It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

EXTINCT LIFE IN KANSAS.

THE MOOSE AND ELEPHANT CAME BEFORE COYOTE OR POLITICIAN.

Time was when the moose, the elephant, and the bison furnished the sport and provided the food for the inhabitants of the territory now known as Kansas. There were wolves much larger than the gray wolves which occasionally make a report in Comanche County and horses very unlike those which do menial service on the roundups of the short grass country. But all of these roamed on what is now Kansas soil before the coyote and the politician.

Where the big packing houses now stand in Kansas City, Kansas, was a range for moose, and there is proof in plenty that men of that time slaughtered them as ruthlessly as a more advanced generation, perhaps, did the buffaloes.

Some 50,000 years before all this occurred the rhinoceros was a common type, and tigers one third larger than any of these which dance to the whip of the queenly tamer in a circus held forth. But homo sapients did not sport with them. It is a melancholy fact that he did not, for the short grass country produced figs and oranges and bananas and overflowed with honey and reptiles.

But it is this later period that interests those who are restlessly moving about the Sunflower State at this time. Scarcely a month passes without some one announcing through the newspapers a remarkable find which he subsequently learns is a part of an extinct type of animal life. Gove and Phillips counties in the extreme northwestern part of the State have been the most prolific parts of Kansas for fossil hunting, but in nearly every nook and corner is found evidence of what manner of creatures inhabited the State 5,000 years ago. Kansas, although young as States are reckoned, has one of the finest geological collections in the country, and additions are made with marvelous rapidity.

"We have two great difficulties to overcome," said Dr. Williston, Professor of historical Geology of Kansas State University, the other day. "In the first place many of those who find the fossils do not know their value, and destroy them. Occasionally someone finds something that would be of value to us and, knowing that we want it, puts such a high value on it that we cannot afford to add it to our collection."

But for all that the evidence of former life is being rapidly collected. Contemporaneously with the rhinoceros, which was by far the commonest species of a time 50,000 years removed, were the three-toed horse, the four-tusked small elephant, and the earliest species of bear and camel. These came after the sea had dried and the land had been elevated. It was some 45,000 years after this before any evidence can be found in Kansas to show that man counted among the animals of earth. The lakes and ponds dried up and we come to another type of mammal life which is closely allied to that found in various parts of the world to-day.

The mastodon which the magazines have recently called upon to form a subject for imaginary stories, elephants larger than any now living, four distinct species of buffaloes, a half dozen extinct species of horses and camels were the larger types of animal life, and along with them came the living gray wolf and pocket gopher. In all twenty-three species of vertebrate fossils found in the later deposits are in the Kansas geological collection. These deposits prove that the gray wolf is the oldest inhabitant of Kansas, for he connects us with the period 5,000 years ago. Professor Williston has him in fossilized form in the geological collection and Professor Dyche has him mounted as he was captured in the eastern part of the State several years ago.

About nine-tenths of geologic time had passed when the formation from Washington County in Northern Kansas, through diagonally and irregularly to a point where Dodge City now stands, was formed. All the eastern part of the State had been land, the western part under ocean water. The gypsum and salt beds had been formed in Kansas long before this period. The upheaval which resulted in the formation of the Rocky Mountains representing the period in which Western Kansas has been dry land, is less than one fiftieth geologic time. It was in this period that the Missouri and other rivers which flow in an easterly direction from the Rocky Mountain slope were formed. Their banks were muddy and the animals which came to drink from them or the springs became imbedded in the mud and perished, to be covered up and preserved for the paleontologist.

Fossils of the elephant species have been found in nearly all parts of Kansas. They are most frequently to be found, however, in the western and southern parts of the State. The Indian Territory immediately south of Kansas was, however, their most popular resort. In Lane County several years ago Mr. Charles Sternberg discovered in a small area not more than two or three rods in diameter portions of a score or more of these animals. He also found portions of the horse and of a small dog. "Everything goes to indicate that the spot was the site of some old spring, to which the different animals had come and died," is the observation of Professor Williston.

Various species of bison have been found in the Wakarusa Valley, in Gove County, along the Smoky Hill, near Wellington and at Manhattan.

An extinct species of moose was found in Wyandotte County, on which is this label: "From the loess near Kansas City, fifty feet from surface." Its teeth are larger than any of those of the specimens of living moose in Professor Dyche's collection.—Kansas City Star, March 4, 1900.

THE TOBACCO HABIT AMONG THE YOUNG.

It is alarming to observe how greatly the use of tobacco, especially the smoking of cigars and cigarettes, is on the increase among school children. With large numbers of them it has become a confirmed habit. They seem to be either ignorant of or absolutely indifferent to the injurious effects of its use. Some time ago a resolution was introduced in the School Board by Director Mitchell and adopted by that body making the smoking of cigarettes by pupils in the public schools a cause for expulsion. If this rule were strictly enforced as it should be it would do much to break up this pernicious habit. If the teachers in every school would explain to their pupils frequently how deleterious the habit is, how it impairs their health and brings them to manhood with shattered and ruined constitutions, this surely would have the effect of inducing many of them to abandon the use of tobacco. Above all, if parents would only realize more fully the terrible effects upon their children of the use of tobacco in any form, and exercise constant vigilance to prevent the formation of the habit, the practice would soon fall into disuse. I have myself observed, and I am sure that the teachers in our schools will confirm my own observation, that the dullest, most listless and indolent pupils in our schools are those addicted to the use of tobacco. This hurtful weed impairs not only the physical but the mental vigor of children and youth. With their brains dulled, and befogged and stupefied by the noxious fumes of this drug no child can apply himself with energy and spirit to his studies. He will inevitably be a dullard and a laggard in his class, and incapable of putting forth the effort required to make a successful scholar. Tobacco is a poison and I believe that its use in any form is injurious both to children and adults and to children especially. It is a poor argument for its use when we are pointed to the cases of smokers and chewers who have attained to a vigorous and healthy old age. They are at best exceptional cases, who commenced the habit late in life, and probably would have lived to an older and even more vigorous age if they had never acquired it at all. With the hope that it may possibly reach the eyes of many parents who seem so indifferent to the use of this poisonous weed by their children, I republish the following:—

All tobacco contains a liquid, volatile, poisonous alkaloid known as nicotine.

True nicotine, fortunately, is only found in the laboratory of the chemist, but some of the drug is contained in every cigar and every ounce of tobacco that is smoked. One drop of pure nicotine will kill a cat, and many fatal cases have shown that tobacco juice, as expressed or distilled by the heat developed during smoking, is very poisonous. Sonnenschein relates the case of a German student to whom his friends for a joke gave a little whisky in which one of them had dipped a straw with which he had cleaned his pipe. The victim of the joke died in ten minutes.

Even when it is applied to the skin tobacco will often exhibit its poisonous effects. Hildebrand records the serious illness of a whole regiment of hussars who had attempted to smuggle tobacco by concealing it on their persons, and tells of the fate of a chemist who tested nicotine upon himself. He says th at the man touched the stopper of the bottle to his lips, stared wildly, fell to the floor, heaved a deep sigh and died.

Nicotine cannot be regarded as a cumulative poison, but many tarry products which are distilled with it can undoubtedly remain some time in the human body.

The symptoms of tobacco poisoning are familiar to most people, but the vomiting caused by the smoking of a first cigar is often looked upon as the worst effect. That is not so. The physical protest which the poison at first causes soon passes away but there follow nervous symptoms which persist. Nicotine is a nerve poison. Its effect is to greatly impair the heart's action and the respiratory function. By its action on the cerebrum it causes spasms which sometimes amount to musuclar paralysis. The hand of a person who smokes to excess will shake so that his handwriting will be seriously impaired. He may even be unable to light his own cigar or in any way to guide his hand with certainty.—From Annual Report of Prof. E. B. Neely, Supt. St. Joseph, Missouri, Public Schools.

GERMANY'S NOTABLE HERESY CASE.

While American Protestant churches have been watching the ups and downs of the Briggs and McGiffert heresy charges, the church in Germany has witnessed an ecclesiastical episode of a similar kind which has received prompt attention on the part of the authorities, and which even now, after the court of last resort has spoken, is discussed with lively interest throughout the land. The leading points of the case, as reported by the church papers of Germany, are as follows:—

Pastor Weingart has for years been in charge of a flourishing congregation in the city of Osnabrück, in the province of Hanover. His ministrations were very satisfactory; but, in a series of discourses delivered several months ago, he denied the bodily resurrection of Christ and expressed his belief in one of the many "subjective" or vision theories that have been substituted, especially by the university professors, for the "objective" or bodily resurrection of the Lord. An appeal was addressed to the Consistory at Hanover, and this court of thirteen ecclesiastical and secular judges at once suspended Pastor Weingart. Appeal to higher authorities, made also by the great majority of the congregation in question, only ended in a confirmation of the decision of the Consistory. Finally, as a last resort, the petition was addressed to the Emperor himself, as the summus episcopus of the Protestant Church of Prussia; and here too the decision remained the same. Within a period of three months, the case has gone through all the courts and has ended in the final deposition of Weingart from the Christian ministry of the Protestant Church of Prussia because of heresy.

The case has been warmly discussed by all the leading church and secular papers of the country, not on account of any special prominence of the man, but because of the principles involved. One of the most noteworthy documents in the case has been issued lately as a special appeal to "all the Protestants of Germany" by several hundreds of laymen from the leading cities of Hanover. The document says in substance:—

Pastor Weingart has been condemned as a heretic by the ecclesiastical courts for teaching a doctrine concerning the resurrection of Christ which is claimed to be contrary to the Scriptures and the Confessions. And yet even his accusers must acknowledge that he has been a faithful pastor, and that, in the main things, he has confessed his faith in the living Christ; but he cannot believe in the bodily resurrection of the Savior in the sense that this resurrection of the Lord, who died and was buried, could be the object of a sensual perception. This act signifies the condemnation of all those in the Protestant Church of Germany who do not acknowledge the very letter of the Scriptures and of the Confessions as absolutely binding. The most famous theological professors in the country, and many thousands in the ranks of the laity as well as hundreds among the pastors, must fallun der the same condemnation. It is, in fact, the condemnation of the theological science of the day and of the spirit and result of the best detail research in this department. Weingart has taught nothing but what is taught in all the leading universities, and it is hard to see how the church can condemn him and yet permit the theological teachers to continue their work.

This decision has filled the hearts of tens of thousands of earnest Christians with deep concern over the attitude of the Protestant Church authorities, who in method and manners are approaching the models and spirit of the Church of Rome. We demand that the rights of the more liberal-minded Christians be respected, and we protest against such heresy-hunting as has driven Pastor Weingart out of his pulpit. He has only been true to the Spirit of the Reformation, and is a representative of the best type of earnest yet liberty-loving Protestantism.

Religious and political papers view the case in various lights in accordance with their various religious convictions. Thus the Leipsig Volkszeitung, a liberal political journal, says: "With the Weingart case we enter again into the Middle Ages." On the other hand, more positive papers, such as the Kreuzzeitung (Berlin) warmly approve the step taken. The majority of the church papers also approve. The Allgemeine Lutherische Kirchenzeitung ridicules the attempt to make the Weingart case a matter of general agitation throughout the empire in the interests of a radical kind of theology. It says that the liberal papers need not be surprised if the present agitation shall result in no good for their cause, as they have all along tried to kill all deeper interest in church affairs in the public at large, and are now reaping what they have sowed. It cannot be denied that the liberal church papers, especially the leading representative of the class, the Welt (Leipsic), are frightened at the prospect that the powerful arm of the state shall be used in the interests of the confessional and of the long-established beliefs of the church.

Naturally, the Catholic papers are looking with interest upon this struggle between the two factions of the Protestant church, and point to this contest as another proof of the fact that Protestantism cannot endure. Thus, the Cologne Volkszeitung, one of the fairest and most influential Catholic journals of the country, says:

PROSCRIPTION NOT DEAD, ONLY SCOTCHED.

Brn. H. E. Moler and A. J. Keck, laboring in the Northern Illinois district, lately with the branch at Moline, Illinois, secured the use of the Art Gallery in that place, for Sunday school Sunday mornings, and preaching at other hours.

It appears that the U. P's., which means United Presbyterians, also occupy the same building at stated hours. These became restive and somewhat irritated with a joint occupation with "Mormons" and "Polygamists," and the ladies entered a protest against our people occupying, and the owners or custodians of the gallery had to take the matter into consideration.

Whatever was done the controversy got into the press, and on Sunday, March 11, a leader appeared in the Daily Journal in which the fact of the protest is stated; and some representations made which are not as "Jesus would do," if he knew the facts.

We give the editorial and Bro. Moler's reply, which we understand from Bro. Moler the Journal was glad to print in justice to the Moline Saints.

The Rock Island branch is presided over at present by Bro. W. B. LaRue, elder; with Bro. J. B. Johnson, priest, to assist him.

The United Presbyterian congregation is said to be not entirely pleased over the renting of the Art Gallery, in which they have been worshiping, to the sect known as the Latter Day Saints. This sect has been using the Art Gallery for Sunday school purposes early in the forenoon on Sundays. A protest has been made by the ladies of the U. P. Church, and the matter is now under consideration by the owners of the building.

There is a disposition here to treat the Saints as well as anybody else as long as they can show that they are nonpolygamists. If they teach plurality of wives, which is the cornerstone of the regular Latter Day Saints' doctrine, then there will be no glad hand for them in Moline. But the leaders in the local movement are loud in their denials that polygamy is one of their teachings or objects. It is claimed that in Rock Island the Saints got up a protest against the seating of Roberts and forwarded it to Washington, and they are strongly opposed to the Brigham Young practice as Brigham was in its favor.

It is said on the other hand that when the Saints' proselyters called on one of the orthodox ministers lately to ask the privilege of holding meetings in his church, he fired at them a volley of searching questions regarding their doctines, and that they were forced finally to admit that they were tolerably good polygamists after all. One of them is quoted as saying to the minister: "Well, what if we are polygamists, whose business is it?"

The outcome was they failed to get the use of that church for their meetings. It seems strange to many people that these Latter Saints should be against the corner stone teaching of the Mormon Church and yet choose to undergo the infamy of adopting the same name. Why do they not use some other name and not have their intentions misunderstood.

It is well known that the Mormon Church, as strong believer in the union of temporal and spiritual power, is reaching out into every land for recruits, and that their zeal is born of a fanatical conviction that the Mormon Church will some day rule the entire earth and possibly a great slice of the solar system bodies. They are beginning to discourage colonization in Utah, which they already control, but are seeking to get control of Arizona, and portions of Mexico. Though polygamy is prohibited in Utah by statute, it is notorious that the practice is common, but the plural marriages are consummated secretly in the church and cannot be proved under the law. If the local proselyters have any connection with the regular church they are strenuously endeavoring to conceal it from their converts.

The Bible used in their services is called the "Book of Mormon."

Editor Journal:—In your issue of Sunday, March 11, is found an article concerning the Latter Day Saints, who meet in the Art Gallery in Moline. Also some insinuation is made that they hold to the doctrine of polygamy. This insinuation is unjust and is an improper reflection upon a people who are strenuously opposed to this evil doctrine and practice. No one who has any acquaintance whatever with these people can conscientiously make the charge of polygamy against them. Your author, or reporter, should have given the name of the "leader" or Saint that admitted that they were "tolerably good polygamists." We positively and unhesitatingly deny that any such admission was made by any "leader" or member of the class of Latter Day Saints who meet in Art Gallery, and challenge the production of the proof. Shall we have it?

We have met representatives of the Utah Church who have made just such admissions as the one referred to, but we wish it emphatically and distinctively understood that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have not now, nor never have had any affiliation or connection with the Utah Church. They hold that the Utah contingent has departed from the original doctrines of the church, and introduced the doctrines of polygamy, blood-atonement, and Adam-God worship, which doctrines were never known among the early Latter Day Saints, but were simply innovations of Brigham Young and his colleagues, after their assumed leadership of the church.

There were thousands who never followed Brigham Young, and afterward, in 1852, began a reorganization of the church upon the original doctrines of the church, and from that time until now have been strongly opposed to polygamy and kindred heretical doctrines. The headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa, where they have a large and well equipped publishing house, and a local membership of over 1,200. The entire church numbers over 40,000. They hold the Utah Church to be their worst enemies. Their missionaries to Utah have never been privileged to preach in the Salt Lake tabernacle, while this privilege has been accorded to Presbyterians and Methodists.

Your author concludes his article by making the statement that "The Bible used in their services is called the Book of Mormon." To this we reply: The charge is both misleading and untrue. While they believe the Book of Mormon (which, by the way, condemns polygamy), the Bible used in their services is the Bible used in all churches—King James' translation of the Scriptures.

We hope our Presbyterian friends will not allow their prejudices to lead them to an unrighteous persecution of an innocent people, who are doing more to oppose the evils of Utah Latter Day Saints than any other one denomination.

On Tuesday and Wednesday nights at the Art Gallery at 7:30 o'clock Elders A. J. Keck and H. E. Moler will fully and clearly set forth the differences between the true and the Utah, or false, Latter Day Saints.

H. E. MOLER.

NEWS FROM THE SOUTH.

The Chronicle, of Nacogdoches of March 2, gave Bro. J. W. Bryan, a very rough advertisement, as follows:

A Mormon tramp has advertised himself to speak in the courthouse next Sunday evening. He calls himself a Latter Day Saint. He is one of the scoundrels that have been exposed and denounced many times in adjoining counties. His polygamous poison is positively against the civil law and the moral code. It came near leading to fatal disturbances in Tyler county and he was compelled to leave the county, this identical bird, the lecherous sniveling scamp.

But in the issue of the same paper for March 9, there appeared a sort of apology, which we suppose covers the principal features of the popular objections to the preachers of the "one faith," in the South and elsewhere. It is about as follows, leaving out a brief from an encyclopedia:—

We find in a recent number of the Sentinel that the said clerical gentleman did indeed come to the courthouse, which performance was alluded to in the Sentinel after the fact as follows:—

"Rev. J. W. Bryan preached at the courthouse yesterday according to advertisement. While Mr. Bryan is of the Mormon faith, he is not a believer in polygamy as some seem to think. He represents the Reorganized Church of the Mormons, which in no way favors the polygamous doctrines of the old church of Utah."—Nacogdoches Sentinel.

Subsequent to this, Mr. Bryan, himself, became a visitor at this office, and declared his grievance against the Chronicle to be in words, figures, and substance as follows: That he did not draw a congregation on the occasion of his advertisement because of a defamatory article in the Chronicle, which he feels to have been intended to defeat his appointed meeting and to injure him personally; and that the publications alluded to in Tyler County were without foundation in fact, and so far as the Chronicle could know of any person of his faith and order visiting those people and preaching, was to say the least of it, a case of mistaken identity, and he desired the Chronicle to correct certain points: first, that he had never been in Tyler County; second, that he had never held to the doctrine of polygamy and was never and is not now engaged in propagating polygamous doctrine; that he is in deed and in truth sent abroad as a missionary minister of the Reorganized Church of the Mormons which in no way favors polygamous doctrines and practices. With his statement before us, we can do no less than to make amends to this extent, that if he is not teaching the abominations of polygamous practice, he is not the party whom we are after, nor the one of whom we have been advised, and that it is really a case of mistaken identity. We can't possibly cherish any sentiment of personal hatred against the said gentleman, as we had never met him before, and if he really disclaims all adherence to such evil practices, we have no attack to make upon him, even though he should come and preach his belief in the Book of Mormon, and especially as he claims to be of a reform branch of the Mormon faith laboring to teach and persuade his members of that faith and order, to cease their evil practices. Men have a right to preach their beliefs when they are not against the laws of God and man.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 22.

Editors Herald:—You will I trust pardon me for presuming for the first time to ask space in your valuable paper to express a few thoughts which to me are of deep interest, and seemingly of vast importance not only to me, but to all that are engaged in this great latter-day work. In the Herald of the 14th of March we notice the following caption: "Honors for Graceland," which after reading its contents has caused me much thought, as those honors are derived from governors and others holding high positions in the affairs of the world. If the position taken in that article be true, and the statement made to me not very long since, by one holding a high office in the church, and also one of the very foremost in accomplishing the building of Graceland; namely, that the college is a part of the work of God, also be true, then I must acknowledge that I am lost with regard to the teaching of the Scriptures on that point, and beg to be enlightened. Christ said: "I do always those things that please him" his Father. (John 8:29.) Again he says: "I receive not honor from men." (5:41.) What bothers my mind is, If God is at the helm, how is he going to receive these honors from those notable men of the world? For if he does, again we are brought in contact with the teachings of Christ when he says: "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." (John 15:19.) Again in 1 John 4:5 we have the following: "They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them."

Now it appears to my mind that if the teachings of Christ are of any value to us we have no use for those wordly honors. But if we must receive them, let us obey the injunction of the apostle, "Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due: . . . Honor to whom honor."

If there is any honor due from those worldly governors it is due Bro. Jones and his family, and not to Graceland.

Yours for truth,

CHARLES H. BARR.

The brother states the point exactly. If there had been honors paid to Bro. Jones and family, by those among whom they would have moved on the other side of the ocean, so much of those honors as would have been paid to Mattie and Pearl, students of Graceland, would have reflected to the college, hence honor to Graceland. It would be an honor to any Latter Day Saint if, upon being called to stand before kings, governors, chief officers, and men of other nations, to be able to perform their parts with due dignity and grace.

Nor are the words or work of the Master made of less worth because believers in and disciples of that word and work may or do stand before notable persons of the world in their sphere and with the gifts of which they are possessed; if they then conduct themselves wisely and with credit to themselves, then their fellows and the Master receive merited honor; whereas, if, when in such conditions they behave themselves unseemly, and fail to do their part well, then their fellows and the Master is dishonored. Pope had it right,

"Honor and fame from no conditions rise;
Act well your part; there all the honor lies."

All that was meant by "Honors for Graceland," was that honor and respect shown to Bro. Dan Jones and family for their worthiness as citizens of this State and the Republic would reflect credit on Graceland, and hence Graceland be honored too.

THERE are now two great divisions of the Salvation Army; the Salvation Army direct, and the American offshoot—the American Volunteers.

That those two fighters of the vice and follies of the slums in the cities are entitled to a greater or lesser degree of credit for good work done is beyond dispute. They have done good in many places, and will likely do more in some other places. But, the fervor and fury of their earlier attacks on the strongholds of sin have in a measure abated, not from any lack of zeal, or opportunity; but because of the fact that the public has become used to their methods, and their services no longer attract the attention they once did, hence less success attends them.

Besides this; the effort so strongly made to build up a home, or homes, resting places, or oases of comfort in which converts made under their peculiar methods may be housed, fed, and clothed, and thus removed from the ways of want and consequent temptation to sin, meeting with only partial success, has marked a point at which the sober second thought of the masses is taking a cooler survey of the situation half in hope and wholly in curiosity. Success is always admirable, and commands respect. The object of the Army and the Volunteers is good to man. They affect to achieve the result of salvation, minus the gospel methods, and base their hope on reform in conduct from a conviction of sin. This is always a preliminary step in salvation and is commendable. Anyone who has a heart to feel the woes of humanity may sympathize in the spirit of sacrifice and labor of love exhibited by these workers, and one might be pardoned if on occasion he should take a temporary part with them, though it might be attend their meetings, and wear their helmet or bonnet, sing their songs, or kneel when they pray. It would be but worshiping in spirit. Of course, one would need to run the risk of becoming infatuated with the delirium resulting from the drum, the tambourine, the cornet, and the wild marching songs which lend such weird interest to the street service, all of which is to us adverse to the "wisdom which is from above," "first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated."

"All things to all men" means much. We have stood by the open grave of one buried by his fellow craftsmen according to the ritual of Masonry, have officiated as chaplain in pronouncing the funeral discourse, marched to the grave, and with the comrades cast into the open grave the sprig of evergreen that to them typified the belief of and hope in the immortality of the spirit of man; and have yet felt no sense of degradation, at mingling with our fellow men in paying respect to their dead, once living; and without a particle of desire then or afterwards to become an affiliated member of the order. We have so officiated with the order of Odd Fellows; and did not then, nor have not since felt that we forfeited our standing with our fellow churchmen, or done anything to lessen their esteem. It was but our right and privilege, so to do, when occasion required.

WRITERS for the HERALD and for the press in general—for any publication — ought to write legibly and intelligibly if they expect their communications to be published. Editors are too busy to rewrite matter forwarded for publication; nor should they be expected to rewrite anyone's matter. We do not mean to complain, but simply to call attention to the admonition, "Let all things be done decently, and in order."

Some of the letters sent us for publication, also some of the articles, are a mass of almost unintelligible matter that no ordinary printer could read. Writers who have neither time nor inclination to write carefully and to present their statements in reasonable order must learn that editors and printers are also busy people; also that while they find time to do their own work, they cannot find time enough to do the work of others.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

In thus writing we do not wish to be understood as discouraging any but expert penman from writing for the HERALD; but simply to urge the necessity of ordinary care. What is worth writing is worth writing legibly; and what is worth writing legibly ought to be worth arranging logically. Sometimes in the hurry incident to busy times a letter cannot be used because, unreadable by the printer, and unintelligible, hence must be cast aside. We advise some writers to make both their meaning plain (as to the use of language) and their penmanship legible. Certainly such request or advice is not unreasonable, and not without interest "to all whom it may concern."

FOR TRUTH AND NOTHING BUT TRUTH.

A writer should be held responsible for what he writes and publishes; but no one should be credited with or held responsible for what he does not write and for which he is not responsible in any shape or form.

Careless critics should learn to think with enough fairness, and to discriminate with sufficient closeness not to saddle upon an individual the authorship of what he is nowise responsible for.

Conclusions should be based upon evidence, upon fact, not upon supposition; and should not result from a desire to place all errors upon a certain one, because of a desire to shield another—another favored in personal estimation.

The writer of this paragraph has no objection to urge against the policy of crediting whatever of merit may attach to his work to any more favored in personal estimation; nor does he object to being held to strict accountability for whatever in his work may be found to be justly censurable, or wherein his work is lacking in merit. However, he does object, and herein states his objection, to being credited with or held responsible for statements written or otherwise of which another is the writer or author.

It is time for our people to learn to judge all matter strictly upon its merits or demerits, without partiality and without favoritism or palliation. The writer has tried to do some educational work along these lines in the years, few or many, during which he has written for the HERALD, and believes, judging from the motives and forces inspiring it, that his work has not been in vain. However, he regrets that the spirit and practice of toadyism, of partiality, of love of person instead of love of principle, yet survives with some. May the day come when every man, without respect to name or station, and every measure, and act, and utterance, shall be judged simply and purely upon their merits and their merits alone—without fear, without partiality, without favoritism, but in love and with strict regard to truth and right, come from whom or whence they may.

It is not who says a thing that should give it the sanction of acceptance at our hands, but what is said. Whether the subject matter be true or false, correct or incorrect, should be the object of our investigations and influence our conclusions. We do violence to truth, and harm even those whom our partiality would favor, by doing otherwise. We love truly and are true only when we act both sincerely and correctly. Christ himself did not ask more. He asked reception of his words because he spoke "the truth," not otherwise.

We have tried in the past to do something in the line of educating ourselves and others to act upon principle, in contrast to action based upon policy; to investigate facts, instead of being governed by considerations of personal or partisan favoritism or prejudice; to build upon lines that were true and strong, instead of following in the wake of worldly-mindedness, including its social shams and follies, its pitiable shallowness and advertisements of human weaknesses, vanities, and shallow display; have tried to teach men and women to be men and women in fact, and to educate their children with a view to becoming in fact that which should be the aim and end of every true man or woman; namely, to be a true man or a true woman—that which is worthy of one who bears the image of God himself, in harmony with the masterly and exalted design of the great Father of the race.

To be less is to miserably fail, however high our social, ecclesiastical, or general position in the world, in church or state, and is to invite the pity if not the contempt of all good and true men and women, and other beings whose high development must cause them to regret if they do not weep at our folly. To work upon other lines is to invite inevitable failure; and anyone who so works must fail, and ought to fail. We protest now as we have ever protested, against worldly nonsense and shallowpatedness among our people; also against any lines of action that place principle secondary to or submissive to policy, for personal or any other ends. We go on record in this regard, and are personally willing to take the consequences of so doing. If we cannot work conscientiously and in harmony with what to us is the true and only right way to work, we do not want to work at all. God can accept and bless only what is done in harmony with his mind and will—the absolute truth: "Zion cannot be built up except it be by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself."—D. C.

We believe the Almighty will turn and overturn until the right is maintained, however much human weakness, human ambition, or evil manifested in other forms of human agency, or otherwise, may assert itself; that every man's work shall be tried and tested by the "fire" that separates the dross from the gold, the chaff from the wheat, the false from the true.

Though the writer has expressed himself pointedly, it is done nevertheless in humility, and he hopes to continue to labor in the spirit of humility and devotion with all who love the truth, to the end that truth, and truth only, may be maintained, made paramount, and finally prevail supreme.

We build for God and truth and the real interests of fellow man when we build in harmony with God's will, among which must be a genuine, pure love and devoted humility. We build up that which is in opposition to all that when we suffer ourselves, either through perverseness, ambition, weakness, or from any cause, to build by other methods.

Let us build with God—solidly—that our work shall be satisfactory to him and creditable to our high callings and grave and sacred responsibilities.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. F. McDowell, Fayette City, Pennsylvania, March 21:—

The nine sessions on, "Joseph Smith the reputed prophet and author of the Book of Mormon, was an impostor, and the Book of Mormon is a fraud," passed off after a somewhat emphatic manner; yet so far as the writer is concerned, good-naturedly. Bro. R. Etzenhouser and the Saints believed divine assistance was granted in support of the negative. "We" are never in a "hurry" at the opening sessions of controversy, and dispense evidence as the time advances. Discussion on second proposition opened on evening of 15th inst. for seven sessions. "The church of which I, G. B. Hancock am a member, is the Church of Christ." Five sessions have passed and we do not know what kind of a church he represents. The last three sessions I have been branding it Campbellitic, quoting several items of interest that produce uneasiness in their midst. The Saints are quiet, and bearing "us" up in prayer and fasting. Some friends are inquiring "our way," asking for reading matter, and many remark, "The old man isn't in it." We close Friday eve this week.

Russian priests and the Russian officials are credited with trying to rob Germany of the Anatolian railway concession in Turkey. Various rumors and statements follow in succession; one that Germany has completed plans for extensive colonization in Asia Minor, along the line of her concessions; and later, that the Sultan has formally agreed to Russian demands to such an extent that the latter not only protects her own borders, but also acquires control of a large and valuable territory, nearly half of the northern portion of Turkey in Asia, and gains a position in Asia Minor whence she can easily watch and thwart German movements against her interests.

FOR BIG RELIGIOUS REVIVAL.

Cincinnati, O., March 23.—Albert Frazer of this city, prominent in church and reformatory work, is busily engaged in mailing to the newspapers an address to the people of the United States, advocating a national religious jubilee, preceded by a year of prayer and preparation and a national religious revival.

This address is signed by the Rev. John Henry Barrows of Oberlin, Bishop William Crosswell Doane of Albany, the Rev. George C. Lorimer, Boston; the Rev. Washington Gladden, Columbus, Ohio; the Rev. Charles F. Thwing, Cleveland; the Rev. Theodore F. Cuyler, New York; Bishop Boyd Vincent, Cincinnati; Bishop C. C. McCabe, Fort Worth, Texas; the Rev. William R. Nicholson, Philadelphia; Bishop Edward G. Andrews, New York, and many other distinguished clergymen.

As the object of the movement is to awaken a national religious revival, it proposes what is intended to be the greatest religious movement of the age, embracing as it does all denominations. The newspapers, secular and religious, are requested to participate in the movement. Correspondence and suggestions in furtherance of this movement are solicited by A. L. THE CHURCH VINDICATED.

Last spring, while working on a little country paper here in Maine, I found H. H. Bancroft's History of Utah, edition of 1890, among the editor's books, and it is needless to say I began reading it at once, and while doing so I made a few extracts for my use, which I trust will be of interest to Saints in general. I quote verbatim, only taking liberty to capitalize a few proper nouns which he has neglected to do.

This is on page 44: The elder Smith was poor, and the boys were sometimes obliged to hire themselves out as laborers. . . . In October, 1825, Joseph went to work for Josiah Stoal, in Chenango County. This man had what he supposed to be a silver mine at Harmony, Pennsylvania, said to have been once worked by Spaniards. Thither Joseph went with the other men to dig for silver. . . . After a month's fruitless effort Stoal was induced by Joseph to abandon the undertaking.

Page 58: Persecutions continue; Brethren of Christ threaten to mob them.

He refers to the Saints.

Page 68: The same night Joseph was arrested by a constable on a charge of disorderly conduct, and for preaching the Book of Mormon. . . . These persecutions were instigated, it was said, chiefly by Presbyterians. . . . Stories were circulated, damaging to his character, this time by Methodists.

Page 90: On the night of the 25th of March, Smith and Rigdon were seized by a mob, composed partly of the Campbellites, Methodists, and Baptists of Hiram, twelve or fifteen being apostate Mormons.

Page 92: Smith was poisoned, and that so badly that he dislocated his jaw in vomiting, and the hair upon his head became loosened; Whitney, however, laid his hands on him, and administered in the name of the Lord, and he was healed in an instant.

Page 100: Meanwhile, clergymen of other denominations, and officers of the state and county, looked on, saying, "Mormons are the common enemies of mankind, and ought to be destroyed."

Page 101: The brethren were instructed by their elders not to retaliate, but to bear all in meekness and patience.

Page 103: "It is a disgrace to the State," writes Judge Ryland.

Page 117: Right or wrong, law or no law, and whether in accord with the letter or spirit of the Constitution or government of the United States or not, the people of Missouri had determined that they would go any length before they would allow the Saints to obtain political ascendency in that quarter.

Page 119: They are hated and despised, though they break not the laws of God, they are hunted down and killed, though they break not the laws of the land. . . . They are not idlers, or drunkards, or thieves, or murderers.

Page 124: They learned that a large force under Samuel Bogart, a Methodist clergyman, was plundering and burning houses.

On page 128 he describes the Haun's Mill massacre:—

Never in savage or other warfare was there perpetrated an act more dastardly and brutal. Indeed, it was openly avowed by the men of Missouri that it was no worse to shoot a Mormon that to shoot an Indian, and killing Indians was no worse than killing wild beasts.

Page 133: Mr. Doniphan, attorney for the defense, and since famed as a general in the Mexican war, finally advised the prisoners to offer no defense; "for," said he, "though a legion of angels from the opening heavens should declare your innocence, the court and populace have decreed your destruction."

On page 148, Mr. Bancroft makes this quotation from the St. Louis Atlas, of September, 1841:—

Their religion is a peculiar one; that is, neither Buddhism, nor Mahometanism, nor Judaism, nor Christianity, but it is a faith which they say encourages no vice nor immorality, nor departure from established laws and usages; neither polygamy, nor promiscuous intercourse.

Page 216: It was not a noble sentiment which had actuated the people of Missouri; it was not a noble sentiment which now actuated the people of Illinois, thus to continue their persecutions during the preparations for departure, and drive a whole city full from their homes out upon the bleak prairie in the dead of winter.

On page 226, Mr. Bancroft quotes a letter written to the Quincy Whig by Major Warren:—

A man of near sixty years of age, living about seven miles from this place, was taken from his home a few nights since, stripped of his clothing, and his back cut to pieces with a whip, for no other reason than because he was a Mormon, and too old to make a successful resistance. Conduct of this kind would disgrace a horde of savages.

Brother Etzenhouser has quoted other extracts from this "history," which I think needless to give, as they can be read in his work, "From Palmyra to Independence."

When we consider that Mr. Bancroft had read hundreds of books—most of which were written against the Saints—before writing his "History of Utah," it is evident that he has been quite fair in his reference to us; but, naturally, while endeavoring to be impartial, yet reading twenty works against to one in favor, he would have a tendency, perhaps very slight, to lean toward that side which furnished the more evidence, not always questioning whether the same was true. As a rule, however, he has allowed both sides to speak for themselves, which is the only fair way in which to record such things as these.

I find by glancing at the clock that the day is not half spent, and as I have nothing else to do, except study sacred literature, as to-day is Sunday, and I am many miles from a branch, I might as well keep on writing. Many times it is easier to write than to get others to read what you write.

Do you know that it is appalling, and almost incredible, that there is so much ignorance manifested among people who pretend to be intelligent, in regard to the difference between our church and the Mormon Church. It does not make any odds whether the man is an educated minister or an ignorant vagrant, when you come to tell him of our faith, O, he knows—you can't enlighten him any. Then he will give you that knowing (?), sarcastic smile, which seems to say, "You needn't talk to me, sonny; I know what you believe." I meet this class of people every day of my life, and the question comes to me again and again, "Why are people determined to be so ignorant?"

Here is something which I believe is to the point: Mr. Fred E. Bennett was United States marshal quite a long time in Utah, and he had a varied experience with the Mormons. Sometime later he published a book entitled, "Mormonism Unmasked," and on page 56, remarks:—

Indeed piety and progeny are inseparable in the tenets of the Mormon religion, as taught by the followers of Brigham Young, but cut no figure in the belief of the "Josephites," who claim that B. Young was an usurper, and are, in fact, the most bitter opponents of the polygamists who reciprocate the hatred."

These knowing ones, who know more about our faith than we know ourselves, will always believe all that they read against us, but will never accept anything said in our favor. Of course such people will call Mr. Bennett an "awful liar."

Here is another statement on pages 178, 179 of his book:—

As has been intimated in the narrative, the "Josephites" (disciples of Joseph Smith) are at enmity with the "Brighamites" (Brigham Young's followers), and are bitterly opposed to polygamy. One of the leading lights of the Josephite section of Mormons is Elder A. [R] J. Anthony, who on one occasion was preaching in a town where the other faction were holding a conference. A son of John Taylor (B. Y.'s successor) happened to be there and gave Anthony the lie regarding some statement he had made. The elder, who is a perfect gentleman, challenged any man they chose to put forward to a public debate, and said he would use no arguments but those the Book of Mormon gave him. They were afraid to meet him, however, and made the excuse that he was not a man of reputation, though the elder is well known as a man of irreproachable character, as well as one of the best posted men in the country.

I present you the above testimony from a man who has lived in Utah, and one that claims to have arrested many a Mormon for breaking the Edmunds-Tucker law, which forbids the practice of polygamy. Will you accept it, or "pooh" it aside as the infidel does an argument against infidelity, which he cannot answer.

I ask permission to present another thought, which I believe to be original if it is not very deep or forcible. After entering the church I was always on the watch for remarks concerning our faith in histories, newspapers, etc. Upon one occasion, while attending a conference held in a schoolhouse, I noticed an International Dictionary on the stand, and thought a chance was afforded me to look up what it said about the "Mormons." While thus engaged, a brother (he is laboring in the Hawaiian Islands now) came near, and finding that I was looking up the word Mormon, remarked: "You will not find anything new there; I have looked in a great many, and it is always the same old thing—'Joe Smith,' 'polygamy,' etc." I have found, by investigation, that he spoke the truth. Most of our modern lexicographers are not content with branding Joseph Smith as a polygamist and impostor, but they must insert after their stale, threadbare statements, a big index, or hand, and these words: "This sect is now known as Latter Day Saints."

Now, I would emphasize the fact that, as far as I have ascertained, all these dictionaries that contain so much about Joseph being a polygamist, were published years after his death.

In my possession is a "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary," which is undoubtedly familiar to all who read this. When it was first published, and years after, it was considered the most elaborate work of its kind in the world. Mr. Webster spent many years collecting the material for this book. Here is a quotation from a memoir:—

During the spring of 1843, Dr. Webster revised the Appendix of his Dictionary, and added some hundreds of words. He completed the printing of it about the middle of May. It was the closing act of his life. His hand rested, in its last labors, on the volume which he had commenced thirty-six years before.

We learn from this that the dictionary was begun when Joseph Smith was two years old, and completed one year before his death. During all these years Dr. Webster was collecting data for his book, and it is only reasonable that he had better advantages for ascertaining the truth, than the majority of compilers of modern encyclopedias, histories, lexicons, etc., who have resorted to the novels written against "Mormonism" to procure reliable statements for their works. This is what Mr. Webster has to say about the "Mormons," as our enemies were pleased to call us in his time:—

MORMON, n. The name of a sect in the United States, followers of one Joseph Smith, who claimed to work miracles, and to have found an addition to the Bible, engraved on golden plates, which he published under the name of the Book of Mormon.

I marveled as I read; nothing was said about polygamy. All that would be necessary would be a line of italic type and an index, if he could spare one, to read thus: "This sect is sometimes called Latter Day Saints, and they practice polygamy."

Well, I would not be beat without a second trial, so I turn over to the P's—surely he will say something about it under "polygamy." I read this:—

Polygamy; a plurality of wives or husbands at the same time; or the having of such plurality. When a man has more wives than one, or a woman more husbands than one, at the same time, the offender is punishable for polygamy. Such is the fact in Christian countries. But polygamy is allowed in some countries, as in Turkey.

Not a word said about polygamy in the United States. After awhile the reason dawned upon me, and I was disgusted with my own stupidness: The cause of his not mentioning polygamy as being believed and practiced by the "Mormons" was because such a thing was not known among them in his day!

This is only circumstantial evidence, yet the same ought to bear some weight with one who is not so shielded by prejudice that he can see only one side.

It is with great hesitancy that I proceed to write this closing subject, because it will be necessary to refer to things which are so well known among even the youngest of our church. My only plea is, that there are so many outsiders who are totally ignorant concerning the birth of the Latter Day Saint Church of Utah. When they read history relating to our denomination, like the Jews reading the New Testament, there seems to be a vail over their faces. A prevailing belief among a large number of people is, because we are known as Latter Day Saints, and the Utah faction call themselves by the same term, that both churches are identical. I can illustrate this by stating that in a small town here in Maine, once lived a man, blacksmith by trade, who claimed to have been in Salt Lake City, and because he saw the words "Latter Day Saints," inscribed on one of the Mormon houses of worship, it was sufficient evidence to him that every one who claimed to be a Latter Day Saint was from Utah, or intended to go there in the future.

What profound reasoning this is! Verily, the Christian who says, in repeating the Apostle's Creed, "I believe in the holy Catholic Church," must be a Roman Catholic.

Mr. Brigham Young was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ, as restored by the Prophet Joseph in 1830. By a humble, prayerful walk, he was chosen by revelation to the exalted office of President of the Twelve, in 1841.

I beg my reader not to throw this paper down in disgust, because Mr. Young was once a member of this church. If he does, in order to be consistent, a condemnation must rest upon the early church for containing Judas, and even heaven must be pronounced a bad place, for the reason, at one time, it contained legions of spirits who are now devils.

From the time of the church's organization in 1830, to 1844, when Joseph was killed, a period of only fourteen years, the membership had grown to an enormous number. Daniel Rupp remarks in his "History of Religious Denominations in the United States," published in 1844:—

There are no correct data by which the exact number of members of this now extensive, and still extending, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints can be known. Should it be supposed at 150,000 it might still be short of the truth.—Page 409.

And other authorities give the number as 200,000 or more. Bear this thought in mind, for your attention will be called to it later.

On January 19, 1841, a revelation was given to the church, which reads in part, thus:—

But I [God] command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build an house unto me. But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God.—D. C. 107: 10, 11.

The house was never completed; the "things" commanded were not performed in the given time; and in 1844 Joseph was taken out of the church, and God, true to his word, rejected it. This large body of 200,000 people was disorganized.

Brigham Young comes forward, upon the death of Joseph, and makes the arrogant claim that the leadership of the church devolves upon him. This statement a great many of the saints knew to be false, as God had said as early as 1831, "that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him [Joseph]."—D. C. 43: 2. And many of the saints who were contemporary with Joseph Smith, have made the statement, under oath, that they heard Mr. Smith remark on several occasions, that "if Brigham ever gets the lead of this church, he will lead it to hell." Further, Joseph had already appointed another to lead the church in his stead. In harmony with God's law of lineage, Joseph's son, then but twelve years old, had been blessed and anointed under the hands of his father to fill this position.

However, no matter how peculiar a view may be, there are some willing to embrace it; and this was true of the assumed leadership of Brigham Young—there were a number of the Saints who confided in him.

We must be merciful—even pitiful, when we refer to them. The days of '44 were indeed "dark and cloudy"; but they were bright compared with the succeeding years which have been experienced by the little band who reached the desert of Salt Lake, cold and famishing, only to be fed on polygamy, and other polluting food.

Now, I once more call your attention to the 200,000 Saints who were deprived of their leader in 1844. Of that number I quote from Bishop Whitney's late "History of Utah," to show you how many followed Brigham Young to Salt Lake and became polygamists. The advance, or pioneer company, numbered 143, who reached the site of the founding of Salt Lake City, Utah, on July 24, 1847. In the spring of 1848 the number had been swelled to 1,671, one year later to 4,080. And, as additional proof on this subject, you will find by consulting "The People's Atlas," published by Phillips and Hunt, in 1885, that the entire population of Utah—Mormons and Gentiles—in 1850 was only 11,380; and the number of people in Salt Lake City—where nearly all of Brigham's followers settled—was only 8,236 in 1860—sixteen years after Joseph's death. Now then, allowing Mr. Young 10,000 of the original church, it leaves us the goodly number of 190,000, or such a matter, who did not go to Utah. Notwithstanding all this, we see in scores of histories, that after Joseph Smith's death, his followers went to Salt Lake City under the leadership of Brigham Young.

By writing to any of the Mormon officials in Utah, I believe they will inform you that the doctrine of polygamy was first publicly announced in Salt Lake City, 1852. Brigham then remarked that it would sail triumphantly over all opposition. Surely, the Baal god must have been sleeping when that prophecy was uttered.

You are anxious to know what became of those who denounced Brigham's usurpation as a cruel fraud. Some died; a few separated into little factions; a number grew lukewarm; but a large number continued to lift their voices in tender pleadings to Israel's God, realizing that only by battling on, keeping the camp fire burning, and having faith in the Father of love, could chaos be turned to order; the spark fanned into a flame.

Faithfulness could not go unrewarded; sorrow could not continue forever, else the heart would break; so Jesus, in the infinite mercy of his great love softly opened the door of heaven, and spoke. The saints were commanded to reorganize; to select Joseph, son of the martyr, as their leader, and the hallowed influence of the Holy Spirit would demonstrate the Father's approval. This was effected in 1860, and since then the church has been designated as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Friend, do you realize that we must all stand before the judgment bar of God? And that "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death"? I believe this with all the energy of my soul, and I do not wish to barter my salvation for the sake of writing a few lies.

Space forbids my entering into a review of the many conflicting accounts of the wonderful phenomenon called "Mormonism." In reading books that give erroneous statements regarding dates, places, and other things which are absolutely ridiculous, when read by one that knows the truth, you must use your own discretion in believing them. Remember there are always two sides to a story, and one is sometimes good until the other is told.

Anyone, and everyone have felt at liberty to write statements concerning our church. Beginning with Howe's work, "Mormonism Unvailed," the world has been flooded with so-called exposes of Mormonism. The religion has always been looked down on, as was the church in Jesus' day, and anyone could write as many slanderous remarks as he pleased, there was no one to object but the despised "Mormons," and their testimony amounted to nothing. It was quite a fad at one time to write a book against the Latter Day Saints. In almost every case the work was against: it would never do to say much in favor. Why! the world would call the writer a Mormon, or else say he lied. And then, the books were made to sell, you know, and it would not be policy—from a financial sense—to disregard the public taste. All one had to do was to go and live in adultery in Utah for awhile, and then apostatize and write a book. He and his writings were at once received in the tender embrace of all; or a good part, of the fair daughters of America. It did not matter how many lies and absurd contradictions the expose contained; not a question raised as to whether the statements concerning Joseph Smith and the early church were true; not a doubt expressed about how one book could say Joseph had forty wives, another only nineteen, and yet another twelve, and another only one, and all accounts be true. Really, it did not matter any way. It was about an unpopular religion, and a few mistakes, or a book full of mistakes were not objected to but by the Latter Day Saints.

Dear reader, I find this in every place I investigate. The world seemed to have gone crazy over the absurdities (?) of the new—and yet old—old as the earth—religion. The phrensy has not died away yet—even in the enlightened, cultured land of America. Every little while some one that has control of a printing press, will publish an account (something that has been exploded again and again,) of "Joe Smith and his Mormons."

Do you wish to learn more about this sect that is everywhere spoken against? If so, read on. I am making no apology for the Mormon Church—as the Utah people are pleased to call themselves in their speeches and writings. As has been well said, "It has made of Utah a deformed child."

Just to show you what contemptible ignorance is manifested by those whose privilege it is to know the difference between our church and the Utah faction, I give a few extracts taken from newspapers, which treat on the subject.

The following I clipped from the Bangor, Maine, Weekly News, of April 9, 1896:—

KIRTLAND, Ohio, April 6.—The annual conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints began here to-day in the old Mormon temple, with a large attendance. There are delegates present from Canada, California, Maine, and Missouri. The denomination claims to be the original church established in 1830 by Joseph Smith, and out of which sprung the Mormon Church of Utah, under Brigham Young. The reorganized sect does not, nor never did, practice polygamy.

One fact is worth a ship load of argument; but two facts are worth more. So here is a statement contained in the Greenfield, Illinois, Argus, May 24, 1895:—

Some years after Brigham Young became established at Salt Lake City, the remnant that refused adherence to this leader, set up a church government of their own. Feeling that polygamy was wrong in its very nature, and wishing to free the church of such false doctrine, they have bitterly denounced polygamy, denying that it was ever a part of the faith as taught by the prophet, and that it was nowhere set forth in the published documents of the church during Joseph Smith's lifetime; that these obnoxious features were an aftergrowth introduced by Brigham Young, for which the original church and faith were not responsible.

The readers of the El Dorado Sun, of September 27, 1895, observed this account in a column of that paper:—

The Reorganized Church, which has been proven the original church by the courts of the land, accept Joseph Smith, Jr., son of the original prophet, as the leader of their organization, and as a result their number has increased and their church has prospered. The Reorganized Church discountenances polygamy and deny the allegation that Joseph Smith ever gave a revelation concerning the same. Those of the Reorganized brethren whom the Sun man has had the pleasure of meeting are all intelligent, worthy, and law-abiding citizens; thrifty and industrious, and are earnest workers for the cause of humanity. They practice the religion that they believe to be the purest and best in the sight of God, a privilege that is accorded to all men in this land of freedom; and surely no man has cause to complain.

The New York Weekly Tribune, of January 12, 1898, refers to having received an able letter in reply to a statement published by that paper that "of late years it has been maintained that the revelation sanctioning polygamy was received by Joseph Smith as early as 1831." It then remarks that the writer "brings what seems to be strong evidence that the practice of polygamy was not known among the Mormons until after Smith's death and the removal of his followers to Salt Lake."

It has previously been mentioned

how many of "Smith's followers" went to Salt Lake.

George Q. Cannon, one of the leading lights of Mormonism, wrote of Joseph Smith, the present leader of our church, in this manner, as published in the Juvenile Instructor, August 1, 1885, a paper published at Salt Lake City:—

He himself has gone to Washington and urged, with cruel and hateful purpose, the enactment against the people of Utah, of laws of the most oppressive and destructive character. Others of his followers have done the same. They did all in their power to have the Edmunds bill become law.

Most everybody knows that the Edmunds bill was a law to prohibit polygamy.

Here are a few quotations taken from a short sketch of Hamilton W. Mabie, as given in Comfort, a paper published at Augusta, Maine, March, 1897:—

Hamilton W. Mabie is a man whose influence is always given towards creating high ideals of life. He is editor-in-chief of the Outlook, and has made that paper an exponent of his own lofty theories. . . . He is in great demand as a speaker and lecturer, before all gatherings that in any manner are connected with the intellectual life of the people. He is a deep thinker, but has the faculty of expressing deep thought in such clear and simple language as to interest all. In a remarkable degree he possesses the ability of awakening thought in others, and that thought is always directed towards all that is sane, cultured and gracious in living. . . . He is an author as well as an editor. . . . He reaches the most thoughtful portion of the community.

In one of Mr. Mabie's histories, entitled "Our Own Country," and published by the Monarch Book Company, Chicago, Illinois, he refers to our church on page 412, in this manner:—

It accepts three books as of divine origin: 1, the Bible; 2, the Book of Mormon; 3, the Book of Covenants. The latter consists of the revelations given to the church in the present century as a guide in church government. The Book of Mormon is accepted as a history of the ancient inhabitants of America and the revelations given them by God; beginning at a period two thousand years before Christ, and continuing until four hundred years after Christ. In doctrine they adhere to the Trinity, to the atonement by Jesus Christ, to the resurrection of the dead, to the second coming of Christ, and to the eternal judgment; believing that each individual will receive reward or punishment, in strict measure, according to the good or evil deeds done in life. They hold that men are to be saved by faith in God and Christ, by forsaking sin, by immersion for the remission of sin, and by the laying on of hands. They believe that revelations of God are still given by the Holy Spirit for the guidance of the church, and that the gifts, blessings, and powers of the Holy Spirit in Bible times are continual. Their order of church government is such as they find authority for in the New Testament, and such as they understand that the apostolic church observed. . . . As to marriage, they believe that it is ordained of God, and that there should be but one companion for man or woman in wedlock, until the contract is broken by death or transgression. They characterize the doctrine of polygamy, or plural wives, as an abomination.

When we consider the writer of the above, and what he has written, I fail to see why the same should not bear some weight with honest thinking persons, and justify them in believing that the world has been too hasty and prejudiced in passing judgment upon an innocent people.

Do you wonder that I feel a downright pity for the man or woman who will tell me, with the stubbornness of Abraham's mule, that they know there is no difference between my church and the Mormons of Utah? I am acquainted with a man who had lived all his life in the same town with a brother, and in conversation with me he was just as positive that the brother was a Mormon as I was positive that he was not. The man was sincere, but he cared not enough about knowing the truth to investigate, and had been under that delusion all his life.

While the old earth drags on under its load of sin, there will be thousands who will never know the truth concerning the true Latter Day Saints. As Peter has said, "For this they willingly are ignorant of." And as there were scoffers in his day, so shall there be in our day.

One more extract and I leave the matter with you, praying to God in the Son's name, that what I have presented in my ignorant way may find a resting place in the hearts of honest searchers for truth, not for my sake, but for your sake, and for Jesus' sake.

The Wright County Democrat, a paper published at Clarion, Iowa, 1893, in referring to some of the elders of the Reorganized Church, remarked:—

The church that these energetic men represent, cannot by any means be confounded with that spurious offshoot of the original church, now and for many years past having their headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah. Any attempt to so confound these two bodies, would be a manifest acknowledgment of unpardonable ignorance, or a willful misrepresentation of historical facts.

WEST SULLIVAN, Maine.

WE SHOULD OCCUPY ACCORDING TO OUR CALLINGS.

Allow me space for a few words in defense of the above heading. We are living in a most momentous age of the world, an age when the prophets of preceding ages, filled with the Holy Spirit, looked down the stream of time, and have foretold that which shall follow in the age in which we are living so plainly, so minutely, that we need not be mistaken in this. This is an age when the watchmen upon the towers of Zion should lift up their voice in defense of God's cause, and proclaim to the world that which shall come upon them. And as ministers for Christ, chosen in this the eleventh hour of the gospel dispensation, our cry as watchmen should go out, "Prepare, O prepare," that there be no lack of care upon our part in discharging our duty as watchmen. Faithfulness upon our part in moving forward in line of our duty will bring joy and added blessings; this is a blessed thought, and should fill the soul of every one engaged in the service of the Lord. In Psalms the prophet tells us:—

Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy.—Ps. 33:18.

And again:—

The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles. The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit.—Ps. 34:17, 18.

O, a blessed thought! How it should cheer us; that if faithful in discharge of our duty, the Lord is ever mindful of us, and that to bless. As servants of God we should be fully equipped and ready to march onward to victory. Steady, unmovable, forward, not backward; advancing, mounting higher, achieving victory over sin and the Devil. "This only can be done by our faithfulness to God and his work." Every man whom God has chosen has a work intrusted to him. He may do that work, or he may not; but he is simply chosen to give him an opportunity. And if he does not lay hold upon this opportunity and grasp it, and perform it, and occupy according to his calling, God will select others upon whom he can depend to carry on his work to victory; men who will not fail to lift up their voices in defense of his work in any and all circumstances. We should see to it that we are not of those who will fail and forfeit this right and privilege; this honor which God has placed upon us, that we may lay aside all those things which are calculated to deprive us of our duty which we owe to God and our fellowman. My experience, since I have been in the work, teaches me that neglect of duty has brought some cloudy days; but by the help of God this has been removed, and I see now the necessity of an onward march to victory. The cry was made some years ago, by the voice of the Spirit, "come up higher." How much higher are we to come? Until we can endure the presence of the Savior. Will this exhortation apply to the priesthood or people; to both, I believe. Let us see. First, to the priesthood, eminently and preëminently. Second, to the people, for through the priesthood only, we understand, can the people be able to abide his presence. Who is responsible if we fail in doing our duty, and with the light already received, we begin to detract, and suffer Satan to begin his work, and finally the result is we become spiritually dead to the work and our duty?

In section 116 of Doctrine and Covenants, revelation given May 4, 1865, paragraph 2:—

Be ye very careful, for many elders have been ordained unto me, and are come under my condemnation, by reason of neglecting to lift up their voices in my cause, and for such there is tribulation and anguish: haply they themselves may be saved (if doing no evil) though their glory, which is given for their works, be withheld, or in other words their works are burned, not being profitable unto me.

If at that time, when this revelation was given, the elders herein spoken of came under condemnation, and if there are any at the present time, would not this language apply to them? We verily think so. As a church and ministers for Christ we are looking forward for the second advent of the Savior. Are we prepared for him? so that when he shall come, and the opening heavens shall reveal him, we can say as John upon the Isle of Patmos, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." If this is not our condition, then we have something to learn—something to do. I cannot lift the veil to tell you more, or to behold it myself. Soon, oh, so soon, we all shall know its boundless, everlasting realities, for we are nearing the golden gate that opens on the ocean beyond. I will only suggest in conclusion upon this subject, Seek for the Spirit of the living God, that it may enlighten our souls, and inform our judgments, and cast a clear light upon his word. Then that day of the coming of our Savior will not overtake us as a thief in the night. May the Lord bless and guide and save us.

Editors Herald:—The Saints in this part of the district as a rule are alive to the work. Some others are coming into the fold of Christ, while many are investigating this new but old gospel; and as they see that the Lord is confirming the word with signs following, they wonder with amazement, and say, "Why didn't others see this before now?" I tell them Paul says, "How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent?" and he that is sent of God will teach the things of God, and those who will do the Father's will shall know of the doctrine. I can truly say, If there were no hereafter, and no reward when we pass from this stage of action, it is good to be a Saint in this life when we do our duty. It is a heaven on earth to do the Master's will, and we do know, when he gives such grand testimonies of his truth in this life, that we are sure of the rest if we do our part.

I have been greatly blessed of the Lord this winter while laboring for him, and strengthened by the testimony of my brethren while trying to encourage them to press on to victory and fight manfully till we hear the welcome voice saying, "Well done."

When I last wrote to you I did not think I could get away to do any preaching this winter; but last December my wife was called to the bedside of her daughter at Bothwell, Canada, who, after a time, was restored through the ordinances of the gospel. The last I heard, she was up and doing her work. To God be all the praise.

While my wife was gone I had to keep "batch." If any of the brethren have been left to do that, and like it as well as I did, they know how to sympathize with me. I do not wonder at the dear wives wanting to go visiting once in awhile and get a change. I do not blame a woman for getting after her husband in good shape when he leaves her a lot of black wood, and crooked at that, to cook a meal with, and then find fault with her when she complains that she can keep nothing clean. It is a wonder to me that there are not more broom handles than brooms worn out. And if complaints we hear in some places are true about preachers, this many apply to elders who have the same fault. They should see they do not put more burdens on the sisters than necessary. While doing missionary work, do not sit or lie around and let the fires all go out unless the good woman of the house bustles around to keep up an extra fire to keep you from freezing. Get a move on you. It will hurt no preacher nor lower his dignity to take in some wood, if it is in the snow, or even split it, if necessary. And when you want a drink and find no water in the pail, do not ask the dear sister, who is doing all she can to make you feel your labors are appreciated, drop her work and run through the deep snow to bring a pail of water, when you can do that much yourself. Think of your dear wife at home, if you have one, and say and act, I'll do unto others as I would they should do to mine. Those who have not learned this ought to keep "batch" awhile. It might help them when they are out, and at home, too.

Elder Durand was with us some three weeks and baptized one, and then Elder A. Barr, district president, came and preached for us nearly a week. His counsel to the Saints was good, and I hope will not soon be forgotten.

Before he left I was called to Goodland to administer to Grandma Shell, aged seventy-six. I remained three days, till she fell asleep in Jesus. The pain left when she was administered to, and the Lord said he would be with her through the valley and shadow of death, and that she was in his hands. I preached her funeral sermon on Thursday, and the following Sunday I conducted another burial service—I buried Bro. John Johnston with Christ in baptism. This caused the Saints to rejoice, as well as Sr. Cora Johnston, who has been traveling the good road alone for many years, and praying that the time would come when they would go hand in hand. Her prayers are answered at last. He will make a useful man in the church if humble, as he was considered a good man before he came in, and if we let the gospel do its work, it will make better men of us. I am inclined to think a man and his wife are not one until they are one in Christ. Then the Spirit of Christ can make them one, and they will seek each other's good, and bear each other's burdens, and thus fulfill the law of Christ. Others at Goodland wanted to be baptized, and would have been, but they did not know I was going to remain over Sunday.

While there I attended the Baptist protracted meeting. Elder Stone, who was conducting them, had previously held some meetings in our church at Juniata. When he saw me, he came and said he was so pleased to see me, and inquired after the welfare of the Saints, as well as his people, in Juniata. I gave him an introduction to some of our people who were with me. He invited me up on the rostrum with him, and when the other two preachers came in he introduced me to them as "the Rev. Elder McKenzie from Juniata, a friend who allowed me the use of his church to hold meetings in when we had none of our own," etc. He called on me to offer the opening prayer. Of course I could not make the same kind of a prayer he could for the occasion, still, it was remarked by his own people, "Wasn't that a grand prayer?" etc. After the preaching, and all the mourners had been called around the anxious bench, and prayer offered, and they were dismissed and all had testified, Rev. Stone asked me if I had a word to say. I first excused myself, as it was so late. Then he invited the Baptist preacher by my side, who also declined to speak. The presiding elder then spoke and sang some, and then Elder Stone called on me again and introduced me to the congregation as the Rev. Elder McKenzie, and told them what fine people he had found us to be; that he had found me to be a Christian and a gentleman, and was glad to meet me and have me with them, and would be pleased to hear from me. All this time I was praying to my Father for wisdom, and that he would give me words to speak. And praise his holy name, he did. And while I could see tears rolling down some of their faces, I knew the Spirit of God went with what I said. When I sat down, the presiding elder of the church, Rev. Hunberger, sprang up and said, "That's the kind of a spirit I like to see manifested in a Christian; to build up the work of God and not tear down," etc., and said he was pleased to hear the testimony and words of exhortation given by the brother; that he had learned something, and hoped they would keep in mind what they had heard; and came across to me and shook hands again, saying, "God bless you, brother, in your work for good. Come again," etc. This was a Freewill Baptist meeting, and it was a close communion Baptist preacher who sat by my side.

I hope the Saints in this place will use wisdom in their testimonies. Let us tell what the Lord has done and is doing for us, and let others alone. If they are honest and of the sheep, when they hear the voice of the Good Shepherd they will follow him; and if not, we only do harm in a meeting of this kind to contend with them. There is a time for everything, and the time to strike the iron is when it is hot, and not before.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

LEEDS, England, March 7.

Editors Herald:—Kindly permit me to contribute a word to your pages in testimony of the gospel and the church, and thus gratify a desire which arises from a knowledge of their divinity. The Herald is of greater interest to me than any other periodical, religious or secular, because it is the official organ of the church, containing matter in relation to the church and its workers and members, and also because the greater portion of its contents is written by persons who have received of the same Spirit as myself.

Though I am not acquainted with the many writers and correspondents, there seems to exist something approaching—may I say—a spiritual acquaintance despite the few thousand miles that separate us. Surely, then, the gospel did come in power and has given life and light to those who have accepted it. My short acquaintance with it has furnished me with abundant proofs of its truth and divine authority, and that it is a saving power not alone for the next life, but for this present life also; in fact is the very thing essential in order that this life may be of real value and purpose. It imparts to us the highest conception of life and prompts us to exclaim even amidst trials and difficulties, that life is a blessed thing.

When the church first came before my notice, I well remember that in making an estimation of it, I looked at it from its outward appearance and contrasted it with other churches in respect to its popularity (or lack of it) the number of members and their social standing, the place of worshiping and the form of worship, and the result was an unsatisfactory one. I did not desire nor did I entertain the least hope of being a member of it at that time, but now my judgment, yes and knowledge too, are entirely different. I have learned that the religion and Church of Christ cannot be judged by the eye, but only with the heart and soul, and that we are not in a position to make an absolutely correct judgment until we have complied with the wishes of Christ as expressed by his teaching; and when compliance has been rendered by us, we receive the gift of the Spirit. Then and not till then are we in a position to pass judgment upon spiritual matters; for spiritual things can be discerned only by the power of the Spirit; and the gift of this power is contingent upon our obedience to Christ.

The church which once appeared insignificant is now the most significant organization, in my judgment. When the gospel is accepted and we become members of the church, our souls receive "life," and a love for Christ springs up within us to a degree not previously experienced, and light dawns upon us to a surprising extent, and the Holy Spirit fully convinces us that the angel did indeed deliver the gospel message to Joseph Smith with power and authority. Does not this firm conviction of our foundation supply us with a cause for thankfulness? Is it not of great value to us? How many honest searchers of truth are there who would not willingly pay a high price for such a blessed assurance which is vouchsafed to the members of our church? This assurance must be beneficial to us in our spiritual life.

When a man is out upon a journey, say to some distant village or town, and he is not sure that he is traveling upon the right road, he walks with some hesitation and uneasiness; but when he is positively sure that the road is the correct one, he steps forward with energy and is free from anxiety that his efforts are misdirected or futile. And so it is with those who are convinced that they are traveling upon the right pathway to salvation; they are not encumbered with doubts on this point, therefore being free from such an anxiety they are in a better position to concentrate their energy and thought upon the object in view.

The gospel is eminently fitted to meet every requirement of the soul, and if our soul were to respond to its every call, what would hinder our rapid progress in every direction? The secret of it all is in a living obedience to it, and it is under such a condition that its light is most brilliant, bringing us increased joy in an appreciation of it. There is nothing of so much importance to man as his eternal welfare, and it can only be insured by a continual obedience to the wishes of Christ; and it is undoubtedly the supreme purpose of our life, and embraces all that is good. The gospel is a very practical one, and its glories and beauties are best seen and experienced by a practical observation of it; and being convinced of its truth, divinity, power, and authority, all that remains for us to do is to live it. May the Spirit aid us in this direction and thus give to the work the best testimony that can be given is my hope. Your brother,

W. R. ROBERTS.

ROCK ISLAND, Ill., March 18.

Editors Herald:—Saints of the Tri-Cities, by their united efforts to scatter the seed of truth as found in the restored gospel, may well claim Sunday a well spent day, as Sunday school is held in Moline at 9:45 a. m., with occasional preaching after; and at Rock Island, Sunday school at two p. m., at three preaching or prayer service, then Religio, and an effort for preaching in the evening, is being made for Moline, we understand. Surely a continuance will bring a reward.

There has been some persecution, by misrepresentation in the press classing us with those who believe in polygamy. An article showing error was written by Elder H. E. Moler, who in company with Elder A. J. Keck is laboring in this vicinity. They are certainly efficient laborers.

On the 11th inst. I was in Kewanee and heard a very fine sermon by Bro. John Chisnall. We were pleased to notice the large attendance of members, and those outside, of which we understand some are quite interested in the work. The new brick church, which is nearly paid for, is certainly a monument of beauty and attraction; and much credit is due the Saints for their untiring efforts.

Trying to be a close observer of the ways of the world, I am made sad by the many who are serving self and who treat invitation to hear religious efforts as absurd and unreasonable. The luxuries of life, with comforts and pleasures, seem to fill their cup to the brim. Under these conditions maybe many were when the Christ with deep emotions said: "O Jerusalem! how often would I have gathered you," "but ye would not;" "Your house is left unto you desolate." It proves how transitory are the things of earth life.

I yearn for Zion's redemption, for the coming of the Master; and yet conditions would seem to point to the dim future for these unfailing pleasures. Patience and faithfulness, however, must have their perfect work.

Your brother in Christ,

ALMA WHITEHOUSE.

KELOWNA, B. C., March 15.

Editors Herald: — British Columbia is a hard field to labor in. The greed for gold and the lack of an understanding of the difference between our church and the Utah faction are the dominant evils.

When last I wrote for publication the open opposition had temporarily subsided, until a big gun of the Advent persuasion had been imported from California. He attacked the faith, thus necessitating a discussion, which lasted one week. As evidence of truth's complete victory seven were baptized; while Elder Hunt, my opponent, hastened away homeward.

Although the debate killed the Adventist cause, it did not fix his Satanic majesty; for shortly after debate a crowd of unruly men and women assembled themselves at my place of service, proposing to run a meeting of their own. After some spirited conversation they got up en masse and walked out. The service went on. A few weeks glided by and I began to think "quietness" was starting her reign, but no; the public was startled by the publication and distribution of a small pamphlet entitled "Origin and contents of the Book of Mormon," gotten up by a Methodist clergyman. Actually it contained at least one hundred and sixty-four lies. I challenged his reverence, as also a Presbyterian divine, in the manner referred to heretofore, with the gratifying results of knowing their guns have been spiked; they haven't peeped since.

My proceedings in Chilliwack were now to be cut short for the present, as a mob spirit was beginning to manifest its barbarous hideousness. Their plans were kept secret, but not from that all-seeing One, who, warned me in a night-dream to flee the community, my life being in danger. I promptly obeyed, and started in to work at Victoria, the provincial capital. Was received and treated with all due kindness by Bro. and Sr. Lively, who sacrificed nobly for the spread of the work. Two weeks effort failed to elicit a responsive welcome from Gentile Victorians and we quit the place.

There was nothing for me to do now only to strike in where there were no Saints. Arriving at Agassiz, I obtained use of school, announced meetings; but when evening of appointment came I was refused key because of a delegation of ratepayers waiting on the trustees with a signed petition declaring I was "a Mormon elder with a notorious reputation," and begging them to refuse me entrance to school. Hereupon one of Agassiz' noble citizens with myself waited upon the caretaker of the public hall, my friend offering to give him two dollars and a half for one night's services; but lo! our opponents came also, thus echoing by action that historical statement, "When the sons of God met together, Satan came also." 'Twas no use; money wouldn't tempt him! thus they ousted me out of the town. I may add that while all hands were waiting upon the caretaker a free fight started, but was quickly stopped.

Going thirty miles up the line found me located at Yale, boarding among strangers. Tarried here nearly a week, and following the suggestion of wisdom made for the next town. I was rather unfortunate in this place, as I could get no place to stop over night. I even tackled John Chinaman for a share of his oriental soul-inviting bunk, but rigidly refused. In a few hours a freight came along; I boarded it and arrived at North Bend, the next town. Distributed tracts from house to house, thoroughly advertised meetings, preached a number of evenings, but could arouse no interest.

Wisdom did not justify my tarrying long in the place, as hotel expenses were high, hence I pushed for Lytton, the next town. Could get no place to preach right away, and as hotel fare was enormously high (two dollars a day) I merely distributed tracts to the few English-speaking people, and put for next hamlet, called Spence's Bridge. Only two or three houses here; preached once without attracting the city, and pushed on for Ashcroft, a town of considerable size. Hall rent here six dollars and a half a night. Was refused school, so I distributed tracts to all residences, and struck out for Enderby, which was reported to have a farming community surrounding. Ever since leaving Agassiz there was little or no farming carried on, owing to the rough country and barren mountains.

Arriving at Enderby I was about sick with a severe cold I had contracted the night before sleeping in a caboose and station house. However, we managed to struggle around. Was refused school, refused Presbyterian church, and hall rent too high. All I could do was distribute tracts to all houses. This being done I boarded an outgoing bobsleigh and put for the country. Six or seven miles out I spotted a school, but as settlers were three and four miles apart it seemed folly to attempt to hold meetings. That night I begged for a night's lodging, got it, and stowed away securely on a poky spring lounge. Morning came, thank heaven; but I soon learned it would take more than thanks to settle up with landlord for the meager two meals and bed; seventy-five cents was the damage. The scanty quilts and cold night by no means lessened my cold and so confident was I that I'd meet success at the next school section six miles away that I paid landlord half a dollar to drive me three miles through the deep snow. I fully expected my almost diminished pocket would soon be repleted. Arrived at next school section; got school. A few out first night, and to my wonder and surprise I was invited home with one of the trustees. Preached next night with increased audience. I was happy and hopeful. At conclusion of service I announced for further meetings, but no sooner had announcements been made than my landlord trustee played traitor and refused me school any longer. The audience was indignant, and in a closing peroration I painted up the hypocritical Methodist trustee in the glowing color of black.

Next day I struck a ride and reached Armstrong, a stranger as usual. Refused public school, but unexpectedly I got Methodist church; who would believe it? Announced services, the audience were gathering and in walks two trustees producing a telegram they had just received from their parson who was in a neighboring town (and who had been telegraphed to by Trustee Laurimer) saying that their discipline forbade use of church to my services. Did anyone ever hear tell of a more deliberate lie? There's not a line in all his discipline suggesting as parson said. The fact is that parson knew the discipline is not widely circulated, hence worked on the ignorance of his flock to oust me out; but I wouldn't go, I had been pushed around so much that I concluded I'd make a stand and face the music. Trustees saw I meant business, and coolly sat down listening to the discourse. The crowd was with us. Next day I rented the hall, preached two nights to interested growing audiences, who gave moderate collections, and again was fired. The proprietor of hall was a Presbyterian; I need say no more. The audience was angered; another fight nearly resulted.

I had lots of friends, but I had to leave town; no other place to preach; however the seeds of truth were left behind, as I sold three Books of Mormon.

In due time I arrived at Vernow, the next town, a place of considerable importance. Got a large warehouse free of charge; spent hours in posting notices of services; held one, and was bounced again by a Presbyterian, an editor of local press. Another hall in town, but no money to hire it. Things now looked pretty blue, I was nearly three hundred and fifty miles from the nearest body of Saints, tarrying at hotel, and means getting mighty meager. The prominent reason urged by editor for my expulsion was that they had heard of my work in Chilliwack. Many friends and sympathizers were made.

Having enough money to push on to the next town I immediately got under way and arrived here yesterday, having but sixty cents on hand. Am tarrying at hotel, the only boarding house; no friends nor Saints here. I have bargained for use of hall, agreeing to give one half the collections. I preach to-night. Let the work roll on.

In bonds,

LYDNEY, Eng., March 8.

Editors Herald:—The Herald pages are perused with deep attention, as week succeeds week, and I feel I could not afford to be without it. Since the war commenced mails have been somewhat late arriving in this country. We usually get the Herald when it has been in print about a fortnight, but of late it has been more like three weeks.

Ye editors and others are doubtless looking forward with interest to the coming conference. We wish you a good time; we also could wish it nearer to us, but that would be of no avail, as doubtless Lamoni is the place for business; and it looks as though the ministry quorums are up to date and are going to beat all previous records this time. My earnest prayer is that the Spirit of peace and love will be present in the assemblies, and that may be done (be it little or much) may have what the divine seal and sanction and be confirmed in the heavens above.

Pleased to hear our worthy missionaries arrived home safely, and I have one regret at present; that is, I would like for them to be just coming over instead of just having gone back. We appreciate very much the labors of both Bro. F. G. Pitt and Bro. Newton amongst us; and irrespective of the peculiar ideas of some, I would say, Send more men of the same stamp over to help us to gather in the thousands upon thousands whom Christ has redeemed. You should just have seen the remarkable way in which Bro. Pitt adapted himself to every department of this great latter-day work. I should like for his equal to reside in the little town of Lydney. The liberty and freedom with which Bro. Newton held forth the faith which has again been delivered unto the Saints, will not be forgotten for some time yet to come.

Since opening our new church here, October 8, 1899, three have come into the fold by baptism, and we are hopeful of more success as the summer advances. Prejudice runs high against us; still we are in no way discouraged, but on the other hand some count it joy that they are worthy to suffer shame for his (Jesus') name.

Bro. A. N. Bishop, of Cardiff, visits us twice per month, by direction of our late mission president, and his labors are not in vain, but on the other hand, much good is the result thereof. The opening services in connection with the new church were fairly successful. We find ourselves in debt to the extent of one hundred and seventy pounds, and as there are but few who can or who will give of their means to help us, we have agreed to pay five per cent per annum interest on this amount and pay twelve pounds or more if we can off the principal.

Whilst writing to your valuable columns I would like to know if section 42 Doctrine and Covenants is in force to-day. I know some will readily admit paragraph 5 is all right, which says the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them," etc. Now, to those who believe that portion come with me to verse 10; it reads: "And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship," etc.

Now much has been said of late about the gathering. I wonder if those who are scattered have done all in their power to get the pure and undefiled gospel before their friends and neighbors, so that the earth can be left without excuse. Query: Is the gospel to be preached as a witness? If so, how can it be successfully accomplished without meetinghouses, or churches, if you will have it? Hath not God made of one blood all nations to dwell upon the face of the earth? That being correct, are we preparing ourselves to have equality and all things common? I know I am coming to a very tender spot in some, but if I understand rightly this is a part of the celestial law, and he that cannot abide this law will not be meet for celestial glory.

In this country there are some who are very much opposed to the missionaries who come here time after time from America. To my mind this should cease to exist, as there is ample room for all to labor in this great cause without being jealous or envious of each other.

Heed the command, ye elders in Israel, Come up higher. Lay aside those things which will ultimately perish, and come, spend your time, your talent, and all the powers with which you are endowed in the service of God for the building up of his church and kingdom here upon earth, and assist to hasten that day which shall come when the will of God shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven. If you are faithful, eternal will be your glory and great will be your reward.

I humbly ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints and hope by God's help to be faithful and make my calling and election sure; and what I desire for myself I also desire for all God's children everywhere.

Your brother in the gospel,

HENRY ELLIS.

ECHO, I, T., March 17.

Editors Herald:—The Herald is truly a welcomed guest in our home. Were we compelled to be deprived of it I am sure we would feel like we had lost one of our best friends. It has often cheered me in times of darkness, when it semed that all my earthly friends had deserted me.

Five years ago to-day I obeyed the blessed command of the Lord. Never, since, have I regretted this step. I was only twelve years old then, yet I was sure that I was pleasing my Savior by obeying his command. The truthfulness of this being his work has been proven to me many times since I have been in the church.

There is no branch here. There are about eighteen or twenty members, seventeen of whom are Lamanites. We have prayer meeting every Sunday afternoon. The Lord remembers us, although we are weak, being deprived of all the privileges of a branch, yet the good Father lends his parental care to even us.

I hope and pray that the time is not far off when the Lord will open the way here and send forth the light of the gospel to the inhabitants of this land. Dear Herald readers, I ask an interest in your prayers, for all of us Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard. I feel that it is hard to live the life of a true Latter Day Saint and be in a scattered condition, deprived of the benefits gained from a branch. Your Lamanite sister,

DANA CLARK.

OZARK, Mo., March 21.

Editors Herald:—The writer has had privilege of attending the South Missouri conference, commencing March 17, ending March 19. While there I was rebaptized and confirmed into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The reason for so doing was because I had gone so far as to renounce the restored gospel and the accepting of false beliefs and doings of the world; and by so doing the writer had thrown himself out of the kingdom or Church of Christ. Then as baptism is the door of the church, it was necessary to be baptized again.

The writer's experience after getting disaffected from the church, has taught him a greater lesson and has more firmly established him in the truth. I enjoyed the conference, and all the Saints seemed joyful from the beginning to the end.

Prospects now are flattering for the work to be reëstablished in this South Missouri district. A church will soon be built at Springfield and the Sweden branch, and we have some little prospects for a church to be built here sometime in the near future.

I close, bearing my testimony a thousand stronger than ever to the restored gospel.

QUINCY ANDERSON.

WHAT CHEER, Iowa, March 19.

Editors Herald:—We have a small branch of the church here, and are trying to spread the good news to others, that those who will hear and obey may be benefited by the blessings contained in the gospel of Christ.

We have been favored with the labors of Elder W. H. Kephart for three weeks, preaching fifteen sermons, ten in What Cheer, and five in a schoolhouse two miles from town. One was convinced of the truth, and was baptized; others will obey in time, I believe. He makes the truth so plain that some said anyone could not help seeing it was the right gospel. I hope he will be returned to this Des Moines district. He is an able workman and has done much good in this district.

What Cheer is a hard place to get people out to hear the gospel; more interest in war news and other worldly things. Well did Jesus say, "And take heed unto yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, so that day may come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth."

May we all watch and escape all those things, is my desire.

Yours in the gospel,

PARLEY BATTEN.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 20.

Editors Herald:—We arrived here from Cleveland, Kirtland, and the Ohio conference (held at Sharon, Pennsylvania, the 4th and 5th) on the 9th, and are sojourning with daughter and her husband, Bro. and Sr. Trowbridge, and the small "boss" of the household Myron B. Glad to meet the friends of other days, and have been speaking to good audiences both Sundays, although under serious physical embarrassment, as lagrippe seems to have "gripped" me about the time of my arrival. Am succeeding in loosening his hold somewhat, but my stomach is still in a state of rebellion against the "mixed drink" in use by the denizens of this unfortunate city—a combination of Chicago sewage and Missouri mud "powerful" enough to strike terror to the heart of an individual whose habit of drink has been confined to water—just simple water; water that you can face and drink with your eyes open and with confidence against disaster.

The temperance crusader needn't bring his song here that tells us of the "clear, cool, sparkling water;" for it isn't here; nothing but the terrible thing referred to as an offset to beer and bad whisky.

I have been reading Rev. Sheldon's book, while partially confined to the house, and I wish he could write another book with a title and subject something like this: "What would Jesus do with the Mormon problem?" At any rate, the Latter Day Saint who has read Mr. Sheldon's current daily edition of the Topeka Daily Capital is painfully and fully aware of the fact that Mr. Sheldon has some things to learn about Jesus Christ, and that "reform" is needed in the manner and methods of some pious people as well as among churchmen, saloon men, or the politicians.

In current number of Saints' Herald, which I have read this morning, Dr. Josiah Strong and Rev. William Campbell, "a missionary of long service in Utah," states that the "Mormons" with one fifteenth of the aggregated number of Methodists, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists combined had outnumbered them all in making proselytes in a given period.

Mr. Sheldon has, however, in the edition of March 15 of his "reform," a "Christian newspaper," an article written by "Richard Wake," dated in Salt Lake City, entitled, "Mormonism at home," in which he states that Mormonism is "making but few converts in Utah, and losing many;" that "forty evangelical churches reporting as to losses and gains to and from Mormonism, show that during the history of those churches they have lost but nine members perverted to the dominant church, while their gains from that church equal forty-four per cent of their present membership. The indisputable fact that where Mormonism is best known it has the least success, is eloquent in condemnation of the system." This writer also states that "polygamy is an essential feature of Mormonism;" that the three especial witnesses to the Book of Mormon all apostatized, also seven of the apostles, four presidents of seventies, high priests, bishops, elders, and members who have been excommunicated or have withdrawn; there must have been hundreds of thousands, etc.

From what I have read of Celsus and other writers against Jesus and the primitive Christian Church, historians who have been so often and emphatically denounced by modern writers and "defenders" of Christianity, I have concluded that Celsus, Tacitus, Gibbon, and others will stand well, if they do not have the call, in the judgment day upon many of the "exponents" of Mormonism.

To state all the facts that common justice —to say nothing of Christian charity—demands in regard to "Mormon" history; to separate the truth from the error by drawing the line between the rational, Biblical, consistent, and preëminently Christian contention maintained by the church up to 1844, and the thing found in Utah so diametrically hostile, contrary, and opposed to it, is the very thing these pious pharisees do not propose at any time to do.

None know better than themselves that it is not polygamy that threatens their decaying and indefensible creed and church history; but, Brighamism, "Adam-God," "blood atonement," "polygamy," and the lying absurdities of Utah Mormonism are everlastingly and always paraded before the world, the truth never being half stated, and so interminibly, persistently mixed, history so distorted, as to forever if possible prevent the hungry, fair-minded investigator and searcher after something they have not from finding it in the camp of the enemy.

The hostility of man-invented religions and their beneficiaries has never let up in its warfare against the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the powerful and legitimately unanswerable argument in favor of its restoration, and the truth and purity of the Bible exposition—the Book of Mormon, and the revelations given through Joseph Smith. The religious world never has nor ever will forgive that angel for saying, nor Joseph Smith nor us for proving, that "they are all wrong."

But "if God be for us, who can" ultimately "prevail against us?" is our consolation. His presence cheers us in our warfare against the strongholds of the adversary and the enemies of Christ and his church, and the downfall of Babylon, burying with her in shame and the just contempt of future history all of her abettors and supports.

The time for General Conference draws near, and expectation enlivens many souls. If the "unexpected happens" we may all or some of us be disappointed in not seeing great things accomplished.

The unstable soul feeds on sensationalism, but people of godly or Christlike character are liable to be in conference and association with that company of spiritual forces and intelligences whose power to visit and to bless is not confined to General Conference assemblages and long interval or periods of time of waiting, but, as "heirs of salvation," are subject to the presence and teachings and glory betimes of a sweet and satisfactory and profitable "conference" of "ministering spirits" wherever their lot may be cast, or the necessities of a real soul hunger and thirst after right and righteousness exist.

"Some have not the knowledge of God," said St. Paul to those called to be Saints. What a pity it is that we should talk so much about, yet know so little of, God, as I fear some of us do.

"Ye worship, ye know not what." How many of us, like the Samaritan woman, are still in the "sign" and sensational stages of religious experience—and what a poor stomach we have as yet for the real "bread" and "water of life." May the kind and loving Father help us to a faster growth, a more devoted and self-denying service. Shall we practice in life as well as sing in the assembly of Saints, "We love to obey thy commands?"

Shall our devotion be a lip service, or shall our love toward Christ be measured by our love of and obedience to his law?

"Nearer, my God, to Thee
E'en tho' it be a cross that raiseth me."

I seldom somehow care to sing that, or if I do there arises before me the awful picture of Calvary. It is too heroic a song to be sung so carelessly as we sometimes sing it. My spirit often shrinks at a service far less agonizing than that which our divine Lord contributed upon that awful day and occasion, and I feel it more becoming a true Saint and more acceptable to our heavenly Father to sing along the line and in harmony with our small practices or accomplishment.

May we learn to be more truly devotional—more consistent, more acceptably so, is my prayer. M. H. BOND.

CHICAGO, Ill., March 21.

Editors Herald:—Our weekly Chicago corresponding missionary letter has but very little to say about the colored missionary in this city, and I think it is very necessary that our church papers should know how all the missionaries get along in this city, whether they be black or white; for God has no respect to color or persons; so I desire all of the Saints abroad to know that the colored missionary is not dead, but alive and busy, engaged in the Lord's work.

My protracted meeting, which began February 22, closed March 16, with a rousing sermon by Elder F. G. Pitt, our missionary lately from England. I did nearly all the preaching myself and have a few honest souls investigating our claims. I had some nights as high as twenty people and as low as three; but I had good liberty all the time preaching the word of life. God blessed us with good luck to capture a very good lady organist, and she is a good singer. She came as soon as I opened our new hall, and I know she was a Godsend, for we have had no one for several months, and I hope to see her a member of the church before long. I was talking with her last night about uniting with us by baptism, and she said she wanted all of the truth, so I think that is a good sign.

Now a word to our missionaries, when they come to Chicago: Our mission is No. 508, Thirty-seventh Street, West, and you will always find a card on the door that will tell you where we live. It is very true it may be well said of J. M. Terry in his letter, whenever the missionaries come to this city he tries to work them to death; but his scheme would not work with Bro. Joseph Smith when he was in Chicago, and I thank God he did not pass me by like some of the other big fish do when they come to this city. But I can truly say of Bro. J. H. Lake, whenever he is here, J. M. runs him under the lake, the big lake, to Lang Mission, in the morning at eleven a. m., and in afternoon, across the lake to what he calls "headquarters branch," and from there to West Pullman, and from there to Mission No. 3, Parkside, and from there to railroad train, and when Graves Mission No. 1 looks for them, I can't see their heels for dust.

I blame J. M. for all of this, for he is called missionary in charge. He worked my brother, R. C. Evans, from my home, Canada, so hard in one day I s'pose he won't come back here except he has to come back this way to go to heaven; and also Bro. A. H. Smith, when he was here; and J. M. looked for Bro. Joseph Luff to pass through so he could measure out to him the same allowance; so he so passed by. So come again, R. C. and others, so you can get a good rest.

So, dear brother, you must change your tactics and get off at some way station and call on me first, and I will enjoy your company and see that you get rest; for J. M. is very greedy and wants the elders all for himself.

I feel very thankful for the calls I have received in the past two years: President Joseph Smith, E C. Briggs, J. H. Lake, F. M. Cooper, J. S. Keir, H. Peters, Moler, H. Southwick, F. G. Pitt.

Those that were here that did not call on me: Elder H. C. Smith, Elder Wight, I. N. White, R. C. Evans, J. W. McDowell, E. A. Goodwin, J. A. Grant, Adam Keck, E. L. Kelley, Elder Burr, A. H. Smith, F. McDowell, and others of the missionaries whose names I did not get noted; and of course I have an eye to business.

Now, dear brethren, before my letter gets too large, it is one request I must ask while the Twelve and the First Presidency are met together at General Conference: My poor, invalid wife, who has been sick and afflicted for twelve years this month, constantly grows worse and worse every year. She asks the prayers of the Twelve and the whole church in her behalf, that if it be God's will to heal her through prayers she may be healed. Surely, Saints, I have had a hard time of it. All the church please remember your brother in Christ. In bonds,

G. H. GRAVES.

P. S.—I nearly forgot to say a word about my mission. It is a very nice hall; it will seat about two hundred people; location good, and by the way, Bro. S. C. Good is the finest paper hanger I ever saw. He both found the wall paper and put it on the hall. You bet he is a big spoke in the wheel in the Chicago missionary work; and also Bro. Wainright is a fine carpenter. He built the platform and did other carpenter work in the hall. May God speed them along. The writer did the painting and varnishing; so all looks well. Please help to pay rent, church, and all will go well with me until God opens up the way among our people. I want books and papers for Sunday school. Will do all I can towards them. Please send all mail to No. 3628 Armour Avenue, rear 3d Flat, Room H.

TEMPLE, Ohio, March 20.

Editors Herald:—A friend to the latter-day work has just reached the limit of earthly experience and gone to her rest. Mrs. Laura Sanborn, widow of Alden E. Sanborn, came to Kirtland in 1823, being then nine years old. She was therefore acquainted with the general workings of church progress and declension, during the period of seventy years. She is said to have always expressed her mind freely in its favor and in support of its chief advocates.

We visited her in November last by request of the Church Historian to obtain some evidence respecting a statement made by Dr. Philastus Hurlbut connecting Sidney Rigdon and the Spalding story as the basis of the Book of Mormon; and although she was very feeble, and could talk but little, yet she seemed to remember with clearness a statement made by him to the effect that "he [Dr. Hurlbut] never could connect Sidney Rigdon with the Spalding Story and make that thing the basis of the Book of Mormon; but he made it tell like h—l on the Mormons." She seemed pleased to be able to make affidavit to the statement, and thus extend a word of favor to the truth.

In her presence her son stated that she was always glad of an opportunity to speak a favorable word for the church. Another of her sons said: "Had it not been for Mother's feeble health for the last few years, she would have united with your people."

She was respected and loved by all who make mention of her, and so a mother has departed, a historical witness has left the stand; but her testimony will still live, being supported by works of righteousness.

By her request we addressed those who assembled to pay their respect to her remains. She died March 14, being eighty-five years old.

We are having all the word March denotes as far as weather is concerned; four degrees below zero on the night of the 14th.

HOW TO READ.

Every one supposes he knows how to read, and most people enjoy reading; but the most people also do cursory reading, and a great deal of it. People read too much and think too little. It is like eating everything and digesting nothing, and in time disastrous results follow the practice.

To get all out of an article or poem that the author endeavored to put there, is the secret of profitable reading, and in order to do this we must stop to think. This consumes a little more time, but the result of reading and thoroughly sensing one good article is worth more than the hasty reading of a whole book. In the author's mind is much that the incompleteness of language fails to express. If we can think it out, and take the intended truths home to our hearts, we will find a hitherto unknown charm in reading, and the truths expressed will go deep into the heart, and its influence will be felt for good in the life of the reader.

For example, take the young girl reading the description of an affectionate scene in the modern novel. Will she not pause to fully digest that? She will place herself in the scene, and we are safe to say she fully comprehends the author's thought. Then let her give the same thought to the words, and as completely grasp the meaning wherever she reads, and her mind will develop, and (it being understood that she chooses only good reading) her life will be benefited, and she will be enabled to comprehend the feelings, the hopes and sorrows of others, and her sympathy will be aroused for her suffering brothers and sisters, and charity will then develop, and how far will the good influence extend? Think it out. When we sing,

"My times are in thy hand;
My God, I wish them there," comprehend the full significance of what we say, and let it voice the sentiment of the soul. In this way "The songs of the righteous are a prayer" indeed. When we listen to that prayer: "That they may eat in remembrance of the body of thy Son, and witness unto thee, O God, the eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him and keep his commandments," etc.; let us each take it home to the heart, and think—think seriously of the witness we make unto the Father. There is deep meaning there—more than the simple words signify.

In this age of rush and hurry, there is so much good lying everywhere about us, that we have no time to appreciate—flowers bloom unheeded about our feet, overlooked in our effort to keep pace with the onward move. Unnumbered blessings and beauties inhabit this world with man; and could he only take time to look about him and appreciate them, and live worthy of the gifts so freely bestowed, contentment and happiness would not have to be searched for in the foreign clime—we could all find it under our own humble eaves.

THERE IS NO UNBELIEF.

There is no unbelief;
Whosoever plants a seed beneath the sod
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusts in God.

Whoever says when clouds are in the sky,
Be patient, heart, light breaketh by and by,
Trusts the Most High.

Whoever sees 'neath winter's field of snow
The silent harvest of the future grow
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

Whoever says, "To-morrow," "the Unknown,"
"The future," trusts that power alone
He dares disown.

The heart that looks on when the eyelids close
And dares to live when life has only woes;
God's comfort knows.

There is no unbelief,
And day by day and night unconsciously
The heart lives by that faith that lips deny—
God knoweth why.—Bulwer.

"SHOWING PUPILS HOW TO PREPARE THEIR WORK."

In our various conventions we have frequently discussed the methods for the superintendent and teachers to pursue in the preparation of their work, but as yet little has been said as to that which is expected of the pupil. Is it that we do not fully realize the importance of the pupil in the Sunday school? Although without the superintendent and teachers it would not be possible to conduct a Sabbath school, neither would it be possible to conduct the school without the pupil; and for the benefit of the pupil is it that the various officers are laboring. But they cannot be successful without the coöperation of the pupil. How many of the teachers pause to think that the reason this coöperation is not given them by all is because the pupil knows not how, rather than because he is unwilling to give it; and, showing him how, teachers, is a duty which belongs to you.

Do not seek excuse for neglecting this duty by saying that this is something to which the parents at home can attend. Many of our Sunday school children are those whose parents care too little for the spiritual growth of their little ones to so much as attempt teaching them their Sabbath school lesson. Such children are often anxious to prepare and be able to deliver well the lessons mapped out in the Quarterly. But they fail to do this, and their teacher, at times, becomes discouraged and wonders why those pupils whom he knows respect and love him fail to do their part in making the Sabbath school a success.

Before laying the blame on your pupils, search yourself and see if in any way you are at fault. Perhaps in asking yourself this one simple question you will discover the difficulty: "Do I explain to my pupils the way I wish them to prepare their lessons?" Have you ever heard a teacher in the schoolroom thus interrogated? "How shall we prepare this lesson?" The child knew well the lesson was to be prepared, but how it was to be prepared, was a problem too difficult for him to solve. Just so in the Sunday school; we must not only tell our pupils what to do, but how to do it. Then, and not until then, will he take delight in doing it.

Someone will urge that the lack of time prevents him showing his pupils concerning the preparation of the following lesson. True, the time given for the discussion of the lesson is very limited; but we shall advance most surely when we have learned to be content in making haste slowly. Locke says: "The chief art of learning is to attempt but little at a time."

It would be impracticable to prescribe a set of rules the following of which will produce the desired results. Each teacher must use his own individuality in suiting unto his pupils their required needs, but we may be able to make a few suggestions which will be of benefit to him.

In glancing over our present Primary Quarterlies the first golden text to meet our eyes is, "The Son of Man came to save that which was lost." If the Sunday previous to the recital of this lesson the teacher explains to her pupils "who the Son of Man" is, and what is meant by "that which was lost," then when they learn that sentence, those words as they repeat them over and over during the week will convey to their little minds some meaning. The thought will be impressed upon them and they will retain it. They will not have learned to repeat those words mechanically, which in a short time they have lost forever.

The older pupils may be instructed to prepare their lessons so as to be able to tell it in story form, not simply answer the questions printed in the quarterly, also to express their own opinions upon all subjects, especially those on which there is room for doubt in the child's mind as to its real meaning. Many persons, however, experience difficulty in expressing their thoughts readily. We frequently hear an attempt at relating some part of the lesson ended with, "Well, I know, but I can't tell." If you have such a pupil you may, by encouraging him to rehearse his lessons to those at home, help him in overcoming this difficulty.

Insist that each of your pupils, though he may study his lesson with another, does everything for himself. Although a little time can be saved if he looks up one reference while his sister searches for another, he will have failed to gain the qualities of self-reliance, perseverance, and thoroughness.

Do not allow your pupils to be content with using the Bible and Quarterly alone. Encourage them to obtain and use all such helps as Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, books of authentic history; in fact, anything that pertains to the principal thought in the lesson. This plan may prove an incentive to develop and widen the understanding as well as acquaint them with the church works and encourage them to obey the divine command, "Search the Scriptures." BOOKS IN A LIBRARY.

The library of a Sunday School should not be considered in the light of an educational institution alone, with food for the brain but none for the soul. And much less should it be, as is too often the case, a collection of useless books whose contents serve no other purpose than that of entertaining for the time and which give no food for afterthought.

There are at least four classes whose needs should be considered when selecting books for the library—the student, the youth, the toiler, and the child. The needs of the student should first be supplied, and the library should be stored with good books for reference on all subjects in which a Bible student, a Sunday school scholar, or a minister would be interested. The works of noted commentators, histories, maps, a Bible dictionary, etc.

To provide for the needs of the tired mothers who have but a few moments at one time to read, and have no unneeded energy which they may spend in study, for such, this library, whose aim is to benefit all, should furnish books clear and comprehensible, interesting and instructive. They must be written in a style which does not require a second reading, nor perfect attention to glean the thought. Still they should be teeming with good lessons, fresh from the one great teacher.

The characters should not be those surrounded by luxury, with no cares but those imposed by society. Such books may have their place in some unawakened mind. But for the weary housewife with innumerable cares, such ideas are only fruitful of discontent. Let the characters be those homelike ones whose trials might easily be her own, but those who have the wisdom and ability to overcome each difficulty. Such books may be found in the writings of Mrs. Alden, Becca Middleton Sampson, Mrs. Mulock Craik. Among the good books in this line are "The Endless Chain;" "A Devotee and a Darling;" "Prince of the House of David;" "Ester Ried;" "Titus;" and "Chautauqua Girls at Home."

For the youth whose habits are not yet formed and who has no particular taste for reading, the librarian must have at hand books which are attractive, even fascinating, but which contain only the purest thoughts and incentives to a noble life. The young usually have no desire to read or to hear lectures. What they read must be of a different character. Books on natural history, biographies of good men, and stories of such writers as Miss Alcott, Rose Carey, Holmes, Irving, or Roe will reach most youths in our schools. IDA SKANK CASTER.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

CENTRAL PASSENGER ASSOCIATION, ETC.

Advices from the Chairman of the Central Passenger Association, dated March 23, give notice of reduction of rates over its lines of road to the coming General Conference and General Conventions, Lamoni, Iowa, April 5–20, 1900.

"The territory of the Central Passenger Association . . . is bounded on the east by Pittsburg, Salamanca, Buffalo, and Toronto; on the north by the line of and including points on, the Grand Trunk Railway, from Toronto to Port Huron, thence via Lakes Huron and Michigan to Chicago; on the west by Peoria, Keokuk, Quincy, Hannibal, St. Louis, and Cairo; and on the south by the Ohio River, but including points on either side of that river."

The following-named lines of railroads in its territory agree to the reduction of one and one third fare for the round trip.

Each of the following companies, namely: Allegheny Valley R'y, Ann Arbor R. R., B. & O. R. R., B. & O. S. W. R. R., C. & O. R'y, C. & E. I. R. R., Chicago & Erie and Erie R. R., C. I. & L. R'y, C. & M. V. R. R., Cincinnati Northern R'y, C. H. & D. R'y, C. C. C. & St. L. R'y, C. L. & W. R'y, C. T. & V. R. R., C. P. & St. L. R'y, C. A. & C. R'y, C. N. O. & T. P. R'y Co., C. & M. R'y, C. S. & H. R. R., D. A. V. & P. R. R., D. & C. N. Co., D. & L. N. R'y, E. & I. R. R., E. & T. H. R. R., F. Ft. W. & W. R'y, G. R. & I. R'y, G. T. R'y System, Hocking Valley R'y, I. D. & W. R'y, I. I. & I. R. R., J. & St. L. R'y, L. S. & M. S. R'y, L. E. & St. L. Con. R'y, L. & N. R. R., L. E. & W. R. R., L. H. & St. L. R'y, Mich. Central R. R., Mobile & Ohio R. R., N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R., N. & W. R'y, Ohio Central Lines, Ohio Southern R. R., O. & L. K. R. R., Ohio River R. R., P. D. & E. R'y, Penna. Lines, Pere Marquette R. R., Pitts., Bessemer & Lake Erie R. R., P. & L. E. R. R., P. & W. R'y, Pittsburg, Lisbon & Western R'y, St. L. C. & St. P. R'y, T. P. & W. R'y, T. St. L. & K. C. R. R., Vandalia Line, Wabash R. R., W. & L. E. R. R.

The same general rules already published govern the reduction in rate, except that tickets costing less than seventy-five cents will not be included.

Tickets must be purchased from April 2–7 (not earlier than the 2d and not later than the 7th); except where rules of local roads permit earlier purchase, when necessary, for delegates to reach destination by opening date; which may be learned by local inquiry.

Passengers pay full fare on going passage and obtain a separate certificate with every ticket purchased, which when countersigned at Lamoni will entitle purchaser to return fare, unlimited, over the same route as going journey, at one third regular fare, up to April 24.

All interested will take notice that according to notices published to date, reduced rates have been granted by the New England, Trunk Line, Southeastern, Central, and Western Passenger Associations; the Southwestern (covering some, but not all, lines in the State of Texas) declining only because of limited attendance from its territory.

All the associations named above have agreed to the change in dates for purchase of going tickets; namely, from April 2–7.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 24, 1900.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, the great and supreme Ruler of the universe has in his infinite wisdom removed from among us our worthy and esteemed brother, John M. Terry, Jr.; and whereas, the intimate acquaintance with his parents in this branch makes it eminently befitting that we record our appreciation of him; therefore, be it resolved, that the sudden removal of such a life leaves a vacancy and a shadow that will be deeply realized by all the members of this branch, and will prove a serious loss to the community in which he lived. Resolved, that with deep sympathy with the bereaved parents of the deceased we express our hope that even so great a loss to us all may be overruled for good by him who doeth all things well. Be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Saints' Herald for publication, and a copy be forwarded to the bereaved parents.

Adopted by the Stewartsville branch, March 25, 1900.

GEO. A. SUMMERFIELD, Clerk.

BORN.

MOORE. — Near Pollock, Missouri, February 3, 1900, to Bro. Milo G. and Sr. Almancie Moore, a son. Blessed at home March 8, by Elder Robt. M. Elvin, and named Leo.

HILL.—At Somerville, Massachusetts, October 30, 1899, to Oscar W. and Sr. Annie Hill, a son, and named David Henry, blessed December 24, by Elder M. H. Bond.

EAMES.—At Providence, Rhode Island, January 25, 1899, to Mr. Canly D. and Sr. Emma Smith Eames, a daughter, and named Claire Agusta. Blessed December 27, by Elders M. H. Bond and R. Bullard.

REEVES.—At St. Louis, Missouri, February 4, 1900, to George and Sr. Mary L. Reeves, a daughter, and named Helen Gertrude. Blessed March 11, by Elders M. H. Bond and J. C. Hitchcock.

DIED.

EATON.—At Deer Isle, Maine, February 22, 1900, Elzinea C., wife of Edwin Eaton, aged 20 years and 10 months. She was baptized May 24, 1896. A husband is left to mourn. Funeral at Saints' chapel, by J. J. Billings and friends.

ROBINS.—At Deer Isle Reach, March 3, 1900, Nellie F., daughter of J. H. and Myrtle Robins, aged 8 months and 3 days. Funeral at house, by J. J. Billings and S. Eaton.

MANCHESTER.—On March 7, 1900, Bro. William Manchester departed this life. He was an aged veteran, being 86 years and 3 months old. But we feel that he is entitled to a "crown of life," having "been faithful unto death." Funeral services were held in Saints' church in Kennebec, in town of Machias.

BROOKS.—At Arlington, Iowa, February 26, 1900, of diphtheria, Wallace, youngest son of Bro. D. S. and Sr. Sadie Brooks, of the same place.

REESE.—At Pleasanton, Iowa, March 11, 1900, Elder Abram Reese, aged 76 years, 5 months, and 18 days. He was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, September 21, 1823; married in 1844, and came to America in 1855. He and his wife accepted the restored gospel in 1848; but when they arrived in St. Louis, they learned the evils of Utahism and went no further west. In 1867 they were convinced of the truth, as preached by the elders of the Reorganized Church, and Bro. Reese united with it. Thenceforth he was an active worker in St. Louis and vicinity, preaching, presiding, and baptizing until their removal to Pleasanton in October, 1881. Eight children were born to this couple, only three remain. By all who knew him Bro. Reese was held in honor for his uprightness, strict integrity, and kind deeds. After fifty-six years of companionship the aged widow is greatly bereaved, but expects soon to join him on the other side. By his request, made some years ago, Bro. H. A. Stebbins was called to preach the sermon. The Saints' chapel was filled with friends and neighbors. Elder Duncan Campbell assisted and had charge of the services.

FISH.—At the home of Mr. James M. Ashcroft, near Mallard, Iowa, March 12, 1900, Bro. John Fish, aged 24 years, 11 months, and 27 days. Bro. John was baptized July 16, 1899; was president of Mallard Zion's Religio Society at death. His bride of less than a week, father, mother, brothers and sisters are almost heartbroken, notwithstanding they have hope in Christ. Services were conducted at the home by Elder C. E. Butterworth, assisted by the pastor of M. E. Church, and funeral sermon at the Saints' chapel at Mallard, by Elder C. E. Butterworth, assisted by Elder Edward Ford. Both services were largely attended, as everybody who knew John seemed to love him.

ASKINS.—At his home in Gray Township, Huron County, Ontario, on November 5, 1899, Bro. John Askins; the Episcopal minister of Brussells conducted funeral services. He was respected by his neighbors and was always reliable in business; quiet in manner, and esteemed among his early associates. When he lived in Halton County he was a good Saint, and the last time he met in sacrament meeting was in June; he bore a good testimony, expressing his hope of eternal life and of continuing faithful to the end. He was born February, 1835, in Trafalgar Township, Halton County, Ontario; baptized October 31, 1864; ordained a teacher November 21, 1865.

EVERETT.—Bro. John Everett, died March 21, 1900. Born in Norfolk, England, March 25, 1820, he tarried eighty years, lacking four days. Miss M. A. Smith became Mrs. Everett April 27, 1843, and faithfully, side by side, have they abode for nearly fifty-seven years. Nine children are the fruitage of their union. In 1849 he received the gospel and in 1853 emigrated to Utah. Like many others, they soon discovered the difference between the church precepts in England and church practices in Utah. Faith shattered and hope destroyed, they came to Nebraska. Unsatisfied and self-criticising, he feared they had judged too hastily, therefore again visited the West. But more tangible were the evidences, and more certain the conclusions that whatever of good might once have distinguished the church in England, the church in Utah did not possess it now, nor seem to desire it. They therefore turned there backs again on the fallen Mecca of their ambitions and hopes, and settled within a few miles of Nebraska City. There they again heard the "old, old story," as told by Henry Kemp and J. W. Waldsmith; and Bro. John said, "That has the ring the gospel had in my native land." He cast his lot with God's people, and was faithful even unto death. Funeral services conducted by Elder M. H. Forscutt, assisted by Elder J. W. Waldsmith.

"Modern Protestantism is no longer in a situation to demand obedience to its confessions and spirit. It lives still only by its inconsistencies and thrives only by its illogical compromises." To this the great Protestant Reichsbote (Berlin) replies: "We do not envy the Catholic Church her consistency and her mechanical infallibility as a means of securing agreement and harmony in her own ranks. This is nothing but the principle of brutal force, and not moral suasion."—Translations made for The Literary Digest, March 10, 1900.

THE CONFERENCE OF 1900.

LAMONI, IOWA.

The General Conference will meet at Lamoni, April 6. It is time to consider how to get there. The Wabash Railroad is the great connecting link betwen the East and the West. It is the through line from Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and Detroit to Chicago. In addition, it has a line from Toledo and Kansas City, by way of St Louis, as well as via Decatur, Springfield, and Jacksonville. The Wabash runs free reclining chair cars on all through trains. HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

SPIRITUAL PARALYSIS IN THE RUSSIAN CHURCH.

No more striking evidence of what a church may become under the domination of the civil power can be had than by contemplation of the Russian schismatic church to-day. There is an article in the Catholic World Magazine for April, by Rev. Joseph Boyle, which makes a revelation of the inefficiency of the clergy, as well as the degradation of the people, as a direct result of a church that exists simply to bolster up a civil authority.

Aksakoff says: "Our church is a vast and unreliable flock with the police for a shepherd, and in Russia instead of the spirit that makes alive we have an atmosphere of death. The sword of the spirit has become rusty, overawed by the material sword of the state." The article goes on to say:—

"With its pastors falling a prey to such sterilizing tendencies, it would be surprising to find religion an active force in the life of the people. No attempt at definite religious instruction is ever made. The elementary catechism, drawn up by command of Peter the Great, remains the only source of enlightenment. The peasant's knowledge of dogma does not get much beyond the elementary facts of curiously reversed importance contained in the Russian saying: 'The Czar is in St. Petersburg, and God is in heaven.' Superstition is rife in every grade of society. Amongst the upper classes magic appears to be regularly practiced. The administration of the sacraments claims little of the clergy's time, and excites less of the people's devotion. To comply with a regulation of the Holy Synod, there is a perfunctory effort made to receive Communion during paschal time; but even then, in most parishes, more than half the population totally disregard the law. Yet the mass of the Russian people are religious, after a fashion. Like most Oriental peoples they are deeply imbued with a sort of contemplative piety. In the peasant's cabin as well as the prince's palace gilt icons, or images of the Blessed Virgin and saints, share with that of the Czar the places of honor. In spite of ignorance, apathy, and Protestant propagandism, devotion to the saints has always kept a firm hold on Russian life; it is the one Christian practice that stands out most luminously amidst the spiritual wreckage with which the Photian schism has strewn the East.

"The religious apathy at home has its counterpart in the feeble attempts at missionary work abroad. Though the Muscovite eagles have been borne across Siberia to the Pacific little has been done to spread Christianity in their track.

"It is fifty years since the late Mr. Palmer, of Magdalen College, Oxford, in a letter to the Russian student M. Khomiakoff, severely impeached the utter indifference shown by the Orthodox Church towards the duty of converting the heathen. The impeachment has lost none of its force for anything that has been done in the meantime. The propaganda undertaken in Japan has yielded no tangible results. In Siberia the attempts to evangelize the Buryates who dwell near Lake Baikal have not weaned these people from their Buddhism. The tribes of the Ostyaks, and some of the Samoyeds, accepted baptism under the gentle suasion of bayonets, but their Christianity continues to be more than three fourths paganism. As if to emphasize the utter hollowness of all this belated zeal, we had the spectacle, some years ago, of whole villages going over to Mohammedanism. The movement of apostasy among individual Russians residing in the missionary sphere still continues, but the defections en masse have been checked, thanks to the zeal that occasionally prompts the Czar's soldier to play the role of missionary on his own account. In the foreign mission field, as at home, it is the soldier behind the preacher that proves the most fruitful instrument of conversions. M. Tchiakowski, in reporting the successful preaching of Pitirime, the Bishop of Nijni-Novgorod, significantly added that the efforts of this eloquent missionary were in every case firmly supported by the troops of Vice-Governor Rjewski, who assembled the audience by force.

The Czar is the real head of the church and the master of its destinies. The fact is painfully recognized in the widespread servility that makes the Russian hierarchy the most sycophantic in Europe. 'Nowhere else,' says Aksakoff, the able Panslavist writer, 'can be found such fear of truth as in our spiritual hierarchy. And the chief cause of it all is that we have so little belief in the power of truth. Our church is a vast and unreliable flock with the police for a shepherd, an institution that may be useful in the interests of the state. But it must never be forgotten that the church is a kingdom where the moral law ought not to be violated, and where infidelity to principle ought not to remain unpunished. And in Russia, instead of the spirit that makes alive, we have an atmosphere of death, and the sword of the Spirit has become rusty, overawed by the material sword of the state, and at the gates of the church, instead of the angels of God, the guardians are gendarmes and police.'

"The outlook for the future is far from hopeful. It excites bitter misgivings amongst those best qualified to judge, and most interested in the welfare of the Russian Church. Amongst those who have lifted their voices against the aggressive agencies of irreligion, and there are many such, two distinct currents of opinion are visible. A small party, strong in its intelligence but sadly hampered in its freedom of action by police supervision, follows the lead of the Abbé Tolstoi, and sees in a reunion with the Holy See the only hope of infusing fresh life and vigor into the worn-out forces of 'Orthodoxy.' The larger body of opinion, however, gravitates towards the enthusiasts who still believe in the inherent resources of Holy Russia if she were set free from the long frost of her political bondage. In the immediate future, at all events, these aspirations are hardly likely to be realized. The church has become too handy an instrument in the schemes of autocracy to be left at liberty to attend to her own mission. And should the day of her deliverance ever arrive, it is the deliberately expressed forecast of the historian Pogodin that 'one half of the peasantry will join the sect of the Rasskols, and one half of the educated classes will become Catholics.'" — Catholic World's list.

GEOGRAPHY AND EXPLORATION IN 1899.

No great geographical discoveries have been recorded during 1899, but a great deal of exploration work has been accomplished. Considerable interest has been taken in preparing expeditions of Antarctic research, of which the Belgian expedition has returned with some important results. Mr. Borchgrevink has begun his work at Cape Adar on the Antarctic mainland. The search for Andrée has helped to increase our knowledge of parts of the Arctic coast, says Popular Science Monthly. In Asia, Captain Deasy has laid down the whole of the course of the Yarkand River, which was before unknown.

The expeditions sent out by Canadian surveys are constantly opening up new country, and the maps produced are of great value. Mr. A. P. Low, finds Labrador to be a country less bleak and hopeless than has been generally believed. Sir William Martin Conway has done some very creditable explorations in the Andes and in Tierra del Fuego the scientific results of which are of considerable value. In Chili, Dr. Staffer and his colleagues have explored the wonderful fiords of the coast and rivers which came down to them from the Andean range. Dr. Moreno has described the results of twenty-five years' exploration of the great Patagonian plains, and the readers of the Scientific American will remember the article which was recently published on Prof. J. B. Hatcher's explorations in Patagonia. One of the most important scientific enterprises was the German oceanographical expedition in the Valdivia under Prof. Chum, which went south through the Atlantic to the edge of the Antarctic ice and north through the Indian Ocean to Sumatra, and home through the Red Sea.—Scientific American, March 24, 1900.

THE ADULTERATION OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

For a considerable time the Senate Committee on Manufactures has had under way an investigation into the extent to which food preparations are made the subject of adulteration, and their report has been submitted to the Senate. The evidence seems to show that our peppers, cinnamon, cloves, and spices, generally, including ginger and mustard are adulterated, the amount depending on the man ordering the article; in some cases it reaches sixty per cent. Of course, in the case of butter, cheese, and flour, the practice of fraud can be more easily detected than in the falsification of spice. The committee has taken the ground that the sale of deleterious and unhealthy food products should be prohibited and where the adulteration is harmless and the goods cheapened, they should be marked for what they are. One method of dealing with the difficulty contemplates putting important food products under the internal revenue law, as has been done with flour, filled cheese, and butter. It is said that the poor flour bill has absolutely prevented the sale of adulterated flour and has increased, according to Bradstreet's, the sale of American flour 25 per cent in other countries. Another plan contemplates the establishment of a board which shall fix the standards for food, drink, and drugs. Of course, the same rule should apply to foreigners who manufacture goods to be sold in this country.—Scientific American, March 24, 1900.

IMMIGRATION IN 1899.

The total arrivals for the year ending June 30, 1899, were 311,715, an increase of 82,416 or 36 per cent. Of the total arrivals Europe furnished 297,349; Asia 8,972; Africa 51. In all other countries 5,343. There were 195,277 males and 116,438 females. According to age, 43,983 were under fourteen years; 248,187 were from fourteen to forty-five and 19,545 were from forty-five years or older. As to illiteracy, 60,446 could neither read nor write, and 1,022 could read, but were unable to write. The total amount of money which they exhibited to the officers was $5,414,462; 174,613 had less than $30 each. — Scientific American, March 24, 1900.

THE PHYSIOLOGY OF PLANTS.

At the botany section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science Professor Barnes, advocating the claims of plant physiology for university recognition, said that even to well-educated people the word physiology, conjoined with plant, conveys no definite idea. "Physiology" they studied at school that hybrid of human anatomy and hygiene, with barely enough real physiology to salt it, which is inflicted upon immature youngsters, to the accompaniment of lurid photographs of an inebriate's stomach. What can physiology have to do with plants that have no teeth to decay, stomachs to ulcerate, or eyes to become myopic? And so it comes about that one must explain to the average man that plants are really alive, that they work and rest, and that they are sensitive to what goes on around them.

In the chemistry section of the British association, Professor Ward called attention to various instances in the vegetable and animal kingdoms where organisms existed together and performed functions helpful to each other, as was the case with the alga and fungus constituting the dual organism of lichens. This he termed symbiosis. In other cases one organism prepared the way for the other, as in the conversion of starch first into sugar by a mold, and then into alchol by yeast. This he termed metabiosis. Other stages of association existed up to the case where one organism injured the other. This state of affairs, which was exemplified by many parasites, was termed antibiosis. The aid rendered by one organism to another was the preparation of proper nutritious matter or the removal of noxious matter.

Apropos of the discussion caused by the reference in President McKinley's message to the emancipation of slaves in the archipelago of Sulu, Prof. D. B. Macdonald contributes to the Review of Reviews for March an analysis of the legal position of slaves as to emancipation under Moslem law—the law which has heretofore governed the Sultan of Sulu and his subjects.

THE ARENA FOR APRIL.

The Arena for April maintains its usual standard of excellence. The following table of contents is in evidence that the Arena is a growing educator among the great monthly reviews: Expansion—Past and Prospective; Conquest and the Constitution; American Development through Assimilation. Irish National Reunion. The Eastern Question. System and Application of International Law. The Passing of the Mormon. Criminal Sociology: 1. The Making of Honest People; 2. The True Purpose of Penitentiary Penalties. Property: Its Psychology and Sociology. Secular Questions in the Pulpit. Genius and Regeneration. Evolution and Immortality. The Feminine Factor: 1. Woman and the Industrial Problem; 2. Woman in Retrospect. Per annum $2 50; per copy 25c.

THE ARENA COMPANY,
NEW YORK.

The Puerto Rican tariff question is editorially discussed in the Review of Reviews for April, and in the same magazine there is an able exposition of the relations of the United States Constitution to the Territories, by Prof. Harry Pratt Judson, of the University of Chicago.

In the Review of Reviews for April the methods of industrial training pursued at Hampton Institute, in Virginia, are described by Albert Shaw, whose text is illustrated from a series of forty photographs recently taken by Miss Frances Johnston, of Washington.

W. M. Flinders Petrie, the famous Egyptologist, contributes the leading article in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly for April. In it he gives a brief popular account of the discoveries which have been made during recent years in Egyptian exploration. Professor Petrie has charge of the fund set aside by the British Government for archæological work in Egypt, and is unquestionable the greatest living authority to-day on Egyptology. The historical importance of the work done by this fund, and the amount of light which it has thrown on doubtful questions of early history, make its publications exceedingly interesting and valuable.

The people who want to know about the latest place for "getting rich quick," should read Prof. Angelo Heilprin's article in the April number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly. It gives an account of the Cape Nome district in Alaska, which, according to Professor Heilprin, who is a scientist of high standing and whose statements may be depended on, is an extremely promising, if not the most promising of all the Alaskan gold fields. A number of illustrations add much to the interest of the text, and give one an idea of the physical characteristics of the Cape Nome region.

Prof. John Trowbridge, of Harvard University, contributes an interesting article, entitled Latest Developments with the X Rays, to the April number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly. A number of curious illustrations accompany the text.

FORGIVENESS.

Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.—Jesus.

Father, forgive them; they know not what they do!—Jesus.

As we look at the conduct of our fellowmen in the light of the principles found and expressed in the foregoing sentences, we are sometimes at a loss to account for the motive that lies beneath the surface of word and deed.

If a man pray, using the terms of the first sentence, and placing the emphasis on the word "forgive" the second time it occurs, it makes the sentence to read as if expressed thus: Lord, I in my goodness of heart and holiness of purpose, do most willingly, earnestly, and freely forgive my fellowmen, severally and collectively, all the wrongs of every sort committed by them against me, or by which I may have been aggrieved; therefore, O, Lord, do thou, also, forgive them that those wrongs so committed may in no way affect or prevent their present and eternal welfare.

This may appear to be harsh and egotistical when written thus: but it is the way this portion of the prayer is too frequently rendered, and is as it sounds when so uttered. The fact appears to be that even while in the act of prayer, the very time when a man should be humble and free from every influence of selfish prominence or bias, the feeling of self-justification and self-gratulation is at work and dictates the spirit of the prayer. "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us."

This is most unfortunate; but who shall say that the picture is overdrawn. Listen, when you hear the Lord's Prayer repeated again.

If the one who prays is sufficiently mindful of his own weaknesses, his own want of broad and comprehensive charity towards his fellow men and fellow servants in the common cause, instead of placing the emphasis on the word "forgive" in the second place, he will in mind place the stress on the word "as," thus:—

Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us.

This is virtually to say: Lord, I feel my weakness and see my great need of thy love and the wisdom that is from above; therefore, feeling that I may not know how to forgive those who may have done me wrong, I dare not ask thee to forgive me my trespasses against thee only as I forgive them, and feeling assured that in the manner and degree that I forgive others thou will forgive me, for this is just; I ask thee, O, Lord, that I may be able to fully forgive that I may be fully forgiven.

The spirit in which a disciple should pray for pardon should be one of conscious freedom from feelings of resentment, or desire to punish others for wrongs done him by them whether those wrongs have been of a public, or personal and private nature.

The spirit of self-justification is not in the prayer as Jesus gave it, and should never be permitted to be present in the breathing of the prayer, whether uttered in public, or in the closet, or the family circle. The terms of the prayer are of similar import as those expressed by the Savior.

For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again.—Jesus.

For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.—Jesus.

If our conception of God, the Judge, is that he will show mercy where mercy may be properly extended, and justice where it is due, we certainly cannot expect him to pardon us our trespasses when we for any selfish reason, or personal cause whatever withhold pardon in both word and spirit from our fellow men. We cannot offer the prayer, forgive us, Lord, as we forgive, understandingly, and expect mercy and pardon unless we have both felt and given pardon to those who have wronged us.

"As we forgive." Here is the rub. To be able to forgive certain kinds of offenses against them is very hard for some men. The offenses which these find the hardest to condone, or pardon, is that class which wounds their self-love. It may be a personal, or an official slight; real, or supposed, it matters but little which, for the result is the same. It is a rankling mental sore which persistently refuses to heal, and by long continuance begets morbid dislike of the offender which lessens spirituality and finally unfits the offended for Christian duties, and the enjoyment of Christian love.

Forgiveness is of two kinds; that is, one that is the result of obligation to rule or law; such as is meant in the answer of Jesus to the question, "How oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? Till seven times?" "I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven." This is from Matthew, and in it there is no hint of concession, or confession of wrongdoing on the part of the offender as a basis of pardon from the offended; but in Luke the answer is given thus: "If he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him." See Matt. 18: 21; Luke 17: 4.

Here the command to forgive is based upon the idea of a confession of the wrong; hence, seems to be imperative. Under the force of this command, a man must forgive if confession is made and forgiveness asked; it is an enforced forgiveness, and lawful when granted. So far lawful that once granted the offense must not be held against the offender. It is the forgiveness in the law.

Although the statement of Matthew does not appear to contemplate the idea of a concession of offense by the offender that forgiveness may follow, it may safely be presumed that the occurrence named by Luke is the same as that related by Matthew, and if it was then the lawful forgiveness is intended.

The other kind of forgiveness is that spontaneous going out of Christian love to an offender which causes the offended one though smarting under the hurt of the wrongs done him to take the act of wrong and the offender into consideration, and enables him to see and weigh all the conditions under which the offense is given, and to discern the motive, or to assume for the basis of his own action that the motive is not bad, hence, the offense more easily condoned. It is Christian love for the offender, though the offense be deserving of condemnation. It is the discriminating love which sees, weighs, and accurately determines the relation of words and deeds to results; the effect of the offense upon the offender and the offended; the probable effect of a resenting of the offense, and what the results to the offended and the offender would be if the offense was made the cause of legal complaint, and prosecution before the proper tribunal for the purpose of punishing the offender.

The man who can do this and forgive trespasses against himself ere yet his offending brother has said, "I have done wrong; forgive me, I pray you," is large hearted and liberal minded; can act upon a sense of right doing without a fear of consequences to himself. Forgiveness comes easy to such a man. He is not easily offended; and can find good motives for men's words and acts against himself, and if he cannot, he is quite large enough to pass by what smaller men would be grievously offended by, and forgive where meaner minds would seek self-vindication or revenge.

It is a pity, and we regret to confess it, that there are too many who cannot bear the wounding of their self-love. Whatever it is that touches this must be resisted and resented. No matter what the motive, or the act of the striker, the wound is incurable and not susceptible to the healing influences of humble and candid confession; the offense must be expiated.

There are far too few men whose greatness of soul guarantees to an offender merciful and generous treatment; and possibly fewer still those who are noble enough to pardon an offense without the act of humility on the part of the offender, which says, "I am sorry; I pray you pardon my offense." There are some, we are pleased to record, whose principles are so safely grounded, and whose characters are so strong in the assurance of a hope in Christ, that they are not moved by slight offenses, and who feel pity for an offender rather than desire to see punishment inflicted. These men are generous; outspoken against wrong, and courageous in defense of truth and principle; but are lenient towards transgressions against themselves, however grave these may appear to others to be. It is but the human reflex of that divine nature which could say, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

We are left to the context to the Lord's prayer to gather the full meaning of the teaching of Jesus in the prayer.

Jesus does not say that this is the formula of the prayer you shall use, but is a sample of the intent and spirit in which ye should pray to be accepted of the Father. In the King James Version, Matthew has the sentence thus:—

> And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.—6: 11.

Luke, thus:—

> And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us.—11: 4.

The Holy Scriptures (Inspired Version), thus:—

> And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.—Matt. 6: 13.

Luke, thus:—

> And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us.—11: 4.

The Book of Mormon, thus:—

> And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.—Book of Nephi, chap. 5.

This teaching follows in Matthew and the Book of Mormon.

> For if ye forgive men their trespasses, who trespass against you, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses.

The teaching is clear in all the records that it was upon the lines of injuries received, whether of purse or person, in word or deed, the spirit to forgive, to make free from consequences to follow, should be in the heart of the devoted disciple, if he would be like the Master, the Lord of Life.

No man of God can afford to hold or to cherish ill-will, or a desire for revenge on an offender. It fills the mind with doubts, creates clouds of darkness, spoils the mind's peace; dwarfs the soul, and makes spiritual advancement and enlargement impossible.

"LET US HAVE PEACE."

Under this caption there appears in the Searchlight, published by our neighboring brethren of the Church of Christ (the Hedrickite brethren) at Independence, Missouri, in its issue for February, 1900, an appeal for peace between the several contending factions, or "fragments" of believers in the Book of Mormon. We give this in full:—

> Notwithstanding the different questions at issue between the believers in the Book of Mormon, there is certainly a large common ground upon which all stand. That the scope of this ground may be largely increased, we believe can be demonstrated whenever those holding different views are willing to meet together for a proper discussion of the differences in faith, doctrine, etc. Meeting together for the purpose of arguing and displaying the learning possessed by each will have but little effect towards attaining the desired end.
> It is quite certain that a great and glorious work is ahead of some part, or perhaps all, of the believers in the restored gospel. If the work is to be performed by all, then it behooves the different fragments to get closer together and attain a condition in which God may use them. If the work is reserved for one or two of the fragments to accomplish, then those who desire to engage in the work of the Lord should put forth an effort to discover who are the favored ones, that they get in line and harmony with the chosen.
> To reach proper conclusions, all interested must possess profound humility, coupled with deep faith and the broadest of broad charity.
> We believe that the "Mormons" are now "making history," and whether that history shall be good or bad depends upon themselves. That it may be good, let all who have the hope of Zion at heart, endeavor to promulgate a spirit of peace and good feeling towards all who have a common cause.

We are prepared to say with our brethren of the Church of Christ, "Let us have peace." We have been of that mind a long time. We are quite willing, nay, anxious for peace. But, we may be pardoned if we make inquiry, On what terms and what sort of peace shall we have? There is a unity of belief upon the part of the Utah Church, the Church of Christ, and the Reorganized Church, so far as the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and the restoration of the gospel and its chief articles of faith and requirements are concerned, and the salvation that is to result from an obedience to the terms of the gospel. What more is to be required?

There is not a common ground upon which all do stand, but there is a common ground on which all may stand, if they will. It is a question of will largely.

Each of these several "fragments" is possessed of certain elements of faith, doctrine, and practice, which it believes to be essential to church existence. To these each clings tenaciously. They include a code of belief, a system of practices, and a claim to authority to administer. Each affects to hold that others are in the wrong, itself alone in the right.

In order to a unity of effort there must needs be an approach to a unity of belief first, a sufficient union of belief to insure cohesion of membership. This would seem to be imperative.

We shall certainly welcome the evangel that will bring to pass this unity, no matter whence he may come. In unity there is strength, in division there is apparent weakness if the fragments be taken to represent the whole.

There is much good sense in the last sentence of the second paragraph of the article.

"If the work of the Lord is reserved for one or two of the fragments to accomplish, then those who desire to engage in the work of the Lord should put forth an effort to discover who are the favored ones, that they may get in line and harmony with the chosen."

The Reorganized Church has held itself in readiness to hear and counsel with those who may have held, or do now hold faith in the angel's message, with a view to the discovery of the golden mean, the platform upon which all could unite if they would. Occupying as they do the middle ground between those who fix the termination of the ministry of the Seer in favor with God at the year 1830 and later to 1844, the year of his death, to the extreme of faith in the, so-called, revelation of 1843 and what resulted from it, after the Seer's death, the Reorganized Church has tried to be conservative and avoid wild or vague theories of either faith or practice.

The Utah Church may number from 250,000 to 300,000; the Reorganized Church one fifth or one sixth of that number, and the Church of Christ, about one hundred and fifty; but as numbers do not constitute a church, these numbers do not make either of the respective bodies the church, so does not such numbers disprove that either one is not the church. The claim must stand upon something besides numbers.

We hope that every one to whom this appeal to be at peace is made may be led by the spirit of true devotion to truth rather than to the spirit of partisan devotion to clan or men; principle rather than dogma; Christ and his work, rather than the ascendancy of man and human rule.

It seems to us now that the Spirit of the Master would surely lead to the unity of true believers, if the domination of self was eliminated.

We have long been of the opinion that vituperation, doctrinal abuse, and a haughty self-assertion, "I am holier than thou," sort of treatment of others was not the better way to preach Christ, or advance the latter-day work. It is not a good way to secure peace!

We have, also, been of the opinion that any cause, or class of believers that depended upon an attempt to make Joseph Smith to be a fallen prophet, or to charge him with things that were contrary to the laws of God given through him could not meet with the favor of God, and his Spirit endorse their works; we think so still. But we are willing to admit that infallibility does not attach to the human; hence the mistakes that may have been made, ought to warn all classes of Latter Day Saints not to set stakes of opinion so deep that they may not be removed by due proof, or the teaching of the Spirit of God.

Let us all be ready to hail the "white-winged angel of peace," even yet before the Son of Peace shall come.

WORTHY OF BEING REMEMBERED.

☞ The Twelve would invite the brethren abroad, in obedience to the commandments of the Lord, to gather to Nauvoo, with their means to help build up the city, and complete the Temple, which is now going forward faster than it has at any time since it commenced. Beware of the speculations about the prophet! Believe no tales on the subject. Time will tell who are the friends of Joseph Smith, who laid down his life for his brethren. We have no new commandments, but beseech the brethren to honor and obey the old ones. For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together. More in the next.

The following is stated as information of importance to some: Under General Conference rules all missionaries not in charge make their reports to missionaries in charge. The latter, only, report to General Conference, and include, in their reports, an account of all work done by missionaries laboring under their charge. The General Conference of 1897 dispensed with the former practice of all missionaries reporting direct to General Conference.

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, successor of Beecher and Abbot, in Plymouth Church, is threatened with a heresy trial because of his liberal views. He says:—

"The difference between the conservatives' position and my own liberal one is this: 'We were both reared in the church of our fathers. The creed is like the old homestead. The conservative reveres the venerable building; through reverence is unwilling to alter a shingle on the roof or a log in the foundation. I love it so much that I want to repair the old homestead in order to save it; to take off the old shingles where the old roof leaks, take out the timbers that are threatened with decay, that the structure may be handed on intact to our descendants. Shall I be driven from the old homestead because I believe in repairing it?'"

"William Crick, candidate for councilman from the Fourth Ward, is an active business man of that ward. He employs more men than any other institution in that ward with the possible exception of the Wagoner Gates Milling Company. His record as a man and a citizen is invulnerable. Gang politicians are heralding the fact that he belongs to the Latter Day Saints Church. Such tactics are in keeping with the campaign that is being made against him. The Latter Day Saint people are good citizens, law-abiding, and attend to their own business, never dictating to others. It is certainly a despicable method and will meet with the disapproval of people who have no sympathy for such unworthy tactics."—Independence Daily News, March 28.

WOODBINE, Iowa, March 28.

Editors Herald:—In last Herald I noticed an article entitled, "What I saw." In said article much was said about the one that used tobacco, which we can say amen to. While I have seen much said about the Saints that chew tobacco, I never have seen anything about the Saint that is selling it. I cannot see why the user of tobacco is any worse than the one that sells it. I believe the Saint that sells that which God says is not good for man is under the same condemnation as the one that uses it. Some have advocated that they must handle it for benefit of their trade. If this is a good drawing card for business, why not handle strong drink so business will increase. It is a poor rule that won't work both ways. Some have said it should be kept for sick cattle. We know that God said it was for sick cattle and bruises, but he never said that we should keep from one to a dozen brands on the store shelf at one time just for sick cattle. It must be that the people are becoming cattle and all are getting sick. I know a brother who is opposed to tobacco who says that the first tobacco his boy got was out of a Latter Day Saint store. Christ said to his disciples that they were the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Now tell me how a Saint can be the light of the world and sell that which God says is not good for man. Can that man be blessed in his deeds? And is it any worse for one to act in an office in the church that uses tobacco than the one that sells it? I believe the one that is in business should be just as pure as the one that is not. If tobacco is not good for one to chew, it is not good to sell.

The Spirit says, "Come up higher." Can parents bring their children up higher when Saints are setting these temptations before them? and have the children come home and say, "If there is no harm for a brother to sell tobacco, it is no harm for me to use it"? and this is what children are doing.

My prayer is that we may all see the necessity of keeping the law, and put from us that which will cast a cloud over the latter-day cause. I love the work that we are in. I ask for the prayers of God's people that I may always be found faithful.

Yours for truth,
J. O. BOOTH.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 16.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference met in the Saints' new church in this city on February 16, and was quite largely attended by the Saints of this, and Newport, and San Bernardino branches. A sufficient number attending to have secured reduced fares had the matter been properly arranged by the committee and carried out by those purchasing tickets; but as it was, full fares both ways was the result. The business sessions were handled in an expeditious manner by Bro. Griffiths; and had there not have been a little friction between the presiding officer and one of the ministry, which cooled the ardor of some during the conference, and later on has been a subject of sharp criticism by many, the conference would have passed into history as one of profit and enjoyable to all attending it. But as God's chosen ministry are not yet perfect, it may be expected that a few sharps in contradistinction to the numerous flats, will be noticeable from a human standpoint for some time to come.

But as you have recently been treated to quite a lengthly summary concerning the conference, as well as the general labors of most of church appointees to the Pacific Slope mission, but more especially those who (in Saints' Herald for December 20, 1899) were denominated "the rising stalwarts in Zion's host," I will content myself by speaking more particularly of two other missionaries who are considered by some of those "rising stalwarts" as being back numbers, because they have passed the noontime of life, and are now on the down grade and shady side of life, having reached the threescore and six and threescore and four years of their lives, respectively.

In reading the late letter of this "stalwart," I could not help but notice the wide difference in space occupied by him, in recounting the labors of these "rising stalwarts," using the most of two columns in the Herald to eulogize their efforts, while the labors of those two old back numbers was crowded into just four lines. Notwithstanding they had labored away from branches, in a mountainous and somewhat thinly settled country, occupying schoolhouses, driving (and sometimes walking by choice) from two to six miles each succeeding night, during the dark, as well as the light nights, and occasionally misting or raining, over sidling, narrow roads, holding fifty odd preaching meetings, in less than two months' time (running measure), while the "stalwarts," were nestling in the cities and towns, enjoying all the comforts which that kind of surroundings bring. The one constantly in the society and company of the Saints; while the two old men were plodding over hill and dale, much of the time in search of truth-loving, honest hearts, to find a suitable lodging place for the restored gospel; and as a result of their labors, fourteen intelligent, honest souls became members of the church and kingdom of God, through the beautiful and God-given ordinances of baptism by immersion, and as many more were "almost persuaded," some of whom will unite with us in the near future, if the good work is properly continued in those places where they abide.

But for fear that from what I have said above, some one or more persons might conclude that Bro. E. Keeler (my colaborer) and self were deprived of the necessary comforts of life and suffered from hunger or cold, I will just say that we did neither; for we found either true friends, or Saints, wherever we went, who vied with each other in providing us with good food and a warm bed to sleep in. Our hardships (if we endured that which could properly be called such) consisted in rough, narrow roads, over a mountainous country, in dark, cold, frosty, or wet nights—that is all. We ate thanksgiving dinner with Bro. and Sr. C. E. Carpenter and daughter Iressa, of Arroyo Grande; also a two-weeks' stay later on. And while at Garey, we were domiciled at the open home of Bro. and Sr. John Houk. Saints, and strangers, too, always find the latchstring on the outside of their door. We were also kindly cared for by Robert Glines, Mr. and Mrs. Foster, while preaching in Pine Grove schoolhouse. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, and Bro. and Sr. W. J. Twitchel, while at Highland schoolhouse; and a Mr. Forester also. We were also kindly cared for while near Templeton by Brn. S. L. and S. M. Twitchel and their noble wives, Bro. R. Anderson, Messrs. York, Matthews, and others, to whom we feel grateful for their kindness to the missionaries. We meet many who were very prejudiced against us until they learned more of our status, and that we were not seeking to make converts to swell the polygamous law-breakers of Utah. They were very kindly disposed toward us and came to hear our message. Many friends were made to our cause in the line of our travel. We also blessed three children.

I returned home on February 15 to attend conference, but Bro. Keeler remained in the field two weeks later, then went home because of his wife being sick, but has lately gone back to the field of our labor, and writes me that those who were our friends while there are still our friends. I expect more baptisms will occur while he is there. He is the most diligent gospel worker that I ever knew. He says he would rather wear out than to rust out; surely there is no danger of the latter. We averaged seven meetings a week for two months. Our labors were performed in the counties of Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo. These counties offer splendid opportunities for a whole year's campaign in gospel work for two to six active missionaries, and then not complete all that can be done. Many of the people seem to be ripe for the acceptance of the truth, and as a rule they are inclined to be hospitable, being mostly farmers or stockmen, and distant from where general supplies may be purchased, their tables are supplied with home productions, and a few staple articles of food, such as bacon and beans, bread, butter, milk, and vegetables in their season, and hen-fruit, and quite often the hen or the rooster are sacrificed, or their lives are, to become a part of the meal, spread before the stranger, or weary traveler within their gates. Is not this kind of hospitality good enough for the old men missionaries? I think so. And I also believe that even those "rising stalwarts in Zion's host" might possibly subsist on it for a short time at least.

If Elder E. Keeler and I can be associated together in these counties which I have named, I am willing to labor there during the coming conference year; or if thought to be more advisable by those whose duty it is to appoint the various missionaries, for me to labor in Utah, then I will consent to go there.

Now a few lines or thoughts concerning the preaching at our late district conference and I will close. The preaching was all good, but to my mind Bro. Fred B. Blair preached the banner or practical sermon of the conference. It may be that I was partial toward him from the fact that he paid a fair and honest tribute of praise to the "old grey-headed sires, who have born the burdens and heat of the day," for which these old heroes, worthies, cranks, fogies, or back editions, call us whatever they please or choose, but give credit where credit is due, and honor where honor is due; and then us old timers will rise up and call you blessed, and join hands with the youth, as well as the middle aged, for the emanciption of Zion, even though it cost us quite an effort to release ourselves from our "grooved conception of things and position wherein we have planted ourselves in the road of progress, to contest every forward step." Again, it is said, "He may not resent the discoveries of younger men; he certainly will not assimilate them. He may not oppose new methods of action; he certainly will not adopt them," again, "very few of the aged will admit this, but it is one of the dynamic truths of history which cannot be refuted."

Now, Mr. Editor, I think this is squeezing the old men harder than they deserve; and while the "rising stalwart" is permitted space in your columns to tighten the screws on the old men, I shall also deem it the right of the latter to come to their rescue, but with the definite understanding that no offense is intended by either the old man or the "rising stalwart." Thanking you for space allotted me in your columns, I hope that this article or letter may find room for publication as early as convenient. Then if our colloquy or good-natured controversy is thought to be unprofitable, use your own judgment in ending it. I am now in Santa Barbara City, doing missionary work. Success to Zion's welfare.

AKRON, O., March 22.

Editors Herald:—As the year is swiftly passing by, a word from the Western Reserve, where the work in the history of the past found hundreds of adherents and thrived in the midst of opposition of the bitterest, might be of interest to many, though I cannot write of any marvelous occurrence as recorded in days of yore; no tarring and feathering as once prevailed in these parts, but a kind of I don't care seems to be the present policy. Just a few miles from Akron, the city where I am now penning these lines, is New Portage, where Joseph the Seer and many of the leading elders bore witness of the visitation of the angel message. As one Mr. Bunks, whose head is blossoming by age for the tomb certifies, better preaching was never heard, yet never obeyed. The work through this part, in branch relation, in many instances, has suffered for the want of proper government administered. I do not speak this way finding fault with those in charge of branches, or to indicate that they did not do the best possible to be done under the circumstances, but to throw a little light upon the subject if possible, to aid all concerned to discover that our rule of faith is "peace and good will to all men," and such cannot obtain unless we as intelligent members assist those in charge by our constant prayers. Men whose time is and has been spent in mines and factories for ten and twelve hours each day since old enough to work, cannot be expected to be as well educated by study into these matters as one whose time for years has been spent entirely in seeking to comprehend these matters by prayer as well as by book study. Hence the success of the work rests upon each Saint as an individual to support those selected by their faith and prayers that God our heavenly Father might especially endow them with power, which is knowledge to administer in church government in the dignity of one sent of God in the spirit of humility.

Each baptized believer should be a preacher, if not in word by acts, letting his light shine that neighbors may be induced by good acts to hear those who can preach. But so often it is all left for the traveling elders to do, that by the time they get the fog cleared away their time for that place is spent. Like a circumstance that once occurred in my ministerial experience. I went to a place to render what assistance I could, and found the fog of tobacco smoke so thick. Of course they did not smoke before me. I did not see any pipes, but oh! if I had not—what did you say? Why the stench that greeted my smeller was sufficient. How I have wished they who will persist in this filthy habit could conceal the stench as completely as they can the pipe. Such conditions make it difficult to reach intelligent people, because most people that want to make something out of themselves quit this dirty, stinking, mean, and contemptible habit, that no Saint or sinner can follow and grow intellectually. And with the present custom prevailing of smoking rooms and cars to accommodate such individuals, it would be a difficult task for the traveling elder to persuade associates of such Saints to believe that there was not a smoking car attached to the heavenly train for immortal bliss. "Be ye pure" and "clean," is the repeated exhortation in holy writ. Shall we concur as Saints of the Most High, or allow habit to be our master? In the distance I hear the echo: "I can't quit!" Alas! sold as a slave to Mr. Habit. Here we find the drunkard, adulterers, and all those who are slaves of a prostituted habit. If John the Revelator saw clearly what he outlines in chapter 19, and verse 8, "arrayed in fine linen, clean and white," not besmeared with a prostituted habit, but a condition where men and women are masters of their habits. Seventh verse: "His wife [the church] hath made herself ready."

This is what must take place in each individual, or else we won't be ready, that's all; for no unclean thing can walk in the way of holiness. (Isaiah 35: 8.)

It's a delusion for any sane person to contemplate redemption unless they desist doing those things the Lord has so frequently declared his children should not do. This, however, is only one of the evils. Tattling and quarreling are detestable, and clouds the pathway of progress to peace and happiness many times among those who profess to know better, hence ought to do better. How oft the elders' time is wholly taken up in converting and getting Saints reconciled to one another before he has an opportunity to try to convert or preach to others, and then too frequently the supposed reconciliation only lasts while the elder is present. Too bad so many Saints won't exercise their own mind, but lean upon their fellow. Paul said, "Be reconciled in your own mind." When this condition obtains, peace prevails and love surmounts every obstacle. It is necessary that these thoughts should be constantly kept before the people, that they may learn their duty and be urged to do it in the fear of God and not of man.

The work is moving along slowly in these parts; an increase of laborers is necessary to meet present issues. I have striven to do the best I could under conditions existing, as light and wisdom is furnished by the Eternal One, as was mine to enjoy. I have no complaints to enter, but feel to rejoice in the Holy one of Israel that it is as well with us as it is. May his peace prevail in the hearts of his children is the prayer of your brother in Christ, A. H. PARSONS.

VALLEY, Neb., March 26.

Editors Herald:—This writing finds me about twenty-five miles west of Omaha. The latter place was reached the 3d inst. My stay there and at Council Bluffs was enjoyable. Brn. F. A. Smith and T. W. Williams have made big tracks at said places respectively. The former has done well under the continued surveillance of the first and the latter has lost and misses the labors of the last.

My trip from California was without any remarkable incidents. I left Los Angeles Tuesday evening, the 20th ult.; stopped at Florin, near Sacramento, the next day to visit relatives; also at the Capital City the 22d, where I called on Sr. Millgate. From the 24th to the 28th I tarried at Salt Lake City, where I preached twice and attended a Zion's Religio-Literary Society meeting. At Denver I stopped two days and went to one meeting, a young people's prayer meeting.

