ONE THING NOT MADE TO ORDER.

If a religion could be outlined, debated, framed, and finally adopted like a political constitution, there might be some reason to believe that the Mid-continent Congress of Religions, now in session in this city, would be able to announce a faith that would be reasonably satisfactory. Many learned and pious men are in attendance upon the assemblage and if mere human wisdom and erudition were competent to evolve a religion we should be justified in considering the task as good as accomplished. The trouble is that the qualities named will not suffice for the work.

The foundation of a religion—or, at least, of a religious creed—is faith in its divine origin. Somewhere or somehow it must be alleged with a degree of plausibility that Omnipotence has made a revelation to man. The Christian believes that the revelation came through Jesus Christ; the Mussulman looks upon Mohammed as the medium of the divine message; the Jew regards Moses and various other prophets as the mouthpieces of Jehovah. No religion, so far as we know, has been founded upon a general debate among men, no matter how learned, who did not profess inspiration from on high. Religion is not a matter of logic, but of faith, and all the "evidences," "apologies" and "demonstrations" ever written rest in the end upon that sentiment.

Therefore, though the members of the religious congress may formulate a creed that will appeal to the reason, the vital spark will be lacking. The claim of inspiration will be missing, for we do not deem it likely that Dr. Hirsch, or Dr. Thomas, or Professor Willet or Miss Addams will put forward the proposition that the Almighty has made a special revelation to any one of them for the purposes of the present gathering. The best that the religious congress can do is to formulate its combined wisdom into a declaration of principles which may be attractive to the logician, but which will no more be entitled to be called a religion than would the platform of a political party. It will be man-made, and not even the congress will contend that it is God-given.

A universal religion—one with "a common denominator," as the congress puts it—may yet spread over the whole world, though the event just now seems a long way off. But when the universal religion rises it will appear not as the result of a mass meeting, but as the fruit of a revelation—genuine or otherwise—which some man or men will claim to have received from the overruling power. A religion which does not at least claim to have its inspiration from the Divine itself is not a religion at all. It is merely a joint resolution. —Chicago Chronicle, December, '99.

DOES NOT FAVOR EXCHANGING PULPITS.

At St. Paul's Episcopal church last night, Rev. Irving P. Johnson lectured on "Why we do not exchange pulpits with other ministers." This was one of the best of the series of lectures Rev. Johnson has been delivering weekly for some time. Briefly stated, he made the point that since the different churches have different theories as to what constitutes religion, they cannot consistently exchange pulpits, and that those who do exchange put themselves in the light of pretenders.

"Religion is a matter of authority," the speaker declared, "and a man cannot officiate at an altar unless he is so authorized. If we attempt to follow everybody's advice we will soon be in the plight of the man and boy who carried the donkey, as related in the fable. I believe the church is founded on principles of authority, and that authority comes from Christ and the apostles, and not from some theory resulting from Tom Jones' or Bill Smith's study of the Bible. We want divine authority, not what some man thinks. We have a heart of our own and brains of our own and can think for ourselves."

The speaker indicated that the Episcopal Church is the original church and he characterized the other churches as "stepdaughters."—Omaha Bee, Dec. 15, '99.

BISHOP DOANE ON EVILS OF MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

New York, Dec. 7.—The convention of the National Reform association continued to-day its sessions at the Broadway Tabernacle. Bishop William C. Doane of Albany spoke on "Our Marriage and Divorce Laws: Their Danger and Remedy." He said in part: "A runaway marriage is prima facie a suspicious case. And a marriage asked to be performed late at night in the parson's house had better be left over until the next morning.

"Our office is called the form of solemnization of matrimony. There are no words in it that jar upon the ear more sharply than those words, 'advisedly, reverently, and soberly,' as one contracts them with the mere merriment and childish byplay and frivolity of the modern conventions of society.

"To be deplored are the excesses and excitements and extravagances that immediately precede and are the chief preparations for the sacred service; the crowds of irreverent spectators profaning the house of God with their display of clothes, their idle gossip, their careless curiosity, and the rude violence which exposes to conspicuous notoriety the man and the woman at the moment when they have the right of privacy and peace. It is high time that good taste and modesty and simplicity asserted themselves.

"Often the woman is sold to a fortune or a title and the man buys the heart of the woman to break it or to find none there."—Tribune.

LOCATING BROOKLYN'S NON-CHURCHGOERS.

New York, Dec. 5.—Brooklyn is taking a church census. Its pastors wish to learn the abiding places of its 600,000 inhabitants who are untouched in religion. The work is going on now in the First Ward—the Heights—where Beecher, Storrs, and Abbott have preached and where the multitude of steeples against the sky show the origin of Brooklyn's title of "City of Churches." These pastors were startled into a season of revival by statistics quoted last October by the Rev. John F. Carson of the Central Presbyterian Church.

Borough population	1,197,100
No. reached by church and Sunday school	593,363
Population not influenced by churches	623,737
Borough's growth in population in a year, 80,000 to	100,000
Increase in church membership same time	5,000

The Federation of Christian Churches and Workers, which has done census work in the Borough of Manhattan, has been employed by the pastors of the three districts of Brooklyn since Mr. Carson's figures appeared.—Tribune.

CHANCE FOR A GREAT BOOK.

In an interesting article in a German periodical, Professor Karl Sell pleads for the application of the historical method to the subjective phenomena of religion. "We possess," says he, "excellent works on the history of dogma, on the constitution of the church, on the ecclesiastical discipline, and on Christian art and literature, but the foundations themselves of all these manifestations of religious life and religious sentiment are not the object of any scientific investigation. We do not possess any historic study of religion itself, of primitive forms of belief and religious life, and all those phenomena in which religion consists and is perpetuated, such as prayer and sacrifices, inspiration and faith, charity and discipline, and perhaps pathological phenomena, such as enthusiastic ecstasy and mystic visions." It is surprising that no one has attempted to write a history of religion in this spirit, treating it as an effect rather than a cause. Here in the United States, for instance, and in almost any denomination, the gradual changes in the conceptions of Christianity are evident. It is apparent that religious ideals are continually changing and that the change has been constant since the earliest times. A wide field and great fame await the writer who will take the pains to apply the modern historic and psychological method to this subject.—Tribune.

THE LAST YEAR OF THE CENTURY.

Only twelve months remain in which to set in order all the things that belong to the expiring century, to the end of giving it a decent dismissal and to save the coming century from the handicap of an unfairly large burden of arrearage. There has been a rather curious misapprehension in the minds of many people as to the proper location of the year upon which we are just entering; and even in print there has been a good deal of allusion to the year now ended as the closing one of the nineteenth century. A half minute's clear thinking is enough to remove all confusion. With December 31 we complete the year 1899—that is to say, we round out 99 of the one hundred years that are necessary to complete a full century. We must give the nineteenth century the 365 days that belong to its hundredth and final year before we begin the year 1 of the twentieth century. For some reason the mathematical faculty usually works far more keenly in monetary affairs than elsewhere; and none of the people who have proposed to allow ninety-nine years to go for a century would suppose that nineteen hundred dollar debt had been fully met by a tender of $1,899. There would remain due just one hundred cents. It is to be borne in mind that the year 1900 is not a leap year, although divisible by four. Under the Gregorian calendar the year consists approximately of 365 days, 5 hours, 49 minutes, and 12 seconds. The accumulated surplus over and above the 365 days amounts, in the course of a century, to very nearly 24¼ days. To indulge in a leap year every four years would require enough remnants of time stuff to make up 25 days for every century. The arrangement in practical use allows 24 leap years each for three consecutive centuries, and then gives the fourth century 25 such days. Thus, though it is not likely to concern many of us in an immediate, practical way, it may be remarked that the twentieth century will be one day longer than the nineteenth, since it is arranged that the twenty-fifth leap year which is assigned to every fourth century shall be brought into the calendar of the year that is divisible by 400. The failure to sacrifice three quadrennial leap years—that is to say, three extra days in every four centuries—has led to the discrepancy between what is known as the Julian, or old-style calendar, and the Gregorian. — From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for January.

THE ADULTERATION OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

The surprising extent to which our commonest foods and drinks are adulterated and counterfeited, and the crying necessity for both State and national legislation which will control and check the evil, have been well proved by the results of the senatorial investigation which was made in Chicago last spring. Before the Senate committee, appointed just prior to the adjournment of Congress and headed by Senator Mason, several prominent chemists, food manufacturers, and others gave testimony. Dr. Wiley, who has been chief chemist of the Agricultural Department at Washington for many years, asserted that nearly every kind of food upon the market is, to a greater or lesser extent, adulterated, misbranded, or otherwise rendered harmful or fraudulent. More Vermont maple sugar is made every year in Davenport, Iowa, from cheap yellow sugar flavored with vegetable extracts than can be produced from all the maple trees in the whole State of Vermont! Currant Jelly is manufactured from the cores and parings of apples utilized after they have been evaporated; glucose, sugar, a vegetable acid, and some coloring and flavoring matter complete the delicacy! Nearly all of the "pure olive oil" imported to this country is cottonseed oil made in the Southern States, sent abroad, and there refined and returned to us as the pure product of the Mediterranean olive!—American Monthly Review of Reviews, January.

THE KINGSHIP OF SELF-CONTROL.

Man has two creators,—his God and himself. His first creator furnishes him the raw material of his life and the laws in conformity with which he can make that life what he will. His second creator,—himself,—has marvelous powers he rarely realizes. It is what a man makes of himself that counts.

When a man fails in life he usually says, "I am as God made me." When he succeeds he proudly proclaims himself a "self-made man." Man is placed into this world not as a finality,—but as a possibility. Man's greatest enemy is, himself. Man in his weakness is the creature of circumstances; man in his strength is the creator of circumstances. Whether he be victim or victor depends largely on himself.

Man is never truly great merely for what he is, but ever for what he may become. Until man be truly filled with the knowledge of the majesty of his possibility, until there come to him the glow of realization of his privilege to live the life committed to him, as an individual life for which he is individually responsible, he is merely groping through the years.

At each moment of man's life he is either a King or a slave. As he surrenders to a wrong appetite, to any human weakness; so he falls prostrate in hopeless subjection at any condition, to any environment, to any failure, he is a slave. As he day by day crushes out human weakness, masters opposing elements within him, and day by day recreates a new self from the sin and folly of his past—then he is a King. He is a King ruling with wisdom over himself. Alexander conquered the whole world except,—Alexander. Emperor of the earth, he was the servile slave of his own passions.—(From "The Kingship of Self-Control," by William George Jordan, published by Fleming H. Revell Company.)

J. J. Christian, author of "Immersion the Act of Christian Baptism," says: "Dr. W. D. Powell, of Mexico, recently wrote from Athens, Greece, as follows: I found that all churches in Greece, Presbyterian included, are compelled to immerse candidates for baptism, for as one of the professors remarked, the commonest day laborer understands nothing else for baptism but immersion. I visited the university and saw the magnificent library and museum. I asked the professor what baptism meant, and he said: It has but one meaning, to submerge, to immerse. Why do you ask?"—Register-Review, Oct. 8, 1898.

Father Hagerty in the Christmas Catholic World Magazine, in a very bright article on the "Ethics of Realism," quoting Ruskin, says: "You want to read books as you take medicine—by advice and not by advertisement." The article sparkles with clever sayings. He denounces much of the over-advertised literature of the day. Father Hagerty is a new literary light who has ability, a brilliant style, and high standards of literary taste. He will undoubtedly do some good in the near future.

"The novel experiments in anæsthesia by Dr. Bier, of Kiel, seem to promise important results. By injecting small quantities of very dilute cocaine solution into the spinal canal, the nerves are attacked at their roots, and the lower part of the body is rendered completely insensible to pain, the effect lasting about three-quarters of an hour. Very curiously, perception of heat and cold, as well as of touch and pressure, are not affected. Under this anæsthesia, severe operations have been satisfactorily performed; but the after-effects—which include dizziness, severe headache, and vomiting—are quite as unpleasant as those following chloroform and ether, and more prolonged.

A prominent Presbyterian Church in Newark, New Jersey, has beautiful young girls as ushers. The girls are tastefully dressed and attract many young men to the church. —Ex.

"NOT MADE TO ORDER."

One part of our cover articles for this issue, will, we think, be read with some interest as well as good-natured surprise. We refer to a partial report of a lecture by an Episcopal minister who in St. Paul's church, Omaha, Nebraska, declared that "Religion is a matter of authority."

Also an editorial of the Chicago Chronicle, of a late date, under the heading of "One Thing Not Made to Order."

This editorial shows how clearly the fair-minded man of the world can see a religious fact, while the average pulpiteer in a church with a creed, and the advocate of the higher criticism without a creed, cannot see that fact at all.

How, in a nutshell, the editor of the Chronicle hits it:—

> A religion which does not at least claim to have its inspiration from the Divine itself is not a religion at all. It is merely a joint resolution.

Rev. David Utter, General John Eaton, Elders R. B. Neal, Clark Braden, and their fellows of every shade of evangelical profession, attack Mormonism, the Utah manifestation of it; and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' phase of the faith brought by the angel, basing their attack upon the proposition that it originated in a fraud—a claim to inspiration from Divinity. All allege deception and a vicious disregard for the word of God, that is, the Scriptures, in faith, organization, and practice.

It is not a little curious that the system of faith and church organization instituted by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Hyrum Smith, David Whitmer, and others should bear so close resemblance to the faith taught by Jesus and his apostles, and the church be so near the pattern found to have been established from A. D. 30 to A. D. 70, and later.

Had Joseph Smith and his then co-partners in church building been learned men, leading men of mind and means in the religious world of their day and time, and had by a series of counsels, meetings, and discussions been led to adopt resolutions embodying in their several provisions, declarations of belief, church order, and church practice, as would have answered so fitly to the New Testament pattern as does now the faith of the Latter Day Saints, they would have been accorded a meed of praise for their candor, piety, and spiritual insight, and possibly have been hailed as reformers, if nothing better. But would they have had the success and suffered the persecution and ostracism that those men did and had?

By some sort of spiritual prescience the fact was acted on by them that a faith and a church to be of worth to men must be authoritative; that is, it must have authority, as stated by Mr. Johnson. And, they also acted upon the principle stated by the Chronicle editor, a church or a faith must have a claim for the divine or it is not a religion at all.

Joseph Smith and his coworkers claimed both, authority and divine origin; a double claim. Nothing but divine inspiration could have enabled Joseph Smith to have evolved so clear and comprehensive a system of faith, agreeing in so many ways with the already written description contained in the word, the Scriptures.

That the various bodies of religious associations claiming the consideration of men as churches doing business for the salvation of the human race are the results of "joint resolutions," seems to be a hard way of putting it; but what could a man like the Chronicle editor write otherwise under existing conditions. None of them claiming inspirational origin as a directing agency in formulating the faith, or forming organization, but all asserting in round terms the entire absence of the letter and spirit of revelation as an agent in church work; and all uniting in denouncing the claim made by Joseph Smith to angelic ministration upon the very sage plea that no such thing as divine interference in human affairs by angelic visitation is had or claimed by any of the churches; therefore, there are and can be none; therefore, Joseph Smith was a self-deceived religious crank and liar. Very inconsequential logic; we have not, therefore no one else has, or can have.

Doctor Thomas, Rabbi Hirsch and others are trying to find a "common denominator," in church affairs, and a chief way of doing it is to eliminate from existent beliefs and faiths everything to which any would-be image smasher or creed breaker may have objection to, leaving something of which every possible objector may presently approve, accept, believe.

