronted with the official warning, "There is spiritual danger" "in every health method," "no matter what its name," except the church ordinance. This broad, sweeping asseveration condemns every effort we can make for self-perservation of health. If we have defective teeth, neuralgia, chills and fever, or broken bones that are giving us disease, our only safety is in being administered to, for "there is spiritual danger . . . in every other" method, "no matter what its name," and we find ourselves more than one hundred miles from an elder to officiate. Oh, me!

Let us consider a few stubborn facts as recorded in the word. "In the beginning God [and his Son] made the heavens and the earth." "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." "And God saw that it was good." To be brief, this includes man with all his human powers and possibilities for good. The only thing on earth the Devil has the honor of creating is a lie, a simple negation of truth, something that exists only in imagination. God made all force, all power, all life, and it is all good. Man is under obligation to do good by all means. We are plainly instructed in modern revelation that man should "do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves." (Italics mine.) Now if it is good to be well, if it is good to relieve the sore afflictions of our fellows, and there are human forces resident within us by which this can be done, who shall condemn us for using them? Surely it will not be God, for he has commanded us to do good of our "own free will," and told us that the power is in us. And though we are told "there is no warrant in Holy Writ for tampering with any minor and merely human agency humanly directed and controlled," it is a fact that there is not a sentence in Holy Writ that can be twisted into a prohibition of the use of all good measures to do the much good we are commanded to do of our own free will, and by the powers that are in us.

In conclusion, I want to flit a ray of light across the pathway of the Saints relative to what these "three methods" so loudly denounced are, First. Personal or animal magnetism is a mental or nervous force generated in the brain and stored in the nerves. It is distinct from muscular force, as also from spiritual force. Man is a triune being; spirit, mind, and body. There are therefore three powers in man, spiritual, mental or magnetic, and physical or muscular. No person living who has one sense left, be it hearing, seeing, smelling, tasting, or feeling, but is using personal magnetism. To ignore or condemn it is to ignore or condemn every sensation of the body. To recognize and cultivate it is to become an active, intelligent, powerful thinker.

Second. Hypnotism, so called, is nothing more nor less than the influence that one mind exerts over another mind. It is used in all branches and avenues of life. If any living person has ever influenced another person by gesture, reason, logic, fear, persuasion, or any other means, he has hypnotized that one to just that degree that he has influenced him. Therefore hypnotism is but another name for influence. Of course, it is usually applied to those more potent influences that are mysterious because not understood; but there is no known dividing line where influence ends and hypnotism begins, for they are one and the same thing. Whoever ignores or condemns hypnotism as a whole, ignores or condemns every possible influence, good, bad, or indifferent, that one person was ever known to exert over another person.

I am aware that many professional hypnotists have fixed certain limitations called degrees; but there never has been and never can be degrees fixed that will apply alike to a majority of subjects. Some say that hypnotism consists of a sleep, that the subject is not hypnotized until he goes into a deep sleep, and loses mental control of himself. Others claim that hypnotism begins when the influence reaches the spirit or subjective mind, while the conscious mind is subdued or asleep; but this will hardly do, since there is not an experienced hypnotist on earth but knows that very many subjects are under splendid control even when cerebrum is active, and that a post hypnotic suggestion will be executed when every faculty of the mind is intact. A wonderful variety of complications arise with different temperaments, and I again affirm, without fear of successful contradiction, that hypnotism is only another name for influence.

There is practically no end to the methods by which hypnosis may be induced; but a large majority of people are more easily influenced if you step close up to them, put your hand on them, look them straight in the eye, and make positive suggestions. Let a strong, well balanced mind do this, and the average mind at once loses its poise, and is easily influenced, duped, and swindled out of his hard earned money. All good salesmen, all noted orators, all successful commanders, and all prominent revivalists are hypnotists or influencers. Many are able to drive shrewd bargains in this way. The sufferer firmly resolves not to be caught that way again; but they soon find that some one else under other circumstances has again "held them up." They have no idea why they were so spellbound, or how it was done, and so they go on through life as mere tools used by the cunning and avaricious. Now the writer is most sure that with this class it would not be "of doubtful propriety to become learned in this direction."

Third. Mesmerism is only an inferior or limited degree of hypnotism, wherein the operator influences himself with the subject. In our practice, we simply influence the patient into a relaxed or passive state, and then by plying suggestions in a scientific manner we arouse life's forces, and start a unanimity of action in the vital organs. If the disease be functional, it is often there and then remedied. If it be organic, nature sets up a lively action to clear the obstructed channels and repair damage.

The Herald readers now have the matter before them in a nutshell, and if they feel so disposed can criticise it intelligently.

REPENTANCE AND FORGIVENESS.

Faith and repentance are most usually associated in Bible quotations, as also in our publications and pulpits. It is the design of this brief article to show the relation which repentance and forgiveness bear to each other in Christian life.

Repentance signifies turning away from our sins, or, as Daniel gave the thought to Nebuchadnezzar, "Break off thy sins by righteousness." Sorrow for sin is not repentance: –

For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death.—2 Cor. 7:10

Pardon a passing thought. Prolonged, deep regret over financial loss will destroy the energies of business life, and blast all hope of temporal success faster than any other agency.

Back to our subject. Genuine repentance, if indeed not the very resolution to repent, is always attended by the seeking of the forgiveness of our heavenly Father, through the merits and power of the blood of Jesus. Jesus has made it an absolute necessity, when seeking pardon from God, to obtain it also from our brother who may have aught against us.

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matt. 5: 23, 24

But says one, "I've done nothing wrong. My brother has not justly anything against me; he only thinks he has. Shall I confess to something I have not done?"

The trouble lies in the difference of opinion as to what is or is not wrong. It is much easier to hold my brother to be wrong, than to admit myself wrong. But the reconciliation must be made sooner or later, and the sooner the better. The longer the delay, the more difficult the task. The plan adopted by so many, to keep away from him, leaving him entirely alone, will never do. And we venture to say that whoever dares to pursue this course will meet disappointment when he crosses the river of death. Matthew 18:35 warrants this conclusion.

But says one, "That verse speaks of the one who holds the offense, not the one against whom it is held."

True, but it follows that no person can possibly avoid unpleasant feelings toward one who is holding offense, real or imaginary, against him, so the verse is applicable to both.

On the other hand, Jesus has taught us to pray, "Forgive us our tresspasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." In his explanation of this prayer, he said:—

For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.—Matt. 6:14, 15

In Matthew 18: 23–35 we read the parable illustrating the kingdom of heaven concerning forgiveness. After saying that, this lord delivered the unforgiving servant to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. Jesus adds:—

So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.—Verse 35.

If these scriptures mean what they say, it is utterly useless to bow the suppliant knee before the throne of grace, and lift the pleading voice for pardon while we hold in our hearts aught against anyone.

But says one, "We do not hold anything against the offender, but we'll keep him at a distance."

Impossible! Vain delusion! More than this, our forgiveness must be more perfect than such as is frequently granted. For example, we will suppose that Bro. A. has done me grievous wrong. After thinking, and perhaps praying over the difficulty between us, he sees the wrong, and with real sorrow and deep repentance in his heart, he comes to me and says, "Bro. B., I was wrong; I did you a real injury. I want you to forgive me and forget the offense." In the plenitude (?) of brotherly love I reply, "I'll forgive you, but I can't forget the wrong."

When next I bend the knee and lift the heart, "Father, forgive me my trespasses, as I forgive those who trespass against me," and God answers me just according to that prayer: "I'll forgive you, but I can't forget the wrong;" tell me, how wide will the pearly gates swing on their golden hinges to admit me to the realm where all is love?

Another form of such magnanimous (?) pardon is frequently displayed. "I'll forgive you, but I don't want anything more to do with you." When next I pray, God answers me with the same words. What seat will I have in heaven with such forgiveness? How long will I survive when God will have nothing more to do with me? How long can a repentant offender, unforgiven or forgiven (?), with all succor cut off, continue in the faith? I tell you my brethren and sisters, no more momentous questions were ever propounded. The great question, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" was not more important. We "compass land and sea" to bring souls into the garner of God, but suffer many, O too many! to "make shipwreck of faith," for the want of the mantle of charity, that "hideth a multitude of sins." (Jas. 5: 19, 20.) The whole text reads thus:—

Brethren, if any of you [not the world] do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner [not a sinner, as of the world] from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.

Some one will say, "I don't believe in hiding sin; let it come out; expose it to the church and the world," Well, its you and God for that. I've given the text as it reads.

I am aware that the Inspired version of the Bible gives James 5: 20, "Prevent a multitude of sins," instead of "hide" them. No doubt this is the correct rendering. "An ounce of preventive is better than a pound of cure." Lack of charity is sin, for we are commanded to both love and forgive. When we hate we sin, and by hatred refuse or fail to forgive, so multiply, or cause "a multitude of sins," which we could prevent by charity. This would prevent the sin of unforgiving, bitterness, and its evil crop from the seeds of uncharitable holding of pardon, or bitterness of soul toward an offending brother. Therefore he that forgiveth not has multiplied his sins, while the offender who repents and seeks pardon does not. Hence the unrelenting, uncharitable, and unforgiving one multiplies the sin of uncharitable judgment by the sin of not forgiving, and so hath the greater sin.

Now says another, "To forget the offense is more than we can do." No more groundless statement was ever uttered! God gives us the pattern in Ezekiel 18: 22 and 33: 16.

None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him.

And I know that when reconciliation has been so completely made that the wrong shall be no more mentioned to the repentant offender (nor anyone else), the memory will not be long forgetting the offense forever.

More than this neither God the Father nor Jesus our Lord has made it optional with us to forgive or not forgive, as we choose. Neither are we at liberty to withhold forgiveness till the offense and repentance has gone beyond "seven times in a day." (See Luke 17: 3, 4.) "Thou shalt forgive him." Neither till the total number of offenses and times of forgiveness shall exceed "seven times seventy." (See Matt. 18 : 21, 22.) There is no option about it.

It follows then that forgiveness withheld from a repentant brother or sister, whether individually or collectively, will bring consequences from which there is no escape.

'Tis true, the Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 9, provides that the murderer (in the church) shall not be forgiven, but that he shall die, i. e., he shall be delivered up to the law of the land (to pay the penalty), as provided in paragraph 22. Paragraph 7 also provides that one committing adultery the second time, i. e., after being once forgiven, shall be cast out. But mark the language in the first instance:—

If he repents with all his heart, and forsaketh it, and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive him.

No option there.

"Thou shalt."

But mark, other evils have not this limitation.

It is a fearful thing to refuse pardon to a repentant offender, either individually or collectively.

Wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men.—D C. 64: 2.

O. B. THOMAS.

WILKESVILLE, Ohio, Aug. 21, 1900.

THE MILLENNIUM;

OR, THE FINAL INHERITANCE OF GOD'S PEOPLE.

The earth, though not always in the same form, is eternal. By this we mean that the substance of which it is composed had no beginning and will never have an end. Before the creation it existed, though "without form, and void" (Gen. 1: 2). Since the creation it has undergone great changes; but though deformed, the substance has not ceased to exist. Nor will it ever cease to exist, though it will undergo various changes and transformations.

Peter, in speaking of the world that existed before the deluge, says:—

The world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished.—2 Peter 3: 6.

Thus it is clearly seen that "perish" does not signify annihilation, or reduction to nothing; for the "world that then was" and the present world are of identically the same material.

"But," says one, "the world referred to by Peter means the people only."

Not exclusively. The context shows the contrary; the verse before, and the one after the one quoted above show that the earth is included. In the seventh verse of that same chapter, Peter says:—

But the heavens and the earth, which are now, as if they—the one before the flood and the one since—were two different earths. The earth, in the time of the flood, was "divided," and since that it has experienced great earthquakes, etc. (Gen. 10: 25; 1 Chron. 1: 19.) Yet everyone who has read the Bible knows that the present earth is the same earth, in substance, that existed before the flood.

If, then, the fact that the earth "perished" in the destruction of the antediluvian world does not prove that it ceased to exist (the substance), we have no right to believe it will cease to exist, or be reduced to nothing, if we read that it is to be destroyed again. Before, it was purified by water; next time it will be purified by fire. It is now "kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." God never made something out of nothing, and he will never make nothing out of something. Solomon says, "the earth abideth for ever" (Eccles. 1: 4). In Psalms we read:—

The earth which he hath established for ever.—Psalms 78: 69.

These passages emphatically deny the cessation of the earth's existence. If they are true, the earth will exist "for ever." If they are untrue, then we are at a loss to determine what part of the scriptures is true.

"But," say some, "Peter declares that the earth shall be burned up." But that does not in the least change the passages cited in the foregoing, which declare that the earth will exist "forever." Nor does it prove that those passages do not mean just what they say. Both of these positions cannot be right; one must be wrong. They are directly opposed to each other; and if there is proof for each position, the proof must be just as inharmonious as the positions themselves; hence, if such proof exists in the Bible, then the Bible is self-contradictory. Peter says:—

The elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.—2 Peter 3: 10.

This is how it appears in the so-called authorized version.

It must be remembered that the division of the Bible into chapters and verses, insertion of punctuation marks, as commas, etc., are only of human introduction. The translators inserted commas so as to convey in the English what was intended in the original tongue from which they translated. Inasmuch as they were apt to misunderstand things, they were apt to improperly punctuate. It is very easy to punctuate a verse or sentence so that the meaning will be changed entirely. Now with reference to that passage in Peter: if the comma appearing after the word "heat," appeared after "also," it would make a marked difference in the idea conveyed. It would then imply or say that the "elements" and "earth also" shall melt with fervent heat, and that only the "works that are therein shall be burned up." Another translation reads:—

The mountains shall melt, and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat: the earth also shall be filled, and the corruptible works which are therein shall be burned up.

This agrees with other scriptures; and the translation it is taken from is no less authoritative than King James'.

Another passage the writer has known to be urged as conflicting with the doctrine of the millennium is found in John:—

I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also.—John 14: 2, 3.

This, say they, is evidence that the Saints will not reign on the earth; because the place he was going to prepare to receive them into is in the air. But, we ask, is that any proof that it will always remain there? Is it immovable? If not, what is there to interfere with the idea that it will be brought to earth? Nothing, answers one. All right then, that passage furnishes you "nothing" to refute our position after all. And before getting through with this (reading it through) work, the reader will find that that "place" will be brought to earth.

Another objection; in Thessalonians we read:—

Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.—1 Thess 4: 17.

Therefore, say they, we will, according to this passage, exist in the "air"—not on the earth." How weak this is! The declaration that the saints will be "caught up to meet the Lord" furnishes no proof whatever that they will not descend again; especially when the Bible abounds with passages which say that the saints will reign on the earth after the second advent of Jesus. There is nothing more reasonable than to suppose that the righteous will be caught up until the corruptible things of the earth are consumed by fire. But to say they will never come down again is going a little further than we are warranted. Still it remains to be proved that the earth will be the final inheritance of God's people. We have shown that it always will exist, that it is eternal and will exist "forever;" and that there is nothing in the scriptures to discredit the possibility of its being the Saints' final resting place.

We will now produce the evidences the Bible affords to show that it will be the abode of the faithful. Jesus said:—

Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth.

If there were nothing more said in the Bible in relation to this subject, this ought to settle it to those who believe the Bible to be true. Yet some who delight in juggling the scriptures and making things agree with their traditions, object to this passage as proving what we claim. They say it does not refer to the world to come, for the meek inherit the earth now. So do the wicked inherit the earth now. If Jesus alluded to the present life, he might have, with equal propriety, pronounced the same blessing on the wicked. For if the meek are blessed simply because they live on the earth, it follows logically that the wicked are blessed for the same reason. The "four and twenty elders" sang:—

And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

This is placed in the future. It is found in Revelation 5:10; and in chapter eleven we read:—

The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.—Rev 11:15

This great transformation—of the "kingdoms of this world" into Christ's kingdoms—has not yet occurred; therefore it is in the future. And Peter, after speaking of the fermentation of the present earth, which we have already shown means purification, says:—

Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.—2 Peter 3:13

In Revelation twenty-first chapter, is a description of the fulfillment of what Peter "looked for." In the fifth verse God says, "Behold, I make all things new"—not all new things.

The most definite language as to the length of time the saints will reign on the earth before another change occurs, and from which I derive the title of this article, "The Millennium," is found in the first part of the twentieth chapter of Revelation. It declares that an angel is to come down and bind Satan at the beginning of the "thousand years." It will also be seen that a resurrection takes place at that time. The righteous will then be raised, but the rest of the dead will remain in their graves until the expiration of the thousand years (Rev. 20:4-6). Also see 1 Thessalonians 4:16; and 1 Corinthians 15:23. The "thousand years" reign will be on the earth (Rev. 20:8, 9).

The Old Testament also abounds with proof for this doctrine. In Psalms we read:—

For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth.—Ps. 37:9.

Thus it is clearly seen by this passage that those who "wait upon the Lord," the righteous, shall "inherit the earth;" and that after the "evil doers shall be cut off." Verse 22 says:—

For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

The eighteenth and twenty-ninth verses show how long the blessed shall inherit the earth:—

The Lord knoweth the days of the upright: and their inheritance shall be for ever.

The twenty-ninth verse says:—

The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

Isaiah, referring to the state of existence in the great hereafter, says:—

Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever.

We are also informed by Zechariah that—

The Lord shall be King over all the earth.—14:9, this, too, is after he sets his feet on the mount of Olives; after his second advent. (See verses 3 and 4.)

The righteous, during their inheritance of the earth in the "world to come," will have bodies of flesh and bones. Jesus is our type, our pattern. He is the "firstfruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. 15:20). He is the "firstborn from the dead." (Col. 1:18; Rev. 1:5.) He was the first to "rise from the dead" (Acts 26:23). That is, he was the first to rise to immortality. Others were raised from the dead before him; as examples: Lazarus, Dorcas, Jairus' daughter; but they were only raised to mortality. For proof that he has a body of flesh and bones we refer to Luke 24:39. The three preceding verses record his appearance to his disciples after his resurrection. They thought that they had "seen a spirit." But Jesus says:—

Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

Soon after this occurrence he led them out as far as Bethany, and after blessing them, ascended with that same body of flesh and bones. As he ascended, the disciples stood gazing up after him; and

Two men [angels] stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts 1:10, 11.

If he comes in "like manner" then, he will come with a body of flesh and bones; and John says:—

We know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.—1 John 3:2.

As additional evidence and plainness on the question, I cite the language of Paul:—

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body.—Phil. 3:20, 21.

If our bodies are "fashioned like unto his," we will also have bodies of flesh and bones. Our bodies will then be destitute of blood (1 Cor. 15:50). Blood is for the sustenance of the natural life; spirit will sustain the spiritual life. Every body occupied by blood is mortal, subject to sickness, pain, distress, etc.; whereas, every living body unoccupied by blood is immortal and spiritual, hence, it is insusceptible of the calamitous conditions so common to the natural body.

As to the change the earth will undergo in its preparation for an inheritance for the saints, I submit the following scriptures. John the Baptist, in speaking of the coming of Jesus Christ, said:—

Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.—Matt. 3:12.

"Purge" means cleanse, and "floor" means the earth, while the "wheat" and "chaff" are clearly the wicked and the righteous. Therefore, he will burn up the wicked and cleanse the earth. The Psalmist says:—

Thou renewest the face of the earth.—104:30.

Again, it is said in reference to the coming of the Messiah:—

A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about. . . . The hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord.—Ps 97:3-5.

Also, read in this connection Psalm 46:6-11. The change will consist in melting of hills, exaltation of valleys, etc., according to this language, or cleansing and leveling the earth's surface.

For a description of the condition of the saints during that glorious period, read Isaiah 2:4; 11:6-9; 60:18-22; 65:17-25; Ezekiel 38:25, 26; Rev. chapters 20, 21, and 22.

Therein it will be found that during that triumphant reign of peace and happiness the saints shall "build houses and inhabit them, plant vineyards and eat of the fruit thereof," and so on. They will also beat their swords into plowshares; they will have no more use for swords, as war will be ended.

Knowing that such a great reward is at the end of our pilgrimage here, it enables us to endure hardships, trials, and temptations. With faithful Abraham and other worthies, we "seek a country" and a "city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

May all who read this come to a knowledge of the truth, that they may participate in the reception of those blessings. ALVIN KNISLEY.

BARNACLES AND CLOGS.

The first-named incumbrances are in the habit of attaching themselves to other shells, rocks, the hulls of vessels, and wreckage afloat on the high seas. Their numerous external tentacles take hold of and tenaciously cling to solid substances, as the tendrils of the vine, or the ivy, cling to bower or wall. To free the ship of these invaders is a task indeed; but it must be done frequently at the expense of arduous labor.

If great caution and skillful toil are essential to keep afloat these crafts and secure the cargo, what about the old ship of Zion? We should not scotch, brake, sprag, nor otherwise impede the great wheel of human progress.

An honorable war is far better than an ignominious peace. The fight of faith must be both offensive and defensive. It is unyielding, inflexible, inexorable, uncompromising, and perpetual. Whenever anyone winks at sin, or shuts his eyes or stops his ears at the appearance of wrongdoing, he is compromised, more or less, according to the turpitude. To apply palliatives or extenuate a crime by throwing the cloak of charity over the affair, is a reproach and a palpable fraud. The reins of our church are held in a slack manner, by palsied, ineffectual hands. Flagrant evils go unrebuked, only in a tame, general way; exhorting to faithfulness, and diligence, with promised blessings, is not effectual.

Busybodying, backbiting, evil surmising, jealousies, and the likes, are reprehensible. Vulgarity, profanity, and the giddy dance are all out of character. Sloth and filth are twin sisters, and a double scandal. Drunkenness is a dark, deep gulch, and lasciviousness is an open sepulcher and a dismal grave.

Our institution is carrying entirely too much driftwood. We should never lower the moral standard nor trail the banner of Prince Immanuel in the dirt and mire. The eldership does not "see that the law is kept," neither do the local and standing ministers keep out iniquity. If the Seventies undertake to administer wholesome church discipline, or even counsel in an advisory way, high dignitaries and district and branch officials thus instructed will not be slow to tell them to keep hands off, and go out to minister to the world. It is a pretty note if this band of missionaries can proselyte—but cannot either feed sheep or lambs when the local machinery is sadly out of tune or inactive.

Some branches have reported elders and the lesser priesthood, when all these high and many of the other officers used tobacco in various ways. Some church organizations and religious movements that have no recent accepted word of God, but the light of olden revelation, coupled with experience and observation and the torch of reason, and the love of truth, have prohibited the use of the noxious, dirty poison weed, while many of our benighted shepherds and bewildered sheep bow down to this false god of a perverted taste, and that, too, in the very face of the divine denunciation and prohibition.

Shall we move the parasites and unclog the wheel, or will we ever "Fellowship the unfruitful works of darkness?" Fraudulent and false is he who cannot or will not see these gins and snares and pitfalls for unwary feet. While it is merciful to tenderly care for the sick and wounded, it is but proper, right, and just to prune and purge away all dangerous and useless dead and decaying branches. Can you fly a kite with a millstone tied to its tail? Can we be the light of the world while we take in about everything, and then carry and fellowship, year in and year out, a motley crew of the baser sort?

I know full well that no human hand can weed out all the tares or discriminate always where to draw the line of church discipline. In equity and in law the jeopardized have the advantage of doubt. In ecclesiastical government the one in peril and under trial should be favored with reasonable dubiety, but the door of mercy should not rob justice. Right rule heroically enforced is an angel of love in proper attire. To wink at, connive with, be deaf to, or in anywise palliate, smother, or extenuate sin in our best friend, or even members of our own household is wickedness; for, behold, the justice of our courts and the jurisprudence of the land allow "that it is a crime to conceal a crime." I want the morals of our people to keep pace with their faith and profession. I want us to preach good and practice as well, lest merited reproach and disintegration blast the fair fields of prosperity.

While the strong are enjoined to bear with the infirmities of the weak, and comfort the feeble-minded, that does not mean that they should let them severely alone, and never visit and counsel them. Let us seek to rescue the unfortunate, and reclaim the estranged, and feed the flock with the sincere milk of righteousness and truth. As we are prohibited of God from fellowshiping the unfruitful works of darkness, and enjoined to withdraw from those that walk disorderly, still excommunication should be the last and only resort. I trust and partly believe that the moral tone is getting better year by year as a whole, with some local exceptions; but, behold, I want to see lovely Zion put on her strength.

Please tell me not of your failures and troubles, nor yet of the trials and peccadillos of the Saints, unless I am bound under the law, and as I am called to aid in trying and judging of all such matters; then I will be under obligation to hear evidences and proofs on the case under official consideration. I do not wish to hear, neither is it right for me to listen to, a tale of woe or injustice, imaginary or real, when acting as a field officer and engaged in mission work. I cannot give relief, or preach the stories while acting as a gospeler. It is stealing my time to ask me to hear only one side "because it is you." Furthermore, I do not see that any have the right to fill me full and then enjoin me to keep still. I get everybody to help me to keep secrets, so you see I am a poor confidential. I delight not in the defeat and downfall of any; but the right must be vindicated if it hurts somebody.

If I have stated myself in strong and seemingly harsh terms, it is for the good of all and an error in method, not in intention. I would far sooner be hurt than to needlessly wound any. I can forgive, have forgiven, and still hope to forgive the trespasser; for, indeed, my selfish nature and my best interests tell me so to do. No properly balanced mind is likely to commit suicide, or otherwise injure himself. Self-preservation is nature's primal law; therefore, Paul said no one ever hated himself. We must also love our All-wise creator and benefactor, and our neighbor as ourselves.

May the Father love us freely, and bless us ever by his guiding hand, and through the ministrations of his adorable Son and our blessed Savior.

HOLLY, Mich., Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—It has been a long time since I have written you in regard to the work of the Lord in my field of labor; but I can assure you I have not been altogether idle, but have been working with Bro. William Davis in the tent. I like the tent for two days' meetings, but for holding meetings in opening new places I do not like it at all. I would sooner preach in schoolhouses, churches, and halls.

Quite a good many were baptized at our two days' meetings, and the Saints were cheered and encouraged in the work. I am now preaching at Five Points schoolhouse, where Bro. Levi Phelps preached a few years ago. I felt directed to come here. Hunted up the school board and got permission to preach in the house, and then learned Bro. Phelps had preached here long ago. Maybe there are some here who will obey the gospel.

How hard it is to convice people we are living in the last days. Last year a cyclone went through here and killed men, women, and children; and with the great tidal wave of Galveston and the one at Japan a few years ago, when thirty thousand people perished, these with perilous times, earthquakes, and the Jews gathering to Palestine, one of the greatest signs of our times that the end of this world is near; yet the people will not wake up to the fact that the Lord is coming, and his marvelous work is before him, as predicted by the prophets: "The light shines in darkness, and the darkness comprehends it not." I feel confident that the Lord of hosts is working and causing everything that is going on around us, to bring to fulfillment the things spoken by the prophets in days of old. And as the Saints are not in darkness, and know what the Lord has said, I believe they should do as the Lord said, "Pray, that they may be accounted worthy to escape those things that are coming on the earth." It is very necessary they be united and work together in order to bring about the redemption of Zion and the gathering of the Saints. The work is gaining ground slowly, and people who were once our enemies are now our friends. The leaven is working, and the honest in heart being gathered into the fold of Christ.

Yours for the truth,

F. C. SMITH.

OAKNOOK, Man., September 27.

Editors Herald:—At last writing I had just reached my present place of labor, which is now about five weeks past. Since then I have, under the blessing of God, labored with some success. Had no difficulty in finding places to preach, hence was soon occupying in the Orange hall, on what is called the Big Ridge, and in three other schoolhouses. Have been busy right along, laboring mostly at the Orange hall. As a result of continued effort, twelve have been baptized to date, and more are likely to follow very soon. Interest from the first has been very good. A retired Presbyterian preacher made a sneaking attempt to offset my work which met with some support from the creed-bound in the community; but as I defended the latter day work and showed the injustice of such an attack, and the cowardice of the individual making it, the more intelligent and unbiased were willing to listen to the story of the angel's message. Have met and had talks with the Baptist and Methodist preachers, but they did not seem to appreciate the force of good logic. The former made an agreement to meet and have an afternoon's private conversation; but having heard of a rumor about me using another Bible, he called, in my absence, to say he did not intend to have any further talk with me. I met him afterward on the road and "compelled" him to take a little medicine for his soul's sake.

The Methodist minister heard me preach one sermon from my chart on the restoration, and expressed himself as delighted, but policy, such as some of these Yesites follow rightly entitles them to the name of hypocrites. This man professes acquaintance with Elder A. E. Mortimer, having worked with him in Paisley, Ontario, some years ago. His name is Gregg. Do you recollect, Bro. Mort?

Nothing happening to prevent, I expect Gospel Quarterlies to reach me in time for opening Sunday school two weeks from Sunday coming, making it October 14. Prospects are good for a branch being organized, but we continue the work and hope for the best. A new line of railway from Dauphin runs west across the Big Ridge, two and one half miles south of the hall. A station is to be built and named Ridgeway. In bonds,

FREDERICK GREGORY.

TERRYVILLE, Conn., Sept. 30.

Editors Herald:—I should like to give a little experience through the Herald that may be of some encouragement to those who may be investigating the claims of the L. D. S. Church. I have been a believer and a professor of Christianity since a young man, and for over thirty years have had faith in the gospel as given to the apostles, and have contended with several men who have had the faith of the Wesleyans and others of the same faith as they, but never came in contact with the Saints until August, 1898, when I visited my brother, J. P. Knox, in Missouri, and from that time have taken the Ensign. Then I took the Herald and Autumn Leaves, and was convinced of the truthfulness of the work, and decided to obey at the first opportunity; but being so far from any branch or church I was prevented until the reunion at Silver Lake, Plimpton, about one hundred and sixty miles from where I live. I decided to go to see the brethren and sisters there. Knowing no one there, it seemed quite a trial for me to go so far; my wife thought it a "wild goose chase;" but I thank God that I took the step for I have been amply repaid for the trouble. When I found the brethren there I found they were friends indeed. My prayer is that the Lord will bless such people. It was there that I was buried under the silvery tide, and rose to a newness of life as it is in Christ.

There has been great peace with me. One of the sisters said to me that I would never regret the step taken. I do not see why I should, for I have passed the most peaceful two months I ever spent in my life. It comes from rendering obedience to the word that says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

As I have received so much from the hands of the Lord, I want to know the brother who is Bishop's agent in the New York district, so that I may send my tithing to him at the earliest date. I thought Bro. Greene would have seen to that—the Lord bless him.

Your brother in bonds,

THOMAS KNOX.

AVENUE CITY, Mo., Sept. 20.

Editors Herald:—This leaves me at this place taking up the work that I had to drop in order to go and assist in tent at Rea. Bro. D. C. White thought while we were at the "Barnard reunion" that he could get some of the local brethren, to help with the meeting at Rea, and I could go and see about the work at this part. This accounts for his being alone. The meeting at Rea was well attended and good was done. While none of the world's people were baptized, six of the children of the Saints were. A vast amount of the prejudice that was in the minds of the people is moved. In time some will more fully learn the truth.

Next the tent was taken to Rosendale. Attendance was not good at first on account of mosquitoes, bad weather, and prejudice; but matters changed. We had good crowds, and the people were kind to us. Thought the preaching was the best ever done in the town. The few Saints living there did all they could to get them to come out to meeting. I believe the Lord blessed them in gaining the good will of the people for their faith and works. Am safe in saying as much good was done at this place as at Rea. I was left alone with the tent near the close, as Bro. D. C. White had to go home a few days. Bro. J. C. Vaughn, of Rea, assisted me, he was also with Bro. White while he was with the tent. A coming young man.

It is plain to be seen that our reunion at Barnard was of worth to the mission; not to the Saints only, but the outside as well, and paves the way for the good seed as preached by the elders.

District reunion is a splendid plan, much better than too many large ones, as the influence is had where it is most needed. In each mission the Saints get the same amount of good, and they are doing good building up the work at home. This can all be done with very little expense to each one.

Although this is campaign year, it does not make very great difference in our work that I can see. We are surrounded by work on every side.

The Saints of this district are alive and at work in every way they can to build up. They that have this world's goods pay to the Lord the part that is his, "one tenth," and remember the traveling elders in his expenses. There is some splendid talent among the middle aged and young, for preaching, Sunday school work, and music. The outlook is good in this mission.

Trusting that the Master's work everywhere may prosper, truly,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

Editors Herald:—At our Mutual Improvement class, the question arose as to how many kings existed on April 6, 1830, the date of the organization of the church. I investigated the subject, and found the following kings. It was determined to send the list for publication in the Herald, asking at the same time any reader to point out the particular ten kings that Daniel referred to.

List of Kings who reigned April 6, 1830:—

Austria, Francis I., crowned August 11, 1804, died March 2, 1835.

Afghanistan, Dost Mahomed Khan, crowned 1826, deposed 1838.

Bavaria, Louis I., crowned October 13, 1825, abdicated March 21, 1848.

Brazil, Dom Pedro, crowned 1822, abdicated April 7, 1831.

China, Taow Kwang, crowned 1820, died January, 1850.

Egypt, Mehemit Ali, crowned March 1, 1811, expelled 1839.

France, Charles X., crowned September 16, 1824, deposed July 30, 1830.

Great Britain, George IV., crowned August 11, 1804, died June 26, 1830.

Germany, Frederick William III., crowned 1797, died June 7, 1840.

Hanover, George Augustus Frederick, crowned 1820, died June, 1830.

Madagascar, Radam I., crowned 1810, died August 23, 1861.

GUERNSEY, Cal., Sept. 29.

Editors Herald:—I wish to say through the Herald to the people of this district that Bro. D. Allen and the writer are at present in the Taquin Valley, and that my address will be Tulare City, California, and that we will be pleased to hear from all who desire preaching. We are here for that purpose, and wish the help of the Saints. The tent is over here, and can be used if it is thought best. It is a hard year to do much, but next may be worse for all we know, so let us each one do all we can, remembering that it is the doer of the word that God likes.

MANY SIMILAR CASES.

"O there, by the way," said Mrs. Slocum, to her neighbor, Mrs. Goodlaw, "have you heard the good news?"

"No; what is it?" interrogated the other with interest.

"Not much—only old Dave Friendless has put an end to his mortal existence, and I for one am glad of it. I was tired and sick of seeing him wandering around in other folks' way, and I wish all such trash would follow his example."

An expression of pleasure accompanied the remark, whereas Mrs. Goodlaw's countenance exhibited a look of respect and pity, and she gently replied:—

"Poor man; circumstances drove him to the act, no doubt, and he has only one near relative to mourn for him, and I don't imagine that that mourning will be very deep. His has been a sad life,—a wearisome life from birth. He was born in extreme poverty; and besides, his eyes had a birthmark, which shut off much of the power of sight. His parents were very illiterate, but when of proper age they sent him to the district school. He was often minus a book, but with all of his difficulties, he learned as well as the average of his age, and no doubt if he had ——"

"But he has been terrible ugly and revengeful ever since I knew him and I should think, judging by his appearance, that he was a half fool," was the abrupt, unfeeling reply of the surface thinker.

"I will admit that he has done many things that were wrong; but show me one person that never did wrong if you can, even though he or she has been blessed with good mental and physical powers, and with good advantages for development, and I will show you thousands who have erred, ourselves included."

"O well, but I don't expect to find perfection in anyone; but I do think he might have done better than he did do! He would have had more friends, sure."

"Certainly; so might all who have lived, and all who are living, have done better, and possibly would, had their circumstances been different, or could they have realized the result of their doings and withheld from their wrong acts. I will admit that he has been revengeful and malicious; but he has more excuse than many, for he had no good instruction in his youth. His mother died when he was a little child, and his father, brother, and sister who were older than he was, often left him alone the larger part of the day with scanty food and more scant clothing, and often without fire in cold weather. Such was his childhood; and when I think of it, my heart is pained. When his father died, their apology of a home was broken up. The brother died, and the sister went out to service, and poor Dave became a wanderer, seeking food and shelter, or a job at cutting wood or shoveling earth. His sight was so poor he could not learn to work as other men—it grew worse as he grew older—but was willing to do what he could, and I am sorry to say that some who hired him would not pay him the value of his work, and others mocked him and scornfully turned him from their doors, and some one stole a part of the little that he had in a camp, where he tried to stay awhile. Who then can wonder that his hereditary spirit of revenge was stirred? Ofttimes that of which he was not guilty was laid to his charge, and told and retold against him, and the guilty one went clear. Each recital added to his disgrace and to his sorrow. Those who took in the reports, not understanding the facts of the case, fell in with the majority, and I am one of that number, Mrs. Slocum. But right glad am I that I had the privilege of seeing the man, and talking with him, in connection with a few who knew much of his history and biased their opinion by a spirit of charity.

"I was very glad to learn the truth and glad to have my soul stripped of its unjust prejudice, and have it clothed instead with sympathy and kindness," said Mrs. Goodlaw, her countenance beaming with emotions adapted to her words.

"But he was revengeful and malicious, and you cannot deny it," replied the other, peering into the face of her hostess, as if about to drive a nail.

"Certainly not. I would not deny a fact; but I would state also that many people who are blessed with friends and the comforts of life, are as revengeful as he was, and do not have the excuse that they were driven into the practice: and strange to say, the world does not censure them so harshly as it did that poor friendless one. When speaking of his evil propensities, why not be fair and note his good points?"

"Well, I declare; I never heard it spoken of in that light before. He must have had rather an unpleasant life, sure." After a moment's thought she added, "And I fear an unpleasant life in the other world."

"Unpleasant is not strong enough to apply to his earthly conditions; and as regards his future life, we know but little—God takes all things into account and deals justly."

"But the Bible says that no self-murderer can enter into the kingdom of heaven; so of course he is lost—is cast out." Her face was clothed with solemn thoughtfulness.

"I have read the Bible through many times, and failed to find your statement in it; but instead, found the words, No murderer has eternal life abiding in him,' replied the vindicator of truth.

"Well, I don't know; I never read it much, but I have heard Aunt Jerusha quote it."

"My opinion is that no sane person would rashly take his or her own life. The mind cannot be fairly balanced at the time. The victim must be driven to desperation by a cause, known perhaps to no one but himself, and in a frenzied moment performs the act.

"There are many, very many methods of suicide. Corsets, poisonous beautifiers, whether applied to the face or to the hair, the close following of injurious fashions of dress, or of an excess of amusements, overlabor of brain or of body, indulgence in licentious habits, drunkenness or dissipation of any kind. Now I would ask right here, Which is under the greater condemnation, one who has rashly, in a moment of distraction, put an end to his own life, or one who has done the same by excessively following fashion, or by indulgence in dissipation?"

"I don't know, I'm sure," was the reply, in a thoughtful manner; "but as we read that

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Judas, who hung himself, went to eternal punishment, I supposed that everyone who has committed suicide must fare the same fate."

"My dear woman, where do we read that Judas went to eternal punishment?" queried Mrs. Goodlaw, in surprise.

"I don't know exactly; but it is somewhere in the last part of the New Testament, I guess. It is there, I know, for I have heard my mother and lots of folks quote it."

"The twenty-seventh chapter of Matthew tells us about Judas' terrible crimes—the betrayal of his beloved Master—and his suicide; and it is stated in the first chapter of Acts, that Judas fell from his apostleship by transgression, that he might go to his own place; but I am not able to tell where that place is or what it is. It is just such a place as he merits, no doubt; and as Dave's crime is so much inferior to Judas', and as God punishes according to the deeds, we must think that the former cannot be punished according to the latter. I think it is a fearful thing to rush into the presence of God unbidden, and pray that I may be withheld from such an act, and also that I may be able to comfort those who are being driven into it. Yet I am unable to tell what the future state of such must be. We will leave that with the righteous Judge," was the thoughtful reply.

"Well, I 'spose that is the best way," responded the other.

"Now in regard to his being foolish, I will say a few words, then drop the whole subject. When conversing with him, I was greatly surprised to see what a brilliant mind he had, and thought if he had had a fair chance in the world he would have been far above the average of men. He enjoyed talking on the Scriptures, and asked many deep questions. In his youth he had no opportunity of learning God's law, and very little later on; he seemed to appreciate that little, however. He had a sweet voice to sing, it reminded me of the warbling of a bird. He had memorized many pieces of music by hearing them sung, so you see he was not an idiot (as many mean when they say, 'a fool'); neither did he have more unwise points than the average of mortals. As he was blessed with talents, and not with sight and opportunities to improve them, it seems to me that he will be looked upon in the life to come with a greater degree of allowance than those who have been blessed with the five senses, and with opportunities for mental and spiritual development, and especially those who have treated him as the rich man did the beggar. His case is beyond our reach, but there are many similar ones, so let us be more thoughtful in future."

OUR NEED AS A DISTRICT ASSOCIATION.

BY LEVI GAMET.

That we are needy is apparent to all who stop to think. My purpose in this paper is to point out some of the more pressing needs as they appear to me.

Our need as adapted to the end to be accomplished may better be appreciated by a brief notice of that end; namely, the awakening of an interest in the mind of the young in a knowledge of the scriptures and of spiritual things, and the satisfying of that interest by supplying the tender minds so awakened with the necessary food for thought and mental and spiritual growth. Among the things needed for the accomplishment of this end may be named first a host; men and women, old or young, it matters not so much, but a host is needed of those who comprehend the necessity of the work to be done and who are willing to do what lies within their power and opportunity in the performance of such a work. These workers should be imbued with the thought that nothing can be attained by spasmodic effort; that it requires continuous, persistent labor, and that from an unselfish, sacrificing motive. The best qualification is the same as pointed out for the minister, "Faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work." These workers may be Sunday school officers having the general oversight of Sunday school organizations. They may be teachers of classes in these same organizations. Or last, but not least to be overlooked in their importance, they may be parents, or brothers, or sisters who will interest themselves in helping the little folks at home to learn the lessons assigned them, and make personal application of the lessons so that they may develop in the children those characteristics so necessary in the Christian character.

Another need which is more marked in some places than in others is a plentiful supply of song books, so that every child may have the opportunity to assist in the song service. Nearly all children love to sing, and will gladly do so if encouraged by parents and teachers. To make this arm of the service effective, fifteen to thirty minutes each sabbath should be given to the song service.

Cards to the wee ones and papers to those who can read should be reckoned among the indispensables. We need in every local school a library, and in it should be a plentiful sprinkle of biographies.

We need some individual with sufficient powers of locomotion, and otherwise endowed with a love of the work and the capacity to instruct in methods to travel and visit the various schools in the district and give them words of encouragement and assist them in making their schools more interesting and hence more effective for good.

These may not be all that we need, but possibly more than we shall obtain for a time. And as this is possible, it suggests one other need which I trust we shall all strive to obtain, and that is a large supply of patience that will enable us to labor on with the means at hand, striving to make the best of present conditions until the way shall open for a better and more successful equipment.

SOME few days ago our hearts were filled with sorrow and our eyes with tears when the sad news reached us that one more of our beloved brethren had been called to the other world. So unexpected, and to us seemingly so untimely when measured by our limited wisdom, we were in no wise prepared for the sad, sad news. It was some time before we could come to a true realization of the truth. But, alas, it is too true. Our esteemed and beloved brother, J. C. Hitchcock, has gone to his rest. May his rest be sweet. May it be complete.

We were never privileged to become intimately acquainted with our brother. We have had several profitable conversations with him, but they have always been at the general conventions or similar places, and he being one of the busiest of men, our opportunities for personal contact were of necessity limited. But we learned to love him—love him for what he has done. We have seen his unceasing and untiring efforts to build up the work of the Religio; and we have with thankfulness seen his efforts crowned with success. We have seen his earnest work in the Sunday school, and God has blessed his efforts there. We have learned of his wise and patient administration of affairs as president of his branch and also of his district, and that there, as elsewhere, he enjoyed the complete confidence of his brethren. Yes, we have seen and known sufficient of his work to know that he was a constant, earnest, and untiring worker for the cause of the Master. We love the earnest, busy workers. We love the person who is sufficiently consecrated to the service and work of the Lord that he will, when the hours of secular work are past, turn to his work for the Master rather than to the attractions and pleasures of the world. These are the ones whom the Lord calls upon to do a great work. Brother Hitchcock was one of these trusted workers. And we believe we speak the voice of all that ever knew him when we say, "we love him for what he has done."

But while we are thinking of his many works of righteousness, the thought reverts to us so keenly and so sadly, "He is gone." Who will do his work? Who will take his place in the branch? in the district? in the Religio? We have sometimes been made to wonder why it was that those we loved the best, and whom the work needed most were the ones taken first. God knows why. We must learn to trust in his wisdom and mercy, even though we cannot see "why."

We extend our sympathy to our sister society, the "Religio," for the loss sustained by them. The vacancy must be filled and the work go on, for it is God's work. But the work done by our departed brother will stand as his most lasting monument,—will ever be fresh in the memories of all who knew him. We will love to think about it though it will be with feelings of sadness. We will talk about it though it brings tears to our eyes. Tears often bring relief for the pent up sorrow that is within our souls.

But it is to the bereaved wife whose life has been made sorrowful and whose hopes are blighted, and to whom the whole world and all therein appears to have changed its hue, we extend our deepest and most heart-felt sympathy. For her our most earnest prayers have been uttered. Hers is a loss that no one else can feel. We sympathize with her, but that sympathy, however sincere, can only comfort. It cannot fill that aching void or wipe away the tears. We can pray for her and God will give her strength to bear her up, but that will not remove the stern reality of what there is. There is a worldly side to these things that we cannot remove. We would not if we could. We may weep for him, but our weeping will afford us a calm relief. We may be sorrowful, but sorrow is only the result of having loved most dearly. We weep and are sorrowful and wish that we could bring him back again. Though it would be to labor and toil and suffer, we are selfish enough to wish him back again. But this cannot be. He has passed through the darkness, or the dawn, we call death; beyond the twilight's purple hills. Why it was necessary we cannot see. The wisdom in it to us is not clear. He knoweth best "who doeth all things well." "God give us faith to trust where we cannot see."

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

Dear Saints of Northeast Missouri District:—I feel moved upon to call your attention to the law of tithing, which law is one of the fundamental principles of the gospel, and is binding upon all Latter Day Saints. I wish to stir up every Saint in this district to honor this important law. The progress of the gospel throughout the world depends chiefly on our temporal means to carry it to the nations of the earth. Our prayers and songs, and our boasting of the truth of this work will not spread it to the nations; our faith alone will not save us. I compare tithing, or our temporal means with which God has blessed us, to a locomotive. The engine and train behind her will not move without the application of steam; neither will the gospel move along without means to push it onward. Surely in vain we call him Lord, Lord, and do not the things which he has commanded us. The Lord has told us through the Prophet Joseph Smith that this law is in force until Christ shall come, notwithstanding that the Lord has spoken directly to us in this dispensation. It seems to me that many Saints in this district are very unconcerned and indifferent as far as its binding character upon all is concerned. I am sorry to say that among four hundred or more members, comprising this district, that we cannot support two missionaries laboring in this district without sending to Bishop E. L Kelley for means to provide those two families Under the present condition I am compelled to impress upon your minds, not only our obligations, but the necessity of imparting a portion of the means with which God has blessed us. Let us show our faith by our works. Hoping this method will stir us up to our financial obligations, I am yours in the one faith, J. T. WILLIAMS

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

The following resolutions were adopted by the St. Louis district conference, September 30, 1900.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father to take from us at this time of need our beloved brother and president, Elder John C Hitchcock; and

Whereas, the departed one has always shown himself an untiring worker, ever ready to comfort those in sorrow, to strengthen the weak, and encourage all, being slow at all times to consider his own convenience when duty called, be it

Resolved, that in the demise of our beloved brother the St. Louis district has sustained a loss as severe as it was unexpected; and be it further

Resolved, that the St. Louis district in conference assembled extend to his bereaved family and many mourning friends their deepest sympathy; and further

Resolved, that while the loss to us is so serious that our poor human judgment would at first question, yet through all we feel our Father knows best, and we believe our brother has but gone to perform labor blessed with greater fruitage in another sphere of usefulness; and be it

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, to the church publications, and to the district secretary to be spread upon the minutes.

Committee, JAMES CHRISTENSEN.
J. J. BILLINSKY.
S. R. BURGESS.

Resolutions of condolence voted by the St. Louis district Religio convention, September 28, 1900.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom and mercy, to remove from our midst our beloved brother and co-worker, John C. Hitchcock; be it

Resolved, that we, the St. Louis district Religio in convention assembled, do hereby tender our sincere and heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and relatives, in this their hour of severe trial; and be it further

Resolved, that a copy of the same be sent to the family of the deceased brother; and be it further

Resolved, that a copy be sent to the church papers for publication; and be it further

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the meeting.

Respectfully submitted,
Committee, FLORENCE BURGESS
JOHN J. BILLINSKY.
CHARLES J. REMINGTON.

Whereas, in the infinite wisdom of God it has been seen fit to remove our brother, John C. Hitchcock, from our midst, thus depriving us of direction and incalculable assistance he so willingly rendered;

Therefore, be it resolved, that we as a society of Religians, express our deep sympathy for his immediate family and friends; and

Be it further resolved, that it is the sense of the society that in the death of our co-worker and friend, Bro. John C. Hitchcock, the Religio sustains a most serious loss; and while we deplore the necessity for his removal, yet we bow to the will of Him who doeth all things well; and

Be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and to the church publications.

TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In ordering supplies for schools much inconvenience and positive annoyance to the office results from carelessness, which may be avoided by following these suggestions: (1) If there is a branch agent for the Herald Publishing House in your branch, let all supplies be ordered through this agent. (2) When ordering for the Sunday school, whenever a new person orders, be sure to give the name of the person to whom the supplies have been previously sent. This will prevent the frequent annoyance to both the office and schools of sending duplicate orders. (3) Be sure to sign your name to every order. If the order is not signed it will not be filled. (4) Send cash with order when at all practicable and save book accounts. (5) Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Iowa,

BORN.

DAVIES.—To Mr. and Mrs. Davies, at Gilfach Goch, Glamorganshire, Wales, July 29, 1900, a son; named Alma Nephi Davies. Blessed September 7, by his uncles, Elders A. N. Bishop and Lot Bishop.

MATTHEWS —At Centerville, Iowa, August 17, 1900, to Bro. and Sr. W. T. Matthews, a daughter, named Margaret Elizabeth. Blessed September 23, by Elders J. S. Roth and David Archibald.

DIED.

DAVIS.—At Angola, Kansas, September 23, 1900, Bro. Bengman T. Davis, son of Elder Richard Davis sen., aged 24 years, 6 months, and 1 day. He was a true and faithful Saint and obedient son, loved by all, as it was well attested by the presence of so many at the funeral. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

WALTERS —Hanna Walters, mother of Sr. McLane, of Fairfield, Utah, departed this life September 19, 1900, aged 70 years, 8 months, and 10 days. She was born in Llanelly, Wales, January 9, 1830, and came to this country in 1856 or '57. Funeral services by Elder Peter Anderson; the choir from Cedar Fort doing the singing. Several children and a number of grandchildren mourn the loss of a good and beloved mother and grandmother.

MC NTOSH.—Sister Maggie May, youngest daughter of John A. and Malinda McIntosh, was born at Galland's Grove, Iowa, December 29, 1875, and was at her death, which occurred May 10, 1900, 24 years, 4 months, and 11 days old. She was the youngest of a large family, and was a bright and earnest spirit, bravely trying to win her way in the world, and had endeared herself to many friends, who with her family mourn her departure from their circle. She waits the resurrection in hope. Funeral sermon by Pres. Joseph Smith, on Sunday, September 30, at Sr. McIntosh's request. Family present.

GREEN.—Ella J. Moore was born October 17, 1857, at Poughkeepsie, New York; came to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, with her parents when still a child; and in 1860 came to Anamosa, Iowa, where she lived until October 17, 1878, when she was married to O. E Green, near Onslow, Iowa. She was baptized March 13, 1887, by Elder J. S. Roth; died September 24, 1900, near Onslow, Iowa. To them were born eight children, three of whom have preceded her to the better land. One daughter and four boys remain, with her husband, to mourn her untimely death; the youngest is a babe eight weeks old. She will be missed in her home. The branch will lose an active worker; the church will miss her, as she wrote so much for the Autumn Leaves, and she will be missed by the readers of the Hope, as she conducted the fourth page of the Hope. Her writings cheered many lonely hearts. A large attendance at funeral services, which were conducted by Elder John Heide, at the Green Valley church; interment at Frozen Hill cemetery, to await the resurrection of just.

AGENSTEIN.—At her home, Omaha, Nebraska, September 25, 1900. Sr. Susanna Agenstein. She was born in Switzerland, October 4, 1845; came to America in 1870, and went to Utah. Becoming dissatisfied, she joined the Reorganization October 8, 1871, and moved to Omaha the same year, and has lived there ever since. She lived and died true to her covenant with her Lord. Her home was ever a home for the ministry, and her hand a liberal one in helping this work along. The poor have lost a friend, the church a staunch and faithful member, and society a noble citizen; and her family a true, devoted, and loving mother. She leaves one son and four daughters, as well as many sorrowing friends to mourn her loss. Funeral from the church where she was a faithful attendant for nearly thirty years; sermon by Elder F. A. Smith. The genuine sorrow of the Prayer Union, as they gathered around their departed president's body, was a marked evidence of the esteem in which our departed sister was held by those who knew her well.

GREEKS WROTE IN 1300 B. C.

HISTORY OF ALPHABET.

Proof has just been discovered that written documents existed in Greece 1,300 years before Christ. Three hundred years before the coming of the Messiah, the Roman capitals of our written language were in use, and two hundred years earlier the writings of the Latins embodied these characters in almost identical form with those on the tombs of the Scipios as preserved in the Vatican at Rome.

Six thousand years has been suggested as the period in which written language evolved to become "the triumph, the instrument, and the register of the progress of our race." It began, according to generally accepted theory, with the hieroglyphic picture-writing of ancient Egypt. A hundred years ago, however, Wolf startled the literary world of Great Britain by saying that Homer's "Iliad" and the "Odyssey" could not have been composed in the present form, largely for the reason that in the time of Homer this written language, begun by the Egyptians, had not evolved sufficiently to have admitted of the composition.

Now, however, Arthur Evans of the British association, delving in the ruins of Knossos, in Crete, announces that the Greeks were using a written language in the thirteenth century before Christ.

ORIGIN OF THE ALPHABET.

Herodotus had told of the Phœnecians bringing the alphabet to the Greeks. "Phœnecians," he wrote, "introduced into Greece the knowledge of letters, of which, as it seems to me, the Greeks were heretofore ignorant."

Archæologists had found indications of the truth of this observation. Tradition seemed to bear it out, and the names, number, forms, and order of the primitive Greek alphabet have been shown to indicate their Semitic origin. The Phœnecians are supposed to have come by this alphabet from the hieratic writings of ancient Egypt. For in the time of the "shepherd Kings" the Egyptian priests had evolved a running hand that expressed their thoughts, and these people were of Semitic origin.

De Rouge, in 1859, pronounced this theory. The proposition had many backers. At the same time it had its emphatic opposers. In Germany Lagarde, and in England, Robertson Smith and R. S. Poole combated this theorizing of De Rouge's. Now Arthur Evans of the British association insists that the whole pretty theory must be abandoned. In a paper recently read before the anthropological section of the association he says:—

"De Rouge's theory of the derivation of the Phœnecian letters from remote hieratic Egyptian prototypes must be definitely abandoned. The Phœnecian, and with it the Greek, alphabet must be regarded as a selection from a syllabary belonging to the same Ægean as the Cretan."

EARLIEST GREEK WRITINGS.

Mr. Evans, with his newly-discovered clay documents from Knossos, bases his assertions on the tablets which he so recently has uncovered. Not only this, but he has set forward the date of the earliest writings of the Greeks more than eight centuries beyond the old limit of 500 B. C.

It is odd to the layman to observe how the dates of the archæologist, as a rule, are moving backward, steadily. Jewish tradition has put the age of the world at only 6,000 years, but science of today would scarcely stop under a million. Wolf had explained in 1795 how Homer, for lack of a language letter, could not have written his poems 1,000 years before Christ. Mr. Evans has found evidences in Crete that they might have been written 300 years earlier if only an alphabet were in the way of it. But already Wolf's idea had been combated.

At Aba Simbel, near the second cataract of the River Nile, are four colossal statues of Rasmeses II., cut out of the solid sandstone of the cliff and standing there as guardians of a stupendous temple-cave, dedicated to the gods of Egypt. In all ages the habit of visitors to such shrines seems to have been to scratch names and dates on such objects. These colossal figures are scratched by many peoples, and among others are several Greek inscriptions. One of these records the visit of several Greek mercenaries, who were acting for Psammetichus. The first Greek ruler of this name lived from 654 to 617 B. C., and the other from 594 to 589 B. C. It is not certain to which of these the inscriptions of the mercenaries refers, but the fact that these travelers were able to write their names at such an age is taken to indicate that the knowledge of writing was pretty widely spread in Greece at that time. At the least these inscriptions have indicated that Greek writing was extant nearly 600 years before Christ. Now Mr. Evans comes and multiplies the least of these groups by two.

These changes in archæological findings indicate that not all is known about the beginnings of civilization, no matter how thoroughly civilization has a grasp of its own present.

It hardly will be contradicted, however, that next to intelligible speech the evolution of an alphabet expressive of all the sounds of language was the thing having greatest bearing upon the progress of the human race. The further this written language is traced back, the more logical becomes the evolution of man himself. If a man or a nation advances by profiting from errors, nothing could have been more preservative of the moral of error than is written language.

VALUE OF WRITTEN RECORDS.

Through this recording of man's errors in the past the future generation got its compass-points. Only a certain limited progress ever has been possible to one generation. If the records of this progress and the means to it had been denied to man the race would have been at a standstill. With a written record left behind one generation the next has been able to take up where the preceding one left off; not only its errors but its experiences of truth have become the heritage of the other, and so the sum of man's generational progress in civilization has come to be the property of the present. Without this written language the law of today would be only custom, history would be hazy tradition, and religion only an intricate superstition.—Chicago Tribune, Oct. 7, 1900.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF FORESTS.

By J. P. Brown, Secretary of the Indiana Forestry Association.

Fifty years hence Kansas and the States planting trees today will be supplying California and the coast States with timber. One need not be particularly gifted with foresight to predict such an event. It is an indisputable and lamentable fact that at the present rate of forest denudation on the Pacific coast it will be but a short time before all the timber on that section of the coast is gone. The government will realize when it is too late the great loss this despoiling of our forests means.

Kansas has formed an organization for the preservation of the trees which other States would do well to join. The progress made in the last quarter of a century by Kansas in tree growing is evidence of what the State can do and will do in the next quarter of a century. I have traveled over the greater part of the State; I have examined groves planted twenty and thirty years ago, and while some are insignificant in appearance the results, taken as a whole, are favorable to Kansas developing from an agricultural region altogether to a forest growing section. This is work along the right line. It seems to me a criminal act to allow our forests to be destroyed by pests and woodmen without the slightest attempt at preservation. Kansas ought to have one quarter of all the lands within its boundaries planted with trees. If such a thing were done the remaining three fourths of the State would be far more productive than they are now. It would change climatic conditions, bring more rains, break up the hot winds, and make agriculture even more flourishing than it is today.

Trees conserve the water supply. Forests in Kansas would also make the country a manufacturing instead of a totally agricultural region. The government reports of timber lands all over the United States are greatly exaggerated. The result has been to lull Congress into slumber and has prevented it from taking action looking toward the preservation of our forests. I would suggest that your Legislature make some such provision as we have in Indiana, making a law practically exempting from taxation timber lands for a certain length of time. That would only be right, for no man can afford to plant trees and wait thirty years for returns.

The great bulk of the forest planting has been done in the States west of the Mississippi River. In the Eastern States, except in a few instances, the planting has been done on a smaller scale.

A year ago our association for the preservation of the American forests secured a forestry law in Indiana. The society is but a little over two years old, but our success in this respect has given it a large growth. We have members in twenty-eight States. In fact, the society is really national in its character, though we keep the name because we hope to get an appropriation from the State for its work. The law that was passed authorizes the Assessors to list as much as one-eighth of any man's acreage at only $1 an acre if it contains a forest growth as dense as 170 trees to the acre. Any tract set out in trees of that number to the acre can be valued the same when the trees are three years old. After trees are four inches in diameter the tract can be used for pasturing cattle. The old plan of valuing the land at $20 to $50 and then the standing timber also made the taxes so high that it placed a premium upon the destruction of the timber.

The question of restoring the hardwood forests of that section is vital with manufacturers, and they are taking the liveliest interest in the movement.

When my bill was first introduced the House barely considered it and the Senate turned it down completely. I began at once a campaign of education by writing to manufacturers and the press, and they took the matter up so vigorously that before the session closed the bill passed both Houses almost unanimously.—Chicago Tribune.

BOOKS BOUND IN HUMAN SKIN.

On a shelf in the library of Dr. Matthew Woods of Philadelphia are three books bound in human skin. The man from whose body the skin was taken was Karl Kaufman, a young German, who had left his home across the water at 24 years of age because of a disappointment in love. Coming to America he supported himself by teaching German. Dr. Woods, who was his physician, became one of his pupils and fast friends.

The young man was dying of consumption. He was speaking one night to a friend of his regret in dying so young, because if he had lived he might have produced a book worthy to stand on library shelves along with Homer, or Ovid, or Virgil. Soon after this conversation Dr. J. C. Morton showed the young German a purse made of the skin of a human being. Kaufman made no comment at the time, but after Kaufman died his will requested that a section of his skin be employed to bind several of the books in the doctor's library, so that he might give of himself to form the binding of some of the grand books that he had so loved.

The request was granted. A large section of skin was taken from the young German's body, and after being thoroughly tanned was used to bind the three books that Kaufman had most admired.—Chicago Tribune.

DURATION OF GEOLOGICAL PHENOMENA.

"As a rule," says L'Illustration (Paris, August 18), "geological action is regarded as having been exceedingly slow; but this classic opinion does not appear to be confirmed by the observations which have just been made by M. J. Gosselet upon the sand about Dunkirk. During certain excavations recently made for the purpose of enlarging the port of Dunkirk, some most interesting geological discoveries have come to light. Among others, there are strata of yellow sand from twenty-three to twenty-six feet in thickness, full of marine shells washed in by the tide. At the base of this deposit were found fragments of pottery covered with a green glaze which marked them as belonging to the sixteenth century. Besides this, at a depth of twenty-three feet in the sand, was found the skeleton of a ship from which three large cannon were taken. One of these bears the date 1581. The sand was well stratified, and, in consequence, must have accumulated after the foundering of the vessel. There is thus a proof that from twenty-three to twenty-six feet of sand have been well stratified on the shore at Dunkirk between the beginning of the sixteenth and the nineteenth centuries, that is to say, a thickness of seven and one half feet per century. Moreover, on emptying an old basin of the port, it was found that there had been a stratification of from four to six feet between 1829 and 1882, although no stream or drain emptied into it, and the waves reached it only on two or three days per month. These discoveries are far from proving the truth of the old theories."—The Literary Digest, September 29, 1900.

LAMONI, IOWA, OCT. 17, 1900.

THE EDITOR AT DOW CITY, IOWA.

Continued rains and cold weather suggestive of the near approach of winter, together with the need to make good the retarded work of the farm, kept hundreds from the Dow City reunion. It may be that there was the additional reason furnished by the misconception that the grounds offered by the city and accepted by the last fall session were not large enough or adequate to the accommodation of the reunion; and this in spite of the assurance given by us as one of the persons who by request looked over the site and reported with the committee that the room was ample, and the site an eligible one.

Because the session was apparently to be an unpropitious one, possible an impracticable one, we determined to be on the grounds at the start, and consequently reached Dow City September 27, the day before commencement day. We found the big tent or tabernacle in its place at the top of the main street of the little town, located near the west center of the city park, an attractive plat of ground of over two blocks in size, nicely shaded by rows of elm, maple, box elder, pine, and cottonwood trees, and covered with a carpet of rich blue grass and clover—an ideal camping place. Rows of tents were already up and ready for occupants. Among them, in a pretty group of trees midway between the tabernacle and the west end of the park, we found our own somewhat battered canvas house, with its end to the big tent, and its door opening toward the setting sun, all ready for us to move in; and before the damp and dingy day had drawn to its close, our furniture was moved in and we were established in our own rented premises, cozy, and if the rain would permit, comfortable quarters.

At the hour of eleven on the 28th, Friday, the few who had gathered from their homes, including the committee, Brn. Baker, Butterworth, Carroll, and Rudd, assembled at the tent, and, in apparent defiance of cold and rain, organized the Dow City reunion. Brn. the editor, J. W. Wight, missionary in charge, C. E. Butterworth, president of Galland's Grove district, were installed as presiding officers; Bro. A. H. Rudd, with Brn. Oscar Case and D. M. Rudd, secretary and assistants; Brn. James Pearsall and S. B. Kibler, choristers, and an efficient corps of police, ushers, and janitors, and the reunion of the year of our Lord 1900 was in full swing. Subsequently, by regular action, Brn. W. H. Kelley and Bishop E. L. Kelley were added to the presiding force. The appointment of Bro. W. H. Kelley was of no avail, as he had gone east, without visiting the camp of the Saints, though he would have been greeted with a welcome had he come. The bishop arrived on the 29th, and was with the camp to the end, rendering such service as in his power.

Brn. J. M. Stubbart and C. E. Butterworth took the opening preaching services. Brn. J. R. Lambert and Charles Derry arrived on the 29th also; but Bro. J. W. Wight was hindered from coming until Monday, October 1, leaving an opening at Mt. Pisgah to come at the time he did.

The preaching was excellent throughout, if the general expressions of satisfaction are to be trusted. The weather was for the greater part of the time good, though for two days at the opening it was wet and cool, and for two days at the close was cold and windy. The attention and interest were sustained to the end. Fifteen were baptized.

We regret that there was some misunderstanding in regard to the locality being low, swampy, and too small for a camp. How this understanding went abroad we do not know, but we do know that it was by no means correct. There is ample room for a camp twice as large as the largest we ever had, and three or four times as large as the one that finally pitched its tents on the site chosen. The arrangements made by the committee were excellent, and gave the fullest security for the peace and welfare of the Saints. There was no disturbance of any sort during the entire time of our sojourn in camp.

On account of the rain the prayer session for Monday morning was held in the Saints' chapel, but the change of locality did not prevent a good session. The other prayer services were held each morning on the grounds, at nine o'clock, and were undisturbed by rain except one session by a passing shower. These services were quite spiritual, and were the scene of tongues, interpretations, prophecies, as well as prayer and testimony.

The Dow City reunion has passed into history, and will be a memory for all time, and we write the hope that next fall a much larger attendance will be had at the time to be stated by the committee. Correspond with A. H. Rudd, of Dow City.

TOLSTOI EXCOMMUNICATED.

Count Tolstoi, the Russian officer, who after a life of profligacy and polite trifling with all the corrupting things of the Russian court, grew tired of them and turned his attention to the consideration of better things, established a sort of religious colony at his estate called Yasnaya Polyana, where as a self-appointed priest he preaches a religion based on the tenet, "Resist not evil."

The Greek church has virtually excommunicated Tolstoi, he having been a member of that church, as are all Russians. But, judging from what is stated in the following extract, the count will pay but little heed to the edict severing him from the church militant in Russia.

The attitude of Tolstoi toward rulers and laws is but the expression of the sacred right of conscience carried to the extreme, just what may occur in any state, society, or church, through the exaggerated estimate that men may put upon their own value and their own right to independence of thought and action. It would be a queer world if every man was at liberty to disregard "any authority save that of the individual conscience."

The better thinkers of the age, among religionists at least, seem to be agreed that conscience is not the only safe guide to human conduct; and that no conscience is or can be an approximately safe guide until such conscience has been fully educated up to the highest Christian standard and the teaching of Christ has other precepts than "Resist not evil," and "Thou shalt not kill."

It is quite possible for a man to be so taken up with the idea of his own freedom of conscience as to forget and ignore almost completely the consciences of his coworkers in a cause to which both are mutually pledged, and to grow restive and resentful under the restraints of the laws of society which are essential for the well-being of the whole fabric of human association. Such men see dangers and menaces to human liberties and rights where none exist, and overestimate their own good qualities and exaggerate the short comings, defects, and actions of others.

We have read Tolstoi's work, "My Religion;" and while recognizing the awakened good in the character of the man, we could not fail to see where he left the realm of sound principles as developed in Christ's religion in its entirety, and entered upon the realm of a self created philosophy. He may not yet have realized the principle stated by one of the participants in the Harrison – Shearman – Godbeite movement in Utah, some years ago. "We had thought," said he, "that a priesthood of love would have been sufficient, but we have learned that it requires a priesthood of power as well."

It must not be forgotten that when Count Tolstoi started his theory and its development he had a goodly estate and considerable means at his command, could have no apprehensions as to want for himself and his, and that he must still control his estate, and the colony which he has founded. Nor is it out of the bounds of probability that Tolstoi's conscience is practically the conscience of his adherents and followers; for while he may not attempt to coerce them, if they stay in Yasnaya Polyana they must conform to its rules, or fail of its benefits.

We give the extract below, taken from a daily Tribune for October 1, 1900:—

THE EXCOMMUNICATION OF TOLSTOI.

A dispatch from Lausanne reports that Joannicius, the Metropolitan of Kieff, has addressed a circular to all the Russian Archbishops virtually excommunicating Count Toltsoi. The great novelist and reformer is declared to be an avowed enemy of the church and unless he abandons his errors the holy synod will prohibit him from celebrating divine service and from expiatory masses in case of his death.

It is not likely that Tolstoi will fret much under this ban. He long ago avowed himself the enemy of autocracy and orthodoxy as it is understood by the modern church. He long ago declared against all rulers and laws and compulsion and refused obedience to any authority save that of the individual conscience. His religion is embraced in a single tenet and that the most difficult to practice, the law of love revealed in the teaching of Christ. His theory of this law does not admit the authority of any hierarchy. The Metropolitan's excommunication, therefore, cannot affect him, for long ago he voluntarily placed himself outside the pale of the church. Granted that Tolstoi's creed is impracticable, he is nevertheless sincere in it and practices it to the smallest detail of life. He lives on the plane of his high ideal and to that extent at least should command the respect of the world. Perhaps it would be better for the world if, morally at least, it imitated his example, but in the present conditions of human nature, which are about the same as they were when Cain killed Abel, Tolstoi's ideal is but a dream of the millennium. Henry Norman, who has recently visited him, tells of his interview with him most entertainingly in the current number of Scribner. He says that his patriotism and his dream are: no more nations and frontiers, but the world, "no more multitudinous cities, and manufactures, and money, but simply the tiller of the soil, eating of the fruit of his toil, exchanging with his neighbor the labor of his hands, and finding in the changing round of natural processes alike the nourishment of his body and the delight of his eyes, while, like some directing angel poised above, the law of love, revealed in Christ, lights each man's path and so illumes the world." It is a beautiful dream, but only a dream this wide world over, except at Yasnaya Polyana, where it is a reality. That Tolstoi carries out his theory still, after publicly acknowledging that men can never be induced to accept it, is the crowning test of his sincerity. Excommunication from the church can be of little moment to such a man.

It is remarkable that Tolstoi has gone so long without excommunication, but it is still more remarkable in that land of autocracy where he lives that the ban of political excommunication has not also been placed upon him. Thousands of men have gone to the gallows or joined the long mournful procession to Siberia for less offense than he has committed over and over again. In an article, "Thou Shalt Not Kill," which appears in the current issue of the Independent, he says of the Czar:—

"He proposes a childish, silly, and untruthful project of universal peace at the same time that he is ordering an increase of the army, and even then there are no limits to the laudations of his wisdom and his virtue. Without any reason he senselessly and pitilessly offends the whole of the Finnish nation and again hears nothing but praise. At last he starts the Chinese slaughter, terrible by its injustice, cruelty, and its contrast with his project of peace: and he gets simultaneously applauded from all sides, both for his own conquests and for his adherence to his father's policy of peace. What must indeed be going on in the heads and hearts of such men?"

No other man in Russia could have written this vigorous criticism of the Czar without feeling the weight of his displeasure, and yet this is but one of many similar utterances which he has made with impunity. Has he escaped the autocratic wrath because the Czar fears the criticism of the world, which respects Count Tolstoi, even if it does not believe his theories?

THE EVERGREEN CHURCH.

There was a dedication service six miles southwest of Lamoni, Sunday, October 14, present year.

Some two years ago the Saints residing in the region between Lamoni, Iowa, and Lone Rock, Missouri, having become somewhat numerous, concluded that it would be well to have a building in which to hold services, many being unable to take their families to either Lamoni or Lone Rock. A committee consisting of Brn. S. B. Hartshorn, S. Rew, A. B. Young, H. C. Snively, George Harger, and David D. Young, was appointed; subscription lists were circulated by Bro. T. J. Bell and others, and the result is, that at a two days' meeting under the direction of the district president, F. M. Weld, the branch decided to have the building dedicated. The meeting was called to order by presiding officer D. D. Young, at eleven o'clock a. m., with Brn. F. M. Weld, J. S. Snively, E. L. Kelley, and Joseph Smith in the stand. After the song service, Bro. Snively offered the invocation. Bro. Young delivered the deed of the land and the keys of the building to President Smith, on behalf of the branch, President Smith accepting them on behalf of the church.

The sermon was by President Smith, the prayer of dedication was offered by Bro. E. L. Kelley. President Smith on behalf of the branch delivered the deed of the premises to Bishop E. L. Kelley; and on behalf of the church, returned the keys of the building to presiding officer D. D. Young to be held by him and his successors for the use and benefit of the Saints of the branch and their neighbors and the strangers within the gates.

The aggregate cost of the house, lot, and well was $802.05; all of which has been paid and the debts discharged.

The day was an ideal fall time one, the air warm and pleasant, what little breeze there was being from the south. The roads were good. From ten o'clock to the hour of service there was a constant stream of buggies, carriages, and wagons, arriving with their freight of Saints and friends; until the house was packed full, and the premises round it crowded with teams. It was a moving scene; the best of order prevailed throughout. The song service was in charge of Sr. Hartshorn, the chorister of the branch, and was good. The feeling of the meeting was excellent and at the close it was evident that all were pleased with the event and glad that success crowned their effort.

It is indeed pleasant to contemplate. The Saints have a little church suitable for their present need, built and paid for with a few dollars still in their treasury, no debt, no fear, no bickering, no heart burnings, from the first to the last of their effort to build.

We do not know how the name Evergreen church originated, but it is suggestive of the ever enduring character of the work, the faith, the doctrine. May the perpetual sunshine of the Holy Spirit of promise and peace ever be with the Evergreen church.

LITERATURE FOR DISTRIBUTION.

Those elders in the field who may be desirous of having church literature for distribution will do well to note the following which we received from Sr. Louise Palfrey, editor of the Religio Arena:—

Sr. Clark, superintendent of our "Gospel Literature Bureau," says that the supply on hand exceeds the demand. There are doubtless many who would like to have some of this literature for distribution if they knew we had it. That our useful plan may become more widely known, and those in need of literature have opportunity of availing themselves of the help we are anxious to give towards the spread of the gospel, would you kindly give the matter mention, editorially, in the Herald? It is expected, of course, that only elders and those who intend to use the literature in distributing among outsiders, for missionary purpose, will apply. The scope of the bureau includes all the church papers, and tracts.

Here is a chance for elders desiring church literature to get themselves in touch with those whose object it is to collect and supply such. Sr. Clark has been active, and we are glad that there are those who are giving their time for such work. We are glad to assist them in any way we can, and gladly give space to this matter, for we are sure many of our ministry will quickly and gladly avail themselves of the opportunity to get reading matter for distribution among people anxious to study our position. Sr. Clark's address is, Marie H. Clark, Box 4, Station A, Kansas City, Missouri.

A QUESTION OF LEGALITY.

We are requested to notice the question of the validity of marriages performed by other than church authority.

It would seem to be unnecessary to make an extended argument upon the subject. The church in solemn assembly, August 17, 1835, made public declaration upon the point as follows:—

According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies: therefore we believe that all marriages in this Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting, or feast, prepared for that purpose: and that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, bishop, elder, or priest, not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married, of being married by other authority. We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

All legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled.—Doctrine and Covenants, section 111 (101 Kirtland edition), paragraphs 1 and 4.

If it be asked, What is a legal contract of marriage? we answer, Any and all contracts of marriage entered into in good faith between persons of legal age and qualifications as specified in the statute enactments of states, governments, and nations known as civilized nations.

Neither man nor woman is justified in attempting to evade the obligations of the marriage bond who has voluntarily entered into the domestic relationship according to the laws of the land where such live and are married. Those who choose to disregard the sacredness of the marriage relation are guilty of a violation of the law of God as well as of the law of the land, both of which Saints are under obligation to keep. There can be no excuse for them. Any plea that marriages performed by other than church authority are either void or voidable by members of the church is an error and of no value as an excuse for wrongdoing.

CLOSE INDIA RELIEF FUND.

Our Business Manager informs us that a few days ago he made another remittance of about $39 for the India Relief fund. Just before he made it he received the following, which our readers will please note:—

CHICAGO, Sept. 27, 1900.

John Smith Esq., Mgr.

Dear Sir:—We are about to close our fund. Should anything have come to your hands we shall be grateful if you will kindly send it in.

We shall arrange to forward anything coming in later, but are about to discontinue our efforts to obtain help.

Very sincerely appreciative of your generous aid, Yours faithfully,

ERNEST A. BELL,
Secretary India Famine Relief Fund.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Editors Herald:—On the road home from the Clinton district conference (convened at Rich Hill, October 6), we had a little argument about how many delegates a branch was allowed with a membership of twenty-five. The Rules of Order and Debate says that a branch is allowed one delegate to each six members or fraction thereof; and I claimed the branch was entitled to five delegates, and was in the minority. So I write you for the answer, which please give through the columns of the Herald, and oblige,

Very truly yours,
H. S. MCINTYRE.

The writer is correct. The rule which provides that a branch shall be entitled to one delegate for each six members or fraction thereof, would grant a branch of twenty-five members, four for the twenty-four, and one for the twenty-fifth. It would be entitled to no more than the five if there were thirty members in the branch, but would be entitled to five delegates for any number over twenty-four and less than thirty.

WE have in this broad land of ours many magazines, devoted to nearly as many interests. There are magazines whose interests are those of the woman; others are for men. The American boy is represented, as is also the American girl, while the youth of the country are represented in very many periodicals, and we have magazines and magazines, until it would seem that every field is occupied, and that every cause has its advocate in the journalistic arena. Yet magazines continue to be born, and every little while we are told of the advent of a new bark upon the sea of journalism.

One of the latest to come to our notice is one which in its mission appeals more or less directly to all of us. It is The Nursery, and is devoted to the interests of the American baby. As might be expected, it is not addressed directly to the little ones themselves and written in the almost mysterious language of the "tots," but it comes in the best of English, and is addressed to the mothers of our little folks, as all such messages should be. It is issued by the Van Publishing Company, of 254 West Fifty-fourth street, New York, and is being mailed for the price of one dollar per year or for ten cents per number.

It deals with all phases of child culture, looking after their diet, their intellectual development, their dress, and what not. We certainly wish the new magazine success, and hope that its mission will ultimately be most beneficial to the little ones.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. A. N. Bishop wrote from Cardiff, Wales, October 1:—

The work seems gradually moving in my mission. I have during the past six months baptized ten precious souls. I feel sometimes somewhat despondent, when I see such very little results. I have distributed from door to door a large amount of old Heralds, Ensigns, and Hopes, and a few thousand tracts, also one thousand four hundred ministry cards. The Lord has blessed me in my labor, and I presume it will bear fruit in due season.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Joseph Kirby, Allegan, Michigan, would like to know the address of some Saint who lives in Leon. Elder Asa S. Cochran is living in Leon, Iowa.

Leslie M. Shaw, Governor of the state of Iowa, was a visitor in Lamoni, October 11, where he made a political speech. He was accompanied by his private secretary.

Mrs. Mary A. Belt, of Decatur, Burt county, Nebraska, and Mrs. Elizabeth E. Cutting, of Little Rock, Arkansas, would like to learn of the whereabouts of James A. Primble, or J. A. Trimble. In his last correspondence with his mother, he claimed to be an officer in the Latter Day Saints church. Anyone knowing of the man please inform either of the above-named.

By letter from Bro. Rushton, who is at work in the Scottish field, we learn that he is presenting the faith at every opportunity to the best of his ability, and has some hope, though the chances are but poor. No churches or schoolhouses are open for use, only private houses and the open air.

Elder J. W. Wight reports crowded houses at Echo schoolhouse six miles east of Mondamin, Iowa, with good liberty on part of the preacher.

Mrs. M. E. Ronat, of Sacramento, California, arrived on the 15th and will live at Saints' Home. She is in fair health and spirits.

BE CONSISTENT.

If consistency was considered as one of the brightest jewels, and a stricter adherence to the same observed, it would produce a greater satisfaction and benefits not otherwise obtainable. For this reason St. Paul's injunction to Timothy (2 Tim. 4: 2) to be instant in season who are out of season (or consistent at all times—continually) would be a great regulator of our actions and judgment, and one of the principal means to gain a higher standard of perfection.

Those characters enumerated in 2 Timothy 3: 1-6, lack this consistency, and their mere form of godliness will be to their destruction. Benevolence and eloquence without charity are useless, vain, and inconsistent. (1 Cor. chap. 13.)

For those with velvet lips and tongue
Will not compose the heavenly throng;
While those with charity alone
Will surround his glorious throne.

St. James points out in his epistle the true nature of religion and consistency; and also St. John, who declares that "whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." (2 John v. 9.) The Savior prayed for those only whom God had given him (John 17); and all through the Holy Scriptures the fact is prominently placed before us that God will only own and acknowledge those who receive his gospel and live up to the same to the best of their ability.

Disobedience has been the cause of all the ills and woes that mankind were afflicted with. Adam fell, the antediluvians were destroyed by the flood, the Jews were scattered among all nations and became a hiss and byword. Judgments and calamities were, are, and will be poured out upon all nations for disobedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ, who will destroy the wicked and rebellious by the brightness of his coming.

When king Saul tried to bribe God with a sacrifice, he was rebuked by Samuel the prophet, and told that obedience is better than sacrifice (1 Samuel 15: 22), and Saul lost his kingdom as the result. Therefore strict obedience to the will and law of God, or the gospel of Jesus Christ, has to be observed to escape the punishment of the wicked and rebellious, and to gain salvation in the kingdom of God.

The Lord by his servant and prophet, Joseph Smith, established his church and kingdom through the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon, which contains the fullness of the everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ, and also a true record of the ancient inhabitants of this continent. (Isa. 29.) The church grew rapidly in numbers; and although her incorporated name was "the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," she went by the name of "Mormon" (as the system was called "Mormonism") without a stigma or reproach upon her until after the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1844; and after Brigham Young led the minority of the body to Utah, and there in 1852 introduced polygamy and other abominations among them—all diametrically opposed to the pure and undefiled tenets of the Book of Mormon, disgracing thereby the whole latter-day work and creating a prejudice against the same hard to be eradicated, for the general impression is that Mormonism is Utahism, and every member a polygamist, which is greatly strengthened by the reluctance to be known by that name, while sneeringly the Utahites are called by that once so highly honored name, when they are a set of apostates, inveterate enemies to the truth, and a dangerous counterfeit to the Reorganization, and just as well admit heathens to be Christians, or the fallen angels to be angels of light as the Utahites Saints or Mormons. Cut Utahism loose from Mormonism, and degrade no longer the fair name of that book so essential to salvation, and which the public will hardly receive with a depreciated name and record.

The significance of the name "Mormon" is "more good" (Joseph the Martyr): then the true believers in that book are or should be those that are seeking for more good works (not women). Then what is the difference between a so called Mormon and a Saint? Nothing but the name; for a Latter Day Saint had to accept the Book of Mormon to be a Saint, and as the church is built upon Jesus Christ through revelation, and not upon Mormon the Prophet, the discarding of or even slighting of the name and then advocating the importance of the book at the same time, is inconsistent and foolish.

I have been known and called a "Mormon" for these last forty-six years, and considered a polygamist and a horse thief of no mean order; yet I have lived through it, and my hair did not get any more gray on account of it. If any asked me why I was a Mormon, I politely gave them my reason for being one; as for being a Saint, they shook their heads, very sagely saying, You may be a good Mormon, but not a Saint; and of course if we are judged by the report, I could not blame them.

I am now seventy-six years and six months old, and confined to my bed for these last eighteen months with kidney and Bright's disease and I think I am pretty near to my journey's end. I had a rough and eventful life; a soldier in Prussia when only fourteen years old; came to America; went to the Mexican war; doubled Cape Horn; pulled a handcart to Utah in 1856; joined the Reorganization in 1864 I think; had a rough time preaching young Joseph, as also in the States and Canada; but am now helpless. I am lonesome, forsaken, and forgotten, though I hope not of the God whom I have tried to love and serve. In hope of eternal life,

CARL W. LANGE.

PEN NOTES AND PENCILINGS.

Just how to vote in the coming election is a very perplexing question to one who has been out of touch with his country's politics for so long. I had begun to prepare by studying the platforms, but found that I am disfranchised—was away too long and have not been back long enough, and yet I am one of the oldest native-born inhabitants of Montana. However, there is no use losing interest. Saints should prize the franchise. If we are careless, and bad men get into power (locally, specially), we are partly responsible. The Doctrine and Covenants contains the counsel: vote for good men. I do not like many features of even the best government by man on earth, but it is a great deal better than nothing. "The powers that be" are ordained of God in the absence of the better (best) kingdom which is to come. For instance, I don't like the blending of politics and statesmanship. Nowadays, a man may be an able statesman, but in order to get into the lawmaking branch of government and do us good, he must be a politician. He must make a trade of it—fall in with and use the methods of those who make it their profession. Some of these methods are bad. A politician is not necessarily a statesman. But to return to the present campaign: no matter which party is right or which is victorious, one good result will come out of it. There is a class of foreigners numbered by thousands who are here to stay, but who came to this land of the free to better their temporal conditions. They have been more intent on making money than assisting in the government of the State. It is desirable that they become intelligent, active citizens. The issues of the present campaign are such as will call out discussion of the immortal principles upon which this government was founded. The contest is to be a warm one, and even a casual observer cannot help but know more of the Constitution and the spirit of our free institutions, and what Americanism means. A sounder citizenship for all ought to result, and thus a safer foundation be laid for the future.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I came across a good thing lately in Campbell's Illustrated Journal, published in Chicago. It is a letter from that eminent rabbi, Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, to Isador Blumenthal, of Chicago, in answer to questions on the present political situation. Dr. Hirsch is a republican. The two candidates for governor of Illinois are Alschuler (dem.) and Yates (rep.), but Alschuler is a Jew. The question is: Should not all Jews vote for their brother? Here is Dr. Hirsch's opinion:—

The fact that I am a Jew and Mr. Alschuler is of Jewish parentage cannot influence my action. I do not vote as a Jew, but as an American citizen. . . . If we are so foolish as to vote for a Jew simply because he is a Jew, we must be prepared to have others vote against Jewish candidates because they are Jews. Judaism teaches loyalty to principles. . . . There ought to be no such thing as a Jewish vote. It is as insane as would be a Catholic vote. Hebrew marching clubs, no matter under what flag, are an insult to the spirit of our institutions. We vote as citizens and not as members of a religious fraternity.

Amen to that! And the church that follows the course deprecated by Dr. Hirsch, to gain temporal power, will certainly share the fate described of Jews in his closing sentence which says:—

Those Jews, I am afraid, who ignore these elementary principles will have cause to regret their fanaticism or their enthusiasm. Today they plead for a Jew with Jews. Tomorrow others, non-Jews, will plead with non-Jews against Jews.

Thoughts sometimes seem original when they were really read beforehand in some book or heard in conversation. Some years ago, was reading the Sermon on the Mount. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." A new (?) thought struck me, and on the margin I penciled: "inherit" it—not buy or conquer it. Later, in scanning my Drummond's Essays, found I had read the idea there, and marked it long enough before to have forgotten it. The mind holds many concepts we are not conscious of. All truth is of God, and it may be doubted whether anything from human minds is original. The meaning of the word in this connection is relative, not absolute. We are but reflectors of thought and truth.

There is in the nature of mankind something (what is it?)—a sort of secret skepticism eating out the heart of a Christian's better nature. It causes the supernatural, and sometimes the existence of the Deity, to be doubted. Reason is called into action, and doubts flee. Dark doubt! you bring no satisfaction to the human mind. It is human to doubt; divine to believe. Intelligent faith develops mind or soul, especially reason. Doubt is negative and dwarfs the mind. In his essays on religion, Hume says:—

The whole frame of nature bespeaks an Intelligent Author; and no rational inquirer can, after serious reflection, suspend his belief a moment with regard to the primary principles of genuine theism and religion.

But let us be impartial in this reflection on doubt. Human nature seems just as prone to dangers on the side of religious thought and devotion. "Ignorance is [sometimes] the mother of devotion." If some doubt without a reason, others believe without a reason. This isn't faith, but credulity, or superstition. That which is absurd or false to a rational (i. e. reasoning) mind is sacredly orthodox to many unreasoning worshipers.

A minister who can rise above denominational bigotry is Dr. Martin, of Deer Lodge, president of the Presbyterian seminary located at the same place. Since being introduced, he always speaks as we pass, and sometimes stops to chat. I had about completed painting and repairing the Deer Lodge Saints' chapel, and had been complimented through the local paper as a rustler. Dr. Martin took occasion to point out in one of our chats that though I had done a good service to the church and had improved the appearance of chapel, I was hurting the other ministers in town by such a course, and also working a hardship to my brother ministers who would follow me. Considering the constitution of human nature, this seemed the philosophical side. He said they once had a pastor locate at Pony, in this State. He would work with the farmers, do all kinds of hard work, and finally built a chapel there. When he went away the work died. His successor didn't fill the bill, because he fell below the standard (?) erected by the first man. Good men with other tastes and talents went there, but could do nothing. The verdict on each was: "He don't do like brother Blank." Result: an empty church and no pastor now. I acknowledged the philosophy, but explained that the present case was special, inasmuch as the church building was going to decay and the congregation was not able to hire a painter at $2.50 a day. However, when the doctor and I parted, I thought there was wisdom in his observation. The people do not always consider the different talents and abilities of men who minister in spiritual things. I know of one missionary who is a mechanical genius. He mends clocks or sewing machines, which is a delight to him, and often helps needy people in his travels, through his skill. He can take off his coat and build a house. He can take his bike and ride to an appointment and not bother any one for fare or horse. And so it is. Another missionary can walk miles and miles, and some others can talk in the street against wind, dust, and noise. It does not follow that because one minister is constituted for a certain line, and may be very useful outside the pulpit, that all others are just the same. Then, the times and conditions must be considered. Elder Glaud Rodger traveled through Australia as a pioneer elder, when railways were wanting or few. Result: he walked extraordinary lengths. Facilities for traveling are better and cheaper now, yet it would be foolish to exact that our elders there now should do just like Bro. Glaud, or be considered below the standard. There are in the church a few (only few) who think a General Conference appointee falls below the standard of ministerial excellence unless he shoulders his valise and strikes out on foot altogether. They might as well require that he wear sandals.

SECRET SOCIETIES; ARE THEY APPROVED OF GOD?

The above was the caption of an article appearing in Herald for September 19. Quite frequently some of the good brethren feel called upon to write against secret societies and insurance companies. It really is an important subject; but a satisfactory answer to the query cannot be given by quoting what Daniel did over two thousand years back, nor can we answer the question by any citations to what the Gadiaton robbers did or what God thought of some secret societies on this continent some centuries ago. Even by inference, where is there anything written that condemns all of the modern insurance companies and secret societies? Probably a majority of these socalled secret organizations are composed of men organized for the purpose of carrying out certain principles and objects. They generally have grips, signs, passwords, etc. They hold meetings, transact their routine business, initiate new members, visit the sick, attend funerals of members, and that is about the life led by the average secret society. About all the secrecy connected with them is that everybody can't get in the room where they are transacting their business. Passwords are simply a device to accomplish this end. There is as much secrecy connected with the average business concern as the regulation lodge. There is the private office, a porter or some one to whom a card or name must be given before an interview can be had with the head of the concern. There is the secret safe combination, trade secrets, private cost and price marks, etc. The church is a secret society to some extent. Everybody can't get into the meetings of the quorums and into sessions of elders' courts. The school of the prophets, referred to on page 243, Doctrine and Covenants, bears a striking resemblance in some things to a secret society in the way of exclusiveness. So the matter of secrecy is not an objection to them. The whole question resolves itself into this: "Are there good lodges, doing good, that it would be beneficial for Latter Day Saints to join?"

The wickedness or righteousness of one doesn't determine the moral complexion of all. Where the sick are visited and nursed, orphans provided with a home, widows assisted, the dead decently interred, that is doing good and Latter Day Saints can properly help in such work, and in turn be benefited. James says, in 1: 27: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." The Book of Mormon gives the thought that all good cometh from God. If it is pure religion to visit the fatherless and is good to care for the sick, does not he who will reward every man according to his works approve of the practical religion carried on by such organizations? Sometimes it is better to go visiting with a full purse than a ready prayer. There is a demand for these organizations, and as the churches don't fill that want, we have insurance companies and lodges filling that demand.

"Oh, but we should have faith in God and not depend on a worldly organization to provide for our wants and look after our loved ones."

What should we expect from God in case the head of the family gets sick and remains so for a long time, as many good Saints have done, and then dies? Ought we to think that the mother and little ones will get along just as well, somehow? If the old people in the church were being well provided for, why was the Saints' Home built? There was a legal demand for just such an institution because the old people were not being properly taken care of, no matter how much faith they had in God.

If it wasn't for the institution of the insurance company, how many additional sad and poverty-stricken homes we would have! God always expects us to use our own intelligence and help ourselves when we can. The sectarian idea is that Jesus has and will do it all, but a modern revelation from that Jesus says: "You can do much good of ourselves." "He that will not provide for his own is worse than an infidel." Isn't it peculiar reasoning to conclude that it is our duty to provide for our loved ones while we are living but it is not our duty to make any provision for them in case of our sickness or death, and is positively wrong to do so, betraying a woeful lack of faith in God? If a man loses faith in God because he is a member of an organization that provides for him when sick and for his loved ones when he dies, we can conclude there is not very much celestial material in that fellow's makeup.

By reason of our environments we are compelled to depend upon human institutions for our very lives, no matter how much faith we have. The majority of us may make our livings from those who oppress the hireling in his wages. Don't let us be cranky and narrow on this subject of insurance, etc. Ideal conditions are not in the church or in the world, so in the meantime we should do the best we can and the Lord will not close the pearly gates on us.

The whole subject is often looked at from a wrong point of view. We ought to do every thing we can to conquer sickness and death, and God proposes to help us in the effort. Christ has said that death is the last enemy he shall put under his feet. He has made it possible to say: "Oh death, where is thy sting! Oh grave, where is thy victory!" God has given the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick that death and sickness may be conquered. He has given the "word of wisdom" for a like purpose —although many of us don't appreciate it. The Lord says we can do much good of ourselves. These insurance organizations help us to soften the terrors of sickness and death; and yet we are told we haven't faith in God if we try to do what we can to meet these enemies to our bodies. Instead of carelessly shoving the responsibility upon God of taking care of your family after you die, use means the most sagacious business men of the day employ to guarantee the protection of the home after their death.

So far as the association of these societies is concerned, the young especially should be careful of the company they keep; but what use is salt as a preserving and saving chemical if it is not mixed with that which it is to save? If Latter Day Saints are to be the salt of the earth, they must mingle with the people whom they are to save, and influence them for good. The convent is a good place for people who are so weak that contact with their fellow men will ruin them; but Christ prayed that God would not take his disciples out of the world but keep them from the evils of it.

Here are some good thoughts by Talmage:—

> Some of you are making a great swash in life and after a while will die, leaving your families beggars and will expect us ministers of the Gospel to come and lie about your excellencies, but will not do it. If you send for me I will tell you what my text will be: "He that provideth not for his own, and especially those of his own household, is worse than an infidel."
> In this day God has mercifully allowed those of us who have limited income to make provision for our families. By some self-denial on our part we can make this provision for those we shall leave behind us.
> Is there anything so helpless as a woman whose husband has just died, when, with her children at her back, she goes out to fight for bread? Shall she become a menial servant in some one else's household? No—not the one who has been lying on your arm all these years, and filling the household with joy and light.
> Shall she sew for a living? God knows they get but six or eight cents for making garments.
> Ah, no! You had better have your coffin made large enough to take all with you into that land where they never freeze or starve.
> How a man with no surplus estate, but still enough money to pay a premium on life insurance, can refuse to do it and then look his children in the face, and say his prayers at night on going to bed, expecting them to be answered, is a mystery to me that I never yet have been able to fathom.

Prospective brides, after the young man has popped the question, you begin popping. Ask him how much life insurance he carries or how much he proposes to take out. If he can't pass the physical examination you don't want to marry a possible invalid.

Brethren with families, it is your duty to invest some of your earnings in a substantial life insurance company and then when the time comes for you to shuffle off this mortal coil, if you haven't been able to save anything, your dying moments will not be filled with anxiety as to the provision of your family temporally.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 5, 1900.

"TRY THE SPIRITS."

1 John 4: 1.

March the eleventh, 1900, I was at Walker, Missouri, and at the social meeting in the afternoon a sister spoke in tongues, and the interpretation was: "Not many days and war will be poured out upon China. Yea, and also war will yet be on your own country."

Well, we see a part of the prediction having a fulfillment. Shall we look for the balance? We are told by the Lord through Moses:—

> When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken.—Deut. 18: 22.

But now we see the thing spoken coming to pass, so the Lord hath spoken it. These are days of trouble and sorrow, and the fulfillment of the Savior's delaration found in the 24th chapter of Matthew; and as we see the Savior's prediction coming to pass, we can lift up our heads and rejoice, for his coming is near, even at the door.

I am very well satisfied that the time is near at hand when he that will not take the sword against his neighbor must flee to Zion for safety. (D. C., sec. 45.)

I believe the Saints now should gather into the regions round about and get themselves homes in the land of Zion, as is found in section 117. The Saints should send up money to the Bishop, and let him whose duty it is buy up large tracts of land, as he could get it much cheaper; for as soon as those speculators find a few families moving in, up goes the price of land; and if we put our money in the hands of the Bishop he stops that raise, and the Saints get the benefit. Let us act wisely in those matters, Saints. If the Saints had acted wisely, and done as God commanded them in the days gone by, Zion could have been redeemed, the temple built and ready for the Master's coming. O what blessings, temporal and spiritual, Latter Day Israel has lost by not obeying the commands of our heavenly Father! God has promised to commune with his people if they would keep his law, and give them revelation upon revelation for their guidance, and be fed daily on that bread of life that cometh down from above. But as it was sung in tongues by one of God's servants in Canada:—

Hearken unto me, my people,
I will give to thee advice;
Think not you I have forgotten,
For before me thou art prized.
If in me you'll be united,
Then my power you would see;
But when vice, and grave disunion,
Then, oh then, how can it be?

I would speak unto my people,
Send my angels to their home;
If in me you'll be united,
Ne'er, O ne'er, from me to roam!
Oh, my people, take the counsel
Of my servants o'er the land,
Cease to be in such disorder,
Then, oh then, in me you'll stand!

Then you'll see my power displayed,
Then you'll have mine angels come;
Oh, my people, they are waiting,
They are waiting, will they come!
It is on you I am waiting—
For my storehouse it is full;
Oh, then, cease, cease all your jangles,
Be united—be you one.

The work in many places is really spiritually dead, yet in other places many of the Saints are struggling alone through the trials of life, and are very anxious to reach that happy home beyond. I find some Latter Day Saints that really believe the letter of the gospel is true, yet they seek for the pleasures of life, and are oft found in the park or theater, and many times go visiting on Sunday, and are not found at the altar worshiping the Master and trying to keep the Sabbath holy. And when they are taken down sick, they are scared, fear comes upon them, afraid they are going to die, and then call for the elders to come quickly and administer, and instead of being raised right up, may lie upon their bed for days and suffer. And why is this?—

They were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers, to answer them in the day of their trouble. In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me —D. C. 98:3

Let us try, my brethren and sisters, to make God's law honorable in keeping it, and thereby reap the benefits accruing therefrom; and by our life in Christ be the means of bringing others to see the glorious light of the everlasting gospel.

A DREAM VISION.

I dreamed I came out of my house in the evening, with two of my boys. We met other children, and together we went up to the corner of the street. It was nearly dark. I happened to look upwards to the sky, and there saw a most beautiful scroll, which appeared to be about six feet long and two feet wide, darting about with great rapidity, seeming to encompass the whole heavens. It appeared to act with intelligence, and to have a purpose in its motions, as it would shoot with lightning velocity in one direction, and then suddenly change is course. The colors were more beautiful than I ever had seen before, so brilliant and splendid; but there was not the least halo or reflection from it. The loveliness was all in itself.

I called the attention of others to the phenomena, but they seemed either not to see it or to be indifferent; only the children and myself enjoyed the wonderful appearance. At the first it caused in me a feeling of awe and great wonderment. I thought it was some kind of comet, that portended disaster to some part of the people of the earth. While thinking of these things, the scroll was gradually approaching the earth, and its form gradually changed. The colors became more numerous and resplendent, and it threw out rays and scintillations in a most beautiful manner until it made the earth round about it for quite a distance glorious with warmth, color, and beauty.

I began to have a feeling of happiness come over me, and wanted the folks in the house (which was only a short distance away) to come and see the strange sight. They seemed to enjoy the recital of the occurrence, but did not come out, as I desired them to do. I returned to the place I had left. The boys were still there, watching the vision, that by this time had descended still nearer the earth, and was now about twenty feet from the ground. My joy seemed to increase as I was enveloped in the beautiful reflections of the wonderful heavenly visitant, and I felt that I must go again to the house and urge my people to come and see it.

As I started the object with all its attendant grandeur commenced to move likewise. At first I did not pay special attention to this; but as I perceived it moved in the same direction that I did and appeared to keep directly over my head. I stopped to see if it would stop likewise, which it did. This caused me great surprise and an extra degree of pleasure, and I purposed then to make a test to see if it was not merely a coincidence or accidental. So I started onward again, and the object started just as soon as I did, and kept in the same position over me, and all the surroundings were beautiful as before. I did not go into the house as at first intended, but passed by to continue the experiment. No matter how far I went, or how often I retraced my steps, it would still move as I did and stopped when I did all the while keeping directly above me.

When the knowledge came to me that I did, truly, control the motion of this beautiful and peculiar appearance, no tongue can describe the feeling of rapture that pervaded my soul, and I could not repress the exclamation, "I believe this is indeed meant for me."

At this point I awoke.

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST.

In the first century of the Christian era the civilized world rested in unexampled peace. It was the most tranquil period Europe has ever known. No general war disturbed the prosperity of Gaul, Italy, or the east; no widespread revolution carried carnage and desolation to the populous provinces of imperial Rome. It was a golden, autumnal season of classic civilization. When the ripened fruits of long years of material and mental progress were showered upon mankind, and when the internal decay of the mighty empire was hidden in its exterior and splendid tranquility. Compared with the later centuries the first was singularly frugal of human life.

In the seventeenth century all Europe was torn by fierce religious wars, and men died by myriads to gratify the fanatical malice of kings and priests.

In the eighteenth the obstinate vanity of a Louis, a Frederick, or a George III. covered land and sea with slaughter.

In the dawn of the nineteenth, millions of the human race perished by the iron will of Napoleon; and the young generation of Europe and

www.LatterDayTruth.org

America have seldom known any long repose from the dreadful duties of the camp.

But in the first century no battle of civilized men occurred equal in importance to Sadowa; no siege, except that of Jerusalem, as destructive as that of Sebastopol. Under its imperial masters — whether madmen, philosophers, or monsters—the Roman world almost forgot the art of warfare; and, weighed down by a general tyranny, gave itself languidly to the pursuits of peace.

A magnificent form of civilization at once grew up. Men everywhere clustered together in cities, and surrounded themselves with the countless appliances of a luxurious life. The theater and also amphitheater, the aqueduct and bath, the graceful temples of yellow marble, the groves and gardens, the triumphal arches, the forums filled with statues and lined with colonnades, were repeated in all those centers of artistic taste that sprung up under the fostering care of successive emperors, from the Cæsarea of Palestine to the distant wilds of Britain or Gaul. The Roman empire embraced within its limits a chain of cities fairer than the proudest capitals of modern Europe—a throng of municipalities destined to become the future centers of Christian thought. At the mouth of the venerable Nile stood Alexandria. Its population was nearly a million. It controlled the commerce of the world, and its vast fleets often covered the Mediterranean. It was the Paris of the east—gay, splendid, intellectual; its university and its library, its philosphers and critics, filled the age with active speculation. Antioch, on the Syrian shore, still retained its prosperity and its luxurious charms. In the midst of its apocalyptic sisters, Ephesus glittered with artistic decorations, and maintained in all their magnificence the temple and the ritual of Diana.

Greece boasted the corrupt elegance of Corinth, the higher taste of incomparable Athens. Far to the west Carthage had risen from its ruins to new importance. Spain was adorned with the temples, and the aqueducts of Saragossal and Cordova; the banks of the Rhine and the wilds of Gaul were sown with magnificent cities; and the camps of Britain swiftly grew into populous capitals and peaceful homes. In the midst of the series of provincial towns stood conquering Rome, the mistress of them all, slowly gathering within her bosom the wealth, the luxury, the corruption of the world.

But of all the imperial cities the most wonderful was still Jerusalem. In a mysterious antiquity none of them could rival her.

The towers of Salem had been contemporary with that of Belus or Semiramis, of the glory of Thebes and the youth of Memnon. Jerusalem had seen the splendors of her conquerors of Babylon and Egypt sink into decay.

A thousand years had passed since David founded the city of Mount Zion, and still, in the first century, with a singularly vitality, the holy site was covered with magnificent buildings, and a new temple had risen on Mount Moriah, to surpass the glory of that of Solomon, when the seven hills of Rome had been a desolate waste, and the acropolis the retreat of shepherds —when all Europe was a wilderness, and savage hunters roamed over the site of its fairest cities. Jerusalem had shone over the east a beacon of light, and had observed and, perhaps, guided the progress of Italy and Greece.

She had been often conquered, but never subdued. More than once leveled to the ground, she had risen from her ashes. For a thousand years the priests had chanted the psalms of David from Mount Moriah, unless in captivity or exile, and still the Jerusalem of Herod and Nero was in her magnificent ritual and her sacred pomp the rival and the peer of Athens and Rome.

Among the gods is none like unto Him, into whose hand are committed the kingdoms, the power, and the glory of the worlds. Thrones and empires, the dynasties of kings, the fall of nations, the birth of churches, the triumphs of time. They arise and pass, they were and are not; the sea and the dust and the immense mystery of space devour them. The tramp of armies, the voices of joy and of pain, the cry of the newborn babe, the shout of the warrior mortally smitten. Marriage, divorce, division, violent deaths, martyrdoms, tyrannous ignorance, the impotence of passionate protest, and the mad longing for oblivion. The eyes of the tiger in the jungle, the fang of the snake, the fœtor of slaughterhouses, the wail of innocent beasts in pain. The strife towards manhood, the ceaseless pulse and current of desire, these are all his. God called him Satan the Destroyer, for his arm breaketh and grindeth to pieces.

Time accuseth even the saints of the Lord. Blessed are they who withstand his subtlety. They shall be called the Sons of God. Oh! that we united be, for the end cometh soon.

Lo! it comes! with stealthy feet,
Day, the ages shall complete,
When the world shall melt with heat.

Day of wrath and consternation,
Day of fiery consummation,
Prophesied in Revelation.

O, what horror on all faces,
When the coming Judge each traces,
Flaming, dreadful, in all places.

Trump shall sound, and every single,
Mortal slumberer's ears shall tingle.

All of every tribe and nation,
That have lived since the creation,
Answering that dread citation.

Volumes, from which nothing 's blotted,
Evil done, nor evil plotted,
Shall be brought and dooms allotted.

Day shall dawn that has no morrow,
Day of vengeance, day of sorrow,
As from prophecy we borrow,

Day of vengeance, end of scorning,
World in ashes, world in mourning,
Whereof prospects utter warning.

Respectfully, in the gospel,
BRO. WM. J. HOLDEN.

SYDNEY, Australia, Sept. 12.

Editors Herald:—Things are "looking up" in Australia, and times seem to be getting better than they have been for the last seven years. The Australian Federal Parliament will soon meet, and all the colonies will then be united and working under one head, with intercolonial free trade and protection against foreign nations. This will encourage foreign capitalists to invest their surplus cash here in developing some of the many rich deposits of minerals. Australia is as large as the United States, and has a white population of about five million, and under proper conditions should be able to sustain more than twenty-five million people—Australia is an infant nation that will yet grow to power and wealth and exert a powerful influence among the nations.

Our church has a large field of labor here; but with only three missionaries we can't expect to evangelize Australia in a few years' time. The honest in heart are being gathered into the church by twos, threes and fives, and we are cheered and made glad by seeing the gifts and blesings follow the believers.

Yes, the truth is being confirmed in the hearts of the Saints here by signs and wonders and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to our loving Savior's will.

I have been here over seven years and in this time would many times have been awfully discouraged at the slow progress of the work and the many hindrances in the way, but for the cheering and comforting promises of the Holy Spirit speaking peace to the soul and declaring that the Lord had many sheep here to be gathered into the "one fold."

I believe one of the main factors in getting the gospel before the people here should be the printing press. The majority can be reached no other way. It's not an easy matter to get buildings to preach in; and when one is obtained it is difficult to get people to come and hear; but the printed word can be supplied to every one alike, if we only have it.

Adventist, Campbellites, Army and many other sects have publishing houses here and print mission papers, tracts, and pamphlets, and thus they have a great advantage over us in making their faith known. Why cannot we who have a fullness of the gospel, also have a small printing plant? If we had one our "Australian Ensign" would have continued to live; for we would only have been to about half the expense with it. One hundred pounds ($500) would get press and type to meet all the requirements of this mission, and we have a place free of rent to put it in, and all the work of getting out a monthly paper would be donated except £2 ($10) per month for type setting, and price of paper and ink would of course be extra. Under these conditions two hundred good subscribers at $1 each would publish a neat little mission paper. We have a "press" fund started and all Saints in Australia please remember to donate what you can afford towards it. Send along your offerings, large or small. Saints in any other part of the world wishing to assist can also send along their donations. The Lord has told us that there were thousands, in this mission, to be gathered in by the faithfulness of the Saints. The printed word will reach many of these honest souls that can be reached no other way. For the present send all money for the Australian press fund to the writer, 128 Evans street, Rozelle, Sydney, N. S. W., Australia.

Thanks to Bro. Caffall for his pleadings on behalf of our Australian work in Herald. I remember with joy my labors under dear Bro. Caffall in Colorado. May God enrich his last days on earth! Love to all Saints!

JOHN KALER.

SWEET WATER, Texas, Oct. 6.

Editors Herald:—I wish to say to the household of the faithful, that I was knowing to the fact of Bro. W. G. North and family being at Galveston at the time the waters heaved themselves beyond their bounds and swept the inhabitants from the island. It was through the faithful effort of Sr. Wight that the daily reports were carefully noted for his name. When she first found it, it was in the enumeration of the refugees at Houston. He is now at San Antonio, as you may see by his letter published in Herald this week.

I have known Bro. North for many years. He is a man full of pluck and energy; and although he must be about sixty years of age I am willing to guarantee that if he has half a chance he will make a sustenance for himself and family. But, dear Saints, he is now out from under the care of the relief committee, and it becomes us as Saints of God to practice what we believe and divide our scanty substance with Bro. North in this his trying hour. If any of the branches will take a collection and send to me I will receipt them and forward to Bro. North at once; or if they prefer, his address is 2002 South Flores street, San Antonio, Texas. He has been a subscriber to the Herald and advocate of the angel message, and a liberal contributor to the ministry and the poor for many years, and notwithstanding he is among his friends who I know to be willing to divide the last crust, they are of the worthy class, very poor.

As to the work in this part, were it not for the perfect confidence I have in the final triumph I would give it up. All the preaching I have done lately has cost me about an average of $1 50 per effort, and that comes out of the scanty allowance for the family; but the Lord blesses us, and though he should slay me yet will I love him.

Yours in hope of a final triumph,

L. L. WIGHT.

Editors Herald:—I have never attempted to write to your paper; but as the letters in the Herald do me so much good, I thought one from me might reach a place in some heart. We have had such a good meeting at our place in charge of Brn. Marshall and M. R. Scott. We hope they will come again.

I never was much inclined to believe in dreams, but am a little puzzled over some dreams I have had lately. First I dreamed I saw a black place in the sky. It was in the northeast, and was in the shape of a sword. Just a little south of that was another black place, it was straight. Just south of that was another, the same as the second. On the night of the second of October I saw those spots the same color as the others, but different shape, and many more of them. They were in the northeast. The sky was so blue and clear and the spots appeared so plainly as I stood at our north gate beholding the beautiful scenery. I heard beautiful singing, such as I never heard before. I never heard such singing among feathered songsters in all my life.

Your sister,

SANTA ANA, Cal., October 1.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps a few items from the Chatburn-Hyder debate will be of interest.

The evening of September 19, Bro. Chatburn and I began a series of tent meetings at a point known as Ocean View, about nine miles southwest of here. On the second evening Bro. Chatburn was interrupted and corrected (?) by what proved to be an elder in the Church of Christ, by the name of Edward Hyder. At our meeting on the 22d ult., Elder Hyder presented challenges to Bro. Chatburn, which were accepted. The question involved being which church is the true church of Christ and is the same in faith, organization, and doctrine as the one set up by Christ and his apostles eighteen hundred years ago.

Bro. T. W. began Tuesday evening, and for three nights affirmed the position of our church, and Elder Hyder denied. The following three nights the order was reversed.

All along we had large crowds and a good interest. Though prejudice ran high on the opposing side, a great many friends were made to the cause we love so much. Bro. Chatburn ably defended our cause, and in a manly and upright way showed forth our position.

Elder Hyder started out a follower of Alexander Campbell, but before the close he repudiated Campbell with his works and claimed to be identified with the church set up by Christ eighteen hundred years ago. He failed however to reveal the mysterious channel through which this identification came. At the same time he denied the Holy Ghost with all the gifts and blessings characteristic of Christ's church; admitted a complete apostasy, and never named an officer in the church he represents.

Bro. Chatburn closed by displaying two charts, one showing the organization and spiritual blessings of the Christ church, the other showing a summing up of all that was set up by Hyder, "nothing."

Our faith is unshaken, our hope far brighter, our zeal augmented, and to God we are returning thanks for his goodness and blessings.

Three young ladies were baptized Sunday afternoon; others are interested.

We will continue services there in the tent for some time.

Still joyous in the conflict, I am,

Your brother,

D. A. ANDERSON.

Editors Herald:—

"Oh watch and fight and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore."

It has just been six weeks today since Elder O. H. Bailey baptized Sr. Mary Nedreau and myself, and since then I have been happy in serving God. Although I am called upon every day to pass through many trials, praise God I can go to him in prayer and receive comfort. It seems I cannot thank the Lord enough for sending the elders to Lamont that he did, and especially Bro. O. H. Bailey who was so kind in explaining the Bible to us all. I shall never forget the feast we all had who attended the two days' meeting at Arlington, Iowa. It seemed hard to part from the Saints who are trying to worship God as they should, and come home where no God is worshiped. I desire the prayers of all Christians, that I may have help from God to bear through the trials of this earth. Sister Mary also wishes your prayers. Your sister in bonds, CLARA M. SCOTHORN.

LEAVENWORTH, Ind.

Editors Herald:—Brn. M. R Scott and Wm. Marshall commenced meetings on the 28th of September at Leavenworth branch. They did some splendid preaching to the Saints, and it was good for the unbelievers. The meetings were well attended night and day. The order was good. The people seemed to want to hear. The brethren preached four sermons, and closed the meetings on Sunday night. After the meeting closed there were four who wished to be administered to, and the arrangement was made to meet at John Baker's early Monday morning. Elders and Saints came together at eight o'clock. All the Saints bore testimony that this latter-day work is of the Lord. The power of God was felt in the meeting to the shedding tears by many who were present. The brethren gave the Saints good advice on the account of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit that will be remembered a long time. After the meeting we bade each other farewell, and went to our homes feeling we had been blessed during the stay of the elders with us. May God bless them as they go to other fields to labor, is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

PETER A. FLINN.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 2.

Editors Herald:—Last June, in company with Bro. J. D. White, missionary in charge here in this city, we began active work in our new tent which had been purchased by the four branches of the city. We erected the tent on Eighteenth street, opposite Holmes Park. From the very first we felt blessed in our preaching, and had good congregations. The second Monday we organized a Sabbath school, with sixty members present: Bro. E. Etzenhouser superintendent, and F. Koehler assistant. Much good was accomplished by the school. We preached forty sermons. Hundreds were informed of the angel's message, and heard us gladly. Much prejudice was removed, and many have become our friends. We were here ably assisted by Brn. Hilliard, I. N. and Alfred White, Williams, and Pease. Their labors were appreciated by us. Also many of the young Saints aided us very much and made our meetings joyful and attractive by their song services.

We were quite loath to pull up stakes and move, but wisdom directed that in other parts of this great city the gospel should be preached, so we moved to Seventeenth street and Prospect Place. Here we were heartily joined by the West Kansas City branch; and the same Spirit that was ours to enjoy at the former place was here with us to rule and govern our meetings. The people seemed to give us a hearty welcome, and we had good congregations at once. We also continued our mission Sunday school every Sunday afternoon. Some followed us from our former location.

After we were nicely located I received an invitation from the committee on reunion of the Spring River district. With the consent of my colaborer and those in charge I left for southern Kansas, my field of labor twenty years ago. Our meeting with Saints and many friends (outsiders) was more than we are able to express. It was almost heaven on earth, a foretaste of the sweet bye and bye. Our associations there with the Saints and friends is one of the oases on the desert of our life. The reunion was a perfect success from beginning to finish. God indeed was with us. Most of the preaching was the best I ever heard, and in our prayer services we were blessed with the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit in prophecy, tongues, interpretations of tongues, and revelations, by which the Saints were cheered, comforted, and instructed. Many sick were administered to, and some were instantly healed. At the close it seemed almost as if the heavenly choir was aiding in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Our parting was a feeling of heartfelt love for each other as Saints only know.

Much credit is due to the committee, Brn. W. S. Taylor, J. M. Richards, and McCall for their untiring labors and looking after everything and everybody. Such labors of love will not be overlooked by Him who rules on high and has this latter-day work in charge. The Saints who manifested so much kindness to us are so many, and lest we should omit some names, we will name none in this letter; but when the sheep will be gathered and the rewards given, then will the sheep, the Saints of the Holy One of Israel realize the sayings of Jesus, "Inasmuch as you have done it unto these my brethren [the priesthood] you have done it unto me." "They shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world; and their joy shall be full forever."—2 Nephi 6: 7.

When we returned home we found everything lovely at the tent. Bro. A. White had nobly filled our place during our absence, and the interest was fully as good as when we left.

Again we reluctantly pulled up stakes and moved our tent to Ninth and Ohio streets, feelings well satisfied with our labors there, for good was accomplished.

Thanks to the many Saints for their kindness shown to us and the excellent assistance rendered while we were there with you. We acknowledge that we could not have accomplished the good we did without your aid.

In our present location we have had some very good meetings; but have been greatly hindered and interfered with by hard winds and rain. But now it is cleared up, and the equinoctial storm seems to be over, and we look for a good time. Last night our tent was full. Every seat was occupied, some sitting on the platform and some standing on the outside: and oh, how happy we felt under the inspiration of God while feeding the souls of that multitude with manna from heaven.

I find in my associate, Bro. J. D. White, all that I could desire. Yours in bonds,

F. C. WARNKY.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., October 6.

Editors Herald:—The work in Providence is "marching on." The recent sermons of Bishop Hilliard have been extremely helpful along practical lines. Zion's Religio, locally, is taking a new impetus. Not long since a new opening was made at Hope, Rhode Island, with preaching by Elders M. H. Bond and G. H. Smith. The last two Sundays a new church building has been secured at Anthony, Rhode Island, where services have been held with Elder George H. Gates in charge and Elder George H. Smith as preacher. Bro. H. B. Johnson has led the singing, assisted by a corps of singers, at both of these places. Bro. A. Leckney as organist has rendered valuable assistance. Several of the Fiskville Saints have attended nearly all these services. The pastorate of Elder M. H. Bond locally has several commendable features, thus far. The death of Bro. Hitchcock of St. Louis is lamented here. In bonds,

UNCLE BURNSIDE.

BRIDGE, Oregon, Oct. 2.

Editors Herald:—This writing finds me up for repairs, but I hope soon to be about my "Master's business." I wish to take this means of expressing my thanks to those Saints who came to my aid last spring to assist me into my field of labor: may the "good Lord" bless them for the same; and while I did not receive the necessary amount, I had some means given me to purchase clothing with, which I was greatly in need. From that fund I paid my way to my field. One good sister took one garment and sewed, dyed, and otherwise repaired it till it looked new; and a good brother did the same to another one, till now they look fairly well. But three years of service is nearly all a suit can stand.

This county (Coos,) presents a very inviting field of labor, although much prejudice remains. Some twenty odd years ago the work was first introduced here by Bro. J. C. Clapp, when some twelve souls accepted the truth; but of these only a few remain true to their covenant. This is not to be wondered at when we come to consider that for some twenty years they were not visited by the ministry, and as one of them remarked to the writer, "We concluded we would have to live and die alone." Some few years ago Bro. J. Luff came and revived the word and baptized a few; then later Brn. Holt and Chase came and did likewise; then a year ago Bro. Chase and the writer did some labor, when some nine were added by baptism. This year Bro. C. E. Crumley and the writer have been doing missionary labor, and to date have baptized eleven, and others have given their names, and we hope will obey ere long. Now we have some thirty-one or thirty-two members in this county in a disorganized condition; but we expect this will be attended to when Bro. Griffiths comes, which we hope will be very soon.

I wish to say to all who have written me in regards to labor, Be a little patient, and I hope to reach you all in time. I may be a little slow, but I hope sure. My plan is to work the ground thoroughly as I go, then when I leave a place I can feel I have done my duty. Observation has taught me that to run hastily over the ground often proves detrimental to the work. A small farm well worked will yield better returns than a large one only partly cared for.

Bro. Crumley will settle his family in this part of the field and will be a great help to the work, for I find him a very agreeable coworker and an able "defender of the faith." With some he is the "white-headed preacher," and I feel to recommend him to all, as worthy of your confidence and support, which I pray will be given him. He is now in another part of the county while I have been at Camas, Douglas county, a new opening, where I held some thirteen meetings, and met some that "knew all about the trouble in Missouri," and of "Joe Smith's" bad work. An investigation proved all they knew was "hearsay." My meetings were fairly well attended considering everything. I am to return there again before leaving, and one is to be baptized on my return. Those who thought they knew so much heard for the first time the "faith of the Saints" or any part of it, and the effect was pronounced, and today we are held in more favorable light than before, and I think if the effort is followed up good will come to the church in more ways than one. While I have anything to say it will be that the Saints in this field (as everywhere I have been) are kind and take pleasure in administering to the wants of the "stranger" who sojourns among them, and one cannot but feel at home with them. As one man, not a member, remarked to the writer, "I find a feeling of love and respect that I do not find with any other people." This is as it should be, for the Saints are the "people of God," therefore should be in the lead in all good works.

I think the west is the headquarters of his "Satanic majesty;" but still there are many noble souls through this country, and I hope they may hear and obey the truth, and that sinners may turn and live. For such we labor and pray.

My address will be Myrtle Point, Coos county, Oregon, till November 1.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

D. L. HARRIS.

CORRELL, Minn., Oct. 7.

Editors Herald:—As requested, Bro. Eli Hayer was sent here by Bro. I. N. Roberts, arriving at 3:30 p. m. I took a flying trip around town, and at eight in the evening had a fair congregation of attentive listeners to Bro. Eli on the first principle of the gospel, "Faith;" others following in their turn for four nights, except Sunday forenoon. He spoke then on the resurrection, from 1 Corinthians, 15th chapter. The Lutherans said it was a spot on them, and such preaching a shame to listen to, for it destroys their eternal damnation doctrine, and one said he would have a dose for him when he comes next year, agreeing to take the stand half of the time. Bro. Hayer preached seven sermons while here, with good attention; but the audiences were small most of the time. Some were satisfied with one hearing; a few attended through all, and were well satisfied and will attend again if one will come in the near future, and, I think, at any time. It was a spiritual feast to me, for I love the doctrine. Mr. Nelson and family received and welcomed Bro. H. throughout his stay here.

Yours in Christ,

JAS. M. BLOOD.

CLINTON, Iowa, Sept. 10.

My Dear Brethren in Christ My Lord:—I was baptized in the Church of Latter Day Saints nearly forty years ago in Sparta, Wisconsin, and married to one of the good old elders of the church, and the man's name that married me to Elder Rogers was James Hutchins. He was one of the twelve apostles [under Strang.—See Church History, vol. 3, p. 44.—ED]. and Elder Cowdery then went to Lacrosse, Wisconsin. He told me he was an eye-witness to the sufferings of the church in Illinois and Missouri. Thank God, they got through all right; but oh! they had to kill our dear prophet, Joseph Smith. I hope God will bless us all to meet in glory. All hold fast to your profession, till Jesus comes. O, I have had many happy hours all alone, although I am feeble in body, but all alive in the spirit. God blesses me daily. I hope you all will pray for me to get better. I pray God to bless all. My name is Eliza Rogers. I am seventy years old and feeble in body. I can go to none of the meetings at all. The good word says: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." I have read almost a dozen of your publication called the Saints' Herald. I like them, O, how much! I have the Book of Mormon. I like all of the true Church of Christ. MRS. ELIZA ROGERS.

CHADWICK, Mo., Sept. 6.

Editors Herald:—I take this opportunity to let all know how the work is progressing in this part of God's vineyard. Our branch, John's Mills, is in a rough, mountainous section, and the scattered condition of the Saints makes it impossible for all to meet and partake of the "bread of life" regularly, which may account for our spiritual growth not being greater. Last Monday Bro. William T. Roach "dropped" among us. Tuesday night he opened up the work at the Barber Creek schoolhouse, south of here. He is having good liberty, making many friends for the cause. Many are interested; some are investigating; the seed is being sown. To God we look for the increase.

Yours for the spread of the truth,

I. K. WEAGLEY.

COOK'S POINT, Texas, Oct. 5.

Editors Herald:—Here I come, to tell you and readers that I met another witness for the Book of Mormon, but he did not know it. This is the way he testified that it was true: He said there was no Devil at all. You remember that the Book of Mormon said that the time would come when men would say, There is no Devil. This man was a prominent merchant. He further said that there is no opposition to right. Some who were present said that they believed his doctrine. He did not hesitate to say that any part of the Bible which he did not believe was not true.

That grand Book of Mormon is and will be proven by those who do not believe it to be true, as well as by those who do.

CHETEK, Wis., Oct. 8.

Editors Herald:—I am still trying to assist in advancing our Master's cause. I joined Bro. E. M. Wildermuth at Eagle Corners, Richland county, September 5, and remained with him about three weeks. We had a splendid hearing at the Corners, with an average attendance of seventy-five. A good interest was manifest all through. We closed our meetings at this place the following Sunday evening after I arrived there, as there had been in all about thirty-two sermons preached at this place. We then moved our tent to a fine grove near the post office of Balmoral, about three miles from Eagle Corners; but we did not have a very good hearing. It is a Presbyterian neighborhood; prejudice against us is very great. However, we were hindered some by a fall of rain nearly every day.

About two weeks later we stored our tent in a granary for winter quarters, and went to Loyd (my old home), and visited my aged grandmother for a few days. Bro. E. M. Wildermuth expects to go into Illinois for the winter. I started for our Northern district conference at Porcupine, which was to convene October 6 and 7. I went via Viroqua, and got my overcoat, which I had left last spring in care of Bro. and Sr. Johnson, then to Valley Junction. I arrived at this place on Thursday eve, ready to go to Porcupine the next day. Here I met Bro. W. A. McDowell. We started for place of conference the next morning and went as far as Eau Claire, but could get no farther on account of railroad washout. We started from Eau Claire to go to Durand, but the train only passed one station and had to return on account of washouts. The track many places was under water. The next day came to Chetek in company with Bro. Whiteaker. Bro. McDowell went back to Valley Junction. We don't know yet whether they had any conference or whether it will be put off until settled weather. There has been so much rain it has been hard to accomplish much, or even for the farmers to get their work done.

Ever laboring and praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

BANDERA, Texas, October 6.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Baggerly has been with us for some time. I left him in San Antonio two weeks since. He has sown the good seed of the word of God, which will surely bear fruit in due time. He was with us in a good, spiritual conference, where all enjoyed their portion of the same.

Yours in the faith,

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 9.

Editors Herald:—The conference of the Eastern Michigan district, held at Flint, October 6 and 7, was well attended. Peace and unity characterized the proceedings. Brn. John H. Lake and A. Barr district president were in charge. There was a continued prayer meeting on Sunday from 8 a. m. to 10:30. Elder A. Barr preached 10:45 to 12 noon; Bro. N. F. Liddy from 2 p. m. to 2:30; Elder Lake from 2:45 to 4 p. m ; Elder E. K. Evans from 5:15 to 6:10 p. m.; and Elder C. Scott from 7:50 to 9:05 p. m. G. A. R. hall, auditorium some 55x60 feet, was full, and the people would have listened another hour!

One was baptized on Monday, at about eight o'clock a. m.

It was a rousing conference. Elders J. A. Grant and Phelps were present from the northern district to enjoy the occasion. Bro. Francis C. Smith, of Owendale, Huron county, was ordained to the office of seventy, by Elders J. H. Lake and C. Scott; and a young brother, James Davis, was ordained to the office of a priest by Elders C. Scott, J. H.

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

Jerusalem, that holy city, we find,
Was shown by an angel to John the divine,
And he saw the glory of God on it shine,
And it "Lighted the city," said John the divine.

The walls of the city were of jasper, so clear,
And had twelve gates of pearl, delightfully fair;
And the beautiful city was gold, pure gold,
Like unto clear glass; glorious to behold.

And a river of water of life was there,
And the tree of life near the water so clear,
Which bore precious fruits, and of twelve different kind,
And "yielded her fruit monthly," said John the divine.

And this holy city that John saw, we learn,
Will come down from heaven prepared and adorned
As a bride for her husband, lovely and fair,
And God and the Lamb that was slain, will be there.

No need of the sun there, for God will give light;
No need of the moon, for there will be no night;
There will be no more death, no crying, no ill,
But God with his people forever will dwell.

And who are the people that God calls his own,
That with him will dwell in that beautiful home,
And partake of the fruit of that lovely tree,
And happy forever and ever will be?

All those who love God and his precepts obey,
From sin and temptation turn firmly away;
Yes, they are God's people, and with him will dwell
In that lovely home, where there will be no ill.

And eat of the fruit of that beautiful tree,
And happy forever and ever will be,
For sorrow and sighing will not be known there,
Nor affliction of any kind ever come near.

Then, dear, beloved Saints, who are bowed down with care,
Affliction, and sorrow, let this your hearts cheer;
For that blessed time is fast hastening on,
Your sufferings and tears will cease before long.

Ere long your Redeemer in clouds you will see,
And then, if found faithful, how happy you'll be!
Through the great thousand years his face you'll behold,
And bye and bye enter that City of Gold.

SELECT READING FOR NOVEMBER MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

But heredity is not the whole story, any more than the foundation is the whole house.

Several times when I have spoken or written upon the basic principle of heredity I have been met by questions like this, from those who are not students: "Then you must think it is hopeless. With these awful facts and illustrations of the power and persistence of heredity before us, we must recognize that we are doomed before we are born, must we not? If there is, as you say, no escape from our heredity and its power and influence, what is the use of trying? Why not let go and just drift on the tide of inherited conditions? If these conditions are unfortunate for us, why not just accept the tragedy; if they are favorable, why not drift in the sunlight that our ancestors turned upon us, and let the world wag as it will?—we are not responsible. Do you not think it does away with our very sense of personal responsibility?" I confess that each time this type of reasoning comes to me it finds me in a state of surprise that it is possible for thoughtful people to reason so inadequately, and to see with but one eye.

It is undoubtedly true that, do what we will, labor as we may, heredity has established beyond the possibility of doubt that an apple cannot be cultivated into a peach. Once an apple, always an apple. That is the power of heredity. That is the foundation of the house. But there is another story. Plant your apple tree in hard and rugged soil; give it too much light and too little rain; let some one hack its bark with a knife from time to time; when the boys climb the tree, let them strain and break it; let Bridget throw all kinds of liquids about its roots—in short, let it take "pot luck" on a barren farm with Ignorance for an owner and Shiftlessness for his wife, and the best apple tree in the world will not remain so for many years. The apples will not degenerate into potatoes, however; heredity will attend to this. But they will become hard and knotty and sour, and feeble and few as to apples; environment will see to that.

Now, suppose you sold that farm to Intelligence, and gave him for a wife Observation or Thrift. Suppose that they had dug and fertilized and nourished and pruned that tree (I do not mean after it had been ruined, but from the start). It is quite true that you need never expect it to bear Malaga grapes. Heredity will still hold its own, and the kind of fruit was determined at birth (if I may be permitted the form of speech), but very much of the quality of the fruit will depend upon the conditions under which it grew—the environment. So while it is true that our heredity is as certain as the eternal hills and, as a famous biologist recently said in my hearing, "dates back of the foundation of the Sierra Nevada mountain range, so that each of us carries within us mementos of an age when language was not," and, as he humorously said: "Man has in his anatomy a collection of antiques—we are full of reminiscences;" still it is equally true that the power of environment, the conditions under which we develop or restrict our inherited tendencies, will determine in large part whether heredity shall be our slave-driver or our companion in the race for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and whether we will pass on to our children a better or a worse, a weakened or a strengthened inheritance. It doubles our responsibility to realize that we are responsible for the physical, mental, and moral quality and condition of our children—for their chances in life.

It is sometimes asked, if children were changed in the cradle, and those of fortunate parentage carried to the slums to be nurtured and taught and those from the slums placed in the cradles of luxury, would not all traces of mental, moral, and physical heredity of a fortunate type disappear from the darlings of Murray Hill in their adopted environment of squalor and vice; and would not the haggard and half-starved, ill-nurtured waifs of Mulberry Bend blossom as the rose in strength and virtue in their new environment of luxury and of wholesome and healthful surroundings? Just here a digression seems necessary; for while I have no doubt that the change (even on the terms usually implied) would work wonders in both sets of infants, still it is to be remembered that for such a test to tell anything of real value to science, the exchange would need to be made upon another basis from that which is generally used as an argument, because it is usually quite incorrectly assumed that children of luxury (as a rule) are born with clean and lofty heredity. This is, alas, so far from true that it is almost a truism that "the highest and the lowest" (meaning the richest and the poorest) are "nearest together in action, and farthest apart in appearance only," the world over. It has been from the middle walks of life that, as a rule, true greatness has sprung. They both, the richest and the poorest, more frequently give to their children tainted mental, moral, and physical natures with which to contend. The self-indulgence of the young men of the "upper classes" leaves a burned-out, undermined, and tainted physical and mental heredity almost a certainty for their children, while the ethical tone of such men—their moral fibre—is higher only in appearance, and in the ability to do secretly that which puts the "tough" of Mulberry Bend in the penitentiary, because he has not the gold to gild his vices and to dazzle the eyes of society. The exchanged children, therefore, might not be so totally different in inherited qualities, after all. They might have alike a tainted ancestry. Their physical natures may be the hotbeds of vices or diseases that are to be developed or curbed according as environment shall determine. But the foundation in both cases—the ground—mental, moral, and physical, is sowed down and harrowed in with the tainted heredity. The mother in both classes, as a rule, is but an aimless puppet who dances to the tune played by her male owner—a mere weak transmitter or adjunct of, and for, and to, his scale of life; she also having inherited tendencies which she neither understands nor is able to cope with. Therefore, to point to the fact that to change these classes of infants in the cradle is to exchange (by means of their environment only) their mature development also, from that of a Wall street magnate to a Sing Sing convict, tells nothing whatever against the power and force of heredity. It tells only what is always claimed for and readily conceded to fortunate and unfortunate environment—that, as Longfellow puts it:—

"It (wealth) gilds the straightened forehead of the fool."

So, let us start fair in our argument. Let us understand that no environment can create that which is not within the individuality—that heredity has absolutely fixed this; but that environment does and must act as the one tremendous and vital power to develop unduly or to control happily the inheritance which parents stamp upon their children. Notwithstanding this, you are personally responsible for the trend, the added power and development you give to much that you inherit. You are personally responsible to the coming generation for the fight it will have to make and for the strength you transmit to it to make that fight. Many a respectable father and mother transmitted ignorantly, but recklessly, to their "fallen" daughter the weakness and the tendency to commit the acts which they and their fellows whine about afterward as "tarnishing the family honor." If they had tied her, hand and foot, and cast her into the midst of the waves of the sea expecting her to save herself, they would be no more truly responsible for her death, be it moral or physical.

And let me emphasize here that I do not attribute all of the moral and physical disasters of the race to the fathers of the race. By no means. I believe with all my heart that the mothers have to answer for their full share of the vice, sorrow, and suffering of humanity. The mother has not, perhaps, been such an active agent, and much of the wrong she has done to her children has been compassed through what have been regarded as her very virtues—her sweetest qualities—submission, compliance, self-abnegation, ignorance of the sterner facts of the world. In so far as the mothers of the race have been weakly subservient, in that far have they a terrible score against them in the transmission of the qualities which have made the race too weak to do the best that it knew—too cowardly to be honest even with its own soul.

I do not believe that the sexes in a normal state would differ materially in moral tone. Why? Simply because throughout all nature there is no line of demarcation between the sexes on moral grounds. In the so-called lower animals the male and female differ in qualities, but neither is "better," "purer" nor "wiser," than the other—dividing them on the basis of sex alone. I do not believe that women are (under natural and equal conditions) better or purer than men, as is so often claimed. I do not believe that men are (under natural and equal conditions) wiser and abler than women. These are all artificially built-up conditions, and they have fixed upon the race a very large share of its sorrow, its crime, its insanity, its disease, and its despair. They have weakened woman and brutalized man. Children have been born from two parents, one of whom is weakly, self-effacing, and trivial, narrow in outlook and petty in interests—a dependent and, therefore, necessarily servile; while the other parent is too often unclean, unjust, self-assertive, and willing to demand more than he is willing to give. These conditions have morally perverted the race, so that it will continue long to need those evidences against, instead of for, civilization—almshouses, insane asylums, reformatories, and prisons.

It is usual to point with vast pride to the immense sums of money we spend year by year to support such charitable and eleemosynary institutions, instead of realizing, in humiliation and shame, that what we need to do, and what we can do, in great part, is to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen; that what we need to do, and what we can do, in large measure, is to regulate conditions and heredity so that we may congratulate ourselves in pointing to the small sums of money needed year by year to care for the unfortunate victims of inherited weakness or vice. We don't want our country covered with magnificently equipped hospitals, asylums, poorhouses, and prisons. What we want is intelligent and wise parentage which shall depopulate eleemosynary, charitable, and penal institutions. We don't want to continue to boast of a vast and increasing population of sick or weak minds encased in sick or weak bodies—half-matured, ill-born, mental, moral, and physical weaklings, who drag out a few wretched years in some retreat and then miserably perish, or who are shielded in homes against a world that they are unfitted for from birth.

We want men and women on this continent who shall be well and intelligent and free and wise enough to see that not numbers but quality in population will solve the questions that perplex the souls of men. We want parents who are wise and self-controlled enough to refuse to curse the world and their own helpless children with vitiated lives, and who, if they cannot give whole, clean, fine children to the world, will refuse to give it any. Nothing but a low, perverted, and weak moral and ethical sense makes possible the need of an argument on this subject. It is self-evident the moment one stops to ask himself a few simple and primitive questions: "Am I willing to buy my own comfort and pleasure at the expense of those who are helpless? Am I willing to be a moral and physical pauper preying upon the rights of my children? Am I willing to be a thief and misappropriate their physical, mental, and moral heritage? Am I willing to be a murderer and taint with slow poison their lives before they get them? Am I willing to do this by giving to them a weak, dependent, and silly mother, or be to them a father who is less than the best he can be—who arrogates to himself the prerogative of dictator, who has no account to render so long as his acts are secret?"

All these questions apply to the "health of the nation" and to what it shall be in the future. When we speak of "the health of a nation" we are so given to thinking of the physical condition only of its citizens, that the more comprehensive thought of their mental, moral, ethical, and business health is likely to escape our minds. Indeed, I fancy that few persons realize that even in the matter of business ethics and general moral outlook (including the nation's political policy, of course) heredity cuts a very wide swath. But it is true that national business morals are as distinctive from generation to generation in each country as are the physical characteristics, well-being or mental qualities of the different peoples. Some one will say, "True, but all this is due to difference of environment"—forgetting that the special feature of our environment itself (outside of climate and soil) are due primarily to the hereditary habits and bias and conduct of a people. Speaking in the terms of evolution, natural selection, per se, ceased to have full force the moment man reached the stage where he was able to control artificial means of protection or power. The "fittest" ceased to be so upon the basis of mere inborn quality. Artifical means—from the use of a sharp stone to overcome a stronger (or "fitter") antagonist, on up to the skillful application of money where it will do the most good—took the place of primary "natural selection" and the "fittest" to survive in the mental, moral, physical, financial, or political worlds became he who could command the artificial means of guiding and controlling the natural forces of primary "selection." The "tough" lives in the "slums" primarily because his parents did. He inherited his social and ethical outlook as well as his physical form, and the mould in which his thoughts have run was fashioned by nature and secondarily fixed by an environment or surroundings which, also, came to him as part of his inheritance.

Heredity and environment act and react upon each other with the regularity and inevitability of the succession of night and day. Neither one tells the whole story; but together they make up the sum of life; and yet it is true that the first half—the part or foundation upon which all else is based and upon which all else must depend—has been taken into account so little in the conduct and scheme of human affairs, that total ignorance of its very principles has been looked upon as a charming attribute of the young mothers upon whose weak or undeveloped shoulders rest the responsibility, the welfare, the shame or the glory (the very sanity and capacity) of the generations that are to come.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE following is a report of the Sunday school and Religio work at the Dow City, Iowa, reunion as furnished us by our ever busy worker, Bro. J. F. Mintun:—

After careful preparation, and many, many discouragements met with, the Sunday school workers met in the large reunion tent at Dow City, and organized Saturday, September 29, not only for their work but also to supervise the work of the Religio and Daughters of Zion work, by selecting T. A. Hougas as superintendent and J. F. Mintun and Romanan Wight assistants. Sr. Lenna Strand secretary, Sr. Lou Mann assistant secretary, Sr. Nellie Ballantyne treasurer, Sr. Anna Stuart librarian, and C. M. Wilder chorister. Superintendents for each grade were selected by superintendents as follows: Romanan Wight, in charge of senior; Sr. May Rudd, in charge of intermediate; and Sr. Mary Shafer, in charge of primary grade. The session of Monday, at 2:30 p. m., was occupied in prayer and praise service, followed by short papers by Brn. Samuel Burgess, Ammon White, and J. A. Gunsolley, with a short talk by Sr. M. Walker, resulting in a greater feeling of confidence and a better understanding of the basis upon which the departments for good in the church have been founded, and an assurance that these departments of work are a power for good in the church of accomplishing what God has intended should be accomplished by the people of God in the "organizations for good" to which the Lord makes reference in a revelation given in 1873, that is a blessing "of the household of faith."

Wednesday afternoon session was occupied in normal work.

A PRIMARY LESSON.

I. Teacher's Preparation.

1.[1] Study lesson for herself.

2.[1] Study lesson for her pupil.

(a) Adapt the lesson.

1. Decide on chief things to be taught.
2. Decide how much of the lesson you will teach; how much you will not teach.
3. Look to the language; decide names and places necessary to be used.

3.[1] Write out before hand, how you will present the lesson,—a lesson outline.

(a) Why?

1. To systemize your manner, to be clear and direct.
2. To find where exists an opportunity of illustrating.
3. To discover how you can teach, and repeat without seeming to do so.

II. Presenting the Lesson.

1. Have a definite aim in view.
2. Make something the children's own each Sunday.
3. Do not encumber the child's mind with unnecessary names, places, and details.
4. Do not let anything detract from central object.
5. Repeat sufficiently.
6. See that terms are clearly understood.
7. Do not lecture the children.
8. Draw the children out.
9. Be unstudied before your class.
10. Do not be stereotyped in method.
11. Do not read the lesson to your class.
12. Make the lesson bright with as much of illustration as will throw your object into stronger light.

The above subject was prepared by Sr. Louise Palfrey.

Following this was the subject of illustrating lessons, conducted by J. F. Mintun.

The regular sessions were held at 4:15, Monday, at which time there were 9 classes and 140 present; 4:15, Tuesday, when 160 were present and 12 classes represented; and 4:15, Wednesday, when 180 formed the school, divided into 15 classes.

The band composed of young brethren from Bigler's Grove played for marching and whenever called upon, which added interest to the work, and demonstrated the wisdom of God in giving instruction to the church in 1887 in which he said, "Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music," and in the congregations of God's people "use therein instruments of music of the reed and of the string, or instruments of brass in congregations that are large and as wisdom and choice may direct."

The willingness shown on the part of those called upon to assist was very encouraging, and the work done was very efficient, no dissatisfaction expressed by any as to the nature of the work done, but by a few who seemingly have not as yet felt the importance of this part of the church work being represented at the reunions it was thought that the time of the reunions was too precious to be used thus.

PRIMARY WORK.

The following paper was read at the Carroll County Convention.

I cannot think of Primary teaching in the Sunday school as something very different from Primary teaching the five days in the week. Methods of teaching the little ones in the public schools have radically changed the last decade. How much has the Primary Sunday school been affected by this modern education?

In some places the Sunday school kindergarten has been established, where Froebel's principles of education have been used in teaching the Bible.

But for the Sunday kindergarten the church parlor or Sunday school room is required, fitted with chairs, tables, sand table, blocks, sticks, etc.

Such conditions do not exist in many village or country churches.

Where the Primary class is conducted in the main auditorium one corner of the building should be devoted to it. This corner, protected by large screens or a curtain from the remainder of the room, would appear quite like a separate apartment. Kindergarten chairs should be provided for the little ones, and with the true kindergarten spirit we would suggest their being arranged in a circle.

It is not easy to apply the principle of self activity to Sunday school work, without the use of material or means of expression. But, mindful of this principle and to foster the spirit of helpfulness, I have the children do as much of the work of the class as possible. One member collects the offering, another distributes the lesson cards, another the papers, etc. Until recently I did not know what an honor and privilege it was considered by the children, to be the one chosen for this work. Only this week a mother asked me if I would please let her little son take up the pennies next Sunday. She said that for three Sundays he had cried when he came home, because he had not been chosen to help.

There are no trifles in childhood. The Primary teacher must learn to "despise not the day of small things."

The publication of inexpensive copies of the noblest pictures of the world, by the Perry Picture Company, has given the resources of Christian service into the service of the Sabbath school. These pictures add a deeper and better interest to our teaching than that which attends the gift of the cheap color cards and floral text cards in use. The masterpieces of the world need no apology on the score of dignity. A truth enforced by the aid of such a picture is remembered. At Christmas time how eagerly Lerolle's "Nativity," or Gorreggio's "Holy Night" would be welcomed. Or if the lesson be of Christ's visit with his parents to Jerusalem, how impressive would be Hoffman's "Christ with the Doctors." Or again "Christ the Teacher" is so beautifully illustrated by Zimmerman's "Christ and the Fisherman."

These pictures as you may know are purchased of the Perry Picture Company for one cent apiece.

A common mistake of Primary work is too much negative teaching. In our anxious zeal to shield the little ones from the evils of life, we often disclose pitfalls to them, which in their innocence they would have passed over unconsciously.

For instance, introduce the subjects of the evil of lying, stealing, or intemperance. Immediately, if you will listen, you will hear how Johnnie told a naughty story; how Harry stole a knife; or how the drunk man appeared on the street.

Such mental pictures do not tend to strengthen character, but to destroy innocence.

Teachers and mothers know the influence of suggestion upon the mind, and yet we are continually creating mental pictures of evil, rather than of good.

"Please, sir," said the first small twin, as they entered the grocery, "We want a cent's worth of beans."

"What do you want them for?" asked the groceryman.

"Because mamma has gone away and she told us to be sure and not swallow any beans, and we can't find any in the house."

Whatever rigid teaching must be given to older pupils, until they are six years old, may they hear only that which is good and true and beautiful. . . . —Mrs. Geneva Jack, in Iowa Sunday School Helper.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.

Conference at Blair, September 28; F. A. Smith, district president, in the chair; James Huff, secretary. District president reported that the work in district and branches was not what it ought to be, but Omaha and Columbus branches were in fair condition, and Platte Valley branch needed some work. Statistical reports: Omaha 276; 5 received by baptism, 1 on certificate, and 6 by letter. Blair 30. Columbus last report 29; absent from branch 15. Decatur 97, absent from branch 54. Fremont reported verbally; no changes. Platte Valley 61. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report $188 82; collected $209 40; total $398 22; paid out $166 50; balance on hand $231.72. Audited and found correct. Ministry reporting: Elders F. A. Smith baptized 4, H. J. Hudson, Oscar Case baptized 1, George W. Galley, John Avondet, James Huff, N. Rumel, S. S. Black, B. L. Lewis, J. E. Butts, W. F. Seward; Priests Marcus Bilyne, Ira C. Lewis, J. F. Weston, H. W. Belville, and E. R. Ahlstrand; Teacher W. C. Fetter; Deacon C. M. Hollenbeck. The priesthood reports show a summary of 163 sermons preached, 5 baptized, 101 administered to, 13 children blessed, 3 marriages, and 4 ordained. Tent committee reported: On hand $17.95; received $4.95; total $22 90; paid out $21.93; balance on hand 97 cents. Tent 10x12 bought and now the property of the district. District treasurer reported on hand $3 17. Report from southern district on change of boundary lines was favorable to the change. Report from Central district on boundary lines not favorable to the change. Further consideration deferred to next conference. Bill of James Huff for $7 50 presented and ordered paid. The time of election of officers for the district was changed from May to January conference. Preaching by H. J. Hudson, F. A. Smith, and James Huff. Conference closed to meet at Omaha the last Friday in January, 1901, at 7:30 p. m.

FLORIDA.

Conference convened with Calhoun branch, Santa Rosa county, Florida, October 6; S. D. Allen presiding, W. J. Booker chosen to assist, Elder G. T. Chute secretary pro tem. The visiting brethren were invited to take part in the conference. Branches reporting: Calhoun, 72; gain 5 by letter. Open Head, 21; gain 4 by baptism. Ministry reporting: Elders W. J. Booker baptized 3; G. T. Chute had performed local labor as president of Bay Minette branch and secretary of Mobile district, was gladly welcomed by his old friends of Florida district; S. D. Allen baptized 4; Priests J. P. Calhoun, J. H. Johnston. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report $18 01; received $82 50; paid out $90; on hand $10.51. Auditing committee requested by agent, but not acted upon. On Sunday the Saints met for prayer and testimony meeting; S. D. Allen in charge. Preaching by W. J. Booker and G. T. Chute. The following resolution was presented and unanimously adopted. Whereas, Mobile and Florida districts are suffering for the need of high priests to preside over them; and whereas, the church at the last Annual Conference took steps toward providing high priests in districts and branches where material is available; and whereas, Bro. G. T. Chute and Bro. W. J. Booker were pointed out by revelation and prophecy through Bro. M. M. Turpen as high priests; and whereas, they have lived honorable and worthy, and are well qualified to preside over a district; therefore be it resolved by this conference, that we recommend these brethren to the consideration of those in authority, who have the power to ordain and appoint high priests, and ask that they be ordained as soon as possible and set over the above mentioned districts. Many spoke upon the resolution; all were interested, and the good Spirit bore witness that it was sanctioned above. W. J. Booker was elected district president and S. D. Allen secretary. Adjourned to meet at Pleasant View, on Saturday before the full moon in February next, at ten o'clock.

SOUTHERN TEXAS.

DOW CITY REUNION.

Friday, September 28, 1900, called to order at eleven o'clock by Pres. Joseph Smith. By motion the following organization was effected: Pres. Joseph Smith, J. W. Wight, and C. E. Butterworth were chosen to preside; A. H. Rudd, Oscar Case, and D. M. Rudd as secretaries. Short talks by Pres. Smith, C. E. Butterworth, and J. M. Baker were heard. Benediction by Joseph Smith. At 2:30, a short prayer service was held, after which Pres. Joseph Smith talked to the assembly. Met at 7:30 for preaching. Bro. C. E. Butterworth was the speaker.