My stay on the Pacific slope was a source of pleasure and profit. One half of my knowledge and nine tenths of my wisdom were obtained there. I also had more spiritual experience than elsewhere. The church there is in a better condition than when I went there. This is not, however, a compliment to my work, but rather to the efforts of Bro. Griffiths and those connected with him in regulating. I labored the most of the time as a missionary on the frontier. The evidence of the Spirit is that I shall be returned there some, though possibly not this year.

I shall return to Omaha in a few days and then go on to Lamoni. I am anxious for the 6th of April to come around, but since I am more interested in the results of the conference, I am more anxious for it to be over.

Yours in gospel bonds,
ALMA C. BARMORE.

NELSONVILLE, Ohio, March 18.

Editors Herald:—Some time ago I told you that I would write and tell you how Bro. Moler and I got along with the meetings in this place. It is a town of eight thousand inhabitants, and I have several relatives here, and once a host of friends. But since I have obeyed the angel message they hardly know me. It makes one feel bad to think that they are so prejudiced, for I have made such a sacrifice for their good. I left a job at one hundred dollars per month to get them to hear the truth. Our people could not get in here till I came. They tried often, but failed. Now I came and have labored all I could in every way. I was shut out of all but the colored M. E. church. After ten nights of labor by Bro. James Moler with little interest, we closed, and then I secured a hall up in the main part of town, in which I paid fifteen dollars and several dollars worth of tracts, and published our meeting through the city paper. Then came Brn. James Moler and Beattie, and labored several days, and only one, sometimes none, and only eight at most, and then one, one night.

We closed for a month, and I put up notices that we were going to start meetings again, and I received one thousand tracts on Book of Mormon and five hundred on Discipleism, and distributed them around town. Then Bro. F. C. Smith came and commenced meetings; one came out the first night, the second night none. I have spent about twenty-five dollars on this people and they will not hear. I have quit holding any meetings. Last Sabbath evening I held meeting and not a soul but Sr. Hull and Bro. L W. were there.

Surely our skirts are clear of their blood. I will leave the town the first of April and go where I have an opening, where the people have come after me. This town is altogether given over to idolatry. Every whisky shop in town has a string band or piano; it is another Sodom. You will find inclosed a clipping that speaks for itself of what kind of religion that is in this part of the country.

Yours for eternal life and the welfare of the angel's message, G. W. HULL.

GRINNELL, Iowa, March 27.

Editors Herald:—I began meetings at Jenkinsville, Warren County, on the 6th and closed on the 21st; had good attendance; some nights they could not near all get seats, and all paid the best of attention. Some ten or more are about ready to obey, only waiting for some one to make the start. I concluded to let them ponder awhile and digest what they had heard for a month or two, then give them another chance. I stopped with the Runnells branch over Sunday—had a fine crowd on Sunday night. Bro. J. McKiernan dropped in on us there on Saturday night; he gave them a good sermon on Sunday forenoon. I came home today to get ready for General Conference. I hope we shall have a spiritual time there.

BORN.

MCPEEK.—At Pawnee, Missouri, February 28, 1899, to Mr. and Mrs. Charles McPeek, a daughter. Blessed at Lone Rock chapel, near Pawnee, March 25, 1900, by Elders C. Scott and P. McPeek, and named Daisy Gertrude.

SCOTT.—At Pawnee, Missouri, March 26, 1899, to Bro. James and Sr. Nancy Scott, a daughter. Blessed March 25, 1900, at Lone Rock chapel, near Pawnee, by Elders C. Scott and C. H. Jones, and named Neva.

MARRIED.

FERRICE—ROHRER.—In Colton, California, March 20, 1900, at seven p. m., Mr. William Ferrice and Sr. Dorcas Rohrer were united in the holy bond of matrimony, a host of relatives and friends being present to offer congratulations. A pleasant hour was spent with the happy couple. Elder William M. Gibson officiating.

DIED.

MCKEE.—At Fall River, Massachusetts, March 20, 1900, Sr. Susanna McKee, aged 72 years, 9 months, and 22 days. After a few days' sickness she peacefully passed away; her last audible words were, "I am going home." She came to America about 1865, and was a member of the old organization in England; united with the Reorganization by baptism January 18, 1866, and remained a firm Latter Day Saint to the end. She was a mother in Israel indeed; full of love to the Saints, and always making a welcome home for the ministry. Prayer was offered at the home before her remains were removed to the chapel, which was filled by Saints and sympathizing friends. Funeral sermon by Elder John Smith, assisted by R. Bullard.

DAVIDSON.—Naoma, daughter of Jesse and Christina Turner, was born near North Union, Ohio, March 5, 1828; died March 22, 1900. Was married to James Davidson, November 25, 1849; to this union was born four sons and three daughters, six of them are left with the father to mourn the loss of a loving mother and wife. She united with the church, October 7, 1887; since which time she has lived a consistent Christian, attending church and Sabbath school whenever her health permitted. Funeral services conducted by Rev. Davis of the M. E. Church.

BANDY.—At his home near Blythedale, Missouri, Sunday evening, February 18, 1900, Bro. Paschal Bandy, "an old and highly respected citizen, and conscientious Christian." He was born in Kentucky, March 4, 1821, and was 79 years, 11 months, and 14 days old at the time of his death. He was a member of the old church, and joined the Reorganization at Henderson, Illinois, many years ago, "and lived a consistent Christian life to the day of his departure to the paradise of God." Funeral sermon in the Christian church by Elder Joseph Snively, of Lamoni, "to a large and appreciative audience." The aged companion, children, and grandchildren are left to mourn.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

NOTICES.

To All Whom It May Concern:—The ministry and membership of the London, England, branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, desire to avail themselves of this opportunity of publicly placing upon record their heartfelt regards and esteem towards the two missionary brethren who have labored with such devotion and zeal and fidelity in our midst of late; namely, Elders Frederick G. Pitt and William Newton, and to thus publicly record their sense of gratitude to the Great Dispenser of every good, that he has graciously protected our esteemed brethren and their beloved ones upon their voyage; and has brought them again to their desired land in peace, in safety, and security. Given 11th day of March, 1900. Signed on behalf of the entire branch.

R. CLIFT, President.
F. R. TUBB, Clerk.

MINNESOTA REUNION.

The fifth annual reunion of Northern Minnesota district will begin on Saturday, the 16th day of June, 1900, at Perham, Minnesota. All those who intend to attend these meetings are requested to notify the secretary, T. J. Martin, Detroit, Minnesota. The committee wishes to make this the best meeting ever held. We wish to know who is coming, and want to hire board so we can arrange for the same at the lowest rates possible. If we do not hear from you no provision for board will be made, therefore you will take your own chances. Committee: I. N. Roberts, T. J. Martin, J. C. Nunn, F. D. Omans, Henry Way.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

CENTRAL PASSENGER ASSOCIATION, ETC.

Advices from the Chairman of the Central Passenger Association, dated March 23, give notice of reduction of rates over its lines of road to the coming General Conference and General Conventions, Lamoni, Iowa, April 5–20, 1900.

"The territory of the Central Passenger Association . . . is bounded on the east by Pittsburg, Salamanca, Buffalo, and Toronto; on the north by the line of and including points on, the Grand Trunk Railway, from Toronto to Port Huron, thence via Lakes Huron and Michigan to Chicago; on the west by Peoria, Keokuk, Quincy, Hannibal, St. Louis, and Cairo; and on the south by the Ohio River, but including points on either side of that river."

The following-named lines of railroads in its territory agree to the reduction of one and one third fare for the round trip.

Each of the following companies, namely: Allegheny Valley R'y, Ann Arbor R. R., B. & O. R. R., B. & O. S. W. R. R., C. & O. R'y, C. & E. I. R. R., Chicago & Erie and Erie R. R., C. I. & L. R'y, C. & M. V. R. R., Cincinnati Northern R'y, C. H. & D. R'y, C. C. C. & St. L. R'y, C. L. & W. R'y, C. T. & V. R. R., C. P. & St. L. R'y, C. A. & C. R'y, C. N. O. & T. P. R'y Co., C. & M. R'y, C. S. & H. R R., D. A. V. & P. R. R., D. & C. N. Co., D. & L. N. R'y, E. & I. R. R., E. & T. H. R. R., F. Ft. W. & W. R'y, G. R. & I. R'y, G. T. R'y System, Hocking Valley R'y, I. D. & W. R'y, I. I. & I. R. R., J. & St. L. R'y, L. S. & M. S. R'y, L. E. & St. L. Con. R'y, L. & N. R. R., L. E. & W. R. R., L. H. & St. L. R'y, Mich. Central R. R., Mobile & Ohio R. R., N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R., N. & W. R'y, Ohio Central Lines, Ohio Southern R. R., O. & L. K. R. R., Ohio River R. R., P. D. & E. R'y, Penna. Lines, Pere Marquette R. R., Pitts., Bessemer & Lake Erie R. R., P. & L. E. R. R., P. & W. R'y, Pittsburg, Lisbon & Western R'y, St. L. C. & St. P. R'y, T. P. & W. R'y, T. St. L. & K. C. R. R., Vandalia Line, Wabash R. R., W. & L. E. R. R.

The same general rules already published govern the reduction in rate, except that tickets costing less than seventy-five cents will not be included.

Tickets must be purchased from April 2–7 (not earlier than the 2d and not later than the 7th); except where rules of local roads permit earlier purchase, when necessary, for delegates to reach destination by opening date; which may be learned by local inquiry.

Passengers pay full fare on going passage and obtain a separate certificate with every ticket purchased, which when countersigned at Lamoni will entitle purchaser to return fare, unlimited, over the same route as going journey, at one third regular fare, up to April 24.

All interested will take notice that according to notices published to date, reduced rates have been granted by the New England, Trunk Line, Southeastern, Central, and Western Passenger Associations; the Southwestern (covering some, but not all, lines in the State of Texas) declining only because of limited attendance from its territory.

All the associations named above have agreed to the change in dates for purchase of going tickets; namely, from April 2–7.

Conference Minutes.

KIRTLAND.

District conference was held at Sharon, Pennsylvania, March 3 and 4; A. H. Parsons in the chair, W. J. Baldwin secretary, David Allen associate. Branch reports: Blake Mills 81, Kirtland 87, Sharon 37, Youngstown 26, Akron 34, Washingtonville 30, Cleveland 62, Conneautville 26; Toledo no report. Elders reporting: F. C. Smith, F. J. Ebeling, Richard Baldwin, David M. Strachan, John H. Cramer, Robert Fuller, and A. H. Parsons. Elders W. H. Kelley and M. H. Bond gave a profitable talk on the excellent condition of the work in the East. Priests reporting: Eben Miller, W. J. Baldwin; Teachers Jonathan Hollibaugh, E. Curry, and Andrew Richardson reported. Bishop's agent, Eben Miller, reported: Income $428,11; expenses $358 85; on hand March 3, $69.26. Resolved, that the tent committee be encouraged, and a committee of three—A. H. Parsons, David Allen, and F. J. Ebeling solicit money through the district. The following resolution was adopted, referring to the petition of Southern California district: Resolved, that we, the Kirtland district, return this petition to the Southern California district, and tell them that we are willing to wait and let the Lord direct when he is ready, and that we are willing to stand by the Lord. Resolved, that this conference recommend the organization of a district Sunday school association, to be known as the Kirtland district; and that A. H. Parsons be authorized to look after the same. Resolved, that we sustain all the general church officers, and that we hold them in our highest esteem. Delegates to General Conference: A. H. Parsons, W. H. Kelley, M. H. Bond, Richard and Annie Baldwin, Sr. Hattie Griffiths, Eddie Garrett, David Proper, R. Etzenhouser, F. J. Ebeling, Lorenzo and Jennie Powell, and Sr. Minnie Russell. Those in attendance at conference are empowered to cast the full vote of the district. David Allen was ordained to office of priest. Election of officers: A. H. Parsons was sustained as president of district, F. J. Ebeling as associate; W. J. Baldwin secretary; Ebenezer Miller Bishop's agent. Saturday evening preaching by A. H. Parsons, assisted by W. H. Kelley. Sunday morning prayer meeting in charge of F. J. Ebeling and Eben Miller. Sunday, eleven a. m., dedicatory sermon, by M. H. Bond; dedicatory prayer by W. H. Kelley. The Spirit of God was manifest, and all present made to rejoice in the gospel. Sunday, sacrament and testimony meeting in the afternoon. Preaching in the evening by W. H. Kelley, assisted by M. H. Bond. Adjourned to meet with Blake Mills branch, October 6 and 7.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The semi-annual conference of above district convened with Los Angeles branch in their new church building, corner of Wall and Eleventh streets, Friday, February 16; Elders G. T. Griffiths and A. Carmichael chosen to preside, Maggie Pankey and T. W. Williams clerks. Elders reporting: G. T. Griffiths, T. W. Williams, D. A. Anderson, N. Van Fleet, A. Carmichael, A. E. Jones, William Gibson, F. B. Blair, H. Hemingway, R. R. Dana. Priests, George Wixom, N. J. Wixom, Will Mills. Branch reports: Los Angeles, 180; San Bernardino, 269; Newport, 236. Bishop's agent's report: On hand last report, $466 47; received to January 1, $252 20; total, $718.67; expended, $347 60; balance due church, $371.07. Audited and found correct. Resolutions: Whereas, Brn. Griffiths, Williams, and Chatburn have evidenced their ability to cope with the needs of church work in Southern California; and whereas, they have inaugurated new methods which we believe they should be permitted to carry out, and which if not carried out will result in loss to the church; therefore, be it resolved, that we, the Southern California district in conference assembled, hereby especially request the Presidency of the church to return Bro. Griffiths as missionary in charge of Pacific Slope mission, and T. W. Williams, T. W. Chatburn, and D. A. Anderson as missionaries to labor in Southern California district. A vote of thanks was moved by Bro. Dana to Bro. Keeler for his services in the district. A session each to Sunday school and Religio was voted for next conference; time of session left to district president. Resolved, that our delegates be instructed to petition General Conference for a new division between Central and Southern California districts. Preaching by Brn. Barmore, Blair, Griffiths, Williams, and Sheehy. Adjourned to meet with Newport branch Friday on or before full moon in October. There were three baptisms by Bro. Williams during conference.

ST. LOUIS.

Conference convened in St. Louis, Missouri, on Saturday evening, March 24; M. H. Bond chosen to preside, J. C. Hitchcock assistant, John G. Smith secretary. Reports from Elders J. D. White, J. C Hitchcock, W. O. Thomas; Priests G. F. Barraclough, J. Christensen; Teachers J. J. Billinsky, T. J. Elliott, and F. Wiley. Branch reports: St. Louis 462; 4 received by letter, 3 removed, 3 died. Whearso 60. The recommendation of Elder I. N. White that J. C. Hitchcock, J. E. Dawson, and the appointee of General Conference of April, 1900, be appointed a reunion committee, was adopted. Bishop's agent J. G. Smith reported: Balance due church $404.82; tithing received $156.15; total $560 97; paid out during the quarter $482; March 24, balance due church

$78.97. Audited and found correct. Delegates to General Conference: J. D. White, W. O. Thomas, F. H. Johnson, S. A. Burgess, and Srs. Eveline Burgess, Florence Burgess, Mary G. Johnson, Frances White, Etta M. Hitchcock, and Daisy Thomas. These were authorized to enroll others as assistant delegates of those from this district who may attend General Conference. The findings of the Bishop's court in the case of Joseph E. Betts, Sen ; that the charges were not sustained by the evidence, were accepted, and the recommendation of the court adopted, that he be reinstated in his office as elder. The findings of the Bishop's court in the case of William Jaques, that while the charges were not sustained, yet his unseemly display of violent temper and lack of self-control were censurable. The findings were accepted, the recommendations of the court adopted, and it was ordered that his license as an elder be restored to him. Preaching on Sunday by Elders M. H. Bond and R. Etzenhouser. Sacrament, prayer, and testimony meeting in the afternoon. Adjourned to meet in St. Louis, Missouri, on Saturday evening, June 23, at seven o'clock, and on Sunday, June 24.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

THE following sweetly comforting lines were sent us by Sr. Burton, and we "pass them on," knowing many of the sisters will appreciate them:—

I CAN TRUST.

"I cannot see with my small human sight,
Why God should lead this way, or that, for me;
I only know he saith, "Child, follow me."
And I can trust.

"I know not why my path should be at times
So straightly hedged—so strongly barred before;
I only know God could keep wide the door.
But I can trust.

"I find no answer often when beset
With questions, fierce and subtle, on my way;
And often have but strength to faintly pray.
But I can trust.

"I often wonder, as with trembling hand
I cast the seed along the furrowed ground;
If ripened fruit for God will there be found.
But I can trust.

"I cannot know why suddenly the storm
Should rage so fiercely round me in its wrath;
But this I know, God watcheth all my path,

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Feb. 23.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have thought many times of writing to the Home Column and asking the prayers of the sisters in my behalf, but have neglected it from time to time; suppose it was the lack of faith. I have been a sufferer from neuralgia since early childhood; have been administered to a number of times and received temporary relief; but the attacks are becoming very frequent, and as there is no elder here, very seldom have the opportunity of being administered to, so I ask the sisters of the Prayer Union to remember me in their prayers, that I may be healed if it is God's will.

Sr. Julia Neal requests me to ask the sisters to remember her also in their prayers. She has been afflicted with rheumatism for a number of months, and has not been able to meet with us for some time. We miss her so much in our prayer meetings, as she has always been an active member, and has helped to hold up the banner for a number of years.

The work in San Antonio is at a low ebb. The elders so seldom visit us here, we feel that we are left to ourselves; but if we do our duty, I know that God will not forsake us. There are quite a number of Saints in San Antonio if they would come out, but the majority of them have grown cold, and only a few are left to battle along, and in their weak way keep the work from dying out entirely. The Lord sees fit to give us strength and courage to go on. Though the way looks dark, we feel that he will help us if we put our trust in him. We are looking forward to the time when we will have a church building to worship in.

Bro. A. J. Moore has been a good helper to us in soliciting funds, and also in giving advice and counsel to the Saints. I hope the time is not far distant when the Saints of San Antonio will waken to a sense of their duty and carry on the Lord's work as it ought to be. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in behalf of the members of San Antonio, that we all might awaken to a sense of our duty before it is too late; and if it is the Lord's will, that we may have a church building in which to worship.

May the Lord bless all of his people is my prayer in Jesus' name.

Your sister in the cause of Christ,
RUTH GIFFORD.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Nellie Humphrey requests the prayers of the Union in her behalf, that if it be the Father's will, she may be relieved of her sore affliction. She has been a sufferer for many years, and earnestly desires the Lord to bless her in body. She is a faithful sister. Sisters, please remember her.

Isabella J. McMillen desires the prayers of the Prayer Union, that she may be healed. She has been ill for the last three months with a complication of diseases.

Dear Sisters: — We desire your united prayers in behalf of our little girl Birdie, aged eleven years. She has been sick with malaria or typhoid fever for almost two weeks, and not being a very stout child, has failed so fast. Dear Saints, we are isolated from the association of God's people at this place, and have never been so before. We ask for your united prayers that she may be healed.

Your brother and sister in Christ,
JOHN AND FANNIE MORRIS.

Original Poetry.

THE MISSIONARY'S TRUST.

NOT ALONE.

ELDER T. C. KELLEY, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

I am a stranger far away from home,
No friend to greet me with a cheering tone,
No friendly shelter from the raging storm;
Yet God is with me—I am not alone.

The wind is blowing cold and bleak and drear,
And through the swaying pines doth sadly mourn;
Yet something seems to whisper, "Never fear;
Thy God is with thee—thou art not alone."

Lord, may I ever feel that thou art near,
That on my path thy light hath kindly shone;
And when life's leaves are growing brown and sear,
Let me still feel that I am not alone.

The dark'ning clouds obscure the sinking sun;
The shades of night are swiftly coming on;
Lord, when my life its fitful course has run,
May I then feel that I am not alone.

The withered leaves are falling from the trees,
And lodge by bush or shrub—perchance a stone;
When from life's tree I fall like one of these,
May I then feel that I am not alone.

When I through the dark vale of death shall go,
Grant me, O Lord, thy staff to lean upon;
When death's cold waters o'er my soul shall flow,
Let me then feel that I am not alone.

And when in heaven thy glory I behold,
And meet with loved ones round thy great white throne;
And with them find I'm safe within thy fold,
Then will I know, I shall not be alone.

OXFORD (depot building), Maine, November 28, 1899.

Note.—On the above date the missionary walked a number of miles, carrying a heavy satchel, arriving at the station in the afternoon, very tired, somewhat hungry, finding no fire in the waiting room, and there was not a soul whom, to his knowledge he had ever seen before. Dark, threatening clouds shut out the sun as he sunk toward the west, while the autumn winds whistled through the pine trees in such a sad, plaintive way as to make one's heart yearn for the companionship of loved ones and the enjoyment of home. And yet there was the spirit of peace and trust with the missionary, that softened the unpleasantness of his surroundings, and he sat down in a cold, cheerless room in the depot and, while waiting for the train, the foregoing verses were written.

DIED.

MEFFERD. — Virgil Mefferd, born August 29, 1837, in the county of Muhlenberg, Kentucky. With his parents he landed in Pottawattamie, Iowa, June 25, 1850; thence to Harrison County. He was married to Jane C. Cadwell in 1866. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder Charles Derry, at Woodbine, September 15, 1889. He died March 20, 1900, leaving a wife and three children. He had suffered much, but retained his faith in the religion of Jesus Christ, and it is hoped is resting in the paradise of God, awaiting the resurrection of the just. He was buried from the Saints' church; funeral sermon by Elder Charles Derry, at his request, from the words in Hebrews 9:27, 28. Elder Kibler, at the request of the sick wife, held a brief service in their house, prior to the departure for the church, which afforded comfort to the bereaved and afflicted companion, who was not able to attend the funeral service. May God comfort her and her children.

HOUK. — At her father's residence near Garey, California, Dora Houk, beloved daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Angeline Houk. Sister Dora had been sick some time at her sister's home in Los Angeles, and improved so much that her mother took her home; she soon became worse, and in two days, surrounded by parents and brothers and sister, she passed away, and the sorrowing ones were called to lay her away to rest until the Blessed One shall come, when we hope she will come forth in the glory of the first resurrection. Sister Dora was born February 14, 1881; baptized September 24, 1893, and was 18 years, 1 month, and 17 days old when she died. The burial services were performed by J. R. Morris, a Methodist preacher. Later, Elder E. Keeler preached a memorial discourse to friends and neighbors.

SHUPE.—Riley Shupe, born in Grayson County, Virginia, in 1830. He was the son of Peter and Sarah Shupe, and with his parents moved to Brown County, Illinois, in 1842; remained until the spring of 1846, when he went to Nauvoo, and started for the West, arriving at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1847. Came to Harrison County, Iowa, in 1850. Was married to Cynthia Lockling in May, 1851; his wife was a native of Vermont. Having no children of their own, they adopted four homeless ones, and educated them and cared for them as they would for the fruit of their own bodies; they with their foster mother survive him. Besides his wife and the four adopted children he leaves a brother, a sister, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn. He died in Calhoun Township, Harrison County, Iowa, August 26, 1899. Funeral preached at his home by Elder C. Derry. He was known as a kind and loving husband and father, and was loved and respected by all who knew him. He was a member of the church, but the writer does not know the date of his baptism. He who shelters the homeless, and cares for the fatherless, will not lose his reward.

REESE.—John E. Reese was born June 12, 1818, at Carpont, Carmarthenshire, Wales; was married to Mary Davis at Morristown, Wales, in 1838. To them have been born five sons and two daughters, four sons and one daughter still remain, and are residents of Gallatin County. In 1857, with his family, he came to the United States; in 1860 he crossed the plains by way of Utah, and thence to Bannack and Alder Gulch, settling in Gallatin County, Montana, at his present home in 1864. He united with the Reorganized Church September 29, 1867, and has been an active member and worker of the same till death claimed him.

BILLINGS.—Elizabeth C., wife of P. B. Billings, died at her home, Sargentville, Maine, March 9, 1900. She would have been 70 years old had she lived till August, and nearly forty-eight of those years were spent with her companion. She was a true and faithful wife and a kind mother. She never joined a church, but was a Bible reader, always respected religion, was both honest and prompt in business and in fact was a superior woman. Funeral services at the Baptist chapel, conducted by Rev. E. S. Drew. She had a sweet voice and was often heard singing:—

There is a place where my hopes are stayed,
My heart and my treasures are there,
Where flowers immortal never fade,
And fields are eternally fair.

That blissful place is my father's land,
By faith its delights I explore;
Come favor my flight, angelic band,
And waft me in peace to the shore.

ALLEN.—At Kansas City, Missouri, March 22, 1900, son of Elder Arthur and Sr. Jessie Allen. He was born December 16, 1899. Funeral at the home, conducted by Elder R. M. Elvin; sermon by Elder B. J. Scott.

Lamoni Sanitarium.

Believing that there should be a place where Saints and others who have not faith to be healed can be treated with "herbs and mild food" by "a friend" and where surgical and other means can be used if needed, I have decided to open a sanitarium at Lamoni, Iowa, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, also a surgical department where operations can be done with skill and modern appliances.

Special attention will be given to diseases of women, ruptures, piles, and tumors. In these disorders I have had large experience. Testimonials of cures sent on application.

Specialists from Chicago and St. Joseph will be consulted in difficult cases. Chronic diseases will be treated largely by baths, massage, and electricity.

I have practiced medicine and surgery for eighteen years. I have taken special courses in the above-named diseases at New York City, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis hospitals.

Temporary rooms have been engaged and patients can be received at any time. Consultations free. Write to me about your case.

RUSSIA HAS NO FEAR OF ENGLAND.

Why should England protest or make a fuss because Russia has massed troops at Kushk and taken a foothold in Persia? We are at home. England has nothing to say about what we are doing within the limits of our own domain.

As for Persia, she is not, so far as I know, a vassal State of Great Britain. She is free to grant concessions for railroads to whomsoever it seems good to her, and to contract loans with whomsoever she pleases. Nothing in all that concerns the English.

But had not England been uncomfortably engaged in south Africa she might not have let these things pass without saying something, for she is a great talker.

Unhappily, or happily, as you prefer, Russia is a power devoted entirely to works of peace. Our emperor is pacific, our people are pacific. We are all pacific. The puissant monarch who took the initiative in The Hague conference owes it to himself, owes it to Europe and to the world, not to let loose war without extreme necessity.

The question that every one here is asking himself is, Can we passively assist at the complete crushing of the Dutch population of south Africa? And it will be necessary to answer it. For above the interest of peace lies the interest of humanity. It is impossible to disguise it; the war which the English are making against the Boers is essentially a war against humanity. In this regard what our Emperor will decide I cannot say, or even know, at present. But he will decide something, for his heart bleeds at the sight of what is happening in south Africa. If he takes his time in deciding it is because his decision will be of great weight for Europe and for the world.

Whatever the Emperor decides, Russia will carry it out—and without fear of the English fleet, even admitting that it be what the English proclaim it to be, invincible, than which nothing is less certain, because nothing is less proved. And we have even less fear of the British army.

This army, commanded by the most famous chiefs, cannot whip the Boers, who are only peasants improvised into soldiers, and three times less numerous than their foe. The easy reputation is has acquired in the course of wars undertaken against half savage populations has suddenly vanished when it found itself before white soldiers and commanded in European style.

If England were to have a war with Russia she would be irrevocably lost. There is not a shadow of doubt about that. O! we shall not go to seek her out in her island, where, anyway, she is stifling. But we shall know enough to strike her where she is most vulnerable, in India—within our reach.

I believe she will surely defend herself with all her strength, but that she will no less surely succumb. The day the Russian avalanche, rolling from the heights of the Pamire, crashes down upon India with dædal force, Britannic domination in the vast empire of the East will be at an end. — Count Mouravieff, Minister of Foreign Affairs, in Chicago Tribune.

STAND FOR FREE SPEECH.

London, March 19, 3 a. m.—The stop-the-war advocates are having a rough time trying to promote their cause through public meetings. At Leeds to-day the peace lovers were prohibited by the authorities from holding a meeting at the city markets.

Two of the leaders attempted to address a gathering in one of the recreation grounds known as Jews' Park, when the crowds immediately began shouting "Rule Britannia," waved Union Jacks, and pelted the orators vigorously with snowballs. Both escaped with difficulty, minus hats and badly bruised.

A big mass meeting will soon be held in London to demand free speech.

James Jeffrey of the London County Council announced at a meeting of the Metropolitan Radical Federation yesterday that 1,000 workingmen were to be enrolled as an army for defense for speakers and others taking part in peace meetings.

At Wakefield the followers of John Kensit, who looted a church the other day, held an open air meeting surrounded by police. Their speeches had no reference to war, but, fearing a misapprehension of this intent of the meeting and the consequent attack, a Union Jack was held up by each speaker, who, to make it doubly sure, explained that the object had nothing to do with the Boers, but was to denounce those of the clergy who received pay from the Church of England and at the same time did work for the Church of Rome.

The question of the right of free speech in England is becoming more important daily. So many pro-Boer meetings have been broken up and so many speakers have been maltreated for daring to express in public views opposed to popular ideas that the necessity for Parliamentary action in the matter seems imperative.

At Hampstead the Liberal Radical association yesterday passed a resolution condemning the recent attempts to deprive the English people of their inalienable right to free speech in public meetings, and calling upon the government to take immediate steps to secure the performance of their duties by the local authorities, and institute proceedings against that portion of the press to whose incitement these attempts are largely due.

The Free Speech Defense Committee met to-day at Highbury, W. B. Parker of the London Trades council presiding. A free speech resolution was declared carried after considerable opposition. The police were in attendance, but did not intervene until the close, when they dispersed the crowd.—Chicago Tribune.

EVIL EFFECTS OF CIGARETS ON BOYS.

I maintain that cigarets, either adulterated or unadulterated, are not beneficial to anybody, man or boy, and are more or less harmful to all who use them. I have no doubt some people can use them without serious result if the quantity is limited, but that is also true of alcoholic drinks, opium, and absinthe.

I want to repeat here the statistics given by me in a recent address in Cincinnati. I said there: "On the first day of this month we had 278 boys between the ages of 10 and 15. Of 63 of this number with the average age of 12, 58 were cigaret smokers; of 133 of them with the average age of 14, 125 were cigaret smokers; 82 were 15 years of age, of whom 73 were cigaret smokers. This demonstrates that 92 per cent of the whole number were in the habit of smoking cigarets at the time they committed the crimes for which they were sent to the reformatory; but even more astonishing is the fact that 85 per cent had become so addicted to their use as to be classed at the time "cigaret fiends." My reason for selecting but 278 of the nearly 1,500 boys under my control for the purpose of making the test for this address was that this was the number we had of 15 years or under, and afforded reliable evidence of the prevalence of this habit among these mere children, already youthful criminals. I have no doubt the same percentage would appear if the entire number had been included."

I further said, after much observation and study of these boys: "If there was nothing more harmful than the associations generally formed by the young boy beginning his first cigaret, that alone would often prove his downfall. He realizes that he must take his first smoke in secret, and to do this he generally finds companions who are victims of the habit and have already taken their first downward step. However, the most harmful effect is not from bad companions alone. I assert, unhesitatingly, and without fear of successful contradiction, that the use of cigarets affects the nervous system, weakens the will power, and destroys the ability of the boy to resist temptation, and, because of this, he easily falls a victim to those habits which not only destroy the body, mind, and soul, but irresistibly lead him into a violation of the laws of his State."

It has been said that cigarets used moderately are not harmful, except to the young and growing boy. Conceding this to be true, is the young boy not worth saving?

The "tobacco heart" is becoming a disease known to the physician. We find many cases of it among boys coming to the institution, and it is a derangement not to be trifled with. A pulse ranging between 60 and 140 indicates danger, serious danger, and yet I can point you to numerous hospital records that show that condition from over-indulgence in tobacco.

Another injury that overtakes the boy that becomes a victim of the habit is the destruction of the moral nature. He will have tobacco, if he can secure it by any possible means, honest or dishonest; boys addicted to the habit will steal to secure it and lie to cover their theft.—George Torrance, Superintendent State Reformatory, in Chicago Tribune.

FRANCE'S STEP TOWARD SOLVING LABOR PROBLEM.

Consul Covert at Lyons has written an interesting report dealing with workingmen's aid societies in France. He says: "A meeting of the Presidents of the mutual aid societies of the Rhone recently held in Lyons calls attention to a movement among the working classes of France in the direction of solving the labor problem. These societies are organized under national laws and are partly sustained by public funds.

"It is believed in France that these associations will be effective in diverting workingmen from communism and attaching them more closely to the republic, with which their interests are inseparably involved.

"In 1897 there were 12,000 of these societies with 2,000,000 members, and to-day their membership foots up to nearly 2,500,000. They have distributed over $135,100,000 to their needy members, have on hand $57,900,000, and pay pensions to 60,000 aged members each year.

"There are two kinds of mutual aid societies in France — free and approved. The approved society is under government control. The government appoints its president, but his name is generally proposed by the society. Any class of citizens can organize a society and have it approved. It must be able to show its members are able to pay monthly dues, to give aid in sickness, and to deposit in the government bank. The money deposited is invested in government bonds, which never draw more than 3 per cent interest.

"Sometimes the premium is so high that the interest is less than this figure; but the government always appropriates enough money to bring the interest up to 4½ per cent, which is left to accumulate for the old-age pension fund."

Members of these societies after contributing a small amount each month from early childhood are paid a small pension after reaching the age of 55.—Chicago Tribune.

TOLERANCE IN THE PULPIT.

Tolerance in the pulpit is coming to be the rule rather than the exception. The time was when no Presbyterian preacher would have allowed a Methodist minister to speak in his church, and the same spirit prevailed among almost all the sects and denominations. Now, happily, the same hard and fast lines are no longer drawn. It has become the custom for churches of all denominations to unite on Thanksgiving day and other special festivals, holding union services in each of the several churches in turn.

Especially striking as marking the growth of a catholic and tolerant spirit among the churches is the fact that Dr. Hirsch of Sinai Temple preached from the pulpit of Appleton Chapel at Harvard College last week, while on Sunday Miss Jane Addams spoke at Sinai Temple on topics in which Jew and Gentile are equally interested.

Harvard University welcomes men of all creeds, provided only that the message they bring is one worthy of a hearing. But what, pray, would the New England Puritans of a hundred years ago have said if they had dreamed that within the century a Jewish rabbi was to stand in the pulpit of a Congregational chapel and preach of the truth as he saw it? And what would have been the answer of the orthodox Jew if he had been asked to allow a woman of the Gentiles to talk in the synagogue?

The indications are many that in battle between the forces of right living, marshaled under whatever name, and those of wrong, non-essentials are to be more and more cast aside, and that on a man's acts rather than his professions must depend his right to claim a hearing.—Chicago Tribune.

ALCOHOLISM IN FRANCE.

The danger from alcoholism in France is not a recent discovery, but the new statistics presented by M. Guillemet of the commission appointed to investigate the proposition to make the rectifying of spirits a government monopoly are of interest. M. Guillemet shows that accidental deaths due to drunkenness increased from 226 in 1840 to 473 in 1896. The suicides caused by drunkenness were 5.3 per cent of the total in 1840, while in 1896 they were 12.4 per cent. The percentage of insane whose affliction may be traced directly to alcoholism was 3.4 per cent in 1896, against only .23 per cent in 1865. The percentage of boys in the reformatory institutions who owe their presence there to the drunkenness of their parents has doubled. The intemperate form 67 per cent of those condemned for crimes and misdemeanors. The increase in the average consumption of liquors is well known, but it is not so well understood how prevalent drinking is in France. The nation now has 425,507 dramshops, while it had 342,622 in 1875. In the Department of the North there is one shop for every fifteen adults and in the Department of the Lower Seine there is one for every twenty-two adults. Figures such as these remove cause for surprise that many of the ablest thinkers in France believe that alcohol will destroy the race.

ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY CONVENTION.

TUESDAY, APRIL 3.

The sixth convention opened with a prayer and testimony meeting at nine a. m., to which the members came fasting. A good-sized audience had gathered in the basement of the Brick Chapel, the young predominating, but among them were also the middle-aged, as well as the gray-haired, all alike interested in the cause which brought them together. There were present, representatives from across the Atlantic, and from the far east, north, south, and west. Probably no convention has opened more auspiciously for the Religio than has this.

President J. A. Gunsolley and Secretary J. C. Hitchcock were in charge of the meeting. Seven prayers were offered and twenty-five testimonies borne. The prayers expressed humility, gratitude for past direction, and an earnest desire for continued growth "Onward and Upward" in harmony with the divine Mind. The testimonies showed the work to have been effective in helping the young to higher life and in preparing them for future church work; that it had aroused to interest and activity both young and old; that many had been led into the church through its influence; and that certain classes of people, otherwise unreached, had been brought within church influence. The testimony of a middle-aged brother, in particular, was, "If anyone should be thankful for the Religio work, it is presidents of branches." Words of exhortation and encouragement were given by manifestation of the Spirit. An excellent feeling was present and the meeting was an enjoyable one. The brief intermission was filled with greetings characteristic of Latter Day Saints.

Business session convened, President Gunsolley in the chair, J. C. Hitchcock secretary. Prayer by Bro. F. A. Russell.

Being so authorized, the chairman named Bro. Walter W. Smith, Sr. Florence Fisher, and Bro. A. B. Hanson as committee on credentials.

The report of President Gunsolley was read:—

PRESIDENT GUNSOLLEY'S REPORT.

DEAR FELLOW RELIGIANS:—

It is with feelings of satisfaction that I enter upon the duty of communicating to you my report covering the two years just past. In looking over the work done success appears in every part of the field. And in forecasting the future as well as limited vision will permit, nothing but bright prospects appear.

Notable among the many evidences of success is the widening interest manifested. Not only the young, but the middle-aged and the old, are joining their interest with ours. Not only the laymen, but ministers of all ranks, are coming to the support of our cause. It has come to pass that everywhere you go, almost, some one wants to know of our work; and the feeling grows upon the part of those who represent the church, that to be well rounded ministers for Christ they must be in touch with those means given us for nurturing and sustaining the sheep when they are in the fold, as well as with the means for gathering them in. Hence it is that both the Sunday school and Religio are claiming the attention of all, which is undeniable evidence that the Lord is with us and that we are indebted to him ever and anew for his tender guidance. Surely he hath led us into green pastures and beside the still waters.

Our work has not only been a widening process, but one of settling as well. The once prevalent spirit of sensationalism and entertainment has largely given way to a far healthier one of study and investigation of the word of God. One by one the locals have fallen into line until it is now the rare exception to find societies devoting their time, or any considerable portion of it, to simply entertaining the people. And while this change in many places resulted at first in a loss of membership, in most places, the membership is larger and interest better now than formerly.

At our last convention we took a long step in advance when we provided for district organizations; and when we published the revision of the constitution and by-laws a new era in Religio work dawned upon us. At this convention also began the improved plans of taking care of our membership; providing means whereby they might and should receive closer attention. It was there, too, that we settled down to a course of work involving the special study of the church books, and we selected the Book of Mormon as the first one we would take up. So it is that with the revision and publication of the constitution and by-laws in 1898 our work took on a forward impetus which has worked much for our cause.

One district had been formed prior to the 1898 convention; and after we gave the idea our sanction and incorporated the same as a part of our plan, district after district sprang into being until now we have a goodly number of such organizations doing effective work.

While speaking of the encouraging features, there comes to mind some things which in themselves were not so much so. For instance, our assessment plan met with strong opposition here and there. It was urged that to exact a specified amount from each society was a species of taxation, not "without representation," but one for which there is no warrant in the law of God; and that to thus educate our young people was doing violence to the spirit of the gospel. So is our system of civil government, levying taxes upon the people, doing violence to the spirit of the gospel; but none of us think to rebel, or refuse to pay our taxes, or hesitate to defend our government by bearing arms, if necessary, taking comfort in the thought that all kingdoms are to become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. Should we be any less loyal to the Master's work? And should we rebel and threaten to withdraw because those laws we have made for our government require some things which we think will not be a part of the perfect system? Should we not, rather, stand firmly in defense of the work, looking to the time when the Master himself shall be our Ruler and Lawgiver?

It would be indeed an oversight not to mention the work of Bro. Russell Archibald, our late Treasurer, and the excellent services rendered our society. While his resignation was received with regret, he goes with the confidence and respect of his associate officers, and the recollections of his association will always be cherished. In the appointment of his successor, Bro. S. A. Burgess, of St. Louis, the society gains an earnest and willing worker, whose devotion to the cause cannot but contribute materially to our success.

With the widening of interest, calls for information about organizing became so numerous, that to meet the demands, it was found necessary to publish instructions that might be on hands for distribution. Hence the Executive Committee issued "Leaflet of Instruction No. 1."

With the widening interest and the unexpected success met with in the study of the Book of Mormon and archæology, came the desire to still farther extend the good influence resulting from a careful study of "the books." The idea was conceived of establishing a Home Department, the plan of which should be adapted to the condition of the isolated ones who have not access to the meetings of local societies. Such a plan, in brief, was agreed upon by the Executive Committee and published in the "Arena." Soon a number of names were received for enrollment, some Home Classes were organized, and it was thought that enough evidence of success was manifest to justify the publication of a second leaflet of instruction, and through the earnest solicitation of the Northern Illinois district, "Leaflet of Instruction No. 2, Home Department," was given to the public.

As another evidence of growth it might be mentioned that to facilitate and lighten the labors of our Editor it became necessary to procure a typewriter. This was done by renting a machine at a nominal monthly cost.

Too much could scarcely be said in commendation of the excellent work of Sr. Palfrey as editor of the "Arena" and Superintendent of the course of study. Naught but her unflagging zeal and indomitable energy has brought the work to its present standard of excellence, and it is to her efforts, with the aid of God's Spirit, more than to anyone's else, that we have moved forward as we have.

We owe much to the zeal and hustle of our Secretary, who by writing hundreds of letters has kept things astir.

Bro. Campbell should be also mentioned as one who has given careful and prayerful attention to our spiritual welfare, in providing such excellent matter for our prayer meeting programs.

Bro. Ammon White as Vice President has been a wise counselor and a friend to progress, alert to needed improvements.

Thus far reference has been made mostly to the past in review, but the future is fraught with significance. Conventions in the past have been important. It is not a question at this convention of life or death, but of "life more abundantly." How shall we attain to it? is the question confronting us now. A right solution requires just as much humility, just as careful consideration, as at any time in our past experiences. The following are some of the things demanding our consideration.

Our course of study should be considered. While the present course will cover another year, dealing more particularly with archæology, it may be necessary to do some preparatory work on a new course before the completion of this course, or before the close of the year. Our declared policy from the first has been to study the books of the church. These books consist, as generally understood, in the three standard books—Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Since the Sunday school deals mainly with the Bible, it follows, it would seem, that our only consistent course would be the Doctrine and Covenants, with, or without, Church History.

We need to consider plans for more effctive local work as to methods of class study. Much of our work is desultory—too indirect. The direct attention of each individual is not gained when all members recite as one class. For the mature it must be too simple, and for the simple, too mature. The only solution of this perplexing question appears in the plan already adopted by many locals, of dividing the societies into classes and follow methods, more or less, of the Sunday school. Some have two classes; some have as many as six or seven. We must appeal directly to the consciousness of each individual. It might give effectiveness in this matter if the Convention would recommend to the locals some such plan.

Perhaps most of the members have heard something about rates—special reduced rates to convention. The body may wish to speak on this question and instruct its executive pertaining thereto.

If the convention could do anything to encourage our new department it certainly would not be amiss to do so. It is a commendable undertaking—one calling for not a little sacrifice upon the part of some. But all good work calls for sacrifice. And after all it is not so much that one be required to make sacrifice, as that he should be duly encouraged in the making of it. To reach the isolated ones and bring them into closer touch with the work, is a great work, and should meet the commendation of every lover of the souls of men.

And last, but of most importance of all to us is the question of our publishing interests. By arrangement with the Board of Publication and the Editor of Autumn Leaves we have had the use of fourteen pages of the magazine for our department, to be our official organ. To edit this entails considerable expense. Besides, it is not sufficient space. The fields occupied by the magazine and our society are identical. Both are for the youth. To put both under the same management would be to further the interest of both. It would tend to further unite the forces working for the betterment of the young of the church. No one could have more interest in improving the magazine and enlarging its sphere of usefulness than the Religians. This enlargement should be in two directions—by improving the magazine itself, and by extending its circulation.

Then there is another consideration. We have practically no income except by assessment—and this, as some can testify, is not wholly acceptable to all. If we could derive through our publication enough revenue to meet our necessary expenses, a very perplexing problem will have been solved. Let it be understood, that while we have edited fourteen pages of the magazine in the past, we received no pecuniary compensation in return, but have paid our own editor a small amount for so doing—really paying that much for the privilege of using so much space. While the space has served us well, and we could not have attained to our present standard of excellence without it, our interests will be greatly advanced by some arrangement by which our publication will not only pay for itself, but also yield enough margin to meet other incidental expenses. If negotiations could be made with the church whereby they would allow us the full management of the magazine, allowing the church a stipulated compensation for printing, mailing, etc., giving us the benefit of whatever profit might accrue from its publication, this question would probably be solved. From recent investigations it is quite evident such arrangements can be made with the church through the Board of Publication. This convention should authorize the Executive Committee, or some other committee, to enter into such negotiations with the church as are indicated herein. This question of publishing interests is the great question of this convention, and should be faced and solved.

It would seem unwise to revise our constitution touching finances at this time, for the reason that if after undertaking the venture of publishing Autumn Leaves, there should still be a deficit, the first year or two, we could through the assessment plan make up such shortage. And certainly no local or member would object to responding to a light assessment for this purpose. But the strong probability is that the venture would more than pay its own expenses the first year.

In conclusion. My heart swells with gratitude as I contemplate the Lord's goodness to us in the past. Evidences of his favor abound upon every hand. He has endowed many of his servants and handmaidens with the spirit of true sacrifice, and warmed their hearts towards their fellow creatures. Many have been awakened to a keener sense of duty, and have taken up the burden of humanity. Some have entered the field of the active ministry and done noble work for the Master. Many have toiled long and late to bring to pass a better understanding of God's word. Many have learned trust and faith in God by living experiences. "To be of use" is our ambition; "Onward and upward," our motto; and, if humble and faithful, "Celestial glory" shall be our reward.

Secretary Hitchcock reported:—

THE GENERAL SECRETARY'S REPORT.

When our last report was made about two years ago, we thought societies had been formed in about every locality where it was possible to do so. Subsequent results, however, have shown that in this we were very much mistaken, for like the widow's meal, there seems to be no end to the formation of societies. While our growth has not been as rapid as some might have expected, it has been steady, and we believe quite firm. True, in some places the seed has fallen on, we do not say unsuitable ground, but rather ground yet unprepared, and the societies have proven to be of short life. This condition is growing less all the time, and especially so since we commenced a systematic study of the Book of Mormon, with the lessons well outlined as they are.

No meeting being held in 1899, this report covers a period of about two years. During this time have sent out fifty-three Commissions, and the accompanying documents, which, together with the four Commissions out at my last report, resulted in forty-four new societies, and three Commissions out at present not yet reported upon. In addition to this, have assisted in forming three societies personally, making a total of forty-seven new societies. Some two or three of the forty-four mentioned were formed by either members of locals or others, of the general officers, hence we cannot consider that the entire forty-four societies were the result in the absolute of the fifty-three Commissions sent out, but it will be seen from this that a very small per cent of the efforts to organize prove failures. The new societies increase our membership 929, making a total of about 3,094.

At our last convention steps were taken providing for district organizations of the Religio. While it was at that time thought by some to be a little premature, results have shown it to have been a very wise provision. Seven districts have been organized, and in some excellent results have followed. Some have only been organized a short time, but the prospect is very fair for good work being accomplished through this medium. It will enable us to work much more systematically than ever before, and we would strongly urge that district organizations be effected wherever possible.

Another new departure for the Religio was the formation of a Home Class Department. This was something of an experiment when we started with it a little over one year ago, but the surprising and decidedly favorable results that have followed, have exceeded even our most sanguine expectations. Through the medium of the Home Class Department we hope to solve a problem that has for a long time perplexed not only the Religio, but the church as well; viz, interesting the isolated Saints. The merits of this Home Class work are so numerous, and the good results to follow so great, they cannot be mentioned in this report. For further information on this point you are respectfully referred to Leaflet of Instruction No. 2, issued by the Religio.

Owing to having no regular system of reporting until recently, we are not in a position to give the exact number of pieces of literature distributed. From information at hand, however, we can say that thousands of pieces have been distributed in different parts, considerable sent to England. This distribution consisted largely of Autumn Leaves, Hopes, Ensigns, and Heralds.

A printed form of report blank has been prepared, and furnished the different societies, in order that a report may be received every six months. This will, we hope, keep us better posted as to the general condition of affairs.

Since our last report have mailed about 1,628 letters and 160 postal cards, besides Constitution and By-Laws, Leaflets of Instruction, samples of the program, etc. In this work have been materially assisted by Sr. Hitchcock, Bro. Granville Trowbridge, and E. C. Bell.

We consider the Religio is in much better condition than ever before. There are yet some difficulties before us, though none so large as some we have successfully passed. We hope for continued progress. When the question of our finances has been solved, we feel that the long list of difficulties that have overshadowed us in the past will have cleared away. May this convention give the needed aid along this line.

Treasurer, Bro. Samuel A. Burgess, reported: On hand last report, $53.84; total receipts since, $332.16; total $386.00; total expenditures, $386.00. Brn. D. A. Anderson, J. W. Adams, and A. B. Phillips were chosen to audit the Treasurer's books and financial account of the Secretary, and later reported both correct.

Sr. Louise Palfrey, Editor of the "Arena" in Autumn Leaves, reported verbally that the literary ability of the Religians had developed appreciably and that thereby her work as editor had been made much lighter.

While waiting for reports from credential and improvement committees, the subject, How to improve in Religio work, was discussed by several of the ministry present, and some excellent thoughts expressed.

Order of business was left to the Executive Committee, and adjournment was taken to 2:30 p. m. Benediction by Bro. J. F. Mintun.

At the opening of afternoon session Bro. R. Bullard offered prayer.

The Vice President, Bro. Ammon White, reported:—

Dear Associates:—My labors as Vice President for the past two years have been for the most part pleasant. The first six months I spent in the ministry, during which time I labored with Religio locals as much as possible, also assisted Sr. Louise Palfrey in the Maysville reunion. A life of work we find necessary to all successful missionaries.

Succeeded in effecting one district organization in Independence district, which resulted in three new locals and the resurrection of a fourth. Also have assisted the President when necessity demanded in reunion work and in council.

I know the general work is in a healthier condition than it was a year or so ago. I am free to say that as I view it, we have made a steady growth. Locals are more spiritual than I had anticipated. Although we have grown, yet there are broader fields to reap and many points to improve upon.

I rejoice in our ultimate success and hope all will occupy every inch of advantageous ground.

Report of committee on credentials was received; committee continued.

Committee on Improvements, J. A. Gunsolley, J. F. Mintun, Louise Palfrey, and M. H. Bond, reported:—

1. Upon the subject of the management of the Autumn Leaves we recommend that the Executive Committee consult with the Board of Publication, and make such arrangements to secure the management of the Autumn Leaves by the Religio Association as they in their judgment may deem advisable.

2. We concluded that suitable provision was made for determining the Course of Study and revision of programs by the Constitution and By-Laws, page 5, section 5.

3. In regard to the Home Department we conclude that a demand exists for Home Class Work, and fully indorse the movement of the Executive Committee in issuing "Leaflet No. 2" upon this subject, and recommend that the locals and districts seek to carry out the suggestions contained therein.

4. We feel that an urgent demand exists for a special missionary effort in the interests of the Religio; hence we advise that the President of the Religio Association, associated with the General Superintendent of the Sunday School Association, counsel with the Quorum of the Twelve in reference to the appointment of a missionary, having for his special work the building up of the Religio and Sunday School; and that the above-named officials urge the Twelve to consider the interests of the above-named departments of the church in the appointment of missionaries to foreign lands.

Clause No. 4, being made the order, its adoption was moved.

At this juncture, privilege of voice in the deliberations was extended to all present who were interested in Religio work.

The motion to adopt was earnestly discussed, for and against, both sides being ably presented. Being put to vote, it carried, 33 favoring, 11 opposing.

Clauses 2 and 3 of the report were separately read, considered, and adopted.

The chairman appointed a social committee composed of Sr. Florence Fisher, Bro. A. B. Hanson, Sr. J. C. Hitchcock, Bro. Walter W. Smith, and Sr. Emily Kinney.

The business session then adjourned till Wednesday morning at eight o'clock, Bro. A. B. Phillips pronouncing the benediction.

The evening session was held in the upper auditorium, which, with the exception of the galleries, was filled. Bro. M. H. Bond offered the invocation. A miscellaneous program was presented, the principal features of which were: Address, "The Religio; its object," Bro. J. A. Gunsolley. Book of Mormon exercise by eleven children of local junior Religio class, conducted by Sr. Allie Thorburn. Addresses, "Necessity for an education in the teachings of 'the Books;' Individual responsibility," Bro. D. W. Wight. "How the ministry can help the Religio," Bro. J. M. Baker. These were interspersed with a recitation and musical selections, Bro. M. T. Short pronouncing the benediction.

An unusually large number of ministry and members were already in Lamoni, and these were increased by many arrivals during the day. The early morning train was crowded; the noon train brought with it an extra passenger coach, which was said to have been literally packed; the night passenger from the south required two extra coaches to accommodate the gathering crowd, aud it was estimated that no less than 130, perhaps more, arrived on this train. The attendance bids fair to be large.

The weather is unusually fine. A spirit of social good will peculiar to Latter Day Saints prevails; all indicate the spirit of cheerfulness incident to expectation of progress and final triumph in the good cause.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4.

The sun shone from a cloudless sky upon the large delegation which arrived on the 6:30 a. m. train; about seventy, it was said.

When the audience gathered to the eight o'clock business session, the basement room was well filled.

Bro. J. D. White invoked the Divine blessing.

Clause 1, report of Committee on Improvements, was made the order of business. After considerable discussion it was adopted. The report as a whole was then adopted, the committee continued, and the President empowered to fill any vacancies that might occur.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of J. A. Gunsolley, President; Ammon White, Vice President; J. C. Hitchcock, Secretary; S. A. Burgess, Treasurer; the election of each being made unanimous.

A brief intermission was granted that everybody might greet everybody else, which proved restful. Convened again, this resolution was moved:—

Whereas, the Religio has manifested its desire and willingness to assume the management of the Autumn Leaves; and whereas, the Executive Committee have been authorized to confer with the Board of Publication, Resolved, that the Executive Committee be instructed to labor for the removal of Autumn Leaves to the Ensign for publication.

The resolution was laid on the table, following which the chairman stated:—

The Executive Committee will consider the interests of the great work as a whole. There is some danger, and I think I see a slight tendency in this convention, to say a little too much about what the Religio has done. The fact is that the Lord has done most of it. In discharging our obligations imposed by this action, the interests of the Religio alone, and only, is not to be considered, but the work as a whole, which includes the Sunday school and church, and when there is a clash, the decision, so far as your president is concerned, will be in favor of the least clash, considered from the standpoint of the work as a whole.

The following questions were discussed: A parliamentary drill or program. Should persons not willing to become members of Religio be invited to take part in musical and literary exercises? to what extent? How can each Religian be placed in possession of society literature, programs, etc.? The relation of entertainment to spiritual things. Should fiction be printed in Autumn Leaves? Why should the general missionary not have a vote in conventions of this society? Dividing local Religios into classes.

The minutes were read and approved.

The chairman, in view of instructions passed regarding Autumn Leaves, regretted that the question of fiction had not been more fully discussed, and said the Executive Committee would welcome studied and thoughtful communications from anyone on the subject. In formally closing the convention, he expressed thankfulness for Divine guidance during the sessions and for the peaceful and expeditious manner in which the business had been transacted, and said he regarded this the best convention the Religio had held, which sentiments seemed to be concurred in by a large majority of those present.

Convention then adjourned, Bro. Ammon White pronouncing the benediction.

Practically all of the $57,000 recommended by Indian Commissioner Jones toward national government support of Indian schools next year will of necessity go to Roman Catholics.

THE GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4.

At 2:30 p. m. the ninth General Convention met in the basement of the Brick Chapel. Superintendent T. A. Hougas presided, assisted by J. A. Gunsolley, First Assistant Superintendent; W. N. Robinson secretary. Hymn No. 126 from Winnowed Songs, "Gather the reapers home," was sung, and prayer was offered by the Superintendent.

The chairman, being so authorized, named Brn. F. A. Russell, J. D. White, and R. Bullard as the committee on credentials, who immediately retired to prepare their report.

The Superintendent briefly welcomed the workers. He said he was pleased to see the large attendance; he expected the best convention ever held, and exhorted prayerfulness and earnestness.

While waiting for report of credentials committee, the audience listened to speeches from Bro. Gomer R. Wells, late missionary to Australia; Bro. F. G. Pitt, recently returned from England; Bro. J. M. Terry, Chicago; Bro. D. W. Wight, Utah; Bro. D. A. Anderson, California; Sr. B. C. Smith, Independence; Bro. Holmes J. Davison, Nova Scotia; Sr. Viola Blair, St. Joseph; Bro. A. M. Chase, Washington and Oregon.

Credentials committee reported. Moved to adopt the report; but many corrections being offered, the committee asked time to correct it before the vote was taken. While waiting, the minutes of the convention of 1898 were read.

As items of business which would come up later, proposed amendments to the Constitution and By-Laws, and report of Committee on Improvements, were read.

Corrected report of the credentials committee was adopted and the committee continued.

Bro. J. F. Mintun and Sr. Belle James were chosen associate secretaries. Bro. F. G. Pitt was chosen chorister and authorized to select his assistant and an organist. Later, he named as his assistant, Bro. B. M. Anderson. Bro. S. M. Bass was chosen janitor; Brn. Hale W. Smith, W. T. Ross, and D. L. Morgan, ushers.

No. 183, "Send us showers of blessing," was sung, and the convention adjourned till 7:30 p. m., Bro. J. A. Gunsolley pronouncing the benediction.

The evening session convened in the upper auditorium. "My soul hath found abiding rest," was sung, and Bro. A. J. Keck petitioned the throne of Grace. An octet from the Lamoni choir rendered an anthem, entitled, "I will extol thee."

The minutes of last session were read and approved.

Bro. T. A. Hougas then presented his report, which is as follows:—

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

Brethren, Sisters, and Fellow Sunday School Workers:—Our meeting, after an adjournment of two years, is one of more than ordinary interest. It is a meeting in which we expect to review our work for the period, the meeting at which we must lay out our plans for the work for the ensuing year or years. It is more than this. While we must pass through the routine, must do the mechanical part of the work, it is to the spiritual influence of these gatherings, the meeting of old and loved friends, the forming of new and valued acquaintances, yes, the handshaking of and greeting of brothers and sisters; it is to these that we look forward with the keenest delight. It is this that has carried us along for months past with the anticipations of this hour,—this hour that is just a foretaste of what will be. May we all be there.

We would love to dwell upon these pleasant thoughts, but the season for work is short and we must "be about our Father's business." Hence, we enter at once upon the work of the past two years and give as far as seems interesting and necessary the items of the work we have done and the results thereof as they appear to us.

Since our meeting at Independence in 1898, we have attended and assisted in eleven district conventions and institutes, four reunions, one general institute, and met with several schools in the various districts. By correspondence we have reached or attempted to reach every organized district in the church. Some of these are alive to the best interests of the work, some are very lukewarm, others indifferent and still others either dead or dying. We have tried to encourage the workers and revive the work and in many cases have succeeded in some degree. Several districts which were either unorganized or inactive have been induced to take up the work and we have the hope now that most of them will continue till they can see some fruits of their efforts.

Two great needs are found to exist in these unorganized and in many organized districts, viz: persons competent and willing to lead, and people or patrons who realize the responsibility resting upon them. If the leaders could be found and put to work, the people would become interested in the course of time. And on the other hand, if the people would become awakened to a sense of their duties, there would be leaders or presiding officers found. What is the solution of the problem? Much can be done to relieve the situation by a properly conducted correspondence to create the needed interest. But there is nothing, absolutely nothing, to equal a personal visit by one gifted with proper talents and clothed with the spirit of humility and earnestness in the work. May the day speedily come when there will be available as many as are needed of these persons.

Many of our missionaries are now helping along this line by lending aid and encouragement as they pass from place to place to the feeble Sunday school workers. A brother writing from Canada says: "I once thought of sending my children to an existing Sunday school. Knowing they would be taught some error we hesitated to do so. . . . We attended a convention at Niagara Falls where in the course of a few remarks, Bro. R. C. Evans said: 'I would not send my child to gather mushrooms where there are toadstools too.' He spoke this for my benefit though he did not know it. I saw the application to my case. We returned home and started a Sunday school in our own house, teaching our children and as many others as we could gather in. Five years have passed since then and God has raised up a branch of about seventy-five members, a grand Sunday school, and we have a church building free from debt, and all is well." In those few words by Bro. Evans was laid, no doubt, the foundation of a great work, the end of which is not yet. We trust our missionaries or anyone else will let no opportunity pass in which they could give any advice or encouragement to the workers in this line.

A paper read at one of our reunions strongly advocated the setting aside of the present system of quarterly lessons and in lieu thereof have books for a part of the grades and lesson leaflets with lessons upon the latter-day revelations, Book of Mormon, etc. It met with but very little visible approval when read. But the thought not being a new one, we resolved to try to ascertain how prevalent those notions were. To do this we issued a circular letter and mailed copies to all the missionaries in America whose addresses we could obtain, to all district superintendents, and to many other prominent Sunday school workers, to the number of about two hundred fifty. Sixty-six replies have been received which are well divided between missionaries and Sunday school workers. We give very briefly the results of this investigation.

To the first question, "What is the aim or mission of the Sunday school?" several very nice answers were given. We quote from some of them:—

"The mission of the Sabbath school is to lead the young mind to God and Christ."—Charles Derry.

"Educate all we can reach, outside and in, old and young, and hold them together for further development."—M. C. Fisher.

"Primarily, it is to prepare the youth for a life of usefulness in God's kingdom, or to lead souls to desire to do right and to obey God's laws."—Sr. Blanche I. Andrews.

"The aim or mission of the Sabbath school should be to direct the children in moral and spiritual ways of thought, and give them at the same time such an understanding of the word of the Lord as is practicable."—Bishop E. L. Kelley.

"I have always considered the special mission of the Sunday school to be in the interest of the children, both in the church and out of it, and that their interests should always be of first importance."—Isaac M. Smith.

In answer to "What should we teach in the Sunday school?" it was almost a universal belief that we should confine ourselves to the simple principles of the gospel, taught from such lessons from the Scriptures as will best illustrate or teach the principle.

Question number three was, "If we teach 'gospel' how far, or in other words, how deep shall we go?" About all said it would depend upon the ability of the scholar. They would not go very "deep" except in special cases.

Number four reads: "Where no actual error exists in the King James version of the Bible, is it necessary or wise to quote from the Inspired translation, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants instead thereof?" Fifty-nine said, "No, it is not necessary or wise," three said "yes," and one occupied a middle ground.

The fifth question was: "Is it necessary or wise to make the Inspired Translation, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants especially prominent in the lessons of the quarterlies?" There were eight who would so make them, four who occupied a middle ground, and fifty who said "No." Some answering no gave circumstances where schools had been broken up by unwise and persistent use of the references from these books made in the quarterly of some time ago.

The substance of the sixth question was, "Should we teach in the Sunday school such questions as the 'gathering,' 'dispensation of time,' etc." Seven answered "yes," twenty-three would teach them to classes especially adapted to receive them and having a teacher especially fitted to teach them, and thirty-four would not attempt it at all. One reasoned thus: "How can we teach what we as a church are not agreed upon?" Another said, "I prefer to leave that for the ministry to teach. I do not understand it." Still another: "Let the priesthood deal with these problems either in special classes or in the pulpit. I cannot teach them."

The results of this gleaning of the field was to show, as we believe, that we are now occupying the best field of scriptural research,—a field approved by eighty per cent. of the association workers. And from the fact that such a large proportion of our schools are children either in years or in understanding, it appears to us that we had better be content to teach the plain principles of the gospel, those that need first to be obeyed. If we can teach them what to do and what not to do, teach them morality, virtue, and kindness, to love God and Christ, father, mother, sister, brother, and all fellow creatures; inspire them with a love and respect for all that is grand, good, and noble, and with a desire to become useful in the works of righteousness, and to his fellow man, we shall have done well indeed. The "deep" questions had better be left to the ordained ministry to teach or expound to those competent to understand.

Two years ago we recommended that some move be made to supply the demand for a field worker. The need has been felt for years and is becoming more apparent every year. In fact the need is growing greater as the work expands. There are many fertile fields that would yield good fruits for the work of the right person. We have received many letters from persons in the distant districts who have said in substance that they are so far removed from the places of meeting of the General Association and circumstances are such that few if any of the active workers ever get to the convention, and as a result they are placed at a serious disadvantage and the work has suffered from it. Many have expressed the wish that a competent worker could be sent amongst them. We suggest that a committee be appointed early in the convention to take this matter into consideration, and report in sufficient time for the convention to act upon the report.

One very important matter to which we should turn attention is the Sunday school literature we are providing or rather not providing. Our limited space in the Herald is entirely inadequate to the demands of the "Department." At least four times that amount should be provided for. We have tried to arrange with the Board of Publication for the increase of space, but so far have been unsuccessful. We are grateful for the space we are permitted to use, and with the Herald in its present size it is about all that can be spared us. But that does not relieve the fact that we have not enough space. It is not sufficient to admit of any division into departments or arranging under various heads. We can simply insert about fifteen hundred words, more or less, of what may be available. Much more good could be done with the same material we have if more space could be had.

In conclusion we would say: We have served the association and its needs as best we could. We have spared no pains or efforts to make the benefits of the association felt and to stimulate and build up the work wherever opportunity would permit. The work has prospered greatly. Not by our hands, but by the blessing of God who will bless and prosper anyone who engages in his work with a purpose to do God's bidding. How many mistakes we may have made we do not know. We trust, however, that they may be few and not serious. We have done only that which we supposed to be right.

May we be guided and strengthened in this convention and in the few remaining years that we have yet to work.

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley read his report:—

FIRST ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—

My report will of necessity be brief, because I have done but little to report, although two years have elapsed since my election to this office.

I attended the Bluff Park Reunion in 1898 and had charge of the Sunday school work there except during the time Bro. Hougas was with us.

Was present and assisted in the Interstate Institute during Christmas holidays, 1898, at Independence.

Attended reunions at Nine Wonders Park, near Eldorado Springs, Missouri, and at Independence, Missouri, in 1899, and assisted as I could in the work there.

The matter of issuing the Primary Illustration Cards involved some little time and attention which I gave as best I could, the committee, however, doing most of the business.

I have, in company with the Treasurer and with the advice and concurrence of Superintendent, assisted in procuring cuts for Quarterly covers.

Have done more or less correspondence on Sunday school matters, as had opportunity, and as necessity required.

Local and district work, and Religio work have prevented my doing some other things which might have been done had circumstances been otherwise.

I am very much gratified to see the progress made during the two years just past; and am very hopeful of the future as it appears to me. We have more workers, and on an average, better workers, than ever before. The Institute idea has done much to develop the workers, and should be continued and encouraged. A keener sense of responsibility is felt by us all than we have hitherto felt. A firmer trust in God is manifest, a stronger desire to know the Master's will, and to do it.

I said the outlook for the future is bright—how much of this brightness will be realized, depends upon the wisdom exercised in our deliberation in convention. If we all seek to know the Lord's will as best we can, and then act according to our honest convictions, being perfectly willing that our ideas should be defeated if not his will, there is no danger of our going wrong. But just to the extent that any of us insist on having our way whether right or wrong; just to the extent that we contend that our way must be right because we can't be wrong, though everyone else may be against us; just to the extent that we are unwilling to see our ideas set aside and others adopted; just to the extent that we contend for mastery rather than right; just to the extent that we give way to any of these weaknesses, just to that extent do we endanger our cause, diminish our chances for success, and invite defeat.

Whether we adopt one measure or another depends upon the will of the majority. This will of the majority should be the will of God, and will be the will of God, if we will do as we ought. And if we could bring our minds into perfect submission to right, the will of God would be our unanimous consent.

Whatever measures we adopt let us remember these vital facts with reference to our work. We are an auxiliary to the church. The Sunday school is the nursery of the church—or a part of such nursery. The Sunday school is an educator to the young of the church—to indoctrinate our children. Our work, as well as the work of the church, is to prepare citizens for the celestial kingdom of God. We must, therefore, teach the laws of the celestial kingdom. Should we teach these laws in their fullness? If we are trying to make full-fledged citizens, certainly we must. Our Sunday schools are sectarian in the strictest sense, in the most absolute sense, if sectarianism means that which is peculiar to a certain sect. The leader of our sect is Jesus Christ and our common belief is the gospel in its fullness.

We are not non-sectarian and cannot be; and to the extent that we try to be, to that extent we are not Christ's. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. To have the Father and the Son, means to be sectarian, though sectarian as generally understood means anything but gospel following.

We are not a missionary society, although the Sunday school has a mission. Some may be converted by our work, but God hath ordained through the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

The creed of the church is "all truth." Should the creed of the Sunday school be any less than all truth.

Nearly every step we have taken in the past has been toward this high standard—"truth." Let whatever steps we take this year be ordered toward the same end. If we improve our quarterlies or seek to improve them, let it be with a view to come nearer this standard—to present it more fully and more plainly.

One thing we do need. We need more time, that is, some do. The Superintendent has many demands upon his time to which he cannot respond. He has many calls to "come over and help us" which he cannot answer. The highest good of the work would be served by loosing his hands, or loosing the hands of some other individual whom we might consider competent to represent us, so that there might be help which would be available for district work, institute work, reunion work, etc., etc., etc.

May the peace of the Lord direct our deliberations, and lead us on from step to step, improvement to further improvement until ultimate perfection of character shall crown our every individual effort.

No report had been received from Bro. C. E. Crumley, Second Assistant Superintendent.

The report of Bro. W. N. Robinson was read:—

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

To the Superintendent and Sunday School Workers, in Convention Assembled; Greeting:—

My report as Secretary for the General Sunday School Association for the past two years, is that I have labored in the office during that time to the best of my ability, not only attending to all the routine duties as Secretary, which comprises the copying of the minutes of the regular sessions and the answering of correspondence pertaining to reports and other matters statistical, but have attended conventions, reunions, and institutes; at these places, laboring in whatever capacity seemed necessary at the time. During the Christmas holidays of 1898 I spent four days at the Institute held at Independence associated with my brother officers of the General Association, and have since seen the benefit that has resulted from the work accomplished there.

In July, 1899, I attended the reunion at St. Louis, being present on the special Sunday school day, and rendering what assistance I could in the Sunday school work there. In August I attended the eight-days' reunion at Washington Park, where considerable interest was manifested, and some good Sunday school meetings held.

I also organized one district association, the Northeast Texas and Choctaw, at Cove, Arkansas. We held several special sessions for the Sunday school work, and found in that district the most excellent qualifications among the membership, they being both willing to work and anxious to learn. My business occupations have kept me from being present at different district meetings where we have had invitations to come and assist, but I have, in a local way, been kept actively engaged, because of having been chosen to act as superintendent of the Independence Sunday school.

I have written many letters in connection with the general work, relating to the organization of new schools, answering questions relative to the proper conduct of schools in various departments, and a number of letters to different district secretaries or superintendents, with a view to getting complete reports from them. In some cases I have been quite unsuccessful. Perhaps it might not be out of place here to suggest that the work in schools and districts is retarded materially by frequent changes in officers; and if there is one thing more than another that I would urge in his connection, it would be when you have a competent official, hold him up by your confidence and help and keep him there.

It would have been more pleasing to have received full reports from all the districts.

The statistical report of the Secretary showed that in 1898 there were 40 districts, present number 48, gain 8; a present total of 333 schools, net gain 26; present total membership, 14,816, gain 596; total number of classes, 894; total number of officers, 1,193; books in libraries, 3,479.

The Treasurer, Bro. A. B. Hanson, reported. The report was referred to an auditing committee composed of Brn. Wm. Landers, R. N. Burwell, and J. M. Baker.

The audience then arose while singing, "Am I a soldier of the cross," from Winnowed Songs.

The Librarian, Sr. Mamie A. Allen, reported:—

LIBRARIAN'S REPORT.

Superintendent and Fellow Sunday School Workers, in Convention Assembled, Greeting:—

As General Librarian I submit the following report.

Not all the districts in the association have appointed librarians as yet. Those that have made the appointment are, Clinton, Missouri; Central Nebraska; Central California; Decatur, Iowa; Fremont, Iowa; Galland's Grove, Iowa; Kewanee, Illinois; Little Sioux, Iowa; Massachusetts; Nodaway, Missouri; Northern Illinois; Northeast Missouri; Northern California; Oklahoma; Pottawattamie, Iowa; Southern Nebraska; Independence, Missouri; London, Ontario; St. Louis, Missouri; Spring River, Kansas.

I have written to each of these for reports but have only been able to hear from part of them. . . .

In my work I have tried to do what I could to plan the best means to advance the library work. I have not been able to visit the schools, nor have I had opportunity to be present at any of the reunions, but whenever I have been requested, I have written papers and answered questions. I have written a great many letters. The actual statistics will not perhaps be very encouraging, but I have received letters telling of the interest manifested in the little schools in reading one or two or more books to which the children have access, and so I do not feel discouraged. I hope and pray that the future will develop grander results.

I have made an effort to become acquainted with as many books as I possibly could. Have sent lists of books to many of the schools. I sent out a number of letters to Sunday school workers, whom I thought readers, asking them to send me a list of at least five books that they could recommend for Sunday school libraries. I received some replies and found them of good use in making up a list of books.

I find that the real need is not so much more interest as it is more funds. I have on hand all the copies of quarterlies for which the association subscribed.

I have some recommendations to offer that I think will be a help to the library work, but will present them to the committee.

I am anxious and willing to do what I can to advance the work.

The financial report of the General Superintendent was read and referred to the committee appointed to audit the treasurer's account.

A committee composed of Brn. Ammon White, A. M. Chase, and S. B. Kibler was chosen to consider both sets of proposed amendments to the Constitution and By-Laws and to recommend regarding them.

A number of announcements were made, and the audience was dismissed by the General Superintendent.

THURSDAY, APRIL 5.

Again the day dawned clear and bright. Delegates, ministry, Saints, and friends continued to arrive in large numbers.

A prayer and testimony meeting had been appointed for eight o'clock. It convened, Brn. Hougas and Gunsolley in charge. No. 43, Winnowed Songs, was sung, and Bro. Gunsolley offered prayer. The Superintendent gave brief but timely instruction and placed the meeting in charge of the assembly. Three prayers were offered and 17 testimonies borne. A good spirit prevailed throughout. "Go forth to the field of the harvest" was sung and the Superintendent pronounced the benediction.

After a short intermission the assembly convened for business. "Not now, but by and by," was sung, and Bro. F. E. Cochran offered prayer. Hymn No. 30 was sung, and after a few cheery words from the Superintendent, the minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

Question being asked as to privileges of general church missionaries, courtesies of the floor were extended to all interested friends of the Sunday school who should be present during convention.

An additional report on credentials was adopted.

An individual report from Bishop E. L. Kelley, as a member of the Revising Committee, was read and ordered spread upon the minutes. It is herewith presented:—

To the President and Members of the General Sunday School Association in Convention, Lamoni, Iowa;

Brothers and Sisters in the Master's work:—My report as a member of the revising board since the last convention will relate simply to the work of examination and checking of the editor's manuscripts for the quarterlies, as prepared from time to time, which I have looked after as faithfully as the limited time I could find to devote to this duty would permit; and knowing the importance of the work of this committee, I take this early occasion to suggest that the selection of members of the committee who can give more time to its work will no doubt greatly improve upon our work, and for this reason ask that the convention relieve me from acting the present year.

My work in connection with the editors the past two years has been nothing but of the most agreeable and pleasant character, and my interest in the preparation of proper and convenient lesson leaves for use in the Sunday school work is undiminished.

In my opinion, should the lessons be materially shortened in the quarterlies and so arranged that in the advanced classes the scholar shall have the Bible text before him, and taught to ask questions upon the text as well as to answer, the step would be in advance and with the saving of much expense in publication. I present the thought suggestively as it has come to me in my observation of the management of classes.

Trusting that continued success and the blessing of the Lord may be with you in your labors in the gospel life, I am, Sincerely yours.

E. L. KELLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 3, 1900.

The committee appointed two years ago to expend the special collection for the benefit of Saint's Home, reported. The report was referred to the auditing committee.

The Committee on Sunday school song book presented the following report:—

We, your committee having been appointed according to the following resolution, "Resolved that a committee of three be appointed by this convention to solicit music and be custodians of the music now on hand for use in a Sunday school song book," beg leave to submit the following report:—

As custodians of the old music, we find most of it to be of such a character that we would not consider it serviceable for a Sunday school song book. There are, however, about eight compositions that could be used, some of which would have to be corrected.

We gave notice through the Herald and Ensign in 1898 that additional compositions were wanted, but during that entire fiscal year, no music whatever was received. In the latter part of 1899 we received a total of six, four of which, after correction, we would consider could be used.

Some of the committee have composed others until we now have a total of about twenty, that would be serviceable for a song book.

We feel as a committee that in the church there is latent the talent that would bring better results than the above report shows, and we regret that we cannot report a greater interest taken in this work on the part of those thus talented and that we cannot report a larger collection received.

The committee appointed the evening before on amendments to the Constitution and By-Laws reported, recommending the adoption of the set of amendments signed by J. A. Gunsolley which were published in the HERALD for December 27, 1899, as follows:—

Art. 5, Sec. 4.—Substitute for last sentence the following: "He shall, as often as necessary, and by the advice and consent of the general officers, notify districts and schools not in districts, of the General Association's need of funds."

ADD THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE.

"Art. 18, Expenses.—Districts and schools not in a district are required, upon receipt of notice from General Treasurer, to contribute to the support of the General Association from their funds, according to their respective ability so to do."

CONSTITUTION FOR DISTRICT ASSOCIATION.

Art. IV., Sec. 4.—Substitute for last sentence the following: "Upon receipt of notice from the General Treasurer of a need of funds, or when funds are needed for district expenses, he shall, by the advice and consent of the district officers, notify the schools of his district accordingly."

Art. VI., Substitute the following: "Expenses.—The schools of the district shall severally contribute, upon receipt of notice from District Treasurer of a need of funds, according to their respective ability, and promptly remit same to District Treasurer."

BY-LAWS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Art. VIII., Sec. 9., Substitute the following: "Finances.—Each school may adopt such financial methods as seem best suited to its needs; but it shall be the duty of each school to respond promptly to the support of the district according to its ability, upon receipt of notice from District Treasurer of a need of funds.

The report was adopted as a whole.

The Committee on Improvements presented an additional report.

The following resolution by the Galland's Grove district was read:—

Feeling the need of a general Sunday school and Religio Missionary we therefore ask the delegates representing this Galland's Grove district in General Convention to present a request to the General Convention to request the church authorities for such a missionary. The Sunday School and Religio societies defraying all expenses of said missionary.

Signed, C. J. HUNT.
JOHN BUTTERWORTH.

The above request was adopted by Galland's Grove District Association assembled at Deloit, Iowa, February 16, 1900.

F. B. SHUMATE, Sec.

Action upon it was deferred until this subject should come up in the consideration of the Improvement Committee's report.

A motion that the recommendation on the subject of Sunday school missionary contained in the Superintendent's report be adopted, and that the body appoint a committee to which shall be referred all matter pertaining to the question of a Sunday school missionary, was lost.

The audience stood while singing, "When we meet safe at home," and was refreshed.

The Report of Committee on Improvements was read:—

REPORT OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL COMMITTEE ON IMPROVEMENTS.

It has occurred to us that in making the following recommendations we may have exceeded, somewhat, the work expected of us in our appointment. But we wish to explain that matters have been presented to us from many sources with such earnestness that we have not known what to do other than to give them our careful consideration in fulfillment of the faith placed in us, and the general understanding of our capacity, and present the matters before the convention. We respectfully submit our report as follows:

At ten a. m., April 2, the committee met at the home of Bro. George Blair. After a season of prayer, we took up the following subjects:—

1. Teacher's Edition Quarterly. We favor the issuing of such a quarterly, associated with the grades of quarterlies now published, to comprise the lessons of the Senior, Intermediate, and Primary quarterlies, and in addition, to give evidence on the subjects from Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Inspired Translation. Also, helps drawn from other sources that will contribute to give a clearer and more complete understanding of the subjects of the lessons. Teaching points and illustrations; home class suggestions; infant class or kindergarten suggestions, also, to be included in this Teacher's Edition.

2. We approve of the appointment of a lesson committee to decide on the lesson course. Further, that this committee also act as the revising committee. We recommend that the Executive Committee, associated with this committee, appoint the editor (the editor having authority to choose sub-editors), and to fix compensation.

3. We recommend that the Hope be under the management of the Sunday School Association.

4. We are in favor of the issuing of programs for Christmas and Children's Day, to be adapted to the uses of the average school.

5. That the interests of the Sunday school may be more adequately represented, we recommend that four leaves be added to the Herald, at the expense of the General Association, for the present. That an editor-in-chief be appointed by the Executive, having the right to appoint sub-editors. We further recommend that this editor-in-chief be the editor of the Hope.

6. We urge the immediate publication of a song book, to be issued in installments, in cheap editions.

7. We favor a simplification and cheapening of the class book now in use. We recommend that the revision of the class book be encharged to a committee to be appointed by the Executive.

8. About the matter of a Sunday school missionary, we recommend that the Superintendent of the Sunday School Association, and the President of the Religio Association counsel with the Quorum of the Twelve in regard to the appointment of a missionary who shall make the Sunday school and Religio his especial work in this land, and we further recommend that the interests of the Sunday school and Religio be duly considered in the missionary apointments to foreign lands.

9. We esteem a knowledge of the standard books of the church to be so important to the spiritual progress not only of the individual, but of the church, that special effort should be put forth to encourage systematic study of the books upon the part of the isolated members as well as those having the advantages of branch association; that it should be the united aim of the general missionaries, Sunday school and Religio workers, to bring about such a systematic study of the church books in every family of Saints. Hence, we urge that district officials devote more earnest attention to the promotion of home class study, and recommend that a committee of three be appointed to draft a resolution to be incorporated in the report of the convention to the General Conference addressed to the general missionaries of the church, inviting them to take active part in the interests of the Sunday school and Religio, two departments of church work, especially the home class work of these departments.

10. We have to report, in addition to what we have given, that we recommend that a committee of three be appointed to assist the General Librarian, as per her request, one of whom should be located in a city.

11. In order to economize time, we recommend that a credential committee be appointed by the executive to act on the credentials for the next General Convention. Should any vacancy occur, we advise that the remaining members have the right to make appointment to fill the vacancy.

J. F. MINTUN, Chairman.
LOUIS PALFREY, Secretary.

The chairman ruled that unless objected to the paper would be considered by sections.

Section 1 was read and its adoption moved.

A motion then obtained that action on sections 1 and 2 be deferred and made the special order of business immediately following election of officers.

Section 3 was read, and it was moved that all reference to the Hope be stricken from this report. A resolution to refer all involved in this motion back to the committee, was lost. The motion to strike from the report all reference to the Hope was then put and carried.

Announcements were made, "With a steadfast faith," was sung, and Bro. John Hawley dismissed the audience.

The afternoon session was opened by singing No. 152, "Glad tidings." Bro. E. A. Blakeslee offered prayer. "Be joyful in God," was sung, followed by reading and approval of minutes of former meeting.

Question being raised, the chair ruled that as only section 3 of report of Committee on Improvements was under consideration, it, only, could be affected by the motion to strike from the report all reference to the Hope. Bro. J. F. Mintun asked that the Improvement Committee might be privileged to correct its report, which was granted.

The election of general officers resulted in the choice of Bro. T. A. Hougas as Superintendent for the ensuing term, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley as First Assistant Superintendent, Bro. F. M. Pitt Second Assistant Superintendent, Bro. W. N. Robinson Secretary, Sr. Mamie A. Allen Librarian, and Bro. A. B. Hanson Treasurer. The election of each, respectively, was made unanimous.

To rest the weary audience, "Come, learn of the Meek and Lowly," was sung.

The special order of business, sections 1 and 2 of report of Improvement Committee, was taken up and section 1 read.

Moved to amend by adding this paragraph:—

And that the same provision be made for the publication of this edition as is made for the publication of the present edition of the quarterlies.

Amendment carried, and the section as amended was adopted.

Clause 2 was read and its adoption moved. An amendment to it was offered, to strike out the first two sentences, and insert instead, "That the International Texts be used as our texts."

A motion to adjourn to 7:30 p. m. obtained. Announcements were made, No. 120 was sung, and Bro. F. G. Pitt pronounced the benediction.

At 7:30, "O my Redeemer, how can

www.LatterDayTruth.org

I be silent," was sung, and Superintendent Hougas led in prayer. Minutes of last session were approved.

Business was resumed just where it was laid down, and section 2 was read, both as originally written and as it would read if amended as proposed. A motion to lay it on the table until necessary business was transacted, prevailed. A subsequent motion to take it from the table was lost.

Section 4 was amended by substituting the words, "adapted to the uses," instead of, "to be within the reach," and as amended was passed.

Section 5 was read, also subsidiary request of the committee, that the last sentence, pertaining to the Hope, be stricken out. The sentence was ordered erased. The clause as amended was read and its adoption moved, but it was lost.

Section 6 was read and its adoption moved. In connection therewith the report of song book committee was reread. After discussion, the motion to adopt section 6 was lost.

It was voted to continue the song book committee. Sr. Belle James resigned. F. G. Pitt, A. H. Mills, and Louise Robinson were added to the committee. These, with J. L. Morgan and W. J. Richards, now comprise the committee, which had by motion been limited to five. Voted, also, that the committee be requested and urged to secure a sufficient amount of suitable music for a Latter Day Saint song book previous to the convening of next General Convention.

Sections 7 and 8, were separately read, their adoption moved, and both tabled.

Sections 9 and 10 were adopted.

Section 11, was read, amended, and passed. As finally adopted, it reads:—

11. In order to economize time, we recommend that a credential committee be appointed to act on the credentials for the next General Convention at close of the last session of the Religio convention, if held prior to the next Sunday school convention.

Additional report of Improvement Committee was read:—

12 We recommend that the Executive Committee of the General Sunday School Association consult with the Board of Publication in regard to the management of the Hope, and they be authorized to act as they in their judgment may think advisable.

No action upon it was taken.

Committee appointed to illustrate primary quarterlies reported:—

To the President and Members of the General Sunday School Association in Convention:—

We, your committee appointed for the purpose of illustrating the Primary Quarterlies, beg leave to report that permission was given by the officers of the General Association to undertake the work sometime in the latter part of October, 1899.

On account of the press of Christmas work in that line, it was then too late for us to see any of the sketches, as we had been promised we should, for the purpose of correction. We were obliged to be satisfied with the completed plates.

The outline cards were chosen for the reason that they provided work for the children, and your committee thought them far in advance of a picture simply to be looked at.

The cards are not what we desired but they have served as a trial.

Very respectfully submitted,

F. M. SHEEHY,
LUCY L. RESSEGUIE,
CHARLES H. BURR, } Committee.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 4, 1900.

It was ordered spread upon the minutes and the committee was continued.

A report of the committee appointed to employ the quarterly editors, with a report of the editors appended, was read and ordered spread on the minutes. Both are here presented:—

To the Sunday School Convention:—

We, your committee appointed to employ editors, and fix their compensation, report:—

Committee met in basement of Stone Church at Independence during sessions of convention and General Conference and made the following appointments:—

1. Sr. Anna Salyards was given the position of editor in chief at a compensation of $25.00 per month.

2. Bro. Duncan Campbell was given the place of assistant editor at a compensation of $75 00 per year.

3. The editors were authorized to secure such help as might be available to write primary lessons.

We append a report of editors, as follows:—

T. A. HOUGAS.
J. A. GUNSOLLEY.
E L. KELLEY.
H. A. STEBBINS.
R. S. SALYARDS.

Brethren of the Revising Committee:—

We, the editor and assistant editor of the Gospel Quarterlies, desire to report through you to the convention that we have completed the work assigned us and that the lessons are now prepared up to October 1, 1900. The unpublished lessons now in our hands are based upon the teachings of Christ in Matthew 5, 6, 7.

Respectfully submitted,

CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.
DUNCAN CAMPBELL.

The auditing committee reported. Report accepted, ordered spread on the minutes, and the committee discharged. The chair ruled that as this committee had audited three reports, they would be considered separately.

A corrected report of the Treasurer was presented, the leading items of which are: Received from former Treasurer, $634.21; received since, $4,028.72; total receipts, $4,662.93; total expenditures, $3,523.87; on hand, $1,139.06. The report was adopted.

The financial report of the Superintendent showed: Total receipts, $152.33; total expenditures $137.41; balance due General Association, $14.92. The account was found correct and adopted.

The report of the committee to expend the "penny collection" for the Saints' Home was found to be in error, and it was ordered returned to the party for correction.

A motion to adjourn to April 6, at eight a. m., prevailed. Benediction by Bro. T. A. Hougas.

FRIDAY, APRIL 6.

Convention met as per adjournment. "Ask, seek, knock," was sung. Prayer by Bro. J. A. Gunsolley. Minutes approved.

Report of the Second Assistant Superintendent was read:—

LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 1, 1900.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Brother:—As your second assistant, I did some correspondence in the interest of the work. That was in the early part of the term. Since that time, owing to circumstances over which I had no control, I have had to play the part of figurehead on the stern of the ship, which position I have magnificently filled.

In bonds,
CHAS. E CRUMLEY.

It was voted to set apart $150 per year to be used by the direction of the officers for the benefit of the association.

The Superintendent, First Assistant, and Secretary were made a committee to draft the resolution provided for in section 9, report of Committee on Improvements.

Bro. Samuel A. Burgess, St. Louis; Sr. Clara L. Clark, Kansas City; and Bro. Elmer E. Johnson, Chicago, were appointed as a committee to assist the General Librarian.

The Executive Committee was empowered to appoint a program committee for next convention.

Voted that when this convention adjourns, it does so to meet at call of the Executive.

Voted that a committee of three be chosen, who, associated with the Executive, shall choose the quarterly editor and fix compensation; the committee also to revise the lessons. Brn. H. A. Stebbins, R S. Salyards, and J. R. Lambert were chosen as this committee; in case of vacancy, the Executive Committee to fill the same.

The Committee on Improvements was sustained, and instructed to publish their report two months prior to next General Convention.

The chairman ruled that additional reports of the Improvement Committee could be received by the convention if not previously published.

Minutes of this session were approved, a vote of thanks was tendered the ushers, and a rising vote of thanks was given the general officers for their past services.

In closing, the Superintendent exhorted to carefulness, prayerfulness, and diligence.

A motion to adjourn obtained, "God will take care of you," was sung, and Superintendent Hougas dismissed the Convention.

The work of the signal corps of the army in the Philippine Islands has been excellent. The corps has handled an average of 2,500 dispatches each day since the American army landed at Manila, and the maximum was 4,000 on November 6.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

FRIDAY, APRIL 6.

The forty-seventh General Conference of the Reorganized Church convened in the upper auditorium of the brick chapel, Lamoni, Iowa, Friday morning, April 6, at ten o'clock. The assembly room was well filled, including the gallery. President Joseph Smith called the house to order. "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning," was sung, and Pres. A. H. Smith invoked the divine blessing. No. 145 in the Hymnal, "Praise ye the Lord," was sung.

The conference then proceeded to permanent organization. President Joseph Smith and his counselors were chosen to preside over this conference. To this President Smith responded:—

We thank you for this token of your continued confidence, and hope that things may so transpire in the prosecution of the business that is before us that you will have no reason to regret the trust thus reposed.

The Secretary of the Church, Bro. R. S. Salyards, was chosen secretary of the conference with authority to select his assistants. He chose Brn. D. W. Wight and F. M. Weld. Bro. F. G. Pitt was chosen chorister, and being authorized to choose his associate and an organist, he named Bro. B. M. Anderson as his assistant, and Sr. Roxanna E. Anderson organist. Sr. Belle R. James was chosen stenographer for the conference.

A resolution prevailed "that Bro. D. F. Lambert, being an agent of the Associated Press, be also authorized as a press committee, and that he may choose his assistants."

A credentials committee was ordered, and the chairman named Brn. H. E. Moler, Arthur Allen, and Frank Granger, and gave them liberty to retire and consider their work.

President Joseph Smith then stated it was customary not to enter upon business in the forenoon, but that it was usual to devote the session mainly to short speeches, and that unless objected to, this would be the order.

The President then addressed the assembly as follows:—

Responding without a motion, and taking it for granted that you are awfully anxious to hear, and those of you that are not thus anxious, curious, I shall offer some remarks.

I enter upon the work of this conference with a good deal of diffidence and with some degree of apprehension. While I have no disposition to imagine that there are lions in the way, I have thought in the past, and I believe now that it is not the part of a courageous man, to be indifferent to what may be before him and neither to pretend ignorance concerning their existence. I know that there are difficulties lying before us that will require all the Christian fortitude that we have, and a good deal more Christian charity than I fancy that some of us have, to get through with. And while I would not want any one person to think that I thus struck at him personally, I hope that each may take it into consideration as to whether or not he enters into the work of this conference with a sufficient degree of Christian fortitude and Christian charity toward the flesh, the world, and the Devil, (in or out of the church, according to his judgment.)

Two things have been fraught with a great deal of peculiar manifestation in the ministerial field to a great extent, and in the home field I may say to a still greater extent; for the individual who has been out on the frontiers hard at work for Christ, has paid little attention to the conflicts that have arisen in the different places where he may have passed through, and if he has been a wise man, he has had his ears largely closed to a good many things that might be in the air and endeavoring to be spread abroad.

The patience of the workers has been quite sorely tried in places and at times, and I have heard, my brethren have heard, here at the center, more or less anxiety expressed in regard to the conduct of the leading officers of the church; and in places individuals have gone so far as to say that the leaders were acting directly contrary to the law of God. Whom they mean by this word "leaders" I do not know; but it appears that individual judgment has been passed upon these said leaders; either for a neglect of duty, or for a failure to do what these men have supposed the leaders should do. To us who are supposed to be among the leading men of the church it is very embarrassing to have these things said by individuals who have not the moral courage and the Christian fortitude to come to us and tell what those things are of which they complain; a thing that ought not to be named even in Gentile society, let alone Christian organizations.

You have heard me say in my services at times that if I could see mine enemy,—and I think I represent the general eldership in saying this,—know where he was located, and have a fair, open, square fight with him, I would be content to take the battle; and I emphasize that this morning. There is not a man among us but what would prefer to fight his enemy though it might be the arch-enemy of mankind, openly, than to fight him under cover. It is a good deal like the Boers, their treatment of their British opponents. They have tried to fight them unseen, and it has been disastrous to those men of valor arrayed against them. These men in red would have been content to have faced their enemy in the open field, but they were not prepared to meet an enemy unseen. We are more or less like these men.

Now I hope that whatever may have transpired abroad in the field in this regard may, for the time being of our assembling here, be forgotten, for this reason: It is irritating, and however much patience a man may have, he may sometimes think the limit is reached; that charity has ceased to be a virtue, and that it is time for, if not resentment, strong resistance. We are admonished to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints, but I do not know of any man in Christ that is authorized to contend over-harsh for his own views. I do not know of the man of so much importance in this world that he can afford to ride over anybody else for the establishment of his own opinions, his own views. I do not know of a man who ought to be so much in love with his own voice and his own opinions as to insist in forcing everybody else to the wall that may oppose him. I believe that the grandest character in Christ is the one that can suffer the most, that can be patient unto the uttermost end; and when I reflect that upon one occasion Jesus apparently lost his temper when he whipped the money changers out of the temple with a scourge; and that only one sixth part of the gospel is said to be of judgment, I feel humble in undertaking to judge my fellow men and force my opinions and my words upon them. Others, of course, must feel and act as they see proper under such circumstances.

There has been a good deal that has been very encouraging in the past. One thing that I have myself taken particular pleasure in, is this: that wherever our brethren have been under the necessity to defend the work, no matter against whom it might be, wherever the attack was made, they have been invariably supported by the good Spirit of the Lord; and so long as they have kept themselves within the province of their mission, they have been aided and strengthened. There may have been occasions where individuals may have forgotten for the time being the principles of true Christian warfare, and in thus forgetting, lost their bearings and have been discomfited. There may have been such a case now and then, but the great majority have been on the other side.

We are facing new conditions, in a sense; conditions, however, that some of us have long foreseen, and conditions which I believe the Lord has been striving by the ministration of his Spirit to individuals to prepare the church for. How far we may be prepared to avail ourselves of these new conditions, however far we may be removed from the bigotry and superstitions of the past and the legendary teachings of the church, and these various questions that arise from the consideration of theories, and doctrines, and authority, how far we may be removed from them in order to take in the larger scope that is open before us I am not at present prepared to state. I know what the opinions of some individuals are, because I have heard them express them, have heard them make statements in regard to these conditions, as if they had foreseen them and are now prepared to act upon them if opportunity offered; but I cannot tell how the general pulse of the whole ministerial field may beat in regard to the subject. I suppose that we shall be permitted during this meeting to discover something of this in our deliberations.

Personally, I have wrought as I thought I could. I am not prepared to say that I have done all I could. I am not prepared to say that what I have done has been done in the wisest manner, but the record of what it is is made. I must face it here and hereafter. But while I occupy a peculiar position, quite different from the great mass of the eldership, I sympathize with them. I do not know how far they may sympathize with me. You, all of you, know that so far as I am concerned, I have no place to lay down these weapons. There is for me no stopping place this side of the judgment seat. There can be for me no human excuse; except death and the disability imposed by the approaches of death. I must continue straight forward in the course that is appointed, that is before me, so far as I may comprehend it, until I die; while the rest of you, so far as I know, could shift the responsibility and take the consequences here and hereafter. You know I am only stating a truth, but it is an unfortunate truth in some respects, for the reason, while other men may sometimes excuse themselves for things as they occur, over which they may possibly have no possible power, I must take the consequences here and hereafter for a great many things that I neither control, nor see other men control when they could.

Now this morning while I feel some apprehension, I feel hopeful, and I do not find within myself a single wavering of resolution, either in regard to the work at large or the work of the conference. I expect to stay right here and do what I can, unless I am ousted for proper and just reasons, until the end of conference; and I am going to do the best I can to keep my temper in check, and I expect every other man to do the same thing.

One thing that has pained me in the past, and it pains me every time I think of it, is this: That when I know and hear men express themselves that they are or should be men of God,—and I have heard some men make use of this expression with a kind of

tremor at heart,—I question, Do they really mean what they say when they say that they consider themselves men of God; and would they as men of God do things that some men do? Would they? Would they, under the influences of the Spirit of the Master, do things that they see some men do? I very much question it. And when Mr. Sheldon, down at Topeka, Kansas, undertook to run a daily paper as Jesus would do it, I asked myself then the question, Does Mr. Sheldon know anything about how Jesus Christ would run a daily paper in a western city, the capital of a Western State, like the State of Kansas? I subscribed for the paper, as no doubt a great many of you did. I wanted to see how Jesus would do things. And when I saw the paper I saw reflected through it just this, that the paper was conducted as a man wearing Presbyterian spectacles saw how Jesus would do it. And I thought about the little paper up there called the Herald, into which there never has, to my knowledge, occurred the entrance of one of those flashy, trashy advertisements against which Mr. Sheldon raised his voice; and yet I thought about the Herald, that in its columns men had advocated different views, and these men had stated his thought in writing, and another man had controverted it, and each man make the statement—I suppose he intended to do—that he was doing it as he believed that Jesus would do it. And they have sometimes written at the top of their writings, "I am led to write by the Spirit, as I believe," and one man would write one view upon the topic, and another man another view. Well, would Jesus do that? I do not know. One thing is sure, that he paid tribute to the executors of the law, and in order to himself keep under the law, not violate it, he caused a miracle to be wrought when he paid his tribute of the money that was found in the fish's mouth. He said to the soldier, Be content with thy wages and do violence to the blood of no man. He said to the man that received the customs, Be content with thy dues. And so he went through the category of those that were engaged in human affairs, under human laws, and gave each class a proper degree of advice, but he never pretended to tell them that they should not do as the law required them to do as public servants.

I have been bombarded with questions as editor of the Herald, and as partially representing myself and the body, as to what the church had done in regard to this or that, whether the church had said this or that in regard to different classes of human conduct. Really, the church has spoken very little about human conduct, as a church. I may have my own views as to what would be right or wrong, what the articles of the church might permit and what they might not; but just as sure as I, as editor of the Herald, would answer some of those questions, it would come back to me as a whip used upon somebody's back to do them harm or injury, or force them into line; and "Bro. Joseph said this, Bro. Joseph read that; Bro. Joseph wrote this, Bro. Joseph wrote that." Well, did Bro. Joseph speak the sentiments of the entire body? I think it was about three years ago that the body turned Bro. Joseph down on one of the things that he had written, notwithstanding that he believed he was right, and Bro. Joseph had to submit to the voice of the people upon the proposition that the voice of the people was the voice of God. And if there is a class of people that can ever convene together in this world, and especially in these United States, whose voice is the voice of God, or should be, it is an assembly like this, among these people. You can see how these things affect. My own opinion in regard to many of the conditions in which these questions are asked is this: Jesus Christ intended the gospel to be a renovating power, to eliminate from human character the things that were not lovely, and to enable an individual to assimilate to himself all the characteristics of human character that are lovely; and provided for them the inward monitor of the Spirit, in order that each individual might not be at the mercy of the body disposed to make rigid rules, laws, and governments by which everybody must walk, until if we were to pursue it as it has been thought some of us ought to do, we would have a code of laws a great deal longer than we can find in Leviticus, and every man would have to carry a chart of human conduct and consult it every minute of his life, in order that he might not trespass against some teaching of the law. Then what is to become of that inward monitor which is to be unto every man given as God will to guide and govern him as an individual, upon the fact that an individual responsibility is what he shall answer for unto God, and not for the rule of conduct imposed upon him by the voice of his brethren.

I know that this conference does not know all the peculiar circumstances that surround my life, that have surrounded me in the past, those things that have been brought to bear upon me to bias my conduct or my opinion this way or that way. They have not the power to comprehend; do not know. Now as a consequence, if it is supposed that they are to make a long code of laws for my personal observance in personal conduct, they are going to remake the man. Well, I do not believe you brethren can do that, and I know some men in this congregation that are just as obstinate as I am, notwithstanding my brother once told his brethren he said, "You think Bro. Joseph is a nice, quiet-tempered man, but you will find that he is just as obstinate as I am." Granting there are two of us, I am only presenting it as an illustration. If this cannot be done with one individual, can it be done with another? And if it is to be made an exception in favor of one, must it not be made an exception in the favor of every other man? If not, are not personal rights invaded? Are not the office work and power of the Holy Spirit supposed to be in every man? Are they not relegated to the past, and we take our places under the moral code and work out our salvation under that law with fear and trembling? But if it is true, let us go back, and when we sin, let us take our dove or our lamb, our heifer or bullock, and go and place it on the altar and get absolution for our sins under the law. Let us do it.

I see things a great deal different from a good many people, and I know that a great many people see a great many things different from what I do, but please God, I am glad of it, and I will tell you the reason: We are placed under different conditions; we face the world under different organizations, mental and moral organizations. It is utterly impossible for each of us to see like every other man in the body; it is utterly impossible. God never intended it to be so. Why, you may say to me, Are we not admonished to be of one mind? Yes, but in regard to what? To speak the same things in regard to what? Those things upon which God has spoken specifically. That is where we should be all of one mind, but upon this great variety of topics that grow out of our organizations upon which the law of God is either absolutely silent or stated in such way that it is not specific and definite, there we are indebted to our various organizations for the final wisdom that shall crown our action, if we shall only be patient enough and honorable enough to give every man the same privilege that we demand for ourselves, the right of free speech without prejudice. Now this may be illustrated. I will bring it home to you. I do not want to do it in a spirit of unjust criticism, but some things that have transpired in the last six months have been pointing in this direction. You all know the result of the attempt to seat Mr. Roberts in the House of Representatives, without prejudice to the man in any sense, but with reference to the principles—it is like this: The question now comes up in regard to the teaching of President Brigham Young in the days that are past as recorded in the Journal of Discourses, himself and his coadjutors, known unto individuals who are listening to my voice, who absolutely heard them and have read them as they were published to the world. Now, one of the principal leading men who has charge of their journal says that President Young uttered those things, but his teachings were not to be taken as an essential unto man's salvation. Now who drove them to that statement? Two of their number, on being excluded from Denmark, if my memory serves me right, made the statement to the Minister of Justice that they are now instructed not to teach plural marriage or emigration, and that they have neither taught, nor do teach, plural marriage nor emigration. How does that comport with the teachings of the past by these same people? The principle lies here, they are facing new conditions, the same as we are, largely; they have come to know that they cannot build upon the teachings of President Young and establish the church, and they are now going before the world and presenting the epitome of 1842 and 1844. They are presenting the teachings of the Book of Covenants and presenting the book to the people, but they forget to tell them that the volume they are carrying is the volume published by them in 1876 from which the marriage law of 1835 and clear down to 1869, so far as the Book of Covenants is concerned, had been eliminated, and that they have introduced that other law, all based upon the teachings of President Brigham Young, all of them.

Now you can see that the principle applied in the one case is good as applied in the other. If applied upon the opposition, it comes back to us, and the reflex action of it is this: You as a body cannot be held by my teachings unless my teachings are in accordance with the word of God, proved to be so upon examination. Is that statement correct? So is it with each and every other individual. All stand alike upon this; and hence, as a body, we have no right, I have no right, you have no right, as individuals, to compromise the church, and to assert that such and such things are the voice of the church, or that they are the teachings of the law, unless the law is specific in its statements.

I have only made these statements to call attention to the application of the principle, that is all; that while we may, as individuals, assert a certain degree of independence of character, and it is necessary that we should, there is not expected of us that we shall so bring ourselves into such subjection in our different organizations that we all look through the same spectacles. I confess that so far as some questions are concerned, I'd like to have every man see as I do, but I had a great deal rather if he differed from me that he would honestly state his difference than that he would surrender his individuality simply because I said so—would think more of him—he would be a better man for the people, a man in whose hands the liberties of the people would be safer.

So as I look out upon the field I see a great variety of minds at work, and it sometimes has seemed to me that the class of minds that we have are peculiar in this respect. I do not know that I ought to say it in just that way, but that the conditions seem to be so ordered that when a representative of this work is called upon to defend it in a specific manner, he seems to have been peculiarly qualified, or peculiarly selected for that particularly spot, at that particular time, for that particular occasion. I have been glad of that. I know some of the men that have met opposition for the past two years that have done in the controversy thrust upon them infinitely better than I could have done under the same conditions—I say infinitely better—I believe it. While I would have made shift under such conditions to have done the best I could, their qualifications for that specific time and place were better than mine, as I understand it.

Now under all these conditions, I feel encouraged this morning, and hope, earnestly hope, that every official member of the body, every ex officio member, every delegate, every one entitled to voice, every one entitled to vote, will enter into the business of this conference with cheerfulness, with devotion, not to self, to preconceived ideas or notions, but to the benefit of the body, the whole work; and when we do that, we will have very little trouble—at least, it will be of that character that we can easily get along with it. But if any of you have brought hatchets here to grind, I am not going to help turn the grindstone, if I can help it. I have no axes to grind, and I have no tomahawks to be afraid of, that I know of, and I am not going to help anyone to sharpen a tomahawk to hit me with if I can help it—of course I am not. I may be brought into such a condition that I may be compelled to turn the grindstone. If I do, I will make the water fly over the one that is holding the ax. With what I have said I shall leave the matter with you and call upon somebody else to address you.

President Alexander H. Smith was the next speaker. He said:—

As Brother Joseph referred to me, perhaps I may express a thought relative to the principle that was being treated upon. He promised us to try to keep his temper. To me a man who has no temper and does not sometimes manifest it, is not of much force. The beautiful character is a man that has a temper and has it under control; and so far as obstinacy is concerned, individually, in my experience, I believe that the household of God as represented in the church, is filled with men that are obstinate. They are affirmative, largely. There are very few negatives among them, and the battle has been of that character that it has made them aggressive, forced them to be aggressive. They are aggressive men, and where you find an accumulation of men of this character, you may expect, once in a while, flashes of temper. The metal that is the best tempered does not bend easily, does not break easily, and when it is bent will come back to its proper shape again. There is a spring and an elasticity in it, and there ought to be elasticity in every representative in this latter-day work. There ought to be stiffness, firmness, and elasticity. I believe this is being made manifest.

I rejoice in the work, and my brother referred to some things that called to my mind one of the principal things that makes me rejoice in it, that makes me feel firm in it, the positions taken by the Reorganization and the representatives of the church of the present have been of that character that we have not had to go back on any of them. Our advance has been, as remarked by some, slow, seemingly, but it has been sure. We have not had to yield any ground where we have planted ourselves. We have planted ourselves in such shape that there is no power that has been brought against the church yet that has caused us to yield any ground that has been won. Now I like that. The work is of a character that will call out all that there is in a man; and it is in perfect keeping with the thought that God has expressed himself that he will have a proven people, a tried people.

We are not all organized alike. As has been expressed, what may be temptation to one man is no temptation to another man at all. What may be looked upon as a trial by one individual is borne in perfect patience by another. The temptations that come upon us are as different as our organizations. It is proper we should be thus; it is proper that we should be differently organized. And God has promised that he would temper his providences unto his people, and he will not call upon them to endure more than they can bear. If we are forced to bear and prove ourselves faithful, the greater will be our reward. I rejoice in this thought too.

I am conscious just at this present moment that the Latter Day Saints gathered here are anxious to hear something relative to the labor of the Patriarch. It seems to be pressed in upon my mind just now. Two years ago I announced to the church my willingness to move forward in the office and calling of Patriarch. I stated some things that I found in the way, asked some relief, and the question was propounded to me, "What will you do if nothing is done? If you receive no instructions, no further light, will you move forward in your work, anyway?" And I answered, "Yes; I will move forward and follow the direction of the Spirit and do the best I can, and leave the results in the hands of God."

I discovered in my work that it was necessary that I should have some one to take down the blessings. In consultation with President Smith there was one thought that was settled in our minds. I received several communications from abroad, from individuals, some of them sending means to defray expenses, requesting a patriarchal blessing, desiring that I should write out patriarchal blessings and send them. In consultation with President Smith, we agreed that this could hardly be in keeping with the law, and we concluded that the blessings should be given by the laying on of hands. That was what the best record that we had, relative to the work of the Patriarch seemed to signify, that this was the order.

The church provided no means for the procuring of a stenographer. The work required one. The party receiving the blessing wants a copy of that blessing, naturally. It is necessary they should have it. The Patriarch should have a copy, and it is incumbent upon him to record a copy of every blessing given, in writing, in the record book that belongs to the church; hence you will see that there is a work of this kind which is necessary to be done. As your Patriarch I was not able to hire this work done. I had to depend on volunteer labor. In the East, Sister Fisher, Sister Ruth Sheehy, and Mary Mortimer volunteered; and while on my eastern tour I was enabled to give numbers of blessings. Sister Belle James has volunteered her labor and services, and I have been enabled to give many blessings here in this section of the country and at Independence. Sister Rich also assisted and gave her help, and other sisters have given their help. Bro. Leon Gould in the North assisted me there, but this has been voluntary work, and I have been enabled during the past two years to bless quite a number of individuals.

I want to say to you that under the influence of the Spirit my heart has been made to rejoice and I have had the confirmation and the evidence from God of my calling to the position, and I have received evidences from those who have been blessed under my hands, which indicate that they have been blessed, and they rejoice in the work.

As the Patriarch of the church I discover that there is sufficient to keep me busy; and wherever I go I am expected to preach the gospel, and in the preaching of the word I have been wonderfully blessed in the past two years, and I rejoice in it.

It seems to me that the church just at the present time, notwithstanding there are clouds in the horizon, stands in a better position to receive and is calculated to receive greater blessings than she has ever received before. If I may judge of what I have seen and experienced, the ministry are just in a condition to receive an endowment, in a receptive mood, and they have need of this rich endowment of the Spirit. And the work opening, as I believe, God will bless it and bring us out of the shadows of the clouds that are in the horizon, and the church will be brighter, and better, and grander, and move along more rapidly than it ever has in the past. The Spirit is ready to bless and sanctify and help the ministry, and the word comes from the different parts of the world where there have been debates upon the principles of our faith has been universal that the Spirit has aided in the defense of the work. God is recognizing, is ruling and overruling. There are still to be revealed those things that will make more complete the representation of the church as representing the kingdom of God, and he stands ready when his people are ready to receive, and I believe that we are advancing along the line of preparation and readiness until it is near at hand when we shall receive the outpouring of his Spirit and the manifestations of greater power as the days pass and the time is approaching for the coming of the Son of God—near us, when we may see the evidence of God's power manifest more than ever before. One thing we should rejoice in, and that, perhaps, represents the organism of the individual, it is a work of antagonism, and we are forcing the world to recognize us. This church is forcing recognition from the Christian world and the world at large, and it is forcing it in such conditions that it redounds to the honor and glory of God. I rejoice in it.

Elder William H. Kelley, President of the Quorum of Twelve, then spoke:—

We have a great deal to rejoice us this morning. The weather is in our favor and we enjoy bodily health. It is a good time to sing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," after a separation of two years, to be privileged to meet under such favorable auspices to engage in our conference work.

This is the first time in the history of the church that we have been absent from each other so long in a conference capacity. It is a new experience, but we meet this morning in the faith; have passed through the trials of the two years of whatever character they may have been, and also good experienced. Both the good and the bad lie along life's pathway. The doctrine of God having a tried people is before us all the time, and the idea of a chosen people, and none of us expect to be chosen without there is some merit attaching to us. Merit indicates things brought to bear to lead one away from the attainment of merit, making true the statement that there needs to be an opposition in all things to develop human character to enable us to perform our work aright in the earth.

It would be too much this morning for one of us to undertake to go over our experience for the last two years, but our presence here indicates that we are in the faith; that notwithstanding the conflicts and the opposition to the various views and ideas that we have had to meet in the world, we meet again this morning in the faith, in the Latter Day Saint faith, in the faith of the angel message that came to the world in this age of the world to enlighten us, to give us a better conception of revealed truth, of religious truth in order to enable a people to occupy a platform religiously upon which they might stand and face the world, giving a reason for their hope, and defying opposition so far as criticism is concerned, and overthrow us so far as relates to argument.

There is where we occupy to-day, and by reason of the safety of that platform it has so inwrought itself into our conditions that we meet to-day strong in that faith, strong in a belief of that message that whatever may be our conflict here in this world, triumph will come to it in the earth.

I was impressed with the speech that was made by the President with reference to our peculiarities, charity, manhood, womanhood, the diversity that is found among us and the world. Evidently God intended it so. It gives us an opportunity to learn how to govern ourselves. It is a splendid thing to be self-governing. We all delight in liberty and freedom, but I do not know as we ought to be allowed it without we do learn something about self-government, and I think we can all take that home to ourselves, and perhaps each one needs a little disciplining in that regard.

But meeting here in conference I appreciate the caution given and shall try to be on my guard along with the rest of the brethren. I am a little extreme in my nature sometimes, but will try to keep cool, be deliberate, and act for the best.

I am in the faith this morning. I believe that this gospel is true and all of the prophecies and inspiration that have come to us in the past relative to it inspiring us on, will yet be fulfilled, will be attained by us or by some others, and that this work will win.

That was a true statement made by the brother that it is forcing itself upon the world and forcing recognition. It is really getting to be recognized now in many places, in places where we are best known, that the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints is thought of in a better light than it was a few years ago. That cloud, that odium that has been upon us in the past is moving away, and we have never stood better before the world nor before ourselves than we stand this morning, so far as any facts have impressed my mind, and I have the privilege to represent the Eastern Mission where I have bestowed most of my labors and the faith has never stood more fairly before the world. The Saints have never stood together as coworkers with themselves and with God better than they stand to-day.

It shows we are making some progress, we are gravitating into a greater unity, and we are comprehending more perfectly human rights and trying to become assimilated to act as one body to accomplish the work that is committed to us.

Elder F. G. Pitt, recently returned from the English mission, said:—

We certainly have much to be grateful for, and every reason to rejoice in meeting together under such favorable circumstances. It seems to me that never in my life have I enjoyed any experience as I have the last few weeks.

Two years ago when it began to dawn upon my mind that it was just possible that I should have a foreign mission, and that mission might be England, I felt to dread and to almost pray that God might deliver me from that mission. But when the question was asked, Could I go, I replied that I could, so far as I knew, and then all apprehension of evil left me, and not only did I feel willing, but really anxious to go. Quite a remarkable change came over my mind and I felt the spirit of that mission, and all the time I was there felt that I had not only been sent by the body, but that God had a hand in my being sent there.

I wish I could give a glowing account of my work and tell you how greatly we have prospered, but I cannot do that truthfully, and can only report that as I see the work it is only in a moderately good condition. The circumstances under which the missionary is called to labor in that land are quite different from what they are here, the opportunities for spreading the work are not what they are in this land. There are very few chances for schoolhouses and churches in which to occupy as you have them here. Our work in that land is mostly in cities and towns. Very little has been done in the country. Some of our people, I think I may say the most of them, are hard working people. We have difficulties to contend with there that you do not have here. But I think the greatest obstacle that has stood in our way has been the bad work wrought through the apostasy, in other words, Brighamism, and we have had difficulty in getting the ears of the people on account of our name. We found at last that we could only reach the people, that is, the majority there, by outdoor work. I was almost amused amused at the efforts that the brethren took to advertise me and its results. I remember one instance in London when I first went there. I think they got out no less than ten thousand handbills. I thought it was rather extreme and I began to figure how many we might expect out to our little meeting room in London. I figured if each handbill was properly distributed it ought to reach at least five people. If one half the people came that the handbills would reach, we might expect twenty-five thousand people, and I began to talk to the brethren about this, but they did not seem to manifest any alarm, and I found there was no cause for any, as I think not more than five individuals were called out on account of these numerous handbills. People promised to come. A house to house canvass was made, but no sooner do people learn that we are Latter Day Saints than it is sufficient excuse for them to stay away.

Not being successful in reaching the people indoors, we found that we would have to adopt some other methods. They would not come to us, and so, yielding to the invitation of the brethren there, I attempted outdoor preaching. I think I never had a bigger cross in my life than to undertake this kind of work, unless it was when I was first called upon to occupy the desk in preaching in the beginning of my ministry. But I attempted it, and I can say truthfully, that I have never enjoyed more liberty than in standing in the streets of London and other places to tell the people what this work was; and sometimes people would listen from one to two hours at a time, and after the preaching by myself and the local brethren, they would ask questions, and in this way the work has been advertised. How many will come in I do not know, but I have ceased to worry about people entering the church. My duty as I see it is to sow the seed, and leave the reaping to the higher power.

I have rejoiced exceedingly in the work there and have found many good people, both in and out of the church, and I believe that the work there ought to be prosecuted with a kind and a firm hand. There are many Saints who are watching us here and who are anxious to receive help from the people in this land. A few men over there have the idea that we cannot do much in the way of missionary labor, and because they have been heard, some people have the idea that the English people are opposed to American missionaries. This is a mistake. I think Bro. Newton, associated with me there, will bear me out in this, and I know of no more than four or five individuals who are in anywise opposed to American missionaries, and they are not as much so as some suppose, only they are afraid that you might swamp them, like the Brighamite church is said to swamp some of their people over there by the great army of missionaries and take away the rights of the local brethren. I think there is no danger of that, but where there is a little of this feeling on the part of some, there is a great anxiety on the part of others to receive help from this land.

There was one very pleasing feature of our work there that was encouraging. We found that when the servants of God worked, God worked with them; that they did not have to stand alone. In Cardiff we undertook a work in connection with the local brethren and the result was, that quite a number of those that belonged to the Utah Church joined in with us. They were quite opposed to us at first. We went around from house to house, showing them the truth, and some were almost fierce in their opposition toward us. But these very people began to have visions in the night; they came to our meetings, and they heard the voice of prophecy, and the gift of tongues. They asked their ministers, "What does this mean? You have been preaching to us that the gifts and blessings of the gospel were in the church. We never saw them in our church. How is it that these Josephites have the gift of prophecy and tongues?" and while their elders tried to explain these things away, it left its effect, and they began to ask the question, are we right or not?" and many of them have joined in with us and are developing in the latter-day work. This of itself is encouraging. Another thing: I found that we need not be afraid of giving the people all the truth. We simply have to throw it out among them and it will take care of itself. And you would be surprised to see people listening night after night outdoors, standing and waiting for us to come, and they did not go to sleep, either, as some people do in the house. They stood there and listened with the utmost attention.

We have some good workers there; they need encouragement. And those who are sent among them need to be kind; they need to be firm as well. You can hardly expect people over there, brought up under different circumstances and customs from what we are used to, to receive at once whatever new methods we may try to have them adopt, and for that reason those who go there have to carefully study the methods employed there, and the disposition of the people, and many other things.

Then, too, you are called upon to engage in such a variety of work. At one time you have to go among the people, visit their houses, talk to them about the work in a social way. Another time you are called to handle the outside influences. At Nantyglo I was met there with a fierce kind of opposition, and I had almost prided myself that God had so blessed me that I was able to bring about a good work without meeting serious opposition; but in that place I had to undergo something like that which Paul said he had to meet at one time when the people cried out, "Great is the goddess Diana of the Ephesians!" I faced the crowd two nights and the next night I felt when I was through that I would like to go home. I hardly knew whether to give it up or come again. "If you do preach," the brethren said, "you will be worse treated than before, because to-morrow is Saturday night and most of them will be under the influence of liquor and you will fare pretty hard." I tried it once more. I went there after three night's opposition, and then the opposition broke and I spoke under the influence of the divine Spirit, to me, it seemed, better than I had ever been able to speak before; and when I was through, a gentleman came forward and wished to make a few remarks. He proved to be one of the officials of the town, a lawyer, and he bore testimony to those people that what I had told them was true. "I do not know what denomination this man belongs to," he said, "but I know he has taught you the Bible and you can believe in what he has told you." They gathered around in little groups and came to the conclusion that they had treated me badly. So I won the victory. To God be all the praise.

These little incidents will show you what we have to contend with in that country. I rejoice in the work, and while it has not all been sunshine,—there has been some degree of trial,—but like the brother stated before me, we have always felt nearest to the Master when we have been able to suffer with him; and I have never felt more at home in my mission than when I have gone about among those poor people, some of them just out of the mines, and attempted to tell them the simple truth as it is in Christ. As I saw their black faces and their eyes shining with interest it seemed to me as if I was fulfilling in a limited degree a prophecy where the Lord says, "I will send among you hunters and fishers, and fishers, and they will hunt for you among the rocks where you have been driven." I felt that was part of my mission, and while it has not all been sunshine, yet the Lord has stood by me there and I have often felt the Saints were praying for me while I was under trial, and I needed none to tell me that I had an interest in your prayers. The more I see of this latter-day work the more convinced I am of its truth and its ultimate triumph.

May we be enabled to endure unto the end, is my prayer.

Elder G. R. Wells, late of Australia, was the next speaker. He said:—

Brother Pitt told you that the more he saw of this work, the more he was convinced of its final triumph. I believe the sweetest conception that it is possible for the human soul to contemplate is that the great ultimate to which we claim this latter-day movement is tending may and can be reached. It is that which helps us to sacrifice.

Our president this morning stated that we needed in our nature to be firm and elastic. I have found out after seven years of experience that I was too elastic in certain respects when I left here, and not enough in others; and also that if I had stayed there very much longer I would have got too rigid in some other fibers of my character. Therefore, I now feel that it was necessary that I should go; and necessary for the cause and myself that I should return. I believe I accomplished the little that divine wisdom contemplated when I was sent. I have told my brethren of the Twelve that I am now satisfied (I was not just after I landed there) with the wisdom that sent me to Australia, and therefore am willing to trust that same wisdom in the next appointment.

Brother Pitt's experience reminded me much of mine in Australia, which is populated from the home land where he was. I hope I do not need this morning to explain that it is like the United States in regard to source of population—only more English. They have their aboriginal tribes the same as we have here who are fast fading out under the baneful influences of civilization's whisky and other corrosive forces. The Anglo-Saxon race which threatens to capture this world has taken possession of that land, as it has here. We have an area then of within a few square miles the same as these United States, excepting Alaska. While you have seventy-three million people, they have only a little under four million, I believe. I consider that mission is the next best to the United States, because it is so similar in these respects. When I first went over there I learned that Bro. Burton had gone there with a good voice and had left it with a crippled voice, because of having to do this outdoor preaching that Bro. Pitt speaks of. We have heard of the marvelous success of the early Wesleyan movement in England, which was due to the fact that they left the stereotyped ecclesiastical methods and went out unto the people in the fields and parks. It was distinctively an open air movement—a feature that Methodism did not take out of England very far. Later, the Salvation Army took that method all over the world. It has compelled all other churches to break over the barriers between the church and the mass in this one respect, and other churches have been following the example of the Salvation Army. To the Army belongs the credit for having perpetuated this method.

When we went to Australia, we discovered that because of the mildness of the climate, the people nearly lived our of doors. It was just as hard to get people inside to listen in Australia—worse, I am certain than Bro. Pitt says it is in England. In England as also in the northern district of this country the people are compelled to go indoors three or four months of the time at any rate. Here they are accustomed to worshiping in schoolhouses. In my late mission, the schoolhouses are not available; they being under a more strict government control; no one can preach in them.

When we first went there our work in the cities had lately started; Elder Wight had just organized a small branch in the city of Sydney, in New South Wales, worshiping in cottages. Sydney is the commercial metropolis—the mother city of that island continent; and I am pleased as I stand here to say that I left Australia feeling in my heart that I had had a part in planting our work upon a firm and I trust lasting basis in this chief city—the landing and departing place of our missionaries. I have a photo of their new chapel with me. But when I first went there apprehension came unto my heart chiefly because of my voice. When I first began to preach in Southern Missouri the people would say to me, "Why don't you speak louder?" They couldn't hear me half across the room. I thought I spoke loud enough. When I left for that mission I had not voice enough to reach the back end of a room this size. The reason for this was that when I first started out I couldn't speak more than five or eight minutes, and my zeal made me think I must do something extra. I therefore sang too long and too loud. Down near Nevada, Missouri, on one occasion, when rain kept us from dispersing, and I then and there nearly ruined my voice. My vocal cords and my zeal were certainly too elastic, and the latter got badly stretched.

I went to Australia with a crippled voice—could not talk over thirty minutes without feeling a pain in the top of my head, and I said, "Is it possible that the Twelve has sent me over here to ruin my voice?" Elder Burton had come with good voice, had crippled it—the doctors said ruined it—and he left the mission in that condition. I came with a crippled voice—what would become of me? Soon after Elder Wight left, we made an unavailing effort in Sydney and New Castle, and Elder Kaler and I went up the coast awfully discouraged; it seemed impossible to accomplish anything in Sydney. The brethren would get a hall; probably one would come out to hear us. They would pay about a dollar and a quarter, perhaps three or four dollars for the hall for one night. Away up in what they called the "bush," in a little locality called the Nambucca, we met the brethren (after having been lost in the bush through mistaking the road and wandering or sleeping out all night, under the dews of heaven,) tired, hungry, and dirty, and we felt as though we had gotten into heaven. Here were the fruits of our predecessors' labors, and they received us with open arms. Here and at other places various brethren and sisters who had never seen us shook hands with us and said: "I have seen you in vision; I know you." A local elder by the name of Loving, at Nambucca, who could not know of the conditions of the work in all Australia, not being in touch with it; yet by the inspiration of God he said to the missionaries, "Your mission for awhile will be hard, and seem vain because of no returns for your labor and persecutions from outsiders; but a brighter time will come before you finish your mission, and you shall return rejoicing." I put that down in my diary at the time (May, '94), and it passed away from my mind; but coming over on the boat I got my diary out and began to go over the incidents of work, and there I came across this prophecy. I was surprised to note how my work could make me so busy that I forgot this. That prophecy was literally fulfilled, beyond our most sanguine expectation. A brighter time did come; but time will not allow me to detail it to you. I went into the work, like the average American, sixty miles an hour. That was a mistake, in a warm climate, which is hard on the liver at any speed, and I got down in physical powers.

In my outdoor work in park and on street I found that my clarinet was a wonderful help in reaching this people. They loved music, and could get large crowds to stop and listen to simple airs, and then I and others would speak. At first I felt it beneath my dignity to go out on the street and preach. That was my traditional education—the result of my environments in the United States. I was not responsible for it; but it was my business to conquer it for Christ's sake. I said "down tradition; up necessity!" and went out, as Bro. Wight used to say, feeling as though I had rather not. The knowledge that all denominations went out helped me a little. I banished that idea that everybody that preached on the streets was a fanatic, or crack-brained; and I went out and used my voice, at times, perhaps unwisely, because I never had the advantage of elocutionary training; I did not and do not yet know the proper methods of speaking or singing, but I do know in spite of all of this, and the noise of the streets, the dust that was everywhere present, and all of the harrowing circumstances that would come to distract attention and make the effort more difficult and dangerous to the voice, that my fears were never realized. I preached in the air even more than Bro. Burton did (because I was there longer, and we had better opportunities in the cities), and my voice got stronger every month and year that I was there. If there is anything I am thankful for, it is that my voice is now stronger than when I left seven years ago from conference in this place, when it was, as I consider, crippled. I have heard my brethren, Frank Sheehy and R. C. Evans speak, and others with strong voices, and I have admired their superior endowment of voice power, because I felt that strong thoughts and weighty arguments went better to the hearts of the people if they were carried with a strong voice. I have coveted a good voice, and when I realized that my ordinary voice was about to be ruined, I felt bad about it. God will pardon me for wanting a good voice, and I want to use it in defense of this truth, not so much in the defense of it, either, for I have found myself too aggressive at times, and that I too often had the battle ax in my hand, and not often enough the flag of love. I want to use it in defense when necessary, outdoors, indoors, privately, and publicly, to build up the kingdom of God, and plant in the hearts of lost humanity, the great ideas or promises that have stirred some of our brethren up lately and make them want to hasten it, and the agitation is going out among this people and oppressed of the whole world. The world needs our gospel. I am glad to be back among you.

President Joseph Smith then stated that unless objected to he would appoint the order of meetings, adjournments, speakers, assistants, etc.

The President named as ushers Brn. C. F. Church, Daniel Anderson, C. B. Bergersen, H. W. Smith, W. T. Ross, D. L. Morgan, W. W. Smith, George Beebe, Clement Malcor, and the selections were ratified by the assembly.

The order in which the assembly would be seated for the business sessions was announced by the chairman: The Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric on the platform; the High Priests and Elders upon the left; the Seventy immediately in front; the delegates upon the right; then the lesser priesthood, members, and visitors.

The order of meetings was also announced: Social meeting at nine a. m., to close in time to allow an intermission of fully twenty minutes; preaching service at 10:45 a m.; business session, two p. m.; preaching service, 7:30 p. m.

Announcements were made, No.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

199 in the Hymnal, "O thou God who hearest prayer," was sung, and President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

Regular business session convened at two p. m. "Awake, ye saints of God, awake," Hymnal No. 34, was sung, and prayer was offered by Bro. M. H. Forscutt.

Minutes of the morning session were approved as read.

Committee on credentials brought in its report. Corrections were offered, and the report was referred back for amendment.

Reports were read from the First Presidency; missionaries in charge William H. Kelley, James Caffall, J. H. Lake, J. R. Lambert, J. W. Wight, and M. M. Turpen; the Secretary of the Church. All reports will appear in full in the minutes, which will be issued in supplement form as heretofore.

Announcements were made, "This God is the God we adore," was sung, and Pres. A. H. Smith dismissed the assembly.

At the evening hour Pres. Wm. H. Kelley was the speaker, assisted by Pres. J. Smith.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7.

The weather continues to be all that could be desired.

The morning social service was in charge of Elders F. G. Pitt and J. D. White.

At 10:35 Elder H. L. Holt was the preacher, assisted by Elder Arthur Allen.

The business session convened promptly at two o'clock. "Hark, listen to the trumpeters," was sung, and prayer was offered by Elder E. A. Blakeslee.

The minutes of last session were corrected and approved.

Matters arising from the reports of missionaries in charge were referred to those making the reports.

An additional report of the credentials committee was adopted and the committee continued.

The Patriarch of the Church reported, as also missionaries in charge Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, Gomer T. Griffiths, I. N. White, and R. C. Evans.

The report of Bro. H. A. Stebbins, General Church Recorder, was read. The leading items are: Total membership, 43,824; baptisms, 2,522; received by letter and other evidence of membership, 1,375; deaths, 441; expulsions, 223; net gain, 1,866; ordinations, 248; marriages, 325. Net gains by States: Missouri 282, Iowa 241, Ontario 176, California 127, Michigan 117, Arkansas 115, etc. New branches, 31. The excellent assistance rendered by many branch and district clerks was mentioned. He also renewed his request for the appointment of an assistant with a view to the release of the present Recorder.

"In the light" was sung and the assembly thereby enlivened.

The report of the First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric on "the duties of a deacon," as published in HERALD of July 27, 1898, was read. Its adoption was moved, but action upon it was deferred.

The report of the Quorum of Twelve, including their action accepting the resignation of Bro. J. W. Gillen as a member of the Twelve, was received and adopted, including the resignation.

Preambles and resolution from the Board of Publication, recommending that Autumn Leaves be transferred to Zion's Religio-Literary Society, was read and its adoption moved. A substitute was offered providing that the management of Autumn Leaves be continued by the Board of Publication, and that the Executive Committees of Sunday school and Religio be consulted in the appointment of Leaves editor. Action upon the whole matter was deferred and made the special order for Monday afternoon.

The Southern and Northern Michigan districts petitioned for a change in boundary lines, and the Saints of Beardstown and Taylorville, Illinois, asked for the organization of a new district. Both were referred to a committee; viz., R. J. Parker, F. J. Ebeling, and E. A. Stedman.

An appeal of Bro. C. I. Potts from action of the Fall River, Massachusetts, branch, was referred to Brn. G. A. Smith, J. W. Brackenbury, and A. Barr, they to consider the matter and report to this conference.

The appeal of Belleville, Illinois, Saints from an action of St. Louis district was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

The Daughters of Zion, through its Advisory Committee, asked for the evening session of the following Tuesday in which to present a program explanatory of its object, which was granted.

Various items of business, subject to future action, were received and announcements were made.

After singing, "My times are in thy hand," the assembly adjourned, Bro. Joseph Smith pronouncing the benediction.

At 7:30 p. m. the audience was addressed by Elder R. C. Evans. He was assisted by President Joseph Smith.

SUNDAY APRIL 8.

The Sunday services were as follows: At the Saints' church, regular Sunday school service at 9:30 a. m.; prayer service at nine in charge of Brn. J. A. Robinson and J. H. Peters. Preaching at eleven o'clock by Pres. Joseph Smith assisted by Bro. Charles Derry. Prayer service at 2:30 in in charge Elders John Hawley, J. M. Baker, and John Shippy. Preaching at 7:30 p. m. by Elder J. W. Wight assisted by Brn. Joseph Smith and Joseph Luff.

Overflow meetings were held in the lower auditorium as follows: At eleven a. m., preaching by Bro. J. J. Cornish assisted by Bro. T. J. Sheldon; prayer service at 2:30 p. m., preaching at 7:30 by Bro. W. W. Blanchard, assisted by Bro. U. W. Greene. In the evening at the college at 7:30 preaching by Henry Sparling; at the Saints' Home at the same hour, preaching by Elder Thomas Hougas, of Illinois, assisted by Bro. M. J. Danielson. Eight were baptized and confirmed; seven by Elder A. M. Chase, one by Priest John Harp. A prayer service was also held by the young people at the Mite Society building at 2:30 p. m., Bro. Hubert Case in charge.

MONDAY, APRIL 9.

At 7:30 a. m. a young people's prayer meeting was held, Elders J. M. Baker and G. W. Robley in charge.

The morning social meeting at 9:30 was presided over by Elder W. A. McDowell.

At 10:45 Elder J. W. Gilbert preached, assisted by Bro. John Gilbert.

Promptly at two p. m. the chairman's gravel called the crowded house to order. The assembly sang, "I'm not ashamed to own my Lord," etc., and Elder E. L. Kelley offered prayer. The minutes were corrected and approved.

The question of the transfer of Autumn Leaves to the Religio Society, which had been made the special order for this hour, was taken up. The report of the Board of Publication, the motion to adopt, and the substitute were read. The substitute prevailed by a vote of 209 for, 85 against.

Report of a special committee appointed to confer with the brethren of the Church of Christ looking to a better understanding between the two bodies was read. By unanimous vote, the brethren of the Church of Christ were permitted to take part in the deliberations on this question. The report was corrected, received, and spread upon the minutes, subject to future action. In response to an invitation, Elders A. L. Hartley and George Frisbie, of the Church of Christ, addressed the assembly. Bro. Roderick May, as one of the committee of the Reorganized Church, reported his attendance at the conference of the Church of Christ, following which this resolution obtained:—

That this body indorse the appointment by the President of the committee to meet the

brethren of the Church of Christ at Independence, and that this report be spread upon the minutes, and the committee be continued.

The First Quorum of Seventy reported, recommending that Elders Francis C. Smith, John W. Adams, Arthur Allen, David R. Chambers, and James W. Morgan be ordained to the office of Seventy. It was voted that the report be adopted, the request granted, the ordinations provided for, and the names considered separately. They were so considered, and upon separate motions the first four named were accepted and their ordination ordered provided for, action on the last-named brother being deferred for the present.

The Second Quorum of Seventy recommended that Elders Richard B. Howlett, Benjamin St. John, Wellington D. Ellis, J. R. Beckley, Amos M. Chase, Adam J. Keck, A. E. Mortimer, J. D. Stead, Frank A. Russell, and Fred B. Blair be ordained to the office of Seventy. Brn. Richard Howlett and Benjamin St. John were separately indorsed and their ordination ordered provided for. Action upon the remaining names was deferred pending report of the Presidency.

The chairman announced Elder Heman C. Smith as the speaker of the evening, and Brn. G. R. Wells and F. M. Slover were appointed to look after an overflow meeting in the lower auditorium should it be necessary.

Appointments for Tuesday, the 10th: Brn. F. B. Blair and D. A. Anderson in charge of the young people's prayer meeting at 7:30 a. m.; Brn. J. C. Crabb and William Anderson to preside over the social service at 9:30; Bro. C. Scott the speaker at 10:45, assisted by Bro. A. M. Chase.

Other announcements were made, the Doxology was sung, and President Joseph Smith dismissed the assembly.

WE give letter from Bro. C. Derry and the clipping sent by him. We do not now recollect that we ever saw a denial of the loss of the ship President, though we have seen doubts expressed as to the Seer having made the prediction referred to. Mr. Foster states that the Seer did so predict in a letter written us from Loda, Illinois, February 14, 1874, published by us in HERALD for April 14, 1888:—

WOODBINE, Iowa, March 27.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH,

Dear Brother:—It is said, "All things come to them that wait," I suppose if they wait long enough. Years ago you published in the Herald an account of your father's journey to Washington, from the pen of Mr. R. D. Foster. I cannot now tell you the number of the Herald, you will have it undoubtedly. I have long thought of inquiring from some reliable newspaper, if such a ship as the "President" had ever set sail, or had ever returned to this land from England having on board one "George Chigston Cookman;" because in the article from Mr. Foster, Cookman is represented as opposing your father in Washington, Cookman being a popular clergyman there. It also said Joseph Smith prophesied of his voyage for England and the destruction of the vessel, the said paper stated the vessel was never heard of afterward, that is after its departure for England. This morning I find in the Ladies' Home Journal for April, 1900, pp. 13, 14, an article entitled "The Mysteries of the Century," and among the rest is the fate of the ship President, which part I clipped out and send to you, it may be useful.

Yours for truth,

C. DERRY.

NEVER HEARD FROM AFTER LEAVING PORT.

Sixty years ago Englishmen and Americans were rejoicing that steamers had succeeded in regularly crossing the Atlantic, that a voyage could be made in a fortnight, and that the first of the Cunarders, the side-wheeler "Britannia," had come into Boston after one of the quickest passages ever known. Steam, it was said, had conquered the terrors of the sea, and men who had gone to London, spent nearly a week in England, and come back, all within thirty-three days, were regarded as wonderful examples of the new celerity in trans-Atlantic travel. One of the vessels which had not long before been launched, and which the English-speaking world hailed with admiration as a steam leviathan, was the "President." The liners which now plow their way across the Atlantic in five days are not more impressive than this ship with her two hundred and sixty-eight feet in length, her sixty-four feet in width, and her twenty-three hundred and sixty tons' register was to the generation which welcomed her into the harbor of New York. The ship was less than a year old when, on March 10, 1841, she left her dock and steamed slowly down the bay, her figurehead, which was a bust of Washington after Canova, pointing proudly along the ocean route to England. In April reports began to come from Liverpool that the "President" was overdue, that nothing had been heard of her, and that great anxiety was rife. The only ray of light that was shed upon the mystery was that a Portuguese brig had sighted a large steamer moving slowly under sail, but she did not hail the brig, nor did she appear to be in a disabled state. Through the spring and far into the summer of 1841 there was agony of suspense in England and the United States. In this country the superstitious fancied strange omens in the coincidence that the first President of the United States who died in the White House — William Henry Harrison — had passed away at the time when the ship which bore the name of his office began to be missed.

Among the passengers were two men who, although they had little in common with each other, had been each an idol in his profession, and who had given delight to multitudes in the United States. One was an actor who for the first time had raised the portrayal of Irish character upon the stage to the level of an art, and whose rich sense of native humor even Dion Boucicault probably failed surpass in later years. Tyrone Power had been hailed in American theaters as the prince of comedians; he had made three tours of the country; he had written a book on his American impressions, and he was now returning to England at the height of popularity, still in middle age.

Even more striking was the personality of George Clugston Cookman, whose eloquence had spread his fame among American Methodists, and to whom even men of the world, like Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, listened admiringly. Indeed, he carried with him when he went on board the "President" the first dispatch which Webster as Secretary of State had written to England. The fate of these men, as well as of a son of the Duke of Devonshire, and a hundred other passengers on the ship, has never been known. Whether the steamer foundered in some tremendous storm, as was thought most likely, or was crushed and sunk by an iceberg, or was destroyed by fire, no man to this day has been able to tell.

THE University of Chicago is groaning under a fresh endowment from John D. Rockefeller and others of four millions of dollars. Graceland College is struggling for an existence, with now and then a donation of a few dollars from a willing but a poor people. Surely, this world loves its own. It will be long before the Saints will be given the dominion of the earth, financially.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The HERALD readers are indebted to Bro. F. E. Cochran, of the Herald Office force, for the report of the conventions and General Conference of 1900. The editors were too busy with other duties to report the present year's sessions, hence delegated the work to one of their assistants.

DEAD AND RISEN.

When I, by faith, my Lord behold
Upon Mount Calvary,
With dreadful awe my heart grows cold,
The fearful sight to see;
For thou, the Savior of mankind,
Is mocked and slain by man so blind.

Is this the Son of God, Most High?
Where, then, his mighty power?
Will not his Father hear his cry
In this, his darkest hour?
He dies, with none to help or save,
And lowly lies within the grave.

My highest hope has fallen low,
My faith is almost gone;
My soul, submerged in depths of woe,
Seems helpless now, alone.
For he whose life had been my own
Is lifeless now, beneath a stone.

But lo! the stone is rolled away,
The Savior rises now,
The radiant light of Hope's new day
Is beaming on his brow;
Ah, death but laid on him its hand
That he, for us, might break death's band.

Now hope arose as ne'er before,
With Christ ascend on high;
And, Faith, cling close to him, no more
To fear that thou shalt die,
And O, my soul, in him prepare,
That thou his resurrection share.

SHEFFIELD, England, March 5.

Editors Herald:—Whilst having a few moments to spare whilst at work in one of the great arsenals of the industrial world, I have been very forcibly struck with the great contrast of things with which I am at present surrounded; on the one hand there is the constant whirl of powerful and complicated machinery, turning out weapons of offense and defense at a rate that would appal the unobservant mind at their cost of production; and from observations made, the rate of production must of necessity be largely increased. On the other hand there are forces silently at work, (and as the mill of God grinds slowly) both day and night, that in the consummation of all things shall stay the mighty efforts of puny man, and cause them to see the futility of their efforts, in their endeavors to civilize the world.

These things of which I write fall into insignificance when the piercing light of the gospel is turned upon them, especially when we consider the saving and likewise the civilizing power of the gospel of Christ. I think St. Paul says truly in his epistle to Timothy that perilous times should come in the last days. How vivid are his portrayals of conditions that would then obtain. What power must his prophetic utterances have had with his colaborers and the church generally of that day could they have seen down the stream of time, and there beheld the mighty handiwork of God in the word spoken in their day and generation. There is one most striking feature in the Lord's work that has always been prominent wherever that work has been first inaugurated; namely, the gifts of the Spirit. In every instance it seems as though their very being has been permeated with that subtle influence, much to their edification. It is evident to my mind that our lives are far below the standard of Christian character; if not, why all this seeming apathy in the church? St. Paul did well to warn his brethren of that spiritual stupor which had overtaken some of the church in that day, and the same may be said of us. I often wonder whether we as servants of the Most High realize our position as stewards. I think not; for had we that perception and holy wisdom that characterized the life of Christ, I am led to think our walk and conversation would be the very beauty of holiness.

O, when shall we have that spiritual awakening to enable us to bring into activity all the latent forces of our nature? Not only could we rise higher on the plane of perfection ourselves, but could and should be the means of helping others to rise from their lost and fallen condition. I for one have been greatly blessed by the faithful ministrations of the missionaries lately returned to America; could there only be more such humble and faithful ministers as our worthy Bro. Pitt. I firmly believe great good would be the results of their labors.

By a perusal of the Church History we learn that the church in this country was established by the true and persistent efforts of men who were willing to sacrifice all that was dear to them for the cause of God and their fellowmen; and they in turn were glad that they had the opportunity of hearing and accepting the gospel that was able to make them wise unto salvation. If so then, why not now? Are there not yet many honest of heart who would gladly obey the truth could they but have it presented to them? I hope the coming conference will be led to appoint some for this English mission. I am desirous of seeing the work in this country grow and flourish as in days of yore.

The gathering and consecration question is a matter of interest to the brethren and sisters on this side of the Atlantic; but the greatest question to us should be, Are we ready for them? Then, dear Saints, may we live such lives as will merit for us the promises made by our Savior. I believe the time is drawing very near when, if we have been faithful we shall be called to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb. Ever praying for the success of God's work, I remain your brother in gospel bonds,

JOSEPH ARBER.

Editors Herald:—I wish to indorse what has gone before in the Herald in favor of Bro. A. Hawes' book on the Sabbath Question. It is a rare fund of information; not too voluminous, yet sufficiently so to enable the reader to grasp and understand the logic and arguments, making his position invulnerable. Fifteen cents, which will purchase the book, will prove a wise and profitable investment. To be had at the Herald Office, Lamoni. A Latter Day Saint library will be incomplete without it. Do you hear that?

ACORN RIDGE, Mo., March 25.

Editors Herald:—I have preached a few sermons at this place, sold two of the Book of Mormon, five Voices of Warning, one Saints' Harp, and baptized two precious souls into the kingdom of God. These brethren baptized are heads of families and are respected citizens of Stoddard County. There are about a half dozen Saints in this county, but they are in different localities. This is the place where Bro. Albert Haws preached some time since; he is well spoken of here, both by the Saints and others. W. T. Hill, who has just been baptized, was born in 1832, and had gone to Illinois three times to be baptized. His zeal in the work is manifested by his request that I order six of the Voice of Warning, that he may give them to his friends to read. May God bless him in his old age. I hope the missionaries will not forget this part of the field. It is quite a change to leave the Ozark mountains and come to this low country, but since my arrival here my health has been fair.

I do not expect to be at General Conference, but hope that wisdom will be used in the counsels of the church, that both those present and those absent may be greatly benefited by the work done. I think the church should fast and pray to that end.

BORN.

HINES.—To Ransom Hines and wife, a daughter. Blessed March 5, 1900, by Elder J. R. Sutton and named Ransa May.