But if the hard common sense of such men as the one who wrote this Chronicle editorial should by a chance get into the councils held in search of this "common denominator" in religion, or church affairs, it must block the way of progress by insisting that religion "must be authoritative," and "must claim divinity of inspiration or it is no religion at all."

We are reminded that it was once said,

> I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not: if another shall come in his own name, him will ye receive.—John 5: 43.

A "joint resolution," in religious interests seems to have currency; but the religion of the Master based on the word of God, and proclaimed by the voice of inspiration through the revelation of God to man, can find no place with the creedmakers, and possibly not with the seekers after "a common denominator," in the problem of faiths.

HELP APPRECIATED.

A sister writing from the East to the Bishop writes thus:—

> Dear Brethren:—I thank you for the aid you sent me; and you will be blessed for helping the widow and orphan. I must tell you I am sitting writing in my mother's rocking chair that Bro. Joseph's grandfather used to sit in, when he used to come through these parts to preach the gospel. O, if those times would come or if the elders could come here!
> Yours in thankfulness and truth,
> POLLY L. HYDE.

Sister Hyde is one of the old-time saints, as one can notice by her letter, for her father and mother used to entertain the elders in their missionary wanderings when the church was but young. Uncle William Smith was at his death one of the oldest Latter Day Saints, in the church in point of date of membership, and since his death it is probable that Sr. Hyde is now the oldest, or among the very few oldest. She and Sr. Seelye, now an inmate of the Home at Lamoni, were among the early converts to the faith in Western New York State, and are yet living to testify of the goodness of God manifest in sending the message of life into the world in these last days.

What a thought it is; that these veterans, long bearing the brunt of attack from the world, upon the faith, and withstanding every shock of battle and every effort of seducing doctrines taught in "cunning craftiness," should at last have their names enrolled in the Reorganized Church—at home and at peace—before the pale reaper calls for them, "ere the silver cord is loosed, or the pitcher broken at the well."

It is a tender and a loving reflection that the church has put the Bishop in such position that it is possible to receive and care for these aged soldiers of the cross.

REFLECTIONS ON NECESSITY FOR TRUTH, BOTH IN THEORY AND IN PRACTICE.

The question concerning church societies is no longer, "Are you orthodox?" Orthodoxy as a term belongs to a past age, the age of Calvinistic theology. We now are in an evolutionary age, in which the proper term is "independent." "Independent" beliefs, independent organizations, and independent personal conceptions of God and Christ, of heaven and earth, and of duties to fellow man, and independent policies and acts, a sort of "freedom to do as you please," in religion and in general, are the order of the day. Who would be bound to any creed or doctrine when such broad freedom and tolerant liberality invite to soar away from all religious or other restraints? seems to be the popular and growing conception. This is an age of religious and general expansion, hence Paul, according to its theories, must have been an old fogy when he held to and wrote about the Christian's "hope" "as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus." Men are become so independent that they, their systems, and their works, are independent of God and truth and law. They have taken up anchor and cast adrift from almost all restraints past and present. The moral restraints and limitations of the perfect law of liberty—of liberty for all—guaranteed in the law that requires of men love for and close adherence to truth, in the interests of all the race, are too rigid for men who would be free—free to think and do as they please without regard to the metes and bounds of law. Jesus is "a beautiful character," but his regard for the rights of man universal, his examples of meekness, humility, love for God and man, for neighbor as for self, are too restrictive and binding for this imperious and imperialistic age.

Men are determined to be free, to be a law unto themselves, hence the Babylonish spirit of the times and the secret combinations in high places to build up religious and other organizations and policies "to get gain."

Let us be "the children of the light," and be "free indeed,"—free from participation in, support of, and from contamination from such "evils," wherever they are found. We are commanded to "come out of" Babylon, to "touch not the unclean thing." We cannot be clean if compromised by the "evils of the world." There is no deviation from the straight lines of truth with God—"his paths are straight, his course is one eternal round." "Break not my commandments to save your lives," is his command. We cannot be true and yet be compromised with the world and its policies and popular driftings, by which so many are weakened. To love God is to love truth and to abide by it at whatever cost. We need and must have more rugged devotion to truth, more complete love of principle, more of that manly and womanly independence of character that fears not to stand by what an intelligent conception of truth reveals to be the plain path of duty.

There must be more of this spirit developed among the people of God and made manifest in their course of action in all things pertaining to life, if we are ever to rise as we should.

It must come. But, it will never come, it can never come, until men and women learn to turn their faces from policy methods and determinedly set their faces as flint against all forms of shams and policies that are opposed to frank and open methods and love for fellowman—all men, all conditions and ranks of men.

We repeat, that the crowning and crying demand of the times is for men and women too, (for both women and men are influential for good or for evil in their spheres,) who will stand for right, who will adhere to truth and be true, and that right in their home communities, in their own church, home, and social circles; who will cast their influence in favor of the real and solid truths that must underlie all the social, religious, and general fabric of society, if truth is to prevail to our salvation and the spiritual, moral, and general salvation of the people.

The age is full of shams and follies, as the world has ever been. Counterfeits and shams in persons and in principles appear in every circle and sphere, mingling with the true and good. The god of this world, at home and abroad, is money and the pleasures and vanities it aids to bestow or permit—a love for wealth, popularity, and for power, all of which are purchasable by desire for ease, comfort, and love to be in the social or popular swim with the tide; and all must learn to discriminate in order to attain freedom and to answer to God for their several stewardships as men and women. All this worldliness is based upon selfishness — selfishness of the worst kind—that selfishness that distorts men and women into perversions of the image of God, and which corrupts human nature and prostitutes to baseness and weakness by which humanity has been dragged down and corrupted in every age.

There is crying need for heroic men and women in the church and in the world; for men and women who will not bow to the shrine of error and policy however popular; people whose faith in God is of such a character that they will not yield to what is wrong in policy or tendency or sentiment to please anybody, but who, with a determination not to please men by displeasing God, having faith in the triumph of principle over policy, of right over wrong, will turn, like the Master, from the popular drifting of the tide and contend for the right, knowing that, as God lives, it must prevail in due time.

As for error, however general may be its indorsement by popular sentiment and popular action, it is weak, and must ever give way, in time, to right, which is strong, and destined to prevail, by its inherent force and trueness—its power. God lives to assert it, and the forces arrayed in the interests of wrong must finally go down in ignominious defeat and be subjugated if not destroyed from his presence.

Truth, justice, mercy, love for the common good, for the welfare of the masses of mankind, including the poorest, ought to challenge the admiration and support of men and women everywhere. True manhood and womanhood, nobility of nature, impartiality, love for the race, are glorious principles of character and ought to receive the unreserved support of all who love right.

Jesus Christ the God-man, the Savior, the Redeemer, the Elder Brother of man universal—of man whatever his race, color, political condition, civilization, or religious belief, challenges our love and admiration as he glorifies God in love for man, in his willingness to live, and teach, and bear, and suffer, and die with man and for man. He came into the world to live the truth, and, as became necessary because of human perversity, to die for it, and thus for man. God's love was and is thus revealed, made manifest both in its unreserved and in its practical character; and when that love is shown forth in human nature as it should be, there will be revealed the same high purposes and devotion and the necessary sacrifices to manifest it.

The Christ rebuked both the errors of Jewish teaching and tradition and the narrow selfishness of the leading classes. He confirmed and asserted the rights of "the common people," "the poor," to whom he preached the gospel and before whom he held up constantly the hope of ultimate redemption from social, political, and economic wrongs and oppressiveness, under his righteous reign and equitable rule.

There is strong need that we cultivate and make manifest this spirit to-day, as a people; that we, among ourselves seek out the neglected ones and labor to promote the unity or union of all the church, high and low, poor and rich, learned and unlearned, if there be such differences of condition among us. Christ taught that when one made a feast he should call in the poor, the lame, the halt, the blind, who needed help and uplifting, not the rich and influential; that he who so did should be recompensed at the resurrection of the just, because the poor could not so recompense the benefactor, but that the rich could make return "in this life." He also taught that he was not as a man who having twelve sons, clothed one in rags and another in better apparel, and placed one to advantage and another under less favorable conditions, but that he loved all equally; and he commended such parable to us, that in so doing we be like him. Are we so? Do we love to go only among those who love us, who especially please and pander to us, whose position is popular in society, who can entertain sumptuously and minister to our comfort the better—without regard to the poor?

Do we draw away from those who sturdily contend for right and who refuse, though in sorrow at our human perverseness, to play the sycophant and "truckle" to our want of sturdiness, and who follow, palliate, and imitate our weaknesses?

Some have suffered, even in the church, because duty to them was more precious than popularity, who steadfastly adhered to what their consciences taught them to be right, and hence to be adhered to. Some have been ostracized to a degree by those who should have been first to discern and commend and encourage their integrity. Nevertheless, the Master has seen and known and has regarded such in their integrity before him, and they will also reap their reward "in the resurrection of the just," though also blessed and commended of God here.

Such are true and strong men and women, safe builders, and such as love the truth and do much to aid its triumphs and the emancipation of the people. Such should be appreciated, though not flattered nor unduly praised.

Men and women of sound common sense and true hearts labor to glorify God, not to serve themselves. It was and is the Pharisees who seek the praise of their fellows. He is weak and to be pitied who exalts himself, however voluntary his simulation of humility. Men cannot labor for the praise or commendation of their fellows and be real, genuine, true in service to God. Such as labor for praise love themselves. They who love God glorify him, as did the Christ, who sought "not his own glory," but "the glory of him that sent him."

There has been, from the beginning, the written, revealed word of God to man which admonishes and demands cultivation and exhibition of the virtues, but there has not been an illustration of the written word wrought out in the actions and general characters of the people, and until there shall be such, humanity will be without the necessary exposition of the power of truth.

While Jesus the Christ reconciled the enmity of man to Christ, and thus brought man to God in his flesh, and thus proved and made manifest the possibilities of the superior life, and promised to man that through him and by him all might be made one by the power of godliness, it was not designed that his own perfection should end the work for humanity; but that, as in him there was recognition, both in teaching and in deed, of the superiority of the divine precepts and life over the human, in that he rose above all weaknesses, all tendencies to wrong unto complete obedience to law, hence into harmony with God, so should man follow in his steps, correct his low condition, and "overcome," and thus glorify God in perfect, reasonable service, thus labor to bring in everlasting righteousness by a practically righteous, redeemed humanity, here upon the earth itself.

The work of Christ did not end in his physical death, but is continued in his saving power to every creature.

We are aware that it is urged, and evidently as an excuse for if not as a palliation of present low conditions, that we can expect and might as well adjust ourselves to evils unto the end and that little improvement in humanity need be looked for, even among the church. If this rises to what we ought to expect, we have measurably misunderstood the teachings of the word and of the Spirit, ancient and modern; for the word and the Spirit have admonished and entreated to occupy higher ground.

We may have been in error in expecting of and in seeking to encourage the body to higher attainments, and possibly ought not to expect much more than we have; but we have imbibed the idea, error it may be, that the church as early as 1831-39, was scattered and driven because of her failure to redeem the land of Zion by becoming in fact "the pure in heart." We are yet of the opinion that nothing else than purity of life, growing out of earnest concern and heed to every word that proceedeth from the mouth of the Lord, will give us the victory for Zion, God's people, and humanity; and that it will not do to excuse ourselves in our carelessness by such conclusions that humanity must of necessity be weak and erring.

The mission of the church is a very responsible and important one. It comprehends more than the redemption and happiness of a few thousands of people who now are named Latter Day Saints. It means, that in the midst of the fall of Babylon and her decaying systems of darkness, weakness, legalized and unlegalized wrongs, that there shall be, in contrast, a glorious, triumphant manifestation of the truth in a redeemed, enlightened, and free people—a people free from moral, mental, economic, and political error and ruin; free from the present prevailing evil policies, and driftings of the general world, which is rapidly developing, ripening in iniquity for inevitable judgment upon it.

Jesus Christ came into the world and sought to save the world from its sins. Our mission is his extended through all who hearken to his voice, as "workers together with God." In his example there was a blending of true principle in teaching with righteous practice in all his deeds—a perfect exposition of truth in word and in fact. We also are in the world to teach the truth by a similar coördination of word and deed. We cannot convert the world by precept alone; the world wants example with the precept, an execution thereof with our proclamation of the truth, which is God's method of teaching, and as God has revealed himself, in word and works.

Past theological errors have gone down, but in their stead, thank God, the truth is proclaimed. And now, another step forward is needed, for with the strife of greed and money mastery the errors of Babylon are looming up, in other lines than in theological teaching, and to the destruction of the interests of the masses, hence salvation in fact, here and now, must appear in the operation of righteousness in all things, including the operation of economic principles ordained in the bosom of God for the redemption of the people; for salvation is not merely spiritual—it is spiritual, moral, and material—temporal—all of these.

We have no human devices or theories to propose, but God has revealed eternal law and order, and he wills that his people prepare by righteousness to draw near that he may counsel among them and work through them to their deliverance from moral and general, including politico-economic bondage, in the building up of

Zion. Our interests and the interests of humanity demand consideration along these lines, and the people themselves will be compelled in due time, if they are not now obliged, to give them due attention.

Every true movement upon the part of the people to establish better conditions deserves encouragement. The Lord stands pledged—not only to respond to our manifestations of regard to these questions, but has made himself leader and author in the establishment of such a system of Zionic economy as resulted in the redemption and independence of Enoch and his people, who found through God deliverance from moral and temporal and spiritual evils, in their redemption. Babylon is falling, at home and abroad, abroad and at home, and where are we? Are we where we ought to be? By no means. Does the faithful watchman on the walls cry peace and safety where all is danger and confusion about him? Certainly not. It is important then that we be awake, conscious of the danger and importance of conditions about us.

We started out to write a paragraph or two, a mere note, concerning the so-called "independent" (?) movements in theology as an "evolutionary" process of modern religious bodies, in contrast to the former rigid orthodoxy that prevailed but a decade or two ago; how the dead-in-the-shell systems of Calvinism, which refused the inspiration of the latter-day message, have now become so liberal that they are rapidly evolving into open advocacy of disbelief in God in fact, as they cast aside his word as a thing to be lightly esteemed. We have said much more however, that bears upon and has a logical connection as part of the subject.

We could not, as a people, take up the popular drift in such irreligious procedures of the world past and present, nor can we consistently enter upon an indorsement of its political and economic departures now being fastened upon the people to complete and make strong the power of selfish domination of the few over the many. We must be true to principle—the principle of justness and trueness, to the rights of all people.

As a people, our only safety,—more than that, our only means of ultimate attainment in God, in refined purity and excellence,—lies in close consistent adherence to truth, without respect to popular drift and popular driftings, no matter by whom proposed or from what they proceed.

We have been called to love the truth in loving God with all our might, mind, and strength, and our "neighbor" as ourselves. On the two commandments to love God and man hang all the law and the prophets.

He who builds upon any other foundation builds that that God himself has decreed shall not endure; while he who builds on that principle of godliness builds with gold, silver, and precious stones.

The lessons of all ancient and modern history admonish us that we must, by safe building, be workers together with God if our work is to abide, otherwise it too will perish as but a part of the systems and order of Babylon against which the wrath of God is decreed.