Saturday morning prayer service in charge of Bro. Jackson and Oscar Case was spiritual. Five prayers and fifteen testimonies. Preaching at 10:45 by Bro. James Stubbart, assisted by Joseph Smith; text, "Who then can be saved." Bro. Stubbart was chosen as usher with liberty to choose a corps of assistants. Benediction by President Smith.

Met at 2:30 and listened to sermon by Bro. J. Frank Mintun from the text found in Ephesians 1:10. At 7:30 the speaker was President Joseph Smith, telling some of the reasons why he believed in the scriptures.

Sunday, September 30. Prayer and testimony meeting at nine o'clock was well attended, and the Spirit was present. Fifteen testimonies and six prayers. At 10:45, Pres. Joseph Smith preached the funeral sermon of Maggie A. McIntosh. At 2:30 the speaker was Elder R. M. Elvin, who spoke from the text found in John 8:29: "He that sent me is with me, for I do always those things that please him." At 7:30 Bishop E. L. Kelley was the speaker; text found in Romans 5:1 which was, "Therefore, being justified through faith, we have peace through our Lord Jesus Christ." The speaker showed that there was only one way of salvation, and that we could not be justified by the law of Moses, and that forgiveness of sins is only preached through Christ. Also the gospel was preached to Israel before Sinai. Moses said, "A prophet shall the Lord raise up; him shall ye hear in all things."

October 1, met at nine o'clock for prayer service. A spiritual time was had. Three prayers and fifteen testimonies and one tongue. Preaching at 10:45 by Elder Charles Derry. A soul-stirring sermon, appealing to the Saints to shun evil and have patience and hope. A few remarks at close by Pres. Joseph Smith concerning patience. Preaching at 7:30 by Elder J. R. Lambert.

October 2, Tuesday, prayer service at nine, in charge of W. D. Bullard and ——; six prayers and eleven testimonies were offered. The good Spirit was present. Preaching at 10:45 by Bishop C. J. Hunt; text, 2 Peter last verse, "For prophecy came not in old time by the will of men, but holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The speaker said: "God's ways and thoughts are higher than man's ways and thoughts. Refers to prophecies fulfilled. The tithing law was given as an express command of God. Jesus said it ought to be observed. Abraham paid tithes, also the ancient Americans. Whosoever is ashamed of me I will be ashamed of before my father in heaven." At 7: 30, sermon by Elder F. A. Smith; text, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." The gospel is not after man. It is absolutely necessary that the people should know whether this gospel originated in the mind of man or God. If the people ever obtain this knowledge it will be a revelation to them. Job 32 says, "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." Shall we close the inlets of our intellect and say we will not let that revealment have effect upon us. We should know how to do our work and this heavenly means is the only way we may acquire it.

October 3, prayer service at nine, in charge of C. E. Butterworth and John Smith. The prayer meeting got fairly under way, when a heavy rain interrupted the meeting. The tent leaked freely. Preaching at 10: 45 by E. L. Kelley. A rousing sermon. After which President Smith officiated in the marriage ceremony of Mr. Yokeley Carroll and Miss Effie Abbie Rounds; a very nice, respectable young couple of Saints.

October 4, prayer meeting at nine, in charge of J. C. Crabb and C. J. Hunt. One tongue and interpretation, six prayers, and twelve testimonies. Preaching at 10:45 by J. R. Lambert; text, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." The speaker said: Paul addressed this letter to the saints at Corinth, and also to all who are in Christ Jesus. The first and great commandment was to love the Lord thy God with all thy might, mind, and strength. 2: 30, preaching by Charles Derry; text, "The adaptability of the gospel to the necessities of humanity. The wisdom of God could devise a means of salvation to suit the necessities of all men. Man was made a little lower than the angels, and we should make friends with God in days of prosperity, so in the days of adversity we may have his good pleasure. At 7:30, preaching by J. W. Wight. The language of the text was found in Psalms 25: 19, James 1:25, and Genesis 28:12. The speaker ably presented the gospel as having fundamental principles, and by a blackboard illustration impressed the text very clearly to the minds of the people.

October 5, prayer service at nine o'clock, was very spiritual; the gifts in tongues and prophecy were enjoyed to the comfort and strength of the Saints. At 10:45, R. M. Elvin's sermon was in support of Graceland College. Text, "Keep thy heart with all diligence." At 2:30 the speaker was J. R. Lambert. At the evening service, Pres. Joseph Smith was the speaker.

October 6, the nine o'clock prayer service was spiritual and strengthening. At 10:45 R. M. Elvin was the speaker.

Business session, Saturday, October 6, at 2: 30, called to order by Pres. Joseph Smith. Prayer by Bro. I. N. Roberts. Speech by President Smith, stating the report of the reunion committee, total receipts $30.35; disbursements $90.32; indebtedness $59 97. Voluntary contributions called for, resulting in $77 being collected. Motion to have another reunion next year prevailed unanimously. Applications: One read from Dow City. Motion to accept the offer of Dow City carried unanimously. Motion of thanks to citizens of Dow City committee. Moved that we retain and sustain the present committee; motion prevailed. Motion prevailed to pay the police as committee deem just. Moved to grant the Sunday school, Religio, and Daughters of Zion, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday afternoons of next reunion. Vote of thanks to committee. F. A. Smith was called upon to speak, admonishing and cheering the Saints for forty minutes. The speaker for the evening was Charles Derry.

October 7, the nine o'clock prayer service was largely attended, and twenty-three testimonies, four prayers, and two prophecies were given. In the afternoon the assembly was addressed by Elder J. W. Wight; text, "The people were astonished at his doctrine, for he taught as one having authority." Blackboard illustration of gospel ladder and tree of life, showing up the church officers, gifts, and signs in New Testament church in an able manner. At 7:30, Pres. Joseph Smith spoke of our position affirmatively, and showed the difference between our faith and other religionists.

The cheerful hearts, occasional sunshine, and the music of the band, and the blessings of the Spirit made the reunion a decided success. Fifteen were baptized during the meetings. Quite a number of ousiders were in attendance, and a great deal of prejudice was overcome.

MESSAGE OF SYMPATHY.

Since our respected and beloved brother, John C. Hitchcock, has passed from the active duties of life to enter upon that more abundant life which God has for the faithful of his children, and since the place once filled by him in the home, in the church, in the Sunday school, and in our society, is now vacant,—

We, the Religio society of Lamoni, feel keenly the loss to our work, and sincerely sympathize with his companion and child who, because of the near ties of love, must realize and mourn his departure most of all; and we feel in our hearts the response to our Father's teaching, "Thou shalt live together in love, insomuch that thou shalt weep for the loss of them that die." While we find comfort also in his word, that death is sweet to them that die in him, we seek to sustain our sorrowing sister with the strength of this assurance and the brightness of this hope and pray our heavenly Father in her behalf that he may be with her in her hour of trial, that she be not left utterly desolate.

It is well with our brother; may it also be well with our sister and child.

Adopted September 28, 1900.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE.

We, the Religians of Far West district, realizing that in the removal of Bro. J. C. Hitchcock by the hand of death, the society has lost a worthy member and a faithful officer, one who was ever ready and willing to use both time and means for the advancement of the society, and one whose place will be hard to fill, yet we humbly bow to the Divine will, believing that his reward will be commensurate with the labor done. And we hereby extend our deepest sympathy with the bereaved family, and pray God to grant to them that consolation that he alone can give in this hour of their great trial.

Adopted by the Far West district Association, Cameron, Missouri, September 30, 1900.

Secretary pro. tem.

FAR WEST.

Religio convention met with Delano branch, four miles north of Cameron, Missouri. September 28. Reports from officers showed an increase in interest and work. Reports from locals showed an increase of fifty-eight members and two locals since last report in June. A committee on good literature was appointed for the district, Bro. Samuel Simmons jun., Cameron, chairman. A called meeting on the 30th, passed resolutions of condolence on the death of the general secretary, Bro. J. C. Hitchcock. Walter W. Smith president, Samuel H. Simmons secretary pro tem.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of Northwest Kansas district will meet at Idylwild, November 3, at ten a. m. Please send all reports to district president, Alma Kent, Idylwild, Clay county, Kansas.

BORN.

KIESTNER.—At Yarmouth, Iowa, August 26, 1900, to Bro. Joseph and Mrs. Lula Kiestner, a daughter, named Vita Luciel; blessed by Brn. J. S. Roth and J. S. Snively at New London, October 7.

BROWN.—Near New London, Iowa, a daughter to Bro. Charles and Mrs. S. E. Brown, August 26, 1900, named Dollie Mabel; blessed October 7, at New London by Brn. J. S. Snively and J. S. Roth.

WILLEY.—Near New London, Iowa, June 24, 1900, a daughter named Ethel Vera to Bro. Loren and Mrs. Lillian Willey; blessed by Brn. J. S. Snively and J. S. Roth, October 7, at New London, Iowa.

DIED.

MILLER.—Charles W. Miller was born in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, April 24, 1866; united in marriage to Annie E. Tucker, May 28, 1892; baptized by Elder J. J. Cornish in 1893; ordained as teacher; died September 13, 1900, aged 34 years, 4 months, 19 days. He leaves a wife and three little ones to mourn.

STONE.—Nephi, the son of James and Elizabeth Stone, of Higbee, Missouri, but was given over to the care of Bro. Thomas and Sr. Caroline Lilly, they having him from December, 1899, until the time of his departure, October 1, 1900, was born September 19, 1899. Funeral services held at the residence of Bro. Luther Simpson, he also officiating. Nephi was a bright and promising little babe, but God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove him.

SEATER.—At Sidney, Iowa, October 4, 1900, Bro. Thomas Seater; aged 85 years, 5 months, and 4 days. He was born at Orkney, Scotland, May 1, 1815. Was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Webb, December 16, 1838, in Knox county, Illinois. Of this union three sons and one daughter were born; wife and two sons preceded him to the spirit world. A son and daughter and grandchildren are left to mourn the loss of a kind and loving parent. Bro. Seater united with the church about 1840, and in after years with the Reorganization. The worldly men say he was a grand and noble soul. Funeral service by A. J. Davidson, to a large gathering of friends and neighbors.

SMITH.—At Salt Lake City, Utah, June 24, 1900, Oranita Smith, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. J. B. Smith. She was born April 27, 1899, being at the time of her death 1 year, 1 month, and 27 days old. Blessed by Elder J. W. Wight. The departure of this little one to the better world was a sore trial to her fond parents, but it is comforting to know that "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Funeral sermon by Elder D. W. Wight.

MANEHAN.—Earley P., daughter of Sr. Anona Mabel Manehan, was born July 20, 1900; died after a lingering sickness, October 9, 1900. Services by James Buckley. This notice was sent from Leavenworth, Kansas.

DEFECTS OF THE JURY SYSTEM.

If we would save the institution of trial by jury, justly described as the palladium of our civil rights, from the undermining influence of popular discontent, we must devote serious attention to the vices and defects of the system. Only a few of these can be briefly noticed here.

In these times of rapid dissemination of news the rule which disqualifies persons who have formed or expressed an opinion based upon other than original evidence is an anachronism. In cases exciting wide public attention it tends practically to exclude all intelligent newspaper readers. It furnishes an easy method to escape jury service to the man willing to swear that his mind is made up.

The business of examining panelmen as to their qualifications should be taken from counsel and intrusted to the presiding Judge. Their names, on the other hand, should be furnished to counsel a reasonable time in advance, so that opportunity may be had for timely discovery of the existence of bias or other objections. An enormous waste of time—in some of our cause célebres many weeks are consumed in the selection of the jury—would thus be saved.

The function of finding the facts should be strictly divorced from that of applying the law to them. Instead of giving the jury complicated instructions as to the law upon involved hypothetical statements of facts, which it does not understand and sometimes deliberately disregards, simple questions as to the existence or non-existence of the material facts in controversy should be submitted to it. When the facts are thus found by the jury the Judge should deduce the legal conclusions and pronounce the judgment of the court. Misapplication of the law by juries would thus be eliminated, the work of appellate tribunals would be simplified, the number of appeals would be reduced.

The requirement of unanimity in the verdicts of juries is illogical and an obstacle to the attainment of justice and the orderly administration of the law. The absurdity of this requirement is that it gives one mind weight equal to that of eleven; its unsoundness, that eleven honest and intelligent men may be defeated by one fool or crank; its moral deficiency, that it constantly holds out a premium to the professional jury manipulator.

In continental Europe, where trial by jury has been adopted in modern times, unanimity is not required. Generally a two-thirds majority is necessary and sufficient. Even in some English-speaking countries, like Scotland, British India, and the Bahama Islands, jury verdicts are made by majority vote. In civil cases a three-fourths majority is sufficient in California, Nevada, and Texas.

It is not possible that all men should have equal power of discerning truth from falsehood. Their opinions are influenced by preconceived ideas and prejudices upon matters of religion, ethics, politics, economics, sociological questions, etc.

A trained chancelor often experiences difficulties in deciding controverted questions of fact. Will twelve men, coming, perhaps, from weighing butter and measuring calico, have less difficulty in weighing evidence and measuring the credibility of witnesses? So long as jurors are taken from the common mass of humanity their opinions will differ in every case in which the evidence does not all tend in one direction. Consequently, when the jurors do not all honestly agree the trial must either be a nullity or a verdict will be returned which, though having the appearance of unanimity, is really the result of compulsion or compromise.

That a small minority should be able to bring about a real change in the opinion of the majority is probably a case of the rarest occurence. If the minority yield because the majority have convinced them, this would simply tend to prove the correctness of the latter's judgment. If the minority yield because they are intimidated, exhausted, or weak-minded, their enforced concurrence adds little weight to the verdict of the majority.

If eleven men say "guilty" and one man says "not guilty" there can be little doubt that the one man is morally or intellectually warped.

In criminal cases the requirement of unanimity is usually defended upon the ground that if even one juror is not convinced of the guilt of the accused there exists such a reasonable doubt as should preclude a conviction. Logically, this argument should lead to the conclusion that the accused must be acquitted whenever one juror believes him not guilty. But the absurdity of the rule is carried so far that even if eleven men vote for acquittal and only one holds out for conviction the defendant is not discharged, but must stand for another trial.

Appellate tribunals, which often have to pass on controverted questions of fact, are allowed to decide by simple majorities. Legislative measures and popular elections involving the happiness and welfare of the nation, questions of peace or war affecting the lives and prosperity of millions of people, the adoption or rejection of vital constitutional amendments, the decisions of grand juries are all determined by majorities. Unanimity is not required to impeach the President of the United States. A person tried before the House of Lords may be sentenced to death by an assembly of twenty-three peers, twelve of whom upon their honor declare him guilty, while eleven declare him not guilty under a like sanction.

In spite of all these analogies we continue to place it in the power of one corrupt or foolish man to pollute the fountain of justice, to defeat the ends for which courts are organized, to upset the judgment of eleven honest and intelligent men, and to make jury trials a mockery.

I favor a two-thirds majority verdict. In criminal cases, unless at least two-thirds of the jury vote "guilty" the defendant should be acquitted. The death penalty, however, should never be inflicted unless by the unanimous verdict of the jury.—Sigmund Zeisler, Chicago Tribune.

SINGING AS ART AND RECREATION.

According to Webster "singing is the act of uttering sounds with musical inflections or melodious modulations of voice, as fancy may dictate, or according to the notes of a song or tune." Singing is the most beautiful of all modes of expression, and in its beauty lies its recreation, but before attempting to describe the art of singing let me first say what I conceive music to be—namely: tone food for the mind, which accounts for the universal love or desire for music which is felt by all nations and peoples.

Music is a distinct and positive portion of the mind's food, and therein lies the secret of its charm and recreation to those who listen to it. When I say listen I do not mean those who listen only, but I include all who have ears to hear, whether they sing, or play, or listen only. It is a fact that those who sing enjoy the music much more than the mere listener, because by a natural law the current of tones which the singer produces enters his own ears, and thus returns to the mind which conceived the tones before singing them. The exhilarating influence of music is much greater to the singer than to the listener, and it is because of this extra exhilaration that it is sometimes said of singers that they are conceited about their own ability. Such remarks are mostly unjust.

Music to a highly sensitive nature sometimes acts as a mental intoxicant; hence the excitement frequently observed among a body of singers. As a natural consequence, if music be tone food for the mind it is recreative and exhilarating to those who partake of it. I would prefer to call music the greatest recreator of the sustenance needed by the mind. It will naturally follow that if music be mind food it should be administered in the most skillful and pleasing manner, so as not to be distasteful, for, be it remembered, the mind judges the quality of its food through the ear, just as it judges food for the body by the tongue.

A good deal of discretion is needed to produce music acceptable to a cultivated mind. Art is needed to accomplish this. Art is skill in the adaptations of things in the natural world to the uses of life; therefore it should be the supreme object of the singer to communicate to the minds and hearts of his hearers the various sentiments and passions expressed in the composition. To achieve this a lovely voice will do much, and a pure, clear enunciation of the words will do more, but the effect of these combined may not be quite satisfactory "for want of animation. This is because the animation which is felt by the artist communicates itself as the electric fluid—to persuade we must believe in what we say, and to move we must ourselves be moved." The singer's object is threefold—to be heard, to be understood, to be felt.—Chicago Tribune, Sept. 23, 1900.

THE PASSING OF THE MANCHUS.

The law of history is that the North must conquer. Russia is illustrating this rule. She is coming down from the septentrional steppes and is eating up Manchuria, just as the Manchus formerly went from their fastnesses north of the Amur and carried all before them among the abject swarms of the Hoang-Ho and Yang-tse valleys. That great conquest was achieved in 1644. Russia has a definite plan in view. The Muravieffs formulated it. It is a first rate formula, too. Prince Krapotkin, in his pre-revolutionary days, did more than any man still living to explore and exploit Manchuria, as far as Kirin, passing through extraordinary adventures at the risk of his life. The Manchus have only dominated China for two centuries and a half, and now they are about to lose the last remnant of their own magnificent original empire. What kind of a territory is that which Russia has now openly declared it her intention to annex? By a diplomatic euphemism the announcement informs the world that Russia has appropriated the "south bank of the Amur." But it is only necessary to look at the map to understand what this means. It does not actually follow that the Czar will immediately occupy all Manchuria, for that, of course, would be a large order, but virtually this is what the proclamation involves. For the Russian forces are operating in three directions. They have crossed the Amur from the north at Blagovechensk; they have marched from Vladivostok towards Mukden; and they have placed the Muscovite flag on the customhouse at New Chwang, in the extreme south of Manchuria. Now, Manchuria is a far more extensive territory than most people imagine. It extends over an area of 380,000 square miles, and is thus considerably larger than Great Britain, Ireland, and France together. This will be a big morsel of the quivering body of the dragon for the bear to swallow. It will be a tough bite, also, but the bear is always a long time licking before deglutition. Mukden, Kirin, and Tsitsihar—these are the three objective points which Russia must and will secure.

The true Manchus are undoubtedly superior to the Chinese, whom they so easily subjugated. Even though they have sadly degenerated, they will excel the southern tribes both in physique and in intellect. The women are often beautiful, and they are generally tall and vigorous. The Manchus never succeeded with the women of China as they did with the men with regard to the engrafting of their northern customs and habits. They forced the male sex to adopt the queue, but they could never eliminate the "golden lily" or bandaged foot. In this single respect the two races have remained entirely distinct. No Manchurian baby's foot is ever bound, but the Chinese have obstinately conserved the cruel custom. A woman who hobbles on "golden lilies," whatever may be her rank, is never allowed to enter the imperial court at Pekin. The Manchu ladies dress their abundant tresses in the most fantastic yet imposing style. As parties of them promenade with their children along the banks of the lovely little Siao-Ho, or "Small River," they present a really picturesque spectacle. Their dark hair is stretched on silver frames in wide projecting loops, decorated with beautiful flowers. Manchuria is a land of gardens and flowers and the people are among the most persevering agriculturists in the world.

Brigandage is an old established institution in Heiligungkiang, as indeed it is to some extent throughout the whole of Manchuria. The northern province between the Amur and Sungari is one of the richest mineral territories in the whole world, and Russia knows all about its potential resources. She will for some few years have a hard task before her in contending with the mountain tribes in such a tangled mass of mountains intersected by countless streams. But the second objective point to the Muscovite forces is Kirin, the capital of the province of that name, the eastern section of Manchuria. Taking that and also Mukden from China, the decapitation of the dragon will indeed be consummated.—Chicago Tribune, Oct. 7, 1900.

"The National Magazine is an American magazine, printing the writings of American authors, illustrated by American artists, and giving to American topics, new and old, that prëëminence which has so long been withheld." So writes the editor of that magazine in the October number, and this fact is nicely illustrated by the first article in the number, which is from the ready pen of Clarence Ousley, editor of the Galveston Tribune, and graphically and pathetically tells of some of the horrible experiences of the people of that stricken city in the disaster that overcame it a short time ago. The article is illustrated by views taken for the National Magazine, and the photographs were the "first to cross the bridgeless channel between the stricken city and the main land."

The October number of the popular Boston magazine is up to its usual standard in brightness.

WORK FOR THE COMMITTEE ON HISTORIES.

The powerlessness of the "Committee on Histories and Encyclopedias" which has been maintained for a number of years by the church to accomplish that for which it has been appointed is illustrated by an instance of recent occurence. It shows how the committee is handicapped in its work. A. Flanagan, a publisher of Chicago, under copyright of 1900, has issued a book entitled "The Making of Illinois," which consists of a number of "historical sketches" by Irwin F. Mather, A. M. It is written, so the writer says, to give the boys and girls of the state of Illinois a better knowledge of the state in which they live, and to encourage them in the study of the history of that state and to "strengthen the love of Illinois."

Chapter eighteen of the work is devoted to "Nauvoo and the Mormons;" and if it is a criterion of the reliability of the rest of the work it is certainly a most unreliable book to put in the hands of the school children of the state of Illinois or any other state. That our readers may see how the writer has tangled himself up on the matter of history connected with the rise and the progress of the people commonly designated as "Mormons," we quote verbatim and entire the chapter on "Nauvoo and the Mormons":—

Some time between the years 1820 and 1825, a minister, by the name of Solomon Spaulding, conceived the idea of publishing, in the form of a religious romance, his belief as to the origin of our American Indians. He believed that they were the descendants of the ten lost tribes of Israel.

The manuscript of this book, under the title of "The Book of Mormon," was sent by the author to a printing house. In this printing house Sidney Rigdon worked as a journeyman printer. The manuscript disappeared from the office, and, shortly after, Sidney Rigdon, giving up his printer's trade, became an itinerant preacher in the State of New York.

About this time a man named Smith had moved from Sharon, Vermont, with his family, to the town of Palmyra, in New York. This man was a well digger by trade, and his wife a fortune teller. One of their boys, named Joseph, had inherited much of his mother's shrewdness and tact.

One day, while digging a well, Smith, the father, unearthed a peculiarly colored stone, semi-transparent and odd in shape. This the boy Joseph at once appropriated for his own use, and, duping the credulous around him into the belief that this stone had miraculous and divine properties, posed as a seer, and read from it hidden messages and revelations.

Sidney Rigdon, the possessor of the stolen manuscript, and the shrewd Joseph Smith, the owner of the mysterious stone, became acquainted, read the manuscript and decided to start a new religious sect, with a new creed, based on the "Book of Mormon," which the two impostors solemnly declared had been given to them by divine revelation.

As with all new creeds or religious innovations, so with this, dupes and followers were not wanting, and in 1830 Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, at Manchester, New York, established the first church of "Latter Day Saints," or "Mormon Church," as it was commonly called.

About the year 1833 we find the Mormons, led by Smith and Rigdon, establishing themselves in their new city of Nauvoo, in our State of Illinois. They called it the "Holy City of the Saints."

A special charter was secured for this new city, and Joseph Smith was elected its first mayor. A shamefully procured act of the State legislature had given the Mormon city the right to pass any ordinance it saw fit, provided it did not conflict with provisions of the State and National Constitutions.

A mayor's court with extraordinary power was established, and a Nauvoo Legion, which was independent of the military organization of the State was authorized.

Smith established an order whose members were to be kings and priests. He organized a company of Danites or Avengers for his bodyguard, each man sworn to obey him as the voice of God.

About this time Smith received a new revelation from heaven. This new doctrine proclaimed that a Mormon elder might marry any number of wives after the manner of Abraham and Jacob.

The governor of Missouri made a demand upon Governor Carlin, of Illinois, for Smith, who had escaped from jail.

A warrant was issued for him and he was brought before Judge Douglas, who found the warrant defective and released the prisoner. Emboldened by this success and fearful that their leader might be taken from them, the Mormon Council enacted a law "that no writ issued at any other place except Nauvoo for the arrest of any person in the city should be executed without approval endorsed thereon by the mayor." The result of this law was soon apparent. Robbers plundered houses and hastened to Nauvoo to escape justice.

Horse thieves fled to the City of the Saints, where they were protected by the mayor and the city council.

The Mormons now became unpopular everywhere. After the release of Smith by a Democratic judge his followers had returned to the Democratic party.

The Whigs realizing that they were lost to their party began to attack them through the columns of their papers. The Legion had been furnished by the State with 250 stands of arms and three pieces of cannon. These the papers magnified into many thousands of muskets and cannons.

The people, now inflamed, prepared to make war upon the Mormons, and the governor called out the troops. Before his arrival upon the scene, the entire militia of McDonough and Schuyler counties had assembled at Carthage and Warsaw. The governor, fearful that the Mormon leaders would be sacrificed to the fury of the people, obtained from the officers a promise that they would keep within the limit of the law in the discharge of their duties.

At the last moment the prophet, his brother and the leading Mormons surrendered and were taken to the jail at Carthage.

Several days after, the jail was broken into by a mob, and the prophet and his brother Hiram were killed. Thus ended the life of a man who, though coarse and ignorant, possessed many elements of leadership which enabled him to originate a movement that he was unable to lead to success.

As organized, the church consisted of three presidents and twelve apostles, who were abroad preaching Mormonism. Two of the presidents—Joseph and Hiram Smith—were dead. The third, Sidney Rigdon, proposed to seize the power.

Several revelations from the prophet confirmed him in his position.

He might have been successful but for an unfortunate revelation which commanded the wealthy to sell their possessions and follow the leader to Pennsylvania. The rich refused to obey and the poor were powerless to go alone. Rigdon became unpopular, and a fierce conflict arose between him and the twelve apostles, who had returned at the news of the prophet's death.

The apostles, with Brigham Young as their leader, now gained control, and sent missionaries everywhere preaching Mormonism and the martyred Joseph Smith. Everywhere they went they found ignorant and credulous people who became infatuated with their strange doctrines. No other religion promised so much for so little.

Dupes and scoundrels, stupid and ignorant flocked into the fold of the church. The sect grew rapidly. In fourteen years their numbers had increased to 200,000.

Meanwhile the state had revoked the charter of Nauvoo and the Saints prepared for the journey to the promised land, where they hoped to live undisturbed.

In the spring of 1846 the great company began to depart, and after enduring many hardships arrived upon the shores of Salt Lake.

Of this region their industry soon made a garden. Here were laid the foundations of a mammoth temple which has been completed after many years of labor and the expenditure of great treasure. The city of Salt Lake grew up around it, and with passing years the church of the "Latter Day Saints" has grown in wealth and in the number of its people.

It is quite evident from the foregoing that the writer of the work has drawn his information of the "Mormon" church from such writers as Kennedy, who wrote "Early Days of Mormonism," and writers equally as capable of distorting the facts and coloring the historical matter to suit personal prejudices. It is to be regretted that writers who are producing books to be put in our schools and in the hands of the young people of this country will persist in drawing their information from such sources. We are confident from the style of the above that

Mr. Mather depended largely upon Mr. Kennedy's work for facts of the history of the "Mormon" people, supplemented, possibly, by matter gleaned from Kidder, or Ford, or Hyde, or Thomas Gregg. However that may be, it will be apparent at once to all our people that the writer had decidedly wrong information, no matter whence he gathered it, and the question that naturally arises is, If this chapter is so woefully erroneous, how much dependence can be placed upon the rest of the work?

We will not attempt here to call the attention of the readers of the HERALD to what is wrong in the article, for neary every error made in the chapter quoted has been repeatedly corrected in these columns.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it lawful for a deacon to prepare the sacrament?

Yes. He should have charge of the vessels and wine supply, and secure and make ready the bread.

Is it lawful for a deacon to take lead and open meeting by prayer when both elder and priest are present?

Yes; if it be in a branch and the deacon is requested to do so by the proper officer of the branch. If in an unorganized assembly the highest in office presides, and may ask a deacon to lead in prayer.

Is it proper to read the comparative text in open school and explain it before the school, or where should it be read?

It would be owing to the conditions of the occasion whether it would be proper or not. There is no rule about it. It would be a matter for the school to determine.

What is the meaning of verses 38 to 41 in the twelfth chapter of Matthew?

It means that the prophet, Jonah, was sent on an errand to Nineveh, and tried to evade his duty, for which he was punished by being put in jeopardy of his life by being cast into the sea, to teach him the value of obedience. When afterwards sent to Ninevah he went and delivered his message, the citizens of Nineveh believed his message, and God did not destroy them. So, in like manner as Jonah was for a time, longer or shorter, in the belly of the fish, as a sign or token of the genuine character of Jonah and his message, so should the Son of Man, being in the heart of the earth, that is, in the grave and the prison, for a time, longer or shorter, be a sign or token to the men of the generation which the Savior was then addressing of his character and mission. No set or stated miracle would be vouchsafed to them, the Pharisees, who were asking for it.

It is useless to ask us to state how long in hours the Savior was in the grave, whether it was full three days of twelve hours daylight and twelve hours darkness and twilight, or that he was buried near the close of one day, and raised in the morning of the third day, thus being three nights and two whole days in the grave. What is written on the subject in the Scriptures is open to the reading of all. We know no more than what is written.

We do not know from the account given just how many hours Jonah was in the belly of the fish; but, if we are justified in believing that there was a parallel in time between that time and the time the Savior was in the grave and prison, then we may accept the idea that Jonah was cast overboard from the vessel near the evening of one day and thrown out on the shore in the morning or forenoon of the third day after, thus leaving three nights and two days to transpire with enough hours of the afternoon of the first day and of the forenoon of the last day to make the approximate of the three days of daylight. We know of no way to determine the question absolutely.

ANOTHER BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATION.

If we can believe much that has appeared of late in the newspapers of the United States, there have come to light many and wonderful testimonies of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon. We have given to our readers many articles (usually on the cover of the HERALD) which have appeared in the daily and weekly press on the subject of archæology which vindicate to a wonderful degree statements of the Book of Mormon,—and the end is not yet. In the Sunday Inter-Ocean for September 23, this year, appeared the following article which will be of not a little interest to the committee on "American Archæology" and those who have taken an interest in the work of that committee and who are interested especially in a comprehensive study of the Book of Mormon:—

LOST RACE OF TEXAS.

Relics of a prehistoric race were discovered in Galveston, Texas, just previous to the storm that flooded the city. Nearly 2,000 human skeletons were found, and scientists who examined the excavations had just given the opinion that an ancient city had been submerged by a tidal wave that drowned all the inhabitants, when the calamity of centuries ago was repeated.

The bones were discovered in a search for relics for the archæological exhibit at the Pan-American exposition, which is to be held in Buffalo, New York, next summer. The skeletons are beyond a doubt several thousand years old, and the character of the people who occupied the coast of the gulf at this period is an interesting subject for speculation. Whoever they may have been and whenever they may have lived, the remains found show beyond a question that some terrible outbreak of nature caused the sudden death of thousands of these ancient people and their burial in the strata where by chance they were exhumed by the people of a far-distant age.

It was but a short time ago that the excavations were begun which resulted in these singular and extraordinary discoveries. The finding of the remains in the first place was quite accidental. H. J. Simmons, superintendent of the Arizona and New Mexico railway, was making excavations along the lines of the railroad near Clear Creek, Galveston county, when bones were found in the earth removed. On examination of the contents of the steam shovel, skulls and human teeth were noticed, and further search led to the discovery of skeletons of whole families, together with ivory beads and other objects of human handiwork.

TIDAL WAVE OF THE PAST.

Realizing the valuable and scientific character of the discovery, a systematic search of the strata in the vicinity was made. Geologists say that the whole section of the state was once covered by the Gulf of Mexico. The idea at once came to Mr. Simmons that in far distant ages a tidal wave had occurred at the time the gulf covered more of that part of the country than at present and that these bones were the remains of the thousands of human beings who had been drowned in the overflow of the waters of the gulf. His theory was later upheld by leading scientists.

Evidently these people were not mere barbarians, living in temporary abodes and having no permanent abiding places. The number of the skeletons and their close proximity to one another indicates that there existed here a populous community and that in some far away age a people devoted to the pursuits of industry and more or less skilled in the arts were here living in a city having its institutions of government and social customs and some degree of civilization. This could not have been simply the site of a cemetery, for the positions in which the skeletons were found proves conclusively that the persons were not buried after a natural death, but were drowned and afterward buried beneath the debris of the convulsion, or hurriedly and in wholesale by their survivors, as was done recently at Galveston. While all the skeletons were lying down, some were face up, others face down, and many on the side. There was no regularity in their burial at all. It was the exception to find one skeleton by itself. Usually two, and sometimes three and four were found together, in some instances as many as fourteen being piled in a heap, as if a whole family had gathered to meet death, and perished in one another's arms.

SKULLS OF GREAT SIZE.

Some of the skulls of those prehistoric Texans were of enormous size, and the majority of them had rather low foreheads. A singular fact observed was that while all of the teeth were considerably worn, showing the use of hard food and age of the persons, there was in no case the slightest indication of decay, a quite different situation from that observed in relics of more modern but still prehistoric Indians, among whom dental caries is comparatively common. Several thousand skeletons were removed in the process of excavation. Fifteen hundred were actually counted in the first part of the excavation, and doubtless several thousand more were removed. As a rule they were soft and damp when first uncovered, but many became fairly hard after being exposed awhile to the sun. No bones of children were found, and this was accounted for by the supposition that they had all decayed.

The situation of this remarkable archæological discovery was a deposit of shell, gravel, and sand in a bank consisting of about thirty acres nearly surrounded by the Clear creek. This deposit consists of seven distinct strata, each about three feet thick, and between each stratum there is a deposit of silt or earth from a quarter of an inch to an inch in thickness. On the top of the bank

the soil is about eight inches deep, and large live oak trees grow thickly over it. It is one of the last places to which one would go in looking for the remains of a prehistoric race. No two of the strata are exactly alike, some having a larger percentage of gravel than others, and the shells also vary. Some are much larger than others, some are oyster shells, and some are clam. On the average the deposit consists of about ten per cent shell, forty per cent gravel, and twenty per cent coarse sand. In the second layer from the top the bones were found in great abundance, and in the bottom layer, just at water level, and about twenty-one feet below the top of the bank, large quantities of the bones were deposited.

PUZZLE FOR ANTIQUARIANS.

Just how to explain this phase of the situation has taxed the antiquarians. Some suggest the possibility of two successive tidal waves, one perhaps far removed from the other in point of time. The ivory beads found were a quarter of an inch in diameter and an inch and a half to two inches long, with a hole cut lengthwise and a diagonal groove cut on the outside.

The exhibit of these bones in the ethnology building of the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo will be a most valuable one, in view of the wide interest excited by the fate of thousands who perished recently in this same part of the country in the same way.

This considered in connection with the report of the Archæology committee reveals a rather noteworthy coincidence. On page seventy-two of the "Report of Committee on American Archæology," as the report was made to the General Conference of 1897, and as published by the Herald Office in 1898, there appears the following:—

It appears from the record that at this time Central America and a large proportion of the central portion of the United States were settled by the Jaredites; in the United States, probably, they occupied mainly in the valleys of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio rivers, covering largely their watersheds. Omer and Nimrah "fled out of the land," evidently from the countries already settled, and probably the chief centers were at New Orleans, St. Louis, Cincinnati, except in Mexico and Central America, where the oldest and richest communities dwelt.

Again, on page seventy-four, we find the committee using the following language:—

So the chase went on. "Shiz did pursue Coriantumr eastward, even to the borders of the seashore, and there he gave battle unto Shiz for the space of three days." (V. 53.) This line of flight and pursuit was in all probability through southern Texas, the States of Arkansas, west Tennessee, and Kentucky, southern Indiana and Ohio, western Pennsylvania, and southern New York, and Connecticut, to somewhere near the present New London or New Haven.

If, then, the report as given in the Inter-Ocean is true, it would indicate that the committee made a pretty shrewd "guess" as to where indications would be found of a once dense population. It is really gratifying to see how present-day investigations of worldly scientists are vindicating the record of the Book of Mormon. It might be well for some of the brethren in the Texas field who are near to where this "find" is said to have been made to investigate this matter a little farther, and if it is possible for any good specimens to be found or procured, we can assure them that there will be a place made to care for and preserve them in our college. The Graceland authorities are always glad to make place for such, and we believe that when our men in the field find this out there will be more of an incentive for them to collect such specimens. Write to Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, of the college, about such matters, and he will tell you what they can do for you.

It might be interesting to some of our readers to know how the Presbyterian Journal defines or describes the doctrine of predestination. Here it is; we give it for what it is worth:—

Belief in predestination is simply a matter of expression. Call it Providence and all agree as to its truth; make it evolution, and the scientists accept it. But where lies the difference? Providence is to see in advance, but God cannot well see what doesn't exist. Evolution is development according to law, but to evolve what is not involved is an absurdity. After all, it is a war of names. The truth may be presented out of all proportion, but to eliminate it entirely would be to make chance omnipotent.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

I. N. White, from the field, October 10:—

I am at Webb City in an interesting meeting; close on the 18th and go to Weir City, Kansas. Held several days at Blendville, where Bro. Macrae had been preaching, and on Sunday last, seventeen were baptized by Bro. Macrae; fourteen from Blendville, and three from Webb. In this number were a number of excellent men and women; also young women and young men; the remaining being mostly children of the Saints—Sunday school scholars. It was hard for me to leave Blendville, when there were new names being added to the list for baptism, at nearly every meeting. Bro. Macrae in his series of meetings had got the people so stirred up and interested that it only lacked, seemingly, an invitation to come. My first sermon was on: "Why we believe Joseph Smith was a prophet of God." I had most excellent liberty. This sermon was the turning point to the many. The people flocked together like thirsty sheep to hear the word, and I felt well in delivering the angel's message to a hungry people. Bro. Macrae continued the meetings for another night, and was to speak Sunday night after the baptisms, and confirm the fourteen, being assisted by the local elders, who are not the least in this work of conversion of so many, and the end is not yet. May God bless them for the work. Political gatherings, rallies, etc., hinder some, but we dare not lie idle and let politics take the field. Have cheering news from many of the missionaries; while from others a seeming lack of interest among the people. But all in all the work is moving forward rapidly.

An elder writing from the field, October 15:—

Just a line this morning as I am hurried. Four more baptized here (Coffman settlement) yesterday. Schoolhouse could not hold all that came last night. Reports for last quarter are in and we have a record of ninety baptisms. Will send report in full tomorrow. I continue here till Thursday night, and then go south on my way home, possibly calling at Crescent, Hazel Dell, Persia, Thurman, Hamburg, and Shenandoah. Am feeling O. K. Preached three times yesterday, baptized four, confirmed and assisted in confirming four, blessed one, and rode twenty-two miles.

Bro. I. N. White, by card October 19, from Webb City:—

Closed my meetings at Webb City last night. Large house and great interest, better than I have ever witnessed before at this place. Messrs. Richards and Frank Freeman, and Mrs. Warren Decker and Mrs. Neff asked for baptism last night. Their baptism will take place next Sunday at two p. m., the same hour and place where the seventeen were baptized last Sunday. Many more are much interested, but I must go, as I am billed to speak at Weir City tonight and up to the end of twenty-fifth, when I commence at Nevada on the eve of 26th and hold over Sunday, 28th. I leave the work at Webb in the hands of the local brethren—O. P. Sutherland, Z. Decker and others, and God through them will care for the work. My field is large and the calls are urgent and I must be on the move, for this is the "hastening time."

Bro. J. W. Wight, from Crescent, Iowa, October 19:—

Five more baptized at Echo today, making twelve in all. Bro. Crabb and writer confirmed at home of Bro. D. B. Coffman. Schoolhouse last night, the last service of eighteen, could not hold all. Never saw better order for such crowds.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. W. H. Kelley reports things going fairly well in the Eastern field. Bro. D. L. Shinn sick all summer, otherwise the workers all busy, prospects fair from Nova Scotia to Ohio. Twenty-one baptisms, many more visitors at the Temple in Kirtland this year than last. Good interest manifested.

Reports from the laborers in Bro. Heman C. Smith's field show a good condition of the branches, an active ministry, and thirty-one baptisms. Prospects favorable.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert reports having preached at Lamoni, Davis City, Pleasanton, Evergreen, Tuskeego, Cleveland, Council Bluffs, and Dow City, Iowa, and Rock Creek, Illinois, having good liberty in all places.

Bro. J. W. Wight's report shows ninety-three baptisms in his field. He thinks if the report from local labor had been full a hundred baptisms would have been scored.

We call attention to the letter of Bro. James Caffall upon the subject of reunions and conferences. It is worth a second reading.

Sr. Lizzie Baggerly, of Bird's Eye, Indiana, asks the prayers of the Saints for the recovery to sanity of a brother now in an institution at Buffalo, New York; and also, for the Lord to interpose in behalf of her husband who is an opposer of the work. Remember this dear sister in her solicitude for those dear to her.

A bright little sheet that comes to our desk is the Deaf Hawkeye. It is printed at the Iowa school for the deaf, and is now entering upon its twentieth volume. It has been coming to us for years, and we are always glad to see it. Indeed, we miss its regular visits when it stops for the summer vacation. No doubt the scholars of that institution are proud of their bright little paper, and so are others. Many Iowa people watch the pages of the Deaf Hawkeye and are glad to see so much brightness reflected from the lives of those who labor under such great disadvantages.

We have received from Bro. Dr. John A. Roise, 313 North Wood street, Chicago, a number of leaflets entitled "Bible Sanctification," written and intended for general distribution in and out of the church. It is an excellent little tract and gives good food for thought. They are "ten cents a dozen, fifty cents a hundred, or free." Bro. J. M. Terry, 365 Ogden avenue, also has these tracts. Send for a lot, you that can, and try to do your neighbors good.

Here is an opinion of our recently published "Church History." It is that of Rev. B. B. Tyler, and appeared in The Christian Evangelist, Sept. 27: "I have been recommending Neal's tracts to those who find it necessary to combat Mormonism; but the 'History'... is worth more to the man who wants to fight the 'Latter Day Saints' than anything that Neal or any other non-Mormon can write. . . . I had no idea of the baseness of Mormonism until this 'History' came into my hands."

Original Articles.

IS IT A "FRAUD"? AN "IMPOSITION"?

Herald Readers:—Attention! "Lend us your ears!" "Variety is the spice of life." You have all, no doubt, had ample opportunity of hearing the Book of Mormon defended by Americans, but it is not often that an opportunity is offered of hearing or reading a defense of it by an Australian. Well, we are going to afford you such an opportunity, for once in a lifetime at least. Some time ago, an "evangelist" of the "Campbellite" stripe created quite a stir in the Newcastle district by visiting around among the people and giving free readings from the book written against the church by D. H. Bays. We challenged him to debate the issue, but he declined, preferring to do his dirty work single handed. Nothing remained for us to do but to reply by lecturing. So your humble servant delivered a series of lectures. The Book of Mormon was placed upon trial. The main allegations made against it and its translator were treated as the evidence for the prosecution, our usual Book of Mormon arguments constituting the defense. Joseph Smith was defended against such charges as "false prophet," "polygamist," "author of the polygamic revelation," etc., etc. Many of the Saints expressed a desire to possess the subject matter in permanent form for future reference. So we decided to have it published in pamphlet form at the first opportunity. The time has at last come, and now we are "killing two birds with the one stone."

The Wallsend branch, where there are only a few Saints have inaugurated, a "building fund," with a view of erecting a permanent place of worship. A few of us have scraped together the money required to publish these pamphlets, and we are getting out so many that when all are sold there should be quite a substantial amount to hand over to the "building fund." As we cannot depend upon the sale in Australia of such a large number as we are having published, we desire to place them on sale to the American Saints. The price is only fifteen cents per copy, and we are certain that no one can afford to do without one at that price. Those who have seen the "advance sheets" declare that anyone getting a copy at fifteen cents will be getting their money's worth ten times over. We desire to say, however, that we wish it understood that we do not publish this pamphlet, as an answer to Bays' book. One should not expect to find the answer to a dollar and a half book in a fifteen cent pamphlet; besides we leave that work to abler men, if the church deems it at all necessary to answer the book. We believe, however, that the charges made against the Book of Mormon are successfully answered and refuted, as are the charges against Joseph Smith already referred to. Now, Saints, will you not come to the front and assist us in our effort to get the truth more prominently before the people of this country? The books which we will sell to them will do good, and if you will only take those which we cannot sell to them, you will materially assist us in the building of another church in this country, and who can tell how many hearts may be made glad, and how many souls saved through the gospel of God's dear Son because of your assistance? Do not turn a deaf ear to this appeal, but make up your mind to assist us. Send for one right away, if you delay, you may forget.

And now just a word about the way in which to send your money. American money is of no use here; so the best way for you to do is for a number of the Saints to club together and send their orders and money in one letter. If, say, twenty persons in one branch decided to take one copy each they could send their money by international money order, just as cheaply as one person could send fifteen cents. In fact, twelve dollars can be sent at the same cost. Will some one in each branch try to sell at least twenty copies for us? Book agents (Herald and Ensign), will you take the matter up for us? We will allow you the usual ten per cent commission, to cover expenses. Saints! where it is possible, will you place your orders with your branch book agent as soon as possible? Where you have no agent, will some one come to the front and act for us? Should there be any places in which only seven or fourteen decide to take a copy, they may send a one or two dollar bill as the case may be, by registered letter, we will be able to use paper money, in paying Herald office accounts. So if seven Saints want a copy each, let them send along a dollar bill. Where Saints are isolated, or where seven copies are not ordered, you may send your orders and cash to Elder Gomer R. Wells, Deer Lodge, Montana, U. S. A., and he will send all such orders and money to us by money order. When sending letters to Australia, remember that the postal rate is five cents. If you do not have a five cent stamp on your letter we are fined double the amount lacking, at this end. When sending money orders (and be sure you get an international one), make them payable to Walter J. Haworth, Wallsend, New South Wales, Australia, and send all orders to same address.

Now another word about Australia's Ensign. We would so like to get five hundred subscribers, so that we could soon begin the paper. Will the missionaries, and others, stir the matter up a bit for us, and see what can be done? Bro. Caffall says we ought to get five thousand; well, I can assure you we will not object. I am sure you cannot send us too many names. I'm really afraid, Bro. Caffall, that if the Saints sent us five thousand subscriptions we would be inclined to buy a printing plant, and flood the country with our paper. No, we won't object. Send them along. You will no doubt be rather surprised to learn that so far, only thirty-six promised subscriptions have arrived, and fifteen of them have been promised by two Saints. Now, Saints, can you not do better than that? Can you not sacrifice seventy-five cents a year in helping us spread the gospel in this land? You could not begin to estimate the amount of good that seventy-five cents, spent in such a cause, might accomplish. Do help us! These English speaking countries are the places where the gospel should be spread. Will you help us spread it here?

Trusting we may receive a hearty response to both our appeals, I am,

Yours fraternally,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

"MORMONISM:

ITS LEADERS AND DESIGNS."

The above is the title of a book issued in 1857, from the press of W. P. Fetridge and Company, of New York, and written by one John Hyde jun. As far as I know there has never been a reply written to the statements made therein, and my only apology for doing so at this late date is that in the southwestern mission our elders have had the book to meet, and in the seven different debates held with Elder Chism of the Christian Church he has made it the basis of his attack upon us.

In the late discussion held at Oklaunion, Texas, between Bro. C. Scott and Mr. Chism, he stated publicly that if we could show one garbled quotation from Hyde's book he would discard the book and never use it in a discussion with our people again. Bro. Scott showed a number of misquotations, but it did not satisfy Mr. Chism, because we quoted from an edition of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants published after Hyde wrote his book.

I have gone to the trouble, therefore, to get the editions of the books published prior to 1857, so that that subterfuge might avail nothing. I shall not try to answer the arguments, as they have been so often refuted, but simply content myself with showing the inconsistencies and garbled statements made. One thing is noticeable in every exposé of Mormonism, the various authors start out by protesting that they are sincere, and what they have done is for love, and each one flatters the public that they are competent witnesses and have told the truth, and nothing but the truth.

On pages 26, 27, Hyde says:—

That I have done right I am convinced. God knows I have done it in the love of right. . . . If in the succeeding pages I have been guilty of exaggeration, I am not aware of it; I certainly do not intend it. Mormonism licenses too much corruption under the name of religion, to need any exaggeration to make it atrocious.

Hyde was born in 1833, baptized in 1848, and was therefore at his baptism but fifteen years of age, and came into the church four years and a little more after Joseph Smith was killed. He was baptized September 4, 1848; Joseph Smith was killed June 27, 1844 (Hyde, p. 17), therefore could not have known anything about the church at Nauvoo or in Missouri, and yet he says on page 50:—

They were far worse at Nauvoo than they are at Salt Lake; were worse at Missouri than at Nauvoo.

No exaggeration here!!

In his introduction he mentions "the meanness of its origin," and "as ensuring human misery, and consummating human degradation" "it should be noticed by the philanthropist." It would be curious to know how a system could continue to improve its advocates if it is all that Mr. Hyde claims for it in his book. If Mr. Hyde were alive we might ask him to arise and explain; but as he is dead, will some of his ardent admirers please stand up. That he was densely ignorant of what transpired in the early history of the church, and even much that was done in his own or the Brighamite church, I have only to call the reader's attention to his frequent assertions in regard to Joseph Smith having children by his alleged plural wives. On page 14 he says that Joseph Smith began practicing polygamy as early as 1838, and says that as early as 1846 he "had children living who were the offspring of this very practice." On pages 84, 85, he tells of a son born to a Mrs. Dibble, by Joseph Smith, and yet he does not exaggerate! Every one knows that the Utah people would long ago have produced those children had there been any; but on the contrary, Wilford Woodruff admits that no children were ever born to Joseph Smith in that way. From a tract entitled, "Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist," we quote:—

On May 30, 1892, Mr. H. Neidig (not a member of any church), of Wampum, Pennsylvania, wrote Mr. Woodruff on this point, and Mr. Woodruff, through his secretary, George Reynolds, replied as follows: "The facts that you refer to are almost as great a mystery to us as they are to you; but the reason generally assigned by the wives themselves, is, that owing to the peculiar circumstances by which they were surrounded, they were nervous and in such constant fear that they did not conceive."—Pp 9, 10

Thus it is conceded by the Utah people, themselves, that nothing of the kind ever occurred, and in this Hyde out-Brigham's Brigham in false assertions. But Hyde has gone through the Brighamite school, of which he says:—

They publicly defend lying for expediency, believing the end justifies the means.—P. 49.

And Hyde certainly was an apt scholar, and did not entirely apostatize from the Brighamite faith.

On page 137 we are given this bit of historical information by this man who does not exaggerate. Speaking of Brigham Young, he says:—

He was convinced by Elder Samuel H. Smith, brother of the Prophet, Joseph Smith, who has since apostatized.

This is something new in the way of history, that Samuel H. Smith apostatized, as he died almost immediately after the murder of his two brothers, Joseph and Hyrum, having passed away July 30, 1844. With Hyde, Brigham was the honest man, Joseph Smith the knave. One he knew, the other he did not know. On page 152 he says, "Smith was not a man of genius;" on 153, "Brigham was superior not only to Smith, but also to Rigdon." On page 154:—

No man ever lived who had more deeply devoted friends that Brigham Young.

On page 145, of Brigham he says:—

Feared with a stronger fear, venerated with a more rational veneration, but not loved with the same clinging tenderness that the people still felt for Joseph Smith, Brigham swayed them at his will. They learned to dread his iron hand; and were daunted by his iron heart. (Italics are mine.)

But there is evidently a contradiction here. The clinging tenderness with which the people regarded Joseph Smith was the power that Brigham wielded over his people,—never undertaking a measure without the use of Joseph's name, and good or bad it won, when he once convinced the people that Joseph began it. On page 146 I find this:—

Colonel Kane who had embraced Mormonism in Iowa.

This is the first time I ever knew Colonel Kane was a Mormon. On page 168:—

A Mr. Howard was a Mormon merchant, but grew dissatisfied in 1845, and determined to leave Salt Lake.

How could he leave Salt Lake in 1845, when they did not go there until 1847. It may be pleaded that this might be an error in the printing. True, but Hyde ought to be more careful in the printing of a book that is to overthrow the faith of thousands; for if such palpable errors as this are allowed to creep in, how might it not be with something more important.

I pass on, however, noticing only a tithe of his inaccurate statements and contradictions, and come to his manifest dishonesty in quoting from the books of the church. On page 184, he quotes from the Doctrine and Covenants, European edition, page 138, (sec. 45: 13 in late ed.):—

And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we cannot stand.

Hyde quotes it as follows:—

And the wicked shall say, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible and we cannot stand; "when one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight."

The latter clause is not found in the section at all, and the rest is not quoted verbatim. Page 110, European ed. (sec. 6: 11 late ed.) reads:—

Did I not speak peace to your mind concerning the matter? What greater witness can you have than from God?

Hyde renders the latter part thus:—

What greater witness can you have from a god?—Page 251.

Paragraph 12 reads:—

Verily, verily I say unto you, that there are records which contain much of my gospel, which have been kept back because of the wickedness of the people; and now I command you, that if you have good desires, a desire to lay up treasures for yourself in heaven, then shall you assist in bringing to light, with your gift, those parts of my scriptures which have been hidden because of iniquity.

Hyde renders it:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

There are other records kept back; you shall assist in bringing to light those parts of the scriptures.—Hyde, p. 251.

Here he entirely changes the meaning of one clause, making the quality of the witness depend upon the manner in which the testimony was given, also teaching inferentially a plurality of gods, while the book makes the value of the testimony depend upon whether it came from God or not; and in the twelfth paragraph making seventeen words do duty for seventy-two.

On page 273, he quotes from Doctrine and Covenants, European edition, page 108 (late ed., sec. 10: 3), as follows:—

Seek not for treasures but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded to you; and then you shall be made rich.

Then he says that Joseph had to Rebuke him [Cowdery] for his too impetuous desires to be rich, and says the inducement held out to Cowdery was riches. But here is the quotation as it really is in the book. I quote the whole of verse 3. Hyde begins in the middle of a sentence, and just after a comma.

Now as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. Seek not for riches, but for wisdom, and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich; behold, he that hath eternal life is rich.

The reader will notice that Mr. Hyde changes the word "riches" to "treasures," and "unto" to "to," and leaves out the qualifying clause or sentence denoting what kind of riches is meant. Is this the work of an honest man? Is it the work of a man who does not want to exaggerate or misrepresent? Assuredly not.

But the end is not yet, for thus far his misrepresentations are tame beside his mangling of Book of Mormon quotations and statements.

On page 215 he tells the falsehood that others have so often repeated after him. He says:—

On page 509 [European edition; large edition, 439], we are told Moroni fills up his father's plates, and says, "I have no more room on the plates, and ore I have none, for I am alone." The plates of his father, the book with rings, are all full. He has no more plates nor ore to make any of; and yet, the matter of forty-seven closely printed pages of pretended translation follows directly after.

A more glaring misrepresentation of facts could not be found anywhere, unless Mr. Hyde is like the story of Daniel Webster, who, when a boy going to school, used to have very dirty hands, and when the teacher called him up one day to punish him by feruling his hand, he held his right hand out to receive the blow, but when the teacher saw how dirty it was, she said, Daniel, if you can show another hand as dirty as this one in this room, I will let you off without punishing you. As quick as thought the left hand was placed beside the right, and as it was equally as dirty, Daniel escaped; and so Mr. Hyde may be able to show something as dirty from another page of his book, and I do not doubt it in the least.

Moroni, in writing his account, said that his father had written the account of the destruction of his people, but only had written "the intent thereof," or an abridgement. "And behold, I would write it also, if I had room upon the plates, but I have not; and ore I have none, for I am alone." He does not say that he has "no more room" on the plates—does not say that he "had filled them up," nothing of the kind; simply that he had no room for that extra matter, that is all. His father had written his account of the battle, and Moroni wanted to write his, but had no room for it, and also to complete the record or to write what he had been commanded to write.

On page 222, Hyde says:—

Lehi prophesies, on p. 11 [European edition; p. 9, large ed.], "These plates shall go forth to all nations—never grow dim, nor perish." "These plates," are not, as the Mormons often try to apply the passage, the plates on which the Book of Mormon was engraved, but the plates of Labin. The Mormons claim literal interpretations of Scripture. It was the plates that should never grow dim, the plates that should never perish, the plates to go forth to all nations. Where are they?

I have heard of a man setting up a man of straw and kicking it over and applauding the performance, and here truly is an instance of it. Now see how simple a tale will put you down, Mr. Hyde. I know you do not want to "exaggerate," but you have consciously or unconsciously done so. Let us read the passage just as it is:—

And now when my father saw all these things, he was filled with the Spirit, and began to prophesy concerning his seed; that these plates of brass should go forth unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, who were of his seed.

Italics are mine.

Now you see that by omitting five words you have "exaggerated" what was meant for only a small portion of the human family into "all nations." It is a wonder that your "love" had not made your vision more acute; but then they say love is blind.

On page 223 he represents Nephi as building a ship—all by himself and in a short time. But unfortunately we read in the book:—

And it came to pass that they [Nephi's brothers] did worship the Lord, and did go forth with me; and we did work timbers of curious workmanship.—European edition, p. 41; large edition, p 35.

So he was not alone. On the same page Hyde says:—

One thing is painfully noticeable, Smith is very cautious not to give the slightest clew as to where they sailed from, how long they were in reaching that point, in which direction it lay from Jerusalem.

But again we find the book very explicit in these matters, for it says they traveled "nearly a south-south-east direction" (p. 34, European ed.; p. 29, l. ed.), and that they "did sojourn for the space of many years, yea, even eight years in the wilderness" (E. ed., 36; l. ed., 31).

On page 228, Hyde calls attention to what he calls contradictions, and says:—

On page 3 [p 3 l. ed] it says Lehi left Jerusalem because God directed him in a dream;" but on page 411 [p 354 l. ed] we are gravely told Lehi was "driven out by the people."

Another misquotation. Here it is as the account gives it:—

For behold, it came to pass that the Lord spake unto my father, yea, even in a dream, and said unto him, Blessed art thou Lehi, because of the things which thou hast done; and because thou hast been faithful and declared unto this people the things which I commanded thee, behold they seek to take away thy life. And it came to pass that the Lord commanded my father, even in a dream, that he should take his family and depart into the wilderness.—1 Nephi 1: 17, 18, l. e.

On page 354, verse 47, it reads:—

Our father Lehi was driven out of Jerusalem, because he testified of these things.

It does not in either case say he was driven out by the people, but it infers in both places that the people were the primary cause of Lehi leaving Jerusalem, just as Herod was the cause of Christ being taken into Egypt. Herod really drove Christ's parents into Egypt, and yet God warned them to flee into Egypt in a similar manner in which Lehi was told to go into the wilderness; but to impute a contradiction would be far-fetched, indeed.

On page 229 Hyde says:—

On page 517 [446, l. ed.], we are assured that "the Lord led Jared and his brother out to America;" but on page 406 [349, 350, l. ed.], the reader is divinely instructed that it was "the Devil."

The words I have placed in italics Hyde incloses in quotations marks, as though quoting the words of Moroni. But the exact words are as follows:—

And when thou hast done this, thou shalt go at the head of them down into the valley, which is northward, and there will I meet thee, and will go before thee into a land which is choice above all the land of the earth.—Ether 1: 15, 16.

The contradictory quotation is lengthy, but I will give it so the reader may see how reliable this non-exaggerater is:—

Now behold, those secret oaths and covenants did not come forth unto Gadianton from the records which were delivered unto Helaman; but behold, they were put into the heart of Gadianton, by that same being who did entice our first parents to partake of the forbidden fruit; yea, that same being who did plot with Cain, that if he would murder his brother Abel, it should not be known unto the world. And he did plot with Cain and his followers, from that time forth. And also it is that same being who put it into the hearts of the people, to build a tower sufficiently high that they might get into heaven. And it was that same being who led on the people who came from the tower, into this land; who spread the works of darkness and abominations over all the face of the land, until he dragged the people down to an entire destruction, and to an everlasting hell; yea, it is that same being who put it into the heart of Gadianton, to still carry on the work of darkness, and of secret murder; and he has brought it forth from the beginning of man, even down to this time. And behold, it is he that is the author of sin.—Helaman 2: 129-133.

A child of ordinary intelligence could tell that there is no contradiction here.

On same page, Hyde says: "The Nephites build on America . . . a temple like unto Solomon's;" and this poor family had come to this land destitute a few years before.

But the book says it was not like Solomon's temple.

And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things: for they were not to be found upon the land; wherefore, it could not be built like unto Solomon's temple. But the manner of the construction was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceeding fine.—Book of Mormon, pp. 65, 66, European ed.; 1. ed. 57.

Hyde cannot or does not even quote the Bible correctly. On page 230 he quotes John 16: 7 as follows:—

If I go not away, the Comforter cannot come.

But correctly quoted it reads:—

For if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.

He then mixes up the 26th verse of the 14th chapter and the 13th verse of the 16th chapter of John, and renders it like this:—

He, when he is come, shall bring all things to your remembrance, and show you things to come.

Then he tries to reason that as Jesus Christ said the Spirit or Comforter could not come until after Christ went away, that because the Book of Mormon claims that they enjoyed the Spirit before Christ, it could not be a true record, and on page 230 says:—

If we believe the New Testament is true, we must reject the Book of Mormon as an imposture, for, says Hyde,—

In the holy Scriptures, we are informed that the Savior had to die in order that his disciples might obtain the gift of the Holy Ghost.—P. 230.

It may be interesting to know where the scriptures says so. His reasoning would do away with the Bible, for we read that the Spirit rested on seventy elders, as also on Moses (Numbers 11th chapter), and in Deuteronomy 34 : 9, Joshua received it; and in 1 Samuel 10 and 6, Saul was promised it; and in the 10th verse he is said to have received it.

Another garbled quotation is found on page 231. On page 520 European ed.; 448 l. ed., I read:—

And behold, O Lord, in them there is no light, whither shall we steer? And also we shall perish, for in them we cannot breathe, save it is the air which is in them; therefore we shall perish.

Hyde renders it:—

And Jared cried unto the Lord, we shall all perish, there is no light to steer by, and in them we cannot breathe for there is no air.

No comment is necessary. I will only give one more. On page 235 Hyde says:—

Another strong evidence of forgery may be found on page 513 [442 l. ed.], "For do we not read, that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever, and that in him is neither variableness nor shadow of changing." The first part of this sentence is to be found in Paul's epistle to the Hebrews, chapter xiii., ver. 8: "The same yesterday, today, and forever." The closing clause was written by James i. 17: "Father of lights in whom there is no variableness, nor shadow of turning." The Nephites do not pretend to have these epistles; how, then, could they read what they did not have? Smith made a terrible oversight here.

As usual, Mr. Hyde does not quote correctly, but there is only a slight variation in language, but it is curious to note that that variation makes the language as given by Mr. Hyde, just a little more like that from which he claims it was taken than what it is in the Book of Mormon. We know Hyde claims to be an honest man, but we think it will do no hurt to watch him, so we give it as it is in the book, so the reader will have it as it is:—

For do we not read that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever; and in him there is no variableness neither shadow of changing.—Mormon 4: 58.

But Moroni was not quoting from Paul's epistle to the Hebrews, nor from James, but from previous books written by former prophets from among his own people. On page 103 (89 l. ed.), and page 107 (93 l. ed.), I find the language "the same yesterday, today, and forever," used by Nephi, who had written nearly a thousand years before Moroni said do we not read; and on page 228, 229 (197 l. ed.), I find Alma using the words:—

Neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; neither hath he a shadow of turning.—Alma 5: 16.

Smith's oversight was not so "terrible" after all, but one cannot help but think that Hyde has proven himself a dishonest man, notwithstanding his protestation of honesty and love for the truth.

I might add much more of the same kind, but will forbear, for I might weary the reader; but wish to say this in conclusion, that I have read and closely examined many books written against the Mormons, so called, some of them by men who have at one time been members of the church, and have also held one and listened to other discussions, and have failed yet to find one man among our opponents that I would care to follow his method of examining or searching for the truth; and while Mormonism may be a delusion, I am certain of one thing, it condemns me if I lie or misrepresent an opponent in the least.

If, then, as I have shown, Mr. Hyde has misrepresented and falsified the records, how can we believe him in anything; and although he gives fourteen different statements, given by fourteen different individuals, and one that he claims was signed by fifty-one different men,—although he does not give their names,—how can we know that those men made such statements? May it not be that he has changed those statements to suit his convenience, just as he changed the words of the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and even the Bible, when by so doing he could make a better showing for his side?

I cannot believe that Mr. Hyde did not know how the books read, because his quotations show a familiarity with them that will not admit of such a thought; but that he deliberately falsified the records, presuming on the ignorance of the people to carry out the deception is evident on almost every page. But Hyde was only twenty-four years of age when he wrote his book, and his desire to become famous as a writer against Mormonism got the better of his love for the truth. But what shall we say of mature men, men of sound judgment, that will take him as the criterion by which to judge Mormonism?

CONDITIONS IN SALT LAKE CITY.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 10.

Editors Herald:—The semiannual conference of the Utah Church closed last Sunday. Their conferences differ widely from ours. No business is done other than the sustaining of the officers of the church. The time is devoted to short speeches by leading men of the church.

Leading papers of the city reported speeches in part, but some of the most interesting statements made by some of the speakers were omitted by all, including the Deseret News. I refer to this fact because B. H. Roberts, in his effort to disprove and throw discredit upon statements made by members of our church regarding remarks by Pres. B. Young, at a conference in 1854, concerning the rights of the prophet's son to lead the church of Latter Day Saints, says that he had searched in vain for such remarks in the minutes of said conference. All the sayings of these apostles and prophets are not reported. Perhaps B. H. Roberts and everybody else will have to search in vain for the following statements made by speakers on October 5 and 6. Elder Woodruff said among other things that "many stake and ward officers use tea, coffee, tobacco, and some drink, and yet we tolerate them. Many of the priesthood are dead."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Elder Cowley got warmed up, and preached quite a stirring little sermon, in the which he remarked that "whether we go to the dance to enjoy ourselves, or to meetings of whatever kind, we should take the priesthood with us." "In many respects we have broken away from the old paths of the gospel." "We sing many things nowadays, but there is nothing in it, for we do not mean it." "Abroad, elders are not afraid to defend any of the principles of the gospel. We cannot do it in Utah. I am glad they defend every principle and philosophy, of whatever nature." He also said respecting conditions of the people here: "We haven't got out of the woods yet."

Elder Merrill said: "If the Saints were fully up to duty there would be a different aspect of things—different conditions. In one ward, only a certain per cent of the people attend meetings. We read in the Book of Covenants that God would raise up a man like unto Moses to lead his people out of bondage. President Snow may be that man. For all I know, Brother Snow may be that man. He is working to get us out of bondage—it is on his mind all the time."

Elder J. W. Taylor testified to all that had been said in the conference, and among other things admonished the patriarchs to always conclude their blessings by saying that "these things shall come to pass according to your faithfulness."

On October 6 I was called to Provo to preach the funeral of Nellie Carter, daughter of Bro. Dominicus Carter, who died on the 5th, her twelfth birthday, so could not attend tabernacle services any further.

Following is what the Tribune has to say about Apostle Grant's speeches: Speaking of the paying of the tithes by the Saints, Apostle Grant said: "There is more money spent in breaking the Word of Wisdom than all the cash tithing that is paid by the Latter Day Saints. If we had kept the money here which we have sent away in breaking the Word of Wisdom, we would have had more wealth than any of the intermountain states."

The first speaker on Sunday was Apostle Brigham Young. Speaking of immorality, he said: "Now there is another subject—immorality. This people is under condemnation. I am under condemnation that I do not know where my children are. Who are all these boys out on the streets, howling like a lot of wildcats, cursing and swearing at eleven o'clock at night? I see it. What was I doing there? Looking to see if any of my children were among the hoodlums on the streets of Salt Lake. Are they yours? I can remember a time when there were no accommodations for visitors in Salt Lake, because the houses were filled with children in the evenings. A governor who was appointed to preside over this territory, Steven S. Harvey, couldn't find accommodations, and couldn't stay here longer than a month. He did stay that long, long enough to insult our women folks, until one day he run against the wrong party and was driven out of the house with a poker. Harvey said he couldn't live without his wife and family. Well, I hope he is dead. There is lots of accommodations now, with all this lewdness that is going on. If it was in my power to catch these young hounds, who sneak around these back doors, I'd fix them so they wouldn't want any. It wouldn't do to leave it to me. For, by God, I'd stop it! I'd see that they didn't foster their corruption. They wouldn't pollute the streets of Zion. You can track them down the streets. They are not so clean that you can't follow their tracks. I can tell 'em by the smell when they come near me."—Salt Lake Herald, October 8, 1900.

On the 9th, commenting upon this part of Mr. Young's speech, the Tribune has the following to say: "It is a little obscure whom Apostle Young really meant; whether he meant that the hoodlums were all Gentiles, or not, but no matter. There are plenty of them, and a full proportion of them are sons of good Saints. But it is no matter about the breed, they have become an absolute nuisance, an absolute menace to the peace of the city."

The above remarks by Mr. Young sound very much like the speeches of another Brigham Young of years gone by. It is rather difficult to determine the meaning of some of his statements, and it would seem almost out of place to quote them here, were it not for the following reasons: 1. All along, this people have claimed to be the true Church of Latter Day Saints. 2. They have claimed that these valleys were of God appointed for safety to the Saints, while his wrath is being poured out upon the nations. 3. That this is Zion, and people of nearly all nations have been invited to come here and learn more of the ways of the Lord. 4. Thus they have claimed to fulfill Isaiah 2: 2, 3.

Undoubtedly Gentiles are responsible, to a degree, for conditions here; but I believe a large share of it is due to the polygamous teachings and practices of the followers of Brigham Young. Reader, please turn to the second chapter of Jacob, in Book of Mormon, and you will have a fair description of conditions where polygamy obtains.

Speaking about the unity claimed to exist among the leading men of the church here, Mr. Young said: "In every way they are one. Some fellows say, I can't swallow that doctrine, when that doctrine comes from the heads of the church. Well, if you cant swallow it, then it will stick in your stomach and kill you. I wish the body of the church could take enough physic to physic these fellows out."

Pres. Joseph F. Smith spoke next, saying he wished to endorse heartily everything that had been said by the apostles during the conference. Concerning the unity mentioned by former speakers, Mr. Smith said: "There has been a great deal said about the unity that exists in this church. I want to tell you that we are not one. We are not united as we should be, for when President Snow has told a brother what he should do, he has replied: 'That comes in contact with my idea of manhood, and I cannot do it.'"

Pres. Snow, now in his eighty-seventh year, spoke on Sunday afternoon. Concerning the gathering, he said: "The day is approaching when a large part of the people whom I am addressing will go back to Jackson county to erect the temple and establish the city of Zion. I shall go back, President Cannon shall go back, and President Smith will go back. I don't know about all the apostles, but a large majority of you will go back to build up a holy city to the Lord."

Mr. Snow urged the people to get ready for this event, and mentioned a most powerful manifestation he had received to the truth of what he had said. He also said: "The time is coming very shortly."

Query: If this people were permitted to go back and build up a city in Jackson county, would it be any different from the Zion they have built up here? How could it? And if not, would the Lord come to receive and bless that kind of a Zion?

President Cannon followed. He spoke of the great number of elders kept in the field at large expense to the church, with small rewards, so to speak—each elder averaging about four converts in two years—and that they should transfer their work to countries where no preaching had been done.

The leading men again failed to elect a president of apostles, probably for the same reason mentioned in my last letter. Had Pres. Snow's statement that they would very soon go to Jackson county, and that the present presidency should all go, gained much credence among them, it seems that there would be but little danger in electing Brigham Young. Their failure in this direction would seem to indicate that there are doubts, and I know from remarks I have heard, that some of the people are doubtful about it.

We are progressing here—some ten persons having united with us since March.

In bonds,

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Oct. 12.

Editors Herald:—The autumn conference of the London district is an occasion of the past. It was held at Toronto, the 16th, 17th, and 18th inst., and was a pleasant and profitable series of meetings. It was a source of encouragement to the writer, and he feels more like being and doing in the interests of this latter-day work. It is dearer to me than anything else, and I don't care what God does with me as his servant. I only want to know he is doing it. I am sure his hand will never cause his child a needless tear.

Bro. Evans has reappointed me to Toronto and suburbs, where I have spent the last five months. I realize the difficulties that hinder our work in large cities, and as a consequence feel more dependent on the Lord.

I came to this place on the 10th, in company with Elders J. L. Mortimer, S. W. Tomlinson, and others. My stay will be brief, for an appointment had been made for me at Toronto for next Sunday ere I left. Bro. Mortimer has gone but Bro. Tomlinson is still here. I preached last night, and he will occupy tonight. The Saints here have a nice little church, but there is but little interest among those without.

Praying that all may increase in diligence, I am,

Yours in expectation of a bright future,

A. C. BARMORE.

SWAN, Ky., Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—Our work in these parts is moving along so as to give a measure of satisfaction, for which we are thankful to the gracious giver of all good.

Saturday, August 11, Bro. C. L. Snow and the writer commenced a meeting at Davis' chapel, near Hamlet, Kentucky, continuing till the 10th. The work had been opened up there mainly through the efforts of Bro. Snow. It has seldom been the good fortune of the writer to have as attentive audiences as greeted him night after night at this place for a week. The good Spirit was present in a goodly degree and this with the splendid behavior and attentive interest on the part of the people, together with their regular attendance at all the meetings, made it a pleasure to preach to them.

Bro. Clark Hamilton is the only member of the church there; and his upright course in life has won for him the respect of his neighbors, and gives us no mean prestige in that part in presenting our claims. This is well.

And how the people of that neighborhood can sing! The country is filled up with Lambs, and they are noted as singers, and deservedly so. "All a Lamb has to do is to open his mouth and he sings." So we heard it said. I don't think they are in any way related to the Rev. M. T. Lamb of "Golden Bible" fame, except in name; and they are to be congratulated, perhaps, that they are not. Quite a number of them are favorable to the gospel message, and sometime in the near future we hope to hear them singing the songs of Zion, sweeter than any they have yet known, "with the Spirit" as well as "the understanding." And why not? If anybody else can become a "sheep" at all, it ought to be easy for a Lamb to grow into a full-fleeced sheep of the true fold. I shall long remember the efficient help they gave us in the song service, and may they be able to see their way clear into the kingdom and thus be prepared to stand on Mount Zion, and sing the "Song of Moses and the Lamb;" and I want to be there to hear them too. It does one good even to think of it. Others at that place were very kind, furnishing us with home, and ministering to our needs. Blessings on them all, is our prayer.

On August 11, to my surprise, I was attacked by one of those unexplainable freaks of nature, called "chills." It shook me around just as though I weighed no more than a feather; just as though I had no rights it was bound to respect. It bade me go to bed and stay there all day, and I felt compelled to obey, leaving Bro. Snow to fill the appointment at Palma, some fifteen miles away, Saturday night and Sunday. Sister Hamilton, who is a member of the Baptist Church, but whose heart seems to be opening to the reception of greater light, did all she could to make me comfortable while the fight was on. May she be abundantly rewarded for the same, is my prayer.

On the 15th, in company with Bro. Snow, I started for his home near Kirksey, a distance of fifteen miles. We had not gone far when Mr. Chill came back and renewed the attack with increased vigor and kept it up all that long drive. I think Bro. Snow's patience was tried in having to make frequent stops for me to make vain attempts to quench the unnatural and almost intolerable thirst that I experienced on the way. But I had my way; that was some consolation.

On the 17th another "chill" and high fever, with vomiting of blood, which indicated, as we thought, that it was of the order known as "congestive," and I was pretty well exhausted. However, repeated administrations and good nursing and treatment by Bro. Snow enabled me to ward off any further attacks, and after a loss of two weeks' time I was again able for duty. Thanks were due to Sister Snow, also, for kindly efforts to make my condition endurable.

Let me see; who is that brother that said in a recent letter in the Herald that he thought we elders ought to tell the bad as well as the good features of our work? Will this do, brother?

From August 25 to September 2 we occupied at a "brush arbor" at the home of Bro. J. Williams, about two miles east of Fulton, Kentucky. Bro. D. W. Cook was with us, and delivered the first sermon. Bro. Cook has improved upon his talent, as a preacher, since we left the mission two years ago. May he continue to grow and be able to do good as he desires.

In the week (exact date lost) I baptized the wife of Bro. J. R. McLain. Her husband had been in the church just one year, and I suppose she had found that his religion made him no worse, but had rather improved him, so she felt willing to follow him. On Sunday, September 2, I baptized her father, Bro. Scurlock, and a Brother Fields. These, together with Brn. J. R. and Will McLain, Bro. and Sr. J. W. Williams, give us a good representation at that place, and the prospect for others to come in soon and for a branch organization, is not a bad one. Uncle "Wash" McLain, his wife and four daughters all seem to be near the kingdom. They seemed to take as much pleasure in caring for us and making the meetings successful as if they had been in the church. Such kindness as was shown us by them cannot soon fade from the memory of this missionary. May they have courage and grace to obey the gospel message e'er it is too late!

Bro. Snow was uneasy all the time we were there on account of the hired hand, a son of Bro. Henry Andrews, whom he had left at home sick. Not receiving any news from him for over a week, he concluded to go back home on Tuesday, September 4, and found the young man had passed over the dark river, and was buried, and that his wife and one of the little girls were down with typhoid fever. A letter had been sent calling him home, but it failed to reach him. The little girl, Ova, was administered to by her father and was soon well. The mother chose to trust in the doctor, and was down for three or four weeks. O, for the faith as well as the undefiled purity of little children! It almost vexes me to hear or read of professed ministers of the gospel, teaching the outrageous doctrine of the total depravity of little children.

The sickness of Sister Snow caused Bro. Snow to fail to meet me again at Paris, Tennessee, on the 6th, which was our understanding when we parted at Puryear on the 4th. So on the 7th I boarded the train and went to Warren's Bluff, in Henderson county, and walked out to Bro. S. Reed's. It is only about two and one half miles from the station to his house, but I took the wrong road, just like many people do in going to heaven, and walked about six miles before finding his house.

I was still about thirty miles from my destination, Morris chapel, where I had appointment to be the next evening. Bro. Reed kindly furnished me a horse and buggy, and I struck out over the sand hills, reaching the home of Bro. R. D. Snow a short time before sunset. Bro. and Sr. Snow are the only Saints here, but they are an honor to the church, and know how to make the missionary feel welcome. Thanks for a home with kind treatment, are due to Bro. and Sr. Snow.

A holiness meeting had been in progress for three weeks, and the people being worn out in attending that, and worse worn by prejudice, our crowds were quite small. What good if any our meetings at this place did we will leave for the developments of time to relate.

Saturday, the 15th, I went to the old historic battlefield of Shiloh, and on Sunday preached once, and baptized Sr. Ernestine Lewis, a daughter of Bro. and Sr. P. V. Irvin, whose honor and integrity are worth a hundred cents to the dollar, gold or silver, among their neighbors. The husband, Mr. Lewis, is not with us yet, but, perchance, will be when he has better understanding of the gospel plan.

Tuesday, the 18th, came back to Bro. Reed's, and on the 19th went to Alberton five miles away, and the same evening preached in the Christian church at that place. My subject had been selected by the people; I was to tell them something about the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, and about the Book of Mormon. At least that was what they wanted. A goodly number came out to hear. The next two evenings were rainy and not so many came; but some were interested. No serious objection was made to what the preacher said until the third evening, when the necessity for authority to baptize, etc., was presented. That roused up one brother of the if-we-have-a-right-to-preach-we-have-a-right-to-baptize order, and a number of questions were asked by him, and answered by the preacher. The last I heard from him he was still roused, and "could not keep from talking about me," and said "I knew my business." I hope there is no need for an "if" in that part of his faith.

Sunday, the 23d, I preached the funeral of Sr. Sarah Ann Reed, wife of Bro. S. Reed, at the McCall shoolhouse, near Bro. Reed's home. Sr. Reed was held in high esteem by her neighbors, both in and out the church. More than two hundred of them manifested their respect in attending her funeral. The house was too small to accommodate the people, so the seats were moved outdoors under the trees, and those who could not get seats occupied wagons, buggies, etc., and all listened attentively while we tried to tell them of the hope of the resurrection of the dead. No more respectful or attentive audience ever greeted the writer, anywhere. In fact, the behavior and respect was all that could be desired. Knowing Sr. Reed to be worthy of respect while living, I could not but feel grateful to the people when I saw them paying such marked respect to her memory after she had passed from earth life.

Bro. Reed has lost a faithful and true wife, and a good house-keeper, but he still has an excellent house-keeper in the person of his youngest surviving daughter, Patri, who cares for the home and the three younger brothers since the death of the mother, more than a year ago, in as womanly a way as could well be without motherly experience. Thirty-three persons ate dinner at Bro. Reed's on the day of the memorial, but patient Patri's hands were equal to the task of preparing and serving a bountiful and well-cooked dinner for all. I think Martha of old was not more careful about serving.

In the afternoon I baptized Sr. Alice Rush, who, with her husband, Bro. Richard Rush, Sr. Sarah E. Rush, his mother, and three or four of the children, had come some fifteen miles to attend the memorial services and for Sr. Alice to be baptized. Her people are very much opposed to the work, and it took some courage to break over the barriers and accept the truth against such discouragements as confronted her. But God had been merciful, and healed her little child, administered to by Bro. Reed, at the request of Bro. Richard, when the child was near death's door. Such blessings she had never dreamed of in the Baptist Church of which she was a member, so she investigated, saw the light, and came in. It is well. May she continue faithful and win the crown of life!

The next day I baptized Osceola, Bro. Reed's oldest son now at home, and Bro. Samuel Scott, who had promised me five years before that he would be baptized "the next time I came back to that place." I had forgotten the promise; he had not; so kept his promise. May he and "Osce" abide in the faith unto the end and be crowned, is my prayer.

September 29 I commenced meetings at Eagle Creek, in the unfinished church commenced some three years ago by Bro. T. W. Chatburn. The house is larger than the people, let alone their pocketbooks, and so it remains unfinished. T. W. may not have built wiser but he certainly built larger than he knew.

Here is the home of Bro. C. W. Roberts, where all the missionaries have found a welcome and encouragement. Bro. and Sr. Roberts are among the pioneers of the work in this country. They have raised their family in the faith, and they all take pleasure in caring for the elders and making them feel at home. The three girls, Annie, Ella, and Alma, have excellent talent, musical and otherwise, and it really seems too bad that they have not had better opportunities than that country affords.

Here also lives "Aunt Betsey" Cooper, who has been in the church ever since 1841. She is eighty-eight years old, and is still firm in the faith. To see her riding to church on the back of a mule, said to be "near thirty years old," struck us as something out of the ordinary. She is in good health for one of her age, and is always ready for a good joke and a hearty laugh. Is that the secret of her long life?

But this letter has grown entirely too long, so Brn. Haws, Oliver, Cooper, Green, McFadden, Malcom, et al., will please not feel slighted if we do not mention, at this writing, the creditable things that come to mind in regard to them and their treatment of this scribe. If they will but live under the influences of the Spirit that hovered round during and especially at the close of our meetings, they cannot but do well. So may it be! Thanks to all for kindness shown me!

Came here last Monday, and am taking a needed rest preparatory to a two weeks' meeting at Davis chapel and Foundry Hill, commencing next Saturday. Am staying with Bro. James H. Adair, who is now quite sick. He needs and is worthy of the prayers of the Saints. In bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

A REJOINDER BY JAMES CAFFALL.

Editors Herald:—In Herald for September 26, I find your response to my interrogation relative to the discontinuance of semiannual conferences, and providing for reunions in lieu thereof. I was not present at the session of conference which legislated the discontinuance of semiannual conferences, but heartily indorsed the act, as being wise and economic, for nothing is more essential in building up God's kingdom among men than a proper utilization of time and money, and the idea of General Conference appointees leaving their respective fields of labor twice a year, consuming at least two months in a year was a prodigality of both time and money, or so I believe. The everlasting gospel is to me the only basis of right, and whatever may receive undue fostering to the hindrance of that authoritative injunction, namely, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel," etc., is wrong as I understand, because this heavenly command is primarily, therefore firstly, and all measures its representatives are authorized to make should be with a view to a further spread or extension of the gospel. God, to my knowledge, has never prevented man from refusing to accept the overtures of his mercy; but has so instructed as to impress him with the thought of his being held to a strict account for the use or abuse of the opportunities offered during his probation on earth, to obtain light and understanding of God's revealed economy. Hence his divine commands are mandatory, and restrictive, his words reflective of the same, replete, in reflecting his will to man. His promises to man are stimulating, but in no way, coercive. But once having by the exercise of his will power accepted his divine message, declaring he has set to his seal that God is true, any departure from that he has recognized as divine and essential will bring him under condemnation proportionate to the enormity of the crime committed, for he walks not in crooked paths or looks upon sin with the least degree of allowance, therefore any policy leading to a condoning of wrong or evil would be the result of ignorance or willfulness.

Branches and districts are recognized governments within "the government" with guaranteed power by virtue of their relation to the body, to regulate their own affairs, without interference from other recognized departments of the government, unless they should unfortunately transcend their limits by running counter to recognized laws of the general government, then the God-provided means should be brought into requisition, to adjust it.

The recognized branch officials, by a studious and God-imposed coöperation, may and should teach, advise, correct, and if need be reprove, that the members of the branch may grow in grace, and in the knowledge of God, being established in the faith and hope of the gospel. And for the encouragement of the members, whether few or many; and as if to meet an exigency, Christ promises to be with the twos and threes, when and wherever meeting together; and as Christ's presence is a stimulating force in prayer meetings and in the closets, as in or at reunions, superseding the necessity of a vast outlay of money and the consumption of much precious time in holding reunions, I therefore think that the claim for reunions being for the purpose of recuperation or an increase of faith and hope of the gospel, invalid. But it is possible for Latter Saints to think present duties monotonous, because of their sameness.

Years ago the attendance at prayer meetings at ——— was meager, indeed. At length a report obtained that a strange elder was expected on the regular prayer meeting night, and punctual to the hour forty members with smiling faces put in an appearance, full of hope and anticipation; but alas, the constant ticking of the clock brought the hands past the time, and those coming to see the new elder began to show signs of disappointment. But the few regulars were active, evincing delight with another privilege to worship God on the shores of time, in letting their voice of praise be heard in the congregation of the Saints, while the many occasionals were silent and sad, seemingly relieved in hearing the sound of the doxology. Many months elapsed before so large a number was seen at the stated prayer meeting; but the regulars continued, "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," stimulated in the assurance that their labor is not in vain in the Lord. There are those in every place who are hindered frequenting the house of worship by force of circumstances. The gospel neither justifies extremes nor radicalism, as a rule; the greatest amount of pleasure or justification is found in the mediocrity. All the world moves today by a repetition of labor performed the day previous; why, then, should we lose interest in duty today because of their similarity of the previous day's duties. God by his foresight and knowledge of all his ways, from the beginning, has ordained such labor or duties as are for our present and future good. I believe prayer meetings to be the thermometer of the church. Would that it showed a rising higher more rapidly.

Districts are formed and recognized for the more effective work and spread of ministerial work. If reunions in the judgment of the officials will be effective in building up the work, they may arrange for them, without an appeal to General Conference. Years agone the Southern Nebraska appointed them; but finding the good thereby was not commensurate with time and money consumed, wisely abandoned them, thereby evincing a proper discretion. I fail to see that the Saints in the Western States were in any way injured, more than the Saints in the Eastern States by the abandonment of the semiannual conferences; but they made their plea, expressed their wishes, and were gratified, since which time other districts are falling in line; and I suppose annual reunions will soon be held by every known district. Well, if good for one, why not for all, and if it's an effective method to move God's work, why apprehensive of there being too many reunions? Why?

You, I think, will hardly claim divine command for reunions; therefore my thinking adversely to you on the matter will hardly be thought treasonable, though you being on the popular side may secure you a prestige that I may not share. I never think God will hold me responsible for results of my performance of law-imposed duties, but would be displeased if pausing in the performance of such duties because of results that might follow; for then I should evince distrust or doubt as to God's abilities to take care of results of carrying into execution his own appointed laws.

Then, too, I believe the gospel an authoritative message; therefore all gospel work must be authoritative in order to receive his sanction and blessing; therefore that which is not authoritative, in God's name, is manmade, attributable to assumption or ignorance. No matter whether it be the edict of one man, or the endorsement of many.

God's laws are immutable, and authority to advocate and enforce the same cannot be construed to mean the right to modify or revise those laws. Hence in this sense, I am neither a parliamentarian nor a latitudinarian; never expect to be. Should I ever be brought to believe (and I may) that that which I advocate today as God's law may be modified tomorrow with impunity, I hope to be sufficiently consistent within myself as to lay by my profession and appear in my true character. My individuality is my own, I have sold myself to no man, I own no one.

"Tis all free grace, and all free will, Freedom and reason make us men."

Heaven forbid I should cherish a remote wish to lessen or interfere with human rights, or fail to properly discriminate between human rights and God's decrees, so long as I claim to believe in God. As I write, I have no wish to merge from the realm of uprightness and godly dignity and enter the realm of sycophancy, but heaven knows where I may be tomorrow, which in a sense never comes, for it is always the present with me; the past is past, I live not in it; the future is to me dark and unknown, unless the good Lord for some wise purpose in himself shall lead me thither by the effulgent light of his Holy Spirit. The present therefore is my battle field.

As to your willingness to leave it to the discretion of the Saints as to whether they will utilize their means for the good received, etc., in attending reunions, or place the estimated cost of such attendance in the church coffers, to be used, as suggested by Bro. Caffall, sending elders and literature where such may be needed, I have little to say, as I cherish no wish to dictate to any as to the utilization of their earthly substance, but think the exercise of my discretion should be in harmony with the stricture of God's law. I am not my own, being bought with a price; but I think there is a gospel education that all Latter Day Saints should receive, that they may act intelligently. And since there are watchmen, they should so watch as to sound the alarm when signs of danger are visible. Your claimed assurance as to the good effected by reunions, especially in Iowa, I shall not essay to controvert. Possibly you are right and I wrong in the belief that a contentment by the Saints with the means of grace afforded by the recognized governments of branches and districts within the government, sacrificing the gratification of reunions and general annual governments (unless exegencies necessitate the latter), placing the cost on the church coffers, which might increase the laborers in the Lord's harvest field, etc. I cherish no wish to be dogmatic; but at present my convictions are too strong in the absence of proof to substantiate the divine authoritativeness of annual general conferences and reunions to forego those convictions or think otherwise than that the consumption of time and money attendant upon these public gatherings with a probability of an increase, a prodigality of time and money, for which some one or ones will be held accountable. Especially so at this juncture with that distressing and ponderous debt staring us in the face, with the doleful appeal for three hundred and fifty dollars per month for running expenses of Graceland College, which holds us in bondage. A wise man finding himself financially involved will lop off luxuries and content himself with actual necessities, for economy's sake as well as his own credit's sake. Then in view of branch and district facilities, why not be willing to lop off the luxuries of public gathering and free ourselves from debt. In bonds,

WEST SURRY, Maine, Oct. 9.

Editors Herald:—Some may want to hear from this part of the vineyard. The work is moving onward in most places here. Several new places have been opened in the district. Have just returned from Cranberry Isles, where J. N. Ames and the writer spent a week. We have three Saints there, and they proved themselves such in caring for us. A good interest there. J. C. Foss was there several years ago and some said to me that they haven't heard the gospel since. They treated us very kindly. May the Lord bless them, is my prayer. Shall return the middle of November if all goes well.

I shall return to the places west that I opened in August, Etna and Sangerville. Many kind friends were raised up to the cause we all love. Some will unite soon, I trust. The work in Sangerville was opened through efforts of Sr. Bodge, a very worthy Saint. We all can work in this cause if we will. Have labored with the Mountainville branch with good success. The Saints are alive and ready to do all they can.

As Bishop's agent I wish to say to the Saints in the western district: Try to do all you can. Don't let the work suffer, for you all can do a little. I find that last year out of the three hundred members we have less than one hundred who paid tithing; and this year the same names are coming in. Where are the other two hundred? Please come to the front and do a little. Have your names appear with the rest. Every one can do a little.

The Saints are doing nicely. They want to see Bro. Davison this way.

S. G. CUNNINGHAM.

THURMAN, Iowa, Oct. 12.

Editors Herald:—Our conference of the Fremont district, which closed Sunday night, October 7, was all we could ask. The Sunday school convention was not so well attended as heretofore, but the exercises were excellent, being conducted by our worthy district superintendent, Sr. T. A. Hougas, and her noble assistant, Charley Fry.

Our business sessions were not well attended, but enough to do the business, presented in good order, and satisfactory.

The sacrament meeting held on Sunday afternoon, Bro. William Leeka presiding, was one among the best we ever witnessed. The Spirit of God was poured out upon us, every heart seemed to be filled with the love of God. No manifestation of tongues nor prophecy, but tears of joy coursed down the cheeks of many, produced by the overflow of the good Spirit of the Master, as promised to those who will keep his commandments.

Our work is in a fair condition, not anything to boast of; but many things to be grateful for. Since our reunion many of our friends have expressed themselves as never enjoying themselves better, or made to rejoice as much, in hearing the gospel preached and the Scriptures expounded as at our meetings. Our ministers filled the bill exactly, and both Saints and friends are inquiring, when are they coming again?

We are all trying to do the best we can in this field of labor, in the two districts. The general missionaries are all busy, and pushing the work as best they can. Also the local brethren are active workers, and willing to do all they possibly can. All who are able to leave home on Sundays have missions, traveling from five to fifteen miles to do work for the Master, manifesting a zeal worthy of admiration and praise.

While we have some things to discourage, we have many and very much to encourage. I feel thankful to be counted worthy to labor with as faithful a corps of workers who are valiant for the right. And while there are members who are almost incorrigible, which causes us sorrow and anguish of soul, on the other hand our hearts are filled with joy and peace because of the many who are obedient to the Master and his law, and determined to do right in spite of every opposing power.

May the peace of God be with all lovers of truth and right, is still the prayer of,

Yours in bonds,

DAUGHTERS OF ZION AT THE DOW CITY REUNION, 1900.

MRS. A. H. RUDD.

The reunion committee having been notified that the Daughters of Zion would be pleased to have an opportunity, at sometime during the progress of the meetings, of presenting the claims of their work to the Saints there assembled, time was granted them on Thursday afternoon, October 5, for this purpose. The day was fine. The sun shed his beams from a cloudless sky, and the air was both invigorating and bracing.

The first part of the afternoon was occupied by Elder Charles Derry in preaching the word to a large and attentive audience, and after the close of the sermon, the opportunity was given for Sisters Hulmes and Walker to introduce the work they represented.

Sr. M. E. Hulmes, of Indepedence, Missouri, who is president of the organization, said:—

It is perhaps needless that I ask an interest in your prayers, as I feel that most of you realize that we need them, and that without such help we will fail in giving you a proper understanding of the work which we are trying to do, the more so as we are not accustomed to speaking in public, and fear our voices are not strong enough to be heard by all.

First, I wish to thank those who have granted us this opportunity of representing our work. We were made glad upon arriving here to learn that at the suggestion of Bro. Mintun, chairman of the committee in charge of the Sunday school and Religio work, it was decided by this committee that the three organizations work conjointly at this reunion. For this courtesy, and the Christian spirit therein manifested, we are thankful. We did not come here from any desire to be conspicuous, but were impelled by a sense of duty. In fact we had many impediments in our way, and but for the strong promptings of the Spirit that failure to be here would be failure in duty, we should not have come. We started during heavy rains which had been prevailing at Independence for some days, but are glad now that we came, for we believe that these organizations are all needed as helps in the church, and are pleased that ours will be represented with the others.

I wish to say that we have many times been blessed while holding our advisory meetings and planning for the good of the work during the past year. This, together with the fact of having been sustained by the General Conference, imposes upon us an added responsibility of carrying it on. We wish to strive earnestly to do our part, but have no desire to labor in any way which the church cannot indorse, and we wish to labor ever in that spirit of humility which will enable us to receive all just criticism—even chiding if need be.

Our work is steadily but surely progressing. We are gaining many friends, and the promise of the Lord to us, that "workers would be raised up from unexpected sources to help us," is being fulfilled. Before our meeting closes—after Sister Walker shall have explained to you the character of our work, we will be glad to hear from any one who may feel disposed to say a word either by way of encouragement or for the purpose of learning in regard to our society.

It has sometimes been objected that, in order to attend our meetings, mothers would often have to leave their children uncared for while away from home. This is never desirable and never encouraged by us. In many of our local organizations the sisters purposely chose the time for holding their meeting, when the children are in school, taking with them any who are too young to attend school. We have also for some time been considering ways and means by which the younger children can be cared for while their mothers attend our meetings, and we have strong hope of soon being able to accomplish this very desirable result. I will now give place to Sister Walker.

The motto of our society, said Sister Walker, "Our aim mankind to bless," might with propriety be the motto of every individual or every society whose object is for the advancement of that which is just, pure, and true in life; therefore, it will be more fully explanatory of the character of our work when I say that we seek the blessing to come upon mankind, through laboring for the obtaining of truer parenthood, better children, happier homes, and purer society.

Our work—the work which as a society we are striving to do, is preëminently a home work. We desire to build up the sacred altars of home, to study by all possible means and in every legitimate way to render home so attractive that our children will have no desire to wander into by and forbidden paths, but will ever find their truest pleasure in the home.

First I will notice truer parenthood.

In order that we fulfil the duties attaching to any relation in life, it is absolutely necessary that we not only have a knowledge of what those duties are, but that we have a firm determination to meet them, to put aside every hindering cause, and determine that in God's strength we will conquer.

All the works of God we find are governed by law. When God had completed all his inanimate creation, as well as the creation of all living creatures, as his last and crowning work upon our earth, he created man in his own image and likeness, male and female created he them, and gave them—the man and the woman—dominion over all his other creations. But strangest, most marvelous of all, he took man into a partnership with himself in his creative work, and commanded him to people the earth. In view of this, how can we help regarding this matter in the light in which the poet has placed it:—

> "A partnership with God is parenthood,
> What strength, what purity, what self-control,
> What love, what wisdom should belong to those > Who help God fashion an immortal soul?"

This sacred relationship God has placed under law, and whether we know the nature of the laws of our being, or whether we are ignorant of them, if they are violated, we must suffer loss. Does it not then behoove us as Saints—as intelligent beings—to seek to understand the laws of our physical being and conform our lives thereto? In Doctrine and Covenants, section 85, paragraph 8, the Lord tells us: "That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same;" and in paragraphs 9 and 10: "And unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions." "All beings who abide not in those conditions, are not justified; for intelligence cleaveth to intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom," etc.

Do you mothers, do you fathers, understand the laws governing the holy relation of parenthood?

In Doctrine and Covenants, section 90, paragraph 5, we are told: "Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created. . . . Man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man cannot receive a fullness of joy. The elements are the tabernacle of God; yea man is the tabernacle of God, even temples; and whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple."

Now while we may never fully understand the mysterious relationship between the eternal spirit and its earthly tabernacle, God has revealed to us the plain fact that their destiny is inseparably connected. Without the body the spirit can never inherit a fullness of glory. In view of such truths, is it not wise upon the part of parents to learn and be governed by the laws of their physical being, that they do not bring children into the world, who, from the beginning of their existence here, are handicapped in the race of life—weighted down with inherited propensities leading them on to the defiling of the earthly tabernacle which God has declared he will destroy.

The day has long passed when to speak of these things need bring the flush of shame to any cheek, rather let it rest upon the brow of the willfully ignorant, for be it remembered that ignorance is not innocence.

Better children: Will not better homes, more intelligent parenthood be productive of better children? In such homes love will be the corner stone, and will permeate every thought and act; and it must certainly follow—they will be happier homes. And when home is purified, is not society to that extent purified also? From all such homes will be forever banished that darkest libel upon the page of history—the double standard of purity. The mother and the father of homes like these will teach their sons that God demands of them the same purity of life which he demands of their sisters; and will also teach them to show the same respect to the sisters of other boys that they demand shall be shown to their own; and maidens will ask from their lovers that they offer them the same purity they exact from their sweethearts.

Our work, that society may be purer, will lead us to follow more closely in the footsteps of the Master, who came "not to call the righteous to repentance, but to seek and to save the lost." It is not in the spirit of the gospel—it cannot be in the heart of any true Christian—to draw aside his robe from contact with anyone. There is no man, no woman, fallen so low, none have so entirely debased themselves as to altogether extinguished the divine spark within them. This being true, who may know or who can say that some fitly spoken word of yours or mine may not kindle that spark into a flame which shall burn away the dross and lead them to repentance and Christ?

I have endeavored very briefly to outline to you the main features of the work we are trying to do, and now I would ask, Are you in sympathy with it? We need your sympathy—your aid—in order that we may be enabled to accomplish that which we desire to do. Can you give it? Shall we have it?

Responses were immediately made by the following: Sister McIntosh, of Denison, Iowa. To me this looks like something good, and everything good comes from God. This outlines a great field of work for the sisters, and much to be done by plucking truth from error. It is certainly, as presented, one of the grandest things I ever heard of. It is surely gospel work—a part of the gospel economy. I want to be one of you, to labor with you. I do not want to see one soul lost, and I pray that you may have abundant success. . . .

Mrs. S. E. Dow, a lady of Dow City, though not of our faith said: "I, too, think this is a blessed work. The principles I have here heard enunciated have been dear to my heart for years. I can certainly bid you God speed. Sisters, you can count on me as one of you."

* * *

A strange sister, whose name I failed to get, said: "It is a good, and I believe a God-given work. It is a work which belongs to the church. If we are Christians we will help every one so far as we are able. It is a duty binding upon each one of us."

* * *

And yet another added: "I believe it is a duty we owe to everyone, to lend a helping hand. We can do much in our homes and in our surroundings. I have not done much in the church on account of a large family. I know the comforts that are in the home with my little family. I want to be one with you."

* * *

Bro. Joseph, thinking to aid the sisters by knowing just how many were in sympathy with the work, requested that he be empowered to make the testimonies shorter. He called for a rising vote of those who approved of this movement of the sisters. The host was numerous, but they were not counted.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. William Kennicutt writes: "Will you pray that God will bless our daughter; she is very low with typhoid fever."

F. M. Slover writes: "Please request the prayers of the church through the Herald for Sr. Nancy J. Lake of Bellair, Illinois, who is very sorely afflicted, and has become deranged in mind."

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

For those who have charge of local meetings of Daughters of Zion and may desire aid regarding questions on the supplementary, published in program for November, we submit the following: 1. Is the habit of destroying property likely to be formed in infancy or early childhood? 2. If so, how? 3 Would such a habit tend to make them lawless? 4. Does parents' carelessness of their children's toys tend to make the children careless of the property of others? 5. How may such a habit be prevented? ADVISORY BOARD.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE General Association will issue a Christmas program for the forthcoming Christmas. It will be in the hands of the printer ere this reaches you. It will be adapted to the use of the smallest school or the largest one. Every school should hold a Christmas entertainment, and that entertainment should be of the proper sort. It should be both entertaining and instructive, and entirely appropriate to the sanctity of the occasion. It should be of such a nature that all who hear will depart from the place feeling a deeper respect, if not a deeper love, for the "meek and lowly one" whose birth we are celebrating. Every heart should be full of joy and holy happiness. It is a time to be happy, but not a time to be hilarious. Our entertainment need not be sorrowful, but it should be worshipful and reverential.

Often many mistakes are made along this line, and as a result the name of Christ is held in low esteem. Many of the workers of our schools have not the time to prepare an appropriate entertainment even if they had the material at hand. These facts have led to the preparation and issuing of an entertainment which we feel will aid greatly in making the Christmastide what it should be, a time of pleasure to both old and young, a time of tender recollections and devotions, a time to which we will ever look with joy and satisfaction for what we have seen and for what we have felt.

We say "every school should hold a Christmas entertainment," and they should. If you have but a half dozen in your school, you can make a creditable showing, and can please God with your efforts. Large numbers are not essential to a good entertainment. Your children need the encouragement and enjoyment to be derived therefrom as much in the small school as in the larger ones. Children and more elderly people, too, often feel a grave disappointment at not having the Christmas entertainment in their school when neighboring schools are happy therewith. This disappointment carries with it an influence that is not easily overcome. Contrast this condition with the one in which the scholars of the Sunday school are made happy and their hearts filled with new love and enthusiasm for the school and the work thereof, and you may be able to see some of the benefits thereof. Give your children a spiritual treat on Christmas eve. They will gladly help you. They will never forget their pleasant hours in the school that makes Christmas a time of joy for them.

The programs will be ready for mailing in October. Prices will be announced as soon as it is possible to make some estimate of the cost. We want to put them within the reach of every school in the association. And we do hope that every school in the association will make an effort to use them for the good it will do the school. Remember, that if you do not furnish instruction and entertainment for your children, the world will. Which do you prefer? "Think on these things."

THE TRUE OBJECTS OF SUNDAY SCHOOL AND RELIGIO DEPARTMENTS OF CHURCH WORK.

BY J. A. GUNSOLLEY. READ AT DOW CITY REUNION.

It is not known to the writer whether or not the committee in assigning this subject, when they said "true" objects, thought of there being false objects or false conception of the objects sought to be attained by these departments. However this may be, it is necessary to discuss it from this point of view. And in arriving at an understanding of what the "true objects" are, it may be permissible to say something of what they are not. Of course all have come now to recognize in these organizations auxiliaries—helps—to the church work; but for us to simply call them "helps" would be only to beg the question. Wherein are they helps, and how, I understand to be the question under discussion.

For argument's sake, the position is assumed at the outstart that all progressive Latter Day Saints believe that a "hastening time" is come, or is coming, when Zion is to be redeemed. Have we ever considered the forces at work for Zion's redemption? Let us look at some of the many agencies working to this end. Before we enter upon the discussion let us keep in mind that while there is a "land of Zion" to be redeemed, there is also a spiritual Zion to be redeemed, and in this latter sense, Zion is the pure in heart.

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness." Jesus said this work must be accomplished before the end of the world, or the end of the wicked, when he will come to reign with his people. Does anyone think Zion can be fully redeemed before this blessed event takes place? To carry out the command to "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," the church is prosecuting the missionary work.

Coördinate in importance with the missionary work is the work of building and developing the superstructure of character upon the foundation laid by the ministry in preaching to the world and to the Saints in branches. The underlying principle of this position occupied by the writer is this: that the "pure in heart" are only those who have become godlike in character. Godly character is the result of practicing principles of godliness, found only in the law of the gospel. To be practiced this law must first be known. To be known it must be studied. To be studied with best and speediest results there must be system and coöperation.

While it is not denied that through preaching alone some might be brought to a knowledge of the law sufficiently to practice it to the developing of a godly character, yet that this is likely to be the case in the vast majority of cases we are not willing to admit. The injunctions, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life," and "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful," contain the essence of the whole process of growth and development unto a perfect man unto the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

These auxiliaries encourage this individual study of the truth contained in the books, as well as impress the truths and bring them home to the heart of each individual. The Sunday school and Religio give emphasis to the home training, aiding parents to perform the duties enjoined upon them in the law, to teach their children the principles of the doctrine of Christ. They also supplement the home training by class association.

These auxiliaries are bringing about a more general study and reading of God's word, not only by providing places and times of study where many can meet together, but they are actually going to carry the books to the homes of those who for any reason do not or cannot meet for this purpose. Our Home Departments will do this. A more general reading of God's word will result in a more general practice of its precepts, which in turn will bring about higher conditions of spirituality. And will not this bring about in turn, or hastening its coming, the redemption of Zion?

"First, let mine army become very great," said the Lord. Great in numbers only? Nay, more. "Terrible as an army with banners." Why terrible? Because the nations will say, Let us not go up to fight against Zion, for truly the Lord is there.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK AT DOW CITY REUNION.

(Concluded.)

On Friday, General Superintendent T. A. A. Hougas arrived, who took charge of session of Sunday school at 4:15 when two hundred and sixty-seven were present.

Saturday, at 4:15 p. m. the business session left the work of next reunion in the charge of officers of the General Association, and arranged to pay all expenses incurred.

At the closing session on Sunday morning at 7:30, two hundred and eight reported present, and although quite cool, yet a very interesting session was enjoyed, all the teachers except two present.

At no previous reunion has there been shown as deep an interest in the Sunday school sessions by the young brethren and sisters.

Three afternoon sessions were voted to the use of the departments of church work at next reunion, with but one dissenting vote, which should be an assurance that all were satisfied that the time previously occupied was not in vain, and that those who should prepare the work for next reunion, would have the support of all present. An effort was made to form a ministers' class, but failed for reasons that we trust need not happen again, but that it may be arranged for at next reunion, as it should be such a satisfaction to the minister, and such an encouragement to all others who look to the minister as an example in every righteous effort.

J. F. MINTUN.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, Oct. 15, 1900.

Bro. J. F. Mintun, of Magnolia, Iowa, has kindly consented to furnish us from week to week brief outlines for review of the Sunday school lessons. It is not expected that you use them exactly as they are, but they will suggest to you some plan by which you may make your review more attractive and interesting. Study them and the lesson and use them.

CAUTION.

Make your work plain and brief. Let your blackboard work be impressive. Do not be too profuse either in word or in illustration. Keep your work strictly on the subject.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, Oct. 13.

Fellow Workers in the Sunday School:—That I may possibly be some little help to you, I essay the task of occupying a brief space to present a suggestive review for lessons of this quarter, hoping that one more able may continue the work.

J. F. MINTUN.

I would advise as a rule the use of capital letters of different shapes and sizes, and colored crayons for chart or blackboard work. Your work is more attractive and impressive.

2. OBEY }
3. RECEIVE SPIRIT.
4. ENJOY EVERLASTING LIFE.

For October 28 the lesson is on "Faith"—True or Perfect Faith—which "Leads To:" "1. Believe" on "God's word" as it is preached to us by one who can testify of its truth and value, and this "Leads to:" "2. Obey" the word we have believed; and obedience "Leads to:" "3. Receive Spirit" for by it the word was given, and by following this Spirit we are led to: 4. Enjoy Everlasting Life.

Stobaugh, and S. Tripp. District treasurer being absent from home, the family requested there should be another appointed to fill the unexpired term; the wife and daughter were appointed. The conference granted the Sunday school workers their hour (more or less) as the district authorities (Sunday school and church) would decide as wisdom. A resolution was passed regarding branch president and individual reports. Some branch presidents have overlooked rules that have been heretofore passed, either by resolution or otherwise, that branch and individual reports should be kept separate. Therefore, be it resolved hereafter that all should conform to this rule and act accordingly. A soliciting committee was appointed to solicit means to purchase a new district tent. W. T. Lambert, Maggie E. Craig, John Lambert, Ida Manifold, Nellie Sargent, Alice Jacobs, Mary J. Willey, James Richardson, Don C. Salisbury, and J. W. Stobaugh. Preaching on Sunday was edifying and instructive, by James McKiernan and J. S. Snively. Adjourned to meet with Rock Creek branch, February 4, 1901.

Branches reporting: Rich Hill, Taberville, Walker, Nevada, El Dorado Springs, Veve, Wheatland, Lowry City; no reports from Deepwater, Tebo, and Lebanon branches. On account of discrepancies existing between branch reports and district records, it was ordered that each branch clerk bring or send his record books to the district clerk at next conference for comparison. The district treasurer reported $1.05 received as per capita tax. Resolution from the Wheatland branch requesting the next reunion to be held there was referred to the reunion location committee. The treasurer was authorized to defray the expenses of the missionary in charge. The time and place for next conference was set for the last Saturday before the full moon in February, at Coal Hill chapel. Much encouragement was received by the counsel of Bro. I. N. White. The preaching and prayer services were spiritual, enjoining sacrifice and more righteous living on the part of Saints, with promises of greater blessings to be poured out All felt repaid for time spent in attending.

Sunday School Associations.

NODAWAY.

Sunday school association convened with Sweet Home school, October 6. Preceding evening was devoted to an entertainment; songs, recitations, etc. T. A. Ivie in the chair, Sr. R. K. Ross secretary pro tem. Schools reporting: Sweet Home, Platte, and Ross Grove. Program committee reported. By motion the report was accepted and committee discharged. Sunday School Echoes was read by Annie Ivie. Talk by E. S. Fannon on the "three books" and "international lessons."

LONDON DISTRICT SABBATH SCHOOL.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—It gives me pleasure in writing to you as your servant. It is impossible for me to visit all schools, and I write informing you that I will appoint local laborers, that we may labor together harmoniously for the best interests of the work. Each one has talents, and let all do that which comes to hand each day, aspiring for the approval of God. If we perform well the duties of the present, God will be able to estimate our value, and our usefulness will appear.

In selecting officers, choose those who live their religion, for upon them largely depend the success of the school; upon them rests the responsibility of selecting the teachers. I believe it to be a good plan to try a teacher for a while, and if they are not a success, you can more easily approach them, and have another put in their place. Be sure and open the school on time, and close it on time. Teachers should study all the quarterlies and be in their place on time. Encourage the class to do the questioning. If the teacher answers the questions himself without giving the class the chance, they will lose interest. Teachers, try and have your class do the talking. I have listened to Bible class teachers, and in my opinion they were complete failures: they would ask the question, and just as soon as some one would try to answer it, the teacher would interrupt the scholar, and go right on and do three fourths of the talking.

Parents must assist the teacher in helping the children to study the lessons at home. It cannot be expected that one hour in the week in a Sabbath school is sufficient to train children for life's struggle. A good plan for parents to assist children is, to go over parts of the lesson each morning and evening during the week. Parents should go with them to school, unless other religious duties hinder. Jesus says, "He that is faithful over a few things, I will make him ruler over many things." And while we may not be aspiring after office, that is no reason why we should not be interested in seeing the school advance; we should be faithful in the discharge of each day's duty, and then if God raises us to positions of honor, we will still have that untiring stability that will cause us to rise to fields of usefulness and power.

In localities where there are no schools organized, I would suggest that all families take the quarterlies, and go over the lessons to the children, and by this we are in line with the school in general. I invite communication with all schools in the district, and hope to fill my mission to the honor and glory of God and the salvation of some.

NOTICES.

Notice of Committee of Improvements of the Sunday School Association, and to all interested in the upbuilding of God's kingdom on earth:—

The time is nearing when we must formulate our report and publish it, and feeling a

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of the Pacific Slope Mission, Greeting:—I hereby give notice that Bro. H. L. Holt will perform missionary work in the branches of the Northern and Central districts, in harmony with the local authority. Also, Bro. D. L. Allen will be associated with Bro. J. Davies in Washington the remainder of the conference year. The rest of the ministry will continue to labor in their present fields.

Two of our children are sick with scarlet fever, and have been quarantined for five weeks, and will be for some time to come. One of them is improving nicely, but the baby girl is not past the dangerous point.

All matters requiring my attention must be referred to those in charge of the respective fields, as I am not allowed to write while under quarantine. I should be glad to hear from you, but will not be able to reply, so be patient in expecting an answer. Desiring an interest in the prayers of all,

Yours in gospel bonds,

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

The following resolutions of condolence were adopted by Zion's Religio-Literary Society at Lamoni, Iowa, October 12, 1900.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father to take from our midst our beloved sister, Dorcas Harder;

Therefore, be it resolved that we as a society of Religians express our sympathy for her immediate family, and friends; and

Be it further resolved that although we feel the loss which we have sustained in the removal of one who had for all a kind word and bright smile, yet we desire to be submissive to God's will; and be it further

Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the church publications, and that they also be spread upon the minutes of the meeting.

Respectfully submitted,
Committee, SARAH C. BASS.

SUSIE L. MADER.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

Some level-headed philosopher once said or wrote: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and the path that leads to success in every enterprise, is the keep at it policy; so, in behalf of Graceland College we would urge upon the Saints that unless you wish to see the sunset of the nineteenth century bedimmed with defeat, and the church put to an open shame, the faithful work of the pioneers in this church institution "of learning" crumble into decay and prove abortive to the original intention, now is the time to come to the rescue. Do not wait till you are able to accomplish some great thing, but send along your mite; for, please remember, it is the grains of sand that make this mighty earth, and drops of water that make the ocean.

Graceland is not the rich man's college, and it would be folly gone mad, to expect an endowment of a million, but it is neither impossible nor extravagant to hope for a donation of a thousand dollars, and perhaps several such, and from that on down to the ten cent piece, or the nickel.

Delay not, but send your offering to the undersigned, or to Daniel Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa.

Our predecessors did what they could with the means furnished to carry out the instruction of the several General Conferences authorizing the erection and running of the college, and the present Board of Trustees neither wish to make a failure nor increase the debt.

As we have not sold a sufficient number of scholarships to meet the running expense, we do not hesitate to ask for donations that we may be able to accomplish our work with credit, and to the disappointment of the "kickers" and the hidden and open enemies of Graceland College.

Come to our immediate help, and I pledge you that the oncoming generation will rise up and call you blessed.

For success,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 17.

BOUNDARY LINES OF DISTRICTS, ETC.

It is necessary to have on record a description or statement of the boundary lines of every district, for the use of the Presidency and other departments. District presidents and secretaries are therefore requested to forward statements of the boundaries of their respective districts. They are requested to also give lists of names of branches in their districts.

If boundaries have not been specifically defined, or not specified at all, kindly so report, and as soon as possible. If your district contemplates action on boundary lines, please report its present status, also its further action when taken. It is necessary to make the record complete. District officials are requested to give this request their early attention. Please do not omit lists of branches.

The foregoing request, made in June, 1900, has been responded to by but eighteen out of a total of sixty-nine districts. Responses from all are earnestly desired.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

The following is a list of names of absent members of Kingston branch: Barsha E. Casto, Mary E. Motter, Sarah E. Owens, Sarah Hall, Zelpha M. Rains, Luella W. Hilt, Sarah A. Bond, Thomas King, Madge S. Bender, William L. Frost, Rabecca Ryerson, Samuel Ballinger, Mary J. Patchin, Isabelle Crouse, Elsie M. Branson, Phebe M. Colvin, Joseph H. Phillips, Anna Smith, Henry Colvin, Myrtle Smith, Effie P. Colvin, Amy T. Smith, Ellsworth G. Carpenter, Laura Fuller, Joseph J. D. Craven.

The undersigned would be glad to hear from any or all of the above named persons. The whereabouts of most of them are not known by the officers of Kingston branch, who would like to hear from them in regard to their spiritual welfare. Come, Saints, please, wake up, and give an account of yourselves.

Signed, C. J. Craven, teacher and clerk of Kingston branch, Kingston, Missouri.

BORN.

HAWLEY.—At Sheridan, Missouri, October, 28, 1898, to Bro. Frank and Sr. Clara Hawley, a daughter, named Hazel June. Blessed October 7, 1900, by J. Arthur Davis and D. C. White. Another daughter, named Helen Blanch. Blessed by D. C. White and J. Arthur Davis.

GATES.—To Bro. and Sr. Gates of Sheridan, Missouri, a son, November 30, 1898, named Arthur Vern. Blessed October 7, 1900, by J. A. Davis and D. C. White.

MOORMAN.—William Oral, son of Bro. E. L. and Sr. Eva Moorman, was born October 7, 1899, at Osceola, Iowa; blessed at Lamoni, Iowa, October 12, 1900, by Elder H. N. Snively.

PRICE.—To Mr. Joshua and Sr. Sarah A. Price, at Bevier, Missouri, June 28, 1900, a son, named Frank. Blessed September 19, by Elders F. T. Mussell and J. T. Williams.

YOUNG.—To Bro. Romalia L. and Sr. Mary E. Young, a daughter, near Defiance, Iowa, May 1, 1900, and named Bessie Parmelia. Blessed at the reunion, Dow City, Iowa, October 6, under the hands of Elders David Brewster, C. J. Hunt, Romanan Wight, and J. M. Stubbart.

MCCORD.—To Bro. William and Sr. Isabell McCord, a daughter, near Defiance, Iowa, July 18, 1900, and named Wilma Mabel. Blessed at the reunion, Dow City, Iowa, October 6, under the hands of Elders R. M. Elvin, C. J. Hunt, and Romanan Wight.

DIED.

CARTER.—Nellie, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Dominicus Carter, died at her home in Provo, Utah, October 5, 1900, her birthday, 12 years of age. Nellie was a good girl and a faithful Sunday school scholar. Her day school teacher and class came to the church to assist in the singing, and six of the little boys acted as pallbearers. A large congregation attended her funeral. Sermon by Elder Peter Anderson. May God sustain and comfort her parents in their trial.

MANTLE.—At his home in Osage county, Missouri, October 14, 1900, Elder John Mantle, of Whearso branch, aged 70 years, 5 months, and 21 days. He bore his sufferings patiently, and was reconciled to the will of God; he had no fear of death. He always bore a faithful testimony to the work. He leaves a wife and eleven children to mourn. Born in Staffordshire, England, April 22, 1830; came to this country with his parents, and was baptized August 8, 1865; was presiding elder of the branch from his ordination to his death. He was always found at the post of duty when health would permit. Two brothers and one sister survive him. Funeral was largely attended, many coming from a distance; sermon by Elder James F. Wilson.

CALKINS.—At her home, Hamburg, Iowa, October 7, 1900, Sr. Nancy J. Calkins. She was born in Worth county, Missouri, September 2. 1850; came to Iowa in 1859; married to Bro. Myron Calkins, January 28, 1868; to them were born four sons and four daughters; three sons and one daughter, with her husband, are left to mourn. Our beloved sister united with the church some twenty-five years ago, and has ever sought to honor her profession faithfully until death. She loved the work, always bore a firm testimony to the truth, was generous-hearted, a loving and dutiful wife, kind and an affectionate mother, loved by all who knew her. Funeral service conducted and sermon by Elder Henry Kemp, in the Saints' church at Hamburg. Her remains were laid to rest, with other relatives, in a cemetery four miles east of Hamburg.

GREEN.—Son of Bro. O. E. Green, of Onslow, Iowa; born July 28, 1900; died October 5, 1900, and laid to rest beside his mother in Frozen Hill cemetery. Funeral sermon by Elder John Heide.

ROBERTS.—At Tabor, Iowa, October 1, 1900, the sweet little babe of Bro. Charles and Sr. Lucy Roberts. This little bud of promise was named Gracie, and but two weeks old. Funeral service at the house, and sermon by Elder Henry Kemp. Her remains laid away to rest in Gaylord cemetery. May the Lord of all give grace and patience, with the blessed assurance that all will be well, to the faithful, weeping father and mother, is the prayer of all that know them.

UNCOVER BONES OF A PREHISTORIC RACE.

HUGE MOUND IN WISCONSIN FILLED WITH SKELETONS OF MOUND BUILDERS.

One of the best preserved monuments left by the once powerful race of mound builders has been discovered on the shores of Clam Lake, Burnett county, Wisconsin. It is a huge mound, built of clay and black loam, and is literally filled with skeletons and relics, which show evidence of having been buried hundreds of years.

Dr. L. M. Robey, of River Falls, Wisconsin, discovered the wonderful contents of this mound some time ago, but the first work that disclosed the magnitude of the affair was done by R. W. Strong, of Belmond, Iowa, assisted by Herbert Ahlstrom, Harry Sadler, A. L. Evans, Charles Fisher, and A. W. Anderson, all newspaper men, who went to the scene and spent a day excavating, in which time the bones of at least twenty skeletons were unearthed. In any part of the mound human bones were found at a depth of three to five feet from the surface, although they were not as well preserved as those found at a greater depth. All of the skeletons were found with their heads lying to the west.

This mound is two hundred thirty feet in diameter at the base and sixty feet high and is cone-shaped. At the top it is only twenty or thirty feet in diameter. Possibly it was higher than this at an earlier date, but has been washed away. Its steep sides are covered with scattered oaks, poplars, and hazel brush.

The mound is situated on a level plat of ground, and for miles around the scenery is wildly picturesque.

Hundreds of mounds have been discovered in Wisconsin, but none better preserved than this. This state is supposed to have been the original starting point of mound building, and work was supposed to have been carried on in proportions of great magnitude until the Indians overpowered the weaker race, driving them south and west to Mexico, where their descendants were finally conquered by Cortez.

Nearly all of these earthworks are situated on level benches of streams, upon ridge tops, near the shores of lakes, and upon the summits of commanding bluffs. Many of them are grotesque in shape, being outlines of birds, beasts, fishes, and reptiles, the predominating forms being apparently those of turtles, lizards, snakes, birds, squirrels, and deer.

Different theories are advanced by historians regarding the uses for which these mounds were erected. Some believe that they were built solely for the purpose of worship, others for defense, others as symbols of mystic rites in which human sacrifice and sun worship played prominent parts, and others as sites for dwellings and for burying grounds. From the evidence at hand it is probable that each of these theories is correct, and that different mounds were used for different purposes.

There is no doubt that this mound was built as a burying ground. From the data secured it is evident that at the beginning of this huge project, when one of this prehistoric race died, he was laid to rest on the bare ground and his body covered by two or three feet of clay and black loam, which was taken from the lakeshore just east of the mound proper. Tier after tier was laid to rest in this manner, until more than an acre was covered, and then another tier was begun in the trenches between the other graves.

In this way countless thousands of men, women, and children were laid to rest as fast as they died, until a veritable mountain of corpses, sand, and clay was made by human hands.

The skeletons apparently have been disturbed but little by animals, and it seems queer that they have not turned to dust. The average height of the largest skeleton is five feet, and the bones are well proportioned. The skulls have high frontal bones, evidencing intelligence, while the arms, spines, hips, and legs are large and strong. All of the bones are of a dark brown color and brittle. Some of them dug up from a point fifteeen feet below the surface appeared to be burned. All of the skeletons found were well preserved, except the skulls, many of which had fallen to pieces, although the skull bones were in a good state of preservation. Several of the jaw bones contained perfect sets of teeth.

There are several other large mounds in Burnett county, located along the principal streams near the larger lakes, but none that eclipse in magnitude and peculiarity this one located on the shores of Clam Lake.—Chicago Tribune, September 23, 1900.

NEW NATIONAL PARK IN IDAHO.

Another national park has been created in Idaho by the Interior department, awaiting only the ratification of Congress to put it on the same basis as the Yellowstone and the Yosemite National Parks. This new reserve takes in Shoshone Falls and Blue Lakes on the Snake River in southern Idaho, and includes some of the most beautiful scenery in the world.

The new national park is twenty-five miles from a railroad, and consequently its beauties are not as familiar as those of many other spots on the direct line of tourist travel. A trip by stage or horseback from Shoshone station, on the Oregon Short Line, through a wild country, is necessary to reach this region of natural wonders.

The falls themselves are rivaled only by those of Niagara. While, of course, nothing in the world can compare in volume with the vast cataract of the great lakes channel, Niagara lacks the wild and weird setting that Shoshone possesses.

Half a mile above the falls the river is 1,200 feet broad, and flows in a cañon 800 feet deep. The water itself is many fathoms deep. Toward the falls the channel narrows. The river, 900 feet wide, sweeps swiftly through a narrow gorge with precipitous lava sides 1,200 feet high.

It reaches a 221-foot precipice and plunges over with a roar which is re-echoed by nature's walls on both sides.—Chicago Tribune.

TO THE PUBLIC.

My age is fourteen months or so;
I've taught myself to walk,
But I am now concerned to know
How I shall learn to talk;
In fact, how any babe who lives
Both day and night among His idiotic relatives
Can learn the English tongue.

And therefore I would make it clear
(Nor deem the act amiss)—
What chance have we when all we hear
Is language such as this:
"'Ze pecious sing!" "Ol' wootsy woots!"
"His muzzer's tunnin' pet!"
"'Ze itty, pitty, witty toots!"
"Now what does danma det?"

They tell me that a drink's a "dink;"
My fingers "fingies" are;
That think is "sink," or also "fink;"
And that a car's a "tar."
With "tumpty tump" and "bow wow wow,"
And "diddly, diddly, dee,"
And other phrases that, I vow,
Are useless, quite, to me.

So when from mother, aunt and all
I've gained a moment's grace,
With none to clutch me lest I fall,
Or stare me in the face,
I've printed out this statement rude
(The letters learned with pain
From cans of patent baby food),
And hope 'tis not in vain.

—Edwin L. Sabin in the November Woman's Home Companion.

WHY THEY ARE IN COLLEGE.

Recently I asked many boys and girls, members of the incoming classes, the rather serious question of what they are in college for. The answers were made in writing in five minutes. Their brief and categorical replies reveal the fundamental purposes which are controlling not only the few Freshmen immediately concerned, but also the thousands of other boys and girls now beginning their college careers.

Be it therefore said at once, affirmatively and positively, that these papers do strike certain fundamental notes of humanity. If the religious note is not struck, the ethical note is clear and distinct. Let me cite from some of the replies. These students give as their reasons for being in college these considerations:—

"'That I may prepare myself to perform duties imposed with good judgment and in an efficient way;' 'that by study and preparation I may best do my duty to my Master and fulfill the obligations of citizenship;' 'to obtain something like completeness of life;" 'that I may develop character;' 'that I may leave the institution more competent for the duties of life and more capable of resisting the temptations of life;' and 'to develop such a character as God can bless.'"

It is also to be said that this ethical note is more constant and more emphatic in the papers of the men than of the women. Perhaps the reason is that with women the ethical note is so fundamental that it needs no expression. It is assumed in all their discussion.

A second characteristic of these papers, which is more characteristic of the papers of the women than of those of the men, is the purpose of securing an education. This purpose may be called by the one word of "culture," or by the Latin word humanitas or the Greek word paideia. It may be interpreted by such phrases as "breadth," "knowledge," or "learning;" but, under many forms of expression, both women and men declare that it is their purpose to gain a liberal education. This purpose is expressed in these ways:—

"'To obtain a broader education;' 'for the purpose of a higher education;' 'in order to understand the origin and growth of the race and of man;' 'because of a desire to reap the benefits of a higher education;' 'that I may obtain what is considered a good education in all things except what is practical;' 'because here are offered the greatest opportunities for that broader and higher development which it should be the wish of all to obtain;' and 'that I may have a broader education than I could have in the high school. When we are old enough to think for ourselves we are responsible for making the most of ourselves. College life is considered to be broadening.'"

The men are on the whole more definite than the women in the expression of their purposes. I will not say that they are more practical, but I will say that they are more precise. Here are some of the replies from the men which are of general significance:—

"'To improve the mind and body; to see and learn more of the world; to meet with men of brain and genius; and to learn more of social life;' 'for the purpose of broadening my knowledge, to prepare myself for taking up a profession, to make myself at ease when speaking before others, to cultivate a taste for reading;' 'the aim of the state is to stimulate us toward good citizenship, and above all I want to become and to be a good citizen, and as good as education can give;' 'for the purpose of getting a solid foundation for my after-work;' and 'to learn to think, to become cultured and to increase my knowledge is my desire.'"—Chas. F. Thwing, in The Chautauquan for November.

CHAUCER.

It is not the purpose of the present paper to dwell long upon the obvious and familiar excellencies of Chaucer's poetry, in diction, versification, and character drawing. His English is fresh and bright from the mint of popular speech, untarnished by the dust of schools, and with its imaginative, picturesque quality still unworn by common use; yet to change the figure, it has something of the sonorous resonance, the mellow, canorous flow which can only come to a language which has passed the first stages of its development His versification, built up as it is upon the old English stavic system native to our speech, with the assimilation of French line movements, Italian stanzaic harmonies, and mediæval Latin rhymes, has the ease, variety, and melody of the most impeccable poetic art. The content of his work has charms equally engaging. The vernal freshness of his page, the sunlit, morning air of it; the sly, kindly humor, capable of the broadest or of the most delicate effects, apparent to the most casual reader, yet so subtle and exquisite that new turns of delight continually open before you as you read and reread; the incomparable gift of readable narrative; the rare power of grasping the essentials of character and of vivifying them in verse—all these attractions are well known to his readers. These are the traits which have given Chaucer his increasing fame through half a thousand years. It is largely because of these traits that many Chaucerians have almost a personal sympathy in Dunbar's lament:—

"He [death] hes done peteouslie devour
The noble Chaucer of makaris flour
The Monk of Bery, and Gower, all three Timor mortis conturbat me."

—Ferris Greenslet in the November Forum.

Perhaps the most timely article in McClure's Magazine for November, is "A Woman's Diary of the Siege of Pekin, by Mrs. E. K. Lowry, one of the besieged missionaries in the legations last summer. This vivid narrative by an eye witness of most of the events described is sure to command attention at a time when the eyes of all the world are turned to the Far East. It is in a true sense history from original documents.

WHEN THE CHILD "PLAYS HOOKEY."

Children sometimes pretend to be ill to escape going to school. Feigning illness to escape duty is called in the army malingering and is always punished when detected. A child who habitually complains of headache just before school time should be put on a sofa in a darkened room, not permitted to read, nor look at pictures, and have a hot-water bag placed at his feet. If the ailment is real this is the best treatment for the early stages; if it is feigned the silence and solitude soon become so irksome that the culprit is glad to do anything to escape from them. Other affected pains should be treated as if they were real, and it should be distinctly understood in the family that the child who is too ill to go to school, and to learn his lessons, is too ill to be out of bed. If a child play truant the lessons he loses should be made up at home in his play-time, and the mother should take pains to see that this is done, so that he may find truancy unprofitable. He may be put to bed as soon as he returns home on the assumption that he must be ill, because nothing but illness should keep him from going to school.—November Ladies' Home Journal.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly has a large subscription list; but it should be larger. Its management is more energetic, its plans better than ever before. As an added stimulus toward an increase, the Monthly offers no less than two hundred and sixty-four (264) prizes in cash to the men and women, boys and girls, who show most energy in securing new subscribers. This offer means that time and energy shall be well paid for.

The price of the Magazine is one dollar a year. Its contents appeal directly to people who care for good and timely literature. A few spare hours a week will add to your income substantially. NO WIT IN THE GREATEST SPEECHES.

In an elcquent article on Public Speaking, in the Saturday Evening Post of October 6. United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge says:—

"It is a remarkable thing that there is neither wit nor humor in any of the immortal speeches that have fallen from the lips of man. To find a joke in Webster would be an offense. The only things which Ingersoll wrote that will live are his oration at his brother's grave and his famous, The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream. But in neither of these productions of this genius of jesters is there a single trace of wit. There is not a funny sally in all Burke's speeches. Lincoln's Gettysburg address, his first and second inaugurals, his speech beginning the Douglas campaign and his Cooper Union address in New York are, perhaps, the only utterances of his that will endure. Yet this greatest of story-tellers since Æsop did not adorn or deface one of these great deliverances with story or any form of humor.

"The reason for this is found in the whole tendency of human thought and feeling—in the whole melancholy history of the race—where tears and grief, the hard seriousness of life and the terrible and speedy certainty of our common fate of suffering and of death, make somber the master-cord of existence. The immortal things are all serious—even sad."

LOVE OF GOD. LOVE OF GOD TOWARDS THE WORLD.

"HOW READEST THOU?"

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

Whatever may be said of human love, that is, love of man for himself, his fellows, father, mother, brother, sister, wife, and children, or for his God, the love which God bears to man is of a larger, better character. It is a clear, discriminating, and comprehensive love—a love that takes due cognizance of man's conditions, his capabilities and his qualifications. Under the influence of this love God makes no mistakes in his dealings with men. He knows their peculiarities of organization, their strength, their weakness. What will tempt them from duty and the straight ways of personal uprightness, honesty of purpose and integrity of spirit. What will be the bias of motive each may labor under; the action each will take in every given circumstance of life; and the environments and conditions of every one. Without these the condition of men before God would be pitiable indeed.

It is fortunate for us all that Christ Jesus, the God-man, who is the Messiah, the Redeemer of the human race, was qualified for the mission in which the love of God was to be so graciously yet so strikingly displayed toward man, through a thorough acquaintance with man made by a life spent among men in the flesh in a condition best stated in the words of holy writ, "In his humiliation his judgment was taken away."

This condition was evidently known to him, as we are informed by himself:—

And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.—John 12: 47.

With such an understanding of the peculiar fitness of Jesus to undertake and carry to a successful termination the task of saving the race of man, we can more easily appreciate the love of God, for we see its characteristic manifestation in the conduct, teaching, and life of Jesus.

One of the chief requirements imposed upon man in accepting and availing himself of the benefits of the salvation with the bringing of which to man Christ Jesus was charged bears intimate relation to the love which moved both the Father and the Son in designing and carrying out the work of redemption and salvation.

A scribe, of the scribes, engaged in a controversy with others listening to the replies which Jesus was making to those who were questioning him, perceiving that he answered well, asked this question:—

Which is the first commandment of all?

The answer to this question is the starting point whence radiate all the ways of duty, and spiritual inclination in the effort of man to be worthy of happiness, exaltation, and eternal life, in salvation:—

The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.—Jesus. (See Mark 12: 29-31. See also Luke 10: 27.)

It will be noticed that Jesus begins and closes his statement with regard to the first commandment by stating that it is the first. He gives additional value and force to his statement by the closing endorsement after the second commandment,—

There is none other commandment greater than these.

All other commandments, directions, and requirements having reference to human conduct must have these two as an underlying basis. There must be always understood and recognized a relation to these two formerly stated commands in all others which Jesus would or might give thereafter to govern in human understanding and conduct toward God and toward man.

If at any time it should occur in a man's life that he needs to know how to manifest his love to God in his conduct, a leading clue to such knowledge may be found in the following:—

If a man love me, he will keep my words.

Whosoever will do this is entitled to the fulfillment of the promise made in the words,—

And my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.—Jesus. (John 14: 23)

A correlative teaching to the "words" of Jesus quoted above is discoverable in the "sermon on the mount," known to some as the "Beatitudes":—

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.

Just what Jesus may have meant by this expression "the law and the prophets," we possibly may not discern, but we may come near to it by examining what he stated by another author of the same occasion: In replying to one who questioned him, a Pharisee, Jesus stated the "great commandment, in the law," as being this:—

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

We may give the meaning of this as being: The law and the work and testimony of the prophets are all based on these two grand, foundational principles of God's dealing with man, and the dealings of man with his fellow man.

It is clear that this has been an attendant of God's dealing with man, as is discernible from the "words" of the Lord to Moses, as given in Leviticus 19: 18:—

Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the Lord.

This was under the law. What is found in the New Testament is under the gospel.

Corroborative of this, it is well to note that in the restoration of the gospel economy this principle was distinctly and specifically reënacted, or rather reaffirmed.

In a revelation to the church, August, 1831, the Lord gave this:—

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Jesus, Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 59, par. 2.

Paul, the ablest lawyer and writer of the New Testament, was thoroughly conversant with this provision or foundation principle, for in stating the requirements of human conduct he enumerates them thus:—

For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Romans 13: 9.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

In every effort of a man to determine what his action toward his fellowman should be to be within the direction of the law of the Lord in all and every condition, under any circumstances, the love of self and the love of neighbor are to be taken into the consideration within the second commandment. The rule of procedure is:—

And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Jesus, in Luke 6: 31.

That no one need to hesitate or err in making this the rule of his life in considering and determining his relations with and course of conduct towards his fellow man ought to be apparent from the comprehensive and sweeping declaration, heretofore quoted,—

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them.—Matt. 7: 12.

The provisions of the law, the prophets and their testimony are not against this.

By reading the context, beginning with verse seven, the conditions giving warrant for the "therefore," which precedes the divine injunction, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," which by the will of Jesus is made the opening, guiding rule in directing the courses of man's conduct towards his fellows, may be seen and understood. There is no walk of life, no occupation, no vocation, no employment, whether for self or others, no station, no condition to which this injunction may not apply, or in which it will not be a safe rule to follow. It will help to modify the too radical views that men are so apt to take with regard to enemies and opponents who may forget the rule themselves and outrage the sentiments of kindness and courtesy men should feel and exercise in their every intercourse one with another and with the many. It will enable a man to maintain an honorable and high moral course in dealing with men and measures, to which and whom he may be opposed for the sake of principle. It will make a man too noble to stoop to any low or mean procedure to gain advantage or victory. It will give a man such conception of what nobility is, that any, men or women, may trust him with wealth, or virtue, goods, or character, whether the one so trusting be friend or enemy. It will serve to create a better conception of the value of manhood and womanhood. It will enhance the estimate and meaning of the terms father, mother, brother, sister, wife, and child, and will brighten, cheer, and comfort when skies are hidden and clouds are storm-driven, for it will leave no sting of wounded conscience for undischarged responsibility.

The love which prompts man to adopt and observe this principle for the government of his conduct does not exult in the glare of noon, nor fear in the gloom of midnight. To him all hours are alike in that his thoughts ever glow with purity of desire and purpose toward his fellowmen. He meets men feeling no fear, for no evil design lurks in his soul; hence, he gives to others the benefit of the thought that they are moved by the same motive as himself. He gives no credence to envy, for he has none in his mind. He is not moved by flattery, for he knows the worth of words, and tries the actions of others in the just balance of a heart willed to do all men good and knows himself too well to accept undue estimate of his own worth.

Such a principle will make members of the church of Christ to be Latter Day Saints indeed. It will put every Saint on his good behavior with regard to those within and those without. It will, almost unconsciously, make every man who works do his work well, he being satisfied with nothing less than the best he is capable of. It will cause men to keep the covenants they make according to the spirit of them, though the letter may be faulty. It will create in the mind of the business man the desire to be honest as well as to be thought honest. It will make the word of the man good as to the performance of what he promises to do; no matter whether the promiser be high or humble. It cannot fail to enrich and ennoble the man who will take it as the motto of his life.

One feature of the law of love, if there is such a law, is that we are to forgive. The prayer given as the sample after which the prayers of the disciples were to be modeled has in it this:—

Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.—Matt. 6:12

And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us.—Luke 11:4.

But Jesus was not contented with the command, but enforced it by an argument, which is quite like him, for he frequently gave reasons for his commands, and this is one of them:—

For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses.—Matt. 6: 14, 15.

That the forgiveness herein referred to is the result of the love which man should have for his fellowman, is seen in the following reasoning:—

Love your enemies, . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to shine on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? —Matt. 5: 44-46.

This commandment to forgive is among those directions given to the church in the restored gospel by revelation:—

Wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men.—D. C. 64: 2.

In this it clearly appears that the Lord reserves to himself the right to withhold within his own mind the decision to forgive, or refuse to forgive, but to men no such right is to be given, he must forgive; evidently for the reason that man cannot see and weigh the motive, nor give proper consideration to the conditions and circumstances which result in the trespass which may have been committed against him. This right is found reserved in the declaration,—

Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord.

We can then have no difficulty in concluding that one of the manifestations of the existence of love in men towards his fellow man is the exercise of forgiveness of the trespasses of men against him. This forgiveness may be of two sorts; one, the spontaneous act of the will; the other, one exacted by the law. The first cannot readily and heartily be extended to a trespasser by the one injured, unless there has been an educational process going on which has resulted in a change of thought concerning self and its importance, a voluntary repression of resentment to real or imaginary wrong, a tenderness of feeling toward the trespasser with a desire for his good—in short, a change of heart, desire, and purpose of soul. The second may be secured in verbal phrase at direction of an officer of the church, a committee or court, be put on record, which would officially bind the forgiver against any further charge or action, but would bring the forgiver under the clause,—

He that forgiveth not his brother . . . there remaineth in him the greater sin.

As a further incentive to the exercise of the kind of forgiveness named above, is the strong injunction of the Savior found in Matthew 7: 1:—

Judge not, that ye be not judged.

This as given in the Holy Scriptures (Inspired Version) is:—

Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged: but judge righteous judgment.—Matt. 7: 2.

This injunction is followed by a statement of the reason why, as in so many cases was observed by Jesus:—

For with what judgment ye shall judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.—Matt. 7: 3.

Here again the second command is of salutary force:—

As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them.

Man assumes that God is ever ready

to forgive; that his love is boundless and never failing and as long-suffering and forgiving as his power is enduring. Hence, he is ever willing to receive and pardon, and forgive; that this is the source of Christ's message, the mainspring of his labor for man. Can man be so unlike him while professing to be his disciples, his servants, his children, as to refuse to forgive.

Notice the prayer: "Forgive as we forgive;" "Forgive, for we also forgive." (Matthew and Luke.) No man can justly ask God to forgive fully, freely, unless he has already forgiven and does freely forgive.

A corroborating command touching forgiving our brother is the Savior's apparently impatient answer to the question:—

How oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?

Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven.—Matt. 18: 21, 22.

This shows that the "quality of mercy is not strained," but that it is the privilege of the devoted follower of Christ Jesus to emulate the love which God holds to man by becoming so filled with the "love that passeth understanding" that he "loves his neighbor as himself."

ANOTHER STATEMENT FROM B. B. TYLER.

In the Christian-Evangelist for September 27, 1900, page 1235, there appears a letter over the initials "B. B. T.," the caption being, "B. B. Tyler's Letter." From this letter as published we quote:—

The Book of Mormon was printed, originally, in Palmyra, New York, in 1830. The printer was E B. Grandin, and on the title-page it was claimed to have been "printed for the author." On the same page, in small capitals, are the words:

"BY JOSEPH SMITH, JUNIOR, AUTHOR AND PROPRIETOR."

I believe that the title-page of the original edition of the Book of Mormon, the portion of it here quoted, tells the truth. Joseph Smith, who was killed at Carthage, Illinois, was the author of this singular book. He may have been assisted in the work, but to him belonged the real authorship. The money made out of its publication belonged to him. He was smart enough to secure from the government of the United States a copyright of the book and thus make sure, for a number of years, of the profits resulting from its sale. The certificate of the clerk of the court issuing the copyright reads as follows:

"Be it remembered, that on the eleventh day of June, in the fifty-third year of the Independence of the United States of America, A. D., 1829, Joseph Smith, Jun., of the said District, hath deposited in this office the title of a Book, the right whereof he claims as author," etc.

This is copied from a "History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," ... "written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Herman C. Smith of the Reorganized Church."

This is therefore by authority. The book referred to is the work now called "The Book of Mormon." The first edition did not bear this title. The name of the book at first was "The Nephite Records." The claim was put forth that it was "written by the hand of Mormon upon plates taken from the plates of Nephi."

We have been surprised many times at the peculiar fact that whenever such reverend gentlemen as Rev. B. B. Tyler essay to speak or write about what they term "Mormons and Mormonism," they invariably garble, misstate, and state things as facts which are false, whether they intentionally do so or not.

Mr. Tyler juggles at the title page of the Book of Mormon, because that below the description of what the book is there is found the inscription,—

BY JOSEPH SMITH. JUNIOR.
AUTHOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Below this still is found the printer's imprint:—

PALMYRA:
PRINTED BY E B GRANDIN. FOR THE AUTHOR.
1830.

Both the inscription and the imprint are separated from the other portions of the title page by dash rules, as is the custom.

Mr. Tyler suggests that Joseph Smith was "smart enough" to get the book copyrighted. This was necessary in order to protect whatever rights Joseph Smith or the church might have in the book, whether such interests were in the literary or the material character of the work. Mr. Tyler ought to know what Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery knew, that no copyright would be issued to the Prophet Mormon, or to Jesus Christ; and that to secure such copyright Joseph Smith must do it in his own name; and in the sense of being the responsible agent through whom the book reached the public, Joseph Smith was the author and proprietor.

Mr. Tyler copied the Church History, volume 1, in order to make his criticism, but does not quote, from the same history, what Joseph Smith stated in his own writing about this same title page. It is as follows:—

I wish also to mention here, that the title page of the Book of Mormon is a literal translation, taken from the very last leaf, on the left hand side of the collection or book of plates, which contained the record which has been translated; the language of the whole running the same as all Hebrew writing in general; and that said title page is not by any means a modern composition either of mine or of any other man's who has lived or does live in this generation. Therefore, in order to correct an error which generally exists concerning it, I give below that part of the title page of the English version of the Book of Mormon, which is a genuine and literal translation of the title page of the original Book of Mormon, as recorded on the plates.

"THE BOOK OF MORMON.

"An account written by the hand of Mormon, upon plates, taken from the plates of Nephi.

"Wherefore it is an abridgement of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites; written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile; written by way of commandment, and also by the Spirit of prophecy and of revelation.

"Written, and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed; to come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof; sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by the way of Gentile; the interpretation thereof by the gift of God.

"An abridgement taken from the Book of Ether, also; which is a record of the people of Jared: who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people when they were building a tower to get to heaven: which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations. And now if there are faults, they are the mistakes of men; wherefore condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment seat of Christ."

The remainder of the title page is, of course, modern.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 928–931, 943.

Mr. Tyler wrote:—

The book referred to is the work now called "The Book of Mormon." The first edition did not bear this title. The name of the book at first was "The Nephite Records."

We have now before our eyes a copy of the first edition of this work "now called the Book of Mormon," lying open on our desk, and the title on the title page is:—

The Book of Mormon: an account written by the hand of Mormon, upon plates taken from the plates of Nephi.

Then follows on, as we have given above.

What idiosyncracy of mind could have induced Rev. B. B. Tyler to write so glaring an untruth. Did he imagine that there was none of the original edition of the book in existence known to us, or the readers of the Evangelist? Why was he not honest enough to quote what Joseph Smith himself stated about this title page?

The prophet Mormon was dead long before the book written by him was copyrighted, no copyright would have been issued to a dead man. Jesus Christ, though he lived, was dead, and "is alive forever more," could not sue or be sued, implead, or be impleaded in the courts of the United States; neither would any copyright be issued in his name by the Northern District of New York, or any other district in the United States; and for these reasons the objection of Rev. B. B. Tyler is a piece of foolish caviling, unworthy a gentleman, much less a professor of Christianity.

Mr. Tyler also writes several statements about the contention of the Reorganized Church as to the connection of Joseph Smith with the practice of polygamy; among them, this:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I have heard that R. B. Neal has a letter from the elder who copied the revelation on polygamy at the request of Joseph Smith—copied it as a matter of divine revelation. If you are interested in this matter write to R. B. Neal, Grayson, Ky. (Italics ours.)

We challenge the statement that any "elder" copied said, so-called, revelation, at the request of Joseph Smith.

Of the Church History Mr. Tyler wrote:—

The work complete costs six dollars. This is the chief objection to it.

He closes his letter thus:—

The Mormons of Lamoni are honest, industrious, temperate, frugal, prosperous. They are good citizens and good neighbors. This was the uniform testimony of non-Mormons.

While we thank our friends of Lamoni and Decatur county for the testimony borne by them to the good character of our people, we cannot refrain asking the question, What is the cause for the existence of such a community with such a character, if their religion is so faulty and of so bad an origin as B. B. Tyler would give it?

A CANADIAN BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Bro. R. C. Evans, of London, Ontario, missionary in charge of the work in the Canadas, is by lapse of years outgrowing the title of "boy preacher," though he still looks young.

He was lately asked to make a visit to British Columbia, with a view to the work there, and had decided to start from his home Monday, October 22. The Saints of London learning of this intention, gathered the clans and raided the premises at 474 Adelaide street, where Sr. Lizzie manages to keep R. C. straight when he is at home; and under the lead of Bro. William Fligg, proceeded to take possession, October 20.

The camp was taken by surprise; and, though the chief was conscious that he was aging, he did not think to celebrate his thirty-ninth birthday in quite so public a manner. But we leave it to Bro. William Fligg, the president of the London branch, and the Advertiser, the editor of which is a personal friend of Bro. R. C., to tell the story, while the latter is enroute to Vancouver and the region where Bro. Dan McGregor is at work, via Denver, Salt Lake, Ogden, and the northern road.

The address of Bro. Fligg we give, a copy having been sent us.

Dear Brother Evans:—We are glad to greet you on this, your thirty-ninth birthday, and wish you many happy returns of the day. And as a token of our remembrance towards you and the esteem which we have for you, accept this small present as a mark of kindness and appreciation on behalf of the branch, Sunday school, Religio, and "prayer league." We feel to say that God has blessed your labors in the several branches of church work. We look upon your work as a priest among us as being filled with energy and desire to do good for a newly acquainted Master; your eldership with usefulness to the church and a lighting rebuke to the elements of sin and disorder in many homes. Your work as a missionary or seventy was filled, we believe, with sacrifices and sufferings, but as your usefulness increased so did favor come to you by our God in calling you to act in the apostleship of this grand Reorganization, so that now we see your usefulness, sufferings, and sacrifices have crowned you with experience, wisdom, and confidence by the church to ask you to direct its interests in many of the branches of his people throughout our glorious Dominion. We trust your trip will increase your value in God's work and his people, and that you may ever enjoy many rich and spiritual experiences in the association of the Saints; and as a branch we wish you "God speed," and wish for you and your estimable wife and children many happy returns of the day.