MARRIED.

ANDERSON—GAYLORD.—In Lamoni, Iowa, at the home of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. Elijah B. Gaylord, Elder David A. Anderson, late of the Pacific Slope mission, and Sr. Roxanna E. Gaylord, were united in marriage. The ceremony was at five o'clock on Wednesday evening, April 4, 1900, Elder Henry A. Stebbins officiating. Bro. Anderson's purpose is to continue in the field of service for the Master, and Sister Roxanna faces the trial and sacrifice that has been bravely met by so many of her sex, that the word of God may be carried to the world. She will continue her work as a teacher in the Lamoni schools, in charge of the departments on the west side.

DIED.

ROBINSON.—At her home in Oregon, Wisconsin, March 8, 1900, Sr. Serena S., wife of Bro. J. B. Robinson. Born October 8, 1827, at Bristol, New York; baptized August 16, 1895. Funeral sermon in the M. E. church by Elder W. A. McDowell. She was a faithful and devoted Saint, and always made her home a home for the missionaries.

KEIR.—Bro. John S. Keir who has been ill for three months at the home of Albert Blakely, No. 773 Sixty-sixth Street, Englewood, Illinois, has passed into the bosom of sweet rest with his God, March 27, 1900, aged 70 years, 11 months, 4 days. His children were faithful in ministering to the wants of a beloved father. He told us many times his sickness was a blessing to us and a comfort to him. He leaves three sons, one sister, and many friends to mourn. His life has been faithfully spent in the cause of God. His burial took place at Braidwood, Illinois. There was no funeral service, as his request was for Bro. E. C. Briggs to preach a funeral sermon. Through misunderstanding of the time when the remains were to leave the house, Bro. Strange did not get there in time to offer parting words, but by request of the children Albert Blakely offer up prayer.

STITES.—Vincent Bradford Stites was born January 15, 1880; died March 23, 1900; his body was laid away to rest in Plainville, Indiana, cemetery. He leaves a father, mother, three sisters, and four brothers to mourn. He was always kind and obedient to his parents; those who knew him the most loved him the best. Funeral sermon by George Jenkins.

THOMAS.—At his home in Valley County, Nebraska, Isaac L. Thomas, after a lingering illness passed away February 22, 1900, aged 67 years and 11 months. Funeral sermon by Elder C. W. Prettyman.

MADDEN.—Bertha May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Madden, died March 11, aged 3 years and 6 months. Funeral sermon by Elder C. W. Prettyman.

NAAB.—Infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. John Naab, aged 6 weeks, died March 25, 1900. Funeral sermon by Elder C. W. Prettyman.

PICKERING.—Near Seiling, Dewey County, Oklahoma, March 25, 1900, Sr. Sarah A., wife of Elder W. P. Pickering. She was born in San Bernardino, California, March 21, 1858; married to W. P. Pickering, July 17, 1879; seven children were born to them, of whom three sons and two daughters survive her. Sr. Pickering was baptized July 31, 1876. She was a true Saint, and died strong in the faith of the latter-day work. Funeral sermon at the hall in Seiling, by Elder H. F. Durfey; a large and attentive congregation present.

Lamoni Sanitarium.

Believing that there should be a place where Saints and others who have not faith to be healed can be treated with "herbs and mild food" by "a friend" and where surgical and other means can be used if needed, I have decided to open a sanitarium at Lamoni, Iowa, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, also a surgical department where operations can be done with skill and modern appliances.

Special attention will be given to diseases of women, ruptures, piles, and tumors. In these disorders I have had large experience. Testimonials of cures sent on application.

Specialists from Chicago and St. Joseph will be consulted in difficult cases. Chronic diseases will be treated largely by baths, massage, and electricity.

I have practiced medicine and surgery for eighteen years. I have taken special courses in the above-named diseases at New York City, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis hospitals.

Temporary rooms have been engaged and patients can be received at any time. Consultations free. Write to me about your case.

SCIENCE AND PROVIDENCE.

Just as in the early ages of the Church Christianity found itself face to face with Hellenism, and found its energies and life crippled at every turn until through battle and partial compromise the issue was decided, so now, it is believed by many students of religion, Christianity must face Science and come to terms with it. So thinks Dr. D. S. Cairns, who writes in The Contemporary Review (March). "The position of Science," he remarks, "is incomparably stronger than the medley of philosophies and beliefs that early Christianity had to encounter. No educated man doubts the solidity and permanence of her contribution to human thought." In the light of the scientific conceptions of the present day, "Christianity seems an exotic," or, as Professor Hermann more bluntly put it, "in our modern world Christianity is an alien." Until this difference has been transcended, says Dr. Cairns, the aggressive force of Christianity will be crippled and hampered at every turn. One of the central problems in this contemplated concordat of Christianity and Science is the reconciliation of the Christian conception of the world, as a realm of Divine Providence, with the scientific conception of it as a Reign of Law:—

"We must recognize that at first sight the demonstration of the Reign of Law in nature seems to conflict with that view of the world which we derive from the Revelation which culminates in Christ. If we take a man who has been living purely in the world of scientific ideas and transport him into the world of thought of revealed religion, we can not wonder if he shows signs of surprise and of revolt. He has changed his 'psychological climate.' He has been living in a world of uniformities, of measured spaces and forces and times, a world of which the central principle seemed to be its own consistent action; and the world into which Revelation would bring him seems to be ruled by radically different principles. For, from start to finish, there can really be no doubt as to the teaching of Revelation. In the clearest and most memorable fashion it proclaims that God's providence controls in their own interest whatsoever happens to His children. If you try to take this faith out of the Old Testament, Hebrew religion becomes a mere ruin. Take the Psalmists: what can shake their conviction that the whole power of God is at the disposal of the solitary faithful Spirit, for protection, discipline, and salvation; what can match their magnificent confidence in God as the Shepherd, the Fortress, and the Refuge of the soul? All the histories in like manner are based on this theory of human life, and the gigantic spiritual achievement of Prophecy is undertaken and carried through in the strength of this faith. And when we come to the climax of Revelation we find this principle expressed with a clearness which cannot be increased. 'Be not anxious for the morrow,' said Jesus, 'for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.' Nor does any one of the Apostles ever dream of moving from this ancient standpoint.

"Some years ago the present writer remembers reading a letter relating to the death of a friend who had perished in the wreck of an ocean liner which had gone ashore on the Spanish coast. The writer of the letter, in referring to this friend, rightly, from the Christian point of view, laid stress on the fact that her death was the will of God, and was therefore best for her. A scientific writer, looking at the same event, might have viewed it as part of an immense context of phenomena. He would have taken the proximate causes—the strong shoreward current in the Bay of Biscay, the mists that at that season envelop sea and land, the deflection of the compass, perhaps, caused by the geological composition of the Finisterre Rocks, and so on. He would have shown that these again had their antecedents, climatic, geological, chemical, and so on, and these again their antecedents, reaching back through the ages. He would have shown further that these proximate causes must also have their consequents, and these again their consequents, and so forward throughout the future. He would have shown us, in short, a great system of things reaching onward from the primordial Fire-Mist to the ultimate Crack of Doom, and maintained that to alter any one part would be to alter the whole, and then would have turned on us triumphantly and asked us if we actually believed that all this vast process was set in motion to drown a particular person on a particular day for her own good. The difficulty certainly seems a serious one, and so long as we stand by the barely Positivist view of Science and the barely Individualistic view of Religion, it would seem to be insoluble so far as the intellect is concerned.

"But in stating these limitations we have already indicated the lines of a solution. It has become impossible for Science to remain at the purely positive standpoint; and Evangelical religion has in like manner outgrown the excessive Individualism which for a long time characterized it.

"Take first the drift in Science. The whole conception of Evolution is teleological. There is an interesting passage in Mr. Darwin's 'Life' in which this point is very clearly brought out by him in a letter to Prof. Asa Gray, thanking him for an article written in Nature, June 4, 1874. 'What you say about Teleology,' he writes, 'pleases me especially, and I do not think any one else has ever noticed the point. I have always said you were the man to hit the nail on on the head.' The passage referred to in Professor Gray's paper is thus given: 'Let us recognize Darwin's great service to Natural Science in bringing back to it Teleology, so that, instead of Morphology versus Teleology, we shall have Morphology wedded to Teleology.' In the same strain Professor Huxley wrote: 'Perhaps the most remarkable service which Mr. Darwin has rendered to the philosophy of Biology is the reconciliation of Morphology and Teleology, and the explanation of the facts of both which his views offer. The teleology which supposes that the eye, such as we see it in man or in one of the higher vertebrata, was made in the precise structure it exhibits, for the purpose of enabling the animal which possesses it to see, has undoubtedly received its death-blow.

Nevertheless, it is necessary to remember that there is a wider teleology, which is not touched by the doctrine of Evolution, but is actually based upon the fundamental proposition of Evolution' ('Darwiniana,' p. 110)."

The vital point, says Dr. Cairns, is that in dealing with the positive or physical standpoint and that of teleology or final causes, we are dealing with two worlds. The Hidden Purpose moves upward through the several strata of the inorganic and organic realms until the central interest of the divine comedy concentrates on the fortunes of human society, the last and highest result of time:—

"If this be so, if there is a real climax to the long history of nature, then it surely must needs be that no part of the long chain of process which leads to this consummation can be without meaning. Logical coherence compels us to suppose that the whole natural order is an immense system of final causes converging at last upon one supreme Telos [Final Cause], the 'one far-off Divine Event to which the whole creation moves.' It is toward this end that law must be working, the ocean currents flowing, the mists rising and falling, the strata being piled mountains high, and human life being lavished by land and sea. All roads of Nature at last converge upon some mother city of Man.

"But is this version of the Scientific Conception of the Reign of Law in radical antagonism with the Christian view of the world? If the argument hitherto has been a sound one, it is, on the contrary, in profound harmony with it. If it is true that Science has advanced from the positive to the Teleological standpoint, it is true also that the advance of Biblical Theology has carried religious thought beyond the narrower individualism in which it was bound, and has given it a vaster horizon and a larger hope. The Gospels also teach us that all God's individual providences converge upon a universal end, which is nothing else than the most perfect form of Society, a union of God and Humanity in the 'Kingdom of God.' "—Literary Digest, April 7, 1900.

METHODIST STUDENTS PROTEST.

Boston, Mass., Feb. 12.—The movement against the doctrines of Methodism as taught in the Boston University Theological School, which was formerly directed against Professor Hinckley G. Mitchell, alone, has culminated in an organized effort on the part of the disaffected students which may overthrow the whole school. Especially rabid attacks have just been made not only against the other leading professors, Dr. Borden P. Bourne and Dr. Henry C. Sheldon, but against the President of the university, Dr. William F. Warren.

This movement has taken the form of an appeal to the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church in a document containing scathing denunciations of the teachings of the school as being a departure from scriptural and Methodist standards.

The appeal starts in with the question, "Shall Methodism remain Wesleyan in type and evangelical?" and the action is backed up by several conferences in the West, among which are the Des Moines annual conference and the Oklahoma annual conference.

The direct appeal to the Bishops maintains that the teaching of Professor Mitchell embodies divergences from scriptural truth and Methodist doctrine, either by direct assertion of denial, or by a carefully insinuated skepticism that accomplishes practically the same result; and also that the other professors fraternize more or less with him in his destructive views.

They further claim that one of the gravest features of the whole situation is the extent to which Professor Mitchell's views have already permeated the church.—Ex.

THE JEWS.

The century which is now drawing to its close has been a most momentous one in the history of Judaism, for during this time it has been put severely to the test whether it contains within itself sufficient elements of universal religion to enable it to live under changed circumstances and under differing conditions. The history of Judaism is, of course, closely intertwined with the history of the Jews, yet, though so closely intertwined, it has often gone ahead for its own sake and disregarded or been in advance of the political conditions under which its votaries lived. It is a singular fact that many years before the political emancipation of the Jews commenced their religious emancipation was well under way, and the Jews were preparing themselves spiritually to enter the promised land of freedom and emancipation. While that political emancipation commenced only at the very end of the last century and took seventy or eighty years in which to work itself out, the movement within the Jewish Church is of a much earlier date.

That movement is connected in its inception with the name of Moses Mendelssohn (1720 to 1786), the sage of Dessau. It was he who by his intimate acquaintance not only with Jewish literature and Jewish history, but also with modern universal history and literature and with the new spirit that had already made itself felt in Europe, laid the first stones of the foundation upon which the inner Jewish movement was afterward built up. His translation of the Pentateuch and the Psalms into classical German in place of the mixed Judeo-German which the Jews in Germany and Poland almost universally used at that time, his philosophical works and his influence with Lessing, brought a new spirit into the great Jewish matters which up till then had been in a state of almost complete stagnation, as a result of their warped life during the Middle Ages. It is true that he and his friends were far in advance of their times. The Jewish salons in Berlin, Koenigsberg and Vienna, which were the direct outcome of the efforts at mental emancipation made by Mendelssohn and his friends, became in later times the hotbeds of apostasy. The break was too severe a one for those who made it to retain that love and respect for their ancestral faith which was necessary to preserve them against the allurements and blandishments of modern culture. Nearly all the descendants of these first reformers found their way into the Christian Church. Yet, despite this fact, the seed which Mendelssohn and his followers had sown fructified also on purely Jewish ground and prepared the revival in Jewish letters and the change in Jewish religious observances which came in Germany during the middle of this century.

The political emancipation of the Jews is due in a large measure to the initiative of France. What Montesquieu and Voltaire had done in preparing the mind of the French people, Mirabeau and Abbe Gregoire carried out in actual fact. The French National Assembly in 1781 granted the Jews of France complete emancipation. In Austria it was done before this, under the liberal regime of Joseph II. The action of the French National Assembly, which was completed by the Synhedrin called by Napoleon I. in 1806, served as an example, which was gradually followed in all the more enlightened states of Europe. Step by step political emancipation made its way, until by 1870 it may be stated to have reached its highest point.

The introduction of the Jews into modern literature and modern scientific investigation prepared the way for the application of these modern methods to the history and literature of the Jews' past.

There is no doubt that the Zionist movement is the answer of the Jews to the attempt of the Anti-Semites to retard their progress and to poison the minds of the people among whom they sojourn, nor can there be any doubt that the great question which now lies before the Jews of the whole world is to be found in Zionism.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

MONDAY, APRIL 9.

Elder Heman C. Smith was the speaker at the evening hour, assisted by Elder A. M. Chase.

TUESDAY, APRIL 10.

Elders F. B. Blair and D. A. Anderson were in charge of the young people's prayer meeting at 7:30 a. m.

The social service at 9:30 a. m. was presided over by Elders J. C. Crabb and William Anderson.

At 10:45 Elder C. Scott addressed the Saints. He was assisted by Elder A. M. Chase.

The business session met as usual at two o'clock, President Joseph Smith presiding. "O thou God, who hearest prayer," was sung, and the President offered prayer. The minutes were approved as read.

An additional report of the credentials committee was received and spread upon the minutes.

The committee on petition from Beardstown and Taylorville, Illinois, Saints, reported, recommending that Morgan and Scott counties be taken from the territory of St. Louis district; Adams, Brown, Pike, and Schuyler from Nauvoo district; Christian, Coles, Douglass, Edgar, Macon, Moultrie, and Shelby from the Southeastern Illinois district, and that the above-named counties, together with Cass, Champion, Dewitt, Logan, Mason, Menard, Platt, Sangamon, and Vermillion counties, be made into a new district, to be known as the Central Illinois district. The report was adopted.

Report of the committee appointed to audit the Bishop's books was received and spread upon the minutes. Brn. E. L. Kelley, F. M. Weld, Heman C. Smith, and Robert Winning made statements regarding it, after which, action upon it was made the special order for the afternoon of Thursday, the 12th.

President Joseph Smith named High Priests J. M. Baker, George M. Scott, and Richard Bullard to fill vacancies pro tem. in the High Council, and the choice was approved by the assembly.

Request for the organization of a quorum of deacons was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

Various meetings, etc., were announced, "This God is the God we adore," was sung, and the assembly was dismissed by Elder E. A. Blakeslee.

The Daughters of Zion presented a program at 7:30 p. m. in the upper auditorium. The main features consisted of papers on the following subjects: Opening address, Mrs. M. Walker. "How may we prepare our children to resist the evils of the world?" Mrs. Anna Salyards. "Enlightened Motherhood," Mrs. Audentia Anderson. "Untruthfulness," Mrs. B. C. Smith. "Responsibility of motherhood," Mrs. Eveline Burgess. "Child training," Mrs. C. B. Stebbins. "How to increase love for the sanctuary of home," Mrs. Frances Davis. These were interspersed with a recitation and musical numbers.

At the same hour an overflow meeting was held in the lower auditorium, Elder T. W. Chatburn addressing the audience. He was assisted by Bro. J. D. White.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11.

The fine weather continued until Sunday night. Monday and Tuesday the sky was overcast and a chill wind blew from the east, and this morning a light scurry of snow fell.

At 7:30 a. m. Brn. D. A. Anderson and J. D. White were in charge of the young people's social service.

The nine o'clock prayer meeting was presided over by Brn. George A. Smith and F. C. Warnky.

At 10:45 Elder T. W. Williams was the speaker, assisted by Elder M. H. Forscutt.

Business session convened at the usual hour, President E. L. Kelley in the chair. "O reapers of life's harvest," was sung, and Elder H. O. Smith offered prayer. The minutes were read, corrected, and approved.

A motion that Brn. L. R. Devore, Hubert and Oscar Case, and Sr. Alice Case be appointed by the conference to represent the South Sea Islands mission was lost.

Report of the Board of Publication was read. It was followed by an inventory and financial statement of the Business Manager of Herald Office, the summary of which was read. Both were spread upon the minutes subject to future action.

The Board of Trustees, the Treasurer, and the Board of Directors, all serving Graceland College interests, reported. The reports were received and spread on the record, subject to action. The chairman announced that when action was taken on the latter, the proposed amendment to Articles of Incorporation of Graceland College would also be considered.

The committee appointed to consider the petition from Michigan districts for a change of boundary line reported, recommending that Oceana, Newaygo, and Mecosta Counties be taken from Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district and added to Northern Michigan district. It appearing from the report that both districts desired it, the change was ordered.

The voting list of ex officio members present was read and perfected.

The Third Quorum of Elders presented a partial report of labor done: Forty-three elders had reported 3,246 sermons, 1,000 other meetings, 134 baptisms, 146 confirmations, 1,799 administrations to the sick, 96 children blessed, 19 marriages, and 10 ordinations. The quorum, having lost its president by death, Bro. Walter M. Self had been selected president, Brn. John Hawley and O. P. Sutherland counselors. The report was spread upon the record and ordination of the president understood as being referred to the Twelve. The chair in answer to a question, stated that the counselors selected being the same ones who had been ordained as counselors to the deceased president, their reordination was unnecessary.

The Historian of the Church and his assistant presented their report. Questions were asked and answered, and the Historian was given permission to add items to the report, and it was ordered spread upon the record as it should be amended. A motion obtained that "this conference request each of the several quorums and all other departments to prepare a record of their work for the Church Historian for each year's report."

A petition was read from the St. Joseph branch asking General Conference to authorize the Presidency and Bishopric to take such measures, harmonizing with the laws of the church, as, from the contributions of the St. Joseph Saints, would provide for the payment of the debt upon their chapel of about five thousand dollars, and at the same time provide for branch expenses and the poor and needy. The request was granted.

A petition from the Fanning, Kansas, branch was referred to Brn. M. M. Turpen, T. W. Williams, and T. W. Chatburn.

A request that Bro. Joseph F. Burton be appointed to Nova Scotia was referred to the Quorum of Twelve. A motion that all future petitions of the same kind be so referred without reading was lost.

The Galland's Grove district petitioned that the Hymnal be enlarged, and the request was referred to Brn. F. G. Pitt, A. H. Parsons, and J. W. Gilbert.

A petition from the Independence district asking the establishment of a mission in Kansas City with headquarters in the State of Missouri was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

Announcements were made, the Doxology was sung, and President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

At the usual evening hour Elder J. H. Lake addressed the conference, assisted by Elder I. N. White.

THURSDAY, APRIL 12.

The early morning prayer meeting for the young people was presided over by Elders J. D. White and D. A. Anderson. One of the brethren in charge reported that during this session twenty-three testimonies and two songs were heard in thirty-two minutes.

The nine o'clock prayer and testimony meeting was in charge of Elders Charles Albertson and Holmes J. Davison.

At 10:45 Elder F. C. Keck preached the discourse, assisted by Brn. J. T. Riley and Noah Karahoo.

At two p. m. business session convened, President Joseph Smith presiding. The assembly sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord," and Elder M. H. Forscutt offered the opening prayer. Minutes of former sessions were approved.

Statements were heard from Brn. F. M. Weld, J. A. Gunsolley, and E. L. Kelley regarding the auditing committee's report on the Bishop's accounts, following which, Brn. E. A. Blakeslee, Robert Winning, and F. M. Weld were constituted a committee to draft a document looking to the settlement of the question before the body, and requested to report at four o'clock.

Committee on Hymnal enlargement reported that from 125 to 150 tunes could be electrotyped at a probable cost of $225, and that these could be added to the present Hymnal, making an edition that could be sold for seventy-five cents, probably less. They therefore recommended that conference provide for the addition of 150 to 200 tunes to the Hymnal, arranged the same as in the present work, index rearranged to suit. The report was laid on the table.

The Patriarch's report was taken up and its recommendations read. After some discussion, further consideration was deferred.

Third Quorum of Priests reported that the offices of first and second counselor to its president had been made vacant by ordination, and that they had chosen Brn. John Jervis and J. W. Layton to fill the vacancies, requesting that the ordination of Bro. Jervis be provided for at an early date. The request was granted.

Fourth Quorum of Priests asked that the ordination of Bro. William H. Murphy as its president be provided for, which was granted. The report also showed that the quorum has 48 members, and that 40 priests had preached 962 sermons, baptized 24, administered the sacrament 276 times, presided in 452 prayer services, presided over 704 preaching services, made 450 official visits, and solemnized 15 marriages.

The chairman then announced that the ordinations already ordered would be attended to, in charge of the President of Twelve, who selected Apostles Lake, Griffiths, Wight, and Evans to officiate. The assembly then sang No. 199 from the Hymnal, "O thou God who hearest prayer," and remained standing while President Joseph Smith offered a prayer appropriate to the occasion. Elders John W. Adams, David R. Chambers, and Arthur Allen were ordained by the laying on of hands to the office of Seventy by Brn. G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Wight; Bro. Walter M. Self was ordained President of the Third Quorum of Elders, Bro. William H. Murphy President of Fourth Quorum of Priests, and Bro. John Jervis counselor to the President of Third Quorum of Priests.

A petition asking conference to more clearly define the duties of branch officers towards dilatory members was referred to the Presidency with the request that they express their opinion regarding it before close of conference.

Denver, Colorado, Saints presented a petition asking that the next General Conference be held there. The paper was filed, with the understanding that when the matter of adjournment should come up, Denver would be considered.

The report of joint committee on "the duties of a deacon," as published in HERALD of July 27, 1898, was taken up and its adoption moved. An amendment was duly moved, but denied, and the original report was adopted.

At the appointed hour Brn. Blakeslee, Winning, and Weld brought in their report. It was received and spread upon the minutes. Action upon it was deferred until Friday afternoon at three o'clock, and it was ordered that the report be printed and placed in the hands of delegates and ex officio members.

Proposed amendment to Articles of Incorporation, Graceland College, was read. It was moved that the resignations of the members of the Boards of Trustees and Directors be accepted and that the proposed amendment be adopted. By motion, further action was deferred until the report of the college Treasurer was considered.

Formal announcements were made, and adjournment was taken. No. 268 from the Hymnal was sung, and Pres. A. H. Smith dismissed the assembly.

Bro. G. W. Robley was the speaker at the evening service. He was assisted by Bro. C. E. Willey. Preaching at the Saints' Home at the same hour by Bro. J. J. Cornish, assisted by Bro. Roderick May.

FRIDAY, APRIL 13.

The day dawned clear and bright, and the air was just cool enough to be bracing and healthful.

The social service in the upper assembly room at nine a. m. was in charge of Brn. D. J. Powell and J. C. Elvert.

At the same hour a prayer meeting for the young people was held in the lower meeting room, led by Brn. J. B. Wildermuth and A. J. Keck.

At 10:45, preaching by Bro. J. M. Baggerly, assisted by Bro. M. H. Bond.

Business session convened promptly at the usual hour. After singing, "The Lord Jehovah reigns," Bro. John Hawley offered prayer. The minutes were approved.

Bro. J. W. Wight presented an additional report of the Rocky Mountain mission.

The Second Quorum of Teachers reported the offices of President and counselors vacant, asking that the ordination of Bro. G. W. Blair as President and Brn. A. K. Anderson and N. W. Smith as counselors be provided for, which was granted.

The Second Quorum of Elders reported 6 sessions held, 18 members present. An aggregate of reports showed: Sermons 5,220, baptisms 330, confirmations 500, ordinations 62, children blessed 361, administrations 4,248, marriages 105, etc.

Auditors' report on accounts of Herald Publishing House was read and adopted.

At three o'clock the matter made the special order for the hour was taken up, the printed report of the committee was read, and its adoption was moved. A substitute was moved and seconded, following which a motion obtained to defer consideration of the subject matter before the body until Saturday afternoon of the 14th, and that the substitute be printed and placed in the hands of members of the conference.

A petition from the Maysville and Fairland branches of Spring River district was referred to Brn. I. N. White, Ellis Short, and A. J. Moore.

The day was warm and the audience weary, hence as a means of refreshment the audience arose and sang, "This world will be blessed by and by."

The report of Treasurer of Graceland College was read and referred to an auditing committee composed of Brn. Robert Winning, W. N. Robinson, and A. J. Keck.

Items from the Presidency's report; viz., request for an assistant, office fixtures, typewriter, etc., were taken up, and a motion that the request be granted was unanimously carried.

That part of the Patriarch's report requesting the employment of a stenographer and purchase of a typewriter was taken up. A motion to grant the request was considered at length, and obtained by a vote of 142 to 99.

It was then moved "that it be declared the sense of this body that such stenographer be placed on a ministerial basis." The motion was carried.

Announcements were made, No. 1080 from the Harp was sung, and Bishop E. L. Kelley pronounced the benediction.

The evening service was in charge of Bro. T. C. Kelley. The speaker, Bro. R. Etzenhouser, lectured upon the main topic of the Book of Mormon. The lecturer, who had visited the place on October 19, 1899, gave a graphic description of the Hill Cumorah, which was illustrated by a large panorama of the hill painted by Bro. Victor Kress of Independence, Missouri.

SATURDAY, APRIL 14.

The regular morning prayer service was in charge of Brn. J. M. Terry and James Moler. The young people's prayer meeting at the same hour was led by Brn. A. B. Phillips and Richard Baldwin.

The speaker at 10:45 was Bro. M. H. Forscutt, assisted by Bro. J. M. Terry.

The business session was opened by singing, "Glorious things are sung of Zion," and Bro. R. May offered prayer. The minutes were corrected and approved.

At this juncture Bro. Joseph Luff rose to a question of privilege, and briefly alluding to the Hill Cumorah, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and the recent visit of the speaker of the night before to this historic landmark, in a nicely-worded and feelingly-delivered speech, on behalf of Bro. R. Etzenhouser, Bro. O. H. Riggs and wife, and Bro. and Sr. Yingling, presented President Joseph Smith and Patriarch Alexander H. Smith each with a cane made from timber which grew on the ancient hill.

The President and Patriarch both responded in a feeling manner, recounting briefly their experiences in the work of the church, a noteworthy statement made by both being, that in the very beginning of their church work, they had resolved to so live that no man, judging by their deeds, could say that their father was a bad man. In accepting the souvenirs, thanks were tendered the donors for the tokens of esteem.

The chairman then said that it seemed an opportune time to sing No. 741, and the audience arose and all joined in singing with much spirit,

Book of Mormon, hid for ages,
On Cumorah's lonely hill.

When the audience was again seated, it was resolved and unanimously carried, that the conference tender a vote of thanks to those who had so kindly presented the canes to the President and Patriarch.

The report of the committee appointed to draft resolutions designed to effect a settlement of questions growing out of the Bishop's accounts, together with the substitute therefor, having been made the special order of the day, were taken up. The general question was discussed. A substitute for the substitute was then moved, seconded, and entertained, which was also discussed. Being voted upon, the substitute to the substitute was adopted by a vote of 265 to 34.

A motion that the auditing committee's report, the statement of the expert committee, the Bishop's statement and that of the committee of the Twelve, together with the statement of Miss Leland, be not published, was laid on the table by a vote of 178 to 71.

The auditing committee provided for in the substitute to the substitute was then considered. From the many nominations made, Brn. F. M. Weld, R. M. Elvin, and M. F. Gowell were selected and their choice made unanimous. It was also moved and carried that the one receiving the next highest number of votes (Bro. J. A. Gunsolley) be chosen in case any special providence should prevent any of the committee from acting.

A resolution that the Bishop be instructed to have his books prepared for the auditing committee on or before August 1 was denied by a vote of 154 to 136.

A petition for the organization of a quorum of teachers was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

The question of place and date of holding next conference was then considered. A motion to act upon place and date separately, obtained. The following named locations were placed in nomination: Independence, Denver, Kirtland, London (Canada), Oklahoma City, Richmond (Virginia), Boston, Chicago, and Lamoni. Independence receiving 217 votes, all others 90, it was declared to be the place of next meeting and its choice made unanimous.

It was resolved that the date of next meeting be April 6, 1901. An amendment to strike out 1901 and insert instead 1902 was lost. The original motion to meet on April 6, 1901, was then carried by a large majority.

Auditing committee on accounts of Treasurer of Graceland reported. The report was received and spread on the minutes subject to further action.

Requests coming from the Twelve, Seventy, High Priests, and Elders therefor, it was unanimously ordered that Sunday, April 15, be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer that God would give light on the important questions before the church.

Usual and incidental announcements were made, "My times are in thy hand," was sung, and President Joseph Smith dismissed the assembly.

The speaker at the evening hour was Bro. F. A. Russell, with Bro. R. M. Maloney assisting.

SUNDAY, APRIL 15.

The morning prayer service was led by Brn. Charles Derry and M. H. Forscutt.

Regular session of the Lamoni Sunday school was held in the lower auditorium at 9:30 a. m. in charge of Bro. G. W. Blair.

The speaker at eleven o'clock was Bro. Joseph Luff, assisted by Bro. A. H. Smith. Bro. M. H. Bond addressed the overflow meeting, Bro. W. H. Kephart assisting.

The services at 2:30 p. m., were devoted to prayer and testimony, in charge of Brn. J. H. Lake and F. G. Pitt. The upper room would not accommodate all the people that gathered, and an overflow social service was held in the room below led by Brn. G. H. Hilliard and J. A. Robinson.

At 7:30 p. m. Bro. G. T. Griffiths addressed the assembly, Bro. W. H. Garrett in charge of the service. The speaker lectured on the subject of the priesthood, and the effort was illustrated with a large and well-executed chart hung on the wall back of the pulpit. At the same hour Bro. A. H. Parsons preached at the Saints' Home.

During the day five were baptized, four of whom were confirmed during the prayer service in the lower meeting room.

MONDAY, APRIL 16.

Last night the clouds hung low and a warm rain fell nearly all night. In the morning, when the clouds cleared away, the earth looked refreshed.

The regular nine o'clock prayer service was presided over by Brn. R. Bullard and J. W. Waldsmith.

At 10:45 a. m. Bishop G. H. Hilliard addressed the conference. He was assisted by Bro. R. M. Elvin.

The business session was presided over by President Alexander H. Smith. The assembly sang, "Blest be thou, O God of Israel," and Bro. R. C. Evans offered the opening invocation. The minutes were accepted.

Report of Treasurer of Graceland College was read, together with report of auditing committee upon it. The latter was adopted.

The request of the Church Recorder for an assistant, with a view to his being chosen to fill the position permanently, was read. Motion was made that the request be granted. A question called forth the information that some two or three years ago a similar request was made and that the matter had been placed in charge of the President and Bishop, they to appoint when a suitable person was available. The request was therefore referred to them.

The report of Bro. F. G. Pitt, in charge of the European mission, was read. Bro. William Newton also reported.

A motion carried to take up all matters pertaining to Graceland College. Following this, upon separate motions, the resignations of the Board of Directors and Board of Trustees were accepted, said resignations to take effect when their successors were elected and qualified.

The proposed amendment to Articles of Incorporation was read, as published in the HERALD of February 7, 1900, and its adoption moved. Brn. E. L. Kelley, J. H. Hansen, and C. R. Duncan were appointed a committee to compare the Articles of Incorporation and the amendment, make the changes required, and report to the body.

While the committee was conferring, a resolution that at expiration of present term, the college be closed until the debt upon it is paid, was laid on the table subject to call.

The committee on petition from Maysville and Fairland branches, Spring River district, reported, recommending that the thirty-sixth parallel, north latitude, be the south boundary line of Spring River district, in both Indian Territory and Arkansas, and that this be the north line of the Southwestern mission. The recommendation was adopted.

The committee on amendment to Graceland Articles of Incorporation returned and reported that they had compared the items and indicated the required changes in pencil. Upon motion, reading of the Articles was waived. The amendment was adopted, followed by the adoption of the Articles of Incorporation as a whole as amended.

After voting that no delegate be allowed to nominate more than one person, the conference proceeded to nominate members to compose the Board of Trustees of Graceland College. The following named were placed in nomination: William Anderson, Ellis Short (declined), E. A. Blakeslee (declined), R. M. Elvin, G. H. Hilliard (declined), W. R. Pickering (declined), F. G. Pitt (declined), E. L. Kelley, R. S. Salyards (declined), Duncan Campbell (declined), G. W. Blair (declined), F. M. Sheehy (declined), O. H. Riggs (declined), J. L. Goodrich (declined), J. H. Hansen, Heman C. Smith (declined), I. W. Allender, W. A. Hopkins, J. A. Robinson (declined), Joseph Smith, J. R. Lambert (declined), Daniel Anderson, F. E. Cochran (declined), D. F. Lambert (declined), J. W. Wight, Alice E. Cobb (declined), R. May (declined), F. M. Weld (declined), and J. A. Gunsolley. At this juncture it was voted to adjourn business till Tuesday, the 17th, at two p. m.

The chairman then made the following appointments: Tuesday morning prayer meeting, Brn. S. F. Cushman and J. C. Elvert in charge; Bro. F. M. Cooper to address the conference at 10:45, assisted by Bro. John Shields. Various announcements were made, and after singing, "This God is the God we adore," the assembly was dismissed, Pres. A. H. Smith pronouncing the benediction.

At the evening hour Bro. A. C. Barmore addressed the conference, assisted by Bro. H. N. Hansen.

The day was warm and bright, but towards evening intermittent showers fell. Under the influence of the warm sun and showers, the grass is springing, the buds are swelling, the birds singing, and all nature seems to rejoice. Notwithstanding the dampening elements, the Saints are cheerful and earnest, and the ultimate triumph of the cause appears to be the inspiring thought that moves the great majority, that cheers through every dark and trying hour.

THE Royal Academy of Sciences of Amsterdam has paid a delicate compliment to the English-speaking world by ordering that its transactions shall in future be printed in English, instead of the native Dutch, in order that they may be more available to the scientific world at large.

WAS IT AN IMPERTINENCE?

Last year a Bro. Quincy Anderson, of Ozark, Missouri, became skeptical in regard to the Reorganized Church being so far representative of the church of 1830 as to be the one of his choice. After a season of struggle over the situation he wrote a renunciation of the church in its entirety, and published it in two Baptist journals. Not long after this he began to see things in a different light, and, as we understand, fell in with some of the elders from the Utah Church, and was disposed to accept their views. He then wrote a recall of his renunciation and sent us to publish, which for reasons we declined; he then wrote another, which we published.

Some time after this we received a letter from Bro. Sparling, at work in the district where Bro. Anderson lived, containing the letter of C. W. Penrose, to whom as Editor of the Deseret News, of Salt Lake City, Bro. Anderson had written, asking concerning Pres. B. Young's teaching on the subject of Adam being God. We were requested to answer or explain, as the correctness of the quotation from the said sermon of President Young by Bro. Etzenhouser in his book was disputed by the elders from Utah.

Our supposition at the time was that Bro. Anderson's letter was written to Mr. Penrose as editor of the News and a teacher of the Mormon philosophy, and as editor and elder a public man, his reply to be used in Bro. Anderson's search after light, and in the controversy with us. It was with this understanding that we used the letter, publishing it without comment. We had no thought that it was a private and personal letter, of such a nature that we were treating the writer with discourtesy, or violating a rule governing newspaper correspondents. If the Editor of the News feels that we did so treat him discourteously, we hereby apologize. The principle so publicly announced by Pres. B. Young is what we are at variance with, men are but incidents for or against.

We give below what Editor Penrose has to say in the News for March 23 about our editorial in our editorial for March 14, on the subject of this, leaving the letter itself out, only:—

A PIECE OF IMPERTINENCE.

A gentleman in Ozark, Missouri, addressed a letter to the editor of the Deseret News, a short time ago, asking for information concerning the teachings of President Brigham Young in relation to Adam. A personal letter was written in reply, giving the desired explanation. The Lamoni, Iowa, Herald, organ of the "Josephites," prints this private letter and endeavors to make it appear that the writer is taking up a controversy with the author of a work called "Utah Mormonism in Contrast." The Herald makes very free with the name of the editor of the News, and also strains a point to show that he has undertaken to "apologize for the teachings of President Brigham Young" on this subject.

We regard the action of the Herald in this affair as contrary to the ethics of respectable journalism and an unwarranted liberty to take with a private communication. We simply addressed a personal letter to a gentleman who made private inquiry on the subject mentioned. And as to the book to which the letter is made to refer, we know nothing. We have never seen the book, or any quotations from it, and never heard about it until the article in the Herald was received, headed "Penrose vs. Pres. B. Young." If our correspondent sent the letter to the editor of the Herald, he was guilty of a breach of good manners, and if it was obtained surreptitiously, the blame lies with the paper that published it.

To show that there was nothing in the letter of which we are ashamed, or that might not with propriety be given to the public if it was obtained in a proper manner and with the consent of the writer, we here append it in full, as published in the Herald: . . .

Anyone who has carefully read the discourse delivered by President Young on this subject, will perceive that our brief statement of its purport is correct, that there is nothing in one that is in conflict with the other; that we have neither "apologized for" nor disputed anything contained in that one sermon, which has been so much misunderstood and perverted by the enemies of our late venerable President. We are familiar with the doctrine he taught, and which he did not attempt fully to explain in the discourse which has been published. And it should be understood that the views entertained by that great leader and inspired servant of the Lord, were not expressed as principles to be accepted by mankind as essential to salvation. Like the Prophet Joseph Smith, his mind was enlightened as to many things which were beyond common understanding, and the declaration of which would bring upon him the opposition of the ignorant.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has fundamental principles to present to the world, the reception of which is essential to salvation. They are to be found in the written standards of the church, and are simple and easy to comprehend and obey. There are men in the church who entertain ideas of a more advanced nature, some of which, although they may be expressed in public, either upon the stand or in works that have been written, are not put forth as binding upon any person. This distinction ought to be clear to all who interest themselves in such matters.

That which President Young set forth in the discourse referred to, is not preached either to the Latter Day Saints or to the world as a part of the creed of the church. In answering the letter of our correspondent we simply explained in private that which was asked in private, so that he might understand the tenor of President Young's views, and not with any intention of advocating or denying his doctrine, or of controverting anything that may have been said upon the subject by opponents of his utterances. We do not regard the course of the Lamoni Herald in this matter as commendable, or even ordinarily respectable. It is a piece of journalistic impertinence.

Why did not Mr. Penrose publish what we wrote about the subject? Would not his readers have had a better chance to judge of our motive in publishing his letter had he done so?

Elder Louis A. Kelsch, President of the Northern States Mission of the Utah Church, while at Lamoni, and speaking in the church here, gave his audience to distinctly understand that he indorsed and believed the teaching of Pres. Young in the Journal of Discourses, the Adam-God theory included. We thought him a little rash at the time; but as it was his voluntary statement, we had no cause to dispute him in it.

We are pleased to note, however, that Editor Penrose states editorially writing of the utterances of Pres. Brigham Young that:—

> And it should be understood that the views entertained by that great leader and inspired servant of the Lord, were not expressed as principles to be accepted by mankind as essential to salvation.

We are pleased to learn this; and if we could know that Elder Penrose now writes for the church of which he is a member, we should be inclined to think it indicative of an intention to put away things unprofitable and dangerous. But how shall we understand, how to read? Pres. Young said:—

> Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner. . . . HE is our FATHER and our GOD, and the only God with whom WE have to do." [Italics and caps as printed in the Journal of Discourses.]

Then follows this:—

> Every may upon the earth, professing Christians or non-professing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later.

We have carefully read and reread this sermon, upon the supposition that President Young intended it as a lesson of instruction to all the elders and children of Israel, and the rest of mankind, to be heard and believed.

If the information purported to be given in the sermon from which we quote was not intended to convey and teach principles involved in the Godhead, including the creation, and the nativity of Jesus, why did President Young seek to give them such prominence?

It is taught in the standard works of the church that Jesus Christ was the Messiah, the Savior of mankind. Whatever relates to him, the prophecies concerning him, his birth, his teaching, his history, character, and life, are all proper subjects of inquiry and belief; and, so far as man can know of him, from what is written and revealed concerning him, we are entitled to understand, and it is essential to our salvation that we do know.

Paul wrote a long time ago:—

> For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

The teachings of Pres. Young, when uttered from the stand and published in the Journal of Discourses, necessarily became public property, as it was intended they should be; and when Mr Quincy Anderson wrote to Elder Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, it was a letter to a man in the public service and not to a private gentleman; and when Mr. Penrose answered Mr. Anderson's letter and added to his signature the words "Editor News," it was the answer of a gentleman in public life who wrote in his official character as editor of a great newspaper. If not, why should the words "Editor News" have been added to the signature? What need for the title if it was but the letter of one private gentleman to another?

Mr. Quincy Anderson can read, and we are inclined to think that he will prefer to read, the record of what Pres. Young said, and credit his own understanding of it, rather than to accept the rendition of the editor of the News.

UTAH ELDERS BANISHED FROM DENMARK.

Charles C. Ronnow and Thomas P. Jensen, of the Utah force of the ministry have been ordered to leave Denmark. We quote from the Millennial Star, No. 10, vol. 62, pp. 150, 151, for March 8, 1900.

ELDERS BANISHED FROM DENMARK.

President Andreas Peterson writes from Copenhagen under date of March 3, 1900, as follows:—

"Elders Charles C. Ronnow and Thomas P. Jensen, who were laboring in Bornholm, had papers served on them to leave the Kingdom of Denmark at once, because they were American citizens and missionaries from Utah.

"They then applied to the American Minister for protection, as being American citizens. He at once stayed the execution of the decree, until some investigation was made. The Minister soon found out the main reasons, which were emigration from Denmark to Utah and polygamy, hence he advised us to state our views on these questions, which we did as follows:—

"We, the undersigned missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, hereby affirm that we have not been instructed or advised by the President of our Church, nor anyone else, to teach or encourage the practice of plural marriage, or polygamy; nor to teach or encourage the emigration from Denmark, or any other country, to the United States; neither have we advised or instructed those who labor with us or under our direction to teach or encourge polygamy or emigration, but to the contrary we are instructed and we do instruct those we labor with not to teach polygamy nor emigration, but to teach the people to live and abide by the Manifesto issued by President Wilford Woodruff, April, 1890, and also approved by his successor President Lorenzo Snow; and to teach the people that they can live Christian lives in their own country as well as elsewhere. We further affirm that we have not at any time taught the people any other doctrine than that contained in Holy Writ.

"On the strength of this statement the American Minister demanded that the banishment be revoked, but yesterday the Minister wrote to Charles C. Ronnow as follows:—

"'I am in receipt of a note from the Minister of Foreign Affairs in which he informs me that the Minister of Justice does not find sufficient grounds for revoking the decree of banishment against you and Mr. Thomas P. Jensen. Respectfully yours,

"I have had the privilege of interviewing the American Minister thrice, the last time to-day; he is a fine man, and I am satisfied that he has done all that he possibly could for us. He read to me the full statement from the Minister of Justice to him, in which he says, that our points have been well considered and have modified his views in regard to us."

Our object in referring to the banishment of these elders, missionaries of the dominant church in Utah, from Denmark, and quoting from their organ the letter of Pres. Andreas Peterson, is to put their statement on record in the HERALD for the benefit of the eldership who in the prosecution of their several missions may meet other ministers from Utah.

These elders in Denmark, in order to defend themselves against the edict of banishment state that they "are instructed . . . not to teach polygamy nor emigration," and "to abide by the Manifesto issued by President Woodruff."

It might be curious to know just what these men might mean to convey by the term "the practice of plural marriage, or polygamy;" and also, what the authorities of Denmark understand by the term.

We regret to know that there is not to be free speech in Denmark; but are pleased to learn that the men whose names are signed to the statement of affirmation have not "taught the people of Denmark any other doctrine than that contained in Holy Writ." And, as the affirmation was made to men in authority and intended to affect them in favor of the elders, it must be fair to infer that by the instruction given them not to teach plural marriage it is admitted that that tenet is not contained in Holy Writ.

THE Topeka Capital, daily, run for a week, finishing on Saturday evening, March 17, was but a redevelopment of men's failure to accomplish large results on a small capital.

Mr. Charles M. Sheldon, a professed minister of an evangelical denomination, so-called, engaged to run a daily newspaper in a typical western city—"as Jesus would do" it.

We subscribed for the paper, but failed to get it as issued, and only got at it last, the whole six issues in a bunch some days after the experiment was finished; for it was an experiment, shrewdly gotten up, or acquiesced in by the owners and business men of the firm of publishers to exploit their paper and coin a few dollars.

The principle involved, that is, conducting the paper "as Jesus would do it," was catching; but how did Mr. Sheldon know how Jesus would conduct such a venture? Jesus drove the money changers from the temple and upbraided the lawyers; but Mr. Sheldon advertised the money lenders, the mortgage seekers, and the lawyers in his paper, and gave notice of the victory of the Acme ball players.

We very much doubt Mr. Sheldon's mental and moral ability to measure or weigh each modern newspaper requirement, or business, or news incident, and determine what Jesus would have done or would do in each case as it occurred. Jesus judged of affairs from divine foresight and tender regard for mankind. He preached for the benefit of the poor, without money, and without price. Mr. Sheldon, while ostensibly taking no pay for his work, permitted the men with the finance rake to gather in the moneys which men paid to see what was Mr. Sheldon's idea of what Jesus would do.

Mr. Sheldon would not print a Sunday issue of the Capital, but he would and did issue a Saturday evening issue, one half of it taken up with the "sermon on the mount," and a number of sermonizing articles which he well knew would be read chiefly on the Lord's day. The other half was the regular advertising sheet.

Mr. Sheldon must have been of the opinion that Jesus would not take of the money that the paper might sell for, but he did allow the syndicate to speculate off of his name and celebrity. Jesus had no money, but paid his tribute in the current coin of the realm. Jesus was not an extremist like a Kansas prohibitionist; but when at the marriage feast in Cana of Galilee, he furnished the good wine to the feasters after the regular supply was exhausted.

Mr. Sheldon was against the sensationalism of the newspaper world, but managed to get some sensational pictures on the horrors of famine, war, and the army canteen into his week's issues.

As a whole we were disappointed with Mr. Sheldon's view of how "Jesus would do," as he has expressed them in his conduct of the paper. In the next to the last issue Mr. Sheldon expresses himself that he will not conduct or have connection with the Capital, or any other paper as editor or publisher, intending to confine himself to the pulpit and platform in his new project of formulating a new religion and a new church to unite all churches.

He will succeed for a time and after a fashion, but at the end will find himself too small for the task he has set himself to do, as Jesus did and as Mr. Sheldon has done are two quite distinct things.

The editor of the Wichita Eagle, also a Kansas daily newspaper, a sort of newspaper lay preacher, has the following editorial for March 20, which we give because it seems to express the common conviction regarding Mr. Sheldon's effort. The layman is sometimes a better judge of such effort and its result than the prejudiced occupant of the pulpit.

SHELDON'S DESECRATION AND HOWE'S BLASPHEMY.

Editor Howe having concluded his series of sermons "as Jesus would have preached them," comes no nearer reaching the pattern set for himself than did the Rev. Sheldon. Only one of Howe's sermons is devoted to Sheldon's venture, but that incontestibly shows Sheldon to be a crank. Sheldon's sole creed is "Crucify! Crucify!" Those who read the numbers of his Jesus edition must have been struck with the man's fanaticism on the prohibition question, for instance. For him, wine, the greater intoxicant, is all right at the communion table, because the law says it is. But beer, as a beverage at the social or the family table, is a crime. There is no more sin in the beer than in the wine, even though the law makes the use of the more innocent of the two a crime.

Some of the papers of the country hold the Reverend Sheldon to be but a sensational mountebank, or at best an imitator of a Parkhurst or a Talmage, while the editors who know him personally credit him with being honest. A man can be honest and at the same time a fanatic, can be both earnest and honest, and at the same time unjust. As we view Sheldon, his great lack, as a minister, is charity; and his great need as a public writer is liberality. He has the stuff in him for a witch-burner. Howe, in the sermon alluded to, illustrates this Pharisaical phase of a man who boasts a co-capacity with Christ. When the prohibition fight was on, red-hot, in Topeka, under the leadership of men, some of whom got drunk periodically, this man, Sheldon, bought or otherwise procured four bottles of beer from a worthy old man who was then in the drug business, but who had been a Union soldier, having proffered his life in defense of his country. Sheldon set these four bottles of beer on his pulpit, on a Sunday morning, and proceeded to preach a sensational sermon as a result of which the old soldier was sent to jail. In that act there may have been both honesty and earnestness, but there was nothing of Christ or Christianity, nothing of charity or of liberality, only the fanaticism of the crank who is a stickler for the enforcement of law because it is a law which happens to coincide with his particular convictions.

It may be a sin to eat hog meat, a sin to use tobacco, a sin to eat rich condiments, a sin to drink beer and coffee, that is, a sin from moral, æsthetical, or physical view, and mankind no doubt would be better off without these and a hundred other things. But when the demagogue steps in as a legislator, in response to the cry of fanaticism, and makes a crime of these moral delinquencies or physical deteriorators, such laws, cannot, and will not, be enforced, at least with all the vigor desired by the fanatic.

Howe may have no use for the mission of Christ, may disbelieve in him, and believe that this brief and unsatisfactory existence ends all; and Sheldon may in the name of Jesus call for the rack and screw of a law which makes crimes of mere moral delinquencies, while incidentally making fifty thousand in a week; yet the fact remains that the love, compassion, and the charity of Christ were more than human; they were divine. His creed was forgiveness, and only forgiveness. More sacred to him than the edicts of Cæsar, more obligatory than the laws of the Roman empire, under which he was born, were those handed down from heaven at Sinai, through the hands of Moses. But when it came to dealing with the frailties of humanity about him, he rose superior to all written laws, forgiving the very thief on the cross condemned to die under the one, and forgiving the woman who had been taken in an open violation of the other. "Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone" was more than human wisdom; but under such an invitation Sheldon would conscientiously throw stones all day and, fearing that he hadn't hit some violator of the prohibitory law, would get up in the middle of the night to shy a few more at random in the dark.

Christ's life was love, and love only. He never called for the enforcement of any other law than the law of love. He lived for love and died for love, for his love of humanity, and his pretended followers, who howl for penalties, making a mockery of his infinite spirit of love. And whether, as Howe says, Christ is but mythical, there is no other myth of history, tradition, earth, or heaven, embodying so much of the best in the human heart, so much that is God-like, and so little of that preached by Sheldon in his "Jesus edition."

As for anything else, nothing pertaining to the religion of Jesus, or the morals of mankind; nothing making for earthly contentment, or for the hope of happiness; nothing for the betterment of the dwellers of earth, materially, morally, or spiritually, has been accomplished by the constrained efforts of the editor or the preacher, while, upon the other hand, things and names sacred to the hearts of the many have been belittled and blasphemed, profaned and desecrated.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. I.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

The new world's people, like almost every other people which has undertaken to relate the story of its own origin, has given us a confused account of supernatural persons,—children of the gods,—which, in the judgment of more enlightened men, is almost uniformly considered fabulous and impossible. And how much of truth is veiled under this mythical dress, and where the line should be drawn between history and pure myth, is difficult to decide, and the line drawn by persons will depend somewhat, of course, on previous training and present convictions.

Two men may look up at a tree from opposite directions, and each will declare that it leans towards him, and if chopped down will fall that way. So in matters of religion and politics, we can readily see that the weight of evidence leans towards us.

A myth may have for its foundation a truth. That truth as it grows older becomes so covered with debris and foliage that the fact is hid from view. This point reached, a myth is born, and the imagination has absolute rule.

Modern research in various lines of study is, however, coming to our aid. Ethnology, comparative philology, antiquarian research, and geological antiquities, each bring to us a valuable contribution.

Each race of men can and does trace back its own pedigree as anciently and as honorably as every other. Each one goes back to one creative god or gods, and there it starts. In Babylonian myths Alorus is the first man; this man was produced from the blood of Belus and the dust of the earth. In the tenth generation Xisuthros, with some others, was saved in a vessel when the flood came. The Bible believer will at once here see a man made "out of the dust of the ground," and "Noah saved in the ark."

In Persia it is Ormuzd who makes a man and a woman, who live in peace in a garden; Ahriman, the evil spirit, plants a fatal tree in their abode, and sends a serpent to persuade them to eat of it. Woe follows. Here in this myth we see Adam and Eve, the garden, the tree, Satan (the serpent), and the fall.

In India, God gave the first men a knowledge of letters, teaching their form and use in an audible voice from the city of God, and also the Vedas to guide him. Later on we see an ocean of death by a flood, and then there remained upon earth only one pious king and seven saints. Here we see God teaching our first parents, and giving them needed instruction, and the eight persons saved from a flood.

In Greece it is Zeus, so Aratus says, who scattered o'er the sky the shining stars and fixed them where they are; man, too, being his offspring. In Zeus we catch a glimpse of God the Father, and in Apollo we see the anticipation God's Son, who will judge our misdeeds and abolish death. So that the Bible believer will go through these myths and find in them a confirmation of his faith.

The new world, too, has a venerable past; its myths and ruins bear witness to it, and long before our fathers found their way across the mighty deep, America had had its babyhood, reached old age, gone into dotage, and died of decay.

The late Henry George said on pre-American civilizations:—

Some estimates give to Peru alone, at the time of the Conquest, a greater population than now exists on the continent of South America, and all the indications are, that previous to the discovery the population had been diminishing. What great nations have run their course, what empires have arisen and fallen in the "new world which is the old," we can only imagine. But fragments of massive ruins yet attest a grander pre-American civilization. Amid the tropical forests of Yucatan and Central America are the remains of great cities forgotten ere the Spanish Conquest. Mexico, as Cortez found it, showed the superimposition of barbarism upon a higher social development, while through a great part of what is now the United States, are scattered mounds which prove a once relatively dense population, and here and there, as in the Lake Superior copper mines, are traces of higher arts than were known to the Indians with whom the whites came in contact.—Progress and Poverty, pp. 95, 96.

Says Nadaillic,

At every turn South America presents vestiges of a vanquished race, of a culture now lost.—Prehistoric America, p. 465.

In the primeval forests covering Chiapas, Guatemala, Honduras, and Yucatan; where through the dense undergrowth a passage had often to be forced, axe in hand; statues, columns, hieroglyphics, unoccupied villages, abandoned palaces, and stately ruins rose on every side, mute witnesses of past ages and of vanished races.—Ibid., pp. 10, 11.

To erect the monuments of Mexico and Peru, the yet more ancient ones of Central America, . . . must have required skilled labor, a numerous population, and an established priesthood, such as could have developed only during the lapse of centuries.—Ibid., p. 14.

The first Americans too were contemporary with gigantic animals which, like their conquerors of Europe, have passed away never to return. They had to contend with the Mastodon, the Megatherium, the Mylodon, the Megalonyx, the elephant, with a jaguar larger than that of the present day, and a bear more formidable than that of the caves.—Ibid., p. 15.

Referring to the native documents, Abbé Brasseur de Bourbourg says:—

If I may judge from allusions in the documents that I have been fortunate enough to collect, there were in these regions [Central America], at that remote date, convulsions of nature, deluges, terrible inundations, followed by the upheaval of mountains, accompanied by volcanic eruptions. These traditions, traces of which are also met with in Mexico, Central America, Peru, and Bolivia, point to the conclusion that man existed in these various countries at the time of the upheaval of the Cordilleras, and that the memory of that upheaval has been preserved.—Ibid., pp. 16, 17.

So that America, within the human period, has undergone great changes; nations or empires came and disappeared again; gigantic animals passed away never to return, angry nature, too, afflicted its people, changing the face of their country with convulsions and inundations, destroying their homes.

Who and what, then, were the first inhabitants of America? Whence did they come? To what immigration was their arrival due? By what disasters were they destroyed? By what routes did they reach these unknown lands? Must we admit different centres of creation? and were the primeval Americans born on American soil? Could evolution and natural selection, those principles so fully accepted by the modern school, have produced on the shores of the Atlantic and the Pacific a type of man resembling the European and the Asiatic, alike in the structure of his frame and his intellectual development?—Ibid., p. 15.

These questions of Nadaillac's the Book of Mormon undertakes to answer. But, la me! No good can come out of Nazareth! It tells of America's first inhabitants (after the flood), that they were not born on American soil! They were not children of the modern school—natural selection. It does not admit different centers of creation. The American is an "immigrant," and that is why he is a true type of man, resembling his brothers, "the European and the Asiatic," "in the structure of his frame and in his intellectual development." It tells who they were, and from whence they came; how they arrived here in this "unknown land," and by what means they were led to so distant a country; and by what "disasters" they were destroyed, and how their cities and palaces were left without an occupant; and it points out where dense populations once lived happy, pursuing the arts of civilized life, which cities were afterwards given up to nature's forest, and were, when discovered again, "forgotten." It explains how Mexico and Peru come to show evidences of barbarism resting upon a higher social development, and how that culture became "vanquished"—succumbed to a warlike and savage race. It shows that they had a proud and haughty Babylon which fell and went into decay; a Darius defeated as at Arbela; a Marathon; a Titus as at Jerusalem, and a Herculaneum and Pompeii.

War! war! was the cause why the Mound Builders disappeared from where a dense agricultural population once lived. War, an exterminating war, in which its prisoners were offered up to their dumb idols in Central America; such idols as are represented on the monuments and picture writings to the present day. It is history repeated again; civilizations developed, and passed away. Those civilizations speak to us in their myths, and from their graves and ruins.

The Book of Mormon narrative is plain and simple. In some respects it seems to tell an incredible story. It leaves itself open for attack all along the line. It invites criticism, in which it has a long line of (apparently) weak forts to defend. From how many different points the enemy may make the assault!

It makes two civilizations, — two distinct races of men on this continent,—which start to develop in two different parts of the country; the first one (as the writer understands it) commencing in Central America, reaching to the United States; the second one commencing in South America, south of the equator on the west coast, uniting later on with another related colony in the northern part of South America, the two becoming one. The first civilization had succumbed to civil war, and had become extinct before the second reached its desolated country. In time the second civilization passed on, and reoccupied the deserted country of the first inhabitants.

Here we see, then, a chance for the archæologist. If the myths fail to say anything here; archæology will "whisper from the ground." The second people, too, in time were nearly exterminated by a powerful foe; since which, for centuries, the victors in their descendants (the Indians) have held dominion.

But why should the author of the Book of Mormon go out of his way and tell such incredible stories, and why should he even name such animals as swine, horses, asses, elephants, cureloms, cumoms, and sheep, when there were no such animals on the continent in prehistoric times? Do we not see that there is a chance for the scientist here? Here is a weak fort for its author to defend.

Why did he write about iron, steel, and glass, when they in those distant times were ignorant of such things? Why did he not say that they did "all manner of fine work with copper and stone tools, and when these implements failed to carve the hard granite, they succeeded with their finger nails," and thus be in harmony with the modern school? Did he not know that science would come along by and by and upset his stories, and he would thus be held up to ridicule? Why did he thus carelessly step aside in his narrative and challenge the man of science that would look for him later on? Why did he not remain within the bounds of reason, and adopt the theory of his own day, and not make a "fool of himself?" Ah, dear reader, these are the earmarks of either a true narrative or of a very ignorant man! —"an impostor." Why did he talk about Christ before there was a Christ? And Christians before those at Antioch? Why does he teach Christianity in America, when the New Testament has a monopoly on that line? Why should he thus lay snares, traps, and pitfalls all along his frontier, into which his dupes might fall? Does such a people as he describes appear in the myths of the New World? Can they be found?

A great antiquity is sometimes claimed for some of the native races, which, we are told, proves fatal to the Book of Mormon theory. Yes—a great antiquity is also claimed for some of the Bible lands, too, which if true would prove fatal to it.

After the fabulous eras have been purged from Egyptian history by the best writers of our times, we are yet in doubt as to its true age. Böckh gives the date of the origin of Egypt and its first king (M'na) at B. C. 5702; Unger, B. C. 5613; Marriette Bey and Lenormant, 5004; Brugsch Bey, 4455; Bunsen, 3623 or 3059; Reginald Stuart Poole 2717; and Sir John Gardner Wilkinson, 2691 (see Ancient Egypt, by George Rawlinson, vol. 2, p. 1); while Mr. Rawlinson himself makes it about 2400. (See his Egypt and Babylon.)

That is about the same as if one person guessed your weight at 150 pounds, while others run it up to 200 pounds, or 300 pounds, or nearly 400 pounds!

But Bible countries agree with the Bible, not in dates, but in great periods; the first great period is ten generations — then the flood; then the race starts again. So Atlantis has ten kings, then she sinks. In Chaldea, Berosus enumerates ten antediluvian kings. (See Historical Evidences, p. 277, note 68.) These ten kings reigned 432,000 years before the flood came; that, if true, would spoil the Bible narrative. So the legends of the Iranians commence with the reign of ten Peisdadien kings—"men of the ancient law." In India we meet with the nine Brahmadikas, who, with Brahma, their founder, make ten. The Chinese count ten emperors before the dawn of historic times. The Germans believed in the ten ancestors of Odin, and the Arabs in the ten mythical kings of the Adites. (See Atlantis, p. 27.)

THE SABBATH DAY.

A Sabbath well spent,
Brings a week of content,
And health for the toils of the morrow;
But a Sabbath profaned,
Whate'er may be gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow.
—Sir Matthew Hale.

Come, let us with our Lord arise,
Our Lord, who made both earth and skies;
Who died to save the world he made,
And rose triumphant from the dead.
He rose, the Prince of Life and Peace,
And stamped the day forever his.
—Charles Wesley.

I offer a few remarks on the Sabbath as a day of rest, and give my reasons for believing no work should be done, only that which is absolutely necessary. Ever since I have professed to follow the Lord Jesus, both before and since I have entered the true church, I have always tried to keep the Lord's day holy, and have been particular not to ride on that day, and have found much opposition to such a belief; I am alone in that belief, for I have never met a Saint who holds strictly to that belief, except a sister who lately joined the church. As I understand scripture, it is wrong to ride on Sunday, whether by train, tram, bus, or in any other way, whereby man, woman, or beast has to work. Perhaps some one will point out where I am wrong, or give me more light than I have yet discovered, in my search.

I have found many commandments given to the children of Israel, that are just as applicable to us in these latter days, and whatever our ideas may be, we are bound to admit that God's wisdom is far greater than ours. He commanded the children of Israel, through the Prophet Moses, to do no work on that day. In the 20th chapter of Exodus, the ten commandments all acknowledge are applicable to us as well as to those they were given to, except that one, keeping the Sabbath, and that to a certain extent seems to be ignored.

Let us examine passages of scripture, and see what commands were given in the early days; and we believe that God is unchangeable. We read in Malachi 3:6: "I am the Lord, I change not;" and we are to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. "The seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God." The keeping of the sabbath day means that I should keep from violating any of the other commands mentioned. In Genesis 2:3, "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it;" and when my thoughts are directed to this passage on the sabbath, I look round and see the tram cars, the bus, the cab, and the rattling and lumbering in the streets, methinks it seems but very little different from other days; it does not look to me much like a day God has sanctified. I go in the station, I hear the engine whistle screaming; the people rushing here and there; the porters all as busy as bees; all seems commotion; does it look like a day of rest?

Someone says, "What has all this to do with us." "Well, if we make use of such means to get from one place to another, what difference is there?" "Oh! yes," says one, "if we did not use them, they would go just the same." "True; but if I used such means to go about, I should feel just as guilty as anyone else, that is if the thing is wrong to employ such means to get about; but if it is not wrong, then there will be nothing to answer for; but if it is, I am thinking that it will be but a poor excuse to give at the reckoning day, that others did it, and I thought there would be no harm for me to do the same."

Let us look a little further; in Exodus 23:12: "Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest: that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed." See also Deuteronomy 5:12–14: "But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou."

If the above was intended for the children of Israel only, then it would appear to me that God is a partial God, for he certainly would be showing more favor to them than to us; for don't our children, our servants, and our cattle require rest in this age just as much as in ages gone by? Where would we find a saint to-day, if asked, that would rather work at his usual employment on the Sabbath than rest? I don't think you would find one. Then if we like to take our rest on the Sabbath, and for pleasure, ease, or convenience, employ the above mentioned in scripture, would that be doing to others as we would they should do to us? Is that loving our neighbor as ourselves?

Again, let us look at Exodus 31:16, 17: "Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generation, for a perpetual covenant [which means never ending]. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever." Are we not the children of Israel by adoption? We call ourselves latter-day Israel.

Let us now see what the Prophet Isaiah has to say: "If thou . . . call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth."—Isaiah 58:13, 14.

"The sons of the stranger, . . . every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, . . . even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer."—Isaiah 56:6, 7.

The Psalmist David, in Psalms 118:19–24, says: "Open to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them, and I will praise the Lord. . . . This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."

Let us now see how Jesus observed the Sabbath. See Mark 1:21: "And straightway on the sabbath day he entered into the synagogue, and taught."

Mark 6:2: "And when the sabbath day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue."

Luke 4:16: "And as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read."

Matthew 12:12: "Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath day."

Jesus is evidently referring to the healing of the sick, saving life, etc., when accused by the Pharisees of doing such things on the sabbath, which was contrary to their traditions. Such things are necessary.

This passage of scripture seems to be one that many of the Saints work upon when talking about this Sabbath question. I have had it put to me in this form: "Suppose someone was taken suddenly ill, and sent for the elders to be administered to, and they lived miles away, so that it would be impossible to get there unless they went by train, tram, or some such way, that your riding caused servants or cattle to help you get there."

Well, my answer is this, that if there is no wrong in employing the above to get there as quick as you can; but if it is wrong to use the above means, I should lay the matter before the Lord, and having left the case in his hands till the Sabbath was over, unless the Spirit directed me otherwise. While it is right to do well on the Sabbath, or any other time, but we should never do wrong to get to the right. Another one says we should use the very best means at our disposal; true, but not to hire servants or cattle to help us use the best means at our disposal.

I heard another say, a few Sundays ago, that there was nothing in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation about forbidding us to ride in railway trains. I thought that was rather a poor thing for a Saint to say. To work a train it takes a great number of servants, and we find much in God's word forbidding us to employ such. Now if we could work the train ourselves, the same as we do the cycle, then I can't see where the harm would be to ride a cycle. I see no more harm in that than in using your legs to walk; you only use them a little quicker. It's not the riding part where the harm comes in; but it is the employing servants, cattle, etc.

We may look at a few more passages. Luke 23:56: "And rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment."

Mark 2:27: "The sabbath was made for man." (See also Acts 17:2; 13:14, 44.)

Now let us examine a much later revelation, given in this day and age:—

That thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest [let us remember the engine, tram, and bus drivers who require rest as well as we do, and many who would like to go to the house of prayer] from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblation, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High; . . . and on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fastings may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full."—D. C. 59:2, 3.

I would now like to ask, Is there anything in the passages of scripture referred to, that would lead us to believe that the keeping of the Sabbath is not intended for us? Is there anything in God's word anywhere—either Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants—to say that we in this age need not keep the above commandments? If so, will some one kindly show. Surely there must be something that I have not seen. All these good Latter Day

Saints in this country must have some word that they are relying upon. Yet it seems strange they have never yet pointed out to me anything to show me I am wrong in that belief in scripture. Of course I have had many things brought under my notice. One is this, If everybody were to cease from work on Sunday, we should never had the restored gospel brought from America, because at that time it took more than one or two Sundays to come from there, and the sailors have to work to keep the ship right. That to me was a most paltry excuse for believing in Sunday work. I wonder how the brother who made such a statement could see how it was possible that a ship, perhaps thousands of miles from land, because it was Saturday night, could return to land to rest until the Sabbath was over. When a ship is on the wide ocean, work is necessary. Another: If I saw a person drowning, or my cattle, because it was the Sabbath, would I not pull them out or save them? Certainly; they are cases of necessity.

It's surprising how far even Saints will go to uphold their pet theories. Yet another will say that I believe in the subject under consideration because it suits me, and because I am able to walk. It would suit me much better if I could ride. Before I came into this church and since, I have walked many hundreds of miles in all kinds of weather, when I could have rode; but the greatest sacrifice I made was to do without my Sunday dinner. To me it has been a great sacrifice, for I am a working man, and take my dinner to work every day; so it is seldom I get a fresh cooked dinner. My wife nor anyone else will ever be able to say they stopped away from meeting to cook my food. I look after my food myself that day.

Many similar questions have been put to me from time to time. I have been told, and so have others that have come from other bodies, that we should leave our preconceived ideas behind us, yet the church teaches that all the good we can get, no matter where it comes from if it is good, to keep it, because it is good.

The above passages of scripture referred to on the Sabbath, is a specimen of my supposed preconceived ideas; and while I am a strong believer in the above, I allow every one else to believe what they like. I have never said to anyone they were wrong, because they did not believe as I do; neither have I thought so. Yet I have heard — perhaps not directly, but indirectly—that everybody was bad because they did not see as I see. I don't know how such a feeling has got about, certainly not from any word I have spoken about riding on Sunday. If any heart would harbor a thought of that description, I am not fit to be a Saint; but I may here say, that this latter-day work is first and foremost with me. Stinging remarks will never drive me from this work; they are only some of the items that go to form the evil report, and I promised the Lord I would serve him through evil report as well as good.

Now, in conclusion I would again ask, Is there any portion of scripture stating that the above commands, under consideration, are not for us; and as I stated before, I am an unlearned man, and the way I understand those commands, they are intended for us, just as much as they were for the Israelites of old. I don't understand them any other way; and I read in God's holy word that a wayfaring man or a fool need not err therein. So if I don't see or understand them any other way, what am I to do? I can't go to man and ask his opinion about it, for that would be trusting in the arm of flesh. I have prayed over it, but never received any answer to say my way of understanding them were wrong. So I must still believe that God forbids unnecessary work on the Sabbath day, until I see it in God's word to the contrary, or that the Spirit reveals it to me.

NOBLE UTTERANCES IN SOCIAL MEETINGS.

I herewith submit some extracts taken from testimonies given in Saints' meetings in the Pittsburg branch, which was handed me by Bro. C. Ed Miller, who has carefully compiled and preserved the same. There are some grand things among them, and thinking that they are worth preserving, and that they will be interesting to most of the readers of the Herald, I send them for publication.

I think that the plan of Bro. Miller is a good one, and is an example that others might profitably follow after.

When the Spirit is present in our meetings, the Saints, under the influence thereof, often utter words and present thoughts that are well worth preserving; and if published, they would be both encouraging and edifying to the reader. These are the reasons why I have been prompted to send the following.

UTTERANCES IN SOCIAL MEETINGS.

"I want to so build that I will not have to go back over my work."

"Always try to be on praying terms with God."

"After I have prayed to God I try to answer my own prayers."

"There were many who wished to be present at the inauguration of Grover Cleveland as president of the United States. I want to be present at the crowning of Jesus Christ as king of the earth."

"The world has too much of the golden calf, and not enough of the golden rule."

"Many messages come from God without a 'thus saith the Lord' attached to them."

"Before you draw very heavily on the bank of heaven, be sure you have laid up for yourselves treasures there."

"I'm glad to see the Pope is going to let the public schools alone, because he would have to anyway."

"If I was to have the gift of prophecy, I would want to so predict that it be could be told, without fail, whether the prophecy was true or not."

"I want to be very faithful in little things."

"I want to do what is right."

"To quote a very vulgar but expressive phrase, I am glad that in this work 'every cup stands on its own bottom.'"

"To those who think that when a person dies that is the end of them, I would say: suppose that Mr. Hoe, the inventor of the web perfecting press, which prints over thirty thousand complete newspapers in one hour, after he had created such a machine would place a charge of dynamite underneath it, blow it up, and say that was the object of its creation!"

"Theologically the world to-day is in organized confusion."

"I think that as a people we are too clannish. We do not associate with the world enough. The salt, to preserve, must come in contact with that which it is to save."

"When we are singing the hymns we should pray them."

"Lord, don't take temptations away from me, but help me to overcome them."

"We cannot get too well acquainted with God, but we can become too familiar with him."

"I don't think much of the man that everybody likes. If he stood up firmly for the right he would make enemies."

"It is harder for me to take part in a testimony meeting than it is to preach a sermon."

"Lord give us such testimonies as we can live by."

"Oh, how I do wish that I had obeyed this gospel long ago."

"One of the great things that I want to be able to say is that I have tried to keep the commandments."

"We are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, but we are ashamed of what some people think is the gospel."

"During the millennium we will not be loafing around picking apples from another man's tree."

"We should take our worst faults,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

one at a time, and try to overcome them."

"O Lord, deliver us from ourselves."

"Energetic people, when they are on the right track, go shooting along with a full head of steam on; but sometimes the Devil comes along in the night, turns the switch, and away they go on the wrong track just as hard."

"Other nations live in monumental history, while the Jew is still amongst us."

"If we are to neglect either household duties or the spiritual education of our children, let us neglect the things that perish."

"I had a dream that there were terrible calamities happening on the earth,—pestilence, tornadoes, etc. I knew they were coming, but did not get ready for them until they were upon me, when it was too late. I hunted for a place of refuge. It reminded me of when I crossed the ocean; the passengers brought books and studied them at the beginning of the voyage, so that when they landed they might be able to speak English. But after a few days they all laid their books aside until the last day of the voyage, when they all tried to learn the English language in one day."

"Some people are like young birds; they open their mouths and gulp down whatever is put in them; they never look to see whether it is a worm or an old rusty nail."

"The American idea is, We don't care what our grandfathers were, we want to know what our grandchildren are going to be."

"When everything goes all right we become independent and don't have very much use for the Lord."

"Love has toppled over as many mountains as faith has."

"When I would do evil, good is present."

"When you are not in a good spiritual condition don't think or speak of other peope's faults."

"We should feel our responsibility, but not our importance."

"Every day pray for some one you have never prayed for before."

"Pray for those you don't like, and for those who don't like you."

"We should promulgate that which we assimilate, which is good."

"When we were children we were troubled with growing pains. We get them in this work sometimes."

RELIGION.

We are all more or less conscious that both within and without the church we are passing through a great transition of belief. It is not merely a change in the phrasing of creeds; there is a radical change in the substantial point of view. This change in point of view does not involve any overthrow of Christian faith. Rightly understood, it involves a widening, and should involve a deepening, of religious faith.

We can judge of public opinion in a community by the addresses which are made to it by its teachers, partly because they reflect public opinion, partly because they set themselves to correct that public opinion and neutralize the errors which they find in it. Thus if we turn to the Bible to read the addresses made by the prophets we find them inveighing against certain sins and attacking certain errors, and the very fact that they do inveigh against these sins and attack these errors shows them to have been common. If we read the Old Testament through even casually we find one of the commonest of these errors to be one in the popular opinion about God, and we can easily trace in the history a gradual change in that opinion.

We are now coming to see, I think—and I believe it with all my heart—that there is no dividing line of any kind. God cares for all men; he cares for the Jews and he cares for the Gentiles; he cares for the baptized and he cares for the unbaptized; he cares for the elect and he cares for the nonelect; he cares for those who have repented and are trying to live righteous lives and he cares for those who have not repented and have not abandoned their sins, but are living sinful lives. He cares for them all—the good and the bad, the elect and the nonelect, the baptized and the unbaptized, the Jew and the pagan—they are all his children.

We are coming to see that inspiration is a universal fact in human life. God has not made an Old Testament simply for the Jews, nor a New Testament simply for the Christians; God has not selected one nation and talked to them to the exclusion of all others. John says: "The Word was with God and the Word was God." That is, God is always a communicating God. Never was God dumb in any epoch of the world, to any class of people. Everywhere and always has he spoken. In a true sense all good literature is inspired of God. Goodness and God are identical. Wherever there is goodness there is God. Wherever there is truth there is God. Wherever there is illumination and life and a largeness there God has been at work. We are coming to see also that sacrifice is the universal law of love. The sacrifice of Christ is the very heart and center, I believe, of Christian teaching and Christian life. He lived an example which men can follow, he taught truths which we can believe, he manifested to us a God whom we can reverence; but, more than all, he sacrificed himself for us. It is right for the Roman Catholic Church and the Episcopal Church to put the altar in the place of honor in their temples—it illustrates the truth that the sacrifice of Christ is the heart and center of Christianity—but it is there because it is the heart and center of all noble, true living.

Sacrifice did not begin on Calvary, and it certainly did not end there. Before Christ died the legend of Curtius was told, who armed himself from head to foot and rode into the great chasm which threatened to swallow Rome—rode into it that it might close and he save Rome by dying. Before the friendship of Christ for men was ever written the story of Damon and Pythias was written. Patriots had died for their country, martyrs had died for their faith, mothers had died for their children, long before the first century. And wherever a patriot had died for his country or a martyr for his faith or a mother for her child or a friend for his friend, there was manifested in smaller measure that sacrificial spirit of God which makes him the object of our worship.

When General Wood said, "I will not take the commercial place that is offered me and the fortune it will bring. I will not stop here to be feted and feasted. I must hurry back to Santiago—why? Because there is yellow fever there. I run to the place where yellow fever is; I do not run from it," we do not ask whether he is an Episcopalian or Presbyterian or Roman Catholic or Congregationalist or a member of a Christian Church at all; we know that he is showing forth the spirit of Jesus Christ.

When a flagman sees a little toddling infant on the track and runs out at the hazard of his life and catches the child and flings it to one side, to be himself struck down and broken and bruised and killed by the onrushing train, we do not ask whether he is a Protestant or Roman Catholic, a Jew or a Christian; we say that man did a Christian thing.

At The Hague last summer a body of men discussed how the world could be rid of war. That body was made up of Roman Catholics and Protestants and unbelievers. They all worked together to lift one great sin from the human race by providing something that should take the place of it. They were doing Christ's work. The Roman Catholic was doing it; the evangelical Protestant was doing it; the unbeliever was doing it. The difference is that some of them knew it and some of them did not.

For centuries God has been lifting ignorance, superstition, and oppression for men. In this redemption of the world he has been working through a thousand instruments that did not understand him any more than the axe understands the woodman who is using it. But they are doing God's work, and through them he is lifting off the sin of the world. When he has finished his work it will not be because a few Jews, or more baptized, or still more elect, or a still larger number of intelligent and consciously repented sinners, are saved from the wreck; it will be because the world will be no wreck, but the kingdom of God will have come, and the will of God will be done on earth as in heaven.—Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, in N. Y. Journal, Nov. 12, 1899.

HASTENING, SHAKING, AND COMING UP HIGHER, TIME.

Editors Herald:—As it is generally believed by the church that the hastening, shaking, and coming up higher time is upon us, I therefore want to call not only the attention but deep and careful thought of my brethren and sisters to some of the conditions that will obtain during this time of peril. For they that are forewarned are forearmed, provided practical use is made of the warning, especially when the warning is given by the Son of God, in whom we profess to believe and trust; for it is written, "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?" (Mal. 3:2). "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18:8.) Also, the parable of the wheat and the tares, when the good seed or children of the kingdom would be sowed by the Son of God, the tares or children of the wicked one would be sowed by the Devil.

I call particular attention to the thought that the two families of children were to be in the church of God and grow together; neither were the servants permitted to pluck up the tares lest they root up the wheat also; but they were to grow and ripen together, until the fruitage or harvest time came, when it would take the wisdom and power of angels or wise and chosen servants, endowed with power from on high to separate the two classes, the one for the burning, the other for the barns. He also says that there will be a virgin church or kingdom, likened unto ten virgins; and that the whole church would slumber and sleep, and at the awakening time only five would be wise and ready to enter into the marriage supper with the bridegroom; the five foolish virgins being unprepared, came too late, therefore failed to obtain an entrance. He has also said, As the days of Noe and Lot were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

These astounding declarations of the Immaculate One, with the following, "And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that Prophet [Christ], shall be destroyed from among the people" (Acts 2:23, should cause every child of the kingdom to stop, think, compare, and stand him or herself up by the word of God, which will judge us at the last day, and not be leaning on the arm of flesh, nor looking for perfection in any one but self. The arm of flesh will fail us, and to look for perfection in others will not help to perfect but defect us only inasmuch as we shall put into thorough practice their examples.

I again call attention to the fact that the whole ten virgins or church, both high and low, will be slumbering and sleeping spiritually; this condition will tend very largely to ripen, develop, and bring forth full grown fruit from the two kinds of seeds sown. It will also develop the wise and the foolish virgins with those who have true and abiding faith and those that have not.

Now it would be of very little benefit to you, beloved Saints, for me to close this article without giving a detector to both classes, by which every man and woman that was ever truly and lawfully born of water and of the Spirit can detect just where and how he or she stands, and to which family we belong. Now for the detector. I believe that all true Saints will admit that the fruits of the Spirit that come through the preaching of the word are faith, obedience, love, and confidence in the gospel, in Christ, in God, and in the brethren, and when fully born of the Spirit's power after confirmation, all of these fruits were increased to overflowing, when "joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance;" "charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth;" "for if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

These are the fruits of a ripe development of the seeds sown by Christ in the virgin children of his church when they were born of water and the Spirit. Brother, sister, if these fruits abound in us, are they not a sure detector, and can we not tell to which family we belong? But for fear that some may be deceived, let us each one turn detective, and carefully examine self and see if the ripe and fully developed fruit from the seeds sown by the Devil are abound in us, bearing in mind that if the fruits of the Spirit of Christ be not in us we are none of his, are not only slumbering and sleeping, but we are also blind. "But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off [to be both blind and asleep is a terrible condition, but worse yet], and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." "Now the works [or seeds of the enemy sown in or] of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revilings," with faultfinding, backbiting, "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away."

But, says the good brother or sister, I have always thought that all of this class of people would be outside of the church. But it is written, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind; which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just."

This parable fully and conclusively proves that the conditions above described will prevail in the church during the hastening, shaking, and coming up higher time. And it further proves that all may know self and our exact status, whether we are coming up higher or going down lower. Ye shall know them by their fruits.

So, in conclusion I will say, Brethren and and sisters, let us be honest with ourselves, and search the inmost recesses of our souls prayerfully, and carefully applying both detectors, and if we have not the Spirit of Christ with its manifestations, then most assuredly we shall have to take our places in outer darkness, and there weep and wail over our lost opportunities, and to pay the last farthing. O, why will we not put away self and repent before the night cometh, wherein no man can work! Your brother in the everlasting covenant. A. HAWS.

P. S.—I want to call the attention of the ministry and the Saints in general that my little book on the "Sabbath Question" removes all reasonable doubts on that subject, and when read by an honest sabbatarian, it shakes his faith in their theory, and if he is then properly dealt with, he will obey the gospel. So, brethren and sisters, order the book and get your Advent friends to read it, and thereby do them good. A. HAWS.

YOUNG, N. D., March 12.

Editors Herald:—I enjoy reading the letters from other parts of the world, and would also like to see a letter from my own locality if someone else would take it upon himself to write it. We are a small band of Saints here, five families in all; we live in rather an out of the way place, with no church privileges, and find it rather hard to live a righteous life under such circumstances and amid such surroundings as those with which we have to contend. However, we are looking forward to a better and a brighter time.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Our hearts are made glad twice a year by the coming of Bro. William Sparling; he always preaches us a few rousing sermons, which awaken us to a sense of duty and causes our hearts to rejoice that we are Latter Day Saints, and make us long to keep him with us all the time. But there are others waiting for him just as we do, so we have to let him go and do the Master's will.

It has been about four years since the Latter Day Saints first came to this field. Elders Swenson and Sparling came and preached to us a couple of weeks; six were baptized, three were baptized the next summer, two the next, and one last summer. I can say that I have never been sorry that I am a Latter Day Saint. I believe it to be the true Church of Christ, and feel that God has blessed me greatly since I became a member. I often feel that I am not worthy of the many blessings he has bestowed upon me, and I realize that I must mend my ways a great deal yet before I will be entitled to an inheritance in Zion. I see many points wherein I am weak, and would like to move to a place where there are church privileges, and hope it will not be long ere I can.

Yours in the one faith,

ORTONVILLE, Iowa, April 1.

Editors Herald:—The debate which was held here between Elder T. J. Sheldon and Rev. H. Ford of the Christian Church, has now come to a close. It began March 22, and was to last nine nights; but owing to bad weather they lost one night on the last proposition, but made it up by making the speeches longer. The subjects were the Book of Mormon and the Christian Church. When they got through with the Book of Mormon the Christian preacher wanted it put to vote to see whether he had gained the victory or not. When the vote was taken, the chairman said, There was not so much difference as there might have been.

As I was leaving the church I could hear people halloo for Sheldon, and say, "Hurrah for Sheldon; he's on top yet." One man said he never saw a man bulldose as that Christian preacher did. He said he could hardly keep from throwing him out of the window. Not a voice could be heard for Ford; he did not bring proof, but threw dirt in the eyes of the people, and when the people got tired of it, they saw he was not a man that they thought he was. As we pass Ortonville we could hear the people say the Campbellites are now down. So you can see, dear readers, who has won the day.

When it came time for Ford to prove his church, he did not do it, nor never will. All he said about his church was that he belonged to the Drake College in Des Moines, and that he was sent to preach, and that the Saints could not down his church. Well, they did anyhow. Bro. Sheldon proved that the Christian Church was not of God and that it belonged to Rome, the mother of harlots.

I am glad that our man did not throw dirt nor say things that were not true, for the people seem to see that way with Rev. Ford. The Saints here, I think, have gained a great many more friends, and that our faith is better known, and that they see we do not teach those doctrines that the Utah Church does. They know there is a difference between us and them.

When it came time to take a vote on the Christian faith, to see whether it stood the test, the Christians were not willing to vote upon it, so we let them go. But I tell you people, if they had voted, we would have gotten the best of them, from what I can learn outside of the church. Bro. Sheldon was attacked with such stories as Joseph Smith was married to his wives in 1849. Bro. Sheldon showed that Joseph was killed in 1844, and when Mr. Ford saw his mistake it was too late for him to answer.

Bro. Sheldon is a man that is well thought of here, more so than Ford is, and it is the Saints' request that he be sent back here to labor. I believe he can do a good work here. I have been in the church about three years, and can say the more this latter-day work is opposed the stronger I believe it. They cannot down the work, for it is of God, and he will take care of his kingdom. I am only seventeen years old, and am the only one of my people that is in the church. I was baptized by Bro. Morgan, of Perry, Iowa. It is my desire to help the work along as much as I can. May God bless his people in their work.

I remain your brother in the one hope,

WILLIAM C. MEAD.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 3.

Editors Herald:—I wrote you from Warren County, Pennsylvania, in December last. Owing to the stormy weather I was unable to continue the work in that section of the country, so left for Philadelphia, where I labored among the Saints for a few weeks, and then went to Baldwin, Maryland. While in Maryland I succeeded with the help of Bro. Daniel Carter, in opening a new place for preaching, where I think much good can be done; as there was considerable interest manifested, the meetings being well attended, although the weather was very bad most of the time. The Saints from Baldwin also came out and assisted in singing and prayer. Since I left I hear that the gentleman who so kindly arranged the place for our services, has begun to remodel the room or hall, and will have it all nicely arranged in anticipation of our return. It is certainly a pleasure to meet with great-hearted, noble men in the world, who are not afraid of the truth. I left Maryland to attend the district conference at Philadelphia, where I met Bro. W. H. Kelley. We had a joyful time and felt that there was harmony and love among the Saints.

I think the work looks brighter for the district in the future. I remained in Philadelphia until February 24, and then left to attend the conference at Brooklyn, New York, in company with Bro. and Sr. Atkinson. The Sunday school convention and the conference were successful; perhaps not as successful as they may be sometime, but successful. I left for home the day after conference on the Bay line steamer. A night on the deep, then the morning light reveals the old familiar scenes along Narragansett Bay. Home again! Home; how the letters glisten and glitter and shine and soften with tenderness and love, wet with tears and bright with smiles; ah! well sometime, somewhere.

During March I labored at Fiskville and Providence, leaving home for General Conference last Tuesday. Wednesday morning Bro. John Smith and wife, Brethren Bullard and Blanchard, Sisters Sadie and Flossie Fisher, and the writer left the "Hub" for the great West. We were seven. What a variety of good things are done up in packages of sevens. I don't know whether the road had a special grudge against our car, or that the officials understood we all wished to be forcefully ejected at Buffalo, one thing is certain, the car in which we were trying to get some sleep was kicked and pulled, grabbed and yanked, until we thought it would never end. However, morning dawned at last, and the horrors of the night were lost in the gladness of the day. Another night on the road, and here we are at General Conference. Amen.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., March 27.

Editors Herald:—At time of last communication I was at the pleasant home of Bro. F. Palfrey, at Macon. On leaving there went to Bevier and preached four sermons, and attended the Sabbath school convention and district conference, both of which were of interest from start to finish. It must be gratifying to the church to observe the acquirement of knowledge, and the development to conduct and do business of our young people. Preaching at conference was by the missionaries: Arthur Allen, William E. Summerfield, and R. M. Elvin. The afternoon meeting, at which three young brethren were ordained, will long be remembered on account of the peaceful overshadowing of the Holy Spirit that filled our hearts with thankfulness, and set the seal of God's approval to the sacrifice and faithfulness of his people.

By agreement with Bro. Allen we went to Sullivan County. While on the way in the switch yards at Brookfield, I had a close call of instant death; to my heavenly Father be all the praise for his watchcare.

We arrived at Pollock in a blizzard, and on account of neglect or an oversight of the postal service, we were under the necessity of tramping up hill and down brae, o'er most woeful roads. Bro. A. on all fours climbing up the icy hillside, is no proof that a former condition of the "noblest work of God," was that of the quadruped, as some of the agnostic school would have us believe. For a time it looked as if our visit and efforts would be a failure. Because of continued storms and the impassable state of the roads, we thought it best to quit the church and try cottage meetings in the dwellings of the farmers. At times we were encouraged, and anon were discouraged; upon the whole we have reason to believe the cause was helped and the Saints strengthened in their faith. Bro. A. was called home by sickness in his family. I regretted his departure, as I found him to be both a genial and willing workfellow. I held the fort for ten days after Bro. A. left me; and there was a growing interest, until I was compelled to close on account of melting snow and endless mud. At no time in my ministry was I ever blessed with greater freedom of thought or power of utterance; and it was with a degree of reluctance that I left, while outsiders plead with tears for me to abide until the conditions would be favorable to continue the effort, of an assurance the Spirit of God was influencing some.

The closing meetings of my two year field were a joyful seal from on high, and to the Saints in other parts of the field, whom I had expected to visit, but was prevented by the smallpox quarantine.

On leaving the Northeast Missouri district, allow me to say it is not numerically as strong as it was when I began labor there. The cause has not been unfaithfulness upon the part of either missionaries or local officers, but the want of work to earn daily bread scattered many of the flock to the four winds; and notwithstanding that the Devil has been active and led a few into the dark path of sin, I am of the opinion that the moral and the spiritual condition has a more positive and uplifting character for good.

Saints should never, while living and associating with the vain and deceitful world, be satisfied with their surroundings, but ever strive to accept and comply with the Spirit's invitation, "Come up higher." Not only in personal appearance and in the transacting of secular affairs are the Saints to be the "light upon a hill" and the "salt of the earth," but in pure thought and in clean language are they to be examples, that they and their children shall be the head and not the tail in all things pertaining unto salvation and life eternal, that indeed and of a truth they may be able to say unto all mankind, Come on!

The branch here has been improving the opportunity of listening to the elders from distant fields as they rest for a day or more in the "center spot" of Zion while on their way to headquarters to the General Conference. I was privileged to hear those from Australia, Nova Scotia, and California.

In a prayer meeting, not long since, heard an elder say that it would not be more than twenty-five years to the coming of Christ. He repeated his statement several times. My prayer and desire is that God shall grant unto his Saints wisdom, grace, and strength, that they may be ready against the day of Christ's appearing, whether the time thereof shall be far away or near at hand.

While attending a prayer meeting, only a few miles away from here, I heard a Saint say: I want to so live that when God shall gather his Saints to Zion that I shall be worthy." This sounded very strange to my ear. Zion, the pure in heart, are of first importance, that the true and accepted gathering may take place. As to the territory called Zion, my understanding is, that millions will find ample room to live therein, and those that are thus privileged to dwell in the goodly land are to possess "the fullness of the earth" as a result of their labor, and not as a gift of spontaneity of the soil to induce idleness.

The branch here meets with a loss by the departure of their president for Pennsylvania, that he may increase his income, the call would be quite a temptation to many, even to some of us missionaries, especially when our Sunday best becomes threadbare or ragged.

The change of railway and mail servfce at Lamoni causes many Saints to read the Herald twenty-four hours later than before the change was made. Cannot the old time be restored?

Considerable fault is found with the books sent out from the Herald Office. Permit me to whisper a word to the business manager aside from the fault finders, that if indulgent parents would not allow their babies and small children to use their church books as playthings, there would not be so much occasion for fault-finding.

On the 23d I went to Kansas City to attend the funeral of Bro. A. Allen's babe. While we have full trust and confidence in the promised redemption made by the Messiah, yet sadness fills the heart when these darling ones are removed from our care to the land of never-failing flowers.

On the 25th, at request of Bro. W. T. Bozarth, we worshiped with the Saints at Armstrong, and made our first bow from a pulpit in a sunflower State. He whom we seek to serve forgot us not while breaking the bread of life to an attentive audience. If all shall be accomplished at the approaching General Conference that is looked for and expected, it will be without doubt the greatest and grandest gathering of God's people since the memorable day of Pentecost. Whether the cornucopia of Heaven's blessings shall be poured out fully or partially upon the church of God's choice, or for a time withheld, I desire grace to abide.

In bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Editors Herald:—Brn. I. N. White and J. B. Wildermuth stopped at this place enroute from Viroqua, Wisconsin, to Lamoni the 11th March. We obtained the Methodist Protestant church two evenings, and Bro. White delivered two excellent illustrated lectures, with the aid of a beautiful pictorial chart 24x6 feet, on the "Rise and fall of Christianity," to large and attentive audiences. We regretted exceedingly that Bro. White did not have another evening in which to carry out the subject, as he only just arrived at the point where John the Revelator saw the angel fly in the midst of heaven, etc. But he had to leave Wednesday morning in order to meet with his quorum the 15th. We believe, however, that much prejudice was removed and that good to the work here will ultimately follow. It did the Saints good to have Bro. I. N. with them once more, to hear his voice, which we have listened to in years past (as this was his former home) in admonition and counsel, still declaring this beautiful gospel with so much power and earnestness.

Our young brother, J. B. Wildermuth, remained with us a short time and held services in Elder W. C. Nirk's house, preaching eight sermons here and four or five in the Clear Creek branch, six miles south of Rhodes. Bro. Wildermuth is an earnest, energetic worker, and we believe could do a good work in this (Des Moines) district. He buried three precious souls in the waters of baptism while with us: Mrs. Della Anway, Maudie Pyle, and Charlie Richeson. The latter an estimable young man, son of a well-to-do farmer living three miles from town. Two of these are the result of the labor of others; but we believe while Bro. Wildermuth has had the privilege to reap where others have sown, that if the work is looked after here some one will yet reap precious souls from the seed sown by him in this place, as he left several investigating, some of whom we believe are very near the kingdom. After all it matters little who does the sowing or who the reaping, so that souls are gathered into the fold of Christ.

We believe every one who is putting forth their best effort, time, and talent in the Master's service, seeking to warn the people and win souls to Christ, though they make few converts, will be entitled to an equal reward with those who are instrumental in bringing many into the fold; for the reason than none can be responsible for the barrenness of the field into which they are sent to labor, or the prejudice which exists in the minds of the people in some localities that they will not hear. I was forcibly impressed with this thought while reading Bro. D. MacGregor's letter in Herald for March 28, of his experience in British Columbia. Surely such persistent effort and sacrifice to get the gospel before the people merits a rich reward, whether there be any converts made or not.

Many of our experiences in this life we cannot understand, and we vainly question why it should be so; but > "God's purposes will ripen fast, > Unfolding every hour," though we may not be able just now to understand.

> "The bud may have a bitter taste,
> But sweet will be the flower."

I fully expected, up to a few days ago, to attend General Conference; but fear I am destined to disappointment. About ten days ago I contracted a severe cold, which has been steadily growing worse, until at this writing I am scarcely able to sit up. I wished especially to attend the General Sunday School Convention, as we are contemplating making an effort to take up the Sunday school work in this place again, and we feel that the help which we might have obtained at the General Convention is much needed. However, if we do the best we can, God will take care of the results, as the aid of the Holy Spirit is not confined or limited to times, places, or persons.

Praying that the spirit of wisdom and peace may preside over the coming conference and conventions, and that all that may be done may be with an eye single to the glory of God and for the best interest of his work, I am your sister in the gospel,

SELECT READINGS FOR MAY MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

From every family altar there is a ladder to our Father's home on high; as our prayers ascend his angels descend to comfort and strengthen. Never let this ladder be withdrawn or its rounds broken, lest you miss this strength and comfort, and your children lose an influence out of their lives no words can express. "Is this culture of one's home such a trivial matter that it must be neglected to gain a few minutes more for toiling and moiling in the fields of Mammon?" O! our eyes are so often blinded to the real good of life, and we are unconscious of our blindness! Yet we can never be cured till we do realize it. There comes to us an old story from the Orient, of a noble king and his blind daughter. So love-enveloped was her life that she never knew her deprivation; never having seen, she had no desire to see. But the father mourned over her blindness and sought the whole world over for one who could give her sight. At last he found a sage who promised to perform the miracle, but only on one condition—that the maiden should be made conscious of her blindness, and desire the light. Long time they labored with her, telling her of the beauty of the sunlight, of green fields and bright flowers; but she understood them not; patiently they continued their task, painting her word pictures of the majestic forests, the sparkling waterfall, whose music she heard; of the starry heavens; of her mother's face. Slowly, discontent with her blindness awoke in her heart, and grew to longing for the light—and then the miracle was wrought; she saw. Thus to every human heart must come discontent with the lower good, aspirations for the higher before there can come for it the fiat, "Let there be light." When noble aspiration is thus aroused it will lead to its own realization. Orion patiently turning his blind eyes to the sun at length receives his sight. So a blind soul, holding itself to the truth with noble desire, obtains spiritual vision.

Cultivate, in yourself and in your children, noble aspiration; not a mere desire to be great, or famous, but an aspiration for the noblest things in life. Cultivate patience; without it nothing great or noble is ever accomplished. Sometimes we hear of greatness being thrust upon men; but if it be true greatness we shall find that back of it, underlying it, is a long, "patient continuance in well doing." "Patience and the silk-worm," says an Eastern proverb, "transform the mulberry leaf into satin." John Ruskin calls patience the finest and worthiest part of fortitude, and the rarest, too. We spoke of its seed-sowing in Babyhood; all through life it should be cultivated and strengthened.

Cultivate also a thankful spirit; it ennobles and expands life. Sir Moses Montefiore who lately died, bearing on his head a century's crown of years and honors, and in his heart the grateful love of thousands whom his wise beneficence had blessed, had carved over the doorway of his home the motto, "Think and Thank." We have but to think of the many mercies that crown our lives, to fill our hearts with thankfulness. The blessed sunlight coming to us new every morning, the wonderful tracery of beauty with which the fields are covered, the fruitfulness of the earth supplying the body's needs, the sweet companionships that feed the heart, the intellect which delights in grasping all problems, and nature ever presenting new problems to be solved, the myriad mercies coming ever from our Father's hand—if we only think on these we can not help but thank.

Where is the ideal home for the care and culture of children, in city or country? Each has its advantages and its disadvantages, so that of neither can it be said, Here, only, can true manhood and womanhood develop; nor, Here, proper care and culture is impossible. David grew up among the sheep cotes, and Paul in the midst of "no mean city;" yet to each was the grace of God vouchsafed.

Since with most people the location of their home is determined more by necessity than by choice, it is well to study the advantages of each, that wherever we are placed we may learn to be content; we should also consider the disadvantages, as intelligent knowledge is the first step toward overcoming them.

City life develops children more rapidly than country life does. Children in cities are usually "old for their years." The tendency of city life is to make children sharp, precocious. This is especially true of neglected children, as witness the multitude of newsboys and bootblacks in large cities. If you do not believe this, try addressing a mission school in the Five Points of New York, or the Black Hole in Chicago. If you have the slightest inclination to goody-goody talk, we pity you.

There is also a tendency to superficialty in city life; there is such a constant succession of new things attracting attention, children can learn so much by simply keeping their eyes and ears open that it inclines them to think they know more than they do, and disinclines to the hard study necessary if they would know as much as they think they do.

The teaching of the street forms a very important factor in the education of every city child. There is a good element in this; there are also very bad ones. Everywhere, in saloons, gambling houses, and theatres, vice is made attractive; bad associations are ever at hand, and vile literature is thrust upon them at every turn. Another disadvantage is that in many city homes there is lack of fresh air within doors, and lack of opportunity for outdoor play, except on the streets.

As we saw in the chapter on Occupations, the work of fathers in the city is not usually such as their boys can share with them; the same is true, in a less degree, with mothers and daughters. From this comes the danger that children will grow to feel work dishonorable, seeing it done only by servants. Again, most city fathers are too busy to play with their children, and often city mothers find so much to do in response to continual demands of society or philanthropy, they neglect this part of their children's education. Remember, "No one is required by any vows or consecration to keep other men's vineyards so faithfully that he can not keep his own."

On the other hand, city life presents many advantages. Often it affords superior school opportunities, though it must be confessed some of the best schools we know are in the country. It affords advantages in the way of libraries, picture galleries, concerts, and lectures; also the privilege of seeing and hearing noble men and women; and this exerts a great influence upon children. When Washington Irving was five years old George Washington visited New York City. His father carried the child in his arms to Washington, who laid his hand on the little boy's head and spoke pleasant words to him. "The touch of that hand never left my head," said Irving, after he had gained the ear of the world.

As a general thing, we think that more pains are taken to make the inside of city homes attractive. Inexpensive adornments, which brighten up a home wonderfully, are displayed in every shop window, and few homes are without them. Books, papers, and pictures, being so easily attainable, are found in greater profusion than in country homes.

City life gives better training in benevolence. Appeals to our sympathies and purses are so frequent that unless one is more hard-hearted than most children are, charitable instincts will be developed into generous deeds. There are homes for the friendless, orphan asylums, foundlings' homes, and other things appealing directly to childish sympathy. Children can be more easily trained to give with these objects right before them, than they can by simply hearing about them.—Childhood: its Care and Culture.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

I desire the Saints, and especially the Prayer Union, to pray for me, that if it is God's will, he will heal my eyes. For the past two or three years they have been very weak and painful. I have received aid through administration. I do not know the cause of this affliction, but I know God is able to heal. Pray that all pain and weakness may be removed. BELLE E. LEISE.

Sister Mary S. Fisk, of Guide Rock, Nebraska, asks the prayers of the Prayer Union if it is the Lord's will she may be healed of catarrh and lagrippe.

Sr. Elizabeth Grimmett, of Bloomington, Idaho, earnestly requests your faith and prayers in her behalf that it may please God to restore her to health.

Sunday School Associations.

LITTLE SIOUX.

Convention met at Magnolia, Iowa, March 2, 1900; J. F. Mintun superintendent, S. B. Kibler assistant, Nellie Ballantyne secretary. Short speeches by T. W. Worsencroft, S. B. Kibler, Margaret Myers, F. J. Seeley, and Sr. Erickson. Report of committee on credentials read and accepted. By motion, delegates present from Logan, Mondamin, Missouri Valley, and West Union Center schools, were permitted to take part in convention, as their credentials were not present. The following schools reported: Bigler's Grove, West Union Center, Missouri Valley, Little Sioux, Woodbine, Pleasant Valley, Mondamin, Magnolia, Union Center, Sunny Glen, Sloan, Onawa, Persia, and Logan. Reports were read from superintendents of schools. District officials reported. Treasurer was authorized to complete her report by including in it all money she may receive up to close of convention, as some had not yet been received by her. Treasurer's report: On hand last report $1.04; received since $9.53; paid out $24; on hand $10.33. Officers chosen for the year: J. F. Mintun superintendent, S. B. Kibler assistant, Lenna Strand secretary, Nellie Ballantyne treasurer, Anna Stuart librarian. Delegates to General Convention: J. F. Mintun, A. M. Fyrando, S. B. Kibler, G. M. Scott, W. T. Fallon, Sarah Hoffman, and Frank Hill. By motion the treasurer was authorized to pay bills presented by district superintendent and secretary. Motion prevailed that the sum of eight dollars be given Sr. Hoffman to pay expenses to General Convention. Motion prevailed that we organize a district association of Religio. The officers of the district Sunday school association were selected to act as officers of Religio until further election was provided for. Adjourned to meet at Little Sioux.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

Galland's Grove district Sunday school association convened at Deloit, Iowa, February 16 to 18; Superintendent William McKim in the chair, Dora Young secretary pro tem. Schools reporting: Dow City, Galland's Grove, Auburn, Pilot Rock, Benan, Deloit, Harlan, and Salem; no report from Coalville. Reports of officers: Superintendent McKim visited four or five schools; assistant superintendent J. M. Baker, visited six schools. Treasurer, Lora Duckett, reported balance of $8 92 on hand. Librarian, Dora Young, reported two libraries in district: one at Auburn and one at Deloit. The following resolution was adopted: "Feeling the need of a general Sunday school missionary, we therefore ask the delegates of this Galland's Grove district convention to present a request to the General Convention to request the church authorities for such missionary, the Sunday school and Religio societies defraying expenses of said missionary." The following officers were elected: J. M. Baker, superintendent; William McKim, assistant superintendent; Fred Shumate, secretary; Lora Duckett, treasurer; Dora Young, librarian; James Pearsall, chorister. Adjourned to Auburn at call of committee.

VOTE OF CONDOLENCE.

The ministry and membership of the London branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints having heard with unfeigned regret of the decease of Bro. Stephen Woods, late of Lamoni, Iowa, North America; who had, during his lifetime, generously assisted in the erection of our chapel building, this branch now, therefore, desires to extend its sincere sympathy and condolence to the widow, in this her heavy trial and bereavement; also to any other survivors dear to our late departed brother who now "resteth from his labors, and his works shall folllow him." —Rev. 14: 13.

Given with the concurrence of the entire branch, this 11th day of March, 1900.

Signed on behalf of the branch.

RICHARD CLIFT, President.
F. R. TUBB, Clerk.

MARRIED.

MALCOR—EVANS. — At the residence of Bro. and Sr. H. A. Stebbins, Lamoni, Iowa, April 12, 1900, Bro. Clement Malcor and Sr. Mary A. Evans were united in marriage. They were present attending conference from Lucas, Iowa, and had arranged beforehand for the ceremony, Bro. Stebbins officiating. The bride is a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Edward R. Evans, of Lucas, and a granddaughter of Elder John T. Phillips, a former missionary to Wales.

DIED.

EVANS.—Sr. Margaret Evans was born at Bevier, Missouri, October 26, 1881; was baptized August 11, 1896; died April 4, 1900. Funeral services in the Saints' church, discourse by Elder J. A. Tanner. She was well respected by all, as was shown by the large attendance of friends. She belonged to the order of Good Templars, who conducted services at the cemetery. Was also a member of Zion's Religio. She leaves father, mother, two brothers, and two sisters, and a number of other relatives. May the Giver of all good comfort them.

HOLT.—Ida May Holt, born September 16, 1899; blessed October 29, 1899, by Elder J. D. Jones; died November 5, 1899. Also, the other twin, Lloyd Charles Holt, born September 16, 1899; blessed October 29, 1899, by Elder John Chisnall; died November 10, 1899. Funeral sermon of both from the house, by Elder S. Alma Whitehouse.

GREENWOOD.—At the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, on the night of April 9, 1900, Sr. Lydia A. Greenwood, aged 70 years, 1 month, and 7 days. She had a paralytic stroke in 1895, and has been feeble ever since. She was born in Oswego County, New York, and her parents were members of the old organization, and named Cranston. After her marriage she removed to California, and many years later she united with the Reorganized Church, being baptized by Elder Walter Scott, February 4, 1896. She has a son in Utah and a daughter in Nevada. The funeral services were held at the "Home," the sermon being preached by Elder H. A. Stebbins, and Elder John Wahlstrom offered the prayer.

CROWSON.—At Alton, Illinois, March 29, 1900, Charles Crowson, aged 62 years, 2 months, 17 days; born in Wednesbury, England, January 12, 1837. United with the church when a boy. He leaves a wife, five daughters, two sons, and ten grandchildren to mourn. The large gathering at the services and at the grave bespoke the esteem with which Bro. Crowson was held by the citizens of Alton. Funeral conducted by Priest George F. Barraclough.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

Lamoni Sanitarium.

Believing that there should be a place where Saints and others who have not faith to be healed can be treated with "herbs and mild food" by "a friend" and where surgical and other means can be used if needed, I have decided to open a sanitarium at Lamoni, Iowa, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, also a surgical department where operations can be done with skill and modern appliances.

Special attention will be given to diseases of women, ruptures, piles, and tumors. In these disorders I have had large experience. Testimonials of cures sent on application.

Specialists from Chicago and St. Joseph will be consulted in difficult cases. Chronic diseases will be treated largely by baths, massage, and electricity.

I have practiced medicine and surgery for eighteen years. I have taken special courses in the above-named diseases at New York City, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis hospitals.

Temporary rooms have been engaged and patients can be received at any time. Consultations free. Write to me about your case.

THE GOLDEN RULE AS A LAW OF LIFE.

REPRESENTATIVE PUBLIC MEN GIVE THEIR VIEWS AS TO ITS APPLICABILITY TO THE EVERYDAY AFFAIRS OF THE WORLD.

"And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 11: 31.

After the lapse of many centuries since the Golden Rule was set forth by Christ as a guide for human conduct, the world is still discussing its applicability to the problems of life as they pertain to the relations of individuals or classes in society, and to those of nations in the broader arena of the world's progress. Those who hope for the dominance of justice rather than of might in the affairs of nations took courage from the deliberations of the peace conference at The Hague, wherein the Golden Rule was referred to as embodying a principle that should maintain in the settlement of international dissensions. Again in the trust conference held last fall in Chicago the precept enunciated by Christ was upheld by many as a rule that should be applied to the perplexing problems that arise concerning the relations between capital and labor, employer and employee.

Soon after that conference Carroll D. Wright, Labor Commissioner of the United States, said in an interview: "It is my opinion that the only permanent solution of the labor problem is to be found in a thorough understanding of the mutual responsibilities and obligations of the employer and employee. In other words, a practical application of the Golden Rule. Arbitration, coöperation, and the various other remedies which have been suggested I regard simply as steps in the right direction."

For the purpose of setting forth their views on the subject the Tribune has invited a number of men in public life to answer a list of questions relating to the meaning of the Golden Rule and its applicability to the everyday affairs of men. Some have answered these questions categorically and some in a general way. The questions asked and the answers received are given herewith, and indicate a common approval of the Golden Rule as a guide for men to follow in their dealings with the world and each other.

THE QUESTIONS ASKED.

1. What is your understanding of the exact and full meaning of the Golden Rule.

2. Do you believe that it is a practicable rule to follow at all times, in the home, in society, and in business?

3. Do you believe that its application in all the affairs of the industrial world would put an end to labor discussions and bring about full harmony among all the working forces of mankind?

4. What progress, in your opinion, has been made in the last quarter of a century in this respect?

5. Would you object to having the Golden Rule taught in the public schools?

6. In what way can the Golden Rule best be made popular and its application to daily life a reality?

JOHN SHERMAN'S ANSWER.

In answer to your questions, I say as to No. 1 that in its general terms it is admirable, but there should be added these words: "Under like terms and conditions." Without these words this Golden Rule would demand of us a degree of acquiescence that few if any would give. It could not be and will not be followed in the home, in society, and in business.

Any effort to apply it to labor discussions would be futile among all the working forces of mankind. No doubt the power of labor has greatly advanced, and this is a fortunate result of our schools and the general education of all classes of our people.

I see no use of teaching the Golden Rule in the public schools, as it is more properly taught in the contest between labor and capital in the broad field of competition in the innumerable industries that now occupy our people.

REV. R. A. WHITE.

1. I understand the Golden Rule to mean just what it says. Treat other people in all matters just as you would honestly desire them to treat you in similar matters and under similar circumstances.

2. The Golden Rule is entirely practicable if people will practice it. I see no clear indications that people are willing to adopt it as a rule of life. The difficulty is not in any inherent impracticability of the rule itself, but in the disinclination of the majority of people to make the experiment.

3. No; but it would greatly help in such matters. Industrial evils are the result of lack of knowledge as well as of selfishness. The Golden Rule could only temper, but not end, misunderstandings and troubles resulting from lack of knowledge. But it would end such troubles as result from instances where employer and employee know what ought to be done to be fair and honest, but through greed or selfishness refuse to do it.

4. In legal restrictive measures tending to modify the spirit of selfishness in industry considerable progress has been made. But law is external and repressive. The growth of the spirit of the Golden Rule in the minds and sympathies of employers and employees is another matter. I think there has been some progress in this direction also, but in no sense commensurate with industrial needs. Industry is still in the main a battle where the spoils are to the strong.

5. No. On the contrary, to fail to teach the Golden Rule in the public schools is to fail at a most fundamental point in the child's education.

6. Let a few churches, ministers, newspapers, and reformers generally practice the Golden Rule, just as an object lesson. Let our divinity schools educate ministers in sociology, as well as theology; in economics, as well as exegesis. Let them be educated in social conditions here in this world, then let them apply the Golden Rule to existing social and industrial conditions instead of to conditions in the time of Moses. Let the churches cease fighting imaginary devils with horns and hoofs and turn their attention to devils in dress suits or in homespun. But best of all, let any or all who believe in the Golden Rule put it into practice as best they may.

REV. F. B. O. SMITH.

1. The Golden Rule seems to teach that I shall deal with the other man as though dealing with myself and my own, trying all the time to put myself in his place. Jesus did to others and for them what he would not have them do for him, as the mother does for her child. Immediately following the Golden Rule Jesus said: "If ye love them that love you, what thank have ye? For even sinners love those who love them; but love your enemies and do them good, and lend, despairing of no man, and ye shall be the sons of the Most High, for he is kind toward the unthankful and the evil." So self-preservation and selfishness, human nature's first law, is made to interpret and help the other man. This attitude toward individuals is to be our attitude toward society, the business world, and government.

2. This rule is practicable. Truth and duty go hand-in-hand. When the husband and wife, employer and employed, understand and fully sympathize with each other love will find a solution for the problems of the home and business. If it fails, then marriage is a failure, and business is war instead of the peaceful pursuit of happiness. But love never fails; we fail to love.

3. If the Golden Rule is applied to the intricate machineries of the industrial world it will adjust all differences, providing its enforcement is by love rather than law.

4. It would require large space to record and classify the details which indicate the advance the world has made toward harmonizing the working forces of mankind in the last quarter of a century, but the progress has been steady and remarkable.

5. The Golden Rule should be taught the children in the public schools, and this will mean a study of the manifold relations of men that should run through the grades from the primary to the high school. How can the employee put himself in the place of the employer unless he knows something of the trials of his employer's position?

6. The Golden Rule can only be made popular by teaching men that even the most selfish as well as the highest considerations demand its application. Men need information, and they need more. Back of conduct is character, which must be cultivated before the highest application of the rule can be expected, since justice and love without must be the expression of love and justice within. But this is to make men Christians, for men must become Christians in character before they can become Christians in conduct.

JAMES A. MOUNT, GOVERNOR OF INDIANA.

The Golden Rule involves a principle founded upon love. "Let each esteem other better than himself and so fulfill the perfect law." Selfishness and greed are the disturbing elements in the industrial world. We are not likely to reach a plane of ethics until the millennium, when the principles of the Golden Rule will be practiced. Capital and labor, employer and employee, should study their interdependence. This is the foundation upon which the Golden Rule must rest. I would exalt its principles. I would make it the bedrock. All the multiplied industries, callings, pursuits, professions, are so intricately connected, so interwoven, so mutually dependent, that all permanent prosperity must be in common and shared by all. The arbitration of differences between employee and employer, thus settling in a court of reason instead of among impassioned men, their grievances, is an evidence of progress and is calculated to extol the idea of mutual interest and mutual dependence, mutual concession and mutual forbearance. Public speakers instead of arraying class against class should seek to unify, to conciliate, to unite, to minimize difference and magnify dependence. The press should endeavor to mold public sentiment along these lines. This would teach patriotism instead of demagogy. Coupled with the foregoing rules for economic guidance I would add, as a rule for the home and society, forbearance, gentleness, kindness, forgiveness.

PROF. DAVID KINLEY, UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS.

1. The Golden Rule is, it seems to me, a rule of personal conduct. It is a command to be just and charitable in all our dealings with one another. Its practice involves, therefore, as many standards of justice and charity as there are individuals.

2. In a sense, yes. What is practicable depends, however, upon conditions which have their origin partly in the minds of individuals. The performance of the full measure of justice to one may make us unable to be helpful to another.

3. There are several reasons why the application of the Golden Rule in the affairs of the industrial world would not produce harmony of economic class interests. In the first place, there are different opinions of what would be equitable in a given set of circumstances. There would still be disputes about the fair rate of wages and the proper recognition of the interest of the workingman in the business. If such disputes were to be avoided, it could be only by one party's yielding to the other. The more charitably inclined would be the one to yield, yet his view might be the just view and the one most advantageous to society. Our social duty may conflict with our duty to particular individuals. The social duty is the higher, yet its performance might cause dispute. It is hard to say whether justice or kindness is, in a given case, the primary duty.

4. I believe that the general level of morals has risen much in the last quarter of a century and that there is a more widespread and earnest desire for the establishment of justice and kindness in industrial relations.

5. I certainly think that the Golden Rule should be taught in the public schools. Our present educational system is behind the times in one important particular. It has not freed itself from the influences of the individualistic philosophy of the last generation. Its aim is still "the harmonious development of the powers of the individual." The social aim in education is almost wholly ignored. Our boys and girls should be educated for social life.

6. It is hard to say how the Golden Rule may best be made popular. It is a matter of the heart. Popularity, which leads to the adoption of a given course of conduct because it is the fashion, would kill the spirit of the rule. We can induce others to obey it only by doing so ourselves.

CHARLES F. THWING, PRESIDENT OF ADELBERT COLLEGE.

1. The interpretation of the exact and full meaning of the Golden Rule is: First, that I should give to the other man justice; second, that I should give unto others such a degree of love and good will as I would desire to receive from them.

2. By all means.

3. I do not think that the application of the rule would put an end to labor discussions and produce full harmony. Does a man ever cease discussing with himself, or does he ever feel in perfect relations with himself? But it is safe to say that the application of this rule would be of great value in ending unworthy discussions and in creating peace.

4. I think that each quarter century is lifting man from his animalism into what may be called a state of humanism. This progress has been more marked in the last twenty-five years than in any other period.

5. I should be glad to see the Golden Rule taught in the public schools, or, indeed, in any school—and of course its essence is now taught in our schools.

6. One of the best methods of teaching the Golden Rule is through example and through story, rather than through the direct presentation of the formal theory. Practical ethics belongs to the lower grades of the school; theoretical ethics only to the higher.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

TUESDAY, APRIL 17.

Regular morning prayer service was in charge of Brn. S. F. Cushman and W. M. Self. Bro. F. M. Cooper was the speaker at the forenoon preaching service. He was assisted by Bro. John Shields.

At two p. m. business session convened, Pres. A. H. Smith in the chair. "God is marshaling his army," was sung, after which Bro. J. W. Wight offered prayer. The minutes of previous session were read and approved.

The election of a Board of Trustees for Graceland College was resumed. Of those previously nominated, Bro. W. A. Hopkins declined. The following named were then nominated: Brn. S. V. Bailey, John Smith, F. M. Smith, Sr. W. R. Pickering (declined), and Bro. William Leeka. Being put to rising vote, the result was as follows: William Anderson 233, R. M. Elvin 190, E. L. Kelley 93, J. H. Hansen 188, I. W. Allender 190, Joseph Smith 21, Daniel Anderson 192, J. W. Wight 47, J. A. Gunsolley 192, S. V. Bailey 74, John Smith 48, F. M. Smith 76, William Leeka 130. The chair then declared the choice of the body to be William Anderson, Daniel Anderson, J. A. Gunsolley, R. M. Elvin, I. W. Allender, J. H. Hansen, and William Leeka, and this selection was made unanimous.

Resolution pertaining to closing of the college was then taken from the table. The time of each speaker was limited by vote to five minutes, and a resolution that the previous question should not obtain but by a two-thirds vote was passed. Twenty-two spoke to the question. Near the close of the discussion, by vote, Prof. R. A. Harkness, President of Graceland, was requested to give his views, which he did. The previous question was called, and the vote on the original motion was taken, 51 voting for, 167 against. It was therefore declared lost.

A motion prevailed that so much of the report of the High Priests' Quorum as refers to ordinations be referred to the Quorum of Twelve for examination.

A motion to request Bro. G. T. Griffiths to repeat his lecture on the priesthood was proposed, but the brother offered to appear with his chart before a priesthood meeting and answer questions that might be asked, and the motion was lost. "There is a land immortal," was sung, and President Joseph Smith dismissed the assembly.

At the evening hour President Joseph Smith addressed the conference on the subject of the gathering. He was assisted by Brn. E. L. Kelley and R. M. Elvin.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18.

Brn. Andrew Barr and William Summerfield were in charge of the nine a. m. prayer service. At the morning preaching service Bro. W. E. Peak addressed the congregation, assisted by Bro. Swen Swensen.

Business session convened at the usual hour, President Joseph Smith presiding. The assembly sang, "Awake, ye Saints of God, awake," and Bro. J. M. Terry offered prayer. The minutes were received as read.

The First Quorum of Seventy reported that they had held eight joint sessions and six others, in some of which the Bishopric, by invitation, had been present. They had discussed several subjects of deep interest, and reported that deep earnestness, the spirit of peace, and much anxiety to come to a better unity and understanding of duty had characterized all their sessions. The report recommended that the reports of all General Conference appointees be published in the HERALD in tabular form previous to convening of conference, as indicated in the blank appended. The report was received and spread upon the minutes and the recommendations were adopted.

The chair announced that all new business, except that growing out of the regular routine of quorum and committee reports, etc., must be in hand during the present day's session.

A motion to take up that part of the report of the Board of Publication referring to the purchase of Zion's Ensign obtained, and it was read. In brief, it stated that on November 7, 1898, the entire plant of Zion's Ensign at Independence, Missouri, including building and business, was purchased for $5,500.00. A motion to approve the action of the Board in this matter was moved, discussed at some length, and on being put to vote, the motion obtained. A resolution was also passed that the Board of Publication be instructed and authorized to secure a proper transfer of the Ensign property to the church at the earliest practicable moment.

Bro. J. H. Hansen, for the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, made a brief announcement. Some time ago an effort had been made to secure one hundred persons who would purchase five-year scholarship tickets at $25.00 per year, and thus insure the running expenses without further increasing the debt. Thirty-five had been secured, and now the Board desired to find sixty-five more who would take scholarships, and thus provide running expenses for the next year.

The regular order was then proceeded with and the report of Second Quorum of Seventy was read: Total enrollment 46; present 31. Ten joint sessions and 8 others had been held. Forty-two reports showed 11,575 sermons, 761 baptisms, 736 confirmations, 528 children blessed, 79 ordinations, 4,069 administrations, 17 debates, served on 18 elders' courts, organized 2 branches, married 58 couples. It was received and spread on the minutes.

The committee on the communication from Fanning, Kansas, branch reported, recommending that the matter be referred to the missionary in charge of Kansas. The recommendation was adopted.

A resolution was passed that the Board of Publication provide blanks to be sent to the missionaries as early as January 1 of each year, upon which they are to report to Church Secretary not later than March 1 to compile for publication in the HERALD; said blanks to be in accordance with the tabulated form of reporting as previously adopted.

The chair announced that there was one vacancy in the High Council, caused by the death of Bro. David Dancer, and that it was necessary it should be filled. His two counselors concurring, he nominated High Priest J. M. Baker to occupy the place, and the nomination was ratified by conference. It was also voted that the ordination be provided for before the close of the day's session.

The chairman requested the President of the High Priests' Quorum to nominate members pro tem. to fill vacancies in the High Council caused by members being called away.

The committee appointed to consider appeal of C. I. Potts vs. Fall River branch presented a majority

www.LatterDayTruth.org

and a minority report. Separate motions to adopt the minority and majority reports were made, following which the whole matter was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

The Twelve reported in the matter of appeal from Belleville, Illinois, branch against action of St. Louis district, that in their opinion the action of St. Louis district conference should be sustained. The report was adopted by the body.

The action of conference two years ago, authorizing the Bishopric to make provision for the liquidation of the college debt, was reaffirmed.

The Church Librarian reported, tendering also his resignation. A motion to adopt the report and accept the resignation prevailed. Being authorized by vote, he nominated Bro. F. E. Cochran as his successor, which was approved by the conference.

A quorum of deacons, not yet numbered, reported that they met on the evening of the 13th, Brn. J. H. Lake and G. T. Griffiths of the Twelve present, who organized them into a quorum, with Bro. R. Nelson president, Bro. E. Nelson first counselor, and Bro. W. Bowlby second counselor. The report was approved.

The Third Quorum of Priests reported that four of their number had been ordained elders and six had been dropped for failing to report, making ten vacancies. Ten had been received, and the quorum was now full. Thirty-seven reports showed 862 sermons preached, assisted 503 times; 27 baptisms; administered the sacrament 179 times, assisted 213 times; presided over 509 prayer meetings, assisted 175 times; 5 marriages; assisted to ordain 3; attended 689 other meetings; 572 official visits.

A motion providing a plan for raising funds to pay off the debt on Graceland College was referred to the Bishopric.

The Second Quorum of Priests presented a report. Nine members had been dropped for failure to report, and nine had been received. Summary of 27 reports showed 1,374 sermons, 4 lectures, 41 baptisms, administered sacrament 338 times, presided in 373 meetings, 6 marriages, 1 ordination, assisted in 507 other meetings.

Fifth Quorum of Elders reported 28 members present, six meetings held. They had sustained a loss of 14, and had enrolled 16. An aggregate of the 86 reports received was: Sermons 6,654, assisted 2,344; held 1,897 other meetings; baptized 476; confirmed 456; administered to the sick 4,983 times; blessed 282 children; 58 marriages; ordained 31.

Fourth Quorum of Elders: Twenty members present, 10 sessions; 37 reports showed 3,712 sermons, 170 baptisms, 185 confirmations, children blessed 153, ordinations 38, administrations to sick 2,244, marriages 50, branches organized 5. Five deaths, 2 existing vacancies, and 32 dropped for inactivity and not reporting. Twenty-four new members had been received, leaving 16 vacancies.

First Quorum of Priests: One session held. Twenty-four priests reported for two years, showing 580 sermons, 31 baptisms, administered the sacrament 195 times, presided over 385 meetings, 7 marriages, 2 ordinations. Membership two years ago 31; present membership 48.

A report was presented showing that on April 16, at 7:30 p. m., Brethren Lake and Kelley of the Twelve organized six brethren into a quorum of teachers, ordaining Bro. B. F. Ordway as its president, Bro. J. R. Osborn counselor. The report was approved.

First Quorum of Elders: Five meetings held, 28 members present; 70 had been heard from, 64 of whom reported 3,401 sermons, 210 baptisms, 142 confirmations, 14 ordinations, 223 children blessed, 2,655 administrations, 61 marriages.

The Bishopric presented the following:—

For the purpose of paying off the debt against Graceland College, subscriptions to the number of one thousand shall be taken of $25 each, to be paid when the full number has been obtained. Persons who pay more than this amount shall be counted per amount subscribed on the $25 basis. Parties who cannot pay full amount of one shall be counted as a part in proportion to amount until the full one thousand subscriptions are had.

The resolution was discussed and adopted.

By resolution duly passed, all quorums were instructed, in making reports to General Conference, to include names of members received into or dropped from said quorums.

Reports from Zion's Religio-Literary Society and the General Sunday School Association were read and spread on the minutes.

Brn. J. R. Lambert and Heman C. Smith presented a document regarding the membership of D. H. Bays, which was referred to a committee of Brn. M. H. Bond, W. A. McDowell, and James Craig, they to recommend action in the matter.

The President stated that but seven of the High Council were then present, and nominated the following named high priests to temporarily complete the proper number; viz., Brn. J. W. Waldsmith, F. M. Weld, J. S. Snively, M. H. Forscutt, J. R. Evans. The nominations were approved.

President W. H. Kelley, being requested by the President to provide for the ordination of Bro. J. M. Baker as a councilor in the High Council, made such provision, and the brother was ordained by Presidents Joseph Smith and W. H. Kelley, the former being spokesman.

The Church Librarian made a statement, requesting that the library be remembered by those in a position to make donations to it.

It was moved and adopted that all missionaries and delegates present are requested to remain until the close of conference.

Four brethren presented notice that at next General Conference a resolution would be introduced to change the present system of delegate representation.

Bishop Kelley, on behalf of members of the Aaronic priesthood, read notice of proposed changes in the Rules of Representation, as published in HERALD of January 10, 1900.

A resolution accepting the gift of a beautiful shell picture presented by Bro. H. T. Watson with the request that it be hung in the temple when built, was passed, and a copy of the resolution was ordered sent the brother.

A request from a committee of the Second Seventy to make compilation of apparent discrepancies in church publications was read and included in the minutes.

A request from the Sunday School Improvement Committee was read and included in the minutes.

Announcements were made, among them one providing for a meeting of the priesthood in fasting and prayer in the lower auditorium at 7:30 p. m. Adjournment was then taken, "O for a faith that will not shrink," was sung, and Bro. Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

Bro. C. R. Duncan was in charge of the evening preaching service. The speaker, Bro. I. N. White, used a large chart to illustrate his effort. At the same hour a meeting composed of the ministry present, except those engaged in the High Council and in other duties, met in the lower room. Brn. W. H. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard were in charge. The meeting was devoted to prayer and was characterized by a spirit of deep interest and earnestness. One hundred and forty-one were present.

THURSDAY, APRIL 19.

A general meeting of the Daughters of Zion was held at nine a. m. in the lower rooms, Sr. M. E. Hulmes in charge. The work was shown to be in good condition by both written and oral reports from general officers and local organizations. Sisters B. C. Smith, H. H. Robinson, M. E. Hulmes, Clara Frick, and E. Etzenhouser were chosen Advisory Committee for ensuing term, Sr. C. B. Stebbins Recording Secretary, and Sr. Anna Murphy Treasurer. Other business of importance was transacted.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The morning prayer and testimony service was in charge of Brn. D. Hougas and James Craig. Bro. L. R. Devore addressed the assembly at 10:45, assisted by Bro. W. H. Kephart.

Business session convened at usual hour. Hymn No. 183, Saints' Harp, was sung, and Bro. E. H. Durand offered the opening prayer. The minutes were approved.

The Quorum of Twelve reported the following action in the case of Bro. E. C. Briggs: "Resolved that Bro. Briggs be suspended from quorum privileges until such time as he makes such restitution as the quorum shall decide sufficient to reinstate him." The report was spread upon the minutes.

The committee in case of D. H. Bays reported, recommending that this conference annul the action of General Conference of 1889 (see HERALD, vol. 36, p. 267) in which the Church Secretary was instructed to issue a letter of removal to D. H. Bays, and that the missionary in charge of Galland's Grove district be instructed to regulate this case according to the law contained in Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7. The report, including the recommendations, was adopted.

Resolutions of respect regarding the death of Bro. J. T. Kinnaman were presented by a committee from the Third Quorum of Elders, and included in the minutes.

A resolution providing that the Bishop be authorized to furnish the ministry, free of cost, with a book of blank certificates of baptism and confirmation, was laid on the table.

The officers of the Fourth Quorum of Elders requested that the list of elders proposed for the organization of a new quorum be referred to the Fourth Quorum for enrollment, and it was so ordered.

The High Priests' Quorum reported 35 present at this conference. Fifty-seven had reported. Of these only 41 had kept statistics, the totals of these being, for two years, 4,800 sermons, 341 baptisms, 360 confirmed, 58 ordained, 291 children blessed, 3,033 administrations, 98 marriages. They also recommended what had been concurred in by the Presidency and Twelve, viz., that the following-named brethren be ordained to the office of high priest: M. H. Cook, Henry Kemp, John Midgorden, Robert Winning, J. A. Gunsolley, A. E. Mortimer, Robert McKenzie, M. H. Bond, A. H. Parsons, W. R. Pickering, J. T. Davis, W. H. Pease, G. P. Lambert, F. B. Blair, F. A. Smith, J. A. Tanner, S. B. Kibler, A. M. Fyrando, David Snobeling, I. N. Roberts, A. J. Moore, T. W. Williams, J. F. Burton, J. B. Roush, John Smith, G. A. Smith, C. J. Hunt, M. M. Turpen, C. A. Parkin, J. B. Carmichael, Alonzo Jones. W. A. McDowell, A. V. Closson, F. M. Sheehy, Ellis Short, John Zimermann. It was moved to approve the nominations and provide for the ordinations. Before the vote was taken, those present, viz., Brn. Henry Kemp, J. A. Gunsolley, M. H. Bond, A. H. Parsons, J. T. Davis, F. B. Blair, F. A. Smith, I. N. Roberts, A. J. Moore, T. W. Williams, John Smith, G. A. Smith, M. M. Turpen, W. A. McDowell, A. V. Closson, and F. M. Sheehy, expressed themselves as willing to accept, and those absent were indorsed by the statements of many present. The vote was taken by show of the right hand, and the motion was unanimously adopted.

The report of the Second Seventy, deferred from the 9th, was taken up. Brn. W. D. Ellis, A. M. Chase, J. D. Stead, and F. A. Russell, present, stated their willingness to accept subject to the will of the body. Bro. A. J. Keck, asking that action in his case be deferred, the nomination was referred back to the Second Seventy. The ordination of Bro. J. R. Beckley, not present, to the Second Seventy, and of Bro. J. W. Morgan, not present, to the First Seventy, were approved and their ordinations ordered provided for, subject to their acceptance. Those present and those absent were all indorsed by numbers present, and the ordinations were approved by a unanimous vote taken by showing of right hand.

By motion, provision was made for the ordination of all present selected therefor at 7:30 p. m. in the lower auditorium. The ordinations of all not present were referred to the respective missionaries in charge where such parties reside, upon their acceptance.

Attention was called to the provision made by the conference of 1898 for the ordination of Bro. G. J. Waller as a high priest, and to the fact that said provision still held good.

Brn. T. J. Sheldon, G. J. Whitehead, and J. M. Brown were constituted a committee to consider evidence of the calling of Bro. W. H. Fuller.

Bro. F. G. Pitt asked if an elder in a foreign land, not enrolled in a quorum, could be ordained a Seventy. The chair stated the opinion that unless objected to his name could be presented to the Presidents of Seventy for consideration. Bro. James McKiernan, of the Presidents of Seventy, stated they had considered their safety in such matters lay in adhering strictly to the law.

A resolution providing that in matters involving the expenditure of $5,000 or more, said expenditures should not be made until consent thereto could be had by the various districts of the church at large was moved, discussed, and laid on the table.

Announcements followed, "O watch, and fight, and pray," was sung, and Pres. Joseph Smith dismissed the assembly.

At 7:30 p. m. Bro. I. M. Smith addressed the conference, assisted by Bro. O. B. Thomas. At the same hour Bro. D. M. Rudd spoke at the Saints' Home, assisted by Bro. Frederick Gregory.

Ordination meeting convened in the lower auditorium at 7:45 p. m., in charge of Bro. W. H. Kelley. Hymn No. 156 was sung. Prayer by Bro. T. W. Williams. The following named brethren were then ordained to the office of Seventy: W. D. Ellis by Heman C. Smith and J. W. Wight; A. M. Chase by J. H. Lake and I. N. White; F. A. Russell by G. T. Griffiths and Duncan Campbell; J. D. Stead by R. C. Evans and G. H. Hilliard. G. W. Blair was ordained President of Second Quorum of Teachers by J. W. Wight and Heman C. Smith. A. K. Anderson was ordain First Counselor in the Second Quorum of Teachers by I. N. White and J. H. Lake. N. W. Smith was ordained Second Counselor in the Second Quorum of Teachers by G. H. Hilliard and D. Campbell. The following named were then ordained to the office of high priest: T. W. Williams by J. W. Wight and Heman C. Smith; Henry Kemp by W. H. Kelley and R. May; A. J. Moore by J. H. Lake and I. N. White; J. A. Gunsolley by G. H. Hilliard and R. C. Evans; I. N. Roberts by H. A. Stebbins and G. T. Griffiths; F. A. Smith by Heman C. Smith and J. W. Wight; M. H. Bond by R. May and W. H. Kelley; F. B. Blair by I. N. White and J. H. Lake; A. H. Parsons by R. C. Evans and G. H. Hilliard; J. T. Davis by G. T. Griffiths and H. A. Stebbins; F. M. Sheehy by Heman C. Smith and J. W. Wight; John Smith by G. H. Hilliard and W. H. Kelley; A. V. Closson by J. H. Lake and I. N. White; G. A. Smith by R. C. Evans and W. H. Kelley; W. A. McDowell by J. W. Wight and G. T. Griffiths; M. M. Turpen by W. H. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard. The first named in each instance was the speaker in ordaining. The Doxology was sung, and Bro. W. H. Kelley dismissed the meeting.

FRIDAY, APRIL 20.

The regular morning prayer service was led by Brn. John Brackenbury and M. L. Sory. The forenoon sermon was preached by Bro. William P. Robinson, assisted by Bro. J. B. Wildermuth.

Business session convened at two p. m. Hymnal No. 188 was sung, and Bro. C. Scott offered prayer. The minutes were corrected and approved.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Committee appointed to consider evidence of the calling of Bro. William H. Fuller (colored) reported, recommending that he be ordained to the office of priest. It was moved to adopt the report and provide for the ordination, but by subsequent motion it was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

A report from the Presidents of Seventy was presented. It stated that in consequence of the death of Bro. R. J. Anthony and the ordination of Brn. J. T. Davis and F. M. Sheehy to the office of high priest, three vacancies had occurred in the Presidents of Seventy. To fill this, they had nominated Brn. H. O. Smith, J. F. Mintun, and W. E. Peak, who were duly approved in joint session of the Seventy. The report was adopted and the ordinations ordered provided for.

Additional report of the First Seventy urged the early publication of compiled resolutions of General Conference. It also recommended that Brn. B. F. Renfroe, A. L. Whiteaker, J. A. Grant, and E. L. Henson be ordained to the office of seventy. Brn. Renfroe and Whiteaker accepted, subject to the will of the body. Bro. Grant declined, and his name was referred back to the First Quorum of Seventy. Bro. Henson, not present, was recommended by those present as being worthy and qualified. The ordinations of Brn. Renfroe, Whiteaker, and Henson were then unanimously ordered by raising the right hand, that of Bro. Henson being referred to the missionary in charge, to be performed upon acceptance by the brother.

The Second Seventy reported the selection of Bro. H. E. Moler as permanent secretary, with Bro. D. W. Wight as his assistant, to fill the vacancy made by ordination of Bro. T. W. Williams to office of high priest. It also recommended the ordination of Bro. W. C. Marshall as a seventy. Bro. Marshall accepted, the report was adopted, and the ordination unanimously ordered by showing of the right hand.

Additional reports from the Third and First Quorums of Elders, in the order named, were presented and included in the minutes.

The Quorum of Twelve, in matter of C. I. Potts vs. Fall River branch, recommended that the appeal be referred to the missionary in charge with the privilege of calling to his assistance whom he may select. The report was adopted.

The request in the additional report of the First Seventy was taken up and a resolution obtained authorizing the committee on compilation of General Conference resolutions to publish its work when completed.

Committee on examination and revision of Church History reported it had revised so much of the history as had been written.

Brn. E. L. Kelley and F. M. Sheehy of the committee on encyclopedias, school histories, etc., reported some progress. Bro. U. W. Greene, the third member, by reason of location, circumstances, etc., had been unable to accomplish much in this direction, and he presented his resignation, which was accepted and Bro. F. M. Smith chosen to fill the vacancy. Bishop Kelley moved that Bro. Heman C. Smith be appointed in his stead, and the motion obtained. The committee, composed of Brn. F. M. Sheehy, Heman C. Smith, and F. M. Smith, was then continued.

Brn. F. M. Sheehy and W. H. Kelley of the Archæological Committee reported progress. The report was received and the committee continued.

Proposed amendment to Rules of Representation as published in HERALD of January 10, 1900, was read and its adoption moved. It was amended by striking from it all the argumentative portion. Action upon it was then deferred till next General Conference, and made the special order for the fourth day.

Election of the Board of Publication was then taken up. A motion to sustain the Bishop and his counselors was unanimously carried by show of hands. The Bishop then recommended that Brn. Joseph Luff and F. B. Blair be continued as members of the Board, and nominated Bro. John Smith of New Bedford, Massachusetts, to fill vacancy formerly occupied by Bro. Frank Criley; and he nominated Brn. G. H. Hilliard, Ellis Short, A. S. Cochran, E. A. Blakeslee, J. A. Gunsolley, R. May, A. H. Parsons, and Daniel Anderson from which to select members to fill the two remaining vacancies. Brn. Hilliard and Blakeslee moved that the Bishop be placed in nomination, and withdrew their names from the list of nominees. Bro. Luff declined, and the Bishop was permitted to nominate in his stead Bro. J. W. Wight. The vote being called, stood as follows: E. L. Kelley 182, J. W. Wight 172, F. B. Blair 135, John Smith 177, E. Short 115, A. S. Cochran 4, J. A. Gunsolley 193, R. May 100, A. H. Parsons 26, Daniel Anderson 20. Brn. Kelley, Wight, Blair, Smith, and Gunsolley were declared elected, and the choice was made unanimous.

Matter of enrollment into quorums by the Church Secretary was taken up, and a resolution obtained that in view of the enrollment having been before the church two years, the Secretary be authorized to cancel the enrollment and the brethren left free to unite with other quorums.

The Presidency stated that it would report through the HERALD on the request from Pittsburg branch referred to it, also upon a request made during conference for its opinion regarding duties of the Patriarch.

Brn. F. M. Weld, R. M. Elvin, and M. F. Gowell, the committee previously appointed to audit the Bishop's accounts when ready, were also made committeee to audit the Herald Office accounts, also the Bishop's accounts January 1, 1901.

A resolution prevailed that because of time required to audit the Herald Publishing House accounts, a separate committee be selected to audit accounts of Ensign Publishing House, January 2, 1900, and Brn. W. N. Robinson, William Crick, and Ellis Short were chosen as such committee, and their choice made unanimous.

Bro. Joseph Luff asked to be released from the committee to meet with the Church of Christ at Independence. The request was by motion granted and the President authorized to appoint one to fill the vacancy.

A list of the ordinations ordered was read, and by motion the chair was authorized to provide for them. The President referred the matter to the President of Twelve, who made provision therefor. The brethren were requested to come forward, prayer was offered, and they were ordained, as follows: Presidents of Seventy, H. O. Smith by R. C. Evans and W. H. Kelley, J. F. Mintun by J. W. Wight and J. H. Lake, and W. E. Peak by W. H. Kelley and R. C. Evans. To the office of seventy, B. F. Renfroe by G. T. Griffiths and I. N. White, A. L. Whiteaker by J. H. Lake and J. W. Wight, W. C. Marshall by I. N. White and G. T. Griffiths, the first named being spokesman.

The First Presidency then reported on the missions of the Twelve as follows:—

1. W. H. Kelley, Eastern mission; i. e., Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Eastern and Middle States, District of Columbia, Ohio, the Virginias, and Maryland.
2. R. C. Evans, Canadas.
3. Gomer T. Griffiths, Pacific Slope Mission.
4. I. N. White, Missouri, Kansas, Southern Illinois, and that portion of Indian Territory and Arkansas that is embraced in the Spring River district.
5. Joseph R. Lambert, to travel and labor under the counsel of the First Presidency as his health shall permit.
6. Joseph Luff, Colorado, Eastern Wyoming, and New Mexico.
7. J. W. Wight, Iowa, Minnesota, and Nauvoo district.
8. Heman C. Smith, Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, except Nauvoo district.
9. J. H. Lake, Michigan and Indiana.
10. James Caffall, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

Announcements were made, the Doxology was sung, and Pres. A. H. Smith dismissed the assembly.

At the evening hour, Bro. I. N. White again lectured from his large

www.LatterDayTruth.org

chart. He was assisted by Bro. G. W. Robley.

SATURDAY, APRIL 21.

The nine a. m. prayer and testimony service was in charge of Brn. C. Albertson and T. J. Sheldon. Bro. F. M. Slover addressed the conference at the forenoon hour, assisted by Bro. Swen Swenson.

At two p. m. the assembly sang, "God speed the right," followed by prayer by Pres. A. H. Smith. The minutes were corrected and approved.

The general organization of the Daughters of Zion presented a report of their work. It was read and made part of the record.

The First Seventy presented an additional report, recommending that Bro. R. M. Maloney be chosen and ordained a seventy. Bro. Maloney being present, expressed willingness to accept, and his selection was approved and the ordination ordered by uplifted hand.

The Fourth and Fifth Quorums of Elders presented additional reports. The latter had selected Bro. J. D. White as counselor to their president, and asked that his ordination be provided for. It was ordered, and the brother being absent, he was referred to the missionary in charge of his field for ordination. The reports were included in the minutes.

A committee of three of the Twelve appointed by that body, to whom was referred the question of call of Wm. H. Fuller to the ministry, recommended that the brother be ordained a priest in the Aaronic priesthood. The recommendation was indorsed and the ordination ordered.

The Presidency then offered a report, which had been concurred in by the High Priests and Twelve, recommending that Brn. C. A. Parkin, C. J. Hunt, Ellis Short, R. May, William Anderson, John Zimermann, R. Bullard, William Leeka, G. P. Lambert, and Thomas Taylor be chosen and ordained bishops. A motion prevailed to adopt the report and consider the names separately. Those present; viz., Brn. R. May, William Anderson, and R. Bullard, expressed willingness to serve. Those absent, as well as those present were spoken for and heartily indorsed. The brethren named were, upon separate motions taken by show of hands, all unanimously indorsed. A resolution then obtained that the First Presidency ordain these bishops at their earliest convenience.

The ordinations of those present was then considered and the brethren asked to come forward. The audience then arose while President Joseph Smith offered prayer. Brn. R. May, William Anderson, and R. Bullard were ordained bishops by Presidents Joseph and Alexander Smith; R. M. Maloney a seventy, and W. H. Fuller a priest of the Aaronic order by Brn. I. N. White and J. H. Lake.

The following were, upon separate motions, unanimously sustained by raising of hands: Joseph Smith as President and Prophet of the Church; Alexander H. Smith as Patriarch of the Church; A. H. Smith and E. L. Kelley as Counselors to the President of the Church; the ten members of the Quorum of Twelve who are in good standing, with W. H. Kelley as President; the First and Second Seventy; the Standing High Council; the Quorum of High Priests; the Quorums of Elders, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons; the Church Secretary, Recorder, Historian, Assistant Historian, and Librarian; the Board of Publication; the auxiliary societies, namely, the Sunday School Association, the Religio, the Daughters of Zion, the Prayer Unions, and the Mite Societies. Votes of thanks were separately tendered the following: The Saints and friends who had cared for visitors; the committee on reception; Sr. Belle James, conference stenographer; all press reporters; chorister, organist, and assistants; the ushers and janitor; the railways and Mr. L. F. Siltz, the joint agent, for courtesies extended.