Truth, like its great Author, moves in straight lines, and makes no exceptions in favor of any persons or principles who through indifference, carelessness, policy, or perversity, place themselves in antagonism to or out of harmony with it.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR TO ALL.

With this the outgoing of the first number of the HERALD for the year 1900, the closing year of the century, the HERALD extends to its patrons,—brethren, sisters, and friends,—sincere good wishes for the coming year; "a happy new year to all."

Conscious that the passing of the years, with their sorrows and joys, have brought withal much of good to the children of God, brightening their hopes and increasing their faith in him, we are confident that the experiences of every kind which are common to all should continue steadily to increase both our faith and our capacity for happiness and trust in God, who, under the tuition of earthly experiences, designs that preparation of heart and mind in his children for ultimate redemption and completeness in him.

We can find no better spheres for usefulness and development than in the paths of duty set before us in the great work "intrusted to all"—the extension of the interests of the kingdom of God, having in view the redemption of brother man universal. Jesus, the Christ, Son of God, Creator and Redeemer of men, found joy and ultimate perfection in the paths of service ordained for him in the discharge of duty; and his life was tempered as his nature was the more perfectly adjusted to both God and man in sharing the inspirations and conditions of both — the love and light of God with the lowly estate and burden of human life, in its sorrows and its joys, in its shadows and its glimpses of the perfect day to be. We should therefore the more appreciate our estate, in which, though darkened by shadows of earth life, there is reflected to us the image of heaven, in contrast, as we are permitted to share the experiences and inspirations of our Elder Brother.

He rose above all things and comprehended and filled the measure of all things in the completeness of his life, by first descending below all things, in which he made himself a voluntary partaker of the lot of man in the trials and sufferings common to all. He therefore knows all the afflictions with which his brethren and friends are struggling in their efforts and sufferings incident to preparation for higher things. Because of such developed love and sympathy he is able to help those who are tried, to bind up the broken-hearted, and to proclaim to them and through them the acceptable year of the Lord.

We live, by faith in him, and trust that with the passing of the years we shall have joy in the triumphs of the work of God. We could ask no better condition, no grander mission than to share with our Lord the responsibilities of our calling as his people. We could receive no promises more inspiring, no hope more comforting than the promise of life in him. "The fellowship of his sufferings" is essential to "the joy of our redemption," and must first be shared ere we share with Christ in the heirship of children of God. "If we suffer with him, we shall be also glorified together."

The features of suffering and trial that come to all are therefore to be regarded as necessary conditions attaching to our education, our preparation for the higher life unto which we have been called; and we should therefore regard our passing difficulties as means by which we may attain to the higher mental and moral and general estate. He who accepts with a due measure of equanimity the difficulties incident to his work, and does his best, has the promise and conscious assurance that there shall be wrought in him and for him a preparation for and a partaking of the riches of the children of God.

The passing of the years in the light of the signs of the times should inspire the faithful to lift up their heads and rejoice in God. Earthly considerations, earthly conditions, are revealing their passing, temporary character; the world with its developments by man without God is falling with Babylon, with the passing of Gentile times, which are rapidly consummating to their final climax. Our work, the great latter-day work, looms up in magnitude and importance, and we should gratefully accept and live by the light it has brought to us individually.

It is our high privilege to draw near to God, to rejoice in him as we grow more completely into the spiritual and moral stature of his Son. May the coming year be to us a year of marked growth in grace as a people, that our development may be to the rejoicing of others in the world to whom we are called to be light-bearers, as it will be a source of joy unspeakable to us, "and full of glory," if we fail not to rise to the full performance of our high duties.

Preparation in righteousness, in unity based upon close adherence to the commandments of God, is essential to the enjoyment of that measure of spiritual power by which only can the work be extended. It is important that we be "very faithful," as admonished, in our respective spheres of action, if the coming year shall be a year for good to the cause.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Pres. A. H. Smith returned on the 26th from Independence, Missouri, where he had been called to visit his daughter, Sr. Emma Kennedy, who was very ill, but now is much improved. Bro. Smith himself is enjoying fairly good health.

Sr. Anna Nielsen, Nebraska City, Nebraska, writes of improving conditions among the saints of the branch at that point. The word is preached and other ministrations performed by Brn. Forscutt and his aids, besides help afforded by the traveling ministry. Some are added to the church from time to time and the outlook grows brighter with the passing of time.

"Liberty Hall," the home of Pres. Joseph Smith, was the scene of a happy holiday home gathering on Christmas Day, when the daughters, sons, daughters-in-law, and sons-in-law, with the grandchildren—those residing in Lamoni—gathered at the old home to partake together of the Christmas dinner and to celebrate the festive occasion with gifts and the usual merriment of the season. Dinner was served, after a season of social enjoyment, at about half past four o'clock, and early in the evening "the tree," containing the gifts of relatives and friends, was displayed and illuminated and robbed of it treasures, to the especial delight of the younger generation. Songs, instrumental music, games, and other amusements added to the enjoyment of the holiday home-coming, in which all shared as joyously as possible under the consciousness that some of precious memory had passed to the unseen state, there to await the final and complete home gathering. Twenty-two of the family sat down to dinner. Only Bro. and Sr. McCallum and family of Independence, Missouri, of the living, were absent, and who, had they been present, would have swelled the number to twenty-seven.

Bro. Israel A. Smith, second living son of Pres. Joseph Smith, surprised relatives and friends by a visit to the old home, where he arrived on Christmas morning, coming all the way from Wheeling, West Virginia, where he is employed. He returned to the East on the 29th inst.

Bro. N. B. Ament, presiding elder of a branch of the church at Harrisonville, Missouri, writes of the unity existing among the people of God at that place, who though scattered as to location are one in spirit, hence in labor together with God. He is blessed in his ministrations in the gospel.

Sr. Martha Salisbury, Benan, Iowa, reports the saints at that point as alive and working in the interests of the cause. Regular church services and Sunday school sessions are well attended and kept in line with their interest in their labors. The Lord blessing with gifts of healings to the afflicted and other manifestations of the Holy Spirit.

The Missouri State Teachers' Association in session at Jefferson City, with an attendance of one thousand unanimously adopted a memorial to congress to establish in the Indian Territory a system of free public schools to be administered by the proper authority at Washington and supported out of the United States Treasury until conditions shall permit the people to support the schools by the taxation of real and personal property.

Egypt will expend $50,000 to clear or cut out the thick vegetable growth which obstructs the White Nile. With an increased water flow the Nile is expected to greatly increase its productiveness, a matter of importance to Egypt, England, and other countries.

"Lord Curzon [of India] has received a curious proposition from Mirza Ahmad, a Mohammedan, who wants the British government to call a conference of all religions for a competitive examination, the test to be the performance of a miracle within a year." The native Mohammedans seem to be confused by the many phases of the Christian religion, as well they may be. They are not more inconsistent in demanding miracle test than are Protestant Christians themselves.

Portugal has sold her Asiatic possessions to Germany and her African territory to England. The transactions involve territory containing 14,000,000 of people.

The Viceroy of India has wired from Calcutta that there has been no increase of rain and that 22,451,000 natives suffering from famine are now receiving relief.

The trust mania, from America, has broken out in England, where large combinations are being formed. Attorney General Monnett, of Ohio, stated publicly at Boston that trusts make their millions through favoritism.

Austria will abolish stamp tax on newspapers.

Catholic authorities in America state that the Pope's decree concerning marriages between Catholics and Protestants only by his sanction during the holy year must be modified.

Charles Baylis, of Temple, Michigan, died in a dentist's chair from the effects of chloroform. A prominent physician urges that in the use of chloroform the respiration, not the heart, should be the chief condition noted by the physician.

An earthquake shock of considerable severity occurred over a large portion of Southern California during the morning of December 25. The undulations lasted about twelve seconds. Every brick building in the town of San Jacinto was destroyed; damage amounting to $75,000. Six Indians were killed at the Saboba reservation by falling walls. Between San Jacinto and Hemet hot geysers with strong fumes of sulphur have appeared since the earthquake.

High Roman Catholic authorities deny that the Pope has published an encyclical authorizing priests of Latin America to wed. Celibacy will continue to be imposed, and, as heretofore, many good men among the Catholic clergy will continue in unnatural and some of them in false positions. "Mother Church," it seems, remains as yet untouched, to any great extent, by the more liberal spirit of the age.

Advices from Boston inform us that Bro. M. H. Bond or some other representative man of the church in that mission is likely to meet "Elder Jensen," of the Utah Church, in discussion. Advices also state that one unauthorized so to do assumed to meet said Elder Jensen, on behalf of the Reorganization, ignoring mission and district authorities in such attempt and which resulted simply in confusion and no definite good, but rather harm all around, as we learn from this writer and which we also gather from a newspaper account of the affair. Persons should not assume to enter upon public discussions without being duly recognized by those in charge as suitable and authorized so to do. As a church we want to be represented, and not misrepresented.

Bro. J. L. Rust, Gladstone, Illinois, writes of his appreciation of the gospel and the expositions of its precepts which he reads and hears. He commends the word of truth as able to build up and make wise unto salvation.

The Rockford, Illinois, Register-Gazette, December 9, graphically describes the missionary work of Brn. H. E. Moler and F. M. Cooper at that point, as it also outlines the faith and work of the Reorganized Church in contrast to the B. H. Roberts' organization, or rather the Utah Church of which he is a leading and trusted representative. The Register-Gazette has good words for the work of the brethren and a fair statement of the faith of the church.

The Sunday News-Graphic, West Bay City, Michigan, commends as it publishes a synopsis of the position of the Reorganized Church on polygamy and the Roberts case, as summarized in a late sermon by Bro. J. A. Grant at that point. The Reorganized Church is commended for its stand on behalf of morals and good citizenship in religion.

Bro. J. W. Burget, West Hoboken, New Jersey, sends newspaper clipping which gives account of the expulsion of one Miss May Oller, from the German Baptist Church, Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, for wearing "a sailor hat." The paper states that Miss Oller is a daughter of the founder of the local church, who was a Bishop, and that though formerly a worker and Sunday school teacher she was given choice between her church membership and a return to the conventional "dinkey bonnet."

Sr. Ida L. Jones writes describing the Christmas festivities and exercises in the church at Kewanee, Illinois, by saints and friends. The services were appreciated as they were conducive to good to the people and the cause. She mentions Brn. T. F. Stafford and D. S. Holmes among others taking part.

Christmas exercises, under the auspices of the Star of Bethlehem Sunday school, were duly celebrated at Lamoni on the morning of Sunday, the 24th, in the upper auditorium of the saints' church, Bro. G. W. Blair, superintendent in charge. The decorations formed a feature of the exercises of especial merit, though it would be difficult to point out the many interesting numbers of the program, in which all, from primary to intermediate and senior grade scholars did well their several parts. Music by the school and audience, and an address by Pres. Joseph Smith were numbers on the program, not forgetting the treat distributed at the regular session of the school in its room, the lower auditorium. Last but not least was the Christmas offering, by classes, amounting in all to $150, which was turned over to the custody of the Bishop. The observance of Christmas was general more so than for years past at Lamoni; all seemed imbued with an extra amount of "the spirit of Christmas" and found it blessed to give, and all seemed to receive, and joyously. Skating at the Home pond, with the Christmas weather without and Christmas cheer within made the day enjoyable to all.

Bro. M. H. Bond writing from Dorchester, Massachusetts, the 30th ult., says: "Propositions for a discussion between myself and Elder Ephraim Jensen, of Logan, Utah, have been signed, and Paine Memorial Hall, in city of Boston, has been secured; discussion to begin Tuesday, January 9; four nights or more as mutually agreed upon or arrangement can be had for hall, etc. The position of the Utah Church and our own as regards succession, authority, etc., are affirmed. It is likely to attract attention and an audience. Elder Jensen seems to be courteous, certainly understands himself and the situation far better than the average Utah representative, and is by far the best man they have in the East. We hope for good results for the cause."

Failure of mills to supply paper has caused delay in issuing the present number of the HERALD. We regret the delay to our readers, but it was unavoidable. This is the first delay of the kind for years; we trust it is the last.

Letter Department.

FULTON, Iowa, Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—Elder Hand came from Clinton, Iowa, and spoke in the church here twelve times; the attendance was not large, but attention fair, and we think good was done. I think the district is getting in better condition; most all the saints seem to be alive and willing to come up higher. From here I took Bro. Hand to Green Valley branch, where he is to hold forth over Sunday the 10th. Elder Hand is unassuming, and saints and outsiders speak well of him.

In speaking with our brethren I find that some of the saints of this, the Eastern Iowa district, send their tithes to other districts. Now our district has been enlarged this year, and the following counties have been added: Benton, Iowa, Linn, Black Hawk, Bremer, Howard, Chickasaw, and Johnson.

Now, dear saints, please send your tithes and offerings to the district in which you live; it will give the district credit. The saints in our district as it stood before, have done well, and I hope that every saint in Eastern Iowa district will do his or her duty. Some of our branches have been and are doing nobly. May God bless them for their effort.

Send money by draft or money order to me at Fulton, Iowa. Registered letter is all right up to ten dollars, and I will send you a receipt by return mail. All moneys that the saints want to be recorded in this year's report should be in my hands by December 31, as I make report to E. L. Kelley, January 1, 1900. My desire is that this district should grow spiritually, and be sure to keep up with their tithes and offering.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

MOUND CITY, Mo., Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—We are moving along quietly in our sphere with our brethren. We have been trying to hold up the banner of truth to our fellowman. There are many who are believing the angel message; but oh the name they would have to bear is too much—they would lose their popularity and friends. What will a man give in exchange for his soul? Popularity, it seems, as many are doing that very thing.

While W. F. Clark and J. Arthur Davis were with us we held some thirteen meetings in a Campbellite or Christian church, with good attention, but only a few nights had a full house; bad roads, dark nights, and several sick in the neighborhood all worked against our meetings. At the same time there was an evangelist holding meetings within five miles of us. Those of the Christian faith would say that was better than the evangelist preached. We have lost two out of our branch in the last ten months; Father Ross, who died last February, and my son Robert, who died in October. Uncle John Knowles fell dead in the road, after he had gathered corn all day till dusk at night. His son Herbert was with him, and had taken the load of corn to the house, while his father went to drive the cattle to water.

The cattle came home, but Uncle John did not. They went in search and found him about forty rods from the house, lying on his face in the road. This was November 25. Funeral sermon was preached by J. Arthur Davis, assisted by the writer at Pleasant Hope church.

To-morrow I will start to Utah to visit my relatives, and try to convince them that they are in the wrong and bring them back into the true fold of Christ. Assist me with your prayers, for I have many relatives in that much despised and abominable church. God help them to see the light and come to it. R. K. ROSS.

GREENLAKE, SEATTLE, Wash., December 13.

Editors Herald:—After the busy tenting season which, this year, began in June and continued till October, we are very pleasantly and comfortably situated for the long rainy months of the winter in this quiet little suburb of Seattle—Greenlake. This pretty little lake is in full view from my window. The little band of saints here at Seattle are alive, and earnest, and steadfast in the faith. Although in a very scattered condition all over the city, they have their regular weekly prayer meeting at the home of one of the saints, and on Sunday we meet at the home of Bro. G. E. Ward, our presiding elder, this being the most central for all, and have a very interesting little Sunday school and saints' meeting.

In these meetings we are not alone, for the Lord verifies his promises to us, and though few in number, he is with us to bless; so when the time comes to separate we go home feeling refreshed and strengthened and well paid for the effort. In the absence of Bro. Ward (his business taking him from home a great part of the time) Presiding Priest W. C. Earheart has charge of the meetings.