Signed in behalf of the branch, Elder William Fligg, Sr. Hunt; the Sunday school, William Hardy; the Religio, Phil Philipine; Prayer League, Brother Martin.

A HAPPY EVENT.

The home of Elder R. C. Evans was the scene of a pleasant occasion last evening, when a large gathering of the members of the Latter Day Saints Church met to celebrate the anniversary of his birthday. During the evening Elder Evans was the recipient of a dressing case and an address. Wm. Fligg, president of the branch, read the address and the presentation was made by little Mamie Constable, of the Sabbath school. Elder Evans made a feeling reply, thanking the members for their kindness and for the esteem which they have shown for him. A short program of vocal and instrumental music and speeches was carried out. Many reminiscences of Elder Evans' early life and ministerial labors were related, and thus a pleasant evening was spent by all. Elder Evans leaves on Monday on an official trip to British Columbia and the Northwest. His return is expected early in 1901. Wm. Fligg acted as chairman on the pleasant occasion.—Advertiser.

Of this birthday, Bro. R. C. writes:—

This is my birthday. I am thirty-nine years old. I see and feel very little difference in the last twenty years, I think I am as strong and spry as at any time in my life. A few gray hairs over my ears, a little more thoughtful, a little more merciful toward those who I think do not do as I think they ought to, and a few other changes tell the story that I am getting older.

Bro. Evans reports an excellent spirit at the conferences of the London and Chatham districts. At the latter the grandson of Bishop George A. Blakeslee was baptized, the son of Sr. Stephen Smith, Bro. Blakeslee's youngest daughter. Bro. Evans expected to spend Sunday, October 28, in Salt Lake City.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In another column will be found something from the pen of Sr. Pauline Ruby, accompanied by a letter from Bro. Charles Derry, written in the early days of the Reorganization. It will be of interest to our readers, so we give it entire.

Bro. Thomas Wellington, of near Lamoni, north side, has been holding meetings some six miles north of Tuskeega, having good audiences and attention. We are pleased to learn that Bro. Thomas, though a local man, is keeping the armor bright.

Bro. W. E. Messenger, of Prescott, Iowa, was agreeably surprised not long since, while visiting the city of Corning, a few miles west of his own town, in listening to a conversation between three gentlemen at the hotel, one of whom was a business man of Corning, to find one of them strongly defending the character of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, from the charge of being a polygamist. He is a resident of Sac county, Iowa, and acquainted with many of our people in that region and he "spoke in the highest terms of them." Bro. Messenger made an acquaintance with him, ascertained his name and address and sent him some tracts treating on the subject of the conversation. He subsequently received a letter from his casual acquaintance thanking him and stating: "Your letter came to hand in due time and I am holding the fort." He was not a member of the church, as Bro. W. E. M. understood it.

Elder H. A. Stebbins last week closed a ministerial trip into Wisconsin, and after a stay of one day at home, went to Kansas on ministerial work.

KINDNESS.

What a great word that is. It is a favorite Bible word, no more gentle than mighty. It would be well for us to stand by it and warm ourselves by its glow, as Paul and his fellow voyagers stood around the fire on the island of Malta, where the Maltese, the barbarous people, showed no little kindness of disposition. Kindness wishes everybody well. Give this spirit sway and you would need no protection; it would dull every sword until it would not cut skin deep, and unwheel every battery until it could not roll, and make gunpowder of no more use in the world except for rock blasting or pyrotechnic celebrations.

Still further, I must speak of kindness of word. When we meet another, should we tell him of disagreeable things we have heard about him, or agreeable? Are there not those who if they know a good thing about you, would mention the bad thing, and act as though they had never heard the good thing?

Now there are two sides to almost everyone's character, and we have the choice of overhauling the virtue or vice. We can greet Paul and the ship's crew as they came up the beach of Malta, saturated with salt water, hungry, and chilled to their bones, with the words, What a sorry looking set you are! How little of navigation you must know to run on these rocks! Didn't you know better then to put out on the Mediterranean sea this winter month? It was not much of a ship anyhow, or it would not have gone to pieces as soon as that. Well, what do you want? We have hard work enough to do to make a living, without having thrust on us two hundred and seventy-six ragamuffins." Not so, said the Maltese, they treated the castaways with hospitality, welcomed them to all they had, until some ship came along and they could resume their voyage. And though for months this kindness went on, we have but little more than this brief record. "The barbarous people showed no little kindness." Oh! that the useful, helpful, Christlike thing might ever be said. We allow it is easier for some temperaments than for others; some are born pessimists and some optimists.

Oh, the power of the tongue for the production of happiness or misery! What a place this world would be to live in if charity dominated! What if all the gossips and tittle-tattlers were gone! What if in figuring out the value of other peoples' character, in our moral arithmetic, we stuck to addition instead of subtraction! Kindness: When you can speak a good word for some one, speak it. If you can conveniently give a letter of commendation, give it. Watch for opportunities for doing good, that your influence may live years after you have gone to your graves, in the practical deeds you have done, in the lives you have lived, in the powerful lessons for good you have left behind. Martin Luther's dead dust sleeps at Wittenberg, but his accents ring through the churches of Christendom.

GODLINESS.

O for a closer walk with God.

To walk, talk, and exist in the light, love, and filial fear of the Lord is but the reasonable service and pleasing duty and satisfactory safeguard of mankind. To provide for, follow after, and yield to the whims, desires, appetites, and passions of the flesh, enfeebles, enslaves, and estranges the creature from the Creator.

The unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace, on the true foundation, brings us all Nearer my God to thee, nearer to thee.

Envying, strife, and division might justly be termed wood, hay, and stubble; whereas, to "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and the same judgment" is "gold, silver, and precious stones."

For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. Let no man deceive himself.—1 Corinthians 3: 16–18.

The passions, foibles, and follies of the world, with its glittering array of wealth, beauty, and glory, is a hymn of the night wind, a transitory dream, and a fleeting vision. Thrones, pomp, and splendor are ruthlessly borne down the stream of time, like a fallen leaf or a broken bough that floats far away on a rushing, roaring river. As we grow old, the limbs enfeebled, the step slow, the sight dim, the hearing impaired, the taste, smell, and sense of feeling varying, it is good to note the beck and call of the pale reaper, and step aboard the craft of the boatswain that lifts anchor and tacks sail, or unfurls square canvas for the other shore. "In the valley of the shadow" the righteous are not imperiled, or forsaken, "for to die is gain." The soldier of the cross, that has grown old in war, and is a veteran in service, is cheered and encouraged by the stainless life, the noble example, and gallant bearing of his great Leader and commander. The voice that stilled tempestuous Galilee, that pronounced against all manner of sicknesses and diseases, that bade a Lazurus to come forth, saith, "come unto me." When the Holy Ghost comes to and upon you, and when it enters into and abides with you, then Glorify God in your body and in your spirit.

This connecting, binding link is not a happen-so or matter-of-chance affair. It is obtained and retained by, in, and through implicit obedience to "the law of the Spirit," "the gospel," "the doctrine," "the perfect law of liberty," etc. This indwelling influence, power, and blessing is how, and the manner in which, the good Father of lights and his adorable, beloved Son abides with, and dwells in, his people. To think of, talk about, pray over, and write on whatsoever things that are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, virtuous, praiseworthy, and of good report, is reviving, uplifting, ennobling, inspirational, and divine.

A person's mind is his kingdom; his heart is a citadel; his integrity a fortress; his faithfulness and diligence are a heroic march, and a victor's everlasting crown. The heart is the great seat of affection, and when honest, humble, and meek, it is the regulator and savior of all.

A good treasure is an armory, whereas a foul spirit is a dismantled castle. Good behavior is a pearl of inestimable value that sparkles in the jasper sea of an eventful life. Urbanity, or deportment of merit, is a diamond of illustrious brilliancy that shines forth in the building of life and character.

The Amsterdam artist may cut, carve, and polish the literal stone, so as to adorn a royal diadem; but the great Architect of the universe must set us, as lively stones, in the household of faith. The rubbish of the quarry, and the refuse of the mine can never invalidate the stones of utility and the gems of beauty. Quacks, and swindlers, and counterfeiters may ply their unhallowed schemes; but, know this, that the precious balm of Gilead, the golden argosy of virtue and the silvery shrine of truth are always in demand and ever at par. In comparison and contrast shams, shoddies, and base alloy are reprobated, while the genuine, the all wool, and the bullion are legal tenders in the commercial marts and workshops of the world. To work in the interests of, for, and with God is a heritage and a blessing within the easy reach of the civilian, the plebeian, and the slave. The gospel message, with its accompanying gifts, graces, and blessings, is not local and limited. The intention and design were for universal use. "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," is a blessed reality; an adamantine truth, and a gloriously demonstrated fact, as often as and wherever the enjoined conditions are honored, believed in, and complied with. A godlike life, like the magnet, or the lodestone, marshals the precious metals of purity, and the pearls of praise from the dross of the world. When our resolute will is an inspiration to the strong hand to lay hold of the distaff the God in whom we live, move, and have our being will tender the flax.

The sun-brown shepherd that beholds his flock crop the herbage, eat the grasses of the field, or drink from the brook, knoweth full well that the Good Shepherd giveth the increase, and changeth the raw material into pure wool. Expert chemists can only imitate honey; but the bee, working under orders, is a veritable alchemist. A pharmacist may combine and compound, but he can never change wholly the mineral into the vegetable, and either, or both, into the animal kingdom, for indeed such work is beyond the domain of art.

The doctrines, traditions, and commandments of men can never cleanse and purify the heart; much less redeem, save, and glorify the immortal past. They are moths in the closet or bureau, weevil in the wheat, tares in the field, blight in the orchard, consumption in the sick room, pestilence in the tented field, barnacles on the hull of a vessel, or sprags in or clogs on all wheels of progress. Human law and authority hath deluged the world in blood, darkened, etc., in every land, and clime, invaded the precincts of heaven, and asks God to come to their terms, and ratify their illegitimate acts. While such monumental presumption is out of all character, and is heaven-daring, persistent, and impious in the extreme, it is sterling coin on the broad, sinful, frequented highway of the earth. If humanity was not erring, and prone to do evil, we could get on all right without the great Physician. In our mortal sojourn we have the smiling world; the enticing demands of the flesh, the siren song of the adversary; passions, appetites, and the environments to surmount and overcome. In that such an Herculanean task is before us, and required at our hands, who is going to be so lost to reason as not to crave, but deny any help from an infinite source, and an almighty hand and a supreme power?

The more we frequent the house of the Lord, the more we attend the means of grace, the more we cultivate the virtues that adorn mind and heart, the more we associate with, model after, and are influenced by the pure and the good, the greater will be our strength and blessing, our greatness, and power, as also our peace of mind; yea, our tranquility, happiness, and usefulness. Through the straight gate, and along the narrow way, the flowers bud and bloom, and lavish their beauty and balm to the traveler that is on the Great King's highway. The birds of paradise with brilliant plumage, and melodious roundelays of cheerful praise carol forth on every hand, all for the benefit of the sojourner. Roaring lions, growling bears, howling wolves, all beasts and birds of prey, as also the slimy serpents, poisonous reptiles, pestiferous and deadly insects, the foul malaria of contagious sin and the boulevard for unclean spirits are all found along the broad road. The gilded palaces of fashion, the conservatories of music, the halls of nocturnal revelry, the long, rich, heavily laden tables of the banquet, where wild game and high wines are in great demand, the club rooms, and secret chambers where beneficiary (?) societies are wont to congregate, as well as the common bar, the house of ill fame near by, the down town quarters, and the veritable slums are all as stations and stepping stones to a wasted life, an untimely death, and a certain, broad, deep, insatiable hell.

Passing strange is it that fair and bright women, and stalwart, intellectual men will gladly, thoughtlessly, recklessly whirl along the avenues of illuring vanity, and never look after, or behold the danger signals that line the dark and devious way. When a man of God strives to tell the dreamy crew that are on a frail barque, and stupefied with narcotics, poisons, and siren opiates, "Behold, your craft is just above and fast verging the toils of the dreadful, awful Niagara;" the rejoinder will be, "Don't joggle the the boat," "I will salt my potatoes," "Tend to your own business," or "summat," as an Englishman from a rural district might say.

If we were not to be the salt of the earth, the light of the world, and our brother's keeper, we could complacently look on with indifference, and when the crash would come we would be exonerated. That, however, would not be humane, but satanic. The infinite, everlasting God, his beloved, adorable Son, the coöperating influence and power of the omnipresent Spirit, the heavenly glorified host, the elect and well inclined of earth, and even the rich man in hell, are all interested in the welfare of all others; hence we ought to be like minded in order to save them and thus make our own peace, calling, and election sure. Our fate is linked into, compromised with, and made sure by the good we do to others whenever and wherever we can. When we alleviate suffering, comfort the enfeebled, sustain the weak, clothe, feed and care for the poor, or do any act whatever for the betterment of frail humanity, it is a sound investment, a safe deposit, and such stock in trade is always rated at par by the good Bookkeeper. It is a perpetual emigration fund that Congress cannot nullify, dissolve, or invalidate one particle. When our freed spirits return to God for a season, behold, we cannot take food, raiment, homes, or sordid dust. We may and must take our characters whether we want to or not, so it behooves us to see to it that our hands are clean, our minds well informed, and our spirits are unsullied, upright, and pure. This God-like, Christ-like disposition is brought about by hearing, believing, receiving, and obeying the truth. This obligation and service are not burdensome, but, on the other hand, they are reasonable, practicable, and absolutely right. When a repentant soul that actually, greatly hungers for the bread of heaven, thirsts after the water of life, and longs ardently for the union and communion of God, seeks lawfully for the living way, with his whole might, mind, and strength, the leaves of healing will fall thick and fast all along the way. It is conceded by the great Teacher that earthly, evil parents bestow proper gifts upon their offspring, and so reasoning from cause to effect, or by object lesson and induction, he wisely concludes how much more our heavenly Parent, etc.

While it is pleasant and at times proper to receive, it is ever more blessed to bestow judiciously and in mercy. The ponderous sun dispenses light and heat abroad in unstinted measure and in a profuse manner. The queen of the night sends forth her silvery light, and the stars twinkle in unison, and sparkle forever. The influence of the Pleiades, the rings of Saturn, the bands of Orion, the Milky Way, the equatorial belt, the tropics of Capricorn and Cancer, the temperate latitudes, the frigid zones, the universe with its endless varieties, with all things therein, from great to small, from suns and systems to a mere atom or the tiniest germ, all contribute to enliven and exalt existence. The three kingdoms of nature are interwoven, and co-dependent, all to give and to take. The florist plants and cultivates for pleasure and profit. The husbandman turns the soil and cultivates the fair fields to replenish his granaries and larders, and also for home and foreign markets.

Through the great law of supply and demand commerce and trade circumnavigate the globe. Our overplus is sold, or exchanged for necessities, commodities, and luxuries produced elsewhere. Water from the deep fountains, the murmuring stream, a sleeping lake, pond, or pool, converted into steam sends the cargo hence on bands of steel, and far away to the sea-girt isles. In that no one lives, and nothing exists wholly independent and to take on, and give off, or reciprocity, is the rule, the ravens cry not in vain, nor yet is the sparrow's fall unnoted. If the supreme Being's time and attention were entirely taken up with and completely monopolized by the vast heavenly bodies and central suns, what about the outlying orbs, to say naught of "the very hairs of our head." His supervising hand and benefactions take in the whole situation, and duly arrange for all vicissitudes If anything, in bounds of reason, was too great for him, if all things were too complicated and complex for his wisdom and power, fortuitous circumstances, the survival of the fittest, the needs, demands, and laws of nature could hardly supply our necessities and hopes. To talk of an inanimate world originating, setting in motion, and perpetuating an animate being, great or small, is vain philosophy beating the air.

Let Darwin, Herbert Spencer, and their confederates feed a gullible, would-be scientific world with their learned ignorance, their degrading, blasphemous deceptions, their assumption, presumption, and conclusions; but know this, that all such work will be overtaken with the vigilant hand of time, and summoned to the bar of scrutiny, and the judgment seat of justice. False premises, blind reasoning, and unwarranted deductions will go up like thistle down, and pass away as the white frost under the power of a burning sun.

During the bustle of the busy day, or amid the stillness, solitude, and sub limity of the silent night, let us "take time to be holy," yea to meditate, watch, wait, and pray. The hour glass is useful only to note and register the passing sands; the dial plate is of worth to chronicle the fleeting hours; the pendulum's swing and the accompanying tick measures the tardy or rapid flight of time. Let us gather up the shell along the sounding sea beach, reap the harvest from the fields, garner in the fruitage from the orchards, fell the forest, quarry the stone, build cities and empires, dig out the precious metals, ravage and rob the surface and bottom of the ocean, and fill with industry and honor, the callings and walks of this intelligent, eventful, wonderful life; but in all our enjoying and getting have the great I Am in partnership, and at the head of the firm. Recognize his loving hand in all things, and commit your ways to his direction, protecting, almighty arm. His will and pleasure, his love and favor, his inspiration and commandments must be our chief joy and delight, our buckler, miter, and shield, so as to drink into, and be made partakers of, his divine nature and power; and thus having done all by his aid and forgiving grace, we will be fully enabled to stand fast. Inactivity is a perilous forerunner of dispair, meager attainments are hardly allowable, but contentment with godliness is great gain and a passport into celestial glory.

M. T. SHORT.

"WHOM SAY YE THAT I AM?"

I shall take for my text the question, found in Matthew, that Christ asked his disciples. This question has been one that has caused me as much consideration as any other,—to know and comprehend who is the Son of God. It is necessary that we should have a clear scriptural understanding of Christ before we can answer correctly who is the Son of God. God, the great power of intelligence, the moving cause of eternity, made Christ his coequal and colaborer.

For as Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to excute judgment also, because he is the Son of God.—John 5: 26, 27.

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—Matthew 28: 18.

You also will find a beautiful description of Christ in the first chapter of John.

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made. In him was the gospel, and the gospel was the life, and the life was the light of men; and the light shineth in the world, and the world perceiveth it not. Then was a man sent from God whose name was John. The same came into the world for a witness, to bear witness of the light—to bear record of the gospel through the Son, unto all, that through him men might believe; He was not the light, but came to bear witness of that light, which was the true light, which lighteth every man who cometh into the world; even the Son of God. He who was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God; only to them who believe on his name.

I have quoted to the thirteenth verse, from the Inspired Translation of the gospel; but the description that I wish more particularly to call your attention to is in verses 1, 3, 10, 11, showing the preëxistence of the Spirit of Christ, and that he was the means by which the gospel was preached. Thus we see he was the first to preach the gospel to man. "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made." Thus making him the Father of all things; and well and truly might Jesus say that "he that hath seen me has seen the Father also," "for he dwelleth in me." He was the Father because he was the creator, and the Son because he took upon himself flesh. He was commissioned by the great power of intelligence, yea, even God, to bring into existence all things that pertain to this earth.

He who was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

This idea of his being God, the Father and the Son, is held out to us in the Book of Mormon, and it certainly should be one of the purest records which we have, for it is the truth that has sprung up out of the earth. Nephi seems to have this idea, and he ought to have a good understanding, for he talked with many of the angels. 2 Nephi 11: 2.

And when the day cometh that the only begotten of the Father, yea, even the Father of heaven and of earth, shall manifest himself unto them in the flesh, behold, they will reject him.

Another account that more fully illustrates who was the Son of God is given by the brother of Jared, as found in the book of Ether, 1: 8:—

And it came to pass that when the brother of Jared had said these words, behold, the Lord stretched forth his hand and touched the stones, one by one, with his finger; and the veil was taken from off the eyes of the brother of Jared, and he saw the finger of the Lord: and it was as the finger of a man, like unto flesh and blood; and the brother of Jared fell down before the Lord, for he was struck with fear. And the Lord saw that the brother of Jared had fallen to the earth; and the Lord said unto him, Arise, why hast thou fallen? And he said unto the Lord, I saw the finger of the Lord, and I feared lest he should smite me; for I knew not that the Lord had flesh and blood; and the Lord said unto him, Because of thy faith thou hast seen that I shall take upon me flesh and blood; and never has man come before me with such exceeding faith as thou hast; for were it not so, ye could not have seen my finger. Sawest thou more than this? And he answered, Nay, Lord, show thyself unto me. And the Lord said unto him, Believest thou the words which I shall speak? And he answered, Yea, Lord, I know that thou speakest the truth, for thou art a God of truth, and cannot lie. And when he had said these words, behold the Lord shewed himself unto him, and said, Because thou knowest these things, ye are redeemed from the fall; therefore ye are brought back into my presence; therefore I shew myself unto you. Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold, I am Jesus Christ. I am the Father and the Son. In me shall all mankind have light, and that eternally, even they who shall believe on my name; and they shall become my sons and my daughters. And never have I showed myself unto man whom I have created, for never has man believed in me as thou hast. Seest thou that ye are created after mine own image? Yea, even all men were created in the beginning after mine own image. Behold this body, which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit; and man have I created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear unto thee to be in the spirit, will I appear unto my people in the flesh.

This quotation is one of the grandest descriptions showing who Christ is that there is to be found in the Scriptures. Language could not be plainer. He tells the brother of Jared that he is the Father and the Son, the came language that fell from his lips to his disciples when upon earth in the flesh. He was the Father because all things are the workmanship of his hand,—the world was made by him and the world knew him not. We all live, move, and have our being, within the power that was given him who came in the meridian of time. He is the Creator, the beginning and the end, even the Spirit of Truth that was chosen from the foundation of the world. It was he who breathed the breath of life into the nostrils of our first parents, who said, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." It was he who died to bring man back into his presence, and bring to pass the resurrection of the dead.

It seems hard for some to understand the saying, "I am the Father and the Son." It is like this: Man is composed of two parts, spirit and body. It was the spirit that was chosen to redeem his people, the Spirit of Truth, the Creator, yea, even the Father, because all things rolled into existence by him, and it was he who talked with the brother of Jared. That same person came that he might have a tabernacle of clay, and bring to pass the resurrection and conquer death, hell, and the grave; and thus he was called the Son of God. Some think because of the statement that "there is no God beside me," that Christ could not be the Father and the Son. Nearly all of us who are heads of families, so to speak, are Fathers and sons. Jesus Christ is the head of the human family; he is the first and the last. We are God's offspring, and by obedience to the law shall become his sons and daughters. Know ye not that the Godhead is composed of a plural number?—God, the Father, who sent the Son; God, the Son, who came in the meridian of time; and God, the Holy Ghost, the spirit which gives life to every creature which dwell upon the earth. These three work in harmony, and form the Godhead; but they are separate and distinct personages.

It is also written, "There is no God beside me" for the benefit of men, to lead them in the narrow way, that they might know that there is no other being, that they can obtain eternal life, only by and through the Son of God, which being is the one referred to that "There is no God beside me." These words are also to show unto man that they are not to accept the teachings of any that try to show them some other God, such as the case of Adam-god doctrine. Jesus was a God and is our God. "Thou art a God of truth and cannot lie." Man worshiped him before he came to earth, while here, and after his resurrection. We find, in Psalms 82: 1:—

God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods.

Thus we find there is a plural number of gods, at least three, which constitutes the Godhead, and thus we find that it is Christ that is judging amongst the gods; for in John, in the fifth chapter, in the twenty-second verse, is the following statement:—

For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.

Some will say, how shall I pray. I will refer you to the eleventh chapter and second verse of St. Luke:—

When ye pray, say, Our Father who art in heaven.

Jesus here referred them to the power that sent him, the great source of intelligence, yea, even God the Father. Jesus prayed unto the Father, and he exhorted his disciples to pray unto the Father; still he allowed them to worship him, for he was coequal with God, and is the God of this earth, as it is written:—

That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father, he who honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father who has sent him.—John 5: 23.

The Scriptures are full of statements showing that Christ is our God.

Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another?—2 Nephi 12: 7.

He loveth those who will have him to be their God.—1 Nephi 5: 25.

Yea, and the Lord said also, that after ye have arrived at the promised land, ye shall know that I, the Lord, am God.—1 Nephi 5: 21.

I leave these statements with you; ponder them over in your hearts. They have given me as much satisfaction and joy, if not more, than any other subject,—to know and comprehend who is the Son of God. May God bless you all.

Your brother in the gospel of peace,

JOSEPH B. SMITH.

"A PECULIAR INCIDENT."

Reading an article in Ensign, headed "A very peculiar incident," brings to my memory an incident just as peculiar, which I will relate. Three weeks before my husband passed away we went to Rock Island to his brother, hoping the change might help him. It became necessary for me to go home in the meantime, having dear old "Ma" Ruby to care for. The folks sent me telephone messages, two and three each day, to let me know how he was. I left him on Thursday, he passing away the following Saturday. A telephone message came telling me he was sinking fast. It being impossible for me to reach him that night, I had to wait, and O, the anguish of my heart I will leave you to judge. And while I sat grieving, all at once I felt a pair of arms around me, holding me in a close embrace. They were his arms; I could not be mistaken. It startled me, and I sprang from my chair saying, "Ma, Jerome is dead!" The assurance came to me with the embrace. I at once looked at the clock; it was thirty-five minutes past seven. In a few minutes I got a telephone message saying, "Jerome died at thirty-five minutes past seven this evening." So it was just as the spirit left his dear body that I felt his arms around me.

Now, I let those judge who can what it was and what the substance that held me in that embrace only for a second, and it seemed I heard the "rustle of wings." His last words and thoughts were of me. A few minutes before he breathed his last he asked for me. They asked him if they should send for me. He said, "No, God bless her! she could do me no good, and I do not want her to see the last." So thoughtful to the last, as he ever was. Then he spoke my name three times, and said, "My wife, mine, mine, forever mine," and O, how I wish and dare to hope that it may be so, that I will be his in the blessed kingdom of God.

The lines I send are from the pen of Bro. Charles Derry. They were, as you will see, written on the baptism of my dear mother and myself. I think them beautiful, and worthy a place in the Herald.

MRS. PAULINE RUBY.

MANTENO, Shelby County, Iowa,
May 27, 1867.

MRS. PAULINE RUBY,

Dear Sister:—Your kind letter of the 6th inst. was received, and my heart was glad to hear that you had united yourself with the church of God. "Be thou faithful unto death, and thou shalt have a crown of life," is the word of the Lord unto thee. Your mother, too! Was it not good to go hand in hand, as it were, through the liquid wave into the portals of the kingdom of our Redeemer?

I am glad that Apollos came along and watered the seed. Others had planted, I only moved the soil that the light and warmth of heaven might reach and cheer the plant. May it bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God!

The husbandman went forth to sow,
'Twas at the evening tide;
He knew not that the seed would grow,
But cast it far and wide.

Another came to till the soil;
His arm with strength was nerved,
And God inspired his willing mind
Till the heart's depths were stirred.

The light of heaven's cheering rays
Shone in the dark recess,
And warmed the seed of many days
And brought it forth to bless,

With heavenly fruits and virtue's flowers,
To feed and cheer the soul,
And clothe it with immortal powers,
And sanctify the whole.

Another comes to ope the door,
As did the servant John
To Jesus, in the days of yore,
(The "well-beloved Son.")

Clad with the priesthood from on high
The porter meekly stands,
Converse holding with the sky,
With upraised heart and hands.

Now beneath the deep, blue wave,
As buried with her Lord,
The true repentant finds her grave,
Obedient to the word.

Anon the opening waves reveal
A babe in Christ renewed,
In which she was but now concealed
In death's similitude.

The new Christ life is hers indeed—
Old sins have passed away—
In Jesus' book her name we'll read
In the all-glorious day.

Now the Spirit's seal is given
By laying on of hands—
(The sealing ordinance of heaven,
As in God's word it stands.)

The holy fire—inspiring flame—
Light to the darkened soul—
All-conquering faith in Jesus' name
By which she gains control

O'er all the ills that would beset
Her faltering, wand'ring feet,
And every dark, infernal net
Of Satan's dark deceit.

Here, then, the seed has brought forth fruit—
The barren hearts rejoice—
The tiller's joy is now complete,
And finds in this a voice.

Oh! may that fruit be ever found
Unsaddened and unsoured,—
Those hearts with endless joys abound
Which Christ's own love procured.

The above lines were suggested by the baptism of yourself and mother. I have Bro. Sheldon Ruby's portrait, but I did not have it from you, but from Sr. Ladner. I am glad to hear of Jerome working in the cause. Tell him to keep his armor bright and his crown will also be bright. My best love to him and Sheldon. I thank Sister Ruby Senior; for her kind regards she shall be remembered. Tell her to make the honor and glory of God's cause the first, last, and best object of her love, and God will honor her and give her every pure desire. I would be kindly remembered to Sheldon's wife, Mr. Williams, and all friends. The verses you have just as they dropped from my pen without rewriting or correction. Remember me kindly to your mother. My Lizzie desires to be kindly remembered to and by you all. When I can afford to have my children's portraits taken I will try to spare you a copy. I remain in love to you and all the Israel of God with you, your unworthy brother,

CHARLES DERRY.

WILLIAMSDALE, N. S., October 13.

Editors Herald:—As no one has written recently from this section, I will take this opportunity to say we are alive and acting in the line of gospel work as opportunity opens. I met Bro. S. O. Foss at Delhaven, and entered upon the program he had prepared for ministerial work in the province. I am enjoying my visit, and trust it may prove profitable. Opportunity and facilities for reaching those outside are circumscribed, if not limited. We cannot report exciting and rapid growth. The gospel wins its way slowly among the staid and conservative of the east. The "restored evangel" gathers the noble and true everywhere, whose minds are not darkened by misrepresentations of the work, but seek an understanding of its positions and claims. Truly the net gathers of every kind; but when those experiences which test the faith and stability of the catch, come, straightway those who can be shaken are removed and the "survival of the fittest" leaves good material with which to build.

Good, patient, and effectual labor has been done here in the past, and the results are apparent, both here and among those who have left the province to find situations in the States. I am disappointed in not being able to remain longer in each place we visit, but do not question the wisdom of the plans, as in some places we can only hold services in private houses and few attend.

At South Rawdon a good interest was manifest, and we were blessed in presenting the word. The openings here are in country places, and the inhabitants are scattered very widely; so gatherings are small. One was baptized there.

At River Philip Centre bad weather dampened our ardor and kept many from attending. We are trying to impress the minds of the people with the necessity of observing all the commandments of God to do them.

The Saints have a very neat little chapel at this place and Sunday very good audiences attend. We are to organize a branch next week, and, we trust, some will put on Christ. Before coming into Nova Scotia I had the pleasure of traveling with Bishop Hilliard through Maine. While here he visited Dixfield, Jonesport, Indian River, Lamoine, and Stonington. All along the line very good interest was taken in the preaching, and the general verdict was that no one who has visited Maine in the past did more in the same length of time for the work. The Bishop was in the state twenty-four days, and preached twenty-seven discourses in the time, while we held the turn for him four times. The "Pine Tree State" will be a poor place to rusticate in the future.

All along the line indications are favorable. There are marked improvements in the diligence and study of the law. This cannot but result in good. The internal movements of the great social mass will force the peaceful to Zion, and by acquaintance with the revelations we learn that only the pure in heart will find abiding safety there. That unity, righteousness, and peace may prevail, we will ever pray. Your brother in Christ,

W. W. BLANCHARD.

BOISE CITY, Idaho, Oct. 19.

Editors Herald:—I do not know that I ever saw a letter in our Herald from this city, and as it is raining today I think it a good chance to hail the Saints' family circle for admission. After a short stay at my home, Albion, Idaho, among my children and friends, the 11th of September found me in Caldwell, Idaho, to feel the pulse of the people on gospel topics.

As a rule I find the people kind-hearted; but as occasionally one shuts the door in a very unfriendly manner on finding I represent the "sect everywhere spoken against." However, being of a spirit that cares little for frowns or contradictions against the message I bear, I can afford to patiently bide the day when mockers shall see their folly. I hope to be a wise servant and harmless as doves, as a sheep among the wolves, yet fearing no evil because of the promise of the Father that all things shall work together for good to those who love God and his cause, and whether on land or sea, I will keep thee. So I can well afford to "take it to the Lord in prayer."

On the night of September 23, I dreamed of walking along a road, and ahead of me was another road at right angles, leading north, and I was to go on it. Just by the side of the road where I turned to the right was a small fire starting up, but I could see nothing to burn. After I turned northward a tongue of fire left the spot where I first saw it and followed along by my left side. I could see nothing but a very few straggling straws anywhere; but walk or run as I pleased, the fire kept pace with me, and it only appeared about two feet wide and about three or four feet from me. Wondering what it was following me so closely for, and what kept it burning, I kept on walking or running some distance, when I came to a house on the right, and off the road a short distance. I turned to it to stop; when I looked around the fire had gone out where I left the road; but far back where I first saw it, it was still burning, and I could hear it cracking as if there was plenty of fuel.

This reminds me of a dream some time ago, which I had on going into a certain valley. In company with another brother, we were fishing in a large pond; and soon after casting my hook in the water I drew up and there was a dry bone which my hook had snagged. After pulling it out I laid it aside with the thought that no one else would snag his hook on it again, anyhow. Just then the brother who was with me drew his hook out, and, lo, a similar bone had been snagged by him. Several bones were thus snagged, and we laid them together, with the consolation that we were clearing the water of snags.

I was not very long in learning the significance of the fire along the road; and that there was nothing after all to feed the flame. A couple of ladies in Caldwell, W. C. T. U. members, objected to my visiting from house to house among Christian people, saying there was plenty of people outside of churches to do missionary work with. Visiting among the people is not lacking in experience, some take very kindly to it, and say it is the best way to reach the people, while others do not want their flocks disturbed, for more than one reason. One good Christian (Campbellite) minister thought to crush me by telling me we knew no more than a hog about what our literature treated of, or some of it. Talking with him of the Scriptures, he said the ministry of Christ spoke by divine inspiration. I asked him whether he was divinely inspired to preach the gospel, and he said no. Then I asked him what right he had to stand before any people as a preacher of the gospel of Christ. Before his sermon was ended, I learned that he told the truth when he said he was "not divinely inspired" to preach that discourse; and some of his own people saw it, too.

The harvest is indeed very great, but laborers are few. My only concern is that I sow only good seed, for the Master has promised fruit in due season.

In Caldwell the people told me several times we had two good members there, and I said in my heart, "God bless all the Saints with a desire to let their lights shine, even if they appear but feeble ones to them!" Sister R. H. Davis acted the part of a sister, and Sister Mary E. Jenkins is a worker in the Sunday school with the Baptists, and as organist, and they seem to appreciate her kindness. I wish all our people would thus reflect honor to the cause, by thus showing their interest in the Sunday school cause; and where we are too weak to establish branches for our own church work to assist where they can. It is no credit to stand aloof from church work even if we join with other churches as far as we can do so conscientiously, in love for "the faith once delivered to the Saints." Very often these are golden opportunities for sowing the seeds of the golden truth in fertile soil. What Saint can sit idly silent, while others are doing what they can to lift up the children and lead them to "remember the creator in the days of their youth?" Where is our zeal for the cause of truth? Let us wake up, Saints, and stand for God, and let our light shine, let it be small or great. Our light will grow larger and brighter if we only grow in grace ourselves. None of us live to ourselves, for weal or woe.

I have only found two Latter Day Saints in Boise City,—a sister Susan Strickland and son, who with her husband is at present domiciled here. She feels lonely, as most Saints do when isolated. There is material in Boise City for Saints, and there is great need of Saints here, too.

I saw the finest exhibit of apples, peaches, and pears at the Idaho State Fair, 8th to 13th inst., I have ever seen. If any state can excel Idaho for fruit, I would like to see it.

While plenty is everywhere apparent, still the croakers about the rich getting richer, and the poor getting poorer are to be heard in every hamlet and city. For my part, I see few poor people who are industrious and economical. If our people were as intent on gaining the riches of eternity as they are those that perish with the using, and as successful as a nation, peace and plenty would look down from heaven as a benediction from the Lord.

Boise Valley is a fertile vale, and, judging by the fruit lying under the trees, the Lord has smiled upon the people this year, or at least has given to the field and orchard their fruit in abundance.

We scarcely realize our blessing, for "the hand of providence hath smiled upon us most pleasingly." Should we not lift up our hearts with thankfulness to the Giver of the "precious things of the earth?" And also that righteousness has looked, and does look, down from heaven, and fills the soul to overflowing with joy and peace, and sweet assurance, if we only open our eyes to see, and our ears to hear. How true, "if any man hear my voice, I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with me." Blessed promise, of the Father, "who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have eternal life."

I am stopping at the Working Men's Home (Advent Mission), room and bed one dollar per week. Board is two cents a dish. No meat is served. This style just suits me, and it occurs to me the Saints might learn wisdom (practical) from even the Advents in these things. They are a people of one great hobby, the fourth commandment, which the Lord gave Israel. They come far short of keeping it, though.

Have hopeful word from the Nez Perce country which I expect to visit soon. Will try to put in a season here again this winter. I have an appointment out for service at district schoolhouse No. 45, west of Boise City, on the 21st inst.

Now, may the grace of the Highest be with all Saints, and strengthen all to stand free in the "joy of the word!" As ever,

Your brother and worker for Zion's weal,

CHAS. ALBERTSON.

AUDUBON, Minn., Oct. 22.

Editors Herald:—The fall conference of the Northern Minnesota district, held the 13th and 14th of October, is now over, and we had a very good time. The weather was fine, and there was a goodly number of Saints in attendance, including five elders, namely: I. N. Roberts, H. Way, T. J. Martin, M. O. Ericson, and F. D. Omans. We had a grand, spiritual time, as all had seemingly come together with the right spirit. We were indeed blessed, and at our Sunday afternoon sacrament meeting many bore testimony to the truth and blessings of this great and glorious work. All present felt the sweet influence of God's Holy Spirit, and our hearts were made to rejoice to know that our heavenly Father had heard our prayers and was raising up from among us men to help carry on his work, and that inasmuch as we are faithful he will not withhold his promises. This was brought more forcibly to our minds as our young brother, Joshua C. Nunn, was ordained a priest. We all remembered that at his confirmation a few years ago the promise was given him that if he was faithful he would soon be called to help carry on this great work. Bro. A. J. Smith, of Minneapolis, was ordained an elder, according to promise. Dear Saints, let us unite our prayers in behalf of these noble brethren that the good Lord will bless them with his Holy Spirit in such a measure that they may be faithful and magnify their calling and be the means of doing much good. We all feel that we needed the good counsel and instructions given by Bro. I. N. Roberts and others. My earnest prayer is that we will all profit thereby; and I know if we will, and be faithful and take hold and perform our duties aright, in love and meekness, the Lord will bless us even more abundantly in the future than he has in the past.

I for one want to do all I can for this work, which I love. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be faithful to the end and receive a crown of light.

Your sister in Christ,

LUCY M. HAWLEY.

WIRT, Indiana, Oct. 15.

Editors Herald:—Associated with the district president, M. R. Scott, Jun., we began our work. Two days' meeting having been arranged by district president, September 21 found us at Pleasant Valley, Harrison county. Bro. Wynn, in his isolated condition resides there, he being the only Latter Day Saint in or about there; but notwithstanding he is firm and faithful. His better half seems to be very near the kingdom—Jordan waters, perhaps, the obstacle. We trust and pray she soon will be buried beneath the liquid wave, for truly she is a mother to the missionary.

We held services on the 21st; but few were in attendance. The community had been told not to have anything to do with us. The command was given of course, by one of the ministers. A great weapon to use in time of battle! Don't face the enemy; be ashamed. Weep and howl, ye that teach for doctrine the commandments of men; your garments are moth eaten; popularity will save you in that sweet bye and bye. Heed the admonition, Prove all things. We were warned while laboring in this vicinity to be on the lookout for the egg party that was being formed, and we were told we had better absent ourselves from their presence to escape trouble. Not being easily bluffed, we just kept apace with our work, as if nothing had happened, and nothing happened. I guess they ate their eggs.

We continued our efforts until the 28th inst. with increasing interest. Think perhaps there are a few in that locality to be gathered into the fold.

The night of the 28th found us at Leavenworth, Crawford county, where a large crowd had assembled to listen to the gospel truths. Bro. Scott entertained them very acceptably. We took the parting hand of Saints and friends on October 2. Quite an interesting time was had; we think much good was done. We could not get away until we promised them to return at the earliest possible date. From there we found our way to Greensburg, Decatur county, responding to a very urgent demand from our worthy and much esteemed brother, H. H. Montgomery. He having secured the use of a city hall, free of cost, we began meetings there on the 6th. The weather being very unsuitable, and people very much prejudiced, and the writer having contracted a very severe cold, disqualifying us entirely from any ministerial work, we could not continue our work. Have come home for recuperation; have had a slight attack of pneumonia. Bro. Scott also has been very sick with pneumonial troubles. We are convalescing, and will take up the line of march in a few days. We have appointments with Plainville branch the 26th, New Trenton, November 9, Byrneville 17th, and will continue just as fast as we can stand it. We intend to to make a thorough canvass of the district as fast as time and health will permit.

Everything at present, almost, is, "Hurrah for Bryan and McKinley." I will be glad when the 6th of November shall have passed, and the people place their minds on King Jesus,—he who can give us rest and permanent happiness. Yours,

W. C. MARSHALL.

BEDISON, Missouri, Oct. 18.

Editors Herald:—On September 20 I began a series of meetings in the Christian church at Ravenwood, Missouri, which lasted just two weeks. The weather was quite unfavorable part of the time, and made against the interest; yet I'm satisfied good was done. I felt free in mind, and had good liberty. My crowd varied some, like the weather, ranging from fifty to two hundred.

The Saints of the Sweet Home branch are worthy commendation for the efforts made to make the meetings a success. Old Bro. John Hawley assisted in the stand a few times, and the good sisters did their part in singing. Some few of the business men were out to hear, and it was quite common to hear some say: "That was a good sermon." "He's well posted," etc. Isome times think the diet we feed the people is too rich for them, and they think it's better to do without it.

The district conference convened October 6 and 7, at the Sweet Home church, with fair attendance and a good spirit. The business all passed off nicely; preaching by Brn. Joseph Vaughn, J. A. Davis, and myself.

After the close of conference Davis and I continued meetings a few evenings, Davis going from there to Guilford and I to this place. On the 14th I held services at the Long branch church. On the 15th, Monday eve, I commenced a series of meetings in the Christian church, at Bedison. Crowds are not large; the old people seem to be afraid to come out and hear.

I'm not surprised, either, when many of their systems are like our Campbellite brethren. A. Campbell says, "For if in our infancy . . . we have in the face of all their opposition and united efforts, risen in a few years from nothing to many myriads; it is not to be imagined that they (the sects) can stay our progress." And he says: "On this bottom we put to sea, with scarcely hands enough to man the ship." Where is the Ark of God in this system? Starting "from nothing!" This must be the bed that Isaiah saw, in 28:20: "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it."

I'm aware that some one must do the piping; but who will do the dancing? The Lord said in Doctrine and Covenants, page 2: "And verily, I say unto you, that they who go forth, bearing these tidings unto the inhabitants of the earth, to them is power given to seal, both on earth and in heaven, the unbelieving and rebellious; yea, verily, to seal them up unto the day when the wrath of God shall be poured out upon the wicked without measure." The people may reject this gospel by refusing to hear or obey, but the word of the Lord to them is, Doctrine and Covenants, page 325: "Behold, and lo, there are none to deliver you, for ye obeyed not my voice when I called to you out of the heavens, ye believed not my servants; and when they were sent unto you ye received them not; wherefore, they sealed up the testimony and bound up the law, and ye were delivered over unto darkness." I'm satisfied the Lord will care for his own, but it does seem the Devil will get more than his portion. It's many to hear, and few to obey.

I have never felt freer in mind and good liberty to declare this gospel than now. May the Lord bring again Zion.

D. C. WHITE.

NASHUA, Iowa, Oct. 19.

Editors Herald:—Bro. O. H. Bailey and I came to this place a little over a week ago, and began meetings in a small place called Carrville, and we are having a splendid interest there. The people manifested a considerable prejudice when we began there; but that seems to have given way, and they seem very anxious to hear. I believe ere we close our efforts there, some will be obedient to the faith.

There is considerable typhoid fever all around here; and starting in so early as it has, I fear it will result in a terrible scourge throughout this part of the country.

The brethren in this field are doing quite well, and I am sure the district is looking up spiritually. Any brethren in the field desiring to write me will please address to Fairbanks, Iowa. Ever praying and working for the success of Zion's cause, I am, in bonds of truth and righteousness.

J. R SUTTON.

WEST OAKLAND, Cal., Sept. 20.

Editors Herald:—It is a long time since I penned a line to you; but I am ready now to depart and live with Christ, having nearly reached my eighty-second milestone, and the doctor says that my heart has failed and I may go at any moment, and I hardly think it right to take all my history to the silent tomb with me; therefore will say to your many readers of what I have been through and know to be true, and I am not alone in this.

Heber C. Kimball, of Utah, told us that polygamy was all right for time, but when he came to die, no good; and others have left dying testimonies. So here is a little from the old Welshman. I have been very religious ever since a little one in the Sunday school where I made up my mind that when big would go and preach to the heathens in Africa. In course of time I went, and now can look and see what a lot of chaff I had, being only a hard shell Baptist; but got along nicely until the elders from Utah came out there preaching a restored gospel with all its gifts, powers, blessings, officers, etc., etc., almost too good to be true, and kept on hammering at my hard shell until they cracked it so I could peep out and see the necessity of present revelation, inspiration, visions, etc., so to prove all things, made off for Utah to test the matter.

We had to be baptized to join a company and fight our way past the red men (to Zion) across the plains, there to hear the voice of the prophet in the land, and see the glory of God in the cloud by day and pillar of fire by night on the temple. This took place at the time of going with hand carts in 1856, when scores died by the way, and their bones are bleaching on the plains. But we got in, and found that the church had been scattered at the time of the great persecution at Nauvoo, in 1844, part of it going into the wilderness and there getting mixed up with mistakes, in getting reorganized in 1856–7, and preaching that the priesthood was something infallible. Had got beyond the books—they were not worth the ashes of rye straw to us, or like the little boys clothes or old almanacs, out of date. We are the living oracles; the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life, and leads us to take our text from anything as he wills, and it is law and gospel to this people. So we had to be baptized and join this reformed church or go across lots. But at the same time I must confess that I was very slow of heart to believe all that was taught when there in 1857; but it was death to kick, yet I never could see with them in these creeds: 1. Adam the only God with whom we had to do; 2. Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost, but like other men; 3. Future exaltation depends on posterity; 4. Celestial marriage or polygamy; 5. Fun making or dancing; 6. The right to divorce all women in the church; 7. Blood atonement; 8. Blind obedience to the priesthood.

I was working for Dr. France making soap, and there was a young girl on his place to become his wife when old enough. I did persuade her not to go into polygamy. The doctor found it out, and reported me at the ward meeting as being disaffected. A big friend of mine was at the meeting and lost no time in coming to tell me of my great luck in being thought worthy by the priesthood of going home to glory. "Come, now, die game; bring your spade and dig your own grave. I'll break the pitcher, and your rest will be glorious, and have a martyr's crown for trying to save that girl from doing what you believed to be wrong," etc.

In astonishment I said, "What are you talking about."

"Why," he says, "are you not glad of a chance to go home into the celestial glory through God's most holy priesthood?"

Says I, "I cannot see it that way; you know I am only just here from Africa to see for myself, proving all things. Give me some time to pray and think about it."

He said, "The priesthood must be honored; we have got to do as told if we want to live in Zion. Don't you know that what they bind on earth is bound in heaven?" etc., etc.

Such a priesthood and creeds were like coals on my garments, so I shook them off and arose in the strength of the Lord and broke off the yoke of such bondage to be free in the joy of the word, and made off for California with Mr. Herbin's herd of cattle; thirty men, well armed to fight our way, and cried for joy to see ships' masts at Sacramento, having escaped all the land pirates.

CANTON, Cardiff, October 1.

Editors Herald:—After laboring six months in my mission field, perhaps it will not be amiss in me informing the many readers of the Herald of the condition of the work in Wales. I have not anything very great to report. The work is in rather a low ebb. I could give reasons for this state of affairs; but I hardly deem it wise to do so. I have visited and preached, sometimes in halls, and our own two church buildings, and upon the streets and highways, in the following places: Cardiff, Newport, Lydney, Aylburton, Abertillery, Nantyglo, Brynmawr, Porth, Gilfach Goch, Llanelly, and Aberaman. Have distributed a large amount of old Heralds, Ensigns, and Hopes, also a few thousand tracts, and over a thousand ministry cards. We certainly prefer tracts and cards to old Heralds and Ensigns. Last week I distributed some old Heralds of 1888, and was told by many that we must be behind the times in distributing literature twelve years old.

What has struck me as being very peculiar is, we can have large crowds upon the streets which appear to listen very attentively to the preaching of the word, and agree with the doctrines, but no one seems to have any desire to yield obedience to the plan of redemption. True, I have in the past six months baptized ten precious souls; but they are those who are in touch with the work in kindred ties. We have a nice church building in Llanelly, another in Lydney, a good hall in Cardiff, Porth, and Nantyglo; and while we are able to get good audiences on the streets, we can scarcely have any one to visit our churches or halls. Summer is now nearly over, and outdoor work will be at a standstill until next spring opens up again. So if we had a good supply of church literature I could distribute same from door to door during the winter months; but, alas, I have none. I wonder if there is any brother or sister interested enough in "gallant little Wales," who would send a good supply of tracts on the "first principles of the gospel" to me. If they would, we promise them to faithfully distribute them. I don't write this in a begging spirit, as I have not the least doubt but what God can look after his own work. I merely give the chance for some good brother or sister to do good if they feel like it. I do not want any Heralds, Ensigns, or Hopes. Let me have fit and proper literature to distribute, and we shall be pleased to do the work. I intend going to London today, as South England is in my mission field. May God prosper the efforts of his servants in all the world.

KEB, Iowa, October 12.

Editors Herald:—A number of the Saints in the Nauvoo district and others will be pleased to know how the district conference got along. Having to hold the conference in the district tent when the weather was so uncertain and the Saints being so scattered, required a good deal of faith, and made it necessary to devise some way to care for the visiting Saints other than to take them to their home for every meal during the day. The first thought was to get the town hall and rent a building in town and use it as a hotel, each one bear his portion of the expense; but that was found to be impracticable. Some one suggested the holding of the conference in the district tent and have one or two smaller tents to cook in, and set the tables in the big tent, the cooking to be left to one cook. It was decided to carry out the last plan. A committee was appointed to carry it out and divide the work to other committees so that most all had something to do; but I doubt whether anyone fully understood what it meant to cook for so many and get everything necessary to serve on the tables. It was a big undertaking; but when faith and works are put together it is possible to accomplish great things. I think I am safe in saying that all were pleased the way they were treated, as far as providing for the want of the natural man is concerned. It was done admirably under the circumstances that controlled.

Bro. F. M. McDonald, of Mt. Pleasant, is the president of the branch. He is an excellent manager in the cooking department, and did his work well. Bro. George McCommas is the teacher, and was a great help to Bro. McDonald. Bro. Thomas Brown is the deacon. Others helped and did their work well. All are worthy of great credit for what was done. It was a new experience to me, and a good lesson can be learned from what was accomplished by the few Saints there.

The conference was held on Bro. Loren Willey's land. He and his good wife did all they could to make us happy. I hope the labors of the Saints of New London and the traveling ministry will be blessed and all be thankful that they had the privilege to help the work done there.

The services were affected by the weather. Saturday night it rained considerable and it was not considered wise to hold the meetings Saturday night. Bro. Roth was appointed to preach and all were sorry that the weather prevented the meeting. It was quite stormy Sunday morning. At 9:30 Sunday school was held. It was quite cold, but the representation of school workers was fair. At 10:45 Bro. James McKiernan preached, and at the close three promising young men were baptized, a son and two grandsons of Bro. F. Johnson, of West Burlington. The afternoon meeting was half an hour late, as the cook and waiters were not able to get through their work in time on account of the large crowd that had to be served at dinner. At three o'clock the social meeting was opened. The weather was still cold but the meeting was quite spiritual. Those baptized were confirmed, three children were blessed, three sick ones were administered to and a large number bore testimony. At 7:30 preaching by Bro. Snively. Quite a crowd was present. The next, the parting and shaking hands, and "Lord bless you," and the conference is over as far as the gathering together is concerned; but I believe the effects will last long, I am sure it will with me. What was accomplished by the united efforts of the few Saints of the New London branch will not soon be forgotten.

Yours in bonds,

HAMILTON, Ont., Oct. 22.

Editors Herald:—It is nearly two months since I came to this city to look for employment, the most of which time I have spent in the railway service. During my stay here I have not been inattentive to our church or its interests, but have endeavored to attend what meetings I could, and have imported into the city a considerable quantity of our literature.

We have not a branch, but a mission, which is presided over by Elder Hyrum Dickhout, a very genial and straightforward man, by whose unceasing labors and love for the gospel he has made himself felt in this city. Through his three years' sojourn here there have been a number of honest ones who have heard and believed and are now rejoicing in the gospel. I don't know exactly what their membership amounts to, but should judge there would be no less than fifteen, perhaps twenty at present.

At their last business meeting I had the honor of being elected secretary of the mission, and also as one of a committee of two to procure a hall for church service. Before the week expires I expect we will have rented a hall, and possibly by next Sunday our meetings will begin in a more public manner.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Sept. 27.

Editors Herald:—The good work moves on apace with unmistakable evidences of divine "footprints in the sands of time."

Loth as we are to express, in concrete form, our appreciation for the divine favors, still God gratuitously lavishes his love upon us. The Los Angeles branch has had its trials—what branch has not? Our bark has, at times, been carried on the crest of the wave; later we have been overwhelmed in the trough of the sea whilst the dark and lowering clouds seemed ominous in their forebodings of evil, and the angry winds lashed the waves into a fury, that at times it seemed we would be swallowed in the deep. Thank God, the storm has abated. The old ship rights herself, and, no worse for the encounter, she moves gracefully along into smoother waters. The crew is laying to with their might to make up for lost time, and we now fully expect to enter port ere the quarantine laws are rigidly enforced debarring farther entrance into the "Beloved City."

One thing saddens the heart, however; some of the crew and quite a number of the passengers will be missing. They took passage fully expecting to complete the voyage, but they were buried "at sea." All died of heart failure. They are a few still on board similarily affected; we are anxiously concerned about them, but are endeavoring to comply strictly with the provisions of the Physician's prescriptions and await developments. There was a time when it seemed we were going to have an epidemic; but we have it well "in hand" now, whilst those who are ill are rapidly being placed in quarantine pending developments to prevent a recurrence of the malady. The officials are manifesting an excellent spirit, and, though the greater portion are raw recruits, still with most we note the embryo of a larger growth.

There is a marked absence of jealousy, and each one seems desirous to fill his "niche," perfectly content to allow others to do likewise. We propose organizing a school of the priesthood shortly, where we can discuss the laws and usages of the church, and more fully gather what is required of each one. It shall be our aim to beget confidence among the weaker ones and help them to acquire proficiency in public speaking and praying.

During the past few months we have given from twenty-five to thirty letters of removal, and there are quite a number more that we expect to grant soon. The reader must not infer that this number have moved away from this place in this time. Oh, no, but we are enforcing the rules of the church relative to absentees. The results are gratifying. Whilst our numerical strength is diminished, the solidarity of the remainder compensates for the contraction. We expect to continue until all absentees in any way contiguous to other branches shall honor the law and take letters of removal.

We are likewise pruning the vineyard, and are determined to omit nothing which will tend to encourage new life in every member; failing we must resort to the knife to save the tree. If we expect a tree to flourish and bear fruit we must care for, nurture, and prune it. Pruning is very necessary in order to secure the best results. All unnecessary and dead branches must be "cut off" or the whole tree will die. I know of branch organizations which are lifeless and going into permanent decay, simply because the president or his aid refuses or fails to do his duty in this direction. It is a crime to foster lawbreakers in this church. Better have a branch with fifty live members rather than one of two hundred where half are either dead or dying.

We are doing well with our church building. The other day I paid the interest for the past year—one hundred and twenty-three dollars—and was fortunate enough to be able to apply two hundred on the principal. This leaves us with a total indebtedness of fifteen hundred dollars. We have placed this loan for one year at six per cent. If we can only succeed in raising five hundred dollars during the year we will be in good shape to hold our building and all anxiety will be past.

I had quite an extended discussion through the columns of the Evening Express with one Rev. Houze, of the Christian persuasion, recently. The main theme was "continuous revelation," and I am assured that the cause lost nothing. Brother Chatburn loses not an opportunity to get after the Brighamites, and seems to think it his special duty to "run them down." Everything goes to show that he is able to fulfill this mission. They had quite an altercation at Santa Ana, resulting in a general mixup involving the city marshal, the city council, and the matter finally finding its way into the Evening Express of this city. President Nye, of the Mormon Church, likewise Brn. Chatburn and T. W. Williams, being involved in the controversy. I am still carrying on the discussion with Mr. Nye. In his last communication Mr. Nye charges that the Reorganized Church has ever stood with open arms to welcome the renegades and villains which have been cast out of the Mormon Church; he unwittingly reiterates the positions taken by Brigham in the dark days of the past, and utters his "defy" to everybody, and particularly the United States government, to do their worst; that the Mormon Church will exist when all its enemies have sunk into eternal forgetfulness. I have written a reply and punctured his "wheel" with the Brighamitic "tack" published by themselves.

I do not think it the wisest policy to waste too much time on these people and in many ways indorse Bro. Roush's position in a late Herald.

Bro. Chatburn recently held a discussion with an "Elder Hyder," down at Ocean View. It seems that Mr. Hyder has been working in the celery fields there, and when Bro. Chatburn went there to preach, Mr. Hyder thereupon challenged him for discussion. It turned out that this fellow has lived several years in Stewartsville, and is in some ways acquainted with our doctrine and people. For a couple of nights he put up a very good argument; but after that Bro. Chatburn had it all his own way. In the defense of his own church, not an affirmation was made. They are considering the advisability of taking up the Book of Mormon and other themes in the future, providing the gentleman can secure church endorsements. As it is, he is representing no one but himself, and our people cannot afford to spend time on one man; hence Bro. Chatburn has demanded an endorsement.

Brn. Chatburn and Anderson have been working earnestly in tent work with some gratifying results. One has to labor a long time in this country to see any material progress. I assisted them some at Santa Ana, Orange, and Ocean View, and am satisfied that the Lord has taken cognizance of their work, whatever the result may be with others.

Have just returned from a trip to San Bernardino. Preached the funeral of Bro. Gibson's granddaughter. She leaves several small orphan children. I also spoke at North Ontario, Riverside, Redlands, and Hermit. I hope at no distant day to follow up these openings. Bro. Burton has returned from the north; Brn. Smith and Gould are expected tomorrow. Our conference convenes at Garden Grove, the 26th instant. Had a nice rain Saturday.

Yours hopefully,

T. W. WILLIAMS,

Get leave to work
In this world —'t is the best you get at all;
For God in cursing gives us better gifts
Than men in benediction. God says, "Sweat
For foreheads;" men say, "crowns;" and so we are crowned,
Ay, gashed by some tormenting circle of steel
Which snaps with a secret spring. Get work, get work.

WORK.

Dear Sisters:—At our local Daughters of Zion meeting recently, we had a lively discussion upon the subject: "Is work, in moderation, beneficial to children; if so, how shall we teach them to like it?" I thought at the time what a pity it was that more young mothers could not be present to benefit by the many ideas and plans presented by the different speakers, and the idea occurred to me, that perhaps some might gain some benefit if we were to relate our experience along that line through the Home Column.

I think we will all agree that children should be taught to work, not alone for the sake of the help to parents or those in charge of them—that is a small consideration compared to the value of systematic work to themselves, especially during school life, when too many are exempt from physical tasks altogether on account of their studies taking up so much time. This seems to me a grave mistake, for in order to maintain the health of the body, it must have physical, as well as mental exercise; if it does not, the mind naturally keeps drawing more and more strength to itself (for whatever part of the body is used most, gains the most development), and the body is apt to suffer in consequence. We are proud, of course, to have our children intellectual, but can a really sound, vigorous mind exist in a weak body? It may, for a time, but surely in time the brain, being a part of the body, will lose more or less of its vigor if the whole be not kept in equal development, by exercise in the proper proportions.

How often we see the young graduate, pale and weak, leaving school-life behind with a sigh of thankfulness that, at last, she can sit down and rest. She feels absolutely worn out by the long strain of years of study. She cannot make much use of her education while in that condition, certainly; in fact the education itself cannot be so thorough as it would have been had the health not been impaired while it was being acquired.

Now I do not wish to be understood as meaning that work would in every case prevent such a condition as that I have referred to, but I do firmly believe work to be a great factor in both promoting and maintaining health.

Housework is said to be one of the best forms of exercise, because the tasks are so varied, that nearly all the muscles of the body are used. Then think of the advantage, especially to our daughters, of knowing how to do that work. I know we hate to require work of them when their time is so much taken up by study, but don't let us be selfish in this regard (of course we firmly believe we are showing a very *un*selfish spirit in doing everything ourselves, but we are not), for whatever is best for our children it is our duty to see that they do.

We however cannot expect young folks to be kept always at work—that would be as bad as no work at all; but let them have some few tasks to be performed regularly, and try to teach them not to shrink from helping occasionally in other things when you, perhaps, are overburdened with work, or unwell.

Above all, let us never encourage the feeling that work is degrading to anyone. It is a sad fact that many of our girls do look upon it in that way, and we mothers apt to think to ourselves, even if we do not openly say, "Oh well, let the girls enjoy themselves while they can, their time of trouble will come soon enough, when perhaps they will be obliged to work hard; that will be time enough to begin."

Dear mothers, we forget that we ourselves make that time doubly hard for our girls by not preparing them now. The girl who has been taught, by degrees, all her life to work, will not find it a heavy burden to take up a like work in a home of her own; but how is it with her whose education in that direction has been neglected, through the mistaken tenderness of those who should have taught her? Surely she is to be pitied, for it is hard to go ahead with duties that one has not been accustomed to performing, with perhaps no one to assist or give a word of advice. To be sure, our daughters may have seen bread made, meals prepared, etc., all their lives; but seeing is not like doing, by any means.

One more thought. The young are full of energy from their very babyhood, as we can plainly see by watching a child. How restless, how full of mischief it is, constantly in motion from one thing to another. Now this energy must be used in some way. If they are not trained to put it to a good use, they are liable to use it in a wrong direction, "for Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." Do we see the hard-working boy, or young man, falling into bad habits? Is it not more often the one whose energies have never been trained aright, but has been allowed to spend his time as best pleased himself; in other words, has been raised in idleness, who falls in with bad companions and is led astray? Oh mothers and fathers, think of these things. Let not your tenderness lead you to mistaken conclusions in regard to the welfare of your sons and daughters. Whatever is right and best for them, let us do, even if it be hard for ourselves.

In giving these thoughts I am far from criticising anyone, and I hope the sisters will (through the Column), for the benefit of all, mention where they see I have given mistaken or erroneous views.

May a loving heavenly Father direct us all in rightly understanding our duty to our dear ones. CLARA M. FRICK.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.

The above is a subject upon which it seems impossible there should be a difference of opinion. Anyone who has ever noticed little children cannot have failed to notice that among the first propensities a child exhibits is that of a desire to "help." No matter what is being done, the little one wants to have a hand in it, and is never so happy as when allowed to help. The sense of having been helpful will bring the light to a child's eye and make his little heart just as glad as the enjoyment of any other pleasure. I say "other pleasure," for it is a pleasure to the child, and if only parents were wise in controling and directing this natural desire of their little ones to be useful—to be employed—they would have infinitely less to contend with in their children for all time to come.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that the child knows the meaning of being useful, neither that it can be at first helpful to the mother. The child is only obeying a natural instinct; but the mother ought to understand and be able to look beyond the present. Just here, however, is where failure most frequently begins. The mother has not time, even if patience is not wanting, to train those untried powers.

O mothers, if you could only look beyond the present, and see the rich reward—the hundredfold service those now untrained, untried powers would render you, would you not take time, even at the expense of what now seems more important to you? If this time of inclination—yes even desire, and we might say longingly upon the part of the child to be helpful—is slighted and allowed to go unimproved, and the child grows up with an aversion to work, whose fault is it? Yes, the question goes even deeper than this. If the mother installs herself as a household drudge, in order that she may bring up her sons and daughters with hands unsoiled by labor, whose fault is it if in time her family come to regard her as such?

We are pleased, indeed, that such questions are being discussed in our locals, and we want the agitation upon this and kindred subjects to go on until the waves shall reach the boundaries of the church, even all who long for the uplifting of home-life.—ED.

Lesson 5.

MAN.

Body.	Spirit.
Manna.	Spirit of God.
Bread and water.	God's word.
DIE.	LIVE FOREVER.

1. Water of Life } Nature of Jesus.
2. Bread from Heaven } 1. The Sacrifice. 2. The Christ.

SACRAMENT. { Eat flesh. Drink blood.

EVERLASTING LIFE.

This review covers the substance of all the lessons preceding for this quarter.

"Man" consists of "body" and "spirit." God gave "manna" and gives "bread and water" to supply the "body," yet it will "die;" the "spirit" is supplied by the "Spirit of God," living by "God's word" (Matt. 4:4) given by that "Spirit," which word is spirit and life (John 6:63), and it (our spirit) "lives forever." By partaking of the "Water of Life" and "Bread from Heaven," we partake of the "Nature of Jesus," as shown in his work in "the sacrifice" and "the Christ," and show that we remember Him in the "Sacrament" when we partake of Bread and Wine as symbols of His "flesh" and blood, and by so doing we have "Everlasting Life."

Lesson 6.

TRUE GREATNESS.

Humble / Loving } FAITH IN CHRIST { Most useful. Precious.

Golden Text.

Object Lesson:—

Take a silver dime and a penny, and compare them in point of greatness, that it is not in size but in quality: or take a pearl or precious stone and compare it with a common rock; their greatness is in quality, not in size. Take again a polished stone prepared for some specific use, and a rough stone of same quality, and show the greatness of the one above the other is in having been subject to fitting and polishing, or the preparation for use. Show from this how we become great by being subject to God's fitting and preparing us for use in his kingdom.

We cannot always tell the greatness of a person by his appearance. Illustrate by a coin soiled by sweat, which by a little effort can be brightened, and its true value shown.

The above are only suggestive.

CHRIST AS A MODEL TEACHER.

A "model," as understood by mechanics, is a pattern after which their work shall be fashioned. Then our subject dealing with "Christ" as a "model teacher" must be looked at in much the same way that a workman regards his "model." If Christ be our teacher and our model, also, then it becomes our duty to study him and his works in such a manner as to become thoroughly acquainted with what he wishes to teach. In our study of Christ we find that he teaches by precept and practice. "Line upon line, precept upon precept; here a little and there a little." We find him teaching by precept to the young man who was not far from the kingdom of God. At another time he taught Nicodemus by precept, at another time the disciples were taught precepts, in his "Sermon on the Mount;" at another time the "woman at the well of Sychar." Still at another time he taught Peter by precept when he instructed him to "feed my sheep; feed my lambs."

Many other instances might be cited wherein he taught by precept. In all his teaching he failed not to teach the principles of the everlasting gospel, for proof of which see his conversation with Nicodemus, and with John Baptist, in which latter instance he also taught by practice, that it "becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."

After setting us the example of obedience to all laws of entrance into the kingdom, he does not stop, but continues to live in obedience to the laws of the kingdom, as notice him healing the sick, restoring sight to the blind, causing the deaf to hear, feeding the hungry; and bringing to life those who were dead that the aged in their weakness might have a support upon which to lean in old age, witness the raising of the son of the "widow of Nain." Hear him give instruction, to "do unto others as ye would have them do unto you;" see him meekly forbear to call "legions of angels" to deliver him from persecution. Notice that when reviled, he reviled not again; see him drive those who were polluting the sanctuary, from it, and hear him say, "It is written, my Father's house shall be a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves."

Time and space will not permit us to name all the instances of his teaching by precept and practice; suffice to say he kept the whole law. Let those of us who profess him to be our teacher look to our lives and see that they conform as nearly to the "Model" as is possible in our weakness to do, and let us not fail to call the attention of others to the "Model Teacher" and pattern for all mankind, that we may prove ourselves good students under a wise "instructor." May we all be found "practicing what we preach," even as he did, not shunning persecution when it is necessary that a law be obeyed.

Praying that the thoughts herein contained may profit someone, E. E. METTLEN.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL THE NURSERY OF THE CHURCH.

If this be true, then we want to know how to keep it in a healthy growing condition. In a nursery, certain work must be done to keep it in such a condition. The growth is supposed to be vigorous and strong, consequently the ground must be tilled so that it will admit both air and moisture, and to kill weeds that may have been sown. The diseased limbs must be pruned off and insects and worms that would destroy the fruit and foliage must be hunted and killed, that the trees may bring forth good fruit.

Just so the nursery of the church must be worked; the erroneous ideas pruned out that may have been formed by the traditions of men. Evil habits that destroy the good fruits of righteousness must be hunted out and destroyed, and the growth stimulated by the combined efforts of parent and teacher.

The methods employed for this training may be many, adapted to individual needs. Sometimes it may seem hard work, and oftimes it is discouraging work, and if given up when our heads and hands and hearts grow weary, we would fall far short of the results aimed at.

In a nursery care is taken that the young plants get a good start, and that should be an object lesson to us. The young in our schools should be encouraged and taught according to their capacity, and, as far as possible, should go hand in hand with precept; and here the parent supercedes the teacher. Often I hear parents telling their little children stories that soon the child learns are untrue, while at the same time if the child should tell the parent an untruth he would be perfectly horrified and wonder where the child learned to lie, and probably punish him for such an offense. Many other things might be mentioned, but, "a hint to the wise is sufficient.

EXAMPLE

THE PARENT CAN DO MUCH to help the child, by studying the lessons with him. If the lesson has been well studied at home, how quickly you can tell it by the sparkling eye and eagerness to answer each question. If, on the other hand, the lesson has hardly had a passing thought at home, the child is dull in his class, and is apt to pay but little attention to what the teacher is saying. Many of us think we have little time for this study with the hurry and worry of household cares; but maybe we had better use a little of our precious time with the child, thereby interesting him and fastening the thoughts brought out in our lesson upon his mind so that it may bring forth fruit in its season. Generally we can make a of some part of each lesson, and if talked about as we would the everyday affairs of life the child will grasp the idea, and it becomes more interesting to him.

The Sunday school has been supposed by some to be only for the young, but it is an educational institution for and all classes. No matter how old we are or how much we have studied, there are yet new thoughts brought out at the Sunday school.

Fathers and mothers who interest themselves in the Sunday school work not only benefit themselves, but by their example the children are encouraged to greater diligence, and the lessons learned in childhood are pretty well remembered in after years. Let those lessons, then, be of the very best kind, that the character of the man may reflect the teaching of the child.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Equally as applicable now as in the days of the "wise man."

The present officers were reëlected, including Bishop's agent. Preaching by G. H. Hilliard, E. K. Evans, and S. W. L. Scott. Adjourned to meet at Clear Lake, Indiana, by call of district president.

SOUTH MISSOURI.

Conference convened at Springfield, October 13. The meeting was called to order by the district president, Elder D. W. Thomas, S. N. Gray clerk. The weather being pleasant, there was a very good attendance. After the business of the day, the assembly met at 7:30 for preaching service and were addressed by Elder Merritt. Sunday morning, priesthood meeting at 9:30. Preaching at eleven a. m. by Bro. J. T. Davis. Prayer and sacrament service in the afternoon, in charge of Elder D. W. Thomas; at this meeting Bro. J. T. Davis was ordained to the office of priest. In the evening there was quite a large attendance; the speaker was Elder H. Sparling. Conference closed to convene at Pomona, Missouri, January 5 next.

DECATUR.

Conference met with Lone Rock branch near Pawnee, Missouri, October 6. F. M. Weld and D. Campbell presiding, C. I. Carpenter secretary pro tem. Ministry reporting: Elders F. M. Weld, William Anderson, D. Campbell, R. S. Salyards, M. M. Turpen, J. C. Clapp, H. N. Snively, C. H. Jones, P. McPeak, J. McDiffit, and W. E. Williams. Priests N. Lovell, J. P. Anderson, G. F. York, and E. E. Marshall; showing 7 baptisms and more than 170 sermons preached, besides considerable activity in local branch work. Branches reporting: Davis City 102, gain 1; Evergreen 107, gain 9; Lone Rock 98, gain 10; Pleasanton 91, gain 1; Allendale 85, loss 4; Greenville 52, no change; Cleveland 48, gain 7. Sunday school association, and Religio society reported joint convention held at Evergreen in September, where profiable work was done, and reports showed healthy growth and general advancement in these lines of work. Resolutions of appreciation and encourgement to these societies, as auxiliaries in the work of the church, were prepared by a committee and passed by the conference. Greenville branch recommended Bro. Joseph Bogue for ordination to the office of an elder and Bro. Francis N. Harp to the office of teacher; and the Lone Rock branch, Sunday School Associations.

KIRTLAND.

Sunday school association convened at South New Philadelphia, formerly Blake Mills, Ohio, October 8. Superintendent, assistant superintendent, and secretary all being absent, Bro. F. Ebeling presided by authority of district secretary. Sr. I. J. McMillen secretary. Short talk by Bro. Hilliard on the importance of Sunday school work, and the training of young minds in the right direction. Report of secretary, and of Kirtland school read and approved. A verbal report of Blake Mills school by Bro. Charles Cramer was very encouraging. Bro. Dalberg gave a verbal report of Akron school, showing that interest is being manifested, and the prospect for growth bright. Bro. Tary talked very interestingly of progress of Wheeling school. Bro. Baldwin told of the excellency of Sharon school. Short talk by Bro. Ebeling on the influence that children exert over their elders. Bro. McDowell discoursed on the importance of the school relative to church work. A few remarks by Sr. Belle McMillen on the importance of woman's work in the Sunday school. Sr. Cramer testified to blessings derived from the Sunday school. Bro. W. H. Kelley talked on the subject of introducing the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon as class work in the Sunday school, not deeming it wise to do so in a Sunday school in its infancy. The question, Shall we adopt the International lesson text, was taken up. After discussing the subject, the convention resolved that we continue the use of our own lesson text. Bro. Dalberg asked the question, What benefits are derived by a Sunday school belonging to the association. Bro. McDowell answered, showing that the same benefit was derived as for a branch to belong to a district conference, and then discoursed on the benefits accruing from having a Sunday school association. Akron school was received into the association. Officers elected: Richard Baldwin, superintendent; Charles Cramer, assistant; Dora E. McFarland, secretary; Sarah Baldwin, treasurer. Committee on program: Brn. Francis Ebeling and Charles Cramer, Sisters Hattie Griffiths, Bessie Darst, and Isabella J. McMillen. Resolved that the association work in the interest of the tent, to raise money to purchase tent and equipments. Motion made and carried, that when the association convenes in February, that the Sunday schools go en masse. Resolved that we meet as an institute, and that the place of meeting be left for the district officers to decide. An interesting literary program was rendered by Blake Mills school; Sharon school not being represented as was expected, owing to the sad death of one of their brightest scholars. Bro. Baldwin gave the address of welcome; Bro. McDowell gave a very interesting ten minute discourse. The most interesting feature of the evening's entertainment was a motion song by "Six little sunbeams." Adjourned to meet the last week in February, 1901, at place designated by district superintendent.

NORTHEAST MISSOURI.

District Sunday school association met at Pollock branch, October 5; Mary J. Richards superintendent, D. L. Morgan secretary pro tem. Reports were had from Pollock, Bevier, Higbee, and Salt River schools. Superintendent's reports were received from Robert Thrutchley of Salt River, and D. L. Morgan of Bevier. Treasurer's report was read and approved: Balance last report $12 50; receipts $3 41; expenditures $3 98; balance October 1, $11 93. George A. Tryon treasurer. Bill of expense of assistant superintendent, $4.92, was allowed and ordered paid. The election of superintendent which was deferred at last convention was again deferred till next convention. Bro. D. L. Morgan was chosen chorister, Annie Williams organist. Sr. Allie Thorburn read a paper: "What should be the attitude of parents toward the Sunday school." Bro. Morgan read a paper: "How are the Sunday school and Religio associated." At night an entertainment was rendered, consisting of songs, recitations, etc. School on Sunday morning at 9:30. A review was given by Joseph Tanner. A collection was taken, amounting to $1.05. Adjourned to meet prior to next district conference, at the same place.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

District Sunday school association convened at Beaverton, October 12. C. E. Irwin elected superintendent, H. J. Badder associate superintendent, C. B. Joice secretary, Alice Joselyn treasurer. J. J. Cornish, J. H. Peters, J. A. Grant, C. E. Irwin, delegates to General Association. Adjourned to meet at Fork, second Friday in June, 1901.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

Southeastern Illinois district Sunday school convention will meet on Friday night before the conference, at Springerton, November 17 and 18. A program has been arranged. Will the Saints have their children get recitations for additional program. A good time is expected. Come one and all.

J. T. CURTIS, Pres.

Semiannual convention of Massachusetts district Sunday school will convene Saturday, November 10, at 2:30, 54 Broadway, Somerville, Massachusetts. Let all the people come, and make it a session of more than usual interest. Take any Broadway, Somerville, car. M. C. FISHER, Supt.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAMS.

The Christmas programs issued by the General Sunday School Association will be ready to mail about November 10, 1900. Price will be 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen, or $4 per hundred, postage prepaid. Send orders to the business manager of the Herald Office, Bro. John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa. Order your programs early and begin work on them at once.

We have examined the manuscript of this program and consider it of unusual merit and will do credit to the many contributors and to the committee which prepared it. It is adapted to the use of the smallest school in the association or to the largest. You may find parts for any individual or class in your school. It has been prepared with this point especially in view. So do not think that your school could not use it.

We hope that all schools whether large or small will celebrate the Christmas with appropriate exercises. Do not desecrate the day or treat the occasion lightly, but make it one of pleasure, worship, and reverence. These programs are issued with the hope to assist those who wish to celebrate the day with appropriate exercises by furnishing them with material such as they cannot find without much effort if at all. We believe that all will be pleased with the program that use it.

SECOND QUORUM OF ELDERS.

I have lately mailed to each member of the quorum one of our circular letters; if any one should fail to receive one, please inform me and I will send you another at once. Each member will please seek to do all he can to magnify his calling, and keep a correct account of all labors, so that on the first of March, 1901, you may be able to make your report. I will send a blank to you before that time, to be filled out, so that I can have our report all in order when we meet at General Conference in April, at Independence, Missouri. F. C. WARNKY, Sec.

NOTICES.

On account of the growing needs of general society of Daughters of Zion, the Advisory Committee have decided to call upon all locals for funds to carry on the work. We trust all will respond soon, and as liberal as possible. Please send all money by post office order to the treasurer, Mrs. Anna Murphy, P.O. box 269, Independence, Missouri.

MRS. H. H. ROBINSON, Sec.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

A PARAPHRASE OF MATT. 4 AND LUKE 4, BY COUNT TOLSTOI.

Jesus came from Galilee to the Jordan to be bathed by John; and bathed and heard John's preaching.

And the voice of the flesh said to him: "If you were Son of the Almighty God, you might of your own will make loaves out of stones; but you cannot do this, therefore you are not Son of God." But Jesus said to himself: "If I cannot make bread out of stones, this means that I am not Son of a God of the flesh, but Son of the God of the Spirit. I am alive, not by bread, but by the Spirit, and My Spirit is able to disregard the flesh.

But hunger, nevertheless, tormented Him; and the voice of the flesh again said to him: "If you live only by the Spirit, and can disregard the flesh, then you can throw off the flesh and your Spirit will remain alive." And it seemed to him that he was standing on the roof of the temple and the voice of the flesh said to him: "If you are Son of the God of the Spirit, throw yourself off the temple. You will not be killed. But an unforseen force will keep you, support you, and keep you from all harm." But Jesus said to himself: "I can disregard the flesh, but may not throw it off, because I was born by the Spirit into the flesh. This was the will of the Father of my Spirit, and I cannot oppose him."

Then the voice of the flesh said to him: "If you cannot oppose your Father by throwing yourself off the temple and discarding life, then you also cannot oppose him by hungering when you need to eat. You must not make light of the desires of the flesh. They were placed in you and you must serve them." Then Jesus seemed to see all the kingdoms of the earth, and all mankind, just as they live and labor for the flesh, expecting gain therefrom. And the voice of the flesh said to him: "Well, you see, these work for me, and I give them all they wish for. If you will work for me, you will have the same." But Jesus said: "My Father is not flesh, but Spirit. I live by him; I always know that he is in me. Him alone I honor, and for him alone I work, expecting reward from him alone."

Then the temptation ceased and Jesus knew the power of the Spirit.—Iowa Sunday School Helper.

GROWTH OF CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE.

We stand at the dawn of the twentieth century, and we find Christianity stronger today. Her adherents in 1800 were perhaps 200,000,000; today they are close upon 500,000,000. Not in numbers alone but in vantage ground of influence she has grown in strength; the Christian nations now wield sovereign influence over 800,000,000 out of the 1,400,000,000 of the world's population. Measure the Christian influence by area and we find that for every mile of the earth's surface governed by non-Christian peoples four are ruled by Christian nations. Yet Voltaire prophesied that before the opening of the nineteenth century Christianity would have vanished from the face of the earth.

But more important than all eternal tokens of growth is the deepening of the unseen hold of Christianity upon mankind. Within the last thirty years an enlargement of the scope of the Christian aim has taken place. Under the shadow of Christianity humane institutions have always flourished, but during the last generation the thoughts of men have turned towards Christian and social ethics in a way before unknown. Almost irresistibly the organizations which were started for a definitely spiritual object have been drawn into social channels. The Salvation Army has developed the social work in which it has achieved so marked a success; the church army has established its labor homes and its labor bureau. Settlements, as they are now called, were unknown twenty years ago.

Along with this there has been a gradual awakening of men to the meaning of social ethics. "There has never been in this country (the reference is to America) such a revival of the civic conscience as at present, such an effort to introduce righteousness into all departments of society. Public conscience is a force in America." The witness is true for the English-speaking race. Last century 2,000,000 slaves were carried in English ships. Now England owns none. Forty years ago there were between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 slaves in the United States; now there are none. The conditions of the workers in city and in country have been ameliorated; the slaveries which wait upon civilization have been greatly mitigated.

These and a thousand more are indications of the growth of that wonderful and precious force, the public conscience. We must not, however, stay our hands or congratulate ourselves too loudly. We have recently been warned how slowly moral ideas penetrate the public mind and translate themselves into practice. In proportion as the public conscience and the Christ-like spirit is awake in us we shall be alive—not so much to what has been done as to what yet remains to be done. It has been calculated that in some parts of London 40 per cent of the population live in conditions which can only be called scandalous. It has been shown that whereas in the favored quarters of London eight in every 100 are above 60 years of age, in the crowded portions they are only six. We are told that in one district of London out of a total of 6,006 tenements 1,854 are one-roomed tenements. These figures serve as an illustration that much needs to be done. To meet the new century with its fresh problems and its old-age questions, with perplexing difficulties, its overmastering responsibilities, and its splendid possibilities, I know no better motto for the church than that which comes down to us from the greatest of Irish saints—"Christ be with me, Christ within me."—Right-Rev. William B. Carpenter, in Chicago Tribune, October 21, 1900.

A PRESENT DAY CHARLOTTE BRONTE.

A really great novelist is promised in the young English woman, Una L. Silberrad, whose "The Lady of Dreams" has just been published by Doubleday, Page and Co. Miss Silberrad is the heroine of a career not unlike that of Charlotte Bronte, whom she brings to mind in many other ways. She is of mingled German and Spanish ancestry, and was born less than thirty years ago in a small village of Essex, which has ever since remained her home. The eldest daughter of a large family, she has long been the head of her father's household, and it was in the scant leisure of successive Sunday afternoons that she began and finished "The Enchanter." This book, the fruit of five years of labor, was published in November, 1899, and at once welcomed by the discerning as displaying the rarest creative gifts. These are again in evidence in "The Lady of Dreams," which deals in a quiet but compelling way with life in the poorer quarter of London. Should further work by its author redeem the pledges of vitality and power she has already given she is sure to take rank at an early day with the foremost women writers of England.

AUTUMN SONG

Let Autumn come with wild carouse,
And scourge the woods, and bare the boughs
Once gay with summer glees;
Let shattered blossoms fall to earth,
And know no more the gentle mirth
Of happy birds and bees;
Why—why should care your lover,
Whose love hath made him wise?
He feels the thrill of Maytime still,
Its dewlight in your eyes.

Let crafty Winter hide from sight
The murdered leaves in cerements white,
And hush the valley's moan;
Let Summer's phantom stray the field
And never find a trace concealed
Where beauty's feet have flown;
From me there is no wailing,
No word of sorrow slips.
A fairer bloom no frost can doom
Is mine upon your lips.

A LITERARY FREE LANCE.

It is the humorous boast of Miss Jeannette, L. Gilder, editor of The Critic, that she has never been ill and has never worn evening dress in her life. And she is wont to add that she worked for nearly twenty years without a single week's vacation. These facts give the keynote to the career of one of the most engaging and unconventional figures in the literary life of New York. Miss Gilder was born on Long Island, but spent the best part of her earlier years at Bordentown, N. J. The story of her girlhood is told with spirit and humor in The Autobiography of a Tomboy which has lately come from the press of Doubleday, Page & Co. Those who make acquaintance with its amusing pages will not be surprised to learn that its author's favorite book as a girl was Franklin's Autobiography, and that her first story, written when she was ten years old, was called Kate's Escapade. While still in her teens Miss Gilder became a working journalist on a Newark, N. J., newspaper, and afterward served in turn on the New York Tribune and Herald. Nineteen years ago, in conjunction with her brother, she started The Critic with which her name and labors have since been identified.

Dr. Russell H. Chittenden, the director of the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, one of the greatest practical institutions in the world, believes in the broadest possible education. In an article in the Saturday Evening Post he writes:—

"There can be no question that in any suitable college course in mechanical engineering, for example, there should be a judicious commingling of theoretical and practical, but the shop, laboratory, and drawing room work should be mainly for the elucidation of the theoretical, and not as an end in itself. Given a young man of broad knowledge, with a mind cultivated by the higher mathematics, and with a thorough conception of the principles and laws of physics, mechanics, hydraulics, etc., and he will soon adjust himself to the environment of his professional work, and eventually rise to a plane far beyond that of the man whose training has been purely technical. If this is so, then such a method of education is to be recommended as more truly practical. I am told by competent engineers, and the statement coincides with my own views, that it is very questionable if the student of engineering derives as much real advantage from the workshop method of instruction as he would gain by expending the time in the study of scientific principles; that the detailed knowledge of the practical application of principles is best obtained by the young man in the shops themselves after his college course, and although he may at first be handicapped, he will quickly adjust himself to the environment and eventually make a far more competent engineer from his broader knowledge of scientific facts and principles. The main object of the practical college course should be to provide a liberal education along various scientific lines, and yet to afford such facilities in certain directions that the student may acquire a proficiency sufficient to fit him for some professional work, or at least to pave the way for further development along some special line.

Asphalt is being dug out of the famous tar lake of Trinidad—the most notable existing source of the material in the world—at the rate of eighty thousand tons per annum. There are still four and a half million tons in sight, but at this rate the supply could not last long, were it not that the lake of bitumen referred to is receiving a constant accretion from the bowels of the earth. This accretion is reckoned as amounting to about twenty thousand tons yearly, and would suffice to restore the lake to its original condition if it were allowed to remain undisturbed for a few years.

This wonderful lake of pitch has an area of one hundred and fourteen acres, and recent soundings made in the middle of it have shown its depth to be one hundred and thirty-five feet in that part. Near the center it is semiliquid and bubbling, but elsewhere it has so hard a surface that a man on horseback can ride over it without danger of breaking through the crust. Scattered over its surface are a number of small islands which have no proper roots in the earth, so to speak, but are composed merely of accumulations of soil, though trees of considerable size grow on some of them. These islands are not stationary, but are carried slowly from place to place by the movements of the lake. Now and then one of them is entirely engulfed.—Saturday Evening Post.

Henry Demarest Lloyd, who in Newest England published by Doubleday, Page & Co., has done for Australia what James Bryce did for our own institutions in his American Commonwealth, was born fifty odd years ago in New York City, where his mother's ancestors had lived for ten generations. His father, a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, was a descendant of Goffe, the regicide. The younger Lloyd was graduated at Columbia, studied law and was duly admitted to the bar. However, he soon tired of legal practice, and for thirteen years following 1872 was a hard working member of the editorial staff of the Chicago Tribune. In 1885 he retired from that paper because of ill-health and diverging opinions and five years later he issued A Strike of Millionaires Against Miners, which at once brought him into prominence as an original and suggestive writer on economic subjects. This was followed, in 1894, by Wealth Against Commonwealth, one of the thought-moulding books of the closing decade, while more recently he has published Labor Co-partnership, another contribution of the first importance to industrial discussion. In the preparation of Newest England Mr. Lloyd spent the greater part of a year in New Zealand and Australia, and it will doubtless long remain the standard book on the development of popular government in those lands.

The November number of the Household is exceptionally noteworthy. The cover, drawn especially for the Household, is executed in two colors, and tells a pleasing story of Colonial days and ways and is in itself a work of art. The stories are from such well-known writers as Sophie Swett, Will Allan Dromgoole, J. L. Harbour. There are illustrated articles by Col. T. W. Higginson, Kate Sanborn, and Fannie Bullock Workman—the only woman who has climbed the Himalayas. The illustrators for the month are Chase Emerson, H. W. Colby, Louis Meynelle, and E. Jepson.

Under the new management, the Household of Boston, Mass., promises to become one of the first in the field of magazines devoted to home interests.

A glance at the prospectus for the coming year indicates that Household readers will be well supplied with choice selections. Some of the best known and popular authors of the day will contribute to its pages, and the art work and the illustrations will surpass anything heretofore published.

Look at the army of salesmen and saleswomen in our stores. There is not, I believe, as capable or honest a corps of workers in the world. Yet a French or English shopgirl will sell twice as many goods in the same time, and the customer will come again and again to be served by the same woman. Why? Because she is civil and courteous.

There is something pitiful as well as ridiculous in the indifference, the hauteur, the actual rudeness of many of the intelligent young men and women behind our counters. Yet, civility is their capital. By selling gloves or tinware they earn their living, and the more civil they are, the more they sell.

Most of my readers know a few saleswomen who have remained in some of the old business houses until an honored old age, and, by their ability and courtesy, have made for themselves hosts of friends. It is a pity that these foolish young people could not learn their business from them.—November Ladies' Home Journal.

COURTESY.

That our heavenly Father recognizes the value of courtesy as a characteristic of his servants, is evidenced by the fact that he has admonished them to "approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor," the object being, as stated in the language which follows, "that they may win souls to Christ."

The apostle Peter, also, recognizing the importance of this trait of character, admonishes the saints to be courteous.

There can be no doubt that true courtesy carries with it a wonderful influence; in fact, we consider this beautiful trait of character but one of the natural manifestations of charity, that crowning virtue of the children of God. There are so many things in the dispositions and environments of the children of men that prevent them reaching the same conclusions, so many things that tend to produce a variety of opinions, that one should be willing to manifest a courteous regard for the opinions and dispositions of others, even though they may appear peculiar and unreasonable. Besides, a proper regard for others will tend to win their respect, and until this is accomplished, our efforts to influence them will avail but little. Let a man understand that his views are respected and given due consideration, and he will be in a much better frame of mind for the reception of truth than he would were his ideas met with ridicule and sarcasm. One of the most influential of men was Benjamin Franklin; and he himself attributes his influence not so much to his ability as an orator, as to his persuasiveness of manner and his consideration for the opinions of others. Truth, both in principle and in manner of presentation, should be attractive, not repellant; but it is possible to present even principles of truth in such an abrupt, unpleasant way, that the honest seeker is repelled, and even seriously hindered in his researches.

Right principles, in order that they may shine with clearest light should be presented in a right way, and exemplified by right conduct.

In a general sense, too, courtesy is a rare trait of character. It beautifies the individual, giving as it does a proper and refined tone to both word and action. As the diamond is made more valuable by being polished, so the influence of a true character is enhanced by that gentility of conduct characteristic of a noble mind. We do not think it necessary to withhold or compromise truth in order to comply with this injunction of our heavenly parent. On the contrary, candor and courtesy are inseparable companions. We cannot be truly courteous without being candid. But that happy faculty of saying and doing unpleasant things in a pleasant way, and of so combining the qualities of gentleness, candor, and firmness, that true courtesy shall be apparent in all our conduct, will add much to our ability to bring "souls to Christ."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

WESTON, Iowa, Oct. 26.

Editors Herald:—In the Herald for October 17, under the heading "A Question of Legality," before quoting from the article on marriage, section 111, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, you say: "The church in solemn assembly, August 17, 1835, made public declaration upon the point as follows."

In looking over the minutes of the general assembly August 17, 1835, as published in Millennial Star, vol. 15, pages 299 and 300, I fail to find any mention of any article on marriage. I am not writing to criticise, but for information. I would like to know if the minutes of the solemn assembly August 17, 1835, were published in the Messenger and Advocate, or in any other church publication previous to the publication in Millennial Star; and if so, if said minutes make any mention of the adoption of the article on marriage referred to? It has been my understanding that the article was adopted by the assembly and ordered printed in the book. But, how can it be proven? This is the question that I am concerned about. I dislike to trouble you, but if you will answer me either by letter, or through the Herald, I will be very thankful.

Your brother,
H. N. HANSEN.

In reply to the above letter of inquiry we quote from the edition of Doctrine and Covenants (then called Covenants and Commandments) for 1835, page 257. It is taken from the minutes of the General Assembly, dated August 17, 1835:—

President W. W. Phelps then read an article on marriage, which was accepted and adopted, and ordered to be printed in said book, by a unanimous vote.

In volume 1, No. 11, of the Messenger and Advocate, for August, 1835, the minutes of the General Assembly, held August 17, 1835, appear on pages 161 to 164 inclusive. On page 162, this entry is found:—

President W. W. Phelps then read the following article on marriage, which was accepted and adopted, and ordered to be printed in said book, by unanimous vote, namely.

After which the article on marriage is given as it was published in the edition of 1835, and all other editions up to the fall of 1876, including the edition published at Nauvoo in 1846 by John Taylor, the editions of 1852, 1854, 1856, Liverpool, England, by Orson Pratt, and Islington, 1869, by Albert Carrington.

1. If the Saints are all to be gathered to Zion or regions round about before the Savior comes, as some of the elders teach, please explain Matthew 24: 31, 40, 41?

2. Has the church ever decided that man, (Adam) had no blood until he fell? One of our missionaries teaches that in the pulpit. If the church teaches that give quotation.

3. Has the church ever decided that the one hundred and forty-four thousand of Revelation 14: 1-5 were those, all those, and only those who were resurrected on the day of Christ's resurrection? If so, when?

1. The church does not assume to indorse all that "some elders" teach.

Matthew 24: 3 to 41 inclusive, teach that at the coming of Christ certain conditions will be existent such as are stated; but the church has not taught that the Saints would "all be gathered to Zion, or the regions round about before the Savior comes;" any more than it has that the Jews would all be gathered to Jerusalem in belief that Jesus is the Christ, as some hold or that they will be gathered in unbelief, as some others hold and argue.

It is stated positively in verse 36 that no man knoweth the day or the hour when the Savior will come, hence it is reasonable to suppose that the details of some of the events shall be attendant on his coming and the transpiring of which may be taken as presaging his coming are so given as to be definitely arranged by those looking for his coming; the general features we may know, but the details not being specified may not know, but may conjecture.

Another thing, there may be some who are elect that are not in the regions round about whom God may have gathered from the "four winds, from one end of heaven to the other," as suggested: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all his holy angels with him; then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."—Matt. 25: 31. "And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."—Zech. 14: 5.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

It is unnecessary for us to notice questions 2, and 3, as the church has never taken the subjects mentioned into consideration nor made any ruling or suggestion in regard to them. It is a matter of personal opinion and speculation upon the part of him or them who so teach. They are not representing the views of the church, or the consensus of opinion of the elders, when they so teach.

Editors Herald:—In reading the last Herald, and enjoying it as I ever have, I came to Bro. Peter Anderson's letter. I read it and laid it down in astonishment, and, need I add, disgust? I thought, Can my eyes deceive me? I read again. I fail to see any merit in the letter from beginning to end, nothing to edify or lift up. Then why should the fair pages of our beloved Herald be polluted with such? While it is true, it is made up of quotations from "Utah elders," yet we are not with them in practice or principle; then why quote them? We know they and their doctrines are a "stink in the nostrils of Jehovah;" that they are an abomination in his sight. I have been in habit of giving my Herald to my neighbors and friends to read, but would be ashamed to give them this one. Neither would I allow my children to read it. Better read "Beadle's Dime Novels." You may say, "To the pure all things are pure;" but if there is anything pure in that letter I fail to see it.

You may think I have no right to criticise; but I am a subscriber to the Herald and look to it for something to cheer, edify, and lift up. I have no apology to make.

A LATTER DAY SAINT.

P. S.—He was called away and did not know all. Better had he not heard any or kept it to himself.

How any men with the "pure love of God in their hearts," can listen to such low, profane, and vulgar language is a mystery to me, let alone repeating it.

The foregoing letter is from an almost lifelong member of the church, and therefore entitled to some consideration.

We as a church contend that there are wide differences between the church in Utah and the Reorganization. That the results accruing to community and the social fabric from the teaching and practice of polygamy, or plural marriage are bad. Bro. Peter Anderson is one of the representatives of the Reorganized Church at work in Utah. It is his privilege and duty to take notice of events as they transpire in his field, both the acts and sayings of men; and, whatever is of note, or value, either in favor of or against our contention, he should report it and place it on record that whosoever may be interested may read, and reading may understand why we contend as we do.

We have reread the letter of Bro. Anderson, and failed to find just reasons why it should be offensive to those in or out of the church if read as Bro. Anderson intended it to be read, as indicating the fact that some of the leading men who spoke at the late conference of the church in Utah were conscious that there was a condition of things existing among the younger element of the dominant church there that was not good and ought to be corrected. Whether those men were conscious of the possible causes leading to such condition or not, it is a hopeful indication, and as such we notice it.

We cannot possibly consult all the patrons of the HERALD as to what should go into its columns, before it does go in; and if we could there are so many who would repress this, that and the other, that we would not be able to please all, so we have to follow our own convictions and take the risk of the criticism to follow.

We have no desire to offend any of the subscribers to the HERALD, but rather desire to please and always regret when we fail.

There is no necessity for "a Latter Day Saint," to apologize for the criticism, for none is asked or expected.

THE mission of Utah elders in the south is not altogether free from mobocratic interference, as the following taken from the Salt Lake Herald for October 26, 1900, will show:—

SOUTHERN BOXERS.

Under the above heading the Southern Star of October 20 gives the following details of the recent mobbings of elders in the south:—

September 20 Elders C. G. Anderson and George O. Holt entered a little settlement called King's Creek, in Cherokee county, for the purpose of visiting some saints whom they had recently baptized. Just before reaching their destination they were accosted by eight men, who warned them to leave inside of two hours, and were only protected from the cowardly assaults of the villains by a man who interfered in behalf of the elders. After dusk a mob of thirty-five men started upon the track of the elders, but were confused in the route of the brethren and abandoned the pursuit.

October 6 Elders J. P. Illum and J. T. Lazenby were passing through the same neighborhood en route to Blacksburg, and were evidently followed and located at the home of Brother J. L. Etters at Blacksburg by three men. Elder Lazenby was sick and went to bed as soon as he arrived. Elders Anderson, Holt, and Illum held meeting the same night at the home of Brother Sanders. After meeting Elder Anderson returned with Brother and Sister Etters, where Elder Lazenby had been left sick in bed.

About eleven o'clock, as they sat enjoying a pleasant conversation, their peace and silence was broken by confusion and clamor like a pack of Russian wolves in the act of surrounding their helpless victims. The house was soon surrounded and filled with cowardly fiends, who bore every characteristic quality of the Prince of Darkness. One miserable coward drew a gun on Sister Etters when she interfered in behalf of the elders, and threatened to treat her like they intended to mete out to the elders. Brother Etters also was covered by two or more guns, as was Elder Anderson.

In the meantime several men entered an adjoining room, in which Elder Lazenby was sleeping, and cruelly dragged him from his bed and started with him in the direction of the woods, with no other clothing on than his garments.

Upon trying to reason with the mobocrats, Elder Lazenby was struck over the head with a weapon, which nearly rendered him unconscious. Elder Anderson was pulled out of the house by four men, and taken with Elder Lazenby into the woods, where the mob's horses were tied.

Elder Anderson was partly stripped of his clothing and given forty lashes, while Elder Lazenby was given but eighteen, because of its being his first entrance into the county. They then were released and warned to leave the state at once, under penalty of hanging. Elders Holt and Illum, who were stopping at the home of Bro. Gordon, were at once notified of the presence of a mob, and found refuge in the woods.

The mob, which consisted of thirty-five men, then went six miles to Cherokee Falls and severely whipped Brother Thomas Martin, who has just recently joined the church.

Elder Nix and I, on the afternoon of the mobbing, went over the line into North Carolina to see some Saints. On entering a little town named Grover we were informed by a man that there was a mob after us. We took no notice of the rumor, but continued on to our destination, supposing our presence was the cause of the action. Monday we returned and learned of the trouble; also that part of the men had come from North Carolina. We went at once to the officials at Blacksburg, whose duty it is to maintain peace and order, and asked for protection, as a petition to ostracize and drive out the elders, saints and friends from the county has been and now is in circulation among our enemies.

The justice of the peace gave us no satisfaction whatever and intimated by his prejudiced conversation that his code of laws afforded no justice for a "Mormon," which indeed was amply proven by remarks made by him to one of our members, in which he said: "The law can't get at the 'Mormon elders' for preaching their doctrine; neither can the law get at those who mob them."

There is an effort now on the part of these fiends to effect a union between the merchants and millers to prevent the saints and friends from getting food and supplies.

As is invariably the case, we have found at the head of this mob a man who professes to be preaching the gospel of Christ and who pretends to teach those righteous principles which will result in the universal brotherhood of mankind. Among the mob also was a merchant and others quite as prominent. May the Lord have mercy on their poor souls, should they ever be considered worthy of beholding his presence on the day of judgment.

THE PROPOSED MARKING OF GRAVES OF THE MARTYRS.

The letter of Bro. J. W. Wight, published awhile ago in the HERALD calling attention to the neglected condition of the supposed burial place of the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, has started a wave of sentiment and feeling in many places, and letters concerning it are finding their way to the Bishop, some of which contain inquiries, money, and proffers of money. Secrecy regarding these graves was for a long time enjoined and observed through fear of a possibility of desecration for selfish purposes, or otherwise; so that the location is known to but few persons, probably less than five, though many have conjectured touching it.

The family of Joseph Smith has not been financially able to place a suitable monument, or other memorial stone, or inclosure to indicate where the remains of the martyrs are lying since the passing of time may have made it safe to so mark the place.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Hence, no effort has ever been made by them to point out the spot.

The family is not given to superstition, or overmuch sentimentality; and believe that the Angel of the Resurrection will not need a stone of recognition by which to find the bodies of these and other witnesses when the dead shall be raised.

The movement for a suitable marking of the spot does not originate with the family; but the members of it will not resent nor resist such movement if those who choose should raise a fund for the purpose; nor will they refuse the trust proposed by the Bishop to execute the purpose of the contributors; stipulating only that they may associate with themselves such other persons as will properly secure the carrying of the trust into faithful execution.

JOSEPH SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 31.

ANOTHER new magazine has been placed before the reading world. It is The World's Work, published by Doubleday, Page, and Company, of 34 Union Square, New York. The first number is the November one, and is an excellent sample of magazine work. The field it will occupy is briefly outlined in the following paragraph:—

It is with the activities of the newly organized world, its problems and even its romance, that this magazine will earnestly concern itself, trying to convey the cheerful spirit of men who do things.

We always welcome the advent of worthy literature, and the new magazine receives our welcome, for if its first number is the criterion, it will fill a worthy place in the magazine world. Its one hundred and sixteen pages are filled with good things, covering a wide scope of subjects.

THE minutes of the European conference, as published in late HERALD, contains this clause:—

At 2: 20 p. m. the auditing committee on Bishop's agent's account reported acount correct; but find no receipts from Bro and Sr. Pitt for amounts they received, which we consider not business like or fair to the Bishop's agent.

The wording of this caused some to think that Bro. and Sr. Pitt were brought under censure. In explanation, Elder C. H. Caton, who was presiding at the time, writes:—

Finding there were no receipts handed in by agent for moneys received by Bro. and Sr. Pitt, they [the auditing committee] returned to assembly and asked Bro. Taylor if he had any receipts. Bro. Taylor replied that he had not been in the habit of taking receipts from any of the missionaries, as he did not think it necessary. Bro. and Sr. Pitt had been no exception to the rule. When he had sent money by post, the missionaries acknowledged by post card or letter receiving it, but he had not asked for receipts in the ordinary way of receipts.

This explanation, no doubt, will set matters straight. There was nothing in the report of the auditing committee that justly construed is reflective on Bro. Pitt and his wife; it was simply the reporting of a fact in business conduct, and if anyone was in fault it would be the agent who paid the money and not the ones receiving it. Bro. Caton's letter explains it, and there the matter is dropped.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

In reporting his field, Northern Illinois and Michigan, Bro. John H. Lake writes October 29, in excellent spirits:—

I have no complaints to make. My associate laborers have done well. Bro. Peak is taking well with the Saints and friends at Galien. Bro. C. Scott is doing fairly well at Detroit and some other points where he is laboring. The mission is doing well financially.

Nineteen baptisms, twelve of them at Clear Lake, Indiana. Bro. Lake has been over the district and finds good opportunities for work for all and is satisfied the prospect is good.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. George E. Harrington, formerly of Independence, Missouri, now of Elwood, Pennsylvania, would like to correspond with the president of the Pittsburg district. Bro. Harrington would like to do some local labor, if agreeable to authorities. He would be pleased if any of the missionaries would visit him. Give him a call; you will find him a whole-souled, wide awake man.

The Hamilton, Scotland, Advertiser, for October 13, reaches our hand from Bro. J. W. Rushton, we presume, which contains a three quarters of a column communication over Bro. Rushton's signature, under the title, "Utah and Its People." This article is in fine print, and is a reply to one from the pen of a Utah elder, Snedden by name, who, it seems from Bro. Rushton's showing, has been either withholding the truth concerning the church of which he is an elder, or has been making incorrect statements, and charging Bro. Rushton with lying. Bro. Rushton's article is clear-cut and direct, dealing with well established facts, and making arguments therefrom which may not readily be answered by any one from the Utah point of view.

Awhile ago it was at Galveston, Texas, that a great storm destroyed life and property; now it is at Lacross, Wisconsin, that a great storm has brought death to some and made many homeless. Surely the Lord is pleading by storm! And an earthquake at Caraccas, Venezuela, begins the list of seismic disturbances for the season. What next?

By the Coquille City, Oregon, Herald, for October 16, kindly sent us, we learn that Bro. D. L Harris and Bro. Charles Crumley are busy in their field, as several references are made to the work of Brn. Harris and Crumley at Coquille City and Bandon. May their opportunities continue to increase, and blessings follow their labor.

Through the efforts of a lot of medical college students, John Alexander Dowie has ceased his attempt to lecture in London and left a deacon to continue his efforts. The students succeeded by disturbances of Mr. Dowie's meetings to wear the old doctor out. We do not approve of Dowieism, but do disapprove of the method used to defeat it.

The towns of San Casimiro, Cua, and Charallano in Venezuela were destroyed by earthquake November 28, and an island at the mouth of the Naeri river disappeared in the same convulsion of the earth's surface.

The French minister of war has given instruction to the officers of the army to give cordial reception to Jewish officers from Coblintz. He also declares that there shall be no more anti-Semitism in the army.

Bro. Rees Jenkins writing from Johnstown, Pennsylvania, states that they would like to see one of the brethren of the field in which Johnstown is, pay them a visit. He mentions a spiritual manifestation made to a lady who was earnestly seeking the way of life that was quite remarkable, and may lead to her uniting with the church.

Bro. Dr. John A. Reese, of 563 West Chicago avenue, near Wood street, Chicago, Illinois, has published a neat little pamphlet entitled, "Bible Sanctification," which he is selling for general distribution, ten cents per dozen, fifty cents a hundred, or free. The money received is for the benefit of the church.

Bro. I. N. White's quarterly report shows the mission to be in fair condition, laborers busy, and seventy-five baptisms. He writes in hopeful terms of the work in his field. The most of the missionaries in his field report that they are blessed in their efforts to a greater degree than in former years. There is an upward growth in spirituality which is very encouraging.

Bro. T. C. Kelley reporting from the southeastern Mission states that there have been thirteen baptisms already, with fair prospects for more; and that "the most hopeful sign is in the increased spirituality and desire to 'come up higher' among the Saints in different places."

Grace is the favor of God; that is, by his favor man is invited to accept the terms upon which he may have life.

LOVE.

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another.—John 13:34.

From the testimony of the Scriptures we may believe that love is the all pervading and all prevailing principle in the world above. One who knew God, wrote:—

Love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.—1 John 4:9.

Love, then, moved the Father in his design and plan to redeem the human family. It equally moved the Son in his execution of the Father's will, according to his own words to his disciples:—

As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you.—John 15:9.

The extent of this love is also set forth in the words,—

God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

Its quality is grandly depicted in the language,—

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

No reservation in this love; nothing withheld. It was perfect, and complete.

That love is in all and through all that pertains to the plan of redemption, is further shown by the question, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" and the Savior's answer,—

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matt. 22:36-40.

The love of God is intended, then, to have its perfect work, its full application, in all who are born of God, among men, for the will of God is to be done on earth "as it is done in heaven." Jesus, who said, "I am the way, the truth and the life," made this love manifest in his life of sacrifice, in his precepts, and in his final sufferings and death, refusing not the bitter cup, even the complete withdrawal of the Spirit and presence of the Father, causing him to say, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" and touching which the Lord revealed to Martin Harris through Joseph the Seer:—

Eternal punishment is God's punishment. Endless punishment is God's punishment. Wherefore, I command you to repent, and keep the commandments which you have received by the hand of Joseph Smith, Jr., in my name; and it is by my almighty power that you have received them; therefore I command you to repent—repent, lest I smite you by the rod of my mouth, and by my wrath, and by my anger, and your sufferings be sore—how sore you know not! how exquisite you know not! yea, how hard to bear you know not! For, behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer, if they would repent; but if they would not repent, they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit, and would that I might not drink the bitter cup and shrink; nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men; wherefore, I command you again to repent, lest I humble you with my almighty power, and that you confess your sins, lest you suffer these punishments of which I have spoken, of which in the smallest, yea, even in the least degree, you have tasted at the time I withdrew my Spirit.—D. C. 18:2.

And so he who knew no sin was made sin for us.

He was wounded [margin, tormented] for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. . . . The Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all.—Isa. 53:5, 6.

God, who knew that men, after having received the Holy Ghost would sin against it, some utterly and willfully, made the atonement so broad, in his love and in his justice, that those who had not sinned willfully "might not suffer if they would repent."

Martin Harris had evidently been tempted both to commit adultery and to kill, therefore he was instructed in connection with the foregoing,

And again, I command thee that thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife; nor seek thy neighbor's life.—D. C. 18:3.

To do either of which was justly to forfeit the Spirit, and that forever, except through repentance based upon the atonement, and the depth of love made manifest therein.

Comprehending the plan and marveling at its perfect provisions, Paul wrote, Ephesians 3:14-19:—

For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.

While baptism remits sins, in that it relieves of condemnation for past offenses, it does not completely change character and disposition. Man's own efforts, aided by God's power, can only in process of time accomplish this. Evil tendencies are inherited and acquired by force of circumstances, to a greater extent in some than in others, but the divine plan is sufficiently broad that none need be completely overcome and sin against the Holy Ghost unto its complete withdrawal. That God is just and yet willing in his love and goodness to forgive to a reasonable extent, is evidenced in what we have quoted, as also in the following from Doctrine and Covenants 42:7:—

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out. Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out; but he that has committed adultery and repents with all his heart, and forsaketh it, and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive; but if he doeth it again, he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out. Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out.

Our disposition and willingness to forgive the offender against the law should be as great as his who gave the law, and he said to the woman caught in the very act of transgression, "Neither do I condemn you; go and sin no more." Beyond the latitude of forgiveness prescribed in the law, we (the church) cannot go. The mind of God should be our mind, both to extend mercy and execute judgment. Our design should be as God's, to save the sinner; but if he wills to continue in sin, he cannot be saved. For "he that continueth in sin is of the devil." (1 John 3:8, I. T.) And again,—

That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still.—D. C. 85:8.

Such we are warranted in giving up as unredeemable, executing the law against them, and in favor of the church, to save the church. Or as the Lord has said,—

This ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your Lawgiver.—D. C. 64:2.

The same revelation shows a lack at that time of the forgiving spirit among the elders, but rather a disposition to condemn causelessly, as we read concerning Joseph Smith, Jr.:—

There are those who have sought occasion against him without cause; nevertheless he has sinned, but verily I say unto you, I, the Lord, forgiveth sins unto those who confess their sins before me, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death. My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened; wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin.—D. C. 64:2.

But we will revert back in our theme to Martin Harris who was to be "an example to the church" in some things. (See D. C. 58:7.) In addition to what we have quoted from the revelation commanding him not to

covet his neighbor's wife, etc., we read:—

And again, I command thee that thou shalt not covet thine own property, but impart it freely to the printing of the Book of Mormon, . . . yea even part of thy lands, and all save the support of thy family.—D. C. 18: 3, 5.

It seems that the law of love is not only in its character prohibitive against sin and provisional for sin through the atonement and repentance on our part, operating to the forsaking of that which is evil; it requires of us not only "repentance toward God" and purity in his sight, and that we shall not do our neighbor any harm either by word or deed, but it requires that we shall do him good; love him as ourselves. The law of love demands not only that we shall not swear, steal, kill, or commit adultery, and thus keep out of jail, but it requires our solicitude and sympathy in behalf of our neighbor, not in waiting for him in his distress to seek our aid, but as taught by the apostle:—

Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.—1 John 4: 10.

It requires not only that we shall be baptized and have hands laid upon us, which is a part of our duty and of our "repentance towards God," but it demands of us no reservation in the matter of loving God and our neighbor. Our sacrifice must be of the same quality, the same character as the Master's, all our heart, all our might, all our mind, all our goods, life itself is not too much. Jesus said to the rich young man who had quoted the commandments, "Thou shalt not," etc.

If thou will be perfect, go and sell all thou hast and give to the poor; and come, follow me.

Jesus asked nothing more than he himself exemplified. He had left the throne of glory, and on this earth had not a place to "lay his head;" was not occupied in seeking anything for himself, but was seeking "first to build up the kingdom of God." The character of his sacrifice and the intended character of ours is set forth by the beloved disciple as follows:—

Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. —1 John 3: 16.

What was required of him in laying down his life has been required of many, and may be of many more. And—

Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, . . . how dwelleth the love of God in him?—1 John 3: 17.

And where there are rich and poor, and the people are satisfied with this condition, there is a lack of love. Enoch and his people overcame the world in this respect, and there were "no poor among them."

The gospel on this continent after Christ visited his sheep, accomplished its purpose of love, and we read:—

And it came to pass in the thirty and sixth year, the people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.—Book of Mormon, p. 478.

But we today have contentions and disputations, are rich and poor, are not free, and not partakers of the heavenly gift to the extent we should be, not because we have not received the same law as the Nephites did, but because we are not converted to it.

The Lord has spoken to us, saying:—

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors.—D. C. 42: 8.

But says one, how many poor are there who are worthy or capable of taking care of means placed in their hands.

Answer: As many as there are rich who are willing to consecrate. Who will say that the principles of a perfect law are more readily obeyed by the rich than the poor? Or who will say that of those who have more than enough for their support there are more worthy ones, than of those who have less than enough for their support. And further, may not the traveling missionaries who are without homes of their own, and are making great sacrifices for the gospel's sake, receiving for their families meager allowances only, be classed among the poor and the worthy poor, and might not a beginning be made by those who have wherewith to impart or consecrate, in fulfilling this law of love? If they are worthy who represent the church, and poor, they are worthy poor, and none who have a surplus need to shut up their bowels of compassion for the want of a place to bestow wisely their temporal good, and instead pull down their barns, and build greater. And why not buy a few scholarships in Graceland for the benefit of elders or other poor children, that all who desire might have equal privileges in respect to education?

The law of love and sacrifice as exemplified by Jesus Christ and his ministers in other ages must be exemplified and taught by his ministers in this age unto the salvation of God's elect, wherefore it is written:—

Whatsoever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer according to my command, ye shall receive; and ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts.—D. C. 28: 2.

In the midst of falling thrones, shattered empires, overflowing scourges, and disturbances of the elements, united and gathered alone can we stand; divided and scattered we must fall, hence the Lord has said: "I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon" (D. C. 64: 5); and—the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked.—D. C. 28: 2.

What kind of a Latter Day Saint is he, or saint living in latter days, who disbelieves in the gathering? And if he believes only, how much better is he than his Satanic majesty, and how much better place will he be worthy of, knowing to do good and doing it not. No better. For the Lord has said:—

If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—D. C. 101: 2.

Well, what is his portion, a tenth? Answer: The tenth is a requirement of God's law for the support of his ministry, or for current expenses of the church in every age, whether his Saints are in a scattered or gathered condition. If persecution scatters them or hinders their gathering, it does not operate against this principle. It is "a standing law forever . . . for my holy priesthood saith the Lord." (D. C. 106.)

But says one, does not the same revelation say that all the surplus properties of those who gather to the land of Zion shall be put into the hands of the bishop as the beginning of tithing? and therefore the consecration of all the surplus properties of the church is the beginning of tithing.

Answer: As the gathering is a work of time, "one out of a city, and two out of a family," "not in haste, nor by flight," and some will be left even to the coming of Christ, who shall then send forth his angels to gather them to where the body is, the payment of surplus would not be the beginning of tithing for the scattered ones, as the surplus is only required of "those who gather to the land of Zion." For "this [surplus requirement] shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion." And the Lord has said to the Reorganized Church:—

It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes oppointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary, I will command that they be established.

Are those in a scattered condition exempt from any financial sacrifice until stakes shall be established, and they are gathered into these stakes? Some have feared to do good, by paying their tithing; and, contending that surplus is the beginning of tith-

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ing in or out of Zion (the city?) and her stakes, have died without making the sacrifice the law requires though perhaps have let go of a few crumbs in the way of offerings to the elders, and what can such receive on the other shore but crumbs, or a reward according to their works, or commensurate with what they have meted out here below? The hymn says,—

Measure given, large or grudged,
Just the same you must receive.

The gathering is the ultimate of God's purpose, the end to be completly realized by saints below and saints above. Unity of temporal and spiritual interests is in view. We can hasten or hinder it. Let us who represent the church do all we can to unify and nothing to divide; thus hastening the consummation intended. As we go forth according to the pattern given, we may be "a help and a support to each other." We may "teach one another" as commanded; we may "learn to love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel [the law of love] requires: cease to find fault with one another," or do or say aught that is unkind or unloving. Many a jest is spoken in earnest, and may pierce to the center a sensitive nature. We should bear each other's burdens, be considerate and solicitous of each other's necessities, infirmities, and individualities, inasmuch as we sin not.

Or, rather than travel together and sacrifice for each other and so develop in our ministry for Christ, shall we keep as far apart as we can to avoid possible sacrifice in some direction, and instead, follow along the lines of the world's competitive system of business; run a race to see who will preach the most sermons, or baptize the largest number by hook or by crook? In Paul's day, "some preached the gospel of envy." Human nature, if not watched and governed by law, may fail in the same way today. If we love one another, we will not be "harsh one with another;" there will be no danger of it. We will seek unity, we will seek peace, we will seek to keep all the commandments, for,—

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments.

To keep all God's commandments requires that we shall read them as contained in the church books, and enjoined by the following words of section 1, Book of Doctrine and Covenants:—

Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful.

May the time referred to by the prophet be hastened, and speedily come, when "the watchmen shall see eye to eye," and have power to "bring again Zion."

M. F. GOWELL.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON INFIDELITY.

Infidelity again speaks and tells us that the holy men of old,—many of them, were cowardly, cunning priests; that they poisoned the fountains of civilization, and that their lives were full of immorality, which, if our children followed, would lead them to ruin; and yet God upheld them in their evil doing.

We acknowledge that the patriarchs of old transgressed, but deny that God sanctioned their immoral conduct.

The thing which David did was displeasing to the Lord.

Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.—1 Cor. 6: 9, 10

The foregoing quotations prove that God rebukes sin and iniquity. If the history of these ancient men were written without telling their sins, presenting them to the world holy and blameless, infidelity would mockingly cry, Ha, ha; what an absurb story to believe; for when we look around we see all men sin. Such a history is a tissue of falsehood.

My friends, how much more sensible to believe that these men of old were subject to like temptation as we are. The Bible does not pretend to be an idyl of innocence; but it shows what the sins of humanity are, and the direful consequences of sin. It speaks of men as it finds them. If they have faults, it faithfully describes them, so that humanity can profit by these faults. If the characters in the Bible had been represented as spotless, if Abraham had never lied, if David had never sinned, if Solomon had never been led astray, if Peter had not denied Christ, how much less interest people would have taken in the Bible; for if these men were represented as perfect beings, poor, erring humanity would feel it would be an impossibility for them to be children of God. If the Bible was written in this manner, you infidels would forthwith declare that Bible history was a fiction, a fable. The Bible never, by word, sentence, or intimation, approves any form of sin that has been written upon its pages; but when we turn to history prior to the advent of Christianity in western Europe, we find such immoralities there sanctioned by law and recommended by the distinguished teachers of the people, which if our republic would adopt would be an end to chastity; home would be robbed of its charms, and our country would not be fit to live in. Such is the contrast between pagan and Christian teachings.

Turn to history, and there we find when Christianity was destroyed in France that the "carnival of crime" and reign of terror commenced, and did not cease until they again went back to some of the teachings of the Bible. A noted journalist of that time wrote:—

We are the only people who ever attempted to do without religion. But what is already our sad experience. Every tenth [the Sabbath of the infidel] we are astounded by the recital of more crimes and assassinations than were committed formerly in a whole year. At the risk of speaking an obsolete language and receiving insult for response, we declare that we must cease striving to destroy remnants of religion, if we desire to prevent the entire dissolution of society.

When we glance back to the restoration of Charles II., we find in the reaction from Puritan austerity, the morals of Christianity were discarded. The historian says:—

Then came those days, never to be recalled without shame; days of servitude without loyalty, and sensuality without love; of dwarfish talents and gigantic vices, the paradise of cold hearts and narrow minds; the golden age of cowards, the bigots, and the slaves.

No higher authority could be asked for by infidels than Professor Huxley, and now we will see what he has to say about the teachings of the Bible, in regard to education:—

I have always been strongly in favor of secular education, in the sense of education without theology; but I must confess, I have been no less seriously perplexed to know what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct, was to be kept up, in the present utterly chaotic state of opinion on these matters, without the use of the Bible. The Pagan moralists lack life and color; and even the noble Stoic, Marcus Antoninus, is too high and refined for an ordinary child. Take the Bible as a whole; make the severest deductions which fair criticism can dictate; and there still remains in this old literature a vast residuum of moral beauty and grandeur. By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized? If Bible reading is not accompanied by constraint and solemnity, I do not think there is anything in which children take more pleasure.

Those who claim the Bible teaches immorality would do well to carefully weigh these words of Professor Huxley.

Will you infidels please explain how these Bible writers,—who lived in times and among communities which were ruled by immoral precepts, and steeped in moral corruptions,—"produced and preserved a comprehensive code of morals so faultless and universal that it can be practiced by all nations, and upon which modern improvement seems impossible?" You have never given any explanations at all comparable with that claimed by the writers themselves, "that they were aided, controlled by divine power." (Exod. 4:15, 16; Ezek. 3:4–10; John 16:13, 14; Gal. 1:12; Rev. 1:10.)

L. T. Townsend, D. D., truly says:—

Modern science and philosophy in the last eighteen hundred years have, it is true, confirmed, and in some instances have made more vivid, many theological truths, archæology has cleared away many difficulties; but, we repeat, science, philosophy, archæology, and all the correlated sciences have not added one new fundamental truth to our theological knowledge, and have changed nothing.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

President Woolsey says:—

The grand peculiarity of the religion of the Scriptures is that it is intensely moral and elevating. The only religion of antiquity which knows no compromise with sin; only deadly, earnest combat until complete victory is gained. . . . Why did not some of the philosophers of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Greece, or Rome—who figured during the same ages that witnessed the writing and compilation of the Bible—give the world books which in their theological and religious teachings might equal or even approach the Bible? In a human point of view, those noted men of antiquity had the same sources of information that were available to the Hebrew prophets and New Testament evangelists; and they had, in many respects, even superior advantages.

Why then, my infidel friends, did they not make discoveries equally valuable, and furnish data equally full and correct upon which to base theological science? How chanced it that those Hebrews alone arose in theological and religious knowledge, not only above all contemporaries, but so far as also to stand in advance of the best thinkers, even in modern times? The wisest men of the present century confess that they have not yet even been able to fully explore the profundity of Bible teaching.

Now what answer can infidelity give to these questions, what explanation of this extraordinary scope and sweep of vision, and this grasp of theological and religious knowledge? If Bible men were moved by a superior wisdom to write as they did, then the unsolved enigma is solved. Otherwise does it not remain unsolved and apparently insoluble?

When we think of the accuracy of the Bible in history, chronology, ethnology, archæology; when we trace the harmonies between its revelations and the most recent discoveries and facts of modern research, what can be thought of infidelity, which so willfully misrepresents Christianity.

Infidelity says God sent forth lying spirits to deceive his own prophets.

And the Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-Gilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner. And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him. And the Lord said unto him, wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so. Now, therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil against thee.—1 Kings 22: 20–23.

Does not this prove the Almighty was on very friendly terms with the "lying spirit" when he accepted his service?

Not so fast, please, my friend. We think Lambert, in "Tactics Of Infidels," has answered this question:—

It might so appear to a reader who is ignorant of the Eastern parabolic modes of speech, but it would not so appear to the student familiar with these modes.

The first point to settle is, did God send abroad lying spirits to deceive his own prophets? This must be determined before we go further. Loose talk will not do. There is no evidence in 1 Kings 22 that God's own prophets were deceived. On the contrary, the whole chapter leaves it beyond doubt that God's own prophets were not deceived, but spoke the truth and persisted in it, and suffered imprisonment for so doing. Even from the quotation you give, it is evident that the prophets who were deceived by the lying spirit were not God's prophets, but the false prophets of King Ahab.

But does it appear from the text that God sent forth lying spirits to deceive any one? Let us see. Ahab, King of Israel, consulted his false prophets to know the result of a war he was about to wage against the King of Syria. Jehoshaphat, King of Juda, liked not the words of these prophets who foretold that Ahab would be victorious, and said:—

There is yet one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may inquire of the Lord: but I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil.—1 Kings 22: 8.

He, however, sent for Micaiah and consulted him. Micaiah said:—

I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills like sheep that had no shepherd.

These are the words of the true prophet, and they were verified by the result of the war undertaken by the king at the instigation of his false prophets, for his army was scattered like sheep upon the hills, and the king himself killed. The texts quoted by infidelity contain a dramatic parable or picture which the true prophet, Micaiah, made use of to convince the king that he was being deceived and led to his destruction by his false prophets. The king disregarded the warning of God by the mouth of his prophet, Micaiah, and was in consequence defeated and put to death. The language of Micaiah is parabolic,—a familiar form of speech used by all Eastern people,—the drift of which is to impress vividly on the mind of King Ahab that his false prophets were inspired by a lying spirit. God permitted the lying spirit to go forth, but warned the king by the lips of Micaiah to heed it not. The fact that God by Micaiah warned the king against the prophets who were inspired by the lying spirit is a sufficient answer to your charge that he made use of it, or was on what you call familiar terms with it. If infidels would read the whole chapter carefully they would see how inconsistent they have been.

The wonderful development of the Sunday school since its foundation in 1780 is illustrated nowhere so well as by the famous Sunday school of Stockport, England, which has a membership of over five thousand. This monster school will be described in an article, fully illustrated from photographs, by Belle M. Brain in the November Woman's Home Companion.

REV. WILLIAMS WRITES OF THE MORMON CHURCH.

Editor Evening Express:—Absence from home has prevented a reply to the strictures of Mr. Nye of the Mormon church which appeared in your issue of September 27. Some of the statements of Mr. Nye are so unwarrantable that I deem it an imperative duty to turn on the light. It is well that the general public is fully able to note the difference 'twixt sarcasm and argument.

To ridicule another's position is a tacit admittance of the impregnability of the position taken and an indication that we have no better weapon with which to combat the same. I never expect to tear the scales from your eyes, Elder Nye. You are impervious to argument. When a man of your mental caliber, with the Bible and modern revealments in your hand, will unblushingly defend the flagrant outrages and tyrannical utterances of the leaders of Mormonism, I am satisfied that no human logic or divine intuition can ever reach you. Yes, the Mormon church is a self-purifying institution(?). More properly speaking it is a "purger." Men of individuality are summarily dealt with. Those who are ever ready to obey counsel are fostered and advanced in proportion to their docility.

You state that no evildoer can long remain in the church. That depends on what you call crime. It is well to remark that your people have a moral idea of their own, and what others would think immoral and sensuous you hold up as a divine virtue. When we quote the Bible to condemn, you immediately fall back on the statement that you "have the living oracles" and their word supercedes all scriptural utterances. Have you not, as a people, flagrantly violated the law of marriage, both civil and divine? Do you not in your communication boast of your defiance and triumph over civil law?

From a revelation given through Joseph Smith we quote: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." I quote this from your own Doctrine and Covenants, p. 219. In the face of this your president and prophet, with a coterie of followers, have pleaded guilty to unlawful cohabitation, and many of them have been sent to the penitentiary for their crimes. Yes, I admit that he who seeketh to cover up iniquity will be thrown and those sins will come to light. This is precisely the condition the Mormon church is in today; and, seek as you may to cover up your weaknesses, we will continue to disclose your vulnerable points and save the innocent from deception and sin.

Prior to Brigham's usurpation of authority he was repeatedly reproved, and Joseph Smith said of him, "If Brigham Young ever gets control of the church he will lead it to hell." If Joseph Smith never delivered any other true prophecy this one has been remarkably fulfilled.

Yes, Mr. Nye, men do love place and

honor, and that is the reason Brigham Young set aside every law and precedent and usurped the reins of church government. How could Brigham become the legal head of the church when the law specifically provided that the seed of Joseph Smith should preside? How adroitly, Mr. Editor, does Mr. Nye try to turn the statements of Brigham to suit his purposes. He says that Brigham referred to men (bad men) who were apostatizing from the church. Let me quote his whole statement on this: Brigham said: "I have many a time from this stand dared the world to produce as mean devils as we can. We can beat the world at anything. We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world, the cunningest and most adroit thieves, and any other shade of character that you can mention. We can pick out elders [notice he says elders] who can beat the world at gambling—who can handle the cards and shuffle them with the smartest rogues on the face of God's footstool. I can produce elders here who can shave their smartest shavers and take their money from them. We can beat the world at any game." Is Mr. Nye honest when he tries to twist this language to apply to apostates?

Brigham said farther, "We can beat them because we have men here that live in the light of the Lord; that have the holy priesthood, and hold the keys of the priesthood of God." (You see it was men in favor with God who could beat the world in crime according to Brigham). He continues: "We can pray the best, preach the best, and sing the best. We are the best looking and finest set of people on the face of the earth; and they [meaning those outside the church] can begin any game they please and we are on hand and can beat them at anything they have a mind to begin. They may make sharp their two-edged swords, and I will turn out the elders of Israel with greased feathers and whip them to death. We are not to be beat. We expect to be a stumbling block to the whole world, and a rock of offense to them." You will find this utterance published in the Deseret News, vol. 6, p. 291; also Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 77.

Any man who would hold a man up as a prophet of God after using language such as that is unfit to teach men. Mr. Nye says he neither accepts nor rejects this language. This is the dodge of the coward. He has been running all over California calling on people to accept Brigham Young as a prophet of God and telling them that they would be damned if they did not, and now when cornered he tries to crawl out with the statement, "I do not accept or reject." Be a man, Mr. Nye. If Brigham Young was a prophet of God then we must either accept or reject his utterances.

It was not the smooth liars and smart rogues, Mr. Nye, for whom Brigham Young was going to "unsheath his bowie knife and conquer or die." Oh, no, the liars and rogues were men who "held the holy priesthood of God." It was the apostates—men who could not endure strong meat—who were visited with summary vengeance. Living witnesses are in evidence to the effect that as soon as a man opposed the abominable teachings of Brigham his life was not safe. Men were subjected to the greatest indignities and inhuman treatment simply because they dared cross the path of this great one. It is passing strange, too, that when men disappeared or were destroyed by the Indians, as we are told, that almost invariably it was those who were weak in the faith. How did the Indians know whom to kill? So you admit, Mr. Nye, that all who had apostatized from the Mormon fold lived in mortal terror of their lives and that Brigham's sword was "hanging over them by day, and haunting them by night." Better take care or you will concede more than I have charged. Was John D. Lee, Porter Rockwell or Bill Hickman ever excommunicated from the church so long as they could be of any service to the church? Did not the Mormon church as soon as they were up against the civil law, desert Hickman and Lee and leave them to their fate although they had for years been servile tools of Brigham? Will you answer these questions?

Mr. Nye deals treacherously with the truth when he states that the Reorganized Church stood with open arms and welcomed the renegades and criminals from Utah. Come down from your self-exalted pinnacle, Mr. Nye, and listen to a few facts. We are perfectly willing for you to attend to your own business in your own way, but when you charge that Joseph Smith was a polygamist you should be man enough to back up your assertions with proof. In this you state something you cannot prove and willfully malign the memory of a noble man, and after you have shrouded his history with the slime of your cowardly slander you self-exultantly state, "We do not have to meet you or your friends." I now serve notice on you, Mr. Nye, that you shall meet this question in public or the world shall know the reason why.

All this twaddle about a disbarred attorney and discussing with one expelled from the church is childish prattle. Be a man. Your law says, "Wherefore confound your enemies; call upon them to meet you both in public and in private."

I herewith publicly proclaim myself an enemy against some of the institutions for which you stand and ask that you defend. Will you live up to this revelation or not? If you will not you violate this feature of your own law and forever brand yourself as a coward or servile tool of an ecclesiastical hierarchy.

God several times condescended to discuss with the devil, and after Christ had spent forty days in fasting he deigned to hold a protracted debate with his satanic majesty. How cleverly you quote the criminal and prison statistics prior to 1880. Why not use later statistics? You know it was since then that your leaders were arrested for unlawful cohabitation. Think of a man, supposed to be a prophet of God, pleading guilty to unlawful cohabitation and being fined for his criminality! According to your own books he was not keeping the law of God or he would have "had no need to break the law of the land." You shall not be privileged to prosecute your work of misrepresentation without a protest.

I am not so sure that the shores of time are strewn with the wrecks of men who have opposed polygamy and its kindred evils, but I do know that Brigham prophesied that this doctrine should triumph over all the world, whereas it has been squelched and is only practiced now in secret.

I am astounded that you would so clearly disclose your purpose as to affirm that all the lawmakers and judges of our country have done to suppress polygamy has amounted to nothing. Then are we to conclude from this that all your promises to discontinue polygamy are not rendered in good faith; that the laws against polygamy have not checked it in any way? Are we to gather from this that you expect the Mormon church to flourish in spite of this government? That is what your words convey. It is well that you have so committed yourself for now the people know where you stand. The Mormon church keeps a half dozen elders in this city who are continuously making a systematic canvass of the city, and it is well that the general public know that at heart they are still polygamists and they have not, neither will they, retract one particle from their previous position. The Reorganized Church is anti-polygamous, and law-abiding.

Yours without malice,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Pastor Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.—Evening Express Oct. 18.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 24.

Editors Herald:—Inclosed find clipping from the Evening Express. It will give you an inkling of the prolonged discussion which has been going on in the press of this city between Mr. Nye of the Utah church and ourselves. I suppose that you have ere this received a copy of the pamphlet which N. Tanner, Jr., of the Mormon church has recently issued attacking the present method of choosing the president of the Mormon church and the official actions of President Cannon? In the preface he states: "Upon investigating the laws of God upon the subject, and comparing them with the present method of choosing the First Presidency, there appears to be an irreconcilable inconsistency, and, considering the disposition of men to maintain a rule whereby by getting themselves into line, they will be automatically moved up and placed in the office of president rather than take the risk of being chosen and placed there by the body of the church, as God has directed; and considering the further fact that by the establishment of this rule the right of a choice by the body is denied, whereas God has said that a choice shall exist, there seems to be an imminent danger of the disfavor of God and a consequent necessity for a word of warning and protest against existing conditions, vitally affecting every soul in the church."

He winds up his arraignment thus. "Considering the evils and dangers possible under the present method of choosing the First Presidency, and that, like everything else that is contrary to the word of God, it has neither wisdom, reason, law, nor justice to support it, while a choice by the body, being founded upon the Word of God, has all these principles for its foundation, and is not subject to the evils and dangers above mentioned, the question arises, What is our duty in the premises? It is a delicate matter to suggest that the brethren are in error, but are not the interests of the great masses of the people of paramount importance, and has not the Lord laid it upon us as a duty?"

As to George Q. Cannon, he says: "Is it not a fact, as regretable as it is notorious, that when George Q. Cannon became the most potent factor in dictating the policy of the Church the reputation of the Saints became almost anything else but honest? Who shall ever compute the amount of injury to the church, and the sorrow, suffering, shame, and persecution that many of its members have endured at the hands of the enemy and the government, because of the reputation of the Mormon people for unreliability, and who does not trace it to the misleading policy and influence of President George Q. Cannon?"

In a letter addressed to the First Presidency of the Church he says: "I hereby charge President George Q Cannon with apostasy and with teaching false doctrine."

I judge that the true object of this tract will be disclosed later. It shows that they are still hedging. Let the good work go on, and they will yet have to come forward and acknowledge that they were wrong on every point of vital difference between us.

I do not think it right to persecute the Mormon people; think we should act precisely in our treatment of these people as we would have them do to us in case matters were reversed. But I am more than ever convinced that while we should manifest love and the greatest kindness for the people who have accepted this delusion, we should leave no stone unturned to disclose the error and falsity of their doctrines.

We are all well and doing the best we can.

Ever your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 24.

Editors Herald:—News from Providence and vicinity, or the Massachusetts district for that matter, does not of late seem to have burdened the columns of the church papers, so we offer a few notes of events current.

The ministerial service of Bishop Hilliard upon his return from Maine was appreciated by the Saints, and by friends as well, in the branches visited by him. Timely advice and counsel, if heeded and put into practice by us all, will have a tendency to lift the clouds and mists and make the "kingdom of God" to "appear" a little more vividly and clearly both to Saint or sinner. By the kindness of Mr. Albert Matteson, his fine grove, seated and prepared for religious service, situated some twelve or fourteen miles from this city, was offered us, and accepted, Bro. George Smith and the writer speaking the first and second Sundays in September, holding six services in all, including one prayer meeting, with song service by brethren and sisters who accompanied us and rendered valuable help in this direction especially.

As a result or outgrowth of these services in the grove at Hope, a chapel, formerly occupied by the Advent people, with present full control free of charge, save the expense of light or fire, has been secured at Anthony, and where, every Sunday, at 3:30 p. m., we are preaching to interested strangers the gospel restored, Elder Geo. Smith and myself attending to the speaking for the most part, although excellent help by Geo. Gates and singers from Providence, has contributed essentially to the success of the meetings. We are contemplating a series of weekly, successive night meetings soon, if interest continues or events warrant.

The watchcare of both Providence and Fall River branches over which we have been assigned or chosen as presiding officer necessarily curtails general district or missionary work, in some degree, but of our support and help from other presiding officers in both branches we have no complaint.

Elder George Smith, as acting presiding priest and associate pastor here in Providence, is a good and helpful associate and worker; and if our vision is not obscured we believe, or it seems to us, that a steady growth toward unity and evident marks of progress may be seen.

Three adults were added to our number by baptism last Wednesday, with confirmation Sunday morning, and more are near.

Fall River, too, is moving out and away from unfavorable and unprogressive methods, Bro. Daniel Shaw presiding in our absence and growing in the work, and working diligently and faithfully with others for a better representation of gospel possibilities.

The Religio society, which is still under our charge here in Providence, is on the increase so far as numbers, interest, and profit are concerned, especially as relates to Book of Mormon study.

Altogether, we are feeling encouraged, finding more to be thankful for, than to complain of.

Wednesday, September 19. Our household was made glad by the arrival of our daughter Bessie, her husband, Bro. Richard Trowbridge, and baby Myron, from St. Louis, Missouri, our former home, and to which place memory turns fondly, though now so regretfully and sadly.

Only the Saturday following after their arrival was it, that while seated at the breakfast table, happy in the social cheer of our reunion, like as a thunderbolt from a clear sky came the ring at the doorbell, and telegram from Sr. Etta that John—"Our John" (for he seemed to be the possession of us all)—was dead! The effect of this news, if it can be described at all, was to stun or shock us so, that to say at first "it cannot be so," seemed the only thing our mind could possibly give assent to. Neither can we yet realize that it is so, much less give consent to the thought that it ought to be so. The talk we have heard about "mysterious providences" never had quite so forcible an illustration, I believe, in my earthly experience; but I suppose that our eyes blinded by tears, our judgments obscured by human limitations, will be wiped away and cleared in time, perhaps, and eternity surely. At least, so far as the liability or responsibility for our loss may be attributed to Him whose plan and allotments to mankind are not of the temporal, or finite, but after the everlasting, permanent, perfect, and infinite plan and execution.

But still the shadow of this loss of our trusted friend and brother is upon us, and will not soon pass away. We were made too well acquainted with Brother John to have it possibly otherwise. It still seems to me that he ought not to have left us and the church so soon as he did. Looking at the matter from our view point, it should have proved the better plan to have denied himself in his passion—I cannot say weakness—for work. He was "the servant of all," literally speaking; but to the church, and for it, his service seemed to be an absolutely tireless and unselfish one. His life was too concentrated, and I would rather he should have doled it out to us more sparingly and have stayed longer with us. How St. Louis and the Religio society and all who knew him will miss him! And while we have not yet learned to be reconciled to his loss to us, or satisfied that one so useful and in the prime of manhood's years should leave us so suddenly and so unexpectedly, yet we are consoled not a little by the reflection and the fact in his case that it is a great thing to so live as to be so missed and mourned when the last summons come to pass over and into the great silence and to rest. What better monument to rear for ourselves while yet living than to so live among men as to make it either impossible or undesirable to forget the life filled with good deeds and unselfish ministrations unto others than ourselves. What more enduring tribute than costly granite or polished shaft of marble that may serve only to perpetuate the memory of a life that otherwise might be forgotten is the evergreen life of an affection that still carries with it into the beyond, the everlasting and imperishable desire for reunion and continual association in the great possibilities which the gospel unfolds. So, good bye, our brother, and our friend! We are saddened beyond expression at your going out from us. May the graces and gift of the great and good God and Father of us all be through the Holy Spirit's power and operation distilled into the life of, and minister abundant comfort to, the bereaved and stricken ones. May the comfort which many friends and the tests of God's grace in this hour of loss and affliction bring find their way to the soul of our Sister Etta, bringing to her the infinite peace of Him whose plan uninterfered with by human imperfections must always be trusted as being after the perfect and eternal order of good for all His creatures. Editors Herald:—As I have written several letters to the elders of the Oregon and Washington mission informing them of my removal from that part of the Master's vineyard to this Southwest Missouri district, and have failed to convince them of the fact, I ask that you publish this in next number of Herald, as the missionary in charge and Bro. Griffiths both have written me in regard to the work there, and their letters were forwarded from Drain, Douglas county, Oregon, my former address.

Your brother in bonds,

WM. TAYLOR.

PACIFIC GROVE, California.

Editors Herald:—I have been a citizen of God's kingdom a little over two years. I thought I was a member of this kingdom before that time; but when the message was brought by a Latter Day Saint elder, I found I had not only never been lawfully initiated into the kingdom, but that I had never heard the gospel preached before. My mother was baptized the same time I was, and my wife one month later, she not being sufficiently convinced that the M. E. Church, of which we were members, was not good enough.

Elder Daley came into our town, and being unable to get a church building or hall to speak in, he accepted the invitation of one of our neighbors, and commenced preaching at her house. My father and mother attended the first evening, and were so much interested that they persuaded my wife and me to attend the second evening. His preaching rather aroused within me a feeling of antagonism, because of his battering ram which he used so effectively on the wall of sectarian creeds. Nevertheless, I could not help seeing that the wall must crumble under such effective use of such plain, simple logic and truth. We went the next evening, and I was forced to lay aside prejudice, and the feeling of antagonism vanished, and I began to receive the light, and by the next evening I knew that the gospel in all its purity, simplicity, and sweetness was being preached, and I rejoiced in it.

It did not take me long to decide not to "confer with flesh and blood" but go and take advantage of the chance while the kingdom of God was at hand. Strangely enough though I had never heard of the Reorganization, I somehow knew that the church which this man represented, had no affinity with the Utah Church, the only Latter Day Saint Church I had ever heard of.

After Bro. Daley baptized three, he seemed to think his work here was done, and left for other parts of the vineyard.

However, we were not left long without an elder. One came among us who proved to be false to the church, and has since been cut off. Our little circle here has had many discouragements; but this man caused the truth to suffer here more than all else has.

Soon Bro. Keeler came among us, followed by Bro. Sheehy, and we started a weekly prayer meeting and organized a Sunday school. We have been favored with visits of missionaries and officers of branches, and Bro. Swenson, of the Sunday school, and many Saints, tried and true, which has been a source of comfort and strength to us young Saints, and we are very grateful.

Sr. Keeler came to live in our midst about two years ago, and has been living here ever since. She has been superintendent of our Sunday school since its organization. Bro. Keeler is beloved by all the Saints here, and his return home from the mission field is looked forward to with as much pleasure by us Saints as a family of children look for the return of their father. The last time he was home he baptized two of our children and two others.

At present we belong to the Santa Cruz branch. We are all praying for the time when we will have a branch, so we can have regular service. I have never regretted for a moment having united with this church, which I believe to be the only church which can be recognized of God—the only one which Christ can claim as his own, and may God help each officer and member to do his best to live a pure, simple, humble, and holy life; and above all let us not allow the world to creep into our church. May it hold itself aloof from the world which has crept into the other churches. W. H. BIRDSELL.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, Oct. 29.

Editors Herald:—I closed a very interesting meeting at Montrose last night. Notwithstanding the heavy rain in the afternoon and evening there was a large crowd out. One young man was baptized, and there are seven or eight others who are fully convinced that we have the truth, and several of them told me they knew they ought to obey, but didn't have the courage to step out on the Lord's side.

I had a good meeting at Vincennes, with increasing crowd till the rain interfered.

The Saints at Vincennes and Montrose were glad to enjoy a series of sermons to build up and encourage them. They were all very kind to me. May our Father bless each one of them!

Sr. Nellie Sargent missed all the meetings at her place—but the last one, as she was visiting at Independence during that time.

I expect to preach here tonight, then go home to vote for the best man on the tickets for president. I hope all will do the same. After the election I will go to eastern Iowa to fill some calls. In bonds,

J. S. ROTH.

CANTON, Ill., Oct. 27.

Editors Herald:—Once again the gospel trumpet has been sounded to us as a branch by God's humble and faithful servants. While we listen to the young, or those "just in the morning time of life," our hearts were made to rejoice at the thought that they were willing to sacrifice all the worldly pleasures of the day, to stand as valiant soldiers for the Lord. And while they have done so, let these words be of no tiring nature to us:—

"Speak gently to the young,—for they Will have enough to bear;
Pass through this life as best they may,
'Tis full of anxious care."

And again when the older ones stand before us, proclaiming the gospel message, some, probably, who have labored these many years, and the silvery locks of hair denote that old age is fast creeping upon them, we rejoice that they have proven themselves faithful even thus far along life's uneven journey. And while the time may look to us nigh at hand when these faithful veterans will have to cease their active toils in the service of the Lord, let us always remember to—

"Speak gently to the aged one,
Grieve not the care-worn heart;
The sands of life are nearly run,
Let them in peace depart."

How often do we grow weary of many things in life, things that once were new, now they are old; but how beautiful to think the "story of Jesus and his love never grows old;" and this being true, let us each one work while yet it is day, for we "know not when the Son of Man cometh." How well prepared we will be to meet the blessed Savior when he shall come in great glory, we know not; but there is that desire within our hearts to live so that we can gain an entrance into that holy city, a place prepared for the pure and good.

How can anyone reject the blessed principles that are so plain that a child may understand. My prayer has been, and always will be, that I shall prove myself worthy of a home in that great beyond.

"Oh may I see that glorious day!
And join with all the blest,
To sing aloud the Savior's praise,
And enter into rest."

Yours for the truth,

SR. IDA L. JONES.

MADISON, Wis., Oct. 28.

Editors Herald:—Fearing unless I contributed to your columns I would become, as a brother said in his letter to the Ensign, a literary pauper, I write.

I have been reading the Herald today with pleasure to note the progress of the work in various parts, and to see how earnest many are, who are sacrificing earthly pleasures and all this world holds out as good, for the spread of the gospel. The work of the Master being paramount to all else, conclusively evidences, to our minds, how necessary it is that all else of a hindering cause, so far as worshiping the Lord is concerned, be put aside as far as possible. Little drops of water make the mighty deep, and little deeds of kindness as well as the little duties of each day, if performed, bring us and others nearer to God. How often do we neglect the little things of life, looking for some special calling in life. We forget to forward our lives on to perfection by the performance of all duties great or small, and through the neglect to perform the small duties do not place ourselves in a condition to perform, neither prove ourselves capable before God of performing, larger ones.

Instead of holding a reunion this fall at Janesville, we held two days' meeting in the Wilder schoolhouse, which was fairly well attended. The young folks of the district held an entertainment on Saturday evening. We regret very much that our young people live in such a scattered condition making it impossible for them to do such work, as they would surely do, if living nearer together. Bro. and Sr. Dutton, of Janesville, were here over last Sunday, also Elder Frank Sawley. The Saints met at the home of Bro. H. D. Stevens, at one o'clock, for prayer meeting, which proved to be a profitable one, after which Elder Sawley spoke to us. We are glad to meet such an earnest worker as Bro. Sawley; and as we have known him for some years, welcome him back to Wisconsin. May he, with all the missionaries, be blessed!

Speeches and rallies, with the coming election, make it difficult to get anyone to listen to the gospel. The fields are wide and much need of the gospel going forth, and many ways of advancing it. Although all cannot go out in the world and preach it, they can live it at home, and by so doing can promote the cause.

I hope to soon be so I can do more for the work.

Praying for the true progress of God's work, Your brother,

OLIVER MCDOWELL.

WILMINGTON, Ill., Oct. 31.

Editors Herald:—Shortly after the Plano conference (on the 6th inst.), Bro. J. T. Hackett and I came to this place and held a two-days' meeting, which was a success in point of interest manifested by the Saints. Since then we have labored here, and about here. The Saints seem alive to the work, and are rejoicing in the light of the truth.

We go to South Wilmington, the latter part of this week, to make a new opening. This is a new mining town, and there has never been an effort made there. Three or four Saints are now living there. Bro. A. J. Keck is busy about Aurora, Batavia, Elgin, and Marengo. Bro. Wildermuth was at Plano, at last reports, and Brn. Southwick and Henley are, presumably, at DeKalb and Cortland. H. E. MOLER.

PERHAM, Minn., Oct. 31.

Editors Herald:—I have not kept silent because I had nothing to write about. We are getting along quite nicely this year; yes, far in the advance of any year previous. The missionaries have more calls for work than we are able to do. There has been about forty baptisms thus far, and others are very near the kingdom. Two new branches have been organized, and are doing well. May the Master bless them, is my humble prayer.