President Joseph Smith then spoke as follows:—

I wish to make a few remarks; I do not know that I will edify you or change your sentiments in any form; but I have been seriously impressed during the last year and especially for the last six months touching this conference and its outcome, and I strove earnestly and continuously that the Lord might in his infinite wisdom give us the instruction that so many seemed to want, to desire.

I do not know that any of you may realize the condition that the position I have occupied has put me into; I do not know whether you may realize the peculiar temptation that would beset a man of whom so much was expected and from whom so much was anticipated in relation to the voice of revelation. The peculiar temptation that must necessarily beset a man who has strong opinions of his own as to church work, as to doctrine, as to theory and practice, to formulate his opinions and add a "Thus saith the Lord" to them. Knowing that under ordinary circumstances a great many would receive those views with a "Thus saith the Lord" attached to them without serious question; realizing also that there was an element in the church —must necessarily be there properly—that would scan anything that bears the impress of revelation closely, especially anything affecting the word as it is written to us and the ideas that have obtained among us upon that word.

Whether the fault is mine that we have not had such recognition at the hands of God, I do not know. If I had known that I was in fault and in what it consisted, and that the amending of that fault would have brought the desired result, I would gladly have made the amendment. I do not know that it is the fault of anybody else. I cannot say. What my impressions are it is not necessary to present. But we have come through the conference. I received no response to my prayers, I have received none to yours. I realize how many have agonized over this topic. I know, I believe, how earnestly many have sought for light; I believe I realize to a very great extent how continuously the Saints have been praying for this approaching conference during the last year, and knowing all this, brethren and delegates, I hope that when you go hence you will go with a kind of an understanding of the position that I was placed in, and if in your opinions I have been in fault, I hope you will be lenient in your judgment; and if you believe that the fault lies anywhere else, also be lenient in your judgment. If satisfied that the conditions we are in as a people have shut up the approaches to us and that we are not heard because we have asked amiss, then let us be patient until we can get into better condition.

Let us not be careless; let us not grow indifferent; let us not forget that God has beforetime watched over the interests of his work and has finally brought it to completion; he has determined that no weapon formed against his work shall flourish, shall be allowed to be successful, and if our faith is not of sufficient character strong and steady in its nature to abide under the cloud, pray, what profit is it and what honor is it to abide in the sunshine? If we cannot be good Saints in adversity, how can we be and be approved of God in his smile, always?

If, in the administration of the office to which I have been called, I have injured anyone and they will kindly make it manifest to me, I will do what I can to repair it. I could do no more than that. And if any of you have just cause to complain of my service as your colaborer while you have been in the field and I at the center, I trust that you will, in your kindness, make it known to me and I will repair that wrong. I believe that I have conscientiously tried to answer every man his inquiry according to the time and opportunity that I had, on any and all important topics touching his mission. I may have done this in some instances where local injury may have arisen or occurred, where my words have been quoted, my letters have been used in local controversies, and I prejudged, perhaps, in the controversy, if it should arise or continue.

I hope that none of the brethren will go hence with the thought in their minds that I have not tried and placed myself in a receptive position before God. I am in no sense what is called a spiritist. I believe that if a man opens the avenues of his soul to the incomings of the evil spirits, he does it to his hurt, and hence I have been careful to avoid the approaches of the spirit of self-exaltation, and also of those spirits that seek to take captive the servants of God and lead them into disorder; willing only to receive ministration from the Spirit of Christ, who is the Master, the only infallible source to which we can look, from which we can expect anything to substantially help us in this conflict.

I have known for years that the church was approaching a crisis in this respect, that there must be a broader charity, there must be a more extended influence of the ministerial force, there must be a more complete welding together of the tenets, if we may use that expression, to signify the principles that we were to teach and to enforce among men. There are many things I do not understand touching the work in its future, but this I feel I can comprehend, that God has intended through Christ to make our ministry effective unto the salvation of men; and while there are a great many things that we do not understand, and which if known would add to our knowledge and in that sense increase our usefulness, if we are but bent on accomplishing the sending of the mission of Jesus Christ abroad, as the angel brought it, the man that does it, the men who do it, will find ample opportunity and may be blessed continually in their so doing.

And I hope that you, who, like myself, may not understand all that there is in store for us, nor comprehend all that may have been written, I hope that you with me shall avoid the stumbling and the falling from a failure to comprehend those things we do not understand. Let us wait until such time as God in his infinite mercy will relieve the pressure and give us light; and if I should undertake to answer the voice of inspiration at the present moment, I should predict this for the men who listen to me, that those who keep their vessels clean and who minister in humility of heart in the field where they are called to labor in the office to which they have been ordained, they shall find those places pleasant to them, and there shall open to them light and instruction when it shall be needed by them, when they are called upon to stand in the difficult places and minister for God.

I can say nothing farther than this touching the year that is past, and I hope that the mistakes we have made will be made profitable to us. They can only be profitable to us by the spirit in which we forbear one with each other, and by the spirit of self-abnegation we learn the value of the Master's teaching that we are to esteem every man his brother as himself.

I thought I would say to you before you parted what I have said touching the year and the six months that are past; my earnest and continued endeavor to ask for light upon those topics that have been vexing, upon those points upon which many have thought we ought to have instruction from God, and upon which we have so earnestly sought that he would give us the light that so many desired. Whether I thought it was better for me, it was better for them, whether I was to be benefited by it or whether others were to be benefited by it, it would be to the benefit of the church, the whole church, and as a consequence, while I have been denied, my faith is still as strong as it has ever been. I repeat what I repeated when my brother was taken with what seemed worse than death, and when I realized the condition of it, after I had agonized before God and had passed through a struggle such as I never want to endure again, I arose to my feet and said, looking up to him, "I will trust thee, though thou slay me." And if, in the future, I can discover that the reason of this failure lies with me, I will remove it if I can and place myself before God and ask his blessing, in pardon for my error.

I feel to express to you, also, this afternoon, this: I have been extraordinarily helped in my health during this conference; I have not engaged in the work of a conference so free from physical disturbance for the last ten years as I have this conference. I feel to give praise to God for this and to acknowledge that it may have been in response to the prayer of God's people.

The following was then unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, that parties ordained bishops, and those to be ordained bishops, be authorized to select counselors, to be ordained by direction of the Presidency of the Church.

The President then renewed the advice offered to the ministry at Kirtland, Ohio, some years ago, following which questions were freely asked and answered.

The High Priests' Quorum having previously appointed Brn. William Anderson, A. S. Cochran, and G. M. Scott as their portion of the general committee to whom the auditing committee on Bishop's accounts should report, the Twelve named as their part of that committee Brn. Heman C. Smith, J. R. Lambert, and J. W. Wight.

The report on missions was then read, corrected, and indorsed, as follows:—

Respectfully submitted,
HEMAN C. SMITH, Secretary.

Announcements, etc., were made.

The appointments of the Presidency read yesterday were ratified.

In closing the conference, the chairman said he almost felt to make a present of the gavel to the assembly, as it had been of little use except in calling attention at the opening of business services. He thanked the gathering for their excellent behavior.

Minutes of the session were then read and accepted, and a motion to adjourn prevailed. The audience then sang, "Oh Lord, thy people bless," and President Joseph Smith dismissed the conference.

BRO. HEMAN C. SMITH has received a copy of the Livingston Herald, published at Howell, Michigan, for March 30, 1900, containing an obituary notice of his father's brother, William Smith, who was a citizen of Howell Township, who came from Michigan in 1837 and to Howell Township in 1844. He was born at Berkshire, Tioga County, New York, April 21, 1815, and was at his death, March 23, 1900, 84 years, 11 months, and 2 days old; a ripe old age.

The obituary states: "His proverbial honesty in all his dealings won him the title of "Honest William." "He lived a noble, useful life; greed never tainted his nature. His love for liberty and equal rights in his prime of life made him an ardent anti-slavery advocate, and from the birth of the Republican party he was one of its most loyal supporters."

The foregoing from a neighbor of Bro. Heman's uncle evinces the worth of a good man in the society where he lived. In religion he was a Methodist, but according to his light he was a Christian in purpose.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

General Conference appointees will please take notice that they have been indorsed to General Passenger Associations, as heretofore, by the Church Secretary. See his notice elsewhere.

The permanent home address of Bro. G. T. Griffiths is Temple, Lake County, Ohio.

Sr. F. C. Redman, Cove, Arkansas, asks prayer that she be restored to health. She lives near the Saints' church, but is unable to attend. She commends Brn. Short, Newton, and the Saints in that region of country.

LONGEVITY IN MENTAL WORKERS.

Professor Manterola contributes to a Mexican scientific society a paper on longevity in connection with mental work. The author divides professions into three groups, according to their influence on longevity. In mental workers he states that the general average of life is above sixty eight years, and the average of men of science, lawyers, and historians is more than seventy.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 2.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

ORIGIN OF THE NATIVE RACES.

Mr. Brinton says:—

The most that can be said with certainty is that the general course of migrations in both Americas was from the high latitudes toward the tropics, and from the great western chain of mountains toward the east. No reasonable doubt exists but that the Athapascas, Algonkins, Iroquois, Chahta-Muskokis and Nahuas all migrated from the north or west to the regions they occupied. In South America, curiously enough, the direction is largely reversed. The Caribs, the Arawacks and Tupis, and perhaps we should add the Aymaras and the Quichuas (though their relationship is not wholly sure), according to both linguistic and legendary testimony, wandered forth from the steppes and valleys at the head waters of the Rio de la Plata toward the Gulf of Mexico, where they came face to face with the other wave of migration surging down from high northern latitudes. For the banks of the river Paraguay and the steppes of the Bolivian Cordilleras are unquestionably the earliest traditional homes of all these stocks.—Brinton's Myths of the New World, pp. 47, 48.

Mr. Brinton is A. M., M. D., L L. D., D. Sc., and Professor of American Archæology and Linguistics in the University of Pennsylvania.

That is, the South American races who are scattered through Peru, Chili, part of Brazil, and the Orinoco country came to those regions from the uplands of Bolivia from the west mountains. These Caribs reached to "Cuba and Haiti and . . . the Lesser Antilles."—Ibid., p. 45.

Squier, Gibbs, and numerous other American ethnologists believed in a migration from the west to South America.—Prehistoric America, p. 523.

From the west coast, then, and the west mountains, the South American stock seems to have started, and spread northward and eastward.

Speaking of the Lake Titicaca region, Mr. Brinton says:—

Four personages, companions or sons, were closely connected with him [Viracocha]. They rose together with him from the lake, or else were his first creations. These are the four mythical civilizers of Peru.—Myths of the New World, pp. 211, 212.

That is, four companions, with Viracocha, stand at the beginning of the Peruvian civilization. Who is this Viracocha? Mr. Brinton says that Viracocha "was creator and possessor of all things." (Ibid., p. 210.)

Illatici, Viracocha, and Pachacamac were the highest divinities known to the ancient Inca race. (Ibid., p. 72.)

Middendorf prefers for Pachacamac the simple meaning, "Creator of the World." (See Ibid., p. 210, note 1; compare with the Inca poem, pp. 186, 187.) It is Viracocha that constructed or created the world.

Now the Christian theory is that it was their Christ that did all that work. Christ is the Creator according to the New Testament. The Creator (Christ), then, was known to the mythical civilizers of Peru.

Peru was populated about five hundred years after the deluge. Its first inhabitants flowed in abundance towards the valley of Cuzco, conducted by four brothers, Ayar-Manco-Topa, Ayar-Cachi-Topa, Ayar-Auca-Topa, and Ayar-Uchu-Topa, who were accompanied by their sisters and wives, named Mama-Cora, Hipa-Haucum, Mama-Huacum, and Pilca-Huacum. . . . The youngest of the brothers, according to the tradition, was at the same time most skillful and handy.—Peruvian Antiquities, by Rivero and Tschudi, p. 52.

This myth gives us quite a little colony; namely, the four families and these men's sisters. "Mama," we are told, means "mother." (See Prescott's Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 1, p. 31, note 8.)

The first Peruvians, according to Prescott, came from the Titicaca region.

They bore with them a golden wedge, and were directed to take up their residence on the spot where the sacred emblem should without effort sink into the ground. They proceeded accordingly but a short distance, as far as the valley of Cuzco, the spot indicated by the performance of the miracle, since there the wedge sank into the earth and disappeared forever. Here the children of the Sun established their residence, and soon entered upon their beneficent mission among the rude inhabitants of the country; Manco Capac teaching the men the arts of agriculture, and Mama Ocllo initiating her own sex in the mysteries of weaving and spinning.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 1, p. 31.

Another legend speaks of certain white and bearded men, who, advancing from the shores of Lake Titicaca, established an ascendency over the natives, and imparted to them the blessings of civilization.—Ibid., p. 32.

The story of the bearded white men finds its place in most of their legends.—Ibid., p. 32, note 11.

In conformity with nearly every tradition, we may derive this race from the neighborhood of Lake Titicaca.—Ibid., p. 33.

In most, not all, of the traditions, Manco Capac is recognized as the name of the founder of the Peruvian monarchy, though his history and character are related with sufficient discrepancy.—Ibid., p. 33, note 14.

Baldwin quoting Montesinos says that "the youngest" one of the four "brothers" "became the first of a long line of [Peruvian] sovereigns." (Ancient America, p. 264.)

This golden wedge of Prescott's is by other writers sometimes called a golden "rod," and still by others a golden "branch." It is by Viracocha, the creator, however, that they are instructed whither to go; the spot to locate (at Cuzco) being pointed out by the miracle. This is what spoils these stories; it is the god Viracocha, and this miracle. Drop them out, then these myths may pass muster.

The explanation of the original names of these four mythical brothers is variously given. Señor Lopez says:—

Ayar . . . means primitive chief; and manco, chaki, aucca, and uyssu mean believers, wanderers, soldiers, husbandmen.—Atlantis, p. 391.

But Mr. Brinton says the meaning of the name "manco" is unknown. The other three names signify, he says, in the order given, "Messenger, enemy or traitor, and the little one." (See Myths of the New World, p. 212, note 2.)

Manco is sometimes called Manco-Topa; with other authorities sometimes Manco-Capac. "Capac meant great or powerful." (See Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 1, note 9, p. 31.)

That is, these were second names given to these four brothers; they are descriptive of the men's life work. One is "great or powerful," one is a "messenger," one is "an enemy or traitor," one is "the little one." This "great or powerful" one is the youngest of the four; he is the one who is said to have been "most skillful and handy," the same one who is directed by the creator where to go, etc., and the same one who is said in most of the myths to have been the first ruler in Peru.

Lake regions seem to have been the centers of prehistoric man. In Peru and Bolivia it is Lake Titicaca; in Mexico it is around the lake Tezcuco the myths cluster. This reminds us of the Swiss lakes and ancient Venice, where preadamite people used to live! So the Muyscas of Colombia, South America, locate their earliest myths around Lake Guatavita, not far from Bogota, in the Magdalena country. They were neighbors to the Peruvians on the north. A culture god (Bochica) "taught them in remotest times how to manufacture their clothing, build their houses, cultivate the soil, and reckon time. When he disappeared, he divided the land between four chiefs, and laid down many minute rules of government which ever after were religiously observed."—Myths of the New World, p. 127.

There is a resemblance between this story and the Peruvian story—"four chiefs" in both myths. Bochica divided the land between his chiefs, and Viracocha divided the land between his. (See Ibid., pp. 212, 217.)

The fourfold division of the Muyscas of Bogota was traced back to four chieftains.—Ibid., p. 101, note 1.

The Tupis of Brazil, which race "dwelt on the Atlantic coast from the mouth of the Amazon to the Plate River and along the shore and tributaries of the former almost to the great Cordillera of the west," "claim a descent from four brothers, three of whose names are given by Hans Staden . . . as Krimen, Hermittan, and Coem." (See Ibid., pp. 46, 101, note 1.)

Their southern relatives, the Guaranis of Paraguay, also spoke of the four brothers and gave two of their names as Tupi and Guarani, respectively parents of the tribes called after them.—Ibid., p. 101, note 1.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Nahuas of Mexico much more frequently spoke of themselves as descendants of four or eight original families.—Ibid., p. 101, note 1.

The Ottoes, Pawnees, "and other Indians," had a tradition that from eight ancestors all nations [natives] and races were descended.—Ibid., p. 101, note 1.

The Algonkins and Dakotas [of the United States] . . . both traced their lives back to four ancestors.—Ibid., p. 94.

The Creeks were at first divided into four clans, and alleged a descent from four female ancestors.—Ibid., p. 95.

The Haytians trace back their pedigree, like the rest, to four women, and speak of "four brothers." "These brothers in time became the fathers of a nation, and to them they traced their lineage." (Ibid., pp. 95, 96.)

Tupa, highest god and first man of the Tupis of Brazil, . . . is depicted with horns; he was one of four brothers, and only after a desperate struggle did he drive his fraternal rivals from the field.—Ibid., pp. 183, 184.

Did the four brothers quarrel? Why did Tupa drive his rivals away?

Another similar Tupi myth is that of Timondonar and Aricoute. They were brothers, the one of fair complexion, the other dark. They were constantly struggling and Aricoute, which means the cloudy or stormy day, was worsted.—Ibid., pp. 218, 219, note 3.

Says Mr. Brinton,

Hardly a nation on the continent but seems to have had some vague tradition of an origin from four brothers, to have at some time been led by four leaders or princes, or in some manner to have connected the appearance and action of four important personages with its earliest traditional history.—Ibid., p. 94.

Mr. Brinton quotes Brasseur de Bourbourg as saying that

"In all the Aztec and Toltec histories there are four characters who constantly reappear; either as priests or envoys of the gods, or of hidden and disguised majesty; or as guides and chieftains of tribes during their migrations; or as kings and rulers of monarchies after their foundation; and even to the time of the conquest, there are always four princes who compose the supreme government, whether in Guatemala or in Mexico."—Ibid., pp. 96, 97.

Reader, what does this all mean? These native races nearly all tell us about four brothers, or chiefs, or rulers, or priests, or ancestors. Mr. Brinton thinks these four brothers, or chiefs, or rulers, are "the four cardinal points"—"the four winds." But the writer thinks that he can see something more substantial in these myths than the "four winds." Say, Mr. Brinton, when the "four brothers," which you identify as the four winds, were traveling northward from the Titicaca region to Cuzco, which way was the north wind going then? Does the north wind ever blow from the south, eh?

In Peru we notice this myth goes more into detail than at any other place. There the brothers have wives, who appear to be mothers. They have their sisters with them. They are guided by a providence. Manco Capac (or Topa) teaches the more rude people the arts of civilized life. He becomes their first king. He is most skillful and handy. Capac means "great" or "powerful."

The Caribs, Arawacks, Tupis, Aymaras, and the Quichuas all start from the same legendary home; namely, "the head waters of the Rio de la Plata." These myths have been carried with them. They were born before these related stocks separated. The variety or variations are perhaps evidence of great antiquity. Moss-covered with age.

We find myths of the creation, ten generations, the flood, the tower, the confusion, the serpent and the fall, in widely separated families. These myths were born before the people became scattered, and they took them with them. This is evidence of the unity of the race, of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

So these native myths point to a common brotherhood; to persons and events that stand away back in their "earliest history," the memory of which is stamped not only in the native mind, but it crops out in their divisions of "four clans" and four divisions of their governments.

But a number of the myths point to "eight ancestors;" and both the Aztecs and Nahuas point to both four and eight, or sometimes to four and sometimes to eight, so that they either contradict themselves, or else they have a double history. (The Chiapanecs and Toltecs speak of seven ancestors; this we will notice later on.)

"Aztlan," the starting point of the ancestors of the Aztecs, has been looked for by most all the writers on Mexican antiquities. Brasseur de Bourbourg places it in California; Humboldt about 42° north latitude; Foster in New Mexico; Fontaine in the Mississippi valley; Bandelier in Florida; Boturini speaks of the gulf of California. (See Prehistoric America, pp. 284, 285, note 3.)

It is argued by all, I believe, that in starting from Aztlan the original colony traveled southward; that is why they all locate it northward from Mexico.

Again, we are told by those who have made this subject a study, that Aztlan, Huehue-Tlapallan, Tulan-Zuiwa, and Amaquemecan are different names for the same place. (See Prehistoric America, p. 272, with Myths of the New World, pp. 104–106.) Aztlan is the birthplace of the Aztecs, Tlapallan is the birthplace of the Quiches, Tulan is the birthplace of the Toltecs, and Amaquemecan is the birthplace of the Chichimecs.

Mr. Brinton says:—

The Aztec priests never chanted more regretful dirges than when they sang of Tulan, the cradle of their race.—See Myths of the New World, p. 105.

The Cakchiquel MS. says: "Four persons came from Tulan, from the direction of the rising sun—that is one Tulan. There is another Tulan in Xibalbay, and another where the sun sets, and it is there that we came; and in the direction of the setting sun there is another, where is the god; so that there are four Tulans; and it is where the sun sets that we came to Tulan, from the other side of the sea, where this Tulan is; and it is there that we were conceived and begotten by our mothers and fathers."—Atlantis, p. 166.

The birthplace of these races was in the east, then, on the other side of the sea, at a place called Tulan. When they had crossed the sea they made a settlement and called it Tulan also, in remembrance of their old country home; and besides this, there were two other Tulans.

Manco-Capac, and his beautiful wife, Mama-Œllo, had, Squier thinks, "crossed the sea." (Prehistoric America, p. 527.)

The original eight Aztec families are represented in the Aztec picture chart. (See John Delafield's work and Bancroft's Native Races, vol. 2, pp. 548, 549.) Delafield seems to approve of Boturini's and Bullock's reading, the substance of which is that the leader, or emperor, had four sons. (See pp. 98, 99.) Here the writer sees an explanation why the Aztecs and Nahuas should sometimes trace back their pedigree to eight ancestors, and then again to four ancestors. The leader had four sons; these four sons were four brothers. Five persons out of the "eight chiefs" belonged to the same family, then. The wives of these eight chiefs are also represented in the chart. Delafield says on page 98 that these women carry as much as the men. These myths in the writer's opinion refer to the distant Orient; on the "other side of the sea," and Aztlan; or this Tulan will be found "over there."

Strange as this may all appear, yet it is a fact that the Book of Mormon relates stories very much like these myths.

In the Lehi colony there were nine men; namely, Lehi and his four sons, (beginning at the eldest,) Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi. (See the headlines for the first chapter.) Besides these five there were Ishmael and his two sons and Zoram. (See 1 Nephi 2:5; 1:42.) Nine "chiefs" altogether. Father Ishmael soon died at Nahom. (1 Nephi 5:15.) This death occurred before the colony had crossed the sea, so that eight only of the first leaders reached the "promised land."

Now the reader can see at once that the Aztec colony that is said to have started from the "other side of the sea" looks just like the Lehi colony that started from Jerusalem (not counting Ishmael); namely, eight men with their wives. The first leader is Lehi, and he has four sons!

Another coincidence is noticed in the two stories. Delafield says of the Aztez women, that they carry as big loads as the men. Nephi says that their women, "were strong, yea, even like unto the men." (See 1 Nephi 5:17.) See how these myths will dovetail together! These four sons being four brothers, it reconciles the native myths, and accounts for both the eight ancestor and the four ancestor myths, showing that they are pointing to the original colony. Ishmael having died before the colony reached the promised land, he is not counted as one of the new emigrants.

If the men whose names are connected with publishing the Book of Mormon in the 'twenties are the real authors of the book, they certainly made a good start, they laid a good foundation; they bring "eight chiefs," led by a prince, who has "four sons," who are "four brothers," across the sea!

Now when the Aztec colony started from Aztlan they traveled southward. That is why Aztlan is looked for north of Mexico. So the Lehi colony traveled in the wilderness in a "south, southeast direction." (1 Nephi 5:6.) Is that all accidental harmony?

The Lehi colony reached the promised land. (1 Nephi 5:43.) But where? echoes the author of "Doctrines and Dogmas," page 165.

The Book of Mormon does not come to us as a geography of ancient America. Geography is only incidentally referred to. But it comes as a teacher of religion; to persuade us to believe in the true God, and his Son Jesus Christ. It does not offer to the Christian a new religion; but it comes to confirm his faith in the divine origin of the one he professes.

A man, Jesus by name, was crucified; died and was buried, to the great disappointment of his followers. A few days later these men say that they saw him alive again. This was a miracle—a new thing to teach. The Jews denied the miracle, and charged this man's followers with having stolen his dead body; thus making them both "liars" and thieves. Christianity swings on that hinge. Is Jesus still dead? If so, our hope is vain, and Christianity a "fraud."

Now the chief burden of the Book of Mormon is to teach us that this man Jesus did rise from the dead; many Nephites declaring that they saw him alive in America after his crucifixion. So that it comes as a "witness" on a very important case. We now have two witnesses; namely, the New Testament and the Book of Mormon. The philosophy of the two witnesses is the same; namely, that the dead shall live again.

The Nephites and Lamanites are in America for several hundred years before they reach a place which is called "a small neck of land." This small neck (so to speak) is the "link" which is between the land northward and the land southward. (See Alma 13:11.)

This "neck," at one place, is a day and a half's journey across it from sea to sea. (Alma 13:11.) At another place one day's journey across "for a Nephite"—one person. (Helaman 2:8.) It is called a "narrow passage" in Mormon 1:6; "narrow pass" in Alma 22:5; and "narrow pass" in Mormon 1:7.

The Nephites and Lamanites reached this "neck" from the south, and their travels, centers of civilization, wars, and fortifications were in a country they called Nephi, until the "days of Mosiah;" he moved a large body of Nephites into the country of Zarahemla. This country of Zarahemla reached to this small neck of land on the north, and southward to a watershed, or to the head of the river Sidon. The river Sidon was a "great river," and ran from south to north. The "head" of a great river would be at a watershed. Manti is near the head of the river Sidon (Alma 13:11), and in the southwest region, (compare Alma 24:18-22 with 26:2,) so that the head of Sidon would be in the southwest part of the land of Zarahemla.

The line between the land of Nephi and Zarahemla runs by the head of this great river, a summit or watershed would make a natural boundary line,—and this is what appears in the record.

The people of Ammon in traveling from the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla "came over near the borders of the land." (Alma 15:3.) This "over" the writer believes to be "over" this summit or watershed. This small neck is the Panama Isthmus, and this watershed is the "Cordillera Oriental" range at the head of the Magdalena River. This brings us nearly under the equator. The land of Nephi was southward, and these two great divisions of land were "nearly surrounded by water."

The physical geography of South America answers this description; namely, a "small neck" at the north end, the water basin leaning towards the north, the rivers running towards the north, a natural boundary by a range of mountains across the continent, and a rich country south of this range.

The city of Nephi was away to the south of this division line. And in this country of Nephi, on the west coast, was "their fathers' first inheritance" (Alma 13:11); that is, the Lehi colony landed on the west coast of South America, south from a point where the water basin leans to the north.

In 1 Nephi is the account of their landing (see 5:43). In 5:45 is what appears to be a long journey. These four brothers quarreled (2 Nephi 4:1). Nephi's life was threatened; he took part of the colony and made another long journey, and located the city of Nephi. Thus they became two peoples with two governments. Nephi prepared his people for self-defense, and taught them how to work in wood, iron, copper, brass, steel, gold, silver, and ores, and he built a temple like Solomon's. Says he: "I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things." They sowed, and reaped in abundance, raised flocks and herds, and animals of every kind. Nephi taught his people to be industrious and labor with their hands; he ruled over them and was their king. (2 Nephi 4:2 to 5:1.)

It was now thirty years since Nephi left Jerusalem, and the children born in the wilderness, on the other side of sea, would now be men and women—children of nature—children of the wilderness; sucking the breasts of mothers who in the main lived on "raw meat" (see 1 Nephi 5:17); living by the chase (1 Nephi 5:8). Their clothing at this time likely consisted of the skins of animals—nature's children wrapped in nature'e garments. What a job Nephi had on his hands, teaching these people the arts of civilized life! assisted, no doubt, in this work by his brother Sam and Zoram. We can see here what a man of push and energy this Nephi was. All kinds of animals in the wilderness, a temptation to still live by the chase. But no, he had a higher destiny; he planted the feet of the little colony on the sure foundation of the industrial arts. His people "loved" him "exceedingly." (See Jacob 1:2.)

In this second colony there were four brothers; namely, Sam, Nephi, Jacob, and Joseph; also Zoram, and Nephi's sisters. (See 2 Nephi 4.) Nephi was their king. (2 Nephi 5:1.)

By the year forty they had already had wars with the Lamanites. (2 Nephi 4:6.) They were "white" people. (2 Nephi 4:4.) The brothers were all together again—a family reunion—sword in hand; Nephi fighting with the sword of Laban. (Jacob 1:2.) Laman seems to have had an eternal "hatred" towards Nephi. (2 Nephi 4:3.) He wanted to kill him soon after they left Jerusalem (1 Nephi 5:15); and later on to throw him into the sea (1 Nephi 5:27); and threatened his life in the promised land (2 Nephi 4:1). Nephi prayed, "O Lord, wilt thou make a way for mine escape before mine enemies? . . . and hedge not up my way, but the ways of mine enemy." (2 Nephi 3:6.) The Lamanites became "an idle people," living by the chase. (2 Nephi 4:4.)

These six brothers are all together in the region of Nephi; namely, Laman, Lemuel, Sam, Nephi, Jacob, and Joseph; yet it is a fact that the first four were married men before the last two were born, and the historic narrative for the first generation clusters around the four eldest. The two youngest being born in the wilderness, they would rank in the colony only like other children born to other parents in like conditions, hence are not counted among the "original" or "first chiefs," between whom the contentions for leadership took place.

The city of Nephi became a permanent place, becoming famous later on; but it was not the first inheritance. The Lamanites were left in possession of it after Nephi moved away from his brethren. The name of the first inheritance is not given. The city of Nephi became a center of population, first for the Nephites and afterwards for the Lamanites, and remained so as long as we can see it.

Now, then, the myths will cluster around that place. It is to that also that the antiquities will point. The sciences will gradually, step by step, march to Nephi, and though they may travel by different routes, they will all meet there.

SERMON BY PRES. JOSEPH SMITH

AT LAMONI, MARCH 25, 1894.

I will read this morning the testimony of St. John, from the Inspired Translation, the first chapter, commencing at the twentieth verse:—

This is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem, to ask him; Who art thou? And he confessed, and denied not that he was Elias; but confessed, saying; I am not the Christ. And they asked him, saying; How art thou then Elias? And he said; I am not that Elias who was to restore all thing. And they asked him, saying, Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No. Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself? He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as saith the prophet Esaias. And they who were sent were of the Pharisees. And they asked him, and said unto him; Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not the Christ, nor Elias who was to restore all things, neither that prophet. John answered them, saying; I baptize with water, but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not; he it is of whom I bear record. He is the prophet, even Elias, who, coming after me, is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am unworthy to unloose, or whose place I am not able to fill; for he shall baptize, not only with water, but with fire, and with the Holy Ghost. The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and said; Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world! And John bare record of him unto the people, saying, This is he of whom I said; After me cometh a man who is preferred before me; for he was before me, and I knew him, and that he should be made manifest to Israel; therefore am I come baptizing with water. And John bare record, saying; When he was baptized of me, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. And I knew him; for he who sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me; Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

In this age of many beliefs it is refreshing to us—and I believe it ought to be for all—that we have that upon which we may safely rely with reference to the things which concern man's best welfare. And while I am not here this morning to endeavor to explore any of the mysteries that may surround the coming of Christ, the wonderful things which he might have done for man, it is the purpose of the hour to present some of the faith of the teachings by which man's duty, and the things that he may do first to ingratiate himself into favor with God and place himself in a condition by which he may become a son of God. And my object in doing this this morning is of a two-fold nature. First, we have ministers—a great many gospel ministers—returning from their distant fields, and it may be of interest to them to know whether or not the home preaching or teaching is the same that they have taught abroad; that the testimony of him who is at home and the one that is abroad shall be found to agree. The second reason is that there are individuals here who are enquiring, and upon whose minds the solemn question is resting—acknowledging that there are obligations resting upon the man to obey the Father—In what direction shall I go in order that I may become a child of God? There are so many religions in the world demanding the attention of men, that in their inquiries to know what to do they are bewildered, and many of them are looking toward us to see whether or not we have that which will commend itself to their attention.

While I have quoted from the new translation, or what we call the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, it does not differ materially from King James' Translation in bearing witness of John and the record which he bore of Christ (and in using the word Christ I mean the man Jesus Christ or Christ Jesus), for it is with the record of his life, his teachings, the promise which God made through him, in which we have interest, and of which he said that he knew whereof he made affirmation; because that God had told him what he should say, and what he should do. And if men do not acknowledge this that has come through the Palmyra Seer, they do acknowledge the validity of that which has been long in the world. And it can do them no harm, and it can do us no harm, while it may do us good if it can be clearly understood that these records agree; for in the claim that we make, it is a part and parcel of our belief that God has promised to restore the gospel, and we assure the people that in the King James Translation it is guaranteed, as well as in the Inspired Translation, and they can apply that which is given them from the word of God, and we assure them that they cannot be deceived; and we freely confess that they have the right to reject that which we present that is not in harmony therewith. I take it for granted—whatever anybody else may do—that in reading this record (Bible), and laying stress upon any portion of it, we assume to lay stress upon that which we believe to be the best acknowledged, the best attested.

We take up this record, or as we have it, the Testimony of St. John, upon the hypothesis that John was a beloved disciple; that he stood very near the Savior; that he not only loved Jesus, but that Christ loved him in return; that he was the daily companion of Jesus; that he studied with him, traveled with him, was a witness of his sufferings with and for the people, and there is no question—so far as I am concerned—that for many years Jesus and John passed many hours together, in which it must be evident that they talked together quietly, peacefully, in the still hours, away in the night. And I doubt not they saw the stars rise in flush of the morning in their loving intercourse. And hence it is encouraging to you and to me, that when this disciple placed his testimony on record he was so bold as to say I know, "I, John, saw and bear record that this is the Son of God." There was that which was given him before he saw the Savior that gave him to understand who the Savior was. And when he saw the Spirit descend upon and abide upon him in the form of a dove, he did not have only the word of him that sent him, but he had the evidence of his own senses. It was immediately impressed upon him that that which was told him was true, and that he carried with him the evidence in himself which he had witnessed, and that God had testified to him that Jesus was the Christ. This was an assurance to this man such as no human being could give him; and yet it was given to a human being in his weakness, through one of the sources of human observation. And if we say the Spirit opened his eyes by which he saw the dove, we have only the evidence of the Christ upon the eyes of his disciples when they saw that which they beheld with their eyes, and which signified to them that he was the Christ; he was the one with whom they walked, and talked, and served while he was living; and after his death,—when he ascended from the mount of Olives, when the clouds received him out of their sight,—they saw him and they knew who he was. Now there are some things borne witness of in this record which I desire to present to you. I heard a day or two since a kind of controversy between two men in reference to what obligations man was under to God, by which he became a member of Christ's church. One individual stated that it was given us in the Greek that man was to be baptized, and the other said that a man can be received of God without being baptized. I do not doubt that there are many that believe that; there may be some in this audience who believes that a man can do right without having respect to the ordinances of God. While I may admit that in one sense of the word, I must confess that no man can do right, in the full sense of the word, unless he does that which God commands him to do. Whatever may be the sentiment of man, so long as he keeps himself without the reach of the commandments of God, he is not doing right, however upright otherwise he may be; however upright his intentions and conduct may be among his fellows, he cannot be right.

In presenting before you this morning some of the testimonies found in this word, I may not follow the rule given by a preacher not long since, that we should not preach baptism to an audience who believed in baptism, for we are commanded to teach baptism and let the mysteries go. I have not the brains, nor have I the heart to hunt after the mysteries; I want to keep somewhere near shore, and for this reason I am afraid if I am not careful I will run the prow of my little shallop into water that I have no business to be in.

In Luke's testimony we have an expression that I have always thought to be remarkable. I will read it: "As I am a messenger of Jesus Christ, and knowing that many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us; even as they delivered them unto us, who from the beginning were eyewitnesses and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee, in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed."

If this language means anything, it means that the historian Luke proposes to state to Theophilus that he must listen to him, because he had been perfectly instructed. That was the secret of his writing; that was the obvious import of the reason why he undertook to set forth the things which were most certainly believed among them. Many had undertaken to set them forth, and now, he says, I propose to write unto thee that thou mightest know of a certainty the things that have been believed among us, having had perfect understanding from the very first. The word or instructions which the Apostle Luke, or the historian had obtained, that he proposed to set in order, we cannot possibly call the law, but we have it here, in the Inspired Translation, called the testimony of St. Luke; and that which comes to us in the law is the word which he testified to as being given to the people to keep as the doctrine of the Lord Jesus Christ for their salvation.

Reading in this same man's testimony, in the third chapter, commencing at the second verse, I find this remarkable statement:—

> Now in this same year, the word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness. [Parley P. Pratt records it that John came bounding from the wilderness. I have heard it so quoted by some elders, but it is only the testimony of Parley P. Pratt; but we have it here that the word of God came to John in the wilderness.] And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. As it is written in the book of the prophet Esaias; and these are the words, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

This was the burden of his cry; this is what was to him the burden of the word of the Lord, and he went about proclaiming it. John came for the purpose of crying unto the people, Make the way of the Lord straight; make it plain; prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

When the Savior came, he came to this same John, to Jordan, to be baptized of him. One thing this act of Jesus bears record to, and that is this, that this same man (Jesus) being sent by the same power that sent John, recognized the servant, and the servant recognized the Master; and if we take the testimony of the witness who was present, Jesus went down to Jordan and submitted his person to be baptized in water by this very same John, and that John recognized him as the very great lawgiver, and the only one that came from the Father. If this record is true, then in his character as the Redeemer, he fastened upon all the world the necessity of being baptized, not only by his precept, but by his example. And the fact that he came to John and submitted to him, bears record to the occurrence that John had testified to; namely, that he was sent of God; and being the lawgiver, he gave significance to this very fact that he came not to break, but to fulfill the law. If there was nothing more than the validity of this, concerning Jesus and John, to prove the necessity of baptism, it would be sufficient. But I read in the testimony of Mark, the first chapter, this expression:—

> The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

If the prophets certified to anything in the world, they certified this, that in the own due time of the Lord, there was a messenger to be sent out, and the office work of this messenger was to prepare the way of the Lord, and the prophecy concerning the coming of the Lord would be fulfilled.

In the history concerning this same Jesus we have the fulfillment of the prophecy, and the earnest testimony which the prophet bore unto that which would take place in the forerunner, as the voice of one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."

Now there are Mark, Luke, and John all agreed in this respect, concerning the character of John; John being baptizing in the wilderness, and preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Unfortunately for us, we have been engaged in an up-hill work, we have been persistently endeavoring to place before the world the gospel, and representing the truth to the children of men, as it is recorded in the Scriptures, concerning the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. How could we go beyond that of teaching and baptizing for the remission of sins?

No matter what may be the views of anybody else; no matter how others may have oppressed us for our belief, when we take the record itself, which was to be the word and our guide, then we have clearly our way placed before us. Now with this understanding of the Scriptures, as I have read it, I would not dare to get up in your midst to preach from the Bible, and leave out baptism for the remission of sins; I would not dare to do it, and I believe I have as much moral courage as any ordinary man. And when a man stands in the sacred desk to preach that which is to be for the eternal welfare of man, if there ever was a time that a man should be understood it is then; and for me to preach that a man should receive the gospel and be saved without baptism, I would not dare to do it. I would expect, if I did, that some one would rise as one did on Bear Creek, Illinois, once—his name was Johnson. He undertook to confound me by showing that he had a Bible in his hand. It was along in 1867, I was preaching on Bear Creek, that this took place; he tried to keep us from getting the schoolhouse, but he did not so happen to do it. And while I was preaching there, instead of sitting down on the seat, he got up on the form, so that I could not fail to see him. He showed me that he had the Bible in his hand. I took up this passage on baptism, and I quoted it as I have quoted this morning, and I thought I would get this man to read the evidence which I had quoted, and after he got through he got down from the form.

If I undertook to quote from the word anything that the word would not bear me out in, touching these means of life and salvation, you would be apt to say, Now, Mr. Smith, why not keep the law—we have it right here. The people of that time—at least those that heard this preaching—were not so peculiarly diffident as they are at this day, for the record says, "There went out all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem"—and King James' Translation says, they "were all baptized of him;" but this translation says, "Many were baptized of him." Why were they baptized of him? Because they believed his report. They did not stop to cavil because he said he was the voice of one crying in the wilderness; but there had come one sent from God, and it was a sufficient guarantee unto the people in that community; and then there was such a joint testimony between the words of these two men, Jesus and John, they agreed and worked together, and the people gathered together on the banks of the Jordan and were invited by John to be baptized. We have the record of John, the testimony of Mark, and the testimony of Luke—three of the best witnesses of the New Testament—testifying to the teachings of Jesus the Son of God.

We have not a record of all things that were done by him. John said that the world would not contain it. I would not care to have the world filled with the books, because there would be no chance of coming to a conclusion upon anything they contained, and we never could come to the same opinion any more, if we had ten thousand books, than if we only had half a dozen.

We have seen that John came to prepare the way of the Lord, by preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins; and that the people flocked to him in Jordan to be baptized of him; and that Jesus himself submitted to the ordinance, and I have only to submit the language of the Savior to John, when he demurred to his Master's demand for baptism, to make more valid the testimony which I am bearing concerning the necessity of obedience to that command. He says to John, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." He went to the one sent of God, and came to the way that the servant was preparing before him, and submitted himself to the wondrous message that the Father had established for life and salvation.

Then when we add to that the testimony which the Spirit has witnessed that Jesus was the Son of God, and that which he himself has borne witness to that he was sent from the Father, I have done all that is required of me as a minister of the gospel message, so far as making known unto you the means by which you may be brought into relationship with God. You may characterize it as you will, call it what you please; call it a milk and water gospel—it so happens that milk contains all the elements for the human life, and the gospel contains all the elements for life here and life hereafter. The gospel embraces not only the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins and the baptism of the Holy Spirit, but it embraces love to God and love to our neighbor, and Jesus himself testified that on these two commandments hung all the law and the prophets. He also declared, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

There is no difference here between the pulpit and the pew. It reaches to the highest as well as the lowest; it reaches to the noble and the ignoble; it reaches to the wise and the unwise, to the learned and the unlearned; it reaches to the entire family of Adam—none are exempt. I used to think I would like to be exempt from some things that I found in the New Testament Scriptures; but in reading in the Old Testament of Jonah, who tried to flee away from his duty to God, I was convinced it could not be done; he realized, like David, that if he should take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, he could not escape from his duty to God; if he should descend to the depths of hell he could not do it. At length he was compelled to do the will of God, and preach repentance unto the Ninevites. And when he had done that, he got angry because the people repented, and the Lord did not destroy the city. I think Jonah made a mistake there,—he made two; one in trying to escape from God, and the other in finding fault with him. God knew better concerning the life and salvation of that people than Jonah did.

I am reminded now of a saying, in the decision rendered by Judge Philips in reference to his opinion on the Temple Lot suit, he says, "If there is one righteous left in Sodom, to be saved, the promise of the covenant would save him;" and he makes this application to our own time, though in this case there was more than one righteous. And so this morning, I bear witness touching this gospel of life and salvation, that we stand face to face with the record itself, and side by side with those who bore testimony formerly, and our testimony is that the gospel is the same now as in olden times. And I believe it is given us to understand, that by our testimony we shall overcome the world; and I don't know but by our patient endurance we shall overcome the flesh, and wear out the Devil,—and hence we will overcome the world, the flesh, and the Devil. I never was afraid, in the dark, of meeting with the Devil. When I was a boy my mother never allowed anyone to scare her children by telling of the Devil with his hoofs and horns; and I never knew any of her children to be afraid to go to bed in the dark. I don't know that I would miss it very far, if I should say that there were grown-up people that would not go down cellar without a light; I have known some that would not. We still have to contend with all our forces against the world, the flesh, and the adversary of our souls, for he has not changed in those things which he feels sure will destroy that which is good amongst men; and just so far as he can, if he perceives an opening in our armor, he will be sure to avail himself of it; if you will open the door for the enemy to get in, you may be sure that he will enter, and when once in he will never leave till he is compelled to.

Never, in any sense, open the portals of your souls, brethren, to that which will take you away from your integrity and uprightness amongst the children of men. This counsel is good for us all. Many years ago I prophesied—and I am sorry to say that in the prediction I was a true prophet—I predicted that the adversary would not again attempt to overthrow the church by the evil doctrine which had obtained among those out West; but that he would resort to some new tactics to destroy confidence among fellow workers in the ministry, and he has been busily at work to do it. And he will do it if you will let him. We must not let him. Remember the integrity of John in that record which he bore; and if John could abide in his life, bearing the contradiction of sinners; how much more ought you and me to take courage, under the influence that has come to us in the sacred testimony in the record which we have received, which has confirmed the testimony of this man which we find in the New Testament scriptures. Why ought we not to take courage to proceed to the end. It is nearer now than it was then. If we could be permitted to look beyond the confines of this world, into the next, and see how good it will be to be found among the pure and the good, to be entitled to dwell with the merciful and just Redeemer of men, we would take courage. Let us take heed to that which has been witnessed unto us, not only the witness of the Spirit itself to us, but to that of men that have gone before us, as John declared, "I John bear record." May peace abide with us.

A CORRECTION.

Whereas, Elder R. R. Dana, in Herald of April 4, has seen fit to make an attack on the missionaries laboring in California last year, calling us "stalwarts," in a reflective sense, and charging us with "nestling in the cities and towns, enjoying all the comforts which that kind of surroundings bring," and "constantly in the society and company of the Saints," while the "two old men were plodding over hill and dale, much of the time in search of truth-loving, honest hearts," and who were denominated by these "stalwarts" as "cranks, fogies, or back numbers," we take this opportunity of entering our protest to these statements as being unwarranted. The charges are not true and ill becomes one brother to make towards his fellows. We further think it ill-advised for the church papers to publish such communications to the detriment of elders in the field without just investigation.

WALLSEND, N. S. W., Feb. 26.

Dear Brother Wells:—Things are much the same as before your departure. I am kept quite busy—visiting, preaching, and attending social meetings and Bible classes. We had our missionary in charge with us about a fortnight after you left. After he left I discovered that a number of the Hamilton branch were slightly doubting the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and, per consequence, the whole work, by reason of Evangelist Lawson's persistent reading of Bays' book from house to house. One certain brother had serious doubts, was absenting himself from meetings and when he did come "felt that he could not bear testimony."

Seeing this state of things, I thought the occasion demanded a series of lectures in answer to the main points of said book. In the effort, I put the Book of Mormon on trial for its life. The charge was "Fraud!" "Imposition!" Each allegation found in Bays' book against the divinity of the work was treated as a witness for the prosecution, and some of the many evidences of its divinity as witnesses for the defense. The summing up disclosed the fact that, first twelve witnesses, and then tens of thousands had borne unimpeachable testimony of its divinity. God had, from the evidence, shown that he was in the "conspiracy" (if such it was)—insomuch that thousands testify that he has "confirmed the message with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost." The prophets also had foretold the coming forth of the book. Archæology also substantiated its claims. The defense had impeached the testimony of all witnesses for the prosecution; while the prosecution in one of its best efforts—Bays' book—had signally failed to impeach the testimony of one witness for the defense.

The Saints were strengthened—and notably those for whom the effort had been made. That certain brother can and has borne testimony since, and several outsiders were favorably impressed. I tell you this so you may know what came out of the Lawson affair. I think we have lost nothing. Seeing in the Ensign invitations for the ministry to forward articles, etc., for publication, and desiring to preserve the subject matter of the above for future reference, I think I will write up the effort for the Ensign. I do not see why I should write for my own benefit only, if benefit there is.

I am trying to get the local forces in the New Castle district to work with me in a systematic way. We now have a preaching plan, in which each of them take their turn at certain points. I expect to start a weekly mission at Islington soon.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"For the one stray soul that must walk apart,
Leave greatness and sadness and fame,
Perchance to die of a broken heart,
That the world may remember its name.
But we, who are only the rank and file,
Whose fame is a life-span long,
We may leave to earth the gift of a smile
As sweet as the poet's song."

HOW TO MAKE HOME HAPPY.

We are defeated in our attempts to make home cheerful and happy because we play too much and we work too hard. We task and weary ourselves so much in the endeavor to collect the materials for enjoyment that they can give us little pleasure when they are collected. It does not take much to make children contented and happy in their own home provided parents take the lead in simple habits, gentle manners, and cheerful dispositions. It takes very little to make grown people love their homes provided they look for its chief ornaments and greatest charm in themselves and not in things that can be bought or borrowed. The rare and costly ornaments of our houses give us most care and least pleasure. But our peace and comfort and joy come from the most simple and common blessings of life.

The first lesson to learn in the happy art of making home happy is to be content with simple and common things. The farther you go from the everyday paths of life in search of happiness the less likely you are to find it. A thankful heart makes the best dinner, a pleasant voice is the best music, a kind look is a more beautiful picture than was ever painted by any masters, old or new. These are things that all can command. They can be had for the humblest home without money and without price. If you make the happiness of the family depend upon things rare and costly, you will only multiply wants without increasing your capacity to supply them. It is impossible to satisfy the heart with getting and giving. If it ever finds rest it must be satisfied from itself. To be happy with much or little we must be content with such things as we have. The enjoyments of life do not depend upon the amount of possessions, but upon the disposition to receive everything with thankfulness, and give everything with love. The ornaments which make the loneliest dwelling beautiful and the poorest family rich, are kind looks, pleasant voices, gentle manners, cheerful hearts, simple affections.

The best clock has the fewest wheels and makes the least noise. And the more simple the order of our domestic life, the better and happier it will be. Let there be no idle hands and no wasted hours. Neatness and order are excellent virtues in the family, but they may be carried to such an excess as to be a daily torment to everybody in the house. Some excellent people spend the best of their days in keeping a few articles of furniture arranged with painful propriety.

When children grow up in such a family and go out into the world, they are apt to fly to the other extreme and become very indifferent about the disorder which have been denounced and fought against with anxious and angry zeal in their own homes.

If you wait to get more money before you begin to make home happy you will be like travelers in the desert, looking for showers where it never rains. Seek your happiness now from the grateful improvement of present blessings and a cheerful submission to present trials, and then whatever change the future may bring. It will find you the possessor of a happy home.

Let all work and diversion, speech and silence, be chastened and purified with the feeling and the thought of the heavenly Father's presence. Be not slow to believe that he loves to see his children happy. Lie down to repose at night with the prayer that he will give you sleep as he gives to his beloved. Rise up in the morning with thankfulness for the new gift of time fresh from our Father's hand. Eat not the bread of cares and sorrows, but receive gratefully what your Father gives, and rejoice as if fed on angel's food. So shall the lowliest earthly home be made the entrance chamber to God's great home in heaven. MAY HORTON.

[We do not clearly understand from the letter of Sr. Horton whether the above excellent article is original or a selection. If the former, we feel sure that many of our readers will join us in our regrets that she has so long covered her light with a bushel, as well as to hope with us that she will not do this in the future. And just here and now, let us speak to the sisters a few earnest words in regard to the Home Column. It is not being sustained by you as it should be, and we hope you will realize this fact, and acting upon it, prepare now those long contemplated letters and articles which you firmly intended sending, but never have sent to the editor, and when they are prepared forward them to us. "Give and it shall be given unto you," is as true of the helpfulness we endeavor to extend to each other as it is of anything to which it can be applied. Pass on to others that which has proven helpful to you is an excellent way in which to test its virtue.—ED.]

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

MINUTES OF GENERAL MEETING OF THE DAUGHTERS OF ZION ORGANIZATION.

The Daughters of Zion met in the primary rooms of Saints' church at Lamoni, Iowa, Thursday, April 19, 1900. Meeting was called to order by Sr. M. E. Hulmes, chairman of the advisory committee. Hymn No. 475, "My faith looks up to Thee" was sung, and prayer offered by Sr. M. Walker. Owing to the absence (because of illness) of the recording secretary, Sr. C. B. Stebbins, Sr. Audentia Anderson was appointed to act as secretary for the present session, and Sr. Viola Blair was chosen to assist her. Minutes of last meeting (1898) read and approved.

Report of Sr. Hulmes, as president, was read and accepted, as also was report of corresponding secretary, Sr. H. H. Robinson. Treasurer's report read, also the president's financial report. Corresponding secretary's financial report was read, and by motion all three of these reports were referred to an auditing committee appointed by the chair. This committee, composed of Srs. Schmutz, Fisher, and Kelley, retired.

Reports from the following locals were read: Lamoni; Independence; Nebraska City, Nebraska; Kansas City, Kansas; Pleasant Hill branch, Alabama; Garland, Alabama; Wheeling, West Virginia; Kansas City, Missouri; San Francisco, California; Stratford, Canada; Chilliwack, British Columbia.

Auditing committee's report read, accepted, and the committee released with thanks for their service.

Verbal report from the Denver branch was given by Sr. Schmutz. Chairman reported a new local organized at Persia, Iowa, by Sr. M. J. Atkinson.

Sr. Davis talked concerning the idea of sending a delegate to the National Congress of Mothers, and moved to refer consideration of the matter to a committee composed of Srs. Hulmes and B. C. Smith, with power to act as their judgment shall direct, favoring the sending of such a delegate if found practicable. This was seconded and prevailed. Chairman called upon Srs. Walker and Greer for remarks, and both responded with helpful and encouraging talks. Sr. Greer spoke in favor of the good the little leaflets, "A Father's Advice," and a "Mother's Advice," had done.

It was resolved to amend Article IV., section headed "advisory committee," by striking out the word "chairman" in the fourth line and inserting the word "president," so that the part should read, "The chairman (of the advisory committee) shall also be president of the organization." In harmony with this change, Article VI. (under officers) was amended by changing the word "chairman" (second line) to "president."

Sr. Schmutz, of Denver, spoke of the work there; suggested that the programs be published in the first issue of Herald each month. Asked what could be done to interest the young mothers, and spoke of the desire they had to have the memory verses of the Prayer Union resumed. She endorsed what Sr. Greer said about mothers instructing their daughters upon personal subjects.

By motion, election of officers was taken up. Sr. Walker suggested that the advisory committee be chosen from among sisters residing in the same place, and advanced the idea that the sisters at Independence should be given a chance. The names of Srs. Eli Etzenhouser, B. C. Smith, M. E. Hulmes, H. H. Robinson, Goodwin, Frick, A. A. Horton, and Anna Murphy were placed in nomination. Votes resulted in the choice of Srs. Eli Etzenhouser, B. C. Smith, M. E. Hulmes, Clara Frick, and H. H. Robinson.

By motion, Sr. C. B. Stebbins was unanimously sustained as recording secretary. By motion Sr. Anna Murphy was chosen as treasurer.

Sr. Hulmes answered some of the questions asked in regard to programs and work in locals. Sr. Nicholson suggested that programs and select readings appear each month in the same issue of Herald.

By motion, the meeting was adjourned, dismissal prayer being offered by Sr. Schmutz.

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN WALES.

Conference was held at the Saints' chapel, Island Place, Llanelly, January 27 and 28; Elder John G. Jenkins, district president, presiding; E. A. Lloyd, assistant secretary. Official reports: Elders John G. Jenkins, Evan Lewis, John Roper, J. D. Jenkins, Gwilym Davies; Teacher W. P. Cox; Deacon Howell Jones. Treasurer's report was referred to an auditing committee and found correct. Bishop's agents accounts were audited and found correct. Resolved that all members of this district not enrolled in organized branches are hereby requested to unite themselves to the nearest branch, and that the district secretary be authorized to issue letters of removal to members of disorganized branches for this purpose. Resolved further, that the president of the district be instructed to furnish the branches with blank reports, with which the several branches shall report at next conference; said reports to be forwarded to the General Church Recorder as soon as accepted by the conference. Resolved that Sister Pitt represent this district as delegate at General Conference: also that Elder F. G. Pitt be recommended to return to the European mission as at present; also that Elder J. D. Jenkins be recommended as missionary for Wales. Officers were elected as follows: Elder David Lewis, district president; Elder David Thomas reëlected vice president; Elder Evan Lewis reëlected treasurer; Sr. Catharine Treharne reëlected secretary; Sr. E. A. Lloyd reëlected assistant secretary. Bro. Pitt preached his farewell sermon on Sunday evening which was enjoyed by all, but all were sorry to part with Bro. Pitt. Resoved that we adjourn to meet at Porth, the first Saturday and Sunday in August at six p. m., or subject to change of president.

Sunday School Associations.

SUNDAY SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT COMMITTEE'S NOTICE.

It has been decided by the committee on improvements for Sunday schools that all communications upon improvements to be suggested, to the Executive Committee to assist them in carrying out the work the convention has authorized to be done, or any instructions as to amendments to Constitution and By-Laws, or such as should be considered by the next General Convention should be sent to the chairman of this committee, J. F. Mintun, Box A, Magnolia, Iowa. Send such suggestions as soon as they occur to your mind, and not wait till you forget them, or just before next convention. We are instructed to have our report perfected and published at least two months before next convention.

J. F. MINTUN,
in Behalf of Committee.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

The Philadelphia district association will convene at Baldwin, Maryland, May 12 and 13. It is requested that any of the ministry coming east who can make it convenient will stop and meet with us at this time. Preparations are being made to have a good time.

O. T. CHRISTY, Supt.
E. B. HULL, Sec.

Massachusetts district Sunday school association will convene in Saints' chapel, North Plymouth, Massachusetts, May 12 and 13. Business session 7:30 p. m., May 12. We trust every school in the district will be represented, also a report from every school in hands of secretary one week in advance of convention. Ora V. Holmes, secretary, No. 123 Sutton Street, Providence, Rhode Island.

Sunday school association will convene on Friday, May 11 and 12, at Nebraska City. Brethren and Sisters, let us have a full report of all the schools in the district; let us all attend that can, and bring something for the advancement of the Sunday school work, and those who cannot attend, please send something for our Sunday school paper to Nebraska City.

W. M. SELF.

Convention of Galland's Grove district Sunday school will meet at Auburn, Iowa, June 1. Please send your reports to Fred Shumate, Dunlap, Iowa, not later than May 28; and as I have been appointed to labor in Little Sioux district, please send your delegates so as to elect a district superintendent.

J. M. BAKER, Supt.

CORRECTION.

I wish to make a slight alteration in the report of the Manchester and Sheffield district Sunday school association of England: Clay Cross is reported as not having paid to the association. I wish to report them as having paid five shillings. This will alter the income of the association to £1. 12s. 6d., and make the balance in hand £2 4s. ½d. I also wish to state that Bro. Thomas Taylor, of Bradford, Yorkshire, holds a Sunday school in his own house, with the members of his own family, as there are no other saints in the town. Wishing the convention every success, I remain your brother in bonds,

COMMITTEE ON HISTORIES AND ENCYCLOPEDIAS.

The above committee met at the Historian's Office, April 23, 1900, and formed a permanent organization by appointing Heman C. Smith chairman, and Frederick Madison Smith secretary.

We are trying to systematize our work, and will make an effort to correct existing misrepresentations in histories and encyclopedias as soon as possible, and will use every effort in our power to prevent the occurrence of future errors. However, we will need the active coöperation of all who are interested in this work, and hence we earnestly solicit the aid of Saints and friends.

We shall be glad to have information of any works mentioning the latter-day work, issued or prospective, especially the latter; and where practicable send us copies of books. Any information addressed to any one of the committee will receive prompt attention. Copies of books should be sent to the secretary.

IOWA AND MINNESOTA MISSION.

To the ministry and Saints of the above mission, greeting: Having been appointed in charge, I wish to say that the work will be divided as follows:—

The Decatur district will be controlled, as a "mission field," by Duncan Campbell: Fremont and Pottawattamie districts by Henry Kemp; Little Sioux district by J. M. Baker; Galland's Grove district by C. E. Butterworth; Des Moines district by D. M Rudd; Eastern Iowa district by J. R. Sutton; Nauvoo district by James McKiernan; Minnesota by I. N. Roberts. All others of the ministry will please report to the above-named, each reporting to the one presiding over the field in which labor is performed, on the first days of July, October, January, and March, giving all the items of (1) services attended, (2) times preached, (3) times assisted, (4) other services held, (5) baptisms, (6) confirmed, (7) assisted in confirming, (8) total ordinations and to what office, (9) organizations effected, (10) marriages, (11) blessed, (12) administered to, (13) new openings. Those in charge will in turn report to me as soon after above dates as possible, at Lamoni, Iowa.

N. B.—Will the ministry note in their memoranda, just as soon as reading this, the different items to be reported and the dates of reporting. Will the local ministry also keep and make a full report of their labors. Saints and ministry, please report to me requirements of and wishes relating to the resident localities. Before entering into debate, please confer with the missionary in charge. J. W. WIGHT.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

A regular conference of Southern district of Nebraska will convene at Nebraska City, Nebraska, Sunday and Monday, May 13 and 14. We hope to have all branches and all the ministry to report. Come and bring the good Spirit with you, and let us have a good refreshing time.

J. W. WALDSMITH, Pres.

Alabama district conference will convene May 12, at 9:30 a. m., at Lone Star branch. Come, Saints, bring the Spirit of the Lord, and help make the conference a success.

M. K. HARP, Pres.

BORN.

GEESON.—At St. Louis, Missouri, February 28, 1900, to Mr. Henry and Sr. Theodosia Geeson a son, and named Arthur Betram; blessed March 11, by Elder M. H. Bond.

BOHN.—To D. C. Bohn and wife, a daughter; born January 25, 1900, blessed April 15, by Elder George Green, and named Minnie Julia.

MARRIED.

CATON—HOOLE.—At St. Mary's church, Walkley, Sheffield, England, December 9, 1899, by the Rev. Hugh Smith, Elder Charles Henry Caton, Sen., of Birmingham, to Sr. Sarah Ann Hoole, of Sheffield. Home address: No. 189 Oldfield Road, Sparkbrook, Birmingham, England.

DIED.

BUTTERWORTH.—Angel Darling, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Charles E. Butterworth, died at their home in Dow City, Iowa, April 3, 1900, aged 3 years, 4 months, and 26 days. Her last words were: "I want to do good." Funeral services were conducted at the Saints' chapel by Elders William McKim and Alfred Jackson.

STUDLEY.—At Dennisport, Massachusetts, March 24, 1900, Bro. George W. Studley, aged 72 years. Born at South Dartmouth, Massachusetts, February 22, 1828; baptized at South Yarmouth, Massachusetts, May 30, 1882. Funeral services conducted by Bro. George W. Young, at his home. A very large number of Saints and friends present.

EARLY.—On Friday morning, April 6, 1900, Sr. Catharine Early passed away after a brief illness; she was born at Niagara, Lincoln County, Ontario, October 15, 1816; was baptized July 31, 1887, at Louisville, Ontario. She was also a member of the Lindsley branch, and bore a faithful testimony to the truthfulness of the restored gospel. May she come forth in the first resurrection.

VAN WHY.—Bro. Jefferson Van Why was born February 25, 1861, in Smithfield, Pennsylvania; died March 24, 1900, in Dunmore. He leaves a wife, two sons, and four girls. He became acquainted with this latter-day gospel eleven years ago, and felt satisfied with its principles and doctrine, and was born with Christ in baptism at Dickson City, and has been a faithful member every since. He was assistant superintendent in the Sunday school at time of death. Just before his departure he offered a most beautiful prayer. Funeral at the house; Elder Tallie T. Jones discoursed to a large gathering. The Saints carried him to his last resting place in the Dunmore cemetery. Bro. John J. Morgan made a few appropriate remarks at the grave.

BIGLOW.—April 3, 1900, at his home in Chilicothe, Illinois, Ethan C. Biglow; born September 12, 1834, at Halifax, Vermont; baptized September 3, 1899, by Elder J. W. Adams. He loved to bear his testimony of the gospel; he a wife and four children to mourn their loss. He died firm in the faith. Funeral sermon by Elder D. C. Smith.

ROCKWELL.—Maggie, daughter of Elder T. J. and Sr. M. J. Beatty, was born December 17, 1868; baptized January 27, 1884; married to Ezra Rockwell December 7, 1886; died at her home in Limerick, Ohio, April 7, 1900, aged 31 years, 3 months, and 20 days. She had one daughter, who preceded her to the spirit land. She leaves a husband, one little son, parents, seven brothers and sisters, and many friends to mourn her early departure. Funeral from the Saints' church, in charge of Elders S. J. Jeffers, V. M. Goodrich, and A. B. Kirkendall, the latter preaching the sermon. Interment in Limerick cemetery, where she awaits the resurrection of the just.

ANDERSON.—Bro. Christian Anderson was born in Denmark, September 25, 1825, and was converted and went to Salt Lake City in the early 60's; he became dissatisfied with that church and returned to Nebraska in 1866; was married to Mrs. Katie Marie Jensen, October 28, 1876, she having two daughters at the time of her marriage, and the widow and one daughter, Mrs. J. P. Ogard, survive him to mourn the loss of a kind husband and loving father. Bro. Anderson united with the Reorganized Church in 1877, and was ordained a priest in 1878, and has been a consistent and an exemplary member of the church to the time of his death, April 3, 1900, at his home in Fremont, Nebraska. Funeral from the Saints' church, sermon by Elder James Huff, assisted by Elder E. H. Boulson.

WILLIAMS.—Sister Phebe Williams departed this life April 14, 1900, at Lucas, Iowa, aged 50 years and 10 months. She was born May 29, 1849, in Lancashire, England; was married to Mr. John Williams, January 3, 1870, at St. Louis, Missouri. She united with the church in 1894, I believe. She leaves a husband and many relatives to mourn her departure. Funeral sermon by Elder W. E. Williams, assisted by Elder T. A. John. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

Lamoni Sanitarium.

Believing that there should be a place where Saints and others who have not faith to be healed can be treated with "herbs and mild food" by "a friend" and where surgical and other means can be used if needed, I have decided to open a sanitarium at Lamoni, Iowa, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, also a surgical department where operations can be done with skill and modern appliances.

Special attention will be given to diseases of women, ruptures, piles, and tumors. In these disorders I have had large experience. Testimonials of cures sent on application.

Specialists from Chicago and St. Joseph will be consulted in difficult cases. Chronic diseases will be treated largely by baths, massage, and electricity.

I have practiced medicine and surgery for eighteen years. I have taken special courses in the above-named diseases at New York City, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis hospitals.

Temporary rooms have been engaged and patients can be received at any time. Consultations free. Write to me about your case.

THE GOLDEN RULE AS A LAW OF LIFE.

REPRESENTATIVE PUBLIC MEN GIVE THEIR VIEWS AS TO ITS APPLICABILITY TO THE EVERYDAY AFFAIRS OF THE WORLD.

And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 11: 31.

CHARLES S. THOMAS, GOVERNOR OF COLORADO.

1. My understanding of the exact and full meaning of the Golden Rule is conveyed by the language used to express it. It requires no explanation to any man who desires to make it a rule of conduct and to apply it to all transactions and intercourse with his fellow-beings. The difficulty with the application of the Golden Rule to the affairs of men does not arise from any failure to understand the rule itself, but from the infirmities of human nature. In other words, it expresses a perfect line of conduct, but, as human nature is imperfect, we can only endeavor to follow it, conscious of the fact that our short comings do not permit us to literally do so at all times.

2. I believe the rule is a practical one to follow at all times, in the home, in society, and in business. The man who will not follow it at all times in all the departments you mention, cannot be depended upon to recognize it at all times in any of them.

3. If its literal and constant application to all the affairs of the industrial world were possible, I think it would terminate labor discussions and bring about full harmony among all the working forces of mankind. But until human nature changes, I believe this is impossible.

4. The progress, in my opinion, which has been made in the last quarter of a century in this respect, has been backward. There is less of human sympathy and recognition of obligations between employer and employee in the industrial world in the period you mention than in any similar period in modern times. The employer and employee seldom come in contact with each other, and while the relations are close industrially, they do not otherwise exist at all.

5. I certainly would not object to having the Golden Rule taught in all public schools; indeed, I should be surprised to learn that the precept was not generally inculcated in these institutions.

6. This rule can be best made popular by the resolve of each individual to act upon it as far as possible; to make duty instead of selfishness the principal end and aim of life.

G. W. ATKINSON, GOVERNOR OF WEST VIRGINIA.

1. The "Golden Rule" means that every man shall deal honestly with every other man. If every citizen will gauge his conduct in life by the plumb line of truth and honesty, the golden age will have been ushered in.

2. I most emphatically say that the Golden Rule should be followed and practiced at all times in the home, in society and in business. If this were done all troubles of every kind would pass away.

3. If the teachings of the Golden Rule were practiced by all classes there certainly could be nothing but harmony among all the working forces of mankind.

4. I believe great progress has been made along the lines of arbitration, coöperation, and mutual responsibility between capital and labor during the last quarter of a century. I confidently believe that these will be the lines that will be generally and universally adopted for the adjustment of all controversies and difficulties between capital on the one hand and labor on the other.

5. Under no circumstances would I object to having the Golden Rule taught in the public schools. On the contrary, I would insist that it should be taught in all schools of every grade and character, and in the home life as well.

6. The best way that I can think of popularizing the Golden Rule is: First, by teaching it to the children in our public schools; and, second, by men in high places and in all business practicing it in their daily walks and conversations.

HARRY P. ROBINSON, EDITOR OF THE RAILWAY AGE.

1. The meaning of the Golden Rule is that "ye should do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you," supposing your relations to each other to be reversed. You are to pay tribute to Cæsar, but not at all expecting Cæsar to pay tribute to you. You are to pay it to him as you would wish that he would pay it to you if you were Cæsar and he were you. If you are a workman you must give to your employer such faithful and zealous work as you would wish him to give to you if you paid his wages. If you are an employer you must pay such wages and give your workmen such treatment as you would wish them to pay and give you if you worked for them. He who laid down the Golden Rule never preached a doctrine of disregard for constituted authority. Those who would read into the scriptures any encouragement of a propaganda of discontent or any countenance for the visionary doctrine, common in all ages, of financial and social equality—those, I say, would corrupt the essence of his teachings. The Golden Rule was intended to be applied then, and can only be applied now, subject to the general social conditions.

2. I believe it to be entirely practicable for the individual to follow the rule, thus understood, at all times—at home, in society, and in business.

3. Its universal application in all industrial affairs, however, will only be possible in a much higher stage of education and intelligence than prevails among the masses of mankind to-day, and only in such higher conditions could it, or anything else, put an end to labor discussions.

4. More progress has been made in the last quarter, or certainly half, century than in all the eighteen centuries that went before.

5. If there is any teacher in any public or private school who does not now teach the rule both by precept and example, that teacher is unworthy of his or her place.

6. The rule is one of the few great realities—is one of the most powerful working forces—in the social and industrial life of all civilized peoples to-day. We are not forever proclaiming the rule. Somebody has well said that "it is only by the strength of its silent virtue that the world exists."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

RT. REV. SAMUEL FALLOWS, BISHOP REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Golden Rule well deserves its name. It is a rule of purest gold in the realm of action. It does not spring from a dreamy, unsubstantial idealism or transcendentalism, but from an eternal principle of righteousness and beneficence. It is the divine Savior's Golden Rule, because he presented it on its positive and not on its negative side, as other teachers had done before him. It puts one in another's place. It is applicable to all men at all times. It should be the very soul of all business relations and transactions. It conserves a true selfness, but eliminates all selfishness. It will end all antagonism between the so-called classes of society. Capital and labor it will unite in firmest concord. It will make wars to cease unto the ends of the earth.

We must not be misled in our view of truth and duty by miserable and mischievous parodies, like that one presented in a popular book, which is full of slang and not elevating in its whole moral tone. We may smile at its rendering of the Golden Rule, and think it striking and witty—"Do unto the other fellow what he would do to you, and do it quick"—but never was a rule of action more heartily to be condemned than that. If the other fellow is going to cheat you cheat him quick. It is the rule of vindictiveness and unrighteousness in every form, which the Golden Rule came to supplant. "Love one another, even as I have loved you." Such a love worketh no ill to his neighbor, for it is the essence of the Golden Rule.

REV. W. W. WILSON.

The Golden Rule is a Christian precept expressing in positive form and with divine authority what men had before expressed in negative terms and on the plane of human expediency. It gathers into a brief and pungent statement the mutual relations of men, and emphasizes a principle of moral conduct which, if followed, will promote the highest welfare of mankind.

It was given as a practical rule of conduct and is capable of application to all social relations. In proportion as it is held up as a standard and is adhered to as a working principle, the various interests in domestic, social, and commercial affairs will be satisfactorily adjusted. The growing conviction, greatly accelerated by the experience of the last few years, that the true welfare of society is promoted through conciliation and not through cruel strife is developing this rule and making it more and more apparent as the principle to solve all difficulties and harmonize all differences.

It should be emphasized anywhere and in every way opportunity offers. It should be taught in every school and at every fireside, by constant repetition and continual illustration. Its success, however, will not be advanced merely by an intelligent understanding of it. Many noble precepts are well understood and widely acknowledged, but are flagrantly disregarded.

The Golden Rule finds its greatest opposition in the inherent selfishness that afflicts humanity. There must be an authority back of the rule that will secure its enforcement and move men to fulfill it as a matter of duty. The rule can be made popular and effective only through the recognition of its divine origin and divine authority.

PROF. WILLIAM W. FOLWELL, UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA.

1. The Christ proposed the Golden Rule to "the salt of the earth," the children of the kingdom of heaven, exhorting them to be "perfect," even as the father in heaven is perfect. The qualities of such children he named as poverty of spirit, sobriety, meekness, a hunger and thirst after righteousness, mercifulness, purity of heart, peacemaking. He commanded them to love their enemies and to do good to those who hated them, that they might be children of the heavenly Father, who maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. The Golden Rule binds all who desire to "qualify" as children of the kingdom, and binds them to apply its principle to all men, including the evil and the unjust.

2. The Golden Rule is practicable just so far as men comprehend it, and are liberated from conceit, anger, and selfishness. In society and in business there may be occasions when obedience will be followed by loss, but the rule can still be obeyed if there be grace enough in the man.

3. If all men were "qualified" as children of the kingdom perfect harmony would follow universal righteousness. I doubt whether that harmony would render "discussions" unnecessary. The right is not always self-evident, but perfectly just men could reconcile differences of interest and opinion.

4. It seems to me that there has been some improvement in the course of the last generation in social amenity, in business honor, and even in politics.

5. No.

6. By the foolishness of preaching; by the efforts—also foolish—of teachers; by the practice of parents; but, perhaps, most effectively, by the example of public men.

PROF. ALBION W. SMALL, UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO.

1. I understand the Golden Rule to mean: "Assuming that you only want what is fair for yourself, always remember that others have the same claim to the fair thing that you have, and act accordingly."

2. Yes, as a motive, but not strictly as a program. Will any one confess that he follows a different motive? We are all supposed to believe in strict justice, and that is the ground course of the conduct demanded by the Golden Rule. In trying to apply the Golden Rule when we are dealing with people who either have no desire to follow it or who have vicious notions of fairness we have to choose between less than justice for ourselves and more than justice for them. Nobody can lay down a rule that will fit all such cases.

3. Yes, if it were actually carried out as a program; no, if it were merely professed alike by our whole population, with the present differences in points of view. Until the human race is closer to the angels than is likely for a number of centuries to come laws and disinterested tribunals will be needed to settle differences between litigants who are equally sure that there is no other side to the case but their own.

4. Twenty-five years ago the chief officer of a large manufacturing company in New England told me that he would not demean himself by admitting a committee of employees to a conference. For fifteen years conferences between employers and employees have been matters of course in that city. In some cases the reverse of this has occurred, but a large book could be filled with evidences that the men who have power in business are, as a rule, more disposed to use it fairly if others leave them half a chance, than men with like power have ever before.

5. If it is not taught in all our schools the people ought to serve notice on the Board of Education that its claims to benefits under the Golden Rule are outlawed.

6. It is popular enough now, whenever we find some one practice it toward ourselves. The only way to increase its popularity is for more of us to fall into line in practicing it. I would suggest that people who want the Golden Rule observed would do well to keep out of the company of those who have nothing good to say of the churches. Whatever faults the churches may have, they are honestly trying to fill the world with the spirit of the Golden Rule. . . . —Chicago Tribune, February 11, 1900.

"Father Ignatius of the Anglican Church announces his intention to retire into "lay communion," because "the Archbishops and Bishops, while they will tolerate any species of heresy or unbelief, are energetic in suppressing Catholic worship to gratify ignorant, godless bigots; and even forbid incense to be used during the eucharistic offering, though God himself commands it."

"A QUESTION OF THEOLOGY."

The Deseret News for Saturday, March 24, 1900, has a short review of a late article in the HERALD, which we give place to, because of the good thoughts expressed and positions taken in regard to man's possible knowledge of the Godhead. We give this review the same as we gave the article it reviews, each to stand on its own merits, we not being responsible for either.

A QUESTION OF THEOLOGY.

A contributor to the Saints' Herald writing on the subject of the Godhead, argues against the theology that takes its position on the written inspired word. He endeavors to reduce to absurdity the philosophy which holds that life springs only from life, and that every design must have a designer.

His argument runs in this vein: Space and matter had no progenitors. The infinite is also revealed in energy. Energy is not the product of so-called creation. There is an undesigned design in shapeless matter. Only the Infinite One knows of the possibilities wrapped up in a clod of clay. God is no more a product of law than is space. Only one God because the infinite is not divisible. Only one infinite space, one infinite universe, one infinite God, without the possibility of beginning or end, creation or extermination.

On these rather incoherent premises, the writer in the HERALD seems to conclude that God is synonymous with intelligence. He quotes: "Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be," and concludes: "Why not a personal God, with a body of an undesigned design, with a mind that is the uncaused cause of the designed designs that environ us?" Undesigned design and uncaused cause! How much more intelligence do those terms convey to the human mind than the more familiar, "Three and yet one;" "everywhere and nowhere;" "without body, parts, and passions," yet having hands, eyes, feet, etc., and being capable of love, hatred, jealousy? How much more intelligible is the expression "undesigned design," than "square circle?"

The failure of the writer to convey any light upon the subject reminds us of the fact that all efforts at explaining philosophically the mysteries of the Godhead have failed. Philosophy has not been able to penetrate except through imagination beyond a very limited space of the tangible universe. Every attempt at explaining the origin of God, the mystery of his Being, his qualities and attributes, by human reason has finally resulted in some absurdity. Were salvation dependent upon a philosophical understanding of the Godhead, the greatest of sages would have but little chance—in fact no more than the most ignorant.

It is natural that it should be so. A little child, though fully capable of enjoying happiness, would not be able to comprehend the origin of its parents, their labors and aspirations. A little child would at an early age admire the architectural drawings of his father; but it would be futile to make him comprehend the meaning of each line, the process of construction, the cost of labor, and the ultimate object in view. But man, frail, finite man, presumes in this stage of knowledge to discuss the nature, the attributes, the essence, and even the origin of God, as if all these questions were no more than a complicated problem in geometry, or algebra.

Locke, in his essay on Human Understanding, long ago pointed out that the finite mind is necessarily incapable of measuring the depths of some subjects. That, in other words there are objects beyond the reach of the human understanding, just as there are objects beyond the reach of our seeing, hearing, and other natural faculties. He thought it would save much idle discussion, if it were commonly agreed that such is the case, but mankind has not profited to any considerable degree by the hint of the English philosopher. Discussions continue every day about subjects which are much further beyond the ken of philosophy, than are the actual conditions at the South Pole.

With regard to the Godhead, all a man on this earth can know for certain is that which is written in the word of God, or that which is revealed by God from time to time. The only question in this connection is: "What is revealed on that subject?" There is ample room for discussion as to the genuineness of the written word, its correct interpretation, and the harmony of one set of passages with another; but when the correct meaning of the word has been ascertained, that ends discussion. The question then is: "How do you read? What has been revealed?" Is the God of the Bible the being without parts, without passions, without compassion, pictured by modern orthodoxy? We think not. We believe every student of the Bible who will read without prearranged ideas will at once discard that fictitious being.

There may seem to be discrepancies in the written revelations, but it is safe to conclude that these are but apparent and depending on our imperfect knowledge. The time will come when our knowledge shall become more perfect, and then we will understand, and know as we are known. In the meantime our greatest wisdom is to believe God's word.

Abraham became the friend of God and a pattern to God's children in all ages, because he had faith in the Almighty. Through faith he lived as a child under its father's care, and through faith he was perfected until he became fully accepted of the Almighty. It is the philosophy of faith the world to-day stands in need of, more than speculation beyond the boundaries of the world in which we live.

BRO. JOHN SMITH, BUSINESS MANAGER.

Bro. John Smith, the new Business Manager and Treasurer of the Herald Office, has a card in the present issue of the HERALD, to which we call the attention of its readers.

We have only this to say in behalf of Bro. Smith: He has for years been in the service of the church as an elder, missionary, branch and district president, Bishop's agent, etc., in all of which he has acquitted himself creditably to the satisfaction of the church. He has been successful as a business man in his home city, New Bedford, Massachusetts, where he stands well in the confidence of the people.

We believe Bro. Smith deserves the support of the Herald Office patrons, and we trust he shall have the due coöperation of all interested.

We introduce him through the editorial columns, and say of him what we believe to be true of every man, in every department, Let his work speak for him.

THE FIRST CHURCH BUILDING BY THE REORGANIZED CHURCH.

The first building built as a worshiping place by the Reorganized Church was erected in 1862–3 in Miller Township, LaSalle County, Illinois, at a point usually called Mission, by the Mission branch.

The first four members of this branch were Levi Lightfoot, Yance Jacobs, Andrew Hayer and Thomas Hougas. Of these four, only the latter is left. There are now one hundred and thirty members left in the locality. A great number of those once members of the branch are now scattered into other localities and have been absorbed into other branches, and are to the credit of the mother branch usually good members of church and society. Bro. Thomas Hougas is still acting president of the branch after thirty-six years spent in the pastoral charge.

Our object in noticing this branch is that the original building had long ago become too small for the use of the congregation, and is being torn down and removed to give place to a larger and more suitable edifice. The new one to occupy the site of the old one is to be 36x60, the size of the one at Plano, which we are almost persuaded will be found much too small; either at the start, or soon after.

The building committee are Lorenzo Hayer, G. L. Hayer, and John Midgorden, all capable men, who expect to have the new building ready by June. We wish them the best of success in their new venture.

LATTER DAY SAINTS not alone in financial trouble; note the following:—

A great deal of unrest obtains among Congregationalists. It is occasioned by the condition of their benevolent societies. Criticism is heard, especially among Congregational

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ists of Chicago, Detroit, St. Paul, and throughout the West, that there are too many societies, too many officials, and too little work.

Since reform must come slowly, a step toward it is to be, if possible, the holding of the annual meetings of all six Congregational benevolences at the same time and place. To the outsider this does not seem to be a radical reform, but to bring it about in 1901 active work is now under way.

The Church Mission boards, whose fiscal years are now closing, claim they have not felt the effect of improved times. The American Baptist Home Mission society, which, with the Missionary union, the foreign organization of the same denomination, was helped out of debt two or three years ago through the assistance of John D. Rockefeller, falls into debt this year $32,000. It has, however, added $170,000 to its permanent and annuity funds, and feels that it has had a good year. The Missionary union fell behind $80,000 last year, and adds $40,000 more to it this year, all in spite of the fact that estimates for expenditures were limited to the receipts of the year last preceding. Baptist boards South have done better and, while they have made no gains, they have managed to keep out of debt.

BRO. I. N. WHITE hands us the following which shows the mercenary side of some of the attacks made upon the faith. We republish that it may be placed with other object lessons of a similar character:—

LECTURE.

The Book of Mormon. Is it of divine origin? By Rev. S. J. Moore. Three years study of the Mormon system. Has had three public discussions with champions of the Mormon faith.

"In any section where Mormons are troubling Israel, Bro. Moore is the man to send for. He can do a neat job in showing them up, and he does it with dispatch and thoroughness."—W. P. Throgmorton, D. D., Editor Baptist News, Du Quoin, Illinois.

Come and hear a full investigation of the arguments for and against this strange book at the Baptist church, Jackson Grove, Thursday evening, March 22, 1900. Admission 15 cents. Children under 12 years of age admitted free. One third to go to the work of gospel missions, as pastor and deacons of the church may direct. Lecture to begin at the hour of 7:30 p. m. Tickets for sale by Pyle and Otterson, at Bessie, Illinois.

WHY HE RESIGNED.

The Wichita Eagle has the following in its issue of April 4:—

WHY DR. HILLIS RESIGNED.

Rev. Newton Dwight Hillis, the great Presbyterian divine of Brooklyn, has sent in his resignation to the Chicago Presbytery to which he belongs, asking for a demit, to the end that he may attach himself to some other orthodox church. His letter of resignation is so carefully worded and written in such a Christian spirit that it stumped the Presbytery, which referred it to a committee, which committee asks two weeks' time to report. He was charged with heresy and the intention was to formally excommunicate him. He has been of late filling the pulpit of Lyman Abbott, and what he said in the course of a sermon last Sunday week was promptly wired the Presbytery at Chicago. He attacked the Presbyterian confession of faith, and this is what he said:—

"The confession of faith says that certain men and angels are foreordained to everlasting death, being particularly and unchangeably designed, and their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished, and every young man who enters the Presbyterian church has to solemnly swear to believe and teach this frightful view. And every attempt to revise and expel that statement from the creed has been successfully combated by a majority that wishes to retain that doctrine.

"It would seem as if a man would prefer to be burned at the stake rather than hold or assert or charge such infinite cruelty upon the all-merciful and all-loving God. The day the scholastics wrote that chapter in the confession of faith they got the Devil confused with God.

"I would rather shake my fist in the face of the Eternal and fling every vile epithet toward his stainless throne, where eternal mercy sits with the world's atoning Savior, than lift my hand with that creed toward God's throne and affirm that I taught or believed it."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Elder John Kaler, Sydney, N. S. W., March 27:—

Saints all well. The bubonic plague is spreading every day in spite of all efforts to keep it down. Many are in great fear, but the Saints seem content to abide the will of the Lord and trust in him. Love to all the dear Saints in Zion.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Joseph Luff, who was appointed to have the work in Colorado, Eastern Wyoming, and New Mexico, in charge, will take the watchcare of it; but cannot at present be in the field in person, conditions and work necessary to be attended to requiring his attention elsewhere for a period of time. Address him at Independence, Missouri, where it will reach him in person, or be sent to his temporary address abroad.

The Prophetic News, Vol. 1, No. 1, for April, 1900, published at Providence, Rhode Island, reaches us this month. The News is an independent religious journal, published by John P. Brown, No. 121 Federal Street, Providence. From the familiar names we see in it we conjecture that it is some sort of a Latter Day Saint effort to disseminate the Christ idea among the people. We welcome it to our exchange list.

We have received two letters replying to, or criticising the letter of Bro. G. H. Graves. But, as Bro. Graves' strictures were rather good-natured than otherwise, we see no harm to result from them if left as they are. If they are magnified, or replied to as if they were ill-natured and intended to be personally offensive, considerable wrong might result, and trouble ensue. We prefer therefore not to insert these replies.

Sr. Emma J. Kling, of 424 East Center Street, Akron, Ohio, wishes to purchase a copy of Bro. J. J. Cornish's synopsis. Anyone having one that he will spare please correspond with her, naming price, etc.

Dow City, Iowa, has responded to the vote of the Woodbine Reunion to meet in that town next fall by holding a meeting at their hall Tuesday evening April 3, last, and appointing a citizens' committee to act with the reunion committee, consisting of Messrs. Willis Wiggins, H. S. Green, T. P. Black, B. F. Bigelow, and F. S. Stone. It is said that the meeting was very enthusiastic.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 3.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

TRADITION ABOUT THE FOUR BROTHERS.

About four hundred years after the colony had located at Nephi, and after the Nephites had left that southern country, we see that the tradition concerning the disputes between these four eldest brothers was fresh in the minds of the Lamanites. Lamoni's father (the king of the Lamanites, who lived at the city of Nephi) referred to Nephi as a "liar," and that he "robbed our fathers." (Alma 12:25.)

And Limhi relates that the Lamanites believed "that they were wronged in the wilderness," and "also wronged, while crossing the sea," and "wronged" again while in their "first inheritance." They were "wroth" with Nephi because, as they said, "he had taken the ruling of the people out of their hands," and because he took the sacred records. (See Mosiah 6:12.)

This represents the tradition as fresh and clear at a time when the principal actors of it had been dead perhaps four hundred years; and it clearly relates to Lehi's four eldest sons, the ones that formed a part of the "original colony," and between whom the disputes arose.

Now the first inheritance was on the west side of the land (country) of Nephi, in the borders by the seashore (Alma 13:11), the Nephites moving northward to Zarahemla, via Lehi-Nephi, the Lamanites spreading north, east, south, and west.

From the foregoing we see that the Book of Mormon is in harmony with scientists with reference to that southern country.

Squier thinks that Manco Capac and his wife had crossed the sea. Gibbs and others think that the southern civilization was developed by a colony that had crossed the sea. Clavigero thinks that the Aztec forefathers came originally from Asia, across the Pacific; and Mr. Brinton catches sight of those southern people in the great western mountains, at the head waters of the Plata, and at the Titicaca Lake. These conclusions are reached by these men after great care and long studies on various lines of modern research.

The Book of Mormon says that the people of South America started from the west seashore, in the land of Nephi, which land was the southern division of South America; its northern line being near or at a great watershed which runs across the continent. We identify the city of Nephi with Cuzco. The four white brothers were there. In the myths it is Cuzco; in the Book of Mormon it is Nephi. These men's sisters were there.

In the myths it was Manco Capac, the youngest one of four brothers, who became the first one of a long line of Peruvian sovereigns. In the Book of Mormon it was Nephi who became the first king at Nephi, and he was succeeded by a long line of Nephite and Lamanite kings. In the myths it was Manco Capac who became great at Cuzco, teaching the rude people the arts of civilized life. In the Book of Mormon this work was done by Nephi. He caused them to work with their hands, teaching them how to farm, and how to work in wood, iron, etc. In the myths it was Manco Capac who had the miraculous golden wedge. In the Book of Mormon it was Nephi who had the miraculous directors. In the myths Manco Capac had for a companion-guide, Viracocha, the Peruvian creator. In the Book of Mormon Nephi had for a companion-guide the Lord, the Christian Creator. In the myths of Peru, one of those four brothers was an enemy. The Book of Mormon points to Laman as the one who wanted to kill Nephi. In the four brother myths of Brazil, it was Tupa, one of the four brothers, who drove his fraternal rivals from the field. In the Book of Mormon it was Laman who was determined to "rule this people," and who drove his brother away into the wilderness. In the myths, Manco Capac was most skillful and handy. In the Book of Mormon Nephi was skillful and handy. He made a ship in which to cross the sea; some of his brothers thought he could not do it. He made the tools to do the work with; some of the colony thought he was a "fool," and wanted to throw him into the sea. Nephi was a genius.

What good hindsight the man had who wrote the Book of Mormon. Could you have done that well? We see that he made his story fit both the Aztec and Peruvian myths! Who would have thought of fixing up a colony of eight men and making the relationship of those men such that they would fit both sets of myths?

In the Aztec colony were eight chiefs; "the Prince" or leader had four sons. They came from Aztlan or Tulan; from the other side of the sea. In the Lehi colony (after the death of Ishmael) were eight men; four of them were the leader's sons. They came from Jerusalem across the sea to South America.

The Aztecs traveled southward from Aztlan. The Lehi colony traveled southward from Jerusalem. The Aztec women carried big loads like the men. The women in the Lehi colony were strong like the men.

The Peruvian myths fit to a dot with the Book of Mormon story. Are there any truths in these myths? If so, the Book of Mormon stands ready to bear witness to them. Is the Book of Mormon a fraud? If so, both the Aztec and Peruvian myths are willing to bear witness to the fraud, and should be held responsible for bearing false witness and the damage done. The very soul of the myths and the Book of Mormon story are the same. If that book is a fraud, what are the myths?

MAYA MYTHS.

The Mayas of Central America have some myths of their own; they tell their story in their own way.

Professor Le Plongeon says that according to his reading of the Troano (a Maya book), their ancient nation or empire was symbolized by a tree, which was planted in the northern part of South America. This nation or empire is symbolized by the serpent also. The serpent's head reaches into the Yucatan peninsula; its long body is streched out at full length through Central America, and eastward down and through the Panama Isthmus, with its tail resting in the northern part of South America.

From these myths we can see that the beginning of that ancient people commenced in the northern part of South America, moving northward until it reached Yucatan, these countries occupied by this serpent becoming the ancient dominions of the Maya Empire.

These Mayas seem to trace their pedigree to the people of Zarahemla —Mulokites. (See Book of Omni.) The people of Zarahemla had occupied the northern part of South America perhaps four hundred years before the Nephites—under the leadership of Mosiah — discovered them; and even after the union of the two peoples each retained its separate tribal name.

The Lamanites were Lemuelites, Ishmaelites, and Lamanites. These peoples united were Lamanites. The Nephites were Samites, Zoramites, Jacobites, and Josephites. These united were Nephites. Dissenters from either side, who went over to the other confederacy, became adopted into their new relationship. Hence Nephites became Lamanites, and Lamanites became Nephites; but still retaining their tribal lineage. So the people of Zarahemla became Nephites in this sense, but still retained their tribal name, and kept up like the rest their tribal separation. Now at the time of the breaking up of the Nephite government, in the fourth century, we can see that in the absence of a central government which kept the tribes together in one organization, they would fall back to tribal rule; and after the destruction of the Nephite government, the Mayas would still retain a knowledge of their ancient dominion while forming a part of the Nephite confederacy; and they being the original founders of the city of Zarahemla and of the civilization that started in that region of South America, the Nephites but sharing with them in that ancient dominion, it would be but natural for them to relate in their myths what had happened in their joint history with the Nephites.

In myths a tribe will relate what happened to it or its ancestors, some events which took place hundreds of years before the tribe was born. For instance, the Fiji Noah was a Fijian, and the seven persons saved with him in his canoe were all Fijians. So with the Mexican Noah; he was an Aztec, of course. So the tower of Babel and confusion, it was Fijians that built the tower, and when the foundation of the tower broke asunder it flung the people far and wide over all the islands of Fiji!

So with the Mayas. They represent their ancient nation as occupying the northern part of South America, the isthmus, Central America, and into Yucatan, when at the same time it was but their joint rule with the Nephites which is described in their serpent chart; their ancestors forming a part of that confederation.

At the time the Nephites were destroyed, many of the Zarahemlaites likely submitted to Lamanite rule, and thus escaped destruction, and retained possession of their own country, having moved northward like many others did.

This view will explain why the Maya myths make it appear that they were a separate and older people than other tribes in that region.

What confirms the writer in this view is: 1. The Maya Empire commenced where the Book of Mormon locates the people of Zarahemla in their earliest history; namely, the northern part of South America. 2. This Maya Empire, Le Plongeon says, at one time became universal in its influence and power, and reached out to all the land. This condition of things we see in the Book of Mormon at the time that all were converted to God. Thus the governmental system (all things common) and church influence were felt in all the land both north and south. 3. This very Maya

Empire, Le Plongeon says, at one time had a southern limit at the Isthmus of Darien, thus showing that they had a rival for dominion in South America that was pushing this ancient people northward.

The boundary line at the isthmus is pointed at in Mormon 1 : 6, where he says that "we made a treaty with the Lamanites and the robbers of Gadianton, in which we did get the lands of our inheritance divided. And the Lamanites did give unto us the land northward; yea, even to the narrow passage which led into the land southward. And we did give unto the Lamanites all the land southward."

Thus we see both stories agree, both as to origin of an ancient nation, its influence, and the division line of this ancient people, Central America having at this time a dense population of civilized people, "covered with buildings, and the people were as numerous almost, as it were the sand of the sea." (See Mormon 1:1.)

SEVEN FAMILIES FROM THE TOWER OF BABEL.

Clavigero, explaining a Chiapense myth, says:—

There was a Votan who was the grandson of the man who built the ark to save himself and family from the Deluge; he was one of those who undertook to build the tower that should reach to heaven. The Lord ordered him to people America. "He came from the East." He brought seven families with him. He had been preceded in America by two others, Igh and Imox. He built a great city in America called "Nachan."—Atlantis, p. 313.

This Nachan is supposed by De Bourbourg to be Palenque, in Central America. Palenque (the ruins) is about fifteen miles from a modern town by that name, and is located in the northeastern part of the state of Chiapas, about one hundred sixty miles eastward of the Tehuantepec Isthmus. Priest, quoting from a letter of C. S. Rafinesque, says:—

This account describes partly the ruins of a stone city, of no less dimensions than seventy-five miles in circuit; length thirty-two, and breadth twelve miles, full of palaces, monuments, statues, and inscriptions; one of the earliest seats of American civilization, about equal to Thebes of ancient Egypt. —American Antiquities, p. 241.

This explanation of this myth would make it appear that a colony came from the tower of Babel and made a settlement in Central America.

The oldest people in this region are called the Colhuas, and Donnelly says:—

The Mayas succeeded to the Colhuas, whose era terminated one thousand years before the time of Christ.—Atlantis, p. 217.

This Colhuan kingdom embraced in its ancient dominions, Baldwin says, Honduras, Guatemala, Yucatan, Tabasco, Tehuantepec, Chiapa, and other districts in Central America. (See Ancient America, p. 199.)

The earliest civilization was in the forest region. (Ibid., p. 95.) "Quirigua is older than Copan," says Baldwin, "and Copan is older than Palenque. The old monuments in Yucatan represent several distinct epochs in the ancient history of that peninsula." (Ibid., 155, 152, 159, 156, 122–128.)

"At Palenque, as at Mitla, the oldest work is the most artistic and admirable" — "Evidence of repeated reconstructions." "'It is as impossible to attribite them all to the same people as to believe they were all built at the same epoch. . . . The substructions at Mayapan, some of those at Tulha, and a great part of those at Palenque,' are among the older remains. These are not the oldest cities whose remains are still visible, but they may have been built, in part, upon the foundations of cities much more ancient." (Ancient America, p. 156)

Some scientists think that the ruins of "Copan, Mitla, and Palenque antedate every thing else in the human period of our globe." (Ibid., p. 161.)

The Colhuas' "first settlements," Baldwin thinks, were "on the Gulf coast in Tabasco." (Ibid., p. 200.)

In Central America and Mexico we read of stone, cement, and stucco "hard as marble." (Ibid., p. 157.)

Making due allowance for exaggeration, it is safe to say that in the ruins of Quirigua, Copan, Mitla, and Palenque are found the footprints of one of the earliest civilizations of our race this side the flood. But the exact time when the Colhuas era ceased, or the exact time when the Toltecs were nearly exterminated, is mere guesswork. The writers differ on this point, and they rest more or less on legendary documents, which are but scanty at that.

The native historian puts the Chichimec victory over the Toltecs at 962 A. D. to 1015 A. D. (See Prehistoric America, p. 282.) Other writers fix other dates. And still others will have it that the fall of the Toltec league preceded the Chichimec invasion. They differ as much about the facts as about the dates." (Ibid., 283.)

We can see, however, that in Central America and Mexico it has been conquest after conquest, nation succeeding nation; or, in other words, empires rose there, ran their race, went unto decay, and died. It is sufficient for the writer's purpose to show that there have been several waves of migration or civilization in Mexico and Central America. The earliest was the Colhuas; contemporary with them was the Chichimec, and, strange yet true, we read of Chichimecs from the remotest times down till after the Conquest, so that in prehistoric times America was never without Chichimecs. They occupy about the same place in the new world myths that the Turanians do in the old. Turanian means "outside," or "barbarian." So the Chichimecs seem as a rule "outside," or "barbarian." The name Chichimec became "a general term to designate the unconquered tribes of New Spain." (Ibid., p. 12.)

Bancroft says:—

Of the tribes that are known to have possessed no civilization, . . . I will only mention the people denominated Chichimecs, under which general name were designated a multitude of tribes inhabiting the mountains north of the valley of Mexico, all of which were prominently dependent on the result of the chase for their subsistence.—Native Races of the Pacific States, vol. 1, p. 617.

From this we see what the historians mean by Chichimecs. Yet this is the kind of people that put an end to the "golden age" in Mexico and Central America. (Prehistoric America, pp. 274, 275.)

These days it is the most civilized that crush out the semicivilized governments, and teach them something better. But in Central America and Mexico it was the nomadic tribes that put an end to the Toltec era. Those nomads had no use for the cities that are found in the dense forests in ruins; they did not want to live in that way.

There were three distinct periods in the Nahuatl rule: that of the Toltecs, that of the Chichimecs, and that of the Aztecs.—Prehistoric America, p. 271.

Seven families from the tower of Babel ordered by God "to people America." That sounds so much like the Jaredite story found in the Book of Mormon. They too came from the tower at the confusion of tongues. The Lord led them to America. Ah! that is what spoils these stories; the Lord is in them.

The number of families in the Jaredite colony is not given; but there were Jared and his brother, and their families, and their friends. These friends consisted of twenty-two persons (see Ether 3:4); so that the number in the Jaredite colony would be about the number as found in the myths.

LATTER-DAY EVENTS.—NO. I.

SERMON PREACHED BY PRESIDENT W. W. BLAIR, AT LAMONI, DECEMBER 30, 1894.

The preacher read for the morning lesson the 52d chapter of Isaiah, and then said: We suggest that this is a prophecy in regard to the period in which we live and is of the utmost importance not only to the Jewish race, and to the Saints, but to the entire world—for all the nations of the earth are to see the salvation of our God. In connection with this we propose to talk in regard to latter-day events. We believe that we are living in the latter days, and that that period known as the latter days was projected upon the world within the last hundred years, and more especially within the last sixty odd years. We are called Latter Day Saints. We believe in the original doctrines of Christianity, and if we practice them we are worthy to be called saints, to bear the same honored title that adorned the people of God 1800 years ago. And it is worthy of note here, that God's people in every age of the world bore the denominative title saints. We find the Psalmist prophesying that in the future from his time, God's worthy people would be known by the title of saints. The Prophet Daniel expresses the same sentiment. In the days of Jesus and the early Christians the denominative title had by God's children was that of saints. The common theory, in the past, has been that all saints were in heaven, saint Peter, saint Paul, and all the rest of the saints were all in heaven, and that earth is not a suitable place for the saints of God. But history records that from the earliest period to the days of John upon Patmos God's people were called saints. Paul—who was a scholar, a precise man in word and work—always directed his epistles to the saints at Rome, at Corinth, and elsewhere, wherever he addressed his epistles. And when we turn aside from history to prophecy we have abundant testimony that the Lord's people would be called saints after the establishment of the kingdom of God under the preaching of the gospel in the latter days, for we read in Revelation 14:12:—

> Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

A very significant expression, showing that God's people in that age would be known as saints; that their patience would be tried, and that, too, in a most imminent manner.

In the 16th chapter of the Revelation is revealed a power that will "shed the blood of saints and prophets;" and in the 18th chapter and the 24th verse is a prophecy that God's people in the last days will be known as "saints."

It is a matter of importance that we, as a religious body, understand and be prepared to give a reason for the hope that is within us in this matter, so that none need blush at being called a latter-day saint, but rather rejoice in it. If any has sorrow, let it be because he is not worthy to bear that holy title, that honored name.

We are called Latter Day Saints, and this suggests, at once, to every reflective mind, that the people that bear that title believe that they are living in the latter days. I believe it with all my heart, and I dare say that a large proportion of my hearers believe it. Others have a different understanding as to whether these are the latter days, and it is for the enlightenment of those that we thus teach this morning. These texts, when they are fulfilled, become signs to us. They should be signs to the world. They give the clearest evidence that God is at work; that he has foreshown the days in which we live, and the important events that are transpiring.

God declared to Abraham, when he called him to go out from his father's house to a land that he would show him, that he would make of him a great nation; that his seed should be a stranger in a land that was not theirs and should be afflicted four hundred years. Time passed on; Isaac was born; afterwards Jacob was born who begat the twelve patriarchs who, in the providence of God, went with their families down into the land of Egypt, to a strange nation, and there they sojourned and multiplied rapidly. Years passed on until the closing of the prophetic period had come—the ending of the four hundred years which should mark the captivity of that people. This was a sign to that people,—and ought to be to all who have regard to the fulfillment of prophecy—a sign of what? a sign that God would deliver them from their bondage and bring them into the promised land,—a land of milk and honey. In due time the Lord appeared to Moses on the plains of Midian and revealed the condition of his people in the land of Egypt; and God sent that man as their deliverer, as a mighty prophet and law giver, to lead Israel out of the land of bondage, with a stretched out arm. All the predicted events connected with it were signs—evidences—that the hand of God was extended for their deliverance.

To illustrate this point still further: God declared by the Prophet Jeremiah that Judah should go into captivity for "seventy years;" and in the days of Zedekiah, Nebuchadnezzar came into Judea, besieged Jerusalem in all its gates, and finally took the people and led them down into the land of the Chaldeans, and there they continued until the seventy years expired. Now there was a man among the children of the captivity who believed God's word, a man inspired by the Holy Spirit, Daniel by name, and he "understood by books" that the seventy-year period was expired, and as a consequence he looked forward for the deliverance of God's people from their captivity. This man fasted and prayed for "three full weeks" that he might have divine guidance with regard to this longed for event—the deliverance of Judah from Babylon. The angel of God instructed him not only with regard to that deliverance, but revealed to him wonderful events clear down to the closing scenes of time. The going down to Chaldea, and the length of time that Judah was to remain captive there, were events recognized by Daniel, the man of God, as signs, sure and certain, therefore he sought the Lord and set his heart to know concerning the closing of that captivity and the deliverance of his people.

Again: With regard to Jesus our Lord, the Jewish world were looking for the Messiah, and the position of the world at that time was in keeping with prophecy that had reference to Judah and the surrounding nations of the earth, and hence that period was one of expectation. When John the Baptist came preaching repentance, the Jews inquired, Art thou the Messiah? who art thou? that we may give an answer to those who have sent us. The Jews looking for the Messiah because prophecy had revealed the time of his coming, and had indicated what the state of the Jewish world would be at that time. They were aware that prophetic periods were then terminating.

And now in regard to this latter-day work, and that we are living in the latter days, God has given clear evidences to enable his people to understand the times in which they are living, and to enable the watchmen to see eye to eye in these important matters and teach the people in the ways of God have them built up in the knowledge of God and be prepared for the events that are transpiring around them. That is consistent, it harmonizes with the dealings of God in the days that are past. We believe that in the Old and New Testaments there is abundant evidence to prove that we are living in the latter days and, identifying these days as the very time that God will carry forward the work of redemption, ushering in of the millennial age and the promised reign of Christ. We believe that; we teach that; and to my mind it is an important thing that the Saints of God should be instructed in these evidences.

Now we pass to the 12th chapter of Daniel. There we find an important prophecy relating to matters that are transpiring in these days. It reads: "But thou, O, Daniel shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." We live in that period when this prophecy is having its most complete fulfillment. No period in the world's history has so abounded with evidences in proof of the accomplishment of this prophecy as the present century. Of course we recognize the fact that God has been working during the centuries past, and notably since the 15th century. God has been turning and overturning rapidly, and more rapidly, and the increase of knowledge has greater speed and is being extended to far greater limits as the years pass by, so that on this the 30th day of December, 1894, we are standing in the midst of greater manifestations of God's work, standing in the midst of conditions favoring the complete fulfillment of this prophecy, than any other period you can point to in the past. In the future, as the days, weeks, and months accumulate, the work will gain in importance until the final occasion when the opening heavens shall reveal the Son of God.

"But thou, O, Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." When we compare the time in which we live, with respect to knowledge, with the periods of the past, we see it is a contrast—we can hardly say it is a comparison, the difference is so great. Now we, as the children of God, believe that the Bible contains the word of God. In the days of the ancients but few people had the word of God to read; in the nature of things they could not have it, because it was lying in manuscript form and continued so along down to the fifteenth century, until we touch the times of John Guttenburg when printing became established, and then God's word was printed. It was among the first books printed, and from that time printing and circulating the Bible has gone on very rapidly. Bible societies are established all over the Christian world and the Bible is sold very cheaply, so that no family need be without it. Large amounts of money have been given to send it not only to those who are Christians, but to the heathen world likewise, so that there is not a people or nation of any importance but what has the Bible. Upon this point you can see how it is that this promise of God is having its accomplishment—"Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." The most important knowledge that man can have is in regard to God and his government, touching the life that now is, and the life which is to come. That knowledge is contained in the Bible; and we repeat it that, in the time in which we now live the Bible, in millions of volumes, is going out into all lands, and the Christian, the Jewish, and the Pagan world are receiving the Bible with its important evidences. This was made manifest in the late "Parliament of Religions," held at Chicago in 1893, where were assembled delegates from China, and Japan, and from all the nations of the world, some of whom appeared to be well acquainted with the Bible and notably the teachings of Jesus Christ. There has been improvement in every department of knowledge, but we believe that Bible knowledge should be placed in the foreground, in the prophecy, and, as we take it, in regard to the word of God and his Christ, and also in regard to individuals called to preach the gospel. What wonderful improvement has been made in these departments alone.

Then in respect to navigation. In reading ancient history we discover that along up to the 15th century the world that was known to the eastern continent, was just a body of land that comprised the continents of Africa and Europe, a large portion of Asia and the islands contiguous. The rest of the world they knew nothing about. God put it in the heart of Christopher Columbus that there was a country on the other side of the world, and he led him to discover a new continent. From that time on navigation has been a very important factor in carrying out this work of distributing "knowledge" upon all the face of the earth; since that time the work of discovery has been progressing in various parts of the New World, and during the last three hundred years the work of discovery has been going on rapidly in various portions of the Eastern continent.

In North and South America, in Africa and Asia, and in the islands of the sea, what wonderful discoveries have been made preparatory to God's carrying out his marvelous work and a wonder.

Then again, wondrous progress has been made in the fine arts and in the sciences. The science of astronomy, of geology, chemistry, and of almost every other class of scientific knowledge, there has been astonishing progress made; so in telegraphy, then again in respect to railway systems, forming parts of one great chain that has been brought into requisition to carry forth the knowledge of God and to make complete fulfillment of this great prophecy of Daniel at "the time of the end," when many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased. Reflect, for a moment, on the facility with which people travel now, as compared with what they did in the days when this prophecy was uttered. Then the most speedy way of travel by land was by camel. Going by sea they had to travel in slow sailing vessels, and these were an ordinary class in comparison to those now used. And when we consider our railway systems for transportation, that travel has greatly increased in point of cheapness, facility, and rapidity, many, many fold we can see that the age in which we now live has contributed prominently to the fulfillment of this wonderful prophecy. "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased," in "the time of the end."

There has also been a wonderful increase of knowledge in regard to surgery, and in regard to medicine, all of which is very valuable in its place. Skillful men will take an individual now, his eyes gone, his limbs gone, or other parts of his body gone, and if there is in him any vitality left they will patch him up, even taking parts of animals and patch on to a human body. How do they do it? It is done by the late increase of knowledge in surgery. It is wonderful the height to which they have attained in this matter of surgery. It would furnish an instructive theme for us to study.

In regard to medicine I have just been talking with a brother who has been to the sick bed of his daughter—and I remember, in my boyhood days that physicians would give a drink of milk to a patient who had a fever no sooner than they would give arsenic—but he tells me his daughter was supplied freely with milk to drink through a long period of typhoid fever. So in regard to many other things in medicine, wonderful discoveries have been made. I remember in my younger days, they would bleed, blister, and sweat a person, until, if he had the constitution of an ox, he would live and come out of it. Now they have more knowledge than to treat a man in that way. Then it was almost like suffering a living death to pass through a treatment, in the hands of what was called capable physicians. I believe in using medicine when properly applied, if needed, and we can do no better. I believe that God has placed in nature a remedy for every curable disease. There has been a vast increase of knowledge in this direction, and it helps to fill up the sum total of the knowledge that was to come to the world "at the time of the end."

Again; take it in regard to mining, a very important department. The world is full of mineral wealth. Our forefathers knew little in that line in comparison to what the people do today. You take the iron, lead, coal, zinc, copper, gold, silver, and then come to the various valuable stones, and a wonderful thing is mining. There has been wonderful growth of knowledge in this direction within the present century.

Coming to farm machinery,—I guess I could point out people here who once used the crooked instrument called a sickle, and then the turkey wing cradle and we thought then improvement had come to an end. After that we got the grapevine cradle, and thought it could not be improved upon; but by and by there came the reaper, and after that the self raking and self-binding harvester, all illustrating the rapid increase of knowledge in that line in this century.

Some of the young people are not aware how the older ones used to make their hay. I have had some experience in that. When I was a young man grass was cut with a scythe, and then turned and then spread and then raked up with hand rakes, and sometimes there would come a rain on it and spoil the whole thing. But now you take your rapid mower, cut down the grass, and in a few hours it is cured and ready to be put in the barn. Again; in the household the women used to sit and sew early and late to make needed garments; men tailors used to go from house to house working at their trades; but now we have the splendid sewing machine that lightens labor in providing things for the household. In a thousand things knowledge is being increased on these lines.

Another most important thing that marks this epoch as the latter days: We are told in Revelation 14:6-8 that, before the coming of Jesus Christ an angel would restore the everlasting gospel to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. Do you find a people in all the land that is preaching precisely as Jesus preached? as John his forerunner preached? as Paul and Peter preached it? and as others of the early saints preached it? If you do you will find a people enjoying the same spiritual blessings also. Have you such a people in your midst? These old Latter Day Saints say, "Yes; we have been acquainted with them many years." In this you have an evidence that is divine—a remarkable evidence that you are living in "the time of the end," for Paul said in 1st chapter of Galatians: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." As I said before, Do you find anyone who teaches strictly in harmony with the divine, Bible pattern? If you do, you have therein an evidence that the gospel of Jesus Christ has been restored, and that this is "the time of the end."

Speaking of the restoration of the gospel and of the rapid increase of knowledge, it is proper that we should mention a fact that is patent to everybody that will inform themselves, and that is, that iniquity abounds all over the world. This is not a necessary result of the increase of knowledge, but it is a perversion—it is knowledge put to bad purposes that results in iniquity. Some parties in our own town, a short time ago, got into a bank, and by their skill, their knowledge of appliances, and the like, they opened the doors of the building and forced upon the safe, because they had a knowledge of means and of methods by which to attain that end. The knowledge of itself was a good thing, but it was put to a bad use, a criminal use. What is true in regard to knowledge in robbing banks is true of everything that comes within the domain of perverted knowledge. In military matters, in diplomacy, in medicine, in surgery, in the mechanic arts, men will pervert and continue to pervert, until they make the knowledge they possess a curse instead of a blessing. Jesus, in the 24th chapter of Matthew says that in the last days there would be great iniquity, it would be very prominent, otherwise the Savior would not have mentioned it as one of the signs of the latter times—and to-day iniquity abounds and is on the increase. In Great Britain, in America, and in all the world at large, iniquity abounds, and is brought about largely by the knowledge that individuals possess. They use means and methods that our forefathers knew nothing about. Iniquity requires great skill, as well as sagacity and brutality, and all these abound in the land. The increase of knowledge in the latter days renders possible an increase of villainy and all manner of wickedness.

We see a great influx of light lighting up and blessing the world where men and women use the knowledge they possess for righteous purposes. We see it everywhere. God blesses them, and we ought to recognize that fact. The wonderful work of God in developing the race is being carried out by the knowledge that has come to the world. The people of God should stand side by side in the great work intrusted to them, knowing that we are engaged in that which redounds to the good of society. We should not forget but recognize these things.

Another important matter indicates that we are living in the latter-days, and that is this: You have heard it very often said that God is blessing the Jewish world—I am not specially in love with the Jew. I have thought all the contemptible practices that ever cursed man have been found with the Jew. But that is neither here nor there,—they have been driven to it by the bad conduct of those professing Christianity. But it is a fact that the Jewish world is being lifted up upon a higher plane than they have occupied since the days when the land of Judea drank from murderous hands the blood of the Son of God. In the age in which we are living, the prejudices that have been held against the Jews are being removed everywhere. They are coming to the front in the affairs of civilized life in fulfillment of predictions concerning the race that was to occur in the days when God would—in the latter days, in the days preceding the coming of the Son of man—remove the curse that had been placed upon them and upon their land.

Jesus said: "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate, and you shall not see me henceforth, until you shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." He said Jerusalem should be overthrown and be under the feet of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled. It is no longer—in a sense—under the feet of the Gentiles. Its inhabitants now are chiefly Jews. The faces of the Jewish world are turned towards Jerusalem. Ways and means are being provided to establish the Jews in their own land. The nations are being educated in the thought that the Jews should be gathered to their own land. There is increase in knowledge in regard to the Jews. The Christian world is becoming possessed of it, and they are ashamed—many of them—of the conduct of their forefathers in their treatment of the Jews in ages past. This is the case with many of the liberty-loving people among the nations of the earth. They are ashamed of the treatment received by the Jews from their governments in centuries past. The fact is that many of that despised race are now holding high positions of trust, both in the civil and military departments of the nations of the earth, and among them are to be found the leading financiers of the world. All this helps to furnish evidence that we are living in the latter days. This amelioration of the condition of the Jewish world is produced largely by the increase of the knowledge of prophecy, and of history, in regard to the past. Thank God, the Jewish world are feeling that they are standing nearer to their Gentile fellowmen. They are more than ever feeling that they belong to the great brotherhood of the human family. These things, together with the gospel of Jesus Christ, will be preached to them ere long, and they will listen to the arguments in favor of the Messiah that they rejected 1800 years ago. For more than seventeen centuries past, it is a well-known fact, the former and the latter rains have been withheld from the land of Judea, in fulfillment of prophecy; but God also decreed that in the latter days the rain should return to the land, and it is a fact that within the nineteenth century God has sent both the former and the latter rain, and as a consequence the land is sending forth its foundations of waters and is yielding its strength; it is being "prepared," as prophets said it would, for that covenant people of God to dwell therein. These are strong evidences that these are the latter days—that this is "the time of the end." God is working among the nations with respect to the restoration of the true Israel. Israel is scattered throughout the whole earth. You take the books of Esdras, and the history of Josephus and then we trace the nine and a half tribes down into Assyria, afterwards going north and out west among the nations and becoming scattered and absorbed among them, where they lost their distinctive Israelitish identity and tribal character. But when the gospel of Jesus Christ came in the last days, the first man selected was an Israelite, of the seed of Joseph and the tribe of Ephraim; and the second man selected was an Israelite, of the seed of Joseph, for God was to begin his work among the Israel of God. And he was to take the true Israel and graft them back into the true olive tree; for God has not cast away his people only for a time, and that time has come. Paul called the attention of the Gentile world to the fact that the time would come when God would restore Israel, and the literal seed would be grafted into their own olive tree. "For this is my covenant with them when I take away their sins."—Rom. 11:24-27. In the promises of the Bible it is repeated time and again, that God would restore Israel; for the Lord has declared in Jeremiah 31:9: "They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn." The work had to begin with Ephraim, and the Palmyra Seer was the first one that ever made that claim.

The Lord by David said in Psalms 80:1-3:—

Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth. Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy strength, and come and save us. Turn us again, O God, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

Who? Israel, beginning with Ephraim. God has already commenced his work to restore Israel, and began by calling Ephraim first.

I am only part way through with my subject. I must close for want of time. I wanted to show you that these latter days were to be days of angelic ministrations; that God would reveal himself from heaven to his people, that he would lead and guide his people, as he did in ancient days. God did, in a marvelous manner, by his word, by angelic ministrations, and by direct revelation from heaven, prepare the way for the coming of Jesus Christ when he came with the words of peace and love upon his lips, with the word of life everlasting to be preached to all nations. When he comes in the latter days, shall not God prepare the way as amply, as prominently and as clearly as he prepared the way for his first advent, shall he not? God's word in the Bible says he will. And if we had time we could show you that he said he would. It becomes us therefore as Latter Day Saints to be well acquainted with these these things, so that we can give solid reasons for what we believe. "When the Lord shall bring again Zion, her watchmen shall see eye to eye." These are the days when they that bear the gospel of God's dear Son, their feet shall be "beautiful upon the mountains." The world is perishing for that knowledge to-day; they need the enlightenment of heaven; they need confirmation in their own souls by the testimony of God's word and the testimony of God's Spirit, that the gospel is what it professes to be; they need the testimony that God's purposes and work moving forward gloriously. God bless you, and finally crown you with everlasting life in Jesus' name. Amen.

MOVE FOR REVISED CREED.

CHICAGO PRESBYTERY OVERTURES THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The Chicago Presbytery yesterday decided to overture the Presbyterian General Assembly to appoint a committee to consider the desirability of revising the Westminster Confession of Faith. Charges were made that some of the doctrines of the church were expressed in archaic forms, conducive to misunderstanding and misrepresentation. As regarded by the ministers the overture was the result of the stand for a new faith taken by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis and Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst. The resignation of Dr. Hillis was accepted by the presbytery.

TEXT OF THE OVERTURE.

The overture to the General Assembly read:—

In view of the widespread misunderstanding of what the things are that are most sacredly believed by our beloved Presbyterian Church, and in view of the archaic forms in which some of the doctrines of our church have expression in the historic confession of faith, and in view of the gross misrepresentations of our faith that claim to find their justification in these existing forms;

We, the Presbytery of Chicago, do overture the General Assembly to appoint a committee to take into consideration this whole matter of a statement of our doctrinal standard and to report to the next General Assembly what in their judgment should be the action of our church on this subject—whether we should issue an authoritative explanatory statement, or undertake again a revision of our doctrinal standards, or draw up a short creed to be appended to existing standards, or devise a substitute for our present confession of faith, or in any other way secure a revision of our doctrinal belief that would embrace the essentials of those things most firmly believed by us and for which the Presbyterian Church has stood through the centuries.

Dr. W. C. Gray, Editor of the Interior, offered the use of his paper to advocate the position taken by the presbytery.

The overture was presented by Dr. Herrick Johnson of McCormick Theological Seminary.

"It simply asks the assembly to take the present agitation into consideration for a year," he said. "The general feeling is that the present doctrine should be simplified."

The Rev. E. T. Fleming, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, offered an amendment, which failed to receive a second, that the assembly report on the question at once and present the matter before the various presbyteries for a vote.

"I believe four-fifths of the Presbyterian ministers believe sections 3 and 4 of chapter 3 of the confession should be expurgated," he said. "Dr. Johnson's resolution will be reported on and the report will be pigeon-holed. These sections caused Dr. Hillis to resign and are causing disaffection in all parts of the country."

REPORT ON HILLIS CASE.

When Dr. Hillis' resignation was taken up Dr. J. G. K. McClure explained that efforts had been made to induce Dr. Hillis to withdraw his resignation, and also that the committee had been tempted to report that it be not accepted. The committee had attempted to hold a conference with Dr. Hillis, but arrangements could not be made.

"Another letter from Dr. Hillis, however, compelled us to accept his resignation," said Dr. McClure. "Dr. Hillis says he has renounced the jurisdiction of the church and quotes the discipline to the effect that we can do nothing but erase his name from the roll."

The report of the committee recommending that Dr. Hillis' resignation be accepted, which was adopted, was as follows:—

The presbytery expresses its high appreciation of the attractive personality and the brilliant intellectual gifts and useful ministry of Dr. Hillis, assuring him that he is held in affectionate esteem by his brethren of the presbytery, who will continue to pray that upon his heart and home and labors the richest blessings of God may rest.

The presbytery admits that the words of chapter 3, sections 3 and 4, of the confession of faith, as quoted by Dr. Hillis, are to certain minds a source of misunderstanding and embarrassment. But it also calls attention to the fact that subscription to them is simply a subscription to the "system of doctrine as taught in the scriptures." It also admits that the words as quoted by Dr. Hillis are not deemed necessary and essential to the integrity of the creed. Neither the church nor the committee appointed on revision of the creed by the General Assembly in 1892 regarded these words as necessary and essential to the integrity and form of the Calvinistic doctrine.

Inasmuch as the letter of Dr. Hillis in which he announces his demission from the ministry was presented to the presbytery under chapter 7, section 53, reading as follows: "If a minister, not otherwise chargeable with an offense, renounces the jurisdiction of this church by abandoning the ministry or becoming independent or joins another denomination not heretical without regular demission, the presbytery shall take no other action than to record the same and erase his name from the rolls."

And inasmuch as Dr. Hillis has made formal alterations in his letter so as to state his request in the language of the provisions of the discipline, the presbytery now makes record of the fact that Dr. Hillis has renounced its jurisdiction, and with affection, but agreeable to his wish, erases his name from the rolls.

The report was signed by Dr. J. G. K. McClure, Dr. W. R. Notman, and Dr. W. J. Chichester, composing the committee.

The Rev. J. A. Rondthaler, pastor of the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian Church, cast the only vote against the adoption of the report. He wanted the case decided on Dr. Hillis' repudiation of the Calvinistic doctrine.

METHODIST MINISTERS MEET.

The Methodist ministers, at their weekly meeting, had a warm debate over whether the rules of the church against card-playing, dancing, and theater-going should be abolished. The general opinion was that the rules should be done away with, because they tend to induce hypocrisy and keep many from joining the church. —Chicago Tribune, April 17, 1900.

HAS THEOLOGY STANDING AS A SCIENCE?

A singular controversy on the status of theology as a science is attracting general attention in Germany, and has called forth articles by leading theological professors, such as Harnack of Berlin, Loofe of Halle, Jülicher of Marburg, Cremer of Greifswald, and Seeberg of Berlin. The occasion for this controversy is the radical work of Professor Häckel, of Jena, the leading Darwinian of Germany, entitled "Weltratsel," and the series of books being published by the veteran Tübingen law professor, Thudichum, entitled "Kirliche Falschungen" (see The Literary Digest, January 20). In these works all the canons of the theological scholars are defied, and credence is given to such stories as that Christ was the illegitimate child of Mary and a Roman soldier, and that the four gospels were adopted as canonical by the Council at Nice out of fifty and more apocryphal records of the life of Christ, because these four, in answer to the prayer of the bishops, sprang from the floor upon a table in the presence of the assembled ecclesiastics.

These works were a challenge to theologians that demanded a reply, and this was not long forthcoming. The first to reply was Professor Loofe, who in the Christliche Welt (No. 45) gave Häckel a vigorous lashing, denouncing his methods as utterly unworthy of a scholar. Professor Harnack, in the same journal, (No. 49) asks why it is that outsiders can, without fear of making themselves contemptible in the eyes of the whole learned world, venture into the domain of theology as Häckel and Thudichum have done. Harnack says in substance:—

On all matters of theology, the most foolish things can be represented as facts, and things may be called into question and the best of authoritative evidence be pushed aside and all that scientific theological investigation has taught can be ignored, and yet the perpetrator can continue to enjoy the reputation of a learned professor. Why has not theology been able to vindicate itself as a science equal in standing to other sciences? Is it not because there is a general suspicion that it has certain secrets to hide, that it is not perfectly honest and open, and therefore not pursued on the same principles that control scientific research in other lines? Is it not for this reason that theology as a science does not enjoy the respect in the eyes of the learned world that by common consent is accorded to other sciences? Here a great work is still to be done by the advocates of genuine theological science.

This view of the case, however, is not shared by other equally prominent theologians, least of all by the more conservative. Further discussion has ensued. In the Berlin Kreuzzeitung (No. 593) Professor Cremer writes in substance as follows:—

It must be acknowledged that theology is looked at askance by many scholars, and that attacks of the most silly kind can be made by non-theologians upon the teachings of theology without their losing caste; but this will continue to be the case as long as theology must deal with matters that belong to a sphere beyond and above the natural. As long as the fundamentals of Christianity are not accepted, with the great supernatural verities concerning the person and work of Christ, the Trinity, the Atonement, and the like, theology must despair of a recognition by outsiders as a science of the same kind with those that deal with secular matters. Nor can theology afford to secure for itself a wider recognition on the part of non-Christian science by the sacrifice of any of the cardinal principles that belong to its very life, but which are not the objects of scientific analysis. The story of the birth of Christ, of the resurrection, of the ascension, must be maintained as historical truths absolutely essential to theology and to the church; and if these are the things that theology is suspected of hiding and not treating in the light of day, as Harnack seems to suppose, the reply must be that it would be fatal to secure, by a compromise of such essentials, recognition as a science.

Seeberg, the new conservative member of the Berlin faculty, in the same periodical (No. 601) expresses his full agreement with these views of Cremer, but adds the following considerations:—

It must not be forgotten that theologians themselves are to a great extent responsible for the fact that theology is looked upon with contempt in many scientific circles. There are controversies in every department of science, but in none is the personal bitterness so pronounced as in theology. Disagreement in principles becomes personal animosity. This old odium theologicum which Melanchthon so keenly deplored is largely responsible for the relatively low status of theological science.

In the meanwhile, Häckel has not been silent. In a newly established Leipsic monthly, called Kritik und Anti-Kritik (No. 2), he has endeavored to fortify his position. From this reply, it appears that he based his charges against early Christianity on information derived from the Talmud, on statements of the anti-Christian writers of the first centuries, and on other similar hostile sources. Thudichum has not replied; but he continues to publish his little books, in the latest of which he practically makes Christianity the manufactured product of a priest party of the fourth and fifth centuries.—Translations made for the Literary Digest.

WATERLOO, Neb., April 1.

Editors Herald:—In the year 1872, if my memory serves me right, I first heard the gospel; on the 6th day of April of the next year I obeyed it, and in July of this year I was blessed with the knowledge of Jesus being the Christ and the Savior of the world, and that he would come to this earth again, and many should run to and fro up and down the earth, and that there would be famine and pestilence and wars and bloodshed upon the earth, and the world of mankind would be in perplexity and commotion.

This was I believe the Spirit of God, and it seemed to work in this manner: I had been baptized and had hands laid upon my head. I know this was in answer to the promise, for I had been praying within when there seemed to be a light around me, and this Spirit seemed to speak within me to my spirit and testify of the things I have written, if my memory serves me right. This blessing took place whilst I was working upon a hedge row in Missouri, July, 1873, in company with a man by the name of R. P. Hare.

Now I will give you the evidence how I know this to be a blessing from God. On the Sabbath day following, we were at another man's place, and I picked up the Bible that lay on the stand, and it opened at the 24th chapter of St. Matthew; and when I commenced to read I was caused to see the evidence of the Spirit that had testified to my spirit, and by this I know this is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, for the blessing is given according to the promise, as it was given to the ancients, and it imparts a knowledge to us that he is the one spoken of by Isaiah twenty-ninth, and others of the prophets; and that wicked men killed him because they are deceived and are in the condition spoken of by the prophets. But O, the weakness and unfaithfulness of man, and the suffering he has to endure, both spiritually and physically, if unfaithful, by bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ, for I have been caused to suffer greatly on account of besetting sins unrepented of, or in other words, being young in those days, and not staying with brethren, or a body of the church. I am caused to regret for lost time that could have been valuable; and although God may bless mankind, when he strives with full purpose of heart to serve him; but if he gives way, Satan seeks him with greater power than before. Now I know that I have certain besetting sins, and I do humbly ask an interest in your prayers that if it be God's will that my mind may be unchained from the conditions of sin, and if God has a work for me to do, I desire to serve him the true and living God to the end, and that I may be able to overcome all sins, and have a part in the first resurrection to dwell with his blessed upon this earth a thousand years, and to enjoy the advancement promised in his word.

Please remember me in the conference assembled, to pray for my spiritual condition; and if it be God's will that I may recover from the effect of broken bones and broken ligaments of joints. And I here ask the forgiveness of my brethren and sisters and all mankind, and by the help of God I hope to overcome the besetting sins and serve God faithfully from this time until the end of my life. Believing that it is God's will to forgive, and that all mankind might be saved. I have felt a desire in my heart to pay my tithing. I have a mortgage on one of my little farms, and I have the money to pay it off and I thought I would pay the mortgage, although it is not due yet, and I have this farm listed for sale, and if I succeed in selling it, I intend to pay my tithing out of this money.

Ever trusting and praying that I may succeed in all good efforts for the welfare of the souls of humanity, I subscribe myself your weak brother, WM. C. FEAGINS.

WELLAND, Ont., April 20.

Editors Herald:—Having a little time this morning, I write a few lines to the Herald. It is some time since I did this, not that I am silent along these lines, for my whereabouts and labors have been made known through the Glad Tidings; but as I was sending to you on business, I thought a few lines as to this mission field would not be out of place. While there are many who seem to oppose this work, yet it is like the metal, the more it is rubbed the brighter it gets, and brings to the honest investigator the facts that it is the brightest gift ever offered the children of men, being restored by the angel in these the last days.

Since my leaving home, January 2, I have labored in Toronto, Humber Bay, Hamilton, and Welland, and can say of a truth, at each of these places the power of God was felt, both with the people and the writer. It was my privilege to see the Saints built up in this God-given work. I find in my short experience that much of a missionary's time has to be spent in this direction, that they (the Saints) may hold fast to the end. God has put those officers spoken of in the three books for the edifying of the Saints. I can say this part of the work was down, both in Humber Bay and Toronto, and before I left those two places, it was my privilege to have our beloved president, Apostle R. C. Evans, and before he left, there was the gift of tongues, prophecy, calling to the ministry, and the two branches now enjoy full branch authority, and the work is onward; though it was cold weather, yet before I left, four more were added to the Toronto branch by baptism, and one a few days after by Priest C. Heltey, priest of the branch. Bro. Charles Neal was ordained an elder, and made president of the branch, while Elder R. C. Evans was there, and a Bro. Robert Wilkins to the office of teacher, who was elected teacher of Humber Bay branch.

We received a letter from Sr. Adia Pycock the other day, together with five large bundles of late Heralds, Ensigns, and Hopes, telling me that the said brother preached for them and did well. The brother is not a year old in the gospel till the 4th of June, and I trust that both branches will strive to live that God may continue to bless them.

The time came that wisdom directed me to go to Hamilton, so leaving Toronto, I came and labored, but I could only stay a few days, with a promise to return as wisdom would direct, after giving Welland a turn.

I am pleased to report good news. I came here March 16, and since that time the little handful of young Saints have got a neat little hall rented that will hold about one hundred fifty, good seating, with backs on seats, and neatly fitted up. I put out two hundred fifty bills, and advertised the meetings in the two papers. At times we had a fairly good turnout; some were opposed, but truth prevailed, and on the 16th of April I was permitted to baptize two more; this makes twelve in all, and two that Elder Dickhout baptized, and with Bro. and Sr. Bird from St. Thomas makes sixteen, fourteen of them not a year in the gospel. There is no priesthood here yet, but things are looking bright, though not without the struggles.

I expect to remain here till the 23d, then to Hamilton, with the expectation of seeing more added to the church. After this visit to Hamilton, I expect to reach London, and see the loved ones of home, and attend to spring duties, that the earth may bring forth its increase, that those of home may eat of the fruit in the season thereof, and those of home be made glad with the presence of father, husband, and truest friend. I will close lest it becomes wearysome.

From your brother in gospel work,

R. B. HOWLETT.

ANACONDA, Col., April 17.

Editors Herald; Lamoni, Iowa:—In a cover article of a recent number of the Herald, a minister alleges certain changes should be made in the translation, according to the original, in regard to the burial of our Lord, given in the Gospels. The article is in about the March 28 Herald. The minister made out a strong case quoting from the Greek. The changes, however, do not appear in the Inspired Translation. Not doubting the Inspired Translation, why is the minister so mistaken?

My wife and I are very anxious to hear about Elder R. Etzenhouser's visit to the Hill Cumorah. Very respectfully,

H. E. MERRYMAN.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, April 8.

Editors Herald:—As I see so little in your valuable columns from Idaho, I thought I would let your readers know that I am one among them. Dear Saints, although our branch does not number as many as I would like to see, still I am proud to be one among them, as it is not the quantity but quality we should look to. I believe we should examine ourselves and see whether we are in harmony with the law that Christ has laid down, and if we are not, I believe that we should try and get in line, for I believe that it is too precious a work to lose a moment. We have some noble members here. Our branch president is quite a wide-awake man, and is always found ready to defend the cause against any opposition that might come. We have had some good assistance rendered us during the past fall and winter, up to the latter part of January, when D. W. Wight left for Utah; but we are in hopes that he will be returned again to Idaho. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, and hope that I may always be found striving to come up higher, is the desire of your brother in Christ, ELIAS E. RICHARDS.

MOLINE, ILL., April 22.

Editors Herald:—Notwithstanding the adversary has been striving to darken my mind by bringing his evil temptations and influences to bear against me, to overcome me and lead me away from the blessed light that the gospel has shed upon my life, I am still strong in the faith, and feel very grateful for the comfort and peace of mind it brings me. I cannot call to mind a time when I experienced a stronger desire to serve my Master than at the present time. I feel drawn nearer to God by the peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit, and O that I and you, dear reader, may put forth our best and most earnest efforts to make ourselves fully worthy of God's love and mercy. O how weak and foolish I have been in the past! God forgive me, and also each and all my brethren and sisters who have likewise been overcome in the hour of trial and temptation. But it must be so; that is, we must expect to be tempted and tried, and if we become careless and neglectful at times, we should not give up in despair and think there is no hope for us; for as long as there is the slightest desire within us to repent and turn away from our sins, just so long there is hope for us; for our God is a God of love and long-suffering patience. I know it is true, for notwithstanding my weakness and unworthiness at times, yet in his infinite mercy and goodness God has admonished me through at least three of his servants to be faithful, to repent of my follies and come up higher. Ah! what we need to do, dear Saints, is to draw away from the world and its allurements and learn to find our greatest joy, peace, and profit in the contemplation of the blessed gospel and in rendering complete obedience thereto. May the Father give us strength so to do.

There are many things of a temporal nature that trouble me and make me very sad at times, but I am striving to be patient, hoping that I shall eventually be able to overcome them.

I hear that some of the Presbyterian people here are still complaining because we are allowed to hold meetings in the art gallery. This seemed very strange to me, so much so that I called upon Mr. J. N. Hardy, one of the owners of the building, and asked him for what reasons those people object to our occupying the building—seeing that our meetings do not in any way interfere with theirs. The answer was, "They believe there is an undercurrent of evil in your church which you keep hidden from the public." And another reason was, "They object to the name of your church. If your faith and belief is not the same as that in the Utah Church, why do you have the same name?"

Well, we were able to make the matter clear to Mr. Hardy, and he seemed fully satisfied, but he said the Presbyterian people would not accept the mere statement that we were not affiliated with the Utah Church, but demand the proof. Well, it is the same old story—obstinate, self-imposed blindness.

Not long since an article made its appearance in one of Moline's daily papers, which was directed against us and our occupancy of the art gallery. Bro. H. E Moler was here at the time and made answer to the article through the same paper, and also announced two meetings to be held at the gallery, at which time our true position with reference to the Utah Church would be clearly explained. Aside from Bro. Moler's announcement published with his article, the meetings were again announced in the three daily papers and also in several of the local churches. So you see our Presbyterian friends had ample opportunity to learn of the meetings, so that there is no excuse for their continued ignorance in regard to the name of our church and all that it implies. However, "None are so blind as those who will not see."

Mr. Hardy assured me that we need not worry about the matter, as he thought it would be amicably settled soon, and nothing more has been heard since.

Brethren Alma Whitehouse and William Norris have returned to their homes at Kewanee, Illinois, and, as one of our number put it, we feel rather all alone since they departed, but our Father is ever near us and ready to help us when we are faithful. So we will still strive to do our duty and leave the result with God. We trust we shall be remembered in the prayers of the Saints, that God will help us to triumph over all obstacles, that his work may be firmly established here.

That we may all become earnest workers for Christ, ever alert to our duty and ever humble before God, is my prayer. We trust we have not been forgotten in the appointment of missionaries, and that we may soon be cheered by the presence and counsel of some good servant assigned to this place. May the Holy Spirit visit you all, and may it abide in you, a light unto your feet and a joy unto your souls. In bonds,

L. M. PRUDEN.

ELLIJAY, Ga., April 8.

Editors Herald:—This part of the vineyard seems to have received little, if any, attention as yet from the church workers. My acquaintance here has been in the northern part of the State, once the home of the Cherokee Nation. The country is a beautiful one: low mountains covered with many varieties of deciduous trees, with pines and laurels intermixed. Between the hills are long narrow valleys, which frequently widen out, covered with rich soil. Streams and springs of clear pure water everywhere abound. The climate is free from extremes summer and winter. The red man must have looked back in longing, many times from his new western home, to the beautiful hills of the old hunting grounds. The typical North Georgian home consists of the old-fashioned log cabin, with its great wide fireplace built of rough unhewn stones. The furniture is homemade, conspicuous because of scarcity. The spinning wheel and hand loom of the revolutionary days are to be found in nearly every house. The diet of the people, in the mountain section, consists principally of hog meat, coarse corn bread, homemade sorghum, and coffee. In the homes of the "better off," vegetables and fruit in season. The people are not so energetic as those of the northern and western states. Farming is carried on in a primitive manner. Corn the principal crop. Tobacco is raised for home use, and is used by men, women, and many children, chewing the natural leaf or "dipping" snuff. The people are generous and warm-hearted, as a rule; their doors being always open to the wayfarer. Their homes and lives are plain and simple. In home life they appear very affectionate. I have seen none of those miserable jealousies nor petty quarrels among the children here, so noticeable in the homes of many other localities I have visited. The majority of the people are religious; a stranger being asked whether he belongs to the Methodist or the Baptist Church, these being the prevailing systems with party lines closely drawn and individuals very "sot" in their opinions. A few Christians (Campbellites) can be found here and there, but the rule is the man you may meet on the roads is either a Methodist or a Baptist. Mormon missionaries have been through the country nearly everywhere, and the people are generally very bitter against anything bearing a semblance of Mormonism, more because of the warnings of their respective churches than of any knowledge of the doctrine. Our people are classed as "Mormons," nothing being known of the difference. This will be a hard missionary field, and those who shall be sent to prune it will require a special amount of the Spirit of wisdom, strength, and loving forbearance, and be possessed with a genuine desire to benefit humanity.

As I sit alone to-night, far from home and dear ones, and isolated from "the friends of my Master," my mind is filled with thoughts of Zion and the redemption of God's people. Thoughts of that body of earnest men and women now gathered at a humble village on the western plain, representatives of those destined in the near future to be builders of that city wherein the temple of the most high God shall be erected; and, as in fancy I see them bowing together before our Father in the sweet unison of the Spirit, pleading with him to hasten his work, seeking wisdom and strength for all of God's children, that the work may not be retarded by willing but clumsy hands, but speedily carried to all nations by those strong in Jehovah's strength and gentle under love's guidance, my soul looks upward to heaven in heartfelt thanks to God for the blessed privilege of being one of those called "Saints" in these latter days; of being permitted, if truly humble and faithful, to receive a portion of that blessed Comforter promised to the children of Christ, and enabled to carry assistance and light to precious souls struggling through the gross darkness of error's realm.

May conference now in session mark the beginning of a steady, rapid advance to higher, sun-crowned heights all along the line. May the sweet spirit of love so thrill each attendant, and thence to the waiting ones of the farthest outpost and scattered family, that all malice and envy, worldly pride and listlessness shall shrink back into the darkness abashed, and the work of redemption roll forth unchecked by those most retarding influences that have hitherto been permitted more or less space in the "house of my friends." May the absolute necessity of thorough and complete consecration of body, mind, and resources by all who would take part in Zion's redemption be so plainly indicated to each member of the body that the complete subjugation of self may speedily follow. A warning of danger delayed, when often referred to, falls upon increasingly unheeding ears, so the dangers attendant upon the near approach of that day "that shall come as a snare upon all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth" ceases to cause mankind, including many Saints, immediate concern. "They shall say Christ delayeth his coming," and the warning cry of "prepare ye" falls on partially dulled comprehensions. Earthly plans and preparations engross the mind and consume the time which should be applied earnestly seeking "first the kingdom of God and its righteousness." The day of peril at length arrives, preparation for which has been incomplete, and disaster ensues. Those for whom so much has been endured, for whom the Master suffered that they might share his glory,—because of lack of the spirit, lack of complete consecration of self,—find themselves weak in the faith, unable to look upward and benefit through the gospel blessings—their hands full of "nothing but leaves" instead of "precious sheaves"—to be finally left in the darkness without oil in their lamps or opportunity to acquire it.

What better time for God's children to take inventory of their spiritual wealth and

value to the cause than now? the commencement of a new conference year. The past, with its pitiable weaknesses and miserable mistakes, as well as its times consecrated by prayer, and its hallowed moments when our feet were permitted to stand upon holy ground, is behind us. Let it remain so, save for the prayers we may offer for the growth of the few seeds of love, hope, and faith, we managed to scatter along our pathway. The future is fast pressing forward to meet us with its multitudes of trials and duties. The ever present now is here. Let us up and be doing what we can for the eternal betterment of humanity, as faithful men and women in Christ, retaining sweet humility and pure love as ever present companions, with God's Spirit for our guide, and Zion shall soon be ready to arise in her strength and beauty, "a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there." The word of the Lord declares (D. C. 45: 4) "And there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved." "That generation" the time of the gospel's restoration. How much longer can the times of that generation last? Look over the world and convince yourself whether or no the signs of the times do not testify of the speedy fulfillment of the foregoing prophecy. "The Saints also shall hardly escape!" Can we afford to run any risk? Can we hope to escape if we pause in our work to utter a word of complaint because of fancied or real slights? Have we time to murmur when the good ship of Zion is not trimmed just as we think proper? Dare we risk putting forth our arm of flesh to steady the ark of God because it does not appear to be riding as smoothly as we may fancy or desire it should? Or are we, individually, in condition to attempt the hastening process that God assures us he will attend to in its time? No! no! dear Saints; our part is to consecrate ourselves and all we have and are to the service of God, possessing our souls in patience meanwhile, and remembering that "all have not every gift given unto them," but that "to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God . . . that all may be profited thereby," and that the command is for all to "labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work that God has entrusted to all," and when all is not just as we deem it should be, or when the unskillful hand of a brother or a sister shall slight or wound us, or when sickness, danger, or any other thing shall threaten to destroy our peace or usefulness, we can go to God in confidence, and placing the matter before him, leave it in his hands, and return again in all faith and earnestness to our part of the great work, continuing in quiet patience and steady zeal to perform the part allotted us with thankful hearts, knowing that he who "seeth in secret" and "rewardeth openly" loves both the work and ourselves with far greater love than we can measure, and that his hand is at the helm. No, we cannot hope to escape if we pause, nor can we afford to assert our individuality. Time is too precious for the one, and humanity too fallible and weak to allow of the other. We must be found doing all that our strength, talent, and means render possible; laboring in harmony with the law, and conjointly with those God has set in the church, consecrating all we have and are to the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom until he shall say, "Well done."

Then, dear Saints, as we stand upon the threshold of the new conference year, with the profit and loss account of the past transferred and closed, what are our assets? What have we in hand to offer in exchange for the coin of heaven's realm? Is it a long list of successes from the past; so that as we stand ready to commence the conflict again, the light of victory flashes from our eager eyes, and the commendations of well-earned achievements sound in our ears, causing us to step forth in boldness and confidence? It is well! Let us bow in grateful praise to him through whose grace we conquered, and as we bow let us remember the words of the Psalmist, "In my prosperity I said I shall never be moved," together with the advice of the Savior, "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall," and casting all at his feet, let us reconsecrate self and all it possesses anew to his service, going forth to greater victories in his name. Is it with empty hands because of lack of effort or wisdom, so that we stand listless and purposeless before the Master? If this be so, let us hesitate no longer, but know there is work for all to do while it is yet day, and soon the night cometh when none can work. Then let us hasten to bow before him, pleading forgiveness for wasted opportunities and time in the past, and at once consecrate ourselves fully and unreservedly to his service, remembering to seek to utilize each moment of the future as his Spirit shall indicate, not forgetting to keep our efforts sanctified and in harmony with divine wisdom through continuous prayer. Or do we find ourselves bankrupt, because of sorrows or weakness when we would have done so much? Have our feet just left the open grave? Or have we been face to face with cruel disaster? Or has unrelenting disease weakened those faculties we would otherwise gladly have used in the Master's cause? Then let us, of all people, look up, and in our weakness and sorrow be strong and glad; for if we will search closely we shall find that his feet have pressed the pathway of sorrow. We shall discover lonely places where he has fallen to the ground, and in agony of spirit besought the Father the cup might pass; then as we with wondering love bow our heads in gratitude and worship, we can, in all consistency and fervor of Spirit, consecrate ourselves and our sorrows to his service, for we will have discovered that sorrow and weakness are the portals through which humanity can be led into the very presence of their great Redeemer, and as we receive the promised Comforter from his loving hands, we shall realize that there are none so weak or poor, or so full of woe but can through perfect consecration be of service to heaven's king, and by the close of the present conference year we shall understand, if faithful, that through much sorrow and many tribulations come the greatest successes.