The saints here are making a very strong effort to get a hall or place for meeting in the city in order to get the gospel before the people more efficiently. This is not an easy thing to do in this great city; rents are high, but they have a committee at work, and quite a sum already subscribed monthly. We hope and pray, as we work to this end, that this may terminate successfully.

We think the Lord's hand is over his work here at Seattle. Prospects look bright in another part of the city, Ballard, where the elders have been doing considerable preaching of late. O, what a glorious work this is! I know I can say this with greater zest and feel more fully the import of these words since coming into this mission. As I have traveled with the elders through Oregon last summer, and this summer through Washington, helping what little I could in the song service, tract distributing, visiting, etc., we have truly been blessed; and with the Lord's smile of approval all the trials and disadvantages of this work, for it is not all sunshine, are counted as nothing; and I have sat night after night and listened to the gospel message as it flowed from the elders' lips, like a benediction upon the congregation; have seen their faces lit up with inspiration from on high until at the close of the service many would say, "Surely the Lord had something to do with that kind of preaching;" "I never heard such before;" "It is every bit of it Bible;" "Just what I have wanted to hear for a long time;" "You can't get anything better;" "Every word of it truth," etc.

I well remember one old man coming up to the stand and with tears in his eyes patting the elder on the shoulder, exclaim: "That's all right; its solid, solid; go ahead!" At such times as these, O how one's very soul would sing out, "O 'tis good to be a saint in latter days."

I fancy I hear some one say "You were not sent to do missionary work by the church." Well, no, nether do I travel on missionary money. In the first place I was invited by those in charge to do what I could in this way, and all my spare time during the rainy winter days was spent in doing photographic work for the gallery where I lived, and many of the evenings were spent taking lessons in vocal music. So when the elders came along in the spring, although I do not draw my full allowance from the church, never have, I was ready to go along and pay my own expenses. I simply state this for the benefit of some who might want to know.

Elders Holt and Chase are at present at Mt. Vernon, beginning a series of meetings in the Christian church. We are looking for good reports from there, as this is one of the points where they took the tent this summer and opened up the work with such marked success.

Well as the two years' mission draws to a close I find my thoughts wander still oftener Zionward, to home and loved ones. I shall be glad to see you all again.

In conclusion, I would like to state for the benefit of my many correspondents of this mission that my address until March 1 will be, Greenlake, Seattle, Washington.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. A. M. CHASE.

LOOKOUT, Cal., Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—The saints of Mountain Home branch are still alive to the work of the Master. Brn. Fred Blair and Arthur Phillips have labored among us since November 12, and we have received much pleasure and profit from their visit. They are at present located at Bieber, a small town about twelve miles south of our regular place of meeting. Three of the honest in heart have been fished out from that community, and many more are persuaded of the truth of the angel's message.

Our branch now consists of three separate communities. Big Valley is the center, and parent family; Round Valley, fifteen miles east, has about a dozen members; and now comes Bieber, twelve miles south, with three, and well-grounded hopes for more in the northern part of the county. These are some members the fruits of the labor of Brn. Barmore, Blair, and Chatburn last year, that are not organized into any branch as yet, so we hope that God may so direct his work, that we shall have a district in the near future.

Our branch is enjoying more of God's Spirit than it has for years. We are made to know that the laborers now with us are indeed followed and directed by the Spirit of Christ, which is the Holy Ghost. Myself and wife were inducted into the kingdom by Bro. Chatburn last June. The Gospel Band have opposed us considerably here, but there is not very much prejudice from other sources.

Hoping for the spread of the truth, I am yours for Zion's redemption,

R. B. BROWN.

MATHEWSON, Okla., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—In consequence of the misunderstanding concerning the time of our conference, I desire to explain why I advertised it for December 8 instead of December 15, as some were expecting. Being prevented from attending the last conference, on account of sickness in my family, I did not know when the next conference was to be only by the minutes as published in Herald and Ensign, which said: "Adjourned to meet with Oklahoma branch, light of the moon in December." And as it had been my custom heretofore to send notice to church papers, giving time and place, according to adjournment, and not seeing the clerk nor hearing from him, and not knowing that he intended sending notices to papers, I therefore sent notices that conference would be December 8. Before sending notices to church papers I had written to different brethren and given December 8 as the time of conference.

And also desiring to hold meetings in the Oklahoma branch the week following conference, and also to have branch business meeting, etc., and desiring also to have this meeting during the light of the moon, and knowing if conference should be December 15 there would not be moonlight the week following. Therefore in view of the fact that no date was named for the convening of conference, just simply the "light of the moon in December." I sent notices that conference would be December 8.

But as Bro. Stephen Smith did not know my mind, nor me his, we both sent notices, and our dates were conflicting. Soon as I discovered this, I sent word to nearly all in the district, saying that conference would be the 8th. Some did not get the word, and those who did were surprised, and some could not well prepare to attend.

In consequence of the misunderstanding and bad weather (rain and mud), the attendance was not large; but we had conference, and those present were edified and encouraged. And feeling that most of the misunderstanding and disappointment was caused by myself, I desire to apologize and ask pardon of all concerned. I confess it was bad management; but we have not gained to the "fullness of the stature of Christ," nor do we "know as we are known," therefore liable to mistakes. I trust that as many as have said or thought that "Bro. Maloney has a head of his own," will continue to so think, but believe me this misunderstanding was not purposely on my part.

Our next conference will, according to resolution, "meet with the Oak Grove branch February 9, 1900."

To-morrow afternoon we have branch business meeting, and desire to see the branch more fully organized. There has been no election since the branch was organized five years ago, and only one branch officer, Priest H. K. Rowland being in charge. Bro. Rowland has remained in the faith and has done, I believe, as well as most of us would have done. But we desire to rally to his aid, and as Israel of old did their leader, "hold up his hands," that greater blessings may come.

We urge the coöperation of the saints in all ways possible: by correspondence; by your prayers; by your attendance at conferences and all other meetings; by tithes and offerings; by good lives and proper example; by refraining from evil, by studying the books —Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and and Covenants; by reading the Herald and Ensign; by attending to your own business and permitting your neighbor to attend to his; by having patience, love, and forbearance; by being clothed with the mantle of charity and endowed with Christian graces; by teaching your children to pray and guarding them from the vices and evils of the world, and to keep proper company; in fact we desire your coöperation as soldiers of Christ, and those who have enlisted in the army of the Lord for the emancipation of man.

JONESPORT, Me., Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—Since Massachusetts reunion I have labored in Maine. Arrangements were made at that time for me to labor for a season with Holmes J. Davison. Our plans for a fall campaign failed to materialize, though I looked forward with pleasure to an acquaintance with the "Land of Evangeline" and her people, of whom our congenial brother is (we presume) a fair sample. While we notice that our best laid plans "gang aft aglee," we are assured that there is a destiny that shapes our end, by the success that grows out of the ruins of our plans for labor. I have enjoyed my association with Bro. T. C. Kelley very much; he is a congenial companion in the field, and a humble, God-fearing man.

Our work in western Maine was not all we would wish in the way of success, yet good was accomplished. When the day comes that our branches keep the fire of faith burning continually; that is, each officer and member doing the work assigned them in the distribution of responsibilities and talents, then the general ministry will have more time to devote to those outside in "regions round about." Many good-living men holding office in the church seem to lack faith to "thrust in their sickles and reap," thinking that because they cannot preach like an apostle, there is no preaching for them to do. If they would exercise their talent in this direction with persistence, they would be surprised at the success attending their efforts, which cannot always be measured properly by the numbers coming out to hear and the remarks of critics; but the results are felt as well as seen in the improved spiritual condition of the saints and sympathizers—the whole body thus working together smoothly and effectually in the work of spreading the gospel and the edifying of the saints.

We came here the 5th inst. Conference, which convened the 9th, was a success, if the presence of the Spirit of peace, love, and power among the saints when assembled may be understood as signs of success. The spirit of contention in high places as well as in the more lowly was noticeably absent; and from the hearts of those who, in the past, have noticed its blighting influence, swelled the cry, "Bless the Lord, O, my soul." I believe there is a better feeling in both districts in Maine than there has been for a long time. May the influences that have been instrumental in bringing about this condition be allowed to continue, is the prayer of those who have the welfare of the work at heart.

Bro. T. C. Kelley left for Little Deer Isle and Stonington en route for Independence last Thursday. S. O. Foss is laboring in Whitneyville. I will remain here until about January 1, then expect to go to Lamoin, Dollard town, and the islands, when we hope to attend General Conference. Interest here and on Beals Island is very good.

Many happy returns of the seasons to those of Zion. Yours in the one faith,

W. W. BLANCHARD.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—I have labored for the Master at Audubon, Evergreen, and Perham. Baptized two fine young people at Evergreen; they fearlessly came forward and acknowledged their faith in Christ by going down into the cold waters and coming up fully satisfied that God is true to his promise. Others have given their names for baptism in the spring. Bro. and Sr. Omans, of Perham, rendered able assistance in the meetings at Evergreen and Perham. May the Lord bless them, is my prayer.

Last week I went where faithful Bro. Swen Swenson was boldly declaring the gospel to the people. He was having a tilt with an Advent lady. That night I dreamed that Swenson was fighting a skunk; 'twas a sorrowful looking creature when he got through with it.

I returned to Perham the next day, and from there here; found all well and glad to meet again. I have learned to-day that I am the father of B. H. Roberts of Utah; quite elevating indeed. What do you think of that, J. W. Roberts? Don't you feel proud that you have such a notable brother as that?

I am pleased to state that the spiritual condition of the saints in my mission is improving in many instances. There are so many places where they are calling for preaching, and no one to respond. My health is good, and I am thankful to God for his blessings. I am blessed in all my administrations. The sick are healed, and to God be the glory.

Wishing all a Merry Chrismas and a happy New Year, I am, as ever,

Yours in the fight,

I. N. ROBERTS.

ALEXANDER, Kan., Dec. 23.

Editors Herald:—I am preaching in a dwelling house near here; have some interest. Was closed out of Alexander schoolhouse, and since we commenced in Mr. Coddington's dwelling, have been invited by the board to again occupy the schoolhouse. This country is sparsely settled, and our audiences in some places are small. But I find as much good sometimes results from preaching to small audiences as from larger ones—the quality often expressing more than quantity. In some school districts where but few came out to hear, I received urgent invitations to call on those attending. One man remarked to me as soon as I called, "Did you bring me some of those tracts this time?" A school teacher lately said, "Now when you come again, please remember to bring me that book you call "Voice of Warning."

We have points where we get good sized audiences; at such places we advertise our meetings largely, and some of those interested in the sparsely settled regions drive over and attend the Sunday services.

Bro. Hilliard's preaching at Bazine created interest to the work where it was not formerly manifested. Some prominent men are expressing favor to the preaching. A school teacher lately remarked, "It is astonishing how popular those Latter Day Saints are becoming throughout the country and everywhere."

I discover that the Kansas City Journal, and other papers, are doing good work for us in their recent articles, showing a difference between us and Brighamite Mormons. I tell some prejudiced ones who say they know of but one kind of Mormons and believe that we are the same, indorsing polygamy, "I am surprised that more of you people don't take the papers, or at least don't read them," then refer them to the name and number of paper that distinguished us from polygamist Mormons.

It gave joy to my soul to read in the Sunday Kansas City Journal of December 3, that Joseph Smith, now president of Reorganized Church, was a man of upright character as well as opposed to polygamy. I know such was published several times before, but the more the better. Like those resolutions sent by our churches against the seating of Roberts in Congress, the more the better. We are thereby known to oppose polygamy.

I stopped over at St. John, Kansas, this fall, where Brighamites have headquarters for a large mission. A stationed elder told me, "We have an office here and sell all kind of books." Then shortly after a conversation took place, in which he assumed our claim for a reordanization was unscriptural. I quickly replied, "I am surprised you should present that matter as an argument against us when your own Brighamite church did the largest reorganization on record—even announcing to reorganize, reorganized, rebaptized, and reordained the whole church over again. He then said, "I know of no such action on record." I answered, "I'm surprised at you again; now I'll just go with you to your office where you have all those books to sell you spoke of, and I'll show you from Journal of Discourses and P. P. Pratt's Autobiography that you fellows did just as I stated." But he had to tell me that he had neither of those books on sale, nor in his office. Then I asked him how it came that they knew less about their own publications than we did; and that they kept back the sale of certain books.

I stopped with the Cadmerites most of the time I was at St. John. They had formerly been followers of Bickerton, the leader of a faction of Latter Day Saints; but since got dissatisfied with Bickerton, and followed the Cadmer Latter Day Saint faction. Bickerton has but few followers now. I preached in his house twice in St. John; he is a polite old man of past eighty years, and entertained me cordially, as also did the Cadmerites who attended my meetings. I stopped among several Brighamite families, including those near Stafford and Attica, Kansas. I observed most of those Brighamites kept a regular fast day and refrained from the use of tobacco, coffee, and tea. None of their elders that I met (and I met about a half dozen) used tobacco, tea, nor coffee—so much for the Mormons. I mention this because it is true, and they heed the revelation on the Word of Wisdom. I believe in giving even the Devil his due.

Bro. J. M. Brown will preach at the Whipple schoolhouse next Sunday, six miles southwest of here, and I join him there. Last Sunday I preached to a good audience at Brownell, and Bro. Brown held forth with interest at Walnuthill, four and a half miles northeast of Bazine. May the good work go on with increased interest, is the prayer of your brother, WM. H. MANNERING.

MOUNTAINHOME, Ark., Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—I have been made sad of late by reading in the Herald of the death of Bro. C. M. Bootman. Deceased and the writer have been associated together some in ministerial work, and I know that he was indeed a man of God. I learned to love him as a father, and many times have I had my drooping spirit cheered by his strong testimony of the truthfulness of the restoration as preached by the Reorganization. I believe his spirit has flown to the paradise of rest, to await the glorious resurrection. The church has lost a faithful servant, the West Plains branch its president, and his children a loving parent, and we all mourn, but our loss is his gain.

I also wish to mention the death of another dear brother, S. G. Pereg of Woodside, Missouri. We were at his home during the quarterly meeting of South Missouri district, and enjoyed our stay somewhat, but not as we had many times before. Bro. Sam did not seem as cheerful as usual, and of course we all noticed it, yet did not understand why he seemed so sad; but about fifteen days later it was all made plain, he passed quietly away. He was seemingly in the prime of life, a strong, healthy looking man; but when the death angel makes his summons, he takes the young as well as the old, the unprepared as well as those who are prepared. Bro. Sam leaves a loving wife and a large family of small children to mourn, and in his death the Woodside branch has lost one of its best members. He was always ready to do anything that he thought he was capable of doing for the cause of truth, and I never knew him to fail to contribute something to help the missionary on his way, and I feel sure that our Master will abundantly reward him for his labors.

We feel lonesome living isolated from the household of faith, and have seen the necessity of gathering. I think that article on school of prophets, solemn assembly, etc., was timely. Let us have more instruction along that line.

Bro. D. R. Baldwin of Ravenden Springs, Arkansas, seems to be in the thickest of the battle lately, as he has had two debates at Martin's Creek church with Bynum Black, a preacher of the so-called Christian Church and the editor of the Eye Opener. I know Bro. D. R., and believe he is able (if humble) to defend the cause of Christ, and he is likely to have more of it to do for the Master. From letters I have received since the debate, I believe that the good Master stood by our brother, and that he scored a grand victory for the cause of truth. May the good work go on until the gospel is preached to all the world, is the prayer of your brother in Christ, JOSEPH WARD.