Our conference passed off on the 13th and 14th inst., and was a success indeed. Not a jar of any kind was observed. The good Spirit presided from start to finish, and all were made happy under its influence. I never was in meetings that were more united and where voting in business was more unanimous. Thank God for the advancement in Minnesota! It has been the prayer of my soul to see this day of rejoicing in this mission.

Brn. Stedman, Hayer, and Omans have all been busy, and their labors have met with success to a great degree. The local brethren seemed to understand their duties better, and are doing what they can in their respective branches; hence there exists a better feeling with more activity. God bless you, my brethren!

Brn. Martin and Whiting have done some good work outside of their branches, and have brought some into the kingdom,—thank the Lord.

As winter is coming on, let us each, who are authorized of God open up new places and sow the good seed of the gospel, that we may gather in the sheaves when warm weather comes. Let us all come up higher in the service of God, and then the work will open more clearly to all. God has begun to raise up good men in this field, which was clearly made known to all at our last conference at Audubon. Awake, Saints, awake, and on to victory! The sick are healed, and God is pleased with his people. Dear Saints, begin now to get ready for our conference and reunion to be held at Clitherall, in June, 1901. May the Lord bless all, is my prayer.

I. N. ROBERTS.

Editors Herald:—

"Oh, watch and fight and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er,
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore."

It is six years since I obeyed the great and glorious gospel. I hope my brothers and sisters will see the light as I did and obey some day; for since I obeyed the gospel I have had more blessings than I ever had before. I hope the Saints will all pray for me that I might be the means of bringing my brothers and sisters into this great and glorious work of our heavenly Father.

Your sister in the one faith,

MAGGIE J. MILLER.

SYLVAN, Texas, Oct. 28.

Editors Herald:—The Saints in this part of the world are progressing slowly. Some are striving to do all they can to build up and advance the cause. These are wide-awake and progressing. Some few, of course, are as it will be when Christ comes, sleeping on their oars.

I am trying to do all I can to get the truth before the people and present the true plan of salvation.

I accepted and obeyed this the latter-day gospel September 15, 1898. Since then I have tried to live as best I could, though I have made many mistakes. Am still in the faith, determined to win.

On March 11, 1899, I was ordained a priest, and I have tried to present the angel's message as opportunity afforded. Soon after my ordination I was elected president of the Manchester branch, twenty-five miles from where I live. Have worked as faithfully as I could. It was there we had our conference which convened July 28, at which time I was ordained an elder by Elder H. O. Smith, in fulfillment of a promise made to me by the Lord through the Spirit on the 13th day of March, 1900. Have since tried to discharge my duty. I am willing to do what I can, but am weak, and ask the prayers of all, that I may live so that the Lord will be pleased to use me as an instrument to accomplish good for his cause.

On the 18th I left home and family, and in company with Bro. E. A. Erwin went by wagon about seventy miles into Indian Territory. The country into which we went was thinly settled, and only a few came out to hear. Two Brighamite elders had preceded us on the 14th and 15th, and had presented their claims as the original church with the authority; but notwithstanding their claims, they did not fail to advocate the idea that the Bible did not condemn polygamy. By the help of the Lord we succeeded in convincing the people that the Utah elders were wrong. We preached three sermons, and one noble lady was baptized. Her husband is deeply interested and near the kingdom we hope.

On our way home we stopped in Antlers with another noble man who is seeking the truth. May the good Lord speed the day when the honest in heart everywhere will be permitted to hear the gospel message and accept.

Yours in bonds,

P. B. BUSSELL.

ROSLYN, Wash., Oct. 25.

Editors Herald:—Since I last wrote I have traveled quite a lot, and have endeavored to cheer the hearts of the world and to enliven the souls of the Saints.

Am often asked why I do not write to the Herald. One reason is, am not much of a writer, and the other is I would rather read the thoughts of the brethren, who can put thoughts together better than I can. At the same time I believe it the duty of the missionaries to write once or twice in a while that the church may know of their whereabouts and the prospects of the work.

I need not remind the Saints that I have the work at heart. If I did not, I would not be in the field. Of all places dear to me on earth, that most dear is home and the family circle. Of all trials none is greater than leaving home. How often I think of "Home, sweet home." I have seen men who cared very little for home. Very seldom are they called to represent the church abroad; and when they are sent they make a failure, also causing others to fall. A man who is true to home and all it implies will never fall nor bring disgrace on the fair name of the church. "Let us keep our spirits [and our bodies] pure in the light of God," and the church.

This field this year has been anything but pleasant. I do not want to paint things in glowing colors when they are not. I must report them as I find them. I do not know how many are going to unite with the church, nor how many are near the kingdom. Have baptized two, one in Mt. Vernon, by the name of Curtis, the other in Seattle, by the name of Mano, one brother, one sister. I pray God that he will keep them in the fold and give all needed blessings.

Have not visited all the places in the mission yet. Bro. Eage left this mission on the 20th of August, for the Scandinavian field.

Brn. Holt and Chase are spoken well of generally. Last week I was joined by Bro. D. L. Allen, of Ohio, a young man in gospel work. Am glad to see the interest he is taking in the work. I do ask God's blessing for him that he may "Never grow weary in well doing." I met four young elders of the Utah faith. I believe they are to be pitied more than to be blamed. Notice a thought like this: "Don't hunt up the old records!" They are so damaging to their cause. Oh, that Journal of Discourses! What fearful language is used there. Shame to them that believe and practice the same! "Blindness is happened in part to Israel" indeed. Those young men do not believe in the story of creation as we have it in our Bible; listen: "Do you think that God got some mud and made Adam with it?" How does that agree with the statement, "Blindness has happened in part [no not in part but altogether] to Israel"?

The Saints out here long for the redemption of Zion. They want to come to Zion; they are willing to live by the celestial law with all that the word implies. "Shall we gather home to Zion?" Yes! But what will become of the ones who are sent to preach the gospel if they all go. I do hope there will be enough left so as the missionaries will have a place to stay.

The outlook is not flattering; still we labor and do what we can and leave the result with him who doeth all things well.

Your brother,

JOHN DAVIS.

FARNAM, Nebraska, Oct. 2.

Editors Herald:—There are but few of us at this place, but we have Sunday school and enjoy it very much. We have preaching occasionally, we enjoy each other's company so much that it seems a foretaste of what it will be when Zion shall have been redeemed.

Just two years ago I heard the first sermon preached on the restored gospel by Bro. Payne; and I thought as they did in the days of Christ and Paul, "What new doctrine is this?" But I find it is not new at all. I was a member of the Church of God (restitutionist), a firm believer in the doctrine of soul sleeping; but I believe if anyone would read Bro. Lambert's work on "What is Man," and really want to know what was right on that subject, he would see plainly which was right.

I attended the reunion last year at Shelton, and met many of the Saints. I was baptized last March. It took me some time to learn all I wished to of this people. I had always understood that they were the most corrupt people on earth; but I find them the purest minded people I ever met, and I am not ashamed to call them brethren.

How would God judge the world by the doctrines of today? I have the works of at least seven different churches on my table now, and what a contrast!

Saints, pray for us here, that we may always be found humble and teachable.

McClure's magazine for November will contain a vivid account of the siege of the Foreign Legations in Pekin, written as a diary by Katharine Mullikin Lowry, one of the besieged. It will relate in full many of the soul-stirring events that we already know, and will make clear many incidents upon which we have hitherto had little light. It will be illustrated with plans of Pekin, of the Legation Quarters, and of the British Legation.

SANCTIFICATION.—NO. 1.

BY MARY KNIPSCHILD.

Dear Sisters:—Again I am counseled to write on the subject of sanctification. I must tell you how this came about. For the last few years I have been more or less afflicted; but this winter I grew worse, and suffered in my head and ears most intensely; so much so that I feared I would lose my hearing, as I heard very little; also my mind was very much impaired. I committed myself into the hands of God, and hoped for the best from day to day and from week to week: but instead of getting better, I grew worse, until I gave up all hope of ever recovering. Almost in despair, and with my whole soul, I cried: "O Lord, my God, what wrong have I done that I thus have to be afflicted? O, my Father, show it to me. Have I left anything undone that I should have done? Show to me my wrong, that I may repent and do, for I am thine, and am in thy hands."

The answer came in a strong reproof: "How often have I moved upon you to write on sanctification, but you would not do it!"

I answered, "O, I was afraid! nor did I realize that such was my duty, on account of my great weakness and inability. But this is enough, and inasmuch as thou wilt spare my life and restore me to strength of body and mind, I will do it in thy fear and in thy name, knowing that thou wilt not demand a work of anyone and not help them to perform it also. But, Lord, if I do write, where shall I write to; what must I do with it, and where shall I send it?"

"To Sister Frances," was the answer.

Now this was a great consolation to me, that I might send it to you.

A few weeks have elapsed, and I am so much recovered that I can hear, and have no pain in my ears; but have some pain in my head yet, and I feel very weak, with an impression that I will not fully recover before I made an effort unto obedience. Accordingly I take up my pen, realizing that God knows without the aid of his Spirit I can do nothing.

Now to get at the beginning and bottom of the subject at issue, my mind is carried back to my first entry into the church, which was in 1878. At that time I knew no Saints at all. Particulars of that time, however important to me, are not needed by the reader now; only I must state that at that time I walked humbly before God and was led by his Holy Spirit. Accordingly, in the very first meeting the will of the Lord was so plainly made manifest to me that I was baptized at once. All the Saints were strangers to me—only one person I had known sometime before. The next, a two days' meeting, I received my testimony from God. It came upon me from on high thus: "This is the work of God: but there is something wrong among the rulers." The wrong never had been pointed out to me. But while I am writing there comes an impression, for the first time, as though it meant the many lo heres and lo theres in the work, and mastery for the leadership.

Now I was very diligent to find out what this "work of God" was and what it contained. I ordered the books and publications of the church. I read, searched, and investigated. Soon I learned by the enlightenment of the Spirit of God that this work is a complete whole, worthy of being called the "work of God."

During this time I became acquainted with the Saints, meeting with them at the same place; but O what a contrast between Saints and the books which contained the doctrine! During the meeting it would seem as though the solemnity of eternity was resting upon the whole assembly, which I truly believe it did most of the time; for the power of God would be made manifest in various ways—to our joy, edification, and comfort; but as soon as the meeting would be dismissed, a confusion of laughter, jesting, and foolish talking would prevail. In my astonishment, the thought would come up within me: They are not sanctified—if they were they could not do so; and I began to bring up the subject of sanctification; how needful it was to be sanctified, so we might live a godly and holy life, as demanded of us in all sacred writ. This would generally be brought up after meetings (as we held all our meetings in private houses), but there was a general opposition to it; none could believe that we could be sanctified in this life. The presiding elder of our district decided we could not be sanctified in this life, but we would be sanctified in death. The same elder, in a good meeting, filled with the Holy Ghost, spoke with power, and among all the things he did speak, with a firm and distinct utterance, waving his right arm firm and steady over the whole congregation, saying, "seek after sanctification, without which no one shall see God!"

This was a great comfort to me, and I hoped it would be heeded. But it was not. And all the warning prophecies that had come through that good old brother came literally to pass over the whole branch.

On another occasion, where a goodly number of us had gathered in for dinner, after a meeting, the subject of sanctification was brought up. All disputed it and opposed it except one elder. He said, "I believe it, for I tried it. One day I watched myself, and was prayerful all day. I never sinned that whole day. So I thought if I can spend one day without sin, I can spend two days. I spent the next day without sin, being watchful and prayerful all the time; so I thought if I can spend two days without sin I can spend three days without sin, which I did; so I know we can live without sin and be sanctified, if we always watch and pray." And this selfsame elder has since been advanced to a quorum of seventy, and has been doing good substantial work in the church. Thus God honors those who honor him!

Several other elders who ridiculed sanctification the most—yes till I felt afraid for them

www.LatterDayTruth.org

—have fallen; transgressed shamefully. O, do not tell it in Gath! Seeing it was of no use, I kept silent, hoping and watching that the Lord would convince his people in some way or other of the whole and complete truth. Nevertheless I always was burdened with this subject, and at times I would have great uneasiness about it; but after last General Conference, more so than ever before.

While there, I was located with a Methodist family near the church, and they were good people. The man, quite ready to talk, soon began on church topics. As answer to some of his talk one time, I asked him if he ever went to our church to hear our elders preach? He answered: "I used to go, but I nearly quit it."

"Do you not like to hear our elders preach?"

"Not as well as some of the Methodist preachers that preach on sanctification. O, I can just take it all in! I like to hear Bro. Luff; he comes with such powerful argument; he is a powerful preacher! Sometimes I go and hear him, that is about all. They don't believe nor preach sanctification."

"Why, it is the doctrine of our church!"

"I know it is," he answered, "but these in Independence do not believe it, and they do not preach nor teach it—do you believe in sanctification?"

"Most assuredly I do believe it; and it is the doctrine of our church, too. The Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants teach it, and I know that it is true."

"Why, you talk differently from any Latter Day Saint I have ever talked with, and I have talked with a great many."

"Well, I can only talk for myself."

"A very sensible answer; but you just ought to know them here in Independence, and hear them talk! O, the meanest things come up among them!"

"Well, are all the bad ones here just among the Latter Day Saints, and no bad among the others? There surely must be some good among them."

"Yes; but the evil is most noticed among them, because they make such pretensions. There are some good. There is Luff and others; well, all the good that is in them is from other churches. I tell you the most they have they got from outside. I tell you it is just ridiculous!"

"Well; it is not for me to talk about the Saints—it seems to me that God always chose most of the lower class for his peculiar people. No doubt there are good and bad here in Independence, and anywhere else. God can and is able to educate them and train them up to suit his purpose. I have got a testimony that this work we are engaged in is the work of God! He will take care of it. I leave it all in his hands."

"Well; do you know of any that believe in sanctification, or did you ever hear any preach on it?"

"I cannot say that I did; but then I have not heard so very much preaching, mostly when I go from home as now. But then there are some where I live that believe in sanctification."

This ended our talk. Now I could not dispute this man's words, for I just felt that he had been telling the truth concerning sanctification.

Now if this is the condition of things among us as Latter Day Saints, then we are just as much guilty of unbelief and disobedience as any of those around us are who do not believe in all the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. Why does Paul say, first principles and not only the principles—if nothing else was to follow? What are the Saints to be taught after they have obeyed the first principles? Be faithful and keep the commandments, is the general reply. Well, is it not as much a commandment when it says "sanctify yourselves;" "purify yourselves;" "cleanse yourselves from all sin;" "seek after sanctification, without which no one shall see God;" "be holy;" "be perfect;" as any other commandment? Or are all these empty words? Do they not mean what they say? Are we allowed to say, I don't believe it, and make light of them, just because we know there is a tendency within us to the reverse? Does this annul them and make them void? No! No! a thousand times No! "It is the will of God, even your sanctification."

THE PRIMARY TEACHER.

BY LOUISE PALFREY.

Read at Dow City Reunion.

A Primary Quarterly that is suited to all primary classes is an impossibility. The quarterly is but suggestive, at best. Hence it follows that each teacher must adapt the lessons to her class.

1. The first thing to do is for the teacher to become well acquainted with the lesson herself. To do this she will go to the Senior Quarterly and the Scriptures and other references. But the teacher must not make the great mistake of trying to tell the child all she knows on the lesson.

She is to make her knowledge useful in her class work by the clearness and vividness with which she presents the simple truths she decides upon. One of my teachers in history stands out distinctly in my memory. She did not teach us any more facts than my other teachers in history tried to do, but she taught those facts better. From her wide reading and information she illustrated our lesson with story and many an interesting sidelight, and our recitation to her was a pleasure hour. We felt we were being more entertained than taught, and yet we were being excellently taught. And I have always thought that that teacher had a great deal to do with my love for history.

After informing herself, the next thing for the teacher to do is to adapt the lesson to her class; to decide what she will teach them, and how she will teach the "what."

A teacher should have learned, by experience, her children are able to hold clearly in their minds. The aim should be to have the children carry away with them some clear idea each Sabbath. Better to teach only one thing, and teach that well, than to try to teach several things, and thereby confuse the tender minds.

HOW MUCH

Very well, then; in preparing the lesson for her class, the teacher decides upon the thought or the fact which she will bend her energies to teach. One reason primary teachers who are not successful fail is because they start in to teach their class with no definite aim; they are confused themselves, and they confuse the children. Such a teacher can never secure the interest and attention of the little ones. I have seen them in such instances where they became wearied and disorderly.

What would I choose for my

CHIEF POINT?

Would I choose the thought contained in the Golden Text? Sometimes I do, and sometimes I do not. Sometimes I find the object I want in the lesson story. It depends upon whether or not the thought is within the mental development of the class, whether or not it can be conveyed to them so they can grasp it.

Having decided upon the subject matter she will handle, the teacher looks to and often she will find it necessary to draw her pencil through some word, substitute some simpler word, or make note that a word is to be explained. I do not believe in encumbering a young child's mind too much with names. I could not say in a general paper just how far to go in this respect; it depends altogether on the capacity of the children. My rule is, however, to not bring in so much of detail or side work as to detract from the main object.

IF THE CHILDREN ARE TOO YOUNG to read the lesson, the teacher tells the lesson to them, and she ought to tell them. Never read the lesson nor refer to her quarterly in class. You can not interest little ones without keeping your eyes on them all the time.

"TELLING THE LESSON."

There is a good deal in that. And it is not well to trust yourself to do it without going through it beforehand. I once heard one of the most prominent Sunday school primary teachers in Missouri, and attended a teacher's meeting under her instruction. She showed us the manuscript in which she had written out how she would tell the lesson to her class. She would not learn it off by heart, of course, neither would she refer to the manuscript in class. She merely took this pains to systemize, in her mind, the manner of telling the story. By this method you see where weak points are; you have an opportunity of measuring each step: you will find it better to eliminate some things, and you will discover where your opportunities are. I was pleased when I heard this talented and experienced teacher explain her methods, for I had found by experience that I was most successful when beforehand, I imagined my class before me, and wrote out the lesson as I would tell it to them.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

WHEN TO "TELL."

Would I tell the lesson to the children first, and then question them, or would I tell and teach as I went along? I have no set way. I may begin with the Golden Text, I may end with it; or I may bring it in at some point in the narrative, that is, if I use it. The lessons present varied opportunities, and I am led by the peculiar opportunities of each lesson. I like the informal, conversational style; have the children talk to me as we go along as much as I talk to them—discuss as we go along. Points I want to impress I get them to talk the most about.

For instance: One time the subject of the lesson was, "Consider the lilies." I started out by asking the children if their mammas had lilies in their flower beds. Showed them a beautiful colored picture, one of my painting studies, of a bunch of lilies. Thus you see the children's interest was caught from the start. When I was through—I should say, when we were through—the children know all I wanted them to know, and they did not realize I had been teaching them. In reviewing them, they answered the questions readily.

By writing out how she will tell the lesson, beforehand, the teacher sees where she can illustrate by picture, objects, etc.

It is necessary to repeat much to emphasize a thing on a child's mind. You study to see how ingeniously you can contrive the lesson so that the repetition will work in naturally. All this the teacher does before she goes to her class. Presenting the lesson is done in preparing it; that is, the teacher knows just how she will present the lesson when her work of preparation is done. The product of her work should be so simple as to appear to be the most easy, natural thing in the world, and almost deceive the natural onlooker into thinking it spontaneous, when the truth was the reason her method appeared so unstudied was because she studied so much beforehand. Having her mind free from worry and study about the mechanical part when she goes to class, the teacher is in a better condition to receive of the Spirit that will give her illuminating powers and reaching influence with the little ones.

Conference met at Fanning, October 6. Elder M. T. Short in the chair, and Elder A. H. Parsons assisted. Elder R. Warnock was called on to address the conference, and responded. Branches reporting: Netawaka, Atchison, Scranton, Fanning, and Centralia. Ministry reporting: High Priests P. Cadwell and A. H. Parsons; Seventy M. T. Short; Elders Henry Green, James Baillie, A. L. Gurwell, R. Warnock, W. Gurwell, W. Hopkins, S. Twombly, W. Menzies, and J. W. Hudgens; Priests W. B. Thatcher, F. J. Pierce, H. Thomas, John Cairns, A. Ehlers, and J. D. Price; Teachers H. Boston and S. Davis; Deacons J. W. Burns, G. Johnston and Bro. Blont. F. J. Pierce, treasurer, reported: Balance last report $7 02; received since $27 42; expended $20 38; balance $14 06. John Cairns, Bishop's agent, reported: Balance last report $52 79; total received $127.90; expended $155; balance $25 69. Bishop's agent's and treasurer's books audited and reported correct. M. T Short was chosen district president, J. W. Burns clerk, and F. J. Pierce treasurer. Netawaka was chosen the next place of holding conference, at the call of president. A communication was received from W. E Peak, and was placed in the hands of the president. A communication was received from the president of Atchison branch asking what to do with some who had joined the Utah faction, was referred to the district president and R. Warnock as a committee of investigation. It was decided to hold a reunion in the district, and a committee was appointed, consisting of R. Warnock, James Baillie, and S. Twombly to look up a location. Charles Ehredge was recommended by Netawaka branch to be ordained a priest, and was accepted and ordained. Each branch to send their reports ten days before each conference, that the clerk may look them over before conference.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

Conference convened at Galland's Grove, Iowa, Saturday, October 27. C. E. Butterworth and J. M. Baker presiding, Nellie Rudd secretary. Elders reporting: C. E Butterworth baptized 2, J. M. Baker, C. J. Hunt, R Wight, J. M Stubbart baptized 5, N. V. Sheldon, A. R. Crippen, D Brewster, O. E Holcomb, A. Jackson baptized 5, B. Salisbury, E Ford, W. A. Carroll baptized 2; Priests J. H Greenwood and T. B. Shumate; Teachers T. F. Jones, T. C. Brady, and G. J. Juergens; Deacon O. Salisbury. Bishop C. J. Hunt reported on hand and received since last report $1,031.66: expended $899.43; balance on hand $132.23. Tent fund on hand $24 30. No report from Auburn. J. L. Butterworth was ordained to the office of elder. C. J. Hunt was chosen assistant president to fill vacancy caused by the resignation of J. M. Baker. Elders D. Brewster, N. V. and J. O. Sheldon were given a district appointment. Elders J. M. Stubbart, O. E. Holcomb, and J. L. Butterworth were appointed a court to hear an appeal case of H. M. Daniel. The Sunday school and Religio conventions reported having held four sessions. Preaching by J. M. Baker, J. F. Mintun, J. M. Stubbart, and C. E. Butterworth. Adjourned to meet at Deloit, Iowa, February 16, 1901, at 8: 45 a. m.

MONTANA.

Conference met at Bozeman, Montana, October 27 and 29 in Maxey's hall. G. Reese, district president, in the chair; G. R. Wells, secretary pro tem. Ministry reporting: G. Reese and G. R. Wells of the Seventy; J. F. Jemison, J. H. Wells, and P. W. Premo of the elders; E. E. Williams of the priests; and Thomas Reese of the teachers. Branch reports: Gallatin 104, gain of 2; Deer Lodge 53, gain of 2; Victor 36, gain of 1; Anaconda 27, gain of 2; Bridger 22, gain of 2. Bishop's agent, G. Reese, reported: On hand last report $5; received since $144.12; paid out $120; balance on hand $29.12. This report was audited and found correct. The district presidency reported having revoked the license of Elder Neils Jensen, of Anaconda branch, and asked confirmation of this act. On motion the same was approved. Finding of an elders' court in case Church vs. Jensen was forward from the Anaconda branch. Branch had adopted the finding, but referred the whole matter to conference for final action. Inasmuch as no sin or crime was found charged against the accused, it was resolved to defer action of dismemberment for twelve months, in which time it was hoped that Bro. Jensen would get rid of his infidel notions, and continue as an active member. Election of officers: Elder G. Reese was chosen district president; G. R. Wells, vice president; and Frank Christoffersen, secretary. The following were appointed as district missionaries to labor as circumstances permit: E. E. Williams (priest), of Aldridge, Montana; J. H. Wells (elder), of Bozeman; P. W. Premo (elder), of Bridger, and J. F. Jemison (elder), of Victor. For place of next conference, Bridger and Deer Lodge were placed in nomination. The choice fell on Deer Lodge. The time was left with the presidency of district. Expense of $13 had accrued for hall rent, light, and printing. A collection was taken that covered the amount in full. Fuel was donated by Lansing and Wells. Preaching on Saturday at 7: 30, and Sunday 11 a. m., and 7: 30 p. m. by Elder G. R. Wells, assisted by Elder G. Reese. Sacrament and testimony at 2: 30 on Sunday. A peaceful session. Steps were taken to hold regular meetings in Bozeman, and a committee was appointed to procure a place.

Sunday School Associations.

NORTHEAST KANSAS.

Convention met October 5, at Fanning. Convention was called to order by F. J. Pierce. Papers and short talks. In the afternoon H. Thomas was in the chair. District officers reporting: H. Thomas, superintendent; F. J. Pierce, assistant. Local superintendents reporting: Fanning, Charles Hessings; Atchison, James W. Burns; Netawaka, S. Twombly; Scranton, John Cairns. Bro. Pierce read a paper, "Why this convention?" Short talks, "What are the benefits of a district organization?" by H. Thomas and F. J. Pierce. "What should be the character and qualifications of a superintendent?" Short talks by F. J. Pierce, Sr. Miller, J. Price, S. Twombly, and W. Menzies. "A few points on Sunday school work" by Sr. Sprague. Vocal duet by Srs. Miller and Munns. "Why should the aged take an interest in Sunday school work?" by Mary Hopkins. Vocal duet by Srs. Helen and Fannie Gurwell. Schools reporting: Atchison, Fanning, and Scranton. The superintendent was authorized to appoint a committee of three to arrange a program for next convention. Committee: Fannie Gurwell, F. J. Pierce, and J. W. Burns. Sr. Miller was elected treasurer in place of our deceased brother, I. McGalliard. A resolution of condolence was passed as follows: "Whereas, it has been the will of God to take from our midst to the spirit land, our much esteemed and worthy brother, Isaac E. McGalliard, who, until the time of his departure, July 26, served in the capacity of treasurer in the Northeast Kansas district, and also filling the office of superintendent of the Fanning Sunday school. Therefore be it resolved, that we as members of the Sunday school convention convened at Fanning, this 5th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1900, do offer this tribute of respect to his memory, and hereby register our loss from among the ranks of workers; and that we tender our heartfelt sympathy and condolence to the bereaved family, and commend them to the mercy and favor of our heavenly Father. Be it again resolved, that a copy of this be sent to the family, and also be spread upon the minutes of this convention.

Miscellaneous Department.

PASTORAL.

A Word to Colaborers, Greeting:—Self, and Bro. S. K. Sorensen have traveled extensively in Miner, McCook, and Lake counties, South Dakota, visiting points where little gospel labor has been done, and in some places years have elapsed since the gospel story was heard. Busy times with farmers, a superabundance of rain, dark nights, muddy roads, and the stolid indifference of the masses as to the vital question of religion, etc., has greatly militated against missionary labor. But we have been at our post, doing what we considered we ought to be doing as General Conference appointees. And if the people fail to fall in with the overtures of God's mercy when offered, we are not blamable. The sound of the divine injunction, "Preach the gospel," has sounded in our ears.

To coworkers in North and South Dakota. I would respectfully suggest, in my opinion it were better to seek new localities for the unfurling of Christ's banner than to consume further time in the above referred to counties, unless specially requested. Christ's injunction, "If they will not hear you in one city, go to another," has its significance as other injunctions. The love of travel should not, by cherishing it, become so intensified in the soul of General Conference appointees as to induce them to leave one point where they have been successful in creating an interest for another point, which perchance may be somewhat more fascinating than the one where evidence of interest develops. I find the work has suffered by this slipshod, indecisive way in prosecuting missionary work. It ought to be understood that the missionary who is successful in creating an interest in a new locality is the one who should prosecute the work until evidence develops that the interest will materialize, or dies out, if it takes all summer. I don't mean by this to keep at one place to deliver forty or fifty consecutive sermons, until the people are surfeited. No; but after delivering five or six gospel sermons, and evidence of an intense interest is evinced, leave that point, but leave an appointment for a few night hence. Go elsewhere, and return at the time appointed so as to keep the interest alive. But as he who is in the front of the battle knows better the needs (or should do) than those afar off, should one be especially directed to go beyond five or six sermons, he should do so, but by no means let the interest die out, when it exists, because of a desire to go home to celebrate the 4th of July or Christmas, or spend a couple of weeks in attending a district conference, or luxuriate in the shade for ten days at some big reunion, preaching one or two sermons, while if sticking to your post you might preach a dozen or possibly twenty sermons, and might let the sound of the gospel trumpet fall on the ears of some honest soul bound down under the benighting influence of a manmade priesthood.

Now if the reader wants to know the meaning of this, I pause to state: It means just this, I speak as I understand. In my acceptation of an appointment by General Conference I covenant to do what that appointment contemplates, and that is, I should go where sent, and stay there. Of course custom, which in time, becomes more forcible than law, has made it permissible to attend annual conferences (and though opposed to annual conference, unless an exigency confronts the church necessitating a General Conference), I have never taught my constituents to violate the action of General Conference. Then too, sickness, etc., may necessitate a missionary to visit home between adjournment and assembling of conference. But if no such exigency confront, the general appointee ought to stick to his post a year. But if he can't endure such a sacrifice, he should quit as a traveling missionary.

I have much sympathy for one whose physical disabilities prevent him doing missionary work. Further, I wish to say to my colaborers, if choosing to quit an appointed field, do not assume the responsibility of appointing some one else in your stead, because in all candor I wish to state, while I am in charge of any portion of God's moral vineyard by the action of the body, I am opposed to any such procedure. It were bad enough for you to leave an appointment unless necessitated per force of circumstances: but such a bit of assumption as appointing another in your stead might cause some unpleasant friction, which is much easier avoided than to extricate ourselves from when inveigled therein. God's given laws, when properly advocated and enforced, will prove effective in friction as in adjusting trouble when despite our efforts to prevent it confronts us.

To those concerned I wish to state that in view of the weather being less severe in east Minnesota than in Dakota, in the event of a severe winter; and, whereas Bro. Eli Hayer is of the opinion that labor may be more effectively prosecuted in east Minnesota by two elders than one, Bro. S. K. Sorensen will labor in conjunction with Bro. Eli Hayer during the coming winter, I take the liberty to announce this change with the understanding that it will be favored by Bro. J. W. Wight.

I take pleasure in recommending Bro. S. K. S. to Bro. Eli Hayer as an active, persevering colaborer. The thought of inactivity is painful to him.

In conclusion, to the Saints scattered in Nebraska and the Dakotas, I wish to say do not by any means turn a deaf ear to the pleadings of the brethren in the far off land of Australia. See Herald for October 24. See, mark, read, and properly digest the nature of their petition. They ask not for ease or release from toilsome life of a missionary in the advocacy of the latter-day work. No, but for help; help that they may more vigorously prosecute the work in the interest of which they have so nobly, steadily worked, lo these many years. Oh, let us place ourselves in their position, or suppose we were one of three or four elders in the United States and as many thousands of Saints in Australia as the case in America, and we cry to them for help, as they now cry to us, wouldn't we feel sad, discouraged, and disconsolate if they should fail to help. For humanity's sake let us help them.

In gospel bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and friends of British Columbia will please take notice that to aid the Bishopric in its work in said territory and better perform the work of looking after the poor and church finances, upon recommendation duly presented, appointment has been made this day of Bro. Daniel McGregor of Chilliwack, B. C., as agent of the Bishopric in and for said territory.

Bro. McGregor has been duly authorized to act in receiving tithes and offerings and expending the same under the direction of the Bishopric of said church and will look after the same and give receipts and perform all other work incidental to the duties of a Bishop's agent within said Territory.

We hereby recommend him to the Saints and friends in British Columbia, and bespeak for him the help, good-will, and aid possible for them to give.

Witness my hand this 30th day of October, A. D. 1900.

In behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L KELLEY,
Presiding Bishop.

BISHOPS' NOTICES.

To Saints of Northeast Texas and Choctaw District, Greeting:—As the end of the current year is drawing near, I beg to say that the work in our district, on the whole, is in a very favorable condition, there having been about fifty baptized since January 1, mostly in western Arkansas, where the work is in a most encouraging condition, all the conference appointees being actively engaged in the work, and the local force is doing well. Also the missionary in charge, Bro. H. O. Smith, has been laboring for several weeks in our district, with excellent results.

Now, Saints, we hope you will not forget the temporal arm of God's work, as much is now depending upon the manner in which his law is honored and observed. The families of the missionaries must not be left without food and raiment, while the husband and father—on whom they depend—is expected by the church to go forward and unfold to the people the great restored gospel, so grand, so elevating, so marvelous, but yet somewhat unpopular.

God requires of us one tenth of all our net gains annually. Will we honor his law, and thereby loosen the hands of his servants? Courage, brethren, and on to the victory!

Bro. E. A. Erwin will receive and forward all tithes in the branches in the Texas portion of our district, brethren Newton and Bailey in Arkansas, and Bro. Peter Adamson in the Territory.

Invoking God's blessing upon you, I am, your brother.

ELLIS SHORT,
Bishop Northeast Texas and Choctaw District.

To the Saints of Northern California:—I wish to tender my sincere thanks to all for the confidence reposed in me as agent for Bishop Kelley, and the way in which you have sustained me, and fully answered my expressed desire at the beginning of my official work in the temporal line. I have tried to do my best, and you have appreciated it, and honored me in your service.

In the past, I have never called upon you but you have always nobly responded, nor have I done so only when the exigency of the case demanded it.

I trust the future will enable us to continue our united efforts for the Master. Since our heavenly Father has seen fit to call me by his Spirit to fill a more responsible position, I hope you will continue to do your duty in the temporal line; help on the great cause, and at the same time help yourselves to appear with more favor in the sight of Him whom you seek to serve.

When it was made known to me that I was to be ordained bishop, I was very uncertain whether to accept or not, until I had received

unmistakable divine assurance; and that too, notwithstanding many times I had been told that I would be called "to a high position in the church of the living God."

I felt, and feel now, the higher the position, the more responsibility. The first time this was ever told me was at Santa Rosa by a young sister, under what I knew to be divine influence. The particular office to which I would be called was made known to me, but I tried to put it away, that is, tried to persuade myself I was wrong. In a dream I was called "Bishop" and commanded to "proceed."

As long as I am in this line of service I trust we may so labor as to bring the designed results. I hope and trust that when the testing time shall come we may be found to have so wrought as to not be disappointed.

All who wish to be reported in 1901 must make their remittances before December 31, as our report must be at Lamoni then.

MEMORIAL FUND NOTICE.

Since publication of the letter of Elder J. W. Wight describing the conditions surrounding the resting place of the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Saints seem interested in putting in proper condition this burial place, and some have contributed to this purpose.

This will notify all who may wish to make an offering to be used for this purpose that they may do so by taking names and amounts contributed by each one and forward to the Bishop of the Church, or place in the hands of any Bishop's agent or local Bishop, who will forward the same, such means to be duly expended for the purposes given under the advice of Bro. Joseph and Alexander H. Smith and the Bishopric of the Church.

All remittances will be receipted by publication through the Herald and Ensign.

Respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 30, 1900.

FOURTH QUORUMS OF DEACONS.

Dear Brethren:—I wish to call attention to the great duty we are called to. Some think a deacon is not much, as they sometimes say, I am nothing but a deacon; but I think it is a high and holy calling, and we should be very diligent and do all that the law requires of us, and very glad to work in that calling as long as God will uphold us in the same. Do not forget that we must give a report of what we have done for the Lord this year, whether it be work in Sunday school, or acting as presiding deacon in a branch. Report how many times you have opened meetings, or other work done in your calling. As we have to give a quorum report to the Church Historian next April Conference, therefore, let us try to do all we can for the Master. Please send in your report not later than the first of March. If any wish to join the quorum, give date of birth and baptism, ordination, and by whom ordained. Please report to me, and let all meet next April. Address me at Guilford, Missouri.

ROBERT NELSON, Pres.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAMS.

The Christmas programs issued by the General Sunday School Association will be ready to mail about November 10, 1900. Price will be 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen, or $4 per hundred, postage prepaid. Send orders to the business manager of the Herald Office, Bro. John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa. Order your programs early and begin work on them at once.

We have examined the manuscript of this program and consider it of unusual merit and will do credit to the many contributors and to the committee which prepared it. It is adapted to the use of the smallest school in the association or to the largest. You may find parts for any individual or class in your school. It has been prepared with this point especially in view. So do not think that your school could not use it.

We hope that all schools whether large or small will celebrate the Christmas with appropriate exercises. Do not desecrate the day or treat the occasion lightly, but make it one of pleasure, worship, and reverence. These programs are issued with the hope to assist those who wish to celebrate the day with appropriate exercises by furnishing them with material such as they cannot find without much effort if at all. We believe that all will be pleased with the program that use it.

44-2t T. A. HOUGAS, Gen. Supt.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Pottawattamie conference convenes at Carson, Iowa, November 24, at ten o'clock. In order that the secretary may have time to prepare the business and forward it to the conference, it is desirable that credentials, reports, and other communications be sent so as to reach him on Monday, November 19. Blank reports have been sent to all the priesthood of the district, and as this is by order of the conference, it is hoped that the priesthood will manifest at least enough interest to return the reports. If you have not done anything, let us know, also the reason; and if you are ready and willing to act in the office of your calling, so that the conference may know who are alive, and arrange for the work in the district accordingly. Address all business for the conference to the secretary, J. Charles Jensen, 102 Broadway, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Conference will convene with Canadian Center branch, Dewey county, Oklahoma, Friday, November 30, at 7:30 p. m. It is expected that each branch will send a statistical report; please do not fail. Also, as per resolution, each elder, priest, teacher, and deacon is required to report. We kindly urge that this provision be complied with, that the conference may know what labor is being performed. Many of the Saints in the district have not as yet visited Canadian Center branch, or the favored spot of Oklahoma, Dewey county, hence this will be a favorable opportunity; therefore, we earnestly invite the Saints to attend the conference. It will benefit you, strengthen you in the faith, enliven your spirituality, and help you to bless others. The place of meeting will be at Guy schoolhouse (so far as is now known), seven miles northeast of Taloga. The busy season will be over, and we hope the Saints will make an effort, an extra effort to attend. R. M. MALONEY, Pres.

Northeast Texas and Choctaw district conference convenes at Cove, Arkansas, December 1, and not on the 8th, as some have understood. Please remember. It is expected that a profitable time will be had. The missionary in charge will be present. Let us have a full turnout.

Southeastern Illinois district conference will be held at Springerton, beginning Saturday, December 1, at ten a. m., to hold over Sunday. This is the time for election of officers of district. All are invited to come and help make this one of the best conferences ever held in this district.

ISAAC A. MORRIS, Pres.

NOTICES.

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 29.

Bro. Joseph Smith brought to the Saints' Home, a few days ago, a cushion which was made and sent here by Sr. Jane Heaton, of Blackfoot, Idaho. It is almost too pretty to use. It is made of silk of various colors, and decorated with fancy silk stitches and silk flowers in colors. It has been put in the parlor and receives its full share of attention.

ALICE P. DANCER, Matron.

BORN.

RAYER.—At Burlington, Iowa, July 28, 1899, to Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Rayer, a son, named Glen. August 23, 1900, twin boys, named Raleigh and Rolf. Blessed October 9, 1900, by Elder J. S. Roth.

MARRIED.

PENDER — GURWELL. — In the Saints' chapel, Fanning, Doniphan county, Kansas, on the evening of October 24, 1900, Elder Will S. Pender and Sr. Fannie B. Gurwell were united in marriage, Bro. H. A. Stebbins officiating. Bro. Pender is widely known as one of the active elders in the field, and this year of the Rocky Mountain mission. The bride is a daughter of Bro. and Sr. William Gurwell. Prior to the ceremony, Bro. Stebbins spoke upon marriage, as defined in the three books. Bro. A. H. Parsons assisted in this service. Bro. M. T. Short was also present. Bro. Pender expects to return to his field about December first.

DIED.

STINSON.—At her home in South Addison, Maine, Sr. Henrietta Stinson. She was born February 26, 1834; baptized November 9, 1894; died October 16, 1900. She was very zealous for the faith she loved so well, and because of this the Saints will miss her much. Funeral services by Elder U. M. Kelley. We feel that we have one portion of scripture at least to comfort us: "Precious in the eyes of the Lord are the death of his saints."

OLSEN.—In Nettle township, Grundy county, Illinois, October 15, 1900, Eva Ann, daughter of Mr. Jacob and Sr. Sarah E. Olsen, aged 10 years, 3 months, and 23 days. For eight months she suffered with disease of the brain and spine, so death was a release from her woes. Her face in death was that of a sweet innocent, one prepared for the change. She was a grandchild of Bro. and Sr. Austin Hayer. The funeral services were held in the chapel of the Mission branch, Bro. Thomas Hougas in charge of the services, and Bro. H. A. Stebbins preaching the sermon.

HUMPHREY.—At New Bedford, Massachusetts, September 28, 1900, Sister Elizabeth, wife of Bro. Daniel Humphrey, aged 56 years and 1 month. She was born at Dennis, Massachusetts, and united with the Reorganized Church something over thirty years ago. She leaves a husband and four sons and two daughters to mourn the loss of a good wife and mother. A large assembly of Saints, friends, and neighbors evidenced by their presence and tokens of affection and of grief the great loss sustained by the family and by all who had known her, at funeral services, which were conducted by Elder M. H. Bond.

ANDERSON.—At St. Clair, Michigan, September 11, 1900, to Bro. Henry and Sr. Mary Anderson, a daughter. Blessed October 21, by Elder C. Scott, and named Marion Delta.

EATON.—At Stonington, Maine, October 21, 1900, Elder George W. Eaton, a great and good man, has gone to rest; his reward will be great, when the Lord comes. He was a great worker in the gospel; but of late years could not do as much as he desired, nevertheless he died firm in the faith of a glorious resurrection. He had a long and painful sickness, borne with fortitude and great patience. He was a faithful and consistent brother, always ready to do his Lord and Master's bidding. He received many blessings, confirming his hope in Christ and his coming kingdom. In his last moments he conversed with angels, who seemed ready to guide him over the river. The church has lost a staunch and faithful member and society a noble citizen and friend. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly has a large subscription list; but it should be larger. Its management is more energetic, its plans better than ever before. As an added stimulus toward an increase, the Monthly offers no less than two hundred and sixty-four (264) prizes in cash to the men and women, boys and girls, who show most energy in securing new subscribers. This offer means that time and energy shall be well paid for.

The price of the Magazine is one dollar a year. Its contents appeal directly to people who care for good and timely literature. A few spare hours a week will add to your income substantially. If you want work that will pay you, write for terms to Frank Leslie Publishing House, 141-147 Fifth Ave., New York.

THE BIBLE AND HIGHER CRITICISM.

The following correspondence between Revs. Professor Dods and Dr. Kerr on the Bible and the higher criticism has been sent us by Dr. Kerr for publication:—

I.—DR. KERR TO DR. DODS.

19 Queen Square,
GLASGOW, 16th Oct., 1900.

Dear Dr. Dods,—In your lecture on the evening of Sabbath week on "The Bible and criticism," as reported in the "Glasgow Herald," you are represented as repeatedly affirming that there are erroneous and contradictory statements in the Scriptures. I write to request, as I do respectfully, that you would kindly indicate to me some of the passages of the Word of God where these errors and discrepancies may be found. I have hitherto professed belief and desired others to profess belief in the infallibility and divine authority of the Bible; but, should your declarations be found correct, I would feel bound to alter my own attitude towards the Word of God, and point out to my congregation and others the erroneous and misleading portions of that book from which comes all our knowledge of the Savior of men. You will, therefore, I am confident, comply with this request, that I may prosecute inquiry on this momentous matter without delay.—Yours sincerely, J. KERR.

II.—DR. DODS TO DR. KERR.

23 Great King Street,
EDINBURGH, 16th Oct., 1900.

Dear Sir,—I am very much surprised that you should ask me for information which you can find in at least a hundred easily accessible volumes. Let me only name Carpenter's "Synoptic Gospels," Gilbert's "Life of Jesus," Snell's "Gain or Loss," any of Schwartzkopff's books, and indeed any critical work on the Scriptures. It is not my business to point out errors in Scripture, but to show that notwithstanding the errors pointed out, Scripture infallibly accomplishes its purpose of presenting Christ to men. In other words, it was and is independent of criticism—the figure of Christ remains and appeals to men as self-evidencing. Have you read Dorner's History of Protestantism? I think that gives as good a hold of the subject an any book I know. Only mischief comes of affirming the literal inerrancy of Scripture—only good comes of maintaining its infallibility as a guide to Christ and God.—Yours sincerely, MARCUS DODS.

III.—DR. KERR TO DR. DODS.

19 Queen Square,
GLASGOW, Oct. 17, 1900.

Dear Mr. Dods.—I thank you for referring me to the works on Biblical criticism you mention,—works not unknown to me. Had you specified the conclusions of these critics against the inerrancy of the Scriptures which you regarded as defensible, your reply would have been more satisfactory. I again, however, respectfully request you to specify those passages in the Word of God which you had in view in your recent lecture in this city, when you maintained that "here and there there were discrepancies and errors;" that "the four gospels differed from another, disagreed with one another in this or that part of their narrative;" and that "errors in any part of the Bible were of no consequence as affecting the accounts given us by Christ." You can surely out of such an evident abundance of passages indicate (say) a dozen of the parts where in your deliberate judgment these errors and discrepancies may be found. You write:—"It is not my business to point out errors in Scripture." I respectfully submit, however, that if you deem it "your business" to affirm that there are errors in Scripture, as you have repeatedly done, it ought to be "your business" to state with all clearness what these errors are and where they are to be found that the readers of the Bible might, as Protestants, exercise the right of private judgment on their character and effects, and might, if satisfied of the fact, warn others of the fallibility of the book in whose infallibility they have hitherto placed the utmost confidence. Is it not "your business" out of love for all students of the Scriptures, whether weak or strong, to point with all clearness the stumbling-blocks in what you describe as an "infallible guide to Christ and God," and especially as in your judgment there are so many of these in their path to the Redeemer of men. I do earnestly trust that you will not hesitate to give a full and definite statement on a question of such momentous importance to the faith of believers and to the progress of Christianity throughout the world.—Sincerely yours,

JAMES KERR.

IV.—DR. DODS TO DR. KERR.

23 Great King Street,
EDINBURGH, 17th October, 1900.

Dear Sir,—Apparently you wish to drag me into a controversy for which I have neither disposition nor time. If it is information you seek, you assure me you know where to get it. I am always ready to answer the questions of honest researchers after truth, but I decline to enter into controversy with one whose mind is evidently made up already.—Yours sincerely,

MARCUS DODS.

V.—DR. KERR TO DR. DODS.

19 Queen Square,
GLASGOW, 18th October, 1900.

Dear Dr. Dods,—I am very much surprised that you even hesitate to specify a number of these passages in the Gospels or other parts of the Scriptures where the errors and discrepancies, whose existence you so frequently affirm in your late lecture here, may be found. You are perfectly correct in assuming that "my mind is made up already" on the infallibility of the Word of God, else I would renounce belief in it; but I would be a bigot indeed if I were not prepared to examine with impartial mind statements by responsible authorities affecting that infallibility. Accordingly, when a public religious teacher of your scholastic reputation again and again insists on the existence or errors and discrepancies in that Word, I was desirous of examining these with honest mind. The opportunity of doing this, however, you now curtly refuse to grant, accompanying your refusal with an imputation on my honesty as an inquirer. The reason you assign for this refusal is singular indeed—you do not wish to be dragged into controversy. Why, sir, you raised a controversy on this very question a quarter of a century ago, and that controversy you have not yet abandoned. In the face of judgments against you at that time, by your Synod and Assembly, you soon after, in the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, London, again asserted your opinions and raised a keen controversy, in the course of which those opinions were repudiated and condemned by the most prominent divines of that Assembly, including Revs. Dr. Craven, Philadelphia; Dr. Murkland, Baltimore; Dr. Hall, New York; Dr. Caven, Toronto; Prof. Watts, Belfast; Principal Douglas, Glasgow, and others. Now, again, in this public lecture on a special occasion, you throw down the gauntlet in the face of evangelical Christendom, which accepts the infallibility of the Scriptures, and you give a deliberate deliverance against their inerrancy in such a form as to lead the youth of the Christian Church and all others to infer that the Word of God was honeycombed with error. And when you are respectfully requested to point out only a dozen of those passages in the Scriptures where some of these alleged errors and discrepancies may be found you evade a duty which you owe to every honest inquirer, and which could apparently be discharged by you with the utmost readiness. And your only reason for this evasion, after all your agitation and controversy these years, is that you "have neither disposition nor time for controversy!" I still trust that for the sake of the vast interests involved, and your candor as a public critic of the Scriptures, you will yet comply with the request which I again respectfully present.—Yours sincerely, J. KERR.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

VI.—DR. DODS TO DR. KERR.

23 Great King St.,
EDINBURGH, 19th Oct., 1900.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, I have three remarks to make:—1. You say "You give a deliberate deliverance against their (Scriptures) inerrancy, in such a form as to lead the youth of the Christian Church and all others to infer that the Word of God was honeycombed with errors." That is not true; indeed it is the very reverse of the truth. 2. You pose as a simple-minded inquirer wishing information about the errors in Scripture while according to your own statement you are perfectly familiar with the sources of such information. 3. I cordially believe in the infallibility of Scripture, for the purpose for which it is given, and I believe in its authority as the Word of God. Allow me to remind you that the utterance of calumnious statements is quite as iniquitous as mistaken opinions. This correspondence now closes so far as I am concerned, and you will be good enough to consider my letters strictly private, and for your own perusal only.—Yours truly,

MARCUS DODS.

VII.—DR. KERR TO DR. DODS.

19 Queen Square,
GLASGOW, 19th October, 1900.

Dear Dr. Dods,—I do not wonder that you follow up your refusal to point out the passages in the Bible where the errors you allege are to be found, by a bold attempt to prevent the publication of this correspondence. You will please bear in mind that the correspondence arose out of your own public lecture on a Sabbath evening in this city, that all my statements affected your public attitude on the question discussed by you deliberately in that lecture, and that the whole matter is one of the gravest world-wide concern. For these reasons, and others also, I cannot hold your letters as private in any sense of the term, and feel the more constrained to publish them as you now charge me with "calumnious" utterances against yourself. It should not, I think, displease you to see in the public press my "calumnious" utterances against yourself. Besides, the leaders and members of the Christian Church will thereby be able to form their own judgment as to whether I am the author of "calumnious" utterances against you, or you the author of such utterances against God's own Word—utterance persisted in by you, without any proof, for more than five and twenty years.—Yours sincerely,

JAMES KERR.

The Thanksgiving number of the Saturday Evening Post is dated November 10. The cover is by Harrison Fisher. The opening article is The Leaders in American Diplomacy, by honorable John W. Foster, formerly Secretary of State. Honorable Frank A. Vanderlip, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, contributes The Onward March of American Trade. Honorable Carter H. Harrison, Mayor of Chicago, has an article on The Defacement of the Modern City. Major Arthur Griffiths, of the British Army (Retired), has an anecdotal sketch of General Wolseley. The Adventures of a Pioneer Plainsman are told by Captain John J. Healy. The fiction includes Senate Bill 578, by Brand Whitlock; For Divers Reasons, by Charles Battell Loomis; The Banner Bearer, by Mrs. Burton Harrison; The Diary of a Harvard Freshman, by Charles Macomb Flandrau. Mooswa of the Boundaries, by W. A. Fraser; 'Enry 'Iggins' 'Eart Story, by Joe Lincoln; A Supper by Proxy, by Paul Laurence Dunbar. There is a half-page poem called The Ballad of Ozy B. Orr, by Holman F. Day. The editorial page deals with timely subjects; the department of Men and Women of the Hour contains new stories, and the "Publick Occurences" tell of the efforts to capture South American trade. Frank W. Thomas gives Confessions of a Mind Reader; Madeline S. Bridges has a poem called An Untold Love; William Mathews contributes The Matter-of-Fact Man. The other departments are Literary News and Oddities of Science.

The practical men who manage the business of the colleges report in a personal and confidential way that the students are better dressed and better appearing than at any time in their experience. The era of bath-tubs and sanitation and good living has had its effect upon American youth. To-day if young Ben Franklin should come to Philadelphia to try his fortunes, it is quite likely that he would not march up the street munching his cheap loaf, but would be riding comfortably and handsomely in an automobile toward a scholarship, possibly pausing on his way to get a well-balanced luncheon at a fashionable café.

The whole tone of college life has been wonderfully raised within the past few years, and if one desires to see a set of well-groomed young men he should attend the opening proceedings of a modern college. Their clothes are not only new and well made, but their complexions are clear.—Saturday Evening Post.

THANKSGIVING.

President William McKinley, according to custom and following the usage of his predecessors in the presidential office, has by proclamation duly signed and issued, set apart as a day of prayer and thanksgiving, Thursday, November 29; and publicly request the citizens of the republic to properly observe the day, by assembling at their respective places of worship at such hours on that day as they may agree, and in such exercises as will be appropriate give tribute of praise and thanksgiving to the Ruler of the universe, for such blessings as have been vouchsafed to the citizens of this great commonwealth of states.

In accordance with such proclamation, we deem it to be wise that the Saints observe such day as requested, and in such manner as the branches, or their officers may determine, always bearing in mind the duty of citizens of the republic and worshipers of the true and living God.

JOSEPH SMITH,

MONEY REPRESENTATION IN CHURCH WORK.

We quote the following from the Baptist Flag, for November 1. We are not familiar with the history and fact of the money basis referred to by the Flag; but from the reference it would appear that there is some rule which requires a money qualification of two hundred and fifty dollars to admit church delegations to seats in the conventions. Rather peculiar, that.

The money basis of representation in conventions is so directly antagonistic to the very genius and spirit of the gospel, and of Baptist faith that it is a wonder how it ever happened to be adopted by any of our Baptist bodies. We acknowledge the patent fact that this is an age that finds the world devoted to the "almighty dollar," but this is no excuse for churches to bow down and worship mammon. A discrimination in favor of the rich as against the poor is a vicious principle, and is distinctly condemned in Sacred Writ. The money basis of representation has in it this offensive discrimination. Suppose the Southern Baptist Convention should resolve at its next session to place itself strictly under the control of the coöperating churches, and accept none as members save those who were sent by the churches, but should still maintain the money basis of representation as it now stands; there would not be two hundred churches in the entire convention that would secure representation in the body, while there would be thousands of churches that would be debarred because of inability to pay the price of admission. If that is not a discrimination against poor churches what is it? Jesus Christ and all of the apostles would be debarred from membership in the Southern Baptist Convention unless he could catch a fish with two hundred and fifty dollars in its mouth so as to pay the tax. Surely such folly will in due time produce its results, and the voice of our leaders will plead for the rights of the poor, yet the sound, Baptist churches that are entirely excluded now. A Baptist church that desires to cooperate with other churches in controlling the work of world-wide evangelization should be allowed to have representation because of its spirit, even if it is unable to give one farthing. It is the spirit our Lord honors, more than the size of the gift. The widow's two mites were more in his estimation than all the gold the rich could throw into the treasury. The money basis is iniquitous. Away with it.

MORMONPHOBIA.

If we are permitted to coin a word to express the peculiar mental condition of some of the reverend gentlemen occupying the religious pulpits of the time, it would be some such word as the caption of this item; for surely none but a man infected with a sort of religious rabies would utter such a screed as we give below. No such phenomenal growth as 63,000 for the year 1897 occurred in the ranks of Mormondom, taking all classes of believers in the Book of Mormon together, including, of course, the Reorganized Church. The probabilities are that this Rev. Sydney H. Cox was so affected by sectarian bigotry and hate that he magnified 6,300 to the huger sum of 63,000. It is possible that the converts to Mormonism, all classes, in 1897 would foot up 6,300; the additions to the Reorganized Church for that year were approximately 2,500, and the Utah division may easily have gained the other 3,800 to make up the 6,300.

As to patriotism. Did the Congregationalist Church, as a church, furnished any troops for the Mexican War? The Mormons did. Did the Congregationalist Church, as a church, furnish a contingent of soldiers for the war with Spain? The Utah church did.

We sincerely hope that the census of 1900 will astonish Protestantism: but as to alarming patriotic Americans, the reverend gentleman may rest assured that the average American citizen is neither a fool nor a Congregationalist to be alarmed at the rash statement of a befogged minister in a sectarian pulpit.

And what may be the "doom" to which the reverend gentleman would consign Mormonism? We are interested in knowing, for he asserts that there are 5,500, in Iowa, and we may be of the number cited by him. Why do the Christians rage?

By what process is "the serpent" to be crushed? Utah is a state and under the sovereign sway of the federal government. If these reverend gentlemen would only give the subject a rest, time and the trend of inquiry would eradicate the causes for their unfortunately rabid statements.

The Rev. Sydney H. Cox, pastor of the Lee Avenue Congregational Church of New York City, preached a sermon Sunday on "The Political Peril of Mormonism," in which he pointed out that the growth of the Mormon Church imperils the country. In showing the growth of the Mormons he said:—

"The gain to Mormonism in 1897 was 63,000 converts, and this when the total number of Mormons was less than a third of a million. During the same year the efforts of over 4,000,000 Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists did not secure more than 50,000 converts, or 13,000 less than the Mormons alone secured. The census of 1890 showed that the Mormons numbered in Idaho 15,000, in Arizona 6,500, in Iowa 5,500, and in six other states from 1,100 to 2,000 each. The census of 1900 will reveal an increase that will prove astonishing to Protestantism and alarming to all patriotic Americans.

"Mormonism will never rule America, but the apathy that postpones its doom prolongs the horror and the agony of those who suffer from its infernal influence. The church must be aroused. The Christianity of the nation must be stirred and organized until this scarlet woman of our republic is destroyed and we are rid forever of this bestial barbarism."

The time to crush this serpent is before it becomes larger and more powerful.—Iowa State Register.

AN instance of what a few words in an opportune time may do is the following. Bro. Alexander Clark, of Waldemar, Ontario, was going from his home last June to attend a farmers' convention at a nearby railway station, and on the train got into a conversation with a gentleman on religious topics in the course of which Bro. Clark loaned the gentleman a copy of Bro. J. J. Cornish's Instructor, which was returned to him the other day accompanied by the following brief letter, which will show for itself:—

TORONTO, Canada, October 27, 1900.
ALEXANDER CLARK, ESQ., Waldemar;

Dear Sir:—About June 1 last you gave me a little volume of Scripture selections to pe-

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ruse and return to you. I left it in the car seat that afternoon and in the anxiety attendant upon my sister's illness forgot all about it for some weeks. I was fortunate enough to find it in the "lost baggage" department of the station, and have had it with me constantly for two or three months in my field work. I have used it for Scripture reading by the camp fire in the wilds of Thunder Bay and in the cultured homes of my friends in some of the leading cities of the United States and Canada, and have had time to carefully peruse it.

The compiler deserves great credit for the compact and complete character of the work. The selections are very appropriate, and the Scripture quotations especially well arranged to teach the important truths and doctrines of the Father's word. I like the book very much.

I have remailed it to you this morning. What I have received of its richness has not depleted or reduced its wealth.

I inclose you a couple of cuttings to memorize, and by the assistance of the blessed One they apostrophise, assist you into the sweetness of his indwelling, and subscribe myself.

Your brother, by the birthright that Nicodemus wondered at until he found it,

LLEWELLYN A. MORRISON.

M. P. HANSEN DEAD.

As we go to press we are notified by letter from Bro. N. C. Enge that Bro. M. P. Hansen, of Plymouth, Massachusetts, who was associated with Bro. Enge in the Scandinavian mission, was dead, dying on October 26. It was quite sudden, caused by entanglement of the bowels.

We deeply regret the death of Bro. Hansen; but he died as he wished at his post, as he expressed himself to us when we met him at Plymouth last year. He rests in peace. Of his departure Bro. Enge wrote:—

We buried him today. The few words he spoke while sick, and his fervent prayers will never be forgotten by those who heard him. Their testimony will some day be heard in the church.

SR. KATE M. JEPSON, of Woodland, Minnesota, sends us a clipping from the Pathfinder for September 29, which we give below. If we, or an elder in the field, should make such an arraignment, it would be charged to religious enmity, and be deemed to be presumptuous on our part. What shall be said of it done by one in their own ranks?

PLAIN TALK FROM PULPIT.

At the session of the convention of Christian workers held in the Moody church in Chicago last week Rev. R. A. Torrey spoke on "The Need of a General Revival," making a bitter arraignment of the present method of worship, and what he said were the "depraved tastes of the people" in literature, art, and amusements. After Dr. Torrey had completed a severe scoring of the ministry, in the course of which he said, "many of us who are professedly orthodox are infidels," he launched forth into a fierce attack on certain church members. "Sunday is rapidly becoming a day of pleasure," said Dr. Torrey. "Along with neglect of prayer and neglect of God's word go a lack of generosity. The churches are increasing in wealth, but the treasuries of the missionary societies are empty. Christians do not average a dollar a year for foreign missions. Unbelief is rampant. Hand in hand with this widespread infidelity goes immorality. Infidelity and immorality are Siamese twins."

NO FAIR DEAL.

A brother sends us the following card:—

No fair deal. If a man is poisoned to death in our licensed saloons by their deadly drink, the widow and orphan children get nothing, only to be sold out to pay up old whisky bills, or other bills contracted while the dead man was crazy with saloon poison; but if any honest business kills or cripples a man, the widow gets a good living.

If this picture is one true to life, it shows a strong argumentative incentive for a man to keep away from the saloon poison.

And, while the fact of the widow and orphaned children being made to suffer must excite the sympathy for them and pity for the end of the poisoned drunkard, it is better for society that the fairness of the deal is in favor of the sober man's family. Let sensible men who love their families take note—and profit by it.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

A. V. Closson writes November 5, from Porcupine, Wisconsin:—

I have been sent here to take charge of the work. We will move tomorrow. We shipped household goods last Saturday. Gospel work is onward here.

Bro. D. McGregor, under date of November 3, writes from Chilliwack, British Columbia:—

It is with unusual pleasure that we chronicle the arrival of Bro. R. C. Evans last evening. He looks natural and full of usual good cheer. Am not a "shoutin' Methodist," by any meaning, but really we all feel like vociferously exclaiming, "Glory Hallelujah!"

November 4, Bro. G. F. Patten wrote from Alexandria, South Dakota:—

I am isolated, but am strong in the faith. Am somewhat afflicted with rheumatism, and desire the prayers of the Saints.

Sr. A. E. Shaw writes from Mt. View, Oklahoma Territory:—

No Saints here in this part. We are very lonesome, yet we are still in the faith.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. N. C. Enge, in a late letter dated at Arundel, Norway, and written to Bro. E. L. Kelley, states that he is having some success in getting a hearing with a few; and is hopeful. He had an opening at Grimstad, where he would make another effort. Bro. Hansen had reached Bro. Enge, sick, but was apparently improving when Bro. E. wrote. He had done a good work at Aalborg, Denmark, to which point he thought it better that he should return as soon as he had recovered sufficiently. Bro. Enge desires that the Saints shall remember the mission and those engaged in it.

Bro. W. W. McLeod, of Cormorant, Minnesota, writes that he still keeps "stoppers," and is always ready to do what he can to help the cause we all love. He also writes of H. M. Anderson, of Iona, Minnesota, who is interested in the work. Mr. Anderson will care for an elder if one calls there.

Advices from Bro. Alexander H. Smith, at Garden Grove, California, state that he is in quite good health, barring some twinges of rheumatism. The work seems to be thriving there.

Bro. T. W. Chatburn, writing from Los Angeles, California, states that the late conference held for the Southern California district was the best in a spiritual sense he has attended in the mission. He says that he "is in the faith," and the work is onward.

Good, if true. "In 1850 the "producers" had in the savings banks of this country $43,431,000. There were 251,354 depositors, being one for every ninety-two of the total population. The average deposit then was $172.78. This year (1900) the savings banks deposits aggregate $2,384,770,000. There are 5,875,456 depositors, or one in every thirteen of the total population. The average deposit is now $405.89."

A brother in writing to the HERALD recently wanted to know where the Saints of New Bedford, Massachusetts, meet. Inquire of Bro. Thomas Barker, 226 Union street, of that place.

THEOPHANY.—NO. I.

BY R. M. ELVIN.

In the book, the "Messiah of the Gospels," by Prof. Charles A. Briggs, is found the following upon the immaculate conception.

The blessed virgin was residing in Nazareth of Galilee, betrothed to Joseph of the royal line of David, the heir of the Messianic promises of the Old Testament. The time for marriage had not yet come. God had a higher appointment for her to fulfill as the virgin mother of the Messiah. The virgin conception of Jesus, as announced by the archangel, is not to be interpreted as if it were a miracle in violation of the laws of nature, but rather as brought about by God himself present in theophany. The words of the angel imply a theophanic presence, though it might be urged that the coming of the spirit upon her was an invisible coming after the analogy of many passages of the Old Testament, yet the parallel statement that the divine power overshadowed her cannot be so interpreted.

This annunciation represents the conception of Jesus as due to a theophany. It does not rotate the doctrine of his preëxistence, although that doctrine is a legitimate inference. It represents an early stage of New Testament Christology. It does not go a step beyond the Paulism of the Epistle to the Corinthians. It implies nothing more than the sending in birth taught by the Epistle to the Galatians and to the Romans. It is really a more primitive and more simple Christology of conception.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Webster's definition of theophany is: "A manifestion of God to man by actual appearance."

Without doubt Prof. Briggs intended to teach and reaffirm the old dogma of the indivisibility of God the eternal Father and Christ the only "begotten." Perhaps he was led to this conclusion from what Paul wrote:—

And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.—1 Tim. 3:16.

No scripture should be employed by an author that will contradict or vitiate other scripture on the same subject, for the reason that—

All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all works. —2 Tim. 3:16, 17.

It is quite evident from this that all revelation emanating from God will be harmonious, and not clash or antagonize. Jesus fully understood the unity of all revelation when he prayed:—

Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.—John 17:17.

The following should be received and interpreted in the same manner, as teaching the same idea:—

Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1:17.

With the foregoing as a prelude, I adopt the following as the rule to guide in this investigation:—

To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8:20.

Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me.—John 5:39.

Obeying this injunction of the Lord, I begin the search, investigating the issue: Are God and Christ possessed of the same individuality, or has each an individuality separate and distinct from each other, such as the personality of a father and son. One thing I will not do—I will not go outside of the radius of light as reflected in the revelations of God, for,—

The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.—Deut. 29:29.

In the first book of Moses, the narrative in relation to the creation or origin of man reads:—

And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness.—Gen. 1:26.

Here is a conversation between God and some one else in regard to the making of man. Whoever God spoke to is included in the pronoun "us," which is the objective case of "we." The unknown person is included in the nominative "our," and seems to indicate more particularly the form or image in which the man was to be created. God was the speaker! A flood of light would flow in upon our mental vision should we discover the key that would unlock this secret, and "reveal" the individual to whom God spake. In a translation of the Holy Scriptures by the Prophet Joseph Smith, the account of the creation of man is as follows:—

And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so.—Gen. 1:27, I. T.

All Saints will cheerfully accept this scripture, but those of my readers who are unacquainted with this latter-day philosophy may not so readily see or accept that it was the Christ to whom God spake when he said: "Let us make man." The testimony of St. John is:—

All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made. —John 1:3.

This is proof positive that Christ was a creator. However, this quotation might be employed to establish theophany, as the language is translucent so far as defining the place occupied by Christ in the Godhead. But the lack of perspicuity in John is supplied by Paul in the following:—

And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ.—Eph. 3:9.

God over all, ever to be worshiped, was the creator by or through his agent or Son, Jesus Christ. The extent of creation is amplified in the following:—

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son?—Heb. 1:1-5.

A careful examination of this scripture, as it were vivisection, in a succinct and an analytic manner, will establish the theorem that God is supreme as Father of heaven and earth, while Christ is subordinate to the eternal Father, as God's Only Begotten Son.

1. God, choosing his own method of communication, gave revelation unto man from the time he spake unto Adam until the closing words found in Malachi.

2. After a cessation of revelation for more than four hundred years, God broke the silence by speaking to the world through his Son, who said:—

For I can of mine own self do nothing; because I seek not my own will, but the will of the Father who hath sent me.—John 5:31, I. T.

3. Christ, who sought not his "own will," was made or "appointed heir of all things" by his Father; and the Son could say when he came to perform the will of his Father:—

Wherefore, when he cometh into the world he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me.—Heb. 10:5.

The manner or method of preparing the body for Christ is a mystery not revealed, and is on a parallel with the forming of "man from the dust of the ground." Christ, the "heir of all things," quoting the Psalms said: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God."

4. "By whom [Christ] also he [God] made the worlds." The creatorship rested with Christ by appointment, and in the performance of the work appointed it is written:—

For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist.—Col. 1:16, 17.

Another people contribute their testimony as follows:—

Behold I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning. I am in the Father, and the Father in me; and in me hath the Father glorified his name.—Nephi 4:8.

As a third witness, I now present the words of Christ, as given to the Palmyra Seer:—

And it came to pass that Moses called upon God, saying, Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them? And, behold, the glory of God was upon Moses, so that Moses stood in the presence of God, and he talked with Moses, face to face; and the Lord God said unto Moses, For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me. And by the word of my power have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth. And worlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten. And the first man, of all men, have I called Adam, which is many. But only an account of this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, give I unto you. For, behold, there are many worlds which have passed away by the words of my power. And there are many which now stand, and innumerable are they unto man, but all things are numbered unto me, for they are mine, and I know them.—D. C. 22:7.

All revelations should be read relating to this topic.

5. "Who being the brightness of his glory." Christ the chief plenipotentiary of the court of heaven, and of him it was prophetically announced:—

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.—Isa. 9:6, 7.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Of equal importance in this connection is the following:—

Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.—Isa. 55:4.

Christ, as the representative of his Father, had back of him all the glory, honor, power, majesty, wisdom, knowledge, and authority of Heaven to sustain his redemptive work. Hence he could say after his crucifixion, and before his ascension:—

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—Matt. 28:18.

Christ, in the radiant splendor of his glory, is described in the following exquisite language:—

And I turned to see from whence the voice came that spake to me; and being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of his month went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.—Rev. 1:12-18.

Surely he who attained unto "all power . . . in heaven and in earth," and possesses "the keys of hell and of death," was, and is, and ever will be the "brightness" of the "glory" of God.

6. "Express image of his person." Should I establish the personage of God by indubitable evidence, and also the personage of Christ, and that in his person he is in the "image" of the person of God, then shall I have successfully disproved the theory of theophany as advanced by Prof. Briggs.

And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him: male and female created I them.—Gen. 1:29, I. T.

The foregoing teaches that the prototype of the human race was formed in the image of their being to conform in appearance to the image of God, and to the image of Christ.

And they saw the God of Israel; and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness. And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God, and did eat and drink.—Ex. 24:10, 11.

The foregoing was written by one of the ablest jurists the world has ever had, and of his erudition Luke writes:—

And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds.—Acts 7:22.

This educated prophet and leader of the Israelites informs us that the people "saw God;" and as a proof that it was an actual viewing, or by natural sight, he adds that they "did eat and drink." He mentions the "feet" of God, and the "hand" of God. "Feet" and "hand" belonged to an organized body such as we possess.

And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend.—Ex. 33:11.

Most assuredly this conveys to the mind the idea of the personality and individuality of God. None but those who practice spiritualization of the word of God but what would accept that God had a face, and the power of speech. In the narrative written by Moses it seems that he desired to see God in his glory, which desire could not be granted; but as a compromise, or a partial granting of the request, God gave the following:—

Behold, thou shalt stand upon a rock, and I will prepare a place by me for thee. And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of a rock, and cover thee with my hand while I pass by. And I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my back parts, but my face shall not be seen, as at other times: for I am angry with my people Israel.—Ex. 33:21-23, I. T.

This in the most simple form of language teaches a personal being as God; a denial of this would amount to an implication that the word of God was a misrepresentation of a vital truth, and misleading in its instruction to those wishing to know and live the truth.

And the Lord delivered unto me two tables of stone written with the finger of God.—Deut. 9:10.

God has a finger! Here is an account of his inscribing upon stone the words of law by the art of writing, and that by his own finger. What an inspiring vision the prophet had:—

In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.—Isa. 6:1.

Equally grand was the vision had by Stephen, as he suffered death for the truth.

But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.—Acts 7:55, 56.

Here is the individuality of both God and Christ taught. The vision of Lehi was as follows:—

He was carried away in a vision, even that he saw the heavens open, and he thought he saw God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels in the attitude of singing and praising their God.—1 Nephi 1:4.

Both simplicity and modesty are exhibited in this ancient vision of an early American prophet. The first vision of Joseph Smith reads:—

After I had retired into the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction. But exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction, not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such a marvelous power as I had never before felt in any being. Just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me, I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said (pointing to the other), "This is my beloved Son, hear him."—Pearl of Great Price, p. 38.

As important as any part of the argument in disproving theophany, is in presenting proof that establishes the unity of the Godhead; but unity in purpose, or in power, or in work, does not destroy the individuality of those constituting the unity. Christ says of himself:—

The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doeth; and he will shew him greater works than these, that ye may marvel. . . . That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him. . . . For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man.—John 5:19, 20, 23, 26, 27.

Every sentient person can discover in this the acknowledgment of Christ, the superior place occupied by the Father in the Godhead, to the place occupied by himself, notwithstanding the Savior says:—

I and my Father are one.—John 10:30.

This oneness of unity should not be construed to mean identy of individuality, for the same who said, "I and my Father are one," also said:—

For my Father is greater than I.—John 14:28

Willing to recognize the manifestations of the All-wise, that all such manifestations are in unity of purpose and in the interest of the redemption of man, as is evidently taught in the Scriptures:—

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—1 Cor. 12:4-7.

Divine manifestations do not destroy the individuality of either God, Christ, or any other person engaged in the scheme of salvation. We can therefore accept the following without confounding the individuality of the Father and the Son.

Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works' sake.—John 14: 10, 11.

SPIRITUAL PROGRESS.

The thought occurs to me, What of all the forces, which unite in strength and combine in purpose for the general development and extension of the kingdom of God, is more essential or that actually contributes as effectually to general success as does the noble life of the Saint. Our Savior unmistakably comprehended this effect and force, for in his ever memorable "sermon on the mount" he declared his disciples to be "the light of the world." And that they might fully understand their responsibility to him in the work before them, and comprehend their personal relationship as disciples, he said:—

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 5: 16

As a church, how assured are we (and what a great unity we have universally and generally come to in the conclusion) that we have the "true light." There are no dissensions on this point. Even the wayworn, the tired and weary of well doing Saint, who through sin and iniquity and open and willful transgression of law if he faints by the wayside and looses his hold on eternal life and is dropped out of the ranks, will, with scarcely an exception, join with us in his testimony that our gospel is true. The thought, then, suggests itself here, If we profess such great confidence and belief in this light, and yet do not cause it to shine, we witness against ourselves, and have need of no condemnation, for in this we are already condemned.

I write of these things because I feel so thoroughly impressed with the thought that there is nothing now so necessary for the church in general to observe, all other things duly considered, as that in our lives as subjects of his kingdom we strive earnestly and faithfully and devotedly to demonstrate to the world that we are walking in this light which we profess. There is nothing which calls forth such success and advancement in the preaching and establishment of the word in estimation of all as does the faithful, united, untiring effort of all, and above all this is well pleasing to God, who will ever reward such diligence with great success.

As a church we look forward to the gathering in Zion, and it seems that some would have us to consider the propriety of consecrating, having all things common, etc.; but have we made the necessary preparation enjoined upon us? I greatly fear we as a church have not; and I believe the principal feature of this preparation consists in the life likeness and glorious example of the Savior reflected in our character.

Before Napoleon could have hoped to conquer the empires of the old world he had to organize an army, and before this army could hope to achieve any visible success it must be disciplined and developed in the art and tactics of war. Are we not the army of the Lord? Are we not now in the midst of the fight? Are we gaining on the enemy of our souls? Think on these things, and ask yourself what part in the battle against sin and wrong are you taking. The battle is fierce and the enemy is strong; we cannot afford to lose one of our soldiers. Many are falling, some are deserting, God's recruiting officers are out in the world seeking for those who will enlist in God's service to take places in the broken ranks, and enlargement of his army. But the chief feature in the success of the army depends upon how it is disciplined. Saints, if we would acquit ourselves as bold, brave, and true soldiers of our King, do we not see and feel the need of considering the wholesome advice of St. Paul, "examine yourselves, and see whether ye be in the faith"? And if we as a church will conscientiously do this, we will soon discover that we are indeed in the faith, so far as theory goes.

But what about the practical and demonstrative features? Here is the turning point, at which we bring ourselves face to face with our duty; not in singling out any one particular duty as required in the law, but rather in every particular.

Not with eye-service as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart.—Eph. 6: 6

We think it can be easily seen from the reading of God's word, from the beginning of his dealings with man until the present time, that the burden of the instruction given therein, as well as the actual experiences of life, all combine in their manifestation to bring man nearer to God. We may make a bold profession, but the golden fruit of our lives will not appear unless we make a practical application of it. We may endeavor to teach other men to do right, but how much more effectually can we do this if we are living aright ourselves. James evidently sensed the importance of this thought when he said:—

But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?—James 2: 20.

Let us, then, as individuals, endeavor to demonstrate in our daily lives our obedience, our loyalty, and our discipleship to the one "who hath called us out of darkness into light." For St. Peter has said:—

Hereunto were ye called: because Christ suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps.—1 Peter 2: 21.

And as we fight the battle with the triune evil, the world, the flesh, and the devil, may we ever strive to make this loving Savior who left his throne of glory that he might teach us how to live, our example, our model, and our guide, that we may ultimately become like him. And now may the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight; through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen.

TWO ANGEL MESSAGES.

On the plains of Bethlehem: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." This was a God-given message that a Savior was born, a Redeemer of the race of mankind had appeared for their release from sin and its consequences. If that message ever has a fulfillment, then surely the creeds were (are) wrong, for it came too late to benefit a large class of the "all people" that had lived in the world, and the doctrine was (is) that no message could reach them anywhere else, only in this life.

But how little the purpose of his coming was understood by those to whom he came. They looked for him, it is true, but were looking in the wrong direction or way. They looked for him to come as a conqueror to deliver them, Moses like, from their bondage; in other words, they looked in the palace, not the manger, and looked in vain in earthly courts for the Christ. It was hard for them to believe that one coming from the lowly walks of life would ever be able to deliver them from the bondage they were in, which they had brought upon themselves by their transgression of the law of God; for which the Savior told them that their city and the children within it should be laid "even with the ground," and not one stone would be left upon another, because they "knew not the time of their visitation." (Luke 19: 44.)

Suppose he had restored the kingdom to them at that time, how long would they have retained possession of it? Surely no longer than his words were fulfilled. Moses had told them what would happen to them (Deut. 28); and the Savior knew they were fulfilling that prophecy, but they did not. Or if they had understood the message, they would have known that his mission was not to restore temporal power to a few Jews; it had been proclaimed that he was to be Christ the Lord, and his mission was to all of Adam's race—all people. (Luke 2 : 10, 11.) It profited them nothing, because they would not receive it nor the messenger; but cast him out of the vineyard, and said, Come, let us kill him, and the inheritance will be ours. (Mark 12:7, 8.) But what an inheritance has been theirs, let history answer.

How hard it was for even the apostles to understand his mission is shown in the question, Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel (Acts 1:6)? showing that they did not understand what was written in the prophets; for he said to them, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken;" they did not know that he must suffer and enter into his glory, although it was written in Moses and all the prophets. (Luke 24:27.)

Now, the question may be asked, What is the use of saying anything about the Jews? Surely everybody believes everything that is written in the Bible about them, do they not?

I think I may safely say they do not, for the people very often confess to me that they neither know nor believe what is shown them that the prophets have spoken.

Well, what about this angel message that the prophets said should come to the world in the latter days? They say, We do not believe in any such thing, because the Lord had said all he ever intended to, and could never send another message to man on the earth. And we did not know nor believe that the prophets had spoken anything about an angel message. Now who are fools and slow of heart to believe? Well, the Jews are not alone now; they have lots of company. It was not the mere fact that Jesus was born that was to be the source of great joy, but what he taught that men should believe and do. So, then, God's good will to man was manifest in the person of Jesus the Christ, for he came not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him, and to finish his work. (John 4:34.)

If the message he brought was the gospel restored, by which salvation was to come to all people by obedience, would not salvation be obtained in any age of the world when the same plan is taught, if complied with? I think so; for God has no respect for persons.

Now in the opening of the dispensation of the fullness of times, when the Lord has sent again this same glad tidings of great joy to all people, by an angel, to deliver to the prophet that he had raised up to receive and proclaim it to the people, they say they do not believe the prophets have said anything about him or his message, and have slain the Lord's prophet. Do they know the time of their visitation any better than the Jews did? And will they fare any better than they? The Lord says his ways are equal. The Savior said,—

> This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.—John 3:19.

So we see that condemnation comes if we choose to remain in ignorance and neglect the privilege we have of seeing and coming to the light. The Jews said they knew God spoke to Moses, and claimed to be his disciple; but as for this fellow, we do not know "from whence he is." (John 9:29.) They knew God had spoken, but they did not know what he had said to Moses concerning Christ, or they did not believe it; for he said to them,—

> Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me for he wrote of me.—John 5:46.

Now what have the prophets spoken or written in regard to this latter-day prophet or his message? In the first place, if they had consulted Jesus and his inspired apostles, they would have known that there was to come a falling away of the church, and also of the gospel which they preached, as recorded in 2 Thessalonians 2:3, beside many other texts that might be cited in the same line. And had they believed these prophecies, they would have known that the same gospel could not be preached again until restored; and that it could not be restored without a living prophet for the Lord to speak to; for it is written:—

> Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3:7.

He says this statement is a sure thing.

Now if this latter-day prophet spake according to the law and the testimony (Isaiah 8:20), he spoke the will of God to man; then he ought to have been judged by that standard; that is, they would have compared it with what Christ and the apostles preached, and would have seen that it was the same message come again, for Jesus said that same gospel should be preached again just before the end. (Matt. 24:14.) And if they had read and believed Isaiah 32:14–19, they ought to know that it has been having its fulfillment ever since the latter day prophet came with that message, as also that recorded in Isaiah 29. He said the time had come for this to be fulfilled, and that it has and is having its fulfillment, no one can successfully deny. So we find him again according to the law and testimony.

Now why do they not know when these things have been taking place before their eyes so long? The answer is plain. They believe neither the latter-day nor the former day prophets, neither the glad tidings of great joy that was to be to all people; but their ears are turned away from the truth. (2 Tim. 4:4.) And the Savior might well say to them, as he said to the Jews, How often would I have gathered you, but ye would not. Will they be left as desolate? O that the honest in heart may see and come to the light before that time of desolation.

THE STONE KINGDOM.

Having heard and read so much concerning the kingdom of God that was to be set up in the last days, as found recorded in second chapter of Daniel, I will give the reader my views on the subject. I see that the elders do not agree on the subject; but it seems to me that they should, so that in expounding the Scriptures they would all tell the same story.

The first elders of the church taught that the church and kingdom that was organized by command of God in 1830 was the kingdom that Daniel said the God of heaven would set up in the last days. In the "Voice of Warning," on page 17, Parley P. Pratt took this view of the matter, while treating on prophecy already fulfilled. On page 257 Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord, speaking of Parley P. Pratt, stated that he should be blessed in expounding all scriptures.

I firmly believe that the kingdom, as represented by the stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands, is already set up; and I believe that the church that was set up in 1830 is that kingdom. Let us read the word of God on this subject:—

> Hearken, and lo, a voice as of one from on high, who is mighty and powerful, whose going forth is unto the ends of the earth; yea, whose voice is unto men, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth; yea, a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord; prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the Bridegroom; pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, that thy enemies may be subdued; for thine is the honor, power, and glory, forever and ever. Amen.—D. C., sec. 65.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The view is taken by some, that the stone kingdom will not be set up until the Lord comes in his glory. Another view is that this free government of ours is that kingdom; but from the revelation we see the stone is already cut out and set up, and that it is going to roll until it has filled the whole earth, and that the gospel of this kingdom is going to roll forth as the stone, and gather in from all other kingdoms.

I believe that the kingdom is one thing, and that the gospel is something that belongs to the kingdom. We read:—

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world.—Matt. 24: 14.

We see also in the revelation that the Lord is coming to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; not which shall be set up on the earth, but which is already set up. I do not believe he is coming to meet this free government of ours, because in no place in his word has God ever called it his kingdom; but we find many places in Scripture where he calls his church the kingdom of God.

According to Daniel the stone kingdom is going to stand forever; but will our free government stand forever? Will we be governed by a President of the United States through the millennium? I think not. Christ will be the only king, and all other kingdoms and free governments will have been by the time of his coming broken in pieces, by the stone kingdom, or, in other words, by the servants of God. The Lord says, in Doctrine and Covenants, page 231, speaking to his servants:—

For with you, saith the Lord, I will rend their kingdoms.

On page 110 the Lord tells us how we may become subjects of his kingdom:—

For verily I say unto you, All those who receive my gospel are sons and daughters in my kingdom.

Not sons and daughters of this free government, but sons and daughters of the stone which the Lord says is cut out of the mountain.

On page 112 we read:—

Wherefore you shall partake of none, except it is made new among you; yea, in this my Father's kingdom which shall be built upon the earth.

And again, on page 192:—

I will be merciful unto you, for I have given unto you the kingdom.

From these few quotations I think the reader will be able to see that the stone kingdom is already set up on the earth, and that the church that was organized in 1830 is that kingdom, and that Daniel's prophecy is fulfilled where he says,—

The God of heaven maketh known what shall be in the latter days.

So I believe the kingdom had a beginning in 1830, and it has continued to roll forth, and will continue, gathering from all other kingdoms until Christ shall come, and all those who have not become subjects of the stone kingdom shall be destroyed and there will only be the one kingdom left. Still it will not cease to roll until it has filled the whole earth.

If the reader will read the 34th and 45th verses of the second chapter of Daniel, he will see that Daniel is telling the king what he saw in the dream, but in the 44th verse he gives the interpretation of what was seen, and only has reference to the one kingdom of God that was to be set up in the last days.

Hoping we will all come to the unity of the faith,

A. W. WHITING.

STICKTOITIVENESS.

Of a long time ago have I heard the boys sing: "Jordan am a hard road to trabble," and for a dead certainty I believe it to be so; but there was a little something I learned in childhood running thusly: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." So here I come again, for the reason that up to date the compliance with former appeals in behalf of Graceland is not sufficient to tide us over to the shore of never want.

The kind words of encouragement and cheer, and the few dollars that have come in, have whetted the edge of my determination to continue, for perhaps I may be as successful as the old lady of the following narrative:—

And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not faint; saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man: and there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary. And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man; yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me. And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith.—Luke 18: 1–6.

It was the woman's "sticktoitiveness" that brought to her the desired victory.

And it is this principle of continual and everlastingly-keep-at-it policy that I wish to press home upon your consideration, for I see no way of our accomplishing the trust and responsibility imposed by the action of the last General Conference, only by this "sticktoitiveness," to keep before the Saints their part of the responsibility, for the college, being the property and an institution of the church, and every member of the church being an equal stockholder, therefore it is to your honor and interest that the college be kept running, and that without going into debt. Do not put off sending in your help, for that is both a bad and an unprofitable policy.

The polity and history of this church is favorable to education. God commanded us to seek "out of the best books words of wisdom," and how is this seeking to be done? Let the book of the latter revelations answer:—

Seek learning even by study, and also by faith.

This requirement of God imposes more than the mere reading of books.

In the forthcoming Church History will the following be found:—

The establishment of schools we are most decidedly in favor of. What may have been the character of the school at Kirtland, so far as its personal conduct was concerned, we are not aware; but suppose it to have been for the purpose of receiving and imparting necessary instruction to those wishing to avail themselves of its advantages. Such was evidently the intention of the establishment of the school or schools at Nauvoo; and the only bad feature that we now remember in connection with any of the literary institutions at Nauvoo, is the library belonging to the "Lyceum Association," was grossly robbed of its books, at or about the time of the breaking up there. If a people would be free, they must be intelligent, and intelligence other than the light of the Spirit must be cultivated, and cultivation must be had in the schools; and these schools to be effective for the people, must be of and by the people.

Such are we trying to present Graceland, for it came into being by the voice of the people and it is kept open for the benefit of the people. All who may wish to attend, and if kept alive and running, it needs be by the patronage of the people, and the deficit between amount received from scholarships and running expense will have to be made up by donations.

Now Saints, we appeal for what help you are able to grant us, for as your servants seeking to faithfully discharge our duties, we do not expect to let Graceland die without your being well and sufficiently warned of the approaching demise.

I will give you Saints a sign by which you may know when the treasury of Graceland is full, and we need no more financial aid, namely: when the undersigned shall cease to write pleading for help, you will then know that our necessities have been amply supplied.

Saints, are we living in a time and manner that the following is applicable?

And that servant, which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.—Luke 12: 47.

Now! shall we plead for bread and receive a stone?

Please send in your donations, and rejoice the hearts of your servants.

For Graceland's success,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

ATCHISON, Kansas, Nov. 1.

Editors Herald:—I have been a member of this church about ten years, and have never regretted the step taken. Before I entered I was afflicted for several years, and tried doctors with no results of good. I then made up my mind that if there was a God, that he could heal me, and that if he would I would try to serve him the rest of my life. I went to the Salvation Army to investigate, and thought that if God was in it and would reveal to me that it was the way, and that if he would heal me, I would obey; but I was disgusted with their way of worshiping God, and turned to investigate some other way. I next heard the Christian Church preach faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, and I obeyed that form of religion; but I felt after entering that church that I had a right to understand the Bible, and was told three times by the pastor how to study the Bible; but I was always more in the dark after following his instructions. I took the trouble to God in prayer, and soon I heard the restored gospel preached in its fullness and power, and said to myself, that is the truth, and if that church (the Reorganized Church) taught all things as those I had heard that it was the church of God, and I would obey the same. I entered the Christian Church the 25th of June, 1890, and was baptized into this church the 17th of September.

Now I know this is the truth, and rejoice that I have been permitted to live in the age when God in his mercy has called and authorized men to preach the everlasting gospel in its fullness. I know the gospel has been restored, and that the blessings are obtainable through the God-given plan of salvation. I have been healed many times, and blessed spiritually, physically, and temporally by the hand of God. I have seen my wife healed many times, and at times when the neighbors would walk the floor of my house and wring their hands and implore me to send for a doctor, I would always ask them to take care of my wife while I went for the elders, and they have expressed surprise (as my companion would seem almost gone or dead) when the elders would come and anoint with oil and lay hands on her and she always would arise immediately and resume her house duties.

I have had some experiences of healing of my own body. Once when I was at Centralia, Kansas, I was sorely afflicted with catarrh of the head and nose, and when the elders administered to me I felt a tickling and soothing sensation in my nose, and was made whole or almost before the elders took their hands off me. Oh! brothers and sisters, the God of heaven is the same to day as he has always been, and in the gospel is a provision for every need of the human family, spiritually, physically, and temporally. I believe that God has the destiny of every being in his hand, and if we do good we shall be blessed, and if we do evil we will be punished. If we want a spiritual blessing, let us keep all of God's commandments; if we want a physical blessing, let us send for the elders of the church and not for doctors and strong drugs, and God will bless us. If we want a temporal blessing, let us bring all our tithes and offerings into God's storehouse, and he will pour out a blessing to us.

My soul is in this work, and my desire is that I and all who may espouse this work may so live that the blessings of the gospel may be ours to enjoy here, and eternal life hereafter.

I believe that God is stretching forth his hand to maintain his cause here in Atchison, and that he has some if not many people here.

Bro. Robert Warnock, of Farmington, Iowa, has moved here with his good and kind companion, and is president of this branch. He is a good soul.

We have been blessed with some of the missionary and local brethren from other branches, and the Saints are enjoying life and the Spirit of God to a marked degree. Brethren M. T. Short and A. H. Parsons are here at present, and have done some good preaching; also Bro. W. S. Pender and bride, Sr. Fannie Gurwell, of Fanning, Kansas, passed through here on their way to the groom's home, Hallowell, Kansas. Sr. Pender is a charming, kind, gentle little soul. May they live long to enjoy each other's company!

I believe I speak the Saints' and our worthy president's sentiments in asking anyone of the elders who may be passing here to stop and preach for us.

I pray for Zion's welfare, and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your brother in bonds,

JAMES W. BURNS.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 29.

Editors Herald:—I have been here for a few days to see what can be done towards effecting an opening for preaching in this city. No effort of any consequence has ever been made to introduce the work here. A few Saints live in the city. Bro. and Sr. Fisher reside about seventeen miles away, at East Aurora, and there are friends and sympathizers in an adjacent neighborhood. It is but a few miles further to Niagara Falls, where a number of Saints reside. With an opening and interest here it would be a natural place of meeting from all adjacent points, at times. Then, just now, it would be in touch with the great "Pan-American Exhibition," planned for the year 1901. Elaborate preparations are being made in the erection of buildings, etc , for the great show; so that in the distance the place now resembles the "White City" at Chicago, Illinois, during the time of holding the "World's Fair." The place is already known in local parlance as "Pan-American," and no doubt it will be the center for sight-seers for the coming year. The great falls being contiguous will be an attraction that never fails to delight the eye of beholders.

A main question to be considered by us, however, is, What can be done in the way of making it a permanent success provided an opening is effected? Where is the man to come from to carry it on? This is the hitch. The laborers are all employed elsewhere, and still the cry of "send more laborers" is heard. Yet here seems to be a real opportunity. Bro. and Sr. William Brothers reside here, and are very exemplary Saints, also Bro. and Sr. Spillsburry.

Yesterday, in company with Sr. Brothers and Anne, I went to Niagara, Canada, attended the Sunday school, and aided Bro. Place in the Sunday's services held in their new and neat little church. A sacrament service was held in the afternoon, and the Saints manifest a lively earnestness in the work. At evening there was an audience of some seventy-five present, large for this place, as there is much prejudice there, and of the kind that will not come to the front, the "freeze-out" kind. Bro. Place is in charge of the branch, with a nice little band of Saints to aid him. Bro. R. C. Evans will please pardon this crossing of the line into his territory. This reference will notify him of the invasion. We administered to Bro. Biggers while there, who was very low with typhoid fever. Doubtful as to his recovery.

While west, in September, I went to Plainview, Nebraska, to see my brother, who was reported to be very sick. On the way, I arrived in Omaha, Sunday morning, September 16, and improved the opportunity to meet with the Saints of that place. Was kindly received by them, and well cared for at the homes of Brn. Huff and C. M. Hollenbeck. Bro. Hubert Case was present, and prepared for the services of the day, but declined in my favor and I preached for them, morning and evening, being splendidly aided by those present and in charge, but whose names are not now remembered. This was my first meeting with the Omaha Saints at their home, and it was a pleasant one. They seemed just like Saints and good ones, too. Worthy fruit of those industriously laboring there, of whom many complimentary references, were made, Bro. Fred A. Smith receiving a fair share. May the Spirit's peace, which the world knows not of, ever abide with them.

On Monday following I arrived at Plainview. Found my brother quite ill, with a kind of suspended doubt prevailing as to results. Thinking it for the best to stay in Nebraska over the following Sunday, I ran down to Inman, and tarried with the Saints of that place. Preached for them twice on Sunday, and attended the Sabbath school and Religio meetings. There was a good interest manifested in the meetings. The organization is not large, but is the result of much labor and effort by those devoted to the work there. It was introduced, I believed, by Bro. James Caffall, at the instance of Bro. E. Downey. Victory was obtained after meeting a brisk opposition. The young people of the place are earnestly engaged in the various departments of the work. Meeting Sr. Belle Wisdom there, whom I had met at the "Home" in Lamoni, Iowa, rendered my visit at once the more agreeable. Sr. Belle is an all-round girl for business, and an active factor in church work at Inman. Bro. and Sr. Downey, where I made it my home while there, are of long standing in the church. Have maintained its integrity through evil and good report, met the shafts of persecution, and know the real worth of the faith. Their standing is such as to enforce respect, and those who have labored there hitherto have left a good record, hence Inman bids fair to be as a lighthouse to illuminate the prairies of Nebraska with gospel truth. This again was an invasion of another's territory, that of Bro. James Caffall. May it be agreeable.

On Monday, 24th, Bro. Peterson kindly brought me with private conveyance to the railway station—distance seven miles. I appreciated this ride the more as it gave me a better view of the country; besides, Bro. Peterson is zealous in the work and an agreeable companion. The sun shone warm and brightly, the wind blew briskly, so I judged it to be a typical Nebraska day. I returned at evening to Plainview, to find my Brother George improved. Before going to Inman I administered to him, and he received help and walked up town, so the outlook appeared more hopeful for him.

Early next morning I left Plainview for Lamoni, where I arrived the day after; and the day after that, started for the Eastern field of labor, having changed my mind about attending the reunion at Dow City, concluding that there were more there to serve the interest of the cause proportionately than in the Eastern mission. So Saturday, September 29, found me at Vales Mill, Ohio, in attendance at the Ohio district conference. Bro. George H. Hilliard chanced to come in at the same time. Conference was in session, and business well under way when we arrived. A good representation of the district was present, and a pleasant and profitable time had all through. Some matters considered produced, for the time, a little friction, but all ended in peace and good fellowship, and the Saints returned home confirmed and confident in the faith. A splendid welcome was given by the Saints and friends at Vales Mill to those attendant at the conference.

Bro. Hilliard and I went from the conference to Creola, where Bro. Hilliard preached an animating discourse. There are hopeful signs of success at Creola. Thence we went to Columbus, where we were pleasantly entertained at Bro. J. E. Mathews, who is deeply interested in the success of the work. While there we called on Sr. Schofield at her home, and met two very promising young men who had been investigating the faith for some time, and who expressed themselves as about ready to unite with the church. The Brn. Goodriches and Beatty have been laboring there, meeting with encouragement and are hopeful of gathering together a working force in that city.

Oct. 6, in company with Bro. Hilliard, I attended the Kirtland district conference, held at New Philadelphia. There was a good representation of the district present, and an excellent feeling and interest prevailed all through. The business done was satisfactory to all. Brn. J. Frank McDowell, O. J. Tary, and D. L. Ullom were present from the Pittsburg district, and assisted in the work of the conference. Brn. F. J. Ebeling and Richard Baldwin were appointed president and associate of the district. One was baptized, and adjournment had to meet at Kirtland the last Saturday in February, 1901. Visiting Saints received a hospitable entertainment at New Philadelphia. At the close of this conference, Bro. Hilliard and I went to Kirtland, and held two services, Bro. Hilliard preaching in his usual forcibly way after which he departed for the west. The following Sunday I preached at Kirtland and Cleveland. On Monday evening listened for the first time to the Democratic candidate for the presidency after which I came to York State.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, Nov. 2.

Editors Herald:—The building of a church in this place is an accomplished fact Our church is completed, even to the papering of its walls. It is nicely lighted with gasoline lamps. It is pronounced by everybody a nice, neat little church. We have paid about five hundred dollars, and we owe about that amount; so the building costs about one thousand dollars. The attendance at our meetings is from fair to good. Bro. William E. Williams is branch president, and is a faithful and attentive worker. The Sunday school is under Sr. Elizabeth E. Williams' watchcare, and is doing well. Apostle Joseph R. Lambert preached the first two sermons at the opening of our church, with good effect.

Bro. J. C. Clapp preached for us about three weeks, and did excellent work, holding his crowd right along. His retentive powers are wonderful. It was phenomenal with what ease and precision he would quote history and the scripture. He is rightly denominated the "walking encyclopedia." At the close of his meeting the Saints passed a resolution of appreciation with a warm invitation to come again. Four, all heads of families, have been baptized since we are here in an organized state. Yours,

EVAN B. MORGAN.

ORSON, Iowa, Nov. 5.

Editors Herald:—I am located at Bro. D. B. Coffman's, holding meetings in the Coffman schoolhouse. Despite the rain and mud, the congregations and attendance have been good. Have had good liberty in telling the gospel story. Had two preaching meetings yesterday, one Sunday school, one Religio, and organized a Religio local; but at the preaching service last evening the house was full.

As soon as possible after the Dow City reunion I went to Missouri Valley for a week. Had some good meetings and hope good was done. From there I went to Galland's Grove to attend conventions and district conference. Was expecting to get home for two days to help get things in better shape for winter, but was disappointed. Had to remain in the Grove to preach at the funeral of Bro. and Sr. David Baughman's babe which died very suddenly. Was privileged to stay at home about twenty hours, then away for this place. Tomorrow is election day. I am going to take advantage of the opportunity and try and get home for about the same length of time again, then back to the field of battle.

I find there are many more calls than I can fill, but I am working as hard as I can to answer as many as possible, trying to be directed by the good Spirit to the places that need me most. I hope none are getting impatient nor offended. If I do not reach your place, it is not because I do not want to, but because I have not the time. I suspect I am a slow traveler, anyway; but I believe in, so far as possible, thoroughly working the ground before hunting or going to other places.

I have written to some parties in the northern part of our district to learn of the chances to get to cultivate new ground, but have not heard as yet. I was glad to meet our worthy brother, W. A. Smith, and his family the other day as they were on their way home from Nebraska, where they had been for Sister Smith's health, and I was made to rejoice to learn that her health is materially better, and that W. A. thought he would be able to take the field in a few days. If he does and is left in this district, we are hopeful for more labor being done, for he is one of the "rustlers."

Bro. Minton, I believe, is laboring at Bigler's Grove. When I saw him he was feeling the effects of over-work. Please remember us in this neck of the woods.

In bonds,

LAMAR, Colo., Oct. 31.

Editors Herald:—Bro. C. R. Duncan and the writer are stationed at this place—or near it—at Bro. M. F. Ralston's. Bro. Duncan has been conducting protracted meetings at the Enterprise schoolhouse. I arrived from Wray last Tuesday. We have hopes that some good may be done for the Lord's cause in this Arkansas valley. Brn. Ralston and Bradshaw live near Lamar, and are active and earnest in the spread of the work.

I want to ask all Saints residing in the Arkansas and the San Luis valleys, Colorado, to write to Bro. C. R. Duncan, Ellicott, Colorado, stating what the prospects are for opening up the work in their respective localities. Please state where you live, and anything else that you may think is of interest to the traveling minister for the good of the cause.

Ever praying for Zion's weal, I am,

Your brother,

A. B. HANSON.

CORRELL, Minn., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—In reading your letters today, I notice one from Audubon, Minnesota, stating that at the late conference of Northern Minnesota district Bro. A. J. Smith, of Minneapolis, was ordained elder according to promise. This adds one more to Bro. I. N. Roberts' force of missionaries. Now if Bro. Roberts will accede to the request again, and send an elder here, either Bro. Eli Hayer or some one else, I am sure he will be gladly received, at least by some. Since Bro. Hayer's visit here I find much prejudice exists; more than I anticipated. Some who agreed to attend never come near.

Now, please send them along, for we read that "They which are whole need not a physician" but they "that are sick." Many are troubled in this place with disease called "prejudice," and a few doses of sound doctrine may cure them. I cannot, with complacency, attend their meetings where the hat is passed for the support of the ministry, for it was not so taught by our Savior. Some, I know, will receive the gospel with gladness. I will attend to their temporal wants as far as possible.

Yours for the restored gospel,

JAMES M. BLOOD.

P. S.—I received a letter from Bro. Hayer a few days ago at Mills, Minnesota. He was having good attendance and interest, enjoying the Spirit in a good degree.

KINGSTON, Mo., Nov. 5.

Editors Herald:—I am in the county seat of Caldwell county, Missouri. I came here Saturday from Braymer. Bro. and Sr. Gilliland brought me overland and we came by way of Haun's Mills, and had the pleasure of meeting, while on the historic spot, one William Odell, who was born near that place in 1832, and was a competent guide, as he had seen the mill and blacksmith shop. He showed us where the old well was, as best he could; that is, within a few feet, as the land is cultivated now.

I conducted the two days' meeting at Wakenda branch in Ray, on the 27th and 28th of October, being assisted by Bro. Alma Booker, as my associate in this instance did not arrive. We had a good meeting. Much of the Spirit was felt. I spoke on Monday and Tuesday evenings following, with good liberty. On Sunday I organized a Religio society, and we feel that the work is onward in this part.

Bro. Elcanie Craven brought me to Braymer on Friday and thence to Kingston as before described. I spoke twice in the Saints' church yesterday.

This is certainly a fine field for a beginner. The Saints assist both temporally and spiritually. May the Lord bless the kind hands and hearts! Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am, Your brother in bonds,

WALTER W. SMITH.

SMITHLAND, Iowa, November 2.

Editors Herald:—While for three years I have enjoyed reading letters written by others in the dear church papers, which has been food for my hungry soul, I hope this will strengthen or encourage some one.

Until six years ago I never heard this gospel preached. The tent of this district came to Smithland. I was just recovering from a severe spell of sickness. The girl who was working for me was a member of the Latter Day Saint Church. She expressed a desire to go to the meetings, and asked me to go with her. I went, and the third year the tent came I was confident it was the church I had waited for, as I had never joined any before, though always had a desire to become a Christian, not in word only, but in truth. I was called—I obeyed the call, and was baptized by J. W. Wight. I will confess, my desires were very strong, with uncultivated ability; but with prayerful heart I was led to study the word of God.

The first year all went smoothly. There seemed to be no trials—only a hungry soul. But, alas, the second year! Unawares, I had certainly prepared myself for the test. Ere long troubles came, fast and thick; the two powers met. The dark cloud hung low, obscuring the sunlight of heaven. O, the disappointments, the discouragements, the pain! No earthly friend can ever tell their greatness. The hundreth part can never be told! Unhindered, unchecked, my soul drank of the "waters of Marah," and they were bitter, indeed! I have had a struggle such as I never want to pass through again. I pleaded for mercy, though at times it seemed that God, too, had forsaken me. But he is merciful, and ever cares for his own. Had I ceased the struggle, all would have been a failure. Through constant prayer I have the assurance that there is a balm for every wounded breast, and with full purpose of heart and renewed strength I again place my shoulder to the wheel, knowing that though I have suffered God will work everything together for my good. "My times are in" his hands, my will and wishes I lay at his feet. And now I can hear sweet whispers: "My child, you have tried to do good." And when I feel alone and neglected, I look to the great Burden-bearer. I am trusting in his promises. Away from church privilege, yet God is with me. Let come what will, I will cheerfully say, "Thy will be done." I expect to profit by my experience; and for his mercy and watchcare over me, in diligence and humility I hope to be found faithful to his commandments. My daily prayers are that God will bless the tried ones everywhere, that we may have a right to a white robe, a crown, or to the "tree of life." And for the good we may do, and for the blessings we receive, to God be the praise, honor, and glory.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your sister in hopes of eternal life,

MRS. ELLA PARKER.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 5.

Editors Herald:—I find the walls of prejudice and bigotry about as impregnable as ever, in almost every place I try to make an opening. In some places no house can be obtained to hold meetings, where the people would come out to hear, and in others where I can get the place to preach I cannot get the hearers. But I have this consolation, that where my responsibility ends in having made the effort, or having delivered the message, there is where their responsibility begins. I have traveled over more territory this year than I have done before, and probably done less preaching than in any former year. I made a visit to our worthy brother, W. R. Davison, and his worthy family, who came from Iowa nearly a year ago, and settled near Sterling, about thirty miles from Washington. Bro. D. was refused the use of the church where he and his family had been accustomed to go since coming to this state, and the Rev. (?) Mr. Dolly refused to be introduced to me, stating that he did not want anything to do with the Book of Mormon, Joe Smith, nor any of the representatives: "Why," said he, "don't you know they are gathering up our women by the car-load and shipping them to Utah?" We held a few services in the house of Bro. D., but could get out but few to hear the message.

We went from there to Washington, to get the train for Richmond, and stopped over night in the city with Alpheus Davison, father of Bro. W. R., and an earnest worker in the Advent Church. Also his son Joseph, who is a prominent minister in that organization, and a writer of some note, and a man of good motives and holy purposes. I could not have been treated better or with more respect at the home of own brethren. I could not but make the comparison in my own mind of the difference between those who are really honest and sincere, and those who are only religious bigots. I was introduced as "Will's friend," and on this account I was entitled to the same kind attention as "Will" himself. This was enough; though not of his faith it would not hinder the application of the golden rule. How different in so many cases, where it seems as soon as they have attached themselves to some society called a "church," they immediately forget everything else and even their patriotism, to persecute every thing that does not seem to favor their preconceived notions and opinions.

Well, I arrived here safely, and expect to remain here and in the country surrounding until after our conference. I found the headquarters yesterday of the Utah elders, and called on them a few minutes. I was invited to call again, which I shall do soon, and we are to canvass our differences on the question of the "succession." There are five of them here in Richmond, and forty in the state.

I look for Bro. Godbey here in a week or so. We will then labor together until March. My address till December 15, is Richmond, Virginia, 3829 Fourth street, Fulton. Yours in bonds,

J. L. GOODRICH.

BALDWIN, Md., Nov. 6.

Editors Herald:—I left home on August 22, for Philadelphia district, to labor with Bro. F. G. Pitt. I arrived in Philadelphia in time to meet with the Saints in prayer meeting. We had a good meeting, and I felt glad to see the familiar faces of old friends.

On the 25th, I left Philadelphia in company with a number of Saints for the district conference to be held at Baldwin, Maryland. We met Bro. Pitt on the train, and enjoyed the trip very much. The conference business passed off very nicely, and a good spirit of unity and love prevailed.

After the conference Bro. Pitt and the writer began a series of grove meetings at Bro. Daniel Carter's place, a short distance from Baldwin. We were kindly assisted by the Baldwin Saints in singing and attendance. The interest was good from the beginning, and the audiences increased until we had, I think, more out than at any previous effort in this vicinity. One was baptized while we were preaching, and others seemed near the kingdom, but have not obeyed as yet.

After we closed the services at the above place, we held another grove meeting at a place called Pleasant Hill. The interest at the latter place was not as good as the place we left, but still I think some good was done and had the weather remained mild I think it would have been well to continue for some time. But as the weather became stormy and cold, we thought we had better change from out of doors to the church building in Baldwin. Bro. Pitt, in the meantime, had returned to Philadelphia and then went to Eastern, a new place. I preached awhile in the church to small audiences, and then returned to the city, labored around the city for two weeks, and then spent a few days at Baldwin again.

October 16 found me in Bridgeton, New Jersey, where a lady (who is the mother of Sr. Hettrick) was willing to open her home for preaching. Bridgeton is a city of about twenty thousand inhabitants, and is preëminently a church-going town, there being about thirty-two churches of different denominations. I said a church-going town but they have their own churches to attend, and are very busy. However, we did what we could, and had a few interested listeners. After I had been there a week, I attended the Seventh-day Adventist's meetings, and took part in their Sunday school. They seemed to be a nice people, and I succeeded in getting the church when they were not using it, only paying a small sum for lights, etc. I began preaching and they said, "That is just what we believe." I told them I was glad, and so I kept on; but soon the seventh-day question came up, and I gave them privilege to ask questions. I did not care to talk about the matter, but they would not have it that way. So I said if they desired me to I would speak on the Sabbath question on Sunday night. In the meantime, some of the leaders of the society had sent to Philadelphia for one of their ministers to be on hand Sunday night, and see how it was done. Two young ladies (sisters) who are sharp, quick-witted, intelligent, and I believe honest withal, seem to be the leading spirits among them, and I hope the great gospel light may sink into their very souls, and give them a grander conception of God than ever has come to them before.

Well, for some reason the Adventist brother did not come. The people thought I was glad; but no, I don't think I was. It would have had a better effect if he had been present. I spoke for an hour and twenty minutes (too long) and then stood under a fire of questions for forty minutes longer. I was interrupted several times while speaking by some of the members of the church, but I presume it was hard work for them to keep still, and I sympathize with them. There are a number in Bridgeton who are interested, and one sister has given her name for baptism. Others are believing, and, I trust, will have the courage to obey. The Sunday school convention in Philadelphia last Sunday was a success, and all had a good time.

Came here last night and expect to open a new place in Newark, Deleware, this week, if arrangements can be made. In bonds,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

CORMORANT, Minnesota.

Editors Herald:—Many of the elders and Saints who once resided hereabouts will be interested to learn that a few are still trying to keep in the faith. Now and then some are added to our numbers, while a number have become weary in well doing. The cause, perhaps, is a lack of teaching when young in membership. A poor time to commence teaching members when old in the church. The Savior instructed to teach when young, that we would not depart when old.

After serving eight years as Bishop's agent in the state of Minnesota, good or bad as case may be, I resigned June last. I still have very pleasant recollections of the sacrifices the Saints made in tithes and offerings which were placed on the books to their credit. May the Lord add his blessing!

Bro. F. D Omans, of Perham, is now your agent. He is in almost every respect better fitted to hold the office than I. The times in the State are very close, as we all can testify. Do the best you can, and you have nothing to fear. In love to all,

W. W. MCLEOD.

DEER LODGE, Montana, Nov. 6.

Editors Herald:—Have just returned from Bozeman, where the only district of this great Montana state held its conference. Though the attendance was exceedingly small, owing to the scattered relation of branches, yet five out of the six branches were duly represented by delegates, and the business was as well done as it would have been had every member been present. Paucity of numbers meant no less spiritual endowment, either; for all present agreed that the conference was an enjoyable one. One of the most encouraging things was the movement of the brethren living in Bozeman to hire a hall to hold meetings in. They have the material there to make a first class Sunday school; and to make that a success will be their only object at present. Hope they will organize one and make the most of their opportunities.

Was agreeably surprised at receiving a pressing invitation from the ministers of Deer Lodge, lately, to attend a meeting of their ministers' association. They are pleased to recognize me as one of their number, and have appointed Rev. Mueller (Episcopal) and self to furnish the papers for their next meeting. Discussion will follow papers. In addition to this was placed on a committee to provide a program for Thanksgiving services here. At that meeting a thank-offering will be taken up for Montana missions, and our church will receive an equal apportionment with the rest. This indicates how we stand in Deer Lodge,—and yet our chapel is continually referred to as the "Mormon Church." We are constrained to ask: "What's in a name?" They quite understand who we are; but that name has been coined and used so much that it would be very difficult to get another in vogue. The name does not seem to debar me here or hurt in any way. I have been invited to play clarinet in the social orchestra, composed of the most select people in the town. This means of getting acquainted has not been neglected, and pleasure and profit have resulted. I had the Methodist minister one of my audience last Sunday. This I took as a sort of official recognition, you know.

Will all Herald readers please take notice, that one Walter J. Haworth, of our General Conference appointees in Australia and a native-born Australian, has written an appeal for help in that mission,—help that thousands can and ought to give to that far-off little band of workers. A mission paper over there is a crying necessity. The sum of seventy-five cents will bring you a copy for one year, keep you posted on the progress of events there, and, best of all, do great good to the work there. Don't send any money, but write Elder Haworth what you will do. His address is Martindale street, Wallsend, N. S.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

W., Australia. By private letter, I learn that the number of American subscriptions promised has reached fifty-eight. Let us give them four times this number, at least. Surely, out of five hundred we ought to furnish two hundred of them.

And further, take notice that the present meeting place of the Wallsend branch, over in that same country, is not only too small, but through the ravages of a destructive little insect called the white ant, is about to fall down. They must seek a new place. They have a lot offered free. Every nerve is being strained to get enough to put a chapel on it. They are saving and sacrificing to the last penny. What will you do? They don't ask much. Elder Haworth has had printed a series of lectures in answer to a few of the allegations in D. H. Bays' book. This little pamphlet is offered to you at only fifteen cents, and you can have as many as you want. They have published two thousand copies. The proceeds go to this chapel fund. If these two thousand can be sold the building of a house of worship, free of debt, in Wallsend, is assured. If we don't take some of these pamphlets off their hands, it will greatly delay the building and compel them to dispose of them at a loss. They thought they could rely on the American brethren to help, without preliminary negotiations. Will you disappoint them? I have some of the pamphlets. If you want over seven, send to Bro. Haworth ($1.00). If less than that send your order to the undersigned.

GOMER R. WELLS.

DEER LODGE, Montana.

BLENDVILLE, Missouri, Nov. 11.

Editors Herald:—Election! The people are wild with enthusiasm! They don't seem to realize that the leaders of these great parties are working more for self than for the masses. But I did not intend to make a political speech, so will desist. Joseph Smith, the Seer, informs us that the whole political fraternity is foul with corruption.

I am interested more especially in this the "gospel message," because it embodies all that is needful for the race. I have been busy most of my time, with the exception of a few days in September, when my time was occupied in fitting up a place in which to live.

A few days after our conference at Blendville, in the fore part of October, according to Bro. Keck's instructions, Bro. Love and I commenced our labors together at Spurgeon, Missouri, where we held forth for a week to small but interested audiences. We left one or two investigating. One gentleman told us so far as he had heard he was satisfied. We had much prejudice to meet. This is where Bro. Love had spent a good portion of his early days when a member of the "Holiness" order, and the Scriptures teach "a prophet is [not] without honor save in his own country." The Devil can manufacture most any kind of a lie to suit his convenience. However, we made friends for the cause, and left an appointment for the third Sunday for the Blendville brethren to fill.

Our next point was at Galena, or near Riceville, where we commenced preaching in an old store building, paying $1.25 per week for its use. We took up collections to pay the rent. Our congregations were good, from beginning to end. On Sunday nights the house was packed, all could not be seated, and many were on the outside. Bro. Baggerly arrived from Texas towards the last, and gave us two rousing sermons. Sixteen sermons were preached at this place, and then the people wanted more; but we had to close on account of appointments previously made. The last day of the meeting in company with Saints and friends, we retired to Shoal Creek, where we had the pleasure of leading three precious souls into the waters of baptism. We closed our meeting with a good feeling, and the people "hungry for more." We intend to come back here again in the near future. There are now over twenty-five members in Galena, and no branch organization, although the Saints have petitioned for one. Most all the ministry and members with whom I have talked are favorable to such a move. The Lord spared old Grandma and Grandpa Pitman for years, that the work might be established in Galena. They intend to have their church building paid for this week, and dedicated as soon as possible. The Saints in Galena are workers. The "Sisters' Aid Society" has accomplished wonders for the establishment of the work there. May provisions be made for the sheltering of the "lambs," is my prayer!

Day after tomorrow my colaborer and I will board the train for Barry county, where we expect to labor for a few weeks.

I have been studying Zechariah 2: 4 with a great desire to use it if possible to prove that the "young man" referred to means Joseph Smith; but I have learned that the young man referred to means Zechariah. Read the first two or three chapters, and I dare say all Bible students will agree that this is the proper conclusion. We don't need to "garble" scripture in order to show up the grandeur of this latter-day work.

May the Lord hasten his work and enable us by obedience to the perfect law to come up higher is my prayer.

In gospel bonds,

A. M. BAKER.

BROOKLYN, New York, Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—The work in this district is progressing as well as we can expect under the circumstances. Elder U. W. Greene has been at work ever since he arrived, and his labors have not been in vain. He has opened one new place in the eastern part of the district, and there is quite an interest among the people to hear the word preached. The Baptist people of New Canaan offered the use of their church, which was gladly accepted and Bro. Greene occupied, and the Saints gathered around him with cheerful hearts and smiling faces for such a privilege as they had not had for a long time if ever before. But some have spread the news that the Mormons had taken possession of the Baptist church and that was enough for some at least and so the church was closed and Elder Greene not permitted to occupy the Baptist pulpit for the present; but the war is on, or the leven is at work, and the little stone has commenced to move as spoken of by Daniel the prophet, second chapter, forty-fifth verse; and somebody should take heed, if the Savior's words are true as found in Matthew 21:44.

Well, the little flock in New Canaan has no need to fear. The Good Shepherd will take care of his flock through the means he has provided. Elder A. E. Stone has been laboring for the interest of the work there, and while some may scorn his teaching, yet others will heed and obey. So there is hope; and from present indications the work will be much advanced in the district during the coming winter, as there are calls for preaching from different parts of the district. Brother Greene is to preach in the city on the 11th.

In gospel bonds,

JOSEPH SQUIRE.

ARENDAL, Norway, Oct. 28.

Editors Herald:—Thinking that all the Saints throughout Joseph's land would like to hear from the Scandinavian mission and that time enough has elapsed to justify an expectation in that direction, I would ask space for a brief narrative of our voyage across the "pond" and various incidents and impressions made on the comers to hear the gospel in my native land. We left Boston on September 8, with the prayers and well wishes of the Saints in Boston and Plymouth ringing in our ears, and consequently, being well in body, with buoyant hearts. The new steamer, Ivernia, being an excellent sea boat, and having extraordinarily fine weather, our voyage was very pleasant indeed. Leaving the shores of grand America, trusting in the God of Jacob, breathing a prayer for our dear ones left behind, we turned to view and converse with our new associates, during which time we were, as we believe, strongly impressed by the good Spirit to pen an application to the ship's captain for permission to hold service in second cabin saloon. Next day, which was Sunday, the 9th, we attended the Episcopal service in the forenoon, and our meeting was duly announced in writing in the several departments. We were notified by the head stewart that there was a Baptist minister and a Congregational exhorter among the passengers; and after being introduced, invited them to take part. This they accepted, but when they discovered that we were Latter Day Saints they declined, so we had it all to ourselves. Bro. Hansen led in prayer, and the writer tried according to grace given to speak on man's final reward. Our remarks were, no doubt, wormwood to our Baptist brother, because he arose after we closed to comment on our position, and with ridicule and bitterness he told the people that I had revealed something that it had taken all Christendom from Adam down to find out and they had failed. Well, I suppose that I as a servant of God ought to say I am sorry to say that he made himself ridiculous in the eyes of the listeners; but I cannot say that I did feel sorry. I arose to retalliate, but was denied to speak. That made it worse for our opponent, and several came next day and expressed their indignation at his ungentlemanly behavior. However, we gave him tracts, as well as the other passengers, and gained, apparently, the respect of all before we parted.

We arrived in Queenstown, Sunday morning the 16th, and in Liverpool the 17th We again addressed a small audience (the minister included) in the Jubilee Mission, September 19 and 20. Next day we boarded the train for Hull, where Bro. Hansen took the steamer for Copenhagen, and I took the boat to Christiansand, arriving at my birth place September 24, where I found my aged father, ninety-two years old, with open arms to receive me, and my sister, likewise, and on the 27th, according to our plan, delivered the angel's message to a Lutheran missionary and a few friends present.

I immediately began to announce my arrival in a local paper, stating our position versus the so-called Latter Day Saints in this country. I held two meetings in my father's house. Unknown results as yet. Since then I have held seventeen lectures in Grinstod and Arendal. The minister in Grinstod influenced the owners of the hall I had hired to close its doors against me; but I finished my lectures in a private house, and quite a number are interested. I visited the minister and gave him our epitome of faith, and warned him against connecting us with the Utah people in his cry of false teachers. We think we have gained a footing here, which will tell in the near future, and to the Lord be the honor and glory.

Bro. Hansen arrived here in Arendal, on the 18th inst. He left Aalborg the 17th all well, but was sick when he arrived here. He went right to bed. He was administered to, but he grew worse. He asked to see a doctor, on the evening of the 21st. On the 23d we moved him to the hospital, and on the 26th he died, at 2:30 a. m., of ileus. His pains were very severe; but he was ready to die. His coming and dying here seems unaccountable in the extreme; yet we should remember that "the Lord doeth all things well." Bro. Hansen, according to report, made himself felt in Aalborg. Pray, dear Saints, that a man may be found here who can fill the vacancy.

Trusting to merit the continued confidence of the Saints, I am, as ever,

Your brother in the Lord,

N. C. ENGE.

ZENA, I. T., November 9.

Editors Herald:—Just closed a series of meeting on White Water. I had the pleasure of baptizing the ex-judge of McDonald county, Missouri. He has read all of our books, and is a regular book-worm, and a fine scholar. He is just one year younger than the church; was born 1831. I also baptized his step-son, who is a very intelligent young man, age nineteen years. The Missionary Baptist preacher could not stand it any longer, and got so keen for a debate he affirmed a succession, and all I had to do was to deny. We held four nights, and I got the church in the wilderness all right; and when he went to bring it out he went to the songs of Solomon, 8:5, and I made him acknowledge that if her mother brought her forth as it states in Solomon 8:5, if she had a mother she also had a grandmother, and verse 8 of same chapter speaks of her little sister, I guess you all know about how it ought to go. Well, the discussion closed the night of the 5th, and on the 6th I baptized my moderator and left others ready for the kingdom. So to God be all the praise and honor.

Your brother,

W. H. SMART.

COLUMBUS JUNCTION, Iowa, Nov. 9.

Editors Herald:—I have been doing a little to get the story of the angel's message before the people, writing articles for our city paper; distributing the Herald and tracts; also bought a Book of Mormon for others to read, besides giving a little "chin music" occasionally.

This is a beautiful country, and lots of good-hearted people here who seem to be honest at heart. I believe it would be a splendid opening for the right one. Elder J. S. Roth promised to stop here the fore part of September, but we have not heard from him since, only through the Herald. Perhaps he has forgotten us. I have a very convenient place to make any elder feel at home, should they see fit to try it. They need be at no expense while here, and if no other place can be found I will see that the opera house is paid for a night or two. Should any one desire to come, let me know before hand, send some tracts or something to circulate. I will also put notes in our local papers.

There are no Saints here that I know of. My soul yearns for the spread of the glorious cause that we so love.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. LANE.

P. S.—We prefer Elder Roth, as we are personally acquainted with him.

SANCTIFICATION.—NO. 2.

BY MARY KNIPSCHILD.

We must be sanctified before we can understand the good, acceptable, and perfect will of God. After we are sanctified—made pure—then we will be made perfect; and the sooner we obey, the more blessed we will be. It is God that does this work in us; in like manner you had to do your part first to be justified—so you have to do your part first to be sanctified. Faith is the main principle here as well as there. If you just make up your mind that it is impossible, and do not believe it, then you will not make the required effort, and you never will be sanctified, and you will be a great loser by it.

What is sanctification? And when and how does it come about?

Sanctification means to be cleansed from all sin, so that sin has no power over us any more; or in other words, made holy. German translated into the English language would term it: To be made holy through and through; or in other words, healed from sin, sin having no power any more; like as when a person is healed of a disease and made entirely well.

Now, when and how does it come about?

After we are born again, it is expected that we should grow in grace and knowledge of the truth; and for that purpose we read and search the books which contain the truth (the written word of God) with much prayer and real intent to learn. By and by, being very diligent, with the aid of the Spirit, you will find yourself wanting in many respects, and almost unawares you will find yourself doing something which you know is wrong. Conscience and Spirit will reprove at once, and you are made to feel miserable. All you know to do is to repent of it, confess your fault to God in humble prayer, with a determination never to do that again, and so you regain peace and favor with the Lord again. So you go on watching that place closely, that you may not be overtaken again. But again you find yourself in a fault, quite in a different way and from another side; it grieves you very much, confessing to God in humble prayer, asking his forgiveness according to his tender mercy, you will be restored and filled with peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. So life goes on—sinning, sinning and repenting—whilst the word and the Spirit sometimes speak very loud of a better thing to be enabled to live without sin, a godly, a holy life. After you have learned by experience that it is an utter impossibility to live a real holy life—a life without sinning—then it is when you will have to make the required sacrifice to be cleansed from all sin, to be santified.

In the twelfth chapter in Romans, first and second verses, Paul says: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."

Now we must bear in mind that Paul speaks this to Saints who had obeyed the first principles of the doctrine of Christ—to such as were beloved of God—and their faith spoken of throughout the world, as you can read in Romans first chapter, seventh and eighth verses. It is them that Paul beseeches to present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, and acceptable unto God; by the mercies of God they were told to do this, because it was nothing more than their reasonable service. And then they could be transformed by the renewing of their mind, be put into a condition that they would and could prove, find out, learn by experience what that good, acceptable, and perfect will of God is. Now they had grown to maturity,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ready to make another step, to "Come up higher."

In the Mosaic law, a sacrifice of whatever animal it may have been, they had to be sound, without any blemish at all, or it was not accepted; after it was accepted, it was put to death first.

Likewise have we to do—present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, with all we have and are, allowing him to do with it what he pleases for time and eternity. When he touches the offering, you are once more made to realize that it is in your power to withdraw or to hold still for his work. If you do hold still, and he begins his work, a feeling comes over you as though he is going to destroy you. Again you feel at liberty to withdraw: but with your whole soul you will say: I am going to hold still, O my Lord and my God, come what will! And he will just continue emptying you out, seemingly one thing after another, until you realize that you are entirely empty, made nothing, and self is dead! O what agony during the process! But no more than realized, and you will be filled with the pure love of God, with an assurance that your offering is accepted of God, and that he is pleased with it.

You realize that you are now cleansed from all sin; and that it was self had made you so much trouble. How glad you are to be rid of it! And O, amazing wonder, to know God! the great creator, preserver, and supporter of all things—God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

O, wonder of wonders! And to know that you are now in his possession with all you have and are, and you are filled with his love beyond all comprehension—filled with a holy awe which cannot be expressed. And your whole soul goes out to God that all his children might enjoy what you enjoy. At once you will be made to realize that it is his will they should.

Now you see the horridness and blackness of sin, also the power of darkness, and you will now know that it is sin that brings us under the power of darkness. We would rather suffer death than to do anything which we know to be sin, or displeasing in the sight of God. To know and to do his will is our greatest pleasure. Eagerly you read and study the Holy Scriptures, and O how much better you understand them than before! The heart is always in prayer, for you will be tried and tempted in many ways, but with no effect, for you have put your whole trust and confidence in God, not to be shaken. You will realize that you are in his care, and that nothing can befall you without his will, for he has dominion over all things.

Now you are in a condition to work for the Lord, and that is just what you want to do. Now going on to do all you can do, you will soon find out that you are not yet perfect, for you will or may, just as the case may be, find yourself lacking in knowledge, or in understanding, or in judgment, or wisdom, or even in your speech. You may miss it sometimes, realizing keenly that you are not perfect yet. We read: "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man." This sentence proves perfection obtainable in this life. And the more humble and faithful and prayerful—the sooner it will be reached. And then we are made one in Christ Jesus our Lord, ready for his coming.

Some time ago the call came to us by the Spirit, "Come up higher." Have we all heeded the call? or is it just the same old thing as it had been before? Do we all realize that it is the great goodness and mercy of God that he thus reveals his mind and will to us as his peculiar people? If there are any among us who had entertained the thought that they were all right, let this call, "Come up higher," convince you that there are higher planes for you to reach. When God speaks, he means just what he says, and he wants to be obeyed. Don't the records show plainly enough how disobedience was treated and punished, and how much the Saints had to suffer on account of it? Therefore, make up your mind at once, all those of you who have not done it already, to make the step, bring the required sacrifice, and you will never regret it; so we all may be fitted and worthy of accomplishing the work intrusted to us.

Now for our consideration let us read section six in the lecture on faith in Doctrine and Covenants; also section 17, paragraph 6. Are the instructions there not plain and strong enough? Section 43: 3, 4; 50: 6; 85: 18, 19, 20; 98: 2; 102: 9, 10; 105: 11; 108: 2 and 6. Read also in the Bible 1 Thessalonians 5: 23; 1 Corinthians 1: 2 and 30; 6: 11; 1 John 1: 7; Romans 15: 16, 29; Titus 1: 8; 2: 14; Hebrews 12: 10 and 14. Are there any more proofs necessary to convince anyone that sanctification is a true doctrine and demanded of us as the peculiar people of God, to be fitted and prepared to do his will in his great and marvelous work and wonder to his honor and his glory, to be made one with him through Jesus Christ our Lord to everlasting salvation? May God grant it. Amen.

Supplementary questions: Are we neglecting to teach our children due respect for authority and age?

The advisory board wishes to call especial attention to the supplementary question in the lesson of this month; also, to the following quotations: Ephesians 6: 1; Prov. 23: 22; Colossians 3: 20, 21.

TIME'S OCEAN.

BY LEE FAIRCHILD.

Time's ocean, rolling evermore,
Casts, once a century, ashore
Some shining pearl of truth to glow
In the dull sands of what we know.

THE TEACHER IN CLASS.

My little talk with teachers is to begin in the class. I have nothing to do with the six days and a half when they must have been preparing for the class, or, more properly, preparing the lesson for the class.

The other preparation also has been properly defined by our friend, who has talked to us of "the teacher as a religious factor." In arithmetic we multiply or add a factor when we annex a cipher—not so in this case; the teacher who is a cipher can never be a religious factor, and such is not the teacher whom we expect to meet in our class.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER IN class is not merely a preacher to expound gospel truths to willing or unwilling listeners. Our teacher will feel the responsibility of making some mark on the mind or heart of the scholar, or at least of finding out the condition of the soil to be planted. In this respect the teacher has a greater responsibility than the preacher.

In our class the teacher occupies such a position that by a very slight turn of the head each scholar's face may be seen when speaking.

THE FIRST FIVE MINUTES OF LESSON

time may be judiciously occupied while a few references are being found in the ever-to-be present Bibles. Only a few references at a time, lest everybody become confused and time be wasted. Let the teacher see to it that all business that may by any possibility arise is attended to now.

In the meantime comments and inquiries on are in order, the why and wherefore, and how much we missed them. An individual, untransferable remark to each scholar at this time will do a great deal toward bringing teacher and scholars in touch.

From last Sunday's absentees it is an easy step to last Sunday's lesson, which those who were present can be helped to remember and to give to the others. The teacher of course has in mind the lesson thought of last Sunday, and a well-defined avenue of transition from it to the lesson thought of today, with a practical application suited to each individual before her. But let tact and caution do their utmost when these individual applications are to be handled. Personalities are more disagreeable, the nearer they come to our deepest feelings; and the Sunday school is not the place for the tender appeal which may be made only from heart to heart with none to listen.

OUR LESSON IS FROM THE BIBLE; and the idea should be to let the Bible language teach the lesson just as far as it may. To that end, let each scholar hold in hand a copy of the Bible itself if at all possible, but

www.LatterDayTruth.org

certainly a copy of the Bible verses embodied in the lesson. Let them learn to handle the book reverently but familiarly. Teach them that therein lies our best source of information. In the hurry of life's battle nothing can take the place of an established habit of familiar use of the Bible, God's appointed guide-book for our lives.

THERE ARE TWO ESSENTIAL SIDES

to every Sunday school lesson,—the historical or fact side, and the applicable or practice side; and the lesson half-hour is so short that one side is always crowding the other. Both are valuable; and I am often troubled to know which should predominate, but I always lean to the practicable. If we could actually put into our scholars each Sabbath the helpful Bible doctrine that is embodied in the lesson, what would their ignorance of any historical knowledge matter? One can be an heir of heaven, though he know none of it.

WHAT SHALL THE TEACHER USE IN CLASS.

as helps? Have I once more to face this disputed question? Well, then, let us use maps, pictures, objects—anything that will keep the scholars' thoughts directed toward the facts, ideas, truths of the lesson. Yes, we might have a few notes and a list of questions within reach when all else fails, but I do hope we will not use them while there is anything of the lesson remaining in our heads. The scholar's faith begins to ebb the moment the teacher takes up the lesson questions. The best of us will run out of material sometimes—and then, too, Satan delights in the multitudinous small disturbances which he brings about for the discomfiture of the Sunday school teacher.

I HAVE A THEORY

that these disturbances are more easily overcome by according to them passing notice than by trying to ignore them. The scholars know perfectly well that teachers are as human as themselves. New people coming in with new clothes on or funny mishaps that take place, are as quickly perceptible to teacher as to class. Why not acknowledge the interruption pleasantly, and then help your scholars to find the shortest way back to the subject of the lesson? When you have appreciated the fun with your scholars, they will be more ready to study with you.

ONE THING I NEVER PASS OVER and that is conversation during lesson-time. My idea is that no matter how small the scholars, a teacher is entirely responsible for holding their attention, and the teacher who cannot find a way out of this difficulty had better resign in favor of some one who can. The plan that I find most effectual is a sudden silence on the part of the teacher, which will soon call the whisperers' attention to themselves.

IT IS A GOOD PLAN

to keep some leading question or special idea to finish with. Hold it until you are sure it is bell time, then leave it to echo in their hearts. Make it short and suggestive.

Now, at the close of the session, is the time when we, the teachers, thoroughly comprehend the lesson and see all of its good points. The scholars, too, have seen them, if we have asked the help of the great Teacher while we taught. Let us take courage and begin immediately to study for next Sunday. —L. F. Magie in New Jersey Sunday School Messenger.

THE LIBRARY.

Some schools have a library that was bought in a bunch when the superintendent was a small boy. It is still in use, and well-preserved, because the children of a generation ago read all the books, got out of the habit of patronizing the library and never trained their children up to the use of it. Most libraries are bought in a lump and kept as long as the scholars will stand it. Then they are generously given to some long-suffering school on the frontier and another lot of books bought to replace them.

THE WORST FEATURE

about this method is that the committe purchase a lot of books of which they know nothing. Buying so many at once, they cannot read them, and, though honestly endeavoring to discharge their full duty, they put a queer collection upon the shelves. Some of the books are unfit for the children to read, while others will never do any harm because the children can never be induced to read them. A poor library is better than no library at all, but sometimes only a little better.

A library to be real good must be

FRESH AND UP TO DATE.

It can only be kept so by the frequent and continuous addition of new books. This does not necessitate a large outlay, but requires only the wise expenditure of money sufficient to buy one new book a week, or one a month.

THE LIBRARIAN

should be a well-educated man or woman of sound and discriminating judgment, if possible; one who has time to read the new books as they are purchased and before they go upon the shelves; and one who is acquainted with children and their needs. Such a librarian should be secured if possible, and may be given an assistant to attend to the weekly exchange of books. This librarian should be given an allowance as large as the treasury will permit, and should ever be on the watch for new books. A careful selection of works of reference, as well as fiction, will enable the librarian to recommend books to teachers and scholars for special study in line with the lessons. Seasonable books, suitable for Eastertide or Christmas reading, may also be announced at the proper time, and a great interest in the library aroused." —Iowa Sunday School Helper.

CUCUMBER TEACHERS.

"Some teachers remind us of cucumbers because they are so cool and green and their classes are frequently doubled up. They lie prone and helpless upon the earth, never seeing the grand sights from Pisgah's top. They are insipid until they get into a pickle and are then too sour for youthful tastes. The only hope is that they will ripen into the sunshine of God's love and become sweet pickles at last."—Iowa S. S. Helper.

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Semiannual conference of above district convened with Newport branch in their chapel at East Garden Grove, October 26. A. H. Smith presiding; A. Carmichael and N. Van Fleet, assistants, D. A. Anderson secretary pro tem. Visiting members of the priesthood were made members of conference. Impromptu addresses by T. W. Chatburn, James Miller, J. F. Burton, E. A. Smith, T. W. Williams, A. H. Smith, and N. Van Fleet, were encouraging and calculated to cheer the Saints. Branches reporting: Los Angeles 173, loss 7; absent from branch 65. San Bernardino 273; gain 4; absent from branch 42. Newport 250; gain 14; absent from branch 50. Ministry reporting: High Priests: N. Van Fleet, E. A. Jones, and T. W. Williams; Seventy: T. W. Chatburn; Elders: E A. Smith and D. A. Anderson. The arrangements for all meetings not provided for was left in the hands of the President of the conference. Saturday afternoon was given to Sunday school and Religio work. It was decided to hold a reunion in 1901, and a committee consisting of T. W. Williams, N. Van Fleet, and S. Penfold was appointed to have charge of the reunion, to select place, arrange time, and provide for all necessities of the same. Saturday afternoon of next conference was granted to Sunday school and Religio interests. Officers selected: T. W. Williams, president of district; A. Carmichael, assistant; Margaret Pankey, secretary. Reports were read from Sunday school and Religio workers. The following resolution was passed: Whereas, a uniform understanding how to conduct meetings held for the contemplation, consideration, and decision of matters of importance will greatly aid in preserving the harmony, dignity, and peace of coworkers in Christ; and whereas, the Book of Rules, compiled by Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, and M. H. Forscutt, and adopted at General Conference of 1891, had for its object such peace and harmony in all deliberative bodies of the Saints; therefore, be it resolved, that the Southern California district accept it as the rules to govern in its deliberations and actions in all meetings for which it provides; and be it further resolved, that all rules now on branch or district records, not in harmony with said Book of Rules, shall be and is hereby rescinded. This was one of the best sessions of conference ever held in the district. Peace prevailed, and during the prayer sessions, the entire audience was melted to tears, under the gentle and inspiring influences of the Spirit of the Master. The preaching was of a high order, the themes were the choicest, and each speaker acquitted himself creditably in the presentation of the matter in hand. Adjourned to meet with San Bernardino Saints, on first Friday in March, 1901.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

LONDON.

Conference of above district convened with the Saints at Toronto, Ontario, October 6, 7, 8. Elder R. C. Evans chosen to preside, assisted by R. C. Longhurst and John H. Taylor; John L. Burger and John Shields clerks. Reports were received from seventeen branches in the district, showing a gain in membership of 41 for the past three months. There were still fifteen branches in district who had not reported. Secretary's report from October, 1899, to June, 1900: Last report 1,911, present number 1,982; gain by baptism 81, by letter 29, loss by letter of removal 23, by death 15, expulsion 1: net gain 71. An order on the treasury for $7 93 due secretary for postage, stationery, etc., was allowed. Treasurer's report showed a balance in the treasury of $45 43. A resolution was passed rescinding rule now on the books in regard to Saints paying five cents each meal during conference, and that no charge is to be made at all. Next conference to convene at Arthur, Ontario, the second Saturday and Sunday in June, 1901. Elder R. C. Evans to be our delegate to General Conference, and that he have power to choose any who may be going from the district to act with him. Resolved that we petition the First Presidency of the church to return Elder R. C. Evans to the Canada mission. Bishop's agent's books were audited and found correct. Officers elected as follows: President, R. C. Longhurst; vice president, John H. Taylor; secretary, John L. Burger; treasurer, Samuel Pope; bishop's agent, R. C. Evans. Speakers for conference, A. C. Barmore, John A. Robinson, and R. C. Evans. Prayer and sacrament meeting Sunday morning from eight to eleven a. m. Saints met again Monday morning at eight a. m., for business. Resolved that hereafter branch secretaries make out their statistical reports and send them to district secretary one month before each conference, so as to save time in correcting mistakes in the reports at conference. Resolved that railroad rates be published in the church papers one month before each conference. Resolved that the Grand Valley branch be disorganized, and that the district secretary call in the branch records, and also furnish letters of removal to those that wish them to Garafraxa branch. Conference collections amounted to $38.83, expenses $2.65, were paid, and the balance, $36 18, was paid over to Toronto branch to go on their church building fund. The ordinance of baptism was administered to four persons by Elder R. C. Evans. Resolved that we tender Toronto Saints a hearty vote of thanks for the kindness and hospitality shown to Saints during conference.

NORTHEAST ILLINOIS.

Conference convened at Plano, October 6. Heman C. Smith and Henry Southwick chosen to preside, James F. Keir secretary. Statistical reports: Ladd 31, Plano 187, Piper City 23, Sandwich 77, Chicago 185, West Pullman 51, Mission 129, Wilmington 63. Ministry reporting: J. M. Terry, J. Midgorden, F. J. D Earl, E. J. Lang, Adam J. Keck, C. G. Laophear, H. E Moler, Henry Southwick, F. T. Haynes, G. H. Graves, G. H. Henley, G. F. Howard, and T. Hougas. Paper from Chicago relative to aiding colored work in Chicago adopted. Paper to Board of Publication of Ensign and Herald adopted. Bishop's agent's report: Balance on hand with total receipts to date, $552.49; disbursements, $419.05; balance on hand, $133 44. Referred to auditing committee and found correct. District treasurer reports: Balance received from former treasurer, $5.45; expenditures, $1 05; balance on hand, $4 40. Report received and adopted. Resolution from Ladd presented, relative to ruling of district president, was referred to committee appointed by the body. Henry Southwick was elected district president, J. Midgorden assistant, James Keir secretary. Committee on Ladd matter reported; report adopted. Report of tent fund presented, received, and adopted. Adjourned to meet at Sandwich, Saturday and Sunday previous to full moon in February.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.

Conference was held with Hebron branch, September 9 and 10. Sunday, preaching by Elders C. H. Porter, Caleb Blodgett, and W. M. Self. One baptized and one child blessed. On Monday, business session was called to order by the president, J. W. Waldsmith; C. H. Porter was chosen secretary pro tem. Reports from official members were received, showing 291 meetings attended, 127 services held, 143 sermons preached, 2 funerals conducted, 3 baptisms, 8 children blessed, 4 marriages solemnized, 38 sick administered to by J. W. Waldsmith and M. H. Forscutt, of the high priests; C. H. Porter of the seventy; W. M. Self, A. J. Myers, James Thompson, and C. E Blodgett of the elders, and R. O. Self, H. W. Belville, and E. Robertson of the priests. Branch reports were received from Blue River and Nebraska City, giving membership of 383; gain 12. Elmwood branch report received after conference adjourned. Bishop's agent reported total receipts $364 54; paid out $359 64; balance on hand $4 90. The district Sunday school association was reported by Supt. W. M. Self as being well carried on, everything being considered. Elder C. E Blodgett was granted a license, as the one he had was worn out. On motion the following was adopted by vote: Resolved, that this conference does hereby indorse the action of our missionary in charge, Elder James Caffall, in the proposed annexation to the Southern Nebraska district of so much of Hall and Buffalo counties as beforetimes belonged to the Central Nebraska district. That we favor the action as suggested by petition from the Northern Nebraska district relative to boundary lines, and that we present the same to the branches of the district for their ratification and approval, with instructions to them to report their action to the next district conference. That we request the secretary of the district to report the action of this conference to the several branches relative to the proposed change in boundary lines. The present district officers were all sustained, and conference adjourned to meet in Wilber, in January, 1901, at the call of district president. E. D. Briggs, district secretary.

THE RUINS OF ERIDU, 2400 B. C.

About the mound is a wall some 20 feet in height, pierced by three openings, the remains of the gateways, says Biblia. Nearly the entire inclosure is filled with a brick platform, equal in height with the surrounding wall. The southern part of the mound contains a few imposing ruins, but on the northern edge stands the temple, a pyramidal-shaped building, reaching 70 feet above the platform. Two of its stories are still to be seen. A peculiar feature of the temple is a marble stairway 15 feet broad and 70 feet in length, leading us to the exterior. The polished marble slabs which served as steps are still scattered among the ruins, attesting to the extreme richness of the building, and along the two edges of the stairway are balustrades; at the foot of the stairway the bases of two large pillars remain, the object of which is uncertain. The peculiar shape of the bricks, plain cones, cylinders, innumerable fragments of pottery, pure gold-leaf, and stone implements abounding in great profusion, are the distinguishing features of this ruin. Unlike most other Babylonian temples, that at Eridu was built partly of stone, for the architects here had access to the neighboring sandstone ridges, and the plain to the south abounds in great boulders of black granite. The statement frequently made that the huge stones from which the Telloh statues were hewn were quarried at Sinai must now be modified, for the quarries about Eridu supplied the material. Mr. Taylor, speaking of the mound, says that as one approaches it he will see "blocks and pieces of marble, rough and polished, of different colors of the most beautiful hues; fragments of bowls, vases and coffins, in crystal, marble, and alabaster; gilt-headed nails, curious bricks, and tiles of original shape and composition, and lastly, and the most curious and interesting, the clay hatchets and hammers, the flint knives and styles, stone and clay nails, and a hundred other objects so palpably denoting a remote period and one of the earliest stages of civilization." One may imagine the desire which the excavator has to reveal the treasures buried in this ruin.—Scientific American, November 17, 1900.

THRIFT.

Put not your trust in money, but put your money in trust.—Holmes.

Penuriousness is a vice. A miser is a social evil. A stingy man is a public enemy. A few people need to be taught how to spend money; many need to be taught how to spend it properly. The majority, however, need to be instructed in the gospel of thrift. Few feel the value of saving something in early years. The average young man and young woman, too, for that matter, is full of wants, the most of them unnecessary. Many spend all they get and borrow from the future—that is, from their friends.

Habits of thrift are of vital importance.

First, because small savings are the beginnings of possible wealth. Some decry wealth. "Money is the root of all evil," say some, "therefore live and die poor." Wealth abused is an evil. A nation is not cursed because it has many rich men, but only when its rich men are mean, lacking in public spirit and benevolence. Wealth ought to mean good books, travel, art, music, refinement, and helpfulness.

Second, the gradual accumulation of even a small competency adds to the dignity and confidence of the possessor. A man stands an inch taller in his boots when he has a growing bank account even if it is small.

Third, the man who is ahead financially, who owns a little home, a few shares of legitimate stock, or some government bonds is a better and safer citizen for it. He owns a part of the United States and has an added anxiety that the corporate body be managed for the best interest of his small holdings. He is interested in good water supply, cheap gas, sanitary conditions, and clean streets. All these things enhance the value of his property.—Rev. R. A. White, in Chicago Tribune, Oct. 14, 1900.

HOW TO CONQUER WORRYING.

Bishop Vincent gives these helpful rules for conquering worry:—

Consider what must be involved in the truth that God is infinite and that you are a part of his plan.

Memorize some of the Scripture promises and recall them when the temptation to worry returns.

Cultivate a spirit of gratitude for daily mercies.

Realize worrying as an enemy which destroys your happiness.

Realize that it can be cured by persistent effort.

Attack it definitely as something to be overcome.

Realize that it has never done, and never can do, the least good. It wastes vitality and impairs the mental faculties.

Help and comfort your neighbor.

Forgive your enemies and conquer your aversions.

The world is what we make it. Forward, then! Forward in the power of faith, forward in the power of truth, forward in the power of friendship, forward in the power of freedom, forward in the power of hope, forward in the power of God.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

JUST THREE THINGS.

"I once met a thoughtful scholar," says Bishop Whipple, "who told me that for years he had read every book he could which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ, and he said he would have become an infidel but for three things."

"'First, I am a man. I am going somewhere. Tonight I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all such books can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray upon the darkness. They shall not take away the only guide and leave me stone-blind.

"'Second, I had a mother. I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned upon an unseen arm as calmly as a child goes to sleep on the breast of its mother. I know that was not a dream.

"'Third, I have three motherless daughters'—and he said it with tears

in his eyes—'they have no protector but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world if you blot out from it all the teachings of the gospel.' "—Selected.

The trouble around Christmas time is to know what to give, and, if the present is not to be bought, how to make it. The Delineator for December is full of Christmas suggestions. Several pages are devoted to holiday fancy work with illustrations, also to the latest designs in crocheting, drawn work, and modern lace making. Puddings, cakes and Christmas candies likewise come in for attention in the December Delineator.

The Catholic World Magazine, in its current issue, makes a plea for the older spiritual writers. While it commends the work of the more recent writers, yet the farther one goes up the stream to its source the purer the water. So the closer we get to the gospel the purer the spirituality. The mental and spiritual life of the church must of a necessity be influenced by the attacks of her enemies. It makes a great deal of difference to a city whether it is besieged by the enemy or not, and what the character of the attack. Drawing out the contrast, the article notes these differences: "In the older spiritual writers there was greater liberty and simplicity, more insistence on the end, and less specification of the means, slighter emphasis of the need of human direction, and more frequent recommendations of attention to divine guidance in the internal order. Among the later spiritual writers method is sometimes developed at the expense of freedom, warning to obey made more common than suggestion to love, and perfection of drill occasionally attained by a thorough suppression of individual differences for the original existence of which God's providence was responsible."

"EVERY mother should read The Nursery for November, as it contains many articles on the care of infants and children that mothers need and ought to know. The list of contributors certainly sustain the publisher's statement that it is a magazine for every home. The contents include information on Hygiene of the Ear, Burns, Hives, How to Use a Thermometer, Bed Wetting, Out-door Play, Over Feeding Baby, Fashions for Children (Illus.), etc. Ten cents per copy. $1.00 per year. USES OF OLIVE OIL.

Olive oil should be found in every nursery and on every medicine shelf. In time of croup it can be given frequently and will not disturb the digestion, as do many medicines. It is often given in place of cod liver oil and is as effective in building up the system and far less disagreeable. It is recommended by many specialists both as a food and a tonic. A certain young chemist never has a cold or requires any medicine except a spoonful of olive oil every night and morning, which he takes regularly. He seldom wears an overcoat.—New York Tribune.

How few clergymen read the Bible as it ought to be read! Have we not, all of us, grown impatient ofttimes at the pulpit droning of that magnificent literature of the Old and New Testament—the lifeless, spiritless rendering of the splendid text? Those who heard Miss Ida Benfey at the Carnegie Lyceum in January, 1899, in her illuminating readings from the Book of Job, were made to feel the splendor of that sublime bit of Hebrew literature. "There is nothing equal to it in the Bible or out of it," was the judgment of Carlyle.