May we "trim up" all along the line, and see to it that we each and all are found truly "working together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all," praying while we work, and working as we pray.

Humbly, in bonds,

G. EDGAR WARD.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., April 24.

Editors Herald:—I arrived home Saturday eve, April 21, from Lamoni, Iowa, where I had been since the eve of the 5th, attending General Conference. There was a large delegation present to represent the church from all parts of America, also from England, Honolulu, Australia, and Canada. The Sunday school was also largely represented by both young and old. The conference all through was of a medium character. I was glad I was there, as I met many of the Saints I had first learned to know soon after I joined this church in 1872, and all seemed to have yet within them the same desire as before, to remain faithful to their gospel covenant. I too, had that same desire, and so expressed myself in their testimony meetings. I was glad the church authorities were mutually sustained by the conference, as I honor them all as the servants of God, capable to rule and govern the church in all righteousness on this earth, and as such I sustain them all alike.

I visited the Saints' Home for the first time, as it was not finished inside when I attended General Conference three years ago. I was surprised to find the inside so nice and beautiful and so well furnished. Truly it can be properly named the Saints' Home. It looked like a palace to me as I went from basement to tower. Our worthy Bishop, E. L. Kelley, has surely exhibited wisdom and good judgment in getting such a large building together for the comfort and enjoyment of the Saints that occupy the building as their home. I am unable to describe it better than to state the whole interior is finished up as if it was meant for a palace. So now I have lived to see the Saints' Home, and Graceland College.

The institution ought to be well patronized by the Saints who are able to send their children away to give them a first-class education. Graceland College has professors and teachers qualified to teach the different branches of learning that will fit all for the different positions they may choose to follow in life. The college and grounds are all one could wish for health and beauty. 'Tis the handsomest location in all Lamoni; is higher up than any ground I saw there. All the rooms are large and airy, with plenty of light, in the shape of large windows. Both ladies and gentlemen can learn to sing, and play all kinds of instruments, so none need to go to New York for education or musical training. Graceland is fully equipped to furnish all the best of education, so all you have to do is to send your sons and daughters and the cash, then the college will do the rest, and turn out the best educated and polished ladies and gentlemen you ever wish to behold, when their terms are finished.

The preaching and testimony meetings during conference were good. I heard the prophet, apostles, high priests, seventies, and elders preach in their turn; none declined and none failed, all did their share assigned.

I talked with Elder J. M. Terry and wife of Chicago. Elder Terry preached here and was superintendent of our Sabbath school till they moved away in 1886, and this was the first time I had seen Sr. Terry since 1886. They were held in high esteem here by the Saints, and we liked them, and I felt glad to hear her talk in meeting, and that she felt as cheerful as she did, after burying her only son last month. The gospel gives all strength to bear all things with resignation, and I hope the Lord will be with them both to the end of their lives.

While at conference I had a nice boarding place close to the church with Sr. Cave and daughter. I got good attention, so I could not wish it any better or handier; so I was fortunate in getting in there the two weeks I stayed.

I attended two funerals: one at the Saints' Home, of a Sr. Greenwood, aged 70 years. Sr. E. L. Kelley led the singing, and Elder H. A. Stebbins preached the funeral discourse. He is a nice man in his talk, kind and gentle in expression. The other was a little boy about three years old. A white casket was provided for him, and four girls were his pall bearers. Elder J. A. Gunsolley performed the sad rite at burial services.

Desiring the welfare of all God's people, and the final triumph of this gospel, I am as ever, your sister, ANNA NIELSEN.

BEAVER, Mo., April 22.

Editors Herald:—Thinking it possible that some might wonder what had become of J. C., he having done little ministerial labor during the past six months in the district, will simply say that I am still unshaken in the faith and as firm as ever in this great and grand latter-day work. Having taken up a homestead among towering mountains of the great Ozarks in Douglas County—the land of big red apples and clover, I have been compelled by force of circumstances to leave the field of active labor spiritually, and turn my attention to said home and dear ones. Through the kindness of Bro. G. W. Bootman I and others of my family secured carpenter work on a new railroad in Southern Arkansas, where I have labored from October till the latter part of March, when by the request of my son George, I returned home to attend district and General Conference, and later to build and improve our home, while he remained to make means to help us financially, that I might soon enter the field again. I had been home only a few days when his as well as my plans were in a measure handicapped by him getting his right leg broken, through the carelessness of the foreman under whom he was working. Will the Saints please remember him in the hour of prayer, as he is over two hundred miles from home, among strangers, and not able to return, having been compelled to have his limb reset. In the midst of trials we will put our trust in God, and submit to his will, knowing that all will work for good to them that love the Lord and will continue to look for the silver lining along the clouds.

My trials during the past six months or a year have been almost unbearable; but for the truth's sake, or the love of the gospel, I will bear and forbear patiently, knowing that it's a long road that has no end, and be as cheerful as possible under existing circumstances, and the truth will make us free.

Am hopeful that more elders will move into the district, as the calls are many and the laborers few. We need a competent man to take charge of the district, one that will and can spend his whole time in the field; much good could be done by one that is in possession of push, wisdom, zeal, and humility,—as well as being self-sustaining. Nevertheless, many of the noble-hearted Saints in the district will do the best they can to keep the wheel rolling, and others are just as willing that they should, and fill the bill as per James 2:15, 16, with a God bless you.

Hope the district will pardon me for my inability to labor. On January 3 I united in holy bonds of matrimony Mr. J. A. Graham and our noble young sister, Mary Ettie Brooner, both of Pomona, where Mr. Graham had provided a nice little farm home for them. May the Lord's blessings attend them and that she may be the means of bringing him into gospel fold, to secure a home hereafter.

I attended one late conference at Johns Mills, which was one of peace; but O how sad the thought that the Sunday school work was not represented. Will the Saints and young people of the district make full preparations to meet on the 6th day of July at ten a. m., at the new Saints' chapel five miles east of Ava (Douglas County, Missouri) for Sunday school convention and entertainment at seven p. m. Come prepared to take an active part. On the 7th the conference convenes, and we shall look for a large delegation of big and little speakers.

I was called to Springfield to preach on Easter Sunday, and while there Bro. and Sr. Nelson lost their only daughter, Sr. Carrie May. About nine a. m. on that passover day she passed over the line, and in so doing she turned gray, while her mother was weeping over the loss; but what was their loss was Sidney N. Gray's gain, having passed over into his hand, and they were both to blame. Bro. Gray gave me a few dollars, thinking perhaps I would keep still about it, but I will not do it. I must say that both made a splendid choice, both being noble workers in the church. May the blessings of God attend them all along life's uneven journey. They will make their home with her parents, hence the lost is found, and the gainer of a son. The writer relished the splendid wedding dinner provided for the host of Saints and friends present. Among the latter were Bro. D. W. Thomas and wife, whom I had not met for nearly twenty years, when we were neighbors near where Lamoni now stands. Truly it was a happy meeting, and with tears mingled with joy we spent a profitable day together, talking, preaching, and singing. They have located at Springfield, and I must congratulate the Springfield branch and Sunday school on being able to secure such noble help. Wish Elder Thomas could have located here, as there are many good openings and chances for him or any one else that may wish to locate in the land southward in Zion, and on receipt of a two cent stamp will gladly give all needful information and descriptions, together with the facts as they are.

LEWISTON, Ill., April 13.

Editors Herald:—I read in my last Herald an article from the pen of Bro. Charles Derry concerning the steamship President. She was captured by a pirate and burned; all slain but four men and five young women. One of the men was a Doctor M. Lorner; the four men agreed to unite with the pirates, thereby saving their lives, hoping Providence would open a way of escape.

The writer of this — with his father, mother, and three other children, and a brother Latter Day Saint—sailed out of Liverpool on the 28th of April, 1841. About the third Sunday out we were becalmed all day. About noon we were surrounded with wreckage of a vessel that had been destroyed by fire. Then in the evening about five o'clock our captain espied a vessel through his glass, and made out she was pirate; and she had a boat out, full of men, rowing towards us with a line attached to the pirate, so as to gain so much on us. None but the men were aware of what she was. There came a storm about sundown, such as I never saw. The passengers were all fastened below. I being in the sailors' quarters by permission from them, learned the character of the vessel in chase; but she lost us, God having an eye on the few Saints on board, and of a prophecy that had been made in England concerning us.

Doctor Lorner published a book in Liverpool; in it he described exactly the calm and the pirate warping their ship toward us, and the storm, and how the pirates raved and swore when they lost us. They then made for their rendezvous; and all were drunk on one day. He then with his companions, determined to escape; but before they escaped two of his companions were murdered and the third died of his wounds, but the doctor carried him in the dark to the only boat the pirates had to go to and from their ship. The ship was anchored out quite a distance, so that the doctor left them without means of escape. His remaining companion died out at sea from his wound. The doctor was out in the open boat several days, and was finally picked up by a Dutch ship and taken to Amsterdam, then on to Liverpool, where he reported the loss of the President, and the last chase they made, which by the blessing of God was a failure, or this would have never been written.

Our captain made the report in New York. The name of the ship were on was Orpheus. The pirate's ship was the Flying Maria; so said Dr. Lorner. I know we sailed in the midst of wreckage, nearly all of it charred. I know we were in the fiercest storm I ever saw, and the doctor told the truth when he wrote that they lost us, and he and his companions were happy. The five young women they took from the President they murdered, on account of a mutiny that was on because of the women.

I know that some say there were no pirates as late as 1841, but I know better. The brother's name that was on the same vessel was Elijah Cheatham. If some brother in Liverpool would search some of the oldest bookstores, or in New York, they might find Doctor Lorner's account of the steamship President and her destruction.

I am very nervous, but hope you can read this; it is the truth about what became of the lost ship. Your brother,

T. F. STAFFORD.

Editors Herald:—We now expect to be in in our field of labor (Northern California district) about May 15, and desire to visit as many members of our district this year as we can find. With this in view I would be glad to hear from the Saints living outside of the branches, and will try and call on them sometime during the year. There is a large and grand work before us, and we hope that all the local priesthood will be about their "Father's business." My address for the present will be No. 3010 Sixteenth Street, San Francisco, California. In bonds,

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Dear Saints:—I am led to ask myself what am I doing for the building up of Zion? Surely we will all have to do a part. I for one desire to do what I can. When, O when, we ask, will Zion be redeemed? Not until all have done their part. God has done his part, and is now waiting for us. I often think of our missionaries how they leave their homes and loved ones to go out into the world to preach the gospel to a people who are ready at all times to turn their backs on anything in the line of religion and truth. How little we realize what some are enduring while we are at home living as it were in peace and plenty.

I feel thankful to my heavenly Father for for the gospel and for the gift of his dear Son. I want to worship and adore him as long as I have breath. How many, O how many are my mistakes. I desire to render the covenant that I made when nine years old to serve the Lord. I want to walk nearer to him day by day, and make sacrifices for the cause which I love so well. When I think that possibly we might have to be shut out from his presence on account of selfishness, I don't know what else to call it. We want to have something to wear as nice as our neighbor in the world, so we let the church wait awhile until we get our new clothes, then we will help to build up Zion. O, how foolish we are; we the children of God, and can't give up these lustful desires. I am ashamed when I think of it. I sometimes fear that God will be ashamed of us. When, O when, will we be willing to give up this world and its sinful pleasures and serve God with sincerity of heart that we might be an example to the world? My hope and prayer is that I may improve my talent and go on in the good-begun work, growing day by day, ever watching and praying and learning, here a little and there a little, as we are commanded. Let us go on striving to overcome until the Master comes. Ever praying and waiting for the building up of God's kingdom upon earth, I am your sister in the gospel,

HATTIE GENEVA NICKERSON.

TRUSTING.

Are you trusting Jesus only,
He who bore your weight of sin?
Are you striving e'er to serve him,
Casting all your care on him?

Sister, brother, can you doubt him—
He who ever pleads for you?
Pause to thank him in your gladness,
He through trials brought you through.

Ah! 'Tis sweet to trust in Jesus,
Knowing he our sorrow shares;
That in dangers seen and unseen,
We've been guarded from the snares.

May we e'er press onward, upward,
Keep our Savior's path in view,
And when ended are earth's trials,
May we dwell among the true.

GREENBUSH, Mich., Feb. 4.

Dear Sisters:—Having just read the letters from the sisters in the Home Column for the past week, I also feel to write, as I have before been led to do so, yet neglected. I have been encouraged and cheered by helpful thoughts in the letters many times, and have been interested also in this department since taking the Herald.

My mother having died ten years ago, when I was sixteen, I promised to keep my younger sisters and brothers together, and have tried to do as well as I could, though I realize many mistakes have been made by me, yet God is merciful and knows all our weaknesses. I realized the responsibility resting on me, and tried to be guided as he wished to lead me. From the time I was a child my desire was to be a Christian, yet I never united with any church until I heard the gospel proclaimed in its fullness nearly eight years ago; and looking back now over the years, I can see that God led me and has known all my desires and helped me always. "Those who hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled."

The responsibility I was under seemed to make me feel more than ever the need of God's guiding, and before I came into this work, my prayers were many times answered, which led me to a stronger faith in God. "Example is greater than precept," it is said, and I early felt that I could lead the younger ones placed in my care, either right or wrong, to a great extent, and determined to lead them as nearly right as I could. Have so often seen those who have children to care for, thoughtlessly saying or doing something (and realize I've made such mistakes myself) which may not seem to amount to anything, yet influences those around them far more than they think. No one can be too careful, and "as the twig is bent, so the tree is inclined," we find it difficult to eradicate evil seed that has been sown in the minds of the young, and they allowed to grow up, untrained for good.

We sometimes hear that when some evil is hereditary there is an excuse for the one who inherits it; but I believe God will help such a one to overcome just as well as others, even though the evil may follow through generations. True, it may be more difficult to overcome what seems to be one's very nanature, for often a fault is overcome, and seemingly it will trouble no more, when shortly a failure follows that just about discourages, and the thought comes, "What is the use, I never can overcome that;" but that is just when the gospel of Christ comes to our aid, and we should ask God in secret to give us strength. We must watch and pray unceasingly. To be accepted as God's children is to be one of the happiest of people, for even though trials seem to be on every hand, we have his Spirit to guide when we do his will, and we know that all will work for the best, even though we cannot see it at the time. My greatest desire is to so live that I may be one of God's accepted children and inherit eternal life—the greatest gift of God.

I sincerely echo the hope of a sister (and doubtless many sisters), that Sister Emma Burton's life story be published in book form. I have been encouraged from reading her writings in Autumn Leaves, though I had the privilege of reading only part two. The Spirit bore witness of her testimonies and experiences when in Australia, and I can also say that it didn't seem ridiculous to me (when she wrote perhaps it did to some) that the Lord, or the Spirit, would show anyone how to do dressmaking, for her experiences in that line seem to have been almost my own; for I have been shown ways of doing such work that I knew not before.

Oh, when I think of God's great goodness to me, and then that I have not been more deserving of it, I feel so unworthy and yet more determined to press onward and upward, and never in any way bring reproach on the work we love so well!

I enjoy reading the letters in Home Column, and would like to tell the writers so. Perhaps I may write again, if this don't find its way to the waste basket. May we ever strive to live by every word that God has spoken, and then we will have nothing to regret, is the humble prayer of

Your sister in Christ,

ALICE M. JOSLYN.

Miscellaneous Department.

TO THE PATRONS OF THE HERALD OFFICE.

Having been appointed Business Manager and Treasurer of the Herald Office, by the Board of Publication, I wish to say to the Saints and friends that I desire their earnest coöperation in my endeavors to serve the best interests of all concerned. I accept the trust as one of responsibility, realizing that the interests of the publishing department have an important bearing upon the development of the church in the branches and the progress of the work abroad. It will therefore be my endeavor to meet demands upon this department by prompt and faithful service in every feature of its work.

So far as in our power to avoid it there will be no reasonable ground for dissatisfaction with the office. The Publishing Department is the servant of the body, owned by it, and subject to its control, that it may contribute to its needs and faithfully meet all just demands upon it. Recognizing its legitimate sphere, we shall endeavor to see that it is made a contributor to the general good by frank and fair dealing with the people.

In the conduct of business the same general rules published in the Herald Office catalogue will be observed until new rules are found necessary.

Mistakes, if any have been made, will be rectified as soon as possible to correct them. Write us plainly your wants and we shall endeavor to supply them.

The traveling ministry, Bishop's agents, branch and district officers, and all Saints are asked to remember the interests of the Herald Office. It is to the interests of the church and the Saints everywhere to be in touch with the progress of the work by reading the Saints' Herald, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Hope, Gospel Quarterlies, the standard books, and other church publications.

Address all orders and remittances to the undersiged. JOHN SMITH,

Business Manager Herald Office.

BEFORE THE HIGH COUNCIL.

The High Council was convened Wednesday, April 11, 1900, at ten a. m. There were present: F. G. Pitt, Calvin Beebe, James C. Crabb, James H. Peters, Asa S. Cochran, William Anderson, Charles Derry, Robert M. Elvin, John Chisnall, and John A. Robinson. Vacancies having occurred by the death of David Dancer, and the absence of Charles E. Butterworth, James M. Baker was chosen to fill the vacancy caused by the death of David Dancer; and George M. Scott to act in place of C. E. Butterworth.

There were two causes heard by the council. The Valley branch vs. R. E. Grant, on appeal.

R. E. Grant appellant.

In this case R. E. Grant was charged with adultery and unchristianlike conduct. The charges were heard before an elders' court at Grand Rapids, Michigan, August 8, 1899, and a verdict of guilty rendered. From this, R. E. Grant appealed to the High Council.

J. A. Grant and F. M. Cooper appeared for the Valley branch, and R. E. Grant in his own behalf.

The decision of the council was that the decision of the elders' court be affirmed; and that the defendant, R. E. Grant, be adjudged guilty of adultery and unchristianlike conduct.

Done at Lamoni, Iowa, April 16, 1900.

JOSEPH SMITH,
R. M. ELVIN,
Secretary of Council.

A second council was convened to hear a cause in which J. A. Grant and F. M. Cooper were complainants and E. C. Briggs defendant. Charges: Falsehood and self-contradiction.

There were present of the council: J. C. Crabb, J. M. Baker, Charles Derry, J. H. Peters, William Anderson, Asa S. Cochran, R. M. Elvin, and F. G. Pitt. J. W. Waldsmith, J. S. Snively, M. H. Forscutt, and F. M. Weld were chosen to fill vacancies.

J. A. Grant and F. M. Cooper appeared for the one side, E. C. Briggs with T. W. Chatburn as counselor for the defense.

Upon the assembling of the council at an adjourned meeting held Monday, April 23, 1900, the following action was had and ordered placed on the record:—

We, F. M. Cooper for John A. Grant, and F. M. Cooper of the prosecution, and E. C. Briggs in his own behalf, hereby agree, that this cause shall be dismissed by mutual agreement; and that the Council Docket of the case shall show, that the evidence was not heard, the charges not proved, and the defendant freed from further liabilities to answer to the charges in this case.

Done at Lamoni, this the 23d day of April, 1900.

Witness our hands,

F. M. COOPER,
for Prosecution.
E. C. BRIGGS.

Attest, T. W. CHATBURN,
Counsel for Defendant.

Whereupon the cause was dismissed by the agreement of the parties.

JOSEPH SMITH,
R. M. ELVIN,
Secretary of Council.

PASTORAL.

MISSOURI, KANSAS, AND SOUTHERN ILLINOIS MISSION.

To All the Saints and Ministers in the Above Mission, Greeting:—Each district will be considered a "mission field" of its own, without dividing, except the St. Louis district, and controlled so far as I can determine at this date, as follows: The Northwest Kansas district by John Alfred Davis; Northeast district by M. T. Short; Nodaway, Missouri, district by D. C. White; Northeast district by F. J. Chatburn, assistant Joseph A. Tanner; Far West district by J. C. Foss, assistant Swen Swenson; Clinton district by T. R. White, assistant Lee Quick; Spring River district by F. C. Keck; South Missouri district by Henry Sparling, assistant R. T. Walters; St. Louis district in Illinois, and the city of St. Louis and suburbs by Arthur Allen; that part of the St. Louis district situated in Missouri (except the city of St. Louis and suburbs) and all of that part of Missouri south of the St. Louis district and east of the South Missouri district by C. J. Spurlock; Southern Illinois district by F. M. Slover.

The Central Illinois district will be provided for sometime in the near future, if possible. The Independence district will be under my own charge for the time being. Those placed in charge will instruct the ministry to report all items to them, on the first day of July, October, January, and March. Those in charge should report to me by the tenth of each respective month named.

Nothing need be considered in this pastoral letter to debar any or all to write me in regard to their trials or blessings, and the special needs of the work here and there, in order to secure my advice and assistance when they feel it is absolutely necessary for the good of themselves and the work that they love so well.

Praying God that we may all labor without friction, and when the conference year shall have passed, we can look back over our work and truthfully say, we have done what we could to advance the good of the latter-day work, without murmur or complaint.

Yours in gospel bonds,

I. N. WHITE,
Minister in General Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., April 27.

To Whom it May Concern:—By arrangement with Bro. I. N. White the counties of Worth, Harrison, and Mercer in Missouri, will be considered as belonging to the Iowa and Minnesota mission, as they are in the Decatur district. The counties of Schuyler, Scotland, and Clark, in Missouri, will be also a part of the above mission as they form a part of the Nauvoo district. Labor done in these counties may be reported to Duncan Campbell and James McKiernan, respectively,

J. W. WIGHT.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 27.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MISSION.

To the Ministry and Saints of Above Mission:—Having been placed in charge, the following arrangement for ministerial labor have been made, subject to such change as the necessities of the work may demand:—

Brethren Gomer Wells and Gomer Reese, Montana.

W. S. Pender and Peter Anderson, Central and Southern Utah.

R. J. Parker and S. D. Condit, Northern Utah and Southern Idaho.

Charles Albertson, Western Idaho.

R. R. Dana, Ogden and vicinity.

Arrangements for tent work will be made in due time.

I earnestly ask the support and coöperation of all, that our united efforts for good may result in honor to the Master's cause.

Brethren of the missionary force will please report promptly to the missionary in charge July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1, under the following heads: 1. Services attended. 2. Times preached. 3. Times assisted. 4 Other services held. 5. Baptisms. 6. Confirmations. 7. Assisted in confirming. 8. Total ordinations and to what office. 9. Organizations effected. 10. Marriages. 11. Children blessed. 12. Administrations. 13. New openings. My permanent home address is Lamoni, Iowa; will give mission address later. D. W. WIGHT.

To the Ministry and Saints in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, Greeting:—Having been appointed at the late General Conference in charge of the above-named field of labor, and desiring to secure the hearty coöperation of all who labor for Zion's weal in unity and good feeling, I hereby address you this greeting, trusting that our future labor may be performed in love, and confidence, and with divine approval. I will be detained at Lamoni for a few weeks, on account of the issuing of the third volume of Church History, which demands my attention. Some changes have taken place and complications arisen which may require consideration in making permanent appointments, but as I am unacquainted with the men and field, I will make as few changes as possible until I have time and opportunity to become more acquainted.

Bro. F. M. Cooper has been removed from Northern Illinois district by appointment elsewhere, hence it will be necessary to fill his place. I hereby appoint Elder H. E. Moler in charge of Northern Illinois district, except the city of Chicago.

Other appointments will remain for the present as made by my predecessor, subject to such changes as conditions may warrant, of which due notice will be given.

Elder J. M. Terry will continue in charge in the city of Chicago.

Elder J. C. Crabb, will continue in charge in Kewanee district.

Elder W. A. McDowell will continue in charge in the State of Wisconsin.

Those who labor in any of these fields will please take notice and report accordingly, according to the rules governing. Please be prompt in reporting as to date, and particular as to necessary details. The times for reporting to your several missionaries in charge are the first of July, October, January, and March. Please make it a specialty to report to those in charge on the first day of each of the above months, in order that they may report to me on the 10th, and thus make our work regular and systematic. In bonds of peace and hope, your coworker in Zion's cause, HEMAN C. SMITH.

EPISTLE.

To the Officers and Members of Pacific Slope Mission, Greeting:—Having been continued in charge another year, I herewith solicit your coöperation and hearty support for my colaborers and self. The following ministers have been associated with me in gospel work, and will occupy as follows until further notice:—

Northern district: R. Etzenhouser and Calvin Rich will operate the tent. F. B. Blair will look after the work of the district. Bro. A. B. Phillips to labor in Modoc County and surrounding country.

Central district: H L Holt and A. M. Chase with the tent. E. Keeler to labor in the southern portion of district.

Southern district: T. W. Williams in Los Angeles. T. W. Chatburn and D. A. Anderson with the tent. J. F. Burton and Elbert Smith to labor as the way opens up before them. Bro. William Gibson in San Bernardino and vicinity.

Oregon: D. L. Harris in sub-charge; Charles Crumley and A. B. Moore.

Washington: John Davies in charge; Bro. N. C. Enge until September 1.

Nevada: Thomas Daley in charge.

In this connection I wish to emphasize the fact that a report will be expected every three months, from each minister, in order that the missionary in charge may be able to make an accurate report to the First Presidency of the true condition of the work in the field.

In order to make the tent work a success, we think it necessary that a special fund be created in the respective districts to meet the current expenses of tent work. Will the district presidents please see to this matter as soon as possible? The Saints throughout the mission have done remarkably well in obeying the temporal law in times past, and we have every reason to believe that you will continue your efforts along that line in the future. The maxim, "In unity there is strength," should be kept well in mind by the workers in Israel. Therefore, let us labor together in unison and ever strive to be in possession of the true charity which characterizes a faithful follower of Christ. We sincerely trust that the local officers will continue to supplement our efforts as willingly as heretofore.

It is desired that those of the Seventy, and such Elders and Priests who are doing missionary work, devote their time in opening up new places, thus leaving the High Priests and Elders, upon whom the Lord has placed the responsibility of feeding and caring for the Saints, attend to local affairs as far as practicable.

That success may crown our labors for the Master, that the sick among us may be blessed and the weak be made strong spiritually, I suggest that we set apart the first Sunday in June (the third) as a day for fasting and prayer. I hope that the presidents of the branches will call the members' attention to this request. I shall enter upon my mission as soon as circumstances will permit. My address until June 1 will be Temple, Lake County, Ohio. After that time 3010 Sixteenth Street, San Francisco, California, will be my mission address. Praying that success may result from our labors, and that the peace of God may abide with us all, I remain your colaborer in the Master's cause,

G. T. GRIFFITHS,
Missionary in Charge.

TEMPLE, Lake County, Ohio, April 25.

APPOINTED.

Bro. R. C. Evans, of London, Ontario, has been appointed on the committee to meet the brethren of the Church of Christ, in place of Bro. Joseph Luff, resigned, in pursuance of action of conference just past.

JOSEPH SMITH,
President of Conference.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, the great and Supreme Ruler of the universe has in his infinite wisdom removed from among us our worthy and esteemed sister, Mary C. Nelson; and whereas, the intimate acquaintance with her relatives in this branch makes it eminently befitting that we record our appreciation of her; therefore, be it resolved, that the sudden removal of such a life leaves a vacancy and a shadow that will be deeply realized by all the members of this branch, and will prove a serious loss to the community in which she lived; resolved, that with deep sympathy with the bereaved relatives of the deceased, we express our hope that even so great a loss to us all may be overruled for good by him who doeth all things well; be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Saints' Herald for publication, and a copy be forwarded to the bereaved husband and mother.

Adopted by the Three Rivers branch, April 13, 1900.

JOHN MIZELL, President.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father to call our president and brother, John Fish, up higher, and by his death our society has lost a faithful and consistent member; therefore, be it resolved, that we offer the bereaved relatives our sincere sympathy in this their dark hour of trial, and commend them to the wisdom of Him who doeth all things well. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Herald and Autumn Leaves for publication.

G. W. FEASTER, President.

COMMITTEE ON HISTORIES AND ENCYCLOPEDIAS.

The above committee met at the Historian's Office, April 23, 1900, and formed a permanent organization by appointing Heman C. Smith chairman, and Frederick Madison Smith secretary.

We are trying to systematize our work, and will make an effort to correct existing misrepresentations in histories and encyclopedias as soon as possible, and will use every effort in our power to prevent the occurrence of future errors. However, we will need the active coöperation of all who are interested in this work, and hence we earnestly solicit the aid of Saints and friends.

We shall be glad to have information of any works mentioning the latter-day work, issued or prospective, especially the latter; and where practicable send us copies of books. Any information addressed to any one of the committee will receive prompt attention. Copies of books should be sent to the secretary.

NOTICE OF REINSTATEMENT.

The trouble surrounding the silencing of Bro. William Jacques of Belleville, Illinois, having been adjusted, this is to notify all concerned that he is again reinstated as an elder. J. C. HITCHCOCK, Dist. Pres.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 30, 1900.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of the Northern Nebraska district will meet with the Saints at Columbus, Nebraska, on May 25, at 7:30 p. m. A good attendance is requested, as it is the election of officers for the ensuing year. As there is some expense attached to the conference meetings, it is requested that the several branches will send the finances due for the past year in accordance with the conference minutes. J. E. BUTTS, Pres.
JAMES HUFF, Sec.

BORN.

GRIFFITHS.—At Lydney, Gloucestershire, England, March 1, 1900, to Bro. and Sr. Griffiths, a daughter. Blessed in Lydney church, April 1, 1900, by Elders A. N. Bishop and H. Ellis, and named Aileen Jessie.

DIED.

CHATBURN.—Sr. Mary Burton Chatburn was born in Wiswell, Lancashire, England, July 26, 1821; died March 12, 1900, at her home, Harlan, Iowa. She was married to Jonas W. Chatburn in 1839; they came to America in 1845; to Iowa in 1850, and settled near Council Bluffs. Joined the old church in 1846, and the Reorganization in 1869, and has been a consistent and devoted follower of Jesus her Lord, a faithful wife, loving mother, kind friend; she was noted for her kindness to the poor, and to those in distress a friend indeed. Loved by all who knew her, both great and small. She leaves an aged companion after sixty years of wedded life, and six children to mourn her departure. A Saint indeed gone to her rest. Funeral from Saints' chapel, Harlan, Iowa, sermon by F. A. Smith.

MATHEWS.—Mead Burton Mathews was killed on the evening of March 6, 1900. He was nearly seven years old; was the oldest child of Bro. Reuben and Sr. Adrienne Mathews, and grandson of Bro. and Sr. J. F. Burton, and great grandson of Sr. Davison of Independence. Mead was a bright ambitious lad, and was delighted to lead the old gentle horse from the pasture to the barn. He evidently had tied the rope around his wrist; just how it happened no one knows, but his mother who was watching for him, saw the horse stop suddenly and then circle around, and then run around the pasture twice, dragging the boy by the wrist. When they reached him he was dead. Services from the East Garden Grove chapel, Elder P. M. Betts officiating. The grief-stricken parents have the sympathy of the entire community.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

Lamoni Sanitarium.

Believing that there should be a place where Saints and others who have not faith to be healed can be treated with "herbs and mild food" by "a friend" and where surgical and other means can be used if needed, I have decided to open a sanitarium at Lamoni, Iowa, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, also a surgical department where operations can be done with skill and modern appliances.

Special attention will be given to diseases of women, ruptures, piles, and tumors. In these disorders I have had large experience. Testimonials of cures sent on application.

Specialists from Chicago and St. Joseph will be consulted in difficult cases. Chronic diseases will be treated largely by baths, massage, and electricity.

I have practiced medicine and surgery for eighteen years. I have taken special courses in the above-named diseases at New York City, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis hospitals.

Temporary rooms have been engaged and patients can be received at any time. Consultations free. Write to me about your case.

FINDS FRAUD IN FLOUR.

Less than one year ago a new Bureau of Inspection was attached to the treasury department at Washington. Joseph Leiter's famous wheat deal had advanced the price of flour until adulterations of the product in hundreds of milling plants led to the passage of Representative Tawney's bill, which put a special tax upon such blended flours and provided for the present system of flour inspection. To-day, however, these department inspectors are unable to detect a 5 per cent adulteration of corn flour, while with wheat flour at $3.50 a barrel and corn flour at $2 this 5 per cent adulteration would mean a clear profit of seven a half cents a barrel to any miller who might be disposed to evade the law. According to market evidences there are no blended flours coming under the stamp tax of the Tawney law, and government inspectors every day are visiting mills and taking samples of flour, in which they would be unable to detect a profitable percentage of corn flour adulterant.

Thus, officially by the card, no one may speak of flour adulterations of 5 per cent and under, but if such adulterations are in progress the millers so offending are menaced by the discovery of a Chicago chemist whose determinations point to one tenth of 1 per cent corn flour in any mixture.

PROFESSOR WESENER'S NEW PROCESS.

Professor J. A. Wesener of the food department of the Columbus Medical Laboratory has perfected this combined physical and chemical process and has proved it to the satisfaction of some of the greatest milling establishments in the West.

"Under the circumstances, of course, my process is secret," said Professor Wesener, speaking of his discovery. "I may say that until the microscopic test was supplemented by the chemical treatment we failed to discover even a 15 per cent adulteration. Now I am prepared to discover one-tenth of 1 per cent corn flour more easily than even 5 per cent adulterations. Knowing that the government's chemists are having trouble with determinations under the Tawney law, you will see the importance of these results should the wheat market take such a turn as it did a year ago."

Competition in the flour trade with wheat at $1.05 a bushel led to the blending of flours. This enabled many milling plants to cut 40 cents a barrel under the prices of the pure wheat product. With the milling business of the United States standing out as the largest single industry in the country, it was estimated 15,000 plants were "doctoring" flour in ways more or less detrimental to public health before Tawney's resolution came before the fifty-fifth session of Congress.

CLAY AND ROCK USED.

Circular letters from a North Carolina manufacturing company first brought the subject to notice. A white clay found near Greensboro had been ground into the physical counterpart of a first-class patent flour. This substance, 96 per cent of which is insoluble in hydrochloric acid, was put on the market. For a high-grade, patent flour the manufacturers advised a 15 per cent adulteration; for medium grades 12 per cent; and for feed stuffs 18 per cent. Its use was advocated as paying $400 to $1,600 a car in clear profits to the miller. A white rock was also ground into a flour adulterant and extensively used for a short time. Finally, however, the law of gravity displaced these, figuratively and literally. After shipment the adulterant would be found settled at the bottom of bags and barrels.

A by-product of the glucose factory, containing 89 per cent of pure starch, with a detrimental percentage of sulphuric acid, was used widely and successfully. How widely may be shown by the fact that in the fall of 1897 this article was a slow moving commodity at $1.22 a hundred, while in May, 1898, the demand exceeded the supply at $1.50 a bag. As an injurious element, its chief evil was shown to be its taint of sulphuric acid. As a food element, however, it was worthless, as a man would have to consume 150 pounds of it every day in order to derive sufficient nutriment to enable him to work. At one time flour was on the general market containing 40 per cent of this starchy commodity.

Corn flour, the starch element milled from Indian corn, was and is the most perfect adulterant for wheat flour, and the one most difficult to detect. In milling it processes have been perfected until almost the last feeling of grittiness has been taken from it. It is essentially wholesome, so far as starch food is necessary to man, and its mixture with wheat flour tends to improve it in the eye of the public. In its raw state the blended flour is much whiter, and in the high grades of rolled flour it produces a beautiful white loaf. Where the corn flour is used in large quantities, however, its displacement of the wheat gluten causes it to produce a smaller loaf. A housewife, in kneading it, too, would notice the lack of springy resistance in the dough. Such a loaf would have a tendency to dry more quickly than would a loaf of pure wheat bread, and distinctly it would be lacking in nutrition, just to the extent that the corn flour had produced an excess of starch in the loaf.

CORN FLOUR SOOTHES HIS CONSCIENCE.

As a wheat flour adulterant the use of corn flour has soothed the conscience of the miller. Feeling that he has been putting a pure corn product into his finished flour, the measure of his guilt at the deception never has been greater than the margin of his profits. He has given the trade a fancy flour that has caught its eye, and, until it shall react on its unwitting stomach, he feels to have been conducting his business to the advantage of all concerned.

"I don't know to what extent flour adulterations are made at the present," said Professor Wesener. "Every little while, however, a sample of suspected flour comes to us. Only a week ago I found 10 per cent of corn in a package of rye flour. Most of these tests are made for millers who have reason to suspect the products of other plants. We simply report on the flour, knowing nothing of its manufacture or of the uses to which our report is put. As compared to analyses asked for a year ago, the number now received is small. To me, the great question is, 'If the government experts cannot detect 5 per cent of corn flour in the wheat product; and if a wheat scarcity or a wheat deal ever should make flour adulteration the object it was in 1898, of what use is the machinery of government inspection?'

SMALL MILLERS WORST OFFENDERS.

"I do not think any big milling concern to-day is using corn in its flour, or that it would do so even under stress of a Leiter deal. But thousands of the smaller concerns in every part of the country would do so, and to the full limit of the government's inability to detect them."

One of the managers of one of the largest mills in Chicago refused to be quoted in his views of the general subject, but he expressed them freely. When investigations of adulterations were so prominently before the people his miller made some corn flour blendings, starting with 5 per cent adulterations. City Hall chemists pronounced this blend as pure, likewise accepting 10 and even 15 per cent mixtures as of pure wheat. Many other chemists failed to discover the 15 per cent of corn flour.

"The subject never had interested us save as one of the sharp practices of some of our competitors," he said. "Our miller could detect corn flour in excess of 5 per cent, but from my experience with chemists at large I doubt if the Washington bureau can do so well."

The average wheat crop of the United States is in excess of 500,000,000 bushels. A 5 per cent adulteration of this flour product would mean the displacement of 25,000,000 bushels of the staple. In the fifty-fifth Congress a bill to prevent this passed both House and Senate almost without question. If it has an organic weakness Professor Wesener's discovery at least may prove a deterrent to dishonest milling methods of the future. —Chicago Tribune, September 25, 1899.

HOME FOR ALL JEWS.

DR. HERZL TALKS OF PALESTINE.

London, April 29.—Dr. Theodore Herzl, originator of the scheme to establish a Jewish state in Palestine, is now in London, perfecting the details of his great movement. Dr. Herzl is a tall, broad man, with a heavy black beard, black hair, finely cut features and luminous brown eyes. He is full of his subject, which he discusses lucidly, earnestly and eloquently. He is apparently inspired with a real and vivid expectation of seeing the Jewish race, in the not-distant future, redeemed from homelessness and persecution and firmly planted on soil of its own.

DREAM THAT HINGES ON THE SULTAN.

Dr. Herzl took time from his multifarious duties to say to the Record correspondent to-day: "Although I have practically inexhaustible means at my command to apply to the colonizing of Jews in Palestine, some men still declare that the project is a dream. So it is, perhaps, but only recently German unity was a dream, and so to-day is British imperial federation a dream, yet it is not impossible of accomplishment.

"The scheme to translate the Jews of the world to their ancestral home hinges, not upon surrounding inherent differences, but merely upon the willingness of the Sultan to grant such a charter as we require. When he grants that, in the course of time, in my opinion, will this colonizing movement begin. The Sultan may not exactly be in love with the idea; but he does love money, and we are prepared to pay what he wants."

OBJECT IS TO GIVE JEWS PEACE.

Concerning the character and purpose of the movement, Dr. Herzl said: "The Jews are without a government, without national independence, without a home. Their political, social, and economic condition in many countries, including Russia, Roumania, and Austria, is most unfortunate. They cannot escape from these degrading discriminations, because they have no place to go. Even the United States would not welcome an extraordinary influx of poor Jews from Eastern Europe, Africa, and the East. The social conditions of the great cities of the earth already are aggravated by the presence of large numbers of Jewish people among whom standards of living are low. The supreme demand to which this situation gives rise is for a place to which these people may go to live in peace.

AIDS THE OPPRESSED AND THE WORLD.

"The scheme I propose—colonizing them in the Holy Land—is not wholly egotistic. I will admit that primarily it is for the benefit of the unhappy members of a persecuted race, but secondarily it will confer a blessing on the human family, without distinction of creed, color or country. The governments of the world would get rid of the dangerous passion of anti-Semitism, and that would help them internally. The large centers of population would find themselves freed from a considerable proportion of the evils of the sweating system.

"These would be of the nature of negative boons, but what of the positive benediction a Jewish state in Palestine would confer on the world?

WOULD MAKE PALESTINE BLOSSOM.

"At present Palestine is a dead country, completely barren, in the modern idea. The Jews would breathe into it the breath of life. They would teach the ignorant and backward Turk, they would build harbors and railways, and would rapidly construct the material elements of a splendid civilization. Palestine now is closed to the world and nobody can get the land without war. The Jews would neutralize the land and open it on equal terms to all races of men. They would immensely shorten the distance between Europe and Asia by building a railway from the bay of Acre to the Persian gulf. Over this all peoples could pass. Nobody would be jealous or fearful of the Jews, a weak people, without a government, desirous only of winning happiness and prosperity for themselves and of promoting the general progress of mankind.

HOLY PLACES TO BE KEPT SACRED.

"The holy places would remain the common property of the world. We should traterritorialize them and treat them as sacred places. Emperor William told me as we stood together near the gates of Jerusalem, 'Palestine is the country of the future.' I think he spoke as a prophet.

"Dr. Hirsch thought that the fertile plains of Argentina would be better for Jewish colonies than the more barren land of Palestine. I told him he was wrong, and time has proved him so. The Jewish colonies in Argentina are now in a bad way, while those in Palestine are flourishing. That the holy land is the Jews' country is written not only in the Bible but in the hearts of the Jewish race." —Chicago Record.

In the Review of Reviews for May, there is editorial comment on Admiral Dewey's candidacy; on the government of Puerto Rico under the law recently passed by Congress; on the proposed government of Alaska, and on the developments of the month in financial and industrial circles. Other topics treated in "The Progress of the World" are the rush to Cape Nome, fox-breeding in Alaska, the April elections, the epidemic of strikes, the opening of the Paris fair, the military operations in South Africa, and the Delagoa Bay award.

It is impossible to foresee the results of the peace conference at The Hague, and it is as yet too early to predict that the next century will be called the century of disarmament. But in the last few months we have had a foretaste of this era of felicity and universal peace, for never until just recently have we seen the conclusion of so many agreements in so short a time. Are they the precursors of one great perfect agreement?—La Tribuna, Rome.

FACTS STUBBORN THINGS.

The Deseret News for April 21 has a column editorial explanatory of some of the teaching credited to Pres. Brigham Young in the Journal of Discourses. The News does this to set straight some statements said to have been made by the "Reorganized Church, or Josephites," to the discredit of President Young. After giving two of the quotations which have been used by some of the "Josephite" elders, which seem to have peculiar significance as teaching, the News says:—

Take these sentences isolated from the full text of the discourse, and those who desire to misrepresent can make a point against the people of these valleys. But President Young made those remarks in illustration of the saying of the Savior, that "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that is cast into the sea and gathers of every kind." But afterwards the good were to be gathered into vessels, and the bad to be cast away.

The two quotations are as follows:—

Some of these Elders seem to be tripped up in a moment, if the wicked can find any fault with the members of this Church; but bless your souls, I would not yet have this people faultless, for the day of separation has not yet arrived. I have many a time, in this stand, dared the world to produce as mean devils as we can; we can beat them at anything. We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world, the cunningest and most adroit thieves, and any other shade of character that you can mention.

We can pick out Elders in Israel right here who can beat the world at gambling, who can handle the cards, cut and shuffle them with the smartest rogue on the face of God's footstool. I can produce Elders here who can shave their smartest shavers, and take their money from them. We can beat the world at any game.

If it be true that President Young was illustrating the "net cast into the sea," why should he have added the next paragraph, which if the whole context is to be taken, as the News states should be done, gives the reason for their being such extraordinarily expert men among the elders? and why did not the News quote it? It reads thus:—

We can beat them, because we have men here that live in the light of the Lord, that have the Holy Priesthood, and hold the keys of the kingdom of God. But you may go through the sectarian world, and you cannot find a man capable of opening the door of the kingdom of God to admit others in. We can do that. We can pray the best, preach the best, and sing the best. We are the best looking and finest set of people on the face of the earth, and they may begin any game they please, and we are on hand, and can beat them at anything they have a mind to begin. They may make sharp their two edged swords, and I will turn out the Elders of Israel with greased feathers, and whip them to death. We are not to be beat. We expect to be a stumbling block to the whole world, and a rock of offence to them.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 77.

A man who reads might be willing to take the explanatory statement of the News in extenuation of these boastful teachings of President Young on the occasion referred to, were it not for the statement of the reason why they could do all the smart things stated that they could do, "because [for the reason] we have men right here that live in the light of the Lord, that have the Holy Priesthood, and hold the keys of the kingdom of God."

Honest-minded men are hardly willing to believe that God by his Holy Priesthood qualifies men to become adroit thieves, successful gamblers, smooth liars, and characters of like ilk. And when the language used by President Young is such that it bears the impress of teaching such an idea, there must be a better explanation offered than the one the News gives.

The "Josephites" have no disposition to misrepresent Pres. Brigham Young; he has long been dead, and it is wise to hope that the evil he did, if any, might die with him; but the conditions are such that the axiom, "The king is dead; long live the king," is forced upon attention. President Young was a man placed by fortuitous circumstances at the head of a people whom he led to the founding of a State; a man who shared a large part of the nation's attention in connection with the church organized in 1830. His teachings have been held to be but a continuation of work begun by Joseph Smith, the prophet; and hence have been given value and importance.

The Reorganized Church has held that President Young overstepped the bounds of correct teaching, thereby leading many astray. Such teaching as is given above is among the things held to be incorrect.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

It may be that we in this favored land, blessed by the things put forth by the sun and moon, and the earth so bountifully, do not prize our condition as we ought; but by comparison we may perhaps estimate it.

According to Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India, there are 61,000,000, of people in the famine-stricken portion of India. Of these 30,000,000, are at starvation's limit, and 5,000,000, are receiving governmental help.

If Great Britain would turn the revenues it is costing her to subdue the Boers and expend them in feeding her starving subjects in India, it would doubtless save thousands of lives; but it is not likely that she will do this under present conditions. In the meantime the poor people are helpless; their condition being made worse by the visitation of the plague.

Lady Curzon, formerly Miss Mary Leiter of Chicago, has cabled the Chicago committee, as follows:—

UMBALLA, April 8, 1900.

Your generous letter received. My husband and I will be rejoiced to receive any help that Chicago may be willing to give toward our terrible India Famine. The government is relieving nearly 5,000,000 persons and the worst has not yet come.

We guarantee that every dollar subscribed will go to the relief of genuine human suffering. MARY CURZON.

We have received from Mr. C. C. Bonney, the Chairman of the Chicago Relief Committee, the following, showing the situation in India, and asking that we as a people help in the relief needed:—

BOSTON, Mass., April 16.—The Rev. Rockwell Clancy, a missionary at Allahabad, who is visiting his brother in Medford, said last night:—

"The condition of famine-stricken India to-day is something perfectly awful to contemplate. I cannot tell anything about the number dying, but when I left Bombay last February there were some 60,000,000 people suffering and over 30,000,000 were in dire distress, and of these but 5,000,000 were receiving government aid.

"It is not the cities, but the country places, which are stricken, and when you know that it is mostly among the agricultural classes, and that 80 per cent of the population of India is made up of tillers of the soil, you may be able to grasp in some slight manner the extent of the suffering at the present time.

"When the famine set in the people began to sell everying they had that they might get a little grain for food. They took the doors from their houses and sold them; sold their furniture and farming utensils; and then, when they had no longer anything to sell, they sold their children. The boys don't sell well, and the traffic is largely in girls.

"I saw girls in one town just before I came away being sold for thirty cents apiece. They were bought up by Mohammedans. But they won't buy the boys, so when the parents can no longer support their children they abandon them and henceforth they must get on as best they can. These cast-offs congregate about the doors of the grain merchants' shops, and the only way the proprietors can get rid of them is to throw out handfuls of grain, scattering it wide.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The children pick and pick all day, and at night perhaps are rewarded by having collected a single handful."

Rev. Rockwell Clancy is the missionary whom Julian Hawthorne commended in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, during the famine of 1897, as one of the very ablest missionaries in India and a perfect specimen of American manhood.

CHICAGO, April 25, 1900.

To the Editor:—Inclosed we beg to hand you copies of news items in regard to the India famine. Similar items have been published in the Chicago papers and commented upon editorially. We would be glad to have you insert as much of the matter as you may be able.

It is our purpose to solicit from your people as much as they may be inclined to give to relieve this great distress.

Will you kindly act as our agent in this matter to receive such contributions and at the end of each week report to us and send the funds by check or post office order, to our treasurer, Mr. Keith?

In behalf of the distressed people of India, I am, Yours very respectfully,

C. C. BONNEY, Chairman.

Anyone who may desire to help the Chicago committee can do so by sending their contributions to the Editor of HERALD, who will forward to the Treasurer, E. G. Keith, 629 The Temple, Chicago; or if they prefer, they may send to Mr. Keith direct.

READ the letter in this issue signed, "A Gray-Haired Elder," and take note of the significance of it.

It is said that "To grow old gracefully is one of the hardest things to learn and to do." Latter Day Saints, however, should be able, if anyone is, to learn the difficult lesson.

A man who by earnest devotion to his work and unfailing steadfastness has won a place and honors in the Master's work can have no fear as to the final reception to be accorded to him. If he has outlived his strength of body and mind he should feel no spiritual disgrace at the filling his place by another at the will of the Master.

We welcome the phalanx of young workers. May the Lord give them greater increase.

BANISHED FROM HANOVER.

Spencer Clawson, son of Hon. Spencer Clawson, and Clarence Cannon, son of Angus M. Cannon, elders of the Utah Church, on a mission to Germany, have been ordered out of Hanover, as persons whose presence in that part of the Kaiser's realm is not grateful to the powers that be. At first but forty-eight hours were given them to leave, afterward two weeks were allowed. A stay after that involved a fine of from fifty to one hundred marks, or two weeks' imprisonment.

A third, Elder Burton, was also included in the order to "get out."

As in the case of those ordered away from Denmark, an appeal to the American Consul was of no avail.

Elders Clawson and Cannon have letters in Deseret News for April 7, giving an account of their arraignment and banishment because they were "Mormons."

The spirit of proscription for religious opinion's sake is not yet sufficiently exorcised to permit Utah's elders to compare notes with the Catholic and Lutheran faiths of Germany. Truly, great is the Diana of modern Protestantism and the rule of church and state. However, Messrs. Burton, Clawson, and Cannon are not the first who have faced fine and imprisonment for the sake of faith in the angel's message.

EXPEDITION TO SOUTH AMERICA.

We learn from Utah publications that a party of twenty-two, under the auspices of the "Brigham Young Academy," left Provo, Utah, April 17, 1900, on an exploring expedition to South America. We are glad that men who accept the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon will have opportunity to visit the country where many of the stirring events related therein transpired, and from their standpoint make deductions from what has been or may be brought to light.

The personnel of the party is as follows: President B. Cluff, Provo; Prof. W. M. Woolfe, Provo; Gordon S. Beckstead, South Jordan; Prof. J. B. Fairbanks, Ogden; W. S. Tolton, Warren Shepherd, Beaver; H. E. Giles, Jr., George Q. Cannon (son of John Q. Cannon), Salt Lake; Eugene Roberts, Provo; Masher Pack, Kamas; W. M. Hughes, Spanish Fork; A. C. Kienke, Nephi; Lafayette Rees, Wales; Christian Olsen, Ephraim; Heber Magleby, Parley Nelson, Monroe; Royal Woolley, Kanab; W. R. Adams, Joseph Adams, Parowan; B. F. Higgs, Jr., Chester Van Buren; Orangeville, and Soren Hansen, Castle Dale.

We wish this party success. Though seemingly insurmountable differences exist between us and the people with whom this party is connected, we shall watch their progress with interest, and consider their discoveries and conclusions with the same care that we have ever given to others upon the important subject of American antiquities.

THE vacancy in the apostolic Quorum of Twelve, of the Utah Church, caused by the death of F. D. Richards, was at the late session of their conference filled by the choosing of Reed Smoot, son of Bishop Abraham O. Smoot, of Provo, Utah. So states the Deseret News of April 9.

UNITY AMONG SAINTS.

A recent number of the Searchlight, published by the Church of Christ, commonly known as "Hedrickites," has an appeal for unity among those who believe in the Book of Mormon and the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph. The appeal says in part:—

"It is quite certain that a great and glorious work is ahead of some part, or perhaps all, of the believers in the restored gospel. If the work is to be performed by all, then it behooves the different fragments to get closer together and attain a condition in which God may use them. If the work is reserved for one or two of the fragments to accomplish, then those who desire to engage in the work of the Lord should put forth an effort to discover who are the favored ones, that they get in line and harmony with the chosen."

The Saints' Herald, the organ of the Reorganized Church, copies the entire article with this comment:—

"We are prepared to say with our brethren of the Church of Christ, 'Let us have peace.' We have been of that mind for a long time. We are quite willing, nay, anxious for peace."

But the Herald finds that each of the three divisions is possessed of certain elements of faith, doctrine, and practice, which it believes to be essential. They include a code of belief, a system of practice, and a claim to authority to administer, and as long as there is not a sufficient unity of belief, there can be no unity of effort. The Herald, however, is willing to "welcome the evangel that will bring to pass this unity, no matter whence he may come."

We refer to this as one of the encouraging signs of the times. When the need of unity is felt by the followers of the Nazarene, a great work is about to be accomplished.

A common ground to stand on is undoubtedly the first consideration, but this must not be one prepared by human wisdom, for the accommodation of ambition. It should be no compromise for the sake of gaining a point. The ground must be pointed out by the divine Master, and all must bow in humility to his will. Only so can a lasting union be consummated.

The Apostle's plea for union among the Corinthians is applicable to the present case. When he heard that there were divisions in that branch of the church, he besought the brethren, "by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing and that there be no divisions." He pointed out that there was no cause for contention, because no flesh has anything to glory in, in the presence of the Almighty, except "he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." There can be no strife about that. He that takes pleasure in divisions, the apostle declares, is yet "carnal," and unfit for the spiritual food that becomes a mature person. Having thus characterized the condition of "fragments," he points out the common ground on which all can unite. "For other foundation," he says, "can no man lay than that is laid." All that can be done is to build upon that foundation, and the day cometh when the value of that work shall be revealed. "If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss."

This gives a key to the present situation, as well as to the past. The foundation has been laid by the Lord himself, and it has been dedicated by the blood of as noble martyrs as ever received an imperishable crown of glory. It is for us to build on that foundation in the fear of the Lord and under the guidance of his Spirit. To the extent that this is done, there will be unity. To the extent that selfish, "carnal" motives inspire the work, there will be contention.

The key that was given to the prophet, when he was anxious to know the will of the Father, is still available: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God." If the subject of unity is studied with a prayerful heart, God will certainly point out the way and grant power to follow it until the desired goal is reached.

The foregoing is from the Deseret News for April 7, and is undoubtedly an expression of sentiment held by all genuine believers in and lovers of the angel's message and the mission of the Seer of Palmyra.

The difficulty in the way will likely be an agreement as to the "common ground;" such common understanding as to the scope of the apostle's words to the Corinthians; "that ye all speak the same thing and that there be no divisions."

Divisions now exist. How shall they be reconciled? What common denominator shall be used to bring the differing fragments into a unit as a whole?

We suggest the standards of faith, belief, and practice as found in the Bible, Holy Scriptures, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants as published by believers from 1835 to 1869 inclusive; and as stated in the declaration of belief published from the pen of Joseph Smith the Seer in 1842 and 1844.

A NEW BOOK ON COLORADO.

By the kindness of P. S. Eustis, General Passenger Agent of the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad, we are in possession of a new book on Colorado, just off the press, which is unusually interesting and artistic. It is on the subject of Colorado, fascinatingly written by James W. Steele, a descriptive writer of great force. The book is lavishly illustrated by engravings of a high order, and the printer's art has not been handicapped by an effort to save expense. To anyone interested in the grandeur of Colorado scenery and particularly to one contemplating a visit to the country described, the book will be indispensable. Copies can be had by sending a letter of request accompanied by six cents in postage stamps to Mr. Eustis, at his Chicago address, 209 Adams Street.

COLONEL BAKER'S FUNERAL.

The funeral of the late Col. Robert Hoapili Baker was held yesterday afternoon at four o'clock from Mililani Hall. The services were conducted by Gilbert J. Waller, according to the rites of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of which the deceased was a member. The body lay in state from two o'clock to four, and during this time many hundreds took a last look at the face of the departed. As an Hawaiian alii, descended from the line of Liloa, King of Hawaii, the deceased in his burial received royal Hawaiian honors. The coffin was draped under a purple velvet pall, on which were arranged the many decorations he had received during life. Large kahilis were placed at the head and foot of the coffin. Black clad kahili bearers waved kahilis over the coffin during the time the body lay in state. On the coffin were a number of rare Oo and mamo feather leis.

The pallbearers were E. K. Lilikalani, Samuel Nowlein, James H. Boyd, Samuel Parker, George C. Beckley, H. F. Bertleman, Robert Parker, and John D. Holt.

The Government Band and a detachment of police acted as escort. The interment was in Kawaiahao cemetery.—The Hawaiian Star, April 9.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

What is the teaching of the church in respect to universal salvation?

The church as a body has not passed upon the question of universal salvation. But the consensus of belief of the eldership is to this effect; that the books of the church warrant the belief that through the atonement of Christ all men will be resurrected, he having won the victory of Death, Hell, and the Grave, saving men from the consequences of original sin, and permitting them to answer upon their own responsibility for their own belief, words, and deeds.

The Book of Mormon clearly teaches that all will be resurrected; so does the Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants; but all are not raised to glory, honor, life, and power. Paul teaches the three glories in 1 Corinthians 15; Jesus, in Matthew 25; the Doctrine and Covenants in the vision.

There is the resurrection of the Saints, the honorable men of the earth, the heathen, and the wicked. The universal salvation attaches to the gospel scheme because of the intervention of Christ in man's favor; but does not mean, or imply that all are saved unto the fulness of glory, this remains to those who are obedient to the commands of Jesus.

Jude called it the "common salvation;" and Paul writing of the other calls it the "better resurrection."

Does the church think it right for an elder to teach universal baptism for the dead?

The church knows nothing of such a theory that we are aware of. It is not taught by any of the elders to our knowledge.

We suppose a man would have the right to state his opinion on the subject; but would not be entitled to teach such a theory as the faith of the church, for it is not.

Is it proper for an elder to preach and to give testimony as to his knowing his wife in the resurrection? Or, if so, in what sense do you think he is right to teach it?

A man may hold such view and state it as his opinion on the subject of the resurrection, and the life which is beyond.

Paul stated, "It doth not now appear what we shall be, but this we do know that when he appears we shall be like him." It is therefore a matter of some latitude of belief as to the conditions which shall obtain on the other side of the vail.

The church cannot suppress men's thoughts and opinions to the destroying their right to think and right to speak. Hence we must permit men the expression of their beliefs in proper times and places.

Is it sufficient ground for a charge of apostasy, or unchristianlike conduct, for a member to be averse to Sunday school work, and always talking against it and finding fault with the Quarterlies?

No, we think not. Such a person is, however, a disturber of the public peace of the church, if he thus exhibits his objection to Sunday school work at improper time and in improper places. His views are his own, and he may express them in proper time and place.

What shall we do with a member who insists on having his name taken from church record when he is not guilty of unchristianlike conduct, and still claims that he believes the doctrine is true?

The conference decided that such continued demand should be taken as evidence of apostasy, and the one so demanding name removed labored with and dealt with as provided. We think, however, it would be better to let the party go his way quietly and leave time and the Spirit to work a cure. We do not believe in compelling a man to commit a constructive crime. If he be dealt with at all, comply with the rule.

Is it right for a lay member to superintend or teach a Sunday school?

Yes; if the one so acting has the qualifications to superintend and teach.

Is it right for a lay member to call to order and open and close a prayer meeting when there is no minister present.

Yes; there is no reason why not.

CONFERENCE.

The conference which has just passed was one of great interest. Whether the work done shall be productive of good remains to be told by the passing of time.

It had been looked forward to in great anticipation by the most of those attending it, and doubtless many went from it disappointed. However, the philosophic Saint (and what Saint is not a philosopher?) will not be willing to concede that he was not prepared for the issue, be it good or ill. For each carried with him from conference the assurance that the consciousness that the motives which underlie human action were with the representatives assembled good, and no man wrought for himself alone, the desire to be found doing for the Master being the paramount incentive to thought and labor.

Much of the work done, though unpleasant at the time it was taking the attention of the body, will result in permanent good to the church; like some things bitter to the tase, it will leave a sense of sweetness on the palate at the last.

The preaching was of an educational nature characteristic of the men who taught, calculated to lead the thoughts to the better side of life and its issues; to create steadiness of mind in them who heard, and to show the unchangeable goodness of God, and give a better appreciation of the "law and the testimony."

Having been permitted to attend all the business sessions, we were struck with the unflagging attention of the conference membership, from those who were members by virtue of office to those who were delegates only by being chosen by branch and district. Many from the opening to the close showed an absorbed interest in every measure and topic presented and discussed, and we believe that those who voted did so with an unusually good understanding of the questions submitted for decision.

We call attention to the fact that the affairs of Graceland College are in the hands of a new Board of Trustees, who will act in the united capacities of the two boards of trustees and directors, heretofore existing. The men who were chosen as this new board are men of sterling character, and worthy of confidence, who have the interests of the college at heart, and will do all that can be done under the conditions which exist to bring success to the movement. We certainly ask for them that moral and financial support requisite to enable them to do what they were appointed to do.

A measure was set on foot during the session to raise the college debt by popular subscription, by securing the names of one thousand who will give $25.00 each. We learned that names to the amount of over $3,000.00 were at once secured. A list was printed and handed to many who will continue the effort at their homes. It is a feasible scheme and should meet with universal favor. There should be no hesitancy in pushing the matter to a success. Of course anyone may sign for more than one share of $25.00, —several did this three or four or more times over, and it is to be hoped there will be hundreds who will do the same. Two or more may, also, join in one share, thus bringing the matter home to the abilities of those who may be willing but not able to do more than a little. Give it a push, brethren! Don't let it fail!

The Board of Publication has also changed complexion, there being but two of the old members on the new board. Bishop Kelley is president of the Board, while Bro. John Smith, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, is business manager, and will look after the business part of the Herald Office with zeal and fidelity.

A larger number of missionaries than usual has been appointed, and from the spirited manner in which they take hold of the work, we gather that they fully intend an excellent year's fruitage shall follow their labor. May God give the increase, should be every man's prayer.

The aggregate of baptisms the last year is gratifying, and shows that the Lord still has a people scattered among the nations, waiting for the voice of the Good Shepherd, whose voice they know and whom they will follow. Strive that the next report of the Recorder will show a still greater increase.

While much is being said about the gathering and more or less anxiety felt about the conditions under which our work is being done, there is a quiet, steady ingathering into the "regions round about," by what we are fain to believe is a good, earnest, helpful class of Saints who will be able to be of service when greater demands are made upon the faithful than have hitherto been demanded. We do not hesitate to advise those who wish to get nearer to the center and who can do so without wasteful sacrifice to gather into the regions once occupied by the Saints, purchasing their lands and homes in honesty of purpose, and living as becomes honest men and women, much more Saints who look for a coming Lord and Redeemer.

In doing this adopt whatever shade of political faith may seem best to your judgment; but avoid the political wrangles, remembering that while there are good men and good citizens in all parties, there are also bad men, unscrupulous and ambitious in these parties, and that politicians as such are largely after the places of power and emolument in the interest of self, and all too frequently forget the good of the people in their greed.

It is our duty and business to preach the peaceable things of the church and the kingdom to come; which, if the principles thereof can but obtain will make men and women good citizens of the state, because they are good men and good women.

Zion in its best sense is the "pure in heart," in its applied sense it is the enrolled host of the members of the body of Christ, the church; but in a restricted sense it is the land of Zion, the place where the pure in heart may dwell if they will so to do. Whoever, then, proposes to move into Zion should do so with the full purpose to live a true, devoted life in Christ, to be carefully industrious, economical, living within their means, keeping out of debt to their enemies, or those not of the faith, because of the trouble possible to ensue in case of failure to pay; and to those in the faith, because of the trouble and scandal to both, in case of failure to pay, and for the sake of the peace that the man has who can in honesty say, "I owe no man anything but my good will."

Debt is a burden, an incubus, a canker that hurts the mind and spoils the peace of an honest man and should be avoided by all, irrespective of class, or difference in faith.

He who lives in Zion must conform to the laws of the land, for two reasons; one, for the sake of a peaceful and contented life among his fellow citizens; the other, that he may keep the commands of God free and untrammeled. "He that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land," and he that keeps the laws of the land may without question keep the law of God.

The conference was remarkably well attended. The room was too small. Not all who came could have access to the floor on which the sessions were held. By this we are admonished that there will be an effort made at the April session for 1901 to secure right ex officio for all of the lesser priesthood. Should this prevail it may be as well that the conference take the matter of a place to hold the yearly assembly in which a house large enough to hold all who may come, including all lay as well as official members may find place, and do away with the delegate system altogether, thus making all who might be present members of the assembly, entitled to voice and vote. We suggest that this be taken into consideration by those who may be chosen to attend the session for 1901.

APOLOGY.

The Deseret News for April 30 publishes a letter from Quincy Anderson, Ozark, Missouri, in which Mr. Anderson states:—

> I will say that I never authorized this elder friend of mine to let anyone else read this letter; neither did I authorize him to send it to the editors of the Saints' Herald to comment on.

This is in reference to the letter written by the editor of the Deseret News to Mr. Anderson which was published in the HERALD with comments.

Accepting the statement of Mr. Quincy Anderson showing that we were in error in using said letter, we hereby apologize to Mr. Anderson and the editor of the News for that error.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. E. F. Shupe wrote from Denver, Colorado, thus:—

> The weather for April has been the worst in the history of the country; rain and snow till there have been about eight inches of water, something unprecedented in the history of April for Colorado. The Platte River has almost reached the danger line, and it is still raining and snowing. No services at the church yesterday on account of the storm. This is the second Sunday this month that it has stormed the entire day, thus hindering church work. Our meetings at Lakewood are quite well attended and the people seem interested.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

"A decided sensation has been caused in Jerusalem by the introduction of the electric light into a new and flourishing flour mill lately started there. The building in which the light has been introduced is near to the supposed site of Calvary, and close to the Damascus gate. It need hardly be said that the Arabs and Jews are much puzzled to account for a light in a lamp in which there is no oil; and up to the present time, while gazing with wonder, have been keeping at a respectable distance."

"Dr. Hillis, the pastor of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, in a letter to the presbytery of Chicago, declares that he 'became convinced that the grounds of the old theological system had been destroyed, and that a new basis must be found.' After several years of mental doubt and distress, he says, 'I found a new basis in science, interpreted from the point of view of theistic evolution.'"

LATTER-DAY EVENTS.—NO. 2.

SERMON PREACHED BY PRESIDENT W. W. BLAIR, AT LAMONI, JANUARY 6, 1895.

The preacher said: By request of the president, I continue the subject that we had under consideration last Sabbath, of latter-day events in the light of prophecy. I don't expect to exhaust the subject, or anything like it, to-day, but to proceed with it as far as we can.

I read, first of all, some portions of Holy Scripture suggestive of the all-important fact that, God manifests beforehand, by the voice of his prophets and revelators, important events that are to transpire in respect to his people, and in respect to the nations and of things of heaven and of earth.

There is nothing, I apprehend, unless it should be the full, personal inspiration of the Holy Spirit, that goes so far to beget intelligent faith, and to confirm that faith, as the recorded revelations of God when supported by their fulfillment in subsequent events. This has ever been held, by eminent teachers, to be one of the very strongest evidences supportive of Christianity.

I read here a portion of the 41st chapter of Isaiah, commencing at the 21st verse, "Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob. Let them bring them forth, and shew us what shall happen: let them shew the former things what they be, that they may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come." God is here reasoning with Israel, as to the evil of trusting in idolatry, as to their trusting in teachers who are not divinely inspired. In verse 23 is a proper challenge; it has come down to our day, and we would do well to profit by it: "Shew all things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods." I read another verse or two in chapter 42, containing the same sentiment: "I am the Lord; that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images. Behold, the former things are come to pass [that is, what God had declared], and new things do I declare; before they spring forth I tell you of them." And so we might appeal to various other portions of scripture suggesting the foreknowledge of God.

You will find in the words of Jesus Christ where, in speaking in reference to his crucifixion, the period of his humiliation, Jesus foretold his disciples, repeatedly, that such an event as that would come, and he tells them of these things so that when they are come to pass then they might believe; it should be a means of confirmation, a source of strength, to establish and to confirm them in the divinity of the work intrusted to them. I read now a portion of the words of our Savior as recorded in the 21st chapter of Luke, and would respectfully suggest a careful reading of this chapter in the light of recorded history and of events transpiring in our own day. I have had occasion to do this in days that are past and gone, in seasons of great trial, in the midst of doubts, to see whether I had indeed placed my feet upon the everlasting Rock. I went into an examination of the word of God in connection with authentic history, and I found it a source of support of great value to me. I will commence at verse 24—(the preceding verses relating to events that would transpire with the disciples, and with the Jews, up to the time of the scattering of the Jews from the city of Jerusalem), and speaking of that time and the scattering of the Jews, he says: "And they [the Jews] shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, [how true that has proved to be], and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled." How remarkably, truly, this has had its fulfillment, first under the feet of the Romans, then of the Saracens, afterwards the Crusaders, then again under the feet of the Turks, where it remains to-day. But Jerusalem is passing rapidly out of this condition, and it is now essentially under the feet of the Jews, one of the most remarkable events that could occur in the nineteenth century to prove the divinity of Christ Jesus our Lord. Eighteen hundred years ago he made this prophecy, and its fulfillment is one of the most important, leading events now occurring. According to history, that land for eighteen centuries has been under the feet of Gentile nations, has been barren and waste in the eyes of all that have passed by, and God is now blessing it, and it is passing from its thraldom to Gentile power. It is prophetic, indeed, that the literal seed of Israel shall return from their captivity, but "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled."

We assume that what is now occurring in respect to Jerusalem and the Jewish world, is in itself an unfailing evidence that we are living in the time when "the times of the Gentiles" are being "fulfilled." Jesus said then, "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity: the sea and the waves roaring." These conditions have begun to obtain in this nineteenth century,—signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, of great importance, have been seen, and are attracting the attention of the civilized, and enlightened world, filling the mind of all with awe and astonishment. Not only would signs be seen in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, but upon earth would be "distress of nations with perplexity." Turn whithersoever you will, in the land of America, North, South, or Central, or whether you turn to Europe, to Asia, to Africa, or the islands of the sea, and you see that this prophecy of Jesus Christ is having its literal fulfillment, namely, "upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity."

It is said by the ablest minds of to-day that all Europe, large portions of Asia, and portions of Africa, are in such a state of ferment, that at any moment the most populous parts of earth will be involved in war and commotion, and that of such a sanguinary character that it will change the entire political geography of the world,—one of the most dreadful periods of time the world has ever known. And when I state that now, in the western part of Asia, and in Europe and northern Africa, there are more than twelve millions of men under arms, and that more than twenty-four millions, could speedily be summoned you can comprehend, to some degree, the dreadful situation of the world as it exists to-day. And it is by reason of this formidable armament that there are such perplexities existing in the land. Consider for a moment the amount of labor and of wealth it takes to sustain this wonderful military force, and you discover one of the means of bringing about this state of perplexity.

With regard to the condition of the world, the people, largely, instead of being patriotic and desiring to benefit the entire race are looking to their own honor, their own gain, little respect to their neighbor, and this adds to the perplexing conditions of to-day.

Again the Master says, "The sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Of these important events predicted by our Savior, we have not time now to speak at length. Suffice it to say that, you have books and papers published by the church which will furnish you statistics concerning earthquakes abounding by sea and by land, of tidal waves upon the sea, the storms and tempests sweeping over the ocean, and these conditions are evidences that we are living in the latter days. "Why," says one, "there have always been storms at sea—the sea and the waves roaring." Yes; but the Master called attention to the fact that these events would be more prominent in the last days, and be signs of the near approach of his coming. These occurrences have been more frequent and notable since 1860 than ever before.

Again: "Men's hearts failing them for fear of that which is coming on the earth." Probably no time since man has been upon our planet has the race been more actuated by fear in respect to future conditions of the world than in the times in which we are now living. This in itself is a remarkable evidence of the fulfillment of the prophecy of the Savior; we see it having its accomplishment in our our own times. Again the Master says, "The powers of heaven shall be shaken." Mark you, after this, "then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory;" when we see these events transpire, we may know that the coming of the Master is nigh at hand—not five hundred, nor a hundred years off, but that it is near at hand. For "the Lord Jesus shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." These are latter-day events, and hence it is that all the Saints nowadays are certainly Latter Day Saints.

I read you another passage but can only give you some of the outlines,—cannot enter into any lengthy discussion on this important point. Upon last Sabbath I made brief mention of the late rapid increase of crime, its universality, and made a few comments upon it. We have not time to-day to give you very lengthy statistics upon it, but to invite your attention to it. I have here a statement Prof. Andrew D. White. He says crime is greatly on the increase. He is giving his attention to these matters, looking up statistics of the past, and of the present. He discovers that crime is rapidly moving in power, iniquity is sweeping out like a great flood. In 1892 Prof. Geo. P. Upham, of the Chicago Tribune said that murder, suicide, lynching, and everything of that kind, in the United States alone, in ten years from 1882 to 1892 had increased "more than four hundred per cent." President Brinkerhoff in his address last year before the National Prison Congress, said, "The tide of criminality is growing stronger; it is rising with a continuing swell." All this is remarkable, and very notable from the fact that the claim has been put forth for more than half a century, and perhaps for a full century, that the world was coming into vastly better conditions than it ever had been before, and that by the means of Bible and tract societies, and various other agencies the civilized, and even heathen world will become converted, and in this way the reign of Christ would be ushered in. But the Bible does not teach us that this will be; it teaches on the other hand, in speaking of the latter days that "iniquity will abound," and that just prior to Christ's second advent, as in Matthew 24: 12, etc. The same is set forth in the Book of Mormon, and in the Doctrine and Covenants, that iniquity prior to the coming of Jesus Christ will abound. One cause for its abounding in these last days, "the time of the end," is the increase of human knowledge and increased opportunities by which to perpetrate crime, — these are greater than in preceding centuries. Crime in the United States, from 1882 to 1892, increased as we have seen more than four hundred per cent. This is simply dreadful! It disappoints the hope, it refutes the claims and the teachings of the religious world for the last two centuries at least, while it confirms and establishes the teachings of the Latter Day Saints. For, from the very first, when the angel first appeared to the Seer in 1827, and even before that, the announcement was made that spiritual darkness and sin would sweep out upon the world; there would be a great increase of abominations among the sons of men, nevertheless the gospel of Jesus Christ would go forth conquering and to conquer, to prepare a people who would be prepared for his coming. This confirms the teaching of the Latter Day Saints from the very first, and, as we have said, refutes the claims made by religious teachers and ministers for the last two centuries at least. In the Doctrine and Covenants, section 45, paragraph 4, is a statement with regard to the rapid increase of iniquity in these latter days, and in the book are many more of the same kind.

I introduce to you now another class of evidences to demonstrate the fact that we are living in the latter days. The Bible clearly informs us in the Revelation of St. John, and notably in the 16th chapter, 13th and 14th verses, that in the latter days, at a certain time, "three unclean spirits like frogs" would "come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet;" and the revelator declares that

> They are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

The mouth is that which speaks; that which receives; that which communicates. I have not time to enter into an examination of this scripture in all its bearings, but simply to tell you what the prophecy declares, that in the latter times, —prior to the overthrow of "Mystery Babylon,"—that three unclean spirits would go out of the mouth of the dragon (Pagan Rome), out of the mouth of the beast (Papal Rome), and out of the mouth of the false prophet (Mohammedanism); and I suggest right here, that all these organizations have been and are largely actuated by demon spirits, spirits that are not of God. In the morning of time, in the garden of Eden, Satanic power was manifested to mother Eve and influenced her to disobey the commandment of God. In holy writ we see how nations were finally overthrown by this same power, and we are told in the 18th chapter of Deuteronomy, that God commanded that Israel should not have any necromancers among them, or a wizard, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or enchanters, or a witch, or a user of divination, or anything of the like, for, the Lord says, "because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them [the Canaanites] out from before thee." These seemed to be the crowning sins, for by reason of them they forgot God. When they submitted to these workings of Satanic spirits, they surrendered their personal agency in these matters, and they were liable to be led wherever these spirits would lead them, being subject to the seductive, perverse influence of spirits that were not of God. Ahab, king of Israel, was led to degradation and ruin by evil spirits. They were permitted to enter into his "four hundred" prophets, and they prophesied to him a lie. He led his army to battle against Ramoth Gilead, being influenced by what these prophets said, and was slain. His death was foretold by Micaiah, a prophet of God, who, when interrogated by the king as to his going up to the battle, prophesied and said, "Behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil concerning thee."—1 Kings 22:23. This one prophet stood there in the presence of the king, his life in his hand, and boldly, faithfully predicted what would come to pass, and it transpired as he said.

We don't say it in hurtful reference to any person, or any party, that we recognize modern spiritualism as being in a preëminent sense this deceptive power that would go forth from these three classes of spirits proceeding in these days "out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet." Suffice it to say that much of my information on that point came from more than human source, and that it began to be given me many years ago. Spiritualism had its rise in 1848 (in its extraordinary and widespread manifestations), in the State of New York, in the month of March. And notice, if you please, that it was but a few years after the gospel had been restored, and was being promulgated to the sons of men. It was only a few years after God had inspired Joseph the Seer to lay the foundation of this wonderful work, wherein we rejoice, that these marvelous manifestations of spiritualistic power were exhibited, (satanic craft and power follow close upon the work of God,) and we are told that in about 1882 the Spiritualists among the civilized nations numbered more than thirty millions. One of the leading lights of that order, a man of influence, a great writer, a very prominent man, Robert Dale Owen, says it was not their work to organize societies, or anything of that kind; but that the genius of the work of Spiritualism was one of reform, a work of enlightenment, as he phrases it. It has gathered among its members some of the most prominent minds of America. Judge Edmunds, of New York, did much in the advocacy and defense of Spiritualism. So did Professor Hare. In Great Britain, we find that many of the leading minds there embraced it. Professor Wm. Cookes, one of the most learned scientists of his time embraced it, advocated and defended it. Spiritualist writers and lecturers usually endeavor to establish it as being in harmony with primitive Christianity. In Great Britain, Mr. Owen says, Spiritualism had its greatest success with the gentry, and the nobility. It also obtained the attention and favor of the crowned heads of the world. It entered the Cabinet at Washington as early as in 1864-5-6. I was laboring in Pennsylvania at the time. Some of the leading men of Spiritualism were consulted as mediums with respect to our national affairs. It has accomplished its greatest work by its insidious movements in the churches, and in the departments of government. It is still going to the crowned heads of Europe. The prophecy declares that these "three unclean spirits" would go forth "unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world." It was to be a universal work. Its closing work was to occur just prior to the second advent of Jesus Christ our Lord. We have proof that its work is fulfilled in our own times, hence these times are the ones predicted—these are the latter days.

We trace the manifestations of spiritualistic power from the morn of creation to the Caananitish nations, to the days of the kings of Israel, and now we come to the days of Jesus of Nazareth, and there it was manifested in a person possessed of a power so that he could not be bound even with chains. When Jesus passed near the demon spirit said to him, "We know who thou art, thou Son of God; hast thou come to torment us before the time?" That spirit had knowledge that the Jewish world with all their enlightenment did not possess,—they did not know Jesus the Son of God. The tabernacle of that poor man was possessed with Satanic power—a demon spirit—and Jesus commanded it to come out of him, and the man was found clothed and in his right mind.

At Philippi Spiritualistic work manifested itself thus:—

> And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her master much gain by soothsaying: the same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation. And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the Spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.—Acts 16: 16, 17, 18.

Paul and Silas suffered it until they saw that the church was likely to be compromised by it, then Paul turned and said to the spirit, "I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her." And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains were gone, they caused the arrest of the disciples, and they being placed in the Philippian jail, the Lord made use of the opportunity, for when they were in prison and their feet in the stocks, they prayed and sang praises to God, and by and by an earthquake took place, they were released, the jailor took them to his house, and a wonderful work of conversion came from it. I mention these instances to show that these manifestations of satanic power had away back in the days of the Canaanites, were manifest also among the children of Israel, and in the days of the Savior, and in the time of the apostles. This power was also manifested in the days of Justin Martyr, and of the early Christians. By virtue of the power that the church had, in the name of Jesus Christ they cast out those evil spirits by their prayer and faith. These evil spirits were to be made manifest in the latter days. I read the 16th chapter of Revelation:—

> And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshiped his image. And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea. And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. [As when Moses delivered the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt.] And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus. For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, [notice the fact that, in that period when this prophecy should have its accomplishment, the people of God would be known as "Saints," and there would be "prophets," and that their blood should be shed—some of them—bear it in mind,] and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy. And I heard another [angel who came] out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments. And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire. And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory. And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds. [Whoever will study the history of modern Rome, and especially since 1870, will conclude that a vial has been poured out upon the seat of the beast.] And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared. [That was to be preceded by the killing of saints and prophets, in the order of the prophecy.] And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs [perhaps from their being so numerous] come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. [Note what follows.] Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame. —Rev. 16: 1-15.

In regard to the operation of these evil spirits, there are many ways by which they work miracles to deceive mankind. One is by electro-magnetism. By this means, this natural force, skilled men can operate on certain temperaments, gain control over them, and influence them, so far as can be possible, to do all that the operater wills them to do. The question, Is it possible that these intelligent demon spirits, known as the "spirits of devils," can be brought into union with people through electro-magnetic force and inspire them to do—so far as in the power of human to do—wonderful miracles and deceive the people? A man in Kansas has been recently convicted of murder in the first degree because he used hypnotic power over a man and inspired him to go and kill his neighbor. A similar case is being tried in Minneapolis, where it is claimed Hayward hypnotized Blitz and influenced him to kill Miss Ging. In a large hall in Washington I saw a number of individuals brought upon the platform by Prof. Carpenter, a hypnotic operator, who in five or ten minutes had them under hypnotic control, and they would do whatever he willed them to do. At one time they were professedly stealing peaches. He bade them be careful and not make any noise and disturb the old farmer and his dog. In an unguarded moment he said, "Look out! the old man's coming! there comes the dog!" One of them started, leaped and climbed up the window casing, clinging to the framework, went up and up and never stopped until he perched on the top of the window cornice watching for the dog. How the man ever got there was a wonder to me. They had to get a ladder to get him down. Here is a manifestation of hypnotic, mesmeric, or magnetic control over the minds and persons of individuals. Now if skillful men—embodied spirits—can do all that, it is no wonder that "spirits of devils"—unembodied spirits—can do all that, and more, and cause the evils mentioned in history concerning their work, and what is predicted of them in the latter days; and I state it as a possible, probable fact that this satanic work is one of the leading causes of the present rapid increase of crime. It is caused by satanic power; it is influenced by satanic spirits that have gone forth to all nations, and even to the kings of the earth. These are important matters. The prophet predicted that such an event would transpire, and that it would be just before Christ Jesus should "come as a thief." We are living in the very time when this flood of satanic power is sweeping out upon the nations; it is the same power that was manifested in the garden of Eden, also in the days of the Caananites, in the days of Jesus of Nazareth, in the days of the Apostle Paul and other Christian ministers of his time. God has declared by his prophets that in the last days Satan would "come down among men, having great wrath, because he knows he hath but a short time." Go to the Book of Covenants, also to the Book of Mormon, and there it is plainly revealed, and the time identified, when many evil spirits would go forth in great power to the world.

I shall now have to say as I did last Sunday, We have only got into the merits of the case, but will have to quit. Sometime hereafter I may take up some other prophecies pertaining to the latter days. Latter Day Saints should be posted with regard to them. I can only say in conclusion, that prophecy clearly indicates the overthrow of spiritual Babylon. The same year in which spiritualism was manifested in the United States, namely 1848, all Europe was politically convulsed, the effects of which are seen to-day. Spiritualism soon spread throughout all Europe. The hearts of the inhabitants there were touched by the insidious enemy of the race of mankind. The result was seen in its great turmoil. Spiritualism has affected the world in a religious, political, and social way ever since.

The Bible says in effect, that in the latter times, prior to the coming of Jesus Christ, there would come the overthrow of kingcraft. How true the prophecy! And again, that priestcraft would be overthrown; there would be greater liberty, on the part of the people, to live and think and act for themselves. There were times when mankind must think along in the same grooves with the preacher; you must talk in express harmony with the priest; but, thank God, that time has passed away. Since the opening of this latter-day dispensation the fetters have been stricken off; mankind are thinking for themselves and act for themselves. Then in regard to human slavery, the nations of the world, with one or two exceptions, looked upon it, until of late years, with favor; but now they denounce it as a horrible institution and rejoice that it is passing away. The shackles of the slave have fallen at his feet! Liberty is on the march! Freedom is in the ascendancy. In the Bible we find prophecies concerning whirlwinds that should go forth in the latter days; one in particular is in Jeremiah, 23: 19, 20, where it is said:—

Behold, a whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked. The anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have executed, until he have performed the thoughts of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly.

There has never been, in all the history of the past, before this century, such frequent terrible tempests, cyclones, and tornadoes, causing such destruction of life and property. The people are living in continual fear and dread of these things. This is true of all parts of the world. None are exempt from them. The first great cyclone of these latter days had its start in Jones County, Iowa, in June, 1860, and these whirlwinds have swept out to all the world. The Master said that before his second advent "the powers of heaven shall be shaken." These are the electro magnetic powers pervading the atmosphere. These powers of heaven are being shaken; they are being greatly disturbed in accordance with the prediction.

Again, the Bible reveals that angels will minister unto men in the latter days. The Bible reveals that prophets will be restored in the latter days. The Bible reveals that revelations from God to man will be had in these days, and that the kingdom of God will be organized as foretold by Daniel 2: 44. The Bible reveals all these leading latter-day events, and more. We are living in the times when these things are transpiring. It is beyond the possibility of reasonable question that these are the last days. God bless you and inspire your hearts to think of these things, and be prepared to make the sacrifice that our heavenly Father requires, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

THE JAREDITE, OR COLHUAS ERA.

According to the myths the Colhuas and Chichimecs were the first people in Central America and Mexico. According to the Book of Mormon it was the Jaredites divided into two factions. (See Ether 1: 1; 3: 7; 4: 1; 6: 4.)

The Colhuas era terminated, it is said, about nine or ten centuries B. C. The Jaredite era, according to the Book of Mormon, ended about 600 B. C.

The seven families in the myths and the Jaredite colony came from the tower of Babel; both were directed by Providence, and both located in Central America. The Colhuas were succeeded by the Mayas, and the Jaredites were succeeded by the Nephites. The Mayas came from the northern part of South America, according to Le Plongeon's reading of the Troano and his serpent chart; and the Nephites moved up into the north country (Desolation) from the land of Zarahemla (northern part of South America) before the Christian era.

(Compare Alma 13:12 with 21:8, 9; 23:9; 30:2.)

The "land northward" was the country which the Jaredites occupied. (See Omni 1:10; Alma 21:9.) Moroni called the Jaredite country "this north country." (See Ether 1:1.)

"This north country," or the "land northward," or the "land of Desolation," always commenced at the "neck," or at the "pass," or "narrow passage." (See Alma 13:11; 22:5; Mormon 1:6.)

The Nephites sometimes divided America into but two lands; namely, the "land northward" and the "land southward." This Mormon does in Mormon 1:6; but then these two great countries were divided up into other lands or states, and ruled over by local judges, or kings, or chiefs, something like a governor of a State.

Now the distance from sea to sea, where the Jaredite country commenced at the south end, was only a day and a half's journey for a Nephite. "A Nephite" was one person. The local land which joined Desolation at this narrow place was Bountiful. Bountiful, in the later Nephite history, occupied the "neck," and was a local land or state, and lay between the land Desolation and the land of Zarahemla. In this land Bountiful was a very narrow place "from the west sea, even unto the east; it being a day's journey for a Nephite, on the line which they had fortified and stationed their armies to defend their north country."—Helaman 2:8.

The Jaredite country then must have commenced at or near the line between Costa Rica and Columbia.

They built a great city by the narrow neck of land, by the place where the sea divides the land. And they did preserve the land southward for a wilderness, to get game. And the whole face of the land northward was covered with inhabitants.—Ether 4:7.

Thus we see that the man who made the Book of Mormon was on the lookout again. In fact he is never caught asleep, unlike the Roman guard, who took a short nap, and while doing so, a few timid and weak, downcast disciples rolled away the stone, broke the Roman seal, and ran off with the dead body of Jesus, and left the guard still sleeping.

The man who wrote the Book of Mormon must have been wide awake, up to date; no back number will do. He had one eye on the myths, the other on the substructure of ruins that lay hidden in the dense forests of Central America. He could see through the forests, the underbrush too. He could see that the ruins "stood upon older," "much older foundations." He could see that "it is as impossible to attribute them all to the same people as to believe they were all built at the same epoch."

The author of "Doctrines and Dogmas" says that it was Oliver Cowdery who was in the "woods" with Joseph Smith. Were they down in Central America, in these "tropical forests," looking at the ruins which stood upon the older, "much older foundations," and there reach the conclusion that "it is as impossible to attribute them all to the same people as to believe they were all built at the same epoch," eh?

If the Book of Mormon is true, then the authority of the Mormon Church is all right. But if it is false, then Mormonism may justly be branded as the most stupendous fraud of the ages, and its advocates are left without even the shadow of truth upon which to base their claim to divine authority.—Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, p. 26.

Again he says:—

The Spalding story is a failure. Do not attempt to rely upon it—it will let you down.—Ibid., p. 25.

Glad of it; we won't have to thrash that old straw any more!

"If the book is true." Well, why not put the "book" on trial, instead of Elder Jason W. Briggs et al.? What if Elder Briggs did repudiate his own revelation? Peter said that Jesus was the Christ; but when conditions changed he didn't even know Jesus at all! What if Julian, the Roman Emperor, did go back to his idols? Did that prove Christianity either true or false? What if Arius of Alexandria and Brigham Young of Salt Lake did teach that Jesus was the natural son of Joseph? They could not measure the power of an infinite God.

How cunning the author of the Book of Mormon is! He locates the Jaredites in Central America and northward to our great lakes; and then he has the Nephites to reoccupy the Jared country, thus rebuilding their dilapidated structures. (Compare Book of Nephi 3:2 and Book of Nephi son of Nephi 1:3 with the antiquities above quoted.) Thus we have another witness—archæology—which comes along nearly a half century after the book is published, bearing witness to the biggest fraud of the ages! How does it come that a very bad man can have so many disinterested persons to bear witness to his veracity? We showed before that both legendary and linguistic science confirmed the Book of Mormon story in a very remarkable way; and now archæology comes and joins hands with other sciences confirming the "strange" story of the ancient nation.

Is this all accidental harmony again? Are we willing to let archæology go on the witness stand in this case and testify to the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth? How it "whispers from the dust" that the antiquities of Central America are older than those of Mexico or Peru! How it whispers again that these cities were rebuilt by another people, thus confirming the "fraud" on these two main points!

BOOK OF MORMON DOCTRINES.

We will now turn to another line of evidences quite different from those above noticed, and in doing so we are met with the query, Could such a people as the book describes have lived and taught such doctrines on the American continent? Is God the Father of all, or only the few people that we read about in the Bible? "Of a truth," said Peter, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." Is it so that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation"? If so, all stand in the same relationship to God, and may obtain his favors, because "he be not far from every one of us."

THE RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.

Nephi, like Job, knew that his redeemer lived; for, said he, "I have seen him." (2 Nephi 8:2.) Nephi taught the doctrine of the "fall," and an "infinite atonement," and the resurrection of the body." (2 Nephi 6:2; 1:6; 6:6.)

Mr. Brinton says:—

The traveler on our western prairies often notices the buffalo skulls, countless numbers of which bleach on those vast plains, arranged in circles and symmetrical piles by the careful hands of the native hunters. The explanation they offer for this custom gives the key to the whole theory and practice of preserving the osseous relics of the dead, as well human as brute. They say that "the bones contain the spirits of the slain animals, and that some time in the future they will rise from the earth, re-clothe themselves with flesh, and stock the prairies anew."

This explanation, which comes to us from indisputable authority, sets forth in its true light the belief of the red race in a resurrection. It is not possible to trace it out in the subtleties with which theologians have surrounded as a dogma. The very attempt would be absurd. They never occurred to the Indian. He thought that the soul now enjoying the delights of the happy hunting grounds would some time return to the bones, take on flesh, and live again.

Such is precisely the much discussed statement that Garcilasso de la Vega says he often heard from the native Peruvians. He adds that so careful were they lest any of the body should be lost that they preserved even the parings of their nails and clippings of the hair. In contradiction to this the writer Acosta has been quoted, who says that the Peruvians embalmed their dead because they "had no knowledge that the bodies should rise with the soul." But, rightly understood, this is a confirmation of La Vega's account. Acosta means that the Christian doctrine of the body rising from the dust being unknown to the Peruvians (which is perfectly true), they preserved the body just as it was, so that the soul when it returned to earth, as all expected, might not be at a loss for a house of flesh.—Myths of the New World, pp. 301, 302.

Mr. Prescott says:—

On the decease of an Inca, his palaces were abandoned; all his treasures, except what were employed in his obsequies, his furniture and apparel, were suffered to remain as he left them, and his mansions, save one, were closed up for ever. The new sovereign was to provide himself with every thing new for his royal state. The reason of this was the popular belief, that the soul of the departed monarch would return after a time to reanimate his body on earth; and they wished he should find every thing to which he had been used in life prepared for his reception.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 1, p. 46.

Their ideas in respect to a future state of being deserve more attention. They admitted the existence of the soul hereafter, and connected with this a belief in the resurrection of the body. They assigned two distinct places for the residence of the good and of the wicked, the latter of which they fixed in the centre of the earth. The good they supposed were to pass a luxurious life of tranquillity and ease, which comprehended their highest notions of happiness. The wicked were to expiate their crimes by ages of wearisome labor. They associated with these ideas a belief in an evil principle or spirit, bearing the name of Cupay, whom they did not attempt to propitiate by sacrifices, and who seems to have been only a shadowy personification of sin, that exercised little influence over their conduct. It was this belief in the resurrection of the body, which led them to preserve the body with so much solicitude.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 3, p. 84.

Mr. Josiah Priest says:—

A cross made of fine marble, beautifully polished, about three feet high, and three fingers in width and thickness, was found in an Indian temple. This, it appears, was kept as sacred, in a palace of one of the Incas, and held in great veneration by the natives of South America. When the Spaniards conquered that country they enriched this cross with gold jewels, and placed it in the cathedral of Cuzco. But how came this emblem of Christianity in America? — American Antiquities, p. 273.

Yes; "how came this emblem of Christianity in America"? that is what the writer is trying to find out.

Mr. Brinton says:—

It is true that a writer whose personal veracity is above all doubt, Mr. Adam Hodgson, relates an ancient tradition of the Choctaws, to the effect that the present world will be consumed by a general conflagration, after which it will be reformed pleasanter than it now is, and that then the spirits of the dead will return to the bones in the bone mounds, flesh will knit together their loose joints, and they shall again inhabit their ancient territory.—Myths of the New World, p. 302.

The Eskimos have a similar myth. They say:—

Then will He above blow once on the bones of the men and twice on those of the women, whereupon they will at once start into life, and lead thereafter a joyous existence.—Ibid., p. 303.

This is to take place when the earth is purified. (See Tales and Traditions of the Eskimo, p. 32, and the Central Eskimo, pp. 588, 589.)

The following is the form of a Peruvian prayer, as given by De Ore, a native of Peru, who held the position of Professor of Theology in Cuzco in the latter half of the sixteenth century:—

O Pachacamac, thou who hast existed from the beginning and shalt exist unto the end, powerful and pitiful; who createdst man by saying, let man be; who defendest us from evil and preservest our life and health; art thou in the sky or in the earth, in the clouds or in the depths? Hear the voice of him who implores thee, and grant him his petitions. Give us life everlasting, preserve us, and accept this our sacrifice.—See Myths, etc., p. 341.

WATER BAPTISM.

At appointed seasons the Tupi priests [of Brazil] assembled the people, filled large jars with water, spake certain words of power over them, and dipping in palm branches sprinkled their hearers. In the elaborate ritual of the Mayan priests the aspergillum, with which to asperge the sacred objects and the votaries, was an indespensable adjunct. The sacred fluid should be the dew gathered at dawn from the leaves, or that which flowed from a well of which no woman had ever tasted.

The use of such "holy water" astonished the Romanist missionaries, and they at once detected Satan parodying the Scriptures. But their astonishment rose to horror when they discovered among various nations a rite of baptism of appalling similarity to their own, connected with the imposing of a name, done avowedly for the purpose of freeing from inherent sin, believed to produce a regeneration of the spiritual nature, nay, in more than one instance called by an indigenous word signifying "to be born again."

Such a rite was of immemorial antiquity among the Cherokees, Aztecs, Mayas, and Peruvians.—Myths of the New World pp. 147, 148.

When an ancient Peruvian had laid bare his guilt by confession, he bathed himself in a neighboring river and repeated this formula: "O thou River, receive the sins I have this day confessed unto the Sun, carry them down to the sea, and let them never more appear." . . .

The order of baptism among the Aztecs commenced, "O child, receive the water of the Lord of the world, which is our life; it is to wash and to purify; may these drops remove the sin which was given to thee before the creation of the world, since all of us are under its power;" and concluded, "Now he liveth anew and is born anew, now is he purified and cleansed, now our mother the Water again bringeth him into the world." . . .

In Peru the child was immersed in the fluid, the priest exorcised the evil and bade it enter the water, which was then buried in the ground. In either country sprinkling could take the place of immersion.—Ibid., pp. 149, 150.

If we formulize these feelings we have at once the doctrine of "original sin" and that of "spiritual regeneration."

At the festival of Raymi at Cuzco and other places in Peru, the Virgins of the Sun would prepare "a fine bread or cake" from "maize flour," a fermented liquor of the country being prepared for the occasion, which was distributed among the people at the feast.

In the distribution of bread and wine at this high festival, the orthodox Spaniards, who first came into the country, saw a striking resemblance to the Christian communion; as in the practice of confession and penance, which, in a most irregular form, indeed, seems to have been used by the Peruvians, they discerned a coincidence with another of the sacraments of the Church. The good fathers were fond of tracing such coincidences, which they considered as the contrivance of Satan, who thus endeavored to delude his victims by counterfeiting the blessed rites of Christianity. — Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 3, pp. 96, 97.

What does this all mean? A future life in two states; "one for the good," and "one for the bad." The "resurrection of the body," "original sin," "spiritual regeneration," "born again," "water baptism," and the "Lord's communion" of "bread and wine." The Roman priests could see nothing in all of this but "the contrivance of Satan."

Prescott says:—

Cieza de Leon, not content with many marvelous accounts of the influence and real apparition of Satan in the Indian ceremonies, has garnished his volume with numerous wood-cuts representing the Prince of Evil in bodily presence with the usual accompaniments of tail, claws, etc., as if to reinforce the homilies in his text! The Peruvian saw in his idol a god. His Christian conqueror saw in it the Devil. One may be puzzled to decide which of the two might lay claim to the grossest superstition.—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 3, p. 97, note 35.

Some of the Roman priests who first visited Mexico and Central America tried to account for the Christian doctrines there on the theory that St. Thomas had crossed over from India to this continent on his mission work, while others were like De Leon, who could see nothing but a bogus Christianity from the Devil to destroy their souls!

Mr. Brinton has another way of explaining these things:—

Had the missionaries remembered that it [water baptism] was practiced in Asia with all these meanings [regeneration, etc.] long before it was chosen as the sign of the new covenant, they need have invoked neither Satan nor St. Thomas to explain its presence in America.—Myths of the New World, p. 148.

So that we can take our choice and select the explanation for the appearance of these Christian doctrines in America that suits our fancy.

But will Mr. Brinton tell us when and where baptism "was chosen as the sign of the new covenant"? Jesus said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." I understand by this that the gospel covenant was not made at Jerusalem, nor at Rome; it has no human pedigree, hence we cannot tell just when baptism "was chosen" as the sign of the new covenant. We read that Jesus was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. If the "Lamb" is that old, don't we see that the plan of redemption is that old too? because baptism is a part of that divine plan. (See Hebrews 6: 2.)

It is true that heathen nations, as Mr. Brinton says, taught baptism from the very remotest times. It was to them a new birth, spiritual regeneration. Does Mr. Brinton mean to say that after the heathen had found out what would be a good symbol for the new birth that Christ and the church adopted it as a suitable "sign of the new covenant"?

Mr. Ingersoll says that "the Eucharist, the most solemn rite of the church, is older than the church,"—how old is the church?—thus making the doctrine older than Christianity, and Jesus as a repeater of heathen philosophy.

How came the heathen to find out that the souls would return to the dead mummies in Peru? How came they to teach that the souls would return to the bones in the bone mounds, and that they would live again? We can see that that would be good Christian doctrine if it was only in the Bible; but being found with the poor heathen, we detect "Satan parodying the Scriptures;" "a contrivance;" "counterfeiting the blessed rites of Christianity."

Is it so that Christ has the keys of death and the grave, and all are to be made alive in him? Thus the hope of immortality centers in him. Without him we are prisoners without hope; death would retain its sting and the grave its victory. But the hope of the red race took comfort in the belief that the bones would live again—they would be ransomed from the land of the enemy. Death to them was not "an eternal sleep."

If the doctrine of the resurrection is "Christian," how came the red race to anticipate it? Could they find that out of themselves? Ah; these things confirm their myths, in which they claim that their ancestors in Peru had a "divine original" for their empire and religious system. Their laws all rested on a "divine sanction."—Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap, 3, p. 83.

Cannot we see something divine in all of this? We would if these evidences were found in a Bible country; but found so far from home, our astonishment drifts to horror, that Satan would be so mean as to teach these people Christianity "to destroy their souls."

Many of the great gods of the race, as Quetzalcoatl, Manibozho, Viracocha, and Ioskeha, were said to have been born of a virgin. Even among the low Indians of Paraguay the early missionaries were startled to find this tradition of the maiden mother of the god, so similar to that which they had come to tell.—Myths of the New World, p.172.

Here we are again; their great culture-gods born of a virgin. Isn't that what we Christians say, namely, that Christ was born of a virgin?

Quetzalcoatl was the Toltec god, Viracocha was a Peruvian god, Manibozho was the Algonkin god, and Ioskeha was the god of the Iroquois. Thus we see this myth of a god born of a virgin mother believed in from our northern lakes to Paraguay. Is this all accidental harmony with the Bible teaching, or had Satan been at work again?

The author of the Book of Mormon relates a vision in which Nephi beheld the virgin of Nazareth, the mother of the Son of God, so that here again the myths confirm "the biggest fraud of the ages."

Letter Department.

April 27, 1900.

Editors Herald:—We read with interest the letter of our California brother, of a few days ago, wherein he suggested the possibility of undue praise being given the young men of the church, at the same time ignoring the noble work already accomplished and being wrought by some of the older ones. If the letter to which we refer was written with any especial spirit of animosity behind it, we misjudged it; as it was understood by us as an effort to see justice and right prevail, so far as this part of it was concerned. It is hoped that no other motive will prompt anything that may be said herein.

It is true many of us have been a little profuse in congratulating the praiseworthy efforts and excellent results wrought on the part of the young of our church. While this is doubtless entirely correct, if properly administered, yet to do so to the forgetting of the great sacrifice and masterly effort of the older men in the church would be a gross injustice and a decided wrong.

The rapid advancement along the proper line made by our young people during the past few years, assisted by means of Religio and Sunday school, has justly attracted attention and much favorable comment, and if in our heartfelt thankfulness our zeal has led to excessive commendable expression regarding them, there is an element of excuse for it. However, this does not warrant our doing so to the exclusion of all others. Inasmuch as this question has now been raised, is it not an opportune time to mention what appears to be some very pertinent points in this connection? Most certainly it ought to be the aim of every true son and daughter of Zion, whether old or young, to seek to weld our interests and workings more closely together all the time. Perhaps nothing could be more fitting here than the old and somewhat time-worn motto, "United we stand, divided we fall." This being true, we mention what follows, that possible errors may be corrected and our mutual interests advanced.

No matter how distasteful it may be to us, the inevitable decree of nature is, in case we run our full course in life, "Once a man and twice a child." The church needs good substantial men and women, and that badly, too; but in our judgment it does not need them bad enough to force those who have made a noble and glorious record already, to stay in the harness when verging onto and passing through their last estate on earth, thereby causing them to undo much of the good they have done. It seems that some of us cannot quietly see the positions we have held for some time taken by others without a feeling of jealousy. How pertinent were the remarks of our President on this point at the close of the General Conference just past. Beware of jealousies. The Devil has used this means very effectively in the past, and your humble servant has by no means been free from its bitter pangs. An inconsistent faith, however, that pleads with Deity to heal the physical wounds of his fellows, and see the desired results follow, that would not lead him to his closet and there seek help to overcome jealousy. We are all good winners, poor losers.

Because I see young men coming up in the church now, having the harness of activity placed upon them, who are going to far outstrip my efforts, will that lessen in the sight of God the work I have tried to do? Some of us, yes, many of us, did not have the advantages of the Sunday school and Religio as our young men now have. Our young people today are slowly but surely unraveling the beauties of the Book of Mormon and Bible through these mediums. The faithful work and good counsel of the older ones have made this possible, and they should thank God for such a favorable condition.

Again; it is just possible some of us did not take advantage of all the opportunities offered us. Take for example the Word of Wisdom. One of the greatest promises in connection with this is that wisdom shall be given its observers. Not so many years ago advocates of the Word of Wisdom were looked upon with much disfavor. To-day the young man or woman in the church who drinks tea or coffee is considered way behind the times, in other words, out of date, belonging to another generation of our people. True, some few of them do, but they are comparatively very few, and we believe it to be a matter of a very few years until its observance will be practically universal. God is true to his promise, and the other parts of the law being observed as they are, they are entitled to the blessing promised. The expeditious businesslike manner in which our young people transact their business in business meetings, conventions, etc., is a splendid place to detect improvement.

If our children don't make better or more efficient workers in church affairs than we, they ought to be ashamed of themselves. Their opportunities should enable them to do so, and we have every reason to believe they will.

The lessons of life are never all learned until we die. We should never be afraid of proper criticism, and as we once told the people in our early ministry, if you see me make a mistake in the pulpit or elsewhere, don't be afraid to mention it to me at the proper time and place, for I don't want to go all through my life making the same mistake over and over again. I have never as yet changed that desire. No matter how much or how little work there may be before me, I hope to learn a little something daily. If some of our elders make some little mistake, is it not better to in a quiet way call their attention to it, than to allow their work to be hindered, and the cause suffer by allowing the mistake to be repeated? For example, how often and often, more a few years ago than now, we are happy to say, did we see men who would get up and preach a good sermon, and then hang on trying to fill out the hour, until they had spoiled all they said, and the people go home disgusted. When explaining the gospel to a strange audience, this of course does not hold good, for if they are really interested, the story of an hour and perhaps longer might be appreciated; but reference is made particularly to work among ourselves. Some of our good old sisters have faithfully and patiently undergone enough along this line to entitle them to a harp at least, in the world to come, if our ideas of rewards and punishments are correctly poised. May the good Lord help our young men to have sufficient wisdom to stop at the proper time and not make the terrible mistake that some of us older ones have made along this line.

Again; because I was fitted for a Sunday school superintendent ten, fifteen, or twenty years ago, does not of necessity mean that I am to-day. That I was a good branch president in my younger days does not mean that I am to-day. Two years ago the suggestion was dropped by Bro. Alexander Smith at the time of the General Conference, "Old men for counsel, young men for war." Some of us, in our zeal want to be warriors and counselors, regardless of our age.

Now this is not written with a view to asking or expecting the old men to lay down their arms altogether, but more that we should give the young men a chance. Not to think because we have been president of the branch for fifteen years that we must of necessity be for the next fifteen. That because we have preached every sermon that has been preached in our little chapel for the past ten years that we must for the next ten. Every young man must have a start. Sit in the audience and note his mistakes, then quietly tell him of them. There is work for all; how smoothly can it all be done, too, if "every man in his own order." How illy can we afford to make the awful mistake of thinking and talking that the work is sure to go to wreck and ruin the minute some young man may be elected to our position as branch or district president, or something of that sort. We ought to be proud that the church has young men so well equipped to take our places. Lend them our very best efforts, and be good and wise counselors to them. It is God we are worshiping, not the good brothers and sisters with whom we are associating. Their association but lends happiness to our labor, brightens our life, and helps to smooth many of the rough places in our journey. If called to serve them, let us serve wisely and well. When called upon by them to let another serve them officially, let us be just as brave. It is not our purpose to here discuss wise or unwise changes. Our people ought, as we view it, always to ask the Lord to direct them, especially in choosing their officers. When we have fasted and prayed before our election of officers, perhaps God will have a better opportunity to work with us.

When I say that I have never had the pleasure of meeting the good brother in California, nor do I know anything about him whatever, save what I may have gleaned from his article in the Herald, he will know this in no way refers to him personally, more than what might be gathered from his article.

May the Lord help us to be good and true old soldiers, as well as when young, is our prayer.

Yours hopefully,

A GRAY-HAIRED ELDER.

PERRY, Iowa, April 29.

Editors Herald:—During the last month I have been quite busy arranging affairs at home preparatory to entering into the summer's campaign. During this time have done some calling and visiting in line of duty. Called on the Saints of Madison County, and, assisted by Bro. H. A. McCoy, ordained Bro. C. J. Peters to the office of priest according to previous arrangements. He started right out and preached his first sermon the next Sunday, thus showing confidence in the call, and also showing the belief that God's calls are for service and not idleness. Bro. McCoy organized a Sunday school at this place, and after a few days of labor and rejoicing we returned home.

Next we called on the Saints of Boone, from which place we have just returned. I spoke twice to a little band of Saints assembled at their chapel on the Lord's day and enjoyed the good Spirit in my endeavor to teach them the law that relates to making our calling and election sure. I notice one distressing feature in my conversation with Saints. They place great stress on the declaration of the Savior in John 3:5 and charge the disobedient as being very great sinners, and express wonder and surprise because of their disobedience, when they themselves too often refuse obedience to the law that should govern them as citizens of God's kingdom, the "born again." And it seems to be as great a sin or greater for a Saint to refuse the law that should govern him or her as such, as the one that refuses the law, that gives him the name. Now it is written, "As God so loved us, we ought to love one another;" and, "He that loveth not, knoweth not God;" also, "Put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

Now, dear Saints, does this exist when you cannot or do not speak to your brother when before God in his house? or when circumstances throw you together? or does God hold you guiltless when you will not go to the place of prayer because some one attends there who you consider has wronged you. And I hear it said, by deed, that, "I am afraid to meet them," or, "I cannot bear to be in their company." Again, I read that perfect love casteth out fear, and that we are to love our enemies. I am forced to the conclusion, sad as it may be, that if people in such conditions continue so, that they have not God, and will come far short of the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus. "He that transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God," says John. Now this firstly applies to the people who call themselves Saints of God. So let us get into, and abide in, the doctrine of love.

Once more we have a change in our ministerial force as provided for us by conference, our former missionary in charge, Bro. C. Scott, being succeeded by Bro. D. M. Rudd, whom we welcome in our district. I can say for one that I hope and believe that the association, company, and labor of our new missionary will supply the wants and needs of our district, if such can be, and that the feeling of sorrow and sadness occasioned by the loss of one who has labored earnestly and interestedly for a long term, may find solace in the administration of his successor.

Saints of the Des Moines district, remember that our district conference convenes June 9 at or with the Saints of Richland Creek branch in Tama County, Iowa, and be present, every one who can. It is our annual election of officers, and we hope to have a pleasant and profitable season.

I go to Boonesboro the 10th of May; expect to meet Bro. Rudd at that place, and all Saints of branches will please communicate your wants and desires to me. Address, Perry, Iowa. In bonds, Editors Herald:—This leaves me well and in my field of labor. I have been laboring at Wilburton, Indian Territory, for the last month. The Saints there need to come up higher. I am truly glad another man was put over this field this year. Surely a change was badly needed. I have many calls for preaching ahead of me. I hope to be able to reach many of them. The work at Cove is onward. Fine Sunday school. A. L. Newton and wife are of sterling worth to the work in this field. All Saints in Arkansas and Louisiana, that need my labor can address me Cove, Arkansas, which will be my address during the year 1900.

Keep on praying—

A CASE OF HEALING THROUGH FAITH AND PRAYER.

Many years ago a niece of mine lay at the point of death. The doctor had told all of us, and the neighbors as well, that she could not live. She believed the gospel, but like many others was too proud to obey. As I sat watching her, expecting to see the change, it came. Her eyes were set, and that pale grey hue came over her face. She was too weak to speak, but whispered, "I am going, Pine." It came to me to say to her, "No, Annie, you will not die, but will get well if you make a covenant with God that you will obey his gospel if he will spare your life."

I raised her up and held her in my arms, and O, such a prayer fell from her lips, I never heard before! With pleading and promises if God would only spare her life. While she was yet praying the doctor came in with her husband, and they both stood at the foot of her bed looking in amazement. When she got through praying she looked at the doctor and said, "Doctor, I am going to get well, but you did not do it. It is God that has done it."

All the doctor could say was, "I know it; for I thought you could not live."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

She was baptized just as soon as she was able to be. Her husband was not a believer, but did not dare to refuse to let her be baptized. She is still living and has a family of children. A SISTER.

HOW OFTEN, dear Herald, you cheer my lonely heart, coming as you do the only saintly visitor to our home. My husband and self are the only Saints living in this part of the State. We are over two hundred miles from the nearest Latter Day Saint church, and one hundred and fifty miles from the closest Saints that we know of, and we truly feel among the isolated ones. When I read the dear letters of the Saints in the Herald and see how others are enjoying church privileges, how much I long to be among you, and sometimes I wonder if those who live in towns where there is a church and elders truly appreciate the privilege of hearing the word of God every Sabbath? My husband and self are striving to get our property in such a condition that we can go and live among the Saints in Iowa or Missouri, for we feel the need of church privileges and associates. It is very hard indeed to grow in grace when one never hears the word preached or talk to one of God's Saints. When I read Sr. Mary Leavins' letter, I thought how much she is like myself. God has abundantly blessed us, and we are very grateful to him for the same; our prayers have been answered so many times. How loving a father we have; when we are weak he strengthens us; sick and in trouble he hears us and heals us.

We are living among Brighamites. Some are good-hearted, but all are more or less prejudiced and make us feel that we are not of them, so we stay away from them. On Sundays we read the Saints' Herald and the Inspired Translation of the Bible, also the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. How they strengthen us! Without the word of God life would not be worth living.

Dear saints who are living in towns where nearly all belong to your faith, visit those who do not, and give them a word of comfort and encourage them to go with you to your meeting. Do not slight them because they do not see as you do, for if you do you can never get them into the kingdom. It is only through love some can be gathered. Dear isolated sisters and brothers, I believe we were placed so for a wise and glorious purpose, either for our own good or the good of others. Let us be cheerful, humble, and prayerful, and God will bless our efforts; and remember we are an example for good or bad, and our every action is watched. Let it never be said of us that we were a stumbling block to some weak one. I believe we ought to be very careful of our dress, not strive to see how elegantly we can dress, but how plain and neat. Some are too poor to get even common decent clothes. It is not right for us to be puffed up in pride, for that is one of the greatest stumbling blocks to the poor, and I believe one of the hardest sins to overcome. We want to be like the world, that is human; but Jesus said, "Follow me, for I am meek and lowly." We must become like him, then our hearts will be full of love, and we will lay up treasures in heaven. How true the saying, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

Dear Saints, let us help and pray for the young of God's church, for they have many temptations. Yours for the love of Christ.

Dear Sr. Frances:—Enclosed you will find an article, which you will please use as you see fit. I love to read the pieces in the Home Column, and I find much help in the thoughts penned, also, in the Daughters of Zion pieces. I wonder if any of the sisters have ever done as I have, that is to clip out all the articles from the Mother's Home Column and keep them, for I often sit down and look over them and find just what has bothered me, I mean in the training and bringing up of my two little ones, who I hope will be the better for my having lived in this day and age when we mothers can study such grand thoughts and ideas as are published in the Autumn Leaves and Herald. I have lent my Autumn Leaves to some of my lady friends, and now they come and get them whenever the new one arrives. Also, I have lent the Ensign and Herald, and plenty of tracts, so that they all know to what church I belong. I attend a weekly prayer meeting held near me by the Congregationalists, and last week I handed the pastor our epitome, and he was surprised to know that there was any difference between the Utah people and us. I am in hopes to get an opening for one of our elders to preach out here. I fear I have made this letter too lengthy now, so ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am your sister in the one faith,

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

The ninth annual convention of the General Sunday School Association finished its work Friday morning, April 6, 1900, after two days of incessant work. At all previous conventions there has been found time for more or less of normal or institute work, training classes, and other miscellaneous items of interest, but with this one it was not so. With the ever continuous expansion of the Sabbath school work, the business necessary to be done has increased till there is not sufficient time in the two days to transact even a larger portion thereof. Some interesting discussions were closed prematurely, and some items of business were cut out of consideration for want of time in the which to properly consider them. It is always better to not take any action at all than to take action that is hasty and perhaps faulty.

It may seem from the above that we are somewhat disappointed with the convention as a whole, but we are not. We do, however, regret that we did not have more time, but that is the only sense in which we would consider the convention any less than complete. On the contrary, the meeting is one to which we shall long look as one of earnestness, harmony, and peace. Often the delegates waxed very earnest in their speeches, but these were simply the promptings of deep interest and not of evil motives. Not a jar, not a retort, or any unfriendly insinuation was felt during the whole meeting. The good Spirit met and abode with us.

The report of the committee on improvements contained among several others, a recommendation that programs for Christmas and Children's Day be provided, and that these programs should be "adapted to the uses of the smaller schools." We may not be able to provide more than a few suggestions for the Children's Day program for this year, as time will not admit of more. We expect to be able to have a Christmas program ready for mailing by the first of November. Of course notice will be given in due time.

The constitutional amendments, as proposed by Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, were adopted. This eliminates all articles that authorize any assessments upon schools or districts. All moneys needed for contingent expenses must be raised, as are all other moneys of the church, by voluntary contribution. This does not free any school or district from doing what is its duty to do, but leaves it optional with them to give what they may think they are able to give when they have considered the needs and their ability to contribute. New "Constitution and By-Laws" will be published as soon as practicable, and will contain all the amendments to date, those of 1900 and also of 1898. Watch for notice and order one when ready for mailing.

The work on the Sunday school song book is advancing rather slowly, because the people fail to contribute music. The committee has worked hard to get it toward completion, but receiving little support, have made little headway. The committee is continued, and will continue their efforts to get material together. But they need support, effective support, such as will make a Sunday school song book. They will probably give some notices from time to time, and we hope that all persons gifted in the musical line will make an effort to respond.

One of the most important moves of the convention was to provide for a teachers' edition of the Gospel Quarterly. This has been a long-felt want, and we believe it will in time work great good to the cause. Many teachers have become discouraged, because of not having sufficient help to make their work what they thought it should be. All of us could do better work if we had the benefit of helps from those of experience in our lines. In this teachers' edition of the quarterly, we hope to be able to furnish such hints, suggestions, and additional matter pertaining to the lessons as will be helpful to a better understanding of the truths in the lessons and an understanding of how better to teach them. We hope to assist teachers of all grades, officers of the Sunday school, and in fact all others who wish to use this edition.

Because of the editorial work on the quarterly being prepared ahead, in order to give time for the work of the revising committee, it will not be possible to publish this teachers' edition before the last quarter of the present year. We think that beyond a doubt we can have it ready to mail with the last quarter, or the October to December quarterly.

All the officers of the association were continued with one exception, Bro. Charles E. Crumley, of California, not being available for another term. Bro. Frederick M. Pitt, of Chicago, was chosen in his place as Second Assistant Superintendent. Bro. Pitt is a young man whose interest and competency in the work has won for him the love and esteem of his brethren, and this is what prompted them to choose him to this responsible position. We extend to him the hand of fellowship and bid him welcome into the councils of the Association, and pray God to abundantly bless him in his efforts for good.

The work with our associate officers during the term just closed has been of the most pleasant character. We have not accomplished all that we would have liked. We have not done all that we could have done had we not been hampered by other duties. But we are truly grateful that we have been permitted to accomplish what we believe to be a great good for the cause of Christ. If we can judge by results, we have done works that are productive of bountiful fruits. We trust that we have "built as for eternity," in some instances at least. We do not take this honor upon ourselves; it is due to Him "who doeth all things well." But we do rejoice in the thought that we have found sufficient favor in his sight to be the humble instruments in his hands for accomplishing good.

We feel assured that this unity of thought and purpose, and congenialness of character, will remain with us for the time that is to come. May we feel our dependence on God and ask him to guide and bless our every act. May our love and zeal for the work increase, our hopes grow brighter, and our sphere of usefulness be widened. And, too, may we be able to say, when the year is ended, that we have done all we could do, that we have been faithful to the trust imposed upon us.

And with a pastoral thought in mind, we would say to all of our fellow Sunday school workers, that we are now entering upon a new year of work. And while the results for the past two years have in many cases been very gratifying, we must not for an instant feel that we can afford to relax our vigilance or energies in lines of work that will in some way work for the spread of truth. Unless we are constantly on the alert, our schools or district associations will soon show signs of disintegration. This must not be. It is the duty of each individual to do his part to keep the schools in a live, active condition. It is the duty of every worker, in every school, to assist the district workers to make the district work what it should be. And to the end that the schools may be improved, let us help to improve the district association.

Our General Secretary's report showed a gain of eight district associations in two years. There are others that are even now taking steps to complete their district organization, and we expect to get their report ere long. There are still other districts that should organize. They have the schools, and we see no reason why they should not fall in line and be receiving the benefit of association with others of like faith and interests.

Who will take hold in these unorganized districts? Do not hesitate. Do not wait. There has been too much hesitating and waiting now. Write us about your district if there is anything irregular or extraordinary about it. What we want is to get the Sunday school work upon an organized and progressive basis. May we not hear from you?

In conclusion, we wish to thank our brethren and sisters of the association for the compliment, and for the confidence shown by sustaining us in the office in which we have labored. For the past four years, or since we entered upon the work, we have done the best we could, and we trust we may be able to continue the same. And, God being our helper, may we all be able to do a good work during the coming year.

Your brother and colaborer,

THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.

Conference convened with Wilber Saints, January 14; J. W. Waldsmith in charge; the secretary being absent, C. H. Porter was chosen secretary pro tem. Ministerial reports: Seventy: W. E. Peak and C. H. Porter; High Priests: J. W. Waldsmith and M. H. Forscutt; Elders: W. M. Self, A. J. Myers, and W. Savage; Priests: Jesse Spurgeon, S. K. Sorensen, R. O. Self, Robert White, S. Brolliar, H. W. Belville, and Ed Robertson; Teacher: David Brolliar; Deacon: H. E. Christy. Bishop's agent's report: Received $476.72; expended $477.58; due agent 86 cents. On motion Palmyra branch was declared disorganized, and the district president to take charge of the books, and the Bishop's agent was instructed to take charge of the church property at Palmyra. The question of district expenses was called up and the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, that we do not think it wise or expedient to vote a per capita contribution on the members of the district to meet the expenses of the conferences; and be it further resolved, that in our judgment it is necessary that a district fund be created, and that wherever a conference is held a liberal contribution should be made to said fund, and that all moneys so contributed should be used only by order of the district conference to meet the legitimate expenses thereof." Reports were received from Nebraska City and Blue River branches. A letter was received from Bro. T. W. Williams containing a resolution relating to the gathering, consecration, and equality; and also a resolution was received from Bro. Ordway, referring to the delegate system, and provides for the publication of all important matters in the Herald and Ensign three months at least prior to final action being taken in the General Conference of the church; they were disposed of as follows: The resolution of Bro. Williams was indefinitely postponed; that of Bro. Ordway laid on the table. Buffalo and Hall counties desired to withdraw from the Central Nebraska district and become part of the Southern Nebraska district. Bro. Belville was appointed to labor as a missionary, subject to the directions of the district president. Delegates to General Conference: C. H. Porter, M. H. Forscutt, W. M. Self. H. W. Belville, J. W. Waldsmith, R. O. Self, and James Fergerson. A committee of three was appointed by the chair to consider the question of camp meeting and camp meeting work, and report at the next session of the district conference; the committee consisted of C. H. Porter, W. M. Self, and H. W. Belville. The following were sustained as district officers: J. W. Waldsmith president, E. D. Briggs secretary, M. H. Forscutt assistant. Adjourned to meet with Nebraska City branch in May, 1900.

WILL YOU HELP?

The debt against Graceland College is a burden to us all, but may be easily carried if each one will do his part. Are you willing to carry $25 of this load? If so, the entire debt will be provided for and the college placed upon a sound basis within the next ninety days. One thousand names at $25 each will do this. No collection to be made until the entire amount is subscribed. If no one has a subscription list in your branch or neighborhood, please send to the undersigned and get one at once. Send your name as a subscriber. The amount to be paid when the full one thousand subscribers are had amounting to $25 each. If you can subscribe for two, so much the better. Some have subscribed already for two, four, and as high as twenty. We want the full list in ninety days. Please let us hear from you.

By order of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 1, 1900.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

The General Conference of the church at its late session decided against closing the college, and elected as the Board of Trustees the following named brethren: From Lamoni, J. H. Hansen, M. D., William Anderson, I. W. Allender, Daniel Anderson, R. M. Elvin, and J. A. Gunsolly; and from Thurman, Iowa, William Leeka.

The board organized with William Anderson, President; I. W. Allender, Secretary; and Daniel Anderson, Treasurer.

Communications regarding scholarships, sale of lots, etc., should be addressed to President William Anderson. All remittances should be made to the Secretary, I. W. Allender.

R. M. Elvin is authorized to represent the college and will travel in its interests, soliciting patronage, sale of scholarships and subscriptions, and making collections.

Let it be remembered that in order to run the college without increasing the indebtedness we should have one hundred five-year subscriptions, of which required number we now have thirty-five. These subscriptions are twenty-five dollars per year, and are represented by scholarships for that length of time, transferable and good until used. Persons who have no children of their own to educate can in this way help to educate some who are not so fortunate as to be able to pay for a scholarship. Or where one knows of no one to receive the benefit of his scholarship, he can subscribe and intrust the board to make application to some worthy beneficiary.

While you are helping the Bishop to pay off the indebtedness, remember the board solicits your assistance in meeting running expenses. You are not asked for a donation, but solicited to buy a scholarship at twenty-five dollars per year, good until used. Of course those who desire to aid in running expenses, but do not feel able to take a scholarship, may make donations of money for this purpose, for which we will gladly receipt you.

Your moral support is solicited at any rate, in case you cannot render any material aid. Speak a good word for a worthy institution, and trust for your reward in the day when all accounts shall be settled without default.

Please do not consider this matter a local enterprise in the interests of Lamoni only. While a failure of the college would injure Lamoni more or less, yet the interests of the work at large would also suffer by such failure.

WILLIAM ANDERSON, President.
I. W. ALLENDER, Secretary.
Board of Trustees.

TO THE PATRONS OF THE HERALD OFFICE.

Having been appointed Business Manager and Treasurer of the Herald Office, by the Board of Publication, I wish to say to the Saints and friends that I desire their earnest coöperation in my endeavors to serve the best interests of all concerned. I accept the trust as one of responsibility, realizing that the interests of the publishing department have an important bearing upon the development of the church in the branches and the progress of the work abroad. It will therefore be my endeavor to meet demands upon this department by prompt and faithful service in every feature of its work.

So far as in our power to avoid it there will be no reasonable ground for dissatisfaction with the office. The Publishing Department is the servant of the body, owned by it, and subject to its control, that it may contribute to its needs and faithfully meet all just demands upon it. Recognizing its legitimate sphere, we shall endeavor to see that it is made a contributor to the general good by frank and fair dealing with the people.

In the conduct of business the same general rules published in the Herald Office catalogue will be observed until new rules are found necessary.

Mistakes, if any have been made, will be rectified as soon as possible to correct them. Write us plainly your wants and we shall endeavor to supply them.

The traveling ministry, Bishop's agents, branch and district officers, and all Saints are asked to remember the interests of the Herald Office. It is to the interests of the church and the Saints everywhere to be in touch with the progress of the work by reading the Saints' Herald, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Hope, Gospel Quarterlies, the standard books, and other church publications.

Address all orders and remittances to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

JOHN SMITH, Manager.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 25, 1900.

COMMITTEE ON HISTORIES AND ENCYCLOPEDIAS.

The above committee met at the Historian's Office, April 23, 1900, and formed a permanent organization by appointing Heman C. Smith chairman, and Frederick Madison Smith secretary.

We are trying to systematize our work, and will make an effort to correct existing misrepresentations in histories and encyclopedias as soon as possible, and will use every effort in our power to prevent the occurrence of future errors. However, we will need the active coöperation of all who are interested in this work, and hence we earnestly solicit the aid of Saints and friends.

We shall be glad to have information of any works mentioning the latter-day work, issued or prospective, especially the latter; and where practicable send us copies of books. Any information addressed to any one of the committee will receive prompt attention. Copies of books should be sent to the secretary.

HIGH PRIESTS' QUORUM.

For the purpose of giving the permanent addresses of all High Priests in the forthcoming Circular List, it is desired that Brn. J. F. Burton, M. H. Bond, J. B. Carmichael, J. T. Davis, W. H. Pease, David Snobeling, and F. M. Sheehy should send to me such address as they wish published.

Also as soon as the following brethren are ordained, will they (or those who ordain them) please to send me the date of ordination, and place, and by whom ordained, giving speaker's name first: Marcus H. Cook, John Midgorden, Robert Winning, Arthur E. Mortimer, Robert McKenzie, W. R. Pickering, W. H. Pease, George P. Lambert, Joseph A. Tanner, Sylvester B. Kibler, Alma M. Fyrando, David Snobeling, Joseph F. Burton, John B. Roush, Charles J. Hunt, Charles A. Parkin, John B. Carmichael, Alonzo Jones, Ellis Short, and John Zimermann.

When any of the brethren of the quorum change their addresses, if they will notify the quorum secretary, it will be a favor.

All members please take notice that the quorum, by resolution, took action to urge upon all High Priests to make a record of "all ministerial labor performed" each year, and that a summary of it be included in their annual reports to the quorum. This means a record of sermons preached, meetings had charge of, baptisms performed, confirmations, ordinations, blessings of children, and assisting in these, administering to the sick, marriages performed, the number of times in each class, if possible. Therefore, will each one please to see that a careful record is made by them. With a convenient little book such entries can be made in a moment each time of officiating, and we may then have a summary of all.

H. A. STEBBINS.
Secretary High Priests' Quorum.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of South Missouri District:—Having been appointed by the late General Conference to labor in a new field, I wish to express to you my thanks for the many acts of kindness shown to me by you during my six years' missionary work among you. Truly I have been benefited by church associations with you, and believe that you have been benefited by my counsel and example, although I do not say that I have made no mistakes. I am glad to note that three other missionaries have been appointed to this field of labor, and that Elder Sparling, of Springfield, has been retained in this mission. You should all work with proper zeal to move the cause of Zion in these parts during this conference year. You should show your love for the work by looking after it, both locally and throughout the district. Don't muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, but rather loosen each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of God. I expect, by the grace of God, to enter hopefully into the field of labor to which I have been appointed. I leave the old field with love to all and with malice toward none, asking an interest in your prayers that the blessing of God may continue to follow my ministrations.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

MAMMOTH SPRINGS, Ark., April 29.

MICHIGAN AND INDIANA MISSION.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Above Mission, Greeting:—Having been appointed in charge, I wish to say that the work will be divided as follows: The Northern and the Eastern districts in Michigan will be controlled as a mission field by J. J. Cornish; and the Southern district, or that portion that is in Michigan, will be under the watch-care of Warren E. Peck, as submissionary in charge; and that portion of the Southern district in Indiana, and the balance of the State will be controlled and cared for as submissionary by G. A. Smith. All others of the ministry will please report to the above named, each reporting to the one placed in charge of the field in which labor is performed; those in charge will in turn report to me, as required. I come to the mission, and I wish to say to my associate ministers and laborers for Christ, Let us be united in the labor of love, and in the sacrifice required of us to make; let the past rest in silence.

Come, let us anew
Our journey pursue,
And never stand still till our Master appear.

Yours in the great conflict,
JOHN H. LAKE,
Missionary in Charge.

Home address, Temple, Lake County, Ohio.

To the Missionaries in the State of Minnesota; Dear Brethren:—As I am again appointed to take charge of the mission work, I do so fully realizing the responsibility of so doing, and humbly ask you to coöperate with me, that our work may be a success. I have prayed much to be guided by the Spirit in arranging or laying out the ground upon which each may occupy. Brethren Eli Hayer and E. A. Stedman in Southern Minnesota, subject to change if the Lord so directs and the work demands. Brethren F. D. Omands and James M. Baggerly, Northern Minnesota, subject to change if deemed wise to do so.

Now, dear brethren, as we are favored this year with additional help, let us improve the time. Please keep me posted as to your whereabouts, so that if I should need your help in other parts I will know where to find you. Give me your field address to aid me in reaching you in the shortest time. My field address is Audubon, Minnesota. Please be prompt in reporting every three months, as required by the former rule of reporting. Please look after the openings made by you as reported to me last year, and seek in humility to gather in the sheaves as the Spirit of God and wisdom may direct. Ever praying for Zion's triumph, I am your colaborer,

I. N. ROBERTS,
Sub-Missionary in Charge.

No. 529 James Avenue, North Minneapolis, Minn., April 30.

To the Saints of Nebraska, Greeting:—For as much as elders and Saints participating in the reunion at Shelton, August, 1899, decided that appointing a future reunion be left to the missionary in charge, I therefore respectfully state that in my opinion the continuance of annual reunions in or for the State of Nebraska would be improper, as the good thereby accomplished would not be commensurate, with time and money thus consumed. I more readily reach this conclusion in view of the fact that most of the officials being present at the above reunion so believed, as I have been informed, considering that each district might, if so desiring, appoint two days' meetings, especially in localities where the gospel is least known. As the spread of the gospel is primary, all other projects should be secondary.

JAMES CAFFALL,
Missionary in Charge.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

To the Saints in Des Moines District:—Having been placed in charge of your district for mission work, I take this means of saying to all of you that it will be our aim to do all we can for the advancement of the cause in every way possible. Our efforts as missionaries must be supplemented by the local ministry and every member, if all the good possible to obtain shall be obtained. There are but three of us in the field who were assigned to the district, but we will expect to have some help from Bro. J. S. Roth, as well as the missionary in charge, Bro. Wight. Bro. Kephart will labor in the south part of the district for the present at least. Bro. Morgan being president of the district, will probably devote a good portion of his time in that office, which will, no doubt, hinder his missionary work to an extent.

If the scattered Saints who desire labor done in their region the coming year will notify me, we will do the best we can, and have all the calls answered as far as possible. My permanent address is Dow City, Iowa. Now if you desire labor done, don't neglect to write, stating the prospects for an opening. We want to devote all the time possible away from branches.

I expect to enter the mission field at Boone on the 10th. Have been resting (?) at home for two weeks, trying to do a month's work. Let members work together with local officers and missionaries for the advancement of the cause of truth, then pray God's blessing upon our work, and all will advance together.

Your colaborer for gospel truth,
D. M. RUDD.

CHANGE OF BISHOP'S AGENCY FOR DECATUR DISTRICT, IOWA.

To the Saints and Friends of Decatur District:—Please take notice that owing to the call and ordination of Bro. William Anderson to the office of a Bishop in the church, and his jurisdiction in this office is now in Decatur district, Iowa, the Bishop's agent in the Decatur district will be discontinued from this date, and all tithes and offerings in said district paid to Bishop William Anderson instead of to Bro. F. M. Weld, the agent as heretofore. Bro. Anderson is well known in the Decatur district, and it will not be necessary to formally introduce him to the Saints. He will be ready and earnest in the performance of all of his duties. Every one should put forth an effort to aid him in his work of helping the ministry and poor and needy in the district. Note the address and send remittances to Bishop William Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa, and sustain him with your faith and prayers as well, and thus all work in harmony for the success of the Lord's work.

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.
LAMONI, Iowa, May 7, 1900.

BISHOP'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Decatur District:—As I have been appointed to look after the necessities of the poor and needy, also the families of the active ministry who live in this district, I desire to say to my brethren and sisters that while our brethren have accepted missions to labor in the gospel for the salvation of man, it will necessarily require them to leave their families to our care. Shall we be faithful to that sacred trust? To do this it will take means.

Doctrine and Covenants, section 119, paragraph 8: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

Dear Saints, there is no more dangerous or deceptive spirit in the church than that which suggests to us that because sometimes some missionary stays a little too long at home, or is not as active in missionary work while out in his field as he ought to be, therefore we will withhold our means and decline to pay our tithes or offerings into the church treasury, as the law of God requires, thereby imperiling the support of our worthy poor, faithful wives, and innocent children. We are not always economical and wise in the management of our own private affairs; therefore, if we should actually see some mismanagement with some who draw their support from the church, we should not be rash or harsh in our judgment, or talk too much or carelessly about these things to the detriment of the finances of the church. If we do our whole duty we shall be entitled to be heard when we may make just complaints.

I have not done very much missionary work, but I have done enough to know that any faithful working missionary makes a real sacrifice if he love home associations as well as I do, and it is fair to presume that he does. While it is true that if a minister sent out by the church who sets indolent or other bad habits before the people, he is one of the church's worst enemies; but we should not be hindered in doing our whole duty or be overcome in any way by our enemies, whether they be in or out of the church.

Desiring your welfare and best good, I pray God our heavenly Father that he will give us of his Holy Spirit, that we may see our duty and have the courage to do it, knowing that if we do our part we shall in no wise lose our reward. All tithes and offerings will be cheerfully received and promptly accounted for. In gospel bonds, your brother,

WILLIAM ANDERSON,
Bishop for Decatur District.
LAMONI, Iowa, May 7.

BORN.

GUNSOLLEY.—Near Pickering, Missouri, March 11, 1900, to J. L. and Sofia Gunsolley, a daughter, and named Pearl Powell. Blessed April 15, by Elders E. S. Fannon and James Thomas.

DIED.

WALDMAN. — Bernadette Willow, only child of Mr. Jake and Sr. Ida Waldman, of Searstown, near Rock Island, Illinois; born June 23, 1896; died April 20, 1900. Brief service at the grave conducted by Elder Will E. La Rue.

JOHNSON.—Sr. Mary F. Johnson was born at Indianapolis, Indiana, March 1, 1841; died April 18, 1900, at Cormorant, Minnesota. She was married to John F. Johnson, June 8, 1859; came to Minnesota in 1879, a member of a Congregational Church; obeyed the gospel January 25, 1887, and was a consistent member till she died; was mother of ten children, five now living. Burial at Scambler cemetery. Funeral services to a large company of friends by Elder T. J. Martin.

BENSON.—Virginia A. Benson was born August 8, 1829; died January 25, 1900, at the home of her son, William Benson, near Wakenda, Missouri. She was the mother of nine children; two sons and two daughters survive her. She was a widow twenty-one years, and during the last nine years had been confined to the house from injuries received by a fall from a horse. She was a loving mother, a faithful member of the church. Her death was rather sudden and unexpected, but we believe that she was fully prepared for the change. She was baptized March 2, 1887. Funeral at the house, Elder Arthur Allen conducting the services.

SHIPPY. — Sr. Rebecca, wife of Bro. Charles Shippy, of Grove Hill, Iowa, departed this life April 23, 1900. Sr. Shippy, whose maiden name was Platt, was born in McLean County, Illinois, May 22, 1840, removed to Iowa with her parents when a young girl, and on September 16, 1860, was married to Bro. Charles Shippy. Shortly afterward they moved onto the farm where they now reside. She obeyed the gospel October 27, 1889, being one of the first to obey the gospel at Grove Hill. She was a consistent follower of the Master; all her life she had been a minister of blessing to those around, the afflicted and needy ones always finding in her a friend and sister. The circumstances of her death were peculiarly touching. With Bro. Shippy she attended the General Conference at Lamoni, and while there was stricken by disease. All that love and skill could suggest was done, but in vain. Away from home and her sorsowing children, her spirit took its flight. The remains were taken to Fairbank, where the funeral was held at the M. E. church. A large concourse of people listened to Elder C. E. Hand as he spoke words of comfort. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. She sleeps the sleep of the righteous, leaving a husband, nine children, one sister, and six brothers to mourn. Her children were all present at the funeral as also was the sister and one brother.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

Lamoni Sanitarium.

Believing that there should be a place where Saints and others who have not faith to be healed can be treated with "herbs and mild food" by "a friend" and where surgical and other means can be used if needed, I have decided to open a sanitarium at Lamoni, Iowa, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, also a surgical department where operations can be done with skill and modern appliances.

Special attention will be given to diseases of women, ruptures, piles, and tumors. In these disorders I have had large experience. Testimonials of cures sent on application.

Specialists from Chicago and St. Joseph will be consulted in difficult cases. Chronic diseases will be treated largely by baths, massage, and electricity.

I have practiced medicine and surgery for eighteen years. I have taken special courses in the above-named diseases at New York City, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis hospitals.

Temporary rooms have been engaged and patients can be received at any time. Consultations free. Write to me about your case.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS ON THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The final days of the great Ecumenical Conference confirmed the opinion commonly accepted during the earlier days of the session—namely, that it would prove the most widely attended and most important missionary gathering of the century. About 2,800 delegates were present, representing 150 missionary societies, drawn from over sixty different countries and from about forty religious denominations. The daily average attendance at the conference—not counting the overflow meetings—was estimated at 15,000.

Among the features most commented upon, aside from the greatness and harmony of the gathering, was the general desire apparent on the part of the delegates to leave doctrinal differences in abeyance, and even to minimize the importance of creeds. One delegate, Dr. Behrends, of Brooklyn, who announced that he would gladly sign any creed that permitted him to sign all creeds, and who later said that what is most needed is "the power to put all creeds in a pile and set fire to them and burn up the dross," was frequently interrupted by applause, although some of the delegates are said to have been astonished at this new way of announcing the gospel. In general, also, the press reports call attention to the general disposition shown to give predominance to measures of physical and medical relief, and to bring into play the culture and uplifting forces of civilization, as a primary aim of missions.—Literary Digest, May 12, 1900.

Perhaps as marked advantage as any that will accrue from this Conference will be found in the personal acquaintance and association of the men and women who are giving themselves to the work. It is twelve years since the last Conference was held in London. In that time many of those who were our leaders have fallen. To go no further than the officers of our own Missionary Union, Murdock, Duncan, and McKenzie are with us no more. A new generation is coming on the stage. The torch is passing from the strong hands that carried it to new hands. A meeting like this brings the tradition, the impulse, and the devotion of an older day into relation with new minds and hearts. It does what the printing press can not do. It brings personality into touch with personality. It bears on from soul to soul the sacred fire of self-devotion to the highest and noblest ends.—The Watchman (Baptist).

This convention is opportune. The world never has been in a more receptive mood than now. Railways, steamships, telegraphs, telephones, newspapers, and all manner of devices for human communications seem just about complete. Ordinary people of all nations are interested in like people of other nations as never before. Men are running to and fro and knowledge increases under conditions more promising than ever. It is said that the Arabs of northern Africa get news about the progress of the war in South Africa almost as soon as the mails can carry it to others. Their system of signaling is wonderful, even though its present motives are sinister with respect to Christian civilization. As sinister as it may be, it yet proves that their interest is alive and suggests that better motives may cleave their minds when Christianity lifts her voice and Christ is preached by missionaries like those now gathered in New York. The world has seemed to be staggering somewhat and even the church has been more or less uncertain. We believe that the doubt is apparent only, just as an army may appear to bunch itself and waver, in order to change its direction. The rally will come. When we have gathered all our arguments to account for some recent depressing aspects of church growth and enthusiasm, it may appear that God has been offended, because the home church has done too little for the very regions in which these godly missionaries are working.

When they return to their distant fields, after telling us what God already hath wrought, we pray that they may take home with them more of our devoted hearts and supreme enthusiasms than ever.—Northwestern Christian Advocate, (Meth. Episc.)

We do not desire to attack any one. But if our opinion be asked of this Ecumenical Conference, we give it. We regard the name Ecumenical, as used in this connection, as absurd. That word has a definite historical meaning which is utterly inapplicable to this gathering. We are interested in the proceedings of this body. We are glad to have missionary problems discussed, and missionary information disseminated; but we are truly sorry that churchmen have identifiedt hemselves with it, and thus have confused the minds of many. We hope that nothing of the kind will occur again. —The Living Church (High Church Prot. Episc.)

The outstanding fact about the Conference is precisely that which was expected; the inspiration which it is giving. The utterances of the opening meetings will long thrill through thousands of minds and warm to enthusiasm thousands of Christian hearts. And the inspiration will be all the more lasting in that it has simply raised to a higher power a deeply felt conviction of the importance of missions and the incalculable privilege of sharing in mission work, whether by personal service or by financial support.

For it is unquestionably true, as was said a day or two ago in the Philadelphia Press, that interest in missions is not decreasing, but is becoming not only greater in volume, but more intelligent. Nothing can be more just than the statement of this writer that 'the unfounded impression that what are known as liberal views in theology would decrease interest in missions should be dissipated by the evidence furnished by the present missionary Conference.' This evidence is overwhelming and irrefragable.—The Evangelist (Presb.)

In all the speeches made at this Protestant mission conference there was not a single allusion to the missionary labors of the church. The church has been carrying on this work for nearly two thousand years, and every nation that is Christian today received its Christianity from that church. Protestants entered on the work about one hundred years ago; in the meantime it has expended many millions of money, employed many thousands of men and women, but it has failed to convert even one nation to Christianity. Even the church is hindered and crossed at every step, and she fails as a consequence to gather the full fruits of her missionary labors.—The Sacred Heart Review (Rom. Cath.)

There are some who dread lest this 'Ecumenical Conference' should be made a precedent, forgetting that the precedent was made by the Good Samaritan. There are those who think that if such a 'disaster' should occur as coöperation with those who are seeking to make Christ known to the world the church will step in and order her missionaries to the right-about. For our part, we are not satisfied to say that we have no condemnation for those who may preach the gospel. We have a consciousness of fellowship with them. We would begin the world embracing process by coming nearer to our brethren in Christ, and surely such gatherings as those that Carnegie Hall has seen in these last days are such as to widen the heart of the most inveterate 'episcopal politician' or ultra-Calvinist. Is it not a heartening and soul-inspiring thing to think of the pulses that are going out from our metropolitan city to the farthest India, to the islands of the sea, to the missionaries from the Arctic to Cape Horn, carrying with them words of cheer, of promise, and of prayer?—The Churchman (conservative Prot. Episc.)

THE SITE OF OPHIR.

Dr. Carl Peters, an African explorer recently returned to London, believes that he has found the Ophir whence King Solomon's gold was brought, in the country between the Zambesi and the Pungwa Rivers, in Portuguese Africa and eastern Mashonaland. Many rivers, some quite extensive, of undetermined origin, and traces of ancient mining enterprises, are found in the region, and gold is still washed there. One site is Fura, on the Muira River, about fifteen miles south of the Zambesi. The name Fura is said to be a native corruption of the word Afur, by which the Arabs of the sixteenth century called the district, and that to be the Saharan or south Arabian form of the Hebrew Ophir. The natives are unlike the ordinary Africans, and have a distinctly Jewish type of face. A chief informed Dr. Peters concerning the position of some ancient workings, and, following his directions, the explorer found ruins "of an undoubtedly Semitic type." Dr. Peters' hypotheses and evidences must be accepted for what they are worth. Other explorers have found Ophir at various points in Africa and Arabia, and even in India and elsewhere, and have been as satisfied and as sure as he with their identifications.—Popular Science Monthly, for April, 1900.