BAZINE, Kan., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—The work in this part of Northwest Kansas district is moving steadily along, yet there are many places that the gospel has not been introduced. I find by experience that a good way to do in some places in a new field after introducing the work by a few sermons, is to send prepaid a copy of the Herald or Ensign to one or two families in the neighborhood that will appreciate it. The papers are generally circulated around the neighborhood. And when you return in a month or two you have an investigating audience. This has worked admirably under my own experience; the funds being raised by individual members. If the district could be interested on this line, and raise a fund for this purpose, to be judiciously used, would prove a great benefit to the work in my estimation. The subscription could be for a short period—three or six months—and if the right parties are selected for this favor, they will renew the subscription when it expires.

The way is opening for the moving of my family into this district, which will probably be done in the early spring. I have labored off and on in parts of this district since 1894, and I have not only become attached to these beautiful expansive prairies, but also endeared to the people. There is a sociability here that is not only characteristic to western Kansas, but to many new countries, that affords the ministry a hearing far better than in many older countries.

Bazine was favored with the presence of Bishop Hilliard about the first of November, when on his way to Nebraska to dedicate a church. He preached a few times here, and on some occasions his words were like shot from a gun that scattered much. Several both in and out of the church were hit; however the wounds soon healed, but the scars remain as bright evidence of the gospel gun and the grandeur of this great latter-day work.

Elder William Mannering, aside from ministerial work, has organized a Religio, which is well represented by the young members of the church; and many of the outsiders are making application for membership. We are persuaded that the Religio is a necessary help. In gospel work,

J. M. BROWN.

GAREY, Cal., Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—Since my article in Herald August 16 last, which pleased some and displeased others (about half and half of each), because of its plainness of speech along certain lines of thought, I have not dared (?) to express myself much above a whisper, lest I should be taken to task by my brethren and some sisters. But I am yet alive, and in the faith, and have not suffered for want of the needful, though I have learned that true Christian socialism is not yet positively established even among saints. But I was not the only one criticised because of said article, for ye Editors came in for a share because of allowing its publication. How would it do for next General Conference to take that matter in hand, and appoint a committee of critics to examine all matter for publication before insertion in the Saints' Herald, with the right to decide upon the merits and demerits of each article, regardless of the opinions of the editors? Then again, if this method should be adopted by the conference, from the observation of the writer, I believe the most active and efficient persons to compose said committee can be found among the laity, as a rule. But lest some one should differ from me and propose my name for one of said committee, I will just say that it would be impossible, on account of a more profitable business.

Now, Messrs. Editors, having been subjected to past afflictions and criticisms, and having, by God's grace, come safely through all, and still being on terra firma, I am going to venture once more, and make a solemn protest against an idea that I find to be quite prevalent in many places, this one not being an exception to the rule. It is this: Our church people, too many of them, ignore the man (missionary or local) who (measured by their standard) cannot hold a congregation with the admiration of his oratory; and not only hold them, but draw the crowds of people, religious or irreligious, out to hear him. Too often it is and has been said, "O, its of no use to ask the people to come to hear our message unless the one who is to speak is an up-to-date speaker—'a drawing card,'" etc.

This method holds the man of medium talent at arm's length. He feels that his effort to assist in the advancement of the great work intrusted to all is not wanted. So he travels on, thinking possibly he may get into a more rural district, where the people have not had so good opportunities to hear the great ones, and will be willing to listen to one of more humble mien, etc. So they may, but if there chance to be some of our members there who may not have heard our brilliant speakers even, but have heard or read of them, the inquiry is soon made: "Where is Bro. ——?" "What is Bro. —— doing?" "When will Elder —— come to see us." "O, if some of them would only come and preach, we think a branch could be built up here;" "and, O dear, we do miss the associations of the saints so much since we left so and so;" "but then the people here are very prejudiced, so that none but an able speaker need try, for they won't come out." And so it goes, in seven places out of every ten; and the man of limited talent falls into decay, because his willingness to do what he can is not appreciated, and his efforts are curtailed, therefore no opportunities for improvement and growth, for the simple reason that everybody (most) wants to hear Bro. ——, ——, or ——, etc.

Well, I presume with this letter (if it don't fall into the waste basket without publication) my former critics, and possibly others, will set me down as a regular fault finder, and maybe the chronic growler; but many others know that much if not all of the above charges are true.

Elder E. Keeler and myself have been placed in this part of Southern California district by those in charge, and are faithfully trying to do our duty; have held six meetings in the last week, five in Garey, and one at Pinegrove, where we will continue while the attendance and interest may prove sufficient to justify in so doing. We are partly crippled in our work for want of a horse to drive around with; the dry seasons causing a scarcity, and the plowing season causing those left to be in use. Expect to remain hereabouts most if not all winter.

SANDYVILLE, Iowa, Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—I have something to communicate which is of interest, more especially for the missionary in charge of the eastern field. I refer the brother in charge of the State of Connecticut to a brother I have living in the town of Terryville, in Litchfield County. He is anxious to obey the gospel. He made me a visit a year ago last August, and I told him of the coming forth of the strange work and a wonder; how it was revealed to Joseph Smith by an angel in fulfillment of John's prediction in Revelation 14:6, 7. He received the message favorably, and after he returned home he subscribed for the Ensign, and that has accomplished the work. I will give you his own words: "The desire grows stronger daily to obey the gospel call." He has used such expressions for some time. So you will see he is fully ripe, he is not keeping it under a bushel, for he lets others know of this glorious work by circulating the Ensign, and some are getting interested in the work.

It is a place where the message has never been delivered. I think if some of the brethren would attend to it, there might be a good work done there; at least it is an opening for the gospel. Inquire for Thomas Knox; he is well known; an old member of the Methodist Church, sixty-six years old.

At the end of 1900 I will be seventy-one and two months. I can read the papers without glasses. I love the gospel as dear to-day and, if possible, much better than ever. I never let an opportunity pass without speaking a word for my Master and his love to me. I believe I have some work to do, and that it will be rough. I think the time is nigh when every creature will have to hear, whether they will or not. So I pray for the dear saints throughout this broad earth wherever found, and especially those who are afflicted, and the dear people that are honest in heart, but their minds are darkened by the mists of sectarianism.

J. P. KNOX.

RADCLIFF, O., Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—Bro. F. M. Cooper and I went from Pecatonica to Rockford, where we secured Calvary chapel, a neat building on Kilbourn Avenue, and held services for over one week. We did not have a large hearing, but some seem interested, and expressed themselves as being well pleased with what they heard. We were closed out for one night, as some of the authorities thought we were Utah Mormons, and said that "at the present at least, while B. H. Roberts was receiving so much attention, it would not be advisable to let us continue."

On the last night we were to use the house, Bro. Cooper delivered an able discourse on the differences between the Reorganization and Brighamism, and set forth our position on the Roberts question. The sermon had the desired effect, and made friends for the cause. After visiting the authorities and explaining who we were, and what we were doing, they permitted us to return and occupy the building. The house is supplied with organ and other conveniences, all of which are at our service. We found the saints recently baptized by Brn. Stebbins and Burr firm, and rejoicing in the faith. Sisters Cushman and Gaskings, who have been in the church for years, and have been isolated, feel very much encouraged.

The newspapers published notices of our meetings, and the Register-Gazette published a lengthy article from the pen of Elder Cooper in reply to an article by Mrs. Carrie L. Grant, entitled, "The Prophet Joe's Boyhood." The editor also published an interview with Bro. Cooper, manifesting a disposition to give us fair play. I send with this a clipping containing account of the interview. Would send a copy of Bro. Cooper's reply to Mrs. Grant, but neglected to get a copy.

I furnished an article to the Rockford Daily Star, which the editor promised to publish as soon as he had the space. We think that a foundation has been laid in Rockford for future work.

Spent four days, including Sunday, the 17th inst., with the saints in Chicago. We found that earnest, untiring warrior, Bro. J. M. Terry, still battling away, though against some odds and difficulties, yet not discouraged, but hopeful of ultimate triumph of right. Bro. Terry is well loved and respected by the Chicago saints.

Stopping off at Creola, last evening, we gave a former singing class a drill and some instruction in vocal music. Our visit at home promises to find plenty of work for us to do along this line.

Ever praying for the progress of truth,
H. E. MOLER.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—After reading quite a number of ideas on government, and meditating upon God's theocracy that he gave to Israel while they were at the foot of Mount Sinai, in regards to a jubilee every fiftieth year, as we find it recorded in Leviticus 25, to be used as a governor to the gaining of wealth and to head off oppression in that line; and also on Christ's plan of holding wealth in common (Acts 4 and 5) and not allow it to center, which would produce oppression.

There is so little history now in existence upon those systems, that we get but a faint idea of their superior results when given a fair trial; but we can reasonably presume that they were vastly superior to systems that men have invented; for the thoughts of Christ and God the Father are infinitely superior to those of man; therefore our presumption or premise has very solid foundation to rest upon.

I have known for some time that there was a colony in our State governed by communistic principles, and having learned something of its workings by parties that have relatives in it, I became anxious to visit it as soon as opportunity offered. About three weeks ago I accepted an invitation to visit it. I thought the saints would like to know what I saw and heard while there, so I send the pith of what I gleaned as a contribution to the Herald.

I had been at Louisiana, Missouri, on business, and on my way home went to Iowa County, Iowa, and visited the German Colony. I arrived in central Amana and learned that there are a number of villages called Amana, designated as east, west, north, and south, and central Amana. Central is counted headquarters for all, as pertains to their governmental affairs. I went into their coöperative store and formed the acquaintance of two of the principal business managers, and found them pleasant and agreeable men. I had quite an interview with one of them, who told me many things about their government, which is communistic; they hold their wealth collectively, and share the profits equitably among all the members as near as they can. They were held together by a religious principle called the spirit of revelation; they believe that God has not got through talking with his creatures (man), but does talk with them now, and reveals his will to them from time to time. I shook hands with him when he told me that, and told him that I believed in present-day revelations from God myself; but as he had to attend to business, I did not get a chance to interview him much further. He allowed me to go all through the store and look at their stock, and talk with the clerks.

They have a general assortment of goods, about everything that will supply their needs, plain but of good quality. They make most of their woolen goods in their own factories; many other things they buy; so they are not selfish. They deal largely with outsiders, and outsiders deal quite largely with them. They have no use or place for monopoly, plutocrats, or aristocracy. Their motto is, or seems to be, Do for thy brother and thy brother will do for thee.

I was told that they pay no more for the skilled labor performed in their mills than they do for labor expended on their farms, but let each man work at whatever vocation suits him best, providing he is fitted for it. So there is no castes or grades of society, as the ownership of different amounts of wealth invariably produce; which will allow one man to live in a mansion on the avenue and the other in a hovel in the alley. They all live in villages, and work the land, not having farm houses scattered all over as we have. Their towns are tolerable well laid out; their buildings are plain, but clean and comfortable. They all seem to have a good supply of stove wood cut and split and piled up neatly under cover ready for use. Their school and church buildings are like large residences, having no towers or steeples to designate them from other buildings. I visited one of their meetinghouses. It was very clean, supplied with seats and a pulpit, and Bibles and song books. I do not know much about their theory of religion, but was told that they teach humility, and not top-heaviness caused by pride. They dress plainly but comfortably. The little school girls wore quite long skirts, with bonnets or shawls over their heads, which made them look like little old women. But they are quite gay in some things; they love nature's adornments, such as flowers, so they make fine flower gardens. They tack strips of wood on the outside of their houses above and below the first story windows, then they nail on upright strips for all manner of climbing flowering vines to grow upon, so I presume that it gives their homes a beautiful appearance in summer, when the flowers are in bloom. They live with their families in different apartments in their residences, the same as we use flats in a block; but they dine in large public dining halls, and the victuals are well cooked by trained cooks. They endeavor to teach the young generation all the leading vocations of life, and to do their work well, to put their religion into it, which St. Paul said was a reasonable service to God.

I visited two of their woolen mills and a large flour mill, and I must say that I was surprised to see what fine machinery they had. I met an agent who was selling mill machinery, who told me he had sold them much of their machinery, and that it was of the latest and finest patterns now known in the New England States, particularly their weaving looms. They have several spinning machines with two hundred and forty spindles each. Their mills are full of machinery and well arranged for convenience of operation, and in healthy apartments for the operators. Their flour mill is quite extensive, manufacturing almost everything from the finest wheat flour to pearl barley, and of a superior quality. They built a powerful dredging machine, and cut a canal from a lake to Cedar River, and as there was fall enough for the water they use it for driving the machinery in some of their mills.

I was also in some of their large cattle barns. They have the best of stock. I formed the acquaintance of the foreman in one of their barns in Homestead, as that town belongs to them. His name is Mr. Schwab. I am acquainted with his brother now living in Audubon County, Iowa. He seemed to be pleased to meet me, and was very agreeable and pleasant. He took great pains to show me through the different departments of the barn he has charge of, which contained ninety head of cows. The stable part of the barn was kept scrupulously clean, with plenty of nice bedding for the cows, which were looking in splendid condition. Their feed consists of a mixed ration: turnips, beets, ground grain, and good hay. Then he took me to the milk department, and I found the milk and cream receptacles as clean as a new pin, as there are so many hands to do the work. The cream is divided and sent to the various kitchens and churned by hand.

Then he invited me to go to the house with him and form the acquaintance of his wife and family, which I thankfully accepted. They occupied apartments in a large residence; everything in them was nice, neat, and clean; I told the children I knew their cousins living in Audubon County, Iowa, but they did not understand me, as they could not speak English. Their parents interpreted what I said to them, as they speak both English and German very well. I enjoyed my short visit with them. As my train time was in advance of their supper time, Mrs. Schwab prepared supper for me in their private rooms, but said they would like me to stay and eat with them in their large dining hall, where forty of them eat at once.

The machinery agent, mentioned above, and I were brought over from central Amana to this place, Homestead, in a wagon, by one of the members of the society, a distance of three miles. We talked about this communistic system in contrast to ours. There is much that is good about it.

Now this is a living picture—a reality. No dream, or fine spun theory untried. It shows what can be done by collective or united efforts. It undoubtedly has its advantages and disadvantages, like everything else in this world; its good and its bad qualities. Here is a community owning upwards of twenty-five thousand acres, or about forty-four square miles of land, dotted with seven villages; having stores, factories, and mills with machinery driven by both water and steam; orchards and extensive vineyards; live stock of the highest grades; also schools, and churches where the spiritual or inner man can be fed; all this and more can be said of this peaceful community, all living like one vast family. They may have their disputes and dissensions, but they seem to get them settled very quickly, for self-interest cuts no figure there. No one can say I own this, that, or the other thing; but he can say, if he is a member, I own an interest in everything that belongs to this commonwealth. There are no monopolies or beggars there; no usurers or used-up people there; no oppression or oppressed there; no affluence or poverty there; no rich or poor there; no lockouts or strikes there.

And the secret of the whole conundrum is that their interests are one. No antagonistic clash of business interests ever reaches there to sow seeds of discord among them; but unity and concentration of effort, both mental and physical, are found there; where all the superior talents and attributes of men are marshaled into a consort of action, coupled with God's spiritual help and guidance, and the smile of Christ's approval, to expend their united forces in the right direction, and all done with a full purpose of heart, to redound to the honor and glory of God.