The adaptability of the Scriptures to elocutionary interpretation is almost infinite, though its demands upon the resources of the reader may well daunt even the most vaulting ambition. But professional elocutionists are coming to see the possibilities it offers. Miss Mary E. Blood, who with Miss Ida Morey Riley conducts the Columbia School of Oratory, at Chicago, gives Bible readings which are said to be unique interpretations.—In "The National Magazine" for November.

The new daily fast mail train recently put on by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad for the government is the third now in operation over that road. One leaves Chicago at three o'clock in the morning, and another at nine-thirty in the evening, both for Council Bluffs. The new train leaves Chicago every morning at eight-forty-eight for Lincoln, Nebraska, where it delivers to the Burlington's Express for the North Pacific Coast via Billings, Montana. The new train carries a coach for passengers and gives a quick day service Chicago to Council Bluffs, Omaha and Lincoln.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY
REVIEW OF REVIEWS

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS is the one important magazine in the world giving in its pictures, its text, in its contributed articles, editorials and departments, a comprehensive, timely record of the world's current history. Not the enumeration of mere bare facts, but a comprehensive picture of the month, its activities, its notable personalities, and notable utterances. The best informed men and women in the world find it indispensable.

There are many readers in your locality who have yet to learn of its usefulness. We wish to establish active agents in every city and township in the country. We will pay liberally for energetic effort in the subscription field. Leisure moments can be utilized with substantial increase of income. Make a list of the persons in your locality who should have the "Review of Reviews," and send to us for agent's terms, sample copies, and working outfit. Then solicit their subscriptions. It is a compliment to approach a person with a subscription proposition for the "Review of Reviews," and consequently orders are easily secured. This is the active subscription season. Make application at once, naming your references.

THE ELECTION IS OVER.

It is with a degree of relief that we notice the fact that the presidential election is over, and that the ordinary affairs of the lives of American citizens have settled back to the normal conditions obtaining in times of political peace, if there can be such a thing.

It has been decided by the American citizens from the voters' booths, that the administration of the public affairs of the nation shall be in the hands and under the care of men chosen as representatives of the policies of the Republican party. Whether these policies are good or bad; whether the men chosen are well or ill-suited to bear the burdens of the offices to which the suffrages of the people have elected them, and whether the confidence of the one party that the policies presented by the party prevailing will be productive of the good proposed, and the men chosen be wholly competent to carry them into execution; or the fears of the party losing in the contest that the policies are bad, and the men chosen incompetent for the task imposed on them by their election, we have not the right nor the disposition to state.

The Saints in their different localities have doubtless exercised their right to hear, read, think, and decide for themselves; and each, after such decision, has made it expressive of his will by his ballot, the franchise of the citizen.

There may have been bitterness in the campaign; there may have been unguarded and hasty speeches made in the warmth of political differences and party strife; and if there has been such they should now be overcome and put away by the power of good will one towards another, in the light of the words of the Master, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them."

The citizens of the Republic have once more witnessed the scene of a strong and vigorous political contest, of gravest import to the Republic and the world in the stupendous interests involved and the results which were to follow in the event of the success of either party, the hosts engaged in the forensic strife and party management meeting like two contending tides at the polls, and there peacefully determining the issues joined between the great parties without personal strife, or bloodshed; the one party departing to take up the burden imposed by the majority of the votes cast; the other to reorganize its forces, reconstruct its order of conflict, to again try conclusions at another time.

Such a spectacle as this is in itself a great object lesson, and teaches the possibilities of the principle of self government.

We venture to express the hope that now that the quadrennial political strife is over for the time being, Saints will put away any bitterness of thought, if any has been engendered, and let the gospel of salvation have renewed sway in the minds of all.

G. T. GRIFFITHS WILL NOT GO WEST AGAIN BEFORE APRIL.

Owing to conditions not subject to control, Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths will not return to the Western mission before the April session of conference. If he should go now, he will be required to return to Ohio again before the Conference sits. This would involve much expense and delay; he will therefore labor in the missions of Brn. W. H. Kelley and J. H. Lake, as they and he may agree and wisdom direct.

JOSEPH SMITH,
For Presidency.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

Spiritual growth is to be sought for, and valued when secured.

We often see it written and hear it spoken that the missionary forces and leading men are negligent of duty in that places where the Saints are found in isolated living places, small branches and sparsely settled districts are not visited, looked after, and good local laborers provided for them, that "the flock of God may be fed."

It may be that there are places where, if suitable "good" men were available for pastoral work, a more active life in church work might appear to be manifest; but we call to mind that the calls are many, the laborers few, and in our case very few indeed.

But, what is the need of charging neglect, when those who are engaged are doing all that men in their condition can do to meet the various demands made on them. Is it not a fact every man and every woman is to be judged at the final winding up of earthly affairs by the Great Judge, upon the basis of individual worth, or demerit, and not for the good or bad things that others have done? And does the living alone or in the crowded branch excuse or exonerate anyone for feeble effort, failure in being worthy, or for absolute wrongdoing? Does an isolated life, or one passed in the whirl of associated members, necessarily add to personal righteousness?

Is it not a fact that the Spirit of God is as accessible and as readily given to the humble follower of the Master, plodding along in the lonely walks of an isolated home, as it is to the man, or woman, who lives among the many and worships with the hundreds of a large branch? Is it not the experience of some that when they lived in a small branch, where but few met at the stated times of meeting, that they had great spiritual enjoyment, and the members seemed more closely united than they did in the larger branch to which they removed in search of spiritual life, and development?

Would it not be well for those who so constantly write of the loss localities may meet unless there is some one sent who is fatherly and wise to take spiritual watchcare over them, just to stay right there and take such watchcare themselves, and go and leave the flock to the wolf? Do such writers take any solace to themselves that they have done their duty by throwing the burden off their own spiritual strength, upon Bro. W. H. Kelley, G. T. Griffiths, or Bro. Joseph, that they are thereby freeing their garments of the blame for loss that may ensue, and fastening responsibility upon those whom they so warn of impending danger to the flock? Do they?

Another thing. The work is the Lord's; he is the "author and finisher of the faith;" he alone can give increase to the fold; he alone can send or retain the Holy Spirit to the convert and disciple. Why, then, should doubt be thrown upon his goodness, will, and ability to give sustaining grace to all—the isolated Saint as well as he who lives in the crowded and busy branch. We are constantly reminded that the church is not a "man-made" institution, that it is not a one man church, that God is no respecter of persons, that neither Bro. John nor Bro. Joseph is authorized or empowered to dominate the opinions, or dominate the thoughts and speech of the membership, that every man has the right, privilege, and duty to think for himself, be a man and act for himself, having right to an access to the Father, through the Master for direction, comfort, and strength. Does anyone forfeit these great rights because he or she lives alone? No. Does anyone have or enjoy them more abundantly simply because they are with the many in association? No; it is a matter of individual life and striving.

Let us trust Christ with a better trust, hereafter. If he cares for the shorn lamb of our material flocks, will he not more tenderly and surely care for his own spiritual flock? We believe so; and while we sympathize with the lonely ones, and pray for them, we do know that to them comes the greater opportunity and the sweeter reward, if they merit the Lord's favor by upright living.

DIVORCE.

The Protestant Episcopal Church is now considering the question of the divorce laws of the state, and the rules of the church in divorce cases. The Chicago Tribune has this to say of it editorially:—

NEW BAN ON DIVORCE.

The Protestant Episcopal Church adopts the proposed new canons concerning marriage and divorce. Its action will be chiefly important in that it may tend to influence public opinion as to the sanctity of the marriage contract. No one will contend that a canon of a church which forbids its ministers to marry two persons unless satisfied that neither has been the husband or wife of any other person living will have any effect in preventing such marriages, except in cases where the parties acknowledge the rules of the church as the supreme law of their lives. It is and will always remain possible for divorced people to be legally married by civil authorities in spite of all church rules to the contrary. Among the members of the Episcopal Church, however, the proposed canons will undoubtedly have much influence and weight and through them it will have a certain influence upon the public generally.

It is proposed that the only condition under which a divorced person whose former husband or wife is living may be permitted to remarry with the consent of the church is that the cause for the divorce must have existed before the former marriage was contracted. In the opinion of many people there should be other exceptions made to the general rule of the church in order to prevent actual injustice to perfectly innocent people. Speaking generally, however, every step which tends to throw additional protection around the home and which is calculated to make people enter into matrimony in a serious and thoughtful frame of mind is to be commended. The proposed action of the church will meet with general approval.

Bishop McLaren is out in a strong opposition to the existing attitude of the church concerning divorces, and the marriage of divorced persons. The action recommended by the committee, and which meets the approval of Bishop McLaren, will be that the church will not permit its ministers to perform marriage ceremony where either party has an unmarried former husband, or wife, living, no matter what the cause for divorce unless that cause existed before the first marriage was entered into.

This action on divorces may be followed by other churches, and may very materially affect the subject of marriage so far as the church itself may be concerned. But, while the laws of the states are so varied and loose as they are, divorces will continue, those desiring to secure separation will disregard the church and use the advantages and disadvantages of the laws to gain their ends.

As far as the church we represent is concerned, there is but one justifiable cause for divorce, that of adultery or fornication.

We favor a uniform law on the marriage relation to be enacted by Congress of such rules and regulations as shall apply in all the states and territories alike.

Joseph the Seer once said, "Congress is supreme in its sphere;" and we hope this grave question will be found to be in its sphere.

ANTIQUITIES FOUND IN THE STREETS OF THE CITY OF MEXICO.

We present herewith something that will be of interest to the readers of the Herald, especially so to those who are interested in antiquities. The articles reproduced were sent from the city of Mexico, to Sr. M. Walker, by a friend who is visiting in that city. We are sorry that the name of the paper from which they were taken cannot be given, as there was nothing to indicate from what paper the clippings were taken. Sr. Walker, in transmitting the clippings to us, said:—

It seems that the earth is fairly vomiting up her antiquities.

Here are the clippings:—

ANOTHER TOWER FOUND YESTERDAY.

IN THE ESCALERILLAS STREET EXCAVATIONS—IS LARGER THAN THE FIRST.

What is thought to be a tower of one of the temples of the great Aztec teocalli was discovered yesterday afternoon in the Escalerillas street excavations. A circular structure of stone, about three meters in diameter was uncovered about twenty-five meters west of the tower discovered last week. The dirt was cleared away from about one fourth of the structure. That it is a tower cannot be absolutely stated until the dirt has been removed from all around it. The structure appears to be hollow and to be filled with dirt. In the opinion of Sr. Batres it is probably a second tower. It is larger than the first tower discovered, by about half a meter in diameter. Of course nothing can be told as yet to its depth.

The supposed tower was the only important find of the day. No more objects were taken from the excavations. The electrical pump for pumping the water from the first tower was put in place yesterday afternoon and the water will probably be pumped out today. It is expected that many objects of value will be found in this tower when the water has been taken out. Electric lights are to be used to light the excavations where they are necessary. The excavations are being pushed westward and laterally. Escalerillas street is thronged with people during the entire day. The venders of alleged antiquities are reaping a rich harvest from the tourist "suckers," selling them all sorts of things at all sorts of prices as objects having been taken from the excavations. The hayseed in New York isn't to be compared with the average tourist in point of gullibleness.

SECTION OF OLD CHAPEL WALL FOUND.

RUNS TWENTY METERS OR MORE WESTWARD FROM THE TOWER OR CORNER FOUND MONDAY.

The extension of the Escalerillas street excavation to the west yesterday disclosed about twenty meters of the top of an old wall, which in the opinion of Sr. Batres, is probably the north wall of one of the chain of chapels surrounding the teocalli. The full length of the wall has not been ascertained, and, of course, its depth is merely conjecture. The wall is a continuation of the structure discovered Monday afternoon, which was supposed to be a section of an old tower. In view of this fact, while no further excavations were made around the supposed tower yesterday, Sr. Batres is inclined to think that it is merely the corner of the building in the shape of a quarter of a cylinder.

A huge stone serpent's head was found in the wall yesterday. The head is very clearly defined, the eyes, mouth and fangs showing plainly. The mouth is widely extended and is flat across the face, being about 35 centimeters wide. The head is nearly a meter in length. Some minor objects were found, among them several stone knives, similar to those already taken out, and a hundred to a hundred and fifty little copper bells. These bells, according to Sr. Batres, were used to hang over a sort of drum in the doorway of the chapel. The drum so blocked the entrance that it was necessary to move it to enter. When it was moved the bells rattled and gave notice to the priests within of the entrance of some person. The bells are about two centimeters long and half a centimeter in diameter with closed mouths, having only a little slit at the end. They had evidently been hung on strings.

The electric pump was successfully put in yesterday and the first tower will be pumped dry today. Interesting finds may be expected in it, in the opinion of the archæologists who are keeping track of the work.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. D. W. Wight reports some fourteen baptisms in his field, the Rocky Mountain, for the quarter. He wrote:—

I can observe increased activity among the Saints, and the prayer meetings at our late reunion were characterized by a marked degree of devotion and spirituality. A greater degree of liberality is being manifested by members of the predominating church, and in different places our elders have been very hospitably entertained.

Bro. J. L. Goodrich, writing from Richmond, Virginia, under date of November 13, says:—

The way seems very much hedged up here now; but may be the dawn of day will soon appear, as the darkest hour is said to be just before day. I have found the location of the Utah elders and some of their membership, and expect to spend most of my time with that misled people. I have found one lady who will make a statement of what she saw there, etc.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths reports some forty or fifty baptisms in his field the last quarter. He and his family have been quarantined for scarlet fever, at their home in Temple, Ohio, for the past six weeks; the quarantine is now lifted, however.

Bro. Henry C. Smith, of Temple, Ohio, reports an improved condition among the Saints at Kirtland, Ohio, of which we are pleased to hear. May peace and the Spirit prevail there, and everywhere is the prayer of all.

Elder I. N. Roberts writes that he organized another new branch in Minnesota on the 27th of October. Reports also, three baptisms by himself and Bro. Omans later. Bro. Roberts expected to do missionary labor in Duluth the next month.

THEOPHANY.—NO. 2.

BY R. M. ELVIN.

The triumvirate of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit should be understood and considered as one in aim, purpose, power, and glory, for the redemption of the wide-spread race of Adam.

Zeezrom was a man who was expert in the devices of the devil, that he might destroy that which was good.—Alma 8: 9.

In his subtle effort to catch the servant of God, he adroitly said:—

Will you answer the questions which I shall put unto you?—Alma 8: 9.

Among the questions he propounded in his attempt to gainsay the truth, were the following:—

Q.—"Thou sayest there is a true and living God?" A.—Yea, there is a true and a living God.

Q.—Is there more than one God? A.—No.

Q.—How knowest thou these things? A.—An angel had made them known unto me.

Q.—Who is he that shall come? Is it the Son of God? A.—Yea.

Q.—Shall he save his people in their sins? Answer:—

I say unto you he shall not, for it is impossible for him to deny his word.—Alma 8: 9.

Here the questioner turned to the people and said:—

See that ye remember these things; for he said there is but one God; yet he saith that the Son of God shall come, but he shall not save his people, as though he had authority to command God.—Alma 8: 10.

The minister's reply was:—

Behold thou hast lied, for thou sayest that I spake as though I had authority to command God, because I said he shall not save his people in their sins.—Alma 8: 10.

After this colluctancy, they renewed the dialogue.

Question:—

Is the Son of God the very eternal Father?—Alma 8: 10.

Answer:—

Yea, he is the very eternal Father of heaven and of earth, and all things which in them is; he is the beginning and the end, the first and the last; and he shall come into the world to redeem his people; and he shall take upon him the transgressions of those that believe on his name; and these are they that shall have eternal life, and salvation cometh to none else; therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death; for behold, the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God, and be judged according to their works. Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death; the spirit and the body shall be reunited again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time; and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; and even there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost; but all things shall be restored to its perfect frame, as it is now, or in the body, and shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil.—Alma 8: 10.

The interrogations were by Zeezrom, "one of the most expert" lawyers of those at the examination of Amulek the minister who was accused of violating the laws. There was an attempt on the part of this expert lawer to bribe the servant of Christ to deny the "existence of a Supreme Being." No one answer given under such circumstances should be considered as ultimatum in the issue under investigation; the consentaneity of the answers gist of the evidence.

1. He testified that there was "a true and living God." This is corroborated by the Prophet Jeremiah:—

But the Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting King.—Jer. 10: 10.

2. His second reply is confirmed by the Prophet Isaiah:—

Before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me.—Isaiah 43: 10.

Anciently angels made known the mind and will of God to men. (See Rev. 19: 10.)

4. The affirmation that it was the "Son of God" who was to come is attested by the testimony of the Apostle Peter:—

Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matt. 16: 16.

5. By taking the first part of this answer separate and alone, and to the exclusion of all other evidence upon this topic, it would establish the dogma of theophany; however, the latter part of the answer dispels all error, wherein the witness testifies that the godhead, is a triune—namely: "Christ the Son," "God the Father," and the "Holy Spirit," which he denominates: "One Eternal God." To accept one part of the answer and reject a part, would be to impeach the witness, which would be both inconsistent and suicidal. Let not the reader overlook the fact that Isaiah, in his prophecy, foretold that Christ should be called "the everlasting Father." John the Revelator, purporting to give us the words of the Master, says:—

I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the Lord, who is, and who was, and who is to come, the Almighty.—Rev. 1: 8. I. T.

Thus we obtain a unanimity in the testimony of Amulek, Isaiah, and John, relative to Christ and his relationship to this cosmos. There is a large portion of the world unaware that one of the chief, particular objects of the Book of Mormon is—the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations.—Preface Book of Mormon.

Surely no truth-loving person will find fault with this, for the good book assures us:—

Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God.—1 John 4: 2.

Can any Christian afford to disregard this divine test, or the evidence that is in harmony therewith? The Nephites were taught:—

And now behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven, whereby man can be saved in the kingdon of God. And now behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end.—2 Nephi 13: 6.

This clearly and unmistakably teaches the doctrine of the triune godhead. To the same import is the following:—

For behold, the time cometh, and is not far distant, that with power, the Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven, among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay, and shall go forth amongst men, working mighty miracles, such as healing the sick, raising the dead, causing the lame to walk, the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear, and curing all manner of diseases; and he shall cast out devils, or the evil spirits which dwell in the hearts of the children of men. And lo, he shall suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death; for behold, blood cometh from every pore, so great shall be his anguish for the wickedness and the abominations of his people. And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things, from the beginning; and his mother shall be called Mary.—Mosiah 1: 13, 14.

The reader will observe that both of these quotations from the ancient prophets of America were prophecies

delivered prior to the birth of the Son of God, and both are replete with certitude of his name, relationship to his Father, and character of his work for the redemption of his brethren—the children of Adam. When he came to this continent he said to the Nephites:—

Behold I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning. I am in the Father, and the Father in me; and in me hath the Father glorified his name. I came unto my own, and my own received me not. And the scriptures, concerning my coming, are fulfilled. And as many as have received me, to them have I given to become the sons of God; and even so will I to as many as shall believe on my name, for behold, by me redemption cometh, and in me is the law of Moses fulfilled. I am the light and the life of the world. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. And ye shall offer up unto me no more the shedding of blood; yea, your sacrifices and your burnt offerings shall be done away, for I will accept none of your sacrifices and your burnt offerings; and ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit.—Book of Nephi 4: 8.

Without doubt the Master referred to the scripture:—

And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.—John 10: 16

And when this scripture was fulfilled by his visitation, he affirmed his sonship, and the fatherhood of God.

In the same trend is the following:—

And the angel said unto me, Behold the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father!—1 Nephi 3: 16.

This was prophetic; was true then, and is equally true now.

In this our own day God hath again spoken unto mankind, and in his revealments we have this beautiful language:—

This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom; which glory is that of the church of the firstborn, even of God, the holiest of all, through Jesus Christ, his Son; he that ascended up on high, as also he descended below all things, in that he comprehended all things, that he might be all in all and through all things, the light of truth, which truth shineth. This is the light of Christ. As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.—D. C. 85: 2.

No theophany in this, but rather the autocracy of the eternal God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the matchless Architect of the vast planetary systems that adorn "the circumambient heaven."

Here is one more citation from the same authority:—

Verily, thus saith the Lord, It shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh their sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face, and know that I am, and that I am the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world; and that I am in the Father and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one; the Father because he gave me of his fullness; and the Son because I was in the world and made flesh my tabernacle, and dwelt among the sons of men. I was in the world and received of my Father, and the works of him were plainly manifest; and John saw and bore record of the fullness of my glory; and the fullness of John's record is hereafter to be revealed. And he bore record saying, I saw his glory that he was in the beginning before the world was; therefore, in the beginning the Word was, for he was the Word, even the messenger of salvation, the light and the Redeemer of the world; the Spirit of truth, who came into the world because the world was made by him; and in him was the life of men and the light of men. The worlds were made by him. Men were made by him. All things were made by him, and through him, and of him. And I, John, bare record that I beheld his glory, as the glory of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth; even the Spirit of truth which came and dwelt in the flesh, and dwelt among us.—D. C. 90: 1.

This explanation by revelation should be satisfactory to all who profess the philosophy of this latter-day Israel.

The immaculate One was ever faithful to confess the supremacy of his Father, and his own dependency upon his Father. Read the testimony of the beloved disciple:—

They understood not that he spake to them of the Father. Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things. And he that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.—John 8: 27-29.

The perspicuity of this is so self-evident that comment is seemingly unnecessary.

James D. Shaw, of Waco, Texas, in his pamphlet, "Divinity of Christ," says:—

Now I have examined every argument adduced by Mr. Black in proof of Christ's divinity, and have not found one of them to be conclusive, or even plausible. On the contrary, I find that the Old Testament does not mention him at all. The Jews branded him as an impostor; the Roman historians took no notice of him; and he, himself, maintains a duality between him and God, acknowledging his inferiority in knowledge, power, and authority. In fact I find no argument in demonstration of his divinity that could not with equal propriety be adduced in favor of a score or more of other good men, some before and others since his time.—Page 25.

Mr. Shaw for many years was a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and without doubt insisted upon the people in his preaching:—

There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts, of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things, both visible and invisible. And in unity of this godhead there are three persons of one substance, power, and eternity—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.—M. E. Discipline, p, 9.

Mr. Shaw at one time received quite a fair vote in a General Conference for the office of Bishop in his church; shortly after which he left the church and announced himself a humanitarian. All men are responsible for what light God grants unto them. The Savior's statement should be a standing ebenezer to one and all:—

For whosoever receiveth, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.—Matt. 13: 10, 11, I. T.

To this may be added as descriptive of those who lose faith in Christ and turn away from the least degree of gospel light:—

If therefore the light which is in thee be darkness, how great shall that darkness be. —Matt 6: 23, I. T.

In refutation of the conclusions of Mr. Shaw, that there is no evidence of the divinity of Christ, I cite:—

Note.—In Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History the following is written concerning Christ being foreknown: "It is now the proper place to show that the very name of Jesus, as also that of Christ, was honored by the prophets of old. And first, Moses himself has intimated how exceedingly august and illustrious the name of Christ is. . . . And the prophets who lived subsequently also plainly announced Christ by name." As quoted above, Christ said that it was written that he should suffer and should rise from the dead the third day; and Paul said that it was written that he should be the first that should rise from the dead; therefore it must have been that they had more in the sacred Scriptures than has come down to us through the Mother Church. Consequently the passages from Genesis, as found in the Inspired Translation, and those from the Book of Mormon, all come in place, and they are in harmony with the texts given from King James' Translation and with Church History, as here shown.—Compendium, p. 14.

Moses prophesied of Christ:—

The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. —Deut. 18: 15.

This text is directly against the doctrine of theophany.

CONCLUSION.

1. I believe in God; and that he is a personal being; eternal without change, and omnipotent.

2. I believe in Jesus Christ, that he is the Son of God, that he is eternal as is the Father.

3. I believe in the Holy Spirit, that he is the witness of the Father and Son, unto those especially who are by obedience sons of God.

4. I believe in the godhead of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; that they each possess individuality, but are one in purpose, aim, and labor for the redemption of man.

The final chapter of Dr. Grace Peckham Murray's contribution to The Delineator regarding children and their ills appears in the December number. It tells of those diseases that result in deformity. The whole series of articles has been professional and yet simple and practical. It is a series of articles that every mother with family cares should read. In this connection another series of articles by Lina Beard, sister of the celebrated cartoonist, Dan. Beard, should also be preserved. With her own illustrations Lina Beard shows many pretty and pleasant ways of giving amusement to children who are recovering from illness.

BAPTISM.—NO. I.

THE HOW? THE WHO? THE WHY? AND BY WHOM?

BY WALTER J. HAWORTH.

THE HOW?

Water baptism is looked upon by all Christians as a God-appointed ordinance—a sacrament. Nevertheless, it is a subject upon which christendom is sadly divided. All accept as truth Paul's statement in Ephesians 4:5, that there is only "one baptism;" but still there are three different baptisms taught by the Christian world. One party teaches that immersion alone is valid, Christian baptism. Another class teaches sprinkling as the ordinance appointed by God. Others contend for pouring as scriptural baptism. The advocates of sprinkling and pouring, however, allow that immersion is legal, but think that sprinkling or pouring will do just as well. In other words, they recognize not one, but three baptisms; but how three baptisms can be conjured into "one baptism" is a conundrum we would like to have explained.

Here is a plain statement of the facts in the case: All Christians agree that immersion is proper baptism, but some believe that sprinkling or pouring will do just as well.

Since all agree that immersion is legal baptism, we will not waste time and space in this article in proving what is already conceded, but our endeavor will be to prove that immersion is the "one baptism," by showing that neither sprinkling nor pouring are God-appointed ordinances, and are therefore not valid in his sight. In order to do this, we will examine the several arguments used by pedobaptists in support of the claim made by them.

First and foremost comes the claim that the word baptize is a generic and not a specific term. We are informed by them that when Jesus, in the great commission, told his apostles to "baptize in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," he did not by the word baptize, direct just how the baptizing was to be done. For example, a man might direct his servant to "go to the city and buy some goods," and the servant would be at liberty to walk, run, or ride in a train, just as he pleased, because the word go is a generic term and not specific. This argument would be perfectly logical if our friends could only prove that the word baptize is indeed a generic and not a specific term. In support of this claim we are referred to Webster's dictionary, which defines the word baptism thus:—

> Baptism: The application of water to a person, as a religious ordinance, commonly performed by sprinkling or immersion.

If the word baptize were an English word, and Webster the proper one to define its meaning, we would have to give up our side of the case right here. Webster gives us the meaning that English custom has attached to the word; but seeing that it is not an English word, but the Greek word baptizo slightly modified, and transferred (instead of being translated) into our English bibles, the proper place to look for its meaning is in a good Greek lexicon. We submit extracts from several.

James Donegan (a lexicon which was supervised by the faculty of a Presbyterian seminary):—

> Baptizo: To immerse repeatedly into a liquid, to submerge, to soak thoroughly, to saturate. Baptisis or baptismos: immersion. Baptos: immersed, dyed. Bapto: To dip, to plunge into water.

Dr. John Jones (Greek and English Lexicon):—

> Bapto: I dip, I dye, stain. Baptizo: I plunge (in water), dip. Baptize: Bury, overwhelm.

Bass:—

> Baptizo: To dip, immerse, plunge in water; bathe one's self; to be immersed in sufferings or afflictions.

John Groves:—

> Baptizo (from Bapto, to dip): Dip, immerse, immerge, plunge, to wash, to cleanse, to purify, to baptize, depress, humble, overwhelm.

The above are four leading lexicographers, the extracts from which prove, beyond reasonable question, that the word baptizo is a specific term, and that when Jesus said "baptize" he meant immerse (or dip), and said so quite plainly, for the word means to dip, immerse, plunge, soak, saturate, wash.

Lest anyone may think we have chosen lexicons to suit ourselves, we append the following from one of the greatest scholars of our age.

Dr. Conant, when asked, "Does any respectable lexicon define baptizo, to sprinkle," replied:—

> My dear brother, no respectable lexicographer gives or ever has given 'sprinkle,' or 'besprinkle,' as a definition of baptizo. I have all the Greek lexicons of any name.—Hardy-Wilkinson debate, p. 42.

The following testimony will also show the true significance of the word:—

R. Pengelly, on baptism, pp. 9, 10:—

> The (Greek) radicle: bapto, to dip; ranei, sprinkling; ekkei, pouring.

Those who have studied mathematics will remember that it is an axiom, that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. The same is also true with regard to logic.

Dr. Barnes tells us in his commentary that the Hebrew word tabal, which is rendered by the Greek word baptize, occurs only fifteen times in the Old Testament. Following are the quotations: Leviticus 4:6; Leviticus 14:6, 51; Numbers 19:18; Ruth 2:14; Exodus 12:22; Deuteronomy 33:24; Ezekiel 23:15; Job 9:31; Leviticus 9:9; 1 Samuel 14:27; 2 Kings 5:14; 2 Kings 8:15; Genesis 37:31; Joshua 3:15. It occurs in no other place, and an examination of the texts will show that in fourteen of the cases it is rendered "dip;" in the remaining one, dyed, which can only be done by dipping. When the Jews, in translating their scriptures into Greek, came to this word tabal, they rendered it baptize; and when our translators came to this same word, they rendered it by the English word dip. It therefore follows, that since dip in English, and baptize in Greek, are both equivalent to tabal in Hebrew, they must be equivalent to each other. Therefore, the word baptizo means to dip.

Bretschneider:—

> An entire immersion belongs to the nature of baptism; this is the meaning of the word.—Theo. Cip., vol. 2, p. 681.

William Smith:—

> Baptism properly and literally means immersion.—Bible Dictionary, p. 73.

Beza:—

> Christ commanded us to be baptized; by which word, it is certain, immersion is signified.—Epistolato in Marc 7:4.

Salmasius:—

> Baptism is immersion, and was administered in former times according to the force and meaning of the word.—De Cess. vii., p. 669.

Vitringa:—

> The act of baptizing is the immersion of believers in water. This expresses the force of the word. Thus, also, was it performed by Christ and his apostles.—Aph. Theo. Lane. Aph. 884.

Richard Fuller:—

> In commanding his disciples to be baptized, Jesus knew what act he enjoined, and he could have been at no loss for a word clearly to express his meaning. Did he intend sprinkling? The word was rantizo. Did he require pouring? The word was keo. If wash, nipo; if bathe, lono; if immerse or dye (the word having this latter meaning, because dying is by immersing), bapto. If Jesus meant immerse, and nothing else, the word was baptize. This is the word he has used, and which the Holy Spirit always employs when the rite of baptism is mentioned.—Spiritual Baptism, p. 36.

Prof. Charles Anthon:—

> The primary meaning of the word baptizo is to dip or immerse. . . . Sprinkling, etc., are entirely out of the question.—To Dr. E. Parmeley, March 27, 1843.

The Rubric (Church of England ritual) provides that after a child has been named, the priest shall dip it in the water discreetly and warily; but adds that, should the parents certify that the child is weak, it shall suffice to pour water upon it.

Mr. John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist Church, thus records a genuine immersion as required in the Rubric:—

> Mary Welsh, aged eleven days, was baptized according to the custom of the first church and the rule of the Church of England, by immersion.—John Wesley's Journal, vol. 3, p. 20.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

On page 24 of the same volume he says:—

I was asked to baptize a child of Mr. Parker's, second bailiff of Savannah; but Mrs. P. told me, neither Mr. P. nor I will consent to its being dipped. I answered, if you certify that the child is weakly, it will suffice (the Rubric says) to pour water upon it. She replied, Nay, the child is not weak, but I am resolved it shall not be dipped. This argument I could not confute, so I went home and the child was baptized by another.

We will now consider another argument often made by those who advocate sprinkling and pouring. We are informed that when John came baptizing, he made a very emphatic statement, which clearly shows how he baptized. He said, "I indeed baptize you with water." From this statement the argument is made that the word with implies that the wawater was applied to the person, as in sprinkling; and not the person to the water, as in immersion.

Suppose I were to say, "I filled the fountain pen, with which I am working, with ink," could you tell whether I had poured the ink into it, or whether I had dipped it into an inkstand, and filled it in that way? No, you could not tell how I had filled it, even though I had used that very conclusive word with. The reason you could not tell, is because the word with was not used to make known how the act was performed, but simply to make the fact clear that the pen had been filled with ink, and not with water, or paint, or any other fluid. So with the statement made by John; the word with only serving to make the fact clear that he was baptizing with water, and not with a mixture of water and oil, or water and blood, such as was employed in many of the washings under the law. How it was done, was conveyed independently of the word with. The word baptize tells how it was done, for we have already shown that the word means to immerse or dip. And now we want to enter our solemn protest against the rendering which makes that verse read, "with water."

Our reason for protesting is, that in the Greek New Testament, this statement of John's, repeated so many times, reads in every instance, "I indeed baptize you in water." It is in no case rendered "with."

Having given a valid reason for dissatisfaction with the authorized rendering, we will proceed to show that the primary meaning of the word employed is in.

The Greek prepositions en and eis, correspond in their primary meanings to the English words in and into, respectively. In the Greek Testament, John 1: 26 reads: "Baptizo en udati" (I baptize in water); also in verses 31 and 33. In Mark 1: 9, the preposition is not en but eis, and says that Jesus was baptized (dipped) into Jordan. The two words en and eis are the only words by which the Greek language can convey the idea of going into or being in a thing or place; so as these are the words used, we think we have ample reason for our complaint.

En means in, in Greek as much as in means in, in English; and although it has secondary meanings, it is a bad rule to discard the primary meaning of a word in favor of its secondary meaning, when the meaning of that word is under discussion.

As the word en occurs 2,720 times in the Greek Testament, in only about forty of which it necessarily means with, the chances are, that as 2,728 is to 40, an argument based on the word with (where it stands for en) will lead to a false conclusion, and vice versa. So, although the word with only signifies that water was the liquid John baptized in, and not a mixture of water and oil, or blood and water, we believe that "in water" is the true rendering, and until convinced otherwise, will stand by the Greek Testament.

By the way, we might mention that the Greek Church (the people best calculated to understand the meaning of all these disputed words) recognizes only immersion as Christian baptism.

A further argument based on the word with, is that as the disciples were baptized with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, so did John baptize. Well, we admit it! and say, Bring forth your strong reasons. Our attention is called to Acts 2: 17, wherein Peter says that the Holy Ghost had been poured out on that day. But why not read the second verse of that same chapter, wherein it says that the Holy Ghost came as a "rushing mighty wind," "and filled the whole house where they were sitting"? Why go seventeen verses down the chapter to find out how the Spirit came preparatory to that great baptism? If you were to read that one of your friends had been baptized in the baptistery of a certain church, into which the water had been poured by the deacon, would you say that he had been baptized by pouring? And yet that is just what people do when they say the disciples were thus baptized by the pouring out of the Holy Spirit. Verse 2 tells us that the Spirit came into the room (baptistery) with a sound like a "rushing, mighty wind," until it filled the whole house.

If that was not immersion, will some one tell us what it was? Why fill the whole house if it was not to be an immersion? Yes, John baptized in the same way as the apostles were baptized in the Holy Ghost; and that way was immersion. Although the record tells us plainly in several places that the persons baptized "went down into the water," "came up out of the water," and were baptized by John "in Jordan," some have had the assurance to tell us that there is no evidence to prove that any of them were dipped in the water. As this is not an argument, but simply an extremely desperate assertion, we will not meet it by argument, but will simply say that aside from the fact that the word baptized tells us plainly they were dipped, the inference is at least strongly in favor of our side of the question.

Where does it say they were not dipped?

Again, we are sometimes told that the record has been wrongly translated where the phrases "in Jordan" and "into Jordan" occur; such places should read "and were all baptized by John at Jordan." Well, we know of one text at least, in which the difficulty cannot be "translated out of" in this way. It will be conceded by all that Naaman the Syrian leper dipped himself in Jordan. The text says, 2 Kings 5: 14 (in the Septuagint), "Ebaptizato en to Jordane," — "he dipped himself in Jordan," and it is a remarkable fact that this corresponds precisely with the text in Matthew 3: 6, which says, "Ebaptisonts en to Jordane," and had Matthew's reference to baptism been translated instead of being transferred, it would read, "they were dipped by John in Jordan." This coincidence is too remarkable to admit of the rendering, "they were dipped by John at Jordan."

Another argument for us to answer is, that although the word is only transferred where it refers to baptism as a religious ordinance [for the acknowledged reason "that the Church of England might reap good fruit thereby"*], there are several places in which the word baptizo, or some of its derivatives, where it does not refer to the ordinance of baptism, have been translated. We are informed that in most of these places immersion would be absurd.

Our attention is first called to Mark 7: 4, wherein we read:—

The washings [baptisms] of cups, and pots, and brazen vessels, and of tables [or couches].

Is it not absurd to say that the Jews immersed their tables or couches? Would it not be more feasible to believe that they washed them, as we do, by putting water on them? If the tables referred to were like our massive cedar and mahogany ones, and the couches like our heavily built and upholstered ones, it would seem that our way was at least the easiest; but even then, we know that the Pharisees did not study ease and comfort in performing what was to them a sacred duty, especially when some one else would have to do the work.

*See Preface King James' Translation.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

When we remember that the little stool which was placed at the head of each guest, while he reclined upon the floor, was called his "table," and that the mat between him and the floor was called a "couch," we can see that immersion is not at all absurd. One thing is certain; the cups, pots, and tables were all washed in one way, and as the Old Testament tells us just how they were to be washed, we will settle the matter by appealing thereto. In Leviticus 11: 32, we read:

> Whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so shall it be cleansed.

Again, in Hebrews 9: 10, Paul speaks of "divers washings" (baptisms) under the law, and pedobaptists indulge the thought that he refers to divers modes of washing (baptizing). Paul does not say one word about the mode of washing; that was settled by the word baptize, which we have shown means to dip or immerse. What, then, did Paul mean by divers washings? Why, he evidently used the term "divers washings" as we often speak of different washings known today. We have "hair washes," "sheep washes," "face washes," etc., in common use among us, and we speak of the application of these things as "divers washings." True, these washes can be applied in different ways, for our word wash is not as distinct and exclusive a term as the words baptizo and tabal. The word baptizo, in its radical form, is never translated "wash," in the New Testament; and when any of its derivatives are rendered "washings," the washing is signified as a consequence of dipping. By "divers washings" Paul evidently meant such things as the washing of vessels by putting them into water, that they might be cleansed (Leviticus 11: 32), dipping in blood, dipping in blood and running water; dipping in oil; dipping in the water of purification, etc.

We are next directed to examine Mark 7:4, which says of the Pharisees, "Except they wash, they eat not." Pedobaptists claim that it is absurd to think that the Pharisees dipped themselves in water, simply because they had been to market. When we read in the law that persons touching unclean things should not only wash themselves, but in some instances their clothes, we would not be surprised at a Pharisee washing himself "all over," after being to market, the very place where he would be likely to come in contact with things "unclean." And supposing only the washing of hands was meant (though we firmly believe it referred to the whole body), that would necessitate the dipping of the hands in water.

But our friends argue that this was not the manner of washing hands in Bible times. We are told that the water was poured on the hands by a servant.

In order to establish this theory they direct us to examine 2 Kings 3: 11, where it is said of Elisha, that he "poured water on the hands of Elijah." And we are asked to believe that this was the way the Pharisees washed. Even granting that this was the manner of washing the hands (and we do not question it), that kind of washing cannot be applied to the phrase, "Except they wash, they eat not." In the third verse there is a reference made to the washing of hands by all Jews, before meals, on ordinary occasions. Here the word used to signify the washing of hands is nipsonti, and in this case the hands may have been washed by pouring; but in the fourth verse the word is baptisonti, and means to dip or immerse, for the purpose of washing. It is quite easy to find washings spoken of in the New Testament, wherein is contained not only the idea of washing by pouring, but also by sprinkling; but the trouble from a pedobaptist point of view is that the Greek root bapto is not contained in any of these references. For instance, in Luke 7:38, we have it recorded that Mary washed the feet of Jesus with her tears. Surely this was washing by sprinkling; but here, as in Mark 7:3, the Greek root bapto is absent. In Mark 7:4 it is present, and means to dip, while the termination given conveys the idea that the dipping was for the purpose of washing. We believe the Pharisees dipped the whole body when they washed after coming from market.

A learned Jewish Rabbi, vouched for by Dr. Adam Clarke, and named Maimonides, tells us:—

> If the Pharisees touched but the garments of the common people, they were defiled all over, as if they had touched a profluous [leprous?] person, and needed immersion, and were obliged to do it.

Again, he says:—

> Every person baptized or dipped, whether he was washed from pollution, or baptized unto proselytism, must dip his whole body at one dipping, and wheresoever in the law washing of the body or garments is mentioned, it means nothing else.

Luke 11:38 is sometimes pointed out as another place in which the washing of hands is referred to:—

> And when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner.

A careful reading of the next verse will show that a washing of the whole body was meant. Jesus compared the washing expected of him to the washing of cups and platters. Verse 39 reads:—

> And the Lord said unto him, Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness.

They washed the outside of their bodies, but neglected the cleansing of the heart.

Before me is a treatise on this subject by a Church of England clergyman (Brookes), in which the following appears:—

> There are four places in the New Testament where the word dip really does occur. Matthew 26: 23: "He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish." Luke 16: 24: "That he may dip the tip of his finger in water." John 13: 26 (twice): "He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot."

He then proceeds to argue that since the word translated "dip" is not baptizo, but bapto, baptizo cannot mean to dip; but he destroys any force there might be in this argument by trying to prove in the next paragraph that the phrase in Mark 7: 4 "Except they wash, they eat not," refers to the washing of hands. He admits that where the washing of hands is mentioned in verse 3 the Greek word is nipsonti, and that in verse 4 the Greek word rendered wash is baptisonti. Now if baptizo cannot mean "dip," because bapto means "to dip," how can baptisonti mean the washing of hands when nipsonti fills the bill? We are affirming just the opposite of what is claimed by the writer referred to; so both of us cannot be right. In verification of our claim we present the following testimony from the Greek lexicon of M. Wright:—

> Bapto: I dip, plunge, immerse, wash, etc. Baptizo: I dip, immerse, plunge, saturate, etc.

I consider this ample testimony to establish the harmony between these two words.

> Nipsonti: To wet, wash; wash the hands or feet. Baptisonti: Immersion in water; ceremonial purification.

With the above information, and a request to "search other lexicons and be satisfied," we leave the readers to judge for themselves as to who is right in this matter.

1 Corinthians 10: 2 is often pointed to as proof of baptism (?) by aspersion. The strong "east wind" is said to have sprinkled the Israelites, when they "all passed through the sea; and were all baptized . . . in the cloud and in the sea." A careful reading of this text will reveal the fact that the baptism did not take place while they were passing through the sea. The language shows that they were baptized after they had passed through the sea. Two separate acts are recorded; first: "they all passed through the sea;" second: "and were all baptized in the cloud and in the sea." Note: "in the sea;" how then could it have occurred while they passed through "dry shod"? (Ex. 14: 29; Isa. 11:15, 16.)

Again: It is argued by some that Paul was sprinkled, because Ananias

said to him: "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." The Greek word "anastas," here rendered "arose," might also be rendered "standing up;" and if so, Paul must have been baptized "standing up."

We could as consistently say that David "fled standing" when he arose and fled for fear of Saul; or that the young men who buried Ananias and Sapphira were "standing still" all the time they were wrapping up the bodies, carrying them out, and burying them, for it reads:—

> The young men "arose," wound them up, carried them out, and buried them.—Acts 5:6.

Paul leaves no room for doubt as to how he was baptized, for he tells us plainly, in Romans 6:4, 5, that he was "buried with Christ by baptism into death," and that he was "planted in the likeness of Christ's death."

How was Christ buried? Reader, you are interested in knowing this, for in like manner you must be "buried in baptism," or to use another figure, "planted in the likeness of his death." Jesus was buried in a tomb—a cave-like hole in the rocks—and the entrance sealed up by a stone, Thus he was separated from the world—hidden from view—entirely covered up. But it was only, as it were, a plunge into the tomb; for in three days he came forth once more; risen by the glory of the Father. Paul says to the Romans:—

> Therefore we [himself included] are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.—6:4.

What a beautiful illustration! Jesus was buried in the tomb, entirely covered up, and in course of time arose again. So the believer is buried beneath the liquid wave, and comes forth again to walk in newness of life. This was how Paul was baptized.

We are now informed by our friends that the water supply of Jerusalem would not permit of such large numbers being baptized as are mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles. That the reader may be able to judge of the merit of this argument, we present the following evidence: In 2 Kings 18:17, we read of the "upper pool." 2 Kings 20:20 speaks of the "pool that Hezekiah made." Nehemiah 2:14 also mentions a "fountain and the king's pool." Isaiah 22:9 tells us of the waters of the "lower pool." John 5:2 makes mention of "the pool of Bethsaida." And John 9:7 refers to "the pool Siloam."

Dr. Robinson says:—

> Immense cisterns, now and anciently, existed within the area of the temple, partly supplied with rain water and partly with the aqueduct. Almost every house had a cistern in it.—Robinson's Res. in Pal., p. 480.

Again, he says:—

> With reservoirs Jerusalem was abundantly supplied, to say nothing of the immense pools of Solomon beyond Bethlehem, which were no doubt constructed for the benefit of the Holy City.—Ibid., p. 483.

Again:—

> There are on the north side of the city, outside the walls, two very large reservoirs; one of which is over 300 feet long and more than 200 feet wide, and the other 600 feet long by over 250 feet wide. . . . Within the walls are the pool of Bethsaida 360 feet long by 130 feet wide, and the pool of Hezekiah 240 feet long by 144 feet broad. . . . There are also aqueducts and numerous fountains.—Ibid., p. 480–516.

Another objection against immersion, as the "one baptism," is that the twelve apostles could not have baptized the three thousand converts on the day of Pentecost, if baptize means to immerse, and nothing else. By reading Acts 1:13–15, we find that one hundred and twenty persons belonging to the church were present on that day. I am sure no one will affirm that none of the "seventy" whom Jesus sent out, under the twelve were present on that occasion. But we will suppose that the twelve apostles alone attended to the baptisms. This would give two hundred and fifty persons to each administrator, which, calculated at the rate of one person per minute, and with fifty minutes added for service at the water side, would occupy just five hours. Let us see if there was time for this on the day of Pentecost. While Peter was speaking, it was the "third hour of the day,"—nine o'clock in the morning. (Acts 2:15.) This would leave nine hours between then and six o'clock in the evening. We will allow Peter two hours in which to finish his speech. That will bring us to eleven o'clock. Supposing it took them an hour to walk to the water, it would then be twelve o'clock—noon. If they devoted fifty minutes to another service and then began to baptize at the rate of one person per minute, they would be finished at five p. m., and would be able to walk back home by six o'clock. These time allowances are extremely liberal, for modern preachers have demonstrated that they can baptize faster than that.

> In 1888 it was published in London, England, that in July, 1878, in India, at Velumpilly, two miles north of Ongole, 2 222 were baptized in six hours, by six administrators; only two baptizing at once.—Bapt. Immersion, R. C. Evans, p. 55.

Having examined the main arguments used in favor of pouring and sprinkling, we now call the attention of the reader to a brief summary of the proofs adduced in this article.

1. All Christians agree that immersion is proper baptism, though some call sprinkling and pouring also legal baptism.

2. That the Greek words bapto and baptizo convey exclusively the idea of dipping, or immersing, and therefore "baptize" is a specific term.

3. That the Hebrew word tabal, which in English is rendered dip, is in the Greek baptizo; and that as both the English word dip, and the Greek word baptizo, are equal to tabal in Hebrew, they must be equal to one another.

4. That the Church of England ritual provides for the dipping of infants in the font, with pouring and sprinkling as alternatives in case of weakness.

5. That John's reference to baptizing "with water" does not show how the act was performed, but only that he baptized with water, and not with water mixed with oil or blood.

6. That in the Greek Testament John's statement reads, "I indeed baptize you in water."

7. That the baptism of the Spirit at Pentecost was immersion; the pouring out only being preparatory to the immersion.

8. That the cups, pots, etc., of Mark 7:4, were dipped for the purpose of washing.

9. That the "divers washings" (baptisms) of Hebrews 9:10, were not divers "modes" of washing, but divers washings; for instance, "dipping in pure water," "dipping in blood," "dipping in blood and running water," "dipping in oil," etc., etc.

10. That the phrase, "Except they wash, they eat not," in Mark 7:4, referred to dipping of the whole body, for the purpose of washing, and not merely the washing of hands as referred to in the preceding verse.

11. That the Greek word bapto, which is translated "dip," in Matthew 26:23, Luke 16:24, and John 13:26, corresponds (in its meaning) to the word baptizo, which is rendered "baptize."

12. That the Israelites were baptized after they had passed through the sea, and not by the east wind as they passed through, "dry shod."

13. That the water supply of Jerusalem was quite equal to the demand that immersion would make upon it.

14. That the twelve apostles alone could easily have performed the task of baptizing the three thousand.

We now submit for your consideration: 1. That neither sprinkling nor pouring are God-appointed ordinances, and, therefore, cannot be valid in his sight. To say they are "just as valid as immersion," gives the case away. God made immersion valid; who made the others "just as valid"—who? 2. That John, and all the apostles administered the ordinance of baptism by immersing the candidate in water. 3. That immersion is the genuine coin cast by Jesus, and upon which is the official stamp—"one baptism."

How is it, then, that there is another coin in existence, bearing the motto, "Three baptisms"? In order to show by whom this false coin was cast, we refer to some of the historians.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Our first witness will be that celebrated ecclesiastical historian, Dr. John L. Moshiem, Chancellor of the University of Göttingen. Of the first century he says:—

The sacrament of baptism was administered in this century, without the public assemblies, in places appointed, and prepared for that purpose, and was performed by an immersion of the whole body in the baptismal font.—Eccles. Hist., cent. 2, part 2, chap. 4, par. 8.

Of the second century, he says:—

The persons that were to be baptized, after they had repeated the creed, confessed and renounced their sins, and particularly the Devil, and his pompous allurements, were immersed under water, and received into Christ's kingdom.—Ibid., cent. 2, part 2, chap. 4, par. 13.

Our next witness is Dr. Phillip Schaff, a professor in a pedobaptist seminary, Mercersburg, Pennsylvania. He says:—

Immersion, and not sprinkling, was unquestionably the original normal form. This is shown by the very meaning of the Greek words, baptizo, baptisma, and baptismos, used to designate the rite. Then, again, by the analogy of the baptism of John, which was performed in the Jordan ["en"], Matthew 3:6, compare with 16;—also eis ton Jordanan [into the Jordan], Mark 1:9; furthermore, by the New Testament comparisons of baptism with the passage through the Red Sea, 1 Corinthians 10:2, with the flood. 1 Peter 2:21; with a bath, Ephesians 5:26; Titus 3:5; with a burial and resurrection; Romans 6:4; Colossians 2:12; and, finally, by the general usage of ecclesiastical antiquity, which was always immersion, as it is to this day in the oriental, and also in the Græco-Russian churches, pouring and sprinkling being substituted only in cases of urgent necessity, such as sickness and approaching death.—Hist. Apost. Church, p. 568.

Neander, in a letter to Judd, says, speaking of the early centuries of the Christian era:—

The practice of immersion was beyond doubt prevalent in the whole church. The only exception was made with the sick—hence called baptisma clinicorum.

Thomas Stackhouse says, in his "History of the Bible":—

We nowhere read in Scripture of any one's being baptized but by immersion, and several authors have proved, by the acts of councils and ancient rituals, that this manner of immersion continued as much as possible to be used for thirteen hundred years after Christ.

Space will not permit us to bring forward more testimony from history, to show that the true coin—immersion—was current in the church for several centuries after Christ, although there is much that has been written on this subject, both by the historians and the early fathers. We will therefore begin to call up the witnesses to the casting of the counterfeit coin. Our first witness is Dr. Wall, vicar of Shoreham, Kent, England, who on February 9, 1706, received a vote of thanks from the general convocation of the Church of England clergy, for the excellent book he had written on infant baptism. He says, speaking of baptism by aspersion:—

The most ancient of which is that of Novatian, who (A. D. 251) while lying in bed from sickness, received what they called clinic baptism. This is the most ancient case on record.

Our next witness is Eusebius. Speaking of Novatian, he says:—

Who, aided by the exorcists, when attacked with an obstinate disease, and being supposed at the point of death, was baptized by aspersion, in the bed on which he lay; if, indeed, it be proper to say that one like him did receive baptism. But neither when he recovered from disease, did he partake of other things, which the rules of the church prescribe as duty, nor was he sealed [in confirmation], by the bishop. But as he did not obtain this, how could he obtain the Holy Spirit?—Eccles. Hist., p. 266.

Our next witness, Dyonisius, says:—

We justly cherish an aversion to the Novatian, by whom the church is split asunder, and some of the brethren have been drawn into impiety, and blasphemy, and most nefarious doctrine has been introduced respecting God, and our most gracious Lord and Savior, Christ, has been calumniated as devoid of compassion; which also, beside all this, sets aside the holy baptism, and everturns the faith and confession that precedes it.

Although this is the first instance on record of baptism by aspersion, it was not countenanced by the church except as clinic (sick) baptism. When the man recovered, church privileges were denied him, by reason of which a split was caused in the church. It was not for many centuries after that that the church declared immersion and pouring indifferent.

The Edinburgh Encyclopedia, edited by the learned Sir David Brewster, in the article on baptism, says:—

The first law for sprinkling was obtained in the following manner. Pope Stephen II., being driven from Rome by Adolphus, King of the Lombards, in 753, fled to Pepin, who a short time before had usurped the crown of France. While he remained there the monks of Cressy, in Brittany, consulted him whether, in case of necessity, baptism performed by pouring water on the head of the infant would be lawful. Stephen replied that it would. But though the truth of this fact should be allowed, which however, some Catholics deny, yet pouring or sprinkling was admitted only in cases of necessity. It was not till the year 1311 that the legislature, in a council held at Ravenna, declared immersion or sprinkling to be indifferent. In this country (Scotland), however, sprinkling was never practiced in ordinary cases till after the Reformation; and in England, even in the reign of Edward VI., immersion was commonly observed. But during the persecution of Mary (Queen of Scots), many persons, most of whom were Scotchmen, fled from England to Geneva, and there greedily imbibed the opinions of that church. In 1556 a book was published at that place, containing the form of prayers and ministrations of sacraments, approved by the famous and godly-learned man, John Calvin, in which the administrator is enjoined to take water in his hand and lay it on the child's forehead. These Scottish exiles, who had renounced the authority of the Pope, implicitly acknowledged the authority of John Calvin; and returning to their own country, with John Knox at their head, in 1559, established sprinkling in Scotland. From Scotland this practice made its own way into England in the reign of Elizabeth, but was not authorized by the established church.

Let us recall Dr. Wall:—

France seems to have been the first country in the world where baptism by affusion was used ordinarily to persons in health, and in the public way of administering it. It being allowed to weak children (in the reign of Queen Elizabeth) to be baptized by aspersion, many fond ladies and gentlemen first, and then by degrees the common people, would obtain the favor of the priest to have their children pass for weak children, too tender to endure dipping in the water. As for sprinkling, properly so called, it was at 1645 just then beginning, and used by very few. It must have begun in the disorderly times after forty-one (1641).) They (the assembly of divines at Westminster) reformed the font into a basin. This learned assembly could not remember that fonts to baptize in had been always used by the primitive Christians before the beginning of popery, and ever since churches were built; but that sprinkling, for the purpose of baptizing, was really introduced (in France first, and then in other popish countries) in times of popery, and that, accordingly, in all those countries in which the usurped power of the Pope is, or has formerly been owned, have left off dipping of children in the fonts; and that all other countries in the world, which have never regarded his authority, do still use it; and that basins (to sprinkle out of), except in cases of necessity, were never used by papists, or any other Christians whatsoever, till by themselves.—Hist. Inf. Bapt., part 2, chap. 9.

Again, he says:—

The way that is ordinarily used, we cannot deny to have been a novelty, brought into this church (the English) by those that had learned it at Germany or at Geneva; and they, not content to follow the example of pouring a quantity of water (which had been introduced instead of immersion), but improved it (if I may so abuse that word) from pouring to sprinkling, that it might have as little resemblance to the ancient way of baptizing as possible.—Def. of Hist. Inft. Bapt., p. 403.

Any of our readers who may desire to read more about how the current coin of baptism became to changed, would do well to read the articles on baptism in the "Edinburgh Encyclopædia," the "British Encyclopædia," and the "Encyclopædia Americana." In those volumes you will read that by the determined efforts of Dr. Lightfoot, the Westminster assembly of divines, after a warm discussion regarding the adoption of sprinkling, decided by a majority of twenty-five over twenty-four to adopt sprinkling as the rule of the (English) church. This was in the year 1643; and in the next year an act of Parliament was passed, requiring the parents of all children in the realm to have them sprinkled. In the year 1648, an Ecclesiastical Council, held at Cambridge, Massachusetts, adopted sprinkling in the place of immersion; and in May of that year, the legislature of that state passed a law making it a penal offense for anyone to say that infant sprinkling was not good and valid baptism.

Reader, our task is done. We have shown that sprinkling was legalized by the authority of the Roman Church at Ravenna, in the year 1311. John Calvin, the reformer, did not reform the practice of the Roman Church, but rather adopted it. This was also done by the Presbyterians under John Knox. Then by the Church of England in 1643, enforced by Act of Parliament, and also in America in 1648. The coin is here. It bears the inscription: "Three Baptisms." The power that issued it declared sprinkling, pouring, or immersion to be indifferent. But on the same coin there is another figure, the impress of the authority that issued it. In our Savior's words we ask: Whose image and superscription is this? And echoing down through the pages of history comes the answer: Cæsar's (Rome's).

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Dear reader, whom do you wish to honor? If you desire to do honor to Cæsar (Rome), "then render to Cæsar [Rome] the things that are Cæsar's" (Rome's); but if you wish to do honor to God, "Render to God the things that are God's."

CREOLA, Ohio, Nov. 13.

Editors Herald:—From the district conference at Vale's Mills, Ohio, September 28 and 29, Bro. James Moler directed me to the "Pine" church, "Bierly" branch, for a few meetings; thence to Limerick, where thirteen sermons were preached, Bro. T. J. Beatty being in charge. Returning to "Pine," sixteen additional services were held, during which time, five brave little soldiers from Sr. Young's Sunday school class of girls, and three other persons, were baptized. Four of these dauntless little girls (the eldest thirteen years of age, the youngest eight last May) walked up to the writer one evening after service, one of them saying, "Bro. Thomas, I want to be baptized next Sunday, at four o'clock." Seeing the four together, I asked each of the others seperately, "And you?" to which all answered, "Yes sir." The other of the five was not of the Saints children, and had not permission from her parents to go forward that day.

A visit to her home the following Saturday secured not only the desired permission, but the company of her dear old grandmother to follow Christ. She had long ago believed the doctrine of the Saints, and with her husband, at one time resolved to be baptized the next day. The circumstance of a call from two neighbors in the morning deterred him from carrying out his resolution, and he departed this life never having entered the fold. Not wishing to leave her husband behind, this dear old sister had never again resolved to go a second time into the water (as she was once immersed by a minister of the "Disciple" church) until the visit above mentioned. The other person baptized with the four girls on the former occasion, is a sister who had also long desired to come into the church, but was hindered by her husband. She at last resolved to save her soul and risk the consequences here, saying, "Whatever he does he can't take my baptism away from me." Knowing his objection and her resolution, I prayed the Lord to prevent his interference. Although he stood on the bridge with the crowd, he offered no objections, and I did not know of his presence till two days later. Her only punishment, immediately afterward, was a cursing from him, with the statement that she had that day committed the worst sin of her life. But she was safe within the fold of Christ.

Bro. Moler had on the Sunday of the first few meetings at the "Pine," baptized two other brave little soldiers of the Sunday school army; one a boy, and the only boy in that school. Where are our boys? Have they no souls to save? Whence shall come the future "laborers in the harvest," if our boys grow up in the world? What is the reason the boys cannot be kept in the Sunday school as well as the girls? Do you answer, "They are in some branches?" Again I ask, "Why not in all? Why not in other Sunday schools in other denominations than ours?

I was present at the afternoon session of a celebration by a school of the "United Brethren" Church, in August, where a nice program was carried out by a dozen or twenty girls, only one solitary boy having any part in the exercises. Where were their boys?

A few years ago, when laboring in southwestern Iowa, in the town of Glenwood, I attended a convention of all the schools of the city, where the ratio of young ladies and girls to young men and boys present, was fully ten to one, if not more. I wonder, is it so in heaven?

Parents, why not look after your boys as well as your girls? Do you say, "The girls are more easily controlled than the boys? That is only because you carelessly let your boys get ahead of you. The picture is a painful one. Do you say, "There are more girls than boys"? That may be true, but the ratio is nothing like that seen in the Sunday schools.

For the sake of their souls, and Zion's cause, look after the boys.

Yours in the gospel work.

NEW LONDON, Iowa.

Editors Herald:—Our conference is over, and a grand one it was. The question was asked me by quite a number at Burlington, when we decided to adjourn to meet at New London, What are you people going to do with us when you get us out there? As Bro. Evans said, we had two or three plans, but finally thought it best, as our district had no reunion this year, to give the Saints a few days outing, and hold the conference in the tent, and feed the people on the grounds, which seemed to be a success, which we of New London think was due to Bro. Evans' good advice and kind assistance. I feel our confererence would have been a failure had it not been for him.

Since our conference three persons have offered ground on which to build a church; I mean three different places. Besides, considerable money has been donated. I think about one hundred dollars now can be raised. Our branch is in a good condition. We regret that our teacher, Bro. McComas, is going to Arkansas. Your brother in Christ,

F. M. MCDONALD.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Nov. 6.

Editors Herald:—We have just returned from a short visit in the Garden Grove neighborhood, where we also attended district conference.

Concerning the conference, we are glad to report that it has been pronounced the best held in years. The Spirit was present in power at the prayer and testimony meetings. Strong men and reserved women were moved to weep as little children under its softening touch. It is not so at the social gatherings of the world. There you hear the silly jest and mirthless laughter; the real feeling of men and women is hidden. Ah, there is a difference, broad as the ocean, between sober joy and riotous pleasure. The sermons all seemed connected, the one with the other, one thread of thought binding them all together; and it was evident that a controlling and helping spirit was aiding, both in outlining them and in giving them utterance.

As different ones conned the list of departed laborers from this part of the field alone, and recited the history of their deeds while here, we were struck with this thought: Our fathers have set their mark high; can their children reach it? I know of one who will be more Christ-like than now if he ever becomes as good as his father.

By the way, the missionary field is a good school to teach one his shortcomings. The things he knows are little foothills he has climbed over; before him tower the mountains of things he does not know.

We learned that the battleship Iowa was in San Pedro harbor, and improved the opportunity to visit her. The sights on board the great ship of war were novel and stirring to one born and bred far inland. Her great, silent guns, her steel-cased walls, are bulwarks of the greatest nation ever founded, because the most free. Her sailors and officers, familiar with all climes, seem enchanted people. Yet we suppose that all strange lands lose their wonder when one sees them, and it is better to have some to dream about and never enter.

Our stay at the home of Sr. David Mills, in company with Uncle Alexander Smith and Bro. Gould, was made pleasant. Also at other homes, and we feel to say that we have many as true Saints here in southern California as the sun shines on. Let there be more!

Bro. Gibson and myself have opened up two places that are, in a sense, new; but in one of them they heard me once and never came again. I could not consistently blame them. The sermon was so excellent and lasting they never needed another!

Bro. T. W. Williams is amuck with Mr. Nye of the Utah church, in the Express. Mr. Nye's statements persuade us that Brigham Young told the truth once, when he said Utah could produce the biggest liars in the world; and his arguments remind us of the greased feathers Brigham said his elders could whip the world with.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

We are becoming Californiaized; can eat figs, olives, celery, and tamales — tests of fellowship.

Our eyes have beheld the beauty of the mountains, and the majesty of the ocean. They declare the glory, and majesty, and dominion of God, and him we are glad to serve.

FORMOSA, Kan., Nov. 13.

Editors Herald:—Am at present in this part of Jewell county; and though I have labored in many points in this the northern part of the North Kansas district, yet few places I have found better than this for interest and congregations. Many congratulate us for our pure, Bible doctrine, etc., some of them going so far as to write it up in the county paper. But yet it seems that this church is not popular enough with them to cast their lot therein.

"Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" To the few only, so far; but there is a great future for the church, and I am thankful that time is extended to all, and that this is but the commencement of the great work of redemption. Hence no cause for any discouragement,—but to labor on.

The work here is gradually gaining, and on the move. Brn. Mannering and Gurwell are occupying in southern, L. F. Johnson in western, and myself in northern parts of this vast district. We are being cared for at present by D. S. Marple and Peter Ramsey, and we are very thankful to them and many others of the Saints, for their great kindness to the missionaries, while in the field. Let us labor together in the Lord.

JOHN A. DAVIS.

MILLWOOD, Manitoba, Nov. 6.

Editors Herald:—Again I offer a few lines relative to my work as a servant of the church in this western Canadian province, believing it my duty to occasionally give brief accounts of labor performed and the success following, etc., for the benefit of the Saints generally, but more especially for Ontario Saints, whose money sent and partly sustains me, that they may see their prayers being answered. I have had some unpleasant experiences since taking up labor here, but on the whole I am content, studying to do the best I can under the circumstances to the upbuilding of the work. I would therefore ask my beloved brethren in the east to continue their confidence in me, and remember me constantly in prayer, that my faith fail not, that humility and love may characterize my efforts, and my zeal be properly seasoned with wisdom and knowledge, so that all possible good may be done that conditions allow; and to God we will ascribe all praise.

At last writing I was busily engaged in the region of Oaknook, and referred to the status of the work at that time. In verification of my prediction that some would enter the kingdom, I am happy to report the baptism of three more souls. Other three gave their names in for baptism, but later withdrew for reasons I will leave them to explain to their Master. There are a number of others very near the door who wish more time for consideration, which while granted, we shall hope to be righteously spent. In all, fifteen have been baptized, making a total of twenty-two Saints, all of whom, with exception of two or three, can, and no doubt will, regularly meet for prayer services and Sunday school exercises. A school has been organized, to be known as the Ashville school, Ashville being the nearest station on a lately constructed line of railway. The first name given was Ridgeway, but later changed to Ashville. A good interest is taken by the new Saints in school work, which is quite encouraging to me. May the blessing of God attend their every effort toward the establishing of themselves and others in the good work! I am of the opinion others will obey the gospel in that section, possibly when I return, as I expect to at some time.

While I have to report the above progress, there has been some prejudice created and dastardly work done. Satan has inspired his emissaries with renewed zeal, and they have acted upon it to the detriment of our work in some parts.

At Drifting River there are some believing, being very much interested; and here the Methodist preacher, referred to in my last letter, exhibited a meanness that jealousy alone breeds. He sought to oust me from the school by trying to leave an appointment for the same hour and in same school, as I had been occupying; but his offer was refused and regarded with disgust by the people generally. At Eldon schoolhouse, however, he was applauded for the same trick. Prejudice is high at Eldon, and served the unprincipled an opportunity to show their hatred to my preaching and manifest the spirit of which they were. When I arrived one Sunday evening, his meeting was in progress. He pretended to feel sorry for the clash in appointment; and said he did not know of my having the school engaged. I did not feel as sorry for him as others, and asked him for an explanation of his action two weeks previous, at Drifting River. This was looked upon by his near friends as an unjust demand, and made the excuse for what disorder followed. It was as a scourging, and had the effect of ridding the building of foolishly indignant and creedbound. A number of the rough lingered on the outside to annoy the service as much as possible, and, as I learned afterwards, to sense me into a few pointers and effectively show me the error of my way, but their courage failed before my meeting closed, for slowly the rabble ceased.

There are friends to our work in this dark corner of his Majesty's realm; but prejudice is so high that evil triumphs for the time; but while "the heathen rage and the people imagine vain things," let us hope for patience to endure their insults, led on to it, as they are, by the professedly pious and sanctified. They will get their portion in a coming day.

Drifting River people collected among them, at the close of my last meeting, the sum of six dollars and twenty-five cents, and presented it to me in the most friendly manner. May the Lord bless the honest and just and let his frown rest upon the willfully rebellious.

At present I am in Millwood, remaining over night in a public house, waiting the arrival of Bro. Selby Carter, who lives sixteen miles distant to the southwest, at Spy Hill. I formed the acquaintance of the Methodist preacher stationed at Spy Hill, on train enroute, and made arrangements with him to notify Bro. Carter of my arrival and waiting. I think this is likely to be the only favor he will do me, for I judge him knowing as much now about Latter Day Saint philosophy as he has any use for; but time will reveal matters more thoroughly.

Am in hopes of securing a good, faithful hearing at Spy Hill school, and enjoying the sweet Spirit of light, liberty, and peace, so as to present the restoration to the best advantage. More anon. I am, in the struggle, pleading the cause of Zion,

FREDERICK GREGORY.

WILBURTON, Ind. Ter., Nov. 11.

Editors Herald:—A few lines by way of inquiry or rather suggestions. We, as Latter Day Saints, are looking with great earnestness towards a time when all true saints will gather to Zion. We pray for the day to speedily come when we will be gathered home. We look for some great revelation concerning the gathering. We get very anxious for the Lord to tell Bro. Joseph, by revelation, to call the Saints home, and we even hear of some complaints being made like this: There must be something wrong, or the Lord would give the long-desired revelation.

Well, dear Saints, truly, is there not something wrong? Now, let us take a look and see if we cannot find the wrong. But let us go by the rule laid down by our Savior, i. e., first cast the beam out of our own eyes then see if there is a mote in Bro. Joseph's eye.

Now the beam first: Have we paid our tithing, that there may be means in the storehouse to aid in the purchase of homes for the gathering Saints, or have we done nothing but pray for the gathering to take place.

Second: If any have not paid tithing, will we pay up, so the Bishop can move out in the great work intrusted to him, and purchase lands to locate the Saints on as they get ready to come. These are very important questions. And third: Do we take church papers, thus aiding the work. If we do not, the question is, Will we. Fourth: Do we ever have anything for freewill offerings? If not, why not? Is it not necessary that we should help in this great work, if we expect to reap any benefits therefrom? There is no rational minded person who can say no. Well, then, isn't it high time that we see to this part of the work as a body, and not expect too much from the heads of the church, especially when we are keeping their hands tied by not responding to their calls for finance to roll the great work on?

Now, dear Saints, one and all, brother and sister, what I wish to propose is this, that we

one and all send, on the first day of January, 1901, to our bishop, one dollar, to be used as God and the church may direct. Now let us just think for one moment what this would mean for us to spare one dollar from our scanty allowance. One may say, I may have to miss my coffee if I spare a dollar. Another may say, It keeps me hustling around, the best I can, to get provisions and clothing for my family. So it may; but, my brother, do you spend any money for tobacco? Do you go to the circus? Do you smoke a cigar, occasionally? Have you kept an account of the dimes and nickels that you spend foolishly for one year? If not, try it once and see if you could not afford to spare one dollar out of that for church work. Some may have to sacrifice a novel; but that will do you no harm. Make the sacrifice, and the Lord will be pleased with you, and if we will adopt a rule to respond to the urgent calls by the authorities of the church for money, we will see the work begin to move out in a marvelous way. Then we will realize that God is pleased with us.

Now, let us continue to pray for the gathering to shortly take place, and, at the same time, do all we can to answer our own prayers. I have an idea to present, or rather a thought to drop, i. e., would it not be wise for us to be very careful how we pray, and ask for nothing to be done that we are not willing to help do, and I feel sure that we will try to do more, so we can ask more.

Here is another thought on the dollar question that is worthy of our consideration, namely: There are about fifty thousand members of this church; and if all should send one dollar each, the result will be that the Bishop will have fifty thousand dollars more to purchase lands with. Let us say that only one tenth of the Saints send the dollar; why, ten thousand dollars more cash to buy lands with. Just think what a large sum of money sent in, and only one dollar from me. We can begin to realize what the small mites rendered by a large number of persons will accomplish. After a due consideration of these facts, can I afford to withhold my dollar? No; I want it with the $1,000 or the $10,000, or whatever the amount may be; I want my dollar there, and if I live, and God wills, it will be there.

Now remember, dear Saints, on the first day of January, New Years, 1901, let us all, small and great, send in our dollars, and in the meantime let us talk it up, encourage the move, and see how many of us will have our names on the list for that day.

Some may think this is out of place, that it is not necessary, that the church does not approve of such a move, and if it wants our dollars it will ask for it. To such I would say, do you read the Herald and Ensign? If so, how do you reason in this way? I understand that there is money needed, and how are they to get it? Borrow it or do without it? No; that will not do. If they borrow it, they will have to pay it sometime, and we can see that we are no better off or nearer the gathering time than before the money was borrowed. So let us rally to the call, and help shoulder the burden, and be willing to say, Come on, brethren, instead of, Go ahead.

Now, I have this apology to offer for writing this letter: If I am out of place, in this, let the officials say, and I only ask you to forgive me, and pray for me, that I may be more careful when I write.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. N. PERKINS.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 13.

Editors Herald:—Quite an interest awakened and inquiry being made in this city, through the preaching, mainly, of Bro. V. M. Goodrich, together with the talks of Bro. J. E Matthews. There are resident Saints in the city who supported their efforts, and thus contributed in a large measure to the success. Thirteen persons have been baptized, and others are standing at the door of inquiry, favorably impressed with the gospel story.

Yesterday, Sunday, the writer was associated with Bro. T. J. Beatty in the services of the day, Bro. V. M. Goodrich having been called away from the city. Sunday school, sacrament, and prayer services were held; also two preaching meetings, a good interest being manifest. The meetings were held in the M. E. church, the brethren having rented it for a month.

Last evening we met in a private house, a good audience being present. After the preaching service was over, we adjourned to the house of Bro. Thorp and organized a branch of the church, to be known as the Columbus branch. Bro. J. E. Matthews was ordained a priest under the hands of Bro. Beatty and the writer, after which he was chosen to preside, and Bro. Robert E. Chase was chosen secretary. On account of the lateness of the hour, the roll of names was not completed; besides, some had to secure letters from the branches to which they belonged, and others were necessarily absent. When the list is completed, however, there will be twenty-five or thirty names recorded. This will be a good number with which to start, but there are many obstacles to overcome in order to success in a large city like Columbus. Among the new members received, as well as those of the older resident Saints, there are the substantial and practical classes, and, no doubt, they will make a good fight for the right. It takes manhood and womanhood, with faith and courage, to face the opposition of a great city, and resist the invitings that lead to sin and folly, and the large company of frivolous and careless people walking that way.

An excellent spirit and unity of sentiment prevailed at the time of the organization; so it was born in a good atmosphere. Bro. Matthews, its chosen president, is of good repute and thoroughly imbued with the faith. Could not be any thing else if he would try. Is a brother of Elder Thomas Matthews, well known by many of the ministry, and of excellent standing. Thus the work is planted in the city of Columbus, Ohio, the capital of the state, and we are hopeful that it will continue to grow and enlarge until the influence of the Saints is felt for good in all parts of this great metropolis.

The Sabbath a week previous was spent with the Saints at Conneautville, Pennsylvania. The meetings were interesting, and the brethren are moving along, seemingly, as well and as fast as circumstances will permit. A change of season is upon us. Bro. Beatty remains in the city. Is well liked.

WM. H. KELLEY.

BRUNSTER PRAIRIE, Texas, Nov. 6.

Editors Herald:—A few words from Northeastern Texas. The outlook for the gospel is good. I find people looking for truth wherever I chance to tell the beautiful message that the angel brought to Joseph Smith in these last days to prepare the people for the great day that is so close at hand. How thankful we ought to be that we are permitted to live in this day and age of the world. Why can the people of this generation not discern the signs of the times? But our Savior said, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." This generation rejected the prophet that God sent to tell in what age of the world they lived, and we know that where there are no visions the people perish.

I had the pleasure recently of following two Utah elders, the first I ever got on the trail of. I anticipate they were nice men. They stated to the people that if the Reorganization had the authority they did not have it. They also stated there was a doubt about it, but they believed it was a matter that would be settled in the near future. Indeed, the pure in heart will soon know where they stand.

God has greatly blessed me in my labors this year. So we pray the gospel will soon go to the nations of the earth.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

MOUNTAIN HOME, Ark., Nov. 13.

Editors Herald:—I have been preaching in Baxter, Sharp, and Randolph counties, Arkansas, and Oregon county, Missouri. I have been hindered some from the field in winding up my business affairs, of which I have reported to the Bishop and missionary in charge.

I had a good meeting the first part of last month at Hardy. I was taken with lagrippe, and have been entirely unfit for the field for nearly three weeks, and my meetings at Ravenden Springs and Martin Creek would have been an entire failure had Bro. Baldwin not been with me. I preached at the two last named places in August, also made one new opening at Hand schoolhouse, still in the vicinity of the Martin Creek branch.

I have baptized seven thus far. I have made five new openings in Baxter county, with but very little interest.

I came home last Thursday, as soon as I was able to make the trip. I am "getting on my feet" again, and will begin a meeting near Henderson, Arkansas, next Saturday, which is another new place. I have no trouble getting a place to preach, as nearly all the schoolhouses are open to all denominations; but it is a big job to get a good hearing, and still a greater task to get the few that do hear to investigate. We had some opposition at our meeting near Ravenden Springs, by a Baptist bigot. Bro. Baldwin announced at the close that he would continue the meetings, beginning on the following Tuesday evening, and told the people that he would divide time with the brother. Bro. Baldwin is equal to the emergency.

Our work has suffered loss at Center because of lack of a minister to look after our interests in that part of the field. Still there is an open door for us, and some who do not belong to the church are interested.

I do not expect to be able to report a very great number of baptisms this year; however, I shall push onward as best I can, and trust the Lord to give the increase.

In bonds,

JOSEPH WARD.

SOMERVILLE, Mass., Nov. 14.

Editors Herald:—Our Sunday school convention for the Massachusetts district, which closed Sunday evening last, was largely attended, and generally voted a success.

The new feature of dealing with the problems of dress, diet, and so forth, proved interesting, and cannot but awaken thought and possible incentive to needed reform, among Latter Day Saints. The papers read, with discussion following, made the convention one of the liveliest and most interesting ever held in the district and betrayed a growing and satisfactory state of intelligence upon the part of our young people. The old officers were continued, and adjournment was had to meet in Fall River in May next. Bro. J. C. Foss was with us, going on to Maine Monday evening, in company with Bro. Eaton.

Interest in church matters on the improvement order, we think in the district, generally speaking. Bro. Bullard still elected in charge here in Boston. Bro. Chas. Lake has been placed in charge of matters in Haverhill, where we expect to go this week.

The need of presiding officers in many branches, capable of conducting the affairs of the church of God with that intelligence and dignity that its importance and relation to human welfare demands, is out of all proportion to the supply, and the lack of proper restrictions as regards the danger of misrepresentation through our haste or eagerness to build or convert the public, to our way of thinking, has become a source of regret and painful comment, and leads us up to the inevitable conclusion, as pondering upon the words of the Master, when he said "I will build my church," that either somebody has, in the past, built without much direction, authority, or warrant from him, or that the work has been permitted to go to pieces, fall into decay, and to suffer just reproach through lack of wisdom or courage to continue as the Master, through his law, would have us build and continue.

A memorial tribute to the memory of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in as enduring material form as earthly substances will permit, is the thing that engages our attention and commends itself to the judgment of the entire membership of the Reorganized Church, I should think.

Ever since our visit (or before the visit, for that matter) to Nauvoo, this question presented itself to our mind, and was emphasized by our visit to the vicinity where reposes the ashes of the men whose close touch with Deity himself is to become, more and more, as the years roll on, the wonder of this world, as relates to its religious history, especially. I do certainly feel that the time is fully ripe for this movement in which the world should be given to understand, as far as we as a church are able to make them by such physical token to understand, the appreciation of the to us all important fact that God has given in this generation an intelligent and defensible revelation of himself through the agency of Joseph Smith the Prophet, Seer, and Martyr.

I was glad to see the subject suggested by the brethren, but did not feel to express myself until an authoritative sanction from the family and from President Smith himself was had.

Were the family in a position to incur the financial expense or obligation of this undertaking I would think, speaking for myself, that it would seem a far more proper and fitting thing to make it, in this particular and extraordinary case, a church affair permit me to say, a Reorganized Church affair, most certainly, so far as the initiative and burden of the work is concerned; for, is it a small part of our trouble and care that we have been put upon by a people apostate to rescue his name and heavenly calling and work from the foul disgrace and reproach unto which their folly has brought it, and their perversity continues to blind the eyes of the world with? Let it, then, be the work of the church of the true faith, not only to defend, but perpetuate, by every legitimate and God-sanctioned invention or plan, the memory of these men, and challenge world attention, as much as such action can to the fact of loyalty to the defense of the primitive Christian faith restored to earth through the heaven-appointed agency of these men.

It must seem that a properly conducted appeal, if answered by the whole church, would involve nothing but a light and pleasing burden, and elicit quick response. With these past and present convictions, I am,

In the faith,

BLACKWELL, Okla., Nov. 9.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps you would like to hear from Blackwell. Will say, I was elected county superintendent of the anti-saloon league in Kay county. We held a county convention, selecting the best men from both republican and democratic tickets, then each member of the different leagues in the county worked to get votes for the temperance men. The result was we elected thirteen temperance men out of sixteen to office. The saloon element objected, but the victory is ours. We made friends to the right. All well. In bonds,

WALKER, Mo., Nov. 11.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Swen Swenson of Lebeck, Missouri, was here the first of last week, and had a fair attendance and good attention. He delivered two sermons on "prayer," which were well liked by all who heard him. The meetings closed on Monday evening, and our faithful servant went to his home on Tuesday. Tuesday evening there came one precious soul to be baptized, not knowing that the meetings had closed; but he made his mission known to the branch leader, A. S. Leeper, who sent a line to Bro. Swenson, and he came and performed the ordinance of baptism, on Saturday, the 10th. At the confirmation the new member received evidence from God that this was the true work of God. The Spirit was also present in the gift of tongues, and it was told that he would be called to the ministry in the near future if he was faithful to the work of God. There are others here who are investigating the work.

Editors Herald:—Myself and wife and are the only ones of our faith here. This place was the home of G. W. Leonard, at the time of the White-Leonard debate at Scammon, Kansas.

There has never been an effort here to tell the true gospel story, that I know of. I believe Brn. Bebee and Baker were at Jacksonville, a short distance from here. A sister lives at that place.

I hope in the near future to see some of the elders at this place. Yours in bonds,

EDITED BY FRANCES.

PREPARED READINGS FOR DECEMBER MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

"If thou canst plan a noble deed,
And never flag till it succeed,
Though in the strife thy heart should bleed,
Whatever obstacles control. Keep on! Go on, true soul Thou'lt win the prize; thou'lt reach the goal."

. . . . . .

In our last two meetings we have considered the subject of heredity. Of course very imperfectly and briefly, but our trust is that interest sufficient has been awakened by this consideration to lead mothers to a more thorough study and investigation of the laws governing it, for, could we once thoroughly arouse the interest of mothers, once convince them that they are largely responsible for the physical, mental, and moral well-being of the children God has intrusted to their care, the work remaining to be done by our labors as a society would be very little.

In reviewing this subject there are points which seem to be prominent above others, and to a few of these we want to call your attention. First among these is the primary object in the establishment of a home. In regard to this question our object will be more fully subserved by asking the sisters themselves to discuss and answer it. (And let us as one who is striving diligently to be faithful in the preparation of these readings, ask that you do not pass this request lightly, for it should be studied.) We give you the opinion of James Hamilton upon this subject, and ask if he covers the ground?

"The home," says Hamilton, "came from heaven, modeled on the Father's house and the many mansions, and was meant to be a training place, the one for the other. The home is one of the gifts of the Lord Jesus—a special creation of Christianity."

In a leaflet which we wrote for this work some years ago, we took the position that love was indispensable to the best results in the founding of a home. We did not then know that we were enunciating a scientific truth, neither that it was one which had cost years of toil and study for others to demonstrate. We simply felt in our soul that it must be true. That the child who is not robbed of his birthright in this world will be the child who is wanted—the child who is begotten and borne in love. In an address delivered before the "Congress of Women," during the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, Mrs. Clara Holbrook Smith, in speaking upon the "Home Side of Progress," said:—

"We study very carefully the condition of the house in which the home is to be located. We talk glibly of sanitation, of hygiene, of foods chemically considered; the wise home makers have placed on exhibition all the latest implements—the model nursery, the kindergarten, the kitchen garden, the gymnasium, and the methods of all the various organizations that are endeavoring to remove evil from the pathway of the child.

"All grand, all helpful, all necessary; but it often looks to me like 'locking the barn door after the horse is stolen.' Yes, we are beating around the bush; but the enemy lies coiled up in the very center. The child is stung with evil before it reaches the outer circle where these implements for the culture of body and soul stand ready for the using. We must probe deep, to the very heart of things, and commence at the very foundation, before we can hope for any special advance—physicially, mentally, or morally—beyond the present showing of our nation. We have made provision for the training in every profession save the profession of home makers and parentage. This is all left to chance. The fate of the nation is left to blind chance.

"The seed of this nation was sown by the church. We had a right to expect wonderful things from such a sowing, but from the first the enemy has been sowing tares from the poisoned weeds of Europe's humanity. Our country must now look very carefully to the quality of her sowing, or expect to reap the fate of the cultured nations of the past ages. The home was God's first plant for a nation. Male and female created He man—in his own image—and gave them the high privilege of entering into his last creative act with him. He gave of all seeds to man, and said, 'plant.' Man has learned to plant with care, according to the latest laws given by science, to insure the largest growth, the most perfect specimen, the choicest varieties. He has also learned in these last days that human development the most precious, the one upon which all happiness and progress depends, is governed by the same scientific laws. There is no progress for any nation beyond the home line of possibility. I want to give you my thought from two standpoints:—

"First. The two laws governing development.

"Second. Outside aid to development.

"I start from the very foundation of the human race—the fathers and the mothers. Could they expect fine results to come by chance? In the light of today's revealments a person is criminal who does not look after the purity of the blood that he imparts to another human being. Every institution of learning [Graceland?] that fails to provide this instruction for its students, male and female, in different departments, fails to provide a foundation for a higher mental capacity in the coming generations. Higher education is a theme much harped upon at present, but every effort, save in a few exceptional cases, will prove futile for lack of capacities upon which to expend their knowledge. . . . I claim that an intelligent present through the use of two laws could soon produce one who could answer the questions of Socrates. We have grown quite familiar with one of these laws through the pens and voices of many, the prenatal law. Rightly understood and used, it has the power to modify the effect of poisonous blood. But the other law so powerful, I alone am presenting. Probably because others have not dug so deep and waded through so many pages of scientific volumes, small of print, large of terms. This law has the power to eliminate all the poisoned matter and vicious tendencies that come down from the ancestral spaces.

"Frederick the Great understood human cultivation. The emperor's body-guard was composed of collossal, stalwart men that had been gathered from their own or kidnapped from other nations. He bade them seek wives that could match them in physique, and establish homes for the rearing of other guards. If homes can be established that will insure splendid physique, why not homes to insure splendid mentalities and splendid morals?

"With this thought in view, I will give you the cornerstone on which every home must be built. That I may not be accused of sentiment, please note the fact that this corner stone is the result of a lifetime of study, of the labor of scientific men investigating natural law. Let me quote from one of them: 'Marriage is scientifically unnatural when not based upon a supreme affection.' There can be no home without it. There may be a place where two persons dwell together, but no home.

"We will go to the laboratory of the 'why.' We must have a scientific analysis, or we will again be accused of sentiment. We have advanced as far as the laws of Lycurgus in our consideration of these truths.

"The following of these laws means perfect health, and perfect health insures pure blood. But the microscope reveals to us the fact that our blood changes with our emotions. Thus the blood that becomes vitalized under the great happiness of the emotion of love, becomes an absolute poison under the emotions of dislike, fear, or hate. This poison, under the extreme emotion of fear or hate, is strong enough to throw a child that may imbibe it into convulsions, and has been known, in some instances, to kill instantly."

. . . . . .

Just here, let each mother who reads this, pause long enough to recall some of her own experiences in this direction. Have you at any time just after a fit of passion, or in the midst of a deep grief, nursed your babe? Do you not recall even now the results? It is in this way we often test the absolute correctness or falsity of theories. For ourselves, we are a perfect convert to this law, which we are firmly convinced governs the marriage relation, and in view of it, what responsibility rests upon those who enter this relation!

And mark you, that all which Mrs. Smith has been pleading for is simply in the interest of good citizenship. She herself is a Christian wife and mother; but unlike us, her plea is not based as ours is, upon the duty we owe to God.

(And that this reading may be perfect in this relation, we beg to request that each leader of a local organization appoint one of their number to prepare a paper upon the law given in this last dispensation for the hygiene of our homes, and another to prepare one upon the marriage covenant of our church, and let us see if the teachings of God, as given through his prophets in our time, and the laws of science, are not in harmony? These papers should then be sent to us, that the most complete may be used in Home Column. It will be necessary, in many instances, that the local leader do this appointing by a written request, as they will see this after the November meeting has been held. But we earnestly hope that it will not be overlooked.—ED.)

And now, with just an added paragraph or two from Mrs. Smith, we will close this reading.

"A home," she says, "started upon scientific principles, based upon supreme affection, —as shown upon chemical analysis of the blood to be absolutely necessary, built on conditions of superb health, as shown by following the laws of Lycurgus, with obedience to the law of prenatal influence,—offers opportunity for the highest earthly possibilities. But here let us stop a moment. This is the horror of it all.

"In one fatal moment, a disobedience to the initial law [the law of supreme love.—ED.] may cancel all the splendid preparation that has been the work of years. This law, the strongest law of all, that has the power to counteract all that comes from the ancestral spaces, that has power to annul the grand conditions which resulted from the preparation of previous years, is completely ignored in almost every home. So strong is this [initial] law, that a spiritualized condition would overcome even unfavorable tendencies, and make favorable conditions. It is a new supply of life from the Creator of life."

. . . . . .

In this generation our homes have been invaded by a subtile enemy—an enemy which strikes a deathblow to this initial law of marriage. An enemy which subverts the very object God had in creating man, male and female, and placing them upon the earth. Can those who claim to be his children cherish this enemy?

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Grace Eldredge, of Catherine, Missouri, asks the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union in her behalf, that God may heal her of the disease which is troubling her.

Also, Sr. W. A. Smith requests your prayers in her behalf. She has long been a sufferer.

Sunday School Associations.

PHILADELPHIA.

Sunday school association convened at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 3 and 4. O. T. Christy, superintendent, in the chair; E. B. Hull, clerk. Report of Philadelphia school: Enrollment 51, with an average attendance of 44. Treasurer reported on hand at last report $5.02, collected since $5.49, expended $5 04, balance on hand $4 67. A bill of $1.50 was presented and ordered paid. The following officers were elected for the ensuing term: Superintendent, H. H. Bacon; associate superintendent, Willard Hettrick; secretary and treasurer, E. B. Hull. The following delegates were chosen to represent this district at General Convention: F. G. Pitt, Sr. C. Pitt, and G. W. Robley. Motion made instructing the delegates to use their influence toward having the delegate system corrected, as small districts are severely hampered by the present system. In the evening an entertainment was held, which was enjoyed by all; those who strove to make this part of the program a success, need to be complimented upon the success achieved. As this was also the yearly anniversary of the Philadelphia school, presents of Bibles and other books were given to meritorious scholars. On Sunday morning, Elder F. G. Pitt spoke to the children on the necessity of "remembering now the Creator in the days of their youth," followed by sacramental service, and preaching in the evening by Elder George W. Robley. Adjourned to meet at Baldwin, Maryland, about six months from date.

CHATHAM.

Semiannual convention of Chatham district Sunday school association met with Chatham Saints on Friday, October 12. Opened by Sr. Jessie A. Hackett; prayer by Sr. Mary M. Green, after which Sr. Jessie A. Hackett was chosen to preside, with Bro. J. H. Tyrrell assistant; Sr. Mary M. Green, secretary; Sr. Annie Kettlewell, assistant. Visiting Saints were granted all the rights and privileges of the convention. Schools reporting: Longwood, Lindsley, Chatham, Cumorah, Wallaceburg or Zion, Zone, Pine Grove, Prince Albert, Ridgetown, Wabash, and Buxton, giving a total enrollment of 374 persons. The report of the treasurer, Bro. George A. McFadden, was read, audited, and found correct. The report from Bro. J. H. Tyrrell in regard to library fund was read: Have received from schools and individuals the sum of $12 50, also two books donated. It was moved that it be a traveling library, and that the committee be continued. Election of officers: Sr. Jessie A. Hackett, superintendent; Bro. J. J. Williamson and Bro. J. H. Tyrrell, assistants; Sr. Mary M. Green, secretary; Bro. G. A. McFadden, treasurer; Elder J. H. Tyrrell, librarian. Elder B. St. John to be delegate to General Sunday school convention. The evening program consisted of speeches, music, singing, reading, recitation, and drafting; also, Elder Tyrrell gave several selections from a phonograph. The prizes for drawing the most correct map of Palestine were a Book of Mormon, a Hymnal, and a History of Joseph the Seer. Those who did the best were Frank Shippy, Sr. Annie Kettlewell, and Bro. Levi Tyrrell. Saturday morning, responsive reading from 1 Corinthians 13. Bro. Williamson was chosen to take charge of the Bible class, which brought out some very interesting answers. Adjourned to meet at two p. m. on Friday prior to the meeting of next conference. Bro. Tyrrell, Sr. Hackett, and Bro. Williamson to see after the drafting for the next convention.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

Sunday school and Zion's Religio-Literary associations convened at Galland's Grove, Iowa, October 25. Mary Schafer in the chair, Fred B. Shumate secretary. Regular session of Religio work was conducted by J. F. Mintun. Friday morning, a Religio business session was held, during which Mallard, Coalville, Lake City, Auburn, Dow City, Galland's Grove, and Benan societies reported. President, vice president, and treasurer also reported. Balance in treasury $5 76. Resolutions of condolence were drafted and ordered sent to bereaved family of J. C. Hitchcock and church publications. R Wight in chair during Sunday school convention, 10:45 a. m., October 26. The following schools reported: Auburn, Benan, Dow City, Harlan, Deloit, Salem, Pilot Rock, Defiance, and Galland's Grove. No reports from Coalville and Mallard. Superintendent R Wight reported four schools visited. Treasurer reported $13 14 on hand. Papers read: "Home Department of the Religio," Dora Young. "Home Department of Sunday School," J. A. Gunsolley. Talk: "Necessity of Study," J. M. Baker. "Incentives," Nellie Hall. "How to Study," Floy Holcomb. Adjourned to Deloit, February 15, at ten a. m.; Religio, at call of presidency.

NAUVOO.

Convention met at New London, Iowa, October 5. District superintendent, G. P. Lambert, in charge; Marjorie Wright, secretary. The reports of the various schools were read. The report of Keb school showed but one officer in the school: and as it was hard for him to make the finances of the school meet the requirements, it was moved and carried to relieve the school of any indebtedness to the association. The treasurer's report was read, showing a balance of $18 25 in the treasury. The teachers for the afternoon were then appointed: George McComas, senior class; Marjorie Wright, intermediate class; G. P. Lambert, infant class. The afternoon was devoted to a regular Sunday school session, responsive reading being from John 4: 5 to 26. The evening was spent listening to a program given mostly by members of New London Sunday school, which reflected much credit on both officers and scholars. Adjourned to meet at the place that the district conference meets, on Friday preceding, at 10: 30.

cals report. Send reports to Miss Carrie Lewis, Stewartsville, Missouri. Come, all ye Religians, and we will have a good time.

WALTER W. SMITH, Pres.

Miscellaneous Department.

TWO DAYS' MEETINGS.

Will the Saints and friends of Nodaway, Missouri, district, please to take notice and arrange for the two days' meetings, requested by the district conference, in the following manner:—

Sweet Home, November 24 and 25; William Woodhead and C. C. Nelsen.

Avenue City, December 1 and 2; T. A. Ivie and W. B. Torrance.

Guilford, December 8 and 9; John Hawley and R. Lorenson.

Ross Grove, December 15 and 16; Joseph Vaughn and A. Jensen.

Bedison, December 22 and 23; R. K. Ross and Arthur Hailey.

Now will those who have been appointed in charge of the meeting make such announcements as you think best in your places, and make a strong effort to attend.

We also ask the help and attendance of our traveling missionaries.

E. S. FANNON, Pres.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints at Welland, Niagara, and St. Catharine's, Greeting: — I have been appointed by our worthy president, R. C. Evans, to labor in your respective branches until December 25, and will endeavor to divide the time with each branch as wisdom shall direct, beginning at Welland about the 20th of this month, then to St. Catharine's and Niagara, in their respective times. I therefore earnestly solicit your coöperation, as well as your faith and prayers, in assisting me to be enabled to acquit myself as a true servant of Christ; and humbly pray the good Lord to bestow upon us as his people, the spirit of wisdom, faith, patience, and discernment, that by these qualifications we may be enabled to build up the work and bring honor to the cause we profess to love. I also notify the Saints of Huron county that I will join my brother George, in the field assigned us at Toronto conference the first of the new year.

SAMUEL W. TOMLINSON.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of North and South Dakota, Brethren and Sisters in the Faith of Christ:—Being unable to visit so extensive a field, personally, I take the opportunity to appeal to you through the church papers on behalf of the tithing fund for this district.

Thankful for the liberality of the past, and the beneficence of a kindly providence which made it possible, with a humble trust in God, and a confidence born of past experience of the generosity of the Saints, I again appeal to you for help.

As a fellow-sufferer from the unprecedented climatic calamity that has befallen us, you have my sincere sympathy. A severe financial stringency is upon us, and an appeal for help may at first sight appear inopportune. But, dear Saints, let us consider. Who! and for what! are we working? God and eternal life. Surely it is needless to say that this great object is worthy of our supremest effort. The confirming of the covenant is by sacrifice; and, as often expressed, glory is measured thereby.

Please do not neglect giving altogether, because you cannot respond as in the past, but give anyway. Christ commended the effort that produced the mite, and God is abundantly able to bless, increase, and magnify to an unlimited extent the smallest offering of a sincere heart.

May the Spirit of the living God be with all his children, cheering, guiding, and leading us more and more fully into all the paths of duty and love.

Your servant for Christ's sake,

WILLIAM SPARLING,
Bishop's Agent.

CLIFFORD, N. D., Nov. 5.

MARRIED.

BRADBURY—GASSETT.—At the residence of Elder M. H. Bond, No. 103 Chapin avenue, Providence, Rhode Island, November 1, 1900, Elder William Bradbury to Sr. Annie Louise Gassett. At five p. m., the bridal party arriving, the legal functions which bind a man and woman together in life partnership and association were, after an address appropriate upon such occasion, performed by Elder M. H. Bond, in the presence of a goodly number of Saints, mostly of sisters of the Prayer Union, whose service had closed shortly before, and who were present by invitation from those most interested. A reception followed in the evening, at the pleasant home of the groom on Friendship street, to which he had taken his new bride, and where a fine spread or feast and entertainment had been prepared, and to which the Saints, old and young, rich and poor, had been, without favoritism or partiality, invited, and which, with the good cheer, with music and song, a pleasant evening was spent. The guests departed near the midnight hour, leaving good wishes for the happy groom and bride of many years of continuous felicity in the new relation which they have just entered into, and under good prospect and evident indorsement of friends, brethren, and sisters, and of heavenly favor as well, as manifest at the ceremony which binds for life a man and woman together in a life partnership evidently designed of God, and alone in which are best and easiest borne the trials of sickness, poverty, neglect of friends, loss of worldly favor, or the many trials for which a true mating and conjugal love is the best antidote or safest and surest remedy.

DIED.

FAUL.—At her home, near Clarksdale, Missouri, November 6, 1900, Sr. Catherine Faul. She was born in Kircheim, Wurtemberg, Germany, 1829; was baptized April 10, 1871, at Binghamton, Wisconsin. Married to Jacob Faul; to them were born four children, three of them preceded her. One son, Charles P., is left to mourn. Our beloved sister united with the church some twenty-nine years ago, and has ever sought to honor her profession faithfully until death. She was a member of the German branch, and loved the work, always bore a firm testimony to the truth. She was generous-hearted, kind to the poor, a dutiful and kind wife, and an affectionate mother. Her greatest desire was to prepare her only son for the ministry. She accidentally broke her leg two weeks prior to her death, was a great sufferer, but patiently waited for the Master's call, Come home. She repeatedly said, I want to go home; what a joy it will be when I reach the other shore. Funeral service conducted by Elder William Lewis, sermon preached by Elder T. T. Hinderks, to a large congregation. Her remains were laid to rest in the German cemetery, waiting for the resurrection of the just.

AT PEACE.

And I said: "She is dead;" I could not brook
Again on that marvelous face to look,
But they took my hand and they led me in,
And left me alone with my nearest kin.
Once again in that silent place,
My beautiful dead and I face to face;
And I could not speak and I could not stir,
But I stood and I looked with love on her.
With love and with rapture and with strange surprise
I looked on the lips and the close shut eyes;
On the perfect rest and calm content,
And the happiness there in her features blent;
And the sweet white hands that had wrought so much,
Now nerveless to kisses of fevered touch.

My beautiful dead who had known the strife,
The pain, and the sorrow that we call Life.
Who had never faltered beneath her cross,
Nor murmured when loss followed swift on loss;
And the smile that sweetened her lips alway,
Lay light on the blessed mouth that day.
I smoothed from her hair -a silver thread,
And I wept, yet I could not think her dead.
I felt with a wonder too deep for speech
She could tell what only the angels teach,
And over her mouth I leaned my ear,
Lest there should be something I should not hear.

Then out from silence between us stole
A message that reached to my innermost soul;
"Why weep you today, who have wept before,
That the road was rough I must journey o'er?
Why mourn that my lips can answer not
When anguish and sorrow are both forgot?
Behold all my life I have longed for rest—
Yes, even when I held you on my breast,
And now that I lie in breathless sleep,
Instead of rejoicing you sigh and weep,
My dearest, I know that you would not break,
If you could, my slumber, and have me wake;
For though life was full of things that bless,
I have never, till now, known happiness."
Then I dried my tears, and with lifted head,
I left my mother, the beautiful dead.

Rev. F. N. and M. A. PELOUBET

AUTHORS OF "SELECT NOTES ON THE INTERNATIONAL LESSONS."

Large 12mo., Cloth, very Unique Binding in Black and Gold.

Every one acknowledges the great value of Dr. William Smith's Bible Dictionary as containing the "fruit of the ripest biblical scholarship of England." In revising, editing and bringing down to date this estimable work the Revs. F. N. and M. A. Peloubet have accomplished a wonderful task and have made this book an invaluable one.

Besides their innumerable notes, they have added the proper names used in the New Version, together with their pronunciation, the signification of proper names has been inserted, the results of the latest research in regard to the topography of Palestine are embodied, the dates at which persons lived and events took place have been inserted, Chronological tables, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the "Apostles and Their History" are also added, all in all making this book of inestimable value to any one interested in the Bible.

DEMAND FOR FAMILY BIBLES.

People who deal in Bibles say that the demand for family Bibles, having the family records between the two Testaments, has almost wholly ceased. They do not know whether this is because family prayers have almost ceased, or are said to have done so, or whether their place is being taken by teachers' Bibles, the sales of which are rapidly increasing. Some years since Bibles bore the Oxford imprint. Now almost all of the best Bibles are manufactured in this country. Some plates are brought from England, but for the most part these are reserved to print the cheaper Bibles for the use of the Bible societies. One can buy Bibles at four hundred dollars a copy, but the Bible trade says the average price paid nowadays for Bibles is about one dollar. Apart from the American Bible Society and its auxiliaries, the public absorbs about two million copies a year. Hence the general public of the United States spends two million dollars a year for Bibles at this end of this century. It is not so great a sum as it spends for tobacco or some other things, but Bible sellers say it is a greater amount than ever before, and one that is steadily increasing.—From "Highways and Byways," in the December Chautauquan.

The position of woman has undoubtedly changed, and the sentiment toward her has changed; and if these changes are as yet scarcely noticeable beyond the educational circle, it is because they arose there and are extending, as it were, unconsciously. Women were appointed this summer on the jury of awards; they participated freely in the congresses; they banqueted with their colleagues. There was no restraint on either side; no affectation on the part of the women, no mawkish sentiment on the part of the men. There was just that cordial fraternizing that Americans love, with a mellow touch of old-world courtesy. On the juries the judgment of the women weighed the same as that of the men; in the congresses of education they were as ready in debate; and their formal papers showed a grasp of subjects which commanded attention and led to fruitful discussion. At the general banquet of all the educational juries, comprising eighty-three men and six women, the latter were ably represented in the toasts by Mlle. Dugard, a well-known writer and professor. She expressed in a felicitous manner the spirit which the new education of woman fosters, the spirit of loyalty to the government and of international courtesy — that courtesy which is itself one of the inestimable outcomes of higher education.

This cordial recognition of women, this free interchange of ideas on a matter of public interest, is far removed from the traditional notion of woman which pervades French literature and has given a peculiar tone to French society. It indicates even in the University circle a great change since the congresses of 1889. On this point I cannot speak from personal observation; but it struck foreign delegates who had the advantage of having assisted also at the earlier conferences. Is this change a mere surface ripple? The answer is not doubtful. The change has come without violence to the inward spirit of the people, and it accords with a great world movement.

The efforts of the French Republic in this matter began with the training of teachers for the public primary schools. As soon as the new government felt itself secure, it passed a law placing the training of women teachers on the same footing as that of men. This was in 1879. The age for admission to these schools (16–18), the subjects, and more particularly the method of instruction, a method which puts the mind upon reflection and comparison, justify the classification of these schools as higher. They are not classical, modern languages and science forming their programmes; but in this respect they differ little from the non-classical courses in our high schools and colleges, in which German or French is accepted as an equivalent for Latin. Moreover, the training in these Normal schools is above all things ethical, because it is of first importance that the future teachers of the people should have the habit of considering all knowledge, even the most elementary, in its relation to the conduct of life and to public duty. This was in the past, and still remains, a very important part also of our notion of the functions of higher education.—By Anna Tolman Smith in the December Forum.

The growing number of persons interested in the Psychical Research movement that is assuming extensive proportions in America will read with avidity the leading feature of the December Arena. The paper is by James H. Hyslop, professor of logic and ethics in Columbia University, New York, and is a powerful plea for the application of scientific methods to the problem of psychic investigation. The Professor shows the importance of this subject to both science and religion, and makes an able appeal for an adequate pecuniary endowment to establish once for all the truth or falsity of mediumistic phenomena. The opening article of this number is a sketch (with portrait) of Holger Drachmann, the Shakespeare of Denmark, by J. H. Wisby, who gives a translation of some of the poet's recent "impressions" of America. Other contributions are: "Remedies for Trust Abuses," by Prof. Frank Parsons; "The Greatest Black Man Known to History," by B. O. Flower whose editorial comments on "Topics of the Times" are strikingly suggestive; "The Problem of Municipal Government," by the Rev. J. H. Batten; "Apostles of Autolatry," by Joseph Dana Miller; "The Danger Tendency in Brain Study," by A. C. Bowen; "The Principle of Human Equality," by C. W. Berry; "The Land Question and Economic Progress," by Bolton Hall, and an excellent department of book reviews by Editor Flower. The other editors are Charles Brodie Patterson and John Emery McLean. The Alliance Publishing Company, New York. Price, 25 cents.

After repeated failures to secure a satisfactory negative of a train in motion, Ayrault Green, an expert Chicago photographer, recently made the Burlington's Denver Flyer take its own picture. This he accomplished by an electric switch which when connected with the rail closes the circuit as soon as it is struck by the engine. The switch communicates with a set of dry cells, and thence to a shutter release.

When the successful test was made, the switch was put in place about six feet behind the spot where it was calculated that the front of the engine would appear when the shutter was released. When the engine struck the switch it closed the circuit, the highspeed shutter moved, and the picture was correctly registered on the center of the plate.

THE BAD MANNERS OF OUR GIRLS.

American girls, admired at home and abroad for their beauty and intelligence, still rest under the reproach of possessing bad manners, and no one who is unbiased can question the justice of the general verdict on this subject. This is one of those true things said which ought not to be true. American girls, the happiest, healthiest, most independent girls in the world, should be faultless in their manners, or nearly faultless. Then why are they so remiss in this important particular?

The good fortune of the American girl doubtless leads to her want of polite manners. Accustomed to having her "own way," devoid of deference and respect for her parents, or for any one else, not sensitive to the feelings of others, because she has not been trained to observe them, the American girl goes on her way rejoicing, and does not realize the careless selfishness of her attitude until she finds herself, perhaps, with very few friends and no admirers.—Ada C. Sweet in the December Woman's Home Companion.

THE SPIRIT OF THE GIFT.

'Tis not the weight of jewel or plate,
Or the fondle of silk and fur;
'Tis the spirit in which the gift is rich
As the gifts of the Wise Ones were;
And we are not told whose gift was gold
Or whose was the gift of myrrh.
—Edmund Vance Cooke, from the December Chautauquan.

In a recent number of the Journal of Applied Microscopy, published by the Bausch & Lomb Optical company, of Rochester, N. Y., the editor calls the attention of the readers to the matter of students choosing the course of study best adapted to their needs. This is indeed a perplexing question to the student about to begin his college course, and the editor of the Journal of Microscopy has given in a few words some excellent advice to the young student. He says:—

"The irresistible advance of scientific study during recent years has brought it to a position where it merits, even demands, attention from anyone choosing a course of study, no matter what line of work is the ultimate object in view.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"An education cannot be considered complete without embracing an amount of training in material sciences sufficient to acquaint its possessor with the work that has been done and enable him to keep in touch with work that is being done by so many of the world's greatest minds.

"Young men, especially those who contemplate legal or business careers, are often, in fact no doubt usually, wont to confine themselves to work in the non-material sciences and kindred subjects, to the entire neglect of the material sciences. To pursue such a course, certainly does not result in a well rounded education."

McClure's magazine for December will contain an intimate account of the fall of Richmond and the flight of the Confederate Cabinet, at the close of the Civil War. This article is from the pen of Stephen R. Mallory, who, as Secretary of the Navy in the Confederate Administration, shared in the stress of those last days. The narrative gives a picture strong and true of the closing scene in the South's tragedy.

VISIONS.

Where there is no vision, the people perish.—Prov. 29: 18.

Paul wrote many things to the Corinthians of greater or lesser weight, and finally near the close of his second letter he stated as follows:—

It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord.—2 Cor. 12: 1.

Cruden, in his Concordance, states as follows:—

Vision is a revelation from God, which among the Jews were of four sorts. [1] By the Holy Spirit immediately, Acts 9: 10. [2] By Urium and Thummim. [3] By a voice from heaven spoken by an angel, Acts 10: 3. [4] By prophecy which were twofold, either in dreams, or when awake, in a trance, or ecstasy, Acts 10: 3, 17; 12: 9; 16: 9.

It does not necessarily follow that Proverbs 29: 18, is to be understood as meaning that where there are no revelations from God in vision, by day or night, there the people perish; for following up his statement used as a text at the head of this article he wrote, "But he that keepeth the law, happy is he."

It appears from this that after the law is given whosoever accepts that law and does what is provided for therein is not, and need not be, an unhappy man, for he would be blameless in the eyes of the law, both the letter and the spirit.

While it is proper to believe that men might rejoice in an "abundance of revelations," it is also true that the provisions of the law, the rules and regulations given by revelation and duly recorded for the guidance and government of the church and its membership, will serve God's purposes in establishing his people and save them if they are heeded, nor does it require a constantly recurring stream of revelations reiterating the provisions already given to keep them in the view of the people and reënact their application and force. "To the law" is a sufficient tocsin to call men, Saints, to the standards; "It is written," ample to show the way to that already given.

Paul was writing of the law and charging its observance when he wrote,—

I will come to visions and revelations, and puts a sort of safeguard over himself lest he should exalt himself through the "abundance of revelations."

One of the meanings given to the word vision is the faculty of seeing. This may also be understood as meaning the power or ability to see. If the organs of the eye be hurt or destroyed, so far as physical sight is concerned, the man so deprived of the organs of sight cannot see; the faculty to see is lost.

Applying this in a wider, more comprehensive sense we may with propriety say that if the faculty to note, observe, and take mental cognizance of what the eye may see, or the mind contemplate, is not present with the individual, or has by any means been lost, then there is with such a man no vision. Having eyes to see he sees not, having ears to hear he hears not, having a heart to feel he understands not.

This is the wider meaning of what the writer of the proverb meant. Given a people whose leaders have not this sense, this faculty to see, perceive, comprehend those things which are essential to a proper discharge of duty as well as an avoidance of those which would cause trouble, harm, and loss, and we shall expect to find a people who are in darkness to a greater or lesser degree and in spiritual and moral danger. And, if with their leaders the people are included in such lack, the elements of mischief and possible ruin are lying under cover ready to break into a flame of disruption at the touch of any kindling influence possible from the conditions.

We believe in all the ways by which revelation reaches men, and should be loath indeed to know that any one of them was overlooked, ignored, or denied by the Saints; but, believing also that men should walk by the light of wisdom, the result of this ability to see, we are strongly impressed with the necessity of maintaining the claim that "wisdom should be justified of her children," and men should govern themselves by the laws given as they are interpreted by the spirit of wisdom in them whom the Lord has made overseers of the flock.

We further believe that in the gospel economy it has been provided for that those who become disciples of the Christ Jesus are entitled to receive, and, if faithfully hearing, obeying, and practicing what the gospel teaches, do receive through the ministration of the Spirit this spiritual faculty in the gift of wisdom written of by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12; to another the "Word of Wisdom."

It then follows that he to whom this ability to see, perceive, and comprehend is eminently qualified for the performance of whatever duties devolve upon him by reason of the call of God to him, if he be an official, and if not an officer, to qualify him to aid, strengthen, sustain, and confirm by counsel and advice within the sphere in which he moves.

Let us then accept the apostle's injunction to seek earnestly the best gifts, being contented with the visions that may be vouchsafed to us, and exercising the faculty to see and understand.

HELP FOR AUSTRALIA.

A scheme is on foot among the Australian Saints to build a chapel at Wallsend. One method to secure means to aid in this work is the sale of a work by Evangelist Walter J. Haworth, one of the missionary force in Australia. The title of this work is "The Book of Mormon on Trial," and is two sermon lectures by Bro. Haworth, containing sixty-one pages of excellent argument upon the topic treated. Bro. Haworth's letter, given below, will give a better understanding of the situation than we could do without it.

ROZELLE, N. S. W., Oct. 20.

Editors Herald:—By this mail I forward you a copy of a pamphlet issued by the Wallsend branch of the church in aid of its chapel building fund. Through having to rush the printer to catch a boat for a new field, I was not able to get a second proof-reading. The result—several printer's mistakes. We wrote you some time ago, offering to put them on sale in America, as the Saints here are not numerous enough to buy us out, and as we must sell all to make a profit for our building fund, we would be grateful if you could assist us by an announcement in the Herald. I am sure that any one who gets a pamphlet at fifteen cents will have the worth of their money, and will also help us to plant the work on a firmer footing out here. Every chapel that we build here is a stepping stone to a brighter future for the work in Australia. We are struggling against great odds, in the way of prejudice. People here have got used to the Brighamite plan of hurrying people off to Utah. They never build a chapel. When we build one in a new neighborhood, that is a terrible blow at prejudice and suspicion. People say, "These people are not like the 'Mormons,'" "they have come to stay," etc. If we can sell two thousand of these pamphlets in America, we will have a clear profit to hand the building committee of about one hundred and fifty dollars, which will be a good help. Seven copies will be sent to any address on receipt of a dollar bill. Where large quantities are ordered, the money should be remitted by International money order, drawn in favor of Walter J. Haworth, Wallsend, N. S. W., Australia.

When single copies (or any number under one dollar's worth) are ordered, sixteen cents should be sent to Elder G. R. Wells, Deer Lodge, Montana, U. S. A., who will forward us a list of all such orders, and send us the money in a lump sum. We prefer not to have American coin sent us; for while we can have it exchanged here, the discount on exchange would be a clear loss to us. Trusting we shall have a hearty response to our offer, I remain, your brother in the cause.

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

LYNCH LAW CONDEMNED.

The citizens of Limon, Lincoln county, Colorado, have lately been guilty of an act which has shadowed the fair name of the state with the taint of crime, and placed it in the list of states where lynch law and unlawful violence are permitted to override law and displace the rule of the civil courts.

A negro boy, sixteen years old assaulted and killed a school girl returning from school. The crime was soon discovered, pursuit entered upon, and the criminal caught; and frightened into confession, he told the details of the crime. He was arrested, kept from violence for a time and lodged in confinement in Denver; but by the sheriff at Denver was turned over to the sheriff of Lincoln county on his demand, it being understood that the negro would be lynched on his arrival in Lincoln county. He was taken from the custody of the sheriff, upon the arrival at Limon, by a posse of citizens and taken to the spot where he had committed his offense, and there by a vote, coolly made and voted upon, condemned to be burned at the stake. A railway rail was placed upright in the ground, the victim bound firmly to it by chains, fuel placed round him, the torch applied, and he burned to ashes. Of this the Des Moines State Register has the following editorial:—

DENVER CONDEMNS THE BURNING.

Denver hangs her head in shame for the burning alive in Colorado of a 16-year-old colored boy, Preston Porter, the confessed murderer of a little girl whom he had abused like the brute and degenerate he was. The execution was the theme of the Sunday sermon in every Denver pulpit, and the denunciation of the mob of 700 men who burned the boy at the stake was unanimous. A mass meeting of citizens was held Sunday afternoon in the First Baptist church, at Denver, attended by over 2,000 people, and as many more were unable to gain an entrance. Governor Thomas of Colorado, Mayor Johnson of Denver, President Slocum of Colorado College, President Hobbs of the Denver Y. M. C. A., and many other leading citizens were seated on the platform, and in the audience were the representative men and women of Colorado and Denver. Mr. Hobbs opened the meeting, and in strong terms denounced the method of execution, saying that the fair name of the state had been tarnished as never before. Governor Thomas spoke next, and when he arose there was a storm of hisses that made it plain the people thought him partially responsible for the delivery of the negro to the mob. The governor said he did not censure the execution, but the manner of it, and he explained that every legal step had been taken to prevent the delivery of the prisoner to the sheriff of Lincoln county, the county in which the burning took place. The mayor, governor, and sheriff all seemed to be held partly responsible by those present, and several speeches were made in which they were denounced. Rabbi Freedman in his speech said of the mob: "The same passion that worked destruction to the child at Limon threw a match into the crowd and lighted the same passions that worked in the negro." This statement seemed to express the idea of the mass meeting, and he was cheered. There is no question but that Porter's life should have partially paid for his crime, but it should not have been taken as a horde of savages would have meted out justice. The action of the representative citizens of Colorado reflects credit upon a state that has been disgraced by a lawless few who took advantage of their isolation to speak for the many.

The HERALD joins the roll of those who condemn this return to barbarism. It is time that the boasted civilization of this enlightened republic should set a higher mark in moral development and punish crime by legal and proper process, and consign unlawful measures to the shades of the far past. Trials of criminals should not be allowed to degenerate into farces, nor criminals be permitted to go unpunished. The majesty of the law should be maintained and those chosen to execute the law be honored and sustained.

PERIL TO THE NATION.

We quote from the Deseret Evening News, of November 17, 1900; under the caption of "The Peril of 'Mormonism'!"

On the question of the "peril to the nation" from "Mormonism," the Saints' Herald, published by the "Reorganized Church," in its issue of November 14, has this paragraph in an article replying to Mr. Cox:—

"As to patriotism. Did the Congregationalist Church, as a church, furnish any troops for the Mexican war? The 'Mormons' did. Did the Congregationalist Church, as a church, furnish a contingent of soldiers for the war with Spain? The Utah church did."

This is a fitting response to the alarms sought to be raised by Mr. Cox, and exhibits a disposition to recognize the loyalty of the Utah "Mormons" to the national government that is gratifying in that journal, which is usually hostile to anything connected with the church here.

The HERALD has always been willing to accord due credit to the Utah people and church for their industry, honesty in financial affairs, and the wisdom in material affairs that turned banishment from honestly acquired homes by the ire of mobs through persecution into a triumph by the occupation of a desert region and making it "blossom as the rose;" and for those acts which stand in the eyes of good men as indications of love of country and the public well being. The HERALD has been hostile to those things in the Utah church which have been evil and of a tendency to hinder both moral and material growth and progress; those things which have lain like a blight over territory and state, things which should have had no place in the church, and for which there was no legal provision in the revelations of God to the church, and which the HERALD now believes the rank and file, and possibly many among the leaders, are pleased to see passing into disuse. The HERALD is not now, never has been, hostile to the people of Utah. It has made its fight openly and conscientiously, and is pleased when it can give credit for merit where it is deserved.

DOWIE AGAINST THE ENGLISH PRESS.

John Alexander Dowie's colony of lace makers sent over from England to settle at the New Zion between Chicago and Milwaukee, has been turned back from America's shores under the contract labor law.

This has greatly angered Rev. Dowie, and in his anger he lays the matter to the activity of the English press. He is reported thus:—

Curse England and the press. In England the public men are afraid of it. The time will come when there will be a censorship of the press.

The devil is much alive and if you cannot find him anywhere else you can find him stinking, smoking, and drinking in the dens of the daily press. May God smite that press and let the people have the truth. The lying gutter press of Manchester, London, and other cities are of their father the devil, and it is the works of their father they do. The devil is the father of nine tenths of the daily press of England. I look forward with the greatest delight to the time when the last gutter pressman will have gone to hell.

It is stated that while at prayer his passion got the better of him, and pausing he rose to utter the foregoing malediction.

ERRATUM.

In HERALD for November 21, page 749, right hand column, paragraph 3, line 7 from beginning of paragraph, for "and go and leave the flock to the wolf," read "and not go and leave the flock to the wolf." Quite a difference, as you discover.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. W. Waldsmith writes from Nebraska City, November 19:—

We had two very excellent sermons delivered here at our church, yesterday and last evening, by our most worthy presiding bishop, E. L. Kelley. The weather was very unpleasant, yet he had a fair hearing. I wish he could come more frequently.

D. D. Wyatt writes from Rosendale, Missouri, November 11:—

The Saints in this vicinity are few. We had some good preaching by Elders M. F. Gowell, D. C. White, and J. A. Davis.

Bro. Henry Sparling from Springfield, Missouri, November 17:—

All doing well here at present. The branch never was better. Interest good; baptized two more today, and still there are more to follow. So they come in twos, fives, and more; prospects look good.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Dr. John A. Reise, of 563 West Chicago Avenue, near Wood street, Chicago, Illinois, has published a little leaflet called "Bible Sanctification," a very pleasant little book to scatter among inquirers. They can be had of Bro. Reise at ten cents per dozen, or fifty cents a hundred. If you want to circulate a tract, try this one. This is the third time we have tried to get Bro. Reise's name correct, the first time it was Roise, the next time Reese, but it is the same man.

BAPTISM.—NO. 2.

THE HOW? THE WHO? THE WHY? AND BY WHOM?

BY WALTER J. HAWORTH.

THE WHO?

Who are proper subjects for baptism? All persons who have heard the gospel of Jesus Christ and have been converted to a belief in its precepts, are fit subjects for baptism. Such persons will believe in God the eternal Father, and in Jesus Christ his Son. They will also realize that they have "sinned and come short of the glory of God." They will repent of their sins; or as Paul puts it (Romans 6: 6), will crucify the old man with his evil deeds, and will by the act of baptism, bury him in the likeness of Christ's death. Then, like Christ, who rose from the dead "to the glory of the Father," they will come forth from the watery grave to walk in newness of life.

In the "great commission" given by our Savior to his apostles, he told them to preach the gospel, and to baptize those who believed. They were true to this command, for we read that Peter preached to the people assembled at Pentecost, till they were "pricked in their hearts," and made known their belief by saying, "men and brethren, what shall we do?" That the people of Samaria "believed Philip and were baptized;" that Paul and Silas told the Philippian jailer to believe on the Lord Jesus, and then baptized him; that Paul taught the necessity of belief in Jesus to the twelve men at Ephesus, and then baptized them; that Philip said to the eunuch, "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest." Like Philip, we say to all, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest."

But some reader may here inquire, "Does not the doctrine that belief must precede baptism preclude the baptism of infants"? Yes, for infants have not the capacity to believe; but if it were necessary for infants to be baptized, we believe that the great God, who has furnished a supply to meet every other demand, would have supplied the infant with the necessary intelligence, to fill the demand that belief must precede baptism.

We understand that Jesus "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance" (Matt. 9:13). He also taught, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick" (Matt. 9: 12).

To which class do infants belong?

Are they righteous, or are they sinners—sick or whole?

The Church of Rome classes them with the sinner, believing that they are "totally depraved," "wholly corrupt," and "heirs of hell."

We are pleased to notice that the above doctrine, although once held a place in all the popular creeds, it is now being eliminated from most of them. It is wrong to presume that children are "totally depraved," "wholly corrupt," etc., simply because David said, "Behold I was shapen in iniquity; in sin did my mother conceive me." The iniquity of sin was upon his mother's head, not upon his. Sin is the transgression of law! What law does a baby transgress that it can be classed among sinners? None; for Jesus has said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Angels are not sinners; neither are babies.

But we are asked, "Does not Adam's sin rest upon the little ones still?" No; for the Lamb of God has taken away "the sin" of the world. The death of Jesus has removed that curse from all mankind. Since then, we have the assurance "That every man will be judged according to his works" (Rev. 20:13), and not because of Adam's transgression. The doctrine that babies are sinners is the parent of infant sprinkling. As sure as the parent doctrine is sinking into oblivion, among the great mass of people who have shaken off the fetters of priestcraft, so must its child go the way of all things earthly—like its creators, it is mortal. Jesus forever settled which class they belong to when he said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." A learned minister once said, "If a child is fit to enter the kingdom of God—the church triumphant—it is fit to enter the church militant." That all depends upon which class you consign the infant to. Such reasoning would be perfectly consistent, if it came from a person who classed the infant with the sinner; but it is just the reverse of consistent when it comes from one who classes the infant with the angels—those who need not a physician. A person who classes the children with the angels in heaven, cannot logically make such a statement as the above one, unless he believes it necessary for the angels also to become members of the church militant. If all belonged to the same class as infants and angels, there would be no need for the church militant. The church was not established for the righteous—those who had not sinned—but for the sinner. Hospitals are not built for the treatment of those who are whole; neither was God's spiritual hospital—the church—established for the treatment of those who had not contracted the soul-destroying disease of sin. The church is indeed God's spiritual hospital for the treatment of the disease of sin; and Jesus came to the world to invite those who were sick with that disease into it; but until the disease manifests itself, there is no need for treatment.

As pedobaptists often assert that infant sprinkling is apostolic in origin, we will notice some of the arguments made by them in support of this claim. Some of them inform us, with assurance, that the children of believers have a natural right to baptism, but that the children of unbelievers have no such right. If this is so, it is very unfair, for a child cannot choose its parentage. Such teaching also strikes at one of the grandest attributes of God—impartiality. It rears its dragon head against the principle which God especially revealed to Peter, "That he is no respecter of persons." But let us examine the proofs presented. Acts 2:38, 39 is first presented for our consideration, wherein the apostle Peter says: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ;" and in which he continues to say, "For the promise is to you, and to your children." We are asked to accept this as proof that the apostles taught infant baptism, as a privilege of believers' children. Let us examine the scripture quoted, and see if there is really any reference to infant baptism there at all. Peter's words were these:—

> Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and [Peter is now making a promise] ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise [the promise of the Holy Ghost] is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

The promise was not baptism, but the gift of the Holy Ghost. If the promise had been baptism, that would have been no evidence in favor of infant baptism; for though the children mentioned waited till they were grown men and women, they would still be the children of those whom Peter addressed. To argue (from the words "to you and to your children") that they would have to be baptized at once would be absurd, for Peter further said the promise was "to all that are afar off." To at once baptize all those that are mentioned would necessitate the baptism of the majority before they were born! The first part of that memorable sentence must be interpreted in the light of the concluding phrase, "Even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Let us see —whom does God call? Hear Jesus:—

I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."—Matt. 9:13.

No babies were baptized on that day, for we read that only they "that gladly received his word were baptized." (Acts 2:41.) They also "sold their possessions," and did break "bread from house to house," eating "their meat with gladness and singleness of heart," "praising God." (Verses 45–47.)

The case of Cornelius and his household is next cited, and the assertion made that there must have been infants in that household. But when we read, in Acts 10, that Cornelius feared God with all his house (verse 2), that when Peter arrived the household assembled to hear the word of the Lord, and that they all received the Holy Ghost, and spake in tongues and magnified God, we are quite satisfied that they were all adults, whom Peter commanded to be baptized.

We will next consider the case of Lydia and her household, cited by pedobaptists as an instance of infant baptism. (Acts 16:15) We fail to notice here even the slightest hint of babies. In fact, verse 40 shows us they were all men; for after Paul and Silas were liberated from prison, they entered into the house of Lydia, and saw the "brethren" and "comforted" them.

The case of the Philippian jailer is often cited as an evidence of infant baptism. Acts 16:32 tells us that the apostles spake unto "all that were in the house;" verse 33 says that all were baptized; and verse 34 informs us that all believed and rejoiced. Babies cannot intelligently hear, neither can they believe, and as all in the jailer's house both heard and believed, we can say with assurance that no babies were among those baptized.

1 Corinthians 1:16 is the only other instance of household baptism. Paul says therein:—

And I baptized also the household of Stephanas.

There were no babies in this household, either, for Paul gives us to understand that they were all adults. He says of them:—

They have addicted themselves to the ministry of the Saints.—1 Cor. 16:18.

Fancy a baby addicting itself to the ministry of the Saints!

For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband; else were your children unclean; but now are they holy.—1 Cor. 7:14.

This is quite often cited as evidence for infant baptism. It is claimed "that if children are 'holy,' they have a right to baptism." In this text we fail to notice any allusion to baptism. It should be understood that the words sanctified and holy were used by the Jews in the ceremonial, as well as the moral sense. Paul evidently was not speaking of "holiness" or "sanctification" in the moral sense; for, in that case, not only the children would be made holy; by the belief of one parent, but the unbelieving parent would also be sanctified by the believing one. If the child had a right to baptism because of this holiness, so did the unbelieving parent, and this our friends are loath to admit. In Ezra 10:3, the Jews were forbidden to continue in marriage relations with Gentile wives. The offspring of such marriages would be "unclean." This was evidently what Paul had reference to; and he was showing them that under the gospel things were somewhat different. Under the gospel the unbelieving parent was "sanctified," in the ceremonial sense, and the children were "holy," in the same sense.

The claim is sometimes made that under the gospel dispensation baptism takes the place of circumcision, and that as the Jewish children were admitted into the church when eight days old, by circumcision, so should our children be admitted into the Christian church at an early age, by baptism. We are surprised that in this enlightened age there are to be found a great many people who are just credulous enough to follow the above "cunningly devised fable." In the first place, the ordinance of circumcision was not the means of entrance into the Jewish church; for if such were the case, that church was composed exclusively of males!

Dear reader, do you believe that the Jewish female was such an insignificant being in the sight of God that he ignored her, by only making provision for the salvation of the males? God is not a respecter of persons, and under all dispensations the door into his church will be one bearing the invitation to all alike, "Knock and it shall be opened unto you." It is a historical fact that the means of admission into the Jewish church was by baptism. Paul tells us (1 Cor. 10:1, 2,) that the fathers "all passed through the sea, and were all baptized in the cloud and in the sea."

In Genesis 17:1–11, we read that God made a covenant with Abraham. Abraham's part of the contract was that he and the male portion of his seed should submit to the ordinance of circumcision. God's part of it was that if the seed of Abraham were faithful in discharging this duty, he would reward them by "giving them the land of Canaan as an everlasting possession." Verse 7 calls this covenant an "everlasting covenant," and as such the Jews still recognize it. Although the Jews are now scattered over all the face of the earth, God has promised, by the mouth of his holy prophets, to restore again to them the land they love. He will not do this unless they fulfill their part of the contract, for the covenant is an "everlasting one," and his part of it is only as a reward of faithfulness in the discharge of their part. Since the Jews continue to follow the law of circumcision, under an everlasting covenant, how can baptism take its place? But, says one, it does not take its place; it only stands in the same relation. Well, my friend, how do you account for this: under the old covenant, although a Jew was circumcised at eight days old, he had to be baptized when he grew up. Under the gospel dispensation, the Jew, as well as the Gentile, is commanded to be baptized; but does that relieve him from being circumcised, and seeing that his sons are subjected to the same ordinance at eight days of age? No; for to be circumcised and have the same done for his sons, is his part of an "everlasting covenant," upon which the restoration of his loved land depends. Then, seeing that he has been commanded, under both dispensations, to be baptized in order to enter the church, and that by the terms of an "everlasting covenant," he must be circumcised under both, how can baptism stand in the same relation under the new covenant as circumcision did under the old? Under both, the Jew must be baptized to receive a heavenly reward, and under both he must be circumcised in order to receive an earthly reward.

We fail to see how an ordinance carrying a promise of heavenly reward can stand in the same relation as an ordinance having only the promise of an earthly reward.

One section of the advocates of infant baptism calls attention to 1 Corinthians 10:1, 2:—

Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.

As proof that infant baptism was carried on among the Jews, Paul says all the fathers were baptized. Will anyone say no infants were among them? It is very evident that there is some limitation to the number of "fathers" who were baptized, after the exit from Egypt. Many of the fathers had died before that time; many had not been born. To argue that all the fathers, without limitation, were baptized on that occasion would be palpable absurdity. Since there must be a limitation, who shall say where that limitation ends? By using the term "fathers," Paul excludes from that sentence all the females in the Israelitish camp; and yet we know that the females as well as the males passed through the sea. If, then, the passing through the sea, and the baptism of the females, escaped the notice of Paul, when framing this sentence, would he be likely to include in the same sentence the little unconscious male children? Why did he forget the female children if that text is an evidence of the baptism of infants?

To prove that there were no unconscious baptisms, we will ask you to consider another of the writings of Paul:—

Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness: when your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years.—Heb. 3:8,9.

Will our pedobaptist friends affirm that the little unconscious babes in the Israelitish camp actually hardened their hearts, tempted the Lord, proved him, and saw his works forty years? If they will not affirm this, they must admit that the term "fathers" applies only to those who have attained to years of discretion and accountability. By conceding this, they hand us the key to their position, regarding the baptism of the "fathers" under Moses.

Again, Hebrews 4:2, referring to these same "fathers," says:—

For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them.

Do you, dear reader, think that the gospel was preached unto little unconscious babes? and yet the record says that the gospel was preached unto the fathers; and the little ones—if they lived—would afterward be called fathers. We are forced to the conclusion that if the gospel was preached to any children that might be included in the term "fathers," that the preaching did not occur until they had reached an age when they could intelligently hear and comprehend it. Why the preaching of this gospel? For no other reason than to call them to repentance and baptism. Preaching first, baptism after belief and repentance.

Having examined what are termed the most positive scriptural proofs, we leave the reader to judge whether the statements that "infant baptism" is "apostolic in origin" or "warranted in scripture" are true or not. Here are several candid admissions by lead-pedobaptist writers, with reference to the scripturalness of infant baptism.

The most eminent writer of all, Dr. Wall, says:—

Among all the persons that are recorded as baptized by the apostles, there is no express mention of any infants.

Dr. Burnett says:—

There is no express precept or rule given in the New Testament for the baptism of infants.

Martin Luther, the noted reformer, says:—

It cannot be proved that infant baptism was instituted by Christ, or by the first Christians after the apostles.

Erasmus, another reformer, says in his notes on Romans 6:14:—

The apostle does not seem to treat of infants. It was not the custom for infants to be baptized.

Dr. Hanna, editor of North British Review, says:—

The baptismal service [of the English church] is founded upon scripture, but its application to unconscious infants is destitute of any express scriptural warrant. Scripture knows nothing of the baptism of infants.

Neander, the pedobaptist historian, says:—

It is certain that Christ did not ordain infant baptism.

Dr. Miller, of Princeton Presbyterian Theological Seminary, says:—

The fact is that during the whole three score years after the ascension of Christ, which is embraced in the New Testament history, we have no hint of the baptism of infants born of Christian parents.

Let see if any of the writers of the first and second centuries say anything about the baptism of infants.

Clemens, who is supposed to have been a companion of Paul, says:—

They are right subjects of baptism who have passed through an examination and instruction.

Ignatius, who was acquainted with Peter, Paul, and John, says:—

Baptism ought to be accompanied with faith, love, and patience after preaching.

The other writers of this age (first century) were "Clemens of Rome," Polycarp, Hermes, and Barnabas (?), but we do not find any mention of infant baptism in their writings.

Dr. F. A. Cox, quoted by Orchard, says that the writers of the second century were: Justin Martyr, Athenagorus, "Theophilus of Antioch," Tatian, Minucius, Felix, Irenæus, and "Clemens of Alexandria," who so far from speaking of infant baptism never once utter a syllable upon the subject.

We also submit the following testimony from two of the leading historians.

Dr. Mosheim, writing of the first century, says:—

Then none were admitted to baptism, but such as had been previously instructed in the principal points of Christianity, and had also given satisfactory proofs of pious dispositions and upright intentions.—Part 2, chap. 3, verse 5.

Of the second century, he says:—

The sacrament of baptism was administered publicly twice every year, at the festivals of Easter and Pentecost, or Whitsuntide. . . . The persons that were to be baptized, after they had repeated the creed, confessed and renounced their sins, and particularly the Devil and his pompous allurements, were immersed under water, and received into Christ's kingdom by a solemn invocation.—Part 2, chap. 4, verse 13.

Curcellæus says:—

The baptism of infants, in the first two centuries after Christ, was altogether unknown; but in the third and fourth was allowed by some few. In the fifth, and following ages, it was generally received. The custom of baptizing infants did not begin before the third age after Christ was born. In the former ages no trace of it appears, and it was introduced without the command of Christ.

If it was not introduced by Christ, nor taught during the first two centuries, what excuse can be found for its later introduction?

As an answer to this question, we submit the following from the great pedobaptist writer, Neander:—

Baptism was at first administered only to adults, as men were accustomed to conceive of baptism and faith as strictly connected. We have all reason for not deriving infant baptism from apostolic institution, and the recognition of it (which followed somewhat later) as an apostolic tradition serves to confirm this hypothesis.

The following is also in point:—

Question:—Why should not the scripture alone be the rule of faith, without having recourse to apostolic tradition?

Answer:—Because infant baptism, and several other necessary articles are either not at all contained in scripture, or at least are not plain in scripture without the help of tradition.—Roman Catholic Manual of Controversy.

Neander voices the opinion of a large section of pedobaptists when he says:—

Infant baptism is not derived from apostolic institution, but from apostolic tradition.

How the apostles could hold and hand down to others a tradition of something neither taught, instituted, or practiced by them, is indeed a conundrum we would like our infant sprinkling friends to explain. Perhaps they have followed a precedent established by the scribes and Pharisees of old, who, when they desired to add something to the already written law made the addition under the pretext of "the tradition of the elders" (Mark 7:3). In Mark 7:9, Jesus denounced this policy by saying:—

Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

Let us be very careful how we receive vague traditions, lest we too be told at the last day:—

In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.—Matt. 15:9.

The testimony introduced has shown that the doctrine of infant baptism was not practiced or taught in the first two centuries; but at the beginning of the third century a doctrine was being taught and generally received, which afterward led to the doctrine of infant baptism. This was the doctrine, that little innocent babes—sinless creatures—were by birth, "sinful," "wholly corrupt," and "heirs of hell." As this doctrine began to gain ground and to be firmly believed in, maternal love began to assert itself. The loving mother could not bear the thought that the little one she loved (should it die in infancy) would be consigned to an endless hell. Her very soul revolted against it—and well it might. Such a doctrine denies the atonement of Christ, and dethrones the justice of God. If, like us, she could have taken her blessed Bible and read the words of a loving Savior, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," she might have been reassured. But she had no printed Bible which she could read, and even if she knew of the Savior's words, she could not take her Bible in her hands and be sure of them as we can. But of one thing she was sure, if the doctrine of the church was true—and I don't suppose she doubted this—her child would go to hell if it died in infancy. Was there no way out of the difficulty? No way to purge the little innocent from its inherent corruption, and the sin which the church said was upon it? Ah! had it not been a doctrine of the church right down from the time of Jesus, that baptism was for the remission of sin? Would not God remit her baby's sin, and purge its corrupt little soul, if it was baptized? And so about this time we have one of these mothers named Quintilla writing to Tertullian, the bishop of the church at Carthage, asking his consent to the baptism of her little ones.

In his reply to her, Tertullian said, among other things:—

> The Lord does indeed say, "Forbid them not to come unto me," and let them come when they are growing up; let them come and learn, and let them be instructed when they come; and when they understand Christianity, let them profess themselves Christians.

Tertullian, in another of his writings, says:—

> Adults are the only proper subjects of baptism, because fasting, confession of sins, prayer, profession, renouncing the devil and his works, are required of the baptized.

This is the first writer who mentions infant baptism, and he in his capacity of bishop opposes it.

But some pedobaptists argue that,

> Infant baptism must have existed, else there would have been no occasion for Tertullian to oppose it. If [?] it existed, then it must have existed from the first, because we have no evidence of its previous introduction, or of any opposition to it.

Irresistible logic!

Tertullian opposed it because a mother had written him asking his permission to the baptism of her children. The fact that such a high dignitary as a bishop of the church opposed it, is a strong proof that it did not exist in the church at that time. Why should a bishop oppose the practice of a doctrine taught by his church? How long would he retain his bishopric if he did so? We have no need to search for a previous introduction of the doctrine, or the opposition to it. Here was the introduction, and here the opposition to it—by Tertullian. Regarding its existence from the first, we refer you to the testimony of the leading pedobaptist writers which we have before quoted. After Tertullian's opposition to the introduction of this practice, the demand for infant baptism became so great that it was allowed in certain of the churches.

In the year 230 A. D., Origen defended the practice, by writing:—

> This is the reason little children are baptized, because by the sacrament of baptism the pollution of our birth is taken away.

By this time the corrupt doctrine of original sin had produced its child; for now the church had acceded to the requests for infant baptism made by the mothers, with a view to the eternal salvation of their little ones.

In the year 257 A. D, Cyprian, who succeeded Tertullian as bishop of Carthage, received a letter from one Fidus, asking "how soon after birth it was proper to baptize." Cyprian called a council of sixty-seven bishops, who in answer to this question gave the "opinion":—

> That the grace of God should not be withheld from any son of man, and that a child might be kissed with a kiss of charity as soon as it is born. They continued by saying, As no person is kept off from baptism and grace, how much reason is there to prohibit an infant, who, being newly born, has no other sin, save that being descended from Adam according to the flesh.

Forty years had passed since Tertullian so severely opposed the introduction of infant baptism; but what a change those forty years had brought! From that time on it has always been practiced in the Roman church; but then, and ever since, it has always been taught in connection with the doctrine of "original sin." But why is infant baptism practiced by those who accept the statement of Jesus, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," in preference to the Romish doctrine, that children are "totally depraved," "wholly corrupt," and "heirs of hell"?

Note what Origen, the first advocate of infant baptism, has to say on this phase of the subject:—

> Let it be considered what is the reason. Whereas baptism is given for the forgiveness of sins, infants are by the usage of the church baptized, when if there was nothing in infants that wanted forgiveness and mercy, the grace of baptism would be needless to them.

Dear reader, do you believe that there is really anything in a little innocent babe that requires forgiveness and mercy? Remember that Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven;" and don't forget that Origen, the original champion of infant baptism, has said, "If there was nothing in infants that wanted forgiveness and mercy; the grace of baptism would be needless to them."

We will now briefly answer several questions often asked us by those who have grown accustomed to present their children to the Lord in some way: Is there any harm in baptizing an infant?

Yes! for as at first it was instituted to cleanse the child from sin, the act is a blank contradiction of our Savior's statement, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Is there no harm in contradicting Jesus? But is it not right to dedicate a child to God in that way, if you do not believe in the doctrine of "original sin"?

If you do not believe in the doctrine of "original sin," it is a solemn mockery, to have your child baptized for the forgiveness of sins it does not possess.

But did not Jesus say, "Forbid not the children to come unto me"? Are you not forbidding the little ones to come unto him when you denounce infant baptism?

When Jesus said, "forbid them not to come unto me," he did not utter one syllable about baptism. We read in Matthew 19:13, that mothers brought their little ones to Jesus, not that he might baptize them, but "that he might put his hands on them and pray." This was how our Lord presented the little ones to his heavenly Father.

We follow his example today, and when we dedicate our children to the service of the Lord, the minister puts his hands on them and prays that God might receive and protect them, and henceforth assist the parents in the training of the child, that it might be always worthy to be called a child of God.

But there are those who forbid children to come to the Lord in his own appointed way. Those who baptize infants put up the ordinance of baptism as a barrier between Jesus and the little ones.

Dear reader, if you desire to present your child to the Lord, do it in his own appointed way.

We now submit a summary of the main proofs adduced in this division of the subject:—

1. Jesus told his disciples to baptize—those who believed. They baptized no one who did not profess belief.

2. Infants have not the capacity to believe.

3. Infant baptism was founded on the doctrine of "original sin."

4. That doctrine is false; for since Jesus has been slain, we have the assurance that the Lamb of God has taken away "the sin of the world" (Adam's sin), and that every man will be judged according to his works, and not because of Adam's transgression.

5. Since infants have not contracted the disease of sin, it is not necessary for them to enter God's spiritual hospital—the church.

6. That infant baptism was not instituted by Christ or his apostles.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

7. It was introduced under the plea of "apostolic tradition."

8. The apostles could not hold and hand down to others, a doctrine neither taught nor practiced by them.

9. Baptism does not take the place of circumcision.

10. Circumcision did not admit into the Jewish church.

11. That no unconscious children were baptized among the Israelites.

12. That we have no mention of infant baptism in the New Testament, nor among any of the writers of the first two centuries.

13. That it was first mentioned in connection with the doctrine of "original sin" at the beginning of the third century.

14. To baptize an infant for the remission of sins is to contradict Jesus.

15. It is solemn mockery to baptize an infant for the remission of sins it does not possess.

16. That the first pedobaptist writer says that if children have no sin, baptism is needless to them.

17. That those who baptize infants "forbid" the children to come unto him in his own appointed way.

18. His own way of dedicating children to God is by the putting on of hands, and prayer, called blessing.

We will conclude by repeating our answer to the first question: All persons who have heard the gospel of Jesus Christ, and have been converted to a belief in its precepts, are fit subjects for baptism. Unbelievers should have no place in the church, even though the unbeliever is a little child.

(To be continued.)

ARE GOD AND CHRIST TWO PERSONAGES?

Swedenborg, the founder of the New Church, says, God—the Eternal Father came to earth and took upon him the human to save men, and that he made the human and divine from the divine in himself. It is according to the doctrine of the New Jerusalem Church that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is both God and man, and although he is God and man, still there is not two, but one Christ. He is one because the divine took to itself the human; yea, he is altogether one, for he is one person.—See small treatise of his work, pp. 29, 30, taken from the Athanasian creed.

Swedenborg claims—the inner or Spirit of Christ to be the Eternal Father, or the Jehovah. The body this Jehovah received from the Virgin Mary was called the Son. Hence the Christ or Son because of the body.—See p. 67 of same treatise.

We will now examine the inner man, or the "me" or the "I" mentioned in the word of God, which this author of the New Church calls the Son. (See pp. 82, 83, of same treatise.) Here he quotes John 17: 7:—

Now they have known that all things whatsoever thou [the inner man] hast given me [the outer man, or body, or Son] are of thee [the inner man or the Father].

We will first notice the "me."

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bone and sinew.—Job 10: 11.

Here we see that the "me" spoken of has reference to the inner man or spirit.

And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me.—John 15: 5, 6.

Here we notice the "me" and the "I" have reference to the inner man and not the outer man; and besides, we notice that there are two distinct personages spoken of here, Christ and the Father. When Christ said, "the glory which I," the inner man, "had with thee," he could not have meant that his body had glory with the Father, as it was not then in existence. If it was then in existence, then Swedenborg's theory would be wrong, hence it would not do for him to take that line of argument, hence the "I" and "me" spoken of here have reference to the inner man and were separate from the Father, hence not the Father himself, as Swedenborg says. We have also the Savior's own testimony concerning the "I" spoken of:—

I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I.—John 14: 30.

Now notice his prayer to his Father:

And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, etc.—John 17: 11.

Hence we see that the "I" and the "me" are still in the world and praying to the Father which is in heaven. We herein notice the "me" and the "I" on earth and the Father in heaven, in another place altogether. Now would it not be deception in the Son or the Christ, to try to influence his people that he had a Father in heaven when he, the Father, was within him and on earth, as Swedenborg would have us believe. We notice, in John 17: 18, that God the Father sent this "me" that Christ speaks of into the world.

As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.

Verse 25 says:—

O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee: and these [speaking of his apostles] have known that thou hast sent me.

Hence we see that Christ speaks of himself and his Father again as two distinct persons or beings. It would be just as consistent, in my mind, to say that the Father was the inner man, or soul, or spirit of those men whom Christ said he sent into the world, as to say that the spirit, or inner man of Christ himself was the very Father, or Jehovah. The first apostles understood that Christ and the Father were two persons, and that Christ was with the Father and existed coequal with the Father before the beginning of the world. See John 1: 1–4 where he says,—

All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made.

See also Paul's letter to the Ephesians 3: 9:—

And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ.

And Hebrews 1: 2, 3:—

Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high.

See also verses 4, 5, and also Genesis 1: 26:—

And God said, Let us make man in our image, showing that Christ existed in the spirit before he took a body, and was coequal with the Father in the creation of the world, and was altogether a separate personality from the Eternal Father, although he might be the Father of this world, or the spirits of this world, for all I know, but not the Eternal Father, or the Great First Cause. In the First Epistle of John, third chapter, the saints are called the sons of God. It seems to me if Christ was the Son because of the body, as Swedenborg says, then would not the saints be as much Christ as the one which was crucified in Jerusalem over eighteen hundred years ago. The scriptures teach us that their bodies are the temples for God to dwell in. See 1 Corinthians 3: 16, 17:—

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

Now let us see Hebrews 10: 5. Paul, speaking of Christ, says:—

A body hast thou prepared me.

And the apostle goes on to say the inner man was Christ, when he speaks of the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, and then says in the twelfth verse,

This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God.

This also shows the two distinct personages; for if Christ were the very Eternal Father himself, how could he sit down at his own right hand?

If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.—Colossians 3: 1.

Who being the brightness of his glory [meaning the eternal Father], and the express image of his person [showing that he, the Father, was a person], and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty of high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father and he shall be to me a Son?—Heb. 1: 3, 4, 5.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?—Heb. 1: 13

Paul tells us that this same person, called the Son, was with the Father at the creation of the worlds, and helped to make them. (See Heb. 1: 2, also John 1: 3.)

And in the face of all this, the great prophet, Swedenborg, tells us that there was no Christ until about 1900 years ago.

Which will we believe? Paul, and John, and Christ, or Swedenborg? Listen to Christ's own words or prayer:—

And now, O father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I [the inner man or spirit] had with thee before the world was.—John 17: 5.

For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me [the inner man or spirit] and have believed that I [the spirit] came out from God. I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.—John 16: 27, 28.

We also draw the attention of the reader to the Savior's words to Mary at the sepulcher, after his resurrection.

Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself and said unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master. Jesus saith unto her, touch me not; for I am not yet ascended unto my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God.—John 20: 16, 17.

Does this not prove that Christ and God, the eternal Father, are two separate and distinct personages; or does it prove the Christ to be an impostor; for according to his own statements, he, the Christ, the outer man, as well as the inner man, is on earth, and his Father in heaven, which could not be if Swedenborg's theory is right, wherein he states that God, the eternal Father, came to earth and took upon him the human form to save men, and made the human divine, from the divine in himself. Again, he says it is according to the doctrine of the church that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is both God and man; and although he is God and man, still there are not two, but one Christ; he is one because the divine took to itself the human. Yea, he is altogether one person. (See small treatise, pages 29, 30, taken from the Athanasian Creed.)