ONE WAY OF SHOWING INFERIORITY.

Showing due deference toward others is an indication of self-respect. Failing to give respect to those who deserve it is an indication of a lack of self-respect. Those who are deservedly looked up to by their felows are pretty sure to be those who are most ready to give due deference to all whom they meet, or with whom they have any dealings. Those, on the contrary, who habitually fail to give deference to others, even to those who are most worthy of it, are those who have neither honor from their fellows nor a right estimate of themselves. It requires and marks a man above the average in the community to be able to know and to do his duty in accordance with the apostolic injunction, "Render to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor." But any boor, whatever his title, can show his inferiority by his lack of self-respect, or of respect for his equals or superiors.—Sunday School Times, May 2, 1900.

EVOLUTION OF THE "PEACE IDEA."

The view has been very generally entertained that all efforts to promote the cause of peace and order in the world by cut-and-dried schemes are bound to fail, and it must be admitted that few truer words have been written than those which stand at the head of this article. But this truth, like some others, may be abused. Evidences are not wanting to show that the incredulity which preceded the convening of the Peace Conference, the skepticism which marked its first sessions, and a certain want of faith which has since been manifested in various quarters in the practical value of the measures adopted, are all mainly due to a misapplication of this truth.

The measures formulated at The Hague do not constitute a "cut-and-dried scheme," but, on the contrary, they form an additional step in a natural, healthy, and orderly evolution of the forces of peace which have so effectively asserted themselves in the improvement of international relations during the latter half of this century.—Appletons' Popular Science Monthly for May.

CHEMISTRY IN MODERN LIFE.

The disinfection of the sick-room and the antiseptic methods which go far toward the creation of modern surgery all depend upon chemical products whose long list increases year by year. Crude drugs are now replaced by active principles discovered in the laboratory—morphine, quinine, and the like—and instead of the bulky, nauseous draughts of olden time, the invalid is given tasteless capsules of gelatin or compressed tablets of uniform strength and more accurately graded power. A great part of physiology consists of the study of chemical processes, the transformation of compounds within the living organism, and practically all this advance is the creation of the nineteenth century. Modern bacteriology, at least in its practical applications, began with a chemical discussion between Liebig and Pasteur as to the nature of fermentation: step by step the field of exploration has enlarged; as the result of the investigations we have preventive medicine, more perfect sanitation, and antiseptic surgery. The ptomaines which cause disease and the antitoxins which prevent it are alike chemical in their nature, and were discovered by chemical methods. Physiology without chemistry could not exist; even the phenomena of respiration were meaningless before the discovery of oxygen. The human body is a chemical laboratory, and without the aid of the chemist its mysteries can not be unraveled.—Appletons' Popular Science Monthly for May.

NEW METHOD OF PRINTING BOOKS.

The curved pages of the ordinary book are injurious to the eye, we are told in the New York Medical Journal, April 14, by F. G. Murphy. He shows how the curved page causes a constant change of the focus of the eye as it reads from one side to another, necessitating a continued effort on the part of the ciliary muscles. The light also falls unequally upon both sides, further interfering with a continued clear field of vision. He suggests, therefore, that the printed lines run parallel to the binding instead of at right angles to it so that all parts of the line would be at equal distance from the eyes and be equally lighted.—Literary Digest.

Lord Curzon on May 8 reported that conditions in Madras and Mysore were improving in consequence of recent rains, but that in other parts matters were becoming worse because of increasing heat and scarcity of fodder. He also stated that 5,617,000 were in receipt of relief.

Ex-President Cleveland, in the forthcoming College Man's Number of The Saturday Evening Post, discusses the oft-asked question: Does a College Education Pay? and makes out a strong case in favor of giving a young man the advantages of a university training.

Other contributors to this special double number are: President Patton, of Princeton; President Jordan, of Leland Stanford; President Butler, of Colby; President Angell, of Michigan, and President McClure, of Lake Forest. The fiction features are by Ian Maclaren, Jesse Lynch Williams, Charles M. Flandrau, Stanley Waterloo and W. L. Alden.

The College Man's Number of The Saturday Evening Post will be on all news-stands May 24th.

"PROFESSOR SINCLAIR, a high authority, says we are on the verge of great therapeutic discoveries concerning the value of the sun's rays. It can cure face ache, nervous debility, and insomnia, weak lungs, and chilliness. It is a finer stimulus than wine, electricity, or massage. The sun's rays must shine long on the parts affected."

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR.
FRED'K MADISON SMITH ASS'T EDITOR.

LAMONI, IOWA, MAY 16, 1900.

WHO WAS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE EXODUS OF THE CHURCH WEST?

It has been claimed by the people of Utah, that as early as August 6, 1842, Joseph Smith prophesied that the church would go to the Rocky Mountains. Elder B. H. Roberts in his work on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," page 102, states:—

Under date of August 6th, 1842, Joseph writes in his history: "I prophesied that the saints would continue to suffer much affliction, and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains, many would apostatize, others would be put to death by our persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure or disease, and some of you will live to go and assist in making settlements and build cities, and see them become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains."

Mr. Roberts gives us no reference to any publication or manuscript where this statement can be found, but we quote it as evidence that the church in Utah is committed to the position that the direction to go to the West came to the church through Joseph Smith.

Elder Anson Call, also an elder of the church in Utah, claims to have been present and heard this prophecy, but gives the time and place as Montrose, Iowa, July 14, 1843. (See his Biography in Supplement of volume 2 of Tullidge's Histories of Utah, p. 271.)

They further claimed that a company was selected on February 21, 1844, which was during the life of Joseph Smith, "to explore Oregon and California and select a site for a new city for the Saints." (See "Church Chronology," page 24.)

After alleging all this, now comes George Q. Cannon, one of the First Presidency of the Utah Church, and makes statements which are positively in conflict with the foregoing claims. In a sermon preached by him in Salt Lake City, Utah, February 18, 1900, and published in Deseret Evening News for February 24, he made use of the following language:—

In Illinois we were threatened by our enemies with destruction. Appeals were made to the governors of the various States, and they were asked if we could find a home within their borders. There was only one governor who condescended to reply; I believe it was the governor of Arkansas. What were the people to do? They were environed by their enemies, and threatened with utter destruction; their property was destroyed, and everything they had which could be got hold of was wasted and stolen. Now, the Lord, in the organization of this church, had so ordered that there should be one man, and one man only at a time, that should have the word of the Lord for the people. Others might have equal priesthood; they might express their views, might teach and expound; but they had no authority to give the word of the Lord in written form or to give general counsel for the government of the whole people. There was but one man who had that authority. At that time that man was Brigham Young. He stood at the head of the church, and was recognized and accepted by the people as the mouthpiece of the Lord to them. He declared unto them what the Lord's will was concerning their movement; but that which he suggested was most trying. It tried the faith of the people, and it is not to be wondered at that many shrank from accepting it. He pointed out the way of deliverance—to launch forth into the wilderness, putting their trust in God that He would lead them to a place of safety, where they could dwell in peace, free from the annoyance and from the persecutions of their enemies. . . .

There was no hesitation among the faithful, whose minds were prepared, and who were living in such a manner as to have a knowledge for themselves. Everyone went to with his might, including the women and children who were capable of labor, to prepare for a journey in a direction that had been pointed out, but the end of which none of them knew. I was sick in Nauvoo at the time. My folks expected that I would die. My uncle, President John Taylor, came back from the Pioneer camp for me when I recovered a little, and took me out as far as the camp had gone—to Mt. Pisgah, Iowa. I remember very well the feelings I had in passing the hundreds of families on the road, and not one of them knew where they were going. They started out on this journey without a clear conception in their minds as to where the journey would terminate. Nothing definite was known about this country. The Rocky Mountains were known, but the valleys of the Rocky Mountains—what they were and whether they were fit to live in—were not known.

If Mr. Cannon is right, all the claims made regarding Joseph Smith planning this Western Exodus and predicting the work to be done in the Rocky Mountains, is false. Joseph Smith knew nothing about it.

According to Mr. Cannon, there came a time while the church was in Illinois when it was threatened with destruction; appeal was made to the governors of the various States, and they were asked if a home could be found within the borders of these States; there was but one man who had authority to give the word of the Lord to the church; "he stood at the head of the church, and was recognized and accepted by the people as the mouthpiece of the Lord to them;" "he pointed out the way of deliverance—to launch forth into the wilderness;" "there was no hesitation among the faithful;" they followed the lead of the man who was thus directing; though "the valleys of the Rocky Mountains — what they were and whether they were fit to live in—were not known; and" "at that time that man was Brigham Young."

Then Joseph Smith did not prophesy that the Saints would be driven to the Rocky Mountains; he did not describe those valleys as Elder Anson Call affirms; there was no company selected in his time "to explore Oregon and California and select a site for a new city for the Saints." On the contrary, if Mr. Cannon is right, the people at the time Brigham Young assumed the leadership was in doubt as to where to go, so much so that they appealed to the various governors of States for shelter ere the word came through Brigham Young to launch forth into the wilderness; and they obeyed, preparing "for a journey in a direction that had been pointed out, but the end of which none of them knew."

Thus does the foundation slip from under these would-be leaders, and out of their own mouths are they condemned.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

When a man and his wife are separated and the family divided, is it not the duty of the priests and elders to inquire into such matters and seek to settle such difficulties?

A man and his wife have no business to so separate and divide the family. It usually happens that when they do so separate it is the result of long continued disregard of the rules of right conduct on both sides and quarreling; a condition of affairs in which priests and elders do not care to interfere, and with which the parties themselves will not tolerate an interference. Both parties are usually in such condition of mind that they will not listen to either teacher, priest, or elder.

If such separation becomes known to the officers of a branch, they should make such inquiry as the case might require, and if practicable seek to induce the parties to be reconciled to each other. But there are cases where this is apparently impossible, for the reason that both the man and the woman will not give the consideration each to the other which they should. In such cases the bond becomes intolerable, and in separation only can either have peace of mind or body.

Does a person getting a divorce on the ground of desertion have a right to marry again according to the law of the church?

"Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery; and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery." (Matt. 19: 9.)

The church does not recognize desertion as a proper cause for divorce. It is, however, plain that if either husband or wife leaves a lawfully constituted companion it is a virtual putting such companion, husband or wife respectively, away, and makes it impossible for such companion to keep the marriage bond. The law of the land recognizes such desertion, if long continued, as constituting a breach of the marriage contract, and permits the deserted party to secure a legal annulling of the bond. In such cases the innocent party should be free, entirely so. The church has said virtually that such deserting party, husband or wife, is guilty of crime against the innocent party, though no actual transgession has occurred. If the person securing the divorce is the one in transgression, and has secured such divorce from improper motive, he or she should not be received into the church, or be retained in the church. It is, however, impossible in most cases to determine who is in the fault.

Where the separation is mutual, it would seem that the courts and the church are both powerless to furnish a remedy.

Does the church recognize other cause for divorce except adultery or fornication.

No. The church recognized but one absolutely justifiable cause for divorce, the one named in the question.

If a woman refuses to do the part of a wife and mother by her family, and the husband gets a divorce for desertion and marries again, should he be expelled from the church for adultery?

This would depend upon the conditions of the specific case, the cause or causes which led her to desert her husband; his treatment of her, and whether the husband be not in the fault in part or in whole, and whether the wife was not justified in getting out of an intolerable bondage, equivalent in effect to being put away. This question would need to be determined in each separate case that might occur.

Should such a woman be expelled from the church, after proper efforts have been made to bring about a reconciliation?

The answer to this question would be much the same as the one just given regarding the husband. No one answer will fit all cases. A woman driven from her home by a succession of indignities, abuses, and wrongs which make her stay intolerable, ought to be pitied of both men and God, rather than scorned and cast out. So, also, in the case of a man thus put away. They should be borne with if themselves innocent of wrongdoing, and let them answer to God at the judgment day.

Does the committing of adultery by husband or wife give the other the right to a divorce and remarriage, and still retain membership in the church?

Yes, as we understand the laws of marriage. In such case the innocent party is free, if he or she chooses so to be. In case of adultery, the injured party should at once withdraw from living as a companion with the guilty one, if he or she wishes to avail himself or herself of the right to divorce.

ADDRESS YOUR MAIL RIGHT.

We wish to call the attention of our readers to the notice of the business manager, Bro. John Smith, in this issue. We desire especially to call attention to the manner of addressing mail to this institution. All letters of business should be directed, as Bro. Smith instructs, to "The Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E," while those having personal business with him should direct their letters to John Smith.

All matters intended for publication or for the use of the editors, should be directed to "Editors Herald." It is important for our subscribers and patrons to remember this. All letters and articles for publication, all clippings, papers, magazines, etc., and all literary matter should be mailed to the editors, while all moneys, drafts, orders for publications, subscriptions, renewals, etc., should be sent to the Herald Publishing House. Remember this and thus help us.

IN passing on the train to his home, Bro. N. C. Enge fell in company with a Baptist minister of the town of Winlock, Oregon, who expressed a wish for him to come to Winlock, which of course Bro. Enge could not do. Bro. Enge failed to get his address; but as the place is small he thinks that Bro. Goodwin can easily find him.

Bro. Enge also met two old-time Saints on whom he wishes Bro. Goodwin to call, Nils Olsen Shauts, at the home of James Shauts, 107 Cord St., Salem, Oregon.

We hope that Bro. Goodwin can make it pleasant to call on these people, "For the sake of auld lang syne."

BY the kindness of Mr. G. H. Van Houten, secretary, we have received a Premium List of the Iowa State Fair, which fair is to be held at Des Moines August 24 to September 1 inclusive.

The list shows a great increase of interest and attractions. There has been an increase in the rate of premiums and a decrease in cost of accommodations for exhibitors and visitors; the management evidently intending to make this the record breaking fair of the State's history.

List may be seen at the Herald Office, at any time by those interested in the Fair. Take a look, be convinced, and attend the Fair.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Committee on Examination and Revision of History has been busy of late "reading history" in the Historian's office.

The Board of College Trustees and Directors is completely organized now, having chosen Bro. Wm. Anderson president, I. W. Allender secretary, and Bro. Daniel Anderson treasurer. Thus organized the Board is prepared to give prompt attention to matters demanding their attention. We bespeak for them the hearty support and assistance of the Saints.

Elder Warren E. Peak is pleased with his first impression of Galien, Michigan. So he writes us under date of May 7.

Sr. E. Sartwell, of Savanna, Ill., writes stating that the "Saints of Savanna would be pleased to have the address of the Bishop's agent of the Kewanee district, Northwest Illinois, through the HERALD." His name and address is, D. C. Smith, Dahinda, Ill.

The senior editor of the HERALD went to Independence, Missouri, Saturday, to attend to some matters of church business.

Bro. Levi Gamet, writing from Clearwater, Nebraska, under date of 13th inst., says he expects to go soon to Bonesteel, S. D., where he expects to join Bro. Whiting and to coöperate with him in tent work for part of the summer.

The Graceland College Board and Faculty are at work upon the new catalogue, which they hope to have out soon. Friends of the college should see that our catalogue is placed where it will do good. The Board, no doubt, will be glad to send to any asking, especially to missionaries, who should be able to answer questions concerning the college.

Our readers, no doubt, will notice by the heading of this number that there has been a change made in the editorial department of the HERALD. Bro. R. S. Salyards, who has for many years filled the position of assistant editor, has been relieved of this work and his place is now filled by the one named in our heading. Bro. Salyards in addition to his work as Church Secretary is now doing clerical work in the office of the Presidency, where, no doubt, the demands upon his time will be great. We trust the change will not be for the worse, at least.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 5.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

THEIR GODS WAS THE CREATOR.

QUETZALCOATL was the Toltec creator. (See Prehistoric America, p. 274.) Zamna and Cukulcan are by Nadaillac identified as the same person as Quetzalcoatl. (Prehistoric America, p. 274.) Vivacocha and Pachacamac of Peru was the creator. (Myths of the New World, pp. 186, 187, 341.)

Manibozho "is always placed in antagonism to a great serpent, a spirit of evil." (Ibid., p. 80.) "Manibozho, Nanibojou, Missibizi, Michabo, Messou," are "all variations of the same name in different dialects." (Ibid., p. 197, compare with p. 172.)

The Aztec people were warlike, yet their great god of war was said to have been born of a holy virgin. (See Panorama of Nations, p. 413.) So that all the great gods of the red race were born of a virgin.

> Quetzalcoatl . . . was born of a virgin in the land of Tula or Tlapallan, in the distant Orient, and was high priest of that happy realm. . . . Of white complexion, clothed in long white robes, and, as many of the Aztec gods, with a full and flowing beard. When his earthly work was done he too returned to the East, assigning as a reason that the sun, the ruler of Tlapallan, demanded his presence.—Myths of the New World, pp. 214, 215.

We noticed before that Aztlan, Tlapallan, Tulan, Tulan-Zuiwa, and Amaqemecan, are different names for the same place or country—the distant Orient — to which the Toltecs, Quiches, Aztecs, and Chichimecs pointed as the birthplace of their "fathers and mothers." They "came from Tulan, from the other side of the sea." So that the native races above named came originally from the same place that their culture-god came from, and this god was born of a virgin "over there"! What a wonderful story! Their chief god was the creator; he was born of a virgin; he came here from the east.

Says John T. Short:—

> From the fabulous Hue hue Tlapalan, this mysterious personage came to Tulla, and became the patron god and high-priest of the ancestors of the Toltecs. . . . He condemned sacrifices, except of fruits and flowers, and was known as the god of peace; for when addressed on the subject of war, he is reported to have stopped his ears with his fingers.—North Americans of Antiquity, pp. 267, 268.

Sahagun, the missionary, was asked by the natives "whether his home was in Tlapallan," thus showing that this distant Orient, where this culture-god was born, was across the sea. (Myths of the New World, p. 106.)

Speaking of these culture-gods, Mr. Brinton says:—

> They are credited with an ethical elevation in their teachings which needs not blush before the loftiest precepts of Old World moralists. According to the earliest and most trustworthy accounts, the doctrines of Tonapa [or Viracocha] were filled with the loving kindness and the deep sense of duty which characterized the purest Christianity. "Nothing was wanting in them," says a historian, "save the name of God and that of his son, Jesus Christ."—Myths of the New World, p. 337.

Yes, dear reader, Mr. Henry George was right when he said, "Mexico, as Cortez found it, showed the superimposition of barbarism upon a higher social development."

At every turn, says Nadaillac, South America presents vestiges of a vanquished race of a culture now lost.

That is just what the Book of Mormon has been telling us about for nearly seventy years, and the more they stir up these myths and antiquities the more evidences they furnish us poor ignorant dupes to make a defense in its behalf!

These myths tell us that the ancestors of the Nahua stock came originally from the other side of the sea—from Tulan or Tlapallan. Then they go on to say that a god who was born of a virgin in that distant Orient came to Central America or Mexico to preach to the ancestors of the Toltecs. Then he returned to that distant country after his mission work was finished, with a promise that he would return again.

Don't we see again that the author of the Book of Mormon had good hindsight? He brings the ancestors of the native race from Jerusalem (Tulan or Tlapallan). Then he says that Jesus came here to America to feed his sheep—preach to them—and set up a Christian church in America, in a Christian community, with a Christian culture. That accounts for the doctrines of Tonapa, which "were filled with the loving kindness and the deep sense of duty which characterized the purest Christianity." Ah, say they, "nothing was wanting in them, save the name of God and that of his son, Jesus Christ." Does "the purest Christianity" come from the Devil? Who is the author of the purest Christianity? Could these Toltecs find it growing in America? Was it a product of the hills or the valleys? Did it flow to them in their rivers, or drift to them from the ocean? The author of Christianity says that it came from above, and that is the way that it came to America in prehistoric times.

Again; did you notice how these myths dovetail with the Book of Mormon story? Jesus was born of a virgin, near Jerusalem; and the Lehi and Mulok colonies came from Jerusalem. You see that the ancestors of the native races came from the same place or country that their culture-god came from. This culture-god is the creator, he was born of a virgin at Tulan. Now, dear reader, cannot you see Jesus in this story? Who else was ever born of a virgin? Who else is the creator in flesh! Ah; the disciples never stole the dead body of Jesus, because his live footprints are found in America. We can see then that Jerusalem must be the distant Orient. When the Aztec priests chanted and "sang of Tulan, the cradle of their race," it was the world's famed Jerusalem that they had in mind. No other place or country will fit the myths.

Josiah Priest, who wrote soon after the Book of Mormon was published, says: "The greater part of the present American natives are of the Tartar stock." (See American Antiquities, p. 285.) That won't do; because the natives say that they came from the same place or country that the Savior came from. The creator, they say, was born of a virgin at Tulan, and that is where they came from. Do we not see it will not do to bring the ancestors of the red race from China, or Japan, or Italy, because the Son of God was not born there, and no other place will fit the myths but the place designated in the Book of Mormon!

It is said that "Joe Smith" was a "well digger" and a "gold digger," "an ignorant boy;" but if we make him the author of this book, or Oliver Cowdery either, don't we see that they must have dug deep into these myths and antiquities? They get their stories about right every time. How do you account for that? How fatal it would have been to their story had they brought Lehi and Mulok from Japan or Rome? If you had attempted to write up this religious "fraud," would you have thought of all these little things? How could you have done so seventy years ago, when little or nothing was known about these myths in those days? And even now, who cares to read such things? How many have laid this paper aside as unworthy of notice, looking for something better and more entertaining? If we will but look at it from this point of view we will see that the book has the right "earmarks," and that it was written by an eyewitness of what is related.

In 1833 Mr. Josiah Priest said that "the Peruvians were doubtless from China originally, and the Mexicans from a more northern region, Mongol, Tartary, and the Japan islands." (American Antiquities, p. 342.) He thinks that some Egyptians and Phoenicians had landed in America, in both north and south, at some remote time (p. 342). Here were Scythians, and Carthagenians, and Israelites (p. 344, and Atlantis, p. 314), Hindoos (p. 181), Welsh (p. 236), Danes (333), Scotch (p. 399), Sicilians (p. 106), and Scandinavians (p. 284), and some Malays and Polynesians

(p. 295). The exterminated race (the Mound Builders) he thinks were Malays (see p. 288). The Romans were here too (pp. 42 and 389); Australasian tribes and Greeks, Persians, and even Germans (p. 399).

Mr. Priest quotes authorities in his book as late as 1832-33 (see pp. 395, 124, 145, 379), and as early as 1815 (p. 96). One reference bears date 1826, on page 87; one bears date 1829, on page 312; one bears date 1828, page 120; another one bears date 1826, page 286.

Now the point to these dates is this: they cover the period in which Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith are said to have been at work on the manuscript from which the Book of Mormon was published. It was Cowdery, Elder D. H. Bays thinks, who was expecting "to share the profits arising from its sale." It is Cowdery now that takes Sidney Rigdon's place in the Mormon fraud—"a man the equal of Sidney Rigdon in point of scholastic attainments and personal polish." (See Doctrine and Dogmas, of Mormonism p. 25.) But pray tell me where to look in the Book of Mormon for any "modern" "scholastic attainments." The man who wrote that book had no such attainments. He started out with a theory of his own, a theory quite different from any other in the 'twenties. Mr. Priest's book is a fair representation of "scholastic attainments" in those days. Why didn't Cowdery catch on and bring a colony from Japan, Rome, Germany, China, etc., and thus make a book that would not fit the myths anywhere? How came he to think about Jerusalem, and thus make that place fit the Aztec and Toltec Tulan, Tlapallan, the place where our Lord was "born of a virgin," and became high priest of that realm?

THE RED MAN SAW THE WHITE MAN COMING.

"Historians have marveled at the instantaneous collapse of the empires of Mexico, Peru, the Mayas, and the Natchez, before a handful of Spanish filibusters." (Myths of the New World, p. 220.) But had they only known what their forefathers in a remote time had said concerning the coming of the white race, they might have found an explanation. Nephi had a vision concerning the coming of the white race and the rise of a mighty nation upon this land. He predicted that the red man would be smitten and scattered by his white brethren, but afterwards would be cared for by them and nourished. (See 2 Nephi 11: 13; 1 Nephi 7: 1, 2.)

When Hernando de Soto on landing in Peru first met the Inca Huascar, the latter related an ancient prophecy which his father Huayna Capac had repeated on his dying bed, to the effect that in the reign of the thirteenth Inca, white men (viracochas) of surpassing strength and valor would come from their father the Sun and subject to their rule the nations of the world. "I command you," said the dying monarch, "to yield them homage and obedience, for they will be of a nature superior to ours."

The natives of Haiti told Columbus of similar predictions long anterior to his arrival. The Maryland Indians said the whites were an ancient generation who had come to life again, and had returned to seize their former land; and the Lenape of the Delaware told the Moravian missionaries that it was an ancient belief that divine men should come to them from the east, and for these they took the first Europeans.—Myths of the New World, p. 221.

"For a very long time," said Montezuma, at his first interview with Cortez, "has it been handed down that we are not the original possessors of this land, but came hither from a distant region under the guidance of a ruler who afterwards left us and returned. We have ever believed that some day his descendants would come and resume dominion over us. Inasmuch as you are from that direction, which is toward the rising of the sun, and serve so great a king as you describe, we believe that he is also our natural lord, and are ready to submit ourselves to him."—Ibid., p. 220.

Father Lizana preserved the following Maya prediction:—

"At the close of the thirteenth Age of the world,
While the cities of Itza and Tancah still flourish,
The sign of the Lord of the Sky will appear,
The light of the dawn will illumine the land,
And the cross will be seen by the nations of men.
A father to you, will He be, Itzalanos,
A brother to you, ye natives of Tancah;
Receive well the bearded guests who are coming,
Bringing the sign of the Lord from the daybreak,
Of the Lord of the Sky, so clement yet powerful."—Ibid., p. 222.

Mr. Brinton says:—

The "Books of Chilan Balam" copied in facsimile by the late Dr. C. H. Berendt are in my possession. They contain several ancient prophecies of a similar character.—Ibid., p. 222, note 1.

Thus we see an undercurrent at work in the native mind which many writers and readers have failed to understand. These prophecies pointed to the advent of a white race from the east, and wrote the doom of the red man to submission, homage, or obedience. That appears to have been the reason why the Indians in many instances submitted to the white man's yoke.

Mr. Brinton says:—

Few tribes were destitute of such presentiments. The Chickasaw, the Mandans of the Missouri, the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, the Muyscas of Bogota, the Botocudos of Brazil, the Araucanians of Chili, have been asserted on testimony that leaves no room for scepticism, to have entertained such forebodings from immemorial time.—Ibid., p. 256.

Thus we see Nephi's prophecy crops out. These "forebodings" had been handed down from time "immemorial."

Lizana, one of the first missionaries, relates a myth concerning the end of the world by fire, a prediction by a Maya priest which reads:—

"At the close of the ages it hath been decreed,
Shall perish and vanish each weak god of men,
And the world shall be purged with a ravening fire.
Happy the man in that terrible day,
Who bewails with contrition the sins of his life,
And meets without flinching the fiery ordeal. —Ibid., p. 256.

In his autobiography, the celebrated Sac chief Black Hawk, relates that his great grandfather "was inspired by a belief that at the end of four years he should see a white man who should be to him a father." Under the direction of this vision he traveled eastward to a certain spot, and there, as he was forewarned, met a Frenchman, through whom the nation was brought into alliance with France.—Ibid., pp. 310, 311, and Life of Black Hawk, p. 13.

But these examples are surpassed by one described in the Atlantic Monthly of July, 1866, the author of which, the late Col. John Mason Brown, has assured me of its accuracy in every particular. Some years since, at the head of a party of voyageurs, he set forth in search of a band of Indians somewhere on the vast plains along the tributaries of the Copper-mine and Mackenzie Rivers. Danger, disappointment, and the fatigues of the road, induced one after another to turn back, until of the original ten only three remained. They also were on the point of giving up the apparently hopeless quest, when they were met by some warriors of the very band they were seeking. These had been sent out by one of their medicine men to find three whites, whose horses, arms, attire, and personal appearance he minutely described, which description was repeated to Col. Brown to the warriors before they saw his two companions. When afterwards, the priest, a frank and simple-minded man, was asked to explain this extraordinary occurrence, he could offer no other explanation than that "he saw them coming, and heard them talk on their journey."—Ibid., pp. 311, 312.

Such are some of the "presentiments" or "forebodings" of the red man. We may be unwilling to rank them as divine inspirations. Swedenborg described the conflagration going on at Stockholm when he was at Gothenburg, two hundred miles away!

Seneca was born B. C. 2 [various authorities place this date from 3 to 8 B. C.], and died A. D. 65. This man prophesied away back there of "a New World across the waters to be revealed in coming ages." Mr. Prescott says that this "is perhaps, the most remarkable random prophecy on record. . . . It was the lucky hit of the philosopher rather than the poet." (Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 2, chap. 1, footnote, 1, p. 149.)

Just such unconscious predictions may be found in the Bible. Both Daniel the prophet and Nebuchadnezzar the king must have caught a glimpse of the New World across the waters "to be revealed in coming ages."

Nebuchadnezzar's metallic image was the coming history of the old world's nations; the skeleton of history, human national history, represented by the human body! But the mountain of Daniel 2: 45 was no part of the territorial image; it lay at a distance from it, and was no part of it. It was not a part of the clay, or iron, or brass, or silver, or gold; but a mountain, and no part of the image whatever, no more than the stone was a part of the image.

The old world's empires moved from east to west,—"Westward the course of empire takes its way,"—but the stone kingdom did not move in that direction, but just the reverse; it struck the image at its feet. (Dan. 2: 34.) "Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together." (Verse 35.) This stone, you see, did not hit the image on the head, or on the arm or breast. (The feet of the image were made before the stone reached it.) It struck the iron and clay first, then the brass, then the silver part of the image, and the head of gold last. Thus we see it moves from the west towards the east. The mountain, then, from which the stone was cut, must be found westward from the image, because it is the stone that moved eastward and not the mountain.

Preachers sometimes tell us that this stone kingdom commenced to roll from Jerusalem nearly nineteen centuries ago. But that Pentecost kingdom could not have been the stone of Daniel, second chapter, because the Pentecost kingdom started at the wrong time and place to fit this chapter. That kingdom commenced to roll from Jerusalem,—Asia,—and that is where the silver and the gold divisions of the image were located. The two first divisions of the image (the gold and silver) were in Asia. The brass, iron, and clay parts were westward, in Europe, Greece, and Rome. Now then, if that stone started to roll from Jerusalem, don't we see that it would strike the image on the breast, or arms, or head, or neck! The feet and toes were not there. In fact, they were not made yet!

The Roman Empire and the Christian Era commenced nearly together. The "Augustan Age" was the period in which Christ was born. These were Rome's best days. The "Empire" lived and ruled the world about four hundred years, as one empire; but Valentinian, the Roman Emperor, who ruled between 364 to 375 A. D., "Divided the empire with his brother Valens, and afterwards Rome and Constantinople usually had each an emperor." (See Bancroft's Footprints of Time, p. 128.) Thus the two legs of the image appeared. We can see, if we will take the time to think, that the Roman Empire at the time of Christ's preaching in Asia does not fit the image of Daniel second chapter, at all, because the kingdom or empire was not yet "divided," which had to be to make both legs. (See Dan. 2:41.)

But after the empire became divided into two parts, east and west, why, then it fit the image all right, by giving it two legs to stand on. Before this division was made it was standing on one leg only. The legs of the image were made one at a time, then the feet and toes later on. The empire began to fall to pieces by invasions about 400 A. D., and the rise of our modern nations in the Old World made the feet and toes. And it was after the image was made, toes and all, that Daniel said to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou sawest till" (or thou sawest up to the time of or until) "a stone was cut out without hands," etc., showing clearly that the image was completed and that there was a space of time between that event and the stone kingdom starting to roll from the west, before it struck the image.

The "mountain" was westward from the image, and no part of it; hence Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar must have caught a glimpse of the New World when they saw the little stone kingdom rolling eastward.

EXTRACT FROM LIFE OF DOUGLAS.

The circuit to which Judge Douglas was assigned was the most perplexing and annoying. It included the Mormon settlements, and there was a constant conflict between the "Saints" and "Gentiles." Some of the most exciting scenes of his life were spent in the judicial and other proceedings growing out of the turbulence of the people connected with the Mormon leaders. Joe Smith and his people were accused of all the crimes in the calendar, particularly with all the horse stealing committed in that section. Whether true or false, it was almost impossible to prove by sufficient legal testimony the guilt of the parties accused. The consequence was that an embittered state of feeling gradually grew up between the Mormons and the rest of the people, and these exasperated feelings often led to deeds of violence. Joe Smith was the head of the Mormon Church and people. The people held the court reponsible if the prisoners escaped conviction, and the Mormons denounced the court for inclining always to the oppressors of the chosen race. One trying scene in his judicial career will suffice to illustrate the difficulties attending the administration of justice in cases where the Mormons were parties, and at the same time serve as an illustration of the boldness and Jackson-like determination of Stephen A. Douglas. Joseph Smith had been indicted for some offense and was put upon his trial before Judge Douglas. While the case was proceeding, the people who had collected from all parts of the country to see the prisoner, and, as they hoped, to rejoice at his conviction, became excited by the thousand stories told of Mormon outrages. Smith was represented to be, as he was in fact, the moving spirit of the sect, and it was supposed that if he were put out of the way the entire settlement, being deprived of their leader, would break up and leave the country. Moreover, Smith was by the populace held individually responsible for all the crimes charged against his people. On this occasion the multitude had become greatly excited, and it being whispered that the evidence would hardly justify a conviction, it was proposed by some one to enter the courthouse, seize the prisoner, and hang him. A gallows was at once constructed and erected in the courthouse yard, and a body of four hundred men entered the courthouse for the purpose of taking Smith and hanging him. As the mob boisterously and tumultuously entered and crowded toward the bench, near which Smith sat, the judge directed the sheriff to clear the courtroom, as these men interrupted the proceedings. The sheriff, a small, weak man, requested "the gentlemen" to keep order and retire, and attempted to enforce the request, but very soon informed the court that he could not do it. Gaining confidence by the confession of powerlessness on the part of the sheriff, and maddened still more by the sight of the prisoner, several of them climbed over the bar, and rushed toward Smith. The judge at once rose in his place, and, addressing by name a large-built man, who stood six and a half feet high, a Kentuckian by birth, and of great muscular strength said, "I appoint you sheriff of this court. Select your own deputies, and as many of them as you require. Clear this courthouse; the law demands it, the country demands it, and I, as judge of this court, command you to do your duty as a citizen bound to preserve the peace and enforce the laws." The newly and rather suddenly appointed sheriff "obeyed orders." He ordered the crowd to leave, the judge encouraging him all the while. The first, second, and third who refused to quit the courtroom were instantly knocked down by the powerful arm of the Kentuckian. Others were thrown out of the windows by him and his deputies, and the great crowd, baffled and discouraged by the repulse of their leaders, crowded out of the doors. In less than twenty minutes from the first entrance of the mob the courtroom was cleared. A murder had been prevented. The administration of law had been protected from a violent invasion. The prisoner's right to a fair trial by the courts of his country had been vindicated, and all this by the prompt action of the judge. A moment's delay would have been fatal; the least sign of hesitation would have sealed the prisoner's fate; in five minutes he would have been hanged, if indeed, he was not killed before taken out of the building.

The above extract is taken from the "Life of Stephen A. Douglas," published by Harper & Brother, New York, 1860, pp. 48–50. I would suggest to our opponents that the Mormons, or Saints, are not guilty of all accused. But recently here an innocent person had his entire house torn down and scattered. In bonds,

D. W. SHIRK.

LAW AND ORDER OF THE CHURCH.

Nearly one year ago my mind took up the thought of law and order of the church, and I then wrote on the subject, intending to send the same to your columns; but I laid the matter a way, thinking that possibly later I might change my mind, or that some one more competent might take up the thought. But on looking over the pages to-day, I concluded to send the article in hopes that my thoughts may do some good.

The word of the Lord in ancient and modern times, as well as our personal experience, teaches that there is safety in living in harmony with the law and order of the church; and when we do so we have a just claim for needed blessings, and when we fail we have not. The first I will notice is the departure from the law and order at some of our branch business meetings in the election of officers. To be in harmony with the law, a branch properly organized will consist of not less than six members, with the following officers: elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. It is true that the needed material sometimes will not justify the formation of a complete organization; hence we sometimes, for the sake of the work, partially organize, with a priest, a teacher, and a deacon. The point I wish to call attention to is, we elect elders to serve as priests and teachers, when there are present priests and teachers in good standing who have labored in their offices faithfully. But some one gets the idea that as Bro. A is a good man and is an elder, that it would be wise to elect him as priest or teacher.

Now while it is in harmony with the law for the elder to labor in any of the duties of the Aaronic priesthood when appointed, still it is not in harmony with the order of the church to elect him as priest or teacher when there are present and in good standing, priests and teachers. We are admonished by the Lord to learn our duties and do them. I confess that I would not consider it my duty to serve as priest or teacher when there were such present as were known to be called and ordained and had labored faithfully in those offices. My duty as an elder would be to go as circumstances permitted, to preach to those who had never obeyed, and to be in harmony with the law and order of the church.

We should be careful not to place responsibility on the elders that is intended in the law to rest on the Aaronic priesthood. If we do, we may hinder the elder from laboring in the field where he could do more good, and at the same time ignore the men that by virtue of their calling should be the proper officers of the branch.

We are again admonished to honor all men in their calling. The Lord in his wisdom appointed the two priesthoods, and we should honor every man in his calling when we find in him qualifications to do justice to the same.

Again, I have noticed a priest in charge of a branch for months when there were elders there. All will agree with me that the order of the church as contemplated in the law (D. C. 17) is for the elder to be in charge. (See also Book of Moroni 3, 4.) Here we notice the elders, priests, and teachers in harmony with the order of their calling. Now for us at our branch business meetings to place the work in charge of the Aaronic priesthood, when there are several members of the branch holding the Melchisedec priesthood and are in good standing, is certainly a departure from the law and order of the church.

I remember once in one of the largest branches of the church where the work was placed in charge of the priest, teacher, and deacon, where there were some of the Presidency, Twelve, High Priests, and Elders. In Doctrine and Covenants 120:8 we read that the High Priests and Elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership. Now, why will we ignore such a plain, positive statement, and place the membership in charge of those who are to assist the above? Again, paragraph 2, same section, reads, "A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch."

We would not think of placing the deacon in charge when all of the above were members of the branch. Then let us move and work in harmony with the law and order of the church.

I am glad that paragraph 2 makes the matter so plain; for there are some who take the ground that the priest is not to take charge of meetings only when there is no elder present. No matter who the elder is, they say he should take charge of all meetings. This at one time was a very popular idea.

Doctrine and Covenants 17:9–11 is speaking of the duties of branch officers, such as the presiding elder, priest, teacher, and deacon; and they may become officers of the branch by vote of the same, as is made plain in Doctrine and Covenants 120:2.

If, as some say, the priest is not to take charge of meetings when there is any elder present, then we ask, if the presiding elder be absent and there are six elders present, which of the six shall take charge, and who shall ask them? If the priest makes the choice, then he has power to give to others what he cannot take to himself; but if he is to remain silent until such time as he finds no elder present, then we ask, Who shall appoint one of those six elders to take charge? You might say the body will. I am glad that this church has long since settled this matter, and that according to law and order, the priest is not to take charge when the elder chosen by the vote of the branch is present, only by consent. Now does it not occur to you very plainly that the law and order of the church is to first choose the presiding elder? Then why ignore this when the surroundings and material present justify and demand it, if we will be in harmony with the law and order?

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 120:2:—

> If a branch, or district be large he who is chosen to preside should be an high priest, if there be one possessed of the spirit of wisdom to administer in the office of president; or if an elder be chosen who may by experience be found qualified to preside, as soon as practicable thereafter he should be ordained an high priest by the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the one ordaining, and by direction of an high council, or general conference, as required in the law.

Now, to be in harmony with the above, we should not only choose men who will come from the above and have the qualifications, but should not make any more that would hinder the order being complied with.

In the spring of 1894 the First Presidency recommended that several of the elders and seventy be ordained high priests. I stated at the time that I could see the wisdom of the move, for there were the names of men that were, because of their experience and qualifications, presidents of districts and missions, and were at the time acting as such; and to still serve as such and be in harmony with the law, they should be ordained. I noticed that many that were recommended would not accept the ordination, yet would still serve as presidents of districts and missions. To be in harmony with the law, if these brethren labored as standing ministry, they should have complied, if the recommendation of the Presidency was in harmony with the law, as it certainly was; then to refuse to accept and still serve as presidents of branches, districts, and missions, would not be. Again, in the report of the Quorum of Twelve bearing on the recommendation of the Presidency, they say that they place themselves on record as being opposed to taking men from the active ministry and placing them in the High Priests' Quorum, unless by revelation. We infer from this that when men are placed in the High Priests' Quorum they are not supposed to be actively engaged, but on the retired list. It has been a question in my mind, Where is the consistency in demanding a revelation to call men out of the active ministry to the High Priests' Quorum, and at the same time indorse men to that quorum who were not in the active ministry, but who were burdened with business cares? It seems to me that I could indorse the former if I could the latter, when at the same time and from that conference some who were considered as active men in the ministry and were named among the number for ordination to the High Priests' Quorum, were given missions to fields that according to the law should be in charge of the standing ministry. Now it would not be in order with the law of the church to give the Elders or High Priest missions to unorganized fields, when at the same time the Seventies were at home waiting and ready to go to the missionary field. No, the law says that the Twelve are to call on the Seventy first for gospel work, to preach the gospel as traveling ministers.

See also Doctrine and Covenants 120:3. In Doctrine and Covenants 122:8, 9, we have very plainly laid down the law and order of the church respecting the duty of the traveling ministry, the Twelve and Seventy, also the standing ministry. And in conclusion, I trust that we will in all our movements be in harmony with the law and order of the church.

THIEVES VS. CHRIST.

"Good morning," friend B., "could you please tell me why it is that so many professed Christians fly to the thief on the cross, when one is endeavoring to point them to Christ as being the true example?"

"Well, I think so. One reason is that 'birds of a feather flock together,' and 'we are known by the company we keep.' No true, reasonable, thinking person will look to the example of thieves for salvation, for 'thou [Christ] hast the words of eternal life;' and Christ says:—

My sheep hear my voice and I know them and they follow me.

But thieves and robbers will try to climb up some other way, and many shall seek by this unlawful procedure to gain entrance and shall not be able:

I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.—John 14:6.

There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4:12.

Therefore thieves are out of the question and Christ is all and in all to us.

C. A. B.

WHY NOT AVOID DOING SO?

There are, in the church, two priesthoods; namely: the Melchisedec, and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priesthood. Why the first is called the Melchisedec priesthood, is because Melchisedec was such a great high priest: before his day it was called the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God; but out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days, called that priesthood after Melchisedec, or the Melchisedec priesthood.—D. C. 104:1.

From the reading of this beautiful inspirational sentence, so fraught with direct information to the church in these last days, it may be considered imperative to refresh the mind in one at least of these immutable sayings, and that not with the slightest desire to impale, or even indulge in fault-finding and picking at and among brethren. Nay, verily; but rather with an affectionate, impressive feeling to better our condition, not only for usefulness in our several departments in the winning of poor souls to Christ, but in the continual onward and upward trend to that perfective plane to which we are or should be tending.

In the consideration of this important topic it may be wisely as well as truthfully said, that the gospel call found us one in one business pursuit and one in another, unthoughtful and careless of our lamentable condition; yes, having accustomed ourselves to various useless words and phrases, a very peculiar way of expression so to speak.

College? Yes, you may well talk of college, as some of us by reason of poverty's pinch, for excessive labor have not been privileged of even knowing the importance of a college, let alone being allowed an entrance; and while remaining in one, even, of its classic training departments. But notwithstanding this, and a deal more that might be said under that heading, it should not be for one moment expected that we are justifiable in continuing in that crude manner in which the gospel hailed us. Nay, verily; but as soon as we found ourselves within the pales of the church lawfully, having by the act of obedience, etc., achieved a testimony not only of its divinity, but of the imperative necessity of putting away as early as possible every evil and foolish practice that may have entwined its insidious fangs around us, this being one of them that is termed in the divine word vain repetitions, and perhaps may be considered the too frequent use of the name of the deity, aside from other useless sayings in vogue by too many of us, such as "as it were," "that's the idea," "you and I," "crack that nut," with many other useless fillings which we might notice had we the ability of penmanship wisely in doing so. The writer himself who may be addicted to some of these evils, and indeed perhaps others more injurious to our loved cause, if induced by brotherly love to see them, has ere this taken out his pencil and paper and marked down upon the hearing of a grand gospel sermon otherwise, as many as one hundred and fifteen and another time one hundred and nineteen times the name of "God," and fifty odd times the name of "Christ." Evidently, my brethren, this not as it should be. Then why not avoid doing so?

WALLSEND, N. S. W., April 10.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have returned home, and for some months now my labors have been confined to the regions round about my home. At the present time, besides laboring in the Hamilton and Wallsend branches, we are trying to plant the work in Islington, one of the towns near by. We hold a three night's mission there this week, and will establish a mission there one night each week. We hope to be able to do the same in some of the other towns before long; but we are greatly hampered in doing work of this kind by the lack of good, earnest, capable men with the time at their disposal to look after the branches. One of the branches here has lately gone through considerable trouble, and in the skirmish with the enemy of all righteousness many have been severely wounded, and consequently the missionary must give considerable attention to ambulance work. However, we look forward to brighter days in this part of the Lord's vineyard. All that is necessary is faithfulness on the part of the Saints, and the Lord has promised us that we shall see many gathered into the church on this island of the sea. Saints of Australia, let us hope for, pray for, and faithfully work for the accomplishment of such a gathering into the fold. The Lord has wrought many marvelous improvements here during the last few years, but he will do more, if we are only faithful.

That dread scourge, bubonic plague, is very prevalent in the capital of this colony, some one hundred cases having already developed, about thirty of which have proven fatal. So far no other part of the colony has become infected. But who can tell what a day may bring forth? Viewed in a scriptural light the wars, rumors of wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes in divers places, are indeed eloquent signs of the wonderful events which must shortly come to pass. "Men's hearts are failing them for fear" to such an extent in Sydney, on account of the plague, that many are migrating to the mountains at the wrong season of the year, the winter, to escape it.

How necessary, under these conditions, that Zion's watchmen should be continually on the watchtower! Saints, think of our responsibilities! Millions go down to death each year without having heard the sound of the gospel. What are we doing about it? Are we resting upon our oars? Or are we doing our best to warn them?

Yours in gospel bonds,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

DEEP CREEK, Wash., April 22.

Editors Herald:—In a few Heralds back I noticed a couple of letters from one Sister Hooker of Spokane, Washington. She spoke of money that was sent to Bro. Hiram Holt to defray his and Bro. Harris' expense to Spokane. This money was sent to Bro. Holt individually, to defray his and Bro. Harris' expense; Bro. Harris, for some reason unknown to me, did not come. Bro. Holt came and brought the remainder back, and it was given to defray his expense back to Seattle. So far as I know it was satisfactory to all those who gave to the assistance of Bro. Holt, that he should use this money to defray his expenses back. I hope this explanation will be satisfactory to all.

I am pleased to notice letters from Lagrange, Ohio, where I spent my early boyhood days. I would be glad to know whether any of my old friends at that time have embraced the true gospel with me. I have been a member of this church twenty years. I embraced the gospel in Pleasant Valley branch, Nebraska. Have never regretted it.

Yours in bonds,

W. T. HICKS,
President of Spokane Branch.

SWEETWATER, Texas, April 26.

Editors Herald:—Inclosed find a clipping from the San Antonio Express. We forward for the benefit of friends. The two ladies mentioned are members of the Latter Day Saint Church. Quite a number of elders will remember that they have been kindly cared for by them. Sr. Cora is the daughter of Sr. Merritt, and the widow of the late Bro. H. P. Curtis. They have our sympathy and prayers.

"Mrs. D. C. Merritt and Mrs. Cora Curtis, while crossing the Southern Pacific track at Starr Street, Monday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, in a buggy, were run into by a switch engine and four freight cars that were moving slowly. The buggy was turned over and the ladies thrown out. Mrs. Curtis escaped injury. Mrs. Merritt was badly bruised and sustained a broken arm and internal injuries. She was rendered unconscious, and was removed to her home, 1332 North Flores Street. The buggy was badly wrecked, but the horse escaped unhurt. The crossing at this point has no flagman."

The work here is slow; the inhabitants seem unconcerned. They seem to think if the angel has flown in the midst of heaven with the everlasting gospel to preach to men on earth, they would have heard it from his mouth and seen his huge wings. We are striving as best we can to make them understand, using kind words. Have made friends, and people are beginning to think Latter Day Saints are not very bad folks.

What disposition the April conference has or will make of me, I know not yet; but whatever it is, I shall try to be therewith content. God bless the work and all the Saints, is my prayer.

Yours in the one faith,

L. L. WIGHT.

A REPLY.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., May 1.

Editors Herald:—In your issue of April 25, page 282, under the caption of "A Correction," Elder R. R. Dana is charged with making "an attack on the missionaries laboring in California last year, calling" them "stalwarts in a reflective sense." The names of six of said missionaries are signed to the article named above; but the impress of it leads me to believe that it was written by the same person who in Herald of December 20, 1899, first applied the name of "stalwarts" to the young men of the church; and in harmony with this view, only did I intend to apply the name of stalwarts. Five of the six missionaries named are young men, and the other one is comparatively young.

The word "nesting," used by me, I will recall, and use the word laboring instead; so that instead of "nesting in the cities and towns," let it read, laboring in the cities and towns; for they were not idling away their time, but were active in their spheres and callings, but short distances with sidewalks and lighted streets to places of meeting, and the associations of Saints are luxuries common to the city missionary, but not common to sparsely settled country districts. And so far as I know or have had an opportunity to find out, all six of those missionaries were stopping in the cities, or large towns of this State, while Bro. E. Keeler and myself were placed in a country district, which has long waited for, and asked as well as hoped for the attention of some of the leading missionaries, but have waited in vain, and thus became discouraged, and the only branch disorganized. (See T. W. Williams' letter in Herald of December 20, 1899, last paragraph.)

The writer of "A Correction" says that my statements are "unwarranted" and "not true," and yet a letter written to this city (over the signature of he whom I believe to have been the writer of the article referred to above) said he had recommended my reappointment as a missionary. A strange combination this! to recommend a man as a minister for Christ, who at the same time had been guilty (?) of unwarranted misrepresentation of his fellows. Consistency is said to be a jewel, and if the old and the young were endowed with a larger degree of it, the redemption of Zion, very likely, would be hastened.

Now, brethren, if this explanation is a sufficient apology to satisfy you, then let us drop the controversy and meet as friends and brethren in Christ; but if not, there is a law for the punishment of calumniators open to all. I am willing to be tested there, if you demanded it, so far as I am concerned. Hoping this finds a place in the columns of the Herald, this must end the matter. Hoping that each have learned a profitable lesson, and the church and the world be none the worse for our colloquy, I am yours in bonds,

R. R. DANA.

On board steamer City of Erie,
Tuesday, May 8, 9 a. m.

Editors Herald:—We left Cleveland last night at eight, bound for Buffalo. Thunderstorm in night, and now this morning we find ourselves surrounded by ice fields which we encountered between four and five o'clock this morning when about eighteen miles from Buffalo.

It is now past nine, and the ice is growing thicker, and we are still seven miles from Buffalo, we are told, and we are grinding at a very tedious rate through the fields of ice that stretch away as far as the eye can reach, the fog preventing our seeing land if it is anywhere near. We hope to get in port before noon, and out on our journey eastward to-day; but matters look a little uncertain just now.

A decided change in temperature from yesterday. Weather very warm and pleasant yesterday when we left Kirtland in company with Bro. Stephenson, whom we met in Grand Rapids, Michigan, three or four years ago.

After leaving Lamoni on the day of conference closing, we went to Independence, Missouri, stopping for a few hours. Taking the evening train for St. Louis, we found our two daughters, Bessie and Lottie, with little Bessie, Baby Myron, and Richard waiting for us at the union station Sunday morning. A joyful meeting it was of course. Time fled, all too swiftly, and duty's call forces us to part from the loved ones, and Friday morning, May 4, we left for Cleveland. Going to Kirtland, we preached morning and evening in the old temple, now looking quite new, fresh, and attractive, both inside and out. Felt well, especially so in the evening in preaching to the people; am quite sure the Lord hasn't got through with Kirtland. The hills about this historic place look lovely in their spring robe of verdure, and it only lacks the principal thing to make it a desirable place of habitation for the Saints of God.

Whatever may be the individual or general opinion of our late General Conference and its developments in the minds of any or of all, one great and altogether important fact remains always as the conscious possession of the courageous, willing, and faithful heart, and that is that he who watches the sparrow's fall will surely guide, lead, and instruct him whose eye and heart is fixed on Him and whose fear of offense is toward him whose friendship and leadership alone can safely guide or permanently bless. We are feeling grateful to God this morning for evidences of his goodness and spiritual aid in the beginning of a new year of ministerial work. There can be no lack of individual endowment because of failure for which we are not individually responsible, and that's the everlasting comfort in this great latter-day gospel work.

The grinding and shaking of the vessel in the ice makes writing somewhat difficult, and for fear I'll lose my reputation as a scribe or penman in the fog of old Lake Erie I'll stop for the present.

In gospel bonds and hope,

MYRON H. BOND.

ROSLYN, Wash., April 24

Editors Herald:—The Herald and Ensign are welcome visitors at my home, as I enjoy reading the letters very much. I am thankful to see the gospel wending its way through the land as there are many honest-hearted to be gathered into the fold before the coming of the great day.

We have had no elders here since the 16th of October, 1899, when Brn. Holt and Chase were here and preached some to us in private houses. But we now have a church 24 x 36 feet in process of erection, so when any of God's servants come again they can preach the gospel in full and not be turned out.

There are a great many names on the church record, but they are scattered over a large territory. There are only a few located at Roslyn, so if there are any that would like to assist us in our undertaking, their assistance will be thankfully received. The building will cost us about $500, so you see we are trying to make the sacrifice. All money can be sent to to the writer, or branch clerk, Thomas Holmes, Roslyn, Washington.

There are a few who meet often together, and I feel that we are blessed by so doing. I wish to be remembered by the Saints in prayer. In bonds of the gospel,

JOHN HOLMES.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, March 26.

Editors Herald:—We are at present in the midst of the scare about the bubonic plague. The steamer just arrived from New Zealand, brings word that the plague is in San Francisco, and rumor has it that the American vessels will not be allowed to enter Papeete but be sent to some near island to discharge cargo. If so we may not be able to leave here for home but we still hope to be able to get off on her. If she does not arrive here for a few days from now we will be through our conference and will be ready to leave. The Saints are hoping I will stay until after conference, and I think will not give us our passage money until after conference.

Our buildings are nearly finished and we hope to be all through, painting and all, by Wednesday. There are about two hundred Saints here, and some four hundred or more will be here this week.

I called upon the consul a week ago last Saturday, and told him that as our conference was near the governor must soon remove his restriction or there might be a collision between us, as we were quite certain that there was no law that would sustain the governor. He went at once to the governor, who still refused. On Sunday the leading lawyer met the consul at the consulate and they talked about the matter. On Sunday the consul sent me a note requesting me to meet him at the consulate at eight a. m. Monday, and on the same day the governor sent me word that he would like me to see him at 9: 30 a. m., with the president of the Consul General, who would act as interpreter for us. I went at eight with Bro. Peterson to the consul who informed us of his stormy time with the governor, and when I told him of his request to see me at 9: 30, he concluded that he intended to retract, etc., etc.

As the governor sent word that he wished to see me alone, I went. At 10: 30 we met. He immediately spoke of Bro. Peterson and of his desire that the natives should learn the French and not English, and suggested that Bro. Peterson should write his sermons and have them translated and read. I told him that our elders did not write their sermons as other clerymen but spoke impromtu, and the difficulty would be for him at such a time to stop and write and translate. He again said that he did not wish any foreign language spoken here, and seemed somewhat nettled. I then said I did not care to talk further upon the subject, as it was in the hands of the consul. He was very angry at that, but spoke of our work here. He questioned me as to my influence with the natives concerning the sending of their children to schools, being industrious, paying their debts, collecting large sums from them for our own personal benefit, their dealing with traders, etc., all of which I answered. Finally he said: "I am very much pleased with your work in these colonies. I have been informed of it all before, and am highly pleased with it." He then asked me about our conference, sanitary measures, etc., and then I told him that our conference would bring natives to the island who never had seen land (only coral islands), and had known nothing of white people's ways except of the traders and missionaries, and that this would give them an opportunity to visit the stores and find out for themselves prices, so as not to be so completely robbed as they have been for years by the traders. I also told of a few samples of such robbery which had come under my observation, e. g., six pewter spoons being sold for $6 00 He was very much pleased with that idea and again spoke commending me. I then said I was pleased that my work had been such as to commend itself to him, and also grateful to him for having been so lenient with us heretofore, and now that we found ourselves at one excepting the question of Mr. Peterson, I hoped he would be able to liberate him speedily. Scarcely had that sentence been translated when he spoke out, "He is at liberty; only tell him to learn the language quickly." He then informed me that our religion or church would never be interfered with in these islands; but he thought we ought to send men here who could speak French. I told him we would be as bad off as now, for the natives do not know that language; but as soon as his schools were established in the islands and the natives learned French, then our missionaries might learn it at our college in Lamoni, and when here could begin their work at once. He seemed pleased with the idea. He asked me whether it would not be prudent to stop the conference if the New Zealand steamer brought news that the plague was spreading. I told him that I would willingly assist him in avoiding the spread of the plague, but now our people were on their way, and being once here they might as well do the business of the conference and immediately disperse to their different islands again. To this he agreed.

This in brief was my talk with the governor.

We feel rather more anxious concerning your conference than hitherto, and often lift our voices in supplication for aid for the Presidency, the Twelve, and all the church, now and during your conference.

We are more easy in mind concerning our conference than at other times. We are well and hopeful. We write with many and frequent interruptions, and in unavoidable hurry.

Will send by New Zealand steamer.

Your brother in the one faith,

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

COOK, La., April 22.

Editors Herald:—I wish to say a few words to the young Saints, if perhaps I may do a bit, yes a wee bit of good. I wish to impress them with the importance of prayer and consecration to God. O you dear young Saints, get low down before God; let him grind you down, till he gets you just where he wants you; until the last spark of self is dead and gone, and then he will lift you up gloriously, and put the living tongues of fire upon you, and a power in you that will shake men and make sinners and lukewarm professors tremble. Yes he will. O, dear Saints, lose no time in making your consecration for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, for the world is perishing around you, and you cannot move men to-day without the burning love of God and the divine fire. There is no end to what he can do for you. Keep going deeper and deeper, deader and deader, sinking in his blessed will, and his glory and power will be more and more manifested in your spiritual intensity. Her aggressive zeal was as a fire in the bones that could not be shut up. Deep humility, a life of prayer, careful and watchful obedience, constant sinking into deeper union stirs our souls, and in loving sympathy we are brought to God, that they might be shaken by his mighty power. Oh, love deep and intense; love to God going out in rapturous bursts of praise, breaking in upon all occasions. Jesus seems very real and very near. O, how lovely! He is so lovely. O praise him; it was love on fire not hidden, but expressed a glory-lighted countenance. There is certainly nothing dreadful about such an experience. One of the cleverest schemes of Satan is to persuade men, at every epoch in grace, that they have now got it all.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The truth is as Mr. Wesley states, That the riches of his glory, and the mystery of his will according to his good pleasure which he purposed in himself, has heights and depths which surpass all knowledge, even of the true believer. Need we fear that fire that turns on the searchlight that exposes the hidden hypocrisy; that consumes the tin and dross that irradiates both the inner and outer being; that refines the whole nature, till it reflects the nature of God. This is what we need, heart purity, which is a necessary preparation to see God. Matthew 5: 8. (See 2 Cor. 7: 1; Psalm 24: 3, 4; Heb. 13: 12; Acts 26: 18; 1 John 1: 7; Heb. 2: 11; 10: 19–24.) I want to go there, I do. I want to go there, don't you? If you do, now is the accepted time. The word of God is sure, and never can move. We shall in heart be pure, and perfected in love. Rejoice in hope; rejoice with me. We shall from all our sins be free. Now make your consecration. Put all on the altar of the Lord. Lord take me and all that is mine. Do what thou wilt; my life, my all is thine.

Thou hast a place for ev'ry one,
And hence a place, my Lord, for me,
Where all my lifework should be done
To glorify the Trinity.
That place, my God, is in thy mind,
O help me e'er that place to find.

Lord give me not another's place,
But give me work entirely mine;
Then help me do it by thy grace,
And let all see the work is thine.
An instrument, my God, I'd be,
To work or wait alone for thee.

In ev'ry place where thou dost see
Some work—however great or small,
That I can, Father, do for thee,
I'll gladly do it at thy call.
Touch ev'ry life thou can'st through mine,
And let the glory all be thine.

Give me my place, my work, each day,
With message fresh for every one;
Then work through me, my God, I pray,
Till all thou couldst through me is done.
Kept in my place and work each hour,
I would be guided by thy power.

MRS. M. E. BUNYARD.

CANTON, Ill., April 28.

Editors Herald:—At last, the long and dreary winter days having passed, spring has arrived, attired in her coat so green, making a scenery grand for the eye to gaze upon. And when for a moment I stop to think, the thought comes to me, If earthly things are so beautiful, heavenly things must be so far superior that language cannot express. Surely that grand and glorious place beyond is a place worth striving for. O, how many will be allowed to dwell in that holy place? It does seem that the wickedness that exists in the world to-day is almost, if not in some instances, inexplainable by the human tongue. O, what are the future days going to bring forth? Surely it behooves us as Saints to watch and pray, and pray earnestly. How much consolation there is in prayer. When we are tried and tempted, if we will only seek the Lord in prayer, he will not turn us away without a comforting word. How grand it is to assemble with children of one family in the house of prayer. It is so sad to see day after day, the people pass and repass the house of prayer, and seek the places of pleasure. Do they ever give anything but pleasure a thought? If actions were to speak their thoughts, a great many thoughts would be spoken.

As Saints we are so often judged by our actions, with people of the world. I have heard some of my brethren and sisters make this remark: "It is strange why we as a Christian body of people are watched so much closer than any other religious body." It makes my heart rejoice to think that we are a body that can stand the test of being watched and judged. We are living in a time that we can expect all manner of evil things done against us; but let this lessen not our faith, but rather increase it.

Oh for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe!

I often think when our missionaries go into fields to labor where so much evil and untruthful things are spoken of the Saints, probably everyone strange to them, not one they can call a friend, and when the twilight begins to draw around them, and they know not where to rest the weary body through the dark hours of night, surely then is their trying time, and a time to test their faith. It makes my heart ache when I read of how they suffer oftentimes by being mistreated by the people, when trying to preach this great and glorious gospel. But great will be their reward in the world to come, a reward that will far excel the $1,200 or $1,500 a year in this life. Precious is the gospel that is sold not, but given as freely as the air we breathe. Ever striving to live a life worthy to be called a Saint, In gospel bonds,

WILFORD, W. Va., May 6.

Editors Herald:—I have neglected for some time to write of the blessings we have received from our heavenly Father. We live about eighteen miles from any of the Saints and it is lonesome. Those not of our faith often tackle me on the scripture, but I manage to hold my own.

My wife was thrown from a horse last fall, and her collar bone was broken in two places as was also her shoulder. One night she awoke and said she never would get well until she was administered to. My father, Charles Moore, came and administered to her, and in a few days she was doing her work. I think that the Lord is on our side.

JOHN MOORE.

VERDELLA, Mo., May 1.

Editors Herald:—This is a new field in the gospel vineyard. No other Saints in this locality. We located here two years ago. People had never heard of Latter Day Saints, though they had heard considerable about the "Mormons." We distributed tracts and papers occasionally, and placed a paper holder in the post office, and still keep it filled with our church literature.

In September, 1898, the M. E. trustees allowed us the use of their chapel for Brn. J. D. and D. C. White to preach two evenings, where we had good audiences and attention to their excellent sermons. The report had been going the rounds that "Doctor Miller and his wife are Mormons—they believe in polygamy!" It had not reached our ears until after this preaching was done, which soon settled the question in the minds of those who heard them that the report was without a foundation of truth. The Congregational pastor attended both these services and afterward told his people privately that should we ever desire their chapel for preaching service to "let them have it, they are all right." He has since moved away, but we thank him for his kind Christian advice left behind.

In October, 1899, we sought the trustees again for their chapel for a series of sermons by Bro. F. C. Keck. They referred me to their pastor who "controls the pulpit, when it comes to bringing in another preacher, of other denominations, to hold a series of meetings; he holds the right to say who shall so occupy." I wrote him and received the following reply:—

"McCabe Chapel, Oct. 22, 1899.

"MRS. DR. E. F. MILLER,

"Dear Sister:—Your letter received this evening, and in reply will say I cannot consistently grant your request when I consider the vast difference in doctrine and plans of work between our respective churches.

"Very truly,

Just as I expected! So wasn't very much disappointed, but at once sought the trustees of the Congregational church and obtained it very freely—and Bro. Keck held the interesting series of meetings in November, which he wrote you about. Pen cannot describe the stir it created throughout the country. You will have to read it "between the lines" if you can. He closed with the good will of the majority of those who were regular attendants, and the privilege of using the church any time, also pressing invitations to come to Liberal, where some of our hearers live, and to four schoolhouses in the country.

But that "wicked one" was not asleep; he was slyly paving the way for his work, and soon Rev. Josiah Strong's "AntiMormon Leaflets" found their way into about every house in the neighborhood and surrounding country; and Rev. S. J. S. Davis' "Origin of the Book of Mormon, and Rise and Progress of the Mormon Church," was also passed around, in which, by the way, we have counted two hundred and ninety-eight misstatements and absolute falsehoods in sixty-five of its pages treating upon the Book of Mormon and rise of the church to 1844. "Anti-Mormon Leaflet" Number 3 is as bad for its size, and others nearly so, except number 7. All these distributions were made by professed Christians. It reminded us so much of how they treated Jesus; read his lamentation in Matthew 23: 23-34, and saddest of all is their fate—Rev. 21: 8; 22: 15, concerning "all liars," and those who "loveth and maketh a lie."

You will not be surprised that it was not so easy to obtain the church when Bro. Keck returned in January. Some of their members desired that a vote of their membership be taken. He was allowed to occupy a week with the understanding that the following Sunday the members would decide by vote whether he should occupy longer. When their meeting was called it resulted in six against and seven for Bro. Keck to continue, so the church is open until the first Tuesday in January, 1901, at least. It was almost an exciting time. People stood around the street in groups awaiting to hear the decision, some whose hearts were beating anxiously for us, others hoping we would be closed out. The news spread rapidly and the house was filled with glad hearts that night. Who shall say God does not answer prayer? "Such faith cometh not but by fasting and prayer."—Jesus.

Young and middle-aged men said they would build an arbor for Bro. Keck this summer if they closed the church.

He continued another week with good liberty and in humble spirit, which must surely bring forth good fruit. Though no baptisms as yet, several have expressed a belief in the doctrine; have "read the Bible as never before," also the Book of Mormon, and other church literature. Frequently echoes of the continuous agitation of the subject of the latter-day work greet our ears.

God speed the day when the pure in heart will be obedient. We almost feel like foreign missionaries, alone out here trying to open up the work paving the way for preaching. Our most convenient branch is Nevada, twenty-four miles distant.

Yours in the faith,

ELLA MILLER.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, March 12.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps a few lines from this corner of the world might be acceptable. Though we seem so far away we always feel rather awkward when writing to America. We have been so accustomed to sending you a letter in a few days that it really is discouraging to think of sending a letter so far and by so slow a route. We let the time go by without sending quorum report or report to the General Conference, but we hope that by the time we get ready to leave here we will have learned to prepare our mail in time to accomplish our wish in sending it. We have brighter hopes for the future, however, for the government has recently signed a contract to put on a steamer between here and San Francisco. It will make its first trip in September. It is expected to make the trip in ten or eleven days. It will make mail matters much better for us, but the fare will be double the present price.

We get along slowly with the language. It is so odd and so backward when compared with ours. One cannot express American thoughts in Tahitian; we are compelled to think in Tahitian. We both keep quite well, and if mail matters were better we would be quite contented. At present we are busy with building a house for conference, which will convene here in the capital on April 6. I think it is the first conference to be held here, though I am not certain. Both Protestants and Catholics are busy to stop the conference, but God rules over all. The Governor General stopped my speaking through an interpreter in November. I appealed to the American consul, but as yet the governor has made no reply. Am confident of the final outcome. Pray for us.

In bonds of peace,

J. W. PETERSON.

PARRISH, Ill., May 8.

Editors Herald:—I am busy here in gospel work, and hope to be found diligent at the post of duty the coming year. Bro. M. F. Gowell will join me here the 12th. I hope the Saints throughout the district will take notice and not forget our district conference which will convene at Brushcreek, June 9, at ten a. m. Presidents and clerks of branches should see that a correct report from each branch is sent in, in due time. Yours in hope of final success for the cause.

FRANCIS M. SLOVER.

HARLANVILLE, April 24.

Editors Herald:—I rejoice in this grand and glorious work of the Lord. He has abundantly blessed me. I have been afflicted for nearly three years. I received a testimony that if I would be administered to I should be healed; I called for the elders and was instantly healed.

Dear Saints, we ought to live humble and faithful. There are great blessings in store for us if we will only live for them. Let us all press on to the mark of eternal perfection, determined to reap the celestial reward, that we may come forth in the first resurrection, and feast at the supper of Jesus our Lord.

We are a little band of Saints; but we have a little Sunday school organized. Pray for us that it may be the means of bringing many precious souls to the kingdom of God.

Your sister,

ANNA HERRON.

BEAVER, Texas, May 7.

Editors Herald:—Saturday night, May 5, closed a debate at this place between the Missionary Baptists and the Latter Day Saints. Bro. A. J. Moore, of Beaver, Texas, represented the Saints, and Elder Bensen, of Vernon, Texas, the Baptists. We think good was done for the cause of Christ.

Most of the people here are Methodists. The preacher (that is, the Baptist) said he was down here in behalf of the Baptists, Methodists, Christians, Presbyterians, and all, to fight the Latter Day Saints. Before the debate was over he wished he had not said it. Bro. Moore defended the work well.

The Baptist had much to say about Joseph Smith, and that, too, in an unkind way; but it was for the worst to him. After the debate an intelligent man, a school teacher, went to Bro. Moore and said: "I never knew what you people taught before. I am glad I attended the debate, and want to congratulate you for the gentlemanly way you have acted your part in this discussion." We rejoice because the people are looking kindly on the gospel.

Sunday after the debate closed Bro. Sheppard preached, and at 2 o'clock p. m. Bro. Moore buried in baptism six precious little fellows, not fruits of the debate but children of Saints. At the prayer and confirmation meeting we enjoyed the Spirit of the Master sufficiently to bring tears to the eyes of those who do not see as we do.

We feel hopeful for the work in Texas this year. Our preaching at times seems useless, but who can tell the results.

Prospects for good crops was never if ever better than now. I hope and pray that the good Lord will protect the harvest and that the people of this part will reap abundantly, and that the children of God may remember him with his part, tithing. I believe they will.

Two brethren from near Independence, Mo., have located near here. We welcome them to our country. There is room for more.

My prayer is that God will bless his people. Your brother in Christ,

ED. L. HENSON.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, May 7.

Editors Herald:—Hastening preparations, I left home for my field of labor, May 1, and after making one or two stops enroute, reached Provo, Utah, Sunday morning, May 6. There I learned of the death of Sr. Sterrett, of Pleasant Grove, and hastened on, arriving in time for the funeral service at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Bro. Condit had already arrived, having been called from his work in Cache Valley by the sad event. The throng of people present at the funeral service gave evidence of the esteem in which our sister was held. The little chapel of the Saints was packed with people standing and sitting, and many outside could not gain admittance. It is difficult to appreciate the real value of the work Sr. Sterrett has done. She joined the Reorganized Church in 1865, and from then until her death she has been absolutely fearless in the defense of her faith. Her home has been the home of the elders, and there are probably few, if any of those sent to this mission who have not partaken of her hospitality. When she first accepted the preaching of gospel principles and came West she sacrificed every earthly tie and the sacrifice made in joining the Reorganized Church was scarcely if any less under the conditions then governing. How sweetly consoling it must be to such a one to realize as did Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day."

Bro. Condit expects to leave to-morrow to resume his work in the North, and I to do some preaching at Provo. My permanent mission address will be 1509 Washington Ave., Ogden, Utah.

In gospel bonds,

D. W. WIGHT.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

SELECT READING FOR JUNE MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

Sabbath visiting, in both town and country, is training many children to Sabbath desecration. This is a point that should be sedulously guarded, for the Sabbath is the key of all the week.

The isolation of a country child's life is in danger of fostering self-conceit, narrowness, and bigotry. Having little opportunity to measure himself by others, he is liable to think of himself more highly than he ought to think. Feeling himself sufficient unto himself, his mind does not broaden as it might do by taking in the thoughts of others. Lacking the attrition of crowded city life, his rough edges are not worn off, and he sometimes appears uncouth and boorish. When he comes to the city he is liable to be overcome by temptation, because it attacks him in unsuspected guise, and he has not grown strong through resisting it.

But country life for children presents counterbalancing advantages. Its fresh air and sunshine; its opportunities for healthful, outdoor work and play are invaluable. The country child is in large measure removed from corrupting influences and enjoys the companionship of his parents. There is apt to be more unity of family life since its members are so shut up to themselves for companionship. We are speaking now of farm life; a small village is often most unfavorable to childhood's proper development, as it combines many disadvantages both of city and country. Wise and close supervision is necessary to guard against the evil influences of the goods-box conclaves which gather on village street corners.

Country life fosters habits of observation, especially concerning plant and animal life. These are safeguards against temptation as well as avenues of pleasure. Children who, like Agassiz, form the acquaintance of every living thing within the sphere of their observation, have no more time for mischief, than he, in his manhood, had time for making money. By the way, is it not a beautiful compensation of Providence that gives to the daughter of this man, too intent on seeking knowledge to take time for money making, such wealth that she can, as she does, spend a million of dollars in giving the blessed Kindergarten to children in the crowded tenement houses of New York? Agassiz beautifully illustrates the benefits of country life for children. Longfellow says of him that

> Nature, the old nurse, took
> The child upon her knee,
> Saying, "Here is a story book
> Thy Father has written for thee.
> "Come, wander with me," she said,
> "Into regions yet untrod,
> And read what is still unread
> Of the manuscripts of God."
> And he wandered away and away,
> With Nature, the dear old nurse,
> Who sang to him night and day,
> The songs of the universe.

Agassiz well illustrates the independence of thought and character often developed in country children. When but a lad, laughed at because he would not accompany his school mates on what he termed "empty pleasure trips," he responded: "I will go my own way—and not alone," he added. "I will be a leader of others," which he was, emphatically.

It is a marked fact that many "leaders of others," were reared on a farm. In every city you will find that the majority of successful business men were country born and bred. Just here a word of caution for country reared fathers of city bred children: your children need more watchful care than you needed in your country home. "Nature, the dear old nurse," had not the opportunity of teaching them as she taught you; temptations surround your children that never enticed you, hence they need closer and tenderer care than you did in your childhood. Lacking this, many such children make shipwreck of life.

Honorable women not a few received in the country the training that made their succeeding city life a benediction. Alice and Phœbe Cary could scarcely have grown into the poets they were had not their childhood known the "clover-nooks" and the sweetbrier lanes of the country. On the other hand, their genius would never have blossomed and perfected such rich fruitage without the stimulating atmosphere of the great city. A proper blending of city and country seems best for full development.

Looking over the list of lady missionaries one is struck by the number who were country girls. As I write there rises before me the image of two young ladies, one from a western prairie home, the other from a New Jersey farmhouse; the one now teaching Christ in Mexico, the other in far away China. She was the youngest child of a mother widowed when she was a baby; a mother left with twelve children, for whom she must wring a living from a small New Jersey farm. That farm home had few luxuries, but it had the inestimable blessing of a strong-souled mother's influence, a woman who knew how to "serve God and be cheerful" in the darkest day. She infused her own faith and courage into her children, and saw them all grow into honored manhood or womanhood. They not only "rise up and call her blessed," but are blessing the world by living out the lessons she so patiently taught them. When her work was done, God took her home, then called her youngest daughter to teach Christ in China as she had learned him at her mother's knee.

Winter evenings on the farm afford good opportunities, which, utilized by carrying out systematic plans for reading, may result in thorough scholarship, as is so happily shown in the case of Mary Somerville, Mrs. Emma Willard, Lucretia Mott, and Maria Mitchell.

Country children receive a better training for citizenship, so far as gaining a knowledge of forms and methods of government are concerned, than city children do. The machinery of city government is too huge for children to grasp, besides being often so corrupt as to be unfit for their study. But the government of school district and township is quite within the comprehension of boys and girls. Most of our better country schools give instruction on these topics, and "school meeting" and "town meeting" furnish practical illustrations of what the schools have taught theoretically. De Tocqueville says the township is the unit and germ of all republican government; from its working children gain a good idea of the methods of State and National government. Many of our best statesmen grew up in the country, attended town meetings from boyhood and served as school directors and township officers. Thomas Jefferson and Daniel Webster are striking examples of this fact.

The country gives room to grow, to develop originality and strength of character; the city opens a field for exercising this strength. Most persons who have done work which has blessed the world have lived both in the country and in the city, usually spending their early years in the country—the years of preparation—and their late years, those of their crowning life work, in the city. The completely rounded life seems to need both its Nazareth and its Jerusalem.

Whether your home be in town or country, its spirit, not its locality, determines whether souls shall grow therein. Old fashioned doors have their panels arranged in the shape of a cross. This is not incidental; the custom orignated in the days of the Crusades. The cross-paneled door showed to every passer by that the dwellers in that house were disciples of him who died on the Judean cross; while those within looked out upon the world only through this symbol of Christian faith. May every home into which this book comes, like those old Crusaders' castles, be cross-paneled in a higher spiritual sense than they realized, so that all looking out from it may see life's duties in the light of the glorified cross; and all who look within may discern not the symbol of Christian faith simply, but the perfect working of that faith in human lives; in every doorway may there stand the children's Friend, with the benediction: "Peace be within this house."—Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

WE feel to-day like asking the readers of the Home Column, Have you read the little book written by Bro. Albert Haws upon the Sabbath question? If it should be that any of you have not, let us strongly urge that you do so. This is a question which is constantly raising its hydra head to be met and combatted, and it seems to us that Bro. Haws has furnished not only enough but a superabundance of material for most successfully doing this. Wishing to say a good word for the earnest, persevering work of our old time friend, and yet not wishing to trust too much to our own judgment in the matter, we talked with a number of the active ministry about it, and were pleased to have our own opinion confirmed.

Bro. Haws has for many years been a faithful laborer in the Master's vineyard. He has published this little volume at his own expense, and by ordering one or a dozen from him, you will be doing yourself a favor, as well as encouraging him and aiding a good cause. He has reduced the price of his work to the very small amount of fifteen cents, although it contains far more information of real value than many volumes of ten times its cost. This little book, "Sabbatarian Theories a Delusion," may be obtained by addressing Elder Albert Haws, No. 922 Third Street, Oakland, California.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Sarah Davis, of Iowa, requests the prayers of the Union that she may be relieved of threatened affliction. A cataract is growing over her eye, which she desires to be relieved of, that her sight be not impaired.

I earnestly request the prayers of the Saints in behalf of Sr. Sarah Weldon, that she may be restored to health if it is God's will. She is sorely afflicted in body and mind. She has been a faithful Saint, and endured many trials for the gospel. Dear Saints, please remember her.

MARTHA YOUNG.

Will the sisters of the Prayer Union please remember Sr. Libbie Sutton of Fulton, Iowa, in faith and prayer, that if it be the Lord's will he may restore her to health and strength.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE paragraphs following are given in answer to the question, "What is the aim or mission of the Sunday school?" If we can settle in mind the exact scope of the work of the Sunday school, we will be able to better conform our ideas and efforts to its needs and conditions. No person has ever reached the limit of his power or possibilities till he has fixed in mind an exact aim or object to be accomplished, and concentrated his efforts in the one line. In our Sunday school work as well as in all other affairs of life, we should have always in mind a definite object to which to work. It may be very difficult at times to determine what that "definite object" should be; but till we do know it, our work will be fragmentary, unsystematic, and more or less desultory.

Space will permit us to give a very small portion only of the many answers we have received to the above question, but they are fair representatives of the whole lot. From them we believe that you may be able to understand what the almost universal opinion on the question is:—

The "aim or mission" of the Sabbath school is to teach the word of God as revealed to man, together with the history of his dealings with mankind in past and present ages.

The work of the Sabbath school is to teach the truths of heaven, to wisely and properly present whatever God has made known to man, or has permitted to come to his knowledge, for his enlightenment, happiness, and salvation here and hereafter.

In teaching "gospel" themes, the plan of salvation and its eternal rewards, there needs to be a gradual unfolding of the principles of truth, according to the years and the comprehension of the children, and to older ones as they may have advanced in knowledge of previously taught truths and evidences concerning God's word and work "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." —Henry A. Stebbins.

The aim of the Sunday school is to teach our own and other's children, and whoever may come in, the true and plain principles of the gospel.—Henry Sparling.

The aim or mission of the Sabbath school is to be a "help" to the church, instructing its members primarily, others incidentally. Its grand object to be had in view is the building of character by learning and applying divine law.—Adam J. Keck.

To teach godliness and lead scholars through obedience to Christ, and to enable the obedient to "grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Teach salvation from sin through Christ, personal righteousness and the beauty of a Christlike life and character. All other teaching is but subsidiary or supplementary to this.—James McKiernan.

The aim or mission of the Sabbath school is to induce those who constitute the school to live lives of honesty, virtue, and uprightness; to so impress their minds and influence their lives that characters will be moulded like unto the grand model held up to us in the life of Christ; to make converts to the true faith and so educate them in that faith that they will stay converted and adorn their profession by lives which reflect the character of Christ; to teach practical lessons illustrating the truths of the gospel, making the duty we owe to God and our fellow creatures apparent; that life is a problem in profit and loss; that all the profits are on the side of right doing, and that loss and destruction are on the side of sin; that sin does not pay either in time or eternity.—John B. Roush.

"What is the aim or mission of the Sabbath school?" This question takes in a wide scope. Briefly speaking, it is to teach to all who attend, the principles of eternal truth; duty to God, also to man; to so train and instruct the young that they may become more useful when they come to more mature years and assume the cares and responsibilities of life. —W. D. Ellis.

I have always considered the special mission of the Sunday school to be in the interest of the children, both in the church and out of it, and that their interests should always be of first importance. The principles of the gospel should be taught thoroughly, and fully comprehended by the children, I think, before trying to teach them anything else. The lesson may be taken from the Old Bible, lessons of faith, obedience, humility, etc., but should be taught as gospel principles. Much more harm is done, both by the preacher and the Sunday school teacher, by trying to delve into the deep things of the gospel than by sticking to the plain, practical, essential principles of life and salvation. I shall not attempt to say "how deep" to go, but would say, Don't try to go too deep. Many good preachers have been ruined and their congregations darkened, rather than enlightened, by trying to go deep; and what is true of them is true, no doubt, of Sunday school teachers, and their classes.—Isaac M. Smith.

That the Sunday school is a potent factor in reaching the end to be attained in life is an indisputable proposition; and if the object of life is the development of character, then the Sunday school becomes not only a factor but a prime factor in that development. And as character must be formed and the elements or forces adapted to the formation of character are embosomed within the Sunday school, therefore "the mission or aim of the Sunday school is the formation and development of character. By this we mean a real inbred cast of soul, not a reputation; for one may have a reputation for that which he is not. The hypocrite may have the reputation for what he appears to be. The fop, the dandy of the tailor, may pass for a veritable man. Character is a person's real worth; reputation is his market price. Character building being the "aim or mission" of the Sunday school, it follows that the pure material entering into the superstructure, of which the Sunday school is a proper and legitimate custodian, should be laid on, which with the finishing touches develops the character of Jesus Christ, the possible type of all men.—S. W. L. Scott.

The aim or mission of the Sabbath school should be to direct the children in moral and spiritual ways of thought, and give them at the same time such an understanding of the word of the Lord as is practicable. The teaching in the Sabbath school should be lessons upon the Scriptures. This will include the gospel of Christ.

Teach the gospel just so far as the children or scholars may be able to comprehend and appreciate it.

Where no actual error exists in the King James translation of the Bible the Inspired translation need not be used, except in classes where the text used is an Inspired, instead of the King James. The Bible should be taught, so as to explain and prove itself. It is not necessary to bring texts, either from the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants, to sustain the Bible when that is the lesson text book. It is better drill and exercise for the student to study the Bible and learn to support it or the principle from itself, than to undertake to support it or principle from the other books. In his work, which is mostly with the world afterwards, he cannot use, to advantage, the other books, hence should not be too much encumbered with them in his study in the school of the Scripture lesson.

In lessons of the Quarterlies, under present conditions of the church and Sunday schools, the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants need seldom to be referred to in the general lesson for children. The Inspired translation should be cited where there is appreciable differences in the translations, and then only; as too often citations tends to confusion, and lessens the probability of fixing the prominent differences between the translations in the mind. It is all right to have classes in Book of Mormon and Book of Covenants.

Teach only what may be properly comprehended.—E. L. Kelley.

Sunday School Associations.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

Convention of Northeast Missouri district Sunday school association will convene at Higbee, Missouri, June 14, at 7: 30 Thursday evening for teacher's meeting, and we hope that all the delegates, and the teachers and officers of the Higbee school will be present. At 9: 30 Friday morning there will be prayer meeting, business session at 10: 15, institute work in the afternoon, and a program in the evening. Send secretary's reports and superintendent's reports to the district clerk, Bro. George Tryon, Huntsville, Missouri.

LOUISE PALFREY, Dist. Supt.

MACON, Mo., May 7.

Sunday school convention of Northeast Kansas district will convene at Scranton, Kansas, June 8, at two p. m. It is hoped that each school in the district will be well represented. HARRY THOMAS, Supt.

Convention of Decatur association will convene at Lucas, Iowa, Thursday, June 7, at 7: 30 p. m., continuing till sometime on Friday. The Religio will hold its convention Friday afternoon. Program for both will be sent to the schools and locals soon.

F. E. COCHRAN, S. S. Supt.
J. P. ANDERSON, Pres. Religio.

Des Moines district Sunday school association will meet in convention at Richland Creek, about nine miles southeast of Tama, June 8. The question for discussion is: "What benefit to Sunday Schools is the District Association?" Let delegates bring thoughts on this question. It has been suggested that all Sunday school reports be sent direct to district secretary by June 1. Sunday school secretaries will please notice this change. BESSY RICHESON, Dist Sec.,
State Center, Iowa.

The Sunday school workers of Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan will meet in convention at Coldwater, Michigan, at 9: 30 a. m., June 8. Will our superintendents aid us in obtaining full reports? A full attendance is desired. MRS. J. H. ROYCE, Supt.

NOTICE HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The Board of Publication consists of the following persons: E. L. Kelley, President; John Smith, Treasurer and Business Manager; J. A. Gunsolley, Secretary; Fred B. Blair, and J. W. Wight. The first two named are the Executive Committee.

We hereby call upon all who are indebted to the Publishing House to make settlement as early as possible, and thus lend their financial support to this important branch of church work. The price of the Herald will hereafter be $1.50 per year to all persons, and all subscribers who are in arrears for six months will be dropped from the list unless arrangements are made with the Publishing House for payment. All Herald subscribers who are now in debt will be permitted to settle upon the basis of $1.50 per year, providing such settlements are made within six months from this date.

Book agents are requested, if possible, to make returns to this Publishing House the first of each month, and to cease retaining commissions on sales when they order books, so long as they are in debt. Commissions when due will be allowed when settlements are made. "Pay what thou owest," is a part of the divine plan; and "Owe no man anything but love," should be observed by all Saints. Prompt payments insure confidence in business as well as religion, and confidence is essential to success.

A new catalogue of books will be issued as soon as possible.

Remittances should be made by post office and express orders, bank drafts on Chicago, or registered letters.

Send all business letters and make all money payable to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Personal matters mark John Smith. Write your orders plain, pointed, and legible, describing just what you want, with name and price as advertised, so that mistakes may be avoided. JOHN SMITH, Manager.

MINNESOTA REUNION.

We again call attention of the Saints and friends to the fifth annual reunion of the Minnesota mission. Will all desiring board, or stabling for teams, please notify the secretary, T. J. Martin, Detroit City, Minnesota, so we can make all necessary arrangements? The committee cannot make any arrangements unless you notify them. We want to make this the best meeting we have ever held. Remember the date, June 16 to 24 inclusive.

I. N. ROBERTS, Pres.
T. J. MARTIN, Sec.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

WILL YOU HELP?

The debt against Graceland College is a burden to us all, but may be easily carried if each one will do his part. Are you willing to carry $25 of this load? If so, the entire debt will be provided for and the college placed upon a sound basis within the next ninety days. One thousand names at $25 each will do this. No collection to be made until the entire amount is subscribed. If no one has a subscription list in your branch or neighborhood, please send to the undersigned and get one at once. Send your name as a subscriber. The amount to be paid when the full one thousand subscribers are had amounting to $25 each. If you can subscribe for two, so much the better. Some have subscribed already for two, four, and as high as twenty. We want the full list in ninety days. Please let us hear from you.

By order of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 1, 1900.

MINUTES OF GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The minutes of the late General Conference will be published in pamphlet form, as usual, and issued as a supplement to the Saints' Herald, and each subscriber be furnished a copy.

Work on the minutes was commenced immediately after conference adjourned, and is being forwarded to completion by the Herald Office as rapidly as possible.

R. S. SALYARDS,
LAMONI, Iowa, May 10, 1900. Church Secretary.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Central Nebraska District, Greeting:—The period for tent work is at hand, and I wish to remind you that we shall be in need of some necessary funds for expenses. I wish also to remind branch presidents that last conference requested them to appoint a person in their several branches to have charge of the tent fund; and to those so appointed I wish to say, the funds so collected may be forwarded to me at Clear Water, Nebraska, by money order, and I will receipt for the same. And to all I wish to say, Remember your tithes and offerings; and when not convenient to pay to me personally, forward by draft or money order to meet the above address, and if I am not at home my wife will receipt for the same.

Last year we made the best record financially in the history of the district. Let us do better if possible the present year. Brother Whiting and myself are now ready to commence a summer campaign in the interest of gospel work, and we desire your prayerful and systematic coöperation in the spread of the work which we all love.

Those having knowledge of any special place where meetings are needed, will please notify us by mail, and we will try to attend to the call. Your brother in Christ, LEVI GAMET.

PASTORAL.

Elder S. D. Payne will continue in former field. This was an unintentional omission in the list of appointments for Nebraska and Dakotas. JAMES CAFFALL.

Being placed in charge of the Far West district, and Bro. Swen Swenson my assistant, we would cheerfully advise those who are to labor under our direction, to enter the field as brave soldiers of the cause, wherever you can find an open door there enter and preach the gospel, and gather in the people. Never mind about troubles that may arise, but leave them for local authorities to settle. Push out and open up new fields and God will bless you with liberty and freedom of the Spirit to present his word. Any advice you wish, consult those in charge, and let us make a noble record this year to the church. Bro. Walter W. Smith will labor with Bro. Swenson, and Bro. S. F. Cushman with J. C. Foss. Waste no time nor ammunition, but let the people know that we are alive, and about our heavenly Father's business. Each one report to J. C. Foss your labor done, number of sermons preached, baptisms, and all items of interest, on the first days of July, October, January, and March, so I can report to I. N. White, missionary in charge. My field address is St. Joseph, Missouri.

J. C. FOSS.
SWEN SWENSON.

To the Saints of the Eastern Mission, Greeting:—It has pleased God to direct that we should be companions in labor another year in the Eastern mission, as may be seen by order of the late General Conference. In view of this appointment, I address you in relation to the duties that are to claim our attention, and to remind you that another year's demand of labor and effort are upon us. The same important and all-engrossing cause is to engage our attention as in the past, and it is to be hoped with intensified interest, confidence, and zeal. The unfaltering aim should be success. The gospel message is as beautiful, important, and full of promise as in the past, entirely worthy of all our sacrifices and efforts. It is God's greatest work that is engaging the attention of men on the earth, and he controls the rewards due to faithful service, hence they cannot fail of realization by those who toil and wait. Unity should characterize all of our efforts. Old scores, if any exist, should be cast to the moles and the bats, and so start anew in a better spirit and a purer and fresher atmosphere. Every home should be made to bloom with love, confidence, and hope in the gospel message, so that angels may be attracted there, the Spirit abide, in order that the heart may be kept strong and the mind filled with light.

As a means of assuring success, branch and district organizations should be perfected as nearly as possible, and all act in harmony with the general missionaries appointed to labor, with a view to strengthening the work where already planted and extending it in other communities as widely and rapidly as possible.

Each member should cast in their own mind as to how he or she may serve the cause best. There is an individual sphere in which we all occupy as well as a collective one. We should be diligent when left to ourselves. Avoid envy and jealousy. They blind and present things in a false light. The green-eyed monster has shown itself too conspicuously already in places, and is eating its way into the church.

It is easy of correction if it is so desired. In this way, cultivate the spirit that rejoices at a brother's or sister's success. If "one member be honored, all the members rejoice in it."—Paul. So the gospel requires. Again, it is necessary to avoid the allurements and vices of the world. If followed after they will corrupt, impart false tastes, and lead you on the downward road to disappointment, degradation, and shame. The days are evil. Set up a high moral standard and adhere to it. The day of reckoning and rewards will surely come, and no man can hide from himself. The kind of lives men live is revealed in themselves. "The show of their countenances doth witness against them, and doth declare their sin to be even as Sodom, and they cannot hide it."—B. of M., page 79. Again, as a reminder, the following cannot fail to impress the careful reader, "Wo unto the rich, who are rich as to the things of the world. For because they are rich, they despise the poor, and they persecute the meek and their hearts are upon their treasures: wherefore their treasure is their God. And behold, their treasure shall perish with them also. And wo unto the deaf, that will not hear: for they shall perish. Wo unto the blind, that will not see: for they shall perish also. Wo unto the uncircumcised of heart: for a knowledge of their iniquities shall smite them at the last day. Wo unto the liar: for he shall be thrust down to hell. Wo unto the murderer, who deliberately killeth: for he shall die. Wo unto them who commit whoredoms: for they shall be thrust down to hell. Yea, wo unto those that worship idols: for the devil of all devils delighteth in them. And, in fine, wo unto all those who die in their sins: for they shall return to God, and behold his face, and remain in their sins."—B. of M., page 73. Italics, the writer's.

Hold on to your integrity, and follow in the straight way, and you will be full of light and life, and happiness will crown your years. Love one another according to the gospel. In dealing with each other, make justice the rule, tempered with charity. "For he shall have judgment without mercy that hath showed no mercy."—James. There are few that are faultless. Christ came not to condemn the world, but to save the world. Avoid whisperers, backbiters, and scandalmongers as you would the Devil; for they make trouble for whole neighborhoods. Difficulties should be settled in a lawful way, and in charity; so as to save, encourage, and build up rather than destroy. Of course the persistent and unrepentant wrongdoer will have to meet the terrors of the law. The kingdom of heaven gathers of every kind. This gives chance for patience to have her perfect work.

The session of the late General Conference was a long one, and, for some, a busy one. It had its encouraging and hopeful side; but there was that manifest in it which was both surprising and disappointing, perhaps more so than in any held in the past. It was apparent that envy and jealousy had been doing their evil work. Some went away discouraged. The conference, however, it is believed largely took in the full situation and no doubt will be prepared for any event that may arise in the future.

Importunity was made to the Lord for increased light through revelation, but none was given; so that the very things that some thought must be done were not done at all. God has said that he will do his work in his own way, and it looks as though he had not changed or forgotten this. This is encouraging. Men's haste and anxiety pass but for little in this respect. It would no doubt prove to be just as impotent and dangerous to undertake to steady the ark by human wisdom in modern times as in former years. On this subject there is a chance for close scrutiny, examination, and waiting.

The conference declared against holding bi-annual conferences. One trial seems to have been enough, if not too much. A larger force of laborers was sent out than by any conference held previously, and it is desired that the Saints will take pride in sustaining them. With this increased number of appointees sent, still there is not enough to supply the real demands of the work.

The Bishop reported that the finances were in a better condition than at any period in the past. This is encouraging, but it will need to be kept good in order to succeed. The Eastern Saints have done their part in sustaining the finances in the past, and no doubt they will take increased pride in doing so in the future.

The college question came up for its share of consideration, and the conference hit upon a happy solution of the matter by proposing a plan to relieve itself from the vexed burden of debt, in arranging to secure the names of one thousand persons who may be willing to contribute twenty-five dollars each so as to pay off the debt at a single stroke. Those paying more than twenty-five, each added twenty-five will count for a new name. The plan provides that no payment of money is to be required until the one thousand names have been secured. Here is a chance for every one who can to show their faith by their works, and thus help lift this indebtedness. It is important. Several hundred dollars were signed almost in a twinkling while the resolution was being put into shape for adoption; and soon after rose into the thousands. Keep up the interest until the names are secured. Pay the debt and be happy.

It will be seen by the minutes of the conference that Bro. Joseph Luff was appointed in charge of another field. This leaves no associate with the one in charge of the Eastern mission, so as to make a division. In order, however, to distribute the responsibility to best advantage, the following appointments are made to the respective fields of labor mentioned in connection with the names given:—

To the Ohio district, James Moler.
The West Virginia district, G. H. Godbey.
The Pittsburg district, J. F. McDowell.
The Philadelphia district, F. G. Pitt.
The New York district, U. W. Greene.
The Massachusetts district, Richard Bullard.
Central and Western New York and Northern Central Pennsylvania, F. M. Sheehy.
Nova Scotia, Holmes J. Davison.

These brethren will please take the direct oversight of the mission work in the "fields of labor" here indicated, and prosecute it as effectively as possible. The missionary in charge will do all he can to aid the work in every department. The Kirtland and Maine districts will be provided for later on, and as soon as the way is made clear. Bear in mind that the best time to labor is before and after the extreme hot weather sets in.

Let us try to put in a good and effective year's labor. May confidence abide, and the Saints kept from bodily ailments and distress of mind.

No doubt this will be a year of great political agitation and excitement—a good time to be swift to hear and slow to speak. You are entitled to your franchise; so, on election day, vote as you believe will be for the best, irrespective of creed or party. Stand by the old flag.

Do not forget to report according to the rule adopted. Respectfully,

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

For the present: address, TEMPLE, Lake County, Ohio.

To the Nevada Saints, Greeting:—As the conference has appointed me to labor another year in Nevada mission, I ask your faith, prayers, and assistance, that each may truly be colaborers together with God in accomplishing the great preparatory work for the coming of our Lord. God has greatly blessed our labor this last year. I thank you all for the assistance you gave, and in sustaining me with your faith and means.

Now I will call your attention to the necessity of getting up a team and a light spring wagon, and a tent to live in, say 10x12 feet, and the things necessary to camp out. One large horse will do if the wagon is light. A Saint at Reno has promised me a horse. If I get the necessary outfit I can travel and reach the towns and valleys with very little expense. We can live in the tent, and if I cannot get a building to preach in, I can preach on the street, as I did last year. This is a large State, with only 42,000 population. It costs ten cents per mile to travel on stage, and one railroad charges ten cents per mile, full fare. In many places you have to pay fifty cents per meal and fifty cents per night for a bed.

Now, beloved Saints, if you feel to accept or indorse my suggestions, please respond at once, for I want to be ready to start by the first of June. My address will be Reno, Nevada. Any counsel or advice by any of the Saints will be kindly considered and received.

Anyone who has a tent they can spare for the season, a harness, a Dutch oven, anything I can use, I will be pleased to accept. I have a partner who will travel with me, and pay for one half the food. May God bless you all. Remember we are colaborers and workers with God for the salvation of souls. God has given a plan by which each can be instrumental in building up the kingdom. Let me hear from all who can assist.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
THOMAS DALEY.

REUNION NOTICES.

Reunion of the Diamond Valley Saints, and other branches, will be held June 1, 1900, at the Diamond Valley schoolhouse, Woodfords, California.

MRS. R. TRIMMER, } Committee.

GROVE MEETINGS.

Preaching services will be held at —— grove, near Arlington, South Dakota, beginning Friday, June 15, at eleven a. m., holding over Sunday, June 19, under the auspices of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The scattered Saints in Howard and White counties, South Dakota, etc., are invited, and as many as can avail themselves of the privilege will please inform Bro. A. C. Stone, Arlington, as soon as possible, who together with Sr. Stone will arrange for their entertainment; and as the purpose of this arrangement is to give publicity to the doctrine in the above locality, it is desirous that the Saints scattered as above will make an effort to attend.

JAMES CAFFALL,
Missionary in Charge.

We live two and one half miles west, and one and one half miles north from Arlington.
A. C. STONE.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan district will hold its semiannual conference at Coldwater, Michigan, beginning at ten a. m., June 9. Many prominent workers are expected, amongst whom are Brn. John H. Lake, Columbus Scott, and W. E. Peak. Full reports, and a full attendance of Saints whose hearts are full of interest for Zion's cause is desired by yours in bonds,
G. A. SMITH, Pres.

BORN.

KILBORN.—At West Pullman, Illinois, March 17, 1900, to Bro. Harrison B. and Sr. Alice Kilborn, a daughter, and named Lodemia Adelaide. Blessed May 6, by Elders Francis J. D. Earl and R. N. Burwell.

DIED.

FROST.—At Argentine, Kansas, April 18, 1900, Lenna Frost, infant daughter of Stellah and Robert Frost, aged four weeks. A beautiful flower too sweet and pure for earth gone to join that angel band that ministers round the throne of God. May it be a means of drawing the father and mother, and leading them to God. Funeral conducted by Priest Frank Parker.

AMES.—Louisa W. Ames was born on Matinicus Island, Maine, June 3, 1834. The last years of her life were spent in Brockton, Massachusetts. She was baptized May 2, 1886; died April 19, 1900. Sister Ames was the only one of a family of nine to embrace the gospel. She leaves three children to mourn. Funeral from her late residence was largely attended by relatives and friends. Sermon by Elder Frank O. Coombs. We have every reason to believe that she died in the full faith of the gospel, and in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

DAVIES.—March 30, 1900, aged 59 years, Elder Dan Davies, president of the Aberaman, Wales, branch for nearly thirty years. He has been very poorly in health for over ten years. He died strong in the faith. He lived a Christian life to the end. He was a man of knowledge, wisdom, and patience. It is a great loss to our branch. Elder Evan Lewis preached the funeral sermon, with good liberty to about two or three hundred people, from Revelation 14:13, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

JOHNSON.—At Indian River, Maine, April 19, 1900, Bro. Jeremiah M. Johnson, aged 74 years and 22 days. Our brother has had a long and painful sickness, which was borne with fortitude and great patience. He was well known to the traveling ministry; they were always welcome at his home. He was obedient to the gospel and received baptism on September 12, 1888. Words of consolation were spoken at his home by Bro. U. M. Kelley. We laid him away to his peaceful rest. His memory is blessed.

BARBEE.—William S. Barbee was born January 3, 1842, at Pittsburg, Indiana; baptized January 1, 1878, at Edenville, Iowa; ordained to the eldership October 19, 1884, at Clearwater, Nebraska; was married to Mrs. Caroline Winslow, November 28, 1895; died April 29, 1900, at his home in Newton, Iowa. Deceased leaves a wife, three brothers, three sisters, three sons, and three daughters. Funeral services in charge of F. A. Russell, sermon by W. C. Nirk.

WEBBER.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 2, 1900, Bro. Daniel Webber, aged 58 years, 3 months, and 22 days. He was baptized at Lawrence, Michigan, February 6, 1881. He was born in Porter Township, Van Buren County, Michigan, December 10, 1841. Funeral remarks by Elder C. Scott, assisted by Elder Fred A. Smith. Buried at Rose Hill cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just.

STUDLEY.—At Dennisport, Massachusetts, March 24, 1900, Bro. George W. Studley, aged 72 years. Born at South Dartmouth, Massachusetts, February 22, 1828; baptized at South Yarmouth, Massachusetts, May 30, 1882. Funeral services conducted by Bro. Charles W. Young, of Dennisport. A very large number of Saints and friends present.

STERRETT.—Sr. Permelia was born February 6, 1822, at Westmoreland, New Hampshire, but moved with her parents at an early age to New York. At the time of her death, which occurred May 3, 1900, she was aged 78 years, 2 months, 27 days. She first joined the Latter Day Saint Church about the time of the death of Joseph the martyr, sacrificing every earthly tie in thus manifesting her faith. In 1850 she came to Utah, suffering the hardships incident to those times. Not accepting the doctrines introduced by the church in Utah, she endorsed the teaching of the Reorganized Church when first presented, and in 1865 identified herself with that body, thus making a sacrifice which none but those acquainted with conditions in Utah at that time could realize. From that time till her death, she has been firm and fearless in defense of her faith. At her home the elders of the Reorganization have ever found a warm welcome, and many there are to bless her memory. For about twenty years she has honored the position of postmistress at Pleasant Grove, her husband having also been postmaster for many years previous to his death in 1873. She leaves three sons and a daughter, besides grandchildren to mourn her loss. The throng of Saints and friends present at the funeral services testified to the esteem in which she was held. The services were from the Saints' chapel in charge of Elder S. D. Condit, sermon by D. W. Wight. Truly after her long and eventful life, characterized throughout by faithful devotion to the right, her rest must be glorious.

SKINNER.—John Elroy Skinner was born April 2, 1859, in St. Joseph County, Michigan; moved with his parents to Calhoun County, Iowa, in 1865; married to Miss Agnes Hunting, December 9, 1885; was baptized January 31, 1895; died April 5, 1900, and was buried from his residence near Auburn, Iowa. Funeral services were held over his remains at the Union church between Lake City and Auburn, in charge of Bro. Benan Salisbury, the sermon by Elder H. O. Smith, of St. Joseph, Missouri. He lived a consistent Christian life, and his nearest neighbors were his best friends.

HOBART.—At Webb City, Missouri, April 23, 1900, resulting from a blow from the falling of a loaded bucket down a mineral shaft in which he was laboring, Bro. George W. Hobart, of Webb City. He was born at Plainfield, Illinois, August 15, 1855; baptized November 2, 1885, at Keighley, Kansas; was ordained an elder August 11, 1889, at Webb City, Missouri, to which place he removed by letter December 16, 1888. He leaves a wife and six children. Funeral sermon by Elder R. M. Maloney, assisted by O. P. Sutherland. A good man taken from his labors in the days of his strength.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

Lamoni Sanitarium.

Believing that there should be a place where Saints and others who have not faith to be healed can be treated with "herbs and mild food" by "a friend" and where surgical and other means can be used if needed, I have decided to open a sanitarium at Lamoni, Iowa, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, also a surgical department where operations can be done with skill and modern appliances.

Special attention will be given to diseases of women, ruptures, piles, and tumors. In these disorders I have had large experience. Testimonials of cures sent on application.

Specialists from Chicago and St. Joseph will be consulted in difficult cases. Chronic diseases will be treated largely by baths, massage, and electricity.

I have practiced medicine and surgery for eighteen years. I have taken special courses in the above-named diseases at New York City, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis hospitals.

Temporary rooms have been engaged and patients can be received at any time. Consultations free. Write to me about your case.

MODERN SOCIETY'S FAULTS.

There is no question to my mind but that all right-minded persons must agree that the young people are not as respectful to their elders as in times past. There has been a general decline in this respect. The younger people in society seem to be getting in a position where they dictate to their elders. This disrespect for their elders is traceable to the parents themselves in most cases.

Parents nowadays see little of their children. They trust them to governesses and nurses, who train them as they feel inclined. The governesses in the best families are of course highly educated and of the best character, but the training they give the children is not what the parents could and should give their offspring themselves. Nothing can take the place of a mother's care. The mothers of society to-day see little or nothing of their children until they return from college. The mothers have permitted all their time to be taken up by their society duties and when a son or daughter returns, as is often the case, from some foreign educational institution with a patronizing air toward their elders the fault lies, I claim, with the parents themselves.

Children educated in foreign colleges will naturally grow to look upon the country they are educated in as the best, and "become ashamed of their native land and have nothing but apologies to offer in mentioning the place of their birth."

It is very true that nowadays there is much slang used in the so-called best society. You quite often hear young girls say: "Well, "'dad' won't be home to dinner tonight," or "'pop' is going to Newport tomorrow."

Such terms were not used in the best society in times past toward a parent.

Then, too, the young men of to-day are given too much money to spend as they see fit. It makes them too independent toward their parents and at the least show of discipline on the part of a father or mother with the high-bred young man of to-day the young man rebels. He either leaves home altogether or acts in defiance of parental commands. There have been examples of this in society quite recently. The young men of society to-day as a rule pay little or no heed to the advice of their parents or elders. Then, too, the parents make the mistake of not training their children in some profession, so that if misfortune overtakes them their sons and daughters can be in a position to earn their own living.

Too much liberty is given the young girl of today in society. I don't say that golf and other healthful sports are not good for young women, but they require more protection, especially as the young men of today in society who are going the rounds of the ball rooms are not up to the standard of the best society. They have good training so far as the colleges can give it, but they lack the moral character of the young man of the past. They have come to look upon life through the glass of the cynic and have not the respect for the young women they should have. There are very few young men to be found in the ball rooms of society today who really appreciate the society of our young girls in a proper sense.

As to the castes in society today it narrows itself down to the three classes of society. There is a wealthy class, which attempts to dominate everything and everybody. Then there is a semi-wealthy set, and then the real old-time families—the Knickerbockers.

The Knickerbockers hold aloof from the set which attempts to control simply through the power of money. The Knickerbockers don't care what the very wealthy do if they are not on their visiting lists. There is a class of very rich people claiming to represent the best New York society who seek to advertise themselves constantly, both here and abroad, but they are easily detected.

It is quite true that many Americans ape the English in public and laugh at them in private. The English no doubt laugh at their American cousins for their actions abroad, but we laugh at them, too, so honors are about even in this respect.

I think the expensive entertainments given by the wealthy people in society are very desirable. They give employment to a number of people who would not otherwise be employed.

I do not agree with Mrs. Howe that the wealthy classes who go abroad fail to get into soceity in England and Paris. They do succeed the same as some of them do here, but the best class of New York society care nothing for the entry into social life in Paris and but little more for English society. The society of Paris is no place for an American girl—a very undesirable place indeed is Paris in which to introduce a young American girl.

MADE CASTS OF INDIANS.

Prof. Frederick Starr of the University of Chicago has returned to his class work after more than three months of exploration among tribes of Indians with unpronounceable names, in the southern portions of Mexico. He has brought back with him a large collection of photographs, plaster casts, and information, and today while waiting for his class to assemble in the anthropological lecture room of Walker hall he described his adventures in the sunny land. "We went more than 500 miles on horseback down there," said he, "and in the course of the trip photographed and measured and took casts of 625 natives. We brought back over 300 negatives, twenty-three plaster busts and the measurements of 625 persons, fourteen measurements each of 100 men and twenty-five women from each of five tribes.

"It is needless to say that the natives didn't come to us and give us these of their own accord. Neither did we go with a pistol in one hand and a measuring tape in the other and take them by force. We used diplomacy, and used it frequently. And the results are most satisfactory.

"Down there in the southern part of Mexico there are many tribes of Indians of distinct types, with varying languages and customs and dress. The study and measurement of these

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Indians are to-day the most important work on anthropology in Mexico.

"I have made previous trips down in that country, and this time went only among five tribes—the Chinatecos, Chochos, Mazatecos, Tepehuas and Totonacos. I knew none of the languages of these people, but in every village there was at least one person who could speak Spanish, and, with his help, I compiled a vocabulary of the common words of each tribe. These vocabularies are among the important results of the trip. I have now but a single trip to make to complete my studies in that section—one to Yucatan, which I hope to make next year.

"I found some very curious things, among others the primitive art of papermaking, as practiced still by the Indians. It consists in a primitive form of our own woodpulp art, the natives moistening the bark of trees and then pounding it out into sheets and drying it.

"I went also for a visit to Mount Malintzi and the Tlaxcalanx Indians who live there. They are a curious, interesting, and conservative people and speak the ancient Aztec language."

The expedition of Prof. Starr was conducted under the auspices of Mrs. Frank G. Logan, who has become very deeply interested in the study of the remnants of the ancient tribes of the southern portion of this continent. With her assistance the expedition was fitted out and the valuable collections brought back. With Prof. Starr were Louis Grabic of Chicago a photographer, besides a Mexican plaster worker and a Mexican boy. Messrs. Grabic and Starr left Chicago on Dec. 21 last and reached this city on their return March 31. Their collections have not yet all been unpacked, but will be added to those heretofore secured by the anthropologist.

The exploring expedition did not visit that part of Mexico in which the Yaqui Indians are waging war against their ruling neighbors. The tribes among which it went were more peaceful than that fierce mountain people, and dwell within a short distance of the capital of the republic. Prof. Starr's travels were from a point south of City of Mexico, around east and northeast of it.—Chicago Record.

POETRY AND POVERTY.

It is true a few songsters—Pope, Tennyson, Whittier and others—have won an independence by their lyres, but they are exceptions to an almost universal rule. To go back to the earliest bards—Homer, the blind old man of Scio, wandered, singing for his bread, from place to place: Dante, driven from his home, had but few dainties; the author of The Faërie Queene was burnt out in winter and lost his spencer; Dryden, though he toadied to lords and burned incense to Charles II, passed his last days in little better than a dry den; Gay, involved in debt, often lacked gayety; Goldsmith was often on the watch for the means of subsistence, and his jewels were in his writings only; Burns was as impassioned and as poor, too, as the northern scalds; Scott earned piles of money, yet could not pay his scot, at last; the author of The Excursion never got his words' worth; Hunt, coveting ease and tranquility, was often tempest-tossed if not wrecked on a lee shore; Moore, but for his pension, might have been exiled to some desolate moor. Even Tom Hood, with all his varied talents, failed to earn a comfortable livelihood, though his friends urned a lively Hood after his death. Even our own popular Longfellow was "short" in early life.—Saturday Evening Post.

MENTAL TYPES AMONG THE NEGROES.

The variety of physical quality which appears to exist among the negroes is important, for the reason that it appears to be associated with mental differences even as great, thus affording a basis for the differentiation of the people as regards occupations and consequent station in life. It is even more difficult to get at the mental peculiarities of the several groups of black folk than it is to ascertain those of their bodies, so what I shall now set forth is stated with much doubt. It represents my own opinion, qualified by that of others whose judgments I have sought. In the Guinea type we have a folk of essentially limited intelligence. The children are rather nimble-witted, but when the body begins to be mature it dominates the mind. It seems likely that thus the largest element of the race is to find its place in the field or in the lower stages of craft work. The Zulu type appears to me fit for anything that the ordinary men of our own race can do. They remain through life alert and with a capacity for a vigorous reaction with their associates. From them may come the leaders of their kindred of less masterful quality. From the Arab type we may expect more highly educable people than is afforded by the other distinct groups. They have more delicate qualities. They lack the wholesome exuberance of the ordinary negro, which is commonly termed "bumptiousness."—Appletons' Popular Science Monthly for May.

A PLEA FOR TREES AND PARKS IN CITIES.

The conspicuous absence of trees from the residential streets of modern New York is hard to explain. Rich men who live here only during the winter appear to take very little interest in their fellow-citizens who are compelled to remain in town all summer. In some instances, indeed, the absence of trees in front of houses situated upon our park and river fronts seems to suggest a fear on the part of the owner that foliage might obscure architecture, apparently oblivious of the fact that the beauty of a dwelling is frequently enhanced thereby. As it is, few of our side-streets are embellished with vegetation; and even along the Boulevard—an avenue highly favored by nature—the trees are neglected. This is true also of Seventh Avenue above Central Park, St. Nicholas Avenue, and of all other thoroughfares not placed under the jurisdiction of the Park Commissioners—a body which should be authorized to exercise control over every avenue upon which the preservation of the trees is desirable. Except in front of St. Luke's Hospital, Morningside Drive, which is the glory of upper New York, is to-day barren of trees on its western side; while on the historic King's Bridge Road the few trees still remaining are sadly neglected. What must we think of a corporation that recently spent the enormous sum of $7,000,000 on the construction of the Harlem Speedway without exercising sufficient foresight to provide that fine avenue with a row of shade-trees for the protection of riders and drivers and their horses?—Louis Windmuller in the May Forum.

The watershed of Rock River, in northern Illinois, will soon be the subject of an investigation by the Division of Forestry in order to determine the cause of the diminution of the stream. This is supposed to be due to the denudation of the forests along its headwaters and to excessive artificial drainage for commercial and agricultural purposes. The decrease in volume of water has become alarming, and, in response to the agitation of citizens in that locality, their Representative in Congress, Hon. R. R. Hitt, has applied to the Secretary of Agriculture for an investigation. G. Fred Schwarz, Field Assistant in the Division of Forestry, will proceed to Rock River in a short time to study the conditions and report in favor of such action as he finds advisable.

Brunswick, Maine, a place of about 7,000 inhabitants, is probably the first municipality in the United States to undertake forest planting on a large scale, or what is practically the Old World institution of a town forest. The town owns a tract of about 1,000 acres of what was once pine land, but long since given over to fire and huckleberries. At a recent meeting of the council $100 was appropriated to improve this land by planting it to White Pine. Seed will be purchased and a nursery established to raise the young trees. At the right age they will be transplanted in rows and set out in the positions they will finally occupy, and will then require little more care except protection from fire.

The land at present is absolutely unproductive. If the new plan is successful it will not only be ornamental but profitable. Town forests are common in Europe and often furnish a large part of the municipal revenue.

The planting will be under the direct supervision of Austin Cary, but the Division of Forestry will assist in organizing and carrying out the work.

The June number of McClure's Magazine will contain a story of the Chinese-Japanese war, written in English by a Japanese, Adachi Kinnosuk, author of "Iroka: Tales of Japan." It will be very fully illustrated. In the same number, the Rev. C. T. Brady will tell the story of the greatest fight in the history of American privateers—Captain Samuel Chester Reid's historic fight in the "General Armstrong" against a whole fleet of British.

The mountain defiles of the Caucasus ranges are so deep and so completely isolated from one another that the tribes which inhabit them have preserved their distinctive characteristics much more decidedly than most parts of the world which have felt the touch of European civilization. Some of these tribes boast of great antiquity, and certain families have preserved for many generations ancestral heirlooms, such as armor and weapons, furniture and garments.—Ex.

"Dr. Koldewey, director of the excavations at Babylon, has informed the Oriental society of the discovery of a canal built of Aramean bricks, which is believed to be the long sought east canal. A temple called Ernach of the goddess Ninniach was laid bare, and stones found inscribed from time of Nebuchadnezzar."

EXIT THE SEARCHLIGHT.

The "Searchlight" which our brethren of the Church of Christ (the Hedrickite brethren), began to use a few years ago has gone out. And in its place has now risen "The Evening and Morning Star." The Star is under the same editorial management as the Searchlight was, and it remains to be seen whether its light will be more effective than was that of the paper the place of which it has taken.

We have received Vol. 1, No. 1, which purports to be a revival of the Evening and Morning Star, the press of which was destroyed and the paper suppressed by mob rule in 1833. We give place on our exchange list to the Star and hope that the light which it may shed will add to rather that take from the light of the gospel which the Master sent by the angel. It is to be published in a building on the Temple Lot, Independence, Missouri, but this fact will not necessarily give brilliancy to its shining.

The managing board asked for and obtained from the HERALD management a copy of our mailing list, with a view to sending to our subscribers something which they were proposing to publish, but without telling us what that was. So, if our subscribers receive copies of the Star, they will know how their names were obtained by the Star publishers.

The newspaper law requires that if persons receive and take from their post offices any paper sent them and continue to do so they are held responsible to pay for the paper. So, those of our subscribers who do not want to take the Star will understand that they must return the copy sent them, or a written statement that they do not want it, and after that leave it in the post office, for the postmaster to return stamped "Not taken out."

The board of Star managers evidently rely on some support for their paper from the members of the Reorganized Church, or they would scarcely have asked for our list, and we advise those of the Saints who choose to take it to send in their names and quarters at once, and those who do not wish to take it to notify Business Manager Hartley, at once.

The claim of the Star made for its publishers on page two is in itself peculiar and may elicit inquiry, which we, or somebody else, may be inclined to make by and by.

We neither advise the Saints to take nor to reject the Star; it is a matter of individual wish and judgment.

FEATHERS AND THE BIRDS.

We note with much pleasure the effort being made by the humane societies to put a stop to the slaughter of the birds.

The sisters of the church ought to second this effort and give it their moral support by refusing to buy, use, or wear any garment in the making or adornment of which bird life has been taken to furnish the feathers, down, or plumage, the wearing of which is to please the pride and gratify the lust of the eye.

Beside the wanton cruelty involved in the slaughter of the birds, there is an absolute loss to the homes of the people in the driving away and destruction of the song birds whose presence so cheer and make pleasant the times of their sojourn in our clime and part of the heritage of man.

"The cattle on a thousand hills" may be the Lord's; but he grants their use to man, to sustain the life of the flesh; so are the birds in a thousand orchards, forests, and gardens, to aid in making the homes of men pleasant and cheerful; pity then that man should ruthlessly destroy these God-given messengers of cheer, to gratify the vanity of men and women who prize looks more than worth.

More than this, it is being discovered that the destruction of the birds is becoming a menace to man's means of physical support in that the birds are the natural foes to insect life; the birds being depleted in numbers insects destructive to plant and vegetable life increase enormously; and if the slaughter continues it will be a question of but a few years when the gardens will be but things of the past, insects taking charge of the young plants to their entire destruction.

The fashion for feathers for personal adornment ought to be satisfied with the product of the ostrich farms from which the supply of plumage does not endanger the lives of the birds. Our song birds and migratory warblers ought not to be disturbed, nor their lives be taken to gratify the demands of pride, a terribly false pride at that.

What say the good sisters? Will you give the orioles, tanagers, robins, thrushes, woodpeckers, yellow and white and black, cat birds, bobolinks, ground birds, wrens, and other birds a chance to fill the mission assigned them to aid man to beautify, adorn, and make pleasant his abode on the earth? Will they?

WHAT IS IN A NAME?

THE NAME SMITH.

The New York Mail and Express quotes Prof. J. P. Mahaffey in the London Athenæum, as authority for the statement that the name Smith is by no means of modern, or of English origin. It appears that among the unpublished curiosities of the Petrie papyri there is one, containing a list of names. Among these names, the professor says, there is one which occurs regularly in the same form, and of which no further explanation can be given. This is the name of Smith—unmistakably written Smith. The professor humorously remarks that it is surely worth telling the many distinguished bearers of the name that there was a man known as Smith in the twentieth year of the third Ptolemy, 227 B. C. "Is there," he asks, "any other English name comparable to this in antiquity?"

The discovery of that name among early Egyptian papyri is certainly of great interest to philologists. It is extensively in use among nations of Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic blood—nations reasonably supposed to contain a liberal sprinkling of the blood of Israel. Where did ancient Egypt get it from? Does it actually date back to the time before Moses?

The foregoing is from the Deseret News for May 11, 1900. There was a time when it was said and written that "there was not a smith to be found in all the land of Israel."

The idea that the Seer was reputed by some to be of the blood of that Joseph who was sold into Egypt has been much ridiculed. But like Prof. Mahaffey we may "humorously remark" that if there were Smiths in that land and in that far off time, why may not the Seer have been one of those whose "lives were hid with Christ in God."

BY a clipping from the Bevier Appeal, we see that the Saints of Bevier tendered Elder Tanner a reception before his departure for his mission field. The Appeal says:—

While it seems hard to part yet we should feel proud that once more a Bevierite has been found worthy and has been called upon to go forth to the mission field to make ready the grain for the reaper. For the past six years, or nearly so, Elder Tanner has been pastor of the Bevier L. D. S. Church and has performed his duties well, and now the time has arrived when he has greater responsibilities conferred upon him. . . . May his efforts be crowned with success is our prayer. Elder F. T. Mussell succeeds him as pastor of the Bevier church.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

After a priest has preached and baptized several persons into the church, and has given them general instructions regarding the church and their duty thereto, is it right for the presiding elder of that branch to withhold the rights and privileges of the church from them, and not confirm them members of the church for eight or ten weeks after their baptism, all under the plea that the law says they shall have sufficient time to expound all things, etc. (D. C. 17:18)?

Answering the above question we should say in general terms that the withholding to confirm members baptized for the length of time specified would be wrong. If parties who listen to the preaching of the gospel are usually intelligent and have accepted the teaching unto baptism, they are generally quite well informed in regard to the church; and if the presiding elder has been fairly diligent and had access to the parties, they should be sufficiently instructed at the end of a fortnight or a month, or even less time, to receive confirmation.

We are aware that some take an extreme view of what is stated in section 17, Doctrine and Covenants, respecting having time to explain all things to them; and if one were disposed to take advantage of the statement in its strictness, there are some who would never understand the full import of all things; for not many of our ablest and best comprehend all things.

It is better to confirm as soon after baptism as is practicable, the officer being reasonably sure that the persons baptized understand what they have done and are doing.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. J. Cornish writes encouragingly from Michigan. He says:—

We are glad to have so many more to labor in Michigan in the Master's cause. Since conference I have baptized two persons, and others are busy doing all they can for the cause and are baptizing some occasionally. We feel that the work must advance. I commence my work since conference with a renewed determination to assist in pushing the work on to victory.

Bro. J. F. McDowell, under date of May 11, writes from Magnolia:—

Weather here spring-like, and fruit trees ladened with bloom. Prospect for large crop is excellent. Bro. D. R. Chambers left home on the fifth inst. for his field of labor. J. F. Mintun is holding forth at the Coffman schoolhouse a few miles from town during this week. Sr. Mintun is better of her severe attack of rheumatic trouble. A.M. Fyrando is yet tarrying at his home enduring the burden of nerve disturbance. His kind and faithful mother is his best human "rod and staff," whose Christian heart warmly pulsates toward an only son. I leave on the 14th inst., eastward bound. Shall tarry a few days in Central Iowa with relatives.

Bro. I. N. White, writing from Independence, Missouri, May 14, says:—

Nearly all of the forty-two missionaries in my charge are now in their fields and at work. Elder F. C. Keck in a debate and coming out finely. Have cheering news from a number thus early. I spoke twice yesterday and attended Saints' meeting and helped administer to six. Hands full but cheerful of good results before us.

Sr. Vodisa Fassett, writing from Sandwich, Illinois, May 17, says:—

My eyesight is poor, but I must have the Herald as long as I can see to read it. If I live till July I shall be eighty-seven years old. Have taken the Herald since the first number came out.

A pretty good record, Sr. Fasset. May the remaining portion of your allotted time be peaceful and happy!

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The business department is receiving many calls for Volume 3 of the Church History, and many become impatient because the order is not filled at once. For the benefit of such, as well as those who might wish to know, we state that Volume 3 is in preparation now, and work on it is being pushed as rapidly as possible. Bro. Heman C. Smith, the Historian, informs us that it is about half completed. Work on it was stopped at conference time, but has been resumed and will be prosecuted as rapidly as possible to completion.

Bro. P. C. Taggart, of South Frankfort, Mich., now has a place in the Saints' Home. He comes well recommended, and is quite spry and active, although eighty years of age.

Elder F. C. Warnky informs us that he has moved from Argentine, Kas., to Kansas City, Mo., and says that he will be "at home" at No. 2422, Wabash Avenue, to his many friends.

Bro. S. D. Love writes that he is in his field of labor in the Spring River district, and desires to hear from any who desire preaching. He fails, however, to give us his address. His card was mailed at Seligman, Mo.

Bro. J. W. Wight left Saturday afternoon for Des Moines and other points in his mission field. Bro. Wight has been very busy while at home, both as a member of the Board of Publication and as a member of the committee on revision of Sunday school lessons.

Elder S. K. Sorensen departed Saturday afternoon for his mission field in the Dakotas.

Bro. Alma B. Hanson, who for some time past has filled the position of HERALD pressman, has left the employ of this office and has gone into his mission field in Colorado. We wish Bro. Alma success, and trust his health may be improved.

We hear much complaint that there are not so many occurrences of the manifestations of power now as there used to be in former years. This complaint is not well founded. There are as many and as varied; but having become more accustomed to them, they do not attract so much attention as they once did.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 6.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

ANCESTORS OF THE INDIANS WERE WHITE.

The Shawnees are said to have claimed that the ancient inhabitants of Florida were white.—Prehistoric America, p. 526.

The Maryland Indians said the whites were an ancient generation who had come to life again, and had returned to seize their former land.—Myths of the New World, p. 221.

We can see here that the Maryland Indians had some recollection of their white predecessors, the Nephites.

The Algonkins with one voice called those of their tribes living nearest the rising sun Abnakis, our ancestors at the east, or at the dawn: literally our white ancestors.—Ibid., p. 207.

Both Algonkins and Iroquois speak of "white and bearded men," (Ibid., p. 209 and note 1.)

The legends of the Quiches of Central America say of the earliest men that they were "white children." (Ibid., p. 208 and note 3.)

As the Algonkins spoke of the Abnakis, their white ancestors, as in Mexican legends the early Toltecs were of fair complexion, so the Aymaras sometimes called the first four brothers, viracochas, white men.—Ibid., pp. 213; 214 and note 2.

There is a tradition that Florida had once been inhabited by white people, who had the use of iron tools.—American Antiquities, p. 234.

From the discovery of those two bodies, we think we ascertain the inhabitants to have been white, like the Europeans.—Ibid., p. 236.

These bodies were found in Tennessee. (Ibid., p. 235.)

A red-headed mummy was found in the saltpeter cave in Kentucky. (Ibid., p. 290.)

The people on the monuments in Central America have beards, and the little Mexican idols have beards also.

The Quichuas . . . were originally a fair-skinned race, with blue eyes and light and even auburn hair.—Atlantis, p. 391.

The Quichuas and Aymaras were the Peruvians; and Peru, at the conquest, comprised the countries of Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, part of Chili, and the Argentine Republic. (See Prehistoric America, p. 388, and Conquest of Peru, p. 28, vol. 1.)

We have noticed before that these Quichuas and Aymaras claimed descent from "four brothers;" now we see that the Aymaras "called the first four brothers . . . white men," and the Quiche of Central America called the earliest men "white children." The Algonkins speak of our "white ancestors;" and the Iroquois speak of white bearded men.

Professor Wilson describes the hair of the ancient Peruvians, as found upon their mummies, as "a lightish brown, and of a fineness of texture which equals that of the Anglo-Saxon race."—Atlantis, p. 189.

The ancient Peruvians appear, from numerous examples of hair found in their tombs, to have been an auburn-haired race.—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 187.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The ruins near Huamanga, Peru, are said in the myths to have been built "by bearded white men." Atlantis, p. 393.) The Peruvians, then, that civilized race, were white and bearded.

The builders of the Central American cities are reported to have been a bearded race. (Native Races of the Pacific States, vol. 5, p. 77.)

The great roads of Peru "were the work of the white, auburn-haired, bearded men from Atlantis," Donnelly thinks. (Atlantis, p. 394.)

"Nowhere in the world, perhaps, has man displayed greater energy" than in Peru. (Prehistoric America, p. 387.) So that by going over the ground again, we find that both the myths, the monuments, and the tombs confirm the story of the man who made the Book of Mormon; namely, that the "vanquished race" were "white men," "white children," "bearded men," a civilized race, etc.

THE RED MAN LOOKING FOR A SAVIOR.

Similar myths are found among various Indian tribes; the legend of a deluge and of a Savior and benefactor of the human race extends to the Alaskan tribes and is in fact almost world-wide among all classes of men in some form or other. No dissemination of merely Christian ideas, since the conquest, is sufficient to account for these myths, which appear to have their root in the natural tendencies of the human mind in its evolution from a savage state.—Prehistoric America, p. 531.

Here we are again. Just as soon as the savage turned his face towards civilization he discovered that there had been a flood, and that he had a Savior! Is that it? The Christian believes the same thing; but he rests that belief on a revelation. The savage got by "evolution" what the Christian got from heaven! How "they stagger!"

The Book of Mormon comes handy again. It says that the "white civilized race" had the writings of Moses, and the prophets down to Jeremiah. It tells us that the red man's ancestors were acquainted with these scriptures. In this way we can account for the flood myths of the Indians without going down to evolution. The natives had their saviors—why not? Here is a list:—

Such to the Algonkins was Michabo or Manibozho, to the Iroquois Ioskeha, Wasi to the Cherokees, Tamoi to the Caribs; so the Mayas had Itzamna, the Nahuas Quetzalcoatl, the Mayscas Nemqueteba; such among the Quichuas was Viracocha, among the Mandans Numock-muckenah, among the Hidatsa Itamapisa, and among the natives of the Orinoko Amalivaca; and the catalogue could be extended indefinitely.—Myths of the New World, p. 192.

These gods, many of them, were born of a virgin. This we have noticed before. Viracocha was the Peruvian creator, Quetzalcoatl was the Toltec creator, and Nemqueteba was the Muyscas creator (of the Magdalena country), and Michabo was the Algonkin creator. Zamna and Cukulcan are identified as the same person as Quetzacoalt by Nadaillac. Don't we see that they are looking for Jesus Christ to return—the Creator in flesh—the one that was born of a virgin "at Tulan"?

But how could this savior (the creator) return, if he had never been in America?

It is but a few years since the Indians on our reservations, in wild despair at the misery and deaths of those dearest to them, broke out in mad appeals, in furious ceremonies, to induce that longed-for Savior and friend to appear. The heartless whites called it a "ghost dance" and a "Messiah craze," and shot the participants in their tracks, hastening the implacable destiny against which the poor wretches had prayed in vain. —Myths of the New World, p. 225.

When the Spaniards landed in Mexico the natives "rushed into the water to embrace the prows of their vessels, and despatched messengers throughout the land to proclaim the return of Quetzalcoatl." (See Myths, p. 221.)

We cannot account for all of this deep-rooted hope or anticipation of a Savior with the red man on the hypothesis of Christian teachings since the Conquest. When he saw the white man the ancient prophecies came uppermost in his mind. Some of them thought that he was the anticipated white emigrant, while others at first thought that he was their longed for Savior. The Book of Mormon I think offers the best explanation for this condition of the native mind. Here we see the fruits of that Christian teaching. That Book of Mormon culture is found all the way through their myths, and the red man is still looking for his Savior to return from that fabulous Tulan.

But if the hope of a Savior is the child of evolution, what about the fall, or original sin? Is that a natural product of evolution too? What about the resurrection of the body, the hope of immortality, and two states after death? Did these doctrines spring up in the native mind without a Christian seed to start from? What about the eucharist, water baptism, the new birth, and spiritual regeneration? Did this Christian tree grow up in the native mind without being first planted there by Christian teachers? Do men gather grapes from thistles?

IRON TOOLS AND GLASS.

There is a tradition that Florida had once been inhabited by white people, who had the use of iron tools.—American Antiquities, p. 234.

The Book of Mormon says that both the Jaredites and Nephites had the use of "iron tools." (See 2 Nephi 4: 3; Mosiah 7: 1, 2; Ether 4: 7.)

Charnay, in the execution of a mission entrusted to him by the French Government, went to Zula and superintended the excavation of some tumuli, mountains of rubbish probably, which had covered for many centuries the relics of the ancient Toltecs. One dwelling thus exhumed consisted of twenty-four rooms, two cisterns, twelve corridors, and fifteen little staircases "of extraordinary architecture and thrilling interest," enthusiastically exclaims the fortunate explorer.

"This is not all," he adds; "in the midst of fragments of pottery of all kinds, from the coarsest used in building, such as bricks, tiles, water-pipes, to the most delicate for domestic use, I have picked up enamels, fragments of crockery and porcelain, and more extraordinary still, the neck of a glass bottle iridescent like ancient Roman glass."

Amongst the debris lay the bones of some gigantic ruminants (perhaps bisons?), the tibia of which were about one foot three inches long by four inches thick, the femur at the upper end about six inches by four inches.

Admitting that there is no mistake, these facts are absolutely new, for previously it was considered that the early Americans did not know how to make either glass or porcelain, and that before the arrival of the Conquistadors none of our domestic animals were known in America; but that the oxen, horses, and sheep living there at the present day are all descended from ancestors imported from Europe.

The excavations have also yielded some little chariots that Charnay thinks were the toys of children. Now, supposing these toys to have been a reproduction in miniature of objects used by men, we must conclude that the Toltecs employed carriages, and that their use was not only given up, but absolutely unknown on the arrival of Cortes.

These discoveries, we can but repeat, greatly modify the conclusions hitherto accepted. But are these really original productions? May they not have been imported? This is after all doubtful, and new proofs are needed to establish certainly that the objects discovered really date from the pre-Columbian period before we can admit that in the eleventh century the Toltecs possessed domestic animals, that they knew how to make and fashion porcelain, glass, perhaps even iron, for Charnay also collected in his excavations several iron implements. He himself expresses an idea that the material of which they were made dates from the Spanish period. He does not explain why he makes an exception on this point with regard to the glass and porcelain objects.

It is strong evidence against their prehistoric character that all these elements of an advanced civilization must have disappeared without leaving any trace even in the memory of man. It is probable, therefore, that the different objects brought to light by Charnay are later than the Spanish conquest, and it will be wise to reserve our opinion with regard to them until more complete information can be obtained.—Prehistoric America, pp. 356, 357.

See how cautious these men are? See the difference between them and the man who wrote the Book of Mormon. Now if these doubts are removed by discoveries, would it not be strong presumptive evidence that it was written by an eyewitness of what is related?

It is stated that "anciently the Peruvian sovereigns worked magnificent iron mines at Ancoriames, on the west shore of Lake Titicaca." "It is remarkable," says Molina, "that iron, which has been thought unknown to the ancient Americans, had particular names in some of their tongues." In official Peruvian it was called quillay, and in Chilian panilic.—Atlantis, p. 451.

From this it would appear that in Peru and Chili there was some recollection of the "black metal." Has that myth concerning iron in Peru been manufactured since the Conquest?

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Molina, like Nadaillac, expresses surprise at the evidence of iron in this country in prehistoric times, "which has been thought unknown to the ancient Americans."

The Shawanese myth says:—

Their oldest Indians say, when children, they had often heard it spoken of by the old people of the tribe, that anciently stumps of trees, covered with earth, were frequently found, which had been cut down by edged tools. Whoever they were, or from whatever country they may have originated, the account, as given by Morse, the geographer, of the subterranean wall found in North Carolina, goes very far to show, they had a knowledge of iron ore, and consequently knew how to work it, or they could not have had iron tools, as the Shawanese Indians relate.—American Antiquities, p. 234.

Speaking of Valley River, North Carolina, Mr. Priest says:—

There is also a deep and difficult cut across a very bold vein of this rock, in pursuit of metal [in a prehistoric mine], but it is now much filled up, having been used subsequently for an Indian burying ground. At this place, says the journal [of Sciences and the Arts], nothing short of the steel pickaxe, could have left the traces on the stones which are found here.

Not far from this place, have been found the remains of a small furnace, the walls of which had been formed of soap stone, so as to endure the heat without being fractured. In the county of Habersham, in Georgia, was lately dug out of the earth, at a place where the gold ore is found, a small vessel in the form of a skillet. It was fifteen feet under ground, made of a compound of tin and copper, with a trace of iron. The copper and tin in its composition, are undoubtedly the evidence of its antiquity. . . .

Crucibles of earthen ware, and far better than those now in use, are frequently found by the miners [who were then (1833) working the mines in North Carolina]. By actual experiment they are found to endure the heat three times as long as the Hessian crucibles, which are the best now in use. Bits of machinery, such as is necessary in elevating the ore from the depths, as used by the ancient nations, are also frequently found in the earth where those mines exist, which clearly shows those ancients were acquainted with the minerals.—Ibid., pp. 397, 398.

Speaking of a skeleton found in a tumulus at Marietta, Ohio, Mr. Priest says:—

Lying immediately on the forehead of this skeleton, were found three large circular ornaments, which had adorned a sword belt, or buckler, and were composed of copper, overlaid with a plate of silver; the fronts, or show sides were slightly convex, with a deep depression, like a cup, in the centre, and measured two inches and a quarter across the face of each. On the back side, opposite the depressed portion, is a copper rivet, around which are two separate plates, by which they were fastened to the leather belt. The two pieces of leather resembled the skin of a mummy, and seemed to have been preserved by the salts of the copper; the plates were nearly reduced to an oxyde rust. The silver looked quite black, but was not much corroded, as on rubbing it became bright and clear.

Around one of the rivets was a small quantity, of what appeared to be flax or hemp, in a tolerable state of preservation. Near the side of the body was found a plate of silver, which appeared to have been the upper part of a sword scabbard; it was six inches long, and two broad, with two longitudinal ridges, which probably corresponded with the edges or ridges of the sword once sheathed by it, and appeared to have been fastened to the scabbard by several rivets, the holes of which remain in the plate.

Two or three pieces of a copper tube were also found with this body, filled with iron rust. The pieces, from their appearances, composed the lower end of the scabbard, near the point of the sword, but no sign of the sword itself, except a streak of rust its whole length.

We learn from this that the person who was buried there was a warrior, as the sword declares; and also that the people, of whom he was an individual, were acquainted with the arts of civilized life, which appears from the sheath, the flax, the copper, and the silver, but more especially as the silver was plated on the copper. Near the feet was found a piece of copper, weighing three ounces, which from its shape, appeared to have been used as a plumb, as near one of the ends is a crease or groove, for tying a thread; it is round and two inches and a half in length, one inch in diameter at the center, and one half inch at the small or upper end.

It was composed of small pieces of native copper, pounded together, and in the cracks between the pieces were stuck several bits of silver, one nearly the size of a sixpence. This copper plumb was covered with a coat of green rust, and was considerably corroded.

A piece of red ochre, or paint, and a piece of iron ore, which had the appearance of having been partially vitrified, or melted, was also found in this tumulus; the bit of ore was nearly pure iron.—Ibid., pp. 260, 261.

Pompey, Onondaga County, New York, . . . is the site of an ancient burying ground, upon which, when the country was first settled, was found timber growing apparently of the second growth, judging from the old timber, reduced to mould, lying around, which was an hundred years old, ascertained by counting the concentric grains. In one of these graves was found a glass bottle about the size of a common junk bottle, having a stopple in its muzzle, and in the bottle was a liquid of some sort, but was tasteless. This fact was related to us by a Mr. Higgins, some time sheriff of Onondaga County, who both saw the bottle and tasted the liquid at the time it was discovered, but could not tell of what kind, as it was tasteless. . . .

In the same grave with the bottle, was found an iron hatchet, edged with steel. The eye, or place for the helve, was round, and extended or projected out, like the ancient Swiss or German axe. On lot No. 9, in the same town, was another aboriginal burying ground, covered with forest trees, as the other. In the same town, on lot No. 17, were found the remains of a blacksmith's forge. At this spot have been ploughed up crucibles, such as mineralogists use in refining metals. . . .

Within the range of these works, have been found pieces of cast iron, broken from some vessel of considerable thickness. These articles cannot well be ascribed to the era of the French war, as time enough since then, till the region round about Onondaga was commenced to be cultivated, had not elapsed to give the growth of timber found on the spot, of the age above noticed; and added to this, it is said, that the Indians, occupying that tract of country, had no tradition of their authors.—Ibid , pp. 252, 253.

On the River Gasconade, which empties into the Missouri, on the southern side, are found the traces of ancient works, similar to those in North Carolina. In the saltpetre caves of that region, and Gasconade county in particular, was discovered, when they were first visited, axes and hammers made of iron; which led to the belief that they had formerly worked those caves for the sake of the nitre.—Ibid., p. 237.

The above shows that the Indian myths concerning a civilized race who had the use of iron tools are confirmed. Yes; more than confirmed, for with the iron were also found glass and steel, and what is more remarkable still, "crucibles of earthen ware, and far better than those now in use." "By actual experiment they are found to endure the heat three times as long as the Hessian crucibles, which are the best now [1833] in use." The glass bottle may be a fraud, and the iron axes may be a fraud too; but I don't see how these crucibles can—can you? Why, don't you see that the man that made these crucibles "had a good thing" had they only known it? Who made them? Shall we charge this up to the Devil, too?

The Spaniards were puzzled at the execution of the great works in Peru when they first beheld them, and in their summary way charged them up to the Devil; "an opinion which Garcilasso [the Peruvian historian] seems willing to indorse." (See Prescott's Conquest of Peru, vol. 1, book 1, chap. 1, p. 37, note 25.) You see it comes handy to have a Devil! especially when studying American Antiquities!

The author of the Book of Mormon did not say much about glass; but when describing the sixteen stones which the brother of Jared had prepared to place in the barges, he says "they were white and clear, even as transparent glass" (Ether 1: 7), thus showing that Moroni was accquainted with glass. And "the neck of a glass bottle" which Charnay found in "mountains of rubbish probably, which had covered for many centuries the relics of the ancient Toltecs," and the glass bottle found in a grave at Pompey, New York, are but in harmony with that record; so the iron hatchet edged with steel, and the copper plated with silver are all in line with the crucible, which is evidence of a "culture now lost." From a tomb near Quito was "taken little copper hatchets; looking-glasses, some of polished stone or obsidian, others of metal." (Prehistoric America, pp. 429, 430.).

The Rev. Robert G. Wilson, DD., of Chilicothe, furnished the Antiquarian Society, with information concerning the mound, which once stood near the center of that town. He took the pains to write down its contents at the time of its demolition. . . On a common level with the surrounding earth, at the very bottom of this mound, they had devoted about twenty feet square; this was found to have been covered at first with bark, on which lay, in the centre, a human skeleton, overspread with a mat, manufactured from weeds or bark, but greatly decayed.

On the breast of this person lay what had been a piece of copper in the form of a cross, which had become verdigris; on the breast also lay a stone ornament, three inches in length, and two and a half in width, with two perforations, one near each end, through which passed a string, by means of which it was suspended from the wearer's neck.—American Antiquities, pp. 179, 180.

Some thirty or forty miles below Tawanda, at a place called the Black-walnut Bottom, on the farm of a Mr. Kinney, was discovered a most extraordinary specimen of pottery.

Respecting this discovery, the owner of the farm relates, as we are informed by a clergyman, who examined the article on the spot, though in a broken state, that soon after the first settlements on that river, and especially on that farm, a great freshet took place which tore a channel in a certain direction across the flat, when the vessel which we are about to describe, was brought to light.

It was twelve feet across the top, and of consequence, thirty-six feet in circumference, and otherwise of proportionable depth and form. Its thickness was three inches, and appeared to be made of some coarse substance, probably mere clay, such as might be found on the spot, as it was not glazed. Whoever its makers were, they must have manufactured it on the spot where it was found, as it must have been impossible to move so huge a vessel. . . . But who can tell for what use this vast vessel was intended? Conjecture here is lost, no ray of light dawns upon this strange remnant of antiquity. One might be led to suppose, it was made in imitation of the great Laver in the court of Solomon's Temple, which was seventeen feet two inches in diameter, and fifty-two feet six inches in circumberence, and eight feet nine inches deep. —2 Chron. 4: 2.—Ibid., pp. 108, 109.

Yes; by supposing that it was made "in imitation of the great Laver in the court of Solomon's Temple," that lands us to the Book of Mormon again. The Nephites had the book of 2 Chronicles 4: 2 to go by. They had the Jewish scriptures, which gave a description of Solomon's Temple, and they kept the law of Moses. (Jacob 5: 2.) And by taking this view it explains the Hebrew writing found by Joseph Merrick, Esq., near Pittsfield, Massachusetts, containing quotations from the Old Testament; namely, Deuteronomy 4: 4–9; 11: 13–21; and Exodus 13: 11–16.

Yes; by taking "this view" "we will catch" a "ray of light" and find an explanation of "this strange remnant of antiquity." Can this be all accidental harmony, or had the Devil been at work parodying Solomon's Temple?

AMERICAN ARCHÆOLOGY.

In the hope that attention may be turned in the direction this short paper indicates, it is penned.