There is no mathematician or political economist on earth who can compute or predict the glorious results that might be attained.

So we call it Zion; and we are patiently waiting for God to unfold to our view the glorious realities that he has in store for us if we continue faithful to him. We thank him for what he has given us, as all prayer should be accompanied with thanksgiving, and he will certainly reveal his plans and purposes to us in his way, and in his own appointed meridian of time; but we must do our part in obeying his mandates. May his holy Comforter assist us all to do our part, and do it well, which is only a reasonable service. May he give us an abundance of confiding faith, which is so much needed by us, to rely on the fulfillment of his promises.

This colony is surrounded by covetous, envious, designing money-grabbers, like a church surrounded by a lot of saloons, gambling dens, and persecuting conspirators, which makes it a hard struggle for an existence, but it prospers.

Now, my brethren, if you think that there is anything in this communication that would interest or edify our brother and sister saints, and that would not offend God, they are welcome to it. I send it as a freewill offering to our heavenly Father, and if he will accept it, may he give spiritual force to these poor, weak words, and my clumsy way of connecting them together.

While at the camp at Woodbine last fall, I purchased the History of the Church, in three volumes. One is not published yet, so I do not expect it for some time. The other two I have received. I have studiously and carefully read them with prayerful interest, and I think, taking the history as a whole, it is one of the grandest revelations ever given to man. I like the spirit of fairness shown by its authors all the way through, by not putting in their opinions here and there, spoiling the sense of the true meaning of history, which is so apt to be the case where men write while their heads and hearts are full of prejudice. This history gives a complete and clear view from the Seer's first call by God's messenger, an angel of light, to the end of his mission. We now see what God hath wrought through human agencies, surrounded on all sides by almost continual difficulties and persecuting enemies; but he had some rejoicing times when he saw the people flocking in and embracing the long-lost, restored gospel, and the beautiful visions, and his instructive talks with God. But most of his life was full of sacrifices and self-denial that others might receive the benefits of his labors and live. I like the way the history is arranged, giving a revelation at certain junctures, stating when and why it was given; it makes it far more explicit. I hope our church will not have to go through such trials and persecutions any more. God has seen all of these persecutions, and has heard the prayers of the saints, when they were robbed of their lands, homes, comforts, and lives. And when I read that revelation where God says that Zion must be redeemed by power, it makes my heart shudder to think of it; but I hope that his power may be manifested in softening the hearts of those people that hold the lands which I think rightfully belong to the saints, and come and help us build up Zion.

Your brother for the success of Zion,
H. T. WATSON.

JOHN DAY, Oreg., Dec. 2.

Editors Herald:—Bro. D. L. Harris and I left my home in Lonerock, November 16, for Wagner, where reside Sisters Shelley and Slavin. Sr. Shelley and her husband (he is not a member yet) being somewhat advanced in years, have taken up their residence near her two sons, Warren and Albert Carsner, they being well to do stockmen, and desire to see that Mother is well cared for in her declining years.

I will here give an account of a wonderful case of healing, of this Sr. Shelley, who is about seventy-two years of age. She was troubled for years with a tumor; had it cut out once, but it came back again, and at the time of administration was of about five years' growth. Bro. Harris and the writer arrived at her home on the 16th, found her suffering much pain. She asked that we administer, and on the following evening after meeting, Bro. Harris anointed; your writer followed with prayer, wherein I was powerless to say what man might desire to, but proceeded to tell her in the name of Christ she would be healed, and if still faithful until death, she should rise with the just in the first resurrection.

The next evening Bro. Harris and I went to her place, on our way to church, and found the sister rejoicing in tears. Her tumor was all gone, although it could be seen, and she had her husband and Sr. Slavin look carefully, neither she nor they could find any trace of it; to God be all praise. What condescension upon the part of one so holy to notice such weak and erring creatures as we. God has promised that "these signs should follow them that believe," and when we see the confirmation of these promises, what manner of men ought we to be.

I find Bro. Harris a very able advocate of the gospel, a very genial traveling companion, a man who before the world and saints alike, conducts himself so that whoever may be called to take up the work after him may have no fears of reproach having been brought against the work through any teaching not in harmony with God's word, nor of any individual acts upon his part. We leave this place to-day for Mt. Vernon, thence on to Fox Valley and Long Creek. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am your brother, W. A. GOODWIN.

SYKESTON, N. D.

Editors Herald:—A few lines from this part of God's vineyard may bring gladness to some weary soul. I will tell you what the Lord is doing for us. This is a new country. My neighbors and myself moved here from Missouri in 1896. We were all raised up in religious families of various creeds; I a member of the Latter Day Saint Church. We all went back to the world, but a brighter day is ahead; we have come back to God in Spirit and in truth. We now have a schoolhouse to worship in. Last spring we organized a Sunday school, with only a few members. I agreed to help what I could. I was called on to pray; with a guilty heart I did my best. O, how my voice trembled for fear the people would scorn at me. I put my trust in the Lord, and have overcome the man-fearing power.

What has our Sunday school done? It has brought us back to God. One who had nearly denied the Savior took no part at first, but now he can preach the gospel better and plainer than the hirelings. We are praying to the Lord to send some one with the gospel of Jesus Christ in purity and holiness, as taught by Christ and the apostles. He has never learned to read or write; he holds to no creed; has he not faith? Who will come to our help? Something must be done; come and help us, they cry. I ask the prayers of God's people. Let others do as we have done; God will bless them. Could not Bro. Caffall come?

CONDON, Oreg., Dec. 2.

Editors Herald:—We exist as a branch in name, but are only partly organized. However, we are striving to keep the banner afloat, and let the light we have shine the best we can under the circumstances. Having no place to hold meetings in without paying a high rent for the city hall, as we are barred from the other church buildings, though few in number, we concluded to put the little stone to rolling that was cut out of the mountain without hands, and the result is that we now have all the material on the ground to put up a neat little church building 20x36 feet, all paid for, and ere long you can read an account of another church of the Latter Day Saints being dedicated away out here in the wilds of Eastern Oregon. Too much credit cannot be given to Sr. Dunlap and Sr. Mabel Moore for their efforts in soliciting for the building fund. It is through their efforts that we are able to build.

Elder A. B. Moore, who has been recently appointed to this mission field, is now with us, and has located permanently here. We have just completed a neat little dwelling for him to occupy near where the new church is to be built. However, Bro. Moore met with quite a serious accident a few days ago. In attempting to lead a horse over some barbed wire fence, the horse became frightened, and jumping backward, dragged him into the wire, making an ugly and deep wound in the calf of his leg, which will lay him up for some time. However, he is getting along nicely now, and we hope that he will soon be able to be out sounding the gospel trumpet again, which he is fully capable of doing in a way that makes us all feel to rejoice that we were led to accept the angel message in this last dispensation and fullness of times. Yours in the faith,

J. R. CLARK.

PINGREE, Mich., Dec. 14.

Editors Herald:—Once again have we been having a feast for the soul. Elders H. C. and G. A. Smith were nearly a week in our midst, and we heard the gospel preached as only Father's called ones can preach it; there were but few came out each evening to hear, yet we feel that we were blessed by the Spirit, and the words of admonition and encouragement will long linger in our minds to cheer us on our way.

On Friday evening we bade good-bye to Bro. H. C., who left for Detroit the next morning. After meeting on Sunday, we said good-bye to Sr. Wilhelm of Pinckney, and then to Bro. G. A. Smith, each to go their different ways. How hard it is to say the parting words. "Joyous is the meeting, but sad indeed the parting." Glad am I to know there is a place where no farewell word need be spoken, and where parting is no more. A promise given by our Lord, which will be kept.

May we as saints live good and true; do all we can to help along this gospel work, and all meet where parting is no more, is the prayer of your sister, A. J. DALEY.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 4.

Editors Herald:—The few saints living at Columbus, the number is six, that I know of, have now arranged to hold prayer meetings at our homes, not having any place of worship nor any elders to visit us. My husband being deacon, we commenced our little meeting at our house. A short time before, I was shown in a dream how the Lord blessed only three that met, and when our meeting night came, there were only three of us, but we felt that we were blessed. Some did not know of it, and some could not come, but promised to meet with us in the future, as we intend to continue our meetings, and live as humble and faithful as we can. We only feel as babes in the work, as husband and I have not been in the work long. In answer to prayer, the dear Lord showed me the way, and I trust I may ever be faithful. Oh! how we would love to have a branch here. I think if some of our elders were here they might do some good.

The Brighamites held conference here last week, and for the first time I heard one preach. They numbered twenty-eight. I think some were to remain here for the purpose of organizing a branch. They held a large audience, and were cheered while speaking.

Oh, how I wish the audience was held by our elders, so the people could have known something about the right. As we have moved from our branch, this does not seem like home without the church; but I hope the time will come when the Lord's work will begin at this place. Any saints passing through Columbus will find us on No. 594 Kerr Street as we would like to have them call and see us. A sister,

L. C. GREEN.

AFTER CHRISTMAS.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., December 26.

At the opening of the evening's performance in the stone church the choir brilliantly sang,

"To all who love the Savior
Christmas time is blest;
'Tis then his kindly favor
On us seems to rest.
Our hearts are full of praises,
Each voice hosanna raises,
Oh, Christmas is a glad time
To those who love him best."

This was the reverberative echo of a song sung by about four hundred Sunday school children. As after the first tumult in time of war people begin to see the amusing side of every dreadful event, so now we can laugh at the grotesque that remains to us after Christmas is over.

We are thankful for all that is left to us, because those who return to inquire for the lost, strayed, or stolen, and everybody else as to that, can begin to realize what is the gain or loss that accrue to a first class Sunday school entertainment.

Old Murmurer says they leave the church in a terrible state of disorder. He will insist on complaining of the profuse quantity of papers, pins, popcorn, candy, sacks, prickly boughs, empty baskets, pecks of dust, books, lost dry goods, and, umph! worst of all, chairs, little and big, piled up, and a big tree which now fails to do good service because, forsooth, the corn strung in festoons is all over its top branches, out of reach. Let him complain! we say, and so said others, "It was a splendid entertainment." Bro. Alexander said so.

At the close, which was at a seasonable hour, in the midst of a multitude, men, women, and children numbering about eight hundred, some clad in furs and some in dainty attire, were seen scurrying here and there jostling one another and climbing over benches and chairs, trying to push their way to the outer, clear, cold air.

Verily, the Christmas of 1899 of Mount Zion Sunday school was a glorious success. The songs and recitations of the little tots, the brave boys and coy young maidens were excellent. The mischief-loving lads acted their parts like men; and when "The Nation Piece" came off they lustily beat their drums, to the organ's tune of grand old "Marching through Georgia."

Just before the closing number a reverend gentleman stepped to the platform, and, scanning the sea of heads before him thought it apropos to ascertain how many wished to help in heating the room upstairs so it might be available when needed. "You see how crowded we are down here: raise your hands," he exclaimed, "every one!" No response. "All raise, who would like to see it done!" Still the people were stolidly indifferent. Two or three slowly raised their hands.

On brusquely retiring to his place, he whispered grimly, but with good Irish wit, "We only wanted to throw out a hint, you know!"

The red curtains were closed in front, and we were in breathless anticipation of every moment seeing the boys and girls in "the Jolly Christmas King" come in, and, just as the good brother spread his coat tails preparatory to taking his seat, the curtains were opened and behold! they appeared, tiptoeing gingerly to the rhythm of sweetest music. Then came the distributing of the sacks and wrapping papers beforementioned.

To summarize, youthful appetites were appeased and the wishes of the patriotic and pathetic, the festive and funny, and the pious and worshipful were all gratified; and, as we reached the open air we seemed to hear the melodious strain again, "Glory to God in the Highest!"

"To these who tell his story,
Christmas time is dear.
Who see by faith his glory
Shining bright and clear.
To every tribe and nation,
That knows God's full salvation
Oh, Christmas is a glad time,
The gladdest of the year."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

BELLGROVE, W. Va., Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—I want to say to the saints of West Virginia district that I propose that we furnish a room in the Saints' Home, and have it named the West Virginia room. I find some of the sisters in the district are preparing quilts, pillows, and so on, to send to the Home, and I told them not to send them until I could appeal to the district to furnish a room and have it named for the State.

Now I ask the president of each branch to take this matter into hand and make it their special business to see each member of his branch and have them to prepare quilts, sheets, pillows, and ticking, and see that they do not all prepare the same garments; but some quilts, some sheets, some pillows, and some ticking, and the brethren to furnish money, and send to Sr. Alice P. Dancer, matron of the Home, to buy furniture at Lamoni, as the freight on it from here would cost as much as the furniture will cost there.

Now let each branch try to excel the other in furnishing the room. And when you get your donations ready, take them to the president of your branch, and let them be expressed to Sister Dancer, matron of Home, all in one box. Remember this is an effort to prepare to warm the destitute of the church; and in doing this you are administering it to your blessed Lord.

It is hoped that the saints in Wheeling will respond to this appeal, as the boom is to be named for West Virginia. I consulted the missionary in charge in regard to this matter, and this is the course he advised me to pursue. So I hope you will make an effort in this direction that you will be proud of in the future. I assure you that Bellegrove branch will do her part.

I have been having grand success in my mission work; have baptized twelve since September 1.

Yours for truth,

G. H. GODBEY.

(The above appeal is all right providing there is a room left to be furnished at present. If not the room cannot be set apart to the West Virginia saints and friends until prepared, but if they are ready will give them chance of choice in rooms.

Sister Alice P. Dancer, Matron of the Home, is an excellent financier as well as manager, entirely responsible and knows just what is most needed at the Home. It costs about eighty-five dollars to furnish a room right. Parties desiring information about furnishings should consult Sr. Dancer. All goods and offerings for the Home should be sent direct to Miss Alice P. Dancer, Matron Home, Lamoni, Iowa, who will duly report the items to the Bishop, and save often double transfers.—E. L. KELLEY, Bishop.)

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Dec. 30.

Editors Herald:—Am at home, almost on the sick list; too much exposure, work, and worry probably the cause. To-day am feeling much recruited, and hope to be around to my work in a few days. I am not done with Braden yet. He has had the hardihood to go to Orchardville and attempt to lecture against our people in the G. A. R. hall. I sent Bro. Stead to follow him up, though he got there after Braden's lecture was over. He writes me it created no stir, as but few would come out to hear him, and did not approve of his nefarious way of doing his work. He has also been at a schoolhouse almost in the same neighborhood and lectured; trying to recover what he lost in the Orchardville debate. Circulated circulars, wherein he says he would lecture on "The Ignoramus, blasphemous, Mormon fraud, Smith's pretended 'Inspired Translation'—the real Mormon Bible." "The ignoramus, blasphemous, Mormon fraud, 'the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.'" "The ignoramus, blasphemous, Mormon fraud, 'the Book of Mormon.'" Then closes up in his circular with: "At the close of the debate in Alma, I. N. White backed square out of a challenge . . . to repeat the Alma debate in Independence, Missouri, as cowardly a backout as was ever made. I. N. White is dared and defied to make good the bullying bluster of his braggart challenge that he has backed out of in so cowardly a manner."

I have this to say: "The ignoramus, blasphemous, Mormon fraud," found in Braden's circulars, is the biggest argument Braden makes against our work. When Braden can be got at, this "ignoramus Mormon fraud" stands the test of an investigation, and the wheels turn, and it is, "The ignoramus Braden, the fraud."