We will now notice Paul's statement, wherein he says this Christ would reign until he destroyed the last enemy, which was death, then he would deliver the church or kingdom up to his Father, that God may be over all. (1 Cor. 15: 24, 25.) James says that the body without the spirit is dead. (James 2: 26). How could Christ, which Swedenborg calls the body, work independently, or without the spirit, which he calls the eternal Father. Take the "me" spoken of in the Bible, or spirit, from man, and he is a helpless form and cannot work. Then, Paul, you must be mistaken when you say the Christ will do this work; for if our dear friend Swedenborg's theory is right, it is the Father which does this work. How would it sound to say, The Father or the spirit within Christ, which Swedenborg calls the Father, will reign until he destroys the last enemy, which is death. Then he, the Father, will deliver the kingdom up to the Father—meaning himself; would that not sound like deception, and silly? I think so.

Paul further states that the "outer man" perished, but "the inward man is renewed day by day" (2 Cor. 4: 16). Christ had that inner man, or spirit, within him, and that spirit preëxisted independent of the Father, as much as Paul's spirit or any other man's; and he, the Christ, demonstrated that fact when he said:—

O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.—John 17: 5.

Here we notice the "I" and the "me" were with the Father before the worlds were. Compare Christ's statement to his apostles, recorded in John 15: 4, where he says:—

Abide in me, and I in you.

Now if the "me" and "I" spoken of here were the body, or Son because of the body, and the spirit within the Father, then the body of Christ, according to this statement, would have to go into the apostles, and the apostles' body into Christ's! Then we are forced to believe the "I" and the "me," spoken of here, have no reference to the outer man, but refer to the inner man, and not the body as Swedenborg teaches. I will now give some catch passages, as to God having a body, before Christ took a body at Jerusalem. Exodus 24: 9, 10: Here we see he had hands and feet. Exodus 8: 19. Has a finger. Gave Moses tables of stone, "written with the finger of God" (Ex. 31: 18). Compare Deuteronomy 9: 10 and Psalms 8: 3: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers." Had a heart. God "sought him a man after his own heart" (1 Sam. 13: 14). Luke says, God "found David the son of Jesse, a man after his own heart" (Acts 13: 22). Has a "heart" and "soul" (Jer. 32: 41). Had eyes (2 Chron. 16: 9). Compare this with Psalms 34: 15, and Proverbs 15: 3, and Amos 9: 8. Has ears (Psalms 34: 15; James 5: 4). Had a nose (Isaiah 65: 5). Had back parts (Exodus 33: 23). Micah saw him. "I saw the Lord sitting upon his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand." Abraham saw him and talked with him face to face (Gen. 18: 1–33). This was 1898 years before Christ took a body at Jerusalem, and yet Swedenborg tells us that God, the eternal Father, was in the Son, and had no body until he took a body at Jerusalem. Stephen saw Christ after his ascension into heaven.

We will now summon him in the case, and this is his testimony:—

Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.—Acts 7: 55, 56.

We all believe that Stephen was a good man, and you will notice that Acts 7: 55 says that Stephen was "full of the Holy Ghost." Now, dear reader, which of those two men's testimony will we receive—Swedenborg or Stephen's? Swedenborg says he was full of the Spirit and carried into heaven and saw the glory of God, and learned many precious truths; and one of these truths was that the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is both God and man; and although he is God and man, still there are not two, but one Christ. He is one because the divine took to itself the human. Yea, he is altogether one, and not two persons. Now Stephen was full of the Spirit, and testifies that there are two personages, called God and the Son. We will see if we can sustain Stephen's testimony by the Bible.

John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, he that cometh after me is preferred before me, for he was before me.—John 1: 15.

The woman saith unto him, I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things. Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he.—John 4: 25, 26.

Here John states that Christ was before him, and also that he was to come; and Jesus bears testimony that he is the one spoken of here as the one that was before John, and that was to come. How could this be if there were no Christ until the Father came and took upon him the human? which human was Christ, as Swedenborg has it. He was sent of God,—

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved.—John 3: 17.

For I have not spoken of myself: but the Father which sent me, gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.—John 12: 49.

Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.—John 8: 58.

As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.—John 17: 18.

And now I come to thee; and these things I speak in the world.—John 17: 13.

Here we again see that this "me" and "I," or the Christ, preëxisted, and was sent into the world, and was before Abraham, and finished the work his Father gave him to do, and leaves the world and goes back to his Father, and where he was sent from, and was seen by the dying martyr Stephen, standing at the right hand of his

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Father, whom Jesus testifies had sent him into the world. Please notice the word sent.

Now we will compare the testimony of the latter day prophet with the testimony of Christ and his apostles and masters:—

Now this caused us to marvel, for it was given unto us of the Spirit; and while we meditated upon these things, the Lord touched the eyes of our understandings, and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about; and we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fullness; and saw the holy angels, and they who are sanctified before his throne, worshiping God and the Lamb, who worship him forever and ever. And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created.—Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3.

If God, the eternal Father, came to earth, and took upon him the human, and made the human divine, and this human or body, was called the Son, then God must have two bodies. The Apostle John says:—

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him.—1 John 3: 2.

Do we understand by this that we shall have two bodies? Then, it seems, according to Swedenborg's theory, we will. We also notice, in Revelation 20: 4, that John states that Christ is to reign on the earth a thousand years and a little space, and that God is still in heaven, which would be a thing impossible, if God and Christ were not two different and distinct personages. This same apostle warns us against deceivers, he says:—

Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is an antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.—1 John 2: 22, 23.

Now, dear reader, I wish you to examine the evidences in the case, and remember the sayings of the Prophet Isaiah, wherein he says,—

To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because is no light in them.

Ever praying that truth may prevail, and reach the honest in heart, I am your humble servant,

TESTIMONY OF HEALING.

I have often thought, as I sat reading the testimonies of sisters of like precious faith, that I would give my testimony of God's blessings to me. I became a member of the Baptist Church at the age of fourteen. Later I became identified with the Methodist, and then the Christian, and last of all the Congregational. But I was not satisfied with any of them, for the way I understood my Bible and the way the churches taught did not agree. I always tried to live believing God was unchangeable, "the same yesterday, today, and forever." The first sermon I heard preached by a Latter Day Saint elder, was preached by Elder J. H. Wells, of Bozeman. I was so impressed, I said to Elder Wells: "That is the first sermon of Jesus I ever heard." But to think of being called a Mormon was too much! What! give up all my friends? Still, I believed it was God's own church, so I gave my name for baptism, praying day and nearly all the night to God, for him to send my father to tell me if it was the true church. Towards morning I dreamed father came. He only smiled, laid his hand on my head and said, "Wait, wait." I awoke, feverish and sick, saying, "I will do as father tells me."

I went to studying the church works, taking God at his word, "if any one lack knowledge, let him ask of God." Still, if I saw anyone coming, I would hide the books, through fear, for my husband and family did not believe there was any good in the Mormon church. Then it came to my mind, "study to show thyself a workman that need not be ashamed," etc., also, "My word is truth." From that time, all fear of what the world or my loved ones would say, vanished.

That was in February, 1898. On July 2, our loved daughter Martha was laid to rest. I went to Billings, in answer to telegram. I did not know she was dangerously ill till I got off the train. When I asked, "Is she better?" they said, "She is dead!" The shock was too much for me; I did not know when I got home. They took me to a hotel, where I lay for a week before I could be moved. I never saw my loved one. But as I lay there, I made a solemn promise to God, if he would grant me life I would be baptized if I ever got an opportunity. In August, my brother died. Elder J. H. Wells was sent for to preach the funeral sermon; but as services were over he returned home, so I did not then get an opportunity to obey.

I kept studying and marking my Bible, till the whole Bible seemed to be Latter Day Saint doctrine, so I came to the conclusion Christ's teachings were all Latter Day Saint teachings.

In the following January, Elder Wells visited us again. I met him at the door, and told him that I was ready for baptism. I could now understand why my father said, "Wait." My heart was not ready at that time, but I could now say, as the eunuch, "I believe that Jesus is the Son of God; see, here is water, what doth hinder me from being baptized." So, on the 11th of January I was buried with Christ in baptism, at the age of fifty-four. When Elder Wells laid his hands on my head, asking God to bestow his Holy Spirit upon me, something said to me, "If you will live faithful, you shall soon know of this doctrine, whether it be true or not." All my life, from childhood, I had very poor health; and as I grew older I would drop as if dead. The doctors, both east and west, said the same thing, that my heart and brain were affected, and that I was liable to die any moment. Six weeks after my baptism, my mother, aged eighty-one, took sick and died. And now comes the promise of God to me. Mother's body was taken to town, ready for burial. Elder Gomer Reese, of Bozeman, came the next day to preach the funeral sermon. I was taken to the Grand Hotel, to await the hour of services. They brought Elder Reese into the parlor to see me, as none of us had met him before. They say I took his hand when they told me who he was, but I was sinking fast. I was taken into an adjoining room, and a doctor sent for. He came, made examination, and told my husband he could do nothing for me. My son, C. D. Fell, was a believer in divine science, and after the doctor gave me up, a lady believer in divine science set to work with me, to try to restore me. In about two hours the doctor came back and said there was no use, that if I were brought to my mind would be gone. But the woman still worked; she did not like the idea of sending for a Mormon elder as the word of God directs; but at last she gave me up, and said she could nothing.

So Elder Gomer Reese was sent for. He came, and asked my husband if he wished him to pray for me. My husband answered, Yes.

Brother Reese said: "I can do nothing of myself, but I can be the instrument in God's hands. Let us see what God will do for us."

They say he uttered a powerful prayer for me, rose to his feet, laid his hands on me, prayed again, asking God to come down and make bare his arm of power in my behalf, and, in the name of Christ, asked God to rebuke the disease. My cramped body became relaxed, and I regained consciousness, and spoke, and said: "God did come down, did he not?"

While Elder Reese was administering to me, I had the following beautiful vision: All at once the room seemed to get so light, bright as the sun. I looked to see where the light was coming from, and I saw a door open in the ceiling above me, and a man came through. He seemed to float in space, as he came down to where I lay. He raised his hand, and struck me quite hard, and said: "What are you lying here for?"

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I said, "I am sound asleep; I can't wake up; I can't breathe or move."

He said: "Do you believe that God has power to work as he did anciently?"

"I believe," said I.

He again asked, "Do you believe the church you have just joined is of God?"

I said, "I believe!"

He struck me again, and said, "Wake up; and if you will live faithful to the covenant you have made, you shall never sleep like this again, till I come for you." And the vision closed.

On regaining consciousness, I said: "O, how tired I feel."

Elder Reese told me, in the name of Christ, to sleep and rest, that I was healed. In about half an hour I awoke and ate a bowl of oysters and crackers.

My faith is so strong that I know if I am faithful I will have no more trouble with my heart. It is now almost two years since this happened. My health never was so good.

Dear sisters, pray for me, that I may remain faithful, and that my loved ones may see the truth and obey it. In gospel bonds, Editors Herald:—The work in this part of the field is almost at a stand still, although the work throughout the Kewanee district, under the management of J. W. Adams, our district president, has improved greatly in the past two years.

I was invited, a short time ago, by Bro. James Highman, of Fairview, Illinois, to come down and speak for them in a Methodist church which he had secured for the purpose. I went by way of Galesburg; and as we rolled across the beautiful prairies, and down along the winding Spoon river, our thoughts were in advance of us, and we found ourselves wondering what the outcome of our meeting would be. At London Mill several well dressed individuals came aboard, among them a young man, with an excited expression and seemingly very nervous. I made up my mind he was a minister, and introduced myself to him. In our conversation he told me he was a student of Heading college, and a minister of the M. E. persuasion. He was going down near Fairview to officiate, and to deliver his initiatory sermon the next day.

On arriving in Fairview, I was met by Bro. Highman and son. At the house we met Sr. Highman. After supper we went to the church, thinking we would have a very few out, as the roads were quite muddy, but to our surprise there was a large and attentive congregation. They had never heard any Latter Day Saint preaching, only that done by Bro. and Sr. Highman. Rev. Mr. Wilson was also there, and was a very close listener. The speaker was well blessed, and spoke about an hour. The next morning we all attended Sabbath school, after which we had the pleasure of listening to Rev. Wilson for about thirty minutes. He gave them quite a nice little talk. In the evening the writer spoke again to a house full of people. After speaking for an hour and fifteen minutes some of the people said they would have liked to have had me speak longer.

The people of Fairview are intelligent and fair minded. Bro. and Sr. Highman have built up a reputation in their neighborhood that is a help to the cause and belief they espouse. They are honored and respected by all; and while they are prospering in earthly things, they are also honoring the Lord with their substance. I am sorry to say that too many of the Saints, when they are a little prosperous, forget their duty to their God, and some of them pay little or no tithing. These things ought not to be.

In bonds,

MIDDLE VALLEY, Idaho, Nov. 11.

Dear Brother:—I thought last spring at conference the provision to raise money for the college debt by subscription on the conditions that one thousand names or subscriptions of twenty-five dollars be obtained before any were payable, was of doubtful propriety. If one can pay on those terms, surely we can pay without the whole number. I will pay mine in January, or when I return to Albion, likely in February at least. I do not like to see the constant appeal to the Saints, because it should not be necessary. If the money is not raised as provided in the conference provision, my twenty-five dollars will be subject to the scholarship privilege. It does seem that there should be Saints enough to pay that little debt without so much entreaty.

Where I am writing this letter, the temperature is too cold for comfort, but ere I go north further I concluded to send this pledge of my sub. I am leaving my satchels here for a few days while I go about thirty miles beyond, and then return to Weiser, and then to Nez Perce.

All are not Saints in spirit, whose names are enrolled as such. Ever for Zion's weal,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Nov. 17.

Editors Herald:—The Saints here commenced the building of their new church this morning, the Ladies' Aid Society having the honor of digging the first spadeful of dirt for the foundation, they also being the first to make a very liberal donation towards the purchasing of the lot. The lot is paid for, and the contract for the lumber is let to Garrett Lumber Co. The work will be done by the Saints themselves; and what the Saints may lack in finances is made up in zeal, especially by the Ladies' Aid Society. We have not commenced without counting the cost; and while we shall have to rustle, we have determined to do that, and the Saints are contributing nobly. We do not wish to ask for help outside of the district; yet if there are any Saints who feel an interest in a church building here, and wish to help, it will be thankfully received, I am sure.

The branch is now doing well, and we are hopeful for the future. We wish this church to be built by Latter Day Saints, and if there are any Saints who wish to figure on the plastering, we would prefer them. There will be about three hundred yards. We either want the three coat work, or the new granite finish. We trust we may hear from some one.

All well in this part of Zion, I think. Two more to baptize today. In bonds,

CHILLIWACK, B. C., Nov. 8.

Editors Herald: — It is with feelings of greatest joy that I inform you of the arrival of our president, Elder R. C. Evans. His coming has been long expected; but better late than never. All are happy; indeed, I know of no better way of certifying the grateful throbbings of British Columbia Saints than by forwarding you a copy of "address of welcome" extended our brother shortly after his arrival.

We are hopeful of a change coming in the dreary monotony that has for some time pervaded this mission. Long have we felt the need of an associate elder to afford us assistance in the performance of arduous duties.

Hoping for the best,

D. MACGREGOR.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME.

The Saints of British Columbia to Elder R. C. Evans, Greeting; Dear Brother:—It is with pleasure that we, the Saints of British Columbia, endeavor to express and extend to you our welcome on your first visit to this mission.

Since the first intimation of your intention was delivered to us, we have looked forward to the time of realization with the deepest feeling of pleasure; and when we consider the difficulties that lay in your pathway, the calls for work in many parts of your field of labor, demanding incessant attention, the distance to be traversed ere you would reach us, the fewness of our numbers, we are indeed grateful to our loving heavenly Father, who has opened up the way and granted the fulfillment of your expectations and the realization of our desires. To us it seems an omen that the Master has other "sheep" among the glens and valleys of this rugged province, and we trust that through your personal counsel and instruction, as his servant, Israel called may be edified and Israel scattered may be called.

And now, dear brother, although you are many leagues from home and loved ones, and to outward appearance among strangers, yet we trust that through our rough exterior a portion of that inner light may shine and make you feel at home. We do not look upon you as a stranger unknown to us. Many of our number have formed your acquaintance through the columns of church literature, and the bond thus formed and strengthened by the Spirit of our Master, given to members of his household, goes out to you, bidding you welcome; and the magnetic rays of "love one another" encircling our hearts and homes again, bid you welcome.

We are aware that you cannot remain long with us, knowing that you must be about your Father's business. But while those duties necessitate your stay being short, we would impress upon you, that our home doors are ever ajar, and may you ever find us ready to assist the common cause of our enlistment, as brothers and sisters enrolled under the banner of King Immanuel. We thank you under God, for sending us our faithful missionary and his wife, who have carried to many of us for the first time news of the restored message. We are glad that he shall have your personal assistance in carrying on the work, and to this end we, with him, again bid you welcome; and may the love that the Spirit gives and brings bind us closer in the days of our association here until we merge into that kingdom where all is love.

We then ask you to accept this expression of our feelings in the spirit it is given, which is the spirit of our Lord and Savior.

31 Chatham Place, Hackney,
LONDON, England, Oct. 30.

Dear Editor and Readers:—It is with pleasure that I again pen you a few lines to acquaint your numerous readers with London's present spiritual aspects and attainments. Our respected and beloved brother, Elder A. N. Bishop, of Cardiff, South Wales, came to this city on the first day of the present month, having left us but last Monday, to return to his native land.

He said, from the moment of his entrance into this city, that he felt his labors to be more needed inside than outside of the branch; and well and nobly has he performed this important mission within the precincts of the London branch, as all can testify. His noble and zealous discourses, fraught with pregnant and poignant illustrations from holy writ, have sunk deep, and found a lodgment in the hearts of London's scattered Saints; for, though a vast and populous city, London holds many, many scattered ones. Not, indeed, in the sense of their being (as many are in your larger and vaster territories) isolated from all human companionship and association, but isolated and alienated from the "communion and fellowship of the Saints," by a spiritual declension from the truth, and an imbibing of that spirit which, as our dear Master expressed it, is not of the Father, but is of the world. (John.) Not for a very long time has there been such a recrudescence of spiritual hopes and animation in these souls, or such a harmonious gathering together in love and union of the Saints of the London branch, as a whole.

Taking a retrospective view of the history of the struggling branch in this the metropolis of the world, it must be freely admitted that the men appointed by the church to labor here, have, one and all, in a worthy and honorable manner, sought to fulfill their high calling and vocation as the sent servants of the Most High; and as such are had in esteem by the London Saints for their trustworthy fidelity and rectitude.

We have not yet forgotten the heartfelt and well-seasoned exordiums of the two beloved brethren who left there shores in the early portion of the present year. I allude to Brn. F. G. Pitt and William Newton.

If, as it is written by the pen of inspiration, "The laborer is worthy of his hire," what shall be the reward of those who, "forsaking father, or mother, or wife, or children, or houses, or lands for His sake and the gospel's" journey to a land thousands of miles from their own, and there labor, early and late, in sowing the "incorruptible seed," even the bread of life? Nor does it, in the opinion of your correspondent, detract from either the certainty or the magnitude of their reward, when, as is the case in London, there be few that heed the gospel message, and fewer still that obey it.

There is, or I am greatly and grievously mistaken, still the divine and welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant," for the worn and saddened laborer returning without a solitary sheaf to garland his brow; for is it not written, "one soweth, and another reapeth"?

The edification and building up of the household of faith is a far less obtrusive kind of ministry than the gathering in by baptism of many precious souls; and moreover attracts far less notice and attention in a yearly or other periodical report home; but is it a work of less moment or less importance in the all-seeing eye of the Lord of Sabaoth?

I trow not as a slight aid to the realization of the importance of the work of the brother who, for instance, just ceased his labors here to return to Cardiff (viz. our brother Bishop), let me propound to your readers a simple sum in proportion, as follows: Let there be, as a result of outdoor and other missionary labors, fifty souls gathered into a certain branch or district during any given year. Let it be granted that of this number eleven or twelve are expelled during the two or three following years, from various causes; while during the following five years an average of seven each year leave the church of their own accord, either from lack of spiritual sustenance, or from want of understanding or agreement upon certain points of theory or doctrine. Query: How much has the church in the aggregate gained from her missionaries' labor in that said branch or district during the given year? Nor is the above, I am convinced, an exaggerated estimate of defections and losses during the five years in question.

But the point I wish to materially enforce upon my auditory, is this: Had the proper and necessary labors been bestowed upon the young and wavering disciples, coupled with adequate doctrinal instruction and effective moral supervision, would anything like the above decimal proportion have left, or become dereliet to the church?

Is not, then, dear reader, my original proposition both sound and logical; viz., that spiritual and educational labor bestowed upon the membership inside the portals of God's church of at least collateral importance with labor directed with the sole purpose of reaching the outside hearers, and thus, by baptism, causing accessions to the numerical aggregate?

Bro. Bishop, in one of his recent sermons, laid down with what appears to me perfect accuracy, the proposition that in themselves mere numbers are no true and trustworthy criterion of a church's position and prosperity in the sight of Him who shall judge all people with just judgment and in the unerring balances. I desire to associate myself with his dictum, and remain,

Your brother in Christ,

LA GRANDE, Oregon, Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:—I wish to add my testimonial to the blessed cause of Christ. It has been over four years since I entered the door of his kingdom. I have been blessed many times. Though isolated, I can tell my friends of the peace and joy I behold in living for the blessed Lord. May it soon please God to send a chosen vessel here to proclaim his blessed will. My prayer is that we may all live worthy the name we bear.

Your sister in Christ,
M. A. BARTMESS.

HOOD RIVER, Ore., Nov. 16.

Editors Herald:—As it is not very often that we see a letter in the Herald from Oregon, and as I'm always glad to read letters from my brethren in this field I will write a few lines so that you may know there is another place in this great northwest where the gospel banner is floating. "The attracting signs" are set up, and, as is to be expected in a new place, some few are trying to blow it down; others are stopping and investigating. It seems as though this place had been passed by our missionaries, for the people here seemed almost entirely ignorant concerning us people, but deeper search has proved that some wanderers from the fold have been here. We found traces of a number of the Autumn Leaves and the Inspired Translation of the Bible had found its way here. There has been a brother here, but it seems that he didn't say much about the work, as his children are in other churches and in the broad ways of the world, and outsiders scarcely knew of what he believed. However, we are making an effort to present the truth to the people, but with opposition the first cry seems, "O, well, you are all the same." Of course, Utah "Mormonism," has a few adherents here, so we had to work to show the difference between us. Bro. W. A. Goodwin, of Condon, Oregon, gave us a lift, and we have that "all-the-same" argument partly killed out; but what next? Well, those good, peaceable men who claim to represent the gospel of peace, commenced their cry, "Beware, oh, beware!" They attacked the character of Joseph Smith and others. This attack we answered from their own stand, and instead of making war with us, the war commenced in their own camp, and the preacher who made the attack has been trying to beg pardon of his own people, claiming he was sorry for doing as he did.

I am expecting Bro. D. L. Harris here soon, so we will make another effort to get the truth before the people.

If these few lines should meet the eyes of my brethren in Persia, Iowa, and Little Sioux district, I would say to them that I well remember where I first learned of the gospel we love, and that I'm not sorry of the step I took when I walked into the waters of baptism, and that I still rejoice in the work, and trying to live so that others may see the grandeur and glory of the gospel of Christ.

Hoping that we will continue to be faithful to the covenant we have made, I still remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

THOMAS CHAPMAN.

CHILLIWACK, B. C., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—I left London on Monday, October 22, 7:15 p. m. Had one hour's visit at St. Thomas; arrived in Chicago 7:50 a. m. Tuesday. Elder Strange met me, and with him I spent the day "doing the city." Remained all night.

Left Chicago 10:30 a. m. Wednesday; arrived Denver on Thursday, 2:30. Elder Shupe met me and took me to the residence of Joseph Schmutz. We spent a pleasant evening at Bro. and Sr. Everett's. Retired at Bro. Schmutz's.

With Elders Gilbert and Roush we visited the mining mills, watched the smelting process, and obtained specimens. The Saints of Denver gave me a splendid time, and I promised them that if I returned that way I would give them a Sunday.

Leaving Denver on Friday, 4:45 p. m., I arrived at Salt Lake on Saturday, 3:30 p. m. Bro. Barrows met me at the station and took me to his home. Sunday I talked morning and evening to our people in our nice little church. I here met Elder Peter Anderson, who remained with me nearly all the time I was in the city. We attended the tabernacle service, at three p. m. I listened to the great organ and the wonderful choir with wonder and delight. I am safe to say I never heard such music in my life before. Angus Cannon presided over the meeting, and two young missionaries did the talking.

On Monday we visited several points of interest: the temple, tabernacle, fort, lion house, eagle gate, Brigham's grave, and last, but not least, Brigham's monument, with his hand outstretched toward the bank and his back turned on the temple. We called at the residence of "Patriarch" John Smith. He was absent, but we had a splendid and profitable visit with his wife, "Aunt Helen." She appears to be a noble woman.

We spent a pleasant evening with President Joseph F. Smith. We found him not only kind and pleasant, but very friendly. I never was treated better in any home that I ever visited. We discussed, briefly, the leading objectionable feature of the Utah church, and he defended their claims as best he could.

The next morning, by invitation, we visited President Snow; had a long talk with him. He treated us with kindness. He, on the start, notified us he was not feeling very well, and while he was willing to tell what he knew, along certain lines, yet when I propounded a question or two, he lifted his hand and mildly said, "I am not in condition to discuss these matters."

We also met President Geo. Q. Cannon, who treated us with respect. President Smith invited us out to an entertainment in the Brigham Young theater. Bro. Anderson had an engagement and could not go so I went to President Smith's house, met another wife and family of his. His wife and son and some others went to the entertainment with us, and there I met and conversed with "Aunt Lucy" Kimball. She told me much that I have not time here to relate. When introduced by Joseph F. to her as "one of cousin Joseph's apostles," she gave me a warm grasp, and said, "I am so glad to meet you, why don't you come and be our apostle?" She, on parting said: "Remember me kindly to Joseph and say to him that he has a warm place in my heart."

I remained all night with Joseph F., and never slept in a more gorgeously furnished room. In the morning, after family prayer and breakfast, I was taken in Joseph F.'s private carriage to Bro. Barrows' residence, where I met Bro. Anderson, took my satchel, and, bidding farewell to Bro. and Sr. Barrows, wended our way to the station.

I found Bro. Anderson a splendid escort while in the famous Mormon city. I may add that Pres. Joseph F. invited me to come and see them, when I returned east, and notified me if I would call on my return he would present me with a large photograph of himself, wives, and children. This picture would be highly prized by me, and be quite a souvenir to remind me of my visit.

Leaving Salt Lake Wednesday morning, 9:45, arrived at Chilliwack on Friday evening, 7:30. I had been furnished with lunch by Sr. Strange, of Chicago, that did me till I arrived at Salt Lake; and being so royally entertained while there, I forgot to make provision for my long trip; so, when hungry, I looked for lunch; but I saw one man pay thirty-five cents for one loaf of bread on the car, and made up my mind not to buy the dining car, so I had three meals from Wednesday morning till Friday night, and slept in reclining chair cars. Let not the Saints think I had no money, for I had; but I refused to be robbed.

I have neither time nor space to describe my trip. It was a splendid trip; one that I am glad I took, but shall be satisfied if I am never called upon to take another. Rolling prairies, snow-capped mountains, many of them thousands of feet high, deep gorges, and rocky canyons.

I found Elder Daniel McGregor and wife, near Chilliwack, comfortably situated at the foot of a snow-capped mountain, seven thousand five hundred feet high. It is said that snow remains on the mountains here the year round, while in the valleys the roses bloom and the birds sing.

I preached this afternoon to a crowded house, and am billed for meetings of some kind each evening of the week. I find a nice gathering of Saints here. Elder MacGregor has put up a noble fight, and deserves great credit for his labor and sacrifice.

I expect to remain in Chilliwack for a few weeks, organize a branch, if the Lord will, make a few other calls, and do what I can in assisting Elder MacGregor to put the work on a more solid footing, and then shall turn my face toward Ontario.

I trust the missionaries in Ontario will "speed the plow," and that, with the local ministry to assist, a great work shall be accomplished this winter. I shall do my best to fill all the engagements made for January, February, and March before leaving for General Conference work.

My prayer is that God will bless the dear ones, who are worthy to be called Saints, in every land, and that we may all enjoy the sweet rest when our earthly work is done.

Brother and Sister MacGregor join me in kind regards to all Saints.

Hastily, your brother,

R. C. EVANS.

WABASH, Ont., Nov. 14.

Editors Herald:—Once more a few words for your readers. I am glad to see you every week; have known you for nearly twenty-four years; you have done me good many time.s

The last time I wrote to you it was about the first of June last. I was at Longwood. Baptized ten there. Went to Bothwell about a week, working in the tent with Elder St. John. Nights got cold and we packed up the tent. Bro. Charles Taylor, of Zone, has it in his care, ready to be used if needed the next Zone conference, which will be there the second Saturday, Sunday, and Monday of next June.

After packing the tent I went back to Longwood for a while, thence to the Chatham conference. We had a good one, but there's room for improvement. God was good to us to speak to us in tongues and interpretation. We were thankful for the instruction given. I should judge it was a good, average attendance, for a district having about six hundred members. Three or four were baptized.

After conference I went home to St. Thomas for a few days. Started out to Longwood again, then Zone branch, now Wabash. There is a nice, neat little brick church, a credit to those dear Saints who have struggled to put it up; and it's all paid for, and a credit to the community, also. I hope God will bless his people here, so they may live their religion faithfully, to fill the little church with good, honest Saints.

I am holding meetings nightly this week till over Sunday. I hope to see next Sunday whether to continue any longer or not. If interest demands I shall do so; if not then on to Wallaceburg.

Brother Green, president of the district, came in our meeting last Monday night, and helped us out with one meeting. I am glad to be in the company of my superior officers for council and advice, and also with Elder Arthur Leverton, of Zone, vice president. I was glad to have a talk with them for the good of the work. I love those old veterans for the truth's sake in this country. I love you all, my dear brethren and sisters; noble-hearted and true let us be to this marvelous work and wonder, the great latter-day work. Dear Brother Evans, I hope God will spare you, bless you, and keep you through your journey till you come home safe and sound.

I am doing the best I can where sent, and hope to be doing so to the end. Dear brother missionaries, all in fair Canada, wherever you may be, my daily prayer is to make us a success for good, not only in Canada but in all the world, for we are one nation within the nations, wherever we are sent. Please pray for me, that I may have wisdom and strength to do right.

I thank all my brethren and sisters for their kindness to me everywhere I have been in the district.

Your brother in hope of eternal life,

T. A. PHILLIPS.

P. S.—My permanent address is Box 625, St. Thomas, Ontario.

NASHUA, Iowa, Nov. 19.

Editors Herald:—W. E. LaRue, O. H. Bailey, and myself are holding meetings here in two different places, with good interest. Bro. LaRue and I are holding meetings at Carrville, and Bro. Bailey at a place called Bradford, about two miles northeast of Nashua. I have not seen so great interest manifest in the old Jerusalem gospel in a new opening in this district as is now shown at Carrville. We are indeed hopeful of good results. With this I order one dozen Voice of Warning. And I don't know whether that will supply the demand? May the good Lord bless with wisdom and power his chosen servants. Yours in the one hope,

J. R. SUTTON.

DAVIS JUNCTION, Ill., Nov. 24.

Editors Herald:—Public men are necessarily the object of public scrutiny, the subject of popular criticism. When a man places himself before the public as an example of righteousness according to a divine standard, it is certainly the right of anyone to form and express opinion as to his success in that role. Charles M. Sheldon, in his widely circulated novel, and his late journalistic venture, has sought to give the modern world a view of Christ life and action in the person, practice, and utterances of himself. The Lord never attempted to run a newspaper, but Mr. Sheldon attempted to run one "as Jesus would do." The Lord did (Mark 1:38) announce himself as a preacher; but in Mr. Sheldon's "Hindrances and Helps in the Ministry," in the Independent, of November 1, makes not a reference, in an article of two thousand words, to "what Jesus would do" as a minister. The only reference to the words of Jesus is a quotation of one of his commandments, to illustrate the alleged truth that those commandments must be transformed, interpreted, modernized, and applied by the modern preacher to be of any effect.

In justice to Mr. Sheldon, it must be admitted that in this article, as elsewhere, he says many good things—many things that Jesus could probably indorse. I speak adversely of Mr. Sheldon and his work as an emphatic illustration of the common error of modern Churchianity, of claiming a divine basis and divine sanction for works that are being promoted by human philosophy with little or no reference to the word that God through Christ has given to govern his people. Here are his "hindrances" in the ministry: 1. Formality; 2. Attempt at oratory; 3. Fear of man.

The "helps" he numerates were: 1. The strength which comes to a preacher when he accepts a hard field, and enters it to do his best. 2. Preaching what a man believes, out of his own experience. 3. The preaching of social truths. 4. The habit of loving everybody in the parish. 5. Keeping very close to the common people. 6. Personal work with young people.

Good principles are these, commending themselves to all, from a human standpoint. But from the man who would show the world "what Jesus would do," we have a right to expect some reference to that blessed Example, that perfect Preacher. The above enumerated principles might as well govern the moral philosopher whose reason has never accepted the embodied revelation of God, who does not believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, "preaching what a man believes out of his own experience," without proving that experience by God's word, has divided and is still subdividing nominal Christians; it is the great error of Protestantism.

The word of God abounds in directions, both of a precautionary and helpful nature to the ministry. Why did not the advocate of "what Jesus would do" quote or cite scriptural proof of the correctness of his principles? Why not mention among the "hindrances" an excess of "gold, silver, or brass in your purses" (Matt. 10:9), or an excess of clothing (v. 10), or carefully prepared speeches (v. 19), or the doctrine of men (Matt. 16:6, 11:12). Why not enumerate among the "helps," study of the word (1 Tim. 3:15–17), prayer (Luke 6:9–12; John 14:13), or the Spirit of God (John 14:26; 16:7–9, 13, 14)? But Mr. Sheldon and his kind may pursue their way, serenely satisfied with their "personal knowledge," doing good in their way, while the ministry of the true church proceed in full assurance of a closer walk with God, but striving to come up higher.

I left home on October 26, going to Aurora, where I preached the following two Sundays, visiting the Saints there and Bro. Rodger's family at Batavia. Then I called at Elgin, upon Brn. and Srs. Barnes and Carnegie. At Marengo I found Bro. and Sr. Brand quite active at 86 and 80 years respectively—strong in the faith and full of reminiscence of experience with Brighamism. At Rockford I visited Bro. Cushman and family, and Sr. Gaskings and family. All this visiting was done while waiting for election to be over.

November 8. I began preaching at the home of Bro. Fulks here, and later transferred to the home of Mrs. Rudolf, a Catholic. The weather was against us, but attendance has been fair, and interest apparently good. This being a new opening, we have been under the necessity of raking over the Utah conglomeration in order to clearly define our relation to those errors and free ourselves of the charge of any connection therewith.

Davis Junction is on the Chicago and Savannah division of the C. M. & St. P. railway, and the Rochelle and Rockford branch of the "Q." Bro. Fulks (until March 1st) lives one fourth mile south of the depot and would be pleased to see Saints or elders passing through.

I expect to join Bro. Moler near Piper City next week, stopping at home on the way.

Your brother,

ADAM J. KECK.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Be brave, dear heart! Who sings a song
Into a soul discouraged, sad,
Has store laid up, though he wait long
For ships and gold to make him glad."

WE SHALL KNOW.

Yes, dear Saints, we shall know each other there, and we shall know as we are known; shall know one another as God knows us, not as mortals think they know us. Our relatives and friends are not the only ones that we shall know. O no, no; we shall know every one that is saved on the purified earth, and we think we shall know all that we meet while in the spirit life, or the intermediate state. The prophets, the apostles, and all who have secured an inheritance in the kingdom of our Christ by obedience to his plan of salvation, many of whom have come up with us through many trials, and are made whiter than snow.

Yes, brothers and sisters in gospel bonds, we do believe—and it is a joyous belief—that we shall recognize the faithful ones of all ages, and the best of all, to behold and greet our Savior, or to bow before him and receive the sweet eternal peace that is his to give to the faithful.

"All of that kind of talk is just sheer imagination. I don't believe that we shall know friends or anybody else after we die," say many people.

Probably we should not, if the spirit died; but as it is only the flesh which dies, and as the spirit is the life and the intelligence, and lives forever, why not cherish the thought that it retains its intelligence, and if it is retained it is for a purpose, and that purpose is for the happiness of the souls of mortals and the glory of God.

Then is it not absolutely necessary that we shall know one another, and enjoy one another's company as much as we do that of our friends in this life. We all know how sweet it is to meet dear friends that have been separated from us, but that is only a faint type, a small foretaste of our future meeting. Our lives here are made up in part, with parting, and the hardest cases are at the threshold of eternity, why then will not our most joyous meetings be beyond that threshold?

Here, we meet as mortals, liable to err; there, as spiritual beings; here, to part again; there, to part nevermore. There we shall have dwelling places, and both physical and spiritual nourishment without anxiety, without fear, and without incessant labor. It is our inheritance, and no one can molest or make afraid on the purified earth, the home of the Saints.

The Prophet Isaiah tells us the beautiful story, and so have others who spoke by inspiration—not in the same words, but each in harmony with the other, both ancient and modern. If these things are not so, it can do no harm to think they are, and if they are as we believe, it is not only our privilege to continue in the belief, but it is our duty.

'Tis a comforting thought, sure, for those who have no home, and have outlived all or nearly all of their relatives and friends—then let us make it our abiding guest. Another beautiful thought is: We shall walk and not be weary, we shall run and not faint. We shall be made alive by the Spirit of God, even as Jesus was at his resurrection. He was the first fruits of the resurrection to eternal life, and if we are one with him by obedience, we have the promise of being like unto him. It was Jesus' very same body that came forth from the grave, quickened by the Spirit, by which he went and preached to the spirits in prison, and manifested himself to the children of men. We, too, shall be quickened as he was, and shall retain our individuality. He appeared in the midst with his disciples when the door was shut, at another time he ate and drank with them, also commanded them to be faithful, and to tarry in Jerusalem till they were endued with power from on high. He did not forget to visit his people on this continent. The inhabitants of the other countries knew nothing about this land, but Jesus did, and he did not forget to gather every faithful soul into his fold. O what a sweet thought, that he will not leave out one soul, no not even the feeble ones; them he will carry in his bosom, as David did the feeble lambs of his flock. O what a grand, what an inspiring thought, that we shall meet and know the worthy prehistoric inhabitants of this chosen land. To those who reject the book that was hidden for ages, those wonderful prehistoric relics they are spending so much time and money in excavating, are enigmas which can be solved only by the book itself. We are glad to accept its teaching, for it gives more knowledge of God's power and of his wonderful dealings with his followers, as well as with the children of men; and besides, it causes our hope to expand with the great thought that we shall know more and more through the endless ages of eternity. Yes, that we shall know of all things.

"What; know about the starry heavens?" queries the astronomer in surprise.

Yes, brother man, all who so live as to have an inheritance with the Son of God shall know as much, and more, about the wonders of the heavens than you do, and more than any other man ever knew in this life. They will attain their knowledge by the power of the Spirit, not by long years of tedious study.

"How is that?" question others.

Jesus the Christ was a coworker with the Father in making the worlds, so he must understand them perfectly, their size, distance, and their paths through space; and as he will not withhold any good thing from us, we shall know the mysteries of his creations in nature, as well as the mysteries of his kingdom. Then our desires for knowledge will not be opposed by reverse circumstances, for nothing can exist there that opposes good. Knowledge will be for all, and we think that all who have a part in the "thousand years" will have a desire for the fulness of truth. O how encouraging is the thought to those who have had limited advantages in this life!

A questioner may ask: How about geography and geology; will you understand that, too?

Yes; we are hoping to, and obtain the hope by reasoning as we do in regard to astronomy, and we shall know the facts concerning the different stages in the formation of the earth and the time it took to bring it out of chaos into a state suitable for the abode of man.

Another thought that fills the soul with joy is, that those who love music here will be permitted to sing and be able to handle the harp—and we hope every one will—with skill and glad hallelujahs.

We shall worship, and we shall sing praises unto our King, and his teaching will perfect us.

COULD WE BUT KNOW.

Could we but know how often worn and weary
Are those we meet;
Would we condemn because they call life bitter,
Which we think sweet?
Would not our thought and judgment be more tender
To friend and foe,
Our greeting warmed with more of love's own kindness,
Could we but know?

Could we but know how pain may lurk 'neath laughter—
Too keen to bear—
And how the hearts we deem so hard and reckless
Are dark with care,
Would not our idle tongues be slow to utter
Our words of blame?
Would we not call what we had reckoned folly,
Some gentler name?

Would we not think 'twere wise to be forgiving
Of doubtful mood,
Of all mistakes and seeming slights and errors
Not understood?
Would not our feet be swifter in the going
Help to bestow?
Our own lives better, nobler for the knowing,
Could we but know?

DO YOU all sing in Sunday school? You should. Can't sing? You can try. It may be that you are not a specialist in that line, but you can make an effort, however weak, and show an interest and a good will. Everybody should sing and sing every time. There is nothing so destructive of life and interest in the Sunday school as poor singing. And what we mean by poor singing is that in which few or no one seems to take any interest, or put any spirit. Put your whole soul and strength into the singing and you will both see and feel the influence for good. All sing.

COLD weather is coming on now, and provisions should be made to have the Sunday school room warmed some time ahead so that there will be no need of waiting for the room to warm before you open the school. Again, if people come to a cold room a few times, they will either stay away the next Sunday or come late enough to be sure the fire is started. The janitor work is very important, and should be attended to promptly.

FOR all who have not separate rooms for the primary classes to recite in, a splendid substitute may be had by simply using curtains strung on wires across a corner or end of the room. The curtains can be slid back against the wall out of the way in an instant of time, when the school is over. Try them, and you will be much pleased with the benefits to be derived therefrom. The cost is very little. Almost any school can afford them, and will be very glad of the outlay when once given a fair test.

"TIMIDITY hinders usefulness and often buries talent. Sometimes the scripture, "in honor preferring one another," is carried to an extreme and some people let their talent go to seed and let other peole do the things that they ought to do themselves.—Selected.

"THE Sunday school teacher is a preacher and a pastor. Sometimes his congregation is larger that a great many regularly ordained ministers have, and sometimes his preaching is better, too, and does more good, and he ought to qualify himself for the work of preaching the gospel to his congregation."—Selected.

The Boys' Friend, Indianapolis, discusses "Base ball vs. Sunday school." It asks the question, Who ever heard of an assembly of base ball players discussing the problem, "How to win and hold the boys to baseball playing?" The thing is never discussed, because baseball rarely fails to hold the crowd. But the game could be conducted so that they would not stay to see it. An ignorant umpire, timid batters, poor pitchers, no snap in running bases, would make them scatter in disgust. Therefore it is the conclusion, as we interpret it, if you would hold the boys in Sunday schools, select an umpire (we mean superintendent) who knows the game—we should say, the way to run a Sunday school. Begin the game (school, of course, was in our mind) on time, without waiting for any member of the team—school, we hasten to say. Let each batsman (teacher; dear! dear!) be courageous enough to tackle any question that is put over the plate. When he hits good and squarely, then is his chance to make a home run, and every boy appreciates that. Don't stay too long on one base. Get around to the home plate before school is over. Let snap, vim, pluck, and earnestness characterize your teaching, and you can hold your class, though they be seated on the "bleachers" or a rail fence.—Iowa S. S. Helper.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

KINGDOM OF GOD:—

STRIVE (Pink.)

TO ENTER IN (Green)

AT THE STRAIGHT GATE. (Blue.)

SALVATION.

The Review:—

STRIVE.—How.—With what motives, disposition, and for what purpose. Show that we may strive in more ways than one.

TO ENTER IN.—What? Salvation Vs. 23. Kingdom of God Vs. 28, 29. Who opens—Master. V. 25. Who kept out—Workers of iniquity. V. 27. Who enters—The faithful.

AT THE STRAIT GATE.—One way to enter. The straight gate. All do not enter. All who seek do not enter. Not able.

Can all enter?

Can any be saved outside of Kingdom of God? What is received in the Kingdom.

SUGGESTIONS FOR REVIEW.

Lesson 10. Dec. 9.

Masters.

True—Christ.	False—Pharisees.
1. Pure.	1. Unclean.
2. Humble.	2. Boastful.
3. Kind.	3. Unkind--Abusive.
4. Good.	4. Bad.
5. Worked for God.	5. Worked to be seen of men.
6. Clean.	6. Appeared clean.

We are like our Master.
Our Master.
Christ.

First show subject is about masters, and the two kinds spoken of are true Christ and false Pharisees. Then show contrast in characteristics, the true being pure, humble, kind, good, clean, and worked for God, and so should we be, for "we are like our Master," whoever it may be, and the false being unclean, boastful, unkind or abusive, bad, appeared clean, and worked to be seen of men, which characteristics we will have if we have false masters, for, "We are like our master." We then decide that our master is and should be Christ.

NORTHEAST MISSOURI.

Conference of above district convened at Pollock branch, October 6 and 7. J. A. Tanner, president; David L. Morgan, secretary pro tem.; assisted by Nydia Thomas. Branch reports were had from Pollock, Salt River, Higbee, and Bevier. Ministerial reports from W. Chapman, J. T. Williams, J. A. Tanner, F. T. Mussell, J. F. Petre, F. J. Chatburn, Charles Perry, W. E. Summerfield, D. L. Morgan, F. M. Burch, Robert Thrutchley, and E. E. Petre. District president's expense bill of $2.75 was allowed. Bishop's agent, J. T. Williams, reported: On hand last report $92 25; received $140.30; disbursements $216. Upon recommendation of Bevier branch and the approval of conference, the ordination of Bro. A. G. Young was ordered provided for. On motion the following resolution was approved: Whereas, it being apparent that Carrollton and Missouri River branches are practically disorganized; and whereas, after diligent and earnest labor by the officers whose duty it is to perform such labor, there seems no reason to longer hope for reclamation of the said organizations; therefore be it resolved, that the said Carrollton and Missouri River branches be and they are hereby disorganized. Adjourned to meet at Bevier branch in February, 1901.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.

PASTORAL.

Having been appointed to labor in Arkansas and Louisiana, the remainder of the year, I desire to inform all concerned that I am now in the field. Will the Saints please inform me of the needs of the work, and opportunities for preaching, etc., in their respective localities. Wisdom seems to favor the visiting of only as many points as can be thoroughly worked, hence we will conform our operations to this plan, as far as practicable.

Brethren and Sisters, if you desire the spread of the gospel, live your religion at home; keep your friends and neighbors supplied with Ensigns, tracts, etc., and the results will be gratifying. If you can use more literature than you have, drop a card to the undersigned, and you will be supplied. Let every Saint be a worker.

Will the brethren of the missionary force please mail their reports to me not later than January 1. Until further notice, mail addressed to Coal Hill, Arkansas, will reach me. Permanent address: Blendville, Missouri.

W. S. MACRAE,
Sub-missionary in Charge.

TWO DAYS' MEETINGS.

Two days' meetings will be held in Eastern Iowa district in Muscatine branch, on the 8th and 9th of December. All are invited to come, and as many of the elders as can conveniently. Also the Illinois Saints are invited. Come and bring the Spirit of the Master with you.

C. E. HAND, Pres.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference will be held at Wilber, Nebraska, 30th and 31st of December, in and for the Southern Nebraska district. By setting our conference for these dates it will give us the benefit of moonlight nights, also of the usual holiday reduction in railroad fare. Branch officials will please see to having their reports ready in time. We would like a full report from all branches, also the ministry. We also hope for a good attendance of the members. Come all that can, and bring the good Spirit with you, and let us have a good time.

J. W. WALDSMITH, Pres.

Mobile conference will meet with Three Rivers branch, December 8 and 9. Will all branches see that their reports are sent in, and will all elders and priests, and Saints come. Have the promise of Bro. T. C. Kelley being with us. Come with the Spirit with you.

W. L BOOKER, Pres.
G. T. CHUTE, Sec.

Far West district conference will convene with St. Joseph branch, on Saturday and Sunday, December 15 and 16, at St. Joseph, Missouri. Will the branch secretaries kindly forward delegate credentials and branch reports one week before convening of conference, so when we meet this part of the work will be done. Pray that the Spirit of the Master may be with us, and we will have a spiritual conference long to be remembered.

T. T. HINDERKS, Pres.

NOTICES.

There will be a two days' teachers institute of Pottawattamie district Sunday school association, held at Underwood, Iowa, December 8 and 9, at ten o'clock a. m. We expect some Sunday school workers to be present, so let all those interested in this work attend and impart their knowledge to others. A welcome invitation to all.

JOHN SMITH, Mgr.

MARRIED.

TURNBULL—MOORE.—At the home of the bride's parents, 1696 Madison avenue, New York City, October 28, 1900, Mr. John W. Turnbull and Sr. Sarah E. Moore; Elder U. W. Greene officiating.

DIED.

STEVENS.—Mary Augusta Stevens, born July 26, 1848; died at her home near Dudley, Iowa, October 18, 1900, aged 52 years, 2 months, and 22 days. She was baptized July 25, 1878; was faithful to the last moment of her earthly life, and was loved by all who knew her. She was a kind wife and mother, and leaves husband, six children, and an aged mother, and a large number of relatives to mourn their loss. She endured her affliction, which lasted ten months, with great patience and Christian fortitude. She has gone to her rest, and will certainly come forth in the first resurrection. Rev. Charles Coggeshell conducted the funeral; sermon by Elder J. R. Evans.

GRIFFIN.—Nellie Griffin, nee Seaton, was born June 26, 1881, near Paris, Tennessee. She was the daughter of Bro. W. J. and Sr. Tennessee Seaton, and was brought up in the faith from childhood. Her sickness lasted nearly three weeks, and was terminated by death September 23, 1900. The funeral or memorial sermon was preached October 20, by Elder T. C. Kelley. Nellie was esteemed highly by those outside the church (as well as those within), and some of them after listening to the reasons for our hope, that those who obey the gospel will be "before the throne of God," were heard to say, "I believe every word of it." Nellie sleeps the sleep of the just; it is therefore peaceful. Her awaking shall be happy and glorious. To her husband and little daughter, father, mother, sister, and two brothers, her death brings great loss; but her gain is greater, and as eternal as it is great. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

HANSON.—At Appledore, Ontario, October 24, 1900, there departed this life, Sr. Leah Hanson, who was born in Virginia in 1815; was baptized by Elder J. H. Lake. For years she bore a faithful testimony to the truthfulness of the restored gospel; she leaves a daughter, grandchildren, and great grandchildren to mourn. Funeral service conducted by Elder George Green, in the Saints' church, Lindsley branch. The funeral was largely attended, and marked respect was paid to the departed.

BRAFFETT.—Sr. Harriette Meridith Braffett, born at Ludlow, England, May 10, 1822; died at North Platte, Nebraska, October 20, 1900. She was baptized in England in 1843, and went to Utah, not knowing anything of polygamy and other evils until she arrived there in 1853. When missionaries were sent by the Reorganization her heart was made glad and she was baptized in 1865. She then moved to Nebraska City with her family; lived there thirteen years, then moved to North Platte, and lived there seventeen years. Has always borne a faithful testimony to the restored gospel. None of our elders being near, the Episcopal minister kindly conducted the services at her home. She leaves a daughter, two sons, and one brother.

SEATON.—At her home in Sandwich, Illinois, November 2, 1900, Sr. Mary Solemna Seaton. Sr. Seaton was the eldest daughter of Bro. Ransome R. and Sr. Mary V. Partridge; was born October 10, 1847. She united with the church in 1865, and was a steadfast and faithful member, an earnest Christian, and a zealous worker in the cause she loved. On September 10, 1873, she was married to Henry W. Seaton, to whom were born four children. In her home Sr. Seaton was a faithful and loving wife, a kind and an affectionate mother, and always ready to make any needed sacrifice for the welfare of others. Besides her husband and children, she leaves an aged mother and two sisters to mourn. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Elder Charles H. Burr, assisted by Elder E. M. Wildermuth.

FLETCHER.—At his home near Shenandoah, Iowa, November 9, 1900, Bro. Calvin G. Fletcher, at the age of 75 years, 10 months, and 1 day. He was married to Mary A. Miller, September 22, 1844; of this union were born thirteen children, seven of whom survive him; except one daughter, all were present at the time of his death. Our brother united with the early church at the age of eight years; was baptized into the Reorganized Church November 3, 1895, and has always lived faithful to the covenant he made. Funeral from the Saints' church, conducted by Elder Daniel Hougas, assisted by Elder J. V. Roberts.

SCOTT.—At New Albany, Indiana, November 7, 1900, Elder David Scott. Born August 21, 1835; married to Miss Mary Furgeson June 22, 1856. Eight children were born to them; all remain to mourn the loss of a loving father. Bro. W. W. Blair baptized him June 2, 1870. He was a worthy brother, an untiring worker as an elder. His last words were, "Wait, Bro. Blair, wait; I'm coming." Funeral services in the Christian church at Pleasant Ridge, W. C. Marshall in charge.

STEEL.—Miss Minnie Domm was born at Ottawa, Illinois, May 17, 1858; married to Mr. George Steel, August 24, 1874; died November 18, 1900, at her home near Auburn, Iowa. About nine days before her death she stepped on a rusty nail, blood poison set in, and death was the result. Sr. Steel was baptized June 19, 1898, by Elder W. A. Carroll, and has been an energetic and consistent member ever since. She leaves a husband, one daughter, and four sons, to mourn her early departure from earth life. Funeral services at the Saints' church, by Elders C. E. Butterworth and R. Wight. She rests with the righteous, awaiting the resurrection of the just.

SCHMID.—At Fruita, Colorado, November 5, 1900, of typhoid fever after an illness of thirty days, Ina Florence, daughter of Bro. M. L. and Sister Edna Schmid, aged 4 years, 5 months, and 11 days. Funeral services at the Congregational church, November 6, after which the body was taken by loving hands and laid to rest in the Ash Mesa cemetery, November 7. She was born May 24, 1896, near Olathe, Montrose county, Colorado.

Rev. F. N. and M. A. PELOUBET

AUTHORS OF "SELECT NOTES ON THE INTERNATIONAL LESSONS."

Large 12mo., Cloth, very Unique Binding in Black and Gold.

Every one acknowledges the great value of Dr. William Smith's Bible Dictionary as containing the "fruit of the ripest biblical scholarship of England." In revising, editing and bringing down to date this estimable work the Revs. F. N. and M. A. Peloubet have accomplished a wonderful task and have made this book an invaluable one.

Besides their innumerable notes, they have added the proper names used in the New Version, together with their pronunciation, the signification of proper names has been inserted, the results of the latest research in regard to the topography of Palestine are embodied, the dates at which persons lived and events took place have been inserted, Chronological tables, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the "Apostles and Their History" are also added, all in all making this book of inestimable value to any one interested in the Bible.

RIGHT KIND OF CLOTHING TO WEAR IN WINTER.

BY DR. WILLIAM E. QUINE, PROFESSOR IN COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

We are now in, or approaching, the time of the year of maximum prevalence of many dangerous diseases. Diphtheria, bronchitis, pneumonia, influenza, and rheumatism are preëminently diseases of the fall and winter seasons and diseases of the kidneys and of the blood are usually at their worst during these seasons. Avoidance of the causes is practically impossible, but much can be done by the use of appropriate clothing to protect the body from their injurious influence.

The derangement of circulation and of dependent functions, which occurs in the process of "catching cold," furnishes a favorable opportunity to disease producing germs, which are already in the throat, lungs, or elsewhere in the system, to secure effective lodgment and then to multiply and to generate—each kind after its own manner—peculiar poisons and diseases. Such derangements of circulation can be obviated in large measure by the use of appropriate clothing. The need of such clothing is especially imperative in cold, damp weather, for then the body chills more readily than in an atmosphere that is colder but dry.

Fabrics which are the poorest conductors of heat make the warmest clothing. Fur and wool are especially adapted for cold seasons and climates, while cotton and linen are useful only for subsidiary purposes. The finer the texture and the heavier the fabric the warmer it is. Weight counts for more than bulkiness. Materials having a large capacity for absorbing and retaining moisture are particularly desirable for underwear, and woolens are the best of all. When woolen garments of good quality and weight are worn next the skin the danger of catching cold is reduced to the minimum. The color of the underwear is of no consequence. Many old-fashioned people imagine that there is special virtue in red flannel above that of other colors, and it is not uncommon for clerks to trade upon this harmless vagary and to exaggerate it by pretending that such flannel has been "medicated." If fur be excluded, woolen outer garments of a black color are the warmest.

There is as good reason for dressing the throat warmly as for protecting other sensitive parts of the body. The stockings, also, should be of wool, and shoes and gloves should be roomy enough to not impede circulation and to admit of a stratum of air between them and the human skin. Tight gloves and shoes are always cold. Gloves should be lined with fleece or fur and shoes should be thickly soled. The sole of the foot should be protected from the ice cold sidewalk by as warm and thick a medium as is consistent with ease of locomotion. Cork soles are the best for winter wear. The top of the foot, also, needs protection beyond that furnished by the sock and the calf or kid skin which covers it, and, consequently, sensible people wear wool lined overshoes when there is snow or slush.

Men dress much more warmly than women. To be sure, they are more exposed to inclemencies of weather. But there is no reason why women who are exposed to such weather should not dress as warmly as men. Women will not dress bulkily, however, for so small a consideration as comfort and safety. It is more important that they present a "refined" figure. Indeed there is no demand for women's underwear as heavy and warm as men use, and consequently it is not manufactured. Many women, whose figures are not as dainty as they wish, affect inability to wear wool in contact with the skin, but in nearly every instance this is a shallow pretense.

Observe the difference between the warmth of the apparel of men and women as they go scudding along the boulevards in sleighs and cutters on a fine winter's day. The man is dressed for the occasion, with heavy cap drawn down over his ears and scarf and heavy overcoat with upturned collar and roomy fur or fleece lined gloves. The woman is dressed for the occasion, also. She wears a sealskin sacque, which is extremely sensible, and kid gloves and a rose in her hair and a smile.

If girls and women used sensible underwear and sensible shoes and stockings they would not be the sickly creatures they are, and the great army of feminine invalids now streaming into doctors' offices every day in the year would be immensely reduced in size and a certain medical specialty would be immensely less profitable.

It is relatively uncommon for men to get sick by reason of errors in dress, but it is extremely common for women to do so. Nearly all women have cold feet and admit it and keep right on wearing thin hose so as to accommodate the smallest shoes they can get on, and shoes with soles hardly thicker than a sheet of blotting paper. Nobody should continue to wear damp shoes and stockings after reaching home and nobody should go to bed with cold feet. The feet should be rubbed or chafed into warmth or warmed by artificial heat before retiring. If people dressed prudently the average length of human life would be appreciably increased and an immeasurable amount of suffering and sorrow would be obviated.—Chicago Tribune, Nov. 18, 1900.

SUICIDE INCREASING AMONG CHILDREN.

BY DR. ALBERT EULENBURG, PROFESSOR IN MUNICH UNIVERSITY.

One of the most painful and depressing, but at the same time most instructive, chapters of the science of statistics is that in reference to suicide. The figures of that chapter surprise us by their remarkable and almost uncanny regularity and by the constancy with which those acts of self-destruction are committed in unvarying numbers, at the same places, at the same times of the year, and even on the same days of the week. This peculiar regularity of suicide statistics has been used for many years by those denying the freedom of the human will and human responsibility as one of their most powerful arguments. They have even gone so far as to class suicide among the phenomena conditioned by natural laws, like births, marriages, and deaths. Some of the greatest statisticians, like Quetelet and Morselli, have repeatedly expressed themselves in favor of that view. To me that argument seems altogether insufficient. In view of the fact that the causes and circumstances leading to suicide have been created by the human will it would be absurd to speak of the natural necessity of suicides. There can be no doubt that suicide is merely a product and consequence of human civilization, and particularly of our social organization, which many praise with no little enthusiasm, while others severely condemn it.

One of the strongest proofs for the correctness of my views is to be found in the constant increase of the suicides committed by children and young persons generally. Those cases of suicide are unnatural and contrary to the objects and purposes of nature, and are solely caused by the abnormal conditions of our social organism, the defects of our economical, social, and public institutions.

The number of suicides of individuals under 20 years of age has increased at a terrific rate during the last twenty years. In Prussia the number of youthful suicides was 21.2 for 100,000 inhabitants in 1876, while in 1896 the number was 32.0 for each 100,000 inhabitants. During the year 1896, 5,073 male and 1,424 female individuals committed suicide in Prussia. Two of the suicides were under 10, 63 between 10 and 15 years, 444 between 15 and 20 years. In all there were 333 male and 176 female suicides under 20 years in Prussia during that year. The causes assigned for those acts of self-destruction were: Tiredness of life in 22 cases, physical ailments in 11, mental diseases in 60, passions in 57, vices in 12, grief in 13, contrition in 103, quarrels in 43 cases. In 176 cases the causes of suicide were not known.

There is good reason to assume that among the motives in those cases were the two most potent factors leading to suicides among young individuals—degeneracy and morally unhealthy home influences and surroundings. The cruelty and brutality of depraved parents or step-parents is frequently the cause of the suicide of their children or stepchildren. Those causes are particularly aggravated in cases where the parents are inebriates. To abate that evil I would recommend to deprive inebriates of the right to direct the education of their children. I would also strongly favor prohibitive laws against the marriage of inebriates, insane, or persons whose nervous system is seriously affected by disease. To prevent the frequent occurence of suicides among school children and students in higher educational institutions our educational system should be thoroughly reformed upon pedagogical principles. The task is extremely difficult, but the final solution of the question is by no means beyond the range of human possibilities.—Chicago Tribune, November 18, 1900.

The purpose of The World's Work is to interpret American activity in its widest ranges. This purpose is illustrated in the number for December by such diverse articles as "A Triumph of American Sculptors" (profusely and beautifully illustrated) in securing the greatest distinctions at the Paris Exposition, and "The Betterment of Working Life," an article (also fully illustrated) explaining what employers are doing for the comfort and improvement of employees in a number of factories of various sorts. Between these are articles explaining the results of exploration, pointing out definitely the chances for young men under the present conditions of industrial organization (an interview with bankers, managers, railroad men and professionals of distinction), an explanation of the manner and method of the Secretary of War, giving a clear insight into Mr. Root's character, an article on the Navy in the Philippines by Rear-Admiral Watson, who recently returned from the command of the fleet there, an explanation (with examples in colors) of the recent progress that has been made in color photography, an article by Prof. Reinsch, of the University of Wisconsin on the great political changes of the century; a critical guide to all the newest books of value, and the record of American achievement under the title "The World's Workers."

The American Journal of Sociology is a welcome visitor to our desk, coming as it does laden with its burden of sociological studies and dissertations. The Journal is one of the many good publications that come from the press of the University of Chicago, and is an honor to the institution that fosters it. The subject of sociology is usually covered by articles covering a wide scope, as is indicated by the table of contents. In the November number we find: "The Saloon in Chicago;" "The Moral and Social tasks of World Politics;" "Prison Laboratories;" "The Scope of Sociology;" "The Social Control;" "The Courts and Factory Legislation;" "The City Council of Berlin;" Reviews; Notes and Abstracts.

MODERN JERUSALEM.

Studied then from its thoroughfares, says Cleveland Moffett, in the excellent Christmas number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, Jerusalem looks for all the world like a huge rambling fortress, with fighting towers and dungeon depths. On either hand, instead of lines of houses, you have formidable and continuous walls pierced with low doors and bodywide stairs and iron-caged windows. You cannot tell where one house begins and another leaves off, nor whether a certain opening leads to roof or courtyard or dwelling room. There is indeed one way to tell, that is to push boldly in and up along stairs and passages and see what you can see.

Whatever else you fail to do in Jerusalem (and you are sure to neglect half the guide book admonitions) do not fail to study the streets from overhead, as many of them as possible. You can always find a viewpoint by a little searching. Take Christian street about mid-day, when the sun lights both sides, and get your station on the arch near David street, no matter if you have to do some clambering. Now look to the north, there where the greenish dome and white minaret rise. You see a straight way along the base of a high wall, window-pierced, with a lower wall on the other side, its stones old and grassgrown. Below, you see two lines of flimsy awnings, tipped down like the visor of a cap, to shelter the booths beneath from the white glare. You see donkeys, camels, sheep, peasants, soldiers, Greek priests, sisters of charity, tourists, pilgrims. Turks and all who live in Turkey, Syrians and all who visit Syria, veiled women, sheeted women and beggars (you will see them all if you wait a little) moving to and fro, now lost under the awnings, now coming into the open. You can follow them between two somber archways, the one that you are on and another, yonder where a cross-wall stops your view. You can watch them until you tire.

The Biblical World, published by the Chicago University Press, is a publication which is of great value to any theological student. It presents matters connected with biblical history in an interesting and attractive way, and in a scholarly way, too.

The topic, "Are Young Men's Chances Less?" which, answered in the affirmative, was one of Mr. Bryan's issues in the campaign, is treated in the current World's Work by H. H. Lewis. Mr. Lewis has collected the opinions of a number of successful men on this subject and the result, as shown in his article, seems to deny the campaign argument and lend a most optimistic view.

MONEY RAISING.

Almost everybody in the church has a plan for raising money for the needs of the church of every description.

One of the most fascinating and most easily suggested and worked out on paper, is the idea of each church member to give a specified sum, usually from ten cents up; few have gone higher than a dollar.

Some three years or so ago, when the debt on the college was presented and the task of raising the money was assigned to the Bishopric, there were subsequently two methods suggested, by others than the Bishop, or his counselors. One was a chain letter affair, which had it carried as figured out would have taxed the mails to carry the chain; but few dollars were the result. Such chains have an odd way of interlocking their own links in such a way as to disgust the receivers, after a few repetitions. The other, a really meritorious system of scholarships, and yearly payments on behalf of those who could afford it and were willing to so aid the cause of the college. Bro. Dewsnup made a partial success of this, but it failed to secure the amount desired and needed for running expenses.

Last spring the conference again noticed the subject, and again made it the work of the Bishopric who at once asked for the names of one thousand persons who would agree to pay twenty-five dollars each, aggregating a sum sufficient to liquidate the whole debt. We do not know just how many of the requested thousand of names have been received, but as the Bishop has not yet given notice that the subscriptions were due, we take it for granted that the list is not complete.

Now another brother starts the idea that a dollar each from the forty odd thousand members would furnish an amount larger than is needed to meet the demand and have a surplus left. The brother is already collecting from the Saints in his vicinity to be paid January 1, next.

All this is easy to suggest and count; but it is confusing to many. Some will pay the one dollar supposing that all others will do the same, and there dispose of their responsibility in the affair. A great many, by far the greater number, will let the matter pass without a thought, reading the brother's letter in a perfunctory way, with the remark, "O, the Bishop is looking after that matter. It is none of my affair."

A few moments of thought would satisfy the ordinary thinker that while it is easy to make such a calculation and it looks well in figures on paper, it is really an impracticable method, for several reasons, principal of which is the fact that not all the members of the church are in a condition to give the dollar asked for by January 1, 1901.

It is supposed that the average family is composed of five members, father, mother, and three children, large or small. It is also supposed that the father is the money provider. If he is, then the one dollar per member of his household means five dollars to him. It sometimes happens that the head of the house is a widow, with but slender means on which to live; if there are five including herself, then the tax is on her already burdened means. Some families are even larger, and it would mean a larger sum. In some families there are a number of colaborers, all doing something for the daily expenditure. These are usually in cities where there are diversified industries employing men, women, boys, and girls. The expenses of such families are heavy, much heavier than the ordinary dweller in the country knows of; so that it often happens there is little spare cash on hand from which to pay the one dollar per head, between Thanksgiving and the end of the year.

Another reason is this: The conference made it the duty of the Bishopric to take the lead in this College debt affair, and he having given a due notice of the way suggested to him, as practicable, it ought to be left to him and his co-assistants to carry the matter out to the end; so that if the way he has at first advised does not succeed he may, by himself and his counselors devise another, and so keep doing till the object is attained. In this, as in some other things, "too many cooks spoil the broth."

We have disliked to say anything on this subject, but as the way opens we suggest that the Saints pay attention to the measure suggested by the Bishop, put their names on the list, and be ready to pay when the Bishop gives notice that the time is up, the names all secured, and the money due. The money will have to be raised sooner or later, and the debt paid, or the church suffer seriously for the failure. Why not help the Bishop according to his own plan, and avoid whatever may tend to confuse or retard the effort.

CO-OPERATION, SOCIALISM, AND ZION.

Two years ago some forty men and forty women from the states of Illinois, Ohio, and Indiana, all of them said to be above the average of intelligence, organized what has been known as the Christian Commonwealth Colony of Socialists. This colony located in Georgia, in Muscogee county, on a thousand acre tract of land, and made all necessary improvements to carry on their scheme. A saw mill, a grist mill, and a broom factory were built, and agricultural pursuits were carried on.

All went well the first year; so much so that forty recruits joined them. With the addition of the new members, trouble began, internal dissensions arose, and grew, until litigations were begun in the courts. The result is that the "colony" is in the hands of a sheriff, and on yesterday one thousand acres of land and the improvements were to have been sold under the sheriff's hammer.

Coöperation, "all things common," and allied topics have always been of considerable interest to Latter Day Saints, and the experiments of societies like the above have always been observed closely and curiously. The belief is quite generally extant among the Saints that some day they will be assembled in communities conducted upon the general plan of "all things common." However, no clear idea seems to predominate or even obtain as to the details of the plan, and hence it is that our men are close and interested observers of schemes and experiments like the one in Georgia.

It is a matter of chagrin to some, yet one of no surprise to others, that these experiments, one after another, have failed to result as the propagators had planned and hoped. If, now, we can discover the leading factors of failure, we have taken quite a step towards finding the plan upon which the Saints must coöperate. By finding why others have failed, we will be prepared or forewarned to avoid the contingencies which give rise to the elements of failure.

The Christian Commonwealth Colony of Socialists, as we stated before, was organized by some eighty people who were said to be above the average of intelligence; that is, they all approximated a certain standard of intellectual excellence. Peace and harmony prevailed so long as only the originators were alone in the operation of the colony. When, however there were converts and additions to the community, trouble began. The social balance was disturbed; the smoothly running machinery became disarranged, and jarred.

There was a society in Pennsylvania which for a number of years enjoyed a considerable degree of success, and amassed much wealth. As a society it is what might be termed a thing of the past. The control of the property has passed practically into the hands of one man, and he has become a man of wealth and worldly influence. We refer to the society of socialists known as the Economites, who built up the country around Harmony, Pennsylvania, in the oil district. In the height of its success, the influence of the society was powerful, and the success of their enterprises was remarkable for the wealth brought the society.

One of the peculiarities of the society was their religious belief in regard to the marriage question. They did not believe that men and women should marry, and this belief was so rigorously lived up to that in the course of a few years the numbers of the society dwindled to a few, as death successively laid them low. They made very few if any converts, and this very fact made it possible for one man to finally assume control of the property of the institution, and was in this case a leading factor of the failure of the society as such.

As long as the originators of the society were all alive, the harmony that existed in the first place was continued, and things operated as planned. As one by one the mortal remains of the members were laid away, wrapped in the long slumber of death, the work was carried on by those still in the possession of physical life, and still the work prospered until there were not enough of the original society left to carry the work on as it was intended by the originators, and the one-man control became a necessity to save the property to those who were left.

A writer in one of the daily papers of late, in speaking of the failure of the Georgia "colony," strikes the keynote when he said that such societies take into consideration "everything but human nature." Just so long as these societies are organized and controlled according to human ideas, and according to the plans of men, just so long there will continue to be such failures. We do not believe that the Divine one himself can make plans that will work as long as humanity is in the conditions men find themselves today. Human nature as it exists today is the factor which mars the working of all such plans. Jealousies, selfishness, egotism will eradicate the element of harmony so necessary to the success of all communities operated on the plan of "all things common." Until the "perfect law" is in full operation, such cannot but end in failure. When altruism predominates, when every man loves his neighbor as himself, when charity doeth its perfect work; then, and not until then, will there be such a thing as a lasting establishment of a society operated on the plan of "all things common."

What will be Zion? We are told that Zion is the "pure in heart." Ah, yes. The "pure in heart" will be those impelled by the truest principles of altruism and charity. In Zion as it will be established in the last days there will be prevalent the harmony that is necessary to the successful working of the truly socialistic plan. The disturbing elements of discord, selfishness, jealousies, egotism, will not, must not, be found. When, then, we are told that Zion is the "pure in heart," we are told in divine words what is lacking in the ordinary instances of "all things common." It sounds the keynote of the plan on which the "city of the Saints" will be operated. It is the basic element of success in the plan of "all things common."

It is useless for us to talk of "gathering" to build the city for the reception of the Messiah until we as a body of worshipers are in the condition expressed by the phrase, "pure in heart." Are we in such a condition? Have we eradicated from our beings the element of selfishness? Are we as a people prepared to love our neighbors as ourselves? We fear not; and if asked for our reasons for so fearing, we reply: There exists too strong a desire for position, for show. There is too great a desire to excel. We do not "in honor prefer one another." We love to appear better than our neighbor. There is too common in the church that spirit which is so prevalent in the world, the spirit of rivalry, of selfish competition. A desire to attain unto excellence is a most laudable and necessary one; but when that desire goes no farther than to appear better than some other person, to appear to better advantage than our neighbor, what is in its proper use a most efficient element for the elevation of a people becomes a dangerous and undesirable thing.

We fear that among those of the ministry, that portion of the church which should be most exemplary, that spirit is far too prevalent. The interests of the work are many times injured by selfishly zealous men who at times lose sight of the spirit of the work in their efforts to outshine others of the ministry. It is wrong. The very essential principle of the whole latter-day work is altruistic,—a working for the interests of others than self; and when the antagonistic element of selfishness, in any of its forms, enters into the work of any of the representative men, the work is injured and retarded to an extent. The burden of the advice of the Spirit unto us for years has been, "Come up higher." The example-mission of the Christ was a succession of self-denials, a mission of self-abnegation unto a most glorious exaltation. "In honor prefer ye one one another" was an ever-present and active principle in the life of the Savior, and for us to simulate that example unto the ultimate triumph of the work makes it necessary for us to put down all desire for place and preference and let our lives be actuated by the perfect law of neighborly love. We should teach that as the one essential thing as a preparation for the gathering into Zion. When Zion, "the pure in heart," is established throughout the whole world by the operation of the perfect law of love and good will to man, then the minor details of the gathering will follow as does day the night. When the people are prepared in their hearts for the long-looked for day of "coming home to Zion," the matter of working out the details for the dwelling together in the place of "all things common" will be worked out in simplicity and efficiency.

PREDICTS FLOOD AND DISTRESS.

Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 26.—The seventh-day adventist tabernacle was massed with people of that denomination last night to hear a message from their prophetess, Mrs Ellen G. White, still in California. She sends this prophecy and warning:—

"Calamities, earthquakes, flood and distress by land and sea will increase. God is looking on the world today as in Noah's time. He is sending his message to the people as in the days of Noah. There is in the world today a repetition of the wickedness of the time of the flood. Many helped Noah build the ark who did not believe the message for that time. God is now testing his people in this thing to see if they will work together."—Chicago Record, November 27.

The foregoing is a slip of news going through the press, and sent us by Bro. W. E. Messenger, of Prescott, Iowa. It is quite easy to make such a prediction from present indications; but we seriously doubt, for causes unnecessary to name now, that the years of 1900 to 1901 will be any more marked by calamities such as are named in the foregoing prophecies. That there will be many serious disasters by fire, flood, storm, and earthquakes, and possibly war in some parts of the world, is probable; but the latter has been imminent for several years now.

ADVICES from Vienna, dated November 30, state that news had reached there from Temesvar, South Hungary, that two "Mormon" elders had received rough treatment from the hands of a mob. It seems that the ministers from Utah had begun to preach polygamy, when the audience stormed the platform and ejected the pair from the hall. The advices further state:—

One of them was compelled to run the gauntlet of three hundred irate citizens armed with sticks, straps, or knotted cords, and shod with hobnailed shoes. He was afterwards stripped to the waist and thrashed by half a dozen matrons of Temesvar. The second Mormon was ducked in a horse pond. Finally the two elders were rescued by the police. The Minister of the Interior has prohibited further Mormon attempts to proselyte as being a danger to the well-being of the state.

Mob violence has been resorted to from the earliest ages in order to persecute the presenters of religious doctrines adverse to those held by the mob; and in nearly every case has the very object sought by the persecutors been defeated by the very measures used. We are unalterably opposed to the doctrine of polygamy, but we are also opposed to the spirit of mob violence, no matter against whom it is used. The doings of that Hungarian mob are paralleled by the actions of the Mansfield, Ohio, mobs of a few months ago when they resorted to violence to eject the Dowieites from the town.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. F. C. Warnky writes from Rich Hill, Missouri, November 26, as follows:—

I came here to Rich Hill one week ago last Saturday. As soon as I came I canvassed the business part of the town, giving personal invitations to come and hear me preach. It worked well. The brethren had arranged everything nicely, and I preached Saturday night, twice on Sunday, and every night last week except Saturday night, and twice yesterday. The interest has been good, and quite a goodly number are near the kingdom. All the papers of the town gave us good notices and reports of our meetings. One paper, the Review, published our faith in full. We were intending to close our meetings last night, but the interest is such that I will continue tonight and tomorrow night, then go to Nevada, Missouri, according to arrangements, and begin protracted meeting.

Bro. J. F. Mintun from Persia, Iowa, November 29, 1900:—

Have been preaching here for the past two nights with a good hearing. Continue tonight. Bro. Wm. Chambers is gradually failing, and in a very sad condition.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By the Darlington, Missouri, Record, of November 22, sent us by one of the brethren, we notice that Elder D. C. White was there for about two weeks in the latter part of November.

Bro. Fred C. Warnky has been at work in Rich Hill, Missouri, with probably good results. Bro. William Chapman sends us a copy of the Rich Hill Daily Review, containing a full statement of the faith in the epitome, mentioning Bro. Warnky as a "pleasant gentleman and an able man."

The authorities at Washington have decided to let Rev. Dowie's colony of lacemakers into the country, upon the ruling that they come to the United States to establish a new industry. So the reverend doctor gains his point so far. We stated an issue or two back that the colony was turned back, but appeal to Washington changed the situation, and decided the case, as above stated.

Bishop Kelley came home last Wednesday from a trip into Missouri, staid over Thanksgiving, and left again on Saturday for St. Louis to meet with that branch on Sunday.

Elder D. W. Wight, of the Utah mission, also one of the editorial force of the HERALD, came home from his field last Wednesday. He reports things as moving along nicely, and says that he never enjoyed better health in the field than he has lately.

Elder J. C. Clapp, who has been holding a series of meetings at Lucas, Iowa, came home last Friday for a short stay.

WHO SHALL PRESIDE?

The question of who shall preside in the absence of the president of the church, especially in case of his death (a thing we do not anticipate soon), has been agitated and discussed to some extent in the church. And believing the Utah church wrong in their position on this, as well as nearly every other vital issue between us and them, and believing that some of our own people are in error on this point, I venture to give my opinion in brief.

In discussing this, as well as any other gospel proposition, we appeal to the law governing in the case. And as God has in the law made provision for a perfect organization, organizing the officers of the church into quorums, specifying the duties of each, and arranging it so that one quorum balances or equals another in the rendering of decisions, we shall discuss this mainly from this standpoint. The law of the Lord is said to be perfect; and if this be true, in it will be found every necessary provision. To say that emergencies were not provided for, would be to charge God with a lack of foresight, or a want of knowledge. And believing God to be as much interested in his work as man can be, and as man knows emergencies may arise, and officers may and do die, and offices thereby become vacant, so God knew all this, and we believe made every necessary provision for such conditions when they do arise.

The highest office in the church is that of presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood; hence those occupying in that position are the highest officers in the church. And the Lord has said, when speaking of the two priesthoods in the church:—

Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church.—D. C. 104:11.

This quorum presides over the whole church, both missionary and presiding departments; as well as the department having charge of the temporalities of the church. They are appointed by revelation.

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed; and in case of the absence of one or both of those who are appointed to assist him, he has power to preside over the council without an assistant; and in case that he himself is absent, the other presidents have power to preside in his stead, both or either of them.—D. C. 99:6.

Now, as the Lord appoints all three of those presidents, and says in the absence of any two of them, the other one has power to preside; and as the cause of the absence is not stated, we have no right to assume that it means, if the president is living and absent, the others can preside, but cannot if he is dead, no more than we have to say that the president cannot preside if the assistants are dead. The Lord says any one of the three can preside if the other two are absent, without stating or intimating the cause of the absence. In section 87:3, we read of the assistant presidents:—

And again, verily I say unto thy brethren Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams, their sins are forgiven them also, and they are accounted as equal with thee in holding the keys of this last kingdom.

The reason they were accounted equal with the president in holding the keys of the kingdom, was because they were assistant presidents, or counselors; and not because it was Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams. They were "set in the church," not in the presidency of the church. Hence, if the president should fall by death, or otherwise, the others being accounted equal in authority, or in holding the keys of the kingdom, there would be no break in the work, but it would go on until God should appoint another instead of the one removed. This is true of either of the presidency, according to the order of the quorums. If the president chose the assistants, their office might cease with his death, or removal from office; but this is not the case. God has wisely chosen the assistant presidents, and says of the quorum of the presidency:—

A majority may form a quorum, when circumstances render it impossible to be otherwise.—D. C. 104: 11.

This is said of this quorum, when considering it in connection with the other quorums (twelve and seventies), in rendering decisions and acting in quorum capacity. The cause of this absence here again is not stated; and we have no right to assume that God has been unmindful of his duty.

If one third of the twelve were absent, the other two thirds could render a decision (or a majority could), and so with the seventy. And if the president of the twelve and four of his brethren were to die or be removed from office, who would think the other seven could not go on with their work? or if a majority of the twelve were gone, so an authoritative decision could not be rendered, who would think the minority could not go on in the discharge of the duties of their calling and office? Under such conditions the seventy could not say, We will fill up the quorum of twelve; but the Lord would have to fill it. And if the president of the church should die or be removed from office, the twelve could not say to the assistant presidents, or president, as the case might be, your appointment by revelation, and ordination to the presidency, by direction of a "high council or General Conference" is now void, and we will now take the lead of the church; we will appoint one of our quorum as president, and he can choose his counselors (as the Brighamites did); and the presidents the Lord had appointed can stand aside, or go and do something else, without entirely ignoring the order and law of God.

If the president was to die, the assistant presidents being authorized by law to preside in his stead, both or either of them; and if there was not sufficient written to make the case clear, when sitting in council, the president may inquire and obtain the mind of the Lord on principle or doctrine. This makes it clear that either of the presidency may receive revelation from the Lord. And the Lord having placed them in the highest office in the church, and declared them as equal with the president, in holding the keys of the kingdom, there is no room left to doubt their right to preside, in case of the absence of the president, by death or any other cause. The death of the president could in no case increase the authority of any other quorum, nor diminish the authority of the assistant presidents. While any two of them are living they can preside and render decisions; and any one can preside, if the other two are absent (but could not render a decision that would be final), over the high council, or high priesthood, until God shall designate or appoint the lineal heir, or some other to occupy in the office of president.

Any other view, to my mind, destroys the harmonious working of the quorums, and would bring in disorder, and cause division.

If all of the first presidency were gone, the twelve being the next quorum in authority, would go on with the work in their own office and calling, until God would designate some one, or more, to act in the office of first presidency. But they could not in any case, either act in the office, or fill the office of first presidency; that must be filled by the Lord. It may be said that Joseph said, "where I am not there is no presidency." If he did say that, it would not make void the law, and would only be true if the others were dead, or disqualified by transgression or otherwise, to act in their calling and office.

The church has said in the articles of incorporation, that the bishop's counselors can act in their office, in case of death or removal from office of the bishop, until another bishop is appointed. And the bishop chooses his own counselors.

It would be rather inconsistent for the church to say, that the assistant presidents, appointed by the Lord, and declared by him to be accounted equal with the president in holding the keys of the kingdom, could not continue to occupy in their office until another should be legally appointed. Therefore we are forced to the following conclusions (if we believe the law), that the assistant presidents in the first presidency are appointed by revelation, and accounted as equal with the president in holding the keys of the kingdom. And holding the highest office in the church, and being called and ordained for that purpose, by right and virtue of their office as members of the first presidency, they should preside in case of the death, or removal from office, of the president, and assist him when living and present. That even the president could not cast them off at his pleasure. They could only lose their high and holy calling by death or unfaithfulness. And in case the church refused to sustain them, the Lord would have to fill their places, as well as that of president. That no other man, or quorum, could preside in the place of the president lawfully; no other being called and ordained to that office.

If this position be correct, it should be taught when speaking or lecturing on this subject. If it be not correct, it should be corrected. Then if an emergency should arise at any time in the church, there could be unity of action, having previously come to a unity of understanding.

I believe every man has a right to his opinion, but no man has a right to teach his opinion as the law of the church, thereby making void the law, and educating the Saints to believe a false theory. Hence, I expect every position taken by any elder in this church to be criticised and corrected by those having the light.

Desiring only the good of all concerned, and praying constantly for unity of sentiment and action, that we may be one, and united according to the law of the celestial kingdom, that thereby we may be enabled to build up Zion and stand when the Lord comes, I hope to be willing to be corrected wherein I may be wrong; and being corrected in theory, I hope to so correct my practice, as to harmonize my life with the law, and thereby become sanctified, and accomplish God's design concerning the faithful ones. To this end I hope to be ever found working, as well as praying. In the faith, as I understand it, and waiting and praying for more light to all, as ever, G. H. HILLIARD.

BAPTISM.—NO. 3.

THE HOW? THE WHO? THE WHY? AND BY WHOM?

BY WALTER J. HAWORTH.

THE WHY?

We are often asked, Why do you teach that all believers should be baptized? 1. Because the ordinance of baptism is an indespensable factor in the new birth spoken of by Jesus in John 3: 5. 2. It is a command from Jesus. 3. Because by obedience to that command we receive God's reward in a remission of our sins (Acts 2: 38), and after the laying on of hands the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 8: 17; 19: 6.)

THE NEW BIRTH.—Jesus said:—

Except a man is born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. —John 3: 5

Dear reader, your Savior here states that in order to enter the kingdom of heaven you must be born again. In that new birth the factors to be employed are water and the Spirit. To say that we can be born again without the instrumentality of either of these two elements is to set one's self up as an authority against the immaculate Son of God, who has said that we cannot enter the kingdom except in that way. We can no more set aside the law governing this new birth by asserting that we have been born again without "water and the Spirit," than was the law governing the natural birth set aside by the ignorant statement of that little girl named Topsy, whom we read of in Uncle Tom's Cabin, that she supposed she "just growed." Both laws came from the one great God, who inspired the wise man to write:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever; nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it, and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.—Ecc. 3: 14.

In the beginning God ordained the law which was to govern the natural birth; it was to operate for all time; he did it for ever. There has been no departure from the rule from the time of Adam to the present, and we look for none between now and the end of time. Nineteen hundred years ago Jesus revealed the law governing the new birth. Was this law to operate only for a time? No; for the word of the Lord says, "whatsoever." Yes; "whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever."

Reader, do you think that you have been born again in any other way than in accordance with the law prescribed by Jesus? Do you think you have been born without the water?

Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption: but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.—Gal. 6: 7, 8.

Sowing to the Spirit is sowing or doing what the Spirit, through Jesus and his apostles, has commanded; sowing to the flesh is sowing or doing what is enjoined in the doctrines of men. Be wise, and sow to the Spirit.

We are sometimes told that the "water" mentioned in John 3: 5 is the same kind of water as that mentioned in John 4: 14—spiritual water—spiritual water would not be water at all; it would simply be the "spirit" itself. Then if Jesus meant spiritual water, John 3: 5 should read: Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of the Spirit and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. Does this harmonize with the teaching of Jesus, "Use not vain repetitions"? (Matt. 6: 7.)

We are confident that when Jusus said "water and the Spirit," he said what he meant, and meant what he said; for the same Jesus has also said, "My words shall judge you at the last day." Yes, dear reader, his words will be there to meet us on that day, and not the many different interpretations given to them. How can he be your Savior if you do not do as he commands you?

Some people believe that the ordinance of baptism has nothing to do with the new birth; but that we are born again when we are converted. There is as much difference between conversion and the new birth, regeneration, as there is between ordinary conception and birth. We are first begotten with the word of truth (James 1: 18), which takes place when we are converted. If we have been begotten by the word of truth—converted to a belief in the gospel—we will be regenerated or born again as the gospel or word of God prescribes; namely, "of water and of the Spirit."

In Titus 3: 5, Paul calls baptism "the washing of regeneration." Paul eloquently describes the new birth when he says:—

For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.—Rom. 6: 5.

He makes this "likeness" clear in the fourth verse when he says:—

That like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.—Rom. 6: 4.

This "newness of life" is evidently Paul's manner of referring to the "new birth" spoken of by Jesus. They were to get rid of their old natures—be "planted together in the likeness of Christ's death." A "planting" always involves a death:—

Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die.—1 Cor. 15: 36.

Did the old natures of those who were "planted" die? Yes, for verse 6 says:—

Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed.—Rom. 6: 6.

A COMMAND.—In the great commission Jesus said:—

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matt. 28: 19, 20.

The apostles, and all evangelical ministers subsequently, called of God, were commanded to go into all the world and preach the gospel—and to baptize the believer. They were to teach the believers to observe all things which he had commanded them. It is therefore the duty of every minister called of God to teach believers to observe all the commands of Jesus. Baptism is one of those commands; and the minister who does not teach it, is not "teaching them to observe all things."

In Mark's account of that commission, the following appears:—

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 16.

Will anyone dare to say that they can be saved without baptism, when Jesus speaks so plainly! To say that we can be saved without baptism is tantamount to saying: "He that believeth and is not baptized shall be saved." Jesus says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

Reader, whom do you believe in this matter? We prefer to believe Jesus rather than any man or number of men who dare to contradict him.

It is taught by some that water baptism is not necessary now, because, when John came baptizing he said:—

I indeed baptize you with water, . . . but he that cometh after me . . . he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 3: 11.

It is urged that while the baptism of John was water baptism, that of Jesus was "the Holy Ghost;" and that people who received the baptism of the Spirit have no need to be baptized in water. But suppose we find in the Scriptures an instance where people actually did partake of the Holy Ghost, and still were commanded to be baptized, will that not be sufficient evidence that all are commanded to be baptized in water, even though they first receive some manifestation of the Spirit? In the tenth chapter of Acts we have it recorded that after Peter had preached unto the household of Cornelius, and told them things whereby they might be saved, the Holy Ghost came upon them, and they spake in tongues and magnified God. Surely this was a rich outpouring of the Holy Spirit. But was this sufficient to save them—all that was required of them? No; for in verse 48 we read that Peter commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. This is the only case on record where any manifestation (apparently the baptism of the Spirit) was received before baptism in water. We say apparently, because there is nothing in the case to show it was the Spirit of adoption. It was done to show Peter "that God is no respecter of persons." Peter was a Jew, and believed that the gospel was to the Jews only. This was God's method of demonstrating that it was to all. Peter saw the point and said, "What was I that I should withstand God?"

Reader, ask yourself the same question, and obey his commands.

REMISSION OF SINS.—In Mark we read:—

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—1: 4.

But the objection is made that John's baptism was not Christian baptism. We read in Acts:—

Repent, and baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—2: 38, 39.

We see that the object of John's baptism was exactly the same as that to be attained by the baptism of Jesus and his apostles—the remission of sins. Both also taught the doctrine of repentance. We are told "the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized" by John (Luke 7:30). "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." Jesus was baptized by John. To say that John's baptism was not Christian baptism, is to deny that Jesus received Christian baptism. Both John and Peter taught baptism "for the remission of sins."

Some Baptists preach that you must be saved, and have a remission of sins, before baptism. In order to reason up to this, they tell us to search our dictionaries for the meaning of the word for. We search, and find that it means "because of." Now, say they, we are baptized, "because of the remission of sins"—because our sins have been remitted by the blood of Jesus Christ.

Let us apply this reasoning to Matthew 26:28:—

> For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

Was the blood of Christ shed because the sins of many were already remitted!—because our sins had been remitted? No! says all "orthodox" Christians, it was in order to obtain for us a remission of sins. Exactly; and we say, Why not obey the command of Jesus in order to obtain a remission of sins, through that precious blood? We have a more positive proof than these for baptism in order to obtain a remission of sins. In Acts 22:12-16, Paul tells us that when the servant of the Lord came in unto him, after he had spent three days and three nights in prayer before the Lord, he said unto him:—

> Now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22:16.

This language often calls out the question, How can water wash away sins? Is there any virtue in the water? We do not claim that there is any virtue in the water of baptism by which sins can actually be washed out of a person. We reply:—

> Baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God.)—1 Peter 3:21.

How, then, are sins remitted by baptism? To illustrate: In 2 Kings 5:10-14, is recorded an account of the cleansing of a leper named Naaman. This man was commanded by one of God's prophets to go and dip seven times in Jordan. He did as he was commanded, and was cleansed of his leprosy. Was there any virtue in the water by which he was cleansed of his leprosy? No? Then if he had not dipped in the water, would he have been cleansed? No! Then since there was no virtue in the water by which he was cleansed, and he could not have been cleansed had he not dipped in the water, what really did cleanse him? It was the power of God through obedience. God honored his obedience, as he will yours. So it is when we are baptized; God honors our obedience, and cleanses us from sin. We are told:—

> If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, . . . the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John 1:7.

When we obey all the commands of Jesus we are walking in the light, and his blood will cleanse us from all sin. If we are not walking in the light,—if we do not believe in him, repent of our sins and be baptized, as well as observe his other commands,—we can lay no claim to the precious blood which can cleanse us from all sin.

We submit the following from a historical standpoint as proof that baptism is for the remission of sins.

Origen, of the third century, says:—

> The baptism of the church is given for the forgiveness of sins.

Dr. Mosheim:—

> The remission of sins was thought to be its [baptism's] immediate and happy fruit.—Cent. 3, part 2, chap. 4, verse 4.

John Wesley says:—

> Baptism administered to real penitents is both a means and a seal of pardon. Nor did God in the primitive church ordinarily bestow this [pardon] on any, unless through this means.—Com. on New Test., p. 35.

Matthew Henry:—

> For they must be baptized in his name for the remission of sins upon the score of his righteousness.—Vol. 3, p. 732.

Again:—

> A great privilege which by baptism we have sealed to us is the remission of sins.—Vol. 3, p. 884.

We might produce much more testimony from history, but for the sake of brevity, we refrain.

The gift of the Holy Ghost:—

> Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2:38.

The gift of the Holy Ghost, or the baptism of the Spirit, is here promised on condition that they would repent and be baptized. This baptism, or gift, was generally imparted after the laying on of hands and prayer by the ministry. (See Acts 8:15-19; 9:17; 19:6.) It was indispensable to the believer then, and it is just as necessary now. Jesus said at one time:—

> If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7:17.

How was this knowledge to come?

> No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Cor. 12:3.

In order to obtain that knowledge, he must receive the Holy Ghost. He will then have something against which even the gates of hell cannot prevail. But while it is conceded by some that the first disciples received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands and prayer after baptism, they contend that this baptism of the Holy Spirit is not given to people now. What! Has the attribute of impartiality possessed by God in such a wonderful degree in other ages of the world changed to partiality now? Is our perfect God,—like poor, frail, mortal man,—subject to change? We cannot believe it of him. He has assured us, "I am the Lord, I change not." He has also said that he is no respecter of persons, and that,

> Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1:17.

Jesus also possesses this same grand attribute; for we read, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever." We have seen what Jesus was in the yesterday of long ago. Is he the same today? If not, why not?

To show that God and Christ have not nullified that promise of the Holy Ghost, made by Peter on the day of Pentecost, but that this as well as every other promise made by them "is yea and amen to all those who will obey them," we will briefly analyze the scripture in which the promise was made. Peter's words were:—

> Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins [and now follows a promise], and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise [of the Holy Ghost] is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2:38, 39

This promise was to them, their children, and those that are afar off; in fact to "even as many as the Lord our God shall call." God is calling men and women to repentance today, and as his voice is the same, we claim this promise. Thousands have already had the joy of receiving this baptism of the Holy Spirit in this nineteenth century, and the promise is still good to all those who will obey the voice of inspiration. When teaching this baptism of the Spirit, we are often asked if we are not teaching two baptisms, whereas Paul says that there is only "one baptism." If we remember rightly, there is also "one God" and Father of all mentioned in the same chapter; and yet there are three Gods taught by the Christian world. There is God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost; and they conjure these three Gods up into "one God," and they call this "three-in-one" "one-in-three" God. "the trinity." We read in 1 John 5:7 that there are three that bear witness in heaven; the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one. These three are joined together—inseparably connected—for the purpose of bearing witness in heaven. There are three also that bear record in earth, the Spirit, the water, and the blood (verse 8). These three are joined together also, for the purpose of bearing witness on the earth. If we have the united witness of the earthly witnesses—the Spirit, the water, and the blood—that our sins are remitted, and that we are born of God, the same facts will also be witnessed by the three in heaven. If we do not walk in the light as he is in the light, we will not be born of water and the Spirit, and the precious blood of Jesus will not join with the water and the Spirit in bearing witness to our souls that we are children of God. If it is proper to call the three heavenly witnesses "one godhead," is it not proper to call the three earthly witnesses "one baptism?" Again, in Genesis 2:24, we read:—

Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they [two] shall be one flesh.

What! two persons, of opposite sex, be one? Yes; for God will join them together, that they may consummate his almighty purpose. God had united the two elements, "water and the Spirit," that they might be instrumental in bringing about the new birth. Since those who are concerned in the natural birth are by God called "one flesh" we deem it consistent to believe that the factors ordained by him to bring about the "new birth" are "one baptism." "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." (Matt. 19:6.)

Paul evidently held this view of the matter, for although he said, in Ephesians 4, that there is "One Lord, one faith, and one baptism," we find him not only baptizing in water, but also laying on hands and praying that they might be baptized of the Spirit. He was very particular that persons baptized in water should also receive Spirit baptism, for we find in Acts 19 that he met some people who believed themselves children of God, and who wished to claim him as a brother in Christ. Paul had a test by which he could tell whether people were disciples of Christ or not. He knew that both John and Christ had promised Spirit baptism to the believer. John had told them that Jesus would baptize with the Holy Ghost. Jesus had promised that his disciples should know of his doctrine by receiving the Holy Ghost. Here was the test. If they had received either the baptism of John or of Jesus and his apostles, they would have received the Holy Ghost. He applied the test by saying, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

They replied, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost."

Paul said unto them, "Unto what were ye baptized?" and they said, "Unto John's baptism."

Paul evidently reasoned that there had been some mistake, and that they had not been baptized by John, for in astonishment he replied: "John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him that should come after him that is Jesus Christ."

If they had been baptized by John, they would have heard him teaching that Jesus would baptize with fire and the Holy Ghost. They evidently were not, for they confessed that they knew not whether there was any Holy Ghost. Paul then baptized them over again, and then having laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came upon them, and they spake with tongues and prophesied. There was no room for doubt then. There would be some difficulty in persuading those men after that that they were not children of God. They would then have the combined testimony of the Spirit, the water, and the blood; and against that testimony even the gates of hell cannot prevail.

The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.—Ps. 19:7.

We conclude this part of our subject by inviting the reader to test the matter for himself, and see whether these things are true or not. Do not be led off the track by such statements as "Salvation is not of works." Paul's reference to works was to those of the Mosaic law. No man could work out his own salvation by doing that kind of works, for "by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight."—Rom. 3:20. (Also Heb. 7:19; 10:1.) And the "righteousness which is of God," is quite a different thing to our own self-righteousness.

All our righteousness is as filthy rags.—Isa. 64:6.

By the righteous works which are commanded of God in the gospel law we can be saved, but not by the law of Moses or our own righteousness. Paul tells us:—

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.—Rom. 1:16.

Will anyone say that we can be saved without doing the righteous works enjoined therein? The "works" enjoined therein are indeed the "righteousness which is of God," for in verse 17 we read, "therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith." By faith we must do the works prescribed in the gospel, in hope of eternal life as our reward. Paul tells us that those works are: Faith in God, repentance from dead works, baptisms, and the laying on of hands" (Heb. 6:1, 2). If our faith moves us to do these righteous works (Jesus himself was baptized to fulfill all righteousness) in hope of life everlasting, and we continue to walk in newness of life, we will have a part in the first resurrection, and will have no need to fear the judgment seat of God. (See Rom. 8:1, 2.)

Reader, you are journeying to the judgment bar, there to be judged by your works. The words of Jesus will be there to confront you. You will be judged out of the things that are written in the books. Then be wise and square your lives by the words of Jesus, by his bright and holy example, and by the things that are written in the books. Pay no attention to those who tell you Jesus did it all. Jesus did his work. He did it well; but you and I have something to do, as well. We have often heard sinners told to get rid of their sins; to get down on their knees and pray, pray, pray. But if prayer would suffice to save a person, it should have saved Cornelius. (Acts 10 and 11 chapters.) "He prayed to God alway," and yet God actually sent an angel to tell him to send for a servant of the Lord, who would tell him words whereby he might be saved. Peter, after preaching the same as John (Acts 10:37, 38), commanded him to be baptized (v. 48). Again, the three days and nights spent in prayer by Saul of Tarsus should have had some effect with God, if that had been his plan to forgive sin. Paul had been struck blind, his proud Pharisaic heart had been broken and thoroughly humiliated; he prayed for three days and nights. God did not by this alone take his sins away, for Ananias said to him, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins."

Reader, do you think that God will take your sins away in answer to prayer, alone, when he would not forgive Paul that way? Remember, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Men have invented many ways of serving the Lord. They seem good and right unto man, but they are not God's way. "My ways are not your ways," saith the Lord. The ways of men, however good they may appear in their own eyes, always lead to death and destruction. Jesus commanded:—

Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.—Matt. 7:13, 14.

Do you desire to be among those few that find it? If so, obey the gospel, for the way of life is the gospel of Jesus Christ. Paul and others are called "The servants of the most high God, who shew unto us the way of salvation" (Acts 16:17). They preached the gospel, and in this way pointed out the way of salvation. Obey the principles of that gospel, walk in the narrow way, and eternal life will be your happy reward. On the other hand,—

How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by our Lord.—Hebrews 2:3.

ANTI-FRATERNALISM.

This is a matter of importance to every Saint. If secret societies are approved of God, all should belong, and if not, all should abstain. I have carefully weighed this matter, and have come to a very rigid conclusion.

It has been asked, "Where is there anything written that condemns all the insurance companies and secret societies?"

I do not care what has been written, said, or done, either for or against the orders; I fail to see the good yet accrued to a Latter Day Saint by belonging to any order or society outside of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Saints! hear the cry of the Spirit everywhere, calling the people to a higher spiritual stand! What is it calling for, if it be not for the Saints to lay off the cloak of the world, and put their trust in him who is trustworthy. Yea, to "lay up treasures in heaven, where moth and rust doth not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal."

It is with all candor and brotherly love that I differ and contend for the right as it appears to me. It is not the secrecy of the societies which I find fault with so much as it is their purpose. I assail the head, or the "god" of those orders, and worship only the God of our church. We cannot serve two masters at the same time—God and mammon. Which is God, and which mammon? The principal point in the consideration of the subject that invites my investigation is, simply the money matter. Yes, "hear the cry of the Spirit" throughout the church, and the bishop's agent of every branch pleading with the Saints to pay their tithing, and yet the theme is not understood, or at least tithing is not paid as well as it should be. Suppose, in a branch of two hundred members, or one hundred members, as the case might be, that twenty-five per cent belonged to some order and carried an insurance policy. The order of Modern Woodmen is an average order as regards expense, of which there are many similar, and some much more expensive. At least the average rate per month, making a general calculation for a common denominator, for the age, and "amount carried," question, among many of the orders. We will figure at fifty cents per month, or six dollars per year, assessments. "Lodge dues" vary according to rent, fuel, and fixtures; at least we will figure at the average low rate of three dollars and fifty cents per year. Then at these exceedingly low figures we find the individual expense to be nine dollars and fifty cents per year lodge dues etc. Then suppose he carries a prudential policy at the exceedingly low rate of forty cents per month; adding to the nine fifty, four eighty, aggregates fourteen thirty, and he is bound to pay that, or the policy he may hold becomes null and void. The supposition is, we have a branch of one hundred members; twenty-five are members of an order, and carry a policy at the above figures. We find that small branch pays annually to fraternal orders the surprising sum of $357.50.

Now, dear reader, what one of you does not think that sum best used in the furtherance of the gospel to the poor, instead of laying up treasures in iron vaults, simply to satisfy our earthly wants. Ah, that greed for gold! That mammon god, the prince to whom the knee of the world is bowed. Shall we, as Saints of God, "the salt of the earth," "the light of the world," lapse into darkness, by assuming the light "of the world"?

I admit that God in his wisdom and love has "poured out his Spirit upon all flesh," beginning at the time when the Reformation fathers went hand in hand up and down Europe, when that light of the gospel began to break forth in its beautiful radiance. This light and goodness are shown in many respects, modern civilization with its many constituents, reformed holy orders, fraternal orders, charitable institutions, and the light and spirit of liberty that has and is spreading over the whole earth. But on the light of liberty we have seen arise the gospel light like and the sky before us is cloudless, for God has promised, "nothing shall stay it," that kingdom, that "shall never be torn down."

> Another morn
> Risen on mid-noon

I have never found any society so pure as the society of the Saints; and let us pray God the Eternal Father that we may never lose our love for each other. In my "everyday walk" I am associated with the world in general, and seldom see a Saint except it be on the Sabbath or special occasions; but even then I feel a bond of unity, and if I know them to be "true Saints," I actually love them as I do myself.

"If Latter Day Saints are to be the salt of the earth, they must mingle with the people who they are to save and influence them for good," says one.

Yes, let us "mingle" with the world, and preach Christ and him crucified, and not fraternal orders. Preach the faith of our church; bear unto them your testimony that you know the work is true; tell them of the blessed promises of Jesus, and how he has verified them with you. Let your light truly shine, that they may see your good works and glorify the Father in heaven.

Dear Saints, who belong to an order, withdraw, and place that small sum you pay your assessements with in the hands of our bishop, and he will put it to a use better than you are putting it. Yes, he will send our elders to the poor and meek, that they may hear the gospel; or he will use it for church benefits.

Now, dear reader, let us see what we can figure out of this proposition. You know we have a college at Lamoni, which is unpaid for. I do not know how much is due. All over the country are churches unpaid for, which the Saints are trying very hard to do. But let us see how hard they are trying. You remember how we figured, a while ago. Now suppose our church—the Reorganized Church—numbers near, if not over, fifty thousand, and twenty-five per cent are fraternalists at a rate of $14.30 per year. We will figure twelve thousand, in case we haven't that many. At least the twelve thousand would pay out annually, $48,840. From this you may form your own conclusion; Do you think it best to deprive God of the amount, and advise all to join, and enrich "carpet-bag" officers? Do as you please.

Those who are contemplating insurance, I ask you to reread the New Testament, and see how closely it invites us to the nature of Christ, and then ask yourself the question, Would Christ have been a fraternalist? And if you decide No, let your act be no, "and keep yourself unspotted from the world."

"Prospective brides," after the young man has popped the question, you begin popping. "Ask him" if he has cast his anchor on the rock that stands in the center of the ocean, and sought to make himself secure against the tumultuous waves which break against Zion's rock. "Ask him" if he has prepared himself in the spirit, that God may approve of your union, and send his Spirit to unite you, that you may be united in the Spirit, and "whatsoever God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." "Prospective brides," these are the questions you want to pop. Try his heart and not his purse; if he loves you, and you love him, he can provide for you, and if God calls him away, he will provide for you. Don't leave the church! Be faithful!

A model of the cathedral of St. John the Divine has been under construction for the past two years. It will be a miniature building, 50 by 25 feet, with a height of 35 feet. It is on a scale of an inch to the foot. The structure will be of plaster, and a wooden frame will accommodate over a hundred persons. It is to be exhibited on the site of the cathedral, and possibly inside of a temporary structure. The work upon the cathedral proceeds slowly.

THE NORTH COUNTRY.

A new idea or an old one revived in regard to the north country, beyond the supposed pole. First, its location; second, its inhabitants; third, who are they; fourth, their origin.

"Come unto me, all ye ends of the earth." The ends of the earth must necessarily be north and south, and not east or west, for we find no end in that direction, because if we travel either east or west from any given point, we return to the same point. And in order that I try to establish a supposed truth it is to introduce what seems to be light and truth in regard to the subject under consideration.

Job, speaking by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, says:—

He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.—Job 26:7.

David, the sweet singer in Israel, says:—

The north and the south thou has created them.—Ps. 89:12.

Here he does not speak of east and west. Isaiah, speaking by the power of the Spirit, says of Lucifer:—

How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north.—Isa. 14:12, 13.

This is presumptive evidence, at least, that there are a congregation some place in the north. Then, where? echo answers, Where? And at another time the same writer records this, while under the inspiration of the Spirit:—

I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back; bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth.—Isaiah 43:6.

So you can see from this language that the ends spoken of are north and south, for there are no ends east and west.

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our righteousness. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.—Jeremiah 23:5-8.

From this we understand that it will be more miraculous than that of the dividing of the Red Sea, and the miracles of Moses and Aaron.

Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest. The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee. Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel; thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets. . . . Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things. For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. For thus saith the Lord; Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations; publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth. . . . They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn. . . . Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd: and their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all. . . . I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord.—Jer. 31:2-14.

For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast. In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go, and seek the Lord their God. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten. My people hath been lost sheep: their shepherds have caused them to go astray.—Jer. 50:3-6.

All these evidences in prophecy, in regard to this subject, are to be fulfilled in the last days, even in the days of the time of the restitution of all things.

And one more testimony is essential, in order to complete the evidences of the prophets, and that will be found in the latter-day work, as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, which is as follows:—

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. Their enemies shall become a prey unto them, and in the barren deserts there shall come forth pools of living water; and the parched ground shall no longer be a thirsty land. And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy. Behold, this is the blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the richer blessing upon the head of Ephraim and his fellows. And they also of the tribe of Judah, after their pain, shall be sanctified in holiness before the Lord to dwell in his presence day and night forever and ever.—108:6.

And now for other testimony. I am informed that Josephus, the historian, says that Israel took this counsel to themselves, that they would go into the north country; namely, a year and one half journey, where they would keep the statutes of the Lord, which they never kept in their own land.

Also northern explorers tell some things that are presumptive, at least, and is worth consideration and of value on this subject.

First. That green herbage floats in northern seas.

Second. That wild geese fly to the north, raise their young, and return.

Third. That the wind blows warm from the north at the supposed polar sea, and that the ice was so rotten that it was not safe to advance with their sledges.

Fourth. That at or near the eighty-third degree north latitude, the magnetic needle turns south. Now if this be true, and the magnetic needle is governed by attraction, then the north end is as large from that point north and south, this being the center of attraction.

Fifth. The northern lights, that are so grand to behold at some seasons of the year, especially in high northern latitudes (which has not been satisfactorily explained to me at least), which, if this theory be true, is the reflection of the sun's rays upon the ice in the narrow connection almost one thousand at the narrow place. And if they have been to the narrow place, this accounts for the warm winds coming from that quarter. This seems to be strong presumptive evidence that this theory is true.

Sixth. Some years ago a man shot a wild goose in southern Oregon or northern California, and there was some grain in its crop that looked different from other grain, being pointed at both ends, and is called goose wheat. He planted this grain, and it grew, and yielded well, and is good grain. I have a few grains in my possession at present that grew in Oregon. It grows about four feet high, and has soft, white straw, and beard two or three inches long, and is larger than wheat.

Seventh. Some years ago some observers discovered from the coast of Alaska, mirage cities of the north. When first seen they supposed they were American cities, being cities with towering spires, incomplete at first, but in later years more complete. These are seen about the 21st of June, when the sun is at its farthest point north, (tropic of cancer.) Job, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Josephus, Joseph Smith, northern explorers and observers all testify in substance, that this theory is true.

JANSON, Ark., Nov. 22.

Editors Herald:—This leaves me busily engaged in preaching the gospel. I came to this town yesterday, opened up last night to a full house. First sermon ever preached in the town. But as usual only few now and then accept and obey the gospel. I have labored up and down the P. G. R. R. this year; opened up in towns where the gospel has never been preached, which is very unpleasant sometimes. Sorry diet to eat and poor accommodations is the life of our missionaries who break new ground. It is much pleasanter to lounge around Saints and preach for them; but how is the gospel going to be preached to all the world unless some of us sacrifice to do it. The harder the work the more pay we will get.

Bro. J. W. Jackson recently received a dose of rocks at Wicks, Arkansas. The rocks failed to hit him; but they were thrown with real intent. Bro. H. O. Smith has been conducting meetings at Cove and Grannis, Arkansas, with success, having a good time among the Saints. We anticipate a fine conference, which will convene at Cove the first of December. We look for a large gathering of Saints from different parts of the district.

We hope to see the work of the Lord prosper in this south land country. Sometimes I get discouraged and think of giving up my field and quitting missionary work; but I want to do my duty and be ready for Christ when he comes. In bonds, CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 18.

Editors Herald:—I am glad that the Lord sent a man of God to Louisville, Kentucky. It was Elder James M. Scott. When I heard him three or four times I gave my name to be baptized and to join the most despised people and church of the whole world. We have a very nice branch in Louisville. Bro. Metcalf is elder, and a man full of the Holy Ghost; J. Riggle is priest; Sid Metcalf deacon; John Resch teacher; and they all are men of God.

It will be two years in March since I became a Latter Day Saint. The Lord has shown me great things. I had a vision of the twelve one night. A young man came in, with hair down his back; and when he raised his hand the twelve stood up, and I heard a a voice say that Joseph was among them. The more that I read about this work, and the more that I see, the stronger I get, for I have the witness that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, and that his father, Joseph Smith, was a prophet of God.

It does my heart good to tell the people of this grand work. I love to read the History of the Church, and the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Book of Mormon which is the stick of Ephraim, and the Bible which is the stick of Judah, and the Saints' Herald which gives me joy to see the work getting along so nicely everywhere. I am in Cincinnati, Ohio, where there is no branch, and only two Saints besides myself, wife, and sister-in-law. If any of the elders will come here I will help them all I can. They will have a home with me. This place needs a man of God. If any of the brethren will come, call at Louis Lipp's enameling works, corner Fifth and Wayne streets.

W. N. HANNER.

FULTON, Ky., Nov. 24.

Editors Herald:—We have no branch organization at this place; there are only a few Saints here. A year ago last August Elder C. L. Snow introduced the work in this neighborhood, there being no Saints nearer than twelve miles. By the help of two or three friends he obtained the use of the schoolhouse, having been refused the use of any of the church houses in the neighborhood.

So, according to appointment, the meeting began on Saturday night. Because of sickness I was unable to attend the first meeting, and I seemed to be getting worse under medical treatment. Having previously investigated the doctrine taught by Elder Snow, and believing God was no less powerful than he used to be, I decided to be administered to. I was, and refused to take any more medicine, and rested well the first night, and was able to attend meeting the rest of the time. To God be the praise.

Certain boys had threatened to "rotten egg" Bro. Snow if he should attempt to preach in the schoolhouse; however, nothing of the kind was done. Bro. Snow had excellent liberty in presenting the gospel. Three were baptized, myself being one of the number. Then the schoolhouse and church houses were closed against us; so we were forced to hold our meetings in private houses. My family thought I had brought a terrible disgrace on them; but, unlike some others, they were not willing to cast me off, but would bear the disgrace with me. So I had a chance to present my side of the question. My wife, brother, and sisters, belonged to the Christian (Campbellite) Church; father and mother were Baptists; I had never joined any. My brother thought he would convince me of my error, and in so doing discovered his own. So he came over to join the Lord's army, although it was very cold weather, near the zero point. So he had to break through the ice to get on the Lord's side, which showed his determination, Sr. Babbie Williams having previously broken through in the same way.

So we now numbered five. Persecution seemed to grow stronger as the enemy's ranks were broken, but the "leaders" never would venture a "fight." Elders T. C. Kelley and C. L. Snow arranged to hold a meeting here in August, and we built a brush arbor near Bro. Joe Williams, where they held forth for a week, with good interest, three more being added by baptism, among whom was my wife. There were others almost persuaded, two of whom were baptized at the October reunion, twenty-five miles east of Fulton, near Bro. J. H. Adair's.

On his way south, Bro. Kelley paid us a call and preached for us, a good interest being manifested, some coming who had never heard before. He preached eight times, after which mother came forward and demanded baptism of him. I am very thankful that the Lord is removing prejudice from the minds of honest ones, who are coming forward, manifesting their love in obeying the gospel. May the good work continue until all the honest in heart have been gathered out and Zion shall be redeemed.

After the baptizing, Bro. Kelley bade us adieu. He has found a warm place in the hearts of many people around Fulton, and we were loath to see him go. May God's choice blessing be with him wherever he may go, is our prayer. He is one of the most logical reasoners I ever met. We anxiously look forward to the time when he can be with us again.

We have organized a prayer meeting for each Wednesday night, to be held at our several homes by turn. It is our desire to have Bro. C. L. Snow with us again, sometime this winter. Don't forget us, Bro. Snow, for some of us look upon you as being our father in the gospel. Don't forget your "children." Some who are not of us have expressed a desire to hear you preach; do not disappoint them.

I hope and trust that the time is not far distant when we will have a branch organization here. May the Lord see fit to qualify and choose such officers as are required to take charge of this work, is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald:—The Lord's work in this part of the field is onward, though there is room for improvement. Our missionaries and local ministers are doing what they can, as a rule, I believe.

People are very busy in the country, husking corn, which militates against our procuring large attendance at night services, with the exception of Sunday evenings, when they seem to turn out well. However, this difficulty will soon be past, and then we look for better results.

The interests of the work demand the very best efforts that we can make; it requires a godly walk and conversation on the part of all, that the preaching of the restored gospel may be made effective by our example. It seems to me that no one who understands the importance of obedience to the gospel of Christ in all its parts can afford to suffer themselves to become negligent and grow cold, and thus lose the influence and power of the Holy Spirit. Salvation is an individual work, so that each may secure the favor of God in time, and eternal life in the world to come if he will but put forth a reasonable effort to do so.

their religion while they circulate church literature and talk of the truth of their religion to their neighbors and townsmen; but how very different it is where only one or two pursue the opposite course, Paul wrote: "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. If we will let him; but he will sanctify us in his own way.

O let God's Spirit dwell within;
Open your heart and let him in;
For he will help you day by day,
And lead you in God's holy way.

My health is fairly good at this writing, though still troubled with rheumatism to some extent. However, my heart overflows with gratitude to God that he has so far blessed me that I am once more able to continue ministerial duties. COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 17.

Editors Herald:—It has been so long since I have written you, I feel like a stranger. It has been something like four years since writing you. I am a much better reader than writer, so I was content with reading from the pens of others.

When I received my appointment, it found me engaged in two different enterprises, viz., general merchandising, and manufacturing church pipe organs. So I informed Bro. W. H. Kelley, missionary in charge, that I would not be able to take up the active work before the first of July, which time I had decided to start, not knowing how or what disposition I would make of the business. But before the time set I had sold the stock of merchandise, also all the organs I had on hands, besides the organ plant, and was ready to take my leave of home and loved ones, so far as affairs of the business of the world were concerned; but our little son, three months old, was attacked with cholera infantum, and was brought near death's door, which detained me about two weeks longer, when it pleased our heavenly Father to hear our petitions in his behalf, and he had recovered sufficiently for me to take my leave of home on the 15th of July for Pittsburg district to assist Bro. J. F. McDowell in tent work.

While nursing the babe I was not altogether idle. I organized a union Sabbath school at Parker's schoolhouse, also preached a few times, and baptized Bro. J. L. Goodrich's eldest son and his wife, Emory A. and Ollie Goodrich; also blessed their two children.

Arrived at Wheeling on the 17th, and found Bro. McDowell with tent pitched along the river front, at Forty-third street, with ordinary interest and attendance. Labored here and also at Bellaire and West Wheeling until August 23, when Bro. McDowell thought best to store tent, which was done. While there were no baptisms I am sure some good was done. Saints were strengthened, and some were heard to say they were going to do better. Some promised to forsake the "chew." One thing I am quite sure of, the experience was profitable to me. I found a noble associate in Bro. McDowell and our happy days and hours spent together will never be forgotten by me. May the good Lord bless him in his labor of love, and may his life be long in the Master's cause, is my prayer!

While I cannot mention all of the names of the Saints at Wheeling and vicinity, I desire to say that I cannot but remember their kindness to me, with the fondest recollection of love and respect. May the good Lord bless all of them and keep them in his love, is my prayer.

Leaving Wheeling on the 24th of August, I arrived at Goose Creek, West Virginia, in company with Brn. McDowell and Ullom, to attend the West Virginia conference. Here I met and made many new acquaintances among the Saints. I wish I could be among such good people all the time.

Returned home on the 28th to visit family, after being absent from them for so long, which was the first time in my life. Seemed to me like a year! After a stay of nine days and preaching for our home branch, I took leave, in company with Bro. T. J. Beatty, for Columbus, Ohio, to "break new soil." Arrived at Columbus on September 7. We commenced meetings in the home of Bro. and Sr. Green, she being a sister in the flesh as well as a sister in the Lord. We held meetings there and elsewhere as opportunity offered in cottages each evening, and were very busy hunting up the few scattered Saints in the city, getting them mutually acquainted and located, and to stir up in them a desire to attend our meetings. It seemed to me that they were indeed "lost sheep" and without a "shepherd." We found a few, namely, Bro. Matthews, and Srs. Scofield and Eichhorn, together with Bro. and Sr. Green, who were willing to take hold and assist the missionary with the needful things to carry on the effort, besides encouraging us with presence and prayers.

After we held three or four services, things looked "blue." On Sunday evening no one came to meeting, which was at Bro. Green's, it being about three to four miles to the nearest Saints. While we were out in the open air, waiting for some one to come to preach to, and almost discouraged, Bro. Beatty thought he heard singing in the distance. We listened, and finally it died away. After a little we heard the sound of the voice of one on the evening breeze, like one preaching. So I suggested to Bro. Beatty that we go and see what we could learn. We started guided only by the sound on the air, which sometimes was faint and almost lost to us; but across lots and "near cuts" we followed on, and finally came to an open air meeting, with torches burning. The speaker was in full blast. We did not disclose our identity until the services were ended. When we introduced ourselves as ministers, we were gladly received. Bro. Beatty was invited to speak there the next evening, which he accepted. I was invited by the minister to speak at his home the next evening, which was over a mile from there, so we took advantage of all opportunities, feeling that the Lord was in it.

I found that the minister who had invited me was an Adventist, and learned afterwards that his purpose was to have me "downed." He and a lady by the name of Greyham were associated, "battling against the walls of sectarianism," as he styled it. She was a missionary of the Dowie stripe, and of much stronger or larger intellect than he, and had confounded and put all the "preachers" to flight, which thing they specially delighted in. The Lord knew for what purpose I was here, but I did not; but I felt sure he had made the way open, so I felt blessed, and had liberty as I never had before. After the sermon the lady arose and began to ask questions. Said she had been praying for six months for the Lord to send her the truth, and that the Spirit had told her that there was more for her yet, and that her desire would soon be granted. Stated that the Spirit bore testimony to her when we entered the room that we were "clean," and that we were the Lord's servants, and all that was said was of God, and the truth. I was led to state to her in her questions, that God had not sent to her an angel as he did to Cornelius, but that he had sent his servants direct to her, to tell her just what she lacked, and to answer her prayers.

When she heard this, she said: "Well, then, here is Cornelius; I am ready for baptism. After we left, her husband made things rather "hot," saying she was weak minded, and he and the minister were cut to the heart, seeing she was converted, while they both expected to see her tear us all to pieces, as I was brought there by him for this purpose.

Thus the good work began to grow, and praise to the good Father above, for I so plainly see his hand in this start. A few days later, Sr. Throp, a Methodist sister, was baptized; a fine lady indeed, and one who has the love and utmost confidence of all the Saints here.

This ended our meetings, with good interest and the request of two fine young men to pray for them, that they might be ready for baptism upon our return, which we had announced would be soon. We wished to attend our district conference, which had been called to convene September 29.

After conference I returned home, and was detained longer than was expected, looking after fuel, feed, etc., for the family for the winter.

On October 22 I returned to Columbus, and resumed the effort, Bro. Beatty joining me on the 26th. On this date I baptized Bro. Throp, husband of the sister spoken of, just before the close of our first meeting. A noble Saint is he. I must here relate what led to his conversion, as I think it wonderful, indeed, and to show you how the Lord is working with us. This brother has never belonged to any church or creed. He is fifty-seven years old, is an old soldier, has heard B. Young preach. Said he joined no church because he could not see the consistency of their preaching, and could not harmonize it with the Bible. I loaned him my Book of Mormon and he began to read. One day he was reading concerning the people of Jared, their final war, and of the finding of the gold plates, and of the many bones, skulls, etc., together with the swords, etc. He was lying on the floor, with a pillow under his head, the Book of Mormon in hand. I will tell it as near as I can in his own language: "I seemed to lose consciousness; the book fell on my breast, I started on a long journey, I went over valley and dell, woods, etc., sometimes having to get down and crawl for brush, briars, and logs. Oh, I was so tired when I got there, for the distance was so long! I found lots of human bones, and thousands of skulls, with the great eye sockets staring me in the face. I saw and handled the swords. They were very rusty, and crumbled in my hands when I picked them up and felt of them between my fingers. I saw the breastplates, and helmets. I found the plates of pure gold; I handled them, slipped one past the other, noticed and observed the size, thickness, and weight. They had writing on them, not like ours, but written in hieroglyphics. I had the interpretation of them, and just began to read, when Sr. Throp came in and spoke to me, and all vanished. I am sure I could have read them if I had not been disturbed. I feel so sorry that I was disturbed before I had read them."

In relating this to me, the brother wept, being so full of the Spirit, and receiving so great a blessing. He said: "Brother, I do not cry because I am sorry, but I am so happy. I believe, and am ready for baptism."

Oh, my soul was full of joy, and his house seemed to be full of the Spirit of God.

On the second Sunday following, Bro. Beatty led the two young men already spoken of, to the watery grave, besides two sisters, a Sr. King and a Sr. Merrick, both sisters in the flesh. One had been sprinkled, the other had been baptized by a Campbellite.

On the Tuesday following, I baptized five more, four sisters and one brother, all adults. This makes twelve since coming here, and all good people, I believe. More have given their names to be baptized on next Sunday. Two, I think, and there may be more, as there are many yet much interested. Bro. W. H. Kelley was here on last Saturday, remaining until Tuesday morning. He organized a branch, Bro. Matthews being ordained to the office of priest, and elected president of the branch. Come again Bro. Kelley; sorry I did not get to see you, being called home on account of sickness of our little babe, he being attacked by acute dysentery. This child has had much sickness since birth, being of a frail constitution. I ask the prayers of all Saints in his behalf, that he may be fully restored to health.

I have lately found two more new sisters, as I call them; that is, new to me, I saw Sr. Betz's letter in the Ensign, giving her street and number, called on her, and found her living with her sister, Sr. Wike. I find them to be noble sisters. I am at this writing domiciled at their home. Mr. Wike, Sr. Wike's husband, is not a member, but is very friendly, and believes no other church is right. May the Lord move on him to come in and take the name of Christ on himself.

There are at present twenty-seven members in the city. Prospects are flattering for many soon. I ask the prayers of all of God's people that we may be able to do our duty, and the will of the Master.

I hereby acknowledge the receipt of tracts, etc., from Sr. Marie Clark, also Heralds, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves from Sr. Burgess. Dear sisters, the supply is exhausted, and still there is room; can use most anything, tracts especially. We have a Sunday school organized, and can use the Hopes you speak of. I write thus as I mislaid your letter and lost the address. In bonds of the gospel,

V. M. GOODRICH.

Editors Herald:—Winter has set in here with a vengeance. First snow to stay fell on the 12th, and since then mercury has been down to 28 degrees below zero. We have about eight inches of snow. Cold and storm have interfered with my meetings; still I have held fourteen meetings in last twelve days, but at times attendance is small. Prospects are for a long, hard winter,—a feature none too encouraging to the writer. Though clad in furs I feel very much handicapped by the extreme cold. I am told small lakes, rivers, and creeks freeze to the very bottom, making four and five feet of ice, which, if occurring this winter, will have a tendency to hinder me in my work. Am trying to be hopeful.

FREDERICK GREGORY.

ADAMSTON, W. Va., Nov. 20.

Editors Herald:—I have done very little missionary work the past three months. We were severely scourged with typhoid fever. There were over two hundred cases in and around our city, and it is not over yet. We had several among the Saints and in my family. One of the severest cases I ever saw to recover, was that of my daughter, Mrs. Johnson. She was down eight weeks. We were all sick more or less of the time. Now we are afflicted with smallpox. Not in our family but all around us. We have been under quarantine for a month by Clarksburg, to protect the city. There were about seventy cases at Wallace, about twenty miles from here, and the county health authorities had them under a strict quarantine till the day of election, November 6.

I am not well. I feel very restless about doing my duty to God and the Saints who expect me to sound the trumpet while I am still on this side the great river that all have to cross to get out of this wilderness "over yonder," to enter into rest. I have passed the half century period some three years; and the time seems to speed on swiftly like the trains when we are on them. Some objects, although we are watching, we do not see till after we have passed them, and then only by peering intently down the track behind us, while we rapidly pass on. Looking backward we see many opportunities overlooked, and duties neglected, but too late, we have left them. I still feel strong in the faith of the latter-day work of God, for that is what it is. There are men who undertake to do it themselves, and after them it takes a good while to get the work in order again. I have no doubt but that this grieves the Holy Spirit. May the Lord forgive and ever watch over the family to save all. I have been suffering with muscular rheumatism, but am confident I am getting over it so that I can sally forth on the skirmish line in the good fight of faith and do what little I can to establish the truth in the earth, and "bring to naught the things that are;" not, however, the good things. We want them to stay. But some have erected "an habitation" for the devil, just beside the "habitation of God through the Spirit," and has given it the same name. So that, by some—our enemies—the two are made to appear to be the same house. And by this they reproach us continually. God help us, amen!

Yours ever,

D. L. SHINN.

NEW BOSTON, Ill., Nov. 16.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference passed off very nicely, September 6 and 7, at Canton, Illinois. The spirit of peace seemed to prevail; business passed off without a jar.

After the business closed I left the conference in charge of the vice president, D. C. Smith, and took train for Cameron, Missouri, in search of a new location for my family. After a night's ride I arrived in Cameron and was soon at Bro. and Sr. Elvert's where we found a welcome. My father and mother arrived about fifteen minutes later than I. After breakfast I started for Delano branch, three miles north, arriving there in time to enjoy the prayer and testimony meeting at eleven a. m., and was asked to preach at night. At four p. m. we met with the Religians in prayer, had a good meeting. Had a good crowd out at night, and interest so good that we promised to preach again Monday night. Had a good hearing then also.

We spent Monday and Tuesday looking at the country, Bro. Ballinger kindly furnishing a conveyance and acting as escort. We like the country quite well, and the Saints very well.

Tuesday night we preached at Cameron, in the house of Sr. Leman, to about twenty-five earnest listeners, which were gathered together on very short notice, as it was five p. m. when we got in town.

Wednesday we went on to Stewartsville, where we met a body of Saints who made us feel at home, although strange to us. That night we met with them in prayer. Sunday we spoke twice in the Saints' church, with fair liberty. Had a good social meeting in the afternoon, in which the Lord spoke through one of his handmaidens, and said it was pleasing for us to come to that place. It was very comforting to us. We spent one week there looking at the country, and my father bought a farm joining town on the west, and also the house in town which was built some years ago by the Saints, and where Bro. A. H. Smith once lived. So it is back in the hands of the Saints, and I expect to move my family in it on or before March 1, 1901. Saints all treated us very kindly, for which we are very thankful.

On Thursday, October 18, we turned our face toward our field of labor, arriving in Peoria on the 20th, where we soon met our missionary in charge, Heman C. Smith. We held forth over Sunday, then went to Canton, where we found Bro. Russell. Bro. Smith spoke that night (Monday) to a small congregation. Tuesday we received word from home, stating, that I was needed there, so we started that way. On the following Saturday we met Bro. Smith at Millersburg, where we held over Sunday, baptizing one. Bro. Smith's work in the district was very pleasing to us all, I think, and we hope he can give us another call soon. We are holding meeting now in the place where we preached our first sermon four year ago. Expect to meet Bro. Russell tomorrow, and we shall labor together this winter. Your brother in bonds,

J. W. ADAMS.

MISSOURI VALLEY, Iowa, Nov. 18.

Editors Herald:—I have been a member of the church for eight years. Before coming in the church I belonged to the Christian Church for about twenty years. I thought I was on the right path. My husband was a member of the L. D. S. Church. I was quite indifferent toward this church, but was not long in darkness, as I soon became desirous of getting on the right path. I heard the true gospel and obeyed, being baptized by Bro. J. F. McDowell. From that day I have tried to live in the true light. About a year after, I became afflicted with what the physician pronounced an eating cancer. I was administered to under the hands of Bro. Alma Fyrando and others, and was healed almost instantly. I have never suffered from that affliction since. Words fail to express how grateful I am.

Our mother, Grandma Lyons, who has lived with us for the last five years, also was a member of the Christian Church for a number of years. She became interested in the word after hearing our ministers preach, and was convinced that this was the true gospel, and was baptized and became a true and faithful member. She was eighty-eight years of age. The messenger of love called and took her home, October 12, 1900. A vacant place in our home can never again be filled. We hope to prepare ourselves that we may be able to meet her in the great beyond.

Our church at the present time does not seem to be progressing as it should. We have lost three of our most willing workers in the past four months. This branch at present seems to be in total darkness. Our president lives six miles in the country, it is inconvenient for him to be with us at all times, as seems almost necessary for one holding that position in order to make a success of our meetings.

This is Sunday, a dark and dreary day. We have had no meeting. I am constantly praying for the restoration of our branch, as this is our permanent home; has been for ten years. We are engaged in the laundry business, and feel that we have been wonderfully blessed in the past eight years. We never neglect our family prayer at home, and wish for the prayers of all the Saints.

I feel as though our branch is not in harmony with God's teachings. I believe that all branches have their trials and tribulations; but it seems as though our branch has the greatest difficulties of them all to follow the true light, although we have until the last few months had a great amount of gospel preached to us, but the deficiency with us is unity and love. Our officers need the help of the Holy Spirit to help support the work.

Again asking for the prayers of all the Saints, that we may have a right to the crown and eternal life,

Your sister in hope,

MRS. A. L. PARKER.

BEVIER, Mo., Nov. 30.

Editors Herald:—We do not often see a letter from this thriving little city, where the latter-day work has been established over thirty years. The important question is, Are we progressing and advancing, or are we standing still and not climbing the ladder towards perfection. My twenty-two years of experience among the Bevier Saints help me to solve this question unhesitatingly, that the spiritual condition of the work is far better now than I have ever seen it before. Never have I seen more interest and inclinations to serve God, especially among the young. The old are passing away, one by one, and the rising generation steps in the ranks and fills the vacancies. The old gospel fire that was kindled in their young hearts is beginning to blaze. Our branch, numbering over two hundred members, including about one third scattered, is presided over by young brothers, good and faithful workers, Bro. F. T. Mussell, president, Bro. I. L. Morgan presiding priest, A. G. Young teacher, and Bro. W. Rudkins deacon. They all work together harmoniously.

Our esteemed brother, J. A. Tanner, is out in the field, trying to win the honest into the fold of Christ by his able way of expounding the Scriptures to their understanding. We have also Bro. F. J. Chatburn, an able expounder of the gospel, and Uncle W. E. Summerfield is still sounding the gospel trump. With those three missionaries the work in the district is kept moving along slowly. They travel singly, thus occupying three places the same time. The number of preachers is small according to the size of the territory. We can say of this district that its condition is the same as other districts; the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Let us pray that God will send more laborers into his vineyard; and not only our prayers, but our temporal means, too. The Lord will do his part when we do ours. Our prayers alone will not send more workers to the field, if we, his Saints, will not pay our tithing and offerings. It takes money to increase the gospel force in the field. I am glad to say that there are some good tithe-payers in this district, and they consider it as binding as any other principle of the gospel. While there are many in this district who think it is not essential for our salvation, I hope that such will think this matter over seriously, and reverse their erroneous belief, and show their faith by their works. Abraham showed his faith by his works when he honored the law of tithing. Notwithstanding that we have some few Saints in this district that are helping all they can, we are depressed financially, and come short in meeting the needs of the work in this district. There is another cause of this depression; many good Saints have left to go to other parts of the state which has effected this district financially as well as spiritually. I appeal to those scattered ones to remember Uncle John T. and send your tithes to my address before the year 1900 closes. As long as your membership is in this district, I shall always expect to hear from you and your continuation of past favors.

The Religio is doing well. Sister Nydia Thomas is superintendent, and doing her part nobly, and Sister Mary Richards is secretary, Bro. D. L. Morgan chorister, and Sr. Annie Williams organist. Every Friday night is spent profitably, and the young are learning doctrine that will make them wise unto salvation.

We have a good Sunday school; Bro. D. L. Morgan superintendent and chorister, Annie Williams organist, Mattie Morgan secretary.

We have also a few faithful workers, the Sisters' Sewing Society, meeting regularly once a week, rain or shine. Their labor is productive of much good, financially, to the church. Those sisters never falter and shirk in their duties. They are worthy of imitation. Let other branches do likewise, and the God of peace will richly reward every good done for the advancement of his work. May the people of God, everywhere, enjoy his peace and blessings in this life, and be crowned with the redeemed at last, is my prayer.

Editors Herald:—I appreciate the Herald very much, especially articles bearing on archæological subjects, of which there has been quite a few in the Herald in the recent past. I always regret when I do not get one issue read through before the next one comes again. I cannot understand why so many Saints do not take either one or the other of the church papers, as they assist me greatly in the warfare against the evil we all have to battle with. I am interested in the onward progress of this work. Your brother,

A mountain-climbing party in the Sandwich Islands was attacked by a colony of wild bees. They had climbed Konahunui, the highest peak near Honolulu. In descending precipitous cliffs they were attacked by the bees, which stung them when they were helpless to ward off the insects. For nearly a mile the bees followed them until they reached a point where they could defend themselves.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Be brave, dear heart! Hopes broken lie
In sight of land; but there is One
Who notes our loss, who hears our cry.
He makes some failures victories won."

SELF-CONTROL, MOTHERS, SELF-CONTROL!

One morning in early May I passed down a suburban street, admiring the beauties which nature had recently unfolded, enjoying the agreeably warm sunshine and pleasantly cool, fragrant air, and listening with delight to the songs of birds. It seemed for a time that I must be in fairyland. But looking in the direction from whence came a cry of distress, I was convinced that I was still in a world of pain and injustice. A little child of not more than four years sought refuge from his mother, who followed with a rod of no small dimensions. Soon they passed from my sight, but the cries of pain and the pitiful "Oh, Mamma, don't!" told me the rod was falling unmercifully upon the little trembling form.

A cow near by affectionately licked her calf; a mare watched her colt as it gamboled about her, and whinnied when it passed from her sight; a hen scratched and clucked for her brood. While these mothers of the animal creation seemed full of love and solicitude, a human mother, who has charge of a little immortal soul, stands beating her offspring! A deep gully checked an impulse to approach the lady and ask her how she would like to stand before one towering as high above her as she was above the child, with strength proportionately greater, and using a rod proportionately larger, and what would be her feeling toward such a person if no heed was paid to her pleadings for mercy; but the rod fell in full force, until that person's wrath was spent! "Perhaps the child needed correcting," you say? When I witness such a punishment I am inclined to think it is given, not for the good of the child, but to satisfy the anger of the parent.

Mothers, it is your duty to govern your tempers. No matter how violent or easily aroused, you can get it under control; and by persistent and prayerful effort, finally subdued. Until a mother can control herself she cannot govern others. The fear of her anger and punishment may impel them to obedience, but what will be the effect upon them in after years? Will the memory of such a mother arouse feelings of love and respect, and a desire to do all that she tried to have them do by force and the aid of the rod?

Mothers, if you must use corporal punishment, let the child understand that it is for their good; it is because it is necessary for them to be taught obedience, and not because you are angry. At no time does one need to be so calm as when administering such punishment. Satan helps an angry person to strike hard blows. Yes, Satan is helping when an angry parent stands over a child and beats it. The child can readily detect your angry look and tone, and sometime, following your example, he will become angry at his dog or other pet and strike it, or throw down a toy and break it. Then you will feel it your duty to punish him. What injustice!

I think we can "spare the rod" and still not "spoil the child," if the "rod" meant, as some seem to think, a literal stick, strap, ruler, or slipper. Is it not possible that it meant correction or some mode of punishment? But if any think there is no punishment so effective, I entreat you to be calm when you administer it. If you are not, you will do the child more harm than good.

My experience with my own little ones has taught me that there are punishments more humane, and at the same time more effective. I was reproving one of my children for cruelty, and telling them they should not cause any of God's creatures pain, when my little boy referred to a spanking, and I felt severely rebuked. I told him mamma did it, not because she wanted to cause him pain, but to make him good. He replied, "It doesn't make me good, it makes me worse." I knew he spoke the truth. If mothers would do more training, more teaching both by precept and example, more praying for wisdom and tact to control and guide the little feet, there would be less need of punishment of any kind.

We have a right to ask and expect the Lord's help if we are worthy, for have we not charge of his own little ones? Does he not wish us to train them so that he can again receive them unto himself? We must not leave it all with him, but constantly strive to perform our many duties well. Our first and most important duty is to gain control of our peevish, hasty tempers, and to correct the evils of our own natures.

GUIDE US STILL.

Bless us with thy Holy Spirit,
As we strive to do thy will;
We are weak, but we would serve thee,
Heavenly Father, bless us still.

Chorus:—

Guide us still, guide us still,
Heavenly Father, guide us still;
Guide us by thy Holy Spirit,
Heavenly Father, guide us still.

We, thy children, wish to serve thee,
Faithfully thy will obey;
Heavenly Father, we beseech thee,
Keep us each one in thy way.

Heavenly Father, we do thank thee
For the blessings of the past,
And we pray thy loving presence
May be with us to the last. A. M. J.

THE TWO OLIVE TREES.

A fable is related of a hermit and his olive tree, which illustrates how difficult it is for shortsighted man to know what really is best for him; and how wise it is in all things to be submissive to the will of God, and leave ourselves in his hands. The fable says: An aged hermit planted an olive tree near his cave; and then, thinking it might want water, he prayed to God to send water. So, the rain came down and watered his olive tree. Then he thought a little warm sun would do it good; so he prayed for warmth and sunshine, and the sun shone, and it was very hot. Then as the sapling looked somewhat feeble, the hermit thought, "What it now wants is a little frost to brace it." Accordingly he prayed for frost, and that night the hoar frost covered the ground. But the tree somehow did not seem to thrive, so he thought that possibly a strong southerly wind might help it on; and he prayed that the south wind might blow upon his tree, and the hot south wind blew, and the olive died!

Some days after, he was visiting a brother hermit, and he noticed that he had a remarkably fine olive three. "Why brother," said he, "how do you manage to get your olive tree to thrive so well?"

"I don't know that I did anything especially to it, but I just planted it, and God blessed it, and it grew."

"Ah, brother, I planted an olive tree, and when I thought it wanted water I prayed to God to give it rain, and he sent rain, and when I thought it wanted sun I prayed for it, and the sun shone; and when I thought it wanted bracing I prayed for frost, and the frost came, God sent me everything that I prayed for, as I thought it wanted it, but my tree died!"

"And I," replied the other, just simply prayed that God would take care of my tree, and then left in his hands to arrange the how and the when, because I felt sure he knew what was best for my tree, better than I did!"—Sel.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Grace Johnson, of Chicago, requests the Prayer Union to pray for her husband, Elmer E. Johnson, who has so long been afflicted, that he may yet be restored to health and strength, if it is the Lord's will.

A sister from Michigan writes, earnestly desiring the prayers of the saints and sisters in the Prayer Union in behalf of her brother, that the appetite for strong drink and tobacco be taken from him, and he be given strength to overcome the temptations of evil companions, and that his desire for reading the Word of God may be stronger, and he may have a stronger determination to do the Master's will, and prove faithful.

We speak of primary department, intermediate department, and senior department as representing those parts of the membership of the school engaged in the primary,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

intermediate, and senior work of the school. So the Home Department represents those engaged in the SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK AT HOME.

In every community there are those who do not attend Sunday school. They are made up of the "can'ts," such as the aged and infirm, invalids, and those detained by reason of being so occupied as to render attendance impossible; and the "won'ts," such as those who are too big, those who don't care, those who don't believe, etc.

THE MISSION OF THE HOME DEPARTMENT is to take the Sunday school to all these, the "won'ts" as well as the "can'ts," and get them to studying God's word as found in the Sunday school lessons, a stated amount of time each week, say one half hour or one hour, and thus bring to pass a more universal study of God's word, and a more general understanding of his law, and, through a better understanding of the law, bring about a more perfect obedience.

HOW

is this to be brought about? The discussion of this question will be based largely upon the methods employed by the American Sunday School Union. The work is to be largely under the direction of individuals called "visitors," whose duties are to visit the stay-at-homes and present the matter of studying the Sunday school lessons at home, one hour each week, or such time as may be decided upon, and secure the consent of the individual so to do and enroll him in the Home Department. When the member is secured the "visitor" provides him with a quarterly, an envelope for contributions, in which his offerings are placed, and on the outside of which a record is made by the member of offerings, and time spent in the study of the lesson. The visitor calls around occasionally to inquire of progress, and at end of quarter to bring new supplies and receive report and offering.

KIND OF CLASSES.

If there is only one individual in a neighborhood working according to these plans, it is an individual class; if several members of one family are enrolled, it constitutes a family class; and if members of a number of families unite in the study under one as a leader, it is a neighborhood class. If there are several classes, and it becomes too much for one visitor to attend to all, there may be several visitors, and a superintendent of Home Department chosen to direct the whole.

THE RELATION OF THE HOME DEPARTMENT

members to the regular Sunday school should be similar to that of other departments. They are a department of the school, and as such, under the superintendent of the regular school, are entitled to recognition as other departments are. They are to be reported as a part of school, make reports to the school through the visitor or superintendent of Home Department, and receive reports of school. They should be notified of special announcements, receive invitations to participate in picnics, conventions, and all special gatherings and doings; and in passing of important matters should have voice and vote. Their lessons are the same as those of the main school.

MEMBERS OF HOME CLASSES

should be induced if possible to become identified with and to attend the main school. Where there is no school sufficiently near with which to be identified, Home Classes may be formed under district authority, or if not in an organized district, then under authority of General Association through its officers. Such classes as these latter would be directed by correspondence and known as "correspondence classes."

Members joining home classes are to take upon them

CERTAIN DUTIES.

They are to study the lessons one half to one hour each week. They are expected to contribute to the financial work of the school. They are expected to participate in the writing of papers, etc., for convention and the like. They will report regularly, and will lend their interests to extending the work as widely and rapidly as possible.

This department with us as an association is a

NEW FEATURE,

but with those who have given it a trial it is a decided success. The American Sunday School Union has been pushing it the past few years with marked results. From actual statistics gathered by house to house visitation it is learned that in this state one family out of every twenty-five have no Bible in the home, and who can say of the twenty-four who have Bibles how many read them? The Sunday school is a potent factor in bringing about a more general reading of the Scriptures, and this department will do much to aid by carrying the Sunday school to many of the individuals who are not now attendants, and readers of the word of God.

But are not all Latter Day Saints readers of the books of the church? Alas, I fear not.

MANY HOMES

in the church do not possess copies of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Many homes which do possess them have no family altar, and hence no regular reading of the divine word. It should be the object of the Sunday school through the Home Department to take the Sunday school into every dwelling occupied by a Saint who does not for any reason attend Sunday school.

Celestial glory is the reward of obedience to celestial law. Can obedience come before understanding? Can an understanding be reached without reading and study? Is the reading as likely to be done without system as with it? The Home Department will do much towards the solution of these questions.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY,
1st Asst. Supt. General S. S. Association.

THE SPIRIT OF THE GIFT.

'Tis not the weight of jewel or plate,
Or the fondle of silk and fur;
'Tis the spirit in which the gift is rich
As the gifts of the Wise Ones were;
And we are not told whose gift was gold
Or whose was the gift of myrrh.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Pacific Slope Mission, Greeting:—You will see by Saints' Herald, of November 21, 1900, that I will not return to my mission for reasons assigned in said notice. However, I will continue to direct the affairs of the mission through the sub-ministers in charge.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser is hereby appointed in sub-charge of the Central district, California, and Bro. F. B. Blair in charge of the Northern district. The ministry are urged to be prompt in sending in their reports the first of January and March, respectively, as I desire to be kept well informed of the true status of the work committed to our care. I truly feel grateful to the brethren associated with me in gospel work, for the hearty support they have given me, and desire that you continue to supplement my efforts; also feel thankful to the Saints for the kindness shown me during my sojourn among them.

I am pleased with the cheering reports which have come to me from different parts of the mission, and I earnestly pray that the work begun will be continued with greater zeal and energy on our part. There is now an opportunity afforded us to help roll on the great and grand work of God, in our respective localities. So let us work while the day lasts for the harvest time is fast approaching when Christ our eternal King will come in his majesty and glory to garner in the sheaves and reward his reapers.

Praying that success may attend our efforts, to the glory of God and the salvation of men,

I remain your brother and coworker in Christ, G. T. GRIFFITHS.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Nov. 24, 1900.

To Those Concerned:—Apostle G. T. Griffiths having been appointed by the Presidency to "labor in the missions in charge of Brn. William H. Kelley and John H. Lake as they and he may agree and wisdom direct" until the April session of conference, by agreement Bro Griffiths will devote most of his time to the Kirtland district, visiting the Pittsburg and Ohio districts, and aiding Bro. Lake as circumstances may require. The scarcity of laborers renders it necessary that the ministry not only be interested in and extend aid in their especially assigned fields of labor, but be willing to aid in adjacent places when demands are made upon them, especially when new openings are presented.

Missionaries who are laboring in the Kirtland district will please make their quarterly reports to Bro. Griffiths and respect his advice in prosecuting the work in that "field of labor," that there may be order and harmony. Respectfully,

WM H. KELLEY.
JOHN H. LAKE.

NEW DISTRICT IN OREGON.

To the Officers and Members of the State of Oregon, Greeting:—In compliance with your request for a district organization, I hereby appoint a special conference to be held at Drain, Oregon, on the 2d and 3d of February, 1901, with the view to effect said organization. I herewith authorize Bro. D. L. Harris, one of the seventy, and sub-missionary in charge, to direct the organization of the new district. (See section 120:3) All secretaries of the branches should send a full and complete report to Bro. Harris at Drain, Oregon, two weeks before convening of conference. Yours in gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS,
Missionary in Charge.

GRACELAND MUSEUM.

Some time ago the friends of art and education began donating to Graceland College such articles as would be of interest, and the last to contribute to our collection was Elder Luther R and Sr. Ella R. Devore, now of Holden, Missouri, who were our faithful representatives of the restored gospel in the far away Society Islands, from 1891 to 1896. They have lately made us their debtor for a "Bibilia Mo'a Ra," so now, if any of our Society Island brethren should visit Graceland, they may read the Scriptures in their own language. With this Bible is a basket, or holder, made by the natives from leaves. Three coins; namely, a Chilian 20 cent piece of 1892, a Peruvian 10 cent piece of 1866, and a French coin of 1863, two pearl ornaments for the ears, a native made fan that is real quaint, six strands of small sea shells, and a large horny shell. These small shells are called by the natives "Pupu." There are also two pupu doors; these grow on the nose of the fish, and in time of danger the fish recoils in its shell and closes the door, so it is safe from shark or other enemy. Surely the small things of the deep bear witness of the wisdom and loving kindness of God. There are also some small red and black berries that grow upon an island tree in clusters like grapes.

In behalf of the college, I return thanks to Bro. and Sr. Devore.

And now, to others, permit me to inform you, that we are still in a receptive mood, and would be pleased to acknowledge your gift to our growing museum. Also, we would like to have the herbalist remember our herbarium. And still wider and larger is the circle we appeal to in behalf of our library; we are still in need of such books that you are willing to contribute.

And last, but not least, we are still in need of financial aid. While we feel very grateful to those who have already complied with former appeals, which has renewed our courage, once more let me plead that the Saints neglect not their duty to Graceland College; for let me assure you, time will prove that it will be no badge of honor to oppose this institution of the church.