Some time after the deluge the posterity of Noah became dispersed or were allotted districts, in settled parts of the earth. To Sharma or Shem the districts south of the Himalayas, and the range of mountains extending from the Hindu Kuh or Caucasus, to the European Caucasus. To Yapeti or Iapheth, the districts north of the above-named mountains. Charma or Ham was accursed.

The section extending from the part now known as Cabul, through the Punjab and along the valley of the Ganges, to Burmah and Siam became known as Bharata-varsha; a part subsequently being named Kumara-varsha. From the countries adjacent to these great Asiatic highlands, the roof of the world, the Pamirs, Cashmere, and Bamah, the Semitic tribes swarmed at intervals, and made their way into almost all parts of the known world. They have left their trace marks in Egypt, Palestine, Hellas (Greece), Rome, and even America.

The name Shem or Sharma means the sun. Hence Shem's descendants have the particular epithet applied to them of the solar races. This name of the sun is found connected with them under other forms, but all having the same meaning, at various stages of their history. Religious feuds divided this great race, from which resulted the formation of another great branch, known as the Lunar race. In other words, the two sections were the Surya-vansas and the Chandra-vansas. Chandra, the moon; Surya, the sun. All, as to origin, were Suryas; as to religious distinction, the later section only were Chandras.

The Bible tells us that Abraham, Laban, etc., were Syrians. Abraham driven out, by religious differences from Ur of the Chaldees, went to Canaan. The name Chaldees or Chaldeans is from the sanscrit, Cal, a tribe, Deva, a Brahmin. They were Brahminical tribes, known as Chasdem; that is, Caucasians. They were persecutors alike of Abraham and Job.

The Hellenes, who gave the name Hellas to the portion of Europe in which they settled, came from the Hela district, see the Hela Mountains in Afghanistan. Now the word Hela or Heli in sanscrit and in Greek means, the sun, and Ina in sanscrit, a king or chief. Helaines whence Hellenes means the sun kings or chiefs.

The names Greek or Greeks are not found in the original Scriptures, always Hellas or Hellenes, or their varied forms. The name Greek or Greece should never have been applied either to the country or people called by that name.

A portion of Hellas, the Peloponnessus, was named Inachia, and in it was the river Inachus. These names are from the sanscrit, Inaca, the sun.

The same name Inaca is found in the title, the Incas. The country of the Incas was Peru. Paru in sanscrit, is the sun. It is found also in Persia or Parasu-rama.

The vast chain of mountains known as the Andes finds its corrosponding word in the Undes, a district and range of mountains adjacent to the Kailas and Himalaya mountains.

The great Peruvian festival was the feast of Raymi. Raymi is the same as Rama (sanscrit for the sun) Raymi, Rama, and Rome are alike synonymous.

The perpetual fire kept burning in the Peruvian temple corresponded to the perpetual fire in the Prytaneum of Athens, and elsewhere. The Peruvian attendants were known as Virgins of the Sun, their overseers as Mamaconas. The first part of this name, Mama, speaks for itself; the second, Conas, is from the sanscrit, Canyas, a virgin; the Mamaconas, were the mother superior of the virgins.

The name Mexico is equivalent to the sanscript Makshika, which means a mineral substance, either gold or silver. This name is therefore fittingly applicable to Mexico.

So far, then, are given indices, by which to pursue a line of inquiry which will lift up much that veils the past, the far off past. While trying to elucidate let us avoid as much as we can vagaries. To know the beginnings, the genesis, of nations, is a laudable desire. To find out the links which unite each succeeding age with its predecessor, and the Divine hand overruling all, should be the aim of all claiming to be his sons or his children. To bear and forbear with each other until we arrive at a united, solid foundation. For, whether the worldly wise like it or believe it, the architect of the universe will yet rule it by his Son.

A word. In Genesis, Abraham is called "the Hebrew," being a descendant of Heber. In Genesis his relative, Laban, is called a Syrian; hence Abraham was also a Syrian. See also Deuteronomy. Syrian from the sanscript Surya, the sun. Neither Abraham, Isaac, nor Jacob were Jews. They were Hebrews or Syrians, or of the Semitic stock. The first Israelite was Jacob or Israel. The first Jew was Judah, son of Jacob. A word to the wise should be enough.

THE SEX.

Between the masculine and feminine genders there are common grounds, as also distinctive spheres. Man has brawn and muscle, strong tendons, and ligaments. Steady nerves, toughened sinews, fibers, tissues, joints, limbs; as well as a large, rugged, powerful, athletic frame. His inherent disposition, and physical make-up, his natural trend, faculty, and aptitude qualify and endow him for the stern realities and hardy achievements of life. The agricultural, manufacturing, commercial, and maritime spheres of life are mainly conducted by the bread-winners of the world. The high seas, silvery lakes, and rushing rivers are the natural highways for commerce and trade. These crafts that ply thereon are built and managed by lords of an earthly transitory heritage. Nautical pursuits, the mining and smelting of ores, the felling of the forest, constructing railways, canals, telegraph and telephone lines, quarrying and cutting stone, making and placing bricks, building and keeping in repair dikes, thoroughfares, aqueducts, viaducts, water mains, sewers, gas fixtures, policing the streets, turning the fallow, harvesting the fields, garnering the grain, marketing, buying, selling, and a multiplicity of other like and kindred things, are under his direct control. The arts and sciences are his realm in mathematics; painting, sculpturing, music, astronomy, botany, the languages; moral, mental, and practical philosophy; chemistry, civil engineering, surveying, navigation, political economy, zoology, and in fine, all that is known or knowable are open to his hand, heart, and brain. Intellectual development, the pageant march of reason, the disclosures of scientific research, and the treasures and fruitage of invention are rife on every hand.

The thresher has taken the place of the flail. The reaper and binder have relegated the reap hook and cradle. The ox yoke is supplanted by the dynamo. The hand cards, reel, and wheel are outstripped by the woolen and cotton mills. Propelling power and labor-saving machinery abound throughout the civilized world, and are constantly knocking at the door of the barbarous and savage nations of mankind.

In governments, both human and divine, he is to take the lead in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. In all earthly institutions he enacts, judges, and executes the law. He establishes tax schedules, collects and disburses funds for the public welfare; levies war, commands armies, and concludes peace; and strives to promote domestic tranquility, prosperity, peace, and happiness at home and abroad. He delights in private and public enterprise, the enhancing of wealth, collectively and individually; and the universal diffusion of knowledge and morality.

As touching the priesthood, or ministry, the male side of the household of faith have ever been selected, chosen, called, ordained, qualified, and empowered of God to bear the burden of ruling, from the presiding prophet down to the latest and last ordained deacon. Aaron and his sons, the male portion of the house of Levi, were to minister in the priest's office forever, when worthy. The apostles of the New Testament were all men, as well as the high priests and elderships, of all times and places; along with overseers or pastors, bishops, evangelists, the seventy, etc.

If we "be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead," as "our living head," we should be subject to this great "leader and commander" in all things. In like manner, in Christ, the wife should be in cheerful subjection to her liege lord and honored husband. "As their own bodies . . . let every one of you in particular so love his wife, even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband."—Old Saxon houseband. I look with suspicion and disfavor upon the Fox girls that originated and set in motion modern spiritualism, in Rochester, New York, in 1848.

This would-be philosophy has gathered in a vast army of female lecturers and mediums. Mary Barker Glover Eddy, of Boston, Masssachusetts, starts on foot and aids in carrying forward "Christian Science healing." Madam Blavatski was a celebrated promoter of theosophy. Female clubs and leagues, Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, and the likes are popping up all around, to say naught of relief societies, prayer unions, the Red Cross, Bands of Mercy, Sisters of Charity, and the woman's rights fad.

It will hardly do to bemean St. Paul, call him an old fogy, bachelor, or anything of the kind, to break down the authority as an inspired apostle and man of God. Please mind you he had an abundance of revelation, was taught the gospel fresh from headquarters, and wrote the commandments of the Lord Jehovah. Isaiah said of apostate Israel, their leaders caused them to err, and women ruled over them.

In Revelation 2:20 we learn how one Jezebel, a self-styled prophetess, taught and seduced the servants of God to commit fornication and sacrifice to idols, and her fate. Anything that partakes of a religious movement, especially when it assumes organic form, should have one or more of the elders present, for the word of the Lord is explicit that they shall take the lead of all meetings as they shall be dictated to or directed by the Holy Ghost. If an evil spirit would come trooping in, or one or more false manifestations occur, the laity could not detect and eject the spirit of darkness; therefore, the great need of ministerial power and authority to rule aright.

In speaking, evidently, of judging, administering church government, and executing wholesome discipline, St. Paul said:—

> Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to rule; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to rule in the church.—1 Cor. 14:34, 35, Inspired Translation.

This matter of delegating even honored worthy handmaidens to have voice and vote in our quarterly or General Conferences, is an overarching cloud and standing rebuke to our people, and the sooner this embargo is removed the better it will be for all concerned. Over the vexed question of circumcision, Paul and Barnabas went "up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about it." (See Acts 15.) Also, "the apostles and elders and brethren send greeting," etc. Peter said, "James answered, saying, . . . hearken unto me," etc. Surely the above describes an elders' conference, and now are we going to learn our duty, and act in our office and calling?

The gentler sex are primarily housekeepers; and, forsooth, it is a glorious thing to float in sunshine, hope, contentment, and providential care throughout the corridors, halls, and chambers of a well-regulated home. The long vigils over the sick, the house of toil, and loneliness when the head of the household is away at work, while the children are at school, the anxiety and responsibility of mother when some are absent, or all are present, coupled with tired frame, unstrung nerves, fainting heart, and enfeebled body is a battle field in the world's arena. Bring forth the larch, and the laurel, and the evergreen from the mountains, and wreath therein the choicest flowers that bedeck the plain, and bloom in parks and gardens; arrange tastefully and tenderly a tiara of beauty; place it carefully upon the wrinkled, feverish, faded brow of care, and let the embrace of affection, and the kiss of love, cause the crimson blush and smile to return to the pallid cheek, as a wellspring of life, and a cherishing fountain. Vigilant care, kind words, and sympathy for wife and mother are ever at par, and always legal tender in the domain of the heart.

The babe looks to the mother for sustenance, smiles, and a model. From her deft touch and example it learns the juvenile lessons of life that flow on in more mature years. Her example and influence will enter into the very warp and woof of its being, to last the ages through. In cutting, fitting, and making, in the culinary arts; in planning, economizing, and saving, in numberless things she is man's superior, or substantial helpmeet. An unfortunate old maid, or a crabbed old bachelor, is like the half of a pair of scissors,—not much of a success. The former, in that she does not have the proposing, is more to pity than to blame; while the latter, if he can find a suitor, and does not, is a monumental failure. He becomes suspicious, stingy, and concludes that none scarcely are good enough for his lordship; whereas, nine out of every ten are too good for him, and would make most any man a dutiful, worthy, happy companion. Secret societies, club rooms, and eating wild game away under the cover of the wee small hours of the night, and all intemperate habits and acts jeopardize the peace of the wife.

stream across the marsh in the dusky eve. If from necessity you are belated through mutual understanding, there will be a light in the window for thee. The sparks will leap up the chimney, and the fire will glow in the grate, and within the altar of conjugal fidelity. If you are unkind, uncouth, and inconsiderate at home, with any or all of the household, get right ere you go forth to do church work and convert the alien and the heathen. An ideal home, with love, peace, plenty, and all the good graces, is a miniature heaven; and sure it is not far away from any of us if we think and act all right. The aggregations of happy homes make excellent churches and stable governments, and soften all the rude and rough asperities of this fleeting life.

I remember when my Hoosier mother used to still my childish fears by singing to my childish heart of the "Better Land," as also when recently at the Washington Park reunion the octogenarian fanned me to an afternoon sleep, and, lo, when I awoke, the blue eyes and wrinkled hand were still on duty. We celebrated her eighty-seventh anniversary at brother Ellis', the third day of this November, 1899, with feasting for the aged guests. You would look over this family reference, I judge, when you learn that for a full half a century she was the consort of my father, and the watchful custodian of a girl and five sons in succession, who all grew to maturity and had families of their own. In the fall of 1873 the aged pair united with the church, in the Spring River district.

Now I wish, in conclusion, to bid all God speed in the right, and may the good Lord add his blessings, and inspire us to renewed activity, and the redoubling of our diligence as we behold the carelessness, slothfulness, inactivity, and downright wickedness of the great masses.

Let us so live and think, strive and act, that we will be as Saviors of men on Mount Zion. May we seek for and not shun opportunities for doing good, and then we will not only save ourselves but all that will hear and heed our teachings. M. T. SHORT.

QUESTION ON SACRAMENTAL EMBLEMS.

Is it in keeping with the revealed law of God, as found in the books, to bless water for sacrament use?

This custom which has found its way into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints calls forth this article in search for the truth of the matter. In order to find what was used as emblems of the body and blood of Christ in the sacrament, we should go to the "law and the testimony."

> Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8: 31, 32.

It is the facts that the scriptures furnish us that enable us to teach any principle aright concerning any doctrine or principle of the doctrine of Christ. Therefore, as the sacrament was introduced as commemorative of the death of Christ, it is very essential to know what should be used to properly represent it.

Some suppose that in the patriarchal age the bread and wine spoken of in Genesis 14: 18 that Melchizedek brought forth when he met Abraham was commemorative of Christ's suffering, they looking forward by faith. Let this be as it may, he brought forth bread and wine."

Next we find in Matthew 26: 17 the disciples asking Jesus where they should prepare for him to eat the passover. Then he gives instruction (verse 18), and they go and make ready (verse 19); and when "even was come, he sat down with the twelve," (verse 20), and "they did eat" (verse 21.) Eat what? That which was prepared. One would suppose it was that which was common to the Jews, to whom this ordinance had been given. See Exodus 12: 8–17. It consisted of "meat, unleavened bread, and bitter herbs." (See verse 8.)

> And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.—Matt. 26: 26–28.

And in verse 29 he calls it the "fruit of the vine;" hence it must have been wine. The bread and wine were introduced at this feast to represent the body and blood of Jesus. Compare section 26: 1 Doctrine and Covenants, given September, 1830:—

> It mattereth not what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, when ye partake of the sacrament, if it so be that ye do it with an eye single to my glory. . . . Wherefore . . . you shall not purchase wine, neither strong drink of your enemies; wherefore you shall partake of none, except it is made new among you.

Although it matters not what ye shall eat or drink. How is this?

This, like the supper that preceded the bread and wine which Jesus blessed, it matters not what we eat or drink before the sacrament is introduced. It doesn't affect the emblems, if eaten with an eye single to the glory of God. As seen from St. Paul's language in First Corinthians 11, it appears to have been the custom in those days to partake of a feast; but they seemed to have abused it.

> For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and another is drunken.—Verse 21.

Hence they did not eat with an eye single to the glory of God. Hence they were unprepared to partake of the bread and wine intelligently, as some were "hungry" and others "drunken." Therefore they were subjects of reproof, and he would remind them that the object of their coming together should be "to eat the Lord's supper," and that when ye come together to eat, "tarry one for another" (verse 33); or have order and respect, that the feast may be enjoyed by all, to the glory of God, that the Spirit of Christ may rest upon the one who blesses the bread, to the souls of all who eat of it, and be received by each as they reach forth the hand to partake, discerning the object for which it is blessed; so likewise with the wine, that his Spirit may be with them; hence, it matters not what we eat or drink in the feast. But the sacrament is represented by the presence of bread and wine. But says Joseph:—

> You shall not purchase wine, neither strong drink of your enemies; wherefore you shall partake of none, except it is made new among you.

Paragraph 3 says:—

> And also with Peter, and James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and special witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry; and of the same things which I revealed unto them.

Did Jesus reveal more than bread and wine as emblems of his flesh and blood? If so, where is it to be found? Again:—

> It is expedient that the church meet together often to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus.—D. C. 17: 22.

Where is provision for the substitute, water? Again, Joseph gave

> This work of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make.—D. C. 86: 1.

Where does water come in? Again, Moroni says:—

> The manner of their elders and priests administering the flesh and blood of Christ unto the church. And they administered it according to the commandments of Christ; wherefore we know the manner to be true.—Book of Moroni 4.

Now if he knew the "manner to be true," do you think he would make a mistake in giving the name of the emblems to be used? He said they prayed to the Father in the name of Jesus to "bless and sanctify" the bread, and also the wine. This being true, where does water come in?

Again, in Book of Nephi 8: 6, 7, we find "that Jesus commanded his disciples that they should bring forth some bread and wine,"—and he took the bread and blessed it, and said "they should take of the wine of the cup, cup, and drink of it":—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And I give unto you a commandment that ye shall do these things. And if ye shall always do these things, blessed are ye, for ye are built upon my rock.—Book of Nephi 8:7.

Now if they were to use bread and wine because they were built upon the rock, can Latter Day Saints use water as a substitute and not step off the rock? Jesus said unto them:—

But who among you shall do more or less than these, are not built upon my rock, but are built upon a sandy foundation.

With this before us, when Saints use water, what foundation are they on?

And the gates of hell are ready open to receive them.

If this be true, who closed the gates? Then why use water as a substitute? Therefore, I again ask, is it in keeping with the revealed law as found in the books to bless water for sacrament use? Remember, it is the facts that the scriptures furnish us that enable us to teach any principle aright, concerning any doctrine or principle of the doctrine of Christ.

Now, to change the case a little, suppose we were to meet to partake of the emblems, remembering that Joseph said, "that it mattereth not what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink." We learn that we have plenty of wine, but there is no bread. What would we do? Would not a substitute do in regard to the bread in this case as well as in the other, seeing it matters not what ye shall eat or drink? Does not this expose the thing, and show that the language has reference to a feast, and not the sacrament direct? The sacrament can only be properly represented by bread and wine. Although they may eat whatever they may have prepared for the feast, it mattereth not, if they eat and drink with an eye single to the glory of God, although it may be water that compose the drink; yet at the close of the feast, having partaken with order, in honor to the occasion, with no one hungry or drunken, the bread and wine being blessed (as stated by Matthew and Moroni) by the elder or priest, they could in fact partake in the likeness somewhat at least of that which is written, which would bring us in remembrance and prepare us to drink into the Spirit that inspired it, and give us strength to renew our diligence in anticipation of meeting at the great marriage supper of the Lamb, when Jesus will eat and drink with us and all those who are worthy.

What a feast that will be, when with all the worthy saints of all ages, "with Moroni, and Elias, and also John, Peter, James, and John, and also Joseph Smith, and Joseph, and Jacob, and Isaac, and Abraham, and also Adam, and also with all those whom my Father hath given me out of the world," will be gathered in one, to give thanksgiving and praise to Jesus, who at the great feast, in acknowledgment of their acceptance, will take the cup and say, Now is fulfilled that which I spake:—

I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.—Mark 14:25.

The fruit of the vine must be wine. With these facts, why bless water? Isn't it misleading?

THE LAW OF OFFENSES.—NO. I.

BY ELDER T. W. SMITH.

It is impossible but that offenses will come: but woe unto him, through whom they come! —Luke 17:1.

To offend is to displease; to make angry; to injure; to sin. We can offend God, the government, (general, state, and municipal), our friends, and ourselves.

Sin is said to be "transgression of law;" and if so, then a violation of the laws of God, of the government, of society, and our natures or bodies is sin. To "injure" another is to interfere with his rights, to deprive him of them, or prevent his use of them. God, the government, society, and our natures have rights, which we are under obligation to observe. God demands of us our love, our reverence, our worship, and our obedience. The government claims our loyalty, our respect, and our support. Society requires that we be virtuous, temperate, honest, and peaceful. Our natures insist that we be healthful, holy, and happy. When we fail in these things, we offend, we displease, we injure, we sin.

The violation of law is sin, and the penalty of sin is death. The violation of the laws of God bring spiritual death, the disregard of governmental laws produces political death, the ignoring of society's laws lead to social death, and the transgression of nature's laws cause physical death. Death, however, may be avoided by repentance, confession, and restitution; otherwise the penalty must attach, or be affixed; that is, death must follow.

As regards the laws of God, there are at least two classes of offenders, one of which is in the church, the other is outside and with whom the church has nothing to do so far as acting as the agent of God in inflicting punishment is concerned. Concerning the class of offenders in the church, the law of God declares that the ministry or the elders are to see that the law of God is kept; that is, that it be honored and obeyed. They cannot, of course, prevent disobedience of the law, nor can they force any individual to observe the law against that individual's will. We mean that the elders cannot use physical force in compelling a member of the church to comply with any commandment of God. They are, nevertheless, required to see that the "law is kept," and if they cannot compel or force members of the church to do what God requires, nor compel them to abstain from doing that which he has forbidden, in what manner are they, then, to "see" that the "law is kept?" There is but one way, and that is to see that the wilful, persistent transgressor of the law is adequately punished; that is, they are to see that the punishment threatened in the law against transgressors is duly inflicted upon the unrepentant offender.

The laws referred to are not the laws of the elders; they did not devise, originate, or prepare them. God is their author, creator, designer, or maker; and the penalty to be inflicted upon those who disregard or wilfully transgress his laws has been affixed by himself. It is not in the power, province, or prerogative of any elder, or any class, or any number of elders collected together in any organized form whatsoever, to alter, change, modify, correct, or amend in any form whatever, in any degree whatever, any law that has come from God. If any change is made at any time, or if a law becomes inoperative at any time, it must be changed by its author or maker, or be annulled by him alone. Laws made by him and applied to a particular class of people at a particular time and designed for a particular object, may cease when that object has been accomplished; but so long as the law is in force and binding upon that people, there is no power, right, or privilege granted any man to alter or amend the law. Nor is there the least degree of privilege granted the executors of the law, whether it is the body at large, or any particular class belonging to the body, to suffer a violation of the law to be committed with impunity.

Nor can the body at large, or any particular portion of the body, in any way, mitigate the punishment to be inflicted upon the transgressor. They cannot make the punishment any more or any less severe than the author of the law has ordained. Nor has the body at large nor any portion of the body any right or privilege to make any rule or establish any principle or permit any custom or practice to obtain which will excuse a violation of any law, or that will prevent the due execution of the penalty affixed to the law. Such a rule, or permission, or excuse is itself either a direct or an indirect transgression of law, and is therefore more or less sin in itself; and is, of course, inoperative and void; and its disregard is not only justifiable, but necessary.

Mercy is a blessed quality, a commendable principle, and a happy experience; but mercy must always agree with, or go hand in hand, with justice. Mercy must not rob justice; neither must justice interfere with mercy's claim. But it must not be forgotten that, so far as the execution of the laws of God is concerned, the church is not called upon to exercise either mercy or justice; that is, it is not the personal or private rights of the church that are being violated, but the rights of God; and it is the mercy of God and the justice of God that is to be considered. It is a false idea of "mercy" that would lead us to pass by unnoticed the transgressions of the laws of God; or that would lead us to refuse or even to neglect the execution of the law of God upon the unrepentant transgressor. We may be, in such a case, unmerciful to the body, and may endanger the well-being of the whole body by our misplaced mercy to the individual transgressor; for by failing to "purge out the old leaven" we may "leaven the whole lump." It is better, so Jesus the lawgiver reasons, that one member should perish than that the whole body should.

If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.—Matt. 5:29.

It is not mercy, but a sickly sentimentalism that to save a persistent transgressor permits him to poison by example and most likely by precept also the minds of others; whereas by prompt enforcement of the law these might be saved the force and influence of the pernicious example.

"But," says one, "I don't believe in being too hasty in executing the law."

Well, who said anything about being "too hasty"? Cannot we be too slow as well as "too hasty"? God has told us precisely what course to take; and when we strictly pursue that course there cannot be too much haste; or if there is, the fault cannot be ours, but that of the Lawgiver. In being so very merciful to the offender we may be unmerciful to the law; or, at least, we may not have any mercy on the honor of God or the good name of his cause.

We have not made the laws that govern the church of God; if we had, then we might permit the violation, their neglect, or even their repudiation if we choose to; but in reference to the laws of God there is but one relation that we bear to them as elders, and that is as executors, to "see" that they are "kept." If we do not "see" that they are "kept," then we must be punished for our neglect. If the local elders, that is, the elders of a branch, refuse to see that the law is kept, or in other words, if they fail to inflict or to see that the branch inflicts due punishment upon the unrepentant transgressor, then whatever body is superior to them, whether the district conference or General Conference, or missionaries in charge, can punish the elders for neglect of, or refusal to do, their duty in the matter. Or if the branch should refuse to execute a just and righteous sentence upon an impenitent transgressor, then the branch would become a transgressor, and subject to punishment. The branch should not execute an unrighteous or unlawful sentence; but at the same time, the elders should not pass an unrighteous or unlawful sentence; and farther, they should not sit in judgment upon accusations that do not come within the province of the law; or in other words, they should not try a person not accused of violating clear and positive law. Nor should they sit in judgment upon a case of even unmistakable violation of law unless the prerequisite labor has been performed. Neither should those whose duties, or rights, or privileges, are to convene a court of elders, prefer charges before that body, which are not violations of law; or if they are plainly such, unless the offender has been duly labored with as required by the law.

It is not within the powers, rights, or privileges of either the elders, or the members to forgive a person who has reached that stage on the law of offenses, which requires his or her expulsion. The commandment which reads, "I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men;" refers solely to personal offenses, and not to offenses against the laws of the church. But even of these personal transgressions forgiveness is to be based upon repentance and confession, as witness the connection; we read:—

Wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin. I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; and ye ought to say in your hearts, let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds. And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the church, and do with him as the scriptures saith unto you, either by commandment or by revelation. And this ye shall do that God might be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your Lawgiver. —D. C. 64:2.

Now if this revelation teaches anything, it shows: 1. That the commandment to forgive refers to personal offenses, or trespasses committed against us as individuals. 2. That even such offenses are not to be passed over if the offender repents not and confesses not; but that while we as individuals, forgive the unrepentant transgressor, yet we must nevertheless deliver him up to the church, so that he may be dealt with as taught in the scripture which says that if he hears not the church "let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." That is, cast him out of the church that he may become an outsider, 3. That if we do not thus proceed with the impenitent offender we will "offend him who is our lawgiver." 4. That "compassion" for the offender is not to play any part in the case; that is, that our compassion or our mercy is not to rob justice. 5. That we are required to forgive the offender, and may have compassion on him and be willing of ourselves to let him escape punishment, yet we must execute the law upon him if he repents not and does not confess his sins, in order that "God might be glorified." 6. Therefore, if we permit our mercy or compassion to lead us to permit the unrepentant transgressor (against us) to pass on unpunished, we not only do not glorify God but we actually "offend" him by so doing, and so become transgressors of the law ourselves.

Now is it not a mistaken and an unauthorized and unlawful exhibition of "mercy" that will permit us to let the unrepentant offender pass by unpunished? Is it not assuming more of a merciful character than God himself assumes? Is it not a sort of exalting ourselves above God? Had we not better have a little mercy for "the law" occasionally?

And now, mark this: If we are not permitted to let the person who trespasses against us personally to escape punishment, how much less can we be allowed to exercise mercy toward the open or public transgressor, or toward him who offends the "body of Christ" or who trespasses against the laws of the land? We have no right whatever to screen the murderer, the robber, the thief, the liar, the slanderer, the traitor, or the general disturber of the peace, but are commanded to deliver them up "to the laws of the land." Compassion, or mercy, is not allowed to interfere. And so in matters that finally come before the branch, in order that they may lift up their hands against the unrepentant transgressor, there is no liberty allowed for the exercise of mercy (except toward God and his law), but the law must be executed.

The real meaning of a vote at such a time is this: All who wish to glorify God and honor his law, and to not "offend him who is your lawgiver," will lift up their hands against Mr. Impenitent Sinner, that he may be cast out according to the law of God. And now "all you who have more pity for the transgressor than respect for the law of God, and fear to offend the transgressor, but have no fear of offending God, and who do not care to glorify God nor to be justified in the eyes of the law, but who wish to exhibit a morbid feeling of mercy for those who have no mercy on the church or on themselves, neither regard for God or his law, will lift up their hands against the execution of the law of God." Ah! the negative has it, and God is not to be glorified, and you are unjustified in the eyes of the law. God is offended, the law is dishonored, the dead branch is to remain in the tree, the "old leaven" is to remain until it leavens the whole lump, and indeed it has leavened the majority already, because they condone the offense, and have more compassion for the transgressor of the law than for the law, and are in a sense particeps criminis with him.

The law says:—

He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you.—D. C. 41:2.

Therefore, the negatives are not disciples of the Lord; and it would be in order for the president to instruct the teachers to labor with those who cast the "negative vote." If they repent, and confess their sins, let them be forgiven; but if they do not, let them be tried before a court of elders, and if they repent not, let them be "cast out."

(Concluded next week.)

SACRIFICE NECESSARY.

It is evident from the study of God's word that man was created to glorify him. For that cause man was created with the power to reason and comprehend the wonderful nature and attributes of God, at least sufficient of his wondrous power and majesty to create within them the desire to learn more and more of his will concerning them. No one could glorify God without a knowledge of his laws, and by compliance with the requirements of the same. No one who believes in God will dispute this. As it is very important to know how we may best glorify him, we will pursue the subject a little farther. Negatively speaking, God is not glorified alone by a moral or righteous course of life, nor by long prayers, or an outward compliance with the forms of religious service, however orthodox these forms may be. All these things are well enough, and help to make up the sum of life, but it is the humble, contrite spirit which yearns in love for poor suffering humanity, and sees in his fellow men the image of God, and who stretches forth his hand to comfort and cheer, that glorifies God most. It is that one who is willing to do God's will by loving the humblest and lowliest of God's poor, not forgetting that the Master said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Then, negatively, As ye have done it not unto one of these, ye have done it not unto me. Then, is it not self-evident that to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, is in perfect consonance with God's will, and it is pleasing in his sight?

John says: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" And James says: "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Without works our professions of fidelity and trust and knowledge of God's word will avail but little; or if we hedge ourselves about with a wall of selfishness and shut out the cry of the poor and needy, to such the Master will say, "I never knew you."

Others, again, seem to think they can please and glorify God and do nothing to carry forward the work of spreading the gospel. While they pray God to bless the means that are being employed to that end, they forget that it requires something besides prayers and well-wishes to clothe and feed the poor preachers and their families and keep up the temporal interests of the work. Again, if we would please and glorify God in giving, it should be done with a cheerful heart and not grudgingly. Many are not blessed in giving because they make no sacrifice in the giving.

Suppose a brother is worth ten thousand dollars, and this is invested so as to give a profit of ten per cent per annum, and out of this he gives twenty-five dollars, not the fourth of one per cent. Is that any sacrifice? We think not. It has not been missed out of the aggregate, but the widows and humble poor of the church who possess no lands or wealth, and who give an amount almost equal to this, are the ones who make the sacrifice, and get the blessing. When the Master saw the rich casting their wealth into the treasury, he saw also a poor widow cast in her mite and said: "This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury: for all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all she had, even all her living." What a striking lesson! There are members of this branch, and of others, I presume, who do not pay one farthing to either the local or general fund of the church, and yet retain their standing. What answer will they give the Master at the judgment? What would more conserve God's glory or bring greater reward and blessing than to sacrifice for the spread of the gospel and the salvation of dying men?

God has laid upon the church the burden of this work, chosen human agencies to carry it forward under the guidance of his Spirit. All are not apostles, all are not elders, all have not the same calling; but while the living priesthood of the church are bending their energies with might and main to glorify God by preaching the gospel, the great mass of the church should feel that God will not hold them guiltless if they neglect to hold up the hands of the ministry.

Listen, dear Saints, do we love this latter-day work? Do we believe it is true? We say so again and again. Would we glorify God? If so, let us resolve to put one hundred more missionaries in the field. Do you hear the cry of lost men and women, crying, "Give us the gospel, or we perish"? That cry is being heard over all the land. Shall we see them perish? Shall we see them fed on the husks of human teaching? O that God would give us a spirit of self-abnegation, self-deniel! Then if we would glorify God let us love his work more than all else, and be willing to make some sacrifice. If we would do this, then this latter-day work would be known in every hamlet in this land, and in islands of the sea in ten years. That this may be realized is my earnest prayer.

In gospel bonds,

JOHN S. STRAIN.

Letter Department.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps some will remember that about one year ago in a letter to the Herald we urged the idea of district reunions. With us at that time it was all theory. Since then, however, our district has practically demonstrated the feasibility of such a move; and believing other districts might be interested in the results, some of them are mentioned herein. Those who had been in the habit of attending reunions each year at some distant point, that is, some general or "world's reunion," were kindly solicited to, instead of spending their money going so far, give a small percent of the amount they would have thus spent in supporting our home reunion. This was readily done, some giving perhaps fifteen or twenty per cent of what attending a distant reunion would have cost them, others giving as high as fifty per cent of what it would have cost. Our subscriptions for the general fund did not, with two or three exceptions, go outside of this number. It was announced at our district conference that those feeling disposed might contribute to the general fund, but no special solicitation was made. The amount resulting from this was about two dollars. Hence it is approximately fair to say that the money for the general fund raised by subscription was but a comparatively small per cent of the amount the same individuals would have paid to have attended reunions farther from home as on previous years. About thirty-five meetings were held during our reunion, and during all that time but four collections were taken. The man who delivered our vegetables, Mr. Evans, allowed us a certain per cent of all he sold on the ground for general fund, which amounted in all to perhaps five dollars. This with a little money gratuitously contributed by the ones especially pleased who visited us, raised all the funds necessary; and though we were unfortunate in several things causing additional expense, such as losing some of the tents, etc., we came out with all expenses paid and $5.70 on hand to start the fund for another year. Instead of our people being money out of pocket, they had really saved several dollars, as they subscribed but a portion of what it would have cost them to go away. So much for the money side of the question.

From the spiritual side, the results were decidedly much more satisfactory. It was generally conceded by those in a position to know that no one thing ever done in the district had so effectually served to get our work properly before the people, or to so efficiently act as a welding link between our own people as our reunion. The prayer meetings were fine. The preaching, while much of it was to outsiders, was very instructive to the Saints. The good effects of the meetings have by no means yet died.

At a business meeting held toward the close of the reunion, the enthusiastic action taken making provision for another reunion this year bespoke the sentiment prevailing among those present as to their individual opinion of its being a success. Many wanted to run two weeks, but ten days was advised and adopted. There are many details connected with the business part of a reunion upon which it would be wise to consult those who have had experience, if you contemplate having a reunion and have never done so before, as it will perhaps enable you to save some expense and miss some slight shoals.

As for speakers, besides our sub-missionary in charge and local district force, we had two speakers from abroad.

We are firmly of the opinion that district reunions are a decided step in the right direction. There are many excellent reasons for this which cannot be enumerated in this communication; but if any who have never yet tried the experience are seriously considering same, and wish further information that I might be able to furnish, will take pleasure in going more into detail in private correspondence.

The general expression of opinion from General Conference seems to be, "Best educative Conference the church has ever held." Somehow we seem to have felt new life down here already, and we have every reason to believe that the promise that has been given that this year would be an exceptionally good one for us will be fulfilled. Have had some splendid prayer meetings recently. The Religio and Sunday school are assisting the work very materially, not only in St. Louis proper, but throughout our district.

Brethren Bond, Slover, and Barmore, of the missionary force, have visited, returning from Conference.

In view of a recent letter in the Herald, perhaps it is but fair to some of us "denizens" of St. Louis, to state that while it is true the water here gets a little intermingled with mother earth occasionally, there is such a thing as a filterer known to westerners, whether they have them "down east" or not. Humanity is so constituted as to become accustomed to their surroundings. We live on in the smoke and with the dirty water, apparently happy, regardless of how distasteful these things are to people from eastern cities. True we are in the city, but not necessarily of it, especially when indulging in many of its babylonish qualities. Bro. B. seems to like us pretty well here, regardless of the unsavory fruits of the Mississippi, used; and I am quite sure many of the Saints here welcome his brief visits as he passes through.

Trusting the Lord may abundantly bless the work of this conference year, and that his Spirit may guide us wisely, I remain,

Yours truly,

J. C. HITCHCOCK.

FULTON, Kentucky, May 13.

Editors Herald:—I have been a member of the Latter Day Saint Church for only a short time, and I find more comfort and consolation in this glorious work than I ever could have imagined before. I feel so thankful to God that I was brought to the knowledge of the gospel of the Son of God.

When my companion first began to talk of the origin of this work, by whom it was restored, and like things, it sounded so disgusting, I could hardly listen to it. At first I was, of course, too stiff-necked and prejudiced to investigate it at all, for, as many say, I was "satisfied," and I understand that the satanic spirit impressed me to have nothing to do with this work. I thought, as most all do who rely on the teachings of men in place of God, that I had been brought up in the right way. My parents were Methodists, and such a thought as that church being wrong did not bear upon my mind at all. I was not a member of the church, but had taken part as though I was a member, and would have joined several years ago, but Mr. Williams could not get the consent of his mind fully to join with me, and I was waiting for him; he was of the same belief, so far as he was in ignorance. So, as time rolled on he began to get farther from that belief. The more he read the Bible the plainer he could see the error of the M. E. doctrine. But I still held to the Methodist theory, because I did not read with fairness and honest judgment. In the early part of last fall I began to investigate the work. My husband earnestly insisted that I read the Bible. He would ask me to read for him, and as I would read he would have me stop at certain places where it would be so plain and would talk of the doctrine, of its plainness, and on until I was convinced beyond doubt that the Latter Day Saints had the Bible for their rule of faith and practice, more than any of the daughters of Rome.

Another reason for my being constrained to turn to investigate this work and glorify God was, that after my companion had been baptized I saw such a great difference in his daily walks and talks, that I thought there surely was a reality in the work. I was also impressed with the idea of a reality in this work, last August, when Bro. C. L. Snow was preaching near here, for he talked more than any man I ever saw, it seemed, and it was nearly always on the scripture. It impressed me because our Methodist ministers never have anything to say about their doctrine. So I soon began to see that gross darkness covered the people, and that they had the form but denied the power. I would just laugh at times when it would be made so plain to me instantly that the Latter Day Saints were right; it would whip me out so completely and so quickly. I had been reading the Bible all my life, but had never once stopped to ask God for wisdom and understanding of the truths of his word; but when I began to realize how deep in darkness I was, I began to pray unto God in humbleness for guidance and for wisdom, that I might understand his word with a right understanding, and I can say beyond doubt that I know my prayers were answered; and now since I can see the people walk in such darkness, it does seem so strange that they will read and overlook the plainest teachings that are laid down for us and for our perfect salvation.

My father and I have an argument every time I go to see them. He says he cares less for me than ever before, because I have gone off into such "stuff." It fills my heart with sorrow when my mind reflects over the people of today, most especially my poor old mother, and all my relation, whom I love so, to think how they are deceived; realizing, too, that our honesty does not change God's way at all, and does not make us right.

Well, I wish to give a few of my ideas on the subject of worldly desires, that we Latter Day Saints should depart from. I certainly heartily indorse Mary Larson's statement on the line of dress. I was raised up to be very proud and dress "up to date," hold a high head, and shun those of lower estate. I am ashamed that such were my teachings and ways, for it does not speak well for my teacher nor myself. However, an honest confession is good for us. My teacher is to blame more than myself. I was a dear lover of vain pride and the style of the day, striving to be up to date on everything; and where our treasure is, there will our heart be also. But I thank the Lord that I have been enabled since I saw the light to forsake those vain things of the world, and we would be glad to see all the Saints dress in neat, clean, modest apparel, as becometh Saints. Our light would shine brighter unto the honest seeker after truth. Besides, it would be more pleasing unto our heavenly Father. I believe the fashion and style of the day are mainly the works of satanic power. Some of the Saints seem to be afraid the people will talk about them if they are not up to date. I pity the Saint who is that way. You will be in a strait all your life if you continue in that way; and then, who are you going to look to for your reward? "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," we learn in the good Book of Mormon. Nephi says we must be stripped of pride before we are prepared to meet God.

I testify unto all the Saints that I know

this is the work of God, for I have seen, as it were, the power of God made known in our family at different times, and know that the promise of God is verified unto them that believe. We ask the Saints to make mention of us in their prayers.

Editors Herald:—In the establishing places of learning for the children of the Saints for the different avocations of a business life, the thought of a telegraphic training has not yet been proposed. There is at the present time a great demand for competent operators; and owing to the opening up of our new possessions, Porto Rico, Cuba, Hawaii, and Philippine Islands, with the extensions of railroad and telegraphic lines on this continent, and also with the enlarging of our army and navy, there will be a greater demand for efficient operators. A knowledge of the Morse system of telegraphy is necessary in all of these different departments, even to the great wireless telegraphy, and the army signal corps. Navy signals also require an understanding of the Morse code of telegraphy.

This being the case, I have some intentions of starting a telegraphic school at Independence, Missouri, provided I am assured of a sufficient number of scholars, guaranteeing a year's tuition in advance, in order to make it an inducement to fit out a schoolroom with the proper number of instruments and other furniture to make it a success. One year is usually the time required to fit one to hold a position, if proper application to the study is given. A diploma of graduation will be given each student at the time they are able to receive and copy promiscuously thirty-five words per minute. Such would be sufficient guarantee or recommend of competence to any company presented, to hold a position. I have had twenty-four years of railroad experience in different departments, ten years in close touch with and five years actual telegraphic duties. Therefore I can bring in and establish in such school all the modern modes and rules of the telegraphic service; such as train orders, blocking of trains by telegraph, and rules pertaining thereto. Let all those who desire to learn this fascinating and renumerative trade write me for further particulars.

The most suitable age for either sex to learn telegraphy is between fifteen and twenty-five years, and those of a grammar school training are more apt to succeed, although any one can learn it and earn from twenty-five to one hundred and fifty dollars per month, according to the office held.

Respectfully,

Editors Herald:—The long-looked-for conference has come and passed. A short time afterwards my husband came home in a very critical condition, with a gathering in his head. I am sorry to say he is no better, but is steadily growing weaker. At times the pain is almost unendurable. He is confined to his bed most of the time.

We wish to say to his correspondents that he will answer all letters as soon as able. His home address hereafter will be No. 1224 Wall St., Los Angeles, Cal.

Your sister in Christ,

SR. HIRAM HOLT.

MANCHESTER, Texas, May 4.

Editors Herald:—A few words from this part of Texas. It has been about twenty years since the good Lord sent the gospel to us. My husband and I were among the first to obey it. We suffered great persecution for the first five or six years. It was at my house where a mob of about thirty men waited on Brn. Heman C. Smith and George Montague and told them they must leave. I learned that Bro. Smith made the statement that they could go, but God would raise up a man here who would tell the gospel to them. God has raised up such a one, Bro. J. D. Erwin, who has done a grand work in the south.

A good work has been done here; but it has taken trials and sacrifices; but I feel assured that God will bless Brn. W. T. Bozarth, Smith, Montague, and Cato for the work done.

My husband passed away from the trials of life thirteen years ago. I am alone, but thank God not without a gospel hope. My husband lived and died true to the gospel, and I know that if I am faithful I shall soon meet him.

Bro. E. A. Erwin is doing all he can to promulgate the gospel here. He has been laboring for six years to get the gospel before the people of Northeastern Texas, and has labored at great sacrifice. I live within a mile of Bro. Erwin's, and have been with Sr. Erwin a great deal when Bro. Erwin was away preaching, and I know he has done all he could for the cause for several years past. He has had to fight the battle here almost alone for the last few years.

May God bless the work in all the earth. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may hold out faithful. I would be glad to attend a General Conference sometime that I might meet with Brn. Bozarth, Heman C. Smith, and others with whom I have spent many hours in the Spirit of the Lord.

Your sister,

R. C. BILLINGSLY.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 17.

Editors Herald:—Leaving home April 28, I came directly to this city, and am now engaged in tent work. Started last Friday night, Bro. I. N. Roberts preaching the first sermon. The weather so far has been unfavorable, so that we have not had large congregations, but some interest is already manifested. Bro. Roberts left the next day for the north, and Bro. J. M. Baggerly and myself have tried to tell the gospel story to those who came.

Last night we were reinforced by Bro. Eli Hayer, who played the organ and the writer preached. The Lord has blessed our labors so far, both in preaching the word and ministering to the afflicted ones.

One remarkable case of healing has taken place since we came, and is worthy of notice. We found Bro. C. I. Shallbetter, president of the branch, very sick with "Bright's disease," and two doctors had given him up and said that he could not live. So, as human wisdom and skill had failed, there was but one thing more to do, and that was to petition the Lord in his behalf. It was a sorrowful house at the time, for the family had not thought that he was dangerously sick but needed rest, as he had worked hard for years. Bro. Roberts being in the city I went for him, and together we administered the ordinance of the Lord's house to him, Bro. Roberts anointing, and I confirming. I was led to ask that his days might be lengthened, that he might be able to set in order his house, provide and care for his companion and little ones until they should be safely within the fold. The Lord heard, and the disease was stayed, and he was so much better the next day when the doctor came that he was very much surprised, for he never expected to see him up again. We administered every day for four days, alternating in confirming, and now he goes to meeting some blocks away, and yesterday took a long ride in the street cars. We feel that good will come to the work in time from this, for his brothers and sisters knew his condition, and some were present when we administered to him. Much of the good Spirit was present in all of the administration, and was felt by all present. To the Lord be all the praise.

I feel that this will be a prosperous year in this field, and pray that those sent out may act wisely, and be faithful to the trust imposed, so that the Lord can bless their labors. Bro. Baggerly is to leave the city this week, when Bro. Hayer and I will continue the tent work for a time.

I am feeling well spiritually, and am hopeful for the future. More anon.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 14.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday I went to Santa Rosa and spoke for the Saints there in their neat little church. I had good liberty and felt well and experienced a feeling of delight in presenting the word.

After an intermission of fifteen minutes we opened services again to partake of the emblems. After administering them, five were administered to by Bro. Ben. Taylor and myself. The Lord was with us in the administrations, and gave his Spirit to comfort and cheer.

Bro. John Keefer, who lives at Santa Rosa, was crushed under a rock some five weeks ago and they sent for me. I went and administered to him under the power of the Holy Spirit, and again with Bro. Taylor, and today he is up in a chair. Everyone who saw him had no idea that he could live. His breastbone was crushed and six ribs broken from the backbone. His left foot bothers him now, or he would be able to walk around. All the Saints who knew of the case prayed for him many times. This is nearly a marvelous case, and we greatly rejoice that our Father came to the rescue.

Trusting we may be able to abide faithfully with added responsibilities, rendering acceptable service, that the results may be desirable, I am, yours in bonds,

Editors Herald:—Bro. Cooper is to preach the memorial sermon here, the service to be by all the churches combined as usual. Bro. Moler and I expect to start the district tent at Wilmington soon. Bro. Wildermuth will remain at Plano and Sandwich for a time. The Mission Saints are pushing the building of their new church to have it ready for June conference.

I stopped to visit with Mr. and Sr. Bouderman near Amboy. While there Elders Bryson and Clayson, from Utah, presented themselves for a night's lodging, and got it. We spent the next forenoon canvassing the issues between us, with about the usual result in such cases. They are assigned to Lee County for labor. I hope the scattered Saints there will treat them hospitably as men, but not countenance their doctrinal errors. Your brother, ADAM J. KECK.

Editors Herald:—The Alabama district conference that convened at Lone Star, May 12, was a good one. The good Spirit of the Lord was with us from the beginning to end. Much good was accomplished in unity. Bro. W.J. Booker, of Bay Minette was with us, and expressed his willingness to labor for the salvation of souls. May the Lord bless all the Saints to acquaint themselves with the work the Lord would have them to do.

M. K. HARP.

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan., May 17.

Editors Herald: — The Shick-Keck debate is a thing of the past. The discussion was held in a schoolhouse four miles west of Moundvalley. Brn. Beebe and Baker were preaching in that place last winter, and created quite an interest. Some of the Christians (Campbellites) became alarmed and sent for Elder Shick, who came and challenged them. Four propositions were agreed upon. But when Bro. Keck and Elder Shick met they reduced the propositions to two, as they embraced but two subjects.

There were eight sessions, four upon each proposition. Bro. Keck made an able and spiritual defense on the divine mission of Joseph Smith. All were well pleased, both Saints and outsiders. When the Christian (Campbellite) Church was on trial Elder Shick seemed to forget it was his duty to bring it out and show its harmony with the church set up by Christ and the apostles, so Bro. Keck had a double task, (as usual,) to bring it out and then show its faults.

Elder Shick was very gentlemanly in the first proposition; but as the battle waxed warmer, he began to call for a sign, and cast unpleasant insinuations at anyone who presumed to believe in God's power being manifest nowadays.

I might give some points brought out, but will just say to those who are anxious to know, that the cause lost nothing; but, on the contrary the general verdict was "The fleshy man [Bro. Keck] had it mostly his own way."

We leave the Saints feeling well, and think that the work is in a fair way to prosper in the Angola branch.

I will say for the benefit of the Saints of Oklahoma that the tent is up and working. Anyone desiring tent work in their town or locality please address me at Sumner, O. T., care H. C. Hughes.

Yours in the faith,

R. W. DAVIS.

GUILFORD, Mo., May 19.

Editors Herald:—Bro. J. Arthur Davis and myself came to this place to hold a week's meeting; but rain for the last five days has prevented us irom doing any special work. We are trying to arrange for meeting at Savannah, the county seat of Andrew County. Whether or not we will meet with success, cannot tell. Just as soon as the weather clears up, will open up with the tent, which is now at Mound City.

As I have been placed in charge of the Nodaway district, and have associated with me Brn. J. Arthur Davis and C. P. Welsh, I would ask that the Saints of the district would let me know where there are good openings for the preaching of the gospel. If you have any good places for tent work let me know, I will try to see that the interest is looked after.

If there be any in the district holding the priesthood who desire to do mission work, let them report to me. Let us all push forward and occupy faithfully in the Master's cause. You can address me at any time at Lamoni, Iowa, and my mail will be forwarded to me. Your brother and colaborer,

CHICAGO, Ill., May 14, 1900.

To the Officers and Members of the General Sunday School Association; Greeting:—Our worthy General Superintendent has officially notified me of my election to the office of Second Assistant Superintendent and has extended me an invitation to attend the reunions this fall and to participate in other Sunday school work. I will say that I was completely surprised when I learned of my election, because I had never thought of such a thing, and could hardly believe the report; but when I was assured that it was correct I tried to console myself with the thought that it was principally an honorary position, and that not much work would be required of me; but since hearing from Bro. Hougas I have been awakened to a realization of what my duties really are. I feel to appreciate the confidence manifested in placing me in this position, and I hope that I may be faithful to the trust imposed upon me. Although I have had but a limited experience, yet I love the Sunday school work, and shall be very glad to do whatever I can and to make the acquaintance of all Sunday school workers. I shall be pleased to respond to any and all calls made upon me, as far as possible, which may legitimately come within my scope of office. My address for the present is 258 N. Troy St., Chicago, Ill. Hoping that this year may be a successful one for the Sunday school work, I remain,

THE following thoughts and selections are furnished by our Brother J. F. Mintun:—

PREPARATION.

All true prayer is answered in the best way, but God does not always give what is asked for.

In announcing a new lesson, give a few suggestions as to how it should be studied.

Every scholar should make the most of his lesson. To do this, the lesson should be studied carefully at home.

The only way to do anything well is to do it over and over again.

Teachers in any grade should study the lessons and helps of all the grades. They will find it very helpful.

The lesson should not be studied for the facts of the lesson alone, but for the sake of the influence in producing and developing Christian character too.

In beginning the study of a lesson, make a general examination of it at first so as to get some idea of it as a whole, then take it up item by item in course.

The object of the Sunday school is the production and training of right character through the study of the word of God.

The truest present gauge of the spiritual strength of the next generation is found in the quality of the Sunday school instruction of today.

GOOD LESSONS AND LESSON HELPS; ESSENTIALS THEREOF.

Subject matter suitable.

Systematic arrangement of lesson.

Illustration sufficient.

Adaptation to the grade designed for.

Topical arrangement of subject matter to be taught.

Numerous quotations and citations from Scriptures and other authentic works.

The plan of the lesson helps should be progressive, comprehensive, and complete.

It is well to be definite. Many a life is frittered away in vague generalities.

Any lesson system that tends to the study of the lesson helps to the exclusion of the Bible stands self-condemned.

Uniform lessons reduce to a minimum the labor of preparing and teaching the lesson, greatly facilitates its study in teachers' meetings and other gatherings, and opens the way for comment on it in various periodicals.

Sunday school lessons should be educational. Not to the exclusion of the spiritual, but educational because in this way the best spiritual results can be obtained.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

ILLUSTRATION.

The child mind is like wax to take impressions and like bronze to retain them.

"Give the children a clue to the poorest drawing and their imagination will transform it into an interesting picture."

"A rude drawing made in the presence of the children and as a part of the talk about the lesson is vastly more effective than the most elaborate and artistic picture put on the board beforehand and shown to the children."

"A great danger lies in illustrating by multiplying objects till they become a meaningless show, or in elaborating blackboard or other illustration till they confuse thought and hide the truth."

We illustrate to make clearer that which is not understood, or to impress some thought already in the mind of the hearer. Unless at least one of these objects is accomplished, your illustration is a failure.—Ed.

The story is told of a colored brother who said at the beginning of his sermon, "Brederen, I will read you a chapter and then 'flustrate' it to you," meaning of course to "illustrate" it. Let us be careful that we do not "flustrate" rather than "illustrate" when we attempt to "make clearer" or "impress" a thought in a lesson.—Ed.

QUESTIONING.

"Questions hold the attention, stimulate mental action, and enable the teacher to find out how much of the lesson is understood."

The answering of questions fixes the truth in the scholar's mind.

Questions should be clear and simple, not too easy, and framed so that the natural answer will be the correct one.

The art of questioning so as to arouse thought is somewhat difficult, but is necessary to successful teaching.

Sunday School Associations.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

ONE THOUSAND FOR GRACELAND COLLEGE.

Are you one of this number? And if not, why not?

The proposition that one thousand subscriptions at $25 each be obtained at once, so as to clear the college of all indebtedness and place it where it can run without this great disadvantage is now before us. No part of this subscription is to be paid unless the entire number is obtained.

There are now extant in the hands of elders, agents, and Saints, two hundred and sixteen subscription lists. We have two hundred more lists on hand and would be glad to supply any good brother, sister, or friend in any part of the world who would like to make the effort to help the college work. In this way they will also help the church work, and help to aid young men and young women for years to come in gaining proper information and training for the practical duties of life. There is no more worthy object to work for, and none where our work will have a more lasting effect than in this beneficent line. If you only have time to send in your own name, place it on a postal card and send it to the undersigned at his address, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Remember, we have but about sixty days now to finish the lists, the expectation from the time of last General Conference being that the lists could be completed within ninety days. Full list of names, together with subscriptions, will be published through the Herald and Ensign as soon as the work is completed.

The attention of all Saints and friends of education and the truth is especially called to this proposition, and now.

Very truly and respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE.—J. T. KINNAMAN.

In memory of Elder John T. Kinnaman, who was born in Madison County, Indiana, October 14, 1829, baptized December 14, 1870, by B. V. Springer.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father to remove from our midst and take unto himself our esteemed brother and worthy president, Elder John T. Kinnaman, who was ordained president of the Third Quorum of Elders at Galland's Grove, Iowa, by W. H. Kelley, James Caffall, J. C. Crabb, and R. J. Anthony, September 30, 1879, and with wisdom and ability served until the time of his demise; and whereas, he was a man of integrity and of sterling worth to the church, a competent exponent of the angel's message, and an able defender of the truth, and ever ready to sacrifice for the cause he loved, and was a kind and loving husband and father, and like one of old commanded his children after him in righteousness; and while we, the members of the Third Quorum of Elders, keenly feel the loss of our brother, his wise counsel and executive ability, how much more are those near and dear by the ties of nature called to mourn.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the members of the Third Quorum of Elders, extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and our prayers in their behalf, that the Spirit of him who is a husband to the widow, and a father to the fatherless, may abide with them to keep them in the faith once delivered to the saints; and while all suffer because of being deprived of the association of our brother, yet our loss is his gain. May we all so live as to be worthy of the communion of God's Holy Spirit, that when the trump shall sound both loud and long, may we come forth in the first resurrection, and be changed from mortality to immortality to meet our Savior, our brother, and all the redeemed of earth, where parting shall be no more.

NOTICE HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The Board of Publication consists of the following persons: E. L. Kelley, President; John Smith, Treasurer and Business Manager; J. A. Gunsolley, Secretary; Fred B. Blair, and J. W. Wight. The first two named are the Executive Committee.

We hereby call upon all who are indebted to the Publishing House to make settlement as early as possible, and thus lend their financial support to this important branch of church work. The price of the Herald will hereafter be $1.50 per year to all persons, and all subscribers who are in arrears for six months will be dropped from the list unless arrangements are made with the Publishing House for payment. All Herald subscribers who are now in debt will be permitted to settle upon the basis of $1.50 per year, providing such settlements are made within six months from this date.

Book agents are requested, if possible, to make returns to this Publishing House the first of each month, and to cease retaining commissions on sales when they order books, so long as they are in debt. Commissions when due will be allowed when settlements are made. "Pay what thou owest," is a part of the divine plan; and "Owe no man anything but love," should be observed by all Saints. Prompt payments insure confidence in business as well as religion, and confidence is essential to success.

A new catalogue of books will be issued as soon as possible.

Remittances should be made by post office and express orders, bank drafts on Chicago, or registered letters.

Send all business letters and make all money payable to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Personal matters mark John Smith. Write your orders plain, pointed, and legible, describing just what you want, with name and price as advertised, so that mistakes may be avoided.

Volume 3 of Church History is now in preparation and we will fill orders as soon as ready.

In view of the great increase of the free list the Board has found it necessary to say that after June 1, 1900, the Autumn Leaves will not be sent free to the missionaries' families; but the Saints' Herald will be furnished as heretofore.

Bills to May 1 are being sent to all debtors, and we kindly ask you to help us. If there are mistakes we will gladly correct them on evidence. JOHN SMITH, Manager.

ATTENTION.

To the High Priests, and Those Approved by General Conference for Such Office:—A number of the members have expressed a desire for a group picture of the quorum, and requested me to see to having said picture made. Will all kindly send me their photograph as soon as practicable (stating if they wish the same returned), and we will furnish the group picture at a reasonable price to the members, and others who may wish to purchase. In bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.
Box 234, LAMONI, Decatur Co., Iowa.

SECOND QUORUM OF SEVENTIES.

Dear Brethren:—We would like the addresses of all members who have been taken into the above quorum since April, 1897, or since the issuing of the last circular letter,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

We also desire the new addresses of any who have changed since 1897.

As soon as ordained, we request the following brethren to send items of birth, baptism, and ordination, as well as address: Richard B. Howlet, Benjamin St. John, James R. Beckley, and A. E. Mortimer. Dates of birth and baptism of Wellington D. Ellis are desired.

The above is desired to enable us to prepare a new circular letter, as provided for at the last conference. Address me at Plano, Illinois, care Box 134.

H. E. MOLER, Secretary.

BISHOP'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Independence District, Greeting:—It has pleased God, and in accordance with the promise made to the church in 1873 (D. C. 117:10) that other Bishops should be appointed; and it pleased God to designate your humble servant to be ordained to the office of Bishop, I enter upon this work with a feeling of considerable responsibility; yet I have the assurance that God, who doeth all things well, will be my help in time of need. I want to do my duty and dignify the office, and in order to do this I must have your coöperation in this department of the work.

My experience in this line of work as Bishop's agent for the past nine years has taught me considerable. I expect to establish a storehouse in Independence, or what will answer for the present as such, and will receive tithes and offerings in moneys and in kind. In paying tithes and offering in kind, the Saints must not think that they can turn in everything—good or bad. Hear what the Lord said to Israel of old:—

"Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year. And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds and of thy flocks; that thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always. And if the way be too long for thee, so that thou art not able to carry it; or if the place be too far from thee, which the Lord thy God shall choose to set his name there, when the Lord thy God hath blessed thee: then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thine hand, and shalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose."—Deut. 14:22–25.

This is good instructions to us in every point, and ought to be carried out now by every Saint in the land, if we expect to be blessed of God. Bind up the money in thine hand, to my mind, means thus: that if the distance is too far, turn your tithe into money and bind the money up in thine hand, or in other words, do not use it for any other purpose, as it is sacred money, and don't belong to you; but bring or send it to the place where the Lord has appointed.

The children of Israel seem to have been very forgetful of the instructions the Lord gave them. They used their tithing money as they pleased, and he came out in a fearful rebuke through his prophet Malachi:—

"Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return? Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts."—Mal. 3:7–12.

Can we have faith in God and trust him? Jesus said to the same, "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6:46.) How about every member of the Independence district.

This law of tithing is also enjoined upon the Saints of the last days:—

"Behold, now it is called today (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned at his coming."—D. C. 64:5.

"Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen."—D. C. 106:2.

It will take about six thousand dollars for this district this year, for the missionaries' families and the poor, etc. We hope to collect this amount in the district, and it can be done if we all do our duty, and would like to see every name on the tithing list. It is the Bishop's duty to travel among the branches and search out the poor. We expect to give this part of the work our special attention, that none may suffer that are worthy.

It is also the Bishop's duty to be a judge in Israel, assisted by two counselors. We expect to establish a Bishop's court. This court will have original jurisdiction, as also an appellant court. I have chosen for one of my counselors W. H. Pease, High Priest, president of Armstrong branch, and now recommend him to the esteem of the Saints. The other one I have also chosen, but not yet ordained. I have chosen bishop's agents in the following branches: First Kansas City, Missouri, William McLaren; Second Kansas City, Missouri, Frederick Koehler; Armstrong, Kansas, J. H. Stratton; Chelsea Park, Kansas, James Anderson; Lees Summit, Missouri, Joseph Currey; Holden, Missouri, Frederick Scarcliff. I recommend those agents to their respective branches, praying that the Lord may bless them in their labors of love for the Master. There will be no agent appointed for Independence for the present. Tithes and offerings in moneys will be received at my office, West Maple Avenue. Tithes and offerings in kind will be received at my warehouse, South Liberty Street, Independence, Missouri.

RODERICK MAY,
Bishop Independence District.

PASTORAL.

In my pastoral letter I unintentionly failed to say that Bro. Columbus Scott would have charge of the ministerial work in the city of Detroit, Michigan, and we bespeak for him all help by any that may or can go that way and stop and lend a helping hand in the good work. I hope Bro. Scott will not think me bold in making this extended invitation to all the traveling ministry; and I shall hope that the branch and local officers will unite with Bro. Scott in the good work to be done. I will assist in Detroit and through the mission all I can in preaching the gospel, not interfering with the branches, expecting each branch officer to seek to learn his duty and see that he does his own duty. If I see anything that I think is out of order I will ask the officers of the branch to look after such things and put them in order.

As to your tithes and offerings, attend to them and place them in the agent's hands, that the mission may become self-sustaining if possible. As the Bishop once said to me, "He hoped the time would come when each mission would become self-supporting," so I hope the Saints will help in that way to make the mission work a success. We ask all to coöperate with us to that end.

Yours in hope of final rest,
J. H. LAKE,
Missionary in Charge.

TEMPLE, O., May 14.

To my Fellow Laborers, Brethren and Sisters of Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts, Greeting:—Having been appointed by the General Conference to labor with you and for you the coming year, I wish to say that I feel satisfied with my field of labor, and thank you all, both general appointees and the local force, for the liberal manner in which you so heartily supported me during the last year's service in the Master's great harvest field, and for the good we were enabled to do, in bringing many precious souls into the family and fold of God, such as we trust will be eternally saved.

I feel grateful to God and the dear Saints for your support, both spiritually and financially, and trust by the help of God's blessed Spirit I may never betray the trust and confidence of my fellow laborers and brethren. Dear brethren and sisters, we want to labor with you and for you as the servants of God. Your interest shall be ours. Let us push the work forward to the front as best we can. God be with you all is and shall be our continual prayer.

Your fellow laborer in gospel bonds,
HENRY KEMP, Sub-Missionary.

To the Saints and Friends of Northeast Illinois District:—Having been appointed submissionary in charge in the above-named district, we desire to ask the hearty coöperation of all interested in the spread of the gospel of Christ. Our missionary force for the present year is limited, but we hope to be able to accomplish something for the advancement of the cause of righteousness, and this can best be done by each putting forth an effort to carry the gospel message to those who are in darkness.

It is our desire to make as many new openings as we possibly can during the year, and ask that the Saints give us all the assistance in their power to secure places for preaching the word. We especially ask the aid of all scattered Saints in this direction. Do all you can to get the truth before your neighbors and friends, and see to it that your daily walk is such that will command their respect and reverence for your religion.

Any of the Saints or friends that can secure places to preach, please write us about it, and we will respond as soon as possible. My mission address will be Plano, Illinois, care Box 134. Yours in gospel work,

H. E. MOLER.

ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

To the Saints in Southern Illinois District, Greeting: As I have been assigned to labor in your midst the coming year as best I can with the help of the Master, and there having been appointed with me Brn. J. T. Davis and M. F. Gowell, I therefore take this method to ask you all, both brethren and sisters, to remember us in your prayers, that our labors may be a success to the work and an honor to the one who has called us to labor. And in order that we may be enabled to reach as many of the Saints and friends as possible at as early a date as will be the most convenient, I have deemed it wise to make appointments for meetings to be held at the following places:—

At the Brown church, beginning Friday, June 15, at eight p. m., and lasting until the 19th.

At the Green schoolhouse, beginning Friday, June 22, at eight p. m., and lasting until the 28th.

At the Ula church, beginning Friday, June 29, at eight p. m., and lasting until July 2.

At Dryfork, beginning Friday, July 6, at eight p. m., and lasting until the 12th.

At Springerton, beginning Friday, July 13, at eight p. m., and lasting until the 19th.

At Bowyer, beginning Saturday, July 21, at eight p. m., and lasting until the 25th.

At Kibbie, beginning Friday, July 27, at eight p. m., and lasting until August 1.

At Hazel Dell, beginning Saturday, August 4, at eight p. m., and lasting until the 8th.

At the Saints' chapel, beginning Thursday, August 9, at eight p. m , and lasting until the 12th.

At Brewer chapel, beginning Friday, August 17, at eight p. m., and lasting until the 19th.

Other places will be looked after later. Either Bro. Davis or Gowell will be with us at all the above-named places, and we ask the coöperation of all the Saints, both ministry and laity, in these meetings, in order that they may prove a success to the work. All are invited to come and help make these meetings a success. Come, and bring the Spirit of the Master with you.

Remember that our district conference will convene at Brush Creek, June 9, at ten a. m.

F. M. SLOVER.

Address: Orchardville, Illinois.

To the Saints of Oregon, Greeting:—Whereas it has pleased the conference to return your humble servant to your field, I will say, I will reach my field as soon as practicable, and shall be pleased to hear from any and all Saints and friends as to the opportunities for preaching in their neighborhood. I wish to correspond with all parts of my field, and to coöperate with all, for in "union there is strength."

My home address is San Bernardino, California, and will give my field address when I reach there; so direct to my home address till otherwise ordered. However all mail sent here will find me. I will say that I shall need help to reach my field, and I dislike to call on the Bishop as he has all he can care for in looking after the families of the elders and the poor, so please remember this, dear Saints.

Brethren A. B. Moore and C. E. Crumley are my colaborers in Oregon. I shall be pleased to hear from them, and we will try and arrange to labor to the best interest of the work. We hope and pray that much good may be accomplished this year, and that many may be added to the church.

Yours for the truth,

D. L. HARRIS.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., May 15.

Will the Saints and friends of the cause who reside in Eastern Iowa district please correspond with Elder J. Russell Sutton, of Fulton, Iowa, when desiring missionary work done in their locality. And, dear Saints, let us put forth every effort to introduce the work into new localities.

SAMUEL TWOMBLY, Pres.

BORN.

WITCHER.—Vera Evyline Witcher, born September 26, 1893, at Wayne, Nebraska; blessed at Lamoni, Iowa, May 13, 1900, by Elders R. M. Elvin and William Anderson, at the request of the foster parents, Bro. and Sr. Eli Hayer.

LODWIG.—To Bro. William and Sr. Nettie Lodwig, of Fairbanks, Iowa, on March 3, 1900, a son. Blessed May 17, by Elder J. R. Sutton, and named Merritt Tolbert.

DIED.

WARE.—Martha A., wife of Elder R. L. Ware, died at Richmond, Missouri, May 7, 1900; was born at Butler, Bates County, Missouri, February 4, 1842; baptized in 1871. She leaves a kind husband and four children to mourn. Funeral sermon by Elder J. C. Foss.

PRICE — At San Francisco, California, April 8, 1900, Sarah, beloved wife of Bro. J. B. Price, of Oakland, California, aged 68 years and 21 days. Sister Price, whose maiden name was Sykes, was born at Brampton, Huntingdonshire, England, March 17, 1832. In 1849 she with two of her sisters, Ellen and Anne, heard and obeyed the gospel as restored in latter days by angelic administration, and were baptized. The sisters Sykes, or better known by many of the English Saints as "The Brampton Sisters," were widely known and highly esteemed by the traveling ministry in England in those days for their faith and good works, their devotion and liberality to the cause they so dearly loved. In February, 1855, Sarah accompanied by her sister Anne bade farewell to her native land, pleasant home, and loving father, brothers, and sisters, forsaking all purely for the gospel's sake, their most fervent and holy desire being to become more perfectly instructed in the ways of God, that they might walk in his paths. They arrived in Utah, October, 1855, and on the 20th of the following March, Sarah was married to J. B. Price. She and her husband remained faithful and devout members of the Utah church until the spring of 1869, when he joined the Reorganized Church and they left at once for California. She united with the Reorganized Church by baptism at Davisville, California, August 15, 1875. Sr. Price was a woman of unswerving integrity, a consistent, devout Latter Day Saint, a faithful wife, a loving and indulgent mother, and a true and generous friend, for which virtues she was very highly esteemed by her many friends and acquaintances. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom survive her. Her remains were interred in Odd Fellows Cemetery, San Francisco, April 11; funeral services conducted by Elder Charles A. Parkin.

JESSAMIN.—Griffin Gladstone, youngest child of Bro. Adam Jessamin, and Sister Jessamin (deceased), was born November 8, 1897, and died at the residence of President A. H. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, April 19, 1900. Since the mother's death the babe has been under the care of his sister, Alla, who with tender solicitude has provided for his every need. Funeral services in charge of Elder A. H. Smith, at his residence. Sermon by Elder Joseph Luff.

Grieve not, dear hearts, nor once forget,
Who guards your earthly state
Can guide to yonder resting place
Where babe and mother wait.
Rest, baby dear, there waits for thee
No blame—no great reward,
But bliss untold, and joy unthought,
Beloved of Christ the Lord.

CAMERON.—Near Croton, Iowa, May 8, 1900, Sr. Ophelia, wife of Bro. George W. Cameron; she was born September 1, 1857, and was married May 21, 1876; to them were born six children. Sr. Cameron professed faith in Christ and was baptized at Farmington, Iowa, October 2, 1892. For many years the family made Farmington their home; but last January they moved to the farm of her childhood's home, near Croton, Iowa. She was sick before removal and never recovered. So around that home clusters her earliest and latest recollections of earthlife. She went home to die. Funeral sermon by Elder James McKiernan at the M. E. chapel. Interment at Croton cemetery.

JUDSON.—At his son Arthur's, just west of Lamoni, on May 12, 1900, of old age and various disabilities, Bro. Richard Judson, aged 76 years, 4 months, and 14 days. He was born in Huntingdonshire, England, in 1823. Came to America in 1854. Settled in Michigan, thence coming to Lamoni in 1893. His wife died in 1883. Three sons and one daughter are living. He united with the church August 21, 1892, being baptized by Elder Isaac M. Smith, at Marcellus, Michigan. The funeral was held at his son's house, the sermon being preached by Bro. H. A. Stebbins.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

GETTING MEN TO CHURCH.

"How to Get Men to Church" is the problem of greatest moment with the ministry of today. We doubt not there are many of them, earnest, godly men, who spend anxious days and sleepless nights in an endeavor to find out what it is that makes men indifferent to spiritual things, that makes them prefer the club room, the park or their own home rather than spend one little hour once or twice on a Sabbath in a house of worship. The Rev. C. M. Coburn, D. D., pastor of Trinity Methodist church, in Denver, who is now closing his fourth year in that pastorate has prepared some suggestions based upon his own experience which ought to merit the reflection at least of ministers who feel that they are not reaching men as they would like to reach them. In the case of Dr. Coburn it is stated that by actual count the proportion of men in his evening congregation has gradually increased until now in an average congregation of perhaps 1,500, he will have from 900 to 1,000 men. This makes his suggestions of more value.

Dr. Coburn's suggestions are as follows:—

First—Be men.

Second—Get acquainted with the men to whom you preach. If you do not make all your "pastoral" calls upon the sisters they will not suffer much and their husbands and brothers need you more than they do.

Three—Cultivate the habit of looking at all religious questions from the business man's standpoint. You can't lift a man to a higher standpoint without first getting a grip on him where he stands.

Fourth—In urging upon men the need and value of making a covenant with God and allying themselves in the struggle of life with the mighty Christ, use the accurate and practical vocabulary of the office rather than technical or figurative language. Stereotyped ecclesiastical phraseology sounds as obscure and senseless to the average man of business as the esoteric terms of occultism to us. He who has really thought through the essential conditions, processes, and manifestations of a true religious experience will not need to tie himself down to phrases and figures of speech which need an interpreter to explain them. Let it be added that the man who wishes to reach men and move them to will and to do God's pleasure does not need much of an oratorical tail to his kite. Children may like these things, but the kites which men fly in these modern times have no tails.

Fifth—Illustrate your sermons with incidents from the office and street, rather than from the nursery and the dying bed.

Sixth—Preach a manly ideal of religion. Do not give the young men in your congregation the impression that sentimentality is vital piety or that they must become as nearly like a woman as possible when they are converted. Emphasize repentance instead of tears, duty and righteousness instead of emotionalism, the energies and potencies of life instead of the horror and danger of death.

Seventh—Take as big themes as you can handle. Think out your arguments till you sweat and make your hearers sweat sometimes as they try to follow you. That won't hurt them any, nor you either.

8. Don't dodge. Whatever issue comes up, meet it squarely. Be absolutely frank and open in the discussion of every question and absolutely fair to your opponent in every argument, and don't think you have proved your case till you have won your jury. A question box is a good thing; it gives a chance for the men to talk back—after which you can strengthen your arguments, or, what is almost an equal advantage, prove your downright manliness by acknowledging a mistake if you have made one. Every man who makes anything worth mentioning does make a mistake occasionally and the further we can get from appearing to claim that we are near relatives of the Lord the better.

9. Vary your themes.

Do not always harp on one string, however good that string may be. You will find that men like an orchestra better than a jewsharp.

10. Be as careful in every statement of fact and every argument as if your whole future depended upon the exact accuracy of your statements. If your men find they cannot trust your word and judgment in matters with which they are acquainted it is not very likely that they will take you as a reliable guide in other departments of faith and knowledge.

Upon the above ten commandments in the opinion of Dr. Coburn, hang the law and the prophecy of a preacher's success in reaching men.—Daily Iowa Capital.

GROVER CLEVELAND'S ADVICE.

HIS INTERESTING ANSWER TO THE QUESTION, DOES A COLLEGE EDUCATION PAY?

Ex-President Grover Cleveland contributes to this week's issue of The Saturday Evening Post the first magazine article he has written since he left the White House. It is a vigorous and remarkably forceful discussion of the question, Does a College Education Pay? and it is of interest not only to the thousands of young men who are considering the problem, but to the tens of thousands of parents who may have doubts. Mr. Cleveland does not judge success simply by money-making.

"Many a college-bred man labors in the field of usefulness without either wealth or honors, and frequently with but scant recognition of any kind, and yet achieves successes which, unseen and unknown by the sordid and cynical, will bloom in the hearts and minds of men longer than the prizes of wealth or honors can endure," he says.

Further on in the article is this: "Parents should never send their sons to college simply for the purpose of educational ornamentation. The fact that parents have the fate of a son largely in their keeping should not only enlist their parental love and pride, but should, at the same time, stimulate their parental judgment. Furthermore, they should be constantly mindful that they have in charge not only a son but an uncompleted man who is soon to become their contribution to the manhood of the world. They therefore owe a dual duty, which demands on the one hand that the education of the son be undertaken as a help to his success in life, and on the other that this education shall promise for the maturing man the equipment necessary to insure his value as an addition to civilized humanity. Before he leaves home to enter upon his student life, his sympathy with these purposes should be fully aroused, and he should be impressed with the importance of keeping them steadily in view. He should also take with him to his new surroundings a love of truth and honor, a cheerful, manly disposition and truly democratic inclinations. With these his collegiate advent must be auspicious, and his future life well guarded against failure. Lacking these, his way is made immensely more difficult and uncertain."

A WORD FOR THE SPARROW.

The fierce war which was waged several years ago over the alleged demerits of the English sparrow has well nigh ceased, although we occasionally notice that here and there a person gives it a shot. It is perhaps twenty-five years since two of the illustrious ornithologists of this country had a serious falling out in regard to this bird. These gentlemen were Dr. Thomas M. Brewer of Boston, Massachusetts, and Dr. Elliott Coues of Washington, D. C. Dr. Brewer stoutly defended the sparrow as a most praiseworthy bird, alleging that it destroyed hordes of insect pests, that it was not in any perceptible degree harmful, and that it deserved to be protected. Whenever he had occasion to write or speak of it, he declared it a most praiseworthy bird. Dr. Coues, on the other hand, asserted that it was in every respect unworthy of having a word said in its behalf, that it drove away our old common stand-by birds, that it created untold filth about houses and barns, and that it was a gamin and deserved to be exterminated. The discussion was so hot that both of these excellent gentlemen lost temper. Dr. Coues published a large pamphlet in which he published his own and the denunciations of other observers. There were plenty of assailants of the sparrow, while its single defender was Dr. Brewer. Wherever the sparrow has appeared it has generally been denounced, and it is extremely rare indeed that any man has ventured to say a word in its defense. There is one thing, however, that may as well be accepted, and that is the fact that the sparrow has come to stay. These little foreigners, pesky as they may be, have a wonderful faculty of taking care of themselves. They put the human race, as well as dogs and cats and predatory birds, at defiance. They "paddle their own canoe." It is therefore utterly futile to denounce them for they still continue to multiply and replenish the earth in their own way. Just now it occurs to the writer to say a word in their favor. The grounds of the capitol have been for many years a regular headquarters for cut-worms, at least we suppose them to be cut-worms. These worms are about an inch in length, black or dark brown in color, and quite active and spry when they are traveling over a smooth surface. After a warm rain they are largely in evidence. At such times the sparrows may be seen eagerly in quest of these worms, and if one will stop to observe them he will see that they are destroying these by the hundreds and thousands. It is amusing to witness the operation of half a dozen sparrows when they are catching and devouring these worms. They are so eager that one could easily reach them with an umbrella or cane As the bird picks up a worm he looks up with an air of exultation as he swallows his prey, and immediately goes for another. As they operate upon the capitol grounds, so we suppose they work along the streets and lanes, in the pastures and meadows, gardens and orchards. So far, so good. Give these little gamins credit for what they do in the direction of conferring benefits upon the farmer and gardener, and in fact upon everybody else. Perhaps it would be well for people who have been so eager to denounce the little foreigner to observe closely his habits. We all may change our minds and instead of denunciation find much in their habits to praise. At all events, it is a very amusing sight to see them eagerly devouring our vexatious insect pests.—Iowa State Capital.

THE CAUSE OF THE FAMINE.

India is a country not quite half as large as the United States, with four times its population. These 300,000,000 people must be fed from their own crops, as there is, relatively, no manufacturing resource to buy food with. There are parts of India with a population of 1,000 people to the square mile; and there are millions upon millions of farm laborers, vagrants, gypsies, and nondescript classes, whose means of living, even in times of plenty, are inscrutable. In a normal year the country, as a whole, produces a little more food than is actually necessary to support its people. But the crops are dependent on the monsoons—the southwest monsoon in the beginning of summer, and the northeast monsoon in the winter. If these periodic rains are late, or are insufficient in quantity, trouble comes, and the spring and winter crops of wheat, barley, and pulses in the north, and of rice and millets in the south, begin to suffer. When the monsoons fail absolutely, there is destitution in the affected district, and when a persistent succession of failures and partial failures occurs, there comes a great and terrible famine, like that the country is now groaning under. Since the first great famine of which there are records devastated the land in 1770, when 10,000,000 perished in Bengal alone, India has scarcely passed a decade free from scarcity of grain in one district or another. The British Government expects a drought about twice in every nine years, a famine once in every eleven or twelve years, and a great famine like the present about twice in a century.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

Within a few weeks we have heard of a yellow fever serum and a discovery of the cause of cancer. Now a New York doctor announces that he has cured a case of leprosy. Of the three the second find is the most likely to prove remunerative. The rich are not so frequently subject to the other two diseases. Leprosy, however, is a horror in any case. The worst of all imaginings, twenty years ago no one dreamed of its approaching America. But it has come. Slowly and surely, as it grows on the patient, it has found a place in our own land, brought in from sources of foreign corruption and the depleted vitality of alien peoples. Yet in these days we need fear little. The "incurable" maladies are one and all trembling in their boots. Experimental pathology, regardless of the anti-vivisectionists, is going right ahead with its work. In the new order man must die only through accident or age. Indeed, one fears that war will become a necessity. Otherwise where will the population find resting-places for the soles of their feet? Did the Czar think of that?—Philadelphia Press.

ORIGIN OF "SETTING THE RIVER ON FIRE."

In old English times, when each family was obliged to sift its own flour, it sometimes happened that an energetic man would turn his sieve so rapidly as to cause it to catch fire. The style of sieve used in those days was called a "temse," and it became a customary saying that a lazy man would never set the temse on fire. Now it happens that the name of the river Thames is pronounced like the name of this old flour sieve, and after many years, when the old-fashioned temse was forgotten, it was thought that setting the temse on fire meant setting the river on fire, and that is why today we say that a stupid person will never set the river on fire. —June Ladies' Home Journal.

In spite of expedients and the substitution of coal for fuel, and iron for walls, bridges piers, and ships, the demand for wood of all kinds is still on the increase. Our immense railroad system alone is using in this country 300,000,000 of wooden ties. Boxes, toys, paper, charcoal, and numberless other articles necessary to comfort or luxury are eating up the forests of the world, until it takes no prophet to predict that the day is not far distant when a scarcity will prevail. In addition to this, forest fires devour hundreds of acers of trees yearly.—New York Tribune.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - EDITOR
FRED'K MADISON SMITH ASSISTANT EDITOR.
JOSEPH LUFF, D. W. WIGHT } CORRESPONDING EDITORS.

LAMONI, IOWA, MAY 30, 1900.

VALEDICTORY.

The writer began his editorial career with the SAINTS' HERALD in the year 1888, though not formally placed on the editorial staff as assistant editor until May, 1891. After a service of about thirteen years his editorial connection with the HERALD now terminates, because of appointment to other duties in connection with his work as Church Secretary, by late action of the Board of Publication.

In offering a few words to Saints and friends as a valedictory, I desire to say, that while not fully meeting my expectations in the work done, I have nevertheless striven to do what I could, under the circumstances of considerable burden of detail incidental to my work.

In my efforts to write for the HERALD readers I have endeavored to obtain and present whatever might have a specific or general bearing upon the great latter-day work, the signs of the times, and the developments of the world in general; to place in the hands of the ministry and membership the varying phases of Protestantism and other religious movements; that the conditions of the world and the relationship of the latter-day work to its problems and development might be more fully apprehened. The work has been an educational one, and I have been aware that its scope has been broad indeed, requiring close attention, wide range of reading and information, to do it justice; and, above all else, a highly developed and constantly maintained spirituality, for which any human instrumentality is but imperfectly prepared. No one could reasonably hope to do all that might be done in so vast a field. Nevertheless I have tried to do what I could, prayerfully and devotedly. The future alone can tell how well or how imperfectly my part of the work has has been done.

I have endeavored to educate rather than to please; to do duty rather than seek personal favor; to contribute to the real needs of the people rather than to please the fancy.

It has also been a leading inspiration in my work to present the necessity of our people being governed strictly by principle, instead of by policy, that their work be strongly built, of that substantial character that shall endure both in time and eternity. In this connection the necessity of a correct understanding of the law of God—the underlying principles and philosophy of truth, and careful, intelligent discrimination, has been emphasized, and the absolute necessity of close adherence to its provisions, without respect to persons, without partiality, has been called attention to. The writer has believed and still believes that careful adherence to principle is essential to our success, and that without such true policy strictly adhered to we cannot succeed; that the permanent upbuilding of the work and the moral, spiritual, and temporal welfare of God's people, or of any people, can be secured and maintained only by such lines of action.

The tendency of the world has been to drift from God, to follow lines of expediency for mere temporary success. Such lines of action have ever developed selfishness and stunted moral and spiritual growth. Surrounded as we are by the world and its influences, and called upon to make manifest the true and permanent in personal character and in the work of the kingdom of God, to the writer our work of genuine devotion to principles of truth in all phases of life has seemed apparent, plain, unmistakable. The sound and true in character, the Christ-conception and Christ-spirit, the masterbuilding to be wrought by his people through him, has been presented and urged, in common with the efforts of other fellow workers acting under the inspiration of the latter-day work. The end sought has been God's methods and the ultimate results and happiness to the race to follow adherence to the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom.

Though assigned to labor in other lines, my interest in the literary department in general remains undiminished. May success attend those having charge of its important interests.

Breathing a prayer for the success of God's work, including the work of the HERALD and its readers, for all God's people and our fellow men, I remain,

Respectfully and in bonds,

RICHARD S. SALYARDS.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 28, 1900.

VALEDICTORY.

To the readers of the HERALD: I wish to say that after five years of service as corresponding editor of the HERALD I now sever my connection with the editorial staff with good will and kindly feelings for my former associates; and with earnest desire that the reorganized staff may be successful and their work and association may be pleasant.

On account of my duties as church historian, in addition to having charge of a missionary field; and for other reasons to me sufficient, I tendered my resignation to the Board of Publication. The resignation was accepted, and I now feel free to say adieu. I expect to still labor for the cause of Christ, including the publishing department, as God shall give me light to do, and as my circumstance will permit.

Your co-laborer in Zion's cause,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

SALUTATORY.

Having received notice of my appointment as corresponding editor of the HERALD, I wish to extend greeting to its many readers. I am free to confess that the request for service in this particular place came as a complete surprise to me; and were it not for the aversion I hold to refusal when duty calls, I should promptly decline.

As it is, I enter the work in this department with a sense of great weakness, coupled with a desire to do the best I can wherever and whenever my service may be needed. Realizing that in this, as in other things, a failure to act in harmony with the mind of God will work disaster to the extent of the influence wielded, I earnestly invoke spiritual light requisite for the task imposed.

Fervently desiring the advancement of truth, and trusting our mutual efforts in Zion's cause may result in glory to God, I subscribe myself,

Your brother and colaborer,

D. W. WIGHT.

WHERE ARE THE POETS?

It was some time ago that there was an effort made to secure an addition to our list of songs, for the use of the church. In that effort it was suggested, indeed urged, that both words and music should be original, and both the song writers and the writers of music were solicited to take up the work and help the committee to perform the duty assigned them.

We believe that Bro. J. T. Williams gave notice in HERALD that he was willing to write music if the words were furnished him. He is quite a musician, and is a conscientious worker. We also believe that there are others who would be willing to contribute in the line of music, if the poets would provide the "motive." Music can be fitted to words better than words to music, as a rule.

Where are the poets?

Surely the spirit of poesy is not altogether passed from the Saints. Waken the spirit of poesy and song, and let us have some new songs and new music.

All who have written songs send them to us, and we will, if desired, pass upon their suitability and will see that they reach the music writers; or if preferred send to Bro. J. T. Williams, Bevier, Mo., direct.

We also request Bro. Williams to examine the files of the HERALD. There has been a number of songs, hymns, and pieces, possibly suited to the purpose, which have been published within the last three years.

We believe Sister Corson, of Virginia, has written a number, and that she will be pleased to add to the book. Where are the poets?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. O. J. Haun, writes from Flint, Mich.:—

I am laboring as circumstances will permit in this part of the district; God is blessing my efforts in the work.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. G. R. Wells has presented the office with three photographs of Australian views of interest to Latter Day Saints. He sends two views, one exterior and one interior, of the Latter Day Saints' chapel in Sydney, and one of the home of Bro. and Sr. Kaler. Thanks, Bro. Wells; come again.

A peculiar coincidence occurred here at conference time. There was presented to Bishop Kelley, by separate parties, for the curios department of Graceland College, two Confederate $20 bills. Oddly enough, one of the parties was an ex-union soldier, while the other had worn the gray. They are both soldiers in one cause, now,—both are live, energetic elders, in the active ministry, valiantly fighting for the cause of truth.

Bro. I. N. Roberts writes encouragingly from his field in Minnesota. Two applicants for baptism at Perham and his field laborers all at work. Brn. E. A. Stedman and Eli Hayer in Minneapolis, and Bro. J. M. Baggerly and Bro. Omans at Perham. Bro. Roberts holding meetings over Sunday the 27th at Audubon. From there he goes to Bemidji.

Some of our local elders are showing commendable activity. Two of our busy ones drove into Lamoni about six o'clock Monday morning, having driven about twenty-four miles. They had spent Sunday evening talking to interested and nearly convinced persons, with the result that about midnight the persons were fully satisfied and asked immediate baptism. The brethren complied, and officiated in the ordinances of baptism and confirmation in the "wee sma' hours" of the night, and then started on their homeward journey in the light of the coming morn.

THE LAW OF OFFENSES.—NO. 2.

BY ELDER T. W. SMITH.

Now in regard to forgiving personal offenses. We can and should forgive such, whether the offender confesses his fault to us or not, because we are not justified in holding hard feelings or ill-will toward any one, no matter how great the provocation. We are not permitted to "return railing for railing," or "reviling for reviling," and must forgive from our hearts our brother's trespass. Even if he repents not and confesses not, still we must forgive. But why cannot we demand that the church shall forgive him although he does not repent and confess? Because he has not offended the church as individuals; but he has transgressed the laws of the church which God has given for her government, and the unrepentant transgressor has offended God as well as us. Jesus could and did forgive sins committed against himself personally. In fact all manner of sin committed against him as "the Son of man," could have forgiveness; but sin against the Holy Ghost he could not forgive, because it was sin against the Father, whose Spirit was offended. Men might call him a "winebibber and a glutton," they could accuse him of being the "friend of publicans and sinners;" they might deride him, and scoff at him, and spit upon him, and buffet him; but when they said that he cast out devils by the power of Beelzebub, then they spoke against the Spirit of God,—or against the "power" which the Father had given him; and for this he could not, and would not forgive them, because the sinner must be punished for that offense; and where punishment must be inflicted there can be no forgiveness. Jesus could forgive the insulting, sneering spirit that prompted his enemies to accuse him with being led by the Devil, but not the offense against the Father, or the Spirit of the Father.

So we can forgive any manner of personal abuse and injury. We can forgive the man who lies about us,—or who defrauds us of our money or other property; or who may harm us in any way, morally, socially, physically, or pecuniarly; but when in so doing the person who offends us violates some plain, positive law of God, we cannot forgive that offense because it is not an offense against us only, that he commits, but an offense against God also.

We are not called upon to forgive any sin against God whatever, except upon the only conditions that God has said that he will forgive; namely, repentance and confession. There is no man in the church, there is no quorum in the church, there is no power in all the ministry combined to remit in baptism the sins of an impenitent man or woman. The baptism of an unrepentant liar, or thief, or profane swearer, or adulterer, or drunkard, etc., is null and void in the sight of God; it is emphatically worthless in his sight.

The man who slanders my character, or who steals my property, or who harms me in any way, I can and must forgive whether he repents or not and whether he confesses or not; but at the same time I am not required to forgive him as an officer and member of the body of Christ—the church. Nay, I am not even permitted to forgive him in my official capacity. I must see that the law of God is kept, and that law says:—

He that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out.—D. C. 42: 7.

The law of God says that I must deliver him up to the church; for it says in express terms:—

And if he or she confess not, thou shalt deliver him or her up unto the church, NOT TO THE MEMBERS, BUT TO THE ELDERS.—D. C. 42: 23.

If I screen his fault and do not deliver him up to the church, I transgress the law which says that I must do so. That is, unless the words, "Thou shalt," means that I may if I choose to,—but if it does so, in this place, it also means the same thing when it says, "And if thy brother or sister offend thee thou shalt [may if you please] take him or her between him or her and thee alone; and if he or she confess, thou shalt [may if you please] be reconciled." But there is no "may if you please" in the case, for it is God who is offended and not me only, and he says, "He that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out."

I do not possess any right whatsoever to retain in the church, any one whom God says "cast out," because it is not my church, but the church of God,—it is his church. I am but an agent, a servant, an overseer, and not the "master of the house." I neither own the church, nor am I the author of the rules and regulations that are to govern it. I am merely appointed to see that the law of God is kept. That does not mean that I am either to break the laws or permit any one else to do so.

I have no right to make a rule that will give liberty or license to any one else to break the least one of God's commandments. If I have helped pass a rule that gives permission to any one to vote "No" when God has said "cast out" the unrepentant transgressor, I had better read and ponder over the words of Christ in Matthew in the Inspired Translation which read thus:—

> Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven.—5: 21.

If I was present at any General Conference and voted without due thought to give liberty for a negative vote to be cast when the finding of a court of elders comes before a branch, which finding declares that the offender has violated a plain, positive law of God, and will not repent, and confess, I repeat, that if I have ever voted to make such a rule, I confess my folly before God and the church, and ask forgiveness of God and the church. This is no trifling saying, but I mean it from my heart; for I feel that if I have done so I have sinned before God, even though I may have ignorantly done it, as I have no doubt all others concerned have done.

Now what offenses may be considered deserving of the severe penalty of expulsion? The answer is found in one single sentence. "He that sinneth and repenteth not shall be cast out." But what is sin? "Sin is the transgression of the law." Law is defined to mean, rule of action, statute, decree; and so far as the laws of God are concerned, they include commandments to do certain things and not to do certain other things. To leave undone anything that God has commanded us to do or to do that which he has forbidden us to do, is, therefore, a transgression of law, and consequently is sin. Without enumerating the various laws or commandments which God has given the church, it will suffice to say, that whatsoever the Lord has given as a law to the church, either through Joseph the Martyr or through his son, the present President of the church, as a law to us, and which is evidently binding on us today, is to be included in the list of offenses; that is, a violation of any one of them is an offense. It matters not whether the law reads, Thou shalt do thus and so, or thou shalt not do this or that. In either case the will of God is set forth, and we are required to do that will, or otherwise we cannot be saved.

There is no offense which can be committed against a member of the body of Christ which is not also an offense against God; for the law expressly says:—

> Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm.—D. C. 42: 7.

So that we are forbidden to injure him in any way whatsoever, whether the harm done be a moral, spiritual, social, temporal, or physical one. So if we do speak evil of our neighbor and do him any kind of harm, we break the law of God which says, "Thou shalt not" do it. Therefore if my brother trespass against me and refuses to repent and confess his wrong; although I am to forgive him on my own personal account, yet I must deliver him up "unto the church, not to the members, but to the elders." Why? Because the elders are to stand as the representatives of God and to act in the stead of or in the name of the Lord in seeing that his "law is kept;" and they are to see that it is kept, or else they cease to be his servants or his disciples. That is their business, that is their calling, and they have no right, authority, or privilege whatever to add to or take from either the letter or spirit of the law in any degree.

As before said, the law is not of their originating or devising, they are not the authors of the law, nor can they alter or amend it in any way, much less abrogate or repeal it. They have alone one thing to do with the law, and that is to execute it or to see that it is kept. As the Lord said to the Bishopric and the Twelve concerning the law of tithing, "As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment," so it can be said to the elders in general concerning the laws of God, which they are to see "kept."

It has been supposed by some that the person who commits the offense is to go and be reconciled to the one he has offended. This is all right when the offending one knows that he has given offense; but it has often happened that the offense taken was not intentionally given. People have taken offense where none was intended, and those offended, planting themselves upon the ground that the offender should come to them and confess his fault, have nourished hard feelings toward the offender, and, after waiting for him to appear and make restitution, have gone to Bro. A. or Sr. B. for sympathy and have related their wrongs to them and have caused them to feel unpleasant toward the offender, and to blame him, and perhaps to tell his wrongdoing to somebody else who were thus also influenced to feel censorious toward the offender. And so it goes until the whole church knows of it, and the accused is all the while ignorant of having offended at all. Therefore, to cover this ground the Lord said: "And if thy brother or sister offend thee, thou shalt take him or her between him or her and thee alone," etc. That is, you who are offended, shall go to him or her who has offended you, and be reconciled if possible. See also Matthew 18: 15. Now as to the offending one, who knows that he has given offense, the Lord said:—

> Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matt. 5: 23, 24.

It is therefore apparent that both the offender and the offended one are to come together and seek to become reconciled. The duty to come together and seek reconciliation is equally binding on both. Remissness in this matter on either side is a violation of law. The writer has known of cases where Bro. A. has said, "Well, Bro. B. knows that I have something against him, because he has offended me, and he knows it; therefore let him come to me and confess his fault." But Bro. A. ought to know that the law requires him to go to Bro. B. and "tell him his fault" privately, and give him an opportunity to confess and make restitution.

The writer has heard the same Bro. A. say, "Well, Bro. B. says that I have offended him, why then does he not come to me and tell me my fault between he and me alone?" But Bro. A. does not seem to comprehend that the law requires him to go to Bro. B. when he remembers that Bro. B. has something against him, because of offense given by Bro. A., whether intentionally or not it matters not, A. is required to go and be reconciled to Bro. B. However, in both cases Bro. A. wanted the first steps toward reconciliation to be taken by Bro. B. when he was required by the law to take the first steps himself. If both would comply with the law they would meet halfway, and neither party would be more humbled or humiliated than the other. In most cases both parties are more or less in the fault.

But where one party alone is in the wrong the innocent party would most likely be in a better state of mind to go to the transgressor and tell him his fault and give him an opportunity to confess his wrong, than the offender would be to go to the offended one, and make confession; and it would justify the offended one in the eyes of the law and would leave the offender without excuse. The work of the offended party is then done, save that he afterward puts the matter in the hands of the teachers, who, acting not in the name of the offended individual, but in the name of an offended God or the offended Lawgiver, seeks to have the offender humble himself and confess his fault, which if he fails to do, he is to place the matter before the elder's court and prosecute the case in the name of the Lord and in behalf of the church; and if the offender will not hear the church, through its representatives—the elders—then he is to be sentenced to excommunication and the church is then to lift up its hands against him, that he may thereby be "cast out."

It does not follow that either the offended one,—the teachers, the elders, or the branch are influenced in the least degree by malice, ill will, anger, or even by indifference toward the offender,—for they do what they do to be "justified in the eyes of the law," "that God may be glorified" and that he be not offended, and to honor the law and the cause of God. In fact the offended one should not permit the case to pass out of his or her hands into the hands of the teachers so long as there is in him any ill feeling or hardness of heart toward the offender, and he should be sure that he forgives him for his wrong doing as an individual before he prefers a charge against him before the teachers and then only because the offender will not repent and confess his sin, and because the law of God requires him to bring him before the church.

But when in ill will, even in malice, in anger, and in a revengeful spirit, an offended party should bring his trouble before the elders and multiply his accusations, for the simple purpose of punishing his enemy, and to secure his expulsion and disgrace, then such a prosecution is ungodly, unbrotherly, and is even devilish. A court of elders is not designed of God as a Star Chamber arrangement or as an Inquisitorial Council, before which the guilt of the accused is sought to be established at all hazards; but it is simply a court of inquiry where the simple facts in the case are to be reached and the guilt or innocence of the accused is to be established according to the facts in the case. To this end every opportunity should be afforded the accused to establish his innocence, to vindicate his cause, or to comprehend his error and to amend his ways as the case may be.

When a couple of brethren (?) bring charges and counter charges against each other, and seek by pettifogging and by using all the quirks and turns that they may see in the law and take advantage of technicalities, so-called, to get the advantage or upper hand of each other, the elders should dismiss their personal charges and proceed to deal with both as disorderly characters, deprive them of office if they hold any, and sentence them to expulsion if they do not repent, confess, and become reconciled. Ill will, hardness of heart, bitterness of spirit, and desire for revenge exhibited under such circumstances or on such occasions prove that both are under condemnation before God, are in sin, and deserving of punishment.

Every step taken—first by the offended one, next by the teachers, next by the court of elders—should be taken with but one object in view, namely, the conversion of the sinner from the error of his way by his repentance and confession. Only when these efforts have failed to bring about a penitent spirit and a reformation of character in the offender should the elders request the church to lift up hands against him and thus cut him off from the church.

A word about repentance. It is asked, How often can the church forgive a transgressor of the law, who confesses his fault and says he repents? It is our opinion that the nature of the offense should determine that matter to a great extent. Adultery can only be forgiven once. Heresy, according to Paul, can be overlooked the second time only, or, as he says:—

> A man that is a heritic, after the first and second admonition, reject.—Titus 3: 10.

Paul had warned the Corinthians and had admonished some of them for "the uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they had committed." He said that when he came to them again, that is, the "third time," "I will not spare."

The church must consider that there is not only the sinner in the church to save, but that the honest in heart who are outside of the church are not to be kept out by the church retaining in membership the person who is repeatedly transgressing the laws of morality.

The writer can think of a score or more branches where persons who fully believed the doctrine and were willing to unite, and who would be a benefit to the cause if they did unite with the church, who have said that they could not consistently fellowship certain ones who were kept in the church but who were clearly unworthy of membership.

Has the church the right to retain in the church those who are stumbling-blocks, not only in the way of numbers of honest people outside the church but who are also rocks of offense to many inside?

Why should the church retain any man or woman in membership, who, unless they fully and positively repent, "cannot inherit the kingdom of God"? The mere fact of a man's name being written in and retained upon the church records will not save him. He must not only believe and obey the gospel, but he must also deny himself of all "ungodliness and worldly lusts," and "live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world," in order to be saved.

Mercy is a divine attribute, but so is justice. And while we extend mercy to the transgressor in the church let us be merciful to the law of God and to the cause of truth and righteousness. We are to have mercy also upon the weak ones in the church, and upon the young and impressible ones, who can be influenced by the evil doer by precept, perhaps, as well as by example. Let us also have mercy upon the honest seekers after truth who are kept out of the church by the evil conduct of some inside. It is better to "purge the old leaven" than to suffer it to leaven "the whole lump." It is the opinion of the writer that in all offenses, save adultery and heresy, not more than the third offense should be overlooked, and in some cases no more than the second should be forgiven. In some, such as murder, obberry, theft, and lying, the offender should be at once delivered up to the laws of the land.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 7.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

THE AGE OF THESE ANTIQUITIES.

Mr. Priest says:—

The reader may recollect, we have elicited an argument, from the age of the timber, or forest trees, growing on the mound, at Marietta [Ohio], proposing to show the probable era when the country became depopulated; and come to the conclusion, that at least, about thirteen hundred years have passed away since that catastrophe.

This would give about five hundred years from Christ till the depopulation of the ancient western country; so that, during the lapse of those five centuries, a knowledge of what had been propagated at Jerusalem about Christ, may have been, easily enough by missionaries, traveling philosophers of the Romans, Greeks, or of other nations, carried as well to China, as to other distant countries, as we know was the fact.—American Antiquities, pp. 180, 181.

So Mr. Priest argues to account for the cross, "the emblem of the Christian religion," being found on the breast of this person under this mound.

Men may figure out by the age of timber about how long it is since the Ohio Valley became depopulated, if they can ascertain for a certainty the number of generations of timber that have lived on a given spot. Ohio was formerly a forest. (Ancient America, p. 50.)

There are few traditions relating to these mounds among the Indians, who generally deny that they were the works of their ancestors.—Prehistoric America, p. 110.

The skulls in the mounds are believed to represent two types of men.

These characteristics are met with in most skeletons of the so-called Mound Builders, and they may even help us to distinguish between their bones and those of the more modern Indians, who often appropriate for their own dead the tombs of those who preceded them.—Ibid., p. 481.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

One of the most ancient skulls which can be attributed to the mound period was discovered in the county of New Madrid, Missouri, under a mound which contained numerous human remains. This skull lay at a depth of about thirty feet and from the mound rose venerable trees, the offspring of a yet more ancient forest, for their roots clasped the old trunks of their predecessors. Since the erection of this mound, the Mississippi had accumulated alluvial deposits to the height of six feet. Near by was picked up, under identical conditions, the tooth of a mastodon. Everything points to the conclusion that the original owner of this tooth was the contemporary of the man with whom chance had associated him in a common tomb.—Ibid., p. 482.

The extent of the territory occupied by the builders of the mounds in Central America, with the number of mounds erected by them, proves the great length of their existence.—Ibid., p. 85.

We are very far from believing the Indians of the present time to be the aborigines of America; but quite contrary, are usurpers; have, by force of bloody warfare, exterminated the original inhabitants, taking possession of their country, property, and in some few instances, retaining arts learned of those very nations.—American Antiquities, p. 93.

Mr. Baldwin says: "Far more than two thousand years, it may be, must have elapsed since they left the Valley of the Ohio," (Ancient America, p. 73,) while Mr. Brinton speaks of "the dispersion of the mound builders of the Ohio valley in the fifteenth century." (Myths of the New World, p. 30.)

"From the ruins of Nineveh and Babylon," says Mr. Gliddon, "we have bones of at least two thousand five hundred years old; from the pyramids and the catacombs of Egypt both mummied and unmummied crania have been taken, of still higher antiquity, in perfect preservation, nevertheless, the skeletons deposited in our Indian mounds, from the Lakes to the Gulf, are crumbling into dust through age alone."—Atlantis, p. 383.

Many of the mounds are completely occupied with human skeletons, and millions of them must have been interred in these vast cemeteries, that can be traced from the Rocky Mountains, on the west, to the Alleghenies on the east, and into the province of the Texas and New Mexico on the south: revolutions like those known in the old world may have taken place here, and armies, equal to those of Cyrus, of Alexander the Great, or of Tamerlene the powerful, might have flourished their trumpets, and marched to battle over these extensive plains filled with the probable descendants of that same race in Asia, whom these proud conquerors vanquished there.—American Antiquities, p. 55.

We can see their vast funeral vaults, enter into their graves, and look at their dry bones; but no passage of history tells their tale of life; no spirit comes forth from their ancient sepulchres, to answer the inquiries of the living.—Ibid., p. 55.

Would we believe a message of that kind? That would be a revelation. If a "spirit" should tell where the history of these millions could be found, what a cry of imposture we would hear from the preachers.

The long existence of the Mound Builders is proven, not only by the timber of two or more generations, and the great age of the bones, but from the fact that they reach from our northern lakes southward into Central America.

Father Acuña tells of countless tumuli in the Terraba plains of Costa Rica, the centre of a once numerous population. Other tumuli, no less numerous, bear witness to ancient history in the desert stretching all along the Mosquito coast of Central America. Near the Balize River mounds raised in honor of the dead and surrounded with circles of stones recall the cromlechs of the old world.—Prehistoric America, p. 83.

Mr. Baldwin says:—

That appears to me the most reasonable suggestion which assumes that the Mound-Builders came originally from Mexico and Central America. It explains many facts connected with their remains. In the Great Valley their most populous settlements were at the south. Coming from Mexico and Central America, they would begin their settlements on the Gulf coast, and afterward advance gradually up the river to the Ohio Valley. It seems evident that they came by this route; and their remains show that their only connection with the coast was at the south. Their settlements did not reach the coast at any other point.

Their constructions were similar in design and arrangement to those found in Mexico and Central America. Like the Mexicans and Central Americans, they had many of the smaller structures known as teocallis, and also large high mounds, with level summits, reached by great flights of steps. Pyramidal platforms or foundations for important edifices appear in both regions, and are very much alike. In Central America important edifices were built of hewn stone, and can still be examined in their ruins. . . .

The explanation appears to me very manifest. This method of construction was brought to the Mississippi Valley from Mexico and Central America, the ancient inhabitants of that region and the Mound-Builders being the same people in race, and also in civilization, when it was brought here.—Ancient America, pp. 70, 71.

This colonizing extension of the old Mexican race must have taken place at a remote period in the past.—Ibid., p. 73.

This is the theory of the Book of Mormon exactly; only that book got about forty years the start of Mr. Baldwin. It teaches that the Jaredites moved up into Mexico from Central America, and that they were a "warlike race," their last battles being fought south of our great lakes, the "hill Ramah" of Ether 6: 6 being "the same hill where my father Mormon did hide up the records unto the Lord which were sacred."

The hill Ramah of the Jaredite history is the hill Cumorah in Nephite history. So that the great last struggles of both Jaredites and Nephites were in the same regions; namely, Western New York. This will account then for the great number of "enclosures" in that region; two hundred and fifty of which are to be found in New York "resembling our modern fortifications." (See Prehistoric America, p. 85.)

Those ancient warriors, as Mr. Priest suggests, did lead over there "extensive plains" their armies, (see Ether 6:4,)—the plains of Agosh. Yes, sir; they did flourish their trumpets.

Wherefore Coriantumr did gather his armies together, upon the hill Comnor, and did sound a trumpet unto the armies of Shiz, to invite them forth to battle.—Ether 6: 5.

They did have a Cyrus, and an Alexander the Great, "or of Tamerlene the powerful."

And it came to pass that Shiz [the rival of Coriantumr] pursued after Coriantumr, and he did overthrow many cities, and he did slay both women and children, and he did burn the cities thereof [they were of wood likely]; and there went a fear of Shiz throughout all the land; yea, a cry went forth throughout the land, Who can stand before the army of Shiz? Behold, he sweepeth the earth before him.—Ether 6: 5.

Those inclosures for defense which were found south of our great lakes are a witness of a Shiz, or a Coriantumr, a Shared, and a Lib, and of the long wars of the Jaredites. They were not thrown up for defense against a foreign and strange enemy. Their great number proves that the struggle was long and severe.

GOD'S ELECT.

I will take my text from the Inspired Translation. In Matthew 24th chapter, commencing at the 23d verse, we find the following language:—

For in those days, there shall also arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if possible, they shall deceive the very elect, who are the elect according to the covenant. Behold, I speak these things unto you for the elect's sake. And you also shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars; see that ye be not troubled; for all I have told you must come to pass. But the end is not yet. . . . And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked. . . . Verily I say unto you, this generation, in which these things shall be shown forth, shall not pass away until all I have told you shall be fulfilled.—Verses 23–25, 32, 35.

Jesus here told his disciples that the generation in which the gospel should be preached in all the world prior to his coming, was the generation in which the false Christs and prophets would come, and if possible deceive the very elect. "Behold, I speak these things unto you for the elect's sake."

I hear marvelous testimonies and wonders from the people here in the valleys of the mountains, and it would naturally cause a man to stop and consider whether it be the right church or not. The best conclusion to arrive at is to stand behind the written word, and to this we shall refer, dear readers, to see if we can point out the deception of testimony. If they speak not according to the law and the prophets it is because there is no light in them.

In the first place, every so-called follower of the gospel under Joseph Smith believes that this is the generation in which the gospel is to be preached prior to the coming of the Son of Man. We shall look within God's word to find who the elect are. "Behold, I speak these things unto you for the elect's sake." We find in Doctrine and Covenants 34:5,

And a commandment I give unto thee, that thou shalt write for him; and the scriptures shall be given even as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect; for they will hear my voice, and shall see me, and shall not be asleep, and shall abide the day of my coming, for they shall be purified even as I am pure.

Here God says that the Scriptures that he is about to give are for the salvation of his elect.

Again, later on in the Doctrine and Covenants, 42:15, it is written:—

Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

God distinctly points out that it is his people that are to teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

Now, dear readers, remember it is written,

Although the days will come that the heaven and the earth shall pass away, yet my word shall not pass away; but all shall be fulfilled.—Matt. 24:36.

God says that he will preserve those scriptures in safety that are for the salvation of his elect, and then it was his people that were to teach them. Let us turn to history and see what the position of the two churches has been.

For in those days, there shall also arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if possible, they shall deceive the very elect, who are the elect according to the covenant.—Matt. 24:23.

We have found out that who God covenanted with should be his elect. Now what has been the attitude towards those scriptures, by a people that have been led here to the valleys by President Young? President Young rejected them and caused that his followers should do the same. They stood on the grounds that they were not completed by the Prophet Joseph. I shall not refer to Times and Seasons for prophecy; I presume all of you are acquainted with the many predictions of their completion, but I will draw your attention to the Doctrine and Covenants of January 19, 1841, section 107:28:—

If he will do my will, let him from henceforth hearken to the counsel of my servant Joseph, and with his interest support the cause of the poor, and publish the new translation of my holy word unto the inhabitants of the earth.

By this it is seen that it was God's will that the New Translation of his holy word was to be published to the inhabitants of the earth. "The scriptures shall be given even as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect." This was given in 1830. Then he tells his people that they shall hold their peace concerning them and not teach them until "ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men." Now we find that the commandments have come, that it was his will that they were to be published to the inhabitants of the earth. If there had been no other word than this, it alone is sufficient to show the scriptures were given, "as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect." The evidence shows that they were completed as God would have them to be, but the evidence also shows that the people that brought them forth and published them to the world, were and are the accepted people of God. The bringing forth the scriptures by the Reorganized Church has as much weight to show the accepted Church of God as did the bringing forth the Book of Mormon by Joseph to show that he was commissioned of God to establish his church upon the earth. The only difference between the two promises is this: The Nephites had to wait about two thousand four hundred years from the time Nephi made the plates, "for a special and wise purpose," for them to come forth by way of the Gentiles. On the other side the sun has hardly set, so to speak, before the promise comes to God's elect. We are living in a day that God will cut short his work in righteousness.

Some people ask me, Do you believe that the Utah church has the false prophets that Christ spoke of in the generation that the gospel was to be preached prior to his coming? Yes, indeed, I do believe that they partially fulfill that prediction of the Son of God, for no other people could show such signs and wonders as could a people that were once in the faith but were rejected through transgression.

Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me. And I will be your Ruler when I come; and, behold, I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept. He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you.—D. C. 41:1, 2.

Now, dear readers, you see that God was going to give his law that his people should know how to govern his church and have all things right before him. "And I will be your Ruler when I come." Let us see what part of that law is which Christ was to give for the governing of his church. "And ye shall see that my law is kept." Turn to Doctrine and Covenants 42:7:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out.

O ye people of Utah, what are you doing out here? If you would believe the word you certainly could not help but see you have denied the faith and that is why you are cast out. "He that saith he receiveth" my law "and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you." God was going to cast those out from among his church that claimed to believe in his law and did it not. I would ask you elders of Utah, Has not the casting out been your portion? O people of Utah, I cannot accept your testimony to be the accepted church. Although you do many marvelous works and wonders, you are deceived; you are out of harmony with God's word.

For it shall come to pass, that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars, and hypocrites shall be proved by them, and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known.—D. C. 64:7.

My heart rejoices when I see that though some of God's people denied the faith, still they shall be brought back in his own due time if they will harden not their hearts and stiffen not their necks against him.

And pray for thy brethren of the twelve. Admonish them sharply for my name's sake, and let them be admonished for all their sins; and be ye faithful before me unto my name. And after their temptations and much tribulations, behold, I, the Lord, will feel after them, and if they harden not their hearts, and stiffen not their necks against me, they shall be converted, and I will heal them. —D. C. 105:5.

The Twelve would not need conversion if they had been in the faith and had kept the law that was to govern the church till Christ comes.

Now, dear reader, I leave these thoughts with you, hoping they will be of benefit to others as they have been to me. Be earnest and faithful in keeping the commandments of God, search the scriptures and become acquainted with them, and bear it in mind that he that came that we might have light and have it more abundantly, said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

"A LATTER DAY SAINT'S HOME."

It is an old but a true saying, "There is no place like home." However humble it is, no matter if poverty does exist in it, if it is the spot where the Spirit of God remains, where the dear wife and fond children are, and a father who is a man in every respect; a home where God's Spirit is continually, where love exists in all the members, where songs of Zion are sung, where prayers are offered morning and evening in family worship, where unselfishness exists in all the members, where each one studies each other's comfort, good, and pleasure, is hard to find. This should be the case in every saint's home. This cannot be brought about in one day, or week, or probably a year; but should be constantly aimed at.

My heart has often throbbed for oppressed wives and children, under the cruel hand of a heartless father, who never has a kind word for any, nothing but a growl and command to do this and that. I have seen homes where the father would permit the wife to carry water from a distance, split wood, feed calves, milk cows, and do all manner of outdoor work, while she had a family of children, some small enough to call babies, generally lugging one on her arm, and never having time to half take care of them. How on earth do such men (if you could call them men—I fear they only have the size of men and really don't know what it takes to constitute a man) expect to retain the love that that dear girl once had for him. Surely she says within her heart, "You cruel, unkind man; little did I think when you ran after me and made such promises that you would sit and see my physical frame twisted, deformed, and displacements come to those weaker parts of my body by lifting, straining, carrying water so far, helping you lift off hay racks, wagon boxes, load and lift beyond that which is reasonable, besides doing all my own housework, cooking for you and hired men, do all my own washing, churning, scrubbing, and house cleaning, and if ever I get time, sewing, knitting, teaching the children to pray and sing, and educate them in Sabbath school Quarterlies."

If all this is not done by this dear wife, some one will say she is lazy and slothful. When the neighbors come to see her they find her asleep in the rocking-chair, with a child on her breast, tired out. Now I ask, Is this not a common picture? My eyes have beheld such pictures.

How can that mother and wife love with all her heart such a character? To my mind such men deserve to live alone; they don't deserve a wife; they are without natural affection, and of the class spoken of by Paul in the last days. Have we got them in the church?

"What is a wife for," you say; "a doll? Will you expect her to sit around, hire a girl, do nothing?"

Now reason on this. Does God expect us to commit suicide? Is not the former picture a true one—the next thing to killing the body? If a man loves his wife, will he see her worked to death? No; if he loves her as he should, he'd hire her a girl. He'd split the wood, dig a well, build a wood shed, dig a cistern, milk the cows when consistent, feed calves and pigs, water the cattle, and study her comfort in all things; and be temperate in all things, constantly studying her comfort, making everything comfortable about the house, convenient, and in such a way as to help her. Instead of leaving her to educate the children in the gospel, let her sit and knit, or sew, while you spend a short time telling the children the gospel plan and help them get ready for Sunday school, and do always those things which belong to a man around home.

I am sometimes ashamed I am a man, when I see such things. Poor women don't get fair play. When used that way for years they think all men are like that. I have heard married women say, "If I were single again, I'd never marry; no man would ever get me." Now the trouble is they did not get a man; they only got the shape. It is seldom you see a woman unreasonable to a good man; but I'm sorry to say it is often that we see men unkind to good women. Surely woman is far ahead of man in purity, virtue, kindness, sympathy, love, and humility.

To make home pleasant and happy unselfishness must be practiced by the head of the house. First practice and then teach. Don't teach one thing and practice another. If you use tobacco, don't mention the bad use of it. If you swear, steal, lie, cheat, and are a crank, don't say a word about religion to the children, for they will despise you. First show the example, and your teaching will be effective. A man who is a crank with his wife and children don't love them. A man has a wonderful influence over his wife and children if they see him do right. The children will imitate. I heard a little boy in the church say, "Pa, if you would start to smoke, I would too." If a man wants his wife to love him he must first show by kind words and actions that he loves her. My mind now comes to those thoughts:—

Kind hearts are the gardens,
Kind thoughts are the roots,
Kind words are the blossoms,
Kind deeds are the fruits.

If we wish our children to love us we must first love them; and if we love them, and they love us, that is the key to the way to train them. We should hold family worship, and each take turn in vocal prayer. Pray ten minutes and practice ten hours. At meal time is a good place to have a nice family talk. Let each in turn ask the blessing. Discuss the topics of the day. Speak one at a time. Don't shut your child off when in conversation unless by something of importance, and then apologize for interrupting. Children are individuals, and like to be so recognized. When a child asks a question, never say, "Don't bother me," or answer him in such a way, because a child is a born questioner, and that is your opportunity to educate him. When you see a child full of good questions you ought to be proud, for you can soon make a preacher out of him.

A child can be taught to practice the law of tithing from six years and up. Give him work to do, and encourage him by paying him well. Then is your opportunity to plant the law of tithing; help him to thoroughly understand it, and allow him his agency in paying it. It will cultivate unselfishness in him. Tell him stories of history, of ancient prophets, and let most of your home talk be the gospel.

I know a family of Saints where the children from four years up pay their tithing—father, mother, and all. In order to teach them the law, this man first practices it himself, then begins in a proper way. He gives them good wages for sawing a few sticks of wood. It teaches them to work, and encourages them, and teaches them the value of money. I have seen them sweat and work by the hour to earn five cents. Now they always pay the Lord one tenth.

The same parent offered one dollar each if they would work hard to pass school examination. When the time came two of them passed. And to show you how unselfishness is being stamped upon them, the oldest, nine years old, first pays of his own free will, ten cents tithes, twenty-five cents offering, then buys his mother a present which cost fifty cents, then treats his father to five cents in candies, and only keeps for himself ten cents. The other boy pays ten cents tithes, twenty-five cents offering, and spends the balance on his own school books, of his own freewill, which shows he has an interest in his father's welfare. That was surely a pattern. Now this, no doubt, is a constant thing, and was not planted upon their minds at once. To show how it is done, the little girl at four years, seeing and hearing the subject spoken of, not being old enough to grasp the understanding of tithing, got a few coppers gathered, and of her own free will came to her father, and said: "Pa, here is a copper for the Lord."

Now these are facts which I have seen. This is teaching them to overcome selfishness. They will grow up to be generous, and will bless others. It will be no trouble for them when Zion will be gathered to lay all at the apostles' feet. People who do not practice and cultivate a generous spirit will find it hard when the time comes to lay down all they have to be equally divided. They will not stand the gospel hammer. We are all spiritual stones in the temple. Will we stand facing? If not, our position will be in the back wall.

Let us study to make home happy. If we live for the Spirit of God it will teach us how to act and conduct ourselves at home and abroad. Let us be Saints at home, and it will be seen by all people. Let us take turn about in going to conferences and to prayer meetings, if home cannot be deserted. Let us study the feelings of all in the home, and God's Spirit will be invited in our homes. Kind thoughts, kind words, kind deeds. If we want to know how much religion a man has, go and live with him at his home awhile. Don't be a saint abroad and a devil at home. God will despise you. Let the gospel be the chief subject to talk on.

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we are told if parents neglect to teach children, both by example and precept, the law of the gospel, the sins will be required of the parents. Let us beware how we build the young characters.

Parents, let us make home pleasant by constantly striving to be patient under all trials. No home will be free from Satan's temptations. He will enter and try to spoil your nice home. By constantly striving to keep the law, the sweet Spirit will come, and all will be sunshine.

It is not to find fault with any I write, but to express my views on what a home should and could be, hoping it will offend none, but rather beget within us fresh desires to make home happy, and entice God's sweet Spirit to come and remain with us.

Yours in the conflict,

GEORGE BUSCHLEN.

BEVIER, Mo., May 21.

Editors Herald:—I have been reading the report of the committee on song book at last General Convention, at Lamoni, Iowa. It must be discouraging to the committee to see the lack of interest taken in furnishing music for the book. Perhaps there is a just cause for this. Not the musicians alone are to blame for this, but the poets, too. They have neglected their part in furnishing hymns for the musicians to set to music.

It is not often that we will find one person gifted with the two talents. Music is one gift or talent, and poetry is another; hence if the musician is only gifted in music, he has to wait until some poet will furnish him poetry. A carpenter can build a house when he has the material; the musician also can compose music when he is furnished with hymns.

I think I am justified in locating the blame mostly with the poets. Since the appointment of the committee on song book at the General Convention, at Lamoni, in 1898, I have not received a single hymn from the committee, nor from any of the Saints; but I have been asked frequently by the committee to compose music for the book. Hymns were not once mentioned. Hence, I was not surprised very much when I read that the committee reported so little had been done towards the completion of the song book.

The lack of hymns has prevented the writer from furnishing the committee with more pieces. I was compelled to compose hymns for the few manuscripts which I did send. To remove this obstacle that hinders the progress of the intended song book, a contribution of good hymns, properly adapted to our faith, should be sent to the music committee. If any brother and sister gifted in poetry, feels interested in this movement, I would kindly solicit a good, original Sabbath school hymn sent to the address below. Wake, up poets; the musicians are waiting on you! Wishing the book a success, I shall continue my interest as one with all the lovers of music.

GREENSBURG, Ind., May 22.

Editors Herald:—Brn. Geo. Jenkins and Wm. C. Marshall have been in our midst, making my home the base of operations, as the would-be pious people of the different denominations have closed their doors against us. However, we hope and pray Greensburg may be another Nazareth, out of which good will come, as we realize there are some with honest hearts in this city.

It is with pleasure I can say we are still in the faith; but we realize it is so easy to drift away from the right, to move along wrong lines, to indulge in dangerous extremes, to go too fast or too slow. May God give us light and a willingness to walk therein.

We became acquainted with this work at Zonker, Douglas County, Missouri; and today, as memory fleets back over the events of the past it brings before us many instances wherein the marvelous power of God has been displayed through the gospel. We came here four years ago, and when no one here knew anything of this latter-day work. Many had read Beadle's work on Mormonism; and we were laughed at and scorned by some, and others called us Mormons. But we prayed for them, and prayed for an elder to be sent here. We also scattered papers and tracts, and the outcome was that we got some interested who seemed to think we were all right.

But the work here is not very flattering; they want anything but gospel truth. Many of comprehensive minds and reasonableness of character are compelled to desist from their adherence to the corrective spirit of rule by the clergy who say, "Don't go to hear the Mormons; they are the same as those in Utah."

While many are misled, we hope the truth may be pictured out to them by the servants of God imbued by the Spirit that leadeth unto all truth.

Brn. Jenkins and Marshall are kindly remembered by some of my neighbors, and often have I been asked when will they ever get round to see us again. They were blessed with the Spirit, and those who heard were made to realize the power of God. One old man told me today he would go a long way to hear such preaching. Said he and his wife will go with me to Wirt sometime this summer.

The above-named brethren visited Rushville from Saturday till Tuesday, and were permitted to speak in the Baptist and Methodist churches. They have taken the hand of two for baptism. They stopped with us again, and spoke three times as they returned on their way to New Marion.

I feel to rejoice, and am truly glad that the time has come when a few have been made to sing praises in this part of God's vineyard, with a desire to receive more light. I do wish and pray that some will unite with us. We have been alone here so long it would be so good to have others of the precious faith to associate with.

May our heavenly Father give us his Spirit and grace. Praying that the Spirit of God may guide us, and that we may have an interest in your prayers that we and our children may see the redemption of Zion, and hoping to continue steadfast in the one faith, I am, Your brother,

HENRY H. MONTGOMERY.

MCNEILL, Miss., May 21.

Editors Herald:—Some days ago I was meditating upon Zion. (See Heb. 12: 22; Ps. 87.) In a night vision I was permitted to see the city. It would be impossible for me to describe the city as it was shown to me. Most wonderfully clean she appeared, her buildings being of a most substantial kind. Her streets were the widest I have ever beheld.

While I was viewing the city with its wide and straight streets, I beheld corn growing in the streets, and I began to wonder why that was permitted in such a great city. A voice spoke to me and said: "Because the elders have sown corn in the streets it is not doing well."

I was troubled to know the meaning of the voice. It is yet a mystery to me.

Another cause for wonder was that there were very few inhabitants in this wonderful city. Ah, very few! The city was ready, but only a few of those who were to occupy it were prepared.

Very truly,

A. L. LIVINGS.

PLANO, Ill., May 21.

Editors Herald:—Since General Conference I have been busy doing ministerial labor in Plano and Sandwich. At the latter place the church is left without a pastor or preacher, Bro. George Howard, the president of the branch, being gone to Joliet to work. So by the earnest request of the Saints residing there and the consent of the sub-missionary in charge I have consented to remain in this vicinity for the present and labor, as it is in my field of labor. Most of the Saints in both branches seem to be earnest and are striving to be faithful.

The union memorial services of all the churches of the city of Plano will be held this year on May 27, at the stone church. It is expected that Elder F. M. Cooper will deliver the sermon on that occasion.

Ever laboring and trusting in Christ, the Savior, for the ultimate triumph of the gospel, I am, In gospel bonds,

ELI M. WILDERMUTH.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 25.

Editors Herald:—Arrived in this city April 29. Was well pleased with my mission. The climate so far is very pleasant. At first we held meetings at the homes of the Saints. About two weeks ago we secured a very fine location for the gospel tent, on lots furnished free by the Minneapolis Trust Co. It is in a good neighborhood. Brn. Stedman, Hayer, and self have occupied of evenings for two weeks, with steadily increasing audiences. Some few are investigating. It is difficult to get the pleasure-loving people of this city to heed our message. The lakes and resorts attract the great mass of the people.

Satan is doing a big work in Minneapolis. The people care so little for the things that are true and abiding. Ungodliness and iniquity is on the increase. The world—socially and industrially—is growing worse and worse. The poor are becoming poorer, and the rich more opulent and cruel. All that we can do is to try to stem the great tide of lawlessness and irreligion, and get for our pains the scorns and buffets of the world.

Our hope is in the great future when Christ shall smite and destroy these wrongs and evils, and bring about the reign of order, equity, and peace.

Field-marshall (I. N.) Roberts is in the northern part of the State, where we expect to join him soon.

We expect a good time at the reunion at Perham, beginning June 16. All who can should attend.

We are hopeful of a successful year in gospel work. We expect to keep busy and take the gospel to as many places as we can find openings.

I shall leave the city this week, and my address will be Perham, Minn., until I select a permanent one.

In gospel bonds,

JAMES M. BAGGERLY.

SLOAN, Ia., May 25.

Editors Herald:—Several months have elapsed since I have penned a communication to you for the pages of the Herald, and hereby apologize for such neglect.

I believe I was laboring at Persia when I last wrote in January. My labor there was very effectual, being associated with the Holy Spirit, and the united support of all the branch officials. Three were baptized, and many testified to having received help from God, and their joy in God's service was increased. The spirit of liberality was largely exercised, by which the attire of the missionary was enewed.

My labor here previously was in reply to an attack made on the faith by a Christian (?) and M. E. minister, unequally yoked together to oppose us, during which defense much prejudice was removed, and I enter upon the services here now with an expectation of less opposition than heretofore, or, if opposition is shown, in a less public way.

Just previous to General Conference two elders of the Brighamite faith came to Magnolia and applied for the church, and were granted it under the conditions that one of our representatives reply the same night. I was selected to reply, and greatly enjoyed laying before my neighbors and church associates the apostasy of the leaders of that people, and the deception the representatives of that church were practicing. The confession was made that I had forced them to defend the doctrines of polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-god theory, and a denial that Jesus was conceived by the Holy Ghost. A very unsatisfactory defense they made of it, even to themselves, judging from their appearance, and their refusal to continue any longer.

Several features of General Conference I enjoyed, and trust that other features not enjoyed by me may, in the carrying out of measures adopted, result in good to the cause in a general way.

Upon my return home I found myself in need of some rest, and sought it in assisting in making garden, cleaning house, etc. I found my wife's health better; but as yet she is not entirely relieved from the severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism she underwent for several weeks, the severity of which was minimized largely through prayer and anointing with oil.

I just closed a series of meetings about eight miles from home, which has resulted in sixteen baptisms, the blessing of six children, and a much better understanding of duty to God, and each other. The Spirit bore witness of the truths presented, and directed in the services in manifold ways. Was assisted by Elders J. C. Crabb and G. M. Scott. The results now seen are largely due to others, especially Bro. and Sr. Don B. Coffman, and the efforts now being made in sustaining a Sunday school in which is taught the faith of the church. Previously to my labor there regular services had been held for several months, first beginning by Elder A. M. Fyrando previous to his illness, and continued by Elder G. M. Scott, who will continue to look after the work there.

On Monday last I returned home for a rest of a couple of days, and found that Bro. Fyrando had had, and was then enduring, one of the most severe attacks of a nervous character that he had ever experienced. But, thank God, in answer to prayer and fasting, and administration he was able to be out again on Wednesday afternoon when I left home.

Expect to raise the tent and begin services tomorrow night to continue about ten days here, ere the district convention and conference, which meets at Little Sioux, the 8th to 10th of June.

I learned on yesterday that Bro. Samuel Wood had gone to Sioux City to be treated for his hearing. This is very sad.

I learn that Bro. Hubert Case has gone on his mission. He is missed from this mission. His labors were much appreciated, and our association was very pleasant to me. I expect to hear of much good being done by him in his new mission. 'Tis pleasant to labor with and after such a one.

As I view it the prospect is excellent for the ingathering of souls; but from present indications the missionary force will be somewhat crippled. I pray that the adversary may not have such power to prevent effectual labor as during the past year, but that God's servants may be blessed, and their families protected.

In hopes of remaining faithful, I am,

J. F. MINTUN.

1862 Springfield Ave.,
SPRINGFIELD, Mo., May 24.

Editors Herald:—I see in Saints' Herald for May 9, under the title "Apology," that the Deseret News for April 30, contains a letter from Quincy Anderson, in which he states that he never authorized me to let anyone else see that letter or have it published.

Now this letter places me in a wrong position before the reading public. I want to say this: if there were any violations of good editorial law in publishing the letter of Mr. Penrose, Quincy Anderson alone is responsible for it. I have all the letters of Bro. Quincy Anderson which led to the printing of that letter of Mr. Penrose. In the first place I and Bro. Quincy had a number of letters of controversy on "Brigham Young's Adam-god theory," and quoted from Bro. Etzenhouser's book, and in answer to that letter he wrote me February 24, 1900:—

"Dear Friend Henry Sparling:—I take the pleasure today to answer more fully to your two last letters. I have investigated these points more fully. First you refer me to the Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 50, and in this number you say Brigham Young taught that Adam was our only God, and that the virgin Mary was not overshadowed by the Holy God. I wrote to the editor of the Deseret News, and I send you his answer to me. So Brigham Young did not teach what you said he did."

So you see, Mr. Editor, that letter from Mr. Penrose to Mr. Anderson was in answer to my quotation from Bro. Etzenhouser; and as Mr. Anderson thought that Penrose had flatly contradicted my quotation, he sent me Mr. Penrose's letter to prove to me how our editors misquote Brigham. And in proof of Mr. Anderson's statement Mr. Penrose's letter is signed, "Editor of Deseret News."

Now, as I did not have the Journal of Discourses to know which statement was true, I sent the letter to the Saints' Herald, and asked the editor to publish it and the statement of Brigham, which was done. I saw Mr. Anderson before the letter was published, telling him I was going to have it published, so we would see who was telling the truth. He, with pleasure, said: "I am glad. That is just what I want to see; and if I find that that is a true statement, I shall have done with Utah forever." I suppose he satisfied himself, for on March 17, at our district conference at John's Mills, about twenty miles from Ozark, Bro. Anderson came, having walked twelve miles in order to get there. He expressed himself forever in favor of the Reorganized Church. He stated that he had sinned enough since he had been in darkness, that he desired rebaptism, which was granted him, as nothing else would satisfy him.

On my return home I called at his home, and found him rejoicing in the gift of the Spirit, as he expressed it. If he has allowed himself again to be overcome by the same spirit of darkness, we are indeed sorry.

But the brother saying he never authorized the publishing of Mr. Penrose's letter, is a case of forgetfulness. Why should Mr. Penrose object? If his letter contained a true statement he had nothing to lose by a comparison. The Herald readers must be the judges, so look up Herald for March 14, 1900.

Surely Springfield won't insist any longer that we and Utah Mormonism are the same. I hear that five Utah elders are preaching now in town; and our tent will be going in a few days. The difference will be made plain in the "old town" every night.

Yours in bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

PAWNEE, Mo., May, 1900.

Editors Herald:—In the editorial column of the Saints' Herald for May 25, the editor says: "We hear of much complaint that there are not so many occurrences of manifestations of power now as there used to be in former years," etc. I am of the opinion that something that I said in the prayer meeting furnished the basis for that statement; and as I believe I was not understood I wish to make an explanation. I have heard that some brother accused me of teaching sectarianism. All I have to say to that is that the brother or brothers making such a charge better learn what the doctrine of this church is before making such a charge. I was talking of my own experience, and I gave as a reason for the infrequency of certain miraculous manifestations the change in our condition. Not that the gospel has changed, or that the Saints are not enjoying the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit, but in the early ministry of the church many —or at least some—of the ministry launched out into unexplored fields, among strangers, and had to meet not only with persecution and slander as the ministry do now, but were often pinched with hunger and cold, and sometimes had to lie out in the woods in rain and mud. They did not have the pleasant homes to fall back on that the majority of the elders have now. They had nothing to fall back on but the Master, and that brought greater humility, more earnest pleading, and often most wonderful relief. And it was through such efforts that many of the pleasant homes were established where the weary pilgrim may now rest.

Had it not been that the power of God was manifest in those early days more frequently and in greater demonstration than they are now, I said they could not have endured. I believe this is true of some, at least.

There may be as many or more exhibitions of God's power in the church now as there were then, but there were ten times as many Saints to witness and relate them.

It may be true, as one said, that we have them so common that we do not mention them; but it is only true in part, for I find many who seem eager to mention things now that would not have been noticed much in early times.

However, I was speaking of my own experience, and I can testify that at many times, when it seemed that the whole universe was against me, and the powers of darkness combined with hunger, fatigue, and disappointment to crush me and still the great message I was trying to bear, yet in the very moment of despair God came to the rescue and brought deliverance in a most miraculous way. Yes, in such a way that the circumstances need only to be related to show the wonder-working hand of providence. Such experiences, perhaps, would have never been, had it been that a pleasant home had been near at hand, or within a day or two's walk; but these conditions did not exist then, hence the necessity of great and oft repeated power.

But even the miraculous deliverance that I spoke of was nothing in comparison to the witness of the Holy Spirit that testified of the source whence the deliverance came.

Many of the young men now in the field have never been half tried, and I hope they never will be tried as some have been; but if they are ever put to the test I pray God they may be able to stand and prove themselves heroes in the fight.

I am glad that I can say of a truth that the work is true, and that I have been permitted to bear some humble part in opening the way and making the work easier for those who shall follow.

There is nothing that brings a man so close to God as to find himself away among strangers, and scored and persecuted and destitute, and then to find every door closed against him, no eye to pity, no shelter to cover him. Then when he goes to God he will go in earnest, and his blessings will be according to his closeness to the source from which his blessings come.

Yours for truth,

J. C. CLAPP.

WHEELING, W. Va., May 25.

Editors Herald:—It is so seldom that any communication from this place appears in your columns that the elders who have labored here in days gone by and are now in distant fields may think we are spiritually dead. While the work has not made as rapid progress as I would like, yet the seed sown here by many of the faithful servants of God has not been sown in vain. There is quite a number who are living faithful to their covenants and seeking to honor God in their lives and to help build up his kingdom on earth.

But Satan is never idle; and through his cunning devices some are hindered from doing the good they started out to do. I think experience has fully demonstrated to us that when Saints neglect their duties they not only lose the blessings God has promised to the faithful, but they are easily influenced to do service for the evil one, thus retarding instead of advancing the cause of Christ. Only the diligent and faithful will be blessed in their work.

Our Sunday school is accomplishing a good work in instructing the youth both in and out of the church. As a result of the Sunday school, or partly so at least, five more went forth in obedience to the Master's command and were baptized on the 19th inst. by the writer. They were confirmed on Sunday following, Elder Joseph Wayt assisting in the confirmation. A spiritual time was enjoyed by a good attendance of the Saints. All of the five were young brothers, and members of the Sunday school. They were: Bro. Smith's two sons, Gomer M. and Leroy E.; and Bro. Thomas' son, Clarence H; also Wm. F. Myers and Ingram McVay, aged 16 and 17 respectively, who are the first of their families to obey. They are truly in earnest; and if they continue as they have begun will be useful in the Master's cause. The truth is reaching the honest in heart. There are others here who desire to obey, but are hindered at present. May God speed the right, and bless and strengthen his people in every conflict with sin.

Your brother in Christ,

O. J. TARY.

Original Poetry.

I'LL SING OF HEAVENLY FAVOR.

Tune: I Love to Tell the Story.

I'll sing of heavenly favor,
Bestowed on earth below,
Of God who lives forever,
Whose course no changes know.
For he to man has spoken,
Like as in days agone,
Before his covenant broken,
His Spirit was withdrawn.

Chorus:—

I'll sing of heavenly favor,
Of God who lives forever;
Whose Spirit failing never,
Reveals his will to man.

I'll sing of blessings given,
To man in latter days,
Of Satan's darkness driven
Before the light we praise,
Of gospel gift reviving,
The gift to man long lost,
As faithful Saints are striving
To keep the Holy Ghost.

Chorus.

I'll sing of faith and healing,
Of wisdom and of tongues,
Of prophecy revealing
God's work before it comes;
Of knowledge and discerning,
And every gift God gives;
For these the Saints are yearning,
By these the church yet lives.

Chorus.

I'll sing of human nature
Subdued by that divine;
I'll seek for every feature
Of Christ to make it mine.

I'll sing of virtue, growing
From earth to heaven above,
Of man, perfected, showing
The fruits of heavenly love.

INVOCATION.

Like the dew upon the hilltop in the evening softly falling,
When the willows bright and golden wave their branches to and fro,
Where the long grass by the streamlet, where the katydid is calling,
Bends to dip its shining tassels in the dimpled wave below,
Gentle Spirit, Holy Spirit, come and soothe me as I go.

Like the rain upon the meadow when the clover leaves are fading,
And the wind as from a furnace bids the lily droop and die,
From the west the gentle rain cloud, with abundance heavy laden,
Comes to drop its fruitful coolness from the grey and solemn sky,
Mighty Spirit, potent Spirit, come in answer to my cry.

Mighty source of holy power, bidding flowers of rarest beauty,
Lift their radiant heads of glory in the desert of the mind,
Causing souls of rugged nature to come tamely to their duty,
Gently holding up the weakest with influence wondrous kind,
Thou art welcome as the hand that bringeth sight unto the blind.

Thou art stronger than the earthquake, yet thy working goeth sweetly,
Like the falling of the autumn leaf that flutters through the air.
Thou art very, very precious; may my will forever seek thee,
While I purify my body as a temple of thy care.
In the name of Christ, my Father, grant to answer this my prayer.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

OWING to unavoidable circumstances the following communication from the newly elected "advisory board" of the Daughters of Zion has been delayed; but we trust its late appearance will in no way detract from the interest attaching thereto.—ED.

As it seemed good to the sisters assembled in General Convention to select for their "advisory board" such of their number as (because of location) would be able to meet together, some changes in the board became necessary. Sr. Eli Etzenhouser and Sr. Clara Frick were chosen to fill the places of Dr. Bertha Greer and Sr. Audentia Anderson. The consultations which heretofore have been unsatisfactory, because of being carried on through the medium of correspondence, will, it is hoped, by this change, be productive of greater good to the greater number. And while we as a "board," both those newly elected as well as those who have served in the past, regret to part with aid which has been so efficient, we yet trust that the field at large—that field which is ripe for the sickle—will gain in proportion as their hands have been released from this special work.

As we look forth upon the field before us and consider the weakness of our hands, we feel to say to each one interested in this work, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his vineyard."

As we say, "Each one interested in this work," the question arises, how many of the Saints are interested? If we were to judge by those who meet with us, those who put their shoulders to the wheel to help roll it on, our hearts would be sad indeed. But we do not judge from this, for we know it would not be the basis of a correct judgment. While we are constrained to admit that many are indifferent and some few even oppose the work, we know assuredly that the many are with us in heart if not in person. How can it be otherwise? Lives there upon this broad land today a true father, a true mother, who in his or her soul does not desire that their son or their daughter should have better advantages, greater opportunities of fitting himself or herself for usefulness in the world than ever fell to their own lot? Such a parent is seldom if ever found.

If this be true of the world at large, how then can it fail of being true with us as Saints? we who are awaiting and oft longing for the coming of Christ. And if by joining together we may gain the strength which union ever brings—the wisdom which is found in a multitude of counsel, why should you not extend to us the hand of fellowship? Why not come and go with us? Not that "we may do you good," but that we may do each other good. It may be you need us, we know we need you.

Comparing year with year—the present with the past, we feel that the closing years of the nineteenth century have not altogether been unproductive of good; and while we have not accomplished all that we hoped for, and much less than we desired to have done, we are glad to be able conscientiously to say that we believe we have held our own; yes, even more than this, that some advancement has been made; and with a firmer and stronger reliance upon the help and guidance of God than ever before, we turn our faces to the new year of duties, the new century of mighty, unborn events, and pray that we be not found wanting when the Master shall call for an account of our stewardship. Our strength is in the purity of our cause, and so long as we are true to that, God will never withhold his blessing.

ADVISORY BOARD OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

AFTER reading the above we felt to copy the following beautiful lines of the poet, which will help each one of us to realize that "the race is not to the swift, neither the battle to the strong," nor yet to the seeming victor.

I sing the hymn of the conquered, who fell in the battle of life—
This hymn of the wounded, the beaten, who died overwhelmed in the strife.
Not the jubilant song of the victors, for whom the resounding acclaim,
Of nations was lifted in chorus, whose brows wore the chaplet of fame;
But the hymn of the low and the humble, the weary, the broken in heart,
Who strove and who failed (?), acting bravely, a silent, a desperate part;
Whose youth bore no flower in its branches, whose hopes burned in ashes away,
From whose hands slipped the prize they had grasped at, who stood at the dying of day,
With the work of their life all around them, unpitied, unheeded, alone,
With death swooping down o'er their failure, and all but their faith overthrown,
While the voice of the world shouts its chorus, its pæans for those who have won—
While the trumpet is resounding triumphant and high to the breeze and the sun,
Gay banners are waving, hands clapping, and hurrying feet
Thronging after the laurel-crowned victors—I stand on the field of defeat,
In the shadow 'mongst those who are fallen and wounded and dying—and there
Chant a requiem low, place my hand on their pain-knotted brows, breathe a prayer,
Hold the hand that is hapless and whisper, 'They only the victory win
Who have fought the good fight and have vanquished the demon that tempts us within;
Who have held to their faith unseduced by the prize that the world holds on high;
Who have dared for a high cause to suffer, resist, fight—if need be to die.'
Speak, history! Who are life's victors? Unroll thy annals and say—
Are they those whom the world called the victors? who won the success of the day?
The martyrs, or Nero? The Spartans who fell at Thermopylae's tryst,
Or the Persians and Xerxes? His judges or Socrates? Pilate or Christ?

—W. W. Story.

IS IT not possible for mothers to so train their boys and girls that they will never be accessory to crimes like the following? We believe it is. But certainly it will never be done so long as the little ones see the plumage of these little warblers worn as ornaments by us. Think of it mothers! Can we afford by our example to teach our loved ones such lessons of cruelty?—ED.

THE STORY OF A CRIME.

Here, related in the hard, unsympathetic language of commerce, is the tragic story of a crime against Nature and the Commonwealth:—

"MILFORD, DEL., March 7.—Contracts were closed here today for the bodies of eight thousand birds to be killed for New York milliners at from ten to fifty cents apiece. The contracts call for meadow larks, bluebirds, redwing blackbirds, crow blackbirds, English sparrows and baby owls."

This recital means that a cruel robbery is about to be committed in Delaware—a robbery which is made doubly wicked by the fact that it is perfectly legal. The bird-life of that State is to be sacrificed to the whims of fashion. The farmers are to be deprived of eight thousand of their most efficient crop-protectors and the landscape despoiled of a charm which nothing can replace. The birds called for by this contract are nearly all of insect destroying species. They exercise a function in the economy of Nature which is almost indispensable to successful agriculture, and aside from their practical value, they constitute a part of the common property of the people which no person has the right to destroy for selfish purposes. The lark that feeds in Farmer Brown's meadow and nests in Farmer Smith's grove belongs alike to Brown and Smith, but in no greater degree than to the veriest tramp who walks the public highway. The owl that roosts in Grey's forest and fattens on the mice in Johnson's grainfields is the property of the community. So are all the birds of the air. They belong to the people, and whosoever destroys them commits a crime against the Commonwealth.

The responsibility for this monstrous destruction of bird-life is easy to place. The birds would not be killed unless they could be sold.—Our Dumb Animals.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

A. A. Fausett writes: "My wife is afflicted with nervous spells at times; she requests the Prayer Union and the Saints to pray for her, that if it pleases God he will heal her."