I am after Braden; and I propose to stand by my guns. I am now strewing Braden's path, and shooting into scores of Christian congregations the following circular;—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"CHALLENGE TO REV. CLARK BRADEN REPEATED.

"In March, 1895, Braden had Rev. Popplewell, editor of the Primitive Christian, Braden's church journal, published at Independence, Missouri, my home, to publish and circulate 2,000 circulars, challenging me to a debate at Independence. I at once accepted the challenge to repeat the Eldorado Springs debate at my home in the Latter Day Saints' chapel while I affirmed, and in the Christian chapel while Braden affirmed. Editor Popplewell published all of this in his paper for April 11, 1895. The debate failed to materialize, and Elder Popplewell pubished the following explanation:—

"'We asked one of the business men of the town, and, we understood, a deacon of the Christian church here, if he would assist a little in aiding Braden to come to Independence. He said: "I would give one dollar to keep him away." We write this to let all who read this know that the reasons why the debate and lecture did not materialize,' etc.

"Now, after Braden had failed to receive recognition of his brethren at Independence, he has the unblushing hardihood to sneak away some four or five hundred miles into rural districts, and publish: 'White backed square out in the most cowardly manner.' Hence, I repeat my challenge, pro bono publico.

"THE CHALLENGE.

"The Rev. Clark Braden is hereby challenged to repeat the debate held with me at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, and later, near Orchardville, and in Alma, Illinois, at Harrisonville, Missouri, his former home. I also challenge him to repeat it at Independence, Missouri, in the Latter Day Saints' chapel, while I am affirming, and in the Christian chapel while he is affirming. I also challenge him to repeat it in every hamlet, town, and city where he may attempt to preach or lecture against the faith taught by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This challenge holds good, the Lord willing, during my natural life.

"I. N. WHITE.

"December 27, 1899."

"That both disputants may come clothed with the authority of their respective churches to act and speak for them in these debates, the following stipulations shall be complied with:—

"1. Elder Braden is to furnish to his opponent, ten days before the debates commence, a written indorsement from the chief editors of the Christian Evangelist and Christian Standard, that he is an accredited representative of their church.

"2. That he is sound in the faith as they hold and teach it.

"3. That he is a Christian gentleman to an opponent.

"4. This indorsement shall be countersigned and accepted by his congregation where the debate or debates are to be held.

"Elder White is to furnish to his opponent, ten days before the debates commence, an equivalent indorsement from the chief editors of the Saints' Herald and Zion's Ensign which shall be countersigned and accepted by his congregation where the debate or debates are to be held. A refusal or failure on the part of either party to furnish such credentials as herein named, shall be sufficient evidence to either party that his opponent is not worthy to affirm or defend the doctrine and belief of his respective church in an honorable public debate. I. N. WHITE.

"PROPOSITIONS AND THEIR ORDER.

"1. 'Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?'

"I. N. WHITE affirms.

"CLARK BRADEN denies.

"2. 'Is the Christian Church (commonly called Campbellites) in fact the church of God, harmonizing in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice, with the church of Christ, set up by divine authority eighteen hundred years ago?'

"CLARK BRADEN affirms.

"I. N. WHITE denies."

This circular letter and challenge is being extensively noticed by the secular newspapers. It tries Braden's reins to be held responsible to his church for his mode of procedure in a debate. Let the Christian-Campbellite Church be held responsible for their man's doctrine and deportment in a debate; then people knows what to depend upon. We propose to go about our missionary work as usual, and wait for developments in regard to the coming debates.

Yours in gospel bonds,

I. N. WHITE.

BEAVER, Mo., Dec. 26.

Editors Herald:—Owing to the many letters sent me by saints from different parts of the States inquiring as to the lay of the land, quality of soil, its productiveness, etc., for the benefit of those desiring homes in Missouri, I would say this country is rather a rough, timbered country, but I think it is a good place for saints to make a home. Cattle run at large and do well; hogs also do well when the mast is good. There are a few saints here in Douglass County, and we would like enough more to organize a branch. There quite a number of well improved farms that can be bought very cheap. It seems that those who are not saints are anxious to get out or trade out, and I think that this is the saints' opportunity to get good improved farms very cheap now. I have lived here ten years, am a German by birth, and I think I know by this time what the country is good for. Fruit of all kinds is raised; corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, sweet potatoes, and grass of all kinds do well. We have good schoolhouses, where we have preaching at times. I hope the saints who are looking for homes will come and look at this country before buying.

I remain in bonds,

JACOB E. SWIGART.

PERHAM, Minn., Dec. 18.

Editors Herald:—Bro. I. N. Roberts came to my place November 15, and on the 18th, with the writer, went to Toad River, twelve miles north of Perham, where he, with what little assistance I could give, held meetings in a schoolhouse every evening for most two weeks, resulting in two being baptized and more near the kingdom, two of whom, I am very happy to say, is my son and his wife. They told Bro. Roberts they wanted to be baptized next spring, and I am satisfied there will be more. It is a new place, and the people seemed to enjoy the meetings very much. Bro. Roberts was blessed with the best of liberty. I got the Methodist church in Perham, and he preached twice in it.

He left here December 15 for Minneapolis; may the good Lord bless him in his efforts for good, and may the glorious work roll on until all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest.

Our reunion is to be held at Perham next June, and I hope the saints throughout this part of the land will all be here. Come one, come all, and let us have a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus. If we do our part the Lord will surely do his. He has promised to be with us even unto the end of the world. I preached at Toad River on Sunday, December 17, and left an appointment to preach there in two weeks, although it is little that I can do, yet I love this latter-day work. Yours in the one faith,

F. D. OMANS.

MILO, Iowa, Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—I have been preaching over in the Concord schoolhouse. Last Tuesday evening had a good turnout; splendid attention given to the word and the very best liberty of the Spirit. I feel all right in the work. The roads are very bad, and I do not know if I shall preach any more or not. There are a good people here. If the saints live right a good work will be done here in time. Yours in haste,

N. STAMM.

"But I say unto you, Love your enemies."—Matthew 5: 44.

"Revenge! Revenge!" our fierce hearts cry.
But lo! a voice comes in reply,
Pleading with love and sorrow, too,
"Forgive, they know not what they do."
O loving Christ, who bowed thy head
Upon the cross for us, and bled,
Grant us thy grace to say anew,
"Forgive, they know not what they do."

BE PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

Sweet friend, when you and I are gone
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor;
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the sighing—
What tender truth shall we have gained,
Alas! by simply dying?

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
Shall no defect discover.
Then hands that would not lift a stone,
Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill path, will scatter flowers
Above our pillowed slumber.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

'T is easy to be gentle when Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glamor;
But wise it were for thee and me,
Ere Love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living!

AMBOY, Ill.

Dear Sisters:—Let me write and tell you how I like the reading of the Home Column; but there isn't enough some weeks to satisfy. I know this beautiful gospel is so true, and I want to so live that I may inherit a crown of eternal life. Please pray for me, that I may be given grace and patience to bring up my darling babes to this faith; also that my husband may yet obey before it is too late. If some sister having Autumn Leaves from the beginning of Beatrice Witherspoon, until January, 1900, would please let me know through the Home Column, I would be thankful to her for the trouble. I haven't heard a gospel sermon preached for a good while, and I get so hungry, yet I enjoy reading the sermons in the Ensign.

Can we not have an elder come this way?

MRS. MAUD WHITING.

SAINTS, PLEASE PRAY.

At our last reunion at Livermore, California, in September, the brethren gave way to the sisters to hold a meeting to discuss coöperation, or what shall we do with our children? Many testimonies were given, or experiences of sisters that have to earn their own living in the world. All was interesting, and the Spirit of God was poured out on us to a great degree, and we know the Lord of heaven was with us.

It was moved and seconded that Sr. B. Smith, of Walnut Creek, California, and Sr. M. L. Douglass, of Ukiah, California, write to the different branches and ask all to take in special prayer from that time until our next meeting in August, 1900, at Oakland, California, that all pray earnestly for God to lead and give his Spirit and will concerning a Zion's coöperative store and manufactory, that God will inspire his saints to give of their means in whatsoever amount they choose, to give the saints' children a place for business, when they have finished school, and not have to go out into the wicked world to be cast down, insulted, led astray by evil designing people.

One dear sister said she was a cook; what could she do? O, I said, many do not like to cook; we want all such as you. We want our dear children to have good warm meals. Those that need to board and sleep need good care and cooking. We want all to help. Land to build a good large home. First a good foundation. Will it be in Zion, one said. God knows, I do not. We want blacksmiths, tailors, carpenters, cooks, seamstresses, shoemakers, and competent and skilled workmen in every line to carry on this work.

Who will help us? and say, I pray for God's will, not mine, be done in this matter. Who will say, God speed a home and place for our dear children God has given us to teach and care for in his truths, that they may live a more just and upright life than we; that they may have the law written in their hearts, and whatever trials overtake them, they may say, as Joshua of old did, "But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."—Joshua 24: 15.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints in Decatur District:—I feel it my duty to again call your attention to the law of tithes and offerings. It is with pleasure I make my report to the Bishop, and would request all the saints to watch for and examine my report (which will be published) for their own encouragement, and perchance there should be any mistakes, that I may be notified and make the proper correction at once; the time to correct mistakes is when first detected. Compare the report with your receipts.

Dear saints, we are now beginning another year, and this is one of the golden opportunities of our lives to make a proper start if we haven't done so already. Let me urge everyone, old and young, to see to it that they are keeping the "whole law," the "perfect law." If your names are not on my books, be sure to have them there at the earliest opportunity, that you may not be cheated out of the blessed opportunity to help in this financial work. "More blessed to give than to receive." It is a pleasure to keep the laws of God, and especially so, the temporal law; surely the Devil knows it is the reason of his tremendous effort to hinder the saints from observing it, but when once they do get started and fairly in the spirit of the law, he and all of his combined forces cannot hinder them. Don't excuse yourselves any longer; let us work while it is to-day, as we know not what to-morrow may bring us. It is but little we can do at best to reward our heavenly Father for his mercies towards us. Do we love Him? "If a man love me, he will keep my words."—John 14: 23. Have we faith in God? (See James 2: 14–26.)

Don't wait to be solicited individually, which I expect to do as fast as I can; but begin with the beginning of the year. Don't wait because you can't pay all at once, but pay what you can—any amount from one cent up. Don't wait until you are exactly sure to a cent just the amount you owe the Lord, with the idea it is as bad to overpay a little as to not pay at all. If you should find out you paid a little too much, if desired, can be credited on next payment. God knows the heart of the giver, and it is the motive we must watch and keep right.

By the installment plan anyone can pay their tithing and not injure their business, if in business; or feel it if working for a livelihood. If there is a will to do and a proper desire, God will open the way. Go to him in faith, and I will assure you the way will open.

In talking with members in different parts of the district, many say, O, if I could only pay something I raised, I would pay my tithing, but ready money I haven't.

To all those let me say, arrangements have been made that we can receive wood, posts, butter, eggs, hay, corn, oats, poultry, calves, young cattle, cows, thrifty shoats or hogs that will pay us to feed and turn into money. Will receipt for any of the above at market price.

Anyone desiring to bring wood, please take to my place or Herald Office, and Bro. Frank Criley or I will measure and receipt for same.

All stock, posts, hay, corn, and oats, take to barnyards at the Saints' Home (scales in the yard), and Bro. Kelley or I will receipt you.

Poultry, butter, eggs, potatoes, apples, and other produce take to any of the stores in Lamoni, and get checks or due bill, which we will take for face value and receipt you for.

If I should be out of town in some other part of the district, or if it would be any handier for you, Bro. Frank Criley or Sr. Clara Cochran-Smith in Herald Office, or Sr. Jennie M. Leland in Bishop's office, or Oscar Anderson, State Savings Bank, will receive them and receipt you also for any moneys.

For the convenience of the members of the several branches in Decatur district, I have appointed the following-named parties, who will receive your tithes and offerings, and receipt you for same (be sure and not pay moneys to anyone unless you get a receipt) and they will forward to me once a month.

Hiteman branch, Sr. Ellen White, Hiteman, Iowa.

Lucas branch, Thomas Hopkins, Lucas, Iowa.

Cleveland No. 4, John Jervis, Lucas, Iowa.

Wirt branch, Joseph A. Anderson, Ellston, Iowa.

Leon branch, Asa S. Cochran, Leon, Iowa.

Davis City branch, H. A. Hartshorn, Davis City, Iowa.

Pleasanton branch, Lewis Moffett, Pleasanton, Iowa.

Greenville branch, John Lovell, Davis City, Iowa.

Evergreen branch, A. V. Minton, Lamoni, Iowa.

Allendale branch, Albert Whorlow, Allendale, Missouri.

If any are uncertain as to just what the law of God is in regard to temporal things, seek knowledge from those whom God has appointed unto this work, and not listen to every "wind of doctrine."

Dear saints, shall we be wise and "lay up treasures in heaven?" Please reread last three paragraphs of Bishop's agent's notice, published in Herald, February 15, 1899, page 111. Don't hesitate to ask for any information I may be able to give that comes within my province.

Your brother in the one faith,
F. M. WELD, Bishop's Agent.

To the Brethren and Sisters of the English Mission:—As there may be some brethren in this mission wishing to pay tithing or offerings who are not in possession of the address of the Bishop's agent, please note that any contributions sent to following address will receive prompt attention: Thomas Taylor, Bishop's agent, care of E Roberts, No. 68 Bristol Road, Bournbrook, Birmingham.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

St. Louis district conference will convene at No. 2518 Elliott Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri, on Saturday evening, January 6, 1900, at seven o'clock.

JOHN G. SMITH, Dist. Sec.

Conference of Philadelphia district will convene in Philadelphia, February 3, 1900, at 7:30 p. m., corner of Fifth and Huntingdon Streets. We want to impress upon the minds of the scattered members in the district the necessity of attending the conference. If it is simply to be a conference of the Philadelphia branch, and other members in the district do not attend, we might just as well disorganize the district. However, we do not desire to do this. Come, and may the Lord bless us with a wonderful degree of his Holy Spirit. GEO. W. ROBLEY, Pres.

NOTICES.

To those anticipating the benefit of Bro. W. H. Walling's ministerial labor in South Dakota during the winter months, I wish to state that from a letter from Bro. S. Swenson dated December 22, I learn that Bro. W. H. Walling has turned his attention to secular labor and is situated at the Hot Springs, South Dakota. Doubtless you will be disappointed, as the brother's labors were well approved, and a three months' labor during cold weather in places adjacent to White, Brookings County, South Dakota, might have been beneficial; but as it can't be, we must submit to the exigencies causing the disappointment with becoming resignation.

Done at Council Bluffs, Iowa, this 27th day of December, 1899.

JAMES CAFFALL,
Missionary in Charge.

The church now nearing completion at Wabash, Ontario, will be dedicated on Sunday, December 31. Elder R. C. Evans and other elders will be present.

W. H. TAYLOR.

BORN.

ASAY.—At Rock Island, Illinois, October 22, 1899, to Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Asay, a son; blessed December 19, 1899, by Elders F. M. Weld, F. A. Russell, and A. J. Keck, and named Joseph Edward; a grandson of Bro. and Sr. J. B. Johnson.

MARRIED.