When in the goodness of your soul charity shall manifest itself at Christmas tide, please do not forget us with a liberal donation.

In behalf of Graceland,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

DIED.

BRIGGS.—At Denver, Colorado, November 28, 1900, Mrs. Louisa Briggs, widow of Jason W. Briggs. She was born at Avoca, New York, September 30, 1827, and was 73 years, 1 month, and 29 days old at the time of her death. She leaves behind two sons, five daughters, and several grandchildren. For many years she was identified with the Reorganization, and shared the many sacrifices and privations of her husband while he was prominent in the missionary force. She was well known to many of the elders for kind deeds bestowed, and no doubt will be remembered and duly rewarded by our heavenly Father. By her request, Elder J. B. Roush conducted the funeral services, which were short and simple, according to her wishes.

WILLIAMS.—At St. Davids, Illinois, November 7, 1900, Edward J. Williams, aged 78 years, 8 months, and 4 days. He was born March 3, 1822; married Jane Davies April 19, 1841. They obeyed the gospel and emigrated to this country in June, 1855; settled in Hyde Park, Pennsylvania; united with the Reorganized Church June 9, 1864; moved to Brookfield, Ohio; then to St. Davids, Illinois, He leaves four sons and one sister to mourn. Funeral service was held by Brn. T. F. Stafford and John S. Patterson in the M. E. church at St. David. He was buried at Canton, Illinois, there to rest until the day when the spirit and the body shall be reunited in the day of the resurrection.

Rev. F. N. and M. A. PELOUBET

AUTHORS OF "SELECT NOTES ON THE INTERNATIONAL LESSONS."

Large 12mo., Cloth, very Unique Binding in Black and Gold.

Every one acknowledges the great value of Dr. William Smith's Bible Dictionary as containing the "fruit of the ripest biblical scholarship of England." In revising, editing and bringing down to date this estimable work the Revs. F. N. and M. A. Peloubet have accomplished a wonderful task and have made this book an invaluable one.

Besides their innumerable notes, they have added the proper names used in the New Version, together with their pronunciation, the signification of proper names has been inserted, the results of the latest research in regard to the topography of Palestine are embodied, the dates at which persons lived and events took place have been inserted, Chronological tables, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the "Apostles and Their History" are also added, all in all making this book of inestimable value to any one interested in the Bible.

IS THE MODERN SUNDAY SCHOOL A SUCCESS?

BY W. R. KENDALL JR., SUPERINTENDENT UNION PARK SUNDAY SCHOOL.

This is the question the Chicago Congregational Sunday school association is asking its members. The answer depends on the standpoint. The enthusiasm of thousands has been awakened and is held by modern methods, but new members are not added rapidly, and a large percentage of new membership is offset by the dropping out of old members. In planning a campaign men search out weak spots to strengthen. What then are some of the things that now stand in the way of the Sunday school reaching its highest effectiveness, in holding present members, in gaining new members, and in lesson teaching?

First—Lack of change or a disposition to allow things to "move along in the same old way." Children want change. Growth and development are laws of their nature, and unwittingly they look for them in every relation of life. It is no wonder that children grow tired after attending, for six, eight, or ten years a school in which the classes are always arranged in the same way, the opening service conducted in the same time-honored manner, where the songs are the old songs, and everything, year in and year out, "pursues the even tenor of its way." Getting into ruts, stagnation, disuse of powers, and consequent atrophy are causes of failure in some schools.

Second—An unattractive Sunday school room. Somber gray or chilly yellow walls with stenciled frescoes are neither beautiful themselves nor suggestive of beautiful ideas to children, and are liable to create the atmosphere of a cloister. It is frequently amid such surroundings that children are expected to absorb joy and hope and cheerfulness. Why not decorate a Sunday school room? Why not illuminate the walls with sparkling thoughts of master minds and with reproductions of the works of great artists? In short, a Sunday school room should be a place of beauty and inspiration. Every foot of it should in one way or another radiate an influence for beauty and truth and nobility of character.

Third—Indifference on the part of teachers. Not only is regularity in attendance of prime importance, but a teacher must be sufficiently interested in his work to bend his best energy toward elucidating the truths he aims to teach. Too frequently a teacher imagines that the preparation of a lesson is a simple thing, that "anything will do for children," forgetting that these same children are studying languages, physics, and geometry in the common schools, and are well able to comprehend the greatest truths one can present, if only they be put in simple language. The teacher asks the questions he finds on the lesson leaf, receives in return perfunctory answers, and the scholars find no fresh thought, no new idea, not a spark of enthusiasm in a thirty-minutes' talk. Such is the teacher who is imbued with the widely prevalent idea that a two-book library is sufficient for a Sunday school teacher—namely; a Bible and a Bible dictionary.

It is the business of the Christian teacher to gather truth wherever it may be found and crystallize it about its true center, the life and thought of Christ.

A fourth difficulty would be largely remedied by a permanent normal class in every school. It is a medium through which young folks pass, out of the school as scholars, back into the school as teachers, without any break in membership. From this viewpoint alone its advantages are obvious.

Fifth—Failure sometimes results from allowing scholars to form an untrue idea of their relation to the school and through failure to impress on them their responsibility for its growth and success. Deal with scholars frankly and squarely. And meet with perfect sincerity the first evidence of an inclination to draw class lines between high and low, rich and poor, between one class and another. There is an American aristocracy, but it is an aristocracy of character and intellect, and any other demarkation must be rigidly suppressed.

These are some of the items that merit attention in any effort to increase the efficiency of the modern Sunday school.—Chicago Tribune, December 2, 1900.

WAS JESUS THREE DAYS AND THREE NIGHTS IN THE HEART OF THE EARTH.

In the twelfth chapter of Matthew and the fortieth verse Jesus is reported as saying that "as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale (sea-monster, margin); so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." According to the commonly accepted tradition of the church Jesus was crucified on Friday, dying at or soon after three p. m., and was raised from the dead early the following Sunday morning. Many readers of the Bible are puzzled to know how the interval between late Friday afternoon and early Sunday morning can be figured out to be three days and three nights. It seems rather to be two nights, one day and a very small portion of another day.

The solution often proposed for the difficulty is that "a day and night" is simply another way of saying "a day," and that the ancient Jews reckoned a fraction of a day as a day. There was then a part of Friday, one day (or a day and a night); all of Saturday, another day (or a day and a night); part of Sunday, another day (or a day and a night).

There are many persons whom this solution does not altogether satisfy and it does not satisfy the writer at all. Is there any solution that is satisfactory? There is. The first fact to be noted in this solution is, that the Bible nowhere states nor implies that Jesus was crucified and died on Friday. It is said that Jesus was crucified on "the day before the Sabbath." (Mark 15:42.) As the Jewish weekly Sabbath came on Saturday (beginning at sunset the evening before) the conclusion is naturally drawn, that as Jesus was crucified "the day before the Sabbath," He must have been crucified on Friday. But the Jews had other Sabbaths besides the weekly Sabbath which fell on Saturday. The first day of the Passover week, no matter what day of the week it came upon, was always a Sabbath. Exodus 12:16; Lev. 23:7; Num. 28:16-18.

The question therefore arises whether the Sabbath that followed the day of Christ's crucifixion was the weekly Sabbath (Saturday) of the Passover Sabbath, falling on the 15th Nisan (which came that year on Thursday). We are not left to speculate about that; for John tells us in so many words in John 19:14, that the day on which Jesus was tried and crucified was "the preparation of the Passover," i. e., it was not the day before the weekly Sabbath (which came this year on Thursday).

The gospel of John was written later than the other gospels and scholars have for a long time noticed that in various places there was an evident intention to correct false impressions that one might get from reading the other gospels. One of these false impressions was that Jesus ate the Passover with his disciples at the regular time of the Passover. To correct this false impression John clearly teaches that he ate it the evening before and that he himself died on the cross at the very moment the Passover lambs were being slain "between the two evenings" (Ex. 12, 6; Hebrew and R. V. marg.) of the 14th Nisan. God's real pascal lamb, Jesus, of which all the other pascal lambs were only the types, was therefore slain at the very time appointed of God.

Jesus then died on Wednesday. Just as the next day was to begin at sunset (the Jewish days begin at sunset), Jesus was buried. He was in the sepulchre Wednesday night and Thursday (one day and one night), Thursday night and Friday (a second day and second night), Friday night and Saturday (a third day and third night). Just as the first day of the week drew on at sunset Saturday Jesus arose, having been in the sepulchre seventy-two hours, exactly three days of twenty-four hours. The next morning the grave was found empty.

The incidental proofs that it was on Wednesday and not on Friday that Jesus died are so numerous that it would take a volume to properly expound them. The traditional theory that Jesus died on Friday and that this was the Passover Day would make it necessary to suppose that Jesus took a long journey (from Jericho to Bethany) on the Jewish Sabbath; for John distinctly tells us that Jesus came to Bethany six days before the Passover (John 12:1), and if the traditional view is right, this Passover came on Friday and six days before it was Saturday the Jewish Sabbath. Of course, it was impossible for Jesus to take such a journey on the Jewish Sabbath. In reality his triumphal entry into Jerusalem was on the Sabbath. This was altogether possible for the Bible elsewhere tells us that Bethany was a Sabbath day's journey off from Jerusalem (Acts 1:12; Luke 24:50). But further yet, John tells us in so many words that Jesus' entry into Jerusalem was on the next day after his arrival at Bethany. (John 12:12.) That Sabbath on which Jesus entered Jerusalem was, if the Passover (15th Nisan) came on Thursday, the 10th Nisan, the very day on which God commanded that the Passover lamb should be taken up (Ex. 12:3). So Jesus, the true Passover Lamb, was taken up on the 10th Nisan (on that day the Pharisees rejected him as king and chose him for death, unwittingly fulfilling the Scriptures), and he was slain on the 14th of Nisan, just as God's word had provided fifteen hundred years before.

It is remarkable how many prophetical and typical passages of the Old Testament are fulfilled and how many seeming discrepancies in the gospel narratives are straightened out when we once understand that Jesus died on Wednesday and not on Friday. The writer has held this view for years, but this year a book has been published (Three Prophetic Days, Wm. Fredrick, Clyde, Ohio) maintaining the same view with such force of argument that many reviewers who have always held to the traditional view have been forced to admit that the argument was unanswerable.—R. A. Torrey, in Ram's Horn.

MORE ABOUT PROFESSOR HILPRECHT'S DISCOVERIES AT NIPPUR.

Students of the Old Testament, particularly the higher critics, will await with great interest the deciphering of the library of 20,000 or more tablets lately found by Professor Hilprecht in the ruins of the great temple of ancient Nippur, in Babylonia. Biblia remarks that it may be the most important archæological discovery since the finding of the Rosetta stone in Egypt, with its Greek copy of the Egyptian inscription on its sides, which enabled scientists to work out the key to the cipher in which the Egyptians wrote most of their tomb records. Says Biblia (October):—

"The tablets treat of literary and historical matters prior to 2280 B. C., or long antedating the career of Abraham. The light thus thrown on the early history of Southern Asia will, of course, have an important bearing on the earlier chapters of Genesis. But it will do still more. It will probably help to clear up the obscure early history of the supposed dispersion of primitive man from the alleged birthplace of the race in Asia, and so it may aid in settling the still open question of whether mankind sprang from one stock or was the product of evolutionary processes taking place simultaneously in different parts of the earth. The latter is the newer theory. Coincidences in the history of race development are now held by many to prove not necessarily a common origin and communication of tendencies, but simply the orderly march of uniform law throughout the world. Not only biblical, but evolutionary and social science will therefore eagerly await and welcome any light that Professor Hilprecht's find may throw into the dark corners of the past."

Biblia gives the following account of some discoveries made public since our last article:—

"From among six hundred fragments of writings, Professor Hilprecht has obtained knowledge of the first king known to man—En-shag-shur-ana, lord of Kengi, now known as Babylonia, who reigned about 6500 B. C. Kengi was harrassed by Kish, a neighboring city and kingdom. En-shag-shur-ana marched against Kish and defeated its ruler, and the spoil of this expedition, the tablets tell, was presented to the temple of Bel in Nippur. But later the rulers of Kish took Kengi, for it is found that one of them, Ur-Shulpauddu, made offering in the temple of Nippur.

"The greatest, however, of all the rulers of this dim and shadowy age was Lugalzaggisi, who appears to have been a veritable Alexander. He was the son of Haran, mentioned in Genesis 12:4. It is contended by many biblical students that many of the facts in Genesis, reciting an invasion of the Mediterranean seaboard from the Persian Gulf, were improbable. But the tablets show that the invader was Lugalzaggisi, who ruled in 4500 B. C. Sargon, who lived 700 years later, also advanced to the Mediterranean. At one time Lugulzaggisi ruled all the then known world. But after a while the Nippur of Lugalzaggisi fell, and a long period intervened before man built again upon the ruins. About thirty feet of accumulated debris represents the age between the fall and the rebuilding by Sargon. One extraordinary feature of the vases bearing records of Lugalzaggisi's greatness is that their interior was hollowed out by machinery, yet civilization today assumes machinery to be of a comparatively recent development."—The Literary Digest, December 1, 1900.

A SLANDEROUS STATEMENT.

LOS ANGELES, California, Nov. 23.

Dear Brother Joseph:—Inclosed please find some more clippings on the "Mormon" question. No response has come to my communication of the 17th instant, and I do not think there will be. We have lost nothing in the controversy.

In one of his previous articles Elder Nye made this statement:—

"Oh the painful waiting of that 'headless body' for eight long years till the man called 'Young Joseph' could be dragged from the haunts and dens of the low and depraved, as set forth by his brother Alexander and published in the San Francisco Call, September 1, 1900, as follows: 'It may seem strange to the unbelievers that a prophet, seer, and revelator, whose relation to the church is that of a mouthpiece of the Supreme Being, should have spent a good share of his life traveling unholy paths, but Alexander says "that after his father's death the mother married outside of the church," and both he and his brother were anything but godly men. They were of the earth earthy; they loved the dance, the card table, the bottle. . . . It was in a saloon that Alexander Smith's first revelation came.' Oh, what a record to be proud of! This ignoble son of a noble sire, after drifting to the lowest walks of life, is hunted out and prevailed upon to become the head of this headless body and ordained thereunto by a set of apostates, one of whom had not been baptized into this headless body!"

I entered an emphatic denial of this slander. Inasmuch as it has been given publicity in the papers of the two cities, I wish that you would answer this through the columns of the Herald. I have not had the privilege of seeing Brother Alexander in relation to this interview as published in the Call; but I cannot think that he told them anything like what they published.

We have had a glorious rain here. Nearly seven inches in Los Angeles, and more at other points. It approached a flood in some places. Much damage was done, but we think the good accuring will more than offset the harm. Hundreds of acres of celery washed into the sea down in the "peat land" country as a result of the old "Santa Ana" breaking over its banks. It is estimated that the damage to the streets of Los Angeles will amount to thirty thousand dollars. By this you can have an idea of the terrific force of the storm. The streets here were veritable rivers. Much damage was done to the steam and electric roads. One consolation, the loss will largely be confined to the few who are the best able to stand it while the benefit will be distributed promiscuously and particularly among those who were famishing for the need of it. We are anticipating a wet winter. The rain lasted for almost six continuous days. Things are moving along here as usual. Bro. "Alexander" and his amanuensis, Bro. Gould, likewise Brethren Chatburn, Anderson, and Elbert Smith, are now at San Bernardino. Bro. Burton is down in the Santa Ana country somewhere, unless he has been washed away. I hardly think so, however, as he is too much of a mariner for that.

Fraternally yours,
T. W. WILLIAMS

1322 Myrtle Avenue, Los Angeles, California.

Referring to that part of Bro. Williams' letter containing the statement made by Elder Nye, concerning the life of the present president of the Reorganized Church, before he became identified with the church, said president has this to say of Mr. Nye's statement: It is not true. Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith the Martyr, never drank a glass of wine, beer, or any sort of liquor in a saloon or place where drinkers congregate, at any time in his life, and was not at any time a frequenter of such places public or private. He never played a game of cards in any saloon, or gambling den, public or private, in his life, and never played a game of chance of any sort for money or prize of any kind, in his life. He was not versed in card playing; but unlike some he did know while a young man, as he does now, the difference between a king and a knave. He was not a lover of "the card table, the bottle," or the saloon, was never intoxicated with any sort of intoxicant, and did not and does not now indulge in intoxicating drinks, or drugs; has always been and is now a strong and persistent temperance advocate, having begun making temperance and antislavery speeches in his fifteenth year, and has been at it ever since. So much for himself.

To the knowledge of Joseph Smith neither of his brothers was in the habit of visiting and spending time in saloons, having neither time, money, nor inclination to do it. Besides, their mother's influence, counsel, and positive interdictions forbade such conduct. Joseph and Frederick, the next in age, were farming together, and the farm on which they worked was the first farm in the township of Sonora, if not in the county of Hancock, from which whisky was excluded in the harvest field, and this notwithstanding it was the custom of the country at that time to have the jug and the bottle as a part of the harvesting outfit. Frederick, when seeking for harvesters to help cut the grass and grain, was asked, "Is it true, Mr. Smith, that you and your brother propose not to furnish your hands liquor during harvest?" To this Frederick replied, "Yes, sir, it is true."

"Very well, then, sir, you'll not get your grass and grain cut," was the comment.

"O, well," said Frederick, "it will not hurt the ground any if the grain is not cut. So we will risk it."

And they did, but did not need a man they could not get, and lost not a shock of grain nor cock of hay; nor did they furnish an ounce of liquor. They did not drink it themselves, and would not have it in their fields. They had seen too much of the evils of drinking in the lives of those around them to be themselves slaves to the habit or victims of its influence.

Joseph Smith does not know what may have been published in the San Francisco Call, September 1, 1900; but, so far as he is concerned, the statements made which refer to himself are grossly incorrect and untrue; nor does he believe that his brother Alexander ever made such statements concerning him, or himself, for he knows better, and is not given to lying either about himself or others.

In order that this statement may be used in refutation of the slander reiterated by Bro. T. W. Williams, I hereto fix my name.

JOSEPH SMITH.

UNITY, ONENESS.

That unity, a certain blending of sentiment and interests, mental, moral, social, religious, and material is desirable is usually conceded, by some insisted upon with more or less vehemence, "except ye are one ye are not mine," being the climax in the argument.

We may all agree that unity is desirable; that without it the body politic of the church loses much of its force and the members much of the blessing which they believe themselves rightly entitled to. This conceded it is hardly needful to spend much time over argument or evidences to prove such conceded fact. What follows? This, How to reach unity?

The Hindu or Buddhist has it something like this. Men are born into the world for the purpose that the embodied spirit may so improve in goodness and pureness that when the final end is reached the man ceases to exist as a separate entity, and becomes absorbed into the Supreme being, the Buddha, Krishna, or God, in a similar way that one drop of water falling into the ocean loses its identity and becomes one with the great body, the All. That environments sometimes prevent this in the ordinary lifetime of men, so that the requisite progress is not made at the time of death; so that it is mercifully provided that there is a succession of births allowed, a reincarnation, or being born again into the fleshly tabernacle with the hope that the environments of the second body in life may permit the needed progress to the final end, which is to be not born again, or a ceasing to be born again. And it is accounted as a mark of divine favor that such an end may be reached at once or in the first body, and a mark of displeasure if the person has to repeat the being born again, and again until the favoring environments are reached.

While we as Christian believers in Christ do not accept the idea of the final loss of an identity once confirmed by a birth into this life and the responsibility imposed by such birth and recognition of identity; nor believe in the doctrine of reincarnation till happily suitable environments are found for the tired spirit in the midst of which the work of becoming worthy of sinking out of individuality into the all Father to lose identity forever enwalled in eternal goodness and happiness, we do believe that individuality and personal identity when once conferred are perpetual, and so far as we are permitted to know, one life only in carnate form is permitted us no matter what the nature of our environments may be. There is no second trial for better surroundings by a reincarnation for us. Our hope of obtaining high place and enjoyment, and completed happiness in the world to which we hasten through death, lies in the opportunity of so using our liberty of individuality here that we become worthy of association with those who themselves have by virtue and integrity reached the condition of peace, and entire freedom from subjection to evil.

Unfortunate environments only serve to emphasize effort and enhance the merit when the end is reached. What, then, is open to us. It is to bring ourselves into subjection.

If a man assumes that he is so constituted that certain lines of thought and conduct are possible to him; that he cannot, hence, will not, yield to other lines of thought and reasoning, and so states to his compeers striving like himself to reach the common goal of peace and happiness to be found in a unity with the Father and the Son, does he not virtually say to his comrades: I know that unity is desirable, that it is necessary. I admit this; and I also desire this unity and value it. If it can be obtained by uniting on the lines of things as I see them, I am willing to be at unity with my associates. If it cannot, I do not see how it can be done; for I cannot recede from the position taken by me. If there are concessions to be made, others must make them, for I cannot. I am so constituted, and my convictions are so strong, that I cannot yield. My conscience will not let me.

If others think, feel, and see differently to this man's views, they being equally honest, able, and conscientious as the first, as it is only just to believe of all, and they too cannot yield, their consciences forbidding, by what rule of love, or power, can unity be secured between them? In what way can a oneness be brought about?

We are largely interested in this question, for the reason that we have heard so much about unity and its necessity, have seen such strenuous articles dealing in the commands to be one, that we have over and over again canvassed the topic, How can we be one with our brethren?

Paul wrote to the Romans years ago:—

> Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power in the church but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God.—Romans 13: 1.

He also wrote:—

> Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ; and having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled.—2 Cor. 10: 5-6.

If we gather the apostle's meaning correctly, it is in substance that those desiring to be in unity with Christ should bring every thought into subjection to Christ, that all might be of the one mind, whatever this may be.

Paul was so sure of his unity with Christ that he once wrote that he had a "desire to depart and so be with Christ," but that it was "better for them that he should remain," and so he was contented to so remain.

He also wrote, "Follow me as I also follow Christ." Whether he intended this to mean that he did follow Christ in all essential things and thus became a proper example for his brethren or intended to warn them against himself and urge them to follow Christ, it involved the essential feature of the effort and work of subduing self into relationship with some standard acknowledged by all. Have we such a standard, and who are, or are to be, its exponents, by either precept and example, or by both?

Can there be unity with every man's conscience a law to himself, is a frequently recurring subject for thought. How can I with opinions fixed which I know to be at irreconcilable variance with those with whom it is desirable that I should be at a unity ever reach such a state of unity, or be found worthy of it? must be now and again a serious thought, with him who concedes the need of unity and desires it.

With this thought there may come the additional one, Am I in unity with my fellows? and not, Are my fellows in unity with me? He may reason like this: The differences that exist between me and my fellows are no greater, or more insurmountable for me than for them. The distance from me to them is the same from them to me. If I by overpositiveness block up the ways against the reaching of a possible unity, what right have they to remove the obstacle. Is it within their province to remake the spirit that rules within me, to change my modes of thought, or compel my reasoning to bend to theirs? Is it mine to do this for them? So long as the barriers of opinion and will remain, what chance is there for agreement which will lead to a unity. Must not I be as ready to yield on contested points as I am willing to ask or expect others to do so? By what rule of fair inquiry should my comrades say to me, Well, my opinions are fixed, I cannot change. Would I not be justified in saying the same, by the same rule?

These and many other suggestions occur to the mind in trying to reach conclusions touching the way to effect a unity. Can it be done, using the word unity in the broad sense, as usually applied by the average talker and writer on the subject? "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?"

REVELATION.

A belief in direct revelation from God has always constituted a distinguishing feature of the doctrine as taught by the Latter Day Saints. Without arguing the soundness of such a position here, we take it for granted that the belief is a correct one, and desire to consider some phases of the question especially applicable to those who may so believe.

It is just possible that we do not always realize the gravity of our own positions; and claiming as we do that God has revealed, and will continue to reveal, his will to his people, it may not be amiss to consider whether we are prepared for the consequences which such a belief involves.

It is a matter of no small moment that God should condescend to speak to men, and instruct them how to order their lives that they may receive the various blessings for which they seek. Certainly we cannot think he would reveal to us anything but the truth, or that the revelations of his will would be careless or ill-advised. We do not think of God as one who would deal in idle words and useless counsel. A message from him ought to be considered of primary importance. Every word should be held sacred, every sentence should receive the most earnest consideration; and surely, if a proper estimate is placed upon the value of that which he may have to say, there will be no delay in yielding humble obedience to the instructions given. And yet how many can truly say that they thus appreciate the revelations of God? In how many homes do the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants receive the consideration which their merit demands?

These may seem plain questions, but we believe there should be an awakening among the Saints in regard to this. It is a terrible thing to importune God for revelation and then ignore and treat with carelessness that which he is pleased to give. Jesus said long years ago, that "this is condemnation that light is come into the world and men loved darkness rather than light." To seek for light, is well; but to ignore it when given, is dangerous.

It might be profitable in this connection to turn the pages of the sacred word, and note some of the things our heavenly Father has said to us in the past. After giving what is known as the "word of wisdom," the Lord adds these beautiful promises:—

> And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them.

The rules laid down by which these desirable results are to be obtained are simple, such that any one may observe, and yet in many instances comparatively little attention is paid to them.

Again, in Book of Covenants section 42:—

> Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out. If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support. . . . And again, thou shalt not be proud in thine heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands, and let all things be done in cleanliness before me. Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer.

A careful perusal of these few words only, will no doubt reveal to us many things in our characters that are not just exactly what we should expect to find in the life of a saint. The above are merely given as examples of what has been presented by way of instruction from time to time.

In addition to this, think of the many injunctions in the sacred books relating to our manner of life; think of the many warnings, exhortations, reproofs, and promises, and then let us speculate a little.

Suppose there should be an unremitting, determined effort on the part of everyone to heed what God has already said, to take him at his word, and, without trying to excuse ourselves or cover our faults, live as Saints should live, what would be the result? It is beyond our power to estimate the degree of spiritual light, peace, and power that would come to us, and, disseminating its glad influence through the body, draw us nearer together and nearer to God.

We do not wish to convey the thought that the Saints, either as individuals or as a body, are altogether regardless of God's commandments; but we do believe that the crying need of the church at the present time is more personal righteousness, more devotion to principle, more faith in God, and more willingness to heed what he has said. He may be long-suffering, but it might not be best to presume too much upon his patience. All around us the world is groaning under the darkness and thraldom of sin. If we expect to shed light through that darkness, we must not forget that our only means of doing so is by allowing the radiant light of truth to be reflected from the work we perform.

How grand, indeed, is that work when viewed from a standpoint of principle! How glorious the outcome if only we are faithful in the sacred responsibilities committed to our care! Do we sense the real meaning of those responsibilities? Are we fully awake to the necessities of the hour?

While we look forward with joyful and eager anticipation to that which we expect God to reveal to us, let us remember that additional light and comfort can be had only upon conditions of faithful adherence to that which we have already received; and while we pose as teachers of the world, let us be sure that we are not trifling with the revelations of God ourselves.

WE give below a clipping from the Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, Colorado, for December 1, which we give because of its interest to us, Sister Louisa Briggs having been the wife of Elder Jason W. Briggs, one of the earliest and most earnest workers of the Reorganized Church at its rising. Sacrifice and martyrdom are closely allied in worth, and the life of Sr. Briggs was one of continued sacrifice from her earliest connection with the gospel economy.

DESCENDANT OF MARTYRED LATIMER DIES IN DENVER.

A descendant of the famous Latimer family is dead in the person of Mrs. Louisa Briggs, daughter-in-law of "Governor" Briggs, who in the early '60s, maintained the government station at Cache la Poudre.

Mrs. Briggs lived with her son at 1445 Platte street. Eight days ago, she contracted pneumonia, while busying herself about the house. Dr. G. B. Packard was called, but could not save the patient's life. Mrs. Briggs was 73 years of age and had lived in Denver seventeen years. She was born in Avoca, New York, and leaves eight children. Three daughters and one son, P. H. Briggs, live in Denver; a daughter resides in Baker City, Oregon, another in Council Bluffs, Iowa, while a son lives near Eldora, Iowa. Mrs. Briggs had eleven children in all.

Mrs. Briggs was proud of her connection with the Latimers. Unable to concur in the teachings of the Church of England, Latimer withdrew from the faith, and was pronounced a heretic. The idea prevailed in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries that a heretic must either follow the discipline of the church or take the consequences, however fatal these latter might be. Latimer steadfastly refused to return to the church and was burned to the stake in London.

Mrs. Briggs' maiden name was Higley. Her husband died twenty-two months ago. He was a Highland Scotchman and his ancestors fought with Sir William Wallace and Robert Bruce.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. What do you understand by the term, "scattering members?"
2. Who are termed "absent members?"
3. In approving branch reports, should a vote actually be taken to approve, or is it understood that the report simply stands as approved?

After consulting the Church Recorder, we give our views and his conjointly, according to our understanding of the matters asked about: To the first question we say that they are those who are not enrolled in any branch, those who are not under the special watchcare of the officers of a branch, although this fact, as we understand it, does not prevent their being dealt with for infraction of the moral law by those who may be in charge of district or mission, officers over the regions where they dwell. They are called "scattering members" because of being baptized outside the limits of a branch, or who have not yet been received into one, or they are members who have taken letters of removal and have not placed them anywhere, as yet.

To the second question we say that "absent members" are those enrolled in branches and counted, but who are at a distance from their branch, their residence either known or unknown to the branch officers. By "distance" we mean so far removed that no regular attendance is convenient, or perhaps possible for them.

As to the third question, it is widely understood, and so acted upon throughout the districts in general, that the branches in business assembly, or at times set apart for the purpose, the Saints in branches, they hear the reading of the statistical report, on motion correct any errors they may notice, and, by due motion and vote, approve of such reports as are thus read and amended, before they are sent to the district conferences. In occasional instances, where it has been impossible for Saints to meet, owing to storms or bad roads, or when too small a number were present, the officers have signed and forwarded such reports. But, where it can be done according to the rule, it is far better to abide the rule, and for this purpose the line was provided, reading, "Approved by the branch .....19..," this blank on the report being for the insertion of the date on which the vote was taken.

The following from the Sac Sun, published at Sac City, Iowa, November 29, accounts for whereabouts of Bro. C. J. Hunt for a time at least:—

There will be a public debate in this city beginning Tuesday evening, December 4, involving the religious belief of Elder C. J. Hunt, of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and Elder W. L. Crowe, of the Church of God, Abrahamic Faith. The discussion will be held in the Robbins-Stearns hall and may continue fourteen evenings. Elder Hunt is a resident of Deloit, Iowa, while Elder Crowe resides in Sac City and preaches regularly to a considerable congregation each Sabbath.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. J. Cornish, Farwell, Michigan, November 30th:—

The work with us in Michigan is moving on nicely. Some are obeying the gospel and uniting with the church, although people do not seem so ready to accept the gospel as they used to be years ago, yet we are gaining in many ways.

The newly appointed ministers are doing well. Local men are helping what they can. The brethren are also helping what they can in tithes and offerings, to care for the families of the elders and the poor.

While there are a few discouraging features, there are many more encouraging ones, so we feel to labor on.

She made this office a pleasant visit on the 5th, being much interested in looking over the several departments of the Herald Office plant. She was accompanied by Srs. Bailey and Strauss.

Bro. John A. Davidson, of Long Pine, Nebraska, writes that he has been a Latter Day Saint for fifty years, and that it is surprising to him that a Saint should call upon a doctor in times of sickness. He is a firm believer in the power of administration, and thinks the Saints should rely more on that source of help.

Bro. A. M. Crofford, of Pond Creek, Oklahoma, writes relating a dream in which he was shown the conditions of things at the coming of Christ. He was comforted and cheered by the dream, and prays that we may all so live that we shall be prepared for that great day.

Bro. W. Taylor writes that the elders will find homes with Bro. Uria Colwell, Drain, Oregon, or Sr. Rosa Tracy, they being the only Saints left near Drain.

BAPTISM.—NO. 4.

THE HOW? THE WHO? THE WHY? AND BY WHOM?

BY WALTER J. HAWORTH.

BY WHOM?

The prevailing idea among orthodox Christians is that baptism can be legally performed by anyone. Hence, when most people make up their mind to be baptized, they seek out what seems to be the most popular of the churches teaching believers baptism, and by that rite are initiated into that church. It seldom seems to occur to them that the church of Jesus Christ is "the kingdom of God on earth," and that those who initiate others into that kingdom should be divinely appointed. The kingdom of Great Britain, presided over by her gracious majesty, Queen Victoria, extends to people of all nationalities an invitation to become subjects of that kingdom. The conditions are that they become naturalized, and are willing to abide by the governmental laws of the country. Officers are appointed to see to the naturalization of all aliens who apply to become subjects. Persons not appointed as officers of the crown would be severely punished if they attempted to attend to the naturalization of anybody. They might take the person's money, and fill out bogus naturalization papers, but the act would be illegal, and the person would still be an alien to the British government.

The scriptures inform us that we are all "aliens and strangers from the commonwealth of Israel"—the kingdom of God on earth. The whole race of man is invited to become subjects of that kingdom. God is King now, and Jesus is its anointed Prince. Here is his invitation:—

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Before we enter the kingdom we must make up our minds to abide by its laws and to recognize the authority of the King. The King has appointed laws of adoption (or naturalization) into the kingdom:—

Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3:5.

Now the question for us to consider is this: Has the King appointed officers to attend to the initiation of aliens into the kingdom, or is any person at liberty to initiate another into it?

How was it in New Testament times? The New Testament informs us that when Jesus began to establish his Father's kingdom nineteen hundred years ago,—

He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.—Luke 6:12.

Why this night of prayer to God? Evidently to seek his direction in the work before him on the morrow, for verse 13 says:—

And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles. (Italics mine.)

He afterwards sent these twelve men out to preach the gospel, to publish to the apostate Jews the invitation into his kingdom—to explain the laws of the kingdom, and to initiate by baptism into it all whom they converted. We are told that later on he sent other "laborers"—evangelists to assist the twelve—called "seventy" (Luke 10:1, 2).

Would he have chosen these "twelve," and these "seventy," from among his few disciples had he intended to invest all disciples with authority to preach and baptize? If there ever was a time when he would authorize all to preach and baptize, surely it was when the laborers were so few, at the beginning of his work. And yet he actually chose eighty-two men from among his few disciples, and sent them forth to do this work. Does this look as though any one could baptize or preach in those days?

After Jesus had been crucified and had risen from the dead, and just before he ascended up to heaven, he called his twelve apostles to him, and extended the mission that he had previously assigned them. Their mission had previously been to the Jews only; now he said to them:—

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matt. 28:18-20.

"Ah!" exclaims the orthordox preacher of today, "That is where Jesus gives the broad commission to all to preach and to baptize."

Whenever a person feels a desire to preach any particular doctrine, he takes up this great commission and makes it do duty as his call to preach. It has been made to do duty as a call for one set of men to preach the doctrine that pouring, sprinkling, and immersion are indifferent; for another class to preach that immersion only is legal; for one class to preach infant sprinkling; for another to denounce it; for one body of men to preach that only a predestined few of earth's children will be saved; for another class to preach that all will be saved; and for still another class to teach that all

may be saved by obeying God's laws; and so on ad infinitum, each man preaching something which contradicts the doctrine taught by another, until unbelievers have actually charged our blessed Lord and Savior with being the author of confusion. Truly, if Jesus did intend that commission as an indiscriminate call to all, he is the author of a strange and very confused medley of doctrine, etc. Is there no remedy for this? Was there no provision made to prevent schism, and contention of this kind among the apostles? Evidently Jesus was alert to the possibility of such an emergency as this, for he told his apostles:—

Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.—Luke 24: 49.

Why this tarrying? Why this seeming waste of time? Jesus realized the human errantcy of the men who were before him. There was a possibility that if the eleven apostles were left to themselves they would preach just eleven different kinds of doctrine. They needed the Spirit of God—the power from on high—to bring them to the "unity of the faith." Hence they were to tarry until endued with the power that should make them one, and stamp their ministry as God-sent.

They tarried, and so well did the Spirit do its work, that their ministry from that time is a grand testimony of their unity, with their own great head, Jesus Christ. Oh, that men would "tarry until endued with power from on high" in these days! What an amount of contention and strife would cease. It is wrong for a person in this age of the world who has not received a direct call from God to do evangelical work, to presume to "go into all the world to preach the gospel" on the assumption that the Savior's special words to eleven men are a call to him. Those words never were a call to anybody. They were not a call to the apostles themselves. We have already shown that the apostles were called, or chosen, by Jesus a long time previous to the time when the commission was given. Why this commission then? As previously shown, this commission was a broadening of their mission. Their mission had previously been only to the Jews, now they were told to move out into "all the world." Does the commission apply to anyone in this age of the world? Yes, it applies to those who have been properly called of God to do the same kind of work as that done by the apostles—evangelical work. In the Jerusalem church of nineteen hundred years ago, there were two classes of officers: evangelical, such as apostles and seventies or evangelists; and pastoral, such for instance as elders, teachers, deacons, bishops, etc. Although the latter class were duly called of God, we have no evidence that any of them traveled, but the record points to the fact that they were standing ministers to the several churches.

And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord on whom they believed.—Acts 14: 23.

For what were these elders ordained? To the elders at Ephesus Paul said:—

Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—Acts 20: 28.

Their duties then were to be "overseers." They were to "feed the flock."

The duties of the deacons are defined in Acts 6, wherein it is recorded that they were ordained that they might minister to the church in "serving tables," etc. The bishop was the treasurer. The best history supports this. The name teacher would imply that the teaching was done in the church, else why the name? The evangelical officers were teachers to the world, primarily. How were these officers called? Paul told the elders of Ephesus that the "Holy Ghost" had made them overseers. In fact, this seems to have been the way in which all officers were called. In the case of Saul and Barnabas (apostles),—

The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.—Acts 13: 2.

In Ephesias 4: 8–11 we read:—

Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. . . . And he gave some, [to be] apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers.

When were these given? When he ascended up on high. How did they know he gave them? He communicated his will to them by a system of "wireless telegraphy" known as revelation. The Holy Ghost was the medium used to reveal the fact that these appointments had been made. (See Acts 13: 1, 2, and 20: 28.)

Why were these gifts (offices) given to the church? Some were given "for the perfecting of the Saints," others, "for the work of the ministry," and "the edifying of the body of Christ." (Verse 12.)

Did those to whom the gifts (offices) were first given accomplish "the perfecting of the saints"? No, judging from the great apostasy that occurred, and the present disjointed weak state of christendom. Did they accomplish all the "work of the ministry" that is to be done? No, there is as much need for real gospel preaching as ever.

Then seeing that these gifts or offices were conferred for the "perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ," and that the work was not and could not all be accomplished at the death of the persons who received the appointments, is it not reasonable to believe that these gifts will be conferred on others, while God has a true church on earth? In fact we are expressly told in the next (13th) verse that these gifts or offices will remain in the church "till we all come in the unity of the faith." If this particular order of things can bring about a unity of the faith, there never was an age of the world's history when they were needed as much as now. Why is there so much strife, contention, and disunion? It is because men have not been content with the kind of officers which God gave to the church, and have instituted other offices as a means to the desired end of unity in the church. Is it strange that since they have cast God's order aside, the officers whom men have presumed to appoint have signally failed to bring about the desired unity?

We have seen, therefore, that the King did appoint officers to administer his laws, and to baptize subjects into his kingdom, just as the kings of the earth appoint officers to initiate foreigners into their kingdoms. That persons not so authorized could not admit others into the kingdom is plainly evident from a reading of Acts 19, wherein Paul is said to have met some men who had without doubt been baptized by some one not having the proper authority — possibly by Apollos, "who knew only the baptism of John." The people told Paul that they had received the baptism of John. But Paul saw instantly that there had been a mistake. John always told the people to believe on the Lord Jesus, who would baptize with fire and the Holy Ghost. These people knew nothing about the Holy Ghost. Hence it is reasonable to believe that they did not receive the baptism of John at all, but that they were baptized by the man Apollos, who also had to be taught "more perfectly." (See preceding chapter.) Paul did not recognize the man's authority (whoever he was) to baptize, and so he baptized the people over again.

From this it is plain that only those who were duly appointed by God had authority to baptize in New Testament times, and only such could teach the whole gospel. Those who were officers in those days either received their appointment direct from God through Jesus, when he was on the earth, or by direct revelation by means of the Holy Ghost after he had ascended on high. Since then, there has been a falling away—a dark night of apostasy. History reveals the fact that men have changed many of the laws of the kingdom; that they themselves have appointed other officers, and have cast out the officers set in the church by God. (1 Cor. 12.) In fact, so radical were the changes made, that not many centuries had passed before it was impossible to recognize the distinguishing marks of the church of Christ in that which laid claim to the title. Well could Jesus, looking through the unerring telescope of prophecy, say:—

The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.—Matt. 11:12.

Not many centuries after this prophecy, the kingdom of God was indeed taken by force, at the hands of wicked men, who transformed the glorious "kingdom of God's dear Son" into one of the kingdoms of this world. From that time the voice of God was not heard for centuries directing his people; men no longer had the offices mentioned in Ephesians 4 and 1 Corinthians 12 conferred upon them. No more was the power of the Holy Ghost manifested in the miraculous ways mentioned in Mark 16:16; 1 Corinthians 12; Acts 2, etc. What was the reason? Had the time of perfection spoken of in 1 Corinthians 13:10 come, when these gifts should be done away? Hardly! For if the apostles saw only through a "glass darkly" when they had the glorious gifts of prophecy, tongues, miracles, etc., these later people saw not at all! They were farther away than ever from that perfect time, when the righteous shall see face to face, and know as they are known. They must still "walk by faith and not by sight;" but the privilege of seeing into the future through the "darkened glass" of prophecy had been denied them. They had removed their confidence from God to the arm of flesh, and God took away the glorious gifts (through which apostles and prophets looked into the future as through a "glass darkly") and left them to grope their way through the darkness by themselves.

After a time the gray dawn of the Reformation began to break, and a determined warfare was waged against the "idolatry" which posed as the religion of Jesus Christ. All honor to the brave and good men who fought so nobly, and gained for us the amount of religious liberty which all may now enjoy. But did any of them restore the ancient order of things? True, many reforms may be attributed to them; but under none of them was direct communication restored with him who sits as the Head of the church, in heaven. While the church was pure and true, he directed it by revelation. Then why did he not direct in the work of the Reformation in the same way? Was it not because the reformers were not seeking to restore the pure church of Jesus back to the earth, with all its heaven-appointed officers, gifts, and graces, but to reform the corrupt church which had taken its place? No doubt they acted up to all the light they had received, and will be rewarded for the good work done, but their mission was not to restore. No doubt these reformers were utilized as indirect agencies by the Lord, to prepare the way for a ministry which he had destined to restore the ancient order of things.

The Lord had, through the mouth of his holy prophet, Malachi, said in the third chapter:—

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years.—Mal. 3:1-4.

All the expressions used in this scripture show that the second coming of the Lord is referred to. It could not have been his first coming, because he did not come suddenly to his temple then. Neither was it at all difficult to stand when he appeared. A messenger was to precede his coming. But, says one, that was John the Baptist. Granted. But this citation does not refer only to the time when he came as the forerunner of the Lord when he was cradled in a manger. The Lord says, "Behold, I will send my messenger," and he was to come before our Lord's second appearing, in glory. John came in the flesh to be the forerunner of Christ, nineteen hundred years ago. He then fulfilled the prophecy:—

The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make his paths straight.—Luke 3:4.

He was beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and so if he comes as the forerunner of Jesus again, he must come in the form of an angel. In Revelation, John writes and says:—

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.—Rev. 14:6.

A messenger is to come before the second coming of the Lord. John the Baptist, who came in the spirit and power of Elias nineteen hundred years ago, is to be that messenger. Having been beheaded, he must come as an angel. John saw an angelic messenger coming to the earth, with the everlasting gospel. Would this angel need to come if the pure gospel of Jesus had always been on the earth? No; it came to restore that which had been lost through apostasy.

Mr. Charles Wesley, although one of the reformers and a founder of a great church, looked for a final restoration of the church of Christ in all its glory, as will be seen by these lines, of which he is the author (italics mine):—

Once he in the Baptist came,
And virtue's paths restored;
Pointed sinners to the Lamb;
Forerunner of the Lord.
Sent again from Paradise,
Elijah shall the tidings bring:
Jesus comes; ye saints, arise,
And meet your heavenly King
Previous to the dreadful day
Which shall thy foes consume,
Jesus prepare thy way;
Let the last prophet come.

These lines show plainly that Mr. Wesley was not satisfied with the state of semi-darkness which existed by reason of direct communication with heaven—the source of all spiritual light—having ceased. He looked for a time when the Lord God would again work; when one would be sent again from paradise in the spirit and power of Elijah, to bring back to earth the pure gospel of Jesus, so long lost to it, and restore communication with him who is the Head of the church, and whose right it is to direct its workings.

What a glorious hope must have inspired him in the midst of all the division and spiritual darkness which reigned supreme at that time, to put into words that they might be handed down to others, the prophetic announcement—taken from God's word—that before Jesus appears in glory, he would send a messenger from paradise, who would restore again "the kingdom of God's dear Son" and bring back to the earth the authority so long lost to it. He and others were working for the cause of Christ, but they had taken the mission upon themselves. They preached, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved;" but in this connection the word of the Lord asks:—

How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent?—Rom. 10:14, 15.

Men who are not sent can preach, but how shall (or do) they preach? Why, they go out, and contradict each other, and if they do happen to agree upon anything, it is to contradict what Jesus and his heaven-sent and divinely inspired apostles have taught. All ministers of Christ should preach the one gospel; and we are confident that it is not the system of Christ by which men preaching so many different gospels, go forth. If anything is ever done by which unity in gospel preaching is brought about, it will be a very different system to that which now obtains. Under the present "orthodox" system, anybody and everybody may go and preach just as he desires. There are no restrictions. Was it so in Bible times? We have seen that all the ministers of Christ, mentioned in the New Testament, were called of God—Heaven-sent. Were there any exceptions to this rule? Not one; for in Hebrews 5: 1–4, Paul, in speaking of the ministers of Jesus Christ, or the "high priest taken from among men" "ordained for men in things pertaining to God," says: "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." It is this honor: To act "for men in things pertaining to God," that could not be usurped. All ministers of Christ must be called of God "as was Aaron." How was he called? In just the same way as were the ministers of Christ in the first century—by revelation. (See Ex. 28: 1.)

Here, then, is the key to the whole trouble. Men were not called in that way among the reformers, nor by the popular churches that exist now; hence the present confusion. But if they were to wait until called of God, as was Aaron and the ministers of our Lord nineteen hundred years ago, and then "tarry until endued with power from on high," this confusion would all cease, and unity and love would prevail. This was evidently what John and Charles Wesley were looking for:—

What could God have done, which he hath not done, to convince you that the day is coming, that the time is at hand, when he shall fulfill his glorious promise, and will arise to maintain his own cause, and set up his kingdom.—John Wesley in sermon seventy-one.

Almighty God of love,
Set up the attracting sign,
And summon whom thou dost approve
For messengers divine.
From favored Abram's seed
The new apostles choose,
In isles and continents to spread
The soul reviving news.
—Charles Wesley, in Wesleyan Hymns.

Dear reader, God has arisen to maintain his own cause, and set up his kingdom. The angel has flown with the everlasting gospel. The Elijah has again come and restored the authority to administer in God's holy ordinances. Once again communication is established between earth and heaven; and once again God has called men by direct revelation, and sent them forth with the glad message that the "everlasting gospel" has been restored to the earth. The message is to you. Will you examine it, and see if the Lord God is indeed working? That such a claim is made should demand from you a candid and free investigation. Do not pass it carelessly by, for if true, this message is fraught with life and salvation to you. If false, you will be justified in rejecting it; if true, you cannot afford to remain in ignorance of it.

We have seen that the prophecies point to the fact that just before the coming of the Lord a messenger will be sent from the courts of glory. That messenger was to be John the Baptist. He was to come as an angel; in the spirit and power of Elias. Elias belonged to the priesthood, God's ministry then on the earth, and was inspired with the Spirit of God. (See 1 Kings 18: 21–38.) To come in the spirit and power of Elias, John must come with power to confer the holy priesthood and the Spirit of God which was present with Elijah. The Wesleys and others anxiously awaited his coming. When he came he must come to some one.

WHO WAS IT TO BE?

On the 23d day of December, 1805, there was born at the town of Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, U. S. A., the personage to whom this divine messenger has come. His name was Joseph Smith. Born of parents religious, he was religiously inclined, and at an early age became concerned about his soul's salvation. In his own home the division and contention characteristic of the Christian world was brought plainly before him; some of his family favoring one sect and some another. While wavering in his mind upon which sect to unite with, he chanced one day to read:—

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.—James 1: 5.

Accordingly he retired to the woods to ask God's direction, as to which church he should unite with. He says:—

My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join.

While praying, two personages appeared before him in glory, standing above him in the air. One of them called him by name, and pointing to the other, said: "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

He continues:—

I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right, (for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong,) and which I should join. I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; "They draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof." He again forbade me to join with any of them.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 748.

At this time he was but a young boy, about fifteen years of age; and for a number of years after that the Lord kept up communication with him, instructing him and fitting him for the great work that was before him. When the Lord had sufficiently instructed him, and the time for the work to begin had arrived, He sent an angel (whom they said was John the Baptist) to confer the priesthood upon him, and a worker named Oliver Cowdery. He says, regarding that occasion:—

While we were thus employed, praying and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 34–36.

Oliver Cowdery corroborated this testimony. They also said:—

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament. . . . It was on the fifteenth day of May, 1829, that we were baptized and ordained under the hands of the messenger.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 36.

When we consider that both these men up to the last, in the face of the bitterest persecution, maintained the truthfulness of this testimony, we think that it should demand the consideration of all those who are "honest in heart."

The messenger was to come. Why not to Joseph Smith? The time is ripe and no one else claims it. The Messenger must come. In accordance with divine command given to Joseph Smith, "the kingdom of God" "the Church of Christ," was once again set up on the earth, April 6, 1830, with six members.

It was afterwards decided to call the church (in accordance with divine command) "The Church of Jesus Christ," the members of which were to be known as "Latter Day Saints."

From that time men called of God by revelation, "as was Aaron," have gone forth preaching this good tidings of the restored gospel, and the same joyous story of the cross as was preached by those whom God appointed in days of old. Like those of old delegated by God, they have authority to initiate subjects into the "kingdom of God." Although the Lord had dealt so kindly by the people of his choice, like in days of old, the net gathered of the good and bad alike. Nineteen hundred years ago Judas and other traitorous fish were found in the net. The "kingdom of God" set up in these last days also had its bad fish. It also had its traitor (Judas) in the person of Brigham Young, who drew away a large company of the church after him, and retaining the name of the church, organized another body, rebaptized his membership, and introduced the detestable doctrines of polygamy,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"Adam-god" worship, and "blood atonement." This caused a partial disorganization; but the Lord moved again, and brought about a reorganization of those who had remained faithful.

Reader, we present the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" for your consideration. It is the "kingdom of God" on earth. Jesus is its head. He has appointed officers as in days of old. His gospel is the same "good tidings" as when first heralded by holy men of God in and around Jerusalem. The laws of initiation are the same, and the same kind of heaven-appointed officers stand ready to induct you into the kingdom. The gifts of the gospel are enjoyed, as in apostolic days. The signs mentioned in Mark 16:16 do follow the believer; and as in days of old God's ministers declare, "If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall KNOW of the doctrine."

Reader, try it; put the matter to the test; and all doubt will disappear.

ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE "BURTONITES," OR "TRUE FOLLOWERS."—NO. I.

BY ELDER C. R. DUNCAN.

Where did the church styling itself the "True Followers of Christ" originate? Present this question to one of the Follower brethren, and he will almost invariably reply, "Our church originated with Christ and the apostles," thus leaving the questioner no wiser than before. It is the purpose of this article to show that this institution originated a long way this side of Christ and the apostles, and that there are a number of persons yet living who know all about its origin and birth.

This movement had its origin with John N. Burton, who was at one time an elder in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but who was, for unclerical and unchristianlike conduct, expelled from the church, particulars of which will be given as we proceed. Burton continued to preach and baptize after being expelled. Among others who became identified with his movement was David T. McDonald, who afterward became famous among the Followers, and who probably did more than any other one man to build up the Follower church. Some very romantic stories of "Brother Mack," as he is familiarly called, can be heard in most any Follower group, provided that you can engage them in conversation on the subject. One story is related of him that a "mysterious stranger," whose name even McDonald himself did not know, appeared to him and baptized him. We shall endeavor to show that this "mysterious man" was none other than John N. Burton, and that McDonald knew his name quite well, and that he was afterward associated with him in preaching.

It is certainly a fact that the Followers have endeavored to cover up the question of their origin. Those among them whose history goes back to the days of Burton and McDonald, have, in most cases, been very silent on the question. Many of those who have united with them in recent years know practically nothing about the question of their origin.

The first successful effort to identify the "mysterious man" who baptized McDonald, and to locate the origin of the Follower movement, was made by Elder S. J. Hinkle, of Stillwater, Oklahoma. We present his statement, which is as follows:—

STILLWATER, Oklahoma, Jan. 31, 1899.

I first met the True Followers in Payne county, Oklahoma, in 1890, while conducting a Sunday school in a grove, on Little Stillwater creek. Monroe Testament was the first one that I heard preach. I made inquiry as to the origin of their church, and was informed that "It started with Christ and the apostles." I was not satisfied with this answer, and proceeded to make further inquiry on the subject, interviewing several of the leading Follower brethren, but without satisfactory results. Later on, William Caldwell, who had once been a Follower, was working for me on the farm. He told me that David T. McDonald started the Follower church, and that he (McDonald) had been baptized by some one whose name he did not know, but that he had heard that it was a Latter Day Saint.

I made inquiry for the next four years, for the evidence connecting McDonald with the Latter Day Saints. Upon one occasion I was talking with J. W. Torrence, a Follower preacher, when in answer to my inquiry, he said that Burton had baptized McDonald. The other Followers, however, denied this statement very emphatically, but in a recent interview Mr. Torrence reaffirmed this testimony in my presence. Except in the case of Mr. Torrence, they have invariably evaded the question of their origin, endeavoring to cover it up.

When the writer of this article was appointed to the Oklahoma mission, in 1897, about the first work he did was in Payne county, among the Followers. Events of a more or less interesting nature transpired until January 30, 1899, when it was decided to "beard the lion in his den." We resolved to go directly to the Followers themselves and interview each one that claimed to know anything of the origin of their church. Accordingly, the writer, in company with Elder S. J. Hinkle, called upon several of them, and interviewed them on the subject of their origin. The answers to our questions were written in their presence, and invariably read to them.

Statement of Marion Osborne, Stillwater, Oklahoma, January 30, 1899:—

I lived in Cowley county, Kansas. Have seen McDonald and heard him preach. My understanding is that McDonald did not know the name of the man that baptized him. He saw the man coming and knew that he would baptize him. McDonald had been a member of the Campbellites. Had been a very wicked man. Had crossed the plains several times. I never knew Burton. I first heard of him seven or eight years ago.

Statement of Woods Relaford, Stillwater, Oklahoma, January 30, 1899:—

I am a member of the True Followers of Christ. I joined twenty-one years ago in Cowley county, Kansas. David T. McDonald baptized me. My understanding is that a stranger baptized McDonald.

Statement of J. W. Nuckols, Stillwater, Oklahoma, January 30, 1899:—

I am a member of the True Followers. I joined nineteen years ago, in Linn county, Kansas. David T. McDonald baptized me. I did not know Burton. I first heard of him the next year after I was baptized. I understood that Burton had been a Mormon, and that McDonald had baptized him over. Torrence has claimed to me that Burton baptized McDonald, but I think he is off. McDonald was baptized in Johnson county, Nebraska, by a man whose name he did not give in talking with me. The man preached at eleven o'clock a. m., and at night, on Sunday, and McDonald offered himself for baptism. The church at one time numbered near five hundred in eastern Kansas.

Statement of J. M. Testament, Stillwater, Oklahoma, January 30, 1899:—

I am an elder in the church of the True Followers. I joined in Cowley county, Kansas, about twenty-one years ago. I was baptized by Marion Reese. Was acquainted with David T. McDonald. Have heard him relate his experience in being baptized. I think he was baptized in Nebraska. McDonald had been in the mountains. Had been wagon boss crossing the plains. Was snow bound. While lying in camp one night he reflected very soberly over his condition, and on the question of religion. On his return to his family they noticed a change in him. He and his wife went to the barn to pray. A light appeared to them, and the lady became frightened and went away. He studied the Scriptures, coming in contact with a Campbellite preacher named Gans, who baptized him. Studying the Scriptures further, he found that the signs should follow the believer. Gans tried to convince him that they were done away. McDonald ordered his name removed from the church record. He prayed that God would send him a man with authority to baptize him. He saw a man coming across the field, who invited him to come and hear him preach. He went and heard the man preach, and was baptized by him. He did not tell me the man's name. Some have stated that a man named Brewer baptized him, while others say it was Burton. I was not acquainted with Burton. I have heard a great deal about him. Have heard that he is dead.

Statement of James B. Caldwell, Stillwater, Oklahoma, January 30, 1899:—

I have been a member of the True Followers, but am not at present. I joined them twenty-two years ago last July. Was baptized by David T. McDonald. I was well acquainted with McDonald. He said that he was baptized by Elias Brewer, his son-in-law, if I am not mistaken. I did not know Burton. I have understood that Burton started the Follower movement, and that he baptized Elias Brewer. The first congregation that I know anything about being organized was at Pleasant Valley schoolhouse, about eight miles south of Winfield, Kansas, and six miles north of Arkansas City; McDonald being in charge. The members picked out such officers as they desired, and voted them in. The officers were an elder, a deacon, and a clerk. Gus Hunt was the elder, and a man named Hawthorne was clerk. They were then called the "Followers of Christ." Myself and Marion Osborne added the word,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"True," making the name "True Followers of Christ." I first heard of Burton shortly after I was baptized. I know of no other officers than those above mentioned. They did not lay on hands to ordain officers then, but this is since practiced. In administering to the sick any of the members may officiate.

Statement of John Griffin, Stillwater, Oklahoma, January 30, 1899:—

I never was connected with the True Followers. Have known them about sixteen years. Was acquainted with McDonald, and have heard him preach. I have heard them speak in tongues, their gifts contradicting one another. The features of those speaking indicated that there was a power of some kind operating upon them, the neck enlarging, and the expression of the face and eyes being unnatural.

Statement of J. W. Torrence, Stillwater, Oklahoma, January 31, 1899:—

I will be sixty-three years old March 10. Am a minister in the True Follower church. I have never been ordained as an elder. Was baptized August 23, 1875, by David T. McDonald, at Chanute, Kansas. I saw Burton at Chanute. I think his first name was John. I heard him preach two or three times. My understanding is that Burton baptized McDonald, some place in Nebraska—probably Nemaha county, but am not certain. The last I heard of Burton, McDonald told me that he went over near Fort Scott, and that he had taken sick and died.

My recollection is that McDonald told me that Burton baptized him. McDonald wrote to Burton, to Nebraska, and got him to come to Chanute. Frank Shanks and wife came with Burton, and another man, whose name I have forgotten. McDonald's work began in Nebraska. He left there and went to Texas, then returned to New Albany, Wilson county, Kansas, and remained there about three years, moving then to Les Cygne, Kansas.

McDonald told me that he prayed the Lord to send him a man to show him the right way. That Burton came, and held a series of meetings in a dugout, and that he (McDonald) was baptized by him. Shortly afterward, McDonald claimed that he was called to preach. I don't know whether he was ever ordained or not, but it is my impression he was not. We have elders and deacons in our church, but no bishops. I have agitated the question of bishops, but as yet we have none.

Mrs. Torrence remarked, "I would like to know who the deacons are."

The above-named persons were interviewed at their homes, a few miles southeast of Stillwater, Oklahoma, on the dates given, in the presence of Elder S. J. Hinkle.

Statement of Mrs. Phebe Benning, Arlington, Oklahoma, May 2, 1899:—

I was born in Iowa in 1855. I lived in Otoe county, Nebraska, near the towns of Bennett and Palmyra, when I was a girl of fourteen or fifteen years of age. I knew John N. Burton, and have heard him preach many times. I also knew David T. McDonald, and Elias Brewer. McDonald lived south of us, some place, near the line of Otoe and Johnson counties. The first I heard of Burton preaching was over in McDonald's neighborhood. He baptized Elias Brewer, and either Burton or Brewer baptized McDonald. Burton and McDonald both preached many times in my father's house. A branch of the church was built up in that community, and I became a member, being baptized by Elias Brewer. We considered ourselves Latter Day Saints at the time, the doctrine then being taught in its entirety. No such name as "True Followers" was ever applied to us then. We were sometimes called "Burtonites." McDonald and Burton did not agree very well, both aspiring to be leader. News came to us that Burton was acting without authority, and that he had previously been silenced by the Latter Day Saints; and I am not sure but what he had been excommunicated. In view of these facts, several of the members were rebaptized by Elder Gordon E. Deuel of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. McDonald was not so baptized by Elder Deuel, and I am not sure but what he had left there before Elder Deuel came. McDonald went south some place, probably into Kansas. Burton was a phrenologist. I was credibly informed that he taught the doctrine of "free love," over in the neighborhood where McDonald lived, but it never was, to my knowledge, taught in the neighborhood where I lived.

Interview with Elias Brewer, in the presence of Elder James Kemp, and Bro. R. M. Ness, St. Francis, Kansas, August 23, 1899:—

I was fifty-two years old in May. I resided in Otoe county, Nebraska, at the time of John N. Burton's first visit there, which was in 1869—probably in June. Burton first preached in a log schoolhouse, about one fourth of a mile from McDonald's place, called the Hendrick's schoolhouse. I was baptized by Burton, September 1, 1869, with three others. We were the first baptized in that community. McDonald did not unite with us for about a year afterward. I am not sure as to who baptized him. I might have done so myself, as I baptized quite a number. Burton may have done so, but I cannot say who did for certain. Most probably it was either Burton or myself. We had two branches. The Palmyra branch, organized about Christmas, 1869, and the Big Nemaha branch, organized probably in April, 1870. Most of the members of the Palmyra branch afterward united with the Reorganization. I think that McDonald belonged to the Big Nemaha branch. Frank Shanks was one of the branch officers there. David T. McDonald was my first wife's father. The statement of J. W. Torrence, as to his movements, is correct. He died near Les Cygne, Kansas, in February, 1893.

I have no confidence in the story of the "mysterious man" appearing to McDonald to baptize him. I never heard of it until today. Had such a thing been true, I certainly would have heard of it at the time. Our church was then called "The Church of Jesus Christ." No such name as "True Followers" was known to us, as applied to the name of the church. I do not remember of ever hearing the brethren preach the Book of Mormon, publicly; but, as a rule, it was believed in by the membership, as being a true record, but more especially designed for the Lamanites (Indians).

When the branches above named were organized, we considered them a part of the church as organized in 1830, by Joseph Smith.

Burton did not teach the doctrine of "free love," as it is generally understood by the world. He taught the doctrine of "all things common." This meant a complete surrender of all things. That a man should not have anything that he could call his own. Burton taught marriage was wholly of human origin, and that in Christ they must be "like the angels of heaven;" viz, "neither married nor given in marriage."

I lived about nine miles south of Palmyra, Otoe county, Nebraska, and about the same distance north of Sterling, which was in Johnson county. McDonald lived one and one fourth miles east of me. He left there in the spring of 1873, and went to Texas, returning to New Albany, Wilson county, Kansas, in the fall. He remained at New Albany about three years, and then went to Benton county, Arkansas, remaining there about a year; then he returned to Miami county, Kansas, near Les Cygne, and bought land, and made that his home until his death.

McDonald was a man of striking appearance. He wore long black hair, which he parted in the middle. He also wore a full beard. He was a very eccentric man, often resorting to great extremes.

McDonald was familiar with the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints at the time of their residence in Jackson county, Missouri. I have heard him tell about seeing the smoke of the buildings, as they burned, when the Saints were driven from Jackson county, Missouri. Some of his folks were connected with the Saints. He was well-informed as to the doctrine, even before Burton came there; and I have often heard him talk it. My wife (McDonald's daughter) was a full believer in it before our marriage, and before we ever saw Burton.

The following letter from Elder Charles Derry will be read with interest in this connection:—

WOODBINE, Iowa, Feb. 11, 1899.

ELDER C. R. DUNCAN,

Dear Brother:—Your favor of the 31st ult. has just been put into my hand. It was addressed to Magnolia, hence the delay. I answer immediately. It is an unpleasant duty to portray the character of some men, and none more so than that of John N. Burton. In this part of the land, where he is well known, his name is only the synonym for filth, and that of the filthiest kind. When I was presiding over the churches in western Iowa, in 1865, I found John N. Burton laboring as an elder. I found that when he had preached a sermon he would announce that he was a professor of phrenology, and he invited the people to have their heads examined, and for fifty cents he would give them a chart.

I visited him and warned him against mixing the gospel of Christ with phrenology. He promised to desist, but I soon found that he was still doing the same thing wherever he went. I soon discovered that he had a twofold motive in this practice; one was to make merchandise of his hearers, the other to pander to his devilish lust; for the fact was established that he was secretly trying to build up a system that he called "free love," and he used his phrenological skill to discover what females he could bring under his damning influence; and the same with males, as to bringing them to submit to his lecherous purposes, and work in harmony with his wicked desires. One of his minions informed me that Burton was teaching that they should love each other with such perfect love that they could even exchange wives with each other, for the time. I investigated the matter, and found the presentation correct, and this man, who told me, had caught at his bait; and others had fallen victims to his sordid scheme. I silenced Burton immediately, and summoned him to appear before a proper tribunal, to answer for his guilt.

But in meantime he, being a member of the Union Grove branch, was cunning enough to go and confess his crime to that branch, begging forgiveness, and promising to forsake the evil. The branch accepted his confession and forgave him, and I was informed that we could not go behind the act of the branch; but the silence remained, that is, his license was never restored to him. The result was he went to preach for the Campbellites, I was told. He was expelled from the church, and then went into Kansas, I believe, and started a church on his own hook. He afterwards appealed to President Joseph Smith for readmission into the church. Joseph told him he would appoint a committee to consider his case, and Joseph said, "I will appoint James Caffall, Charles Derry, and Thomas Dobson, on that committee." He replied, "O Hell! You might as well send me to the Devil at once." He never applied again, and I know nothing further of him, only by hearsay. I saw his wife at a reunion, or protracted meeting at Wilber, Nebraska, some years ago, and she informed me that he was killed by some man. I know nothing of McDonald. I believe that Stephen Butler and his son-in-law, T. J. Smith, are living somewhere in Oklahoma. They can give you information of J. N. Burton. The Union Grove branch, to which Burton belonged, has been disorganized several years, and those who had charge at the time referred to are dead. Bigler's Grove branch, at that time of this district, was so demoralized by his base conduct, that it, too, became disorganized. Of the remainder, some recovered from the terrible condition, and others have gone to the dogs, so to speak. My sentiment is that the less notice taken of Burton and his work the better.

There is no branch either at Union Grove, or Bigler's Grove. The loss of both these may be largely traced to Burton's base conduct. I cannot give you particulars as to time of Burton's expulsion. The immediate cause was apostasy, but his apostasy was because the church would not sustain him as a minister of the gospel. I strongly insisted upon his expulsion because of his corruption, but could not go behind the action of the Union Grove branch in accepting his confession and granting him forgiveness.

Yours in bonds,

C. DERRY.

P. S —Brother Duncan, I have no desire to be brought into any controversy over Burton. I have given you facts, as I understand them. I have not the church records, and only speak from memory upon those facts.—C. D.

(Concluded next week.)

RASPINGS.

We all need rasping betimes. Rasping! What do you mean? Why, admonishing, of course. Our Master said, "There is none good but God." Therefore, if we are all evil, then a dose of admonition medicine at times will do us good. I need it, you need it, we all need it; for our spiritual health and welfare. Well, I don't know how to begin, and if I begin I may not know how to stop. I know for my part that I am subject to unclean thoughts, liable to utter unkind and unwise words, guilty often of acts unseemly to man and displeasing to God, and I obey human nature by judging others by myself; yet I believe that many are better than I am by nature, and more capable to so strive and endure to gain or obtain that favor from the heavenly realms to do as we desire in the line of strict purity.

Sometimes I desire to so understand, believe, know, and comprehend God and his law, to be inclined thereby to love and serve him and keep his law in the strictest sense, refraining and abstaining from every sinful and injurious way, not offending in one point, cultivating clean and pure thoughts, speaking ill of no one, forgiving all, condemning none; but do I always thus? As the German says, nit. And why don't I? Well, I excuse myself and console myself, by telling myself that I am too weak by nature. "Insufficient for these things." Am void of good understanding and faith "that works by love," and that kind of knowledge that gives power to fight successfully against inpure thoughts, envious and surmising feelings, cross-grained and ungodly expressions, and unchristian-like conduct.

Well, I am now led to ask myself, Who are you rasping? Nobody but myself, and it here occurs to my dull, simple mind, that this is all right in keeping with the admonition of one of the apostles of our Lord and Savior, "Examine yourselves, to see whether you be in the faith," and betimes I think it good to examine myself to see if I am really sane.

GOOD INTENT.

Letter Department.

CARSON, Iowa, Dec. 8.

Editors Herald:—The Pottawattamie district conference held here two weeks ago today and tomorrow was all we could ask, a good representation of elders, officers, and members was present. Business transacted satisfactory to all, I believe. Bro. Caffall was present and preached twice, giving us some good, sound doctrine, and admonition opportune for the occasion. The missionary force of both districts was present, lacking one, Bro. Paul Hanson.

The Saints of this place have a neat little chapel, are keeping up a good Sunday school, and prayer meetings, and preaching whenever the elders get around. They are an earnest, zealous lot of workers in the Master's cause. Bro. H. N. Hansen will look after the interest of the work here and at Wheeler this winter in connection with other labor in the district as best he can. All know him as one of the faithful ones, trustworthy in any position appointed. We are glad to be able to make the same statement of the other missionaries in this field of labor. The local brethren are trying to do the best they can.

We put in a week's work on Farm Creek; had an excellent time in preaching the word, and visiting the Saints and friends of that branch. They are moving steadily along; have a fine Sabbath school, and meetings every Sunday. Elder Hougas is president. This branch has a better opportunity for Sunday school work, as this is the home of T. A. Hougas, the general superintendent, and Sr. T. A., district superintendent. But this branch, with all others, ourselves not excepted, stand in need of a closer walk with God, in order that we may enjoy a greater degree of his Holy Spirit, to enable us to push the work onward to victory and gain the crown of eternal life.

The Saints here were not unmindful of the wants of the missionary; may the great Master be mindful of them and others who do likewise, is our prayer. We are billed for this place until over Sunday, then we expect to move on to Shenandoah.

The work is not as prosperous in the two districts as we desire, but we do not by any means complain, as we hope that all are doing the best they know.

Dear Saints, let us not forget our duties in this the greatest and best of any work we could possibly be engaged in. It will bring to us the greatest and grandest results. Let us, then, lay up treasures in heaven, by aiding the cause financially, pay our tithes and offerings, for the spread of the work, the ingathering of souls, and the building up the kingdom of God. That we may be prepared to enter in, receive an inheritance, with all the faithful, and be eternally blessed with the riches of eternity, and ultimately be crowned with the glory of God, is the prayer of,

Your colaborer, and servant for Christ's sake,

HENRY KEMP.

LAMONI, Iowa, Nov. 29.

Editors Herald:—Having just completed a perusal of the two lectures of Walter J. Haworth, noted in Herald of instant week, I take pleasure in heartily recommending this work to all. Either of the lectures alone is worth the price asked. So far as Bro. Haworth has followed D. H. Bays, the sophistry and illogical reasoning of Mr. Bays is very clearly shown, and the lecture on the Book of Mormon is certainly unique in many respects, while the subject is very clearly elucidated. Some very remarkable cases of healing in that far-away land are recited, and make at once a forcible and fitting close to this subject. In view of the fact that the price is nominal, fifteen cents for a sixty-one page pamphlet, and the sale is for the purpose of helping to build a chapel in Wallsend, where, personally, I know it is very much needed and believe it will prove an impetus to the work in this place of several thousand inhabitants, it seems to me that at least five thousand in America should subscribe for it. To save postage, club together in localities and send through one. While you are thus helping this commendable enterprise, you are at the same time getting "value received," and more. Attend to the matter now, and it will not be neglected.

Hastily,

J. W. WIGHT.

NORTH PLYMOUTH, Nov. 25.

Editors Herald:—As I am interested in the salvation of the children of men, I will report through your pages for the benefit of all those of the same faith. A few months ago I had the privilege of baptizing two precious souls in the stone kingdom that has been set up in these last days. Their names are Henry Gardner, of Hanover, and Cyrus Wood, of Cohasset, the latter being named for Capt. Cyrus Gammon. Through those brethren and the help of others we have opened up the work in Hanover and Cohasset. We hope there are precious souls to be inducted into the stone kingdom, which we believe will stand for ever. This brother Wood's father, William Wood, used his influence nobly and got the orthodox church for two Sundays. I believe that some of our elders have used it before, Elders M. H. Bond, F. M. Sheehy, and John Gilbert. The subject for the first Sunday was the hours of Christ's work upon earth; the next Sunday we preached the gospel that was revealed to the Apostle Paul in first Galatians, and we also called attention to Romans 3:4, and also to 1 Timothy 4:16. We intended to give them the angel's message, and we believe we did with the help of Christ. When we got through there were some questions asked by the minister and others. The Book of Mormon seems to trouble him some, but we separated with a good feeling to all. Their minister seems to be a fine man. I hope we will always find him what he appears to be. May God bless him.

There is a noble people there in Cohasset. May the Holy Spirit be with them to comfort them. They have proven to me by their fruits that they are God's people. William Reed of that place has opened his house for meetings, and there is quite a turnout. There were forty one night, I think. Of course some of them like to let people know they are young; but when we inform them the sacredness of these meetings, we believe they will be more quiet in the future.

We hope we may be the instrument in the hands of God to bring about his noble purposes. May God bless his people, and may we heed the warning voice to come up higher, is my prayer.

Your brother in the one body,

N. R. NICKERSON.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Dec. 2.

Editors Herald:—I was called here to administer to Sister Burnham, who is sorely afflicted, and unless divine aid is applied, must soon pass away. Her husband, Elder George Burnham, keenly feels the hand of affliction now upon him, and feeling the hour of separation is near shrinks before the blow. Yet he tries to be resigned to the decrees of an infinite God and Father. We have administered twice, and earnestly prayed for her relief; yet no permanent benefit comes. Gangrene has attacked her foot, with its attendant agony. To alleviate this the doctor resorts to the modern method of quieting pain. It places an elder in a trying position, and God at a disadvantage. I am unable to say how far God will exercise his power to bless the sick when the temple is charged (if not defiled) with so powerful a poison as morphine. I fail to see how the patient can command faith in God and his promises when the senses are muddled by drugs. Yet the temptation is great when pain is unbearable to apply measures that have become common to alleviate distress and pain. To have faith in God at all times in the trying hour of extreme pain, and when light seems wholly obscured, can only be exercised when we have laid up a supply by a prayerful, faithful walk before him when health and light are enjoyed. Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 12, gives us the rule laid down by the God of Saints: "And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me."

This town is beautifully situated on the Connecticut River one hundred and sixteen miles from Boston, but is one of the old-time, conservative, New England fortifications against Jesus Christ, and his gospel, a veritable refrigerator against Latter Day Saintism. What will ever break down this terrible prejudice?

Our Thanksgiving service in Somerville was the most enjoyable, profitable, and spiritual time we ever experienced upon like occasions. It was truly a thanksgiving to God, Zion and her redemption being the theme. The writer spoke for about thirty minutes, and then called upon the Saints for a talk of five minutes or less. We had sixteen responses, the time being all occupied without one refusing to respond. We have a corps of young ministers distributing tracts and getting in talks on gospel principles through the neighborhood where the chapel is located—house to house work, and we believe the work will be honored of God. Our ministerial force in the Massachusetts district is altogether too small for the demands, and I feel something better must be done for us at our next General Conference. There is general dissatisfaction throughout the district as two missionaries with branches to look after cannot possibly do justice to outside work.

We are all busy and trying to keep in touch with the great head of the church.

In gospel bonds,

R. BULLARD.

ATCHISON, Kansas, December 4.

Editors Herald:—We are all alive and in the work. The Saints are feeling good, both spiritually and physically.

Elder John Arthur Davis, of Baker, Kansas, passing through here on his way to his mission in Missouri, stopped off November 24, and gave us two sermons full of reason and instruction. Elder Davis is a good reasoner and a fine preacher.

We have been wondering where that good, kind, joval being, known as Elder M. T. Short, was, as we have not seen him for a few weeks; but through the Atchison Daily Globe, we locate him at Effingham, Kansas, by the following from that paper of November 30:—

"Rev. Short, an elder of the Church of Latter Day Saints, has been preaching some time in Effingham. Sunday evening last, at a temperance meeting, Dr. Haswell, of the Presbyterian Church, stated that the two greatest evils of this country were intemperance and "Mormonism." The "Mormon" elder being present, arose to defend himself, although he could hardly get a word in edgewise. But amid the excitement he announced that the next night he would distinguish between his church and Utah "Mormonism." As a result of this free advertising, the elder had a big audience the following night."

So you see Bro. Short is hunting and fishing for souls. May he have success and peace from God.

Elder William S. Pender passed through here this morning on his way to his mission, Utah, after obtaining a "better half," to complete the "man."

Bro. Warnock is going back to Farmington, Iowa, about the last of the week, on some business. Yours in bonds,

JAMES W. BURNS.

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 8.

Editors Herald:—As a review of missionary work in the Rocky Mountains may not be uninteresting, I will write a little of efforts there in the few months past. In the early summer, Brethren R. J. Parker and S. D. Condit had charge of the Idaho district tent, in Cache Valley, while Brethren Peter Anderson and W. S. Pender kept the Utah folks stirred up with the one further south. Later on, Bro. Anderson took charge of the city work, Bro. Condit joined Bro. Pender in Provo Valley, and the writer and Bro. Parker were associated during the remainder of the tent season.

After an interesting series of meetings in Preston, Idaho, we loaded the tent into a wagon, and with a small balance in the tent fund, and a limited supply of bread and butter, salmon, and boiled eggs in our lunch box, proceeded to wend our way through dust and heat across the mountains to Gentile Valley.

This was virgin ground for the "Josephites." Never before, that we could learn, had the gospel, as taught by the Reorganized Church, been proclaimed in this quiet mountain nook.

The valley is a pleasant one, lying midway between the magnificent peaks of the Bear River range on the east, and the southern point of the Port Neuf mountains on the west; while the few inhabitants are scattered up and down the valley on both sides of the river.

We secured the use of the schoolyard for the tent; but we had scarcely driven the stakes when a gale brought the canvas to the ground, at the same time ripping it from top to bottom. We piled up the tent, obtained consent to use the schoolhouse, and for nine nights preached to interested audiences. The bishop, on Sunday, advised his people to go and hear what we had to say, expressing his own intention to do likewise; and after our first night, when we slept in the schoolhouse, they took us home each night, cared for us kindly, gave us free access to their haystacks for team feed, asked hosts of questions, and tried to defend their positions with pluck worthy of a better cause.

Of course, much of this was rather surprising to us; but we appreciated their hospitality, (and by the way, is there anybody who does not when they are the recipients?) and, thanking the Lord and the people for the kindness manifested, turned our attention elsewhere.

After storing the tent at Logan, we labored some in Malad Valley, where I had the pleasure of baptizing three young ladies, Sisters Stella Williams, Beatrice Thomas, and Mary Richards. The first two named have been active Sunday school workers since last winter, and with others there, both in and out of the church, are making earnest efforts to uphold the credit of the work. May God bless the young, who thus come out so fearlessly against the wickedness of the world, and enlist their talents in behalf of the right.

Later on, others were baptized, including Sr. Annie Richards, who comes from the ranks of the Utah church and gives promise of being a faithful worker for Zion's cause.

From Malad we went to Pleasant Grove by team.

Our reunion at the latter place was quite well attended, and the daily prayer meetings were characterized by a high degree of interest, devotion, and spirituality. At a priesthood meeting held at the reunion, the unanimous sentiment seemed to prevail that our treatment of the "Brighamites," as we sometimes call them for convenience, should be courteous and considerate, and that while there exists a necessity for plainness of speech, yet we should endeavor to let them know we are their friends by telling them the truth in a friendly way. To the writer's mind, Bro. J. B. Roush struck the keynote on this subject, and I enjoyed his article throughout. I was also quite interested in Bro. Peter Anderson's letter in a recent Herald, recognizing therein a true delineation of some phases of the Utah question. For one I failed to see anything improper in the letter, and if I may be allowed to express an opinion, I will say that I have thought that when a caustic criticism is directed against a brother, the name of the critic should be given as well as the one criticized.

My faith continues strong in the work. When I view the actions of men I feel discouraged; but as my own actions are among the weakest of all, I feel like doing my hardest work with myself. From a standpoint of principle the work is grand beyond expression.

As I am compelled from time to time to clasp the parting hand and bid good bye to the faithful, toiling Saints among whom missionary lot is cast, I yearn to see the time when together we can realize that the victory has been won, and we are henceforth worthy to associate with each other in the rest of the Lord.

With prayers for Zion's cause, I remain,

In gospel bonds,

D. W. WIGHT.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, Nov. 30.

Editors Herald:—How many really know that this is the last time the gospel will be restored to earth? How many realize that the time of Christ's coming is near at hand, that the midnight hour is nearing when the trumpet will sound and Christ will come to claim his own? How many will be as the wise virgins, and be waiting with oil in their lamps? The answer comes, Not many! My soul cries out, Oh Lord, that we may be saved!

As the prophets of old said, even so can we say now, Surely this is a stiff-necked people, slow to do the will of God, but quick to do evil. How often has God warned his people in dreams, visions, prophesies, tongues, and preachings, to prepare ourselves for his coming; but how few heed this warning. Some resolve to do better at the time; but when they are again in their homes they forget the promises they have made, or think there is plenty of time yet, and thus go on from month to month and year to year, and the time of His coming is drawing nearer all the time. Before we are aware of it he will be here, and many of us will not have oil enough to light our lamps. Oh that I could cry out so loud that all the inhabitants of the earth could hear, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. Obey ye his voice, ere destruction come upon you. Oh, that every one under the sun would know and obey his voice.

The Lord has commanded us to gather to Zion and her stakes, to send our moneys to the bishop, that he may buy up land in Jackson county and the country round about. What think ye of this law? Is it not time that it was in force? We must prepare a place wherein our Lord can dwell ere he comes, and now is the time to begin. Brethren, you that have the money and are heads of your families, it is upon you that this rests; will you not take a step forward? It needs only a few to start, the rest will follow.

Saints, let us awake and rise in the strength of the Lord; "let us shake off the coals from our garments, and be free in the joy of the word."

May the Lord bless his Saints everywhere, and keep them in the straight and narrow way; and may we soon all be together in the place the Lord has appointed us to gather to. I know it is God's will that his people should gather together in the place he has appointed.

I am a weak, unworthy girl, but God knows it is my whole longing and desire to do good, and help in some way to spread his gospel.

In the faith of Christ,

No star is ever lost we once have seen,
We always may be what we might have been.
Since good, though only thought, has life and breath,
God's life can always be redeemed from death;
And evil, in its nature, is decay,
And any hour can blot it all away;
The hopes that lost, in some far distant seem,
May be the truer life, and this the dream.

"PUT YOURSELF IN THEIR PLACE."

This may be a difficult thing to do. Indeed, we are satisfied that anyone who has ever tried it, knows that it is so. But like many a thing which is difficult, it is also a good thing to do. Especially do we think this position of mind is necessary in studying the Scriptures of divine truth, and it may be through our failure in doing this that we often lose the blessing which otherwise we surely would receive. Paul, in writing to the saints at Corinth, makes this statement: "Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples [or types]: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come." Now we naturally stop to inquire, What are "all these things" to which Paul refers? And in view of the fact that they were written for our admonition, the question is certainly an important one.

We find upon examination that his immediate reference was to the things which happened when the Lord, with an outstretched hand, brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, led them through the wilderness, and finally gave them possession of the promised land.

As latter-day Israel, this question comes home to us with great significance) especially at this time, when as a church we feel that a day of trial is upon us—a day when it behooves each one who loves the Lord to be found at his post with armor on.

Is it not natural, in speaking of or in reflecting upon God's ancient people, to think of them as stubborn and rebellious? Do we not think of them as peculiar in their disposition of ungrateful murmurings and rebellion? Has it never entered our minds to think that their blessings were especially great—that our own trials are heavier? Now if it were possible for us to put ourselves in like circumstances, think you we would find it as we have thought? Is it not a disposition peculiar to mortals to think no trials so heavy as those we ourselves have known? To feel that for our heart wanderings, our negligence, our failure to keep the commandments of God, there is more excuse than our neighbor has to offer for his failure? So far, however, from this being the case, we feel sure that could we but put ourself in our neighbor's place, we would find that—contrary to what we had thought—our own burden was lighter than his; our own excuse for failure less valid.

The Lord himself called ancient Israel a stiff-necked and rebellious people. His judgment is yet to be pronounced upon us. Israel was a nation of slaves. Four hundred and twenty years they had dwelt in the midst of an idolatrous people. They had only the traditions of their fathers to hold them to a knowledge of the true God, and even these were comparatively few. After all those years of bondage, it is probable they were broken in spirit, and ceased to long for freedom, or a better condition of things. They knew nothing of God's government, his plans, his purposes; and above all, his love.

Egypt was a fertile country. They had once eaten of the fat of the land, and though now groaning under taskmasters, even that state of things seemed better to them than plunging into the midst of a wilderness, encumbered by their wives and little ones, to seek a country, about which they knew nothing, only that it had been promised to their ancestor, Abraham, that it should be the possession of his children. Think you there was nothing bitter, nothing trying in those forty years of wandering in the wilderness? Many times in hunger and thirst, and what was the result of murmuring or complaint? It is recorded, and Paul says, for our admonition. Yet steadily through all this God moved unchangingly forward to the accomplishment of his purposes in choosing this people, and establishing them as a nation in the land he had promised Abraham should be theirs.

But, as his hand had been stretched out in mighty power to plant and to nourish them, so was it displayed in power to pluck them up and cast them out of the land when they disobeyed him, until in the rejecting and crucifying of Christ they filled up the cup of their iniquity, and their homes were left unto them desolate. And when the mind tries to grasp what the Jews in their final dispersion have suffered, the heart sickens at the picture of the untold agony and awful desolation which has been their portion; and we exclaim, if this is all, if this is the end of it, far better for them had they been left in the land of Egypt!

But this is not all—this is not the end. Steadily through all these years—these centuries—God has been moving forward to the accomplishment of his purposes in the world. And as Paul, in reciting to the Hebrews in his day, bore witness of the faithful ones who "were stoned," "were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented;" so the historians who followed Paul have added time and again to the same testimony, until at last, as foretold by Daniel, the saints of the Most High were worn out, and darkness covered the earth. But the end was not yet. Steadily the Father was moving on to the accomplishment of the grand result had in view when he chose the Hebrews as a nation to be the custodians of his law, and through them to manifest to the world his righteousness.

And now we are standing just upon the brink of the grand final consummation of all the mighty events which have preceded us. When "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the . . . saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." In regard to this matter there cannot be the slightest doubt in the mind of anyone who has studied the prophecies and is observing the signs of the times. Shall we, can we expect to enter into the possession of the kingdom—this kingdom, the hope of obtaining which has in every dispensation of the world cost the blood of martyrs—the suffering and torture of saints, without paying the price which this hope has demanded of them?

It may not be in the same way—indeed God has forewarned us that it would not be; but there is a price we must pay, and God, who is the embodiment of justice, will see to it that he demands no more of you than he does of me.

"While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." This though the commandment had been given, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch." Does not this indicate that the entire church, at the time of his coming, is to be in a comparative state of inactivity? and during the time of this inactivity, there is no perceptible difference between the wise and the foolish virgins. But the time of testing is near. The cry is heard at the midnight hour, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." Well will it be for us then if we are found with oil in our lamps, and prepared to enter in with him. My neighbor's lamp will not furnish light for me; and if I am wise, I must see to it that I have a sufficient supply of oil of my own.

RIVERSIDE, Cal., Oct. 21.

Dear Sister Frances:—It has been a long time since I have written anything to the sisters' department. Not that I have not thought of the dear sisters who have been praying for me and all of the lonely ones, who have no chance to meet with those of like faith. I get somewhat discouraged at times, then the thought comes to me, I am not alone. There is one who knows all that we have to contend with. Perhaps I may help some one who is struggling along to keep God's laws and do as he would have us do. I often think how happy the Saints ought to be who can meet together to praise God and have sweet communion together! But, dear lonely sisters, our Father above will hear our petitions and help us bear our cross with patience and longsuffering. God has been good to me, giving me strength to endure, and raising me up when almost crushed, giving peace and joy, and such a restful feeling that my heart is full of praise to his holy name, because he does manifest himself to us in these last days. It makes me feel sad when I see so many without this hope to cheer and help them to live by every word that has been given us to live by. I feel that I come far short of living as it is my privilege to do. There are so many things to contend with, especially where there is no one in the household who is in sympathy with your way of thinking, and you cannot talk about or tell what the Lord has done for his people, and is doing all the time in these last days. I do enjoy the church paper so much. There is so much to help us. I feel to thank all the Saints for the gracious words from their pens. I can take them to my heart, and they are as a balm to my soul. I am distributing the papers to others, trying to let others have a chance to learn the good news which has come to all who will accept. Sometimes I feel like going out on the streets and talking to the people, but I suppose I would be taken up for insanity. Dear sisters, I do need your prayers, that I may live a godly life. So live that I may be worthy to stand with the redeemed when the Savior comes to claim his own. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain, your sister in the everlasting gospel,

THE BENEFITS OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Sunday school is an organization that is a benefit to mankind, and one of which everyone engaged in the work can say, "I am able to lead a better life by belonging to such an organization." I believe the Lord approves of the Sunday school, and blesses every effort put forth in forwarding this great work.

Perhaps all do not realize the importance of the Sunday school and the benefits derived therefrom. Would that more did, and that more were interested in the advancement of this work. Some may think, and it has been said, "the Sunday school is for the young, not for the old." If the Sunday school is worthy of the consideration of the young, is it not worthy of the consideration of the old, and will it not be a benefit to the old as well as to the young? It is an educational school for both old and young, and all classes.

Parents who interest themselves in the Sunday school work not only benefit themselves, but by their example the children are encouraged to attend and take an interest in preparing their lessons. The lessons learned in Sunday school during childhood are not soon forgotten. The child does not forget his early training. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

His early training proves beneficial to him in after years. He has a greater desire to go on and learn more of the truths that are taught, and do more for the work that he may receive the reward that is promised to those who prove faithful to the end.

The benefits of the Sunday school are manifold. It benefits the officers and teachers as well as the pupils, spiritually and morally. Each one has a desire and an inspiration to lead a nobler and higher life. If we come before him with a broken heart and contrite spirit, will not God's Spirit be with us to aid and guide us at all times?

Our duty is to serve and obey God, and to acquaint ourselves with his works. In Proverbs, chapter four, verse five, we are commanded to "get wisdom, get understanding: forget it not; neither decline from the words of my mouth."

Is not the Sunday school an excellent school, by which we may obtain knowledge and understanding? There is not a better school for the young, for the understanding of the Scriptures, and fitting them for their calling in spreading the gospel, than the Sunday school. It is in the Sunday school that we receive strength and aid to perform our duties. Teachers are benefited by new ideas and helps that are obtained from time to time, fitting them for good work, and better ways of presenting the lessons to their classes. They receive spiritual strength in helping others to obtain light and knowledge. Some may become discouraged and think that their teaching is all in vain and no one benefited, but it may be like bread cast upon the waters, it will return after many days. We may not be permitted to see the fruits of our labor, but we may be the means by word or action of influencing for good the life of some one.

The Sunday school is a benefit to the church in helping spread the gospel. Perhaps many would never have received light and knowledge, and understood the plan of salvation, had it not been for the Sunday school. I think a great many can speak from experience in this respect.

Fathers and mothers that are interested in the spiritual welfare of their children will not neglect to instruct and encourage their children in the work, that they may be brought within the fold.

The Lord wants us to grow in grace and knowledge and be a benefit to others.

We are all placed here for some purpose, and that purpose should be the highest of our ideals, in doing all the good we can for the advancement of his work, and spreading of the gospel that others might receive the truth.

Then may the time soon come when all will be more interested in the Sunday school. God does not forget to reward every effort, and if we wish to be benefited and have others benefited, we must not falter by the wayside, but be willing to labor until the end.

"All true work is sacred; for in all true work there is something of divineness. Labor wide as the earth, has its summit in heaven."

CHEAPENING THE WORK.

Some men are born leaders; others are just as surely born to be led. Many leaders are willing to serve humbly in the ranks, but more of the rank and file aspire to leadership. It is a great mistake in any work to permit the mantle of authority to fall upon unworthy shoulders or force the armor-bearer to wield the weapons of his captain. And yet this is just what is constantly being done in Christian work, because the workers do not realize the dignity of their high calling, but are continually cheapening it in their own minds. —Iowa Sunday School Worker.

A SPRINKLER OR A WELL.

Have you ever noticed in looking around a Sunday school during its session, how many of its teachers there are holding forth with earnestness, with more or less animation, to their classes, each one of whom is apparently taking no part in the exercises, or at least no other part than that of listening?

Now good listeners are to be desired; and many of us who have had unruly boys to manage would be thankful for such a state of things. But would it not be better as a rule to have less preaching and more teaching in the classes?

THE FIRST OBJECT IN TEACHING should be to awaken thought in the mind of the pupil. Just in proportion as the child takes part in the discussion of the subject presented, just so far is he interested in it. Too many teachers are like fountains sprinkling the spray of their knowledge over all in their vicinity. Not that I think for a moment there is danger of any teacher knowing too much! But should not the knowledge be more like the well—deep, pure, and sparkling, where the pupil must come with his bucket and draw for himself? Fountains are good things—always ornamental, often useful; but for practical, everyday purposes, as a means of quenching thirst, most of us would prefer the well.

I try often to

of presenting the lessons from Sunday to Sunday. Most of us like novelty, while monotony is irksome. I have been surprised at times by the readiness with which the scholars have responded to new ways of taking up the lessons. For instance, I had a class of young misses whose ages ranged from twelve to fifteen years. I suggested that each one should read to the rest of us two or more verses and then explain them the same as if they were teachers and we pupils, and we could all ask questions of the reader. I wish you could have heard the sensible, clear-headed way in which most of those girls explained and answered questions; and they evidently liked it. Of course with younger pupils other methods must be tried. But a few of the most important points in the lesson should be so emphasized by illustration, by repetition, that at least a part of the subject shall remain in the mind of the child.

IF TEACHERS WOULD STUDY

not only the lessons, but also the best methods of presenting them, would it not obviate much of the restlessness and inattention now noticeable in many of the classes in our Sunday schools?—G. M. Howard, in Iowa Sunday School Helper.

Conference Minutes.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

On the 1st day of December, the above district conference convened at Taylorville. R. T. Walters chairman, M. R. Shoemaker assistant, Alice M. Simpson and Luther Simpson secretaries. Branches reporting: Taylorville 45; gain by baptism 15. Beardstown 30; gain by baptism 5, by certificate 1. Priesthood reporting: R. T. Walters baptized 2, Luther Simpson, S. J. Bartlett, J. G. Ettinger, Thomas Broad, M. R. Shoemaker, and Thomas Lilly. The recommendation of M. R. Shoemaker was read, and by motion was accepted to be ordained an elder. By motion the recommendation of Luther Simpson to the office of an elder was read and accepted; also Thomas Broad to the office of priest was accepted. Delegates to General Conference: Thomas Broad, S. J. Bartlett, H. Seegar, and Maggie Lilly. The district was formed into a Sunday school association; M. R. Shoemaker superintendent, Alice M. Preaching in the evening by M. R. Shoemaker. Sunday school at 9:30 a. m. Preaching at eleven a. m. Prayer and testimony meeting at 2:30 p. m., at which the brethren named were ordained. Bro. M. R. Shoemaker was elected district president. Bro. Luther Simpson to be recommended to Bishop E. L. Kelley as Bishop's agent for district. The evening sermon was by Bro. R. T. Walters. A vote of thanks was given to the Saints for their hospitality and kindness. Adjourned to meet by statement of president.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

Conference met at Carson, Iowa, November 24. The district president and the missionary in charge were elected to preside, Brn. H. N. Hansen and Charles Fry were chosen secretaries pro tem. The courtesy of the floor was extended to visiting members. A report was read and accepted from the secretary. He had sent out 62 reports to the priesthood of the district, of which 22 had been returned, reporting 120 sermons, 8 baptisms, 4 marriages, and 12 children blessed during the quarter. The report further says that he had served formal notice on Crescent branch, through their presiding officer, of the action of the last conference, in ordering the branch to place the name of Sr. Ray Heizer on their record; but that the indications were that the branch had ignored the order. With his report he presented credentials for 40 delegates, with 114 notes, representing 773 members. Statistical reports were read from all the branches. Boomer 40; gain 4. Carlile and M. F. Elswick. (Too late for conference Levi Grabill and John Leytham, who both express their love for and interest in the cause; but have been inactive, owing to their infirmities.—District Secretary.) J. P. Carlile, the Bishop's agent, reported as follows: Balance on hand last report $53.53; collected since $860 32; total $913 85; paid to Bishop E. L. Kelley $800; to ministry $45; others $31; abstract of titles of church lot in Council Bluffs $7 50; total $883.50; balance on hand $30 35. At the afternoon session, after the chair had addressed a few remarks to the conference concerning the placing of Sr. Heizer's name on Crescent branch record, the matter was referred to the district president. On separate motions, the following officers were sustained: D. R. Chambers, district president; H. N. Hansen, assistant; J. Charles Jensen, secretary; J. P. Carlile, Bishop's agent. On motions to adjourn to Council Bluffs and Cresent, it was decided in favor of Crescent. Elders J. S Strain, D. K. Dodson, Priest L. G. Wood, and Teacher A. E Madison, having expressed a willingness to labor as they could, were instructed to labor under the direction of the presidency of district. On further motion, the conference requests all the priesthood who can and will labor, to do so. Preaching by Charles Fry, James Caffall, I. M. Smith, and H. N. Hansen, in the order named. Adjourned to meet Saturday, February 23, 1901.

Sunday School Associations.

TEXAS CENTRAL.

Sunday school association convened at Hearne, with Texas Central branch, November 2. S. R. Hay, superintendent, in the chair; John Hay, secretary. The following schools reported: Texas Central, Shady Grove, and Philadelphia. No report from Bethel. S. R. Hay, superintendent, reported one school visited and one organized. Treasurer reported $1.70 on hand. The superintendents of schools also reported. An hour was spent in ten-minute speeches by the leading Sunday school workers, which was very instructive. It was moved and carried that each school prepare a program for next association. Adjourned to place of meeting of next district conference, on the Friday preceding, at 10 a. m.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.

PASTORAL.

To the Missionaries and Saints of Northern Illinois and Wisconsin:—It becomes my duty to inform you that I will not be with you during the winter, unless it may be on special occasions. I have been requested by the Board of Publication and directed by Joseph Smith to commence the preparation of the fourth volume of Church History.

I regret that I have been able to spend so little time in my field during the conference year, but I am very thankful that I have so competent and reliable a corps of associates. I desire to take this occasion to commend them to the confidence and hearty support of the Saints.

I am quite sure that if they receive the support that they are worthy of, that the interests of the work will be carefully safeguarded and advanced. My short association with the Saints in different parts of my field was pleasant to me, and I would be glad to further continue my labors and acquaintance. The third volume of history takes us to the close of 1872, and the fourth will no doubt bring the history up to date, then it is to be hoped that whoever may be historian will not need to devote so much of his time to the preparation of matter for publication.

Invoking the peace and blessing of God upon you, I am your coworker in the cause of truth, HEMAN C. SMITH.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF ORDER AND DEBATE.

Notice is hereby given, that by action of the joint council of the seventy, the following proposed amendments to the Rules of Order and Debate will be presented to the General Conference of 1901 for its consideration and action:—

Resolved, that section 161, paragraph 5 (a), be stricken out, and that the following be inserted in its stead: "In case satisfaction shall not be given upon the examination and decision of any cause before a court of elders, an appeal from such decision may be had by the party aggrieved to the bishop's court, and from that court to the high council."

Resolved, that section 151, paragraph 5 (b), be stricken out and in lieu thereof the following be inserted: "In case of appeal, the appellant must set forth clearly to the court to which appeal is made, the reasons for such appeal."

"In case of appeal, the authority to which the elders' court has reported, shall send at once, upon receipt of written notice of such appeal, the papers and minutes of evidence, and a copy of the proceedings of the court in said case, and cause the same to be filed with the court to which appeal is taken."

"Remark. In cases where offending parties have absconded, or are inaccessible to the prescribed labor and methods provided for in paragraph 4, section 161, the words, 'if practicable' should be construed to qualify the conditions named, and proceedings had accordingly. If satisfaction is not had by the party, or parties, the way of appeal is open."

Whereas, the law of God in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 17, paragraph 13, provides that "the several elders composing this Church of Christ" shall meet in conference and transact the business of the church in said conferences, etc., Resolved, that the Rules of Representation, section 176, paragraph 2, be amended to read as follows: "The only qualifications to eligibility to the office of delegate from district to General Conference shall be eldership in the church in good standing."

Resolved, that section 177, paragraph 1, be amended by adding the words: "The qualifications for eligibility as such delegate being that he hold the office of an elder and be in good standing."

Resolved, that section 175 be stricken out, and the following be substituted therefor: "The general officers of the church known as the presidency, the twelve, the high council, the seventy, the presiding bishopric, and all high priests, elders, and priests when traveling under General Conference or general appointment are ex officio members of General Conference, and entitled to voice and vote in General Conference when present."

Resolved, that section 99 be amended by inserting in the sixth line, after the word "affirmative," the words, "By a two-thirds' vote."

On behalf of a committee of the joint seventy,

HIGH PRIESTS' QUORUM.

Having waited to obtain account of the ordination of brethren as high priests the publication of "List of Names and Addresses" has been delayed. But said list (No. 3) has now been issued and a copy has been sent to each member of the quorum, also to the four whose ordination has not yet been reported as attended to, namely, G. J. Waller, V. M. Goodrich, J. B. Roush, and John Zimermann.

Should any of the brethren fail to receive the copy mailed them they may write and another will be sent.

When any change their location, or address, please send notice, and the changes will be published in Herald and Ensign, so that the secretary and other brethren may mark such changes on their lists, and know where to write you.

As the expenses of the quorum for lists, blank report-forms, letter heads, envelopes, and stamps have increased much, and the only collections ever made have been from those present at April meetings of the quorum, therefore if those who have not met with us desire to contribute small amounts, such will be acceptable as supplies for the treasury of the quorum.

Blank report-forms will be mailed about March 1.

Respectfully yours,
H. A. STEBBINS,
Secretary and treasurer.

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 5.

CLERGY PERMITS FOR 1901.

The Central and the Western Passenger Associations have been furnished with lists complete to date of all General Conference and other general mission appointees, and notified that certificates of appointment hold good until the General Conference of 1901. Applications for permits for the year 1901 may therefore be made at any time.

The Western Association is divided into two departments. Applicants located in Alabama, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Kentucky, Louisana, Mississippi, Missouri, Sonora (Mexico), Tennessee, and Texas, should address C. M. Pratt, Chairman, Room 1320 Union Trust Building, St. Louis, Missouri. Those in other territory of said Association address Eben E. MacLeod, Chairman, Monadnock Building, Chicago, Illinois.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Applicants in Central Association territory should address F. C. Donald, Commissioner Central Passenger Association, Monadnock Building, Chicago, Illinois.

Application blanks may be obtained from local railroad agents, or from either of the above named.

All local ministers entitled to permits are referred to their respective missionaries in charge for indorsement, as heretofore.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

A GRATEFUL REMINDER.

The Curtis Publishing Company of Philadelphia are offering cash prizes ranging from $1,000 to $25 each for the largest lists of subscribers sent in by any one person to "The Ladies' Home Journal" a monthly at one dollar per annum, or to "The Saturday Evening Post," a weekly at the same price. Some of Sister Walker's friends are interested in getting one of these prizes for her, and thus make her old age more comfortable.

She has edited the "Hope," and also "The Home Column" in the Herald for nearly twenty years without compensation, and we think this is our opportunity to reward her in return, and by united effort to do her some good at the age in life when most needed. We ask your help in getting subscriptions both in and out of the church. Also your own subscription if you desire to take either magazine, or your renewal if you are already taking one. Please send as many subscriptions at one time as possible, deducting price of money order and stamp. Address all communications to Mrs. Lucy L. Resseguie, and make money orders payable to her. If you desire to make a present of either magazine to a friend, a beautiful illuminated card will be sent with the first copy stating that the magazine is sent for one year, and giving the name of the friend sending it. Send in your subscriptions now and begin with the January number.

We have, however, until the last of April, 1901, to compete for these prizes. By that time all subscriptions must have been in.

Very sincerely, your sister in Christ,
LUCY LYONS RESSEGUIE.

We believe the above movement commendable, and the end sought a worthy one, and therefore recommend it.

WALLER.—To Mr. Burton N. and Sr. Kate P. Waller, March 24, 1900, a son, named Robert Burton. Blessed November 18, by Elders Charles Derry and C. A. Beebe, at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

LEETUN.—To Bro. Lars and Sr. Isabel Leetun, September 11, 1900, a son, and named Milton Edgar. Blessed at Head Grove church, November 29, by Elder D. M. Rudd.

ELIFSON.—To Bro. Oliver and Sr. Amelia J. Elifson, October 8, 1900, a daughter, and named Dora Violet. Blessed by Elder D. M. Rudd, November 29, at the Saints' church, Head Grove.

MARRIED.

MEGATHLIN—CHASE.—On Tuesday evening, at the home of the parents of the bride, Captain and Sister George W. Chase, Garfield street, Brockton, Massachusetts, Mr. J. Earnest Megathlin to Sr. Sylvia Chase; Elder M. H. Bond officiating, assisted by the Rev. H. G. Megathlin, pastor of Congregational Church of Quincy, and uncle of the groom. A large company of relatives and friends from Providence, Cape Cod, and elsewhere were present to witness the ceremony, which was of an unusally elaborate character, including in addition to the usual attendants of maid to the bride and groom attendant, a double ring service with page, flower girl, etc., etc., and who, with tokens of friendship by beautiful gifts, and most fervent good wishes for Sister Sylvia and congratulations for Mr. Megathlin in securing so good and promising a girl for a wife and life companion —manifested the high esteem in which both parties are held.

DIED.

JENNINGS.—Sr. Martha Belle Jennings, wife of Mr. David Jennings, was born February 20, 1880; died November 5, 1900, aged 20 years, 8 months, and 16 days. Our sister was baptized at the age of nine years. A husband, two little children, and a host of friends are left to mourn. Funeral service in Bigler Grove schoolhouse, by Elder J. A. Donaldson, assisted by Bro. Frank Seeley.

BILLINGS.—At Little Deer Isle, Maine, November 10, 1900, infant daughter of Bro. Phillip R. and Sr. Bertha E. Billings, aged 9 months and 13 days. Funeral services by Elder J. N. Ames.

CLARK.—Bro. Benjamin F. Clark died at his home, Adelphi, Iowa, November, 13, 1900. Funeral services held at the Caldwell schoolhouse, by G. M. Jamison. B. F. Clark was born in Jackson county, Ohio, January 19, 1833. Came to Iowa in 1849; was married to Miss Julia Porter in Polk county, Iowa. Of twelve children born to them, seven remain, who with the wife, many grandchildren, a brother and sister, mourn his departure. Bro. Clark was one among the first to unite with the church when the gospel was first preached in his neighborhood in 1875. He was ordained a priest soon after, and was an untiring advocate of the faith.

CARLILE.—Bro. Isaac Carlile departed this life at the home of his son-in-law and daughter, Bro. and Sr. William Scott, near Underwood, Iowa. He was born in England, August, 1820, and passed away November 5, 1900. He was baptized and confirmed by his son, Elder J. P. Carlile, August 14, 1887. We laid his earthly remains away in Walnut Hill cemetery at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where ten years previously his wife had been buried. Seven children, all members of the church, are left to mourn, two having passed on before. Service by Elder H. N. Hansen.

GARDINER.—At her home, Omaha, Nebraska, November 14, 1900, Sr. Emma Gardiner. She was born October 10, 1837, at Stroud, Gloucester, England; was baptized October 16, 1892, at Omaha, by Elder G. M. L. Whitman, and has been a very devout and faithful member ever since. She leaves husband, one son, and five daughters to mourn her loss. Funeral sermon at the house, by Elder F. A. Smith; interment Forest Lawn cemetery.

BAKER.—At her home, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sunday, November 25, 1900, Sr. Harriet Baker. She was born December 25, 1833, in Gravely, Cambridge, England; was baptized September 18, 1895, at the Manawa reunion. She leaves a husband and three sons, also one sister and three brothers to mourn her loss. A large concourse of sorrowing friends bore witness of the love and esteem in which our departed sister was held; sermon by Elder F. A. Smith, from the church.

RUDD.—Amander F. Rudd died from accidental drowning in the Boyer river, near his home, Dow City, Iowa, October 29, 1900. He was born in Erie county, Pennsylvania, December 6, 1824, moved to Crawford county, Iowa, about 1860, living a quiet life. He was married to Miss E. L. Chandler, August 12, 1846, who survives him, with seven children, fifty-eight grandchildren, and nineteen great-grandchildren. He united with the church in the early '30's, renewing his covenant in 1860, under the hands of Elder J. A. McIntosh, by whom he was ordained an elder. It is said of "Uncle Frank" that he was an exceptionally pure minded and virtuous man. Funeral sermon by Elder J. F. Mintun, in Saints' chapel, Dow City, and in the cemetery. There was his remains laid to rest awaiting the resurrection.

SHIPPY.—At her home, near Fairbank, Iowa, November 6, 1900, Sr. Elsie Shippy, after a long illness. She was born at Fairbank, Iowa, October 21, 1867. Her maiden name was Miller. She was married to L. D. Shippy, and with him united with the church, she being baptized May 15, 1892. She leaves husband and four children to mourn, besides many other relatives. Funeral service in the Methodist church at Fairbank; sermon by Elder J. R. Sutton, assisted by W. E. LaRue.

HEQUEMBOURG.—At Newman, Kansas, Bro. John Cavender Hequembourg, departed this life November 25, 1900. He was born at St. Louis, Missouri, January 7, 1868; married Miss Rose Green, October 30, 1889; baptized January, 1896. He died with a hope of a glorious resurrection. Buried in Oak Hill cemetery, Kirkwood, Missouri. He leaves a wife and son to mourn their loss. Funeral sermon by Elder Arthur Allen.

WILD.—At Belleville, Illinois, November 20, 1900, Sr. Mary Ann Wild. She was born August 10, 1831, at Cynder Hill, Staffordshire, England; was baptized August 8, 1881, at Belleville, Illinois. She had been confined to the house for a number of years, but lived a good Christian life until death. She leaves several children and grandchildren, who mourn their loss. Funeral services by Elder Arthur Allen.

CHAMBERS.—At his home, near Persia, Iowa, December 4, 1900, William Chambers. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, December 29, 1830, coming to America in 1853 Having espoused the faith of the Latter Day Saints he journeyed to Salt Lake City, Utah, expecting to find that faith represented by the people there, but being disappointed, returned to Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1861, where in 1863 he united with the Reorganization. He was the first president of the Spring Creek, now Persia branch, and at one time president of the Second Quorum of Elders. He was married to Louisa M. McKee, October 5, 1858, by whom he became the father of twelve children, seven of whom with his wife survive him. Funeral services conducted by W. D. Bullard, sermon by Elder J. F. Mintun. Thus was laid to rest another one who has labored long and faithful for the restored gospel.

RATHBONE.—At St. Louis, Missouri, Harry, infant son of William and Sister Rathbone. He was three years old, a lovely child, taken from this world of sin unto the paradise of God. Funeral service by F. L. Kelley and A. Allen.

ETHICS OF CHURCH MUSIC.

BY HAMILTON M. WILD, ORGANIST IN GRACE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The question of what is right and proper in church music depends largely upon the point of view. Primarily, any music likely to produce such mood as brings home to the one so affected the words sung, or revives any prior lesson, or prepares a fertile soil for the seed the priest desires to sow, is good from the church's point of view. In this regard carrying out the idea: "The end justifies the means." What is right from the musical point of view depends largely upon the training and taste of the musician. One finds that only right which is molded in strictest form, is purely scientific, to be regarded as such, and likely or desirable to have all emotional features eliminated.

Another—and it is a large class—demands that that which was must now be. That that which did duty centuries ago should do duty today. That because our fathers worshiped so, we, too, must. Since much of that music was as cold as the churches themselves, and since it did not creep out into the world, it is eminently proper to urge that as that, indeed, was church music, to use it now would be to avoid all worldly association. Another class would have anything beautiful. Another, anything to arouse intense emotion. Another, anything appropriate to place or occasion. The latter seems to be fairest to all concerned—priest, musician, and congregation. Let it be said, just in passing, that music in itself is pure. It can become impure only through suggestion or association. Hence, any such suggestion or association as tends to dissipate the ideal attitude of mind while worshiping is out of order and place. To say that one form or another is the only one proper in church and shall be used is as absurd as to insist, for physical reasons, that all human beings shall be treated alike. We all know that what is one man's meat is another's poison, and so it must be with ritual and music in the church service.

While no one disputes the musical value of the church works of Palestrina, Beethoven, Mozart, and Haydn, in the Protestant Episcopal Church the works of Stainer, Tours, Goss, Wesley, Sullivan, John E. West, and many others find far better place and more favor. These, in turn, do not appeal as strongly in many of the churches as the lighter works of Buck, Brewer, Schnecker, Shelley, and a host of others, and these in turn fail of effect—the arousing of religious fervor—and fall before the gospel hymn. So, broadly, from a priest's point of view, he is justified, in so far as he uses music as an accessory and aid, and is alive to the merits and demerits of this, that, or the other form of music, in choosing between Palestrina and Perkins, or Bach and Bliss. Excepting in "high" church, the florid music of the masses of Mozart—his, just for example—finds no place. It is admitted that he was deeply religious, and that the music he penned stands an inspiration and an offering, and yet it sounds to the low churchman "too high," or savors too much of actual musical performance per se. Plain song finds no favor, grand and impressive as it is sung by large bodies with big accompaniment. So, with the idea of what is demanded by the service and with the words at hand, the Anglican priest or choirmaster naturally turns to Smart, Croft, Stanford, and their vast company for his music, serving his church best by so doing, but by no means pleasing the strict classicals.

If, then, one looks farther, it will be noted that the music for the various churches has emanated from those belonging to the various sects, Mozart in the Roman, Bach in the Lutheran, Goss in the Episcopal, and Sankey in the denominational.

Briefly the case might stand: Serve the greatest need of the church with that which is purest and best in music, and in proportion as the work is sincere and well done, not to say artistic, will it foster a love for all that is beautiful, and this granted, the priest and musician educated to appreciate what is right and proper, due regard had for gradual development of the masses, and an intuition of what may best serve the one end and aim, the point of view becomes common, and the results to religion and music equally happy.—Chicago Tribune, Sept. 30, 1900.

CAUSES OF THE INCREASE OF SUICIDE.

BY GOLDWIN SMITH, CANADIAN HISTORIAN AND ESSAYIST.

Recently published statistics show suicide is on the increase. It might be hastily inferred that the world is becoming less happy. But the inference would be unfounded. Rather it might be said that the means of enjoyment having been greatly increased and the standard of it generally raised, deprivation is more keenly felt and more productive of despair. The leading cause, however, probably is sensibility intensified by civilization. It is admitted that the rate of suicide increases with national education; not that national education produces suicide, but it produces sensibility. Some investigators tell us that suicide is common also among savages. If it is, the cause may be assumed to be different from that which operates among the civilized. The savage yields without reflection to any impulse, like the horse in the New Forest, which, maddened by the sting of the forest fly, dashes out its life against a tree.

It does not appear from the classification that any particular calling is especially suicidal unless it be that of the soldier. It would have been easy to understand why a British or Prussian soldier of former days, subjected to an iron discipline, deprived of every comfort in life and mercilessly flogged or caned, should be ready to bolt through the only door of escape, especially if he had been, like many of Frederick's soldiers, crimped, or, like many of those in the British army, decoyed when he was drunk by a recruiting sergeant into a service which in those days was for life. But under the present military system it is difficult to see why soldiers should be given to suicide.

Of the races one is rather surprised at first to be told the Teutonic, in which you would have expected most fortitude, are more suicidal than the Celtic, in which you would have expected less. The gloom of the northern climate may be partly the cause, but it probably may be said also that the deeper character is the more melancholic. The Roman Catholic Celt in Ireland will hear with complacency that the rate of suicide among the Scotch Presbyterians of Ulster is double that among the Irish of his own race and religion.

One is rather surprised also to learn that May, June, and July are the suicidal months. It might have been supposed rather that they were the season of cheerfulness and hope. The explanation given is that with revival of vitality all the feelings and impressions become more lively, those which lead to suicide among the rest.

Marriage, it appears, is an antidote to suicide, which, on the other hand, prevails among the divorced. The fact is that nine marriages out of ten are happy; not so happy, perhaps, as, in spite of all disillusionment, evenness of temper and determination to make the best of the union would render them, yet happier than a lonely life. The tendency to domestic strife and divorce would naturally prevail most among the rich and idle, who have not daily need of each other's help and are tempted to fill the vacancy in their lives with irregular love.

That suicide would be far less common among women than among men statistics were hardly needed to assure us. Women are more patient as well as less resolute than men. They are also less exposed to the stress of life. Among Spanish women, however, it seems there is a special prevalence of suicide, of which the intensity of Spanish passion is no doubt the cause.

It is rather disappointing to be told that neither drunkenness nor sexual immorality is among the principal direct cause of suicide. Their suicidal effect seems to be felt more by the children of the sinners than by the sinners.

If we could scrutinize the causes of suicide we should probably find that the variety was infinite. Numberless are the things which may make a man, especially if his liver is out of order, fancy that life is not worth living. Mere satiety, it appears, may sometimes have a fatal effect. The mysterious death of the wicked Lord Lyttleton, supernaturally predicted, seems to have been merely a case of suicide committed by a sated voluptuary and masked by a story which he told his friends of an apparition warning him that he was about to die. Within the writer's notice a case has occurred of suicide committed by a wealthy sybarite without assignable cause unless it were weariness of life, brought to a crisis, perhaps, by disorder of the liver owing to extreme sultriness of the weather. On the other hand, the writer has known a case where the character of the man was excellent, and the only assignable motive was the prospect of having an office thrust upon him and being thus compelled to play a public part. The temperament, perhaps, was something like that of Cowper, though there was not, as in the case of Cowper, insane delusion.

We can hardly reckon among suicides cases of euthanasia, as it is called, that is of the mere shortening of the pains of death. There seems to be no good reason why, when death is certain, when moral and intellectual life is practically extinct and nothing is left but the capacity of pain, a man should undergo lingering tortures instead of being allowed, to the relief of all about him as well as his own, to depart in peace. If Providence has sent the pain, Providence has also sent the remedy. If it is urged that you ought to wait till God calls you, you may reply that a mortal disease is the call of God. The danger of license, however, is obvious, at least without strict medical regulation, which it would be difficult to provide. It seems hard that science should be employed, as so often it must be, in keeping a man stretched on the rack, and it is sometimes an unhappy privilege of wealth to have its tortures thus skillfully prolonged when poverty would be allowed to die. Yet it is, no doubt, the duty of the physician to fight death to the last. As a matter of fact, the merciful use of anodynes, which no law of the profession forbids, is almost equivalent to euthanasia. Sir Thomas More, a most devout man, makes euthanasia lawful in his Utopia.

Of self-destruction from insanity or lesion of the brain it is needless to speak. This is to all intents and purposes natural death.

Some experts maintain that all cases of suicide are cases of insanity; but if you ask them what they mean by insanity, they will say tendency to suicide; just as in the case of murder, when they are called in support of a defense on the ground of insanity the only account of insanity which they can give is tendency to murder.—Chicago Tribune, December 2, 1900.

Once a week in the factory of the Cleveland Window Glass Company, a discussion takes place upon some topic of business interest. Written questions are handed in advance to the employees. The answers enable the company to judge of the efficiency of its working force. They indicate also the possibility of educating men from the ranks to positions as foremen and salesmen, thus obviating the necessity of relying upon outside assistance. Here is one example: Two years ago a young man was taken into the employ of the company at a salary of $12 per month. Soon the company needed a salesman. Largely through information obtained in these discussions he was enabled in a short time to fill the position of salesman at a salary of $25 per week instead of $12 a month.

One feature of special interest in the works of the Cleveland Twist Drill Company is the system of paying for suggestions tending toward improvements in factory methods and management. The drills made by the company are straightened before they are sent out. A drill is laid on a block of metal whose upper surface is smooth and highly polished. By looking toward a strong light and rolling the drill back and forth, the inaccuracies, if any exist, are discovered. This work requires great accuracy and close application, and it is exceedingly trying to the eyes. Formerly the work was done in a large room with a number of large windows. An employee suggested partitioning the room, painting the walls green, and hanging green shades at the windows. Fifty dollars were paid for this suggestion. In return the company obtained the use of half the original room for other purposes, and an increase of fifteen per cent in the work done in the green room. This increased output has already amounted to several thousand dollars.—The World's Work for December.

From 324 illustrations in 1894 to over 1600 in 1900 are the figures which denote the numerical growth and development of the pictorial features in The Ladies' Home Journal in six years. This 400 per cent increase in numbers is rather dwarfed by the fact that nearly 1000 per cent more space is now given to pictures than six years ago, and that the quality, or artistic value, of the illustrations has improved beyond computation. A few years ago magazine making was thought by some to have attained a degree of perfection that precluded further advancement, but it seems to have been in its infancy. The reading public now insists upon illustrations, and in meeting that demand it is safe to say that the pictures printed in The Ladies' Home Journal in 1900 exceed in number, size, quality, and cost those published in all the leading magazines ten years ago.

An article of note in the January number of McClure's Magazine will be entitled, "Great Achievements in Modern Bridge Building," by Mr. Frank W. Skinner, of The Engineering Record. Here are sketched vividly the chief bridges of recent times and the manner of their building. The text is enriched by illustrations from photographs and a page drawing by Mr. George Varian.

If it is right that parents should live with their children as well as live for their children, the parent who strives to make childhood a happy time will find aid to that end in each number of The Delineator. Lina Beard, who has been contributing to that magazine a series of pastimes for children who have been ill devotes her whole article in the January issue to "The New Year." The article is illustrated with sketches from her own pen and is very clever. The same number tells of "A Soap Bubble Party," and also of the toys and amusements of "Child Life in China."

THE WEAK POINTS OF PROTESTANTISM.

In the East End Presbyterian church yesterday the pastor, Rev. Alfred Nicholson, preached a striking sermon on "Weak Spots in Protestantism."

His text was: "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation." His sermon was as follows:

"The present decade is one that has bred and bristles with repellant forces, both numerous and grave. Organ is in conflict with organism; progeny with parents: individual with corporate interests; statal with national issues and personal caprice with canonical obedience. This may be a sign of development, it may be a sign of independence of thought, it may be a sign of retrogression, it may be a symptom of anarchy. The significant individualism of the age appears in all the departments of man's life and labors. As an honest and hard-working teacher of good morals and sound doctrine I have not scrutinized, without alarm, the effect of the present tendency upon the whole area of Protestant Christianity, and what is more lamentable, upon the very vitals of Christianity itself. The protean forms of ecclesiasticism are of no more moment to me than monkish jungles, but as a rational and moral being endowed with parental responsibility and immortal aspirations I cannot but view the present outlook of gospel vigor with apprehension, discouragement, and doubt.

"We make the claim that Protestantism is composed of those, who, having protested against the innovations of mediævalism, endowed posterity with the apostolic form of Christianity. If Protestantism as we see it is essentially apostolic Christianity then God pity us! What advantageth us if we have fought with beasts at Ephesus. Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die.

PROTESTANTISM TODAY.

"The beginnings of Protestantism are lustrous in the character of its founders and the spiritual heroism of its defenders and to Presbyterianism in particular God has granted spiritual giants who impressed its institutions with order and decency and coherence. Let us look at our Protestantism, and especially our Presbyterianism, today. Let us mark with shame and sorrow her weakness as she totters to her fall. We do not gloat over her decay as an enemy. We rather give the alarm that we may repair to our original stronghold and from her neglected arsenals clothe ourselves with those weapons that will silence her enemies and regain her lost possessions.

The first and fatal weakness of Presbyterianism today, and generally of the entire Protestant fabric, is lack of authority. This weakness is vital. It is as undeniable as it is deplorable. The Protestant ministry in general and Presbyterian clergymen in particular have lost nearly all their authority over the manners, morals, and government of their churches. They can only assert their authority by resigning it, if affection and ability come into play, their demands may be then conceded. It used to be that the members of a church feared the disapproval of their pastor as a partially divine disfavor. Today he fears the disfavor of his people as having his professional career and personal support within the power of their capricious will. The preacher asks himself what will please the people, not the Almighty. He speaks his piece. The audience, especially those in the reserved seats, hiss or applaud him. Sometimes, especially when candidating, is like the gladiators in the arena of ancient Rome. Instead of saying to the lords and ladies before him, 'Dear brethren,' he might aptly say, 'Morituri vos salutamus.'

DECLINE OF DISCIPLINE.

"The authority of the session or lowest court in a Protestant church is practically null. A member may get intoxicated, he may cheat, slander, be guilty of treason and contumely, and there appears to be no redress. Discipline is practically obsolete. The presbytery, or second court, is shamelessly and nakedly impotent in the matter of authority over churches or pastors. They can go through the weak formality of installing or dissolving pastoral relations if the individual church asks them to do so. This is practically all that is left of that body once almost absolute in its authority over members, ministers, and churches. The synod is like the fifth wheel to a coach. And as for the general assembly, its chief business seems to be to afford a condition by virtue of which some ambitious member may become famous as moderator at the expense of mileage, massing and warring of words. In becoming a preacher in the Presbyterian church you are asked to accept a creed which you are not expected to believe. Creedal anarchy, clerical inquietude, and constituent decay characterize our condition today.

"The lack of dignity in the mode of ministerial appointment is the second vital weakness. 'Call from God,' how prostituted is that holy term! Men are not called any more to a particular pulpit; they are juggled into it. The first thing a candidate must do is to abandon his self-respect, then submerge his personality, then risk his reputation.

TREATMENT OF OLD MINISTERS.

"The old minister is a case not only of indecency, but a cause of scandal and of derision for the scoffer and the worldling. Amazing power of Presbyterianism that has schooled her members into a fortitude that can gaze, without pity, at the quivering heart of their aged pastor paraded before the presbytery on the spears of their elders. They can out-Herod Herod and his entombing John the Baptist in the dungeon of Machaerus is only mild in comparison with the brutality of our robust Presbyterianism. Grand opening for ambitious young men. Here, indeed, is a place where you may be honored with a martyr's crown, if your life should be spared until the gray hairs of service and sorrow appear.

"Unbusinesslike methods is the third weakness of our Protestant system.

"Debts, deficits, interest. How many pastors' hearts have broken with these words; how many vigorous congregations discouraged? In the majority of cases where dissatisfaction arises between pastor and people financial difficulty is at the bottom of it. A new church is built and an enormous mortgage dedicated to Almighty God. The mortgage follows the church for interest at every step as you have seen a horsefly in summer following the progress of that noble animal for blood. No church ought to be permitted to build without demonstrating to the business minds of the presbytery the feasibility of carrying on the work to the glory of God and the comfort of the people. In New York not long ago Archbishop Corrigan floated the consolidated mortgages of his dioceses amounting to some millions at the absurdly low interest of 2 per cent. We pay 6 and sometimes 7. Why cannot every presbytery pool all church property within their jurisdiction, raise mortgages at 2 per cent and make an annual assessment on all churches to pay off the entire encumbrance in instalments. The sad fact is that there is no affiliation and very little fraternity between us.

"Along this line there is the precarious, paltry, and disproportionate revenue of the church. A rich man will give a paltry sum and a poor man near him will give twice as much. Some that are extravagant in their private life will accompany their devotions with pennies. If a large sum is demanded they will return not again to worship. When subscribers get in arrears they are not reminded of their obligations. At the end of the year there is a deficit and the usefulness of the pastor is disparaged, but the financial end escapes unscathed. A Catholic would fear to worship in his sanctuary lest the curse of God would blast the profanity that refused to support the honor of his religion.

LAY AND CLERICAL TRAMPS.

"Lay and clerical tramps is a feature of our system that is symptomatic of maladministration. Members living in the north worship in the south, those living in the east worship in the west. The appearance of a new or sensational preacher increases this army of tramps. What was first a privilege soon degenerates into a custom. The custom of going anywhere to worship soon establishes the habit of going nowhere.

"The clerical tramp is, additionally, more obnoxious than the lay church tramp. It is his peculiar prerogative to dose and drench moribund or sterilized congregations with patent spiritual stimulants and tonics. The effect of their kindly intended labor and very hopeful patients is much like the hypodermic injection of morphia for pain or the imbibing of whisky for weariness, or the application of a whip to an unfed horse. Year after year this dismal experience comes to many a church.

"There is no strong hand to break down these obstructions to the orderly and masterful progress of Protestantism. There is not a nobler, more executive, tireless, devoted, and mentally equipped class of men on God's green earth than these same faithful ministers that hear from day to day everyone's tale of woe or tune of dissatisfaction. God bless them and give them ecclesiastical machinery that will not sink their marvelous capital of heart and brain and hand.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette, November 19, 1900.

The peculiar attack upon prevailing and popular religion, or its manifestation, as seen by the Rev. Alfred Nicholson from his point of view, which we give place to in the foregoing from a leading journal of the day, will be of interest to our readers as a curiosity, and of import because of its facts sharply told.

Is not his text applicable to himself and those whom he essays to criticise

www.LatterDayTruth.org

so sharply? It seems so to us. But it is but one of the signs of the times.

There ought to be a more rapidly growing conviction on the part of the Protestant ministry that so far as authority goes it is no better off than Catholicity, and that in point of unity within its borders and allegiance to its principles the average membership of the Catholic church are in the lead.

The usual claim of Protestant churches, that the different churches of the evangelical character and union are integral portions of the church, or Christ's body, and that the whole number goes to make that one body, is untenable from a Catholic standpoint, as well as from the standpoint of any so-called orthodox church that assumes to itself to be the church of Christ preëminently, as some, if not all do. There cannot possibly be so many bodies each claiming and holding that it is preëminently the church of Christ, and yet all others similarly making the same claim be essentially parts of the same Church of Christ.

It is not to be wondered at that Rev. Nicholson sees the hurt and danger to the church in its lack of authority. Authority is necessarily conceded, when this claim that the whole list of differing orders of church organization are by right the church; for this conceded, no one body dare, or can consistently demand, or enforce its authority over its members, for if it does, those against whom it is so enforced have only to say, We deny your right of authority, and straightway take ecclesiastic leave of that body and become identified with another of equal authority, or no authority as the final arbitrament may decide. Where then is Protestant security?

As to the things in which the reverend gentleman sees reasons for decadence in the churches, it is sadly true; nor need we as yet claim absolute freedom from similar causes. The almost despairing cry of the doctor, "If Protestantism as we see it is essentially apostolic Christianity then God pity us," is pathetic. And we believe that God does pity the rank and file of all the struggling masses now making up the sum of Protestantism; but, will the purposes of that Divine Being be set aside by him or abandoned, by reason of that pity—or will they be inexorably carried out to their ends for the "salvation of man" and "the glory of God?"

To us it is a foregone conclusion that the wisdom of God having devised the means and provided the ways of salvation, the weaknesses and follies of mankind will not be permitted to disarrange the working details of the great plan, nor prevent the final consummation, the redemption and sanctification of the race.

It is well that the ministry of Protestantism learn to know what its weaknesses are, that haply they as professed teachers of the Word may see the futility of "teaching for doctrine the precepts of men," and turn to the word itself as all should assuredly do. It is, also, well that those who may be interested in the general advancement and success of the Christ idea in religion, should be informed on the subject of the strong points in their own professions of faith, and these may be seen in comparison with the recognized and confessed weaknesses of faiths differing from their own. For these reasons the foregoing is valuable, as Presbyterianism is one of the oldest of the daughters of the century of reformation, and has been one of the most austere and conservative in its own behalf and least tolerant of opposition.

But no body of believers among the class of reformers, or would-be reformers, should rely on the supposed or known weaknesses in the professions, beliefs, organizations, and practices of others. Each must have strength in itself or it cannot survive the age of growth and criticism. And as increase and development bring into light weaknesses and defects, the true spirit of progress requires that such defects shall be cured; or if incurable and fatal the body should change for that which is better and capable of giving life and perpetuity; hence the need of an early and final return to the original faith through a restoration rather than a reformation.

AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

A movement has been set on foot by a society in New York City, the object of which is to secure an action of Congress to submit the question of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to the several states of the Union which shall prohibit both marrying and living in the practice of polygamy.

This ought not to be necessary, but it is thought by many to be, hence the movement.

We give below an extract from the Kansas City Journal of December 6, present year.

It will be seen by the whereases that there is a strong feeling that our neighbors in Utah have dealt in bad faith with the government and the public, hence this effort to make a law so wide reaching that no sort of craftiness can disregard, or make its provisions void.

We should not favor this idea for a constitutional amendment were it not for the fact that the Lord by revelation gave the church his "mind and will" on the subject of the marriage relation by direct statement in 1831, which mind and will should have been observed by all classes of believers in the Book of Mormon and the revelations to Joseph the Seer upon the teaching of which the church was founded.

Book of Covenants referred to in the first whereas is not the one in use from 1835 to 1869 and 1876, for none of the editions published prior to 1876 had anything in it sanctioning plural marriage, or anything like it, as may be easily proved by a comparison of the books themselves.

As things are, we favor the effort to secure the amendment as provided for in the resolutions.

ANTI-POLYGAMY AMENDMENT.

NEW YORK WOMEN WANT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO PUT AN END TO THE EVIL.

New York, Dec. 5.—A meeting was held here today, under the auspices of the Interdenominational Council of Women for Christian and Patriotic Service, to further the agitation for the adoption of an amendment to the federal constitution forbidding polygamy. Darwin R. James presided and read a letter from ex-Senator Edmunds to Mrs. D. R. James favoring the adoption of such an amendment. The following resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, The Mormon leaders have resumed their polygamous practices since statehood was given to Utah and are everywhere justifying these acts of bad faith by the persistent circulation, under the authority of their church, of the book of so-called "Doctrine and Covenants," wherein the practice of polygamy is enjoined by an alleged divine revelation, and

Whereas, The neighboring states of Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, and Nevada and the territories of Arizona and New Mexico are already inoculated with the virus of this evil, which is bound to spread into other states unless it is speedily checked, and

Whereas, The political influence of the Mormon leaders is not only sufficient to prevent the enactment of anti-polygamy laws in the state of Idaho, which came into the Union pledged by its constitution to prohibit polygamy, but even to prevent the enforcement of existing laws in Utah and the other neighboring states. Be it hereby Resolved, First—That we earnestly urge congress to take prompt action submitting to the several states a constitutional amendment forever prohibiting the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in the United States and all places subject to their jurisdiction.

Second—That as a step toward this end we urge the judiciary committee of the house of representatives, before whom bills are pending for the submission of an amendment prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation and providing for the disfranchisement of those who persist in such practices, to give these important measures immediate attention, so as to get their report upon the calendar in time to insure its consideration during the present session.—Kansas City Journal, December 16, 1900.

MONEY REPRESENTATION IN CHURCH CONVENTION.

A movement is pending that looks to an amendment to the Missouri Convention constitution allowing every church that contributes as much as one dollar to the work of the convention to send messengers. That is some better than to require ten dollars as is now the law, but we suggest that while they are at it our Missouri brethren rub out the money basis entirely, and allow any Baptist church that wants to do so to send messengers. That is the way to get the noncontributing churches to give. Elevate doctrine and abase the idea of estimating a church on the basis of cash.—American Baptist Flag, December 6, 1900.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The foregoing will explain what we noticed a few issues back, that is, the idea of representation in the conventions of the Baptist Church upon the basis of a money consideration. It would appear that the Flag was right in its suggestion to "rub out" the money consideration altogether.

CORRECTION.

In "Who shall preside?" by Bro. G. H. Hilliard, HERALD for December 5, 1900, page 783, third column, five lines from foot of column, the sentence, "They were 'set in the church,' not in the presidency of the church," should read, "They were 'set in the church,' not in the president of the church." The corrected sentence is just as it appeared in Bro. Hilliard's manuscript.

EXPLANATION.

In a sermon preached by us at Independence, last April and published in Ensign for Nov. 9, the following sentence appears: "There is not found on record anywhere in books secular or religious, any record of the means of life and salvation at the hands of God, except that (means of life and salvation) found in the New Testament Scripture; and if we are not authorized to believe it (the means of life and salvation) as we find it (means of life and salvation) there, (in the New Testament), pray tell me what is to become of me and all the balance of us?" The explanation is found in the parentheses which are ours.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. M. H. Bond, of Providence, Rhode Island, reports encouragingly of the work. He says:—

Matters under our immediate eye in Fall River and in the country are favorable to church progress. We are by no means losing ground. I hope to see impediments removed and the progress of the whole church in the next year recorded.

Bro. W. A. Smith writes from Mondamin, Iowa, December 10:—

This leaves me well and my companion better. I am here at Sandy Point, holding meetings. Have been here for three weeks. Yesterday we baptized five of the Mondamin Sunday school. The interest is good; others are near the kingdom.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Geo. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric, is now laboring among the churches in the state of Texas. On the 11th of December he was at Beaver, Texas, and from that point he expected to visit Hearne, Cook's Point, and San Antonio in their order.

"IS TITHING ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION?"

The question of tithing, it seems, is not considered by some to be an essential feature of the gospel; but to my mind it has equal force with any other command of God to his people. After years of study on the subject I believe it is certainly essential to salvation, and shall endeavor to offer proof. That it is essential, seems to me as easily proven as faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, or any other feature of the gospel. And I shall proceed as we do to prove the necessity of water baptism for the remission of sins.

First, in Romans 1: 16, Paul says:—

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation.

In other words, it is God's plan of salvation; and Jesus says, "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." Again, "He that believeth [the gospel] and is baptized, shall be saved." This, then, is surely sufficient to prove that the gospel of Christ is the plan of salvation.

It now remains for me to prove that tithing is a part of the gospel, and then, logically, we must conclude that tithing is essential to salvation. We cannot escape that logic, can we?

We do not need to spend much time to prove that tithing was observed by Israel under the law of Moses. Leviticus 27: 30 substantiates that:—

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's, it is holy unto the Lord.

Couple this with what is recorded in Malachi 3: 8–12, where God is rebuking his people, through Malachi, for robbing him of their tithes. He shows them why they were cursed for withholding their tithes from him, and then goes on to exhort them to bring in their tithes and see if he will not open the windows of heaven and shower down great blessings upon them.

None will refuse to believe that tithing was observed by Israel of old while under the law of Moses. Although we are not under the law of Moses today, shall we say that tithing belongs only to the law of Moses? I think we can hardly say that; for we find that Abraham lived long years before the law of Moses was in force, and we find, in Hebrews 7 that Abraham met Melchisedec, the great high priest, and paid his tithing to him. Why did he observe this law of tithing if it was not a part of the gospel? Paul says, in Galatians 3: 7, 8:—

And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham.

So we see the gospel was preached to Abraham, and he obeyed it; at least he obeyed one principle of it that we know of, and that is, he paid tithing to Melchisedec, and that was long before Moses' time. Who will dispute that? So the tithing question did not originate with the law of Moses, but was a part of the gospel; and as the law of Moses was added to the gospel, till the seed should come, which was Christ, that was why Israel was expected to observe the law of tithing. Baptism was a part of the gospel, and they were baptized by Moses.

Oh, says one, show me from the New Testament where we are to observe it, and I will believe it.

Let us examine the statement in Matthew 23: 23.

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

He evidently did not mean to belittle the idea of paying tithing on small things, — that was not why he reproved them; it may have been because they laid too much stress on the traditions of the elders. He certainly did not intend to ignore the law of tithing, but to me it is evidence of his approval of it. Notice it again: "These things ought ye to have done, and not leave other things undone." Sure enough, it was right and proper that they should pay tithes on the smallest articles. This to me is strong proof of it, and if there was not another word, that is a sermon in itself.

Now, while there is not much said of it in the New Testament, we must remember that many valuable books have been destroyed during the dark ages of apostasy. Who knows but that the law of tithing was more fully written up in those missing books. But is there not sufficient proof in that which we have offered?

Now, if Latter Day Saints had no proof from the New Testament as to whether tithing is essential to salvation, have we not present revelation? Do we not rejoice in the fact that God speaks to us today, and makes plain to us his mind and will in regard to truths pertaining to our salvation? Our heavenly Father has spoken to us on this question of tithing, and that forever settles it beyond a doubt. The revelation is recorded in Doctrine and Covenants, section 64, paragraph 5, and reads as follows:—

Behold, now it is called today (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming).

That is like the statement found in Mark:—

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And he that does not pay his tithing shall be burned, (or damned.) To be burned, means to suffer; to be damned, means to suffer. Is that not the true meaning of that language?

Again, the Lord speaking to us today, says that when we do what God tells us, he is bound; but when we disobey, we have no promise. All God's promises are on conditions. The word if means liable to be changed if we fail on our part. "Man shall not live by bread alone," is as good today as when written. God is unchangeable; his law is unchangeable. The gospel is the perfect law, and if we refuse to observe this part of the perfect law, where is there any promise of celestial glory?

I fancy if we are so dishonest and selfish as to withhold from God what is his, we need not be disappointed if things don't go right. Of course we are permitted to use it, we can use our agency, the law of the land will not interfere with us about it; but we should keep the laws of God because it is right, not because we are afraid of punishment. I would not count a man honest for paying his neighbor because the law of the land forced him; he should pay it because it is right; he should be glad to have the money to do it. An honest man takes pride in paying every cent he owes. It makes him feel happy to pay his debts; and so it is with God's law of tithing, we should pay it because it is right. We should love to pay it. It is an honest debt. God says it is his. Then why withhold it?

Tithing has been a part of the gospel in all ages of the world, and the man who tries to fix it as only belonging to the law of Moses is blind, and short of argument against it. Does it not prove to be a part of the gospel as taught to Abraham long years before Moses was born? Does it not prove to have been taught by Jesus? Does it not prove to have been taught in the restored gospel? Then where is our room for excuse? It reminds me of the statement of Jesus where he says, How hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom. Why? Because where their treasure is there will their heart be also. It tests the rich to part with his gold. The man who has ten thousand, looks at it, admires it, and when he separates the tenth, he fixes his eye on the wrong pile; he looks at the one thousand and dotes over that, and seems to forget that he would still have the nine; and he is tempted to say, Well, God don't expect me to give so much, and flatters himself that he is good other ways, and God will overlook that little affair, and he loses the promise of which Malachi spoke. Bring in your tithes into my storehouse; I will open the windows of heaven, and pour you out such a blessing that there will not be room enough to contain it. But a lack of faith is manifest in so many of us; and after a while a horse dies, we lose a fine cow, the house is burned, or a barn is burned, or some fine situation is lost, or something comes over us that we are made to feel the correcting hand of a loving Father trying to train us that tithing is his holy law; it will pay us to learn obedience, and if we do not do it cheerfully, we must be educated to know God wants us to come up higher, and then we have to learn by suffering. It is just as hard a test on the poor man as on the rich. (I did not mean to infer that all rich men do not pay their tithes; I was just touching the danger.) While the rich have to give of their abundance, see the large amount they have left; the poor man only has a little, and feels the sacrifice just in the same proportion that the rich man does. And is it not a perfect law? Who could improve on it? Well could David say, "The law of the Lord is perfect."

Now, then, have we not proved that tithing is essential to salvation? assuming that we are to observe all things? Another question will follow, How shall it be done? My understanding is this: First value all our property conscientiously before God, just as if we were going to buy it or sell it; then value all stock, implements, articles, household goods, etc.; then count up all debts, mortgages, notes, and bills, balance them up, and pay one tenth of the remainder. As each year comes, keep a record of all increase and produce sold, count our cost of labor and necessary expense to run the farm, then at the end of a year or so balance up, and by this we can get at it. This means work for farmers or business men; but it will make better business men and women. They will know exactly if their business is paying in every department, and it will pay to practice a little of the exactness that was noticeable in the Jews, that Christ approved of, "These ought you to have done," that is tithing even the smallest articles.

The apostle says, "We are laborers together with God." Now let us all see if we are laborers together with God. What are we doing for the work, if we are not paying our tithing? Are we laboring with God? or are we leaving the work for others to do? We are admonished to examine ourselves and see if we are in the faith. Does the Lord not expect us to make equal sacrifice with the officers and missionaries? Does the Lord expect an apostle or a seventy to leave home and loved ones, and stand the cold opposition of an unfriendly world; many a time begrudged their meals; called a lazy set of tramps, and all that; when many a good, faithful, hard-working man is called to do that work, and is supposed to lose his independence, when his natural feelings would be if he could speak his mind,—I have always paid my way, sir, and can, and will; but my office demands me to make the sacrifice, sir; and many an aching heart beats behind the frosted bosom of a white shirt, that is worn not because they are proud, but because they have to be respectably dressed. And are we not expected to share their trials, minister to their wants, and show by our sacrifice that we are laborers together with God and them? We cannot expect to sail through to Paradise

> On flowery beds of ease,
> While others fought to win the prize,
> And sailed through bloody seas.

A consecrated life means untiring zeal and hard work, love and sacrifice; there is no rest for any till life is done. I know a man who has been fifteen years a missionary. He left a fine situation as foreman in a factory, getting a handsome salary. He was commanded by the Lord to go out as a missionary. Had he refused he would have been under the curse mentioned by Paul, where he says, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." And after making this sacrifice of leaving home, family, and a large salary, his family only getting something less than one hundred dollars a year at first, and after fifteen years of sacrifice, abuse, and small pay, some one whispers, Oh, he has a fat time of it! At the same time this same man could command a good salary at most anything he would work at. And I know a man in our town, and a very clever man, too, who, when in conversation with this missionary, said, Well, Elder, one thing convinces me that you are sincere in your religion, and that is your wife gets such small pay; and you are a man if you went into the law business could command one hundred dollars a day.

While missionaries and officers have to make this sacrifiice, are we as members not expected to share their burden? "Bear ye one another's burden, and so fulfill the law of Christ," is quite fitting here; and when we consider that men leave home and large salaries, denying themselves of many of earth's riches and comforts, we, too, must make equal sacrifice in the same proportion other ways if we expect to get the same glory, and be fitted for their company in the sweet by and by. Thus the command of the Master comes as forcibly as ever to Latter Day Saints, to seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish righteousness. To assist in building up this great kingdom of God, none can help unless they are humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity. These are essential features which must characterize every one; and to be full of love means much love for God, love for his work, love for mankind. When I hear some say, I love the work with all my heart, and see that one withhold his tithing, I question whether his love is as great for the work as it should be, for "actions speak louder than words."

We hear some say, How can a man pay tithing when he has nothing to pay tithing with?

I know a wealthy man who made that excuse, and I wondered how he could conscientiously make it before God? He seemed to justify himself simply because all his money was lying in a large farm and stock, with no ready cash in his purse. Now in that case, as in many others, it is not often that we have the ready cash; but surely these are poor excuses. When we have property, or anything worth the money, could we not trust the Lord enough to rely on his promises, that if we pay our tithing he will open the windows of heaven and shower blessings upon us? Could we not borrow money in such extreme cases? Oh, yes, says one, but we would have to pay interest on it.

When we keep it and use it, is it right to cheat the Lord out of the interest? Would it not be worth interest if in the Bishop's box? Well, why try and rob God?

I fancy where there is a "will there is a way." How often is it said, I would if I could. Would this not be better, I could if I would, and I will? I firmly believe that where there is a will there is a way to pay tithing. God helps them who help themselves.

ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE "BURTONITES," OR "TRUE FOLLOWERS."—NO. 2.

BY ELDER C. R. DUNCAN.

Statement of Elder James Kemp, of Conifer, Colorado:—

WRAY, Colo., Aug. 30, 1899.

I became acquainted with John N. Burton in 1865, in Mills county, Iowa. He was then an elder in the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. I knew no more of him except from hearsay, until 1871; during which time I was informed he was excommunicated from the church. In 1871 I was presiding over the Southern Nebraska district. I made a visit to Palmyra, Otoe county, Nebraska, and there met John N. Burton, who had been preaching and baptizing without authority from the church. He had built up a branch near Palmyra. He expressed himself as pleased to see me, and wanted me to recognize him, and the branch he had established, as being a part of the Reorganized Church. This I refused to do, on the ground that he had previously been silenced and expelled from the church. A public discussion between Burton and myself followed, on the question of authority, and I showed that he had no authority, except from the Brighamite church. Several of his members afterward united with the Reorganized Church.

The following from Elder H. A. Stebbins, church recorder, will be of interest in this connection:—

LAMONI, Iowa, Aug. 29, 1899.

BRO. C. R. DUNCAN, Greenleaf, Kansas:—Replying to your inquiry received 28th, will say that the first entry of name of John N. Burton on the church records is as follows, being the report of W. W. Blair to the April conference of 1861, in which he says that on December 20, 1860, he, with Elders E. C. Briggs, B. L. Leland, and others, "Examined the case of Elder John N. Burton, who had been received into the church and ministry, sometime last summer, in an irregular manner. Upon investigation it appeared that he had himself withdrawn his name from the church at the North Star branch, in the fall of 1860. He now demands baptism. We refuse him on the grounds of a want of manifest humility and repentance, and that, while acting in the calling of an elder, he appropriated to his own use moneys received on subscription for the Herald. The amount was, I believe, some three dollars."

Then March 11, 1867, there appears W. W. Blair's memorandum of labor done as follows: "Wrote today a notice to John N. Burton to cease his labors in the ministry, and to appear at the June conference, at Bluff City, and then and there establish his membership and ministry."

Then a report of Union Grove branch, Harrison county, Iowa, to April conference of 1865, shows John N. Burton born 6th February, 1817, Geauga county, Ohio; baptized 30th of June, 1863, by Elder Jonathan Haywood, and ordained an elder by Joseph Smith. A later minute says that he was ordained the 8th of October, 1863, by J. Smith and W. W. Blair.

Next comes minutes of Galland's Grove conference of September 4, 1870, which says that J. N. Burton was then silenced. Last comes an entry by Isaac Sheen, church recorder, on record of the Morning Star, Iowa, record, that J. N. Burton was expelled, but date is not given. With it I have a minute of my receiving from Bro. Phineas Cadwell, on January 11, 1887, a statement that Burton was expelled, at sometime. Have never been able to obtain the date. As Bro. Sheen died the 4th of April, 1874, it was done sometime prior to his death. . . .

But the above is all I have ever gained about it. Much has been said of Burton, and inquiry had, but the records in those times were poorly kept, both in branches and on the general record; many details never entered. I hope this may be of some use to you. . . . Your brother in Christ,

H. A. STEBBINS

Statement of Mrs. Martha E. Tate:—

PERKINS, Oklahoma, February 7, 1899.

While living in Pottawattamie county, Iowa, in 1867, I met John N. Burton, who claimed to be a Latter Day Saint elder. He preached several sermons in the village of Wilberville. He was also a phrenologist. We learned afterward, that prior to his visit there, he had been expelled from the Latter Day Saints' Church, for immoral conduct.

Statement of Sarah C. Swank:—

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 25, 1899

I moved to Otoe county, Nebraska, in 1870, in company with my husband, Samuel Swank. I was well acquainted with John N. Burton, Elias Brewer, and David T. McDonald, and have heard them preach. I think that McDonald was baptized the year that we moved there. I am sure that Burton baptized him. Elias Brewer and several others had been baptized before we moved there. Burton ordained Brewer as an elder, and after that Brewer did much of the baptizing, as Burton was lame. I was baptized by Elias Brewer, with five or six others. We went from the water to McDonald's house, and changed our clothing. McDonald was ordained a priest, by Burton and Brewer; but I don't know of his being ordained an elder. Burton and McDonald had some strife as to who should be leader; Elias Brewer rather acting as peacemaker between them. I know that Burton taught the doctrine of "free love," and that Brewer and McDonald taught the same.