Sister Lydia Oglevie of Kansas, desires the prayers and faith of the Prayer Union that if it is the Lord's will she may be healed of kidney disease, and be blessed with the Holy Spirit.

"WE need never fear to undertake any work to which God calls us. He never sends us alone. The Spirit is with us as we walk the way God points out. It will assist us to overcome all obstacles, and give us all needed wisdom and strength."—Cook.

"Of the building of life God is the architect, and man is the contractor. Since God has one plan and man another, is it strange that there are clashings and collisions?"—Beecher.

Children, let us try to realize how much God has done and is doing for us. He has not only created our wonderful bodies and minds, preserved and provided for us, and given us home and loved ones, but he sent his Son, Jesus, to save us from death, and his Spirit to warn us of enemies, and save us from their power, and to guide us that we may be saved from sin, and all its results, which are harmful.

"Which are the more prosperous among the boys and girls of your acquaintance—those who love and frequent God's house, or those who attend neither church nor Sunday school? If you will observe closely, you will find that those who prosper in their studies, who win the esteem of their teachers and love of acquaintances, and have the most true enjoyment in life, generally are of that class who love God's house, and the services held there."

"Let us never forget that the church building has been dedicated to God. Let us do what we can to keep it in good repair, and free from dirt and disorder. When within its walls let us be quiet, reverent, and attentive, realizing that we are in the presence of our loving heavenly Father."

We should go to the church to be with God and rejoice in his presence, not to admire or criticise the preacher, or the superintendent, or the teacher, or even the singers, neither to notice what kind of clothing the people or children have on and comment upon it.

DIFFICULTIES attending Sunday school work:—

The work is voluntary and unpaid.

Little time is devoted to Sunday school work.

Untrained and incompetent teachers.

Irregular attendance.

The study of God's word not relished.

Not sufficient authority in the school.

Proper educational methods generally ignored.

Not sufficient encouragement given it by the adult church members.

Work is not properly systematized.

Competition with a great pressure of outside work.—Selected.

Read before Sunday school convention, at Provo, Utah.

"HOW TO CREATE AN INTEREST IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL."

To create an interest is to awaken a concern, or excite emotion, in those attending in and for the Sunday school. To do this, officers and teachers must be interested and have a love for the work in which they are engaged; and as preparation comes before success, they should prepare themselves for the responsibilities intrusted to them. This done, they should begin at the homes. Persuade the parents not only to send their children to Sunday school but come themselves.

If possible have a committee appointed to prepare the church or school room before the hour of commencing, thus making it bright and healthful by allowing sufficient light and ventilation, and attractive by using a little tact in tasteful decorations.

All officers and teachers should arrive early, not only to set an example to the pupils in regard to punctuality, but to greet each with a handshake, a kind good morning, or smile. These cost nothing, and help greatly in removing that unwelcome, icy wave that is bound to creep in where a crevice can be found.

In remembering the members of your own school, do not be unmindful of strangers and visitors, but make them feel welcome, that they may have a desire to come again. Let the opening exercises be spirited and not dull or lifeless.

A variety of methods should be employed by teachers in presenting the lesson to the class, so that the most important points may be brought out and impressed upon the mind of the pupil. Do not think you are talking to a number of cast figures, and follow out a regular routine of questions, but always strive to draw out original ideas. Make comparisons with everyday life. Connect subjects of lessons, and with cards, maps, charts, and blackboard diagrams, you cannot fail to create an interest.

The review should be plain, simple, and right to the point, so that the attention of the little folks as well as that of the older ones can be gained, thus avoiding restlessness and confusion.

Should the interest taken in this work be allowed to die out at the close of each Sunday session? I think not. Give everyone something to think of during the week. Secure assistance of parents by getting them to aid their children in studying and preparing their Sunday school lesson at home, so that when they go into the class the subject will not seem foreign to them.

Officers and teachers should endeavor to visit members of their school as often as possible, never forgetting the absent ones who are compelled to remain at home through illness or any other cause, making them feel that their places in the school cannot be filled by others. By doing this you will have no stray sheep in your flock.

There are many of us striving and laboring under very trying circumstances; and as difficulties and discouragements are sure to arise, do not give up and say, "There is no use trying," but go forth with a more resolute determination to make a success of the work you undertake.

If your school does not number in hundreds, and your schoolroom is not equipped with every modern convenience, do not think for one minute there cannot be an interest created there.

Open the door, not only of your church or schoolroom, but of your heart, and let a little heavenly sunshine in, and almost immediately you will feel the difference in the atmosphere. Adapt yourselves to the conditions under which you are placed, and make the best of them; always remembering that God will reward every effort for good.

Above all things, be prayerful. Prayer will always help us to overcome difficulties and surmount any or all obstacles that may block our path or impede our progress.

May the interest never be allowed to die out. As we take up our duties in the future, let us keep in mind, and try to profit by, Paul's teachings when he said: "Give diligence to present thyself, approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

NOTICE HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The Board of Publication consists of the following persons: E. L. Kelley, President; John Smith, Treasurer and Business Manager; J. A. Gunsolley, Secretary; Fred B. Blair, and J. W. Wight. The first two named are the Executive Committee.

We hereby call upon all who are indebted to the Publishing House to make settlement as early as possible, and thus lend their financial support to this important branch of church work. The price of the Herald will hereafter be $1.50 per year to all persons, and all subscribers who are in arrears for six months will be dropped from the list unless arrangements are made with the Publishing House for payment. All Herald subscribers who are now in debt will be permitted to settle upon the basis of $1.50 per year, providing such settlements are made within six months from this date.

Book agents are requested, if possible, to make returns to this Publishing House the first of each month, and to cease retaining commissions on sales when they order books, so long as they are in debt. Commissions when due will be allowed when settlements are made. "Pay what thou owest," is a part of the divine plan; and "Owe no man anything but love," should be observed by all Saints. Prompt payments insure confidence in business as well as religion, and confidence is essential to success.

A new catalogue of books will be issued as soon as possible.

Remittances should be made by post office and express orders, bank drafts on Chicago, or registered letters.

Send all business letters and make all money payable to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Personal matters mark John Smith. Write your orders plain, pointed, and legible, describing just what you want, with name and price as advertised, so that mistakes may be avoided.

Volume 3 of Church History is now in preparation and we will fill orders as soon as ready.

In view of the great increase of the free list the Board has found it necessary to say that after June 1, 1900, the Autumn Leaves will not be sent free to the missionaries' families; but the Saints' Herald will be furnished as heretofore.

Bills to May 1 are being sent to all debtors, and we kindly ask you to help us. If there are mistakes we will gladly correct them on evidence. JOHN SMITH, Manager.

WANTED.

To borrow money for the Herald Publishing House, in sums from one hundred dollars and upwards, for which we will give ample security, and pay interest.

FOR SALE.

By the Herald Publishing House, one large cottage, with nearly two acres of land, and barn, fruit trees, and fine lawn, bounded by four streets, and near the Herald Office. Cash, or part payment. For particulars inquire of John Smith, Treasurer, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

ONE THOUSAND FOR GRACELAND COLLEGE.

Are you one of this number? And if not, why not?

The proposition that one thousand subscriptions at $25 each be obtained at once, so as to clear the college of all indebtedness and place it where it can run without this great disadvantage is now before us. No part of this subscription is to be paid unless the entire number is obtained.

There are now extant in the hands of elders, agents, and Saints, two hundred and sixteen subscription lists. We have two hundred more lists on hand and would be glad to supply any good brother, sister, or friend in any part of the world who would like to make the effort to help the college work. In this way they will also help the church work, and help to aid young men and young women for years to come in gaining proper information and training for the practical duties of life. There is no more worthy object to work for, and none where our work will have a more lasting effect than in this beneficent line. If you only have time to send in your own name, place it on a postal card and send it to the undersigned at his address, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Remember, we have but about sixty days now to finish the lists, the expectation from the time of last General Conference being that the lists could be completed within ninety days. Full list of names, together with subscriptions, will be published through the Herald and Ensign as soon as the work is completed.

The attention of all Saints and friends of education and the truth is especially called to this proposition, and now.

Very truly and respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

WESTERN MAINE DISTRICT.

The Saints of the Western Maine district of the Reorganized Church will please take notice that owing to the change of the mission of Elder T. C. Kelley from the Eastern to the Southeastern mission he has resigned the position of Bishop's Agent for the Western district of Maine, and Bro. S. G. Cunningham of West Surry, Maine, has been duly appointed agent in his stead. We bespeak for Bro. Cunningham the confidence, aid, and coöperation of the Saints in Western Maine district. Let each and all put forth a helping hand, and thus give encouragement to the new agent and materially aid in the work of the Master.

For the faithful and timely labor of Bro. T. C. Kelley as agent the past two years, in connection with his duties as an active missionary, the Bishopric extend to him special thanks; and we trust that the Lord will bless the new agent and all the Saints in their efforts to aid the gospel work.

In behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.
LAMONI, Iowa, May 26, 1900.

SOUTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT.

To the Saints and Friends, Southern Indiana:—This will give notice of the resignation of Bro. W. C. Marshall, Bishop's agent for the Southern Indiana district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the appointment of Bro. David Hurbaugh, of Byrneville, Indiana, as agent.

Bro. Marshall resigns the agency so that he can give more time to travel outside of the branches in his field of labor, and heartily with other of the ministry of the district indorses Bro. Hurbaugh for agent. We take pleasure in making the appointment at the instance of the brethren, and trust the Saints will find in Bro. David Hurbaugh an active and energetic worker in his office. We also trust that no one will be found to criticise adversely the agent for teaching and preaching the law as required in the discharge of the duties of his office. Only make such criticism if he does not.

We especially thank Bro. Marshall for his faithful work while agent, and trust the Lord may bless him with all Saints in the discharge of his great obligations as a missionary for the Master.

In behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY,
Presiding Bishop.
LAMONI, Iowa, May 26, 1900.

PASTORAL.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Above Mission, Greeting:—Having been appointed in charge of this mission for another year, I address you with pleasure. When I think of the years of association we have had together, years fraught with toil and sacrifice, sunshine and gloom, suspense and tranquility, my soul doth bless the Lord that I am permitted to return to you.

Never in all the past were prospects so bright for the advancement of our work in this Dominion as now, and I trust that we all will feel that we are called of God to perform our part promptly and well.

During part of the past year we were successful in obtaining the labor of four extra missionaries. By pressing the requirements of this large mission upon the general church authorities, we have secured the permanent appointment of those four and two others. Those six new General Conference appointees are all good men, and while we are all doubtless glad to know that we have six new missionaries, I trust we will all remember our duty to them and their families, now lonely at home, and give tangible evidence of our love for God—the work, the missionary, and the lonely ones at home, by paying our tithing, and by a life of prayer and good works, so that in all parts of this large mission the cause of Zion may advance.

To the Saints in British Columbia I would say, we deem it wise to request Elder Daniel MacGregor to remain in charge of the work in British Columbia. Report your needs to him, and he will report to me. D. V., I fully expect to visit you in October.

Let the Saints in Manitoba be patient; your several petitions have been heard, and after June conference we hope to arrange to send an elder to labor there if finances permit. Will Manitoba Saints send me their addresses?

That the many parts of this Dominion which have not heard the beautiful gospel may soon hear and obey is to be desired. I trust the local staff in each branch will live in harmony with the law, so that wisdom, love, diligence, and tranquility will reign in your respective branches. Should this blessed condition obtain, it will unshackle the hands of the missionary force, so they can give much more of their time to new and untried fields.

As I have requested all the missionaries to meet me at the St. Thomas conference, June 16, 17, I will not at this time make any appointments. Let them remain in present field till time for conference, when they will receive further instructions as to future labor.

Will each missionary observe this law fully this year? You are requested to report to me on the first days of July, October, January, and March, giving all the items of labor performed. 1. Services attended. 2. Times preached. 3. Times assisted. 4. Other services held. 5. Baptisms. 6. Confirmations. 7. Assisted in confirming. 8. Total ordinations, and to what office. 9. Organizations effected. 10. Marriages. 11. Children blessed. 12. Administrations to sick. 13. New openings. Before entering into debate, please confer with me.

I have heard expressions and read statements in the Herald that have caused many to think that our late General Conference had much to discourage and weaken in it. Permit me to say I attended every business meeting of the conference and of the apostolic quorums, and as many prayer, preaching, and Sunday school meetings as my official duties would permit me to attend. In the fear of the Master I say, Never in all the past conferences have I seen so much to encourage, build up and strengthen, as I saw, felt, and realized in the conference just closed. It is true evil was condemned, firmer and more improved business methods were suggested; strong, good, honest men gave expression to views regarding methods which they thought might be adopted for the triumphant, rapid march of Zion's cause. These methods were not matured, and the wisdom of adopting them was honestly questioned by some; while others, "true as steel," thought those methods were the one thing needful. This evinced a splendid evidence of moral worth, independence, and individuality, and forever crushed the cruel suspicion "that the church is controlled by a designing few." To me all this is hopeful and encouraging. The Prophet never gave better evidence of being God's appointed leader to the church. The Patriarch never enjoyed more of the Spirit of his high and holy calling. The presiding Bishop in his report to the apostolic quorum said, in substance, as follows: The financial arm of the church was never so strong as at present; you may without fear send to the mission field every man whom you know God has called to the work. As a result we have from this late conference sent out the largest missionary force ever appointed by the Reorganization.

God favored his church in that at this conference there were more High Priests, Seventies, and Bishops ordained than in any previous conference of the Reorganization. Surely the white rose of hope never blossomed, bloomed, nor freighted the air with sweeter aroma of success than now.

May our Father's sweet peace be on Zion's children, now and ever, is my prayer.

Your colaborer,

R. C. EVANS.

LONDON, Ontario, May 21.

To the Saints of Colorado, Eastern Wyoming, and New Mexico, Greeting:—By the concurrent action of Bro. Joseph Luff and the President of the church, I have been given the active oversight of the field comprised in the above named territory. Brethren C. R. Duncan, M. R. Scott, Jr., J. Frank Curtis, and A. B. Hanson will be my assistants in the missionary force. I also hope for and expect much valuable assistance from the local priesthood in the different localities where they reside. Move out brethren and occupy, and the Lord will bless your work if it is done in the spirit of love and humility. Let us make this year a more active one than any heretofore in our lives. Do not bury your talents by allowing the things of this world to absorb all of your attention. You will suffer loss if you do. You have said many times, no doubt, that you loved this work and desired to see it progress. Is your desire to see it progress sufficiently strong to move you to activity? I believe the Lord wants men who can be depended on, and who mean what they say. I will be pleased to hear from the local ministry from time to time as to what they are doing. I want to keep in close touch with all of the brethren appointed to this field of labor, so we may counsel together and try to arrange plans so as to labor to the best advantage possible. I will be grateful for suggestions at any time and trust we may labor together harmoniously and peacefully, helping each other all we can.

Bro. C. R. Duncan and J. F. Curtis will have charge of the gospel tent work, assisted a part of the time by Bro. A. B. Hanson and others, as we may be able to arrange.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., will look after the work in Western Colorado and New Mexico.

Eastern Wyoming will receive attention from me a little later. I would like to correspond with the Saints scattered throughout the mission to ascertain the prospect for openings in different places.

Dear brethren and sisters, we need your hearty coöperation. Sustain us by your confidence, your faith, and your prayers, and I believe a good work will be done in the Colorado mission this year. Let us not waste our time lamenting over the mistakes of the past, but try to profit by the experiences through which we have passed, and try to make fewer mistakes in the future. Avoid evil speaking and unkind words about one another. We need more love and charity—a better exemplification of the divine command to love one another. Backbitings, bickerings, etc., are of the Devil, and when we engage in them we are lending our influence and encouragement to strengthen the enemy. Whatever may be our influence in the world, let us see that it leads away from all that is sinful and impure toward that which is pure and holy.

I hope the success of the work in the Colorado mission will be a matter of personal interest to each Saint residing here, and each one will feel the burden resting upon his own heart. Let each one who may read these lines ask himself the question, "What am I doing to advance the work of God, and what can I do?

This is a day of sacrifice. What sacrifice are you making? I would not contend that our ministry should sacrifice less, but I do believe many of the Saints could sacrifice more and then the burden would be more equally borne.

There will be the families of three missionaries to receive their allowance from the tithes and offerings of this mission. I hope the Bishop's agent may not be embarrassed for lack of means, but that you will come nobly to his assistance. We hope to see many new names on the bishop's agent's book this year. Make an inventory of your goods and see if there is anything which you have not tithed. Send your tithes and offerings to the agent, Bro. Charles E. Everett, No. 2925 West Sixteenth Avenue, Denver, Colorado, and have your name written in his book and receive a receipt in his excellent chirography.

We hope Bro. Luff may find it possible to be with us a little later to counsel and direct. Till then the brethren of the missionary force will please report to me quarterly, so I may be able to report properly to him.

I would suggest and appoint the first Sunday of June, being the third day, as one to be set apart for fasting and prayer by the Saints of this mission, for the success of the work here, and that wisdom and power may be given to his servants.

Your field officer is young, and I earnestly request the prayers of the Saints for wisdom to direct the work and physical strength to endure. Trusting we may by wise and upright conduct merit the esteem and confidence of the Saints among whom we may be called to labor, and above all that we may live so as to be worthy of the blessing and favor of our heavenly Father,

I am your brother and coworker,

JOHN B. ROUSH.

WRAY, Yuma County, Colorado.

To the Saints in Southwestern Mission, Greeting:—Having been appointed by the last General Conference in charge of this field, I have appointed my assistants as follows: Texas will be in charge of Bro. T. J. Sheppard of Oklaunion, Texas. Oklahoma and Indian Territory will be in charge of Bro. Hubert Case of Moorhead, Iowa. Those missionaries appointed to labor in Arkansas and Western Louisiana will report to me for the present, or until further arrangements can be made. All reports are due July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1, and should contain all the items named in adopted blanks for ministerial reports by conference. Do not forget to make full reports of all debates and items of interest that should become matters of historical record so that I can make a historical summary for Historian. I advise that no debate be entered into or any other measure taken that will materially affect the work without due deliberation and consultation with the missionary in charge. Let no jealousies arise among the missionary force. Let every man consider that his brother is equally interested in and anxious for the work to prosper as himself, and while we may not all see "eye to eye" as yet, let us remember the advise and counsel given by the Lord in 1894, Doctrine and Covenants 122:16: "And now I say unto you mine elders, apostles and high priests of my church, Continue ye in the ministry unto which you have been called; and if ye cannot fully agree on all points of the law, be patient and be not contentious; so far as you can agree work together without heat, confusion, or malice. Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege and shall be blessed of me." And in section 4:1, 2 we read: "And faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence;" and in section 11: 4 the Lord says, "Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care." These admonitions we cannot well disregard. I would like to hear personally from the different parts of the mission as to its needs for labor and so forth, so that I can intelligently advise my different assistants in their work. It will be impossible for me to visit all parts of the field during the year, but shall do the best I can. My home address will be 1321 Ridenbaugh Street, St. Joseph, Missouri, and my mission address 1317 Fifth Avenue, Fort Worth, Texas. God expects diligence from all, and we cannot afford to be otherwise than faithful to our trust. I have letter of appointment for Bro. C. F. Bekham appointed to labor in Southeast Texas. Will he kindly furnish me with his address, so I can forward it to him. With prayers that the year may be full of good to the Master's cause, I am,

Yours in bonds,
HYRUM O. SMITH.

COLORADO, EASTERN WYOMING, AND NEW MEXICO MISSION.

It being improbable that I shall be able to enter the above-named field for some time, I have, with the concurrence of the President of the church, appointed Elder J. B. Roush to take the active oversight thereof. All laborers who have been assigned to that field will please report to Bro. Roush, whose address is Wray, Colorado, and move as he may appoint.

Bro. Roush may publish a general announcement for the benefit of the field and workers, and I will refrain from further counsel at present, other than to exhort all to diligence, patience, and humility, and to coöperate together for the general good. May the good Master crown the year with abundant good. In bonds,

JOSEPH LUFF.

This is to say that Elder R. May is this day appointed minister in charge of the missionary work in the Independence, Missouri, district. The missionaries of the district will make their reports to him on the first day of July, October, and March.

I. N. WHITE,
Minister in general charge.

INDEPENDENCE, May 21.

To Coworkers in Nebraska, South and North Dakota, Greeting:—In view of the great importance attached to General Conference the necessity for a practical observance of its legislative acts ought to be apparent. You will therefore bear in mind that individual reports will be the order for 1901, so keep a sharp lookout for the brand new blank forms. Just what this new bit of legislation may be attributable to I hardly know, unless some lover of system felt a kind of disgust in view of the nonuniformity of reporting at the last conference, which was so visible; though the stalwart advocates of annual conferences had a space of two years to learn the printed order of reporting, the conference of '98 having ruled thereon, page 104, conference minutes for 1898.

I offer these suggestions to help you to practically demonstrate your loyalty to, in recognition of conference acts, and suggest that you don't overlook reporting to the submissionary in charge, July, October, January, and March, and where there is no submissionary, report direct to me, James Caffall, 308 Oak Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa. And we do well always to remember; that punctuality and due diligence in small matters will prove a means of preparation for graver matters. We can only evince our love for that which will elevate and dignify in the sight of God and truth-loving men and women by a practical observance of conditions and injunctions God's word imposes, we thus teach. Shall we practice less than we essay to impose on others? If so, how will our righteousness be in excess of that of the Pharisees? Surely we cannot think Christ's teachings at fault on this point (Matt. 5: 20). Moreover, as ministers for Christ, we can hardly expect success unless living in the confidence and affections of those among whom we labor; and nothing short of a practical observance of that we present to them as righteousness will secure this.

To seek occasion to find fault, condemn, make one an offender for a word or act, would most effectively evince ignorance or revenge. Hence, putting forth strenuous efforts to avoid such debasing practices were but a reasonable service. And yet we cannot close our eyes to the blighting effects of a universal apostasy, nor can or ought we to forget that the proficiency often evinced in evading the truth and substituting some cunning policy in lieu thereof is among the fruits or distressing effects of the apostasy, so find ourselves prepared to distinguish between the effects of this apostasy and a love for that which is lovely, virtuous, and honest. Nor could it prove injurious to any in the remembrance of the fact that "a man may with equal skill pretend to be what he was not, and not be what he really was." "Then without injury to any, we might think such an one might be deeply versed in hypocrisy." And so watch and strive and see that we ourselves never get inveigled in such meshes.

Then we ought to remember that in speaking in our own praise we add nothing to our reputation that it were unfortunate to do wrong; but if becoming so unfortunate, it were better, far better to confess, with a determination to forsake it, though humiliating it be, than with a persistency essaying to make a wrong appear right, etc.; whether I survive or perish, I am glad to know that religion is a personal affair.

Then, too, I believe the success of the whole body is only secured by godly diligence of the several integral parts that no one of the body should stop short of or transcend law-prescribed duty; that to illustrate, the teacher is not transcending duty when moving as directed in Doctrine and Covenants, 17: 11. Nor the elder, as per request, serving as one of a tribunal to try an offender; nor he or she when testifying before that tribunal for or against him or her arraigned before this tribunal, nor the tribunal deciding against or for him or her arraigned in the light of the superabundance of unimpeachable testimony: for so I learn the law of God directs. And if God's law is perfect, its practical observance cannot be construed to mean an error.

There is, I think, a material difference between a wrong committed as a result of impulsiveness and after mature consideration, confessing, and retracting, and a wrong as a result of intention, because of present advantage, which abiding by the right would deny. So I think Christ's revealed method of adjudication is just and right, and this concession involves a necessity of a surrendering of preconceived opinion if I would be consistent.

Don't cherish a desire to make your life, as a missionary, one of pleasure, as that phrase is understood. Should you do this, the way may open for you; if so, and you embrace it, more than likely the conception of the grave responsibility assumed may lessen more rapidly than it would increase by due diligence, perseverance, and patience. For the fact must ever remain unchallenged, that when once starting on a downward grade the momentum increases proportionate to the weight and size of the object starting.

On the admission that knowledge is power, it were much to our advantage to so study and live that we may obtain and retain the requisite knowledge, and being thus powerful, we may act intelligently. But we should not be ignorant of the possibility of the exhibition of a zeal not according to knowledge.

The ostensible purpose in sending General Conference appointees into the Lord's great harvest field is that the gospel may be carried into new localities. And I incline to the opinion that forty sermons preached at several points within such a radius as to make it practicable to visit each point once a week would prove more effective than forty consecutive sermons in one place. Under the former method time is given to the hearer to study and digest one sermon before hearing another; under the latter, some might think they were being surfeited, and get discouraged. I do not claim the former method is always practicable, but think it should be sought for. Christ taught thus, If they will not receive you in one city go to another. The thought here expressed is, that the missionary should exercise discretion, that by properly applying himself (not else) he may know the needs of his field, and how and when to apply labor, better than those afar off. I reach this conclusion on the hypothesis that every integral part of the body is as a result of due diligence, powerful in his own sphere, according to the gifts and calling of God unto him. Were it otherwise, the fact of God having set every member in the body as it has pleased him, as a preventive to schism in the body, would have but little, if any significance. But it is possible for poor, vascillating, scheming man to presume more and accept less than God's given law guarantees; hence the prohibition to detract from or add to God's revealments. Are we growing?

It is more than likely in your diligence to extend the gospel unanticipated, trying exigencies may confront you, testing your integrity, patience, etc. The only way in such an event is to remain steadfast, evincing a determination in God's strength to abide, with faith in God that will lead to a decision to trust him for the result.

In view of man's will power, and the right to exercise the same, man is largely if not altogether what he desires to be; hence we may, though failing to sit in judgment on his motives which we never ought to do, decide as to his loyalty or disloyalty, obedience or disobedience if coming within our province, so to decide according to his deeds.

The building of a character for ourselves, compatible with the Spirit and genius of the gospel we preach is most essential.

And should we find ourselves assailed, if knowing we are free of that charged against us, we can afford to wait a favorable opportunity for redress. Let us not so far allow ourselves to so transcend godly dignity as to complain in public or private. So as it were present ourselves as a martyr to illicit sympathy, or by making indirect accusations, for that were contemptible, for we ought not to lose sight of the fact that the charging some one of wrong doing presupposes ability to prove the wrong by the law-required amount of evidence, and if failing we would in that case be liable to be dealt with for scandal. For we ought to have learned long ere this that all are innocent until proven guilty, which proof is to be obtained by a legitimate process. Some one or ones has been arraigned for being jealous and envious at the late conference. Wonder who he or they were?

The innocent can better afford to wait the development of events, making a seeking of redress possible, than violate the law, in evincing undue haste in seeking redress. For one wrong is never adjusted by resorting to another wrong. Should it be legitimate to at times assist in branches, let such labor be done in harmony with local authority. And when becoming the recipient of the hospitality from Saints or friends, let gospel modesty govern, while being the recipients of such hospitality. If advice is sought, or questions propounded, be ready with becoming deference. Let the gospel be your theme, for that is what all need. JAMES CAFFALL.

COMMITTEE ON HISTORIES AND ENCYCLOPEDIAS.

The above committee met at the Historian's Office, April 23, 1900, and formed a permanent organization by appointing Heman C. Smith chairman, and Frederick Madison Smith secretary.

We are trying to systematize our work, and will make an effort to correct existing misrepresentations in histories and encyclopedias as soon as possible, and will use every effort in our power to prevent the occurrence of future errors. However, we will need the active coöperation of all who are interested in this work, and hence we earnestly solicit the aid of Saints and friends.

We shall be glad to have information of any works mentioning the latter-day work, issued or prospective, especially the latter; and where practicable send us copies of books. Any information addressed to any one of the committee will receive prompt attention. Copies of books should be sent to the secretary.

BORN.

SHERMAN.—Myrtle Avesta was born February 20, 1900, to Bro. Clare A. and Sr. Mabel C. Sherman. This precious firstfruit was blessed where it was born, Chicago, Illinois, May 6, in the arms of Elders J. M. Terry and P. Pement. In the meeting and blessing there was much of the Spirit.

HOOPER.—At Keb, Iowa, November 7, 1899, to Bro. John M. and Sr. Sarah Hooper, a son, named Joseph Smith. Blessed January, 1900 (no date), at Cleveland, Iowa, by Elder E. B. Morgan.

HOWELLS.—At Ottumwa, Iowa, June 2, 1894, to Mr. Thomas D. and Mrs. Annie Howells, a son, named Earl C. D.; also on September 30, 1896, a son, named Orville J. Blessed at Cleveland, Iowa, May 13, 1900, by Elders E. B. Morgan and W. E. Williams.

DIED.

OGARD.—Born April 11, 1900, to Bro. James and Sr. Mary Ogard, of Fremont, Nebraska, a daughter. Blessed April 26, by Elder E. H. Boulson, and named Ruth Frances. Died the same day, after an illness of five days. Funeral sermon at the house by Elder E. H. Boulson.

PHELPS.—Sr. Anna, wife of Elder Levi Phelps, was born February 18, 1850, in the town of Aron, Middlesex, Ontario; died March 17, 1900. Sr. Phelps has ever remained firm in the faith, and died in hope of the "better resurrection." She was ailing for several weeks, yet not real sick at any particular time until a few minutes before she died. She leaves a husband and seven children to mourn. "Blessed are the dead who die in Christ."

MOLYNEAUX.—Sr. Sarah Molyneaux was born November 5, 1824, at Stockport, England; died May 12, 1900, at St. Louis, Missouri. Early in the 'forties she united with the church in her native land, and later, the descriptive powers of the elders concerning the beauties of Zion induced her to come to America. In crossing the plains she shared the same sad and unfortunate fate as did many other honest hearted souls. Her disappointing experience with error, did not however, steel her heart against truth and the Spirit of God, hence she united with the Reorganized Church at St. Louis, Missouri, May 23, 1864. For about thirty-six years she served faithfully under this banner, and even now her ever pleasant features will be missed in the congregation of the Saints. Perhaps some of her English friends will remember her as Sr. Bradshaw. Services conducted by J. C. Hitchcock.

WOODWARD.—Josephene N. Woodward, born April 2, 1844, at Stafford, Connecticut; died May 21, 1900, at St. Louis, Missouri. She united with the church in Providence, R. I., and will be remembered by the Providence Saints by the name of "Pond," her maiden name. During the past twelve or fourteen years she has been a sufferer from paralysis, and has been unable to attend church services. Having received convincing evidence of the divinity of our work she remained a believer until the end. Funeral services conducted by J. C. Hitchcock.

BIRCH.—Bro. Adelbert Birch was born at Wastanaw, Michigan, May 6, 1847; died February 14, 1900 in West Berkeley, California; was baptized September 9, 1895.

HART.—Sr. Lucina, wife of Bro. William H. Hart, died at her home in Sandwich, Illinois, May 14, 1900, aged 83 years and 10 days. Sr. Hart was baptized October 4, 1840, in Oneida County, New York. Funeral sermon was preached by Elder E. M. Wildermuth.

WARREN.—At Lynn, Massachusetts, May 10, 1900, Laura J. Warren, after many years of painful and weary sickness. Sister Laura was baptized September 22, 1895, and from the day of her adoption into the family of God she has manifested a Christlike spirit of patience and heroic resignation that was stimulated by the testimony of Jesus so strong with her unto the end of her stay here. She leaves husband and six children; three are with Brother Charles in the church, and if a mother's prayers prevail the rest should obey. Funeral at Memorial chapel, Lynn, where many friends and Saints paid their last tribute of love and respect to the departed. Services by Elder R. Bullard. One more for the first resurrection to greet our Lord when he appears.

HOLLINGSWORTH.— Near Ellston, Iowa, May 20, 1900, Mr. Guy Hollingsworth, aged about 25 years. Not a member of the church, but the family are friendly to our cause. Funeral sermon by Elder R. M. Elvin from 1 Corinthians 15: 22, to a large gathering. An untimely ending to the life of a good young man.

ALLEN.—Luther Allen was born May 17, 1812; died May 18, 1900, at the age of 88 years and 4 days. Father Allen lived a consistent life, loved and respected by all. He faithfully filled the office of priest of the Eldorado Springs branch while strength of body permitted, and until recently was always seen at the services at the church; his presence will be greatly missed. He had two of his daughters with him when he died. He calmly fell asleep in full assurance of a glorious resurrection. Services at Coal Hill chapel, conducted by Elder A. Lloyd. Peacefully shall he rest until the trump of the resurrection shall awaken his slumbers.

CHARLES. — Joseph Charles was born January 27, 1856, at Dudley, England; baptized May 4, 1875, at Kewanee, Illinois; died very suddenly May 12, 1900, at Tiskilwa, Illinois, while working in the mines. He was buried at Tiskilwa, and afterward taken up by the Federation of Labor and buried at Kewanee. Two daughters and one son mourn his loss. Memorial sermon at the Saints' church, Kewanee, Sunday, May 27, 1900, by Elder William Willitts, attended by the Federation of Labor.

PARK.—Sr. Priscilla, wife of William A. Park, died at her home near Delta, Colorado, May 11, 1900. Deceased was born in England, January 19, 1843; united with Newport branch, California, March 27, 1876. After coming to Colorado she, with other members of her family, united with the Fairview branch, Olathe, Colorado (formerly Brown), upon its organization, having invited Elder James Kemp to visit her part of the State the result being the above-named organization. She leaves a husband and ten children, with many friends, to mourn their loss. Funeral services conducted by Elder M. L. Schmid.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

CHRIST'S LETTERS TO AGRIPPA.

London, May 3.—Prof. George R. M. Murray, keeper of the department of botany in the British museum, when questioned by the correspondent of the Associated Press today regarding the reported rediscovery, after being lost for more than 900 years, of letters claimed to have passed between Christ and King Agrippa and to have been carved in stone over the gateway of the palace of the kings of Ephesus, says:—

"There is no doubt that the inscription found at Ephesus is a genuine production of the fifth century. Beyond that nothing definite can be said except that it is in the nature of Syrian writings of the second century discovered a few years ago relating to alleged writings between Christ and Agrippa. The discovery of the stone inscription at Ephesus was made by Prof. Heberdey, who had charge of excavations there on behalf of the Austrian government. He published the results of his work some time ago in Vienna.

"The fact that these alleged letters between Christ and Agrippa were used as a charm by Christians in the fifth century on their linens is established; but this would not prove that such correspondence occurred. Certain Syrian documents, dated in the year 200, A. D., and giving almost the same letters, have long been suspected of being literary forgeries. The discovery of the stone tends to relieve this suspicion and makes it tolerably certain that as early as the second century news of Christ's miracles had spread to heathen countries, and that the early Christians believed that Agrippa asked Christ to come to heal him, and that Christ replied.

"The alleged answer is almost a paraphrase of much that is found in the New Testament. Whether it was actually sent, or was the result of a continuing tradition, transferred from papyrus to stone, is a question opening too wide a field for mere achæologists. Many points in Prof. Heberdey's discovery, however, are most important."

A MORMON TREK.

Much of the picturesque in American history is furnished by Mormonism. The women were compelled to admit that even Roberts was interesting. Although many may doubt the reasonableness of a present undertaking of Utah Mormons, all agree that it shows unique faith. Three teachers and twenty students of the Brigham Young academy of Provo, Utah, have started out on an expedition to Mexico, Central America, and South America, in search of traces of the Nephites, a people who, according to the Book of Mormon, came from Jerusalem to America about 600 B. C. That twentieth century scholars should start out in serious search of a problematical people who may have lived in this country 2,000 years ago, seems almost incredible, but of all queer things in this world, people are the queerest, and of all queer people, the Mormons are entitled to the superlative. These students announce that they will devote their search mainly to the southern part of Ecuador, through which flows the river Marona, an affluent of the Amazon. They attach importance to the name of this river, as it was the angel "Moroni" who made the revelations to Joseph Smith. They will follow as nearly as possible the supposed path of the Nephites, and hunt for the ruins of the Nephite capital, Zarahemla.

The first Book of Mormon, it is known, professes to be the work of Nephi, a Jew, the son of Lehi, who dwelt at Jerusalem in the days of King Zedekiah, about 600 B. C. In obedience to the command of the Lord, who appeared to him in a dream, Lehi went into the wilderness of Arabia and dwelt there many years with his family. At length he received a further divine command to set out in search of a promised land. After traveling "nearly eastward" for eight years, "through a wilderness," Lehi and his family reached the ocean. Here they built a ship, and, guided by a compass, sailed to America. The Book of Mormon gives no information as to the part of the continent on which they landed, but later Mormon interpretations or revelations have declared it to be Chili. In America, we are told, Lehi and his family found "beasts in the forest of every kind, both the cow and the ox, and the ass, and the horse, and the goat." Soon after their arrival in America, Lehi died, and dissensions arose between Nephi and his brothers. We are told that those who rebelled against Nephi, "whom the Lord had appointed to be their ruler," were cursed by the Lord, and they and all their posterity were condemned to have dark skins and to "become an idle people, full of mischief and subtlety, which did seek in the wilderness for beasts of prey." This is the Mormon theory of the origin of the Indians, who are consequently believed by the Mormons to be of Jewish race. Nephi died about fifty years after his arrival in America, and his people continued to be called Nephites, and to be governed by kings bearing the name of Nephi for many generations.

Records are supposed to have been kept on golden plates of the history of the Nephites, and of their wars with the Lamanites, or red men. The Mormon students also hope to find records of the revolutions in the land of Zarahemla, which was near the isthmus of Darien, "where was an exceeding great city." Three days after the earthquake had announced the crucifixion of Christ at Jerusalem, the Lord himself descended out of heaven into the chief city of the Nephites, and remained there forty days instructing them in Christianity and instituting Christian churches. Wars continued to rage, however, between the Nephites and the heathen red men, with great destruction of the Nephites and their populous cities. In the year 134 the Christians made their final stand on the hill of Cumorah, in western New York, where in a great battle 230,000 of them were slain. It was Moroni, one of the survivors of this battle, that sealed up the golden plates, upon which the history of the Nephites was written, and hid them in the hill where they were found by Joseph Smith.

JOHN RUSKIN.

Ruskin was a born preacher, with much of the temper of the great Florentine, Savonarola, and with his incapacity for compromise. Of his nineteenth century Oxford education he could not get rid, so he used it to good purpose; but his sympathies were with the past. He was so ready to engraft that past on the present that when, in his later life, he gave himself over to social reform and established his St. George's Guild, it was avowedly modelled on the social condition of Florence in the fourteenth century. He was, as he tells us in "Praeterita," a violent Tory, a staunch believer in kings and in a social hierarchy. What was such a man to do in this century of democracy, of scepticism, of revolt against authority, of contempt for the past? He was pious; and the world had grown irreverent: he was an idealist; and the world, become practical as never before, scoffed at the ideal: he cared nothing for riches; and found the world given over to the worship of money. He despised politics, hated engineering, detested railways and telegraphs, and great cities with their hurry and bustle, loved jealously the quiet solitude of lakes and mountains, and was in most ways at war with the preferences, aims, and pleasures of modern life.

Ruskin was profoundly religious. His natural gift for exhortation announced itself when, as a child, he used to preach over the sofa cushions at his mother's friends. It had been the dear desire of his parents to bring him up for the church; and his father was probably right when he said, with tears in his ambitious eyes, "He would have been a bishop." How successful a bishop he would have made is a question; for a bishop is an administrator, and one who does not thrive in hot water. If eloquent preaching would have made an able bishop Ruskin would have done it; but we can see that his own instinct decided the matter for him better than parental ambition. With a head swarming with ideas and possessed of an eager impulse to exhortation, preach he must. His strong religious instinct was joined to an equally strong instinct for art. He must preach either religion illustrated by art, or art informed by religion; and by a natural gravitation he turned to the latter.—W. P. P. Longfellow in the May Forum.

ORIGIN OF OUR VEGETABLES.

It is difficult to imagine that 300 years ago a boiled potato or a dish of mashed turnips was not to be had in Europe. In those days people lived chiefly on bread and meat and beer, and the bread and meat were, as a rule, of such quality as would cause a riot in the workhouse of today.

Beans they did have—at least, the upper classes had them. Henry VII. was fond of beans, and had a Dutch gardener over, who found English soil would grow broad beans every bit as well as Dutch. They rather sneered at peas in the year 1600. Such as were eaten were imported from Holland. "Fit dainties for ladies; they came so far and cost so dear," says one writer. But mother-country peas were highly cultivated from early times. Last year, in the Isle of Bute, a splendid crop of peas was raised from seed, which was at least 2,000, and probably nearly 3,000, years old. This seed came from an Egyptian tomb. The flower had a beautiful red center, surrounded by white petals, and the peas were well up to the modern market garden standard. Cabbage has always been a pet vegetable of the Dutch. We got it from them in 1510, and in 1900 we still used thousands of pounds of Dutch cabbage seed. And the extraordinary part of it is that cabbage is in reality a native of Great Britain.

All our garden vegetables are merely types improved by long cultivation of wild species. The wild cabbage is common enough in places by the sea, but is of no use for food in its wild state. Indeed, it will take a botanist to tell that it was a cabbage at all. Scotland owes the cabbage to Cromwell's soldiers. The cauliflower is but a cultivated improvement on the cabbage. It was brought to perfection in Cyprus, and was little known until about a century ago. The parsnip is another native of this country. You may find it along almost any hedgerow, but it is small and intensely bitter in its wild state. Parsnip is grown more in Ireland than elsewhere. In Ulster a sort of beer is made from the root.

Celery is a native of Great Britain. It grows luxuriantly in ditches and brooks, but, like the others, wild celery is nasty—even poisonous. We owe the delicious eatable celery to a French prisoner of war, Field Marshal Tallard, whom Marlborough beat at Blenheim in 1704.

If asked what was the most important event in the history of British vegetables, most people would say the bringing over of the potato from its home in America. They would be wrong. The introduction of the turnip—that is, of the Swedish variety—was of much greater value. Until Britain got the field turnip people had to live during the winter chiefly on salted meat. And severe winters were dreaded on account of the terrible mortality among sheep, which were then left out at pasture all through the cold weather. The growing of swedes changed all that by providing cheap and wholesome food for stock when penned up. Turnips, like so many other vegetables, came from Holland about 1690.

By the way, although England generally gets the credit for growing the first European potatoes, it was really Spain which did so. The potato is still found growing wild in a few spots in the high tablelands of Mexico.

Onions and cucumbers are two of the oldest known vegetables. Like peas, the Egyptians grew them at least thirty centuries ago. Indeed, to the onion belongs probably the honor of being the first vegetable primeval man ever made trial of. Onions are not found growing wild anywhere, but a kind of leek is not uncommon in southern Siberia, which is like the Welsh national emblem.——Cincinnati Enquirer.

A very interesting paper on Mohammedan slavery will be found in the May Forum under the title of "Uncle Sam's Legacy of Slaves," by Henry O. Dwight, who is uncommonly well qualified, by residence in Moslem lands, to speak on the subject. The author is very impartial in his handling of the theme, holding up all the good points of the system while condemning it from the moral point of view. He shows how deeply it is rooted in the traditions of the people, and decries any radical methods on the part of the United States authorities to abolish it in the Mohammedan lands recently acquired as a result of the war with Spain. At the same time, however, he recommends a method of gradual abolition.

"The best scholars succeed best in life chiefly, I believe, because they have been most regular and punctual in doing their college work and meeting their college appointments," says Dr. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, in the Saturday Evening Post. "My experience with college students teaches me that they are intellectually much nearer a level than their achievements indicate It is power of will more than power of mind that differentiates them. Must and ought have fifty times more stuff in them than might and could."

To college and business women alike, to all who must be wage-earners, the practical verities appeal. Set a high value on yourself, dear toiler, and live up to your own estimate. Have before you an ideal of true womanhood, and pray daily that you may not fall below it. If the precise work you wish for does not offer itself, take something else, even if you do so only temporarily.—Margaret E. Sangster, in the June Ladies' Home Journal.

PLEA AGAINST DEBATING—BY A UTAH JOURNAL—REVIEWED.

There is a little paper published at St. Johns, Kansas, in the interest of the Southwestern States Mission, of the Church in Utah, called Truth's Reflex. In the issue for April there is an editorial under the heading of "The Bible on Debating.—Contending is of the Devil."

Strangely enough the editor quotes the famous and oft cited statement of Jude: "Ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints."

It appears from the reading of the whole epistle of Jude that the exhortation of the writer to those to whom he addressed himself was to remind them that a class of specious pleaders was seeking to enter in and lead the flock astray, and his idea was that these men should be met by a strong contention for the faith once delivered to the Saints, not that which was yet future, but that which had been already given them.

We quote from the editorial several points of interest:—

> The debating of truth is one of the relics of barbarity which is fast dying away among civilized people. As well might children debate the merits and demerits of their respective parents before public gatherings, as for Christian sects to debate their religious faith: thus holding up to unscrupulous enemies, as a target for the shafts of vicious hate, principles that are as dear to the advocate of them as life itself. Their faith may be false but debating will not make it true: nor will vicious assaults lead them to renounce it. One hour's quiet reasoning, with a calm prayerful spirit will do more to enlighten a man or woman, than months of debate.

There are a number of scripture passages cited in an attempt to prove that the Bible condemns debate. 2 Corinthians 12:20, is cited; but this refers to "debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults" within the church, and cannot have meaning to the interchange of opinions between those of differing beliefs.

2 Timothy 23:—

> But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes.

This is also an exhortation to those within the fold, and can have no reference to the idea of the comparing of views between those holding to differing faiths not of the fold.

1 Corinthians 1:11. The contentions here named were in the church, not out of it.

Philippians 1:15, 16. The force of this citation is broken as an evidence that the Bible condemns debates, by the express statement of Paul, who states in the 18th verse:—

> What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretense, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

The contention here was commended of Paul. Where, then, does the Bible in this citation condemn debate?

The next is from Titus:—

> But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

Romans 2:8:—

> But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath.

This refers to the judgment of God to be passed upon those who are found ultimately unwilling to yield to gospel influences. It cannot justly be construed to apply to the comparison of views and the presentation of facts of history and men's opinions and express teachings, as between opposing faiths.

1 Corinthians 11:16–18. Here again the contentions and divisions referred to were those in the church, which, of course, the apostle reproved. How about his own practice of entering the synagogues and challenging and discussing with the priests?

None of these citations properly prove that debates between rival or opposing sects are not a fair and honorable means of reaching just conclusions.

The debating of truth may not at times be profitable; but how is it with the opposing of error by truth, the overcoming of the wrong by showing the right, and that, too, in public.

The Truth's Reflex cites Paul; we cite the revelation of the Lord; the Master, and not the disciple, in a direct command to the first elders of the church, and to whoever should understand and receive. Which is the better instructor, Paul or Jesus?

> Call upon the inhabitants of the earth, and bear record, and prepare the way for the commandments and revelations which are to come. Now, behold, this is wisdom; whoso readeth let him understand and receive also; for unto him that receiveth it shall be given more abundantly, even power; wherefore, confound your enemies; call upon them to meet you, both in public and private; and inasmuch as ye are faithful, their shame shall be made manifest. Wherefore let them bring forth their strong reasons against the Lord. Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, There is no weapon that is formed against you shall prosper; and if any man shall lift up his voice against you, he shall be confounded in my own due time; wherefore, keep my commandments: they are true and faithful. Even so. Amen.—D. C. 71:2.

This used to be taken as applying to the elders in their mission fields; and they as a rule followed the instruction given, challenging men of other faiths to discussion. Why, then, this change?

Jesus began his disputations with the doctors at about twelve years of age, and continued to meet the teachers and priests up to the time of his death. Paul was not a barbarian, and yet he contended in debate with the teachers in the synagogues concerning Jesus the Christ. Indeed, the gospel won its way in these last days because of the readiness of its ministers to defend their cause in debate.

In the same issue of the Reflex is an article, the fourth one of a series, written by B. H. Allred, Jr., in controversy against the Reorganized Church, in which the positions of that church are misstated, and the harsh epithets of "a fraud and a lie" are used in application to it.

Is this in harmony with the editorial position that "debating" is a "relic" of barbarism?

MORMONS SETTLING IN CANADA.

The annual and periodical wave scare over the increase, growth, and settlement of the Mormons as a people is passing over the press, newspapers and magazines.

Mr. Eugene Wyman, of Caseville, Michigan, sends us a clipping from the Buffalo, Express, for April 17, 1900:

> Quebec, Que., April 6.—Some people in Canada are becoming seriously alarmed at the rapid spread of Mormonism in parts of the Dominion, especially in the northwest. The Mormons themselves assert that within the last year they have brought in more than 2,000 emigrants from Utah alone. If this movement is continued, Canadian public men fear that the Mormons will shortly control large districts of the country. As the bulk of the people in Southern Alberta have come from Utah, and as the Mormons have a thorough organization, it is dawning upon the country that they may become a serious menace to the State, especially as there is a suspicion that polygamy is practiced secretly by them. Some of the elders in Alberta assert that polygamy is one of the chief privileges of the communion, and it is stated that in some cases the privilege has been held out as a bait to attract converts. Consequently the attention of the government of the dominion is being called to these Mormon colonies.

Outside of Alberta and the other northwest provinces of Canada, the Mormons say they have no less than 10,000 members in the Province of Ontario. The Mormon missionaries endeavor to obtain a footing in new centers by keeping the peculiar doctrines of the Mormon Church very much in the background until they gain the confidence of their converts. They use every effort in their power to proselytize. They keep a close watch over their young people, especially those who go away from home. Some of the girls in the northwest go into the towns of Southern Alberta and get employment, but they are not allowed to stay very long. The church sends for them to come home again, lest the influences of Christian teaching should alienate them from their own faith.

In the Canadian Northwest the Mormons are following the same course of communism and segregation which has made them a power in Utah. About ten years ago a small body of them formed a settlement on Lees Creek, about 50 miles from Lethbridge and 45 miles from McLeod. From that small beginning has grown the large and thriving community known as "the State of Zion in Alberta of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Just as in Utah they have their townsites with central church and dance hall, surrounding wards, church council, local bishops, elders, high councils, etc. They are already accumulating considerable wealth, are doing all in their power to get rid of all their Gentile neighbors, are carrying on a most active propaganda and are sending out missionaries to all parts of the country.

As an instance of what an enterprising business corporation the Mormon Church in Canada is, it may be mentioned that when recently a ditch 30 miles long had to be dug for irrigation purposes for the Alberta Irrigation Company, the Mormon Church took the contract for digging it and offered to take pay in land. So much attention is attracted to the matter by the phenomenal increase of these people that, according to the politicians, the federal authorities will have to take some action.

Suppose the Mormons do settle in the Dominion of Canada. What need for the Buffalo Express, or other American newsjournals to get into distress about it? The Canadas are under the rule of the British crown, the government of which does not undertake to prescribe religion to its subjects. The intelligent Catholic and Protestant, the fanatical Dervish and the polygamous Persian are all subjects of the Crown; and if the nation is equal to the exercise of the rule and control of British laws and the administrators of them, abroad, why may not the same rule and administration be equal to the taking care of a few thousand, more or less, of Mormons, than whom in the way of temporal and material citizenship Canada has no better.

Presbyterians, Methodists, Catholics, and Episcopalians may be clannish and vote as bodies for or against any political measure offered to settlement at the polls, and nobody has a word to say about it; but "Mormons," believers in the Book of Mormon and the philosophies of the Christ idea as taught by the angel's message, must not be allowed to exercise the privilege of standing as a unit on political issues if they choose so to do.

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints has been from the first almost a unit upon the question of the selling of intoxicants, from which traffic so much of poverty and crime have resulted. What right or propriety would there be in depriving these people of the right to vote as a unit on this question?

The Mormon Church of Utah has by proclamation stated their intention to be law abiding on this nation-perplexing question of the practice of polygamy; and it is quite probable that they will not attempt to vitiate their possible welcome to British dominion by carrying a reprehensible practice with them.

The practice of polygamy being confined to "two per cent" of the Utah Church in the United States, according to the continued assertion of the leading speakers and writers of the church, it is to be presumed that it is so confined to the few, for the reason that the number of the sexes has been, and still continues to be, so nearly equal that it is God's practical and perpetual protest against the dogma and its practice. So that it will be an ineffectual effort if attempted to plant the practice in Canada under its laws unless British authorities are willing and connive at the introduction of it, which is not likely. We make no plea for polygamy, but are opposed to the senseless display of semireligious and partizan malice displayed toward Joseph Smith and his professed followers whenever Mormonism is treated of in the press, forum, or pulpit. The "survival of the fittest," is a fairly good axiom in the premise.

GRACELAND COLLEGE THIRD ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT.

It was the privilege of the editoral force to attend the Third Annual Commencement of Graceland College, held in the College chapel, June 1.

Rain had fallen during the night and some clouds obscured the sky in the early morning, but by nine o'clock the skies were clear. As the hour set for the exercises to begin drew near, the dwellers at Lamoni were crowding the roads leading to the College, where at ten, there was a fair and representative audience intent on enjoying the hour and the occasion.

As sometimes occurs a few preliminaries left over to the last minute made the opening later than advertised—but, as all waits come to an end soon or late, so did this one, and it was twenty minutes past ten when Prof. Harkness asked the senior editor to offer the invocation. This done and the commencement services were opened.

A chorus composed of D. A. and Oscar Anderson and Otis White, bass; Roxanna Anderson, Maud Lambert, and Andentia Anderson, alto; R. J. Lambert, J. A. Smith, and Oliver Hayer, tenor; and Lena Church, Alta Mather, and May White, soprano, sang the chorus, "Praise ye the Father," by Gounod.

This was splendidly done, the singers all taking their parts in excellent spirit and form, Prof. A. H. Mills at the piano.

Then came the program given below:—

Essay, "George Eliot," Miss Laura Mader.

Piano solo, a "Murmuring Breezes," Jensen-Nieman; b "Norwegian Bridal Procession," Grieg; Mr. A. H. Mills.

Paper, "Incentives to School Work," Miss Blanche Lawrence.

Vocal solo, "A May Morning," Miss Clara Dudley.

Recitation, "Reuben Toast's Tricycle," Miss Samuella Bailey.

Piano solo, a "Prelude," Chopin; b "Invitation to the Dance," Weber; Mrs. Audentia Anderson.

Oration, "The Plumed Knight," Mr. James Kelley.

Vocal solo, Mrs. Alta Mather.

Recitation, "The Swan Song," Miss Floye Lewis.

Piano solo, a "Waltz, E Minor," Chopin; b "Minuet," Op. 14, No. 1, Paderewski; c "Pizziccato, from Sylvia," Delibes; Miss Maude Lambert.

Presentation of Diplomas by the President of the Board of Trustees.

Piano duet, "Marche Militaire," Schubert; Miss Lambert and Mrs. Anderson.

President Wm. Anderson's remarks in giving the certificates to the outgoing graduates were quite felicitous and were well received.

The graduates were Lermond W. Holmes, of Illinois, and Birdetta Graham, of Lamoni, Iowa, in shorthand; and George E. Snively, of Lamoni, Iowa, in the Commercial Course.

These go out to take up their work in the activities of the work-a-day world, and we hope for them a future, kind and successful.

The faculty consisting of Prof. R. A. Harkness, M. A., Ph. D., Pres.; J. A. Gunsolley, B. S., B. Acct., Sec.; Eleanore Hatch, B. A.; Fred'k M. Smith, B. S.; Alida Logan, Stenography; A. H. Mills, Piano; Viola Blair, Voice; were all present, except Sr. Viola Blair, whose work was but a sinecure for the term.

The following men compose the Board of Trustees, most of whom were present: Wm. Anderson, Pres.; I. W. Allender, Sec.; Daniel Anderson, Treas.; J. H. Hansen; R. M. Elvin; Wm. Leeka; J. A. Gunsolley.

It is useless to state that any one number on the program was better than another, for all did well; there was neither slip nor break from first to last; each did the part assigned intelligently and well, and Graceland has a renewed hold on the will and popular opinion of the people.

THE firm in New Bedford, Massachusetts, for which the Business Manager of the Herald Office, Bro. John Smith, did business for so many years, lately wrote him looking to further engagement, and upon Bro. Smith's answer that he was now permanently employed, the firm sent him indorsement as below. We set out so that our readers may know that our new Business Manager carries with him in the office work, the confidence and esteem of his former employers. They write as follows:—

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., May 24, 1900.

MR. JOHN SMITH;

My Dear Sir:—We offer our heartiest congratulations and best wishes for success to you in your new position, which in our judgment you are particularly well qualified to fill. We did not know of your leaving N. B. So you will pardon the tenor of our letter. When at home call and see us.

Yours Respy.,
Denison Bros. Co.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Geo. M. Robinson writes from Vernal, Utah:—

There are no other Saints in Vernal that we know of, and we feel very lonesome. Let us hear if there are Saints here.

H. E. Moler writes from Wilmington, Illinois, June 1:—

Bro. A. J. Keck and I are holding forth here in the tent, and are having some interest. Think that some will obey ere we close our effort.

Bro. Duncan Campbell, under date of June 1, says:—

I start today for Centerville and other points in the district, via Lineville.

Bro. J. F. Burton is on American soil again, as the following by card from San Francisco, May 31, will show:—

Emma and I arrived at four p. m. today, on the "Galilee." Left May 1. We are well and will write soon.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bishop E. L. Kelley and the Patriarch went to Auburn, Iowa, Friday, and J. R. Lambert went to Burlington.

THE RELATION OF PRAYER TO CHRISTIAN GROWTH.

No one is better qualified to determine the results of the application of principles to certain conditions than he who has gone through the experimental steps of the process and demonstrated the truths of the matter. Different individuals may observe the results from somewhat different standpoints and may in the details reach different conclusions; but in the main, in the operation of great general principles the results must be practically the same.

The conclusions which I have in mind to advance for the consideration of the thoughtful mind in this connection, (for minds that are not investigative will not consider them,) are the results of actual and, in a great many particulars, painful experiences, connected with the statements of scripture upon the subject.

The particular phase of this subject which I wish to examine has been brought to mind more forcibly on account of the mist that seems to hang around one clause contained in the revelation on priesthood duty, which says the priest shall "visit the house of each member exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret and attend to all family duties."

In my observation the stress has always been placed upon the part referring to prayer, and especially the old custom of saying grace before meals and united family prayer at night or morning, or both; and that concerning "family duties" has never been presented in any degree of clearness.

Now, I have some ideas on this subject, and I hope the reader will follow me through closely and critically, for I am not writing this merely to force my conclusions to the front, but because I believe they are right; and if they are not it becomes somebody's duty to present these things in the correct light, that I, as well as many others, may see aright on these subjects.

In the first place, what is prayer? As we frequently sing the sentiment,—

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed,
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast."

It is simply the soul's reaching out after a desired object, and a communion in thought with the object desired to be reached. If this be the true definition, then everybody prays; for everybody possesses the faculty of love in some degree, and has some great object in life toward which he is constantly reaching. There is an eternal unrest in the human mind, a disposition not to be satisfied with present attainments; and as is said, "The more a man gets the more he wants." This is true in Christian experience, learning, worldly pleasure, and every other pursuit, as well as in money getting.

The question then resolves itself into this: Which of these different attainments, or gods, if you please, shall be the object of our prayers? I believe it is a rule without exception that a man's thoughts will dwell the most upon the thing he knows the most about. Likewise, the occupation or labor a man performs will, provided there be no adverse influence, be in the line of work in which he is most skilled.

This brings the whole thing down to a matter of education. Educate a child in music and he will, unless naturally unfitted for it, follow that as a life work. Educate him in the German language or the French, and that will be the language of his thought. Teach him the principles of Confucianism and he will be a pagan priest. Educate him in Brighamism and he will have an excuse for every blasphemous utterance of that adulterous leader. Give him an unbiased general knowledge of all these various and conflicting ideas and the chances are he will select the truth from out the midst of error. Therefore it is necessary that all these different theories be placed before the mind in their proper light before a correct decision can be made as to which god he will serve.

When the selection is made, unless he continues to study the merits of the cause he has espoused, he is liable at any time, by some outside influence, to be turned out of the way he has chosen and led to serve some other god. But as he begins to study and learn more about the God he has chosen to serve, his interest increases, and as he reads of the dispensations of goodness to others of His servants, his heart begins to be drawn out toward Him in love and adoration. And if he continues to investigate the mysteries of godliness contained in his revealed word, the field of knowledge will be opened up to his view in such magnificent splendor that to turn back from the pursuit of the golden city of Happiness and Perfection, and to check the divine flame that has been kindled in the soul, and been leaping upward in continued enraptured prayer, sustaining the divine life of the sanctified spirit, would be immediate spiritual suicide and eternal death.

The necessity of study, then, becomes apparent. And right here, I believe, lies the most important part of the priest's work, to advise with the parents as to the most successful plan of attending to "all family duties." Family duties seem to occupy a place way down in the scale of importance, and family prayer, way up. In my opinion it should be the opposite. Teach a man, or a child either, the principles of the gospel, and get him interested in the unspeakable beauties thereof, and you need not worry about his prayers. They will follow just as surely as life springs into being under the light and warmth of the beautiful spring sunshine. There is one family duty spoken of on this wise: "Parents should teach their children the principles of the gospel as contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants." I want to emphasize this fact in this connection, viz., that this does not say "first principles." Many Latter Day Saints seem to think they have gone far enough when they understand the first seven principles. And right here is what I believe to be the cause of the spiritual lethargy in the church today. We do not study the word and think for ourselves.

The principle of faith comprehends much more than a mere passive belief that there is a God, somewhere, of some kind. Repentance means more than to be sorry for the sins we have committed before baptism and to resolve to try to do better. Repentance means to stop committing the sins we have been subject to, and to determine to keep all the commands of God at any cost. If it does not mean that then it means nothing.

Then there are other principles which, while they may not be termed "first," are absolutely essential to salvation. Among these are justification, sanctification, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. These are some of the things that parents should teach their children. If they do this, and tell them the beautiful stories about the love of God to his children in the past and present dispensations, there need be no concern about the rest. They will love him and pray to him, too, and you will have no need to tell them about the closet more than once either.

Parents, listen! What do you mean, on these beautiful Sunday afternoons, while you are sitting around in your easy-chair, or taking an afternoon nap on the sofa, while your children are playing on the street, probably with companions of questionable habits? How can you be content with the thirty minutes' Scripture lesson in the Sunday school as sufficient training of your child in the development of a Christian character? Why idle away the greater part of the day that has been set apart for the special service of God? Is it not as important that we be as diligent in the special work of God on the one day in seven as that we be zealous the other six in the week pertaining more especially to this temporal existence?

It seems to me right here is an excellent opportunity for the priest to make his influence for good felt. Parents as a rule need counsel along this line, for it is a great and all-important work, this training and educating the child mind, and there is altogether too little attention given to it.

Then there is not always a proper understanding of the relations between husband and wife. Are these to be considered "family relations"? If so, are the duties connected with them "family duties"? What, then, of the priest's work here? Why, it seems to me, as I look at the field of labor open to the visiting priest, it appears almost boundless in its scope. Where is there opportunity for him to sit down and be content with a few remarks to the family regarding the all importance of prayer and of keeping up a "family altar," when, in many instances, the only thing the family has to offer upon that altar is an incense of ignorance and the lamb of tradition? Possibly this is an extreme view of the matter; but when I look upon the dire needs of the work along this line it seems to me I can see little else but extremity at every point.

Some one may wonder what all this has to do with the relation of prayer to Christian growth. What I mean by all this is, that the first and great necessity to Christian growth, is a careful, systematic, persistent, and continual study of the revealed word. "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think [and that properly, too] ye have eternal life." They are the bread and the water of life; and he who partakes not thereof freely cannot hope to even sustain his spiritual life, much less to grow.

Prayer, in its relation to Christian or spiritual growth occupies the same place as does the process of breathing to our physical life and growth. It is one of the manifestations or signs of life. So long as we can detect the film of moisture upon the mirror which has been held before the motionless lips, we know there is life there. But unless there can be some nourishing element of food introduced into this body that lies even at the portal of death, the breath must cease. It is natural for a man to breathe. It is next to impossible for him to stop the process of his own free will. The heart beats and the blood flows on without our taking any thought of the process. Our food is digested and assimilated to the different parts of the body independently of our consciousness. And so we deduce this great truth, viz.: The manifestations of life in the process of growth are natural and spontaneous.

Paul says:—

> For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made.

So we may expect to find this same great truth prevailing when we enter the spiritual realm. In harmony with this principle I argue that there is little necessity for exhortation to pray; in fact it is no more necessary than to urge the physical necessity of breathing. True, in many cases of disease, as consumption, for instance, the wise physician prescribes breathing exercises to strengthen the lungs, and help remove impurity; but that alone will not effect a cure. It is first necessary to discover and remove the cause, then administer proper food in the proper manner, when the processes of life will again be restored to regularity. So in spiritual diseases, I would not detract from the importance of prayer, but would emphasize as of vastly greater importance the necessity of determining the cause of and correcting the evil by repentance; and then when proper spiritual food is appropriated from the revelations of God, we may expect to see the processes of spiritual life manifested in healthy growth.

The conditions of growth in the vegetable world are different from those of the animal. So is there a difference when we come to the spiritual world, or kingdom of heaven. The plant in the vegetable kingdom cannot appropriate the life-giving element in the air as does the animal. No more can the sinner who is outside of the heavenly kingdom make use of elements of spiritual life. He must first change his nature; he must be converted from a sinner to a saint; he must be "transplanted [or born] from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son." For this reason I hold that it is just as much folly to exhort a sinner to pray, or to train a child to pray, as to urge that the unborn infant should breathe the atmosphere of this world which it has never known. For just as surely as the newborn babe struggles eagerly for the life-giving element into which it has been ushered, just so surely will the newborn babe in Christ take hold on that element of spiritual life,—prayer.

It may be well at this juncture to explain my meaning on one point. I remarked that it was folly to train a child to pray. I used the word train advisedly. We can train a dog to perform tricks, or a parrot to talk; but neither the dog nor the parrot is any the wiser. So can we train a child of three or four years to lisp the words of a prayer but it would do him as much good if he had memorized one of the Mother Goose melodies, and repeated that. I believe in teaching a child to pray as early as possible; but I do not believe in making parrots out of them. Paul says something about this subject of spiritual food as follows:—

For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.—Heb. 5:12–14.

No one is foolish enough to feed a tender babe on tough beefsteak. Why should we not have as much sense when it comes to feeding our spiritual babes?

The problem of spiritual life and growth is a difficult one; but I find that a comparison of the natural with the spiritual clears up many questions that would otherwise be almost unanswerable. The Savior gave us an example of this in the many parables which he presented to his disciples. Let us follow in his steps.

MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD.—NO. 8.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

EXTINCT ANIMALS.

became exceeding rich, having all manner of fruit, and of grain, and of silks, and of fine linen, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious things, and also all manner of cattle, of oxen, and cows, and of sheep, and of swine, and of goats, and also many other kind of animals which were useful for the food of man; and they also had horses, and asses, and there were elephants, and cureloms, and cumoms: all of which were useful unto man, and more especially the elephant, and cureloms, and cumoms.—Ether 4: 3.

Scarcely an animal named in the above list was found here at the time of the discovery of the country. The horses, swine, goats, asses, and cows had to be imported to America from the old countries, also many of our grains, etc. The first rooster the Peruvians ever saw was one presented to the curaca at Tumbez by Molina "and, when the cock crew, the simple people clapped their hands, and inquired what he was saying." A man on horseback they thought was all one animal!

But why should the author of the Book of Mormon mention cureloms and cumoms? What are they? They are classed with the elephant as being useful to man—tame, domesticated. Why should he write so much at variance with everything known on this subject at the date of the publication of the Book of Mormon? Some men who have undertaken to criticise its author have, like the Peruvians, when they heard the cock crow, asked, "What does he say?" "Didn't its author know any better?" Not long since a minister, who was also an editor of a religious paper, cited the writer to the fact that the Book of Mormon was out of joint with the fauna of America.

In a letter dated October 31, 1875, Ameghino related a discovery some twent leagues from Buenos Ayres of human fossils and charcoal, pottery, arrowheads, chisels, and stone knives, together with a number of the bones of extinct animals, "the carapax of a gigantic armadillo scientifically known as the glyptodon."

The mammals, bones of which were found by Ameghino mixed with those of man, are: The Canis cultridens, the Hydrochœrus sulcidens, the Reithrodon, the Toxodon Platensis, an Equus, an Auchenia and a Cervus of undetermined species, the Mylodon robustus, the Panochœtus turberculatus, the Glyptodon reticulatus, and the G. typus.—Prehistoric America, p. 29, note 1.

These discoveries led to long discussions. Burmeister, another scientist, "rejected the theory of the contemporaneity of the men and mammals whose bones were found together. The Argentine Scientific Society even refused to listen to the reading of a memoir upon the subject." (Prehistoric America, pp. 29, 30.)

See the difference between Burmeister and the Argentine Scientific Society, and the man who wrote the Book of Mormon? He says all manner of cattle, of oxen, cows, sheep, swine, goats, "and also many other kinds of animals which were useful for the food of man;" then he goes on with his list again: "And they also had horses, and asses, and there were elephants, and cureloms, and cumoms." You see he could not find an English name for the two last named, but says that they were useful unto man; that is, all these animals were contemporaneous with man.

The point is this: The man who believes the Book of Mormon to be a true narrative is expecting to hear of just such finds as are reported by Ameghino, while scientists are constantly being taken by surprise, and move very cautiously; something like unbelieving Thomas, for instance. Now if step by step this partition wall is removed, which seem now to be between the fauna of America at the time of the Conquest and in prehistoric times, and fossils are found of such animals as are described in that narrative, pray tell me then who had the greatest wisdom in this matter, the scientists and preachers, or the man who made the Book of Mormon? That narrative has been telling us all these years that man in America in prehistoric times was contemporaneous with the cow, horse, ass, swine, elephant, etc., while those who did not believe it used these very statements as evidence that the book was a fraud, "and evidently written by a very ignorant man"! Now when these animals are found in a fossil state, what then becomes of the fraud? and what about that ignorant man? Then, don't you see, we begin to see the earmarks of a true narrative.

Mixed up promiscuously with the human remains were found those of several animals, chiefly feline and cervine [cats and deer], still extant in the same region [province of Minas Geraës, Brazil], together with others belonging to species which have now migrated or become extinct. Amongst the last we may name a monkey, a rodent of the size of the tapir, a peccary twice as large as the living species, a horse very similar to our own, a large cat bigger than the jaguar, a llama, a megatherium, and several others, such as Chlamydotherium Humboldtii, an edentate of the size of the tapir, and the Platyonyx of Lund. . . . By prolonged and careful work he [Lund] succeeded in gathering complete specimens of forty-four species now extinct, including several monkeys, some hoplophori, which were as large as our oxen, and the Smilodon, a large feline animal akin to the Machairodus, or saber-toothed tiger, which inhabited Europe in post-tertiary times. . . .

Several years ago Séguin collected on the borders of the Rio Carcarañia [in the province of Buenos Ayres] numerous bones of extinct animals, including those of a bear larger than the cave bear, a horse, the mastodon, and the megatherium. With these remains lay human bones. . . .

We think, therefore, with Ameghino, that man lived in South America with animals long extinct.—Prehistoric America, pp. 25–31.

Some of these animals were very large. (See illustrations, Ibid., pp. 16, 17.)

In the löess of the Mississippi at Natchez, Dr. Dixon found, side by side with the bones of the mylodon and megalonyx, a human pelvis.—Ibid., p. 34.

In a salt mine on the island of Petit Anse, Louisiana, was found a mat made of interlaced reeds. The salt occurs at a depth of fifteen to twenty feet, and the fragment of mat was found at the level of the first deposit of salt. Two feet above lay some fragments of the tusks or bones of an elephant.—Ibid., p. 36.

But the recent discoveries of Dr. Aughey in Iowa and Nebraska have now confirmed them. There, too, bones of the mastodon have been found mixed with numerous stone weapons.—Ibid., p. 37.

Everywhere these fliats, mortars, and dishes were associated with the bones of the mastodon, of the elephant, of a large tapir, and of other extinct animals.—Ibid., p. 39.

In 1857 a fragment of a human skull was found, associated with the bones of the mastodon, in the auriferous gravel of Table Mountain, California.—Ibid., p. 40.

Hewn stone implements, the work of their hands, are not the only relics of the early inhabitants of America. In many places human bones have been found, associated with numerous fragments of extinct animals.—Ibid., p. 23.

There are deposits in California and Oregon where, to use a popular expression, the remains of elephants and mastodons might be had by the wagonload. Besides gigantic pachydermata we meet with the Palæolama, the Elotherium, extinct oxen, Hipparion, and several kinds of horses.—Ibid., pp. 41, 42.

Charnay believes that he has found in the ruins of Tula [a little northeast of the City of Mexico] the bones of swine, sheep, oxen, and horses, in a fossil state, indicating an immense antiquity.—Atlantis, p. 350.

At this same place Mr. Charnay "picked up enamels, fragments of crockery and porcelain, and more extraordinary still, the neck of a glass bottle iridescent like ancient Roman glass," bones of animals, "several iron implements," and "some little chariots that Charnay thinks were toys of children. Now, supposing these toys to have been a reproduction in miniature of objects used by men, we must calculate that the Toltecs employed carriages, and that their use was not only given up, but absolutely unknown on the arrival of Cortes." (Prehistoric America, pp. 356, 357.)

www.LatterDayTruth.org

That is it exactly. With the red man chariots or carriages had gone out of use, and so had the horses, and elephants, and iron, and steel, and plated copper, and such crucibles as were noticed in No. 6 of this article.

In what was formerly called the Wilson's cavern, on the Ohio, some twenty miles below the mouth of the Wabash, was in the early settlement of that country found some interesting tokens of antiquity. In the cave were found representations of the sun in different stages of rise and declension; the moon under various phases; a snake, biting its tail; . . . a viper; a vulture; buzzards tearing out the heart of a prostrate man; a panther, held by the ears, by a child; a crocodile; several trees and shrubs; a fox; a curious kind of hydra serpent; two doves; several bears; two scorpions; an eagle; an owl; some quails; eight representations of animals which are now unknown. Three out of the eight are like the elephant in all respects, except the tusk and the tail. Two more resemble the tiger, one a wild boar, another a sloth; and the last appears a creature of fancy, being a quadrumane, instead of a quadruped, the claws being alike before and behind, and in the act of conveying something to the mouth, which lay in the centre of the monster. Besides these were several fine representations of men and women, not naked, but clothed, not as the Indians, but much in the custom of Greece and Rome.—American Antiquities, p. 140.

Thus, in numerous ways we find that the strange narrative is confirmed; this last reference points to a civilized race—not Indians. This we can see by their dress, which is much like "the costume of Greece and Rome." The animals are no doubt such as they were acquainted with; but eight out of the number are unknown to us. In this same cave were "found many hieroglyphics, and representations of such delineations as would induce the belief, that their authors were, indeed, comparatively refined and civilized." (Ibid., p. 138.)

The conclusions to be arrived at seem to us simple. Without doubt man lived in California, and Whitney's narrative is one more proof added to those already quoted, during the time when the volcanoes of the Sierra Nevada were in full action, before the great extension of the glaciers, before the formation of the valleys and the deep revines, at a period when the flora and fauna were totally different from those of today.—Prehistoric America, p. 44.

That is, the vegetable and the animal species are different in California now from what they were at, or before the great volcanic outburst; but man in America appears to have been living here at the time these changes in the flora and the fauna were being made, and lived here before and since. Human relics and the bones of extinct animals found together in or under the lava beds and in the auriferous gravels, prove that great changes have taken place within the human period.

The discoveries by Professors Lund, Ameghino, Whitney, and others, which have reversed the opinions of scientists on these subjects, are of recent date, and later than the publication of the Book of Mormon. It declared that man in prehistoric times in America had "all manner of fruit, and of grain;" "horses and chariots;" "silks," "fine linen," all manner of cattle, oxen, cows, sheep, swine, goats, and many other animals.

Nadaillac says:—

New discoveries are daily made, upsetting preconceived hypothesis, breaking down earlier theories, and completely destroying what had appeared to be the best founded conclusions.—Prehistoric America, p. 260.

We can see by the above that the Book of Mormon is and has been on trial all these years. "New discoveries are daily made" "upsetting" somebody's theories, destroying "the best founded conclusions." If the Book of Mormon was not written by eyewitnesses of what is related; if it was written by Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith, we may expect its theory to be upset, and its conclusions "confounded;" but if its hypothesis stand the strain, and these "new discoveries" which "are daily made" confirm that narrative, is that not one of the very best of proofs that it is a true record? Could you have written a book at variance with everything else on the subject, and hit the nail on the head every time? Could you have done that well? If scientists would read the Book of Mormon they would find in it a handy text-book; it answers many of their knotty questions. They try to fix the age of the lava beds under which human bones or relics are found, and the gravel deposits which overlay the lava in some places.

The Book of Mormon tells us of some such great changes in the earth's surface—of great earthquakes. "The whole face of the land was changed" (Book of Nephi 4:2), thus, we see, confirming the Nadaillac statement about "the formation of the" present "valleys and deep ravines." "The inhabitants were witnesses of the convulsions of nature, of the volcanic phenomena, which brought about such remarkable changes." (Prehistoric America, pp. 44, 37.)

Then the Book of Mormon goes on and says, "And the highways were broken up, and the level roads were spoiled, and many smooth places became rough." You see how modern science is working for the Book of Mormon? The present valleys and ravines in some localities were made by a volcanic outburst, which were witnessed by prehistoric Americans. Both science and the Book of Mormon say so. Does either one tell the truth? If so, which one?

And some "cities were sunk," and many were burned. Moroni sunk into the sea, "and the earth was carried up upon the city of Moronihah, that in the place of the city thereof, there became a great mountain." The City Gilgal was buried in the earth; so was Gadiandi, Gadiomnah, Jacob, and Gimgimno. "All these have I caused to be sunk, and made hills and valleys in the places thereof, and the inhabitants thereof have I buried up in the depths of the earth." (Book of Nephi 4:6.) This accounts for the human relics under such places as Table Mountain, and the Calaveras skull in California. (See Prehistoric America, pp. 40, 41.)

The Journal, of Los Angeles, California, reports that D. J. Court, a mining prospector, has returned to Prescott, Arizona, from a three months' sojourn in "one of the most remote and little known parts of the Territory," and says that that section contains more Aztec ruins [this name is given for the want of better one] than any other portion of America, evidence of human habitations being found from the highest peaks to the lowest valley. In one place he found a road or street three miles in length, perfectly smooth and straight, and sixty feet in width. On either side of the street, the entire distance, are ruins. The road was evidently built prior to some mighty earthquake, as it ends abruptly at the brink of a mighty chasm. He dug up and found lying about a great number of skeletons, which were in a fair state of preservation [remember that is a dry and pure climate], the heads of all being alike—very large over the eyes and receding, and almost flat toward the back of the head; jaws well developed, but front upper and lower teeth small and sharp. The ruins show the people to have been workers in stone, some fragments of work in turquoise being found. Every available foot of land had once been cultivated.—Lamoni Patriot, May 2, 1895.

Frank Cushing, who had charge of the Hemingway expedition in New Mexico, some years ago, reported a number of prehistoric cities in that Territory, which had, he thought, been destroyed by earthquakes, and left desolate. The walls were of adobe, and had fallen outward. The roofs falling inside, had buried the inhabitants alive. He found skeletons under the debris, in such positions as indicated that they had met a violent death.

The above is in harmony again with our record, where it says that some of the cities which had been destroyed by the great earthquake were renewed, but others left desolate. Thus they "whisper" again.

Some people think that Oliver Cowdery was to share the profits from the sale of the Book of Mormon. What a pity that he died so early, before he knew what a good thing he had! Why not share the spoils with Messrs. Lund, Ameghino, Bancroft, Brinton,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Squier, Baldwin, Charnay, Le Plongeon, Priest, Short, Nadaillac, et al? Cowdery and Smith told a lot of Mormon lies, and then these men come along after, under the garb of science, and swear to them!!

ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

I have read the discussions for and against secret societies, and should like to give my experience, believing it is wise to tell what we know for good to men, leaving it with them to judge as to the wisdom of the matter.

I know secret societies tell a great deal of their kindness, benevolence, and charity. I once knew of two men who went to get work in a town. It was hard to get work there, at their trade, but the grand master said two men not of their order must be dismissed to give their brethren work. I was once a foreman in a mine, gave satisfaction to all. My employers, the coal company, belonged to a secret society. One of their brothers was out of work. He wanted my place; so I was dismissed. These are samples of much more of the same kind. The question is asked, Are such acts charity?

"Oh yes," says one, "you have yourself blame, their doors are open to all."

I once asked the worthy noble what it would cost me to become a member.

"Oh, just twenty dollars."

I replied, "To tell you the truth, I could not well give you five."

"Oh, then we can do nothing for you."

Thus it is. If you have not the cash there are no benefits. The baker sets a price on his pies, cakes, and bread. If I want bread I pay his price and get it; but do not think he is doing me a charity. These societies set their prices; if I pay and get their promised benefits, how can that be charity? It is simply a matter of business like an insurance company that will insure your house in return for so much money. If the house burns down, the company pays the loss; but none call that charity. So all the talk about kindness, and charity, is simply the bait that catches the fish.

I once lived where they established a new lodge. It was a chance to get into the society cheap,—only fifteen dollars. About twoscore wanted to become members.

Some of them said, "Come, Billy, now is your chance. Join with us. We will make you chaplain."

They were all good fellows as the world goes, some of them well to do; but they all cursed and swore, and did not object to hearing or telling dirty stories. They gave no heed to my words of admonition. Some of them refused to believe there was a God. What, call those men brethren? Nay, not I! When the lodge was established they raised the entrance fee to thirty dollars, each member to pay ten dollars a year. Every month or six weeks there was a social dinner at midnight, and dance till morn. The pay was always two dollars and a half. The men never came to work next day. Too expensive for a poor man.

A brother draws a sad picture of a man who died, left a home partly paid for, a wife and children to the mercies of the unkind world. I have known men who bought a home and struggled for years and at last got it paid for. What then? They reached out and bought some more land, and thus it continued till they grew old and gray. I never knew one of them who had a happy home, they drove themselves, their wives, and their children. It was work, work, all the time; scrape, pinch, save, no time to play. Shoes and clothes always wore out too soon. Their children were all unruly and self-willed, and would rather stay anywhere than at home. Some of them had their names on the books of the Saints' Church; but they seldom had time to thank God for the blessings received or ask him for the blessings desired. There are worse things in the condition of men than poverty. True, some of them were applauded as successful men, and in the lodge were made noble grand, worthy grand, most worthy, grand supreme, or some other title in accord with the secret society. The question is asked, What will the harvest of such lives be?

I know a brother whose savings over his living were over a thousand dollars a year. He had a nice cottage home of his own, and all that was needful to make life comfortable. His wife had help to assist in the duties of the household. I knew another who worked for $1.20 a day, had a rented house. His wife had to do all her own housework, and ofttimes washed for others to get money to pay the rent. These men belonged to the same branch, ate out of the same plate, drank out of the same cup, and called each other brother. After all that is said about coming up higher, how much better are we as a church than other Christians.

The trouble seems to be with many that come into the church, they have not faith in God and his promises in the gospel covenant. Men have faith in their fellows who bind each other with an oath; but what a difference in covenanting to do God's will, and how hard to give up the foolishness of men after we have seen the light of truth. We read that the law of the Lord is perfect. Then why not obey his law and be perfect? In the days of Enoch his people were all of one heart and mind, held all things common. In the days of the apostles they enjoyed the same blessings. The Nephites held all things common; there were none rich, so none poor. All were made free partakers of the heavenly gift.

For what was the law given in these last days if it was not to be obeyed? If we can do no better than buy, sell, pay, hire, hold to the secret rites, ceremonies, manners, and customs of the men of the world, what good will it do us to know that God has revealed his word? Why not give heed to the admonition, gather together ununder the celestial law, and so come up higher in a true sense, so that we also may be partakers of the heavenly gift?

CONFIDENCE.

Confidence.—Trust in moral probity; firm belief; reliance; credit; assurance.

Probity.—Honesty; uprightness; integrity; sincerity; veracity.—Worcester's Dictionary.

It is quite probable that often the Saints in their zeal for the gathering to Zion to take place only perceive it in their mind as an accomplished fact, and entirely overlook the preliminary work to be done, which is absolutely necessary. Confidence is one of the essential elements, and we might say the first and most important of all things that is required in the building up of Zion. Without it very little can be accomplished. It is a principle that enters into all our relations with our fellow man in religion, business, and social affairs; and without it we would not be any better than the dumb animals.

It has often occurred that the business men who were reported worth $30,000,000 or more have, when they died, left property which would not sell for more than $3,000,000; and yet their fellow citizens would trust them in business enterprises involving the expenditure of many millions of dollars, and this because of their great confidence in them, believing that they would be honest and keep every promise that they had made.

I read when a school boy a story of a young man in Boston who went to one of the large banking institutions and asked for a loan of $2,000 to start in business. When asked what security he could give, he replied, "My note and my word of honor." The banker refused. Not being easily discouraged he made the same proposition to another banker. The manner and look of the young man betokened integrity and honesty, and the loan was granted. In after years he was one of the most successful business men of that city. He paid back the money he borrowed, and in after years, when his benefactor was in financial distress, he was able to loan him $75,000.

Two things, it would seem, were of great importance in this business affair. The young man must have weighed the matter carefully in his mind, and saw that the chances of success were so great that it seemed to him an absolute certainty, otherwise he would not have taken the risk. He was too honest to engage in an enterprise that had a reasonable chance for failure. He would not borrow when he saw that the risk of paying back was too great and thereby injure his benefactor.

This story is told of A. Lincoln: He went in business with another young man. In a very little while his partner deserted him and left a large debt to pay. It was many years before Lincoln accomplished it, and he used to say that it was a burden equal to the national debt. Although his friends told him that the law exempted him, and the debt was outlawed, his answer was that he was morally bound to pay it, and so continued until it was accomplished.

Is it not possible for us to do much to build up Zion if we will live so that our brethren will have the confidence in us that was placed in the two men referred to? Suppose that Bro. A. is such a man that his brethren can trust him. They know he is honest, that his word is his bond, that he will keep all his promises, that he will not go into some scheme where he expects to get something for nothing, and who believes that success comes through honest labor and in patience is willing to toil on, believing that success will ultimately crown the labor of the industrious. He may be a young man, just starting out in life, or he may have lost all he had in some fire or sickness or in many other ways that is the common lot of mankind. He wants to start farming. Land in Zion is high. He has very little money, or he may not have any. Bro. B. C. and D. have been prosperous. They have abundance and some to spare, and they say to Bro. A., "We will help you make a start on a farm." It's done. He keeps his promise. He succeeds. By and by he is able to help others.

This same principle can be carried into all branches of business with the same prospect of success. This is not a dream it is a reality; it is in the realm of practical affairs of life, and can be done if there is a good foundation for "confidence,"—confidence in God, in our brethren, and in the work in which we are engaged.

PAUL PARKER.

REST.

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.—Matt. 11:28-30.

What is it that makes men and women weary and heavy laden? It is because they believe that that is false, and cultivate erroneous feelings toward each other. It is said that, "He that believeth a lie is under condemnation." How much more so if he spread that lie all around? Error must die, and the sooner the better. One time the family were speaking of the faults of a neighbor. The head of the family said, "Don't let us talk about that, it only makes it worse. It has a bad influence upon us and upon them." He taught a good principle, a truth that will stand the test of a true life. To think or speak of good, helps ourselves and stimulates to good acts, and throws good influences around us, and causes us to be meek and lowly. Good and truth form a yoke that makes the burden light.

It is our privilege to get into that higher life that is said to flow from the throne of God. Then shall we drink of that well of living water that brings eternal joys, sweetness, and love to all. It will vibrate from one to another, like the pebble thrown in the water, reaching from shore to shore. This is our great privilege right here in the eternal now, giving us strength to rise above the trifles that might otherwise annoy us. All that have tasted at that fountain know this by experience. May it be our happy lot to attain to that right here, in order that a place may be prepared for the coming of the Son of Man. Then he will come, he will come; he will not, cannot tarry.

SANCTIFICATION.

Some Saints do not believe in sanctification. Are there any who do not believe in baptism? One is taught in the Bible the same as the other. Do not understand me that we are free from temptation and cannot sin. Let us see what the scriptures say:—

If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.—1 John 1:8.

Again:—

If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.—1 John 1:10.

I have heard these passages used for self-justification, for sins that were willfully committed. Now, my understanding of what John meant is this: We may be as perfect as it is possible for us to be in this life, we may give our whole life to God and walk with him as Enoch did, yet the blood that courses through our veins is impure, infirm, unholy, and sinful. The life of all flesh is the blood (Lev. 17:14); therefore we have to war continually against the sin of the flesh. In John 8:15 Jesus says, "Ye judge after the flesh;" therefore a sinful and unrighteous judgment. Paul, in writing to the Roman church, said:—

I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh.—Romans 6:19.

God sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh.

Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.—1 Cor. 15:50.

Why? Because it is sinful.

My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not.—1 John 2:1.

How is this? if we cannot live without sin, how are we going to live and sin not?

Whosoever committeth sin, transgresseth also the law.—1 John 3:4.

Can we be Saints and transgress the law of God? In the sixth verse he says:—

Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not.

And in the eighth and ninth verses:—

He that commiteth sin is of the devil. . . . Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

Now let us examine sanctification. Webster defines sanctify thus:—

1. In a general sense, to cleanse, purify, or make holy.
2. To separate, set apart, or appoint, to a holy, sacred, or religious use.
3. To purify, to prepare for divine service, and for partaking of holy things.
4. To separate, ordain, and appoint to the work of redemption and the government of the church.
5. To cleanse from corruption: to purify from sin; to make holy by detaching the affections from the world and its defilements, and exalting them to a supreme love to God.

Now let us compare these with the Scriptures. In Genesis 2:3, God sanctified (set apart) the seventh day. In Exodus 13:2, the firstborn of both man and beast were sanctified; and in verse 12 it says they shall be set apart. So to sanctify means to set apart.

Now we will try prepare. In Leviticus 20:7, the Lord says:—

Sanctify [prepare] yourselves therefore, and be ye holy.

Joshua 3:5:—

Sanctify [prepare] yourselves: for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you.

1 Samuel 7:3:—

And prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only.

Ephesians 5:26, Christ sanctified (cleansed) the church with the washing of water by the word.

1 Timothy 4:5:—

For it is sanctified [cleansed] by the word of God and prayer.

Psalms 73:13:—

Verily, I have cleansed my heart in vain.

2 Timothy 2:21:—

If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor; sanctified [purified], and meet for the master's use.

Isaiah 13:3:—

I have commanded my sanctified [purified] ones.

Titus 2:14:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people.

Now, reader, you will admit that we as Saints are a purified, cleansed, separated, prepared, appointed people. Are we not sanctified, therefore, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost (Rom. 15:16), being cleansed by the washing of water (Eph. 5:26), being separated from the world by the gospel (2 Cor. 6:17; Heb. 7:26; Matt. 25:32), being prepared by God (Rom. 9:23, 24; Rev. 21:2), being purified by Christ (Tit. 2:14), being set apart by the Lord (Ps. 4:3), being ordained (John 15:16; Acts 13:48), and being appointed to the work of redemption by obedience to the word of God (Acts 6:3).

Let us detach our affections from the world and its defilements and exalt them to a supreme love to God.

CLARKSVILLE, Texas, May 7, 1900.

Letter Department.

GILROY, California, May 22.

Editors Herald:—Again I am in my field of labor and at work. On May 2 I bid my wife and little ones good-bye. At St. Joseph I was compelled to stay over night, and so hunted up some of the Saints, and was given a hearty welcome. I was privileged to attend the business meeting of the branch, and enjoyed a visit with Bro. H. O. Smith, also Bro. Wm Lewis and his son Dan. I was entertained for the night by Bro. Dan Lewis and wife, for sake of "Auld Lang Syne."

Sunday morning I arrived in Los Angeles, in time to partake with the Saints of the sacrament, and by invitation assisted Bro. T. W. Williams to administer the same. The evening hour was passed in an effort to instruct the Saints and friends at the chapel. How well I succeeded I know not.

While at Los Angeles I was entertained at the household of Bro. H. L. Holt. I am sorry to say that he is still suffering very much with the gathering in his ear or head, besides being afflicted otherwise.

Monday I had the pleasure of calling upon and taking dinner with Bro. and Sr. H. L. Tilton. I had thought to spend a few days at Los Angeles; but a letter received there called me away, so at seven p. m. Monday I took train for San Francisco, where I arrived at ten a. m. Tuesday. Taking my little Bilhorn in my hand I stepped into the store of Bro. C. A. Parkin, where I met a very chilly reception until he recognized the fact that it was Bro. Chase with the little organ that some of the San Francisco Saints had helped pay for, and not a drummer with his samples, then the air of the place grew more salubrious.

Well, Bro. Parkin soon furnished me with breakfast and dinner combined, and armed me with the proper document so that I could secure myrail road permit, and by dusk I was at this point, at the home of Bro. Jairus M. Putney, formerly of Monona Co., Iowa, and in consultation with him as president of this district and Bro. J. E. Holt assistant president, concerning the gospel tent for this mission field this summer. It was for this consultation that I hurried from Los Angeles, for Bro. J. E. Holt lives at San Benito forty-eight miles distant, but had written that he would see Bro. Putney on the eighth, at Gilroy, and so I hurried on to see them both.

After I had been refreshed by supper we made a visit to an old schoolmate of mine, Bro. George Ross and family. Of course we enjoyed the evening, and did not talk exclusively of tent.

On the 9th we decided that it would be best to make a visit to Oakland, where the old tent was stored, and examine it and see whether a new one was necessary. So with Bro. and Sr. Putney we journeyed hither, stopping over night with the Saints of San Jose, while Bro. Holt drove back home with his family and then returned to San Jose for Sunday to look after the interests of the tent there. At Oakland we were kindly entertained by Saints and friends, and the result of our mission was that a new tent was ordered from a San Francisco tent maker. The Saints of San Francisco and Oakland gave us quite a help toward paying for the same.

We were privileged to speak to the San Francisco Saints at eleven, and to take part in their Sunday school at ten. In Oakland we met with the Sunday school at one, and were pleased to listen to a very instructive discourse from Bro. Putney. In the evening we had the pleasure of occupying the pulpit as speaker. When the Master bestows his Spirit in help, as then, it is always a pleasure.

From Oakland we returned to San Jose Monday, where we met Bro. J. E. Holt and drove with him to San Benito. There we remained over Sunday and met the Saints and friends once at the house of Grandma Davis and once at Bro. Page's. Monday, the 21st, Bro. Holt returned to this place with me, where I am preaching this week,—not in the town of Gilroy, but at Pruna Dale schoolhouse, near the home of Bro. Putney. Sunday I am to meet the Saints in San Jose and hope to start the tent work there Monday next.

I have found the Saints here quite alive to the needs of the work, and ready to coöperate with the missionary force for the good of the cause. This is as it should be. The tent is ordered and money on hand to pay for it. I hope we may be able to so occupy with it this year that all may feel repaid for the effort and means expended.

Bro. H. L. Holt is still sick at his home in Los Angeles. Pray for him that he may be restored.

I find that while Bro. Putney has aged in the fourteen or fifteen years since I saw him last, he is still staunch as ever, and willing to do for the work's sake. That is true also of Bro. and Sr. Ross.

This is quite a trying season here on account of frost and drought,—the third of its kind in succession.

I feel that the Saints here are to be commended for the sacrificing spirit shown in the effort to coöperate with us in this work. Surely their covenant will be remembered. Some have expressed surprise because I did not make a longer stay at some of the notable places on the coast before I went to my field of work, but I am here for work. Hardly think I could enjoy sight-seeing or picnicing, with my family back at Lamoni. When the season's work is ended my picnic will come when I can see them once more.

My mission address is San Jose, California.

Yours for the work,

A. M. CHASE.

BLACKWELL, Okla., May 26.

Editors Herald:—I have often thought to drop a line to inform the church that five or six Saints live in Blackwell. We are in one of the best business towns and best farming counties, and like it here. We never have had any preaching yet. Being rather poor in this world's goods we don't care to put the elders to too much expense in coming here; yet if they can conveniently stop off we will try and treat them as they deserve. Bro. A. F. Lambert is still engaged in selling agricultural implements, and sets a good example to those around. Bro. Henry Bivins makes wells of different sizes. Lately he has been distributing tracts and talking the latter-day work to neighbors.

I have presided over the union temperance meetings, held Friday evenings in four different churches in Blackwell, since last August. Sometimes we get considerable gospel mixed in with temperance speeches. I was also elected secretary of the Blackwell Township Sunday school union. The post master is president. I would be pleased to receive any good temperance help, speeches, pieces, statistics, or suggestions.

W. D. MCKNIGHT.

CLEAR LAKE, Ind., May 28.

Editors Herald:—Leaving General Conference on Friday evening, April 20, we came directly home, landing Saturday night. Being tired and sick we waited until Thursday the 26th, when we started for Knox, Indiana, accompanied by Bro. S. W. L. Scott. We were busy until May 1, when we came home. Were again sick until May 5. However we occupied at home church May 6.

On the 11th we started for Grand Rapids, Michigan, where we found appointments for preaching. We occupied in the hall on South Division Street until Tuesday evening, when we were joined by Bro. S. W. L. Scott. Held a business meeting; assisted Bro. Scott Wednesday and Thursday evenings, Friday, the 18th with Bro. Scott, we started southward. We parted at Allegan, Michigan, Bro. Scott going to Scott Center, Indiana, to fill previous appointment, and your writer to fill appointments at Allegan. We found announcement for evening advertised by our good Bro. and Sr. Kirby, who by their Christian manner of living have the respect of their neighbors. We talked again on Saturday evening, also Sunday morning at 10:30; and about 12, noon, we, with quite a company of friends to the work, wended our way to the Kalamazoo river, where we led into the waters of baptism three precious souls. The sun was shining brightly, making the scenery grand indeed. The people assembled on the bank above and at the water's edge were very orderly and interested in the solemnity of the occasion. I want it to be understood that the baptisms were largely due to the close living of the Saints, in fact the teaching and practicing of good works. Bro. and Sr. Kirby have been conducting prayer and reading meetings at their home, regularly, three a week. It has its influence. Saints, everywhere, go and do likewise. But we must not forget to tell you that Sr. Larkins, of Hopkins, came over and assisted Sr. Russel and others in singing, and presided at the organ at the G. A. R. hall in the evening. Sister Larkins is a niece of Bros. Norman and Sherman Smith. This is all we need to say of her ability for music. Monday we went to Hopperton, and, as agreed, visited our old veteran Bro. Meutze. Received his testimony of the truth strong as ever. Came home Thursday. Sacrament meeting Sunday. Are waiting for measles now, and district conference on the 9th, 10th, and 11th.

Yours for work all the time,

G. A. SMITH.

PLAINVILLE, Ind., May 27.

Editors Herald:—After coming home from the conference I secured a house in Plainville, moved my family in it, and was off on mission work. Have been as busy as a bee (not a drone) ever since, laboring with Bro. Marshall through Rush, Decatur, Ripley, and Jefferson Counties, and some in Daviess County. Tomorrow am off to Wirt, Jefferson County to assist Bro. Marshall in replying to some Utah elders. Two will be there tomorrow night, and two more Friday night. They will not debate, but promise to stay and hear the reply. Quite an excitement over their coming and the reply.

Everything seems to be on the move. I am very hopeful and encouraged over the work here this year. May God speed the right.

A worker for the cause of Christ,

G. JENKINS.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 29.

Editors Herald:—The debate arranged to be held between Elder Chism and myself at Oklaunion, Texas, is an event of the past. I left Lamoni May 10 for the field of battle, being accompanied from St. Joseph, Missouri, by Bro. H. O. Smith, at whose special request I went. He being missionary in charge of the Southwestern mission, acted as moderator for our side.

The discussion began on the 15th inst., and continued eight days, two sessions of two hours each per day. Elder Chism did well considering the cause he labored for. Discipleism as once distinctively known is getting to be a thing of the past. It is grouping into its belief the ideas of more recent development, as illustrated in the ever-changeful views of the popular religious world.

But Elder Chism represents the conservative wing or division of the institution, which rejects located, salaried ministers, instrumental music, and Sunday schools in the church. He dates the rise of their church with the baptism of Bro. J. H. Amend's grandfather, November, 1827, which year terminates the 2300 days' period of Daniel 8: 14, when the sanctuary began to "be cleansed"!

He begins the period with the beginning of the Pelopennesian War, B. C. 473. But there is nothing connected with that war that relates to the sanctuary, the daily sacrifice, or the host, Jewish nation; nor was the Christian sanctuary trodden down by the little horn for 2300 days. But the vision concerns the "daily sacrifice," the "host," and sanctuary. And besides, the church on earth was never called a, or the, sanctuary. Christ, our great high priest, has entered the sanctuary, "heaven itself," there,—"to appear in the presence of God for us."—Heb. 9: 24. The church on earth is but the "outer court" at the utmost (Rev. 11: 1,2), and but 1290 years—540, 1830, A. D.—was it not to be measured by God's measuring rod. And but forty-two months was it to be under foot of church and state united.

I mention this as the only new idea I met in Elder Chism's affirmative.

Brother Chism pretends to read Greek, but his translating is not good. He does not follow Braden and others; but seeks for new objections, realizing, no doubt, the weakness of former objections to our position.

In his effort to meet us with gossip, stories, and detective stories, he rather exceeded, and did his own side damage, and so made our task the easier.

Bro. H. O. Smith told us quite early in the debate that he had the Spirit's evidence that we would come out all right, and at the conclusion of the discussion this was confirmed to me; and I felt so thankful for the gospel—the truth. I realized that "nothing shall offend" those that keep God's law, and that "great peace have they."

My opponent admitted that miracles attended our mission, but asserted that they were lying wonders; so he defied God Jesus, or the Holy Ghost, or any of the Saints to strike him blind. But if we have not the truth, how can he or anyone else know whether the miracles wrought be of God or the Devil?

Some of the Disciple friends told some of our brethren that they had had debate enough! And the Saints expressed themselves as being satisfied with our effort.

Our visit among the Saints at Beaver and Oklaunion, Texas, will always be remembered by us as among those the most pleasant of life to date. They have a beautiful, healthful country, adapted to grazing and wheat raising; and it would be difficult to imagine how their prospects could be brighter for crops than this year. With wheat fields, in a level country, extending beyond whence sight determines; the atmosphere clear and bracing; a bright, clear, exhilarating sunshine—the scene is inspiring!

I am led to believe that with the diligence essential on the part of the laborers appointed, and faithfulness of the Saints, a good report for the year will be heard from the Southwestern mission,—and we hope from all our missions in all the world.

As to our late General Conference I was so spiritually sustained that no misgivings entered my mind regarding the ultimate of the work. The staying qualities of our brethren are better known than before, and this tends to inspire mutual faith, I think. Where mutual, concerted action is to be devoted to common cause, mutual understanding on the part of all concerned is essential. Without this, only division could ensue; a willing, intelligent unity only, and an agreement on the part of all to the truth. "Ye all are brethren," equal, and no one but God is Father, will give us success. "Common consent" is God's provided prerequisite to the success of the church, and no policy but that foreshadowed in the divine law will receive God's approbation and aid; and I think it more apparent than ever that this is the desire of the servants of God.

Some steps taken at the conference were surely forward, and I believe preparatory to more advanced movements yet to be taken as God shall direct.

I take leave of my former mission with that sadness that comes on separating from friends. I thank them for their kindness and their forbearance toward me in my weakness, and trust God's blessings may attend them, and the efforts, doubly, of those appointed to labor in the Des Moines district.

Hoping to be attended by the divine power and direction in entering the field lately assigned, I am,

Your colaborer and brother,

C. SCOTT.

FORT WORTH, Texas, May 28.

Editors Herald:—I do not often trespass upon your space; but as I have been contemplating the changes occurring from time to time in the life of a missionary this morning, I have been led to reflect that it has been a long time since the Herald readers had had anything from my pen, and yet the changes have gone on. I went to conference this spring with a feeling that a change of field and work was in store for me; but when asked if I would take the oversight of the "Southwestern" mission, it came as a surprise to me and I accepted it with a full consciousness that it meant separation from loved ones at home, and also a separation from those whom I had learned to hold dear through the ties of the gospel, and by a two years' asssociation in church, Religio, and Sunday school work. I accepted, because years ago I had vowed to go wherever the Master might call me, and trust him to qualify me for the work.

I left Lamoni for my home, April 24, and began at once preparing to leave for my mission, expecting to leave the 11th of May. Sunday, May 6, I preached my farewell sermon, and was assured by a resolution unanimously passed at the close of the meeting that my services and work had been appreciated, and that the Saints of St. Joseph wished me well in my new field. On the Monday night following I was surprised at my home by the assembling of one hundred or more (one hundred and two by actual count, if we did not miss any) of the Saints, bringing with them ice cream and cake, and what was better, an assurance of their good will. After the greetings were over, and a few minutes of social intercouse had been indulged in, the assembly was called to order by Bro. Best, when Bro. Winning, in a well chosen speech on the name of "Smith," presented to myself and wife, as a token of appreciation of our labors, a generous sum of money; and to me as a token of esteem from Bro. D. H. Blair's Sunday school class, composed mostly of girls just bordering on to womanhood whom I had baptized, a beautiful tie pin, representing a star and crescent. So Monday, May 7, 1900, will always be remembered by me as a red letter day, and will mark one of the brightest spots in my life.

Bro. Columbus Scott joined me on the 10th, and on the 11th, at 9:25 a. m., I bade farewell to loved ones, and in company with Bro. Scott I was away for Texas,—Bro. Scott to meet Elder J. W. Chism of the Christian Church in Oklaunion, I to act as his moderator. We arrived at Beaver, Texas, in the afternoon of the 12th, where we found Bro. A. J. Moore, and learned that he had just closed a discussion with a Baptist minister, and from comments by outsiders and others we were convinced that our cause had lost nothing by the investigation. We furthermore learned that the Saints, under the leadership of Bro. Moore and his excellent example, had made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in that region.

We stayed here over Sunday, Bro. Scott preaching to a full house in the evening, and on Monday took train for Oklaunion, to be ready for the debate, which was to begin Tuesday, at ten a. m. We were met at the train by Bro. Amend and taken to his home a mile away. The next day we met at nine a. m. to arrange preliminaries for the struggles. Mr. Chism opened up on the affirmative, defending his church in a properly worded proposition for four days of two sessions each day. Bro. Scott also affirmed his church in four days of two sessions each day. It was the old story of abuse and stories on one side, pitted against the word of God on the other, resulting as we believe in victory for us.

Bro. Scott did well, starting out rather hoarse on account of cold contracted on the trip down and the dampness of the weather; he steadily improved to the end, which we took as a mark of divine favor. I was much surprised at the attitude assumed by our opponent and his moderator in refusing to kneel when we offered prayer; and when asked for a reason we were told that we were "vile deceivers," and they could not conscientiously kneel with us.

Bro. Scott certainly showed himself a Christian gentleman in the discussion, and endeared himself to the Saints and friends. We believe the cause has lost nothing.

Next day after the discussion Bro. Amend took us in his buggy to Bro. Moore's and the following day Bro. Scott took train for home, accompanied by Sr. Moore, who went to Lamoni to visit her parents. Bro. Renfroe and myself went with them as far as Bower, where they left the train to wait for the north bound "Rock Island," while we continued to Fort Worth, where we found a home with Bro. J. E. Nicoll and his excellent wife, to recruit and catch up with our correspondence.

We found our aged uncle, L. L. Wight, here gathering a few of the Saints and friends together in private houses and striving to instruct them in the gospel. On the second night of my arrival here I preached my first sermon in Texas with good liberty, to about twelve "in" and "outsiders," in the home of Bro. McFarland.

My uncle left me this morning to go to Cleburne to visit his son Henry, and tell the gospel story there. I will remain here until the 31st, when I go to San Antonio, and from thence to Pipe Creek to attend the conference of the Southwestern Texas district.

The year is before us; "What shall the harvest be?" With requests for prayers for this great mission, I am,

Yours in bonds,

H. O. SMITH.

Editors Herald:—As I have never written a letter for your columns, I thought, inasmuch as I was appointed by General Conference as a missionary to labor in southern Indiana, I would give notice of my leaving the Decatur district today by the way of Burlington, enroute for St. Louis, by special request of my son, Edward, and J. C. Hitchcock, president of the St. Louis branch, where it is expected that I will occupy in gospel work over Sunday. Thence onward to Byrnville, Harrison county, Indiana, to commence work in the new field. In leaving the Decatur district, where I have labored for the past three years, I wish to say to both Saints and the many friends with whom I have associated so long, that I leave you regretting that such association ends for a time. I am very thankful to all for kindness toward me in times of need. I have not words to express my thankfulness to God for his kindness in giving the aid of his Spirit in preaching the word and in administering in the ordinances of his gospel.

I am also pleased that since the conference closed I have witnessed some marked manifestations of God's power in healing several sick, some nigh unto death. I am glad of the opportunity I have had of leading seven more precious souls into the waters of baptism, one at Benton, four at Spring Valley, and two at Evergreen. I leave many others believing, and hope they will not put off the time of their coming into the fold.

May God speed the work.

Yours for truth,

T. J. BELL.

Editors Herald:—For the information of my friends and correspondents I wish to say that the above will be my field address until further notice.

I left my son's home at Baker, Kansas, on the 11th inst., and called on Bro. and Sr. Buckley, at Leavenworth, Kansas, almost the only members in that historic and populous city, which is situated so near the "center," in the "regions round about."

On the 12th I left for St. Louis. Occupied at the city over two Sundays, morning and evening, and in the week time in the "vicinity missions." Was pleased with my visit and reception. Especially was I pleased with the invitation at parting, "come again, Bro. Davis."

The street car strike is very detrimental to travelers. Hope they will "settle" soon.

I left for this place on the 25th, and spent Sunday very pleasantly with the few members found here. There is no place for preaching. I hope matters will put on a more promising aspect as time passes along and we enter deeper into the heart of our field. In bonds,

J. T. DAVIS.

Editors Herald:—Are there not some of the Saints who are desirous of adopting a nice baby? Sr. Teters, who died last fall, left a young baby. The father, Bro. Wm. Teters, having several small children, is unable to take care of it longer, and would like to give it to some good Saints. It is a lovely baby, now nearly eleven months old. Any one desiring any information can correspond with me, as I have the correspondence in charge. Address me at Fairbank, Buchanan County, Iowa. In bonds,

Original Poetry.

"JESUS WEPT."

"Jesus wept." Oh words so blessed
As ever mortal tongue expressed,
To feel that Christ our Savior knows,
And enters into all our woes.

"Jesus wept." Not this alone,
But rolled away the massive stone;
So rocks of error may we move,
Our love to God by service prove.

"Jesus wept." This was not all;
He, Lazarus from the the grave did call.
Let us still call and strive to win,
Poor erring mortals lost in sin.

"Jesus wept." Yes, words and deeds
Go hand in hand where'er He leads,
Our precious pattern, guide, and friend,
From birth through life and at the end.

"Jesus wept." May we like Him
Weep for each other's griefs and sin;
That mutual love may others show,
The Christ-life began on earth below.

"Jesus wept." Oh bless the time
That I first read those words sublime;
Then hasten, righteous reign of peace,
When weeping shall forever cease.

In the days of knighthood every man carried a sword and was ready to slash his neighbor upon the slightest pretext. When friends met they grasped one another by the right hand, thereby indicating peaceable intentions, as each one thus gave up to the other his fighting arm. That is why we shake with the right hand.—Ladies' Home Journal.

THE BOER'S HYMN.

"Our strength is in our God of hosts,
Our times are in his hand;
The wrath of man that idly boasts,
We fear not in the Rand.
From farming dale, from soil and loam,
We're coming, God of Might,
The ramparts of our mountain home
To shield. Guard thou the right."

IN THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF EVERYDAY SUBJECTS DISCUSSED.

IN THE GARDEN OF MY SOUL.

"There's a fence about the garden of my soul;
I built it up, and strive to keep it there."

In the early days, when we children had our gardens in a row under the south wall, one of my brothers set up a rabbit hutch. My little plot came next to his, and as the door of the hutch was insecurely fastened, it happened once or twice that the tiny plants, on which much care and thought had been expended, were nibbled to the root.

As a means of protection I built up a little fence with pieces of wood. This discouraged the rabbits, and if they escaped in the night they would roam onto the meadow beyond, or the family cabbages, and my garden was saved.

One evening it happened that after weeding and watering, I stepped back hastily and broke down the fence in one place. It was late, and I thought: "Just for tonight it won't matter; I'll mend it in the morning."

Just for tonight! And in the morning all the tender shoots were gone.

The cultivation of souls is very much like gardening. The digging out and weeding, the planting, sowing and watering, the times of rapid growth, the times of rest. One can find parallels everywhere.

But it was when thinking of a very important part of the soul's garden—one neglected by many people—that the old rabbit story came into my mind.

THE FENCE.

It is possible to carry on earth gardening without a fence, though it is not often satisfactory; but it is not possible to work successfully in the soul garden unless a fence has been built up carefully all round and is kept intact.

The materials of which this fence is to be built are definite rules of prayer, reading, worship. If there is no fence, neither will there be any progress in the soul garden; the only work done will be spasmodic and weak; the enemy may come in and trample as he will if there is no barrier to keep him out.

If you wish to cultivate your soul, please make this fence at once and keep it whole. By this I don't mean make a lot of rules you cannot possibly keep; the fence should be of the very simplest materials, only when your simple rules are made they must be kept.

"There's a fence about the garden of my soul;
I built it up and strive to keep it there—
A fence of quiet thought and meditation,
Of reading of God's word, and fervent prayer.
"If one corner of this fence is left neglected,
If I carelessly omit the prayer or praise,
Through the tiny hole my enemy may creep in,
And undo the patient gardening of long days.

"But if I keep my fence quite firm and steady,
And make it stronger as the days pass by,
The garden of my soul which lies within it,
Will be filled with flowers pleasing to the eye,"

And not only flowers, but fruit—fruit in the form of some work done for love of God and my neighbor.

Just think for a minute, you who have built your fence and cultivated your soil. Ask yourself: "Where is the fruit?" and believe me, that unless there is some fruit of work and love, the condition of that soul garden cannot be satisfactory.

Real religious improvement can never end in the mere cultivation of self. One always feels, for that reason, that David's prayer, expressed in the fifty-first Psalm, is wonderfully comprehensive. He has expressed contrition, prayed that the sense of God's presence may not be taken from him, and says: "Then will I show thy ways to the wicked, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." (By the way, make that Psalm a part of your fence.)

"All may save self; but minds that heavenward tower,
Aim at a wider power—
Gifts on the world to shower.
And this is (not at once) by fastings gained,
And trials well sustained;
By pureness, righteous deeds, and toils of love,
Abidance in the truth, and zeal for God above."

One thing more. Don't deceive yourself into thinking that "Just for tonight it won't matter. I'll build up the fence—say the prayer, read my Bible—again tomorrow." For these are the very moments for which your bosom enemy is looking out.

One evening's carelessness, and the work of months may be undone, and careless about the fence is inexcusable, because it is so easy to keep it in repair—that is, if you are wise enough to make it of a reasonable size, and not too ornamental.

A LAST GOOD-BYE.

I was glancing through Collier's Weekly,
A popular home magazine,
Where sketches from every nation
By artists of fame may be seen.

There were sketches of war with its horrors,
And sketches of scenery grand,
And many of drama and stage life,
So brilliant in every land.

I was turning from one to another,
And carelessly passing them by,
When I came to a very small picture,
Where was written, "A Last Good-bye."

A soldier boy waiting the transport,—
Not one of our own boys in blue,—
Whose face was a face to admire,
So noble, yet tender and true.

And there, with her hand on his shoulder,
Looking lovingly up to her son,
Stood his mother—his brave little mother—
Who many a battle had won.

O! heart among hearts is the mother's!
God help those who send their life's joy
To fall 'neath the enemy's rifle;
Once this man was her dear, baby boy.

The years have passed by till that mother
Looks up to the face of her son;
But time cannot alter her feelings—
He must always be "mother's dear one."

She has watched him grow upward to manhood,
Begrudging the years in their flight,
Till at last he sails off to the battle,
Where death and her son may unite.

We read of the wives and the sweethearts,
We read of the mothers so true;
But I fear that we just pass it over,
As people so oftentimes do.

Far away in South Africa's region
Wages war with causalities great,
While at home are the grief-stricken loved ones;
Whose sorrow no tongue can relate.

Our lives with reality's burden
Is filled to the utmost, 'tis true;
But we always find time to be faithful
To those of the Red, White, and Blue.

Let us rise above prejudice ever,
Dip low into sympathy's part;
For we, with our Nation's proud banner,
Cannot stoop to be selfish at heart.

Ask the Father in heaven to comfort
The souls that are bursting with pain,—
The home-coming step they have waited
Never rings on that threshhold again:

For wives and for mothers whose dear ones
Sink low 'mid the battle's wild roar;
For each have a heart true and tender,
Be they Spanish or British or Boer.

A WASTED DAY.

Of all the griefs that fall to men,
I do not know a heavier than
The thought, when I kneel down to pray:
I've spent a useless day.

I do not find, that I have done
A deed that might God's praise have won,
Or paid the debt I ought to pay:
I've spent a useless day.

I do not find, that I have said
A word of comfort, or have shed
A light on some one's weary way:
I've spent a useless day.

I do not find, that I have tried
To help a brother by my side,
Or drive his heavier cares away:
I've spent a useless day.

Oh! that the blood once shed by Thee,
My soul from this offense may free:
Lord Jesus, may Thou be my stay
In Thy great judgment day!

LOOK for Brother Mintun's notice in another column. Whoever has the book will please return it soon.

NEXT week will be "Home Department" week. Watch for it, and put the thoughts and suggestions to work.

Following this will be "Library" week. Many inquiries have reached us upon these two subjects, and in a few paragraphs we hope to present a few practical hints.

WE wish to call especial attention to the position in which we are often placed. We are sent an article by some earnest worker, and the article possesses considerable merit. It shows much study in its preparation and contains many very good points. But it is long. Sometimes they are long enough to fill three issues of the Sunday school department in the Herald. Some of them are of such a character that to "cut" them would spoil them, and to use them entire is impossible because of the lack of space. So from them we can only take extracts, and this we fear may be interpreted as a way of disposing of them without using them. We have papers now on hand which we have held some time hoping that we would get our space increased, in which case they would be "available." There are but very few of them that do not possess much that is good. We are pleased to receive them all, whether we are able to use them entire or not. They are a very good index of the work being done in the various districts, and from them come many very good suggestions. Some of our best thoughts and plans of work come from a suggestion found here or there in some one's paper. Send in your papers, send them every one; and if they cannot be used, in the course of time they will be returned if you request it.

A SISTER who is superintendent of a district Sunday school association writes: "We would like to have you attend and take charge of the Sunday school work at our district reunion to be held ——, to continue about ten days. I think you are needed very badly, as there does not seem to be the interest in the Sunday school work in this district that there should be. Some lack interest, and others are young in the work and need encouragement and teaching. I wish that we might have a course of institute work at the reunion." This is not the exact language, but it is the exact thought of several others who have written upon the line of Sunday school and Religio work of our reunions. It expresses the condition which, to a more or less degree, exists in every district in the church. It expresses the thought, too, which many have expressed, that these reunions are very fitting places to do institute work for the two auxiliary societies. Many of our earnest Sunday school and Religio workers may be reached there who are not permitted to attend the general institute or convention, or even the district institute. They may be reached, too, by some one of the general officers—an opportunity somewhat rare, be it worth what it may. Much good has resulted from the work done at the reunions, notwithstanding the very limited time and opportunity usually granted. The workers have come in contact one with another and with the general officers, have exchanged thoughts and experiences, have been drilled in the actual work of teaching or conducting a Sunday school, have furnished good food for scores of children who had naught else to do or to interest them, and have carried with them to their homes a new zeal and love for the work which has not been barren of results.

This work has been done in most cases at the "off hours," or outside of the regular meeting hours. Sunday school and Religio workers have often begun their work at half past seven in the morning, so as to have time for a session before the regular work of the reunion began. Another session after the afternoon meeting is usually held. These, together with the four regular sessions of the reunion, make a very long, wearisome day for the few upon whom the work must fall. But they have stood by the work without a waver or complaint; and for their extra effort may they be abundantly blessed.

But we see a brighter day coming. Several of the reunion committees have in years past adopted the plan of dispensing with the afternoon preaching services upon week days and turning the time over to the Sunday school and Religio to occupy in institute and other work. The committees of other reunions are considering the matter, and some state that they will probably do likewise. This is certainly a step in the right direction; for it is quite conclusive that no one has either the strength or the disposition to listen to three sermons a day for ten days and get the full benefit that could be derived from them were there fewer in number. A variety of exercises is what makes it possible to do much work in a day without becoming too much worn out.

If all the reunion committees will make provision for time in which to do the work of the Sunday school and Religio, strenuous efforts will be made to provide profitable work for the time allotted. But do not make the mistake of setting apart one whole day for Sunday school work and cut it out of all other days. Better by far for both the work of the Sunday school and the reunion that the work be run through four days than to have the four sessions in one day. To bring it all in one day destroys the "variety" spoken of before for both the Sunday school and the reunion proper. Set aside the afternoon sessions of each day, from Monday till Friday, and give the Sunday school and Religio a chance, such as you would wish to have given you many places in the world,—a chance to be heard and a hearing,—and we believe you will be satisfied with the results.

Last year Bro. C. P. Faul, superintendent of the Far West, Missouri district, and also one of the Maysville reunion committee, extended us the very opportunity for work that we have just urged upon all reunion committees; but circumstances over which we had not control prevented our attending the meeting. We had hope that we could attend till it was too late to make other provisions. The committee did their part, but we were not able to do ours. We do not mean that there was no Sunday school or Religio work done, for we received report of very good work done in both departments; but that the officers of the General Association failed to reach there or to provide any program of work. We sincerely trust that it may not so happen again, and that the committee will not feel discouraged or slighted. We much regret that we were obliged to disappoint you, brethren, notwithstanding we did the best we could.

We would like to hear from every reunion committee, giving the probable date and place of next reunion. Also would like to hear from the Sunday school association officers of the districts connected with reunions. Please do not neglect this.

Conference Minutes.

EASTERN WALES.

Conference was held at the Saints' hall, 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff, May 12 and 13. Called to order by Elder A. N. Bishop, president. Appropriate remarks were made by Elder Bishop, in which he extended a hearty welcome to all visiting Saints. Elder T. S. Griffiths, vice president, followed with words of counsel and advice. Branch reports: Lydney, 36; gain 6. Cardiff and Nantyglo, no change: Ministry reporting: Elders A. N. Bishop baptized 5, T. S. Griffiths baptized 1, T. Gould, T. Jones, J. Jones, and Henry Ellis; Priest D. Edmunds; Teacher C. Kelsey; Deacon Moroni Bishop. District treasurer's report: Total receipts £2. 3s. 11½d., total expenses 13s.; balance in hand £1. 10s. 11½d. Bishop's agent's report: Balance in hand last report £1. 14s. 5d.; received £3. 10s.; total £5. 4s. 5d.; expenditure £1. 10s. 10d.; balance in hand £3. 13s. 7d. Both reports were ordered audited and auditing committee reported that reports were correct. Recommendation from Cardiff branch for the ordination of Bro. A. W. Trenchard to the office of a priest was then considered and unanimously adopted, and ordination ordered during this conference. Recommendation from Nantyglo branch for the ordination to the office of a priest of James Evans was then considered. The recommendation was unanimously indorsed and ordination ordered during this conference. At this juncture Elder David Lewis president of the Western district of Wales, was called upon to address the conference. Resolved, that we accept the "rules of representation" as presented by the committee ordered to draft same at our last conference. The spiritual authorities of the church in America were sustained; also, Elder A. N. Bishop as missionary of Southern England and Wales. All the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons were sustained in righteousness by our faith and prayers. Bro. Bishop tendered his resignation as president of the district, so that his hands may be free to labor under his appointment. Resignation accepted, and Elder Thomas Gould was chosen in his stead. Elder T. S. Griffiths, vice president, Moroni Bishop, clerk; and Elder Henry Ellis, district treasurer. Sunday morning, short addresses by the following elders: Thomas Jones, Thomas S. Griffiths, Henry Ellis, Thomas Gould, and A. N. Bishop. At two p. m., Saints' fellowship meeting, in which James Evans was ordained a priest under the hands of Elders Thomas Jones, T. Gould, and A. N. Bishop; and Bro. A. W. Trenchard under the hands of Elders A. N. Bishop, Thomas Gould, and Thomas Jones. The sacrament was then administered by Elders Henry Ellis and Thomas Gould. Fourteen testimonies and eight prayers, and several hymns, with tongues, interpretation of tongues, and also the gift of prophecy was enjoyed, and the hearts of God's people made glad. At six p. m., preaching by Elders A. N. Bishop and David Lewis. Thus ended a peaceable and profitable conference. Adjourned to meet at the call of the president.

MANCHESTER.

The above district conference was held April 14, 15, and 16, convening for business at five p. m. the 14th in South Manchester branch 3 Denton Street, Upper Moss Lane, Hulme, England. Elder Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., district president, in the chair. J. Baty, secretary. Delegate credential were presented and received from North Manchester, Elder J. Dewsnup, Jr.; Farnworth, Elder Joseph Harper; Wigan, Elder W. Spargo; Northeast Manchester, Elder G. W. Leggott; Leeds, Elder W. R. Roberts; South Manchester, Priest John Foden. District president's twenty-second annual report read, and it was resolved to consider it as soon as all the reports have been read.

Financial secretary's report read, showing balance in hand at last report £2. 12s. 10d.; income for the conference year £35. 4s. 1½d.; total £37. 16s. 11½d.; expenditure £27. 0s. 1d.; balance in hand £10. 16s. 10½d. Missionary Home Fund account: Balance in hand £1. 12s. 1d.; income 18s. 6d.; total £2. 10s. 7d.; expenditure 10s.; balance in hand £2. 0s. 7d. This report was referred to Elders George Baty and Thomas Taylor to audit and report upon.

Spiritual reports of branches and mission read: Hunslet Car mission (Leeds) by Elder James Moir. Burley (Leeds) branch by Priest Walter Aveyard. Leeds branch by Elder Tom Roberts. Northeast Manchester branch by Elder G. W. Leggott. East Manchester branch by Elder S. F. Mather. North Manchester branch by Elder J. Dewsnup, Jr. South Manchester branch by Elder J. Baty. South Salford branch by Elder Edwin Nixon. Farnworth branch by Elder Joseph Harper. Wigan branch by Elder James Spargo.

Elders Joseph and George Greenwood of Stafford, Birmingham district, having arrived, were by vote invited to participate in the business and exercises of the conference. Ministerial reports: By resolution these reports, together with all the licenses of the ministry of the district, were referred to a committee of the whole to consider, and report on Monday. A recommendation for the ordination of Priest Walter Aveyard of Burley (Leeds) branch to the office of elder, was read. It was also requested that the case of Bro. A. E. Gayter, whose recommendation to the office of priest lies on the table, be reconsidered.

The next business was the consideration of the president's report. The president vacated the chair, which was taken by the vice president, Elder Henry Greenwood. The report read as follows: Dear Brethren, in presenting you with this my twenty-second annual report of the spiritual condition of the aforesaid district, for the conference year ending March 31, 1900, I take the opportunity of acknowledging the hand of our heavenly Father in his care over each of us in the period which has now passed away, leaving only the remembrance of its joys and sorrows, pleasures and pains, with such advantages as wise men may reap from such experiences, conducing, I trust, to the development of our integrity before God, the increase of our strength and faith in the Lord, and in "the power of his might," with a stronger determination than ever to continue the "Battle to the Gate," so that ultimately with our Father's permission we may enter in and enjoy the promised reward. In reference to the spiritual condition of the district, I regret that I am unable to report any very substantial progress in this direction. The spiritual condition of the district still leaves much to be desired. The presiding officers of the several branches are, so far as I know, in harmony with district action; and with very few exceptions the same may be said of the elders and others responsible to district authority. I am sorry to report that in my opinion the policy pursued by the mission authorities for some time past have been more or less hostile to the policy pursued so long and successfully by those responsible for the government and control of the district. Motives have been impugned, intelligence questioned, and official actions travestied. For proof of this I refer you to missionary correspondence in Herald and Ensign during the last eighteen months or two years, as well as to your own experiences at the late mission and other conferences. Personally, since the period named, I must confess that the relationship betwixt the mission president and myself has not been as cordial as it might have been, having differed upon matters affecting more or less the discipline and control of branch and district organization, the needs and character of missionary labor, as well as the manner and method of Sunday school control. These differences, if continued, can only perpetuate strife, eliminate unity, destroy peace, and injure the work of God amongst us. I have therefore decided to place my resignation as the presiding officer of the Manchester district in your hands. Thanking you for the confidence and trust you have reposed in me during the many years that you have sustained me in the discharge of the important duties of the office to which the church elected me over twenty-two years ago, and I trust that the same generous and trustful sympathy may be as freely accorded to my successor as it has been to myself. Still affirming my faith in the latter-day work, and in the divine calling of the martyr prophet, Joseph Smith, I remain your brother and colaborer in the gospel of Christ.

The report having been considered and several questions thereon asked and answered, the farther consideration of it was deferred till Monday. Nine a. m. was announced for committee on licenses and reports to meet; conference business to be resumed upon the rising of the court.

The services tomorrow, Sunday, to be held in the Vestry Hall, Hulme Town Hall at 10:30 a. m., two and 6:30 p. m. Speakers: Morning, Elder George Greenwood, Stafford; evening, Elder Joseph Greenwood, Stafford; afternoon session for fellowship.

Monday, called to order at 1:25 p. m. The committee on licenses, etc., reported as follows: Your committee beg leave and report. We recommend that the license of Elder Thomas Hughes be endorsed and restored. Elder Joseph Bennett and Priest D. Aitken, Jun., who have failed to report according to district rule 5, be written to by the secretary asking for explanation of neglect. We further recommend that the license of Elder Samuel Bennett, Priests John Morgan, Robert Hodson, Thomas H. Spargo, Ed Edward, and S. Warren, Teachers J. W. Fox, Jesse Porter, and George Bolton be continued under suspension; and that the licenses of Priest B. J. Finshel, Teachers Joseph Laycock and F. Green be suspended by this conference; and that the license of Priest Edwin Tordoff be referred to the district president for adjudication; and that in the case of Elder Samuel Bennett a committee be appointed to investigate and report to next conference; and we further recommend that the licenses of all the priesthood with these exceptions be endorsed. There are in the district 34 elders, 23 priests, 14 teachers, and 14 deacons. Report received and adopted.

The consideration of the president's report and resignation was now resumed. After several brethren had spoken, permission was asked and granted for the introduction of the following, as it had a bearing upon the question before the conference; namely, "Resolved, that this, the 1900 annual conference of the Manchester district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is of the opinion that much strife and contention would be avoided, the best interests of the work conserved, and the law of God observed, if the general missionary laborers of the church prosecuted vigorously the work lying before them without the limits of organized districts and branches, leaving the work in these latter organizations to the oversight and administration of the local ministry; except where there is definite and distinct evidence of gross neglect of duty, or where invitation to labor within the district or branch without the limits of a district, has been extended by the authority thereof. And be it always provided that nothing in the aforesaid shall be taken as objecting to wise and discreet supervision and visitation by the missionaries in charge or the general authorities of the church."

This was discussed, put upon its passage and adopted. A motion to amend having been put and lost. On resuming the discussion on the report, a little time having elapsed in which several brethren spoke, the following was submitted: Resolved, that we regret the reasons which have caused the president of the district to report as he has, and to tender his resignation; and we very respectfully show our utmost confidence in our brother by asking him to reconsider and withdraw his resignation, and hereby pledge ourselves to severally and collectively support him in his office and calling. On this being put to the vote it was carried by every person in the assembly rising to his feet.

Elder Dewsnup said that in compliance with this unanimous wish of his brethren, he would continue as hitherto to serve them to the best of his ability; thanked the body for its sympathy and support. The next item on the agenda was as follows: The attention of this assembly having been called to letters appearing in the Saints' Herald of October 18, 1899, and January 17, 1900, over the signatures of Elders F. G. Pitt and William Newton, and it appearing unto us that the said communications are reflective upon the integrity and ability of the elders of this district; be it resolved that we hereby place on record in the minutes of this conference, our deep deprecation of the unfriendly and hostile spirit that has prompted the aforesaid ministers of the gospel and general church appointees to so grossly misrepresent the official ministerial actions of the very large majority of the elders of this district. Carried unanimously.

Recommendations for ordinations: That Priest Walter Aveyard be ordained an elder, and Bro. Albert Gayter a priest, was placed before the meeting. The president called upon Elder T. Taylor to offer prayer on behalf of the conference, that the Spirit of the Lord influence our voting when considering these recommendations. After prayer had been offered, it was moved that Bro. Aveyard be ordained to the office of elder. This was carried by the unanimous vote of the conference. The Leeds brethren having shortly to depart by train to their homes, the president called upon Elders Henry Greenwood, James Moir, and John W. Rushton, to ordain our brother; this was done, Bro. Rushton being spokesman, the Holy Spirit's presence being felt by all present. Permission to ordain Bro. A. Gayter to the office of priest, was also unanimously accorded, subject to the approval of the branch to which he belongs at the time of the ordination.

The auditors presented their report upon the financial secretary's accounts were handed back for completion, reported the books correct and well kept. Report received and ordered spread upon the minutes. The financial secretary's report was then received and adopted. On motion the financial secretary and treasurer were authorized to open a banking account, and to place all surplus moneys therein. Brn. S. F. Mather, J. Dewsnup, Jr., W. R. Roberts, were appointed a committee to inquire into the feasibility of running a monthly paper in the interests of the district. Bro. John Foden was sustained as musical director of the district for the next conference year. Resolved that the rota preaching plan, together with the system of assistant elders to branches be continued. Vote of thanks accorded to Elder William R. Armstrong for past labors in connection with tract distribution. Resolved that the authorities of the church—local, district, and general—be sustained in righteousness, according to law. Resolved that a copy of the minutes of this conference be sent up for publication in the Saints' Herald. Resolved that the location of the next conference be left to the district authorities. Votes of thanks were given to the South Manchester branch for use of meeting room; to the catering committee, chorister and musicians, Saints for locating visitors, etc. The president said in conclusion he was thankful to God for his blessing upon the conference, and the good feeling manifested during the whole of the sessions. The business of the conference being completed, the session was turned into a fellowship meeting, Elder Henry Greenwood in charge. He made a few opening remarks, and thanked the Lord for the success of the conference; said he believed that which had been done would be of lasting benefit to the work of God in this district. A number of soul-cheering testimonies were borne; they were humble, spiritual utterances. An enjoyable conference was brought to a close by singing, and prayer by Elder J. Dewsnup, Sen. The Sunday services were largely attended, and were marked by an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, cheering and encouraging to both Saints and strangers.

Sunday School Associations.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

London district Sunday school convention will meet with St. Thomas branch, Friday, June 15, at 2:30 p. m., one day before conference. We heartily urge all to attend. Sunday school secretaries will please make out their reports; and superintendents, write out brief accounts of your schools, general condition, and the interest taken therein by the pupils and the Saints. Send all reports to Willie Evans, 474 Adelaide Street, London, Ontario.

Northern Michigan district Sunday school association will convene at Boyne City, June 22, at 9:30 a. m. A full report of schools desired. Come all and help us to make it a success and the means of advancement in the district.

W. D. ELLIS, Supt.
C. B. JOICE, Sec.

Convention of Northeastern Illinois district Religio association will convene at Mission, Illinois, June 22, at 3:15 p. m. (see conference notice in this issue for directions as to how to reach Mission). The election of officers occurs at this convention, as well as other important business, and it is hoped that all the Religio workers and friends in the district will make an especial effort to be present. Come prepared to take part in the convention, and to help to make it a success.

MARIE H. CLARK, Pres.

South Missouri district Sunday school convention will convene at the Saints' chapel, five miles east of Ava, Douglas County, Missouri, July 6, at ten a. m., and close at night with an entertainment. The schools throughout the district should take notice, and come well prepared with good thoughts on Sunday school work, songs, recitations, essays, etc., suitable for the occasion. Remember, it is on the day before the conference, and at the same place.

NOTICE HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The Board of Publication consists of the following persons: E. L. Kelley, President: John Smith, Treasurer and Business Manager; J. A. Gunsolley, Secretary; Fred B. Blair, and J. W. Wight. The first two named are the Executive Committee.

We hereby call upon all who are indebted to the Publishing House to make settlement as early as possible, and thus lend their financial support to this important branch of church work. The price of the Herald will hereafter be $1.50 per year to all persons, and all subscribers who are in arrears for six months will be dropped from the list unless arrangements are made with the Publishing House for payment. All Herald subscribers who are now in debt will be permitted to settle upon the basis of $1.50 per year, providing such settlements are made within six months from this date.

Book agents are requested, if possible, to make returns to this Publishing House the first of each month, and to cease retaining commissions on sales when they order books, so long as they are in debt. Commissions when due will be allowed when settlements are made. "Pay what thou owest," is a part of the divine plan; and "Owe no man anything but love," should be observed by all Saints. Prompt payments insure confidence in business as well as religion, and confidence is essential to success.

A new catalogue of books will be issued as soon as possible.

Remittances should be made by post office and express orders, bank drafts on Chicago, or registered letters.

Send all business letters and make all money payable to Herald Publishing House, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

Personal matters mark John Smith. Write your orders plain, pointed, and legible, describing just what you want, with name and price as advertised, so that mistakes may be avoided.

Volume 3 of Church History is now in preparation and we will fill orders as soon as ready.

In view of the great increase of the free list the Board has found it necessary to say that after June 1, 1900, the Autumn Leaves will not be sent free to the missionaries' families; but the Saints' Herald will be furnished as heretofore.

Bills to May 1 are being sent to all debtors, and we kindly ask you to help us. If there are mistakes we will gladly correct them on evidence.

JOHN SMITH, Manager.

WANTED.

To borrow money for the Herald Publishing House, in sums from one hundred dollars and upwards, for which we will give ample security, and pay interest.

FOR SALE.

By the Herald Publishing House, one large cottage, with nearly two acres of land, and barn, fruit trees, and fine lawn, bounded by four streets, and near the Herald Office. Cash, or part payment. For particulars inquire of John Smith, Treasurer, Lock Box E, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa.

BISHOP'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Decatur District, Greeting:—The bishopric of the Decatur district is now fully organized, and the hearty coöperation of the Saints in this district is earnestly desired, so that the work may be done as it should,—that the poor may be cared for, that the needs of the families of the missionaries may be supplied, and that other legitimate church expenses may be met. This can be done only by a united effort on the part of all concerned—and surely all Saints are concerned.

The bishop of the district and his counselors will receive and receipt for tithes and offerings wherever they may be; but for the convenience of these in the several localities we have made arrangements with the following persons to act as solicitors, who will receipt for tithes and offerings and report to us once a month:—

In the Davis City branch, H. A. Hartshorn; in the Leon branch, Asa S. Cochran; in the Pleasanton branch, Lewis Moffett; in the Allendale branch, Arthur B. Whorlow; in the Centerville branch, David Archibald; in the Lucas branch, Thomas Hopkins; in the Cleveland branch, John Jervis; in the Hiteman branch, Sr. Ellen White; in the Ellston branch, Joseph A. Anderson; in the Greenville branch, John Lovell; in the Evergreen branch, A. V. Minton; in the Lone Rock branch, Frank Hitchcock.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

In Lamoni, we have made arrangements whereby money can be paid to any of the following: Bishop E. L. Kelley; John Smith, business manager of the Herald Office; W. A. Hopkins, cashier of the State Bank; and F. M. Smith, who can usually be found at the Herald Office. When possible pay to the last named or one of the bishopric. However, any one of the above-named will gladly give receipts for moneys.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints and Missionaries of Indiana, Greeting:—Having been appointed submissionary in charge of the above-named State, I desire the prayers and hearty coöperation of all the Saints and missionaries in the work of God.. We know that the laborers are few, but trust that the moral and spiritual strength of the few may be equal to the task before us. It will be our aim to open up as many new places as possible, and leave the work in the branches with local officers, as much as the best interest of the work will permit and not injure the work at large.

I am unacquainted with the needs of the work in the southern part of the State, but will try to reach that part before long.

I trust the missionaries will push the work in their field of labor to its utmost, as we believe the time is growing short for the Gentiles, and this gospel must be preached. We must not say the Lord delayeth his coming, and illtreat his servants, for he will come and reckon with his servants. So let us work and build up his kingdom—in fact work together, God helping us to do it in an acceptable way to him.

I trust the Saints will help with their tithes and offerings to keep every missionary in the field. Your brother for work,

G. A. SMITH, Submissionary.

Home address: Box 23, Fremont, Steuben County, Indiana.

I have made arrangements to enter into the field of labor assigned me about June 1. As I have been placed in charge of Clinton, Missouri, district, with Elder Lee Quick assistant, A. C. Silvers and J. N. Stephenson missionaries, I take pleasure in making things as pleasant for all in the district as possible. And to do this we must all feel interested and work together in the spirit of the gospel in this great gospel work. Those holding the priesthood wishing to join us in the prosecuting of this work will notify me of the fact. I will find work for them. Bro. Stephenson and I expect to follow up the tent work; invitations from you for it are looked for, and when received will be given our careful attention. Address me at Lowry City, Missouri. A cordial invitation is given to every one in the district to give a lending hand.

Yours in the faith,

T. R. WHITE.

To the Saints of Southern Texas, Greeting:—Whereas, General Conference has assigned me, as my field of labor, in your midst the coming year, let me ask of you in the various parts of this great field to write me where openings for preaching can be had. And the scattered Saints are especially invited to correspond. Think of it, Saints, the great field of Texas, and then count up the number of laborers assigned to this vast field. Surely the quotation of Luke 10: 2 has again come to pass. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. Now, dear Saints, shall we not marshal our small and scattered forces and meet the enemy on his own ground, and if we only succeed this year in driving in his pickets and sowing the good seed, surely there will be reaping by and by, for this gospel must fill the whole earth.

C. F. BELKHAM.

Address: Deatin, Polk Co., Texas.

CANADIAN SAINTS TAKE NOTICE.

REDUCED FARES TO ST. THOMAS CONFERENCE.

We have made arrangements with the undermentioned railways: Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific, Michigan Central, Lake Erie, and Detroit. Delegates must purchase first-class full fare one way tickets to St. Thomas, and obtain certificates to that effect on standard certificate form, form 98. Ticket agents are supplied with standard certificates and are instructed to issue on application. Purchase your ticket and obtain your certificate at least fifteen minutes before train time. On arrival in St. Thomas present certificate to me; I will sign it, and you will, when you desire to return home, present certficate to the agent and you will receive the following rates, as per agreement. If three hundred have certificates, you return home free. If fifty you return at one third of the one way first-class fare. If less than fifty at two thirds, of the one way first-class fare. This applies over all roads mentioned above. All members are delegates. Tickets good to go on June 13 to 15; to return from 15 to 19. No stop over permitted. School convention meets June 14. Conference meets June 15, at ten a. m. We expect President Joseph Smith will be present. R. C. EVANS.

WATERFORD, Ontario, May 30, 1900.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of London district will meet with St. Thomas branch, June 16 and 17, instead of 9 and 10 as per resolution; the date having been changed on account of an expected visit from Joseph Smith. Arrangement will be made with all railways of Ontario for reduced rates. Purchase a single ticket to St. Thomas, and ask the ticket agent for delegates certificate to Latter Day Saints conference. If fifty are present having certificates you will get home for one third fare, but if three hundred are present, you will get home free. Secretaries, please send statistical reports of branches to Elder R. C. Evans, 474 Adelaide Street, London. Ministerial reports should also be sent. Let all who possibly can come to this conference, and bring the Spirit of the Lord with you. Be sure to come in time for the Sunday school convention on Friday afternoon.

MAGGIE MACGREGOR, Sec.

South Missouri district conference will convene with Sweden branch, in the new Saints' chapel, five miles east of Ava, Douglas County, Missouri, commencing on Saturday, July 7, at ten a. m. Branch presidents and clerks, please take notice, and have your branch business meetings from eight to ten days before conference. Branch presidents and officers that have labored outside of branches are requested to report in writing. The election of district officers will take place at this conference, hence look for a large delegation. Send all reports, petitions, and communications to my home address, Beaver, Douglas County, Missouri.

J. C. CHRESTENSEN, Pres. and Sec.

Conference of Texas Central district will convene with Cook's Point branch, July 7, at ten a. m. Branch officers will please see that their reports are correctly made out. Let all officers report in person, if able; if not, send report to district secretary. The Sunday school convention will convene the 6th, the day before conference. Come all, with the Spirit of the Lord, and let us have a profitable conference.

S. R. HAY, Pres.

Conference of Northeastern Illinois district will convene at Mission, Illinois, June 23, at ten a. m. It is expected that the new church will be dedicated at this time, and it is hoped to have Bro. Joseph Smith present. Mission is about eight miles from Seneca, on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad and about the same distance from Sheridan, on the C. B. and Q. R. R. All persons coming by rail will therefore please notify Bro. Thomas Hougas, Stavanger, Illinois, what road they will come on, what time, day, etc. Do not put off writing Bro. Hougas until the last day, but write him in plenty of time, so that arrangements can be made to meet every one. ELMER E. JOHNSON, Sec.

St. Louis district conference will convene in the Saints' chapel, 2518 Elliott Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri, on Saturday evening, June 23, at seven o'clock, and on the followlowing Sunday. J. G. SMITH, Sec.

NOTICES.

Persons coming to conference from a distance, which will be held at Tilbury, June 9 and 10, will please send a postal card to the secretary, so that we may meet all.

M. MIFFLIN, Sec.
A. F. CARLESS, Ass't.

BORN.

DOCKSTADER.—To Bro. F. A. and Sr. Joanna Dockstader, of Bevier, Missouri, on February 28, 1900, a daughter. Blessed May 20, by Elders F. T. Mussell and F. A. Evans, and named Ora Fay.

DIED.

NEIDFFER.—Sr. Ada E. Dara Neidffer was born April 7, 1862; died March 29, 1900. She was married to Samuel Neidffer, April 28, 1888; was baptized January 1, 1880. She was the mother of five children; a husband and four children are left to mourn; also, father, mother, four brothers, and two sisters. Burial at the Plainville, Indiana, cemetery. Funeral sermon by Elder G. Jenkins.

HITCHCOCK.—At Shenandoah, Iowa, May 24, 1900, Sr. Deborah J. Hitchcock. She was born in Hamilton, Ohio, January 8, 1838, and at her death was 62 years, 5 months, and 16 days old. She was married to Lorenzo Hitchcock, at Lovilia, Iowa, September 17, 1853. They moved to Tabor, Iowa, in 1866, and were baptized there October 13, 1872. They moved to Shenandoah in 1878. Seven children were born to her and her husband, only one of whom survives, Mrs. Mollie Miller, living near Hines, Monroe County, Iowa. The remains were interred in the Rose Hill cemetery according to the ceremony of the church. Mrs. Hitchcock was a faithful, loving, and devoted companion to the husband who survives her. She was a patient and kind mother and passed through the dark valleys of life when six loved ones were laid away with a trusting and triumphant faith. She was calm, kind, and cheerful to all who knew her and numbered many friends in this city who will sincerely mourn her departure.

MCINTOSH.—At her home, Denison, Iowa, Sr. Maggie May, daughter of the late "Uncle" John A. and Melinda McIntosh. She was born December 29, 1875; died May 10, 1900, aged 25 years, 4 months, and 12 days; and was laid to rest in the Saints' cemetery, Galland's Grove, Iowa, beside her aged father, two brothers, and two sisters. Graceful in person, Sr. Maggie was tenderly loved by her brothers and sisters, and she will be sadly missed by her aged mother, whose chief joy was the society of her fondly cherished daughter. She rests free from life's pains and cares and disappointments; her work done, awaiting the resurrection of the just, when she will be glad of opportunity for further development throughout the glorious millennium. A short and touching address was made to the many sympathyzing friends assembled at the home, and prayer offered by Elder Robert R. Montgomery; at the grave the service was concluded by Elder John Pett. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

The Factions on Polygamy and Spiritual Wifery.

A new tract by Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, which shows that the factions of the church, other than the one under Brigham Young, were originally opposed to polygamy; hence that polygamy is not traceable to the original church organization. Per dozen 15 cents; $1.00 per 100.