Statement of Cora J. Day:—

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 25, 1899.

I am the oldest daughter of Mrs. Sarah C. Swank. I was about nine or ten years old when we moved into Otoe county, Nebraska. I remember of hearing Burton, Brewer, and McDonald preach. I remember the ordination of McDonald to the office of priest, by Burton and Brewer. He was ordained by the laying on of hands, and as a child I was very much impressed by the sight of the ordination, as it was the first time I ever witnessed such an event. I distinctly remember that Burton was spokesman in the ordination. He was ordained at the house of James Lockwood, who lived about one mile from us. I well remember of hearing the doctrine of "free love" talked privately among the members, as having come from Burton.

From the foregoing statements we learn several important facts:—

1. McDonald was a member of the "Burtonites" in Nebraska.

2. He was baptized either by Burton or Brewer, the evidence not being quite clear which did the work, Brewer himself having forgotten.

3. So far as McDonald's authority is concerned, or the validity of his baptism, it would make no difference which one of the two did the work, as Burton baptized Brewer, and it would all hinge on the question of Burton's authority.

4. Burton was silenced, if not excommunicated, before baptizing either Brewer or McDonald, hence had no authority to act.

5. Burton's conduct was bad, as can be plainly seen by the very strong testimony in the various statements above presented.

6. The ordination of McDonald to the office of priest was of no more value than his baptism.

7. On the strength of this ordination he proceeded to build up the Follower church, for he never received ordination from any other source.

8. In the light of these facts, who is prepared to believe what the Followers have the audacity to claim; viz., "Our church started with Christ and the apostles?"

I now submit the statement of Thomas N. Berry, of Clayton, Oklahoma, who was connected with the Followers for some time, and who had an excellent opportunity to see the practical workings of the institution:—

CLAYTON, Oklahoma, Jan. 28, 1899.

I was connected with the True Followers about three years, but am not at present. My understanding is that a man by the name of Burton baptized McDonald, and that Burton was previously a Latter Day Saint elder. I have frequently attended the meetings of the True Followers. I have heard the gifts manifested among them, in particular the gift of tongues. The meetings often resulted in confusion where the gifts were manifested. Some would accept the gift as being genuine, and others would reject it. This would, at times, be followed by other tongues, denouncing the first. Very few instances have occurred where gifts gave general satisfaction and were accepted by all. When speaking in tongues, the features were often distorted, and drawn out of natural shape. The tongues are often manifested while the elder is delivering a sermon, by some one jumping up and speaking in tongues, regardless of the fact that the elder is preaching. From July 2 to 4, 1893 (if I am not mistaken in the date), I attended a meeting of the True Followers, at the house of Monroe Testament, eight miles southeast of Stillwater, Oklahoma. A number of persons were present from a distance. During the meeting, Thomas Parashaw and others administered to a sick child. During the administration Parashaw gave a revelation, demanding of the mother of the child that she make certain confessions, publicly, or the child would die. The sister followed with the confession that she had been guilty of adultery. This caused excitement and confusion in the camp, being perceptibly noticed in the meeting that followed. Children were seized with spasms, or fits, of a curious nature, and even older persons were not void of the influence. The afflicted ones were frequently administered to. Some persons spoke in tongues to those under this influence, declaring it to be the power of God, while others gave revelations declaring it to be of Satan, rebuking the evil spirits. During the meeting, Monroe Testament was preaching, when he was interrupted by a brother speaking in tongues, to three of the leading brethren. Interpretations followed, which charged that the revelations of certain of them were "false as hell."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Revelations and interpretations were given rapidly, and in confusion, one of the preachers giving force to his revelations by leaping like a frog. A number of short speeches followed, from various persons present, in which a wide difference of opinion was expressed as to the source of the power present, and the meeting adjourned in confusion, leaving the participants in great perplexity of mind.

THEY "MASH" THE DEVIL OUT OF SAM MUNDELL.

Statement of S. A. Mundell:—

CLAYTON, Oklahoma, Jan. 28, 1899.

I have been connected with the society known as the "True Followers of Christ," but am not at present. The general understanding in the brotherhood is that a man named Burton baptized McDonald, and that Burton had formerly been a Latter Day Saint.

During my connection with the True Followers I attended a meeting at the house of a brother Rogers. Upon entering the room my attention was attracted to a young man by the name of Nation, who seemed to be under an influence that caused him to shake like he was having a chill. In a few moments he arose, and placing his hand on the shoulder of a brother Dick Toles, said, "Do your duty," when the brother so addressed arose and spoke in tongues. Nation immediately followed him, speaking in tongues. They each spoke in tongues several times, when a Brother Frank Huddleston arose, who seemed to doubt the divinity of the gifts, and proceeded to demonstrate that he could speak like the others, yet he said that he had no gift. Nation reproved Huddleston for this, saying, "God is not mocked," when Huddleston replied, "No, but I can mock you."

During the time that these persons were under the influence that caused them to speak in tongues, their features were distorted, and their faces were drawn into an unnatural shape, causing them to present a wild and frightful appearance.

Upon another occasion, while I was associated with some of the Follower brethren, they became convinced that I was possessed of the Devil. After a vain attempt to cast him out in the orthodox manner, one of the large and burly brethren, of about two hundred pounds avoidupois, jumped upon my chest with his knees, saying, "The Scripture says we shall cast out devils," and he proceeded to mash the Devil out of me in a very effectual manner. Although five years have passed away since this experience, the effect of this mashing is still very perceptibly felt in my chest.

THE HOLY KISS.

Greeting one another with a holy kiss has certainly been carried to a great extreme among the Followers, if the testimony of observers and participants may be relied upon. Favoritism is charged in some cases, but is probably not general, while the holy hug has been practiced quite freely as a necessary appendage to the advice of St. Paul, to "greet one another with a holy kiss." At the close of the meeting a circle is formed, when some member starts around the circle, holy hugging and kissing each person in the circle. The next person to him starts and makes the same round, until each person in the circle has made the trip around the circle, kissing and being kissed, hugging and being hugged, and in turn has been visited by each person in the circle. By the use of a few figures we can soon see the great extremes to which this practice has been carried. For example, if 25 persons are in the circle, each person kisses 24 others, and in turn is kissed by 24 others, making 48 osculations to each person, or 1,200 for one small congregation of 25 persons. Verily this out-Hobsons the hero of the Merrimac.

One of the most disgraceful things I have found among the Followers, and, in fact, the only thing seriously reflecting on good morals, is their exegesis of Paul's statement in 1 Corinthians 7:36, by which they grant privileges to young people, who are engaged to be married, that would evidently make the celebrated bachelor apostle blush, to say the least. I learn, upon good authority, that this teaching has had a very degrading influence upon some of the young people among the Followers.

"AND THEY SHALL TAKE UP SERPENTS."

A very foolish and dangerous practice obtains among the Followers, by reason of a wrong understanding of Mark 16:18, "They shall take up serpents." This they look upon as a command, instead of a promise, and no person among them is accredited with genuine faith until they have demonstrated their ability to handle all kinds of dangerous reptiles. I am informed that some of them have been bitten while indulging in this practice, and that death has resulted in some cases.

Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you.—Luke 10:19.

Are we to understand by this that the disciples could intentionally put themselves in danger of being bitten by poisonous reptiles, by "taking them up," or "treading on them," and receive protection? If so, how about the latter part of the quotation?

And nothing shall by any means hurt you.

By putting the same interpretation upon this part of the passage, one might as consistently place himself in front of a locomotive, and claim God's protection. Our faith should be seasoned with a small grain of common sense. Did the apostles ever go about handling snakes on the strength of this promise? If they did not, it is good evidence that they placed no such construction upon this statement of Jesus. We read that Paul was accidentally bitten upon one occasion, "and he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm" (Acts 28:5). To be able to handle snakes does not prove that a man is a servant of God. It only proves that the performer is capable of traveling with a circus, at a good salary.

Literature of any character, except the Bible, is decidedly below par with the True Followers. They have no church paper; and books or tracts in defense of their position is a thing unknown. The printing press is regarded as being of the Devil, notwithstanding the fact that a printed Bible is their standard of evidence. Revelations by the thousand are annually given to them, but not one of them ever found its way into print. Had the ancient revelators and prophets held the same views that are now entertained by the True Followers, and had not written their prophecies and revelations for the benefit of others, we would not now have a Bible at all. The world will probably not be any great loser, however, if the Followers still persist in their present course and refuse to publish their revelations.

They lay great stress on the statement of Paul, that "not many wise men are called." That "Peter and John were unlearned and ignorant men." They boast of their lack of education and worldly wisdom. Mr. T. B. Mallerney, of Stillwater, Oklahoma, very fittingly remarks, "If the Lord was after unlearned and ignorant men, he was certainly well acquainted with the Followers in my neighborhood."

They glory in long hair, uncut beard, and a greasy coat collar, which seems to be a kind of "uniform" among them. Medicine is absolutely refused, under all circumstances and in all ailments. From a broken bone to the toothache, or from a bad cold to the seven-year itch, nature's remedies are ignored, and the "prayer of faith," only, is employed.

As to their numerical strength, I have been unable to gather accurate information. As an estimate, they probably number somewhere about three or four hundred. Their membership is mostly in eastern and southern Kansas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma. They are probably most numerous and active in Oklahoma. In organization they are sadly deficient. No one speaks with authority among them. Every man is a law unto himself. There is no tribunal before which a transgressor can be called to answer for his guilt. All they can do is to denounce him, and as this denouncing is a two handed game, they employ much of their leisure time in denouncing one another. It can be seen at a glance that they do not possess the elements of unity among them. Many persons join them, and continue for a time, and then leave them in disgust. The logical conclusion is that they can never accomplish much. Their successes are only spasmodic.

I have sought to state facts as I have been able to gather them by observation and by interviews with responsible persons. My object has been to let the world know the "true" origin of the Followers, and to let them stand in their "true" light before all men, then they can the more consistently claim to be "True Followers."

THE SPREAD OF THE GOSPEL.

Those who have by reason of their obedience to the system of eternal and salvational truths received the gift of the Holy Ghost, have almost invariably received with it, as a coherent part, the desire that others might receive like information. And in pursuance of this desire, many an earnest heart has yearned to know which were the best methods to pursue to acquaint others with these truths, and many suggestions and ways have been advanced and adopted suitable to the place in which the people lived and agreeable to national customs. The Ottoman's system of promulgation among the southern tribes differs from that of most protestant Christians, in that they, like the Jesuits (prior to the age of printing), seek to become conversationalists. Our chief desire is to acquire oratorical powers, as a means of attraction. To this may be added sensationalism, as a favorite method with some, and which is used with apparent satisfactory results by many denominations in our country.

Our observations have been, as a people, that if we can obtain the attention of the masses, that good will result to them and the cause of Christ. And in our anxiety to publish glad tidings we never take a round about road, in order to avoid a debate with some Goliath of sectarianism, though they may flatter their congregations, like Dr. Ray, of St. Louis, did while in discussion with Bro. E. L. Kelley, at Pleasanthill, Missouri, "That his discussions always resulted in good to his congregations, and many times there were fifty or more added to their number during or shortly after his discussions." We are willing to abide results, and feel thankful for like opportunities.

It is not the writer's intention to advocate a system that will provoke discussion, as in discussion it is impossible to obtain the undivided attention of the people. We prefer other means. Agreeable to this the fruitful mind of some one suggested that if we employ tents, more people would visit there than what would in a church, should one be secured. This has been proven to be a fact, and the tent has come to stay, irrespective of the many early objectors.

Should it be possible that the writer could advance an idea that would prove in its own field as great a power for good as the tent has proven in the past, he would not say, I will count it as pay; but he would feel to extend an invitation to Israel, to come and let us rejoice together.

The method suggested to me by the many demands for the printed word is that each tent be equipped with a small hand press and type. They are advertised from fifty to seventy-five dollars, and the elders would soon be able to manipulate this little giant for good and send their "Gospel Tent News" through the town, and many who will not come to hear will satisfy their curiosity by reading. On those presses a sheet sufficiently large can be printed to give an outline of the previous night's discourse. The people can be invited to ask questions through its columns. An active management can put it to many uses, such as could not be thought of beforehand, and we would become independent of that boon for which we seek so much,—that is, to receive a notice in the press. It would serve to advertise the services.

Upon us rests the burden of bringing the world to light and understanding, and what means can we use to accomplish this, by the most speedy and economic manner. Then comes the question to my mind, is there any agent more powerful at the command of man than the press?

But this is not without its dark side. While the foregoing may be true, and such a plan desirable, it becomes a query how such liberality can be maintained? To this we may answer in a blunt way, that man was not born with a plaster on his mouth, and this being so of old, the Lord said, Ask and ye shall receive.

It surely is an imprudent condition to be in, to simply have our "hearts in our hand" and our mouths in our pockets, as modesty seemingly dictates to some. I have observed that people were willing to give, if only mention would have been made. So my answer to the question, How can it be maintained? is, Ask of them in whose behalf the effort is made!

PECULIAR.

"PATTING ON THE SHOULDER."

While the writer does not impugn the motives of any, yet there are many times when he seriously doubts the wisdom of those who do this "patting." He believes that more injury comes therefrom than good to the individual upon whom it is bestowed. There should be a deeper and purer motive that actuates to duty than the love of praise. One should be taught to act from principle, that doing right from proper motives will develop and perfect a quality of character that cannot otherwise be possessed, thereby fitting himself for a degree of usefulness and ultimate glory that he could not otherwise attain to.

I believe this to be the true basis of the Christian's reward. While if one is actuated by a love of praise from his fellowman, the natural result will be an envious and jealous disposition. Approbativeness is selfish in its character—wants all the patting upon the same shoulder. Although to start out with, one is sometimes willing to pat others in order to get patted in return. But should this patting not be paid back, such a one will almost wish that he had "hanged a millstone about his neck and jumped into the sea."

And to keep those who act from love of praise in the line of duty, it will be necessary that it be regularly administered, as that is his incentive; and should circumstances place such an one for a very long time in society that does not respect the cause that he is representing, he may falter and possibly apostatize.

It is true that every conscientious person is pleased to know that his efforts for good are appreciated by all good and right loving persons, and such follows as a natural result and should not be specially sought for.

Again, in some cases praise is calculated to make of one a kind of mental expansionist, and cause him to be content with his present intellectual status—thinking that no other one will hardly reach that realm that he alone so pleasantly occupies.

Sometimes we have noticed in the Herald what we thought to be a very extravagant use of this "precious ointment," by both older and younger elders, in which some poor shoulders caught it in good shape. As instanced in, "Bro. —— is very able," etc. Now somebody ought to be benefited by this lavish use of the precious ointment, and inasmuch as neither the giver nor receiver is benefited in this instance, let us see if it is possible for the reader to get any benefit therefrom. The word able is indefinite—having a peculiar meaning to each individual. Therefore, it will be necessary for the reader, in some way or other, to ascertain what degree of ability the one who so uses the word possess, that he may use him as a kind of criterion to judge the other fellow by.

At other times we see resolutions of praise spread out in the columns of the Herald for individuals who have only done their duty. Is it wisdom? Would it not be better for the young elder to enter the public arena and be received upon his merits; than to take chances on having a too high preëstimate placed upon his ability, and a consequent fall in the public estimate? In the first case, he would work among the people with their increased confidence, while in the latter, his usefulness would be greatly forestalled.

Now, in conclusion, let me say, that I am persuaded that every good Saint is disposed to encourage in the proper way those that stand in need.

THAT EDITORIAL.

Hold on there, Mr. Editor; we have not baptized our pen in ink for a forensic contest with you, but rather your editorial, "money raising," is the foundation of the inspiration or text for this paper.

Since my appointment as a trustee of Graceland College, we have sought to be diligent in presenting for the benefit and success of the college the essential paramount issue—the necessity of financial aid; and I trust that all will fully understand the situation, and put into practice the principle that "a friend in need is a friend indeed." It is our intention to give the friends of Graceland (and who among the household of the faithful would not be a friend to this church institution) an ample opportunity to fulfill their duty in sustaining the creature of your own appointment.

For the wiping out of the debt on the college the last General Conference adopted a resolution authorizing the presiding Bishop to formulate and send out a subscription list asking for one thousand twenty-five dollar subscribers. Since the adoption of that measure we have made it our business as best we could to advocate the official action of the conference and urge upon all the importance of a united effort to accomplish the object of the General Conference resolution. My opinion is that we had better as a church in this matter adopt the "Reed rule," and all be counted with the majority to accomplish the intended purpose of the voice and will of the body, and thus advertise to the world that our profession of being friends to education is not an empty assertion; for a profession of that nature without material evidence, would be as hurtful to our cause, as an open opposition and warfare against education.

Now is a most opportune time for this church to prove by their works that they are especially the friends of this particularly grand and praiseworthy work of the church in behalf of education in the advanced or higher departments, and that under the fostering care of our own faith and people.

Suggestively permit me to say that notwithstanding the clause of qualification in the conference resolution, that the subscriptions are not due until the one thousand subscribers are all obtained, or the $25,000 pledged, thus signifying their willingness to lift the indebtedness, that if those subscribing twenty-five dollars, more or less, would immediately send in to Bishop Kelley the full amount of their promise, it would save money to the church, for the bishop could apply the money sent in upon the debts, and thus stop interest upon the amount of debt paid, and surely all those who signified their willingness to help by signing the subscription list, did so in good faith, and with full expectation to meet their obligation, for it could not be compatible with our saintship to dishonor our promise to the church, and become covenant breakers. I cannot see that there would be a violation upon the part of the subscribers to thus promptly pay up, and send in their moneys in advance of obtaining the full amount asked for.

In seeking to raise means for the running expenses of the college, we have figured thusly (and O how easy it is to pay debt, by figuring upon paper): The membership of the church in round numbers being about fifty thousand, and estimate five to the family, we would have ten thousand families. We have not forgotten what the Master said about the virgins, five wise, and five foolish; so, with a degree of reluctancy, respect, and kind consideration, because of youthfulness, old age, and indigency, we feel under the necessity of dividing our ten thousand families by two, one half incapacitated by unavoidable circumstances, and the other half we shall consider as wise families, and with their means are in harmony with the word of inspiration which sayeth unto one and all of the church membership, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—D. C. 119: 8. Now, if two thousand of those wise families would each contribute $12 50, they could pay off the entire college debt, and surely this church has two thousand families who could amply afford, and that without distressing themselves, to pay for this laudable purpose the sum of $12.50 over and above their other church obligations, and how much better the whole church would feel with this load removed.

But some one inquires about the other three thousand wise families? O yes! we have ample opportunity for them to work with God in accomplishing good. There is a place or niche that all may fill. For the time being Graceland, like all infant institutions of learning, does not receive a sufficient patronage to meet the running expense, so there is no other alternative for us, only to depend upon, and appeal to, the Saints and friends of education for donations to make up the deficit between scholarship receipts and the running expense.

If the three thousand wise families, who are certainly the Lord's helpers in the angel-restored gospel dispensation and work, would each remit on receipt of this communication, a dollar, more or less, we would have a sufficient amount to meet the running expenses, and a trifle over for needed improvement and for the purchase of supplies to make our college more attractive as an institution in which to gain a useful education.

Will the Bishop in the near future receive the thousands of dollars subscribed?

And shall we soon receive remittance from the three thousand wise families, who are the work-fellows with God in this great cause?

A very necessary sinew of our warfare is finance, and let none excuse himself upon the pretext that his more wealthy or better fixed brother will meet and pay off all demands; for, rest assured if that better fixed brother pays all, he will receive all the reward. Do what you are able and then are you justified and your reward is sure, and no man can deprive you of the crown and the palm, if you honestly and faithfully do what you can. On duty,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

DUNSEITH, N. Dakota, Dec. 6.

Editors Herald:—Nearly seven months have passed since I arrived on the great, open prairies of Dakota to engage in missionary work. To one accustomed to an older settled country with its beautiful green hills and valleys, it seemed at first very lonely out on these great, broad prairies, where one can look a great distance and see only a few small houses, and seldom a stream or bush. At first I wondered how I should be able to get a congregation even as large as Noah's. But I made up my mind not to be faint-hearted, and started forth, traveling from village to village and from house to house, seeking to find those who were "of Israel," or those who might be interested in the same.

I first visited Bro. and Sr. Delap, a lone family of Saints at White. Though isolated, I found them full of cheer and the spirit of the latter-day work. A few days were cheerfully spent at their home. Then I visited Bro. Stone's folks, at Arlington. From thence I went to Lake and Miner counties, where I found a number of Saints and did some preaching.

While there I met Bro. S. K. Sorensen, who seemed full of zeal and hope, which I was glad to see; for I had begun to think that one who would remain long in missionary work, in the Dakotas needed a full supply.

After finishing my stay there, I visited Hecla, Manango, Kidder, and other places, preaching one and two sermons on Sunday, and now and again a few sermons in the week, as opportunity offered. About the middle of August, I visited Clifford, and as the very busy time of harvesting and thrashing had begun, and I could not do much in the way of holding meetings during the week, I spent some time working at harvesting and thrashing, and preaching Sundays as opportunity offered. Later I came to the Turtle Mountains, where I found Bro. G. W. Thorburn, who had been sort of an isolated missionary here in the timber and hills for several months, like the Master of old, in the hills of Judea, looking after the lost sheep of Israel. Bro. George is a pleasant companion in missionary work. There seems to be a good interest here in the mountains, and opportunity for a good work to be done. Bro. Thorburn and I have visited a number of places the past few weeks, and have done some preaching, which we hope has not been in vain. One finds a number of very kind, sociable people in some places here, and if one had opportunity to preach the gospel to them he might do a good work.

While Dakota may have her hardships in missionary work, as compared with other places, yet she has some advantages. Priestcraft does not exercise the power here it does in some other fields, and the people as a rule are a more humble class. I hope the day may soon come when the Lord will open up the way to reach the people of these great prairies, and many be brought into the Master's fold.

Many hamlets and towns are now springing up, and now if ever is the time to try to plant the gospel among them. Though the way may seem hard, it may never be any easier.

As a soldier for Christ, I hope to be among those who shall have fought valiantly in the great conflict with the world and Satan, just prior to the Lord's coming.

Also praying and seeking for the welfare of the Israel of God, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

LEONARD HOUGHTON.

SAC CITY, Iowa, Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—For several weeks I have been doing missionary work in Sac county, of which this city is the capital. I meet with new work and new experiences every month. For the past week I have been acting as moderator for Bro. C. J. Hunt, who is conducting a public debate in this place with Elder W. L. Crowe, of the Church of God (called Restitutionists by some). Seven sessions have been held, and we are only half done. The faith of our church is on trial first, then follows their affirmation that man is wholly mortal and unconscious in death. The hall is well filled every night, while the interest is intense. This public discussion is the first of the kind for Bro. Hunt, but he is careful, quick, emphatic, and in all cheerful. We are making friends to the cause of truth, and are happy, and confident in the conflict.

Faithfully yours,

R. WIGHT.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday was the coldest day of the winter so far; twelve degrees below zero,—a change of about fifty degrees in twenty-fours. Rather sudden for this country, as it is not subject to such extreme changes. Although so cold, we had the pleasure of burying a fair sister in the cold waters of Long Lake. To say that it takes nerve and grit for such an act, is to speak within the bounds of truth at least. The sister baptized, Eliza M. Landquist, was born in Denmark; is now a widow and a professional nurse. She is a good musician, and will be quite an aid here when the branch is able to secure an organ. This makes eight baptized in the city since we began tent work last May—and more to follow.

It is hard work to raise up a branch in a large city; but a wise, persistent effort will accomplish it in time. One thing that retards the work, and one that is hard to overcome, is the bad living of some of the members of the church. Sometimes one family can do more to hinder the work than six men can do to build it up. I believe this to be the general belief and experience of the ministry. one cannot preach as many sermons in the city as in the country when traveling from place to place; and besides, it takes longer to get acquainted with the people. There is so much to attract in a large city, that unless you have something sensational they will pass you by. Music and good singing will call a crowd together most any time on the street and especially at night.

I have wished many times this year that I had Bro. A. M. Chase and his little organ to play and sing upon the street, so that I could touch up the men from Utah that are doing work here. I hear that they have about forty members in the city. Most of them are young people, and girls at that. Sometimes they have as high as seventeen young preachers here at once; and if each one takes a girl, of course that makes a fair congregation for them. They only hold public services Sunday nights; and as I am always busy then I have not been able to attend any of their meetings. But I intend to so arrange for Sunday night that I can go and see for myself.

The work is onward in this mission, and we feel hopeful for the future.

In gospel bonds,

E. A. STEDMAN.

March 6, 1897.

Dear Parents:—Your welcome letter to hand and duly read. Was pleased to hear from you, but sorry to learn you were not well. I have been quite well since I saw you last, until last Friday. I took cold, having to drive so far to and from meetings; have been driving from fourteen to eighteen miles nearly every night for the last two weeks. Have opened up in two new fields, one at Houghton Center, and the other at Vienna. There is quite an excitement at the last named place. By the assistance of Bro. Isaac Pearson, we rented the Catholic church here, and it is well filled every night, and God is blessing me in setting forth his glorious work. They tell me people are found in groups on the street corners, and in public buildings, discussing the work, of course, as in the times of the Savior, some are for us, and others rage and fight against us; and David has it, "the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing." But we are not at all afraid, for we are confident we have the truth, and truth will shine where error will sink to rise no more. We have challenged the so-called reverend divines to come and prove wherein we are wrong. One came, but refused to find aught against what we preached, and has not made his appearance since.

Now, dear parents, you know what amount of education I received, having never been more than two years in school in my life, if it was all put together. Now, first stop and ask yourself, from whence cometh this power by which we preach? Seeing the reverend divines are all afraid to meet us, does this not prove God is with us, and we have his divine truth? Paul said he did not preach by the wisdom of man, but by the power of God; when he preached by the wisdom of man, man stood by him; but as soon as he began to preach by the power of God, then the people all, or nearly all, turned against him. He was whipped, bound, and put in prison; scoffed and scorned at, and what had he done to receive this ill-treatment? Just because the Spirit of God, Paul tells us, is sharper than a two-edged sword, which reproved the Rabbis of their false teaching, and of course that made them mad; then they went to kill him, as they did his Master. And that is the real cause why we are slandered and spoken evil of, because we are in possession of that same Spirit with which Paul and the unlearned fishermen were possessed, and which reproved the people of their false doctrines.

Dear parents, my faith grows stronger as I advance in years and become more acquainted with God and his work. Although we see many faults with some in the church, yet that does not make the work false. If that were a criterion to go by, then what about the church our blessed Savior established? There were many unruly and disobedient ones in his church. (See Acts 20: 30, also 5: 1–8; compare 2 Corinthians second chapter with 1 Corinthians 5 and 6, also 3: 1–3; Revelation 2: 14–20; 3: 2.)

Please, father, read these passages, then compare the evil works of the former day saints with those of the Latter Day Saints, and if you can find such works within the Church of Christ of latter days, it is more than I have ever found. So we ought not to condemn the church on account of the evils of those in the church. Satan has always tried to destroy the church, by working with and through some of the members. See Job 2, where he met with God's people; and Peter says, "Judgment must begin at the house of God;" and says if judgment begins there, what shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel? (Peter 4: 17.)

Now, dear father, Jesus says, Except a man is born of the water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into his kingdom. Do you believe this statement? Is is true or false? If true, you must be baptized, or born of the water.

"To be born or born again—is to be regenerated, and renewed to receive spiritual life." —John 3.—Webster's Dictionary.

"We are buried with him [Christ] in baptism."—John Wesley.

Bury—To deposit persons in the grave; to cover up; to overwhelm; to commit to water; to deposit in the ocean as dead bodies buried in the deep; to place one thing within another.—Webster's Dictionary.

Now, you are well aware that there is a law, ordained by the great Creator, whereby the natural birth is brought about; and if that law never was obeyed, there would not be a natural birth, then the earth could not fill the measure of her creation, for there would be no natural life. As there is natural law to produce natural life, so there is spiritual law to produce spiritual life. And now suppose the spiritual law which produces spiritual life will not be obeyed, how can there be a spiritual birth? Jesus says, That which is born of flesh is flesh. Now he speaks of the natural law by which we are born into the world; then he goes on and says, "That which is born of Spirit is spirit." Here he speaks of the spiritual law by which we are born into his spiritual kingdom. These laws resemble each other so closely we cannot see how some people cannot understand that this means a birth of the water. (1 John 5: 5–8.) The apostle says, There are three which bare record in heaven: the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and there are three that bare witness upon the earth: the spirit, the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one. Nicodemus marveled when Jesus told him he must be born again (John 3: 5), for he well knew that meant to come forth, and asked, could he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born again.

Did you or anyone else see a natural birth without water and blood? Tertullian says (chap. 1: 7), We, after the example of Jesus Christ, are born in water. The act of baptism itself is carnal, in that we are plunged in water; but the effect is spiritual, in that we are freed from sin. How do we become free from sin? Is it not by complying with the spiritual law? Jesus says, If ye love me, keep my commandments. Baptism is one of his commandments; and as we come forth from the watery grave, the blood of Christ meets us in the act of obedience to the commandments of him, and our sins are obliterated or washed away. (See Acts 22: 16.) Ananias said to Paul, Why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins. Then we come forth by water and blood; then our bodies are cleansed and made fit for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, which is given by another law devised by the Creator, obtained by the laying on of hands. (Acts 8: 17; 9: 17; 19: 6; 1 Tim. 4: 14; 2 Tim. 1: 6; Heb. 6: 2; Deut. 34: 9) Here we find Joshua was filled by the Spirit, which was given through the laying on of Moses' hands.

Now, dear father, all those laws were ordained by the great Creator for our good, and he has warned us that we cannot enter into his kingdom unless we comply with them; and he has made them so plain, that we have no one but ourselves to blame if we are shut out of the kingdom.

You spoke of us being close communionists. Yes, we are. Can you or any one else produce one proof wherever Jesus administered the sacrament to any one outside of the church? Can one evidence be produced that his apostles did? Read 1 Corinthians 11: 27: "Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself."

Now, dear father, examine yourself. Jesus says, if we love him, we will keep his commandments. Now there is one commandment you have not obeyed, that is, you have not been born of the water. Besides, Paul says, in verse 29 of the above chapter, that if we eat unworthily, we eat and drink damnation to our own souls, not discerning the Lord's body. Now what does Paul mean by not discerning the Lord's body? I do not believe he means transubstantiation, that is, converting bread and wine into the literal body and blood of Christ, as our Roman Catholic friends believe; but the body or church of Christ. Paul tells us, by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body; then he goes on and shows that that body is the church, and that church has apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers; gifts of healings, tongues, and revelations. (1 Cor. 12: 12, 27; Eph. 2: 16, 20; read also Eph. 4.)

Now, as you do not surely discern that this church is the real body or church of Christ (if you did, I am sure you would enter in), as I know you love God and desire to keep his commandments, and as we believe and know that this is the true church or body of Christ, Hampshire, or any other God-fearing man would not want you or anyone else to eat and drink condemnation to your souls.

By this, you will see our position, and that we would not dare to administer the sacrament to anyone outside of the church. Some go so far as to say all churches combined, or taken as a whole, constitute the body or church of Christ. I might ask, as Paul once did, Is Christ divided? Is God the author of confusion? No; but the author of peace in all churches of the saints. Again, he says, "I would to God that ye all speak the same thing, and be of the same mind, and that there be no divisions among you" (1 Cor. 1); and "By one spirit are we all baptized into one body," and now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular; and God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after miracles, then gifts of healing.

Read Ecclesiastes 3: 14: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it that man should fear before him." Did not God set those officers in this church in the days of Christ? Where does it say they should be dispensed with? You see they were put there for two purposes; first that God's work could be carried on successfully. Read Ephesians 4. Here Paul states they were for the work of the ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ. Then we learn there were apostles, prophets, pastors, and teachers in the body of Christ, or the church. If there were those officers in the body of Christ, the church, in the days of Christ, and as that which God does once he doeth for ever, could the body, or church, exist today without those officers, or would he require officers in his church in the early days to carry on his work, and not now? and change not? In the second place, he said that what he did once he did it for ever. Then if he once found it necessary to have those officers to carry on his work, and in a later period found they could be dispensed with, then he could not carry out this statement, for he would be doing something differently to that that he had once done, and this he could not do, as it would prove he was not an all-wise God, and would be giving infidelity a chance to make good its claims. In the second place, God says he did this that man might fear before him. Why fear? Paul says, He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh condemnation to his soul. See how particular God was in the days of Moses, and Moses was in the church of God. Stephen says he was, Acts 7: 38. This is he that was in the church in the wilderness, with the angel which spake to him in Mount Zion. Read Exodus 12: 43, 45: "And the Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, This is the ordinance of the passover: there shall no stranger eat thereof. . . . A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof." See Paul's letter to the Ephesians, second chapter, verses 16 to 22 inclusive: "And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby; and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." It seems to me that Paul here argues that all that are not adopted into the true church of Christ, and that church has apostles and prophets, and which has baptism as its mode of adoption, are strangers and foreigners, and according to God's own words to his servant Moses, have no right to the Lord's supper, for certainly the passover is a type of the Lord's supper. (See 1 Cor. 11: 23.) Christ broke the bread and blessed the wine, and divided it among his followers. This was just previous to his deliverance from the scoffs and scorn of the enemy, and from his mortal body unto an immortal or glorified body. So the last supper in Egypt signified their deliverance from bondage and the cruel mockery and jeers of the Egyptians. Their passover was a lamb without blemish, typifying Christ, the Lamb of God, without sin, that was to be slain for us. This last supper in Egypt was celebrated among the Israelites only; no stranger or foreigner could partake of it, and we see Christ following out the same example, for none but his disciples or followers were allowed to be at his last supper. In this we see a close resemblance between the last supper in Egypt and the last supper of Christ in person with his followers. Paul says they are not all Israel that claim to be Israel; he says by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body or church (1 Cor. 12: 13); and, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, . . . for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—Gal. 3: 27, 28.

Therefore, we become Israel by adoption. Paul speaks of the grafting of the wild branches into the true olive tree, typifying the adoption into the true church of God; for we are all aliens and must be grafted, or adopted into the family of Israel before we can have any claim to the blessings of Israel.

Now, father, I will drop this part of the subject, hoping there has been nothing said that will cause offense, for I assure you I have written this with a pure motive.

You spoke of your philanthropy. Yes, dear father, you have certainly fulfilled that part of God's divine law; and he will not forget your kind works unto fellow men and women, and will richly reward you for the same. See Jesus' own words in Matthew 25: 35–46, where he says, "I was a hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." But you see, father, this will be when all nations are to be gathered before him; when he shall sit upon the throne of his glory, which will be after the thousand years' reign upon earth with his people; and my desire is to see you receive a part in the first resurrection, and live and reign a thousand years with Christ. See Revelation 20: Blessed and holy are they that have part in the first resurrection; for they will live and reign with Christ a thousand years, but the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired; then they will come forth, and the books will be opened, and judgment set, and all will receive their reward for their good works unto the children of men.

This is called the terrestrial glory, which is the glory of the moon. See 1 Corinthians 15, where it says: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another of the stars." It seems to me, by Paul's statement here, that there will be those that will do more than others for the welfare of their fellow men, and of course, they will receive a greater reward at the great and last resurrection, although they do not obey all the gospel of Christ; they will receive the glory they have prepared themselves for. As one star differs from another in glory, so shall the resurrection of the dead be. But the glory of the sun surpasses by far the glory of the moon and stars; and this glory is given to those that obey Christ in all things; that follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. "These are they which were not defiled with women."—Rev. 14: 4. These are they that are born of water—that is, baptized into Christ—and have received the Spirit through the laying on of hands of those whom God has called "and sealed unto this power; and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true; they are they who are the church of the Firstborn [Christ]; . . . these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they that shall come forth in the resurrection of the just; these are they who are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly place, the holiest of all; these are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and the church of Enoch, and the Firstborn; these are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all; these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood; these are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all; whose glory . . . the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical."

Now, dear father, this is the glory we desire, and pray you will be permitted to share, and reign with Christ a thousand years, then enter into the great eternity. And though we be scattered far and wide from each other here in this life, that we may all meet in the life beyond this vale of tears, as one unbroken family around our dear Savior's throne, and enjoy his presence for ever more.

I close, ever praying God to comfort and cheer you and mother in your lonely hours, and send his angels to watch over you, both by day and by night; and if we never meet again in this life, we may beyond this. Begging an interest in your prayers, I bid you farewell. Your affectionate son,

S. W. TOMLINSON.

The above letter was written by Elder S. W. Tomlinson, of Delhi, Ontario. His father, who had not yet obeyed the gospel, was attending Saints' meetings and had been bearing his testimony with them, when Elder Hampshire refused him the sacrament. He was offended, and wrote to his son about it, and to which this letter is a reply. As so many misunderstand why the sacrament is not given to outsiders, the letter is submitted to the readers of the Herald, trusting it will remove the obstacle from the path of duty over which many stumble, but we hope will not fall. FLORALICE MILLER.

NEVADA, Missouri, Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—I closed my meetings here last night, and feel well satisfied with my labors. I not only have done the Saints good, but have made many friends to the church, and we stand in a much better light before the public now then we did before I came here, which causes much comfort to the Saints.

Yesterday I baptized eight; Prof. Weltmer (the magnetic healer) and daughter were in the congregation, both morning and evening. I noticed that he (also other officials of the city) waited near the door till I got there, eulogized my sermons, and by the shake of the hands he expressed that he meant what he said. By invitation I go to Rich Hill to preach there Tuesday night on an especial subject, and then to Montevallo, where I will hold a protracted meeting to continue as wisdom may direct.

Am glad to say that the Saints here nearly all take the church papers; some the Herald, others the Ensign and some both, which I think is essential to progress.

F. C. WARNKY.

CHILLICOTHE, Mo., December 13.

Editors Herald:—I came here by request of Elder I. N. White, and to fill his appointment, as affairs had taken a turn so that he could not well do so in person, but the rather by selection. I close my eighth tonight, and take the morning train to St. Joseph where, Religio, the district Sunday school convention, and the conference are to convene. While I think of it, please announce that the northeast Kansas district conference is to meet at Netawaka, Jackson county, Kansas, March 2, 1901, at ten o'clock a. m. The time was left with myself, and on consulting with the missionary in charge he thought he could meet with us there and then.

The Saints here are few, indeed, and prejudice is rife on every hand, especially among some. The people generally would meet us courteously, and promise to attend when invited, but fail to appear. The three daily papers have done nobly by us. We had a commodious place to worship free. We attended Baptist Sunday school, opened with prayer, and responded to the request to deliver a brief address. We also, by invitation, called on the large normal, opened the chapel services with reading and prayer, and after the second song spoke fifteen minutes by their kindly request.

This beautiful county is where the mob raised up, and marched forth to the Haun's Mills massacre, where twenty were thrown in an old well. Some of their offspring, hearing the old folk lore, may have retained the spirit of those unhallowed perilous times, but let us hope for the better, and work forward, onward, and upward. This city is about the size of Independence, and has good schools, and surrounded with a fine country. The Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad; the Wabash; and the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul railways pass through this place, and the last named has a roundhouse here. At this writing the roads are good, the ground bare and almost dusty, the sun bright, and the weather all that could in justice be desired. Hoping that the few here may be kept in the straight, narrow, and rugged road of duty; and for their humble endeavors they may have great blessings, and cause to rejoice, I am, with due consideration, an admirer of Priest R. S. Parker's cheerful, steadfast, aggressive deportment and character, as also a sympathetic well-wisher for all in the right. May the Lord direct and protect.

WOODBINE, Iowa, Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday I returned from Crescent, where I had been invited to break the "bread of life" to the Saints and sinners also. I thank God for the liberty enjoyed while so engaged. There is a glorious satisfaction in preaching this gospel when we have the Spirit of God to guide us. We are not only used as instruments in feeding others, but we ourselves are richly fed; and this is one grand evidence to me of the truth of this work, and the divine calling of the Seer. I am more than ever satisfied that no man can preach the gospel effectively without the Holy Spirit's inspiration, hence I see the wisdom of God in forbidding his servants to teach without the Spirit. I realize it is possible for a man who loves to display his ability, and is pleased with the music of his own voice, to imagine he is doing very effective work, when he is only "Darkening counsel with words without knowledge." May God help us all to lose sight of ourselves, that we may not present ourselves, but the Lord Jesus Christ, and his glorious truth to the people, caring less for the manner of our appearance than for the matter that it is our duty to present. I would not be understood as ignoring the necessity for good manners in the pulpit; but while we cultivate these and proper phraseology, the one great thought that should be uppermost in our minds should be the proper presentation of Christ and his gospel, and see to it that we do this to the glory of God.

I was invited by the Galland's Grove branch to preach the thanksgiving sermon, but as man may appoint while God sometimes disappoints, so in this case. Death had visited the family of Bro. and Sr. Archibald McCord, of Defiance, and had taken their one infant from this life, and the house of gladness was turned into a house of mourning, and it became my duty to speak words of comfort to these young parents. I tried to do so in Galland's Grove church, and while thus engaged the spirit of Sister Sibyl McCord, widow of Brother Alexander McCord,—both well and favorably known to many of the eldership,—passed to the paradise of God to accompany her sweet little great-grandson. She died at the home of Brother Ichabod McCord at Defiance. I preached her funeral, in Galland's Grove church, on the 2d instant, assisted by Elders Holcomb and Pett.

In consequence of a severe cold in my head and on my lungs, I only preached four times there. I found Sister Martha, wife of Alexander Black, in a very low condition, said to be suffering from a cancer in the intestines. Physicians give no hopes of her recovery, but declare that an operation to remove it would be fatal to her. All Saints are desired to pray for her that whether living or dying it may be well with her. Brother and Sister Black have been sorely tried with affliction in the family, and the burning of their home twice in four years. Yet their faith in God and his gospel has not faltered. It is good to so live in harmony with God, that we may realize that he is our friend in adversity, and our stay in prosperity. It is high time that as a church and as individuals we more thoroughly wean ourselves from the world and draw closer to God in holiness and truth. "Friendship with the world is enmity with God." The Church of Christ must have no fellowship with the world. There is no fellowship between Christ and Belial. "We cannot serve God and Mammon."

It is our business to build up the kingdom of God. Is it possible that we are hankering for the "Flesh pots of Egypt?" Let us read closely the signs of the times, and stand firmly on the watchtower.

CHARLES DERRY.

GUILFORD, Missouri, Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—In November I called on Bro. and Sr. E. A. Bray, of Darlington, and spoke eight times in the M. E. church at that place. From there I went six miles west of Ravenwood, and asked for the use of the "Harmony" M. E. church; but having spoke there a few times in October, Mr. Hunt, one of the trustees, said "they had decided not to open it for me." I asked him what objection they had, and he said it was because I preached "Joe Smith doctrine." I told him it was possible that I had done so, but I found it in the Bible.

I came from there here to Guilford. Bro. J. Arthur Davis had commenced meeting, and we have continued up to date, making almost two weeks. The interest has been quite fair. Last Saturday and Sunday was the "two days' meeting" appointed by E. S. Fannon, the district president. Brn. John Hawley and Ras Lorensen were in charge, and the meeting was a pleasant affair.

This branch of the Saints is alive to the work and the rest of the branches are not much behind it. Brn. J. C. Vaughn and R. F. Hill are doing some good work south of Rea, and the field is widening, and many calls, but few preachers. J. A. Davis goes to Ross Grove branch and I to Darlington. May the Master hasten his work.

Yours in bonds.

WACOFF, Minn., Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—On my return from Lamoni to my field of labor in Minnesota, I stopped off at Eagle Grove, Iowa, and by request of district president, Bro. D. M. Rudd, whom I found holding forth in a schoolhouse about nine miles southwest of Eagle Grove, I did some preaching at the Head Grove church, six miles southeast of the city, commencing on December 2, closing on the ninth. Held ten meetings, and seemingly good interest manifested from beginning to close, although a Baptist State Evangelist was holding forth two miles south of the church. Some seem to be convinced of the truth, but how near or how far they are from the kingdom, only God knows. On Sunday evening at the close of the meeting, many requests from the dear Saints and friends to come back again, made us feel that the efforts had been appreciated.

May the good Lord abundantly bless those who so kindly ministered to my necessities and made my stay pleasant. One more bright spot in a traveling elder's life.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 12.

Saints' Herald:—I appreciate your kind and welcome visit each week with your cheering letters and sermons. Since I moved my mission to second flat, same number as first, 508 Thirty-seventh street, our turnouts are very small; so in order to advertise our work more extensively, as well as in a desirable manner, we have decided to preach and teach in private houses for this winter, if the doors are not barred against us.

W. H. Fuller and the writer began street work May 27, 1900, and ceased in October, with the determination to seek other quarters to preach in, and the Lord Jesus Christ opened up the way for us. Bro. Fuller baited his hook to catch white fish, while I baited my hook to catch black bass. I made my way to the colored mission and churches. I got just one charge at the target, and I passed my right hand, and the Protestant Episcopal Methodist minister passed his left hand at me, and I was knocked out in one round. So goes the fight. I did not stop at that price, but kept everlastingly at it. On the evening of November 15, I went to the west side of the city, by invitation to Sister L. A. Kess's house, and opened up meeting with growing interest and on November 6, I organized what is known and styled the "Bible school." Some on both sides of the house are believing our report, and some are very near the kingdom of God.

Now, dear Saints, in a large city like this, where there is so much evil of every kind going on, both night and day, it is very hard to get the people to pay attention to the right gospel. I know, in order to build up the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, we must be a royal priesthood, a holy laity, a perfect people, that should show forth the praises of him who hath called us from darkness to this "marvelous work and a wonder" the great light of the Lamb of God.

Sometimes, dear Saints, when I think and realize that God raised me up to be as Joshua among the colored race, I think as David did when he said, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou visitest him?" Let us all consider that the Lord made us a little lower than the angels and hast crowned us with glory and honor and has given us dominion and power over the works of his hands. The Lord is a friend to poor sinners and we must all openly consecrate ourselves today to the Lord. We should come out and rally to the standard. All true Christians and friends ought to be decided, united Christian Saints of right and truth.

This is the cause of the Almighty God, and Christ himself is captain. Who can hesitate under such a captain, leader, and commander of his people? In the name of Jesus Christ, let all Christians unite, and let us as ministers of Christ gather the people together, high and low, rich and poor, to the glory of Christ and the benefit of humanity.

Dear brethren and sisters, will you all, who have plenty of this world's goods, please be a friend of God's poor colored people here in this city of Chicago. Pray that the poor, friendless, penniless, jobless colored men, women, and children shall have coal in the shed this winter, and flour in the barrel. No poor people should suffer when there is so much money in this world and to spare. No poor should be allowed to tramp in the snow banks this winter, nights, for the want of some place in which to sleep. May the hospitality of the Saints come to our wants is my prayer in Jesus' name. Remember us for good. We are struggling for life and light to get this work established in this great city of Chicago.

The work is onward, Bro. Fuller goes tonight to the east side of the city, while the writer goes to the west side to fill appointments. Pray for us, dear saints, that we may be blessed in our work.

Your brother in Christ and gospel bonds,

GEO. H. GRAVES.

NEW WESTMINSTER, B. C, Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—A recital of the pleasant and unpleasant experiences during the sojourn of our worthy mission president in this province may be permitted an insertion into your valuable columns. Two weeks were spent in Chilliwack, with great profit unto the Saints. A branch was there organized, and several called to the ministry, among them Alex. McMullen, our young and energetic brother, who received priesthood after the order of Aaron, entitling him to preach, baptize, etc. We look for great things eventually from this worthy ambassador of truth.

From Chilliwack we went to Victoria, where we billed the city, hired a hall in prominent part of city, and preached nearly a week. It's an old song now, but sing it we must, "No interest, no interest!" Seven to fifteen constituted the immensity of our audience, including the preachers.

Arriving at Westminster, we planted guns and opened fire; but like Cronje and his Boers, the people crawled in their holes, and so our shooting proved ineffectual. We couldn't get at them. A few showed themselves, but "No interest, no interest!"

Another branch was organized here, which, when including the scattered Saints, will aggregate a dozen or so. The work is still in its infancy.

At this stage of the fight Elder Evans left us for the land of the "beautiful," far-off Ontario. He went via Salt Lake, Denver, and Lamoni. We are all grateful for his coming, and trust that living impressions of the almost insurmountable barriers of British Columbia may abide with him unto sending of more help to make a big push and discernible indentations upon the the stony hearts of the Rocky Mountains.

At present writing, there does not appear an effectual open door in all British Columbia, but we must make them.

In bonds,

CLIFFORD, N. D., Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—As I do not see very many letters from the Dakotas, I essay to write. Since I last wrote to your valuable paper I have been laboring in and around the neighborhood of the Turtle Mountains. There is a nice band of Saints locating in the mountains. Bro. and Sister Oakes, from southern Minnesota, have located in the mountains and Bro. Oaks being a priest he will be quite a help to the Saints in that neighborhood.

On about the first of November I was agreeably surprised to meet Bro. Houghton, and to have him as a companion in gospel work.

To my mind, this is a peculiar field to labor in. In the summer the season is so short people have to work late and early; they have no time to go to meeting. In the winter it is too cold. In November it was twenty-four degrees below zero. Still I feel thankful to say that the gospel is making its way into the different parts of the Dakotas, and some good people are becoming identified with the church.

I am domiciled with Bro. and Sr. Anderson. They are kind, and know how to make a missionary comfortable. Bro. Sparling is at Park River, and Bro. Houghton is up in the mountains. I expect to remain in this neighborhood till after Christmas, and Bro. Houghton will join me and we will go to South Dakota for the remainder of the winter.

May God bless all who are trying to build up Zion.

Your brother in Christ,

THE LORD IS OUR SHEPHERD.

There is no path so dark or drear,
But the loving Lord can light,
If we will put our trust in him,
He will make it clear and bright.
He prepared the stones for Jared,
To light the dreary barge,
The Lord will light the darkest path,
If we are in his charge.

There is no cross so heavy,
But Christ will gladly share,
If we bow in meek submission,
And ask his aid in prayer.
The nail-scarred hands of Calvary
Will help us bear the load,
And fill our hearts with songs of praise,
As we journey on the road.

There is no heart so rent with grief,
But the loving Lord will heal,
If we firmly put our trust in him,
And prayerfully to him kneel.
The heart that was pierced on Calvary.
Intreats for us each day,
At the throne of God our Father,
Let us rejoice and pray. J. H.

SCOLDING.

Not long since I witnessed the unjust and too severe punishment of a little child; and though it aroused feelings of indignation, and caused my heart to ache for that child and hundreds of others who are under the control of unjust parents and guardians, it taught me a lesson. My own children came before my mind, and though they have never been in the same position, I thought with regret of times when I have scolded, when a few gentle words would have been more effective; times when I have spoken sharply and in anger, and wounded their feelings, when a few words of reproof spoken in a kind, firm tone, would have made the lesson I desired to instill more deeply impressed and aroused feelings of respect for "mother." Can we expect children to respect a scold? Do we enjoy being in a home where we hear scolding and nagging, fault-finding and harsh words? If adults do not enjoy this, how can children?

Mothers, we are not living only for the present, but our conduct in our home and our dealings with our children, will be remembered by them in after years. Do we want them to remember mother as a scold? Do we want them to think of times when she was harsh and unjust? Do we want the rod, and mother's angry look when she used it to be among the memories of their early home? Will the memory of such a home, and such a mother, help them over the slippery and thorny places in the pathway of youth and middle life? Scolding mothers, whipping mothers, may have obedient children; but let us watch these children when they are no more under the control of such a mother, and free from the fear of punishment. Are they better than others then?

I remember one mother who was constantly scolding, nagging, and using the rod. Some one spoke in praise of her ability to govern (?). She might have merited the praise and been proud of it, too, if she had done more teaching in kindness and love, instead of scolding for every wrong act; if she had praised more for good conduct, and nagged less for errors. The child grew up with a disposition to domineer over younger ones; was selfish; and with other traits of which no mother could be proud.

Does any one know of any good that ever resulted from scolding? It grates harshly on the ear, and disturbs the nerves. It makes those who are within sound of it feel that they are not far from Hades. But does it ever do any good? Is the thought of doing good to our children, or others, uppermost in our minds when we scold? Are we not rather trying to satisfy our ruffled feelings and hasty tempers? It is hard, when we are overworked and burdened with care, to control our taxed nerves and keep our irritable tempers in subjection.

Being the mother of four small children, I know whereof I speak. I know how a mother's strength is taxed, how her limbs can ache, and every nerve seem to quiver under the load of care, worry, and physical pain. I know it is hard to control an inborn irritability; but it can be done, and scolding can be driven from our home, never to enter again, if we will cultivate our will power and ask for Divine help. "ESSEL DEE."

PRAISE TO THE LORD.

To God we would render
Our tribute of praise,
For he has so blest us
In these latter days.
The rain and the sunshine,
The birds and the flowers,
Each helps to make joyful
This earth home of ours.

The beautiful gospel
The angel restored,
Has shown us the blessings
Contained in his word.
Its beauties unfolded,
Grow brighter each day,
When our hearts and our minds
On the Lord's work we stay.

When our Savior came down
From the mansions above,
Gave his life as a ransom,
And showed his great love;
How great was that love
For mortals below,
That he came for the sinner
His life to bestow!

The principles over,
Each one should review;
Have faith in his word
And repent of sin, too.
'Neath the clear liquid wave
Be gladly baptized
And by th' laying of hands
Is the Spirit realized.

Add to our faith virtue,
Knowledge, temperance all through,
Patience, godliness, kindness,
And charity, too,
If these in our hearts
And lives do abound,
Lacking knowledge of Jesus
We'll never be found.

Looking forth to the day
When the dead shall arise,
And our loving Redeemer
We'll meet in the skies;
Our hearts and our voices
In anthems we'll raise,
To him who has blessed us
And lengthened our days.

Chorus:—

Hallelujah to the Lamb,
Hallelujah, Amen;
Hallelujah! Hallelujah!
Hallelujah, Amen. A. M. J.

THE HASTY WORD.

To think before you speak is so wise an axiom, says Margaret Sangster, that one would hardly think it needful to emphasize it by repetition. And yet in how many cases the hasty temper flashes out in the hasty word, and the latter does its work with the precision and pain of the swift stiletto!

Singularly enough, the hasty word oftenest wounds those who love one another dearly, and the very closeness of their intimacy affords them opportunity for the sudden thrust. We know the weak points in the armor of our kinsman and our friend; we are aware of his caprices, and ordinarily are tender and compassionate even of his vanities and whims; but there dawns a day when it is written in the book of fate that we shall be as cruel as we are loving. We are cold, or tired, or hungry. We are anxious over unpaid bills, or our expected letters have not arrived.

So politeness fails us, fortitude is vanquished, philosophy is in abeyance, and we say that which we repent in sackcloth and ashes. But though the hasty word may be forgiven, it is not at once forgotten. It has flawed the crystal of our friendship. The place may be cemented, but there is a shadowy scar on the gleaming surface.

O, if the word of haste had been left unspoken; if the strong hand of patience had but held back the sword as about to strike!—Sel.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS.

God bless our little Herald,
May its wisdom still increase;
Its weekly visits to our home
Bring comfort, joy, and peace.

And then the lovely Autumn Leaves,
Its monthly visits come;
There's fragrance in its golden sheaves,
To brighten every home.

And the Ensign, precious Ensign,
With its sermons sweet and rare;
The gospel of our blessed Lord,
None with it can compare.

And then our darling little Hope
The cutest of them all;
It brings sweet comfort to the heart
Of both the big and small.

A merry Christmas to you all
Is what we wish to send,—
A happy, prosperous, bright New Year,
To every Saint and friend. J. H.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union:—We desire your prayers for our daughter Mary, now lying low at home, if it is God's will that she might be healed of her sickness, that she may have a testimony for herself and rest of the family, and that she may become a member of his household.

Your sister and brother,
W. H. AND L. J. COOK.

Bro. M. O. Matthews, of New Park, Pennsylvania, writes: "Last spring I got my leg hurt by a log, in a sawmill. Since then I have been an invalid, and have suffered greatly. I called on the elders, according to the law of God, and have not received, as yet, the great blessing. Now my next act is to apply to the Prayer Union in my behalf. Please notify them for me, and all the Saints to whom this may come."

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

IN another place will be seen a notice of some work that our second assistant superintendent, Bro. F. M. Pitt, is putting out for the benefit of those who are trying to make the blackboard work a success and attractive. We have seen but a part of the work, but all that we have seen is of considerable merit. Bro. Pitt is especially qualified in this line of work, and what he now offers to do will surely be a benefit to all who avail themselves of the opportunity of securing the matter. He is not trying to make money out of the work, but to simply cover some of the necessary outlay for machine, material, postage, etc. He has purchased at his own expense an Edison mimeograph, upon which he does the duplicating work. These machines, while rather expensive, are about the most successful duplicating device we have ever seen. They will make thousands of duplicate copies, and the last be as good as the first. We venture this assurance that the designs will be interesting and unique, and the work well done. We hope you will send for the copies and get the benefit thereof, and at the same time show an appreciation of an effort put forth in behalf of the work we all love so well.

THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

Special! Special! Special! To Sunday school superintendents, officers, and teachers. Here is something that will interest you! Blackboard illustrations and object lessons! To more fully introduce this method of teaching I have prepared twenty sketches with full instructions as to how they may be used, hints for using colored chalk, also some acrostic and word exercises.

I have given names to these sketches as follows: 1. The water of life; 2. Two ways of self defense; 3, Strengthened through trial; 4, Divinity of the Bible; 5, Danger in delay; 6, God's Bank of Promises; 7, The Light of the world—Candle object lesson; 8, Temperance lesson, "Three drops;" 9, Temperance lesson, "The dangerous key;" 10, Star exercise, by Bro. J. M. Terry, Jr.; 11, The true vine, by Bro. H. C. Smith; 12, In remembrance of me; 13, Crown, uncovering exercise; 14, Remember thy Creator in the day of thy youth; 15, I am the good shepherd; 16, Baptism; 17, The Sunday School Hand—suggestion for the Secretary in reading report of the school by ——; 18, Sunday School Record of Attendance—wall diagram; 19, Lesson Review; 20, Lesson Review.

Most of these illustrations can be readily adapted to the lessons that are now being studied, and will be a great help to all who are interested in this kind of work. I expect to be able to supply everybody who may desire to have these illustrations, and in order to do so, I should know by December 25 the names of those who want them. In order to defray the expense in getting them printed, it is necessary to charge a small price for them; therefore for the sum of fifty cents I will send the above named illustrations to any address.

All who desire these illustrations will please send a postal card giving me notice to that effect. It will not be necessary to send any money with the notice; this is only to give me an idea as to how many copies it will be necessary to make.

With a feeling of assurance that this work will give a pleasing satisfaction to all who avail themselves with this offer, and thanking you all in advance for an early reply, I remain, your colaborer in gospel bonds,

F. M. PITT.

THE value of a well-organized movement in the world, whether it be social, political, or spiritual, cannot be over-estimated. Without it our most sanguine expectations fall to the ground. It helps to bring unison, order, and system to our work. Sociability is not a small feature resulting from a well-improved organization. In this way we get to study and learn each other's nature and disposition, as well as to create a feeling of love and respect for each individual who is enrolled as member in a common cause for the benefit and elevation of mankind. We are enabled to delve more deeply into the actual needs and necessities of the various schools comprising the district association. Lastly, we will look upon another benefit; namely, the increase of knowledge obtainable through the medium of a well-developed organization. Knowledge is power, hence it is bound to greatly enhance our usefulness in connection with the work of the Lord, whether in Sunday school or in church work. "In a multitude of counsel there is safety," so we want to put forth every legitimate effort we can to come together to devise ways and means to reach a desired end in view that the good work may not lag on our account.

What is to be gained by always staying at home? Push out a little, should constantly be our watchword. I feel as I write, that many are lying dormant who should be stalwart pillars in this great Sunday school work. Awake, then, ye Saints of God. Put on the whole armor, and fight manfully to the end. Come out to the district conventions, and there receive inspiration in your work. Then your influence for good will permeate far and near. The writer was appointed associate superintendent in place of Bro. W. S. Hodson, resigned. Will be glad to hear from any or all the schools in the district, requiring information and advice. My permanent address will be Fanning, Kansas.

FRANK J. PIERCE.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

The usefulness of the Sunday school and the potency of the work in connection with it is now established beyond question. It only remains for the advocates of, and the workers therein, to advance the methods to the highest possible point of perfection, in order that the greatest possible good may accrue therefrom. While it is well, even necessary, for legislative and executive officers to be on the alert for any improvement that can be made as to modus operandi, yet there is need of a certain amount of conservativeness to be exercised, as the most newly suggested method is not always the best. An eternal fixity as to ways and means is not desirable at all times; nevertheless, a good rut is better to follow than vacillating uncertainty. There is a golden mean in this as in many other matters, and happy and successful the man who finds it. One thing is evident: the child, while being made to feel that a degree of the success of the school is depending upon him, should never get the idea that the school is an experiment depending upon the eccentricities of a wavering, speculative mind. Rather let the child feel that the school is an emanation of the divine mind, and is founded upon principles as grand and eternal as the church itself.

One thing that will inspire confidence in this direction is a determination on the part of the leaders not to discard hastily that which has proven itself worthy by long usage, for an untrue and doubtful idea. Another thing is a strict adherence to accepted rules.

It is destruction itself to announce rules and then manifest a flagrant carelessness in carrying them out. The apeing propensity in children is very strong; and when they see the superintendent, who announces that the school will open at nine o'clock, come in about five minutes after nine, then fuss around about five minutes longer before opening the school without an apology and a promise not to do so again, they begin to feel that the whole thing is only a matter of whim, and they soon act accordingly.

Some superintendent may conceitedly think that he is so efficient in other respects that he can do that right along with impunity; but he is mistaken. That man does not live who can do that. He may retain his office because of no better available man to fill it; but let there be another man as well qualified in all other respects, and prompt also, it would soon be seen who is the acceptable man. Let the officers prove that they think the school is a permanent, important, God-approved institution, and the children will not long differ from them.

Conference Minutes.

OKLAHOMA.

Conference convened with the Saints at Canadian Center branch, December 1. District president, R. M. Maloney, in the chair; S. S. Smith clerk. Reports of the district officers were given, showing the condition of district. The following ministry reported: Elders W. P. Pickering, Wm. M. Aylor, S. J. Hinkle, D. S. Crawley, W. R. Smith, R. M. Maloney, Hubert Case; Priests J. Scott, J. Yates, W. H. Rhodes, and S. S. Smith; Teachers J. W. Squire, Thomson Cochran, F. W. Pate; Deacon Jesse M. Volgamore. Branches reporting: Oklahoma, Stillwater, and Canadian Center. The following motions prevailed: That hereafter all branch presidents be requested to make written reports to the district president ten days before the meeting of each district conference; said report to contain a brief report from said officer, and the spiritual condition of his branch, together with a brief synopsis of the labors of his branch officers under his charge. That we sustain by our faith, confidence, and prayers, the church authorities and district officers. That when this conference adjourns it does so to meet the first Saturday and Sunday in March, 1901, at Okarche. A good spirit prevailed throughout.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Nauvoo District, Greeting:—When we solemnly consider that to us is committed a dispensation of the gospel, and upon us rests the responsibility of its proclamation, and that hundreds of earnest men are now engaged in the preaching of the word, who are leaving their families to our care the importance of the financial arm of the church cannot well be overestimated. Since accepting the Bishop's agent's books in April, 1898, I have been gratified to see a gradual increase in the amount of business done and in the number of names appearing on the books. This year, however, there has been quite a falling off, occasioned, no doubt, by poor crops in this vicinity and the loss to the district of one branch by redistricting and most of another by removal. But now as the Giver of every good and perfect gift has given us a more bountiful harvest, shall we not be able to do more for the cause and assist by tithes and offerings the work of the Lord.

Sub agents have been appointed as follows: Sr. Ellen I. Sargent, Vincennes, Iowa; Bro. F. M. McDonald, Mount Pleasant, Iowa; and Bro. H. E. Jarvis, Burlington, Iowa; each and all of whom are worthy of your confidence. The other branches at Keokuk and Montrose, Iowa, and at Burnside and Adrian, Illinois, are accessible to me; and should any have amounts and prefer to pay direct to me, let me know and I will come. Or should there be need of preaching on the law of tithes and offerings, I will do what I can in that also.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

My address is Adrian, Hancock county, Illinois. Your colaborer,

GEO. P. LAMBERT.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints and Friends of the Central Illinois District:—Please take notice that upon the recommendation of the district conference in and for Central Illinois district, as certified to me by the secretary of said district, Bro. Luther Simpson, of Taylorville, Illinois, has been appointed agent of the bishopric in said district in place of Bro. J. D. Stead who has been compelled to be absent from the district on account of affliction in his family. All in the district wishing to aid in the gospel work, please send their tithes and offerings to Bro. Luther Simpson, Taylorville, Illinois, who will duly give receipts and perform all work usually looked after by Bishop's agents in the several districts of the church.

Trusting the Lord may bless and help all those who make an effort to aid in the spread of the truth, I am,

Very truly and respectfully, your coworker,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

DIED.

MCCORD.—Afton Earl McCord was born August 16, 1900; departed this life November 27, 1900, aged 3 months and 11 days. Son of Bro. and Sr. Archibald McCord, Defiance, Io.

LASUER.—At her home in Plano, Illinois, Sr. Mary Angeline LaSuer. Sr. LaSuer, nee Riggs, was born at Quincy, Illinois, February 8, 1847. In August, 1861, she united with the church, and has ever since remained a steadfast and faithful member. On August 11, 1861, she was united in wedlock with Mr. William Leroy LaSuer, who afterwards also became a member of the church. Some years ago she received a stroke of paralysis, which was in time followed by another, and on the morning of December 6 she fell asleep, and we believe it can be truly said of her, She died in the Lord. Two of her children had gone on before, and were waiting mother's coming. Besides a husband she leaves four children, one son and three daughters, to mourn her loss. Their loss is her gain. Funeral services conducted by Elder Charles H. Burr.

MCCORD.—Sibyl McCord was born February 27, 1817, in Ulster county, New York; died at Defiance, Iowa, November 29, 1900, aged 83 years, 9 months, and 2 days. Was united in marriage to Alexander McCord, November 25, 1834. To this union were born five sons and two daughters; three sons survive her. Was with the church in 1838; passed through the troubles in Missouri and Illinois, yet her faith in the restored gospel of Jesus Christ was unshaken. Death to her was a welcome messenger. Baptized in Hancock county, Illinois, in August, 1844. She died with a full assurance of a glorious resurrection.

AMES.—Olive Ames was born in Rutland county, Vermont, February 13, 1815. At seventeen years of age she heard the angel message and recognizing the Master's call, gave obedience, and followed the fortunes of the church, locating at Haun's Mills, and was present at the massacre at that place. She was driven from her home with the Saints, who were so ruthlessly forced to abandon homes and flee before a cruel mob. She found a home at Nashville, Iowa Territory, opposite and a little below Nauvoo, Illinois. She married a Mr. Ellis Ames, and when the dark and cloudy days of trouble and apostasy came, and the Saints were scattered and driven again, she located for a few years in Utah. With her husband she came to San Bernardino, California, in the year 1854; he died October 11, 1862. She was the mother of sixteen children, nine of whom remain to mourn her departure. When the claims of the Reorganized Church reached her she gladly renewed her faith, and was baptized by Pres. Joseph Smith, and her last days were her happiest. She died December 2, 1900, beloved by all who knew her. Her chief thought and aim in life was to do good to others and aid in the cause she loved so well. If she had lived till the 13th of February, she would have been 86 years of age. She died firm in the faith, having received her patriarchal blessing two days before she was stricken. She will come up with those who wear white robes, who come up through great tribulation, having their robes washed white in the blood of the Lamb.

WU TING FANG ON CONFUCIUS.

Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese minister to this country, delivered an address on "Confucius" to the members of the Society of Ethical Culture at the Carnegie Music Hall yesterday morning. Every part of the auditorium was packed, and fully fifteen minutes before the opening of the meeting it became necessary to turn people away. His excellency wore the mandarin's hat, to the front of which was affixed a large diamond button.

The minister spoke for nearly an hour, basing his discourse to a large extent upon the comparison of the teachings of Christ and of Confucius. The principal difference between the two doctrines, he said, was that, while Christianity taught its people to be good for the sake of reward and for fear of punishment, the lesson preached by Confucius was the practice of goodness for the sake of doing good. He urged also that the tenets of Christianity were out of accord with the beliefs of the present age, which was one of growing agnosticism. On the other hand, Confucianism, he contended, was a practical religion, and he pointed to many signs in proof of his assertion that the doctrines of Confucius were finding adherents in countries outside of China. In somewhat caustic language Wu Ting Fang implied that Christian nations did not practice what they preached. He referred particularly to the bloodthirstiness, destruction, and looting which, he said, had characterized the allied Christian armies in China.

His excellency's address was in part as follows:—

"There is a general impression that China has three systems of religious belief—Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism. True it is that the government of China recognizes these three in its constitution and laws, but the struggle for supremacy was decided long ago and victory declared for Confucianism. Confucianism has taken the realm of the living. While Taoism and Buddhism have taken the realm of the dead.

"What is Confucianism? It will be well to mention in a few words what it is not before stating what it is. It is not a religion in the practiced sense of the word. What I understand by religion is a system and doctrine of worship. As such it recognizes the existence of a divine supreme being and of spirits having control of human destinies, who want to bring man back from the errors of his ways by holding up the fear of everlasting punishment to him and by promising him everlasting happiness for goodness. One of its cardinal doctrines is that there is such a thing as life after death. I must confess that the thought of the immortality of the soul is pleasant. I wish it were true; I hope it is true; but all the reasoning of Plato cannot make it anything more than a strong probability. Horace Greeley once said: 'Those who discharge promptly and faithfully all their duties to those who still live in the flesh can have but little time for peering into the life beyond the grave. It is better to attend to each in its proper order.' This is not an unfair statement of the aim of Confucius. Confucianism undertakes to guide man only through this world. His system is accordingly intensely human and practical.

"In Confucianism man is regarded as an animal endowed with social instincts. He does not live with himself, but seeks the fellowship of man. Out of this fellowship Confucius deduces these relations: Sovereign and subject; parent and child; older and younger brothers; husband and wife; friend and friend.

"The five relations I have referred to comprise all the relations in which a man may find himself in society. To each position are attached proper duties, and the fulfillment of those duties makes one a desirable member of society. Of the five relations, Confucius places special stress upon that of the parent and child. Filial piety may be said to be the pivotal point of his system. A good son must make a loyal subject, a faithful husband, and a trusted friend. The aim of Confucius is to make man a desirable member of society. They have to do good, and to perform the duties of their position. To be good they must practice the five virtues of benevolence, righteousness, propriety, understanding, and truthfulness.

"The virtues of Confucius may be best understood by making comparison with the founder of the Christian religion. Christ said, 'And unto him that smiteth thee on one cheek, also offer the other; and him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat also.' This seems to me to be meekness with a vengeance. I am inclined to think that no sensible man has ever acted up to the letter of these injunctions. They are not applicable to human society. I think the teaching of Confucius is in more accord with reason. Confucius says: 'Do not quarrel with those who offend you.' this is all that good sense requires. Christ says: 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you.'

"These, I must confess, are noble and grand statements, but such a standard of moral excellence is too high for frail humanity. Christian nations fall far short of it. Love your enemies, Christ commands; but at this very moment some missionaries are crying out for vengeance and blood, and Christian armies are burning houses and villages, sparing neither age nor sex in their indiscriminate slaughter, and are carrying away everything they can lay their hands upon. What a vast gulf there is between profession and practice! Confucius does not demand so much. The question was asked him if he would requite injury with kindness, and he said: 'Requite kindness kindly, and injury with justice.' By saying that injury should be requited with justice, he meant that the requital should be just, fair, and right; but he does not sanction retaliation, much less vengeance, in a vindictive spirit, as is sometimes done by people professing to follow the tenets of Christianity.

"The spirit of Christ's commands and of those of Confucius is the same,

and anyone who acts up to it, whether a professed Christian or a Confucian, is a truly good man. So far as this world is concerned, Confucius and Christ tread in the same direction, and principally in the same path. A good Christian is a good Confucian and a good Confucian is a good Christian. Men following Confucius are certainly entitled to happiness in the great hereafter.

"I don't believe that heaven is an exclusive place, and though Christians, Taoists, Buddhists and others try to appropriate it and to make a private park of it for their respective adherents, my opinion is that it is a place with many ladders leading to it, and that any one who has done good in life will be able to go up one of those ladders and enjoy the happiness that should come to him. It is a place for all good men, irrespective of doctrines and creeds. A Confucian who leads an upright and useful and good life will go there as quickly as those of any other religion.

"The world is gradually coming round to the teachings of Confucius.

One of the signs of this is the growing agnosticism of the age, and the progress of science has compelled the abandonment of many religious theories. Another sign is the progress which the course of universal peace is making among the nations of the world. Five hundred years before Christ came into the world Confucius had already begun to preach the gospel of peace, and under the influence of his teachings his followers have turned from the pursuits of war to the arts of peace.

"Confucianism has taken root in Japan and in Corea also). Its spread is not the result of armed conquest or excessive propaganda. Neither the sword nor the missionary is ever employed to gain for it a single adherent. No trail of blood marks its progress. Missionaries have not been sent to other nations urging people to embrace Confucianism or to make war in order to compel people to embrace that religion. Confucianism appeals to human sympathy, human interests, and human aspirations. It is a power for mankind not through force and terror, but through voluntary submission of the heart."—Brooklyn Eagle.

WAS ST. THOMAS THE APOSTLE OF THE AZTECS?

In an editorial yesterday headed "Was Columbus Antedated?" you speak of discoveries in Mexico indicating that the Chinese had discovered America long before Columbus, and that certain confirmatory documents found in the imperial palace at Pekin have aroused great interest in historical circles. Of course, these facts will not detract in any way from the merit of Columbus, for he, as well as the rest of the civilized world, was ignorant of them as if they had never existed, yet there may be more in them than mere conjecture.

That the Aztecs had been taught Christianity at a very early date there can be but little doubt. Prescott, Veytia, and Gleason, whose works are authorities on the early history of Mexico, tell us that the Spanish discoverers found among the Aztecs many religious observances strikingly resembling the rites of the Catholic Church. They found that the cross was an object of generel veneration and a certain temple called "The Temple of the Holy Cross" was considered to be the oldest place of worship in the country. There were also monastic institutions for both men and women in which the inmates lived a pure and austere life. They made vows for life, living under obedience and passing the time in prayer, fasting, and psalmody. Another observance was a solemn baptism by immersion in water when a name was given to the baptized. A part of the formula was "I pray that these heavenly waters may destroy and separate from thee all the evil of sin which was given to thee before the beginning of the world." Both Veytia and Prescott say it is worthy of particular notice that the Aztecs had the custom of confessing their sins to the priests, relating all that they considered as faults, and accepting the penance which was imposed. The secrets of the confessional were looked upon as inviolable. Father Bernardino de Sahagun, who spent sixty-one years in Mexico and died in 1590, says that "at the same time at which we celebrate the Pasch the Mexicans celebrated theirs, after a fast of forty days, during which they abstained from flesh meat," and Veytia says "Nothing is better known than that the offerings are made of bread and wine—that is, bread from flour without fermentation, and that what was drunk was wine." On certain feasts also they baked bread which, being blessed by the priests, they believed to be changed into the flesh of their God and this bread was distributed to the people who received it with great veneration, saying they were eating the flesh of their God.

Torquemada, Prescott, and Gleason all speak of the doctrine of purgatory and concur in representing the Mexican belief in regard to the state of souls in the other world to be in a great measure in harmony with the teaching of the Catholic Church.

Now, how did all of these analogous doctrines find their way into Mexico? The Aztec traditions speak of an evangelizer called Quetzalcohuatl—"a white man with a flowing beard, a large mantle adorned with crosses spread over his shoulders, with his head uncovered, his feet bare and carrying a staff in his hand." He is represented as a holy and venerable man, who taught the people chastity and the love of virtue, the worship of an only God, the mysteries of the Trinity and the incarnation, the birth of the Son of God of a virgin and his death upon the cross, and the other religious observances enunciated above. This man came from the north some years after a solar eclipse and a terrific earthquake similar to those that occurred at the time of the crucifixion. Now we know that the Apostle St. Thomas went from Jerusalem into the Eastern countries and he may have found the Chinese in communication with the western shore of what is now America. What is more natural than that he should cross over to announce the gospel to the people in those distant lands? The name Quetzalcohuatl signifies "The Illustrious Twin." St. Thomas was called Didymus (the twin). It is also related that when Huemac, an apostate king, persecuted Quetzalcohuatl, he hid himself among the islands of Yucatan, which were afterwards called "The Islands where the Twin hid himself."

In the national histories of Mexico it was said that Quetzalcohuatl had promised that his followers, also white men, would come to that country and would venerate the cross. There was a common belief also that the time had arrived when these followers should come to the country, and Sahagun assures us that "at the arrival of Cortez and the Spanish on the coast, the natives went out to meet them in canoes and prostrated themselves before them, believing that the God of Quetzalcohuatl, along with his followers, whom they expected every day, had come to visit them. Boturini says that the year ceacatl was the one announced by Quetzalcohuatl, and in that very year the Spaniards landed in Mexico.

This supposition, then, that it was St. Thomas who visited Mexico, is quite probable; almost certain it is that some early Christian missionary did come, and probably through the Chinese. Future discoveries among the Chinese may prove that their claims are not all founded on fable.—W. J. Howlett, in Rocky Mountain News, December 14.

Whether in college or in business, whether the young man is making three dollars a week or three dollars an hour, he should make it the fundamental business of his life to see that a large part of his salary is saved. To spend ten thousand dollars a year no doubt is adelightful sensation to a young man, but if he is only making ten thousand the delight of spending it will sooner or later be dearly paid for. In the end, the man who makes a thousand and saves two hundred and fifty will get vastly more out of life.

REVELATION FIRST.

It appears that when John, the beloved disciple, or more correctly speaking, the "disciple whom Jesus loved," was upon the Isle of Patmos, whither he had been banished by the powers that were, it pleased the Lord to extend to him comfort by sending an angel, or messenger, to him with a message which should be a blessing to him who should read and him who should hear and keep the things which the message contained.

John wrote what he saw and heard to the churches at Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea, seven churches of Asia. He was in the spirit on the Lord's day, and heard a voice, which said:—

> I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last.

This voice commanded him to write what he saw and heard and send to the churches named above. John turned to see the voice (or person whence it proceeded from) and saw seven golden candlesticks. These candlesticks surrounded a personage who in appearance was like the Son of Man. He was clothed with a garment confined at the breast by a golden girdle or belt. His head, hair, and beard were very white, indicating age, or character for veneration. His eyes were very bright and piercing in appearance, like a flame as some eyes brown in color do appear when their owner is excited by mirth or anger. This appearance indicated youth and strength of character and will. His feet had the appearance of fine brass refined in the fires of a furnace. His voice was generous and strong, like the sound of moving waters, and very melodious; indicating force, generosity, and great kindness and courage.

This personage held in his right hand, the hand of rule and power, the seven angels, or ministers, rulers, overseers, or presiding authorities of the seven churches representing the Christian, or Messianic dispensation, over which he held rule by virtue of his law, represented as a "sharp, two-edged sword." This law spoken by him became his word or will and was to be and is supreme.

His countenance was full of power, shining like the sun in its strength. In its wondrous, shining light everything has and shall have life and light, warmth, splendor, glory, all are found in his favor.

So grand and awe inspiring was the vision of this personage, that John was overpowered and fell in a swoon or faint. But the personage laid his hand on John, renewing his spirit within him, reviving his courage; and then said to him:—

> Fear not; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys [power over] of hell and of death.

He also stated to John that he was "the first and the last," the description by which all may recognize the Savior, the Redeemer, the Messiah, as is given in verses 4 to 8 inclusive, and unto whom John ascribes glory, honor, and power and dominion, as the Ruler of all, God the Father of Jesus Christ, who had loved the Saints, washed them from their sins and made them kings and priests unto God.

This message was to be one of peace from the Lord Jesus Christ unto these seven churches, and thence unto all, every where and in every nation who would receive and recognize him as the Lord, the faithful witness, the one who was the first to achieve the victory over death and the grave and rise from the dead as by power within himself through the Father who had given him this life in himself for obedience, and who was the "prince of the kings of the earth."

This same prince was to come in due time in the clouds to earth, and when he should come every eye should see him, not excepting those who had slain him. The nations and kindreds of those who were sufferers from the action of the Jewish portion in crucifying Jesus the Lord of life and glory should be sorrowful and wail because of the evil done him.

That there need be no mystery to John after the vision passed, this personage like the Son of Man, who was the Alpha and Omega, told him that the seven stars in his right hand were the angels, or ministers of the seven churches, one for each. That the seven candlesticks were the seven churches themselves. His being in the midst of them indicates that he was the source of the light, life, strength, and power of the churches and by which they existed, and that all that they had came by and through him unto whom and by whom are all things, even Jesus Christ the righteous.

FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY.

For some time, now, a statement has been going the rounds of the press to the effect that the "Mormon" church, of Utah, was not only talking about the building of a temple at Independence, Missouri, but was contemplating taking measures to so build.

Several of these newspaper articles have been sent to us, one of them from the Nonpareil, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, for November 18, in which Lorenzo Snow, president of the Utah church, is quoted as saying:—

> The time is drawing near when most of you will go back to Jackson county and build the temple in the City of Zion. If you live twenty years more I can assure you that you will go back to Jackson county. I have had a communication from a prominent member of the church who wanted to put $1,000 in the church to buy land in Jackson county, and another saint has $25,000 and still another $6,000, for the same purpose. We will never go back, however, until we are ready and willing to pay our tithing."

President Snow is now in or approaching his eighty-seventh year, and it is by no means probable that he will himself be among those who twenty years hence will go back to Jackson county and build a temple there, as he is credited with saying in the foregoing statement. But, if a few more years pass with no more active migration from Utah to Missouri than for the last half century, there will be none of those expelled from the state in 1835 to 1838 to "go back" there.

The statement in the Nonpareil closes thus:—

> The elders of the Utah church, who are working in the vicinity of Kansas City to prepare the way for the return of the Utah Mormons, say the Independence temple will be finer and larger than the one in Salt Lake City. The Mormons were forty years in building the Salt Lake temple. It cost several million dollars. All Mormon temples and churches will be under the control of the Independence temple when it is built.

Whatever hopes may have been excited, or fears raised by those supposed or real sayings of President Lorenzo Snow, it will be well to bear in mind that the revelation given on Fishing River, June, 1834, for the instruction and comfort of those who were being driven out, must be considered in determining the time of gathering to build and the character of the people, or body of people, who shall be called Zion. We quote:—

But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws.

Another thing may as well be considered. At a very early date in the history of the church, the Lord stated very clearly what was his will in regard to the laws of the land. This was in August, 1831, twenty-one years before the proclamation of polygamy by President Young in 1852, and was in the following terms:—

Let no man think he is ruler, but let God rule him that judgeth, according to the counsel of his own will; or, in other words, him that counseleth or sitteth upon the judgment seat. Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.—D. and C sec. 58 par. 5.

The laws of the states of Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, all contiguous to the place which President Snow is said to have been speaking of, in regard to the domestic relation, are all monogamous, one man, one wife. Neither polygamy, plural marriage, nor concubinage is provided for nor tolerated. Public opinion and statute enactments are against such marriages and the practice of living in accordance with them. And whoever should be guilty of either, would be a breaker of the laws and subject to penalty.

It is therefore idle for men who are in the practice of those things named to contemplate immigration into the states whose laws make their practices criminal. No polygamist, known to be such, will ever be permitted to build or engage in building temples in Missouri. Polygamist leaders of a people practicing polygamy or plural marriage will not be able to lead such people into Zion, or the borders thereof to engage in the building and occupation of a temple of the Lord, whose command is that they who keep his laws have no need to break the laws of the states where Zion is located, or to be located, for the Lord will not sanction such a stultification of his word by those professing to be his people.

It is true that so far as numbers may be concerned, of the three contending portions of the believers in the mission and work of Joseph Smith known to the world as "Mormons," or Latter Day Saints, the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," the "Church of Christ," as they severally style themselves, the Utah body is by far the largest, being some three hundred thousand, or more; while the second named has about fifty thousand, and the last named somewhere about one hundred members. Hence, the weight of numbers is on the side of the Utah church. But, numbers do not make a religious body righteous, or its members "pure in heart;" and therefore, even the least in numbers may be found to be superior in the qualities which go to make up a successful body. We do not say that in this instance such is the case; nor do we say that any are unrighteous; but point out the facts which must enter into the consideration when speculation is indulged in as to who shall, or may build a temple in Zion.

There has long been a contention on the part of the Utah church that Utah was the true location of Zion "in the tops of the mountains;" the place to which the people of God should flow, the converts to Zion gather. What becomes of this contention, if President Snow is now correct?

It is an interesting problem and fruitful cause of study to many, and we leave the subject with the admonition to our readers that they be not troubled, for they may rest assured that whoever may attempt to build the temple referred to, must do so within the limits designed of the Lord and in accord with the principles of righteousness given to the church through his prophet, and by a people who shall not be law breakers living in defiance of the institutions of the government which God raised up wise men to found on the land which he kept and caused to be discovered and settled for the accomplishment of his purpose, whether that people be one of those named herein, or some other.

A FAKE.

TWO STORIES OF THE SAME SUBSTANCE.

The following clippings are taken from the Inter-Ocean, Chicago, December 16, 1900, and the Murphysboro Independent for December 14, 1900, respectively, though the latter quoted from the Cairo, Illinois, Bulletin.

FOUND IN AN OLD STUMP.

Original Manuscript of the Book of Mormon is Discovered.

Carbondale, Ill., Dec. 15.—Considerable excitement has been created recently in Southern Illinois over a discovery made by Marshal Penrod, who lives on farm close to the village of Dongola, in Union county. Penrod, in digging a black oak stump out of a potato field close to his residence, found a stone which was about a foot long and eight inches in diameter. The peculiar shape of the stone, which resembled a pocketbook, attracted his attention, and upon close examination he found carved on its face in English the following words: "This stone contains the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon. JOSEPH SMITH."

The ravages of time had apparently made little headway on the stone, and upon close examination he found the stone was hollow. A hole had been drilled entirely through it, and at both ends red cedar plugs had been driven. Upon removing one of the plugs, several sheets of paper, containing writing in hieroglyphics that could not be deciphered, were found. The characters are peculiar, following no known line of ancient writing.

At the bottom of the last page was found, written in English: "The finder of this manuscript will deliver the same to the elders of the Mormon church." The stone still remains with Mr. Penrod, and already communication has been made with the Salt Lake church, giving the incidents of the find. It is thought the Mormon church will take steps at once to secure the stone and also the manuscript.

BOOK OF MORMON.

Original Manuscript Found in a Hollow Stone at Dongola, in Union County.

Marshal Penrod, living on a farm in the vicinity of Dongola, while digging at the root of a large black oak stump in a potato field, found a stone about ten inches long and eight inches in diameter, much the shape of a wallet. On the outside of the stone were carved in the English language the following words: "This stone contains the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith." Investigation disclosed that the stone was hollow, a hole having been drilled through it, and the hole at both ends stopped with red cedar plugs. These plugs were taken out, and from the inside was taken several sheets of paper containing writing in hieroglyphics that could not be deciphered by the finder nor by any others of the many people who have examined it.

At the bottom of the last page is the following in English: "The finder of the manuscript will deliver the same to the elders of the Mormon church."

This stone is in possession of the finder, near Dongola, and he takes great pleasure in showing it, and the manuscript taken from it.

The "Mormons," whoever may be referred to by the term in these two clippings, may be a very credulous and marvel loving people; but they will hardly be caught by so apparent a fake.

Union county, Illinois, in the extreme south end of the state, near Cairo. Joseph Smith, grandfather, father, nor son, was ever there, and neither was a habitue of that part of state. That portion of the state was but sparsely settled as early as 1844, the time of Joseph Smith's death, and the records do not show that the "Mormons" had any foothold there, that we are aware of, so that it is not likely that any one of the elders cotemporaneous with Joseph Smith was ever there to locate such a find.

The chances are that this particular stone deposit, if such was really found, is the work of some man for sinister purposes, money or notoriety, and hence unprofitable.

The words accredited to Joseph Smith, his name attached and the direction to the finder to deliver the stone to the Mormon church, are suspicious marks, indicating that the manufacture of the stone, its contents, and its deposit are quite too modern to fool the "Mormons" of any class.

Another version of the find at Dongola, Illinois:—

Cobden, Ill., Dec. 18.—Marshal Penrod, living at Dongola, sixteen miles south of here, last week unearthed a stone three and one fourth inches long, two and one half inches wide and one inch thick, with a hole in the center, extending through the entire length, half an inch in diameter. In this hole was found a manuscript. Each end was tightly stopped with cedar plugs and sealed. The manuscript contained writing in English and also half a dozen lines in hieroglyphics. The writing in English was as follows:—

"Religion of the church of Jesus Christ or latter day saints. Being driven from place to place by the enemy of our faith, I place beneath this oak, in the year 1842, this document, being the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, and signed by Joseph Smith, the mormon prophet."

Two mormon elders visited the finder Saturday to negotiate for its purchase. They say they can read hieroglyphics very readily. They declare the manuscript is the missing link of their religion. The price of the relic was not agreed upen.

Notice that the size of the stone said to have been found and the text of the inscription differ from the other accounts. What next?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bishop Hunt, in a letter to the church librarian, writes, under date of December 16, from Sac City, Iowa:

We have had ten sessions of debate, and six more yet. They have been lively ones. I am feeling better in every respect than when I engaged in it. Bro Wight is a good moderator and helper. We are joyous in the conflict.

Bro. J. M. Brown, the 10th inst., wrote from Sharon, Oklahoma:—

At present I have more calls for preaching than I can fill, and the outlook is favorable. My mind is often lit up with sparkling thoughts reflecting the beauties of the restored gospel, and of late I feel more and more the responsibility of one sent to represent the righteousness of God. At present I am stopping with Bro. Smith, whose love for the cause is shown in many ways, and especially with his liberality to the ministry.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. F. Palfrey, of Macon, Missouri, has a column of defense of the church in the Macon Citizen, the paper of the city where Bro. Palfrey lives. It is an excellent article and well written.

Bro. Morris T., the genial Short man, is pretty well represented as a defender of the faith, in the Chillicothe Constitution, in editorial notes making favorable mention of him and his efforts at that place in the Masonic Temple. Good for our happy tempered brother.

Edward Adkins writes from Galt, Ontario, December 15, and states that he was baptized last summer by Elder Gamet, in Nebraska. He says there are no Latter Day Saints where he is, but thinks that if an elder would come there that he would be greeted by good congregations.

Bro. D. A. Anderson, secretary of the Fifth Quorum of Elders, desires to know the address of A. Z. Rudd. Letters have been addressed to Bro. Rudd, but have not reached him. Bro. Anderson's address is Santa Ana, California.

Next week we will commence publishing the "Autobiographic Sketch and Incidents in the Early History of the Reorganizasion, by Edmund C. Briggs, of the Quorum of the Twelve;" which will occupy several numbers of the HERALD.

George Jacob Schweinfurth, the founder of "Heaven," a farm near Rockford, Illinois, and famous as a self styled "Messiah," and who lately announced that he was wrong in his claims as such, has been notified to leave the community at once. Over one hundred persons in the neigborhood of the "Heaven" signed a paper in which he is branded as "a deceiver and a fraud, a shrewd and cunning wolf in sheep's clothing, a disgrace and a scourge upon society," and have requested him to leave the country.

INSURANCE, SECRET SOCIETIES, ETC.

Much has been said and written touching the gathering, consecration, purchasing of lands, and secret orders.

Some time since, in conversation with one of our missionaries who is a member of one of the leading quorums, I learned he had his life insured, for which he was paying $10 per year, and drawing family support from the church treasury.

My position was, "A Saint need not belong to anything but the church, and if he lives the gospel, the Lord will provide."

He quoted, "He that will not provide for his own house has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

My answer: "There is a right way to provide, and a wrong way. And have we any commandment for such things?"

His answer was, "He that waiteth to be commanded in all things is a slothful servant." He also said the church was not able to take care of all its poor.

Let us see. I know of another missionary who is paying $70 per year insurance. Some years ago the bishop called for $100,000 to purchase homes for the worthy poor in the church and the little Saints' Home at Lamoni. Seven or eight thousand dollars was the result. Suppose upon an average 5,000 Saints are paying $10 per year insurance on their lives to organizations of men. (I think that a reasonable per cent of 40,000 members.) That would be $50,000 per year, which, if placed in the hands of the Bishop for the purpose designated in the commandment which saith,— would purchase at least 1,666 acres at $30 per acre, which, if continued for ten years, would be 16,660, which, if divided into twenty-acre farms, would settle 833 families. Then add to this what the Saints pay out annually for house insurance, doctor bills, and secret orders, would bring it up to double the amount, at least, which would be $100,000, which, if laid out in land at $30 per acre, would secure 33,333 acres, which, divided as before, would settle at least 1,666 families; which, with an average of five to the family, would be 8,330 people. And all this with funds from which the church reaps no benefit, and in the short space of ten years only.

Purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion (D. C. 98: 9).

Then to think of the amount of property that passes out of the hands of the Saints and then out of the church annually. For instance, a brother passed away recently under the Weltmer system of treatment. He willed all his property to his sister, who cares nothing for the church. His property and insurance together, so I am told, amounted to $14,000. She is now said to be bedfast with the same incurable disease, and she wills this property to one outside of the church entirely, save $50, which went to the magnetic healer.

I know another brother worth $20,000. His sons are all enemies to the church, and may inherit the major part of his estate. And yet we are told, "The church can't."

There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—D. C. 98: 10.

The Lord requires the whole heart, might, mind, strength, and soul. And when I give him all that, have I anything to give to any organizations of men?

He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me.—Jesus.

Brethren, the church is my nearest relative, and to her I dedicate not only my property, but my life. If I can do but little to build up the kingdom of heaven on earth in the way of work, it is useless to try to blow it up on paper. As long as we put our funds into other societies and organizations, where the voice of the Lord is not heard, and where inspiration does not lead, and will our possessions to people who care not for the church, then it is true, "The church can't."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

But O, thou God of Saints, help thy people to see aright. All these organizations will fail in time. But the church of the living God will stand forever, and by our own works in that church we stand or fall.

With good will to all, and ill will to none, I am, your brother,

D. E. TUCKER.

WHY NOT INSURE?

I am a member of an insurance order. I have seen a good deal in the Herald on this matter, and I think it is unnecessary contention. If my memory serves me right, we are told to cease to contend one with another. When God made man, and placed him in the garden, he gave him his agency, and I do not think that we should try to rob each other of it.

The Bible says that the man who will not provide for his family is worse than an infidel. If a man unites with a fraternal order or society, and puts by a few cents per month, in case of accident, why not let him do so? I do not think there is a man in our church who will condemn me if I place in the bank fifty or one hundred dollars per year for my family in case anything happens to me. They will generally say, Bro. so and so is a good saving man. That is all right. On the other hand, we have men who have only fourteen thirty, as the brother has it figured, that he can lay by in one year. He has a great deal of sickness and hard luck, and he is not sure of his life or health for any length of time; he sees a chance to insure his life, and begins to figure how much he makes and how much tithing he has or should pay out of that, and sees he has enough to carry that insurance and help along matters in his branch as well. He takes it up, and in the course of a year or two that man is working at his usual work and meets with an accident and is killed; his wife gets the insurance. Is it not a boon to her; yea, a Godsend, to have something to launch out with? She feels a little independent; she does not have to depend upon strangers to help her raise her family, or have them scattered from pillar to post, to be knocked around by every one.

Brethren, let us look at these things from an unprejudiced standpoint. We can look at it from another view. All, or most all of these societies have connected with their insurance a sick and funeral benefit. Many of our people get sick and are sick for a number of months at a time. To a poor man, is it not easier for him to lie in his bed knowing that there are a few dollars coming in every week, so that he will not have to depend on Saints or neighbors to pay his rent and buy fuel. Usually the Saints are not able to do this, as it is all they can do to keep themselves. Those who are able, I am very sorry to say are inclined to refuse.

Some might say, If you have faith there is no need to be sick. All have not this faith. The Master saw that there would be those who would be weak in the faith, and he allows them to use herbs, and does not condemn them for having a doctor.

Well, says one, if all the Saints would pay their tithing, the church could provide for her own poor. I quite agree with you; but such is not the case. Many do not pay tithing, nor even make an effort to do so. Then have I to let my family be thrown on the mercies of a cold, unfriendly world, because of that? I think not. When the Saints come to that standard, and the church is able to do this, then I say, Saints, cease to be members of societies or insurance companies; but until such times, get your insurance just as cheap as you can, so you can pay more than your tithing into the hands of the bishop or his agents, and help get our church in that condition.

Why do we insure our houses, barns, churches, and such things? A man told me one time, that he did not think there was much religion about a man or set of men that would not insure and provide for the family. After he was gone, I took the position to oppose such. He was a good living man, and would share his last crust with anyone. If we as a church would take a stand against this, would we do ourselves good or harm.

I think that we should not contend about this matter, for I do not think that we will be shut out of the kingdom for joining a society and getting our lives insured. If it is not a matter that will stand against our salvation, or keep us out of the kingdom, why not let it rest? Where I see and find the greatest fault in this matter, is that our people who go into those orders spend too much of their time with and on them. They would miss a prayer meeting to attend the lodge, and would oppose having a meeting in the church on a lodge meeting night, no matter how much benefit it would be to the church. This, I say, is wrong, and I do not think that God is pleased with the Saint who will do that. I have been in a court room about once in three years, and I would not miss a committee meeting in this church, if I was expected to be there, for all the society meetings in this or any other country, for I think the church is of more importance than all of them, even the least of its meetings. I heard one of our elders say he never missed a church meeting to go to a lodge meeting. I thought it good, and I said I will do likewise, hoping that God will help us to come up higher, and arrive at that standard that we will not need to join those things. If I thought that the Lord was displeased with me for insuring my life, I would drop it at once, for I do not want to run any risk.

ST. MARY'S, Ont., Dec. 10.

SANCTIFICATION. WHAT IS IT?

We wish to introduce a few scriptural evidences in favor of the above subject, for we believe it a Bible doctrine, although misapplied by many, hence misleading.

Rev. Howard, of the Holiness order, said:—

Sanctification is instantaneous, and is effected by the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire, and therefore cannot sin.

Webster defines sanctification:—

To make sacred or holy.

Alexander Campbell:—

To separate anything to God.

Albert Barnes:—

The original word means to set apart from a common to a sacred use.

Sometimes it is said that God sanctifies, as in Genesis 2: 3:—

And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made.

This means that he set the seventh day apart to his service, and that is all. There was no change in the material universe on that day to designate it from any other day. Its use was only to be different from other days. Sometimes men sanctify, as in Leviticus 8: 10, 12:—

And Moses took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein, and sanctified them. . . . And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him, to sanctify him.

Christ is said to be a sanctifier, as in John 17: 19:—

And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified, through the truth.

The word is a sanctifier, as in verse 17:—

Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.

Prayer is a sanctifier:—

For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.—1 Tim. 4: 4, 5.

The altar was a sanctifier:—

Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifieth the gift.

In the scriptural quotations referred to, sanctification is affirmed of both animate and inanimate matter; therefore, how can Rev. Howard's application be true? Did the seventh day, the first born of the animal creation, the unbelieving husband, the food before eating, the gold on the temple,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

all receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire when sanctified? If the person or thing sanctified is in a state of perfection and without sin, then we have a perfect unconverted husband. Beasts that cannot sin and the entire outfit of the tabernacle in a state of perfection. Where is it today, Rev. Howard?

Then, inasmuch as the above application of "sanctification" is not in harmony with revelation or reason to our mind, therefore our opinion is that neither the elements which constituted anything, their form or size, was changed. By such sanctification their use or purpose or life only was changed. The seventh day was under general laws as other days. However, it was holy; set apart to God's service. The priests were only men; their nature human. And whatever may have been their occupation before, we know not; but after their sanctification they were set apart to God's use or service. So also the tabernacle, and everything pertaining to it was thus set apart to God's service.

May we not affirm the same of all Christians, that after our sanctification, in obedience to the truth, we are set apart to the divine service, and thus become the "temples of God and the Spirit of God dwells in us." The means of sanctification seem to be numerous. But conditions after sanctification are the same.

We conclude this article by referring to 2 Thessalonians 2: 13:—

But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth.

CONFESSION.

We are enjoined to confess our faults; but some of our shortcomings are of such a nature that we are loth to confess them, but as a poet beautifully remarked, "Sacrifice brings forth the blessings from heaven;" and in inspired writ, "Obedience is better than sacrifice." I once heard or read a circumstance that may illustrate the subject somewhat. A parson had set a certain Sabbath day to give his flock a rasping, or at least those considered black sheep, and when he came to that part on intemperance, he shouted in a loud voice, "Where is the the drunkard?" and paused; whereupon the deacon, known to get boozy betimes, arose and shouted, "Here I am." The parson continued, and in due time came to that part on hypocrisy, and inquired in trumpet tone, "Where is the hypocrite?" and again paused, but no one arose; and again the parson shouted, "Where is the hypocrite?" and again waited for a reply. In front of the deacon sat the old Squire, a well-known hypocrite, and as there was no indications of him arising to confess, the deacon looked at him quite sharp, and nudging him, shouted, "Get up, Squire; I got up when my time came."

SCALAWAG.

MEDITATIONS. — I have thought somewhat on the scriptural admonition, "He who thinketh he standeth, let him take heed lest he fall," and am reminded of a carpenter who was at work on the roof of a two story school building at Montrose, Iowa, a few years ago. He was quite skillful in standing erect and walking about on a steep roof; but one day he slipped and glided off, striking the ground below with his head, breaking his neck, and was instantly killed. I thought perhaps that he thought, or had the idea, that he stood safe, but by not taking heed, he fell to his death. We of the true faith may think we are perfectly safe, or that we will not fall; yet if we are not always careful, we may fall and lose what we have endeavored to gain.

A LAMONIAN.

Letter Department.

CUBA, Kan., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—After leaving Ness county I arrived at Idylwild, November 10. After preaching ten sermons, Bro. A. H. Parsons came to my assistance; continued until the 27th. Bro. W. H. Mannering arrived in time to preach one sermon. Bro. Parsons and the writer departed for other fields, Bro. Mannering continuing the effort. We created some interest while there.

Bro. Parsons left me at Concordia, he going to Jewel county. Arriving at Minersville, I began preaching; held five services; some interest manifest, better attendance than heretofore. Found Sr. Myrtle Curtis improving. The Saints in district will be glad to learn there is much improvement in her condition since August. If faithful, she will yet rejoice in the gospel.

I arrived at Wayne, December 3; occupied for ten nights in the Christian church with good attendance and considerable interest manifest. All the crowds of men collected in town seemed to be discussing religion during the day. People who did not attend other churches were among the interested ones. I distributed tracts, sold several Voice of Warnings, and at close several old men and ladies expressed regrets at my departure, wishing my return. Yes, Brn. Parsons and Kent, I left the work in an interesting condition, so the next man will find ready hearers.

I begin at Prairie Home tonight. Am alone, among strangers. I find good interest at most all places where I go, and the laborers are very few.

Laboring to be able to travel with those who "come up higher," I am,

L. G. GURWELL.

VIOLA, Iowa, December 12.

Editors Herald:—Thinking perhaps those who are acquainted in Viola would like to hear from this part of the vineyard, we will jot a few notes. For the past two years we have had only two sermons a year from the traveling ministry. Bro. W. A. Smith, of Persia, and Bro. C. Albertson, of Idaho. But the Saints have not been asleep nor idle. We have been working in the Sunday schools, and doing what we could to prepare the way for preaching.

We have been anxious for Bro. Roth to come, and on the tenth of November he arrived and commenced meetings. Just as we were rejoicing that the long looked for time had arrived, our rejoicing was clouded by seeing in the Herald that he was to go to Illinois. His appointments were out, therefore he remained and filled them. He preached one week at Oak Park, a schoolhouse two miles north of town, where we have Sunday school, and then began in Viola. Elder Hills, of Marion, assisting at both places, and they have succeeded in getting more interested than we ever knew to be interested here. Some at Oak Park were so interested that they walked over two miles to attend the meetings at Viola. Some drove three miles. Sunday eve, December 2, Bro. Roth closed the meetings with a sermon on the apostasy. The house was crowded, and it was the finest sermon on that subject we ever heard. It was grand!

The meetings were all remarkably blessed by the presence of the Spirit. The sermons were an hour and a quarter in length, and the people said they were so interesting they did not seem long.

At the close of the meeting one name was given for baptism. As Bro. Roth had made previous arrangements to leave on the morning train, he promised to return Thursday and attend to it. He arrived as promised, and Bro. Hills came from Marion. About eleven o'clock a little company of Saints and friends gathered by the river, where Bro. Hills administered the rite of baptism to Bro. G. W. Randall. In the evening Bro. Roth preached an excellent sermon on the "laying on of hands," after which Bro. Randall was confirmed under the hands of Elders Roth, Hills, and Potter. Thus another worthy soul has been adopted into the kingdom of God.

The interest seemed to demand a continuation of the meetings, and as Bro. Roth must leave on the ten p. m. train, Bro. Hills came to the rescue, and continued meetings over Sunday. Srs. Hills and Cator and daughters came down Saturday night and remained over Sunday. Their presence cheered the hearts of the Saints and friends. We thought, "How sweet to the soul is communion with Saints."

Sunday the Saints met at the schoolhouse at one o'clock for sacrament. It was a meeting long to be remembered by all who were present. Sunday school at two p. m., followed by preaching.

In the evening Bro. Hills delivered an excellent sermon on the Book of Mormon. We think those who were present will not feel so much afraid of that book as some pretend to be. We were sorry to have the meetings close. The Saints of eastern Iowa understood that Bro. Roth was to remain in the district the remainder of the conference year, and had made arrangements accordingly. While we do not presume to find fault with those in authority, yet we do believe that they are anxious to know the needs of every place, and we believe if Bro. Roth is taken out of this district the work will suffer loss. We know that we have not enough elders in the district, and consequently the work is greatly retarded. Therefore we have not asked for much of the elders' time, and have tried to do what we could; but now we think the time has come when we need help. When a miner goes out prospecting and "strikes a lead," he does not leave it until he has secured at least all the nuggets of the precious metal near the surface. When there are some near the kingdom we do not like to see them neglected but brought into the fold. It is like sowing grain and neglecting to harrow, and the birds come and devour it. Then what will the harvest be? When a new opening is made or an interest gained, if it is neglected, it will take about as many sermons to get back the interest again, hence, much time and labor is lost. If we could have enough elders or preachers to have regular services wherever there was a branch or a few Saints, though it were only once a month, then the work would move so much more rapidly, and the Saints could do what circumstances permitted to keep the work alive. We cannot all preach, but we can all do something. And the people could have a better chance to understand the gospel before something claimed so much of their attention. Order, regularity, and persistent effort is what will bring the bountiful harvest.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Your sister in Christ,

JULIA NEWLIN.

HAMILTON, Scotland, Dec. 3.

Editors Saints' Herald:—I thought this morning I would write and let your readers know how we were progressing in this land of Scotland. I would first express my thanks in behalf of the mission to Sr. M. Woods, Bro. and Sr. Houston, Bro. and Sr. Wylie, and "a friend," per Bro. Pitt and others, for their kindness and generous response to our appeal in your columns which appeared some time ago. We have become acquainted with several persons who are disposed to treat our message with favor through being introduced by some of our American brothers and sisters. We cannot foretell the results, but hope for the best. We also have had the sympathy and generous help of many of our brothers and sisters in Leeds, and we pray that God will abundantly bless all for their goodness and remembrance of us since being here.

On September 15 we were made glad by the appearance of Elder T. Taylor, of Bradford, Yorkshire, who spent a week with us, this being his annual vacation, and we all appreciated his material assistance in the spreading of the glorious news of the restored gospel. While he was here we preached in Hamilton, Airdrie, and Glasgow in the open air, and were successful in having a good hearing on each occasion. I personally was glad of Bro. Taylor's company, and felt that it would be very encouraging to have the counsel and help of an elder to be associated with us in our missionary labors in this land.

Through the kindness of this brother, the writer was privileged to enjoy some of the scenery for which "Bonnie Scotland" is world-famed, and its reputation is by no means underserved. The rugged, wild, mountainous coasts of the Western Highlands presented a magnificent spectacle as we sailed through the lochs, while on either hand the heather-clad hills arose straight up from the water's edge and were lost to sight in the clouds above. Truly, nature contributes her best not only for the existence but also for the enjoyment of man, and one feels impressed that the late Henry Drummond was correct when he penned his beautiful thoughts on coöperation in nature unfolding her testimony in such poetic eloquence, establishing the truism, "Nothing lives unto itself," but that "the struggle for the life of others seems to be everywhere impressed upon the universe as the veritable foundation of 'Altruism.'"

We also visited "Auld Reekie" (Edinburgh) in the interests of the work, which has recently become so conspicuous in the religious world as the place in which the great event in Scottish church history has been consummated, namely, the union between the United Presbyterian Church and the Free Church, which we hope may presage the final union with the one body of which alone Christ is the head. Surely these heartfelt feelings of the human family bespeak the insatiable longing for the bread of life in place of the husks of human wisdom and tradition upon which religion has become as starved as "Pharaoh's lean kine." May it be so; but just as every great movement in history is met with opposition and persecution, so it seems that this union of ecclesiastical bodies in Scotland is not so felicitous as was first anticipated. The noise of opposition and rioting is in the air, and the malcontents are strenuously seeking by foul means to accomplish what argument and arbitration have failed to bring about.

We found some in Penstone, Tranent, and Elphinstone, outlying villages of Edinburgh, who had erstwhile been active members of the church, but the wrongdoing of one whom they looked upon as the ambassador of Christ devastated the work and we found, like archæologists, only the debris of ruins to show us of what had once been. Our efforts to reanimate these lifeless members, so far has been a failure. With the confiding simplicity of country people, they had almost lost sight of God in the fleshly instrument, and when their idol was shattered the light died out; and the passage of time has put out even the smouldering ashes of their first love, and one told us they "could never, nor had they ever, joined any other church, and they would not hear us because they were not going to be deceived again." On the threshold of eternity, it seems inexpressibly sad that our aged brethren and sisters cannot forget the wrongs of the past and once again resume their communion with the household of faith, but so it is. We cannot compute the effect of individual influence for good or evil in the life and experience of our fellow man, and how necessary it is that we all, especially ministers, "walk worthy of our vocation," and when we remember according to Paul that "what the world knows of God it knows through us," surely we cannot be too careful in our deportment among the childen of men; position and rank seem very desirable to many, and "unholy ambition" has been the rock upon which multitudes have struck and sunk in despair, yet the increase of honors brings increase of responsibility, and when we reflect upon these things our only ambition is to be "an honest man—the noblest work of God."

> "Rank is but the guinea's stamp;
> The man's the gowd for a' that."

Let us see to it that our position before the world shall be honored and respected by ourselves as a sacred treasure, and in so doing win the respect of others. We were kindly cared for by one Mr. Dudgeon, who had espoused the Brighamite cause. Being fast on for eighty years of age, his views had crystallized and it was almost impossible to show him anything different to what he had got.

On Saturday, September 22, Bro. Taylor left us for his home. We felt sorry to part, as we had enjoyed our brief intercourse.

Bro. Miller and I have continued our open air meetings in Hamilton, and sometimes visiting Airdrie, we get a fair hearing, in Hamilton especially. Of course we are meeting bitter opposition from a sect here who call themselves Brethren of Christ, but so far there has been a complete bankruptcy of Christlike actions and sayings in their treatment of us. They are very emphatic in their advertisement of salvation, yet their much vaunted sanctification does not prevent them from grossly and willfully misrepresenting us to the people in a manner anything but truthful or fair. They are privately informing people that we are Mormons, those characters of whom it is written "steal into houses and lead captive silly women," urging the people not to come and hear us. Both in public and private they have consigned us to hell, and according to these oracles, there is not any chance of us being saved. The very vivid manner in which they depict the horrors of the tortured in this place and their continual preaching of it might lead one to believe that their especial commission was to represent that firm, besides having had a more than theoretical acquaintance with it. However, they are doing us no hurt,—their conduct recoils upon themselves. One threatened us, saying I ought to be thankful he was converted or else he would have given me something, etc., and because I do not preach that everybody deserved to be literally blazing in the unquenchable fire of this infernal holocaust, I should go there. Well, we still have an attentive audience which greets us whenever the weather permits us to occupy there.

On Saturday, December 1, we had the pleasure of again troubling the waters, this time in Glasgow, when Bro. Alex. Porteus, a young man who has heard the old, old story at these meetings, covenanted to follow Christ through good and evil report. We believe his wife will soon follow. She is investigating as are more whom we trust will follow this example. It seems very difficult to penetrate the indifference to religion many, many people have, and one is tempted to be discouraged at the paucity of success. We are still distributing literature from door to door, as well as in our public meetings in the open air. The weather is very inclement, street preaching is heavy, still we are pressing on doing the best we can, trusting the day will come when we shall reap the harvest.

The Mormons studiously avoid us. Their fiat has gone forth. Bro. Cairns and the writer are to be visited with some calamity for our lies (?), etc., especially for daring to assert Brigham Young was not a prophet of the Lord.

We were glad to make the acquaintance of Bro. James Wilson, of Glasgow, who was baptized into the church by Bro. F. Sheehy at Providence, Rhode Island. He is an earnest man, full of zeal for the cause, and we hope soon to commence permanent operations in the city of Glasgow where, from out of the teeming multitudes we hope to gather some who will accept God's overtures of mercy and love.

So far as I can judge, the success of this work is dependent largely upon concentrated, coherent efforts on the part of the ministry; spasmodic, intermittent struggles don't effect much. "The continued dropping of the water wears away stone" if it is all in one place.

Bro. Miller has had a spell of sickness, rather severe, but is feeling better and has resumed his employment. Wife and baby are now here in Hamilton, which accounts for change in address. This arrangement is much preferable, besides saving the expenses of board. We still ask for the help of all who can help the work here in Scotland, besides an interest in your faith and prayers.

We were sorry to notice the death of Bro. Hansen, of the Scandinavian mission, and pray that God will comfort the mourners.

In hope of ultimate triumph, yours,

J. W. RUSHTON.

CHAUNCEY, Ohio, Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I left home November 17, and went to Pine, where Bro. O. B. Thomas and I recently baptized ten. I preached three times to full houses of attentive listeners. At Davisville I organized a branch on the 20th, by the direction of Apostle W. H. Kelley (missionary in charge), and the Ohio district conference. I baptized three while there, and confirmed one other baptized by Bro. Hill. Since the organization of the new branch eight have been baptized. All was peace when I left them. At Creola I assisted Bro. O. B. Thomas a few times; he baptized three while there. At Union Furnace I held two meetings and baptized three, who were enrolled with Creola branch. I visited New Straitsville, Hemlock, and Sand Run, preaching at each place; at Sand Run, December 9, I baptized two,—a Mrs. Stedman and Sr. Ceilia Vernon's daughter Rose. Sister Vernon has recently buried her husband and a bright little daughter; surely her trials are severe. Saints, please remember her at the throne of grace; she is worthy, and is striving to bring a large family up in the fear of the Lord. I went to New Pittsburgh and preached twice for the scattered few there.

The Saints and friends of Sand Run and New Pittsburg showed their appreciation of my labors as their overseer for a number of years, by surprising me with a present of thirteen dollars in money; and saying, as it was presented by Srs. Maggie Hanna of Sand Run and Carrie Davies of New Pittsburg, "This is for Bro. Moler's individual use; we give it to him, and not to the church." I assured them then, and do still, that it was duly appreciated.

I came here and am holding meetings in the town hall; congregations small but very attentive. I am domiciled with Bro. G. W. Hull and family, who know how to care for the missionary. I close here tonight, and go to Union Furnace to assist Bro. O. B. Thomas, Bro. S. B. Kriebel, the station agent there, having procured the K. of P. hall for a series of meetings. Brethren T. J. Beatty and V. M. Goodrich have been doing a good work in the city of Columbus; they have baptized quite a number, and the missionary in charge recently organized a branch there. All things considered, the work is progressing fairly well in this district.

Early in the month of March, 1901, I expect to gather up my family and move Zionward, and locate in the town of Holden, Missouri, having recently bought me a home there. And I wish through the Herald to express my thanks to the Saints and friends in Ohio district for their support and noble manner in which they with very few exceptions have stood by me. May the God of heaven and earth reward them. I pray the Lord to bless you, Bro. Joseph, and your counselors with great wisdom, that you indeed may wisely and righteously preside over this great body of the family of God, and that all in authority may seek to honor their calling and office.

My address is Limerick, Ohio, until March 1, 1901, after that Holden, Missouri.

Yours still in the conflict, striving to win the race,

JAMES MOLER.

[Bro. Moler seems to have come to a practicable solution of the question, "Shall we gather?" by first getting ready, then moving into the region round about. Welcome, brother.—ED.]

BAR HARBOR, Maine, Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—It seems to be the rule of correspondents to write when a favorable report can be given. This is as it should be, we think, as a tale of woe in a letter or prayer meeting has usually a depressing effect. I have been associated with Elder H. J. Davison since the latter part of August, with the exception of a few weeks he spent in Aroostook county. So far as I know, the work never was in a better condition in Maine. Everywhere we have been good audiences were willing to listen attentively to the gospel story. Bro. Davison, by his genial disposition and kind counsel, makes friends everywhere for the cause. He is no doubt a descendant of Tubal Cain, as he knows how to "handle the organ."

November 8 we began a series of meetings at South Gouldsboro. I was born there, but moved away when a child, and now return with the best thing in the world, the gospel. Some there are about ready for baptism, but the icy salt water seems to cool their ardor. In leaving South Gouldsboro Bro. Davison preached a rousing sermon illustrating the difference between man's teaching and our Lord's. He put such statements as, "Raise your hand and be saved before leaving the room," against, "He that shall endure to the end the same shall be saved," on a blackboard with chapter and verse of scriptural quotations. Also, "Believe only," against, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit," etc. He neglected to erase it, and as the next day was Sunday, with an appointment out for a Baptist at the same hour, it was well. The minister came, carried his manuscript up to the desk, then turned and read carefully the comparative statements. He must have decided his sermon was not for the occasion, as he picked it up and put it away in his pocket. He talked awhile without making reference to the "writing on the wall," though it was evident he interpreted the "weighed in the balances and found wanting." He placed himself on man's side all right. "If anyone asks," said he, "why I didn't use my manuscript, tell them the Lord did not want me to." I think if he would be a little more solicitous he would find the Lord didn't want him to preach at all.

From there we went to Birch Harbor and preached to a crowded house nearly every evening during our series. An evangelist and a Baptist minister tried to hinder us by putting in appointments ahead, but we had the sympathy of the people, while they could get but small audiences. Many houses are open to us that never were before, and public opinion is in our favor, apparently.

Corea was just as nice to us, and we left sadly, with hearty invitations to come again.

December 6 we started for conference at Stonington. Staid one night at Bar Harbor with Bro. and Sr. McKeown, noble Saints, who make the travelers welcome. I noticed a large picture of our present prophet hanging in a conspicuous place.

Arriving at conference we found a fair delegation from surrounding branches. Elders Cunningham and Davison were chosen to preside. Elder John Billings was elected president of district. Preaching and other services received favorable comment from all, and a good spirit prevailed. Elders Davison, Ames, and writer were speakers for conference. Bro. Mark Billings was ordained a teacher and Bro. Chase Dunham a priest, on recommendation of their respective branches. We hear Bro. Greene's work spoken highly of and both he and Elder T. C. Kelley are greatly missed. Bro. Blanchard was unable to be present, owing to ill health, we understand. The next conference will be held at Mountainville.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Elder Cunningham is to hold a series of meetings at Cranberry Isle this and next weeks. Bro. Davison and I came to Bar Harbor by boat yesterday and go to Lamoine for meetings till last of next week, when he goes home for the holidays.

Thus is our report favorable, we think, with the field "white unto the harvest."

In gospel bonds,

C. H. RICH.

OLD DANESMOOR, Eng., Dec. 6.

Editors Herald:—The work here seems to be moving slowly along. We ought to be up and doing. There has been contention of late, but the cloud is slowly passing away. I know that if we were as faithful as the work is true, we should be more blessed than we are. We have not many members here in Clay Cross branch, but if the few would make a united stand, we would make progress, because it has been promised us by our heavenly Father. We should live in accordance with his word. If we gain only one or two souls, great shall be our reward. May the time speedily come when we shall be able to gather some sheaves into the fold, is the earnest prayer and desire of your brother in Christ, GEO. H. HOLMES.

PLEASANTVILLE, Iowa, Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—Since my last communication I attended our district conference and reunion held at Colfax, after which Bro. J. W. Morgan and myself went to Baxter with the district tent expecting to hold a series of meetings there; but the weather became so cold that the people could not stay in the tent without endangering their health. We held a few meetings, and while there were visited by Brn. W. C. Nirk and George Shimmel, who gave good instructions that were well received.

We then moved the tent to Rhodes in hopes the weather would be more favorable, but it remained so cold we stored the tent for the winter, and Bro. Morgan went home for a few days, and I went three and one half miles north to the home of Bro. Charles and Sr. Bessie Richards and commenced a series of meetings in their schoolhouse, continuing two weeks, and would have been glad to have staid two weeks longer, as the interest in the meetings demanded it, but corn picking came on and we thought best to close until some future time. While there, we were much encouraged by the assistance rendered us in the singing by Sr. Mattie Hughes and all the good Saints of Rhodes, who seemed to be willing to make any sacrifice to spread the gospel. Bro. Nirk was on hand and did much to make the meetings a success. There is a new opening, and I have every reason to believe that the Lord has sheep there that will come into the fold.

I held three services at the home of Bro. Nirk, where I met a number of live Saints and some interested friends. Then went to Oskaloosa and stayed over Sunday with the Saints; then went to Charter Oak, where I had a good hearing and found the Saints living their religion and doing all they can for the spread of the gospel. They stopped their Sunday school for a short time during the hot weather, but all were anxious to have it started. Outsiders seemed as much interested as the Saints, so we started the school again.

From here I went to Concord and held a week's meeting with a good hearing, considering the busy times. I went to North Liberty and started a series of meetings, but owing to the corn not being picked I closed for the present.

Through the courtesy of Bro. Bare I next reached Sandyville. From there I went to the Con schoolhouse, half way between Sandyville and Pleasantville, where I have been for the past two weeks, and in spite of mud and bad weather the congregations are good and a good interest prevails. I am well cared for at the home of James Foisher though neither him nor his good wife are members of the church. I do not know where I will go from here.

Yours in bonds,

W. H. KEPHART.

DENVER, Colorado.

Bro. R. C. Evans arrived in the city Friday the 14th and remained for the Sunday services. Fair-sized congregations greeted him both morning and evening. His talk was very interesting.

The first Sunday in January will be a rally day with the Denver Saints, and it is requested that all be present, both members of the branch and members of the church that are not members of the branch. Come, Saints, come up to the work of the Lord and let us make this a time long to be remembered. E F. SHUPE.

PARK RIVER, N. D., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—The correspondence department of the Herald has a particular charm, and a most wholesome and beneficial effect upon all, I believe; but feelings of especial gratitude fill the hearts of those who are isolated. And when we read of the gallant struggles of the Saints of latter days, we confess to a fellow feeling that makes us "wondrous kind." One writer said, some time ago, Why don't the elders write of their failures? Because there are none. What! I answer again, if we are truly engaged in God's work, there can be no failures.

There are discouragements without number; we have our share of them in Dakota; but God has decreed, "The prophecies and promises . . . shall all be fulfilled.

This mission has suffered more this year, from a variety of causes, than at any time within my recollection. First the unprecedented drouth of last summer has paralyzed industry and trade of all kinds; this was followed by abnormally heavy fall rains, and at present we are suffering from deep snows and periodic storms of great severity, commonly known out here as "blizzards."

In the towns the popular churches invariably close their doors against us; the halls cost from two to seven dollars per night, numerous interruptions of "lodge nights" intervene and paralyze our best efforts, and experience has taught me that a regular attendance of one dozen people in a country school is productive of more good than a spasmodic town effort.

I have just concluded a three weeks' effort in the eastern part of Ramsey county, thirty miles from a railroad. Had fair interest, considering inclement weather and other drawbacks. One blizzard interrupted three successive nights. Another night, Bro. and Sr. Langton in company, we attempted to force a passage; but, losing sight of everything but our own sleigh in the blinding snow, we were compelled to take the back trail.

I leave here for Cavalier county today, by invitation of Bro. Crowel, who, I understand, had nobly tried to labor locally.

By letter from Brn. Thorburn and Houghton, I learn that the former is "doing the best he can," at Leeds, York, Knox, and adjacent points, and the latter in the "mountains," somewhere, struggling to make all that he meets acquainted with the glad gospel news.

May the God of heaven bless each and all of his children everywhere! Let us call upon him to give us faith and strength to do our duty, labor in whatever sphere, conscientiously, undeviatingly, wisely.

I again beg leave to remind the Saints of the needs of the bishopric; and I especially solicit correspondence with all "scattered members" in the two Dakotas, with a view to recording their names, and also as a means for planning new openings for gospel labor.

Yours for enlightenment and progress,

WM. SPARLING.

Editors Herald:—Bro. H. E. Moler and I began a series of meetings in the town hall at Essex on the last night of November and continued until Wednesday, December 12, with moderate attendance and a fair show of interest. Of course our presence did not fail to induce some one to stir the antiquated and unsavory odors of twice-dead and thrice-corrupted stories as to the origin and character of Mormonism, so-called. But we are not so favored as our brethren in many fields. There the opposition is open, bold, defiant. Here it is quiet, secret, cunning. There public attack and defense furnish opportunity for honest examination and fair play. In our field the opposer may attend our meetings and make no attempt to utilize the proffered opportunity to question, criticise, and oppose publicly; but he has a more clever way. Quietly, even slyly, he finds opportunity to poison the minds of the people by circulating information gleaned from what Chambers' encyclopedia calls the "most satisfactory" source, our enemies, so at Essex the aforesaid work of Chambers and the autobiography of Peter Cartright were used privately.

The latter's reference to Mormonism I had not noted before. It might interest some of the Herald readers. This life of that old-time preacher of note issues from the M. E. press of Cranston and Curts, Cincinnati. Mr. Cartwright tells, on pages 343, 344, of a visit to and conversation with "Jo" Smith which accords much better with his own brag spirit than with the facts of the life and utterances of Joseph Smith. Then he puts the finishing touch to his story by relating what he claims to have occurred at a Methodist camp meeting in Morgan county (state not named): Quite a number of "Mormons" were in attendance. One of them, a woman, fell over in her husband's arms and began to "speak in tongues." He forgets that the "falling down" spirit belongs to Methodism, not to Mormonism. He also forgets Paul's counsel, "forbid not to speak with tongues," for he told the woman to "stop that gibberish." Then he says the woman claimed to have a message from the Lord for him, and he would not hear that. As a result the woman's husband and himself exchanged some warm words, ending in this reverend gentleman using these words (p. 345): "Now start, and don't show your face here again, nor one of the Mormons. If you do you will get Lynch's law." I wonder if the people who read such stuff, accepting it as evidence against the "Mormons," enjoy the picture of a camp meeting in glorious progress while a few "Mormons" dangle from the limbs of near by trees, where they have been hung at the instigation of the pious leader of the meeting. How can intelligent people accept as unqualified truth the unsupported statements of men who are so manifestly moved by a spirit of prejudice and violence as rabid as that that has shed the blood of thousands who dared to believe and teach unpopular things?

This pious exponent of the doctrine of the meek and lowly Nazarene devotes quite a deal of space to argument justifying the mob that slew Joseph and Hyrum. On page 346 he says: "A few years after that, an outraged and deeply injured people took the law into their own hands and killed him and drove the Mormons from the state. They should be treated as outlaws in every country and clime."

In view of these statements in this book, it follows that he who circulates such literature becomes a party to lawlessness in theory and the opponent of order and good government. His position here is not enviable, and what of the hereafter?

We held meetings at Wilmington, from Thursday, 13th, until Monday, inclusive. The Saints there are alive, maintaining prayer meeting, Sunday school, and Religio. Last night we began a series at Deselm. Brn. Roush and Pitt have preached here a number of years ago, and interest was good. We hope to build upon their foundation.

The usual preparations for Christmas celebration are in progress among Saints as well as others. Will there be the usual amount of devotion to the heathen-originated, Roman-adopted, Protestant-stamped customs? Will there be the common quantity of unbecoming frivolity in the house of God? Must we see the same amount of money wasted upon useless trinkets and toys? Will we, as usual, spend more than we can afford to buy presents for those who, unlike us, are able to buy expensive presents, lest we receive more than we give? Shall we have that idiotic clown, Santa Claus, with his worse than nonsense, celebrate for us the holy event of the coming of the Son of God? Shall we lie to the innocents concerning this personage? Shall we in the spirit of sobriety worship the God of heaven, or in the love of pleasure, worship the God of this world? And shall we continue to celebrate the day we don't believe is Christ's birthday? I trust that we may come up higher in this as in other things. Desiring truth in all things, I am, Your brother,

ADAM J. KECK.

COLUMBUS, Kan., Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—Reading the Herald this morning, and meditating over the blessings the Lord blesses his people with when faithful, I feel to rejoice that with them I am one. If Saints could realize the great advantage there is in living a life that would imitate Christ! In so doing we have a claim to the blessings which accrue from obedience to the gospel, and it would not make us feel that we were asking for things we really had no right to ask for, and if we received the blessings it would be more as a pure gift or mercy of God toward us, than a reward for the work and labor we have done in order to secure the payment.

The time is coming when the Saints of God must wear the breastplate of faith in order to escape the judgment which will surely come. I believe the Lord will take care of his people; but who are his people? Those who have their names upon the record as Saints? No! The Lord defines himself when he said: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The Saints in this branch are trying to apply the golden rule, Do unto others as you would have others do unto you. I have never in my sixteen years' experience in this church, observed more true love for one another than I have in this branch. The Saints know their duty. When you go to the house of worship, you will always see the dear faces of your brethren and sisters, and the Spirit of the Lord is there to bless. It puts me in mind of old times when I first met with the Saints. I remember twenty years ago when I first came to this country, I was not then able to speak or understand a word of English. My stopping place was with Bro. R. H. Davis, Mound Valley, Kansas (now Angola). It happened that Bro. and Sr. J. T. Davis were there, he preaching. I attended meeting regularly, but the first meeting that affected me was prayer and testimony. Sr. France (now dead) bore her testimony and prophesied in the name of the Lord. I was looking on, when all at once it seemed the house was full of something, what I did not know. If I ever loved the Saints, I did at that time. I imagin the heavens would not be any better. My whole body shook. The tears were filling my eyes. Yes, I left the house. I did not care to let anyone see my feelings. The same Spirit we enjoy now when meeting with the Saints.

Our presiding officer is well known to the Saints all over for his love and the great sacrifices he has made for this gospel. You will always find him at his post. He is a father to the Saints in this place, with his words of advice and encouragement to go on. Well it would be, if Saints in branches had such shepherds as Bro. W. S. Taylor. May the Lord bless the brother and spare him years to come, that the Saints may be blessed through him. We have other brethren in this branch who will some day be called upon to meet this world with their testimony, whom I believe are chosen vessels of the Lord.

Brn. F. Keck, E. A. Davis, I. P. Baggerly, and W. S. Pender have been with us of late. We had some good sermons preached by them, two being baptized by Bro. Keck. We have a good Sunday school, and when time comes for school, you will always see the parents take their children, or the children take their parents, I do not know which, but they are all there, which, I think, is an act that will do for imitation. I have learned that Sunday school is one of the grandest auxiliaries to the church, for here you have the minds of the ones the Lord said, of such is the kingdom of God. It is the first round to Christianity. The child will learn to love the Lord and form a right conception of Deity, and when coming to years of accountability he is able to understand the teaching of the gospel, as the parents are instructed to give in Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

We were blessed with the presence of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley at our last reunion, and the instruction we received from him on Sunday school work did not fall on thorns or by the wayside, but I believe is bearing fruit. The Saints who are blest with such men to always be with them have much to be thankful for. Come again, brother.

As I am writing, my companion is doing her housework, and I can hear her singing,—

There must be no sleeping soldiers
In the army of the Lord.

Ah! if we were all able to understand the meaning of these words, No sleeping soldiers! Saints, let us try to be awake and at our post when called upon, that the work may prosper. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

J. C. SEVERINE.

HOPE.

Hope comes to us all with its cheery smiles,
And bids us look up to the far-off hills;
Where the light lingers yet for awhile
We lay down the burdens of our mortal ills.

Hope wipes the sweat from the tired laborer's brow,
Bringing to mind the happy rest of home.
Hope cheers the Christian in his toil,
The promise of a rich reward to come.

And to the weary Christian on life's weary road
Hope points the gushing fountain and the palms;
To those who are ready to fall by the way,
The waving fields and the harbor smiling calm.

Yes, Hope is our inspiration and our guide,
Solace in trouble, support in strife.

THE YEAR'S RECORD.

The year is done; it's smiles and tears,
It's toil and rest, it's hopes and fears
No more shall lift or bend us low.
Till time shall end, we ne'er shall know
How much of good, how much of ill,
Its closely written pages fill.
How many deeds the whole year through,
Had we the power, would we undo,
How many words would we recall—
Those words we let so idly fall,
How many thoughts from day to day
We wish that we might sweep away.
Alas! We cannot now retrace
One step, nor any blot erase
That our mistakes have placed upon
The pages of the year that's gone.
Great God, who only can repair
Our life that's past, into thy care
We trust in humble penitence,
In pity pardon our offense;
And every shadow sin has cast
Clear from the record of our past.

SELECT READING FOR JANUARY MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCALS.

[The following reading is taken from a recently published volume entitled "Viavi Hygiene." As we have given some time to the subject of Heredity, it seems wise to consider the influence of Environment and we hope that much help will be received through a full discussion of the same.—ED]

ENVIRONMENT.

The two factors determining what we are and what we make of ourselves are heredity and environment. Heredity is the essential part of our nature that comes to us with our birth; environment is the external circumstances of our lives. The traits and tendencies which we inherit have been transmitted to us by our progenitors—our parents, grandparents, great-grandparents, and so on back indefinitely. The nature of these traits and tendencies has been determined for us, without our volition or consent, by the lives which our progenitors led. Many of these traits and tendencies are good, many others are bad; but it is a wonderful law of nature that the good tends to overcome the bad, whether physical, mental, or spiritual. It is a knowledge of this fact that makes us responsible creatures, for we know that by cultivating the good and suppressing the bad we can constantly grow better and steadily tend to arrive at human perfection. If we did not have a knowledge of this natural tendency we should not be responsible creatures, should not be endowed with a conscience, and should have no incentive to be good other than a fear of the consequences of being bad. But as habit is a powerful factor in determining the development of character, we may easily fall into the habit of ignoring what is good in our heritage, cultivating what is bad, drowning the conscience within us, and thus drift into evil which leads to ruin.

TWO FORCES OPERATE TOGETHER.

Heredity both affects and is affected by environment. A strong inherited character has the ability to bend and shape the circumstances of life to suit its own wishes and demands. Many of the greatest achievements of men have been accomplished under the most disadvantageous circumstances. Burnham, the brilliant American astronomer, was a hard-working court stenographer, having time to study astronomy only at night, and with the aid of a small telescope which he himself mounted in the crudest fashion: yet with this equipment of time and apparatus he became the greatest discoverer of double stars that the world has produced. History is full of such cases. The stronger the inherited traits, the greater the ability to overcome disadvantageous circumstances. Hence the truth is put before us in all its tremendous force that if we wish our children and children's children to be great in the struggle of life, we must contrive by every exercise of brains and conscience to see that they inherit from us all the strength and health and will that it is possible for us to transmit to them by intelligent living.

HOW WILL POWER IS INSTILLED.

On the other hand, a nature born with a feeble will and no ambition nor pride will yield most readily to the influence of its environment. It frequently happens that this environment is wholesome and uplifting, but this is opposed to the general scheme of nature and to facts as we know them. We all know that to be born with a silver spoon in the mouth is oftener a curse than a blessing. All religions understand the value upon character of the practice of self-denial and the performance of hard and ceaseless labor. All the saints in all the calendars led lives of the severest austerity, activity, and self-abnegation. To be born to a life of ease means generally to be born to a life of idleness, and we all know that idleness is the father of most of the evil in the world. If it does nothing worse it prevents a development of the good within us, which needs exercise for its growth and strength. It is common to the knowledge of all that a large proportion of the sons of millionaires are little more than social outcasts, and that many of them die in youth or early manhood.

STRENGTH NEEDED FOR EXISTENCE.

It is a law of nature that every living thing must be put upon a strain. If it is not sufficiently strong to bear the strain, it must break and give room to something that is. Nature is a swarming beehive of tremendous and ceaseless activities. Idleness is a disease within its economy, and it will leave nothing untried to thrust it out. The stress and strain are constant and severe. Social and business usage naturally acquires the same characteristic. Competition is as strenuous in every department of life as among the shrubs and trees of the forest. From this competition come strength, agility, and courage. If the strain is greater than can be borne, we go down and are lost and forgotten.

A FAULT IN MODERN EDUCATION.

Habit comes largely from environment. As we are social creatures, we are imitative. The son, instinctively longing to be a man like his father, will imitate his father's vices as readily as his virtues. Young men thrown together in cities and colleges drift into a common way of thinking, talking, and acting. A curious determining factor here introduces itself. A thing becomes a temptation because it is forbidden. The fault with the general system of instruction is that it pays more attention to prohibiting a thing than to explaining why it is pernicious. The natural spirit of enterprise and discovery in the young urges them to see and touch forbidden things. There is, besides, inherent in all a certain impatience under personal restraint which is as easily translated into a love of license as a love of liberty. Added to all this is a spirit of adventure inherent in the blood. So, taking all things together, the general effect of instruction to make evil a temptation instead of a warning is bad.

This renders the environment of the young a very important matter. The more fascinating it is, for any reason, the stronger it acts as an element in determining character and the development of life. If its nature is wholesome, its effects will be, for good comes out of good; but also, evil comes out of evil.

AN ENDLESS FIGHT FOR EXISTENCE.

Heredity and environment are constantly reacting one upon the other. Each is striving to gain the advantage in molding character. They are not essentially antagonistic elements, but as a matter of fact they are generally opposed. In a natural wild state, plants, animals, and human races are exactly suited to their environment. This adaptation has come about by a very slow and painful process of adjustment and the survival of the fittest. But even then, a constant warfare is in progress among the different orders that inhabit a specified wild locality. Men kill animals and rob fruit trees to secure food, animals kill smaller animals and rob birds of their eggs, birds eat worms and insects and seeds, and plants of one order struggle ceaselessly for possession of the ground with plants of another order. Only the strongest or the most ingenious survive. Some animals take on a coat or color which makes it difficult for their enemies to find them. Many are armed with weapons of defense as well as offense. Killing goes on ruthlessly, and the animals which cannot fight in defense of their lives must have something to compensate for their lack of strength and size—they must be agile, swift, or cunning.

MAN EASILY ADAPTS HIMSELF.

Civilized man is under the operation of the same great law, though its operation is complicated by numerous circumstances. If he is not naturally fitted to his environment, he fits himself to it by resort to artificial measures. In cold climates he wears clothes to compensate for the lack of a coating of hair.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

If he does not find all the foods that suit him, he cultivates them, often under the most artificial conditions. This shows most splendidly his innate power to bend extraneous conditions to his will. If he fails to do so, it is generally not from a lack of strength for the purpose, but from a weakness to yield rather than a willingness to fight. Being gregarious by instinct, he must conform in a large measure to ways and customs which he finds; it is his natural tendency to do so. This is the origin and this the danger of the imitative faculty.

THE NATURE OF GREAT ACHIEVERS.

Those who imitate least are those who have the strongest wills. If we were solely imitative beings, none of us would think of making those great departures which indicate distinctive individualities, and out of which all great individual achievement arises. It is the men and women of distinctive individualities who do the thinking for the world, who make the discoveries, who build railroads, who paint great pictures and write great books, who probe into the secrets of nature and drag them forth for the benefit of mankind, and who do all the other noble and inspiring things that make of the world an eternal spectacle and delight. The more easily people adapt themselves to the conditions about them the less they care for something different, and yet something different might be something better.

BE PREPARED FOR A CATASTROPHE.

No matter how comfortably one may be established in life, no matter how snugly one may have fitted one's self into one's environment and found the nicest possible balance between the urging of one's inherited tendencies and the pressure of one's environment, it should be remembered that there is nothing stable in life or the world. At any time a catastrophe may befall us. It may come as war, or pestilence, or severe financial stringency, or great labor strikes, or devastating storms, or sickness, or an accident that transforms us into cripples. There are many ways in which the established order of things may be upset. The man or the woman who can best and most readily change front and effect a new adaptation has a tremendous advantage. The qualities required for this evidently do not come from a peaceful environment, and therefore must be inherited. But they cannot be inherited unless those responsible for our being have lived so that this exceedingly useful power of adaptation, this ability to rise after we fall, will descend to us, and if it can descend to us we can transmit it to our children.

WHAT WE SHOULD GET WITH LIFE.

The deductions which we can draw from this brief glance at heredity and environment as determining factors in our lives are that we may inherit from our parents and remoter progenitors, and transmit to our children and their progeny, essential qualities which are determined by the manner of thinking and living; that the more intelligently we think and live, the greater will be the benefit to our offspring; that we can live so as to make them or break them to a large extent; that heredity and environment react upon each other, each modifying the force of the other to the extent that one has a preponderance over the other; that the stronger the inherited qualities, the greater the power to bend circumstances to the purposes of life; that the weaker the inherited qualities, the greater the danger that the influences of the environment will be evil, and that every sense of right and duty urges us to live so that our offspring shall come into the world equipped for its severe struggles and trials with all the ability that it is possible for us to hand down.

WORK IN UTAH AND IDAHO.

During the reunion held at Pleasant Grove last fall, Thursday, September 6, was set apart as Sunday school day. It proved to be one of the most interesting days of the reunion. Convention work, in which many took an active part, occupied the morning and afternoon sessions; and at night the audience, which more than filled our little chapel, was entertained by a literary and musical program, which all seemed to enjoy. The temporary organization of the previous year having been indorsed by all the Sunday schools of Utah and Idaho, and delegates from most of them being present, a permanent organization was effected under the name of the Utah and Idaho district, with D. W. Wight superintendent; Sr. Jennie Garr, of Ogden, secretary and treasurer.

We are glad to see the interest taken by so many of the Saints in this line of work. It is indeed proving a "help." The example of Bro. and Sr. Gardner, of Clinton, Utah, in keeping a home school ought to be followed by many others who have not the advantage of a regularly organized school. Surely there ought to be no children more worthy of consideration than one's own, and I do not believe that God will hold parents entirely irresponsible for the characters that develop under their own direction.

We appeal to the Saints and ministry throughout the mission to use every effort to develop this important branch of the work. Undoubtedly the most effective labor is that which gets the people to work, and the Sunday school is especially effective in enlisting a class of energetic young people who are apt to imagine there is nothing they can do. Let us not forget that there is work for all, and that there is all the work that all can do. There is no time to lose. We are pulling against the tide, and if we rest on our oars we shall drift. If we are really in earnest, we need not hunt long for something to do.

If this catches the eye of anyone in the district or mission who is interested and wants help, or can help us, we shall be glad to correspond.

Address Jennie Garr, secretary, 801 Washington avenue, Ogden, Utah.

OUR PART IN GOD'S WORK.

The gospel of Christ is not confined to a chosen few, but to all people. It is so extensive and far-reaching in its character, that men of every rank and nationality, regardless of age and physical abilities, may find some part to perform in God's heritage.

He has told us in these latter days "The field is white already to harvest, therefore whoso desires to reap let him thrust in his sickle and reap with his might while the day lasts." That invitation has been accepted by many. Some have reaped until the Lord was satisfied and called them home. Others are still at work, and volunteers are steadily enlisting as laborers in the harvest field. Not only are those holding the priesthood called to do a work, but all who have covenanted to served the Lord are his servants, and each has a work to do, that cannot be done by another.

THE DIFFERENT ORGANIZATIONS

in the church are furnishing employment for many, and the privilege of doing good in the home, the most important place, is open to all. The ones who are performing the noblest part in spreading the truth and making the greatest sacrifices are often the least known to the world, and sometimes to the "household of faith." The true spirit seeks not for prestige, or to display self-ability; but unostentatiously, at every opportunity, tries to help where it is the most needed. This is the grand and deeper side of the gospel, and the place where we must occupy if we desire God's recognition. It is gratifying to know that while man may pass through this life, with his good works unnoticed, the all-seeing eye of God knoweth him and will reward accordingly.

Not all are called to do the same part in the gospel, but each has his

INDIVIDUAL LABOR.

Upon examining a great piece of mechanism, we discover that it is a combination of many parts. Some are large, others are small: but each, having a close relation to the other, has its own work to perform, the small wheels being of as great a necessity as the large massive ones. So may we regard every effort that is being made, whether it be preaching the word, helping in the different auxiliaries to the church, or discharging family duties in the home, as works of no little importance. It is necessary that the works of some be of greater publicity than others, so do the great wheels upon a machine occupy a more conspicuous place, yet that fact does not prove their work to be of more consequence than the minor ones. It may truly be said, no one can say to another, "I have no need of thee."

In whatever place we may occupy in our Master's cause, it is well to examine ourselves and ascertain whether are wholly pure. Satan is at work everywhere, seeking the harder to destroy those who are engaged in a better work. This evil influence was felt by the apostles, in the days when Christ sojourned here, and led them to ask, "Who shall be the greatest?" We need to be upon our guard, lest the enemy take us

www.LatterDayTruth.org

by surprise and we be found God lovers outwardly, while inwardly we seek not his counsel.

Could we but know ourselves as we are known by God, seeing all the imperfections we are making in the place we are trying to fill, it is doubtful whether we would be able to see our brother's failures, because of the multiplicity of our own. J. A. HANSEN,

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of Nodaway District:—It is required of us today to pay our tithing. Do we believe the angel's message? Some say, Yes; and confirm it by their actions. Some have paid their tithes and are still willing to continue to obey the voice of God in so doing. But O how few have said they now want to wake up to duty, not because they expect the Lord to bless them with better crops another year, but because they know it is the law of the Lord, and that law they will obey, knowing that by so doing they will inherit a celestial kingdom. We have been blessed with plenty this year. Don't let us neglect the Lord's treasury. We will soon have to send in our report. Let me hear from you as soon as you can gather in a few dollars. Remember it is only one dollar out of every ten. Isn't that reasonable and just? The Lord has given us all we have, and only requires one tenth. Now Saints, don't neglect this duty any longer. Let me receive a draft from you by the 28th of this month. My address is Mound City, Holt county, Missouri.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF ORDER AND DEBATE.

Notice is hereby given, that by action of the joint council of the seventy, the following proposed amendments to the Rules of Order and Debate will be presented to the General Conference of 1901 for its consideration and action:—

Resolved, that section 161, paragraph 5 (a), be stricken out, and that the following be inserted in its stead: "In case satisfaction shall not be given upon the examination and decision of any cause before a court of elders, an appeal from such decision may be had by the party aggrieved to the bishop's court, and from that court to the high council."

Resolved, that section 151, paragraph 5 (b), be stricken out and in lieu thereof the following be inserted: "In case of appeal, the appellant must set forth clearly to the court to which appeal is made, the reasons for such appeal."

"In case of appeal, the authority to which the elders' court has reported, shall send at once, upon receipt of written notice of such appeal, the papers and minutes of evidence, and a copy of the proceedings of the court in said case, and cause the same to be filed with the court to which appeal is taken."

"Remark. In cases where offending parties have absconded, or are inaccessible to the prescribed labor and methods provided for in paragraph 4, section 161, the words, 'if practicable' should be construed to qualify the conditions named, and proceedings had accordingly. If satisfaction is not had by the party, or parties, the way of appeal is open."

Whereas, the law of God in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 17, paragraph 13, provides that "the several elders composing this Church of Christ" shall meet in conference and transact the business of the church in said conferences, etc., Resolved, that the Rules of Representation, section 176, paragraph 2, be amended to read as follows: "The only qualifications to eligibility to the office of delegate from district to General Conference shall be eldership in the church in good standing."

Resolved, that section 177, paragraph 1, be amended by adding the words: "The qualifications for eligibility as such delegate being that he hold the office of an elder and be in good standing."

Resolved, that section 175 be stricken out, and the following be substituted therefor: "The general officers of the church known as the presidency, the twelve, the high council, the seventy, the presiding bishopric, and all high priests, elders, and priests when traveling under General Conference or general appointment are ex officio members of General Conference, and entitled to voice and vote in General Conference when present."

Resolved, that section 99 be amended by inserting in the sixth line, after the word "affirmative," the words, "By a two-thirds' vote."

Carpenter, born at Arroyo Grande, San Luis Obispo county, California. Blessed by Elder E. Keeler, December 3, 1900, at Arroyo Grande, California.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ANDERSON.—Esther May, daughter of Joseph A. and Eliza J. Anderson, was born September 8, 1900, near Ellston, Iowa. Blessed October 28, 1900, by Elder F. E. Cochran.

SMITH.—At Lamoni, Iowa, at 10:55 p. m., November 18, 1900, to Pres. Joseph and Sr. Ada Rachel Smith, a son, who at blessing will be named William Wallace.

PEAK.—To Elder W. E. and Sr. Mellie E. Peak, September 16, 1900, a daughter, and named Audentia Bell. Blessed October 21, at Galien, Michigan, by Elders J. H. Lake, J. T. Davis, G. H. Hilliard, and W. E. Peak.

DIED.

WATKINS.—At Cleveland, Iowa, December 2, 1900, Sarah, wife of Bro. John Watkins, aged 72 years, 4 months, and 27 days. The deceased was born July 4, 1828, near Swansea, Wales. In September, 1847, she was married to Bro. John Watkins; to their union were born twelve children, four of whom survive and were at the funeral. Besides these and the aged husband, there are twenty-three grandchildren and great-grandchildren left to mourn. In 1849 Sr. Watkins and her husband united with the church. In 1863, when her brother, Jeremiah Jeremiah, returned to Wales on mission, they both united with the Reorganization. In 1869 they came to America, and have resided the last twenty-four years in Cleveland. She was a faithful wife, an indulgent mother, a good neighbor, and a peacemaker in society. She was widely known and held in the highest esteem by all. Elder John R. Evans preached the funeral sermon, assisted by Elder E. B. Morgan.

WILTFONG.—Mrs. Priscilla Wiltfong was born in Ohio, March 18, 1823, died September 10, 1900, aged 77 years, 6 months, 24 days. Was a member of Little Sioux branch.

JONES.—At the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, December 8, 1890, Bro. Gamaliel L. Jones, aged 57 years, 7 months, and 28 days. He was a descendant of one of the families that came over the sea in the Mayflower in 1620. In 1868, at the age of 25 years, he graduated from Middlebury College, Vermont, his native state; and in 1874 said college gave him the degree as master of arts. He taught school in Ohio from 1868 to 1875, when he removed to Becker county, Minnesota, where he taught and also served four terms as county superintendent. Later he was principal of schools at Audubon, and all his life was spent in active work to elevate mankind in mental and moral ways. Religiously he was not satisfied with the creed he had and sought light, until he discovered it in the latter-day work. He was baptized July 15, 1888, and from 1889 till 1899 he was district clerk of Northern Minnesota. He came to the "Home" in November, 1899, and failed slowly during thirteen months, suffering much the latter part of the time. He married in 1868, and had five children. By his request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached his funeral sermon. Bro. John Smith assisted.

HOLMAN.—At Conneautville, Pennsylvania, December 5,1900, Elder John Holman, aged 78 years, 9 months, and 7 days. Born February 28, 1822, in Worcester county, Massachusetts. Death overtook him while feeding his stock in the barn, cause heart failure. Married Abigail Robbins in 1847, whose demise occurred in 1892. Five sons and four daughters were born of this union; two sons and three daughters survive. In 1895 married Miss Hulda Norris, who is left to mourn. He united with the church in the "forties." He had resided in the one township sixty-eight years. He was noted for his sterling integrity, and his word was as good as his bond. Beloved and respected by all who knew him. He was one of our most staunch and faithful members. The church militant suffers loss, but another has been added to the host whose garments have been white, by acceptance of the gospel covenant, and have overcome trials and tribulations. He awaits the glorious resurrection. Funeral sermons preached by Elder G. T. Griffiths at the house and church to a large concourse of people.