PIEPERGERDES—HINDERKS.—At the home of the bride's parents, four miles north of Stewartsville, Missouri, Bro. G. W. Piepergerdes and Sr. Emma Hinderks were united in marriage, Elder T. T. Hinderks officiating. About seventy friends and relatives had gathered at six p. m., December 20, 1899, to witness the ceremony. A bountiful feast was prepared for the occasion. The presents were numerous, valuable, and useful articles. May a loving, peaceful, happy, and prosperous life be theirs to enjoy, was the wish of all present. Their future home will be in St. Joseph, Missouri.

PETTIS—HORSEY. HUMMELL—MCCOMMAS.—I had a very pretty double wedding today, at the residence of Mr. Jack and Sr. Kate Horsey, two miles north of Lowell, Iowa, Sr. Horsey's daughter Tama to Mr. Adg. Pettis of Mt. Pleasant; and Mr. William Hummell and Miss Hannah McCommas, of Burlington. Ceremony performed by F. M. McDonald, priest.

DIED.

WELDON.—Near San Jose, California, September 20, 1899, the infant son of Bro. Elmer and Sr. Celeste Weldon. His earthly life was but the span of three short days—a bright and beautiful child taken from earth into the galaxy of the heavenly throng. His little body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Saratoga to await the resurrection morn. Funeral sermon by Elder J. B. Carmichael.

GARDINER.—Agnes Gardiner was born in Glasgow, Scotland, August 30, 1833; died in Ruby Valley, Nevada, November 12, 1899. She was converted in her native land in the early forties, and with her mother, three brothers, and one sister crossed the plains with the handcart companies in the early fifties. Since the visit of Elder Glaud Rodger to Ruby Valley in 1884, this family have been favorable to the Reorganization, and with her husband and family was baptized by Elder Thomas Daley last August. She was the mother of ten children, two of whom are dead. She was loved by all who knew her.

FLACK.—John Flack was born February 7, 1834, at Crab Orchard, Kentucky; died December 7, 1899, at his home, Fairfield, Utah. June 7, 1860, he married Emma Burchell, who still survives. To this union were born four sons and two daughters, all of whom save the older daughter are left to mourn. In youth he became connected with the Latter Day Saints, but in manhood he became disgusted with "Mormonism" in Utah and withdrew, holding aloof ever after from any church relationship. His neighbors give him the name of an honorable man, and manifested their sympathy by turning out en masse to his funeral. Services from the residence by J. W. Wight.

KNUDSON.—Evie Field Knudson was born December 13, 1875, at Las Vegas, Nevada; died December 17, 1899, at Central City, Colorado. Was baptized February 12, 1892. She leaves husband, one child, parents, and brothers and sisters to mourn. She was buried from the chapel, 228 East Second South Street, Salt Lake City, December 24, 1899; her remains being laid away in Salt Lake cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. Death being sudden in his visitation, she resembled rather a sleeping woman than a corpse. Elder J. W. Wight conducted the services, the sermon being reported.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

"AN ABSOLUTE NECESSITY"

"'The Literary Digest' is an absolute necessity to those who would keep in line with the progress of thought and achievement. It is really a wonderful success. I do not see how any thinking man can get along without it. 'The Literary Digest' constitutes a record of current history that is unequaled elsewhere."—E. P. Powell, D. D., in "Unity," Chicago.

THE LITERARY DIGEST

"All the Periodicals in One"

THE LITERARY DIGEST has taken the highest rank as a weekly review of current news at home and abroad, literature, art, the drama, politics, philosophy, etc. No other publication of its kind has received such support and commendation. It gives discussion and opinion on all sides of important political and international questions. Its contents are selected and translated from the world's best periodical literature, and are given partly in summary, partly in direct quotation. It covers each week a field so diversified as to make it indispensable to the busy man who desires to keep up with the thought of the times, but who lacks the leisure for such a task. This veritable magazine presents in each issue, in "peptonized" form, the wheat-kernel of current news.

SOME OF ITS READERS AND THEIR OPINIONS

Senator William P. Frye: "THE LITERARY DIGEST will afford immense assistance to the scholars of the country."

Ex-Senator John J. Ingalls: "THE LITERARY DIGEST . . . should abolish provincialism in letters and enlarge the boundaries of intelligence."

Philip F. O'Hanlon, M. D., Coroner's Physician, Borough of Manhattan, New York: "I am glad to say that few things in life have given me better results for time and money than THE LITERARY DIGEST."

Editor Atlanta Constitution: "I know of no more concise and at the same time comprehensive concentration of the world's work and thought progress than this weekly journal."

Henry Randall Waite, President American Institute of Civics, New York: "An epitome of the best thought of the day."

Edwin Markham, author of "The Man with the Hoe": "I can not afford to miss any numbers of THE LITERARY DIGEST, as it is one of the two or three best journals which come to my desk."

Josiah Strong, D. D., Secretary Evangelical Alliance: "Such a periodical is indispensable to every student of the times. I enclose $3.00 for one year's subscription."

Francis E. Clark, D. D., Editor Christian Endeavor World, Boston, and Founder National Christian Endeavor Association: "It winnows the multiplicity of newspapers and magazines, and tells us the most important things which they contain."

Gov. John P. Altgeld, of Illinois: "THE LITERARY DIGEST is one of the very best publications in America. To a student of current literature it is invaluable."

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

Neatly bound in heavy paper covers; price 50 cents, mailed to any address.

DISASTERS IN THE U. S.

The following table gives the loss of life resulting from various disasters in this country as reported to the Tribune by mail and telegraph:—

Fires	1,852	Falling buildings,
Drowning	2,412	etc.	465
Explosions	618	Cyclones, storms	713
Mines	563	Lightning	223

RAILROAD DISASTERS.

The loss of life by railroad accidents, reported by mail and telegraph, for 1899 was 3,552, as compared with 3,590 in 1898, and 2,764 in 1897. The number of seriously injured was 3,385, as compared with 2,616 in 1898, and 2,428 in 1897. The most prominent disasters of the year were as follows:—

	Killed.	Injured.
Jan. 9. Collision Lehigh Valley Railroad	15	35
May 12. Collision Philadelphia and Reading Railroad	30	60
May 28. Derailment Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Northern Railroad	8	41
Aug. 1. Derailment Northwestern Railroad	4	7
Sept. 23. Collision Denver and Rio Grande Railroad	6	5
Nov. 29. Collision Lackawanna, Delaware, and Western Railroad	7	23

EPIDEMICS AND FAMINE.

The loss of life by epidemics and famine shows an increase over last year. The plague in India, Africa, and at other points has swept off over 250,000 victims. Famine has claimed over 50,000 in Russia and Africa and cholera about 2,000. Yellow fever has attacked different places between Florida and Brazil, but improved methods of treatment have reduced its fatalities to about 900. It is hard to collect statistics of this kind, but the total, so far as reported, is about 310,000, as compared with 222,900 in 1897.

WARS.

The three prominent wars of the year have been the quelling of the Filipino revolt, the Anglo-dervish, and Anglo-Boer. In addition to these there have been several revolutions in South and Central America, battles in the Soudan, and in various parts of Asia and Africa. The list of casualties, including killed and wounded, is as follows:—

Philippines	9,475	Samoa	273
South Africa	9,935	San Domingo	48
Soudan	3,958	Venezuela	4,800
China	8,582	Colombia	1,500
India	975	Ecuador	1,000
Arabia	6,460	Bolivia	200

MARINE DISASTERS.

The following list of wrecks during the year where loss of life was involved is approximately correct. It is impossible to make an absolutely correct statement of the fatalities, as in some cases no record of the number of crew and passengers was left. The list shows 1,750 lives were lost upon the ocean and 469 on inland waters, a total of 2,219, as compared with 3,655 in 1898, 2,426 in 1897, 3,012 in 1896, 4,250 in 1895, and 6,881 in 1894.

SUMMARY OF DISASTERS.

As nearly as can be estimated 1,750 lives have been lost upon the ocean, 469 upon inland waters, 3,552 by railroad accidents, 44,828 by disasters abroad, 6,775 by minor diasters in this country, 300,000 by epidemics and famine, and 48,237 by wars, making a total of 405,711, as compared with 127,930 in 1898, 389,017 in 1897, 246,546 in 1896, and 275,391 in 1895.

SUICIDES AND MURDERS.

The total number of persons who have committed suicide in the United States during 1899, as reported to the Tribune by mail and telegraph, is 5,340, as compared with 5,920 in 1898, 6,600 in 1897, 6,520 in 1896, and 5,759 in 1895. It will be seen that the decrease in self-murder since 1897 has been steady. Of this total 4,155 were males and 1,185 females, which is about the usual porportion year by year for the last ten years. Among professional men physicians still head the list, 38 having taken their own lives, as compared with 44 in 1898, 41 in 1897, 47 in 1896, 59 in 1895, and 45 in 1894. During the year also 9 clergymen, 7 prominent attorneys, 7 persons engaged in the banking business, 2 actors, 7 journalists, and 2 college professors have committed suicide. The causes of suicide were as follows:—

Despondency	2,573	Ill health	225
Unknown	1,649	Domestic infelicity	191
Insanity	355	Disappointed love	146
Liquor	127	Business losses	74

In these cases of suicide poison remains the most frequent agent: 2,134 killed themselves with poison, 1,953 by shooting, 527 by hanging, 302 by cutting their throats, 316 by drowning, 30 set themselves afire, 25 threw themselves in front of railroad trains, 42 jumped from housetops or windows, 7 killed themselves with dynamite, and 4 starved themselves.

MURDERS.

The total number of murders committed in the United States during 1899 shows a continued decrease, being 6,225, as compared with 7,840 in 1898, 9,520 in 1897, 10,652 in 1896, and 10,500 in 1895. The causes of these murders may be classified as follows:—

Quarrels	3,309	Highwaymen killed	83
Unknown	1,699	Insanity	81
Jealousy	173	Self defense	31
Liquor	212	Strikes	29
By highwaymen	296	Outrages	6
Infanticide	182	Riots	10
Resisting arrest	114

FIRE LOSSES.

The losses by fire in the United States during 1899 aggregate $150,537,365, as compared with $133,139,467 in 1898, $120,001,737 in 1897, $111,856,067 in 1896, and $131,578,206 in 1895. Those where the loss in each case was $100,000, and upwards amounted to $71,212,000, and the losses by smaller fires to $84,725,365.

HANGINGS.

The number of legal executions in 1899 was 131, as compared with 109 in 1898, 128 in 1897, 122 in 1896, 132 in 1895, 132 in 1894, 126 in 1893 and 107 in 1892. The executions in the several States and Territories were as follows:—

There were 100 hanged in the South and 31 in the North, of whom 58 were whites, 72 blacks, and 1 Indian. The crimes for which they were executed were murder, 113; rape, 17; highway robbery, 1.

LYNCHINGS.

It is gratifying to note that the criminal work of the mob murderers, notwithstanding some instances of special barbarity in Georgia, Louisiana, and Kentucky, has decreased during 1899, being much smaller than in any year since 1885. Judge Lynch executed 107 persons during the year. The following table showing the number of lynchings through a series of years should be of interest at present to those engaged in the study of this interesting question in criminology:—

1886	138	1894	190
1887	122	1895	171
1888	142	1896	131
1889	176	1897	166
1890	127	1898	127
1891	192	1899	107
1892	235

The lynchings in the various States and Territories were as follows:—

Alabama	6	New York	0
Arkansas	11	Nevada	0
California	0	North Carolina	3
Colorado	0	North Dakota	0
Connecticut	0	Ohio	0
Delaware	0	Oregon	0
Florida	6	Pennsylvania	1

Missouri	3	Utah	0
Montana	0	Indian Territory	0
Nebraska	0	Oklahoma	1
New Hampshire	0

Of these lynchings 103 occurred in the South and 4 in the North. Of the total number 84 were negroes and 23 whites. The alleged crimes for which they were lynched were as follows: Murder, 44; complicity in murder, 11; rape, 11; alleged rape, 6; bad reputation, 5; arson, 6; race prejudice, 5; robbery, 5; unknown offenses, 4; aiding criminals to escape, 3; suspected arson, 1; inflammatory language, 1; rape and murder, 1; no offense alleged, 1; mistaken identity, 1; highway robbery, 1; arson and murder, 1.

DONATIONS.

Among all the records of the year 1899 not one stands out so conspicuously as that of the donations and bequests made for religion, educational institutions, charity, libraries, museums, and galleries, and to cities for popular benefit and entertainment. No year in the history of this country has ever equaled it. The aggregate thus bestowed is the immense sum of $79,749,956, as compared with $23,984,900 in 1898, $33,612,814 in 1897 $33,670,129 in 1896, $28,943,549 in 1895, and $19,967,116 in 1894. In the preparation of these statistics no record has been kept of donations or bequests of less than $1,000, since to collect them would be manifestly impossible. Of the total amount stated above there has been given to educational institutions the extraordinary sum of $55,851,817; to charities, $13,206,676; to churches, $2,992,593; to museums and art galleries, $2,686,500; and to libraries, $5,012,400.—Chicago Tribune, December 31, 1899.

MISREPRESENTATION OR WORSE.

From several parts of the mission field come reports that the elders from Utah are making the statement that we of the Reorganized Church have changed the revelations contained in the original Doctrine and Covenants to suit our own purposes. That among these is the article on Marriage published in the edition of 1835, the first edition.

Others it is said, state that there never was a revelation on the marriage relation in the Doctrine and Covenants until the so-called revelation on celestial marriage was printed in it.

Here are a few facts in the case.

In section 13, paragraph 7, of the Doctrine and Covenants, edition of 1835, this is found:—

> Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else.

This was given in February, 1831, to the church:—

> Thou shalt love thy wife [not wives], and cleave unto her [thy wife, not wives] and none else [no one else].

That is a revelation on the marriage relation.

In section 65, paragraph 3, of the same edition of 1835, this is found:—

> And again I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man: wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.

This is a revelation given in March, 1831, one month after the one quoted from above.

Summarized: Marriage must not be forbidden, whoso forbids it is not ordained of God. Marriage is ordained of God to man. It is lawful for man (a man, any man) to have one wife (not more than one, nor many wives). They twain, (one man, one woman), two, not one man and two, or more women, are to be one flesh. This rule was intended as the rule of action and observance in the marriage relation in order that the earth might answer the end for which it was created and be peopled and be filled with the measure of man, utmost numbers, of man. And it was in direct accord with the creation of man and the purpose of God in creating him before the world was made.

Surely there can be no question with anybody but what this was a revelation on the subject of the marriage relation.

In keeping and in harmony with these two revelations a declaration was framed and presented to the church in a solemn assembly, August 17, 1835, and adopted by universal acceptance by vote. It is section 101 in the edition of Doctrine and Covenants of 1835. Paragraph 3 of said section reads:—

> All legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled. Inasmuch as this church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe, that one man should have one wife; and one woman, but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.

This had direct application to the marriage relation, and was the deliberate and candid expression of the belief of the church on the subject, made while the church was beginning its work, and formulated and adopted by the men who had the best right to know what the revelations meant and how they should be understood.

Section 13 in the edition of 1835, the first edition of Doctrine and Covenants, is also 13 in the 1846 edition, published by John Taylor, in Nauvoo, Illinois. It is section 13 in the Liverpool edition of 1852, published by S. W. Richards. Section 65 of the edition of 1835 is 65 in the edition of 1846, and 65 of the edition of 1852.

Section 101 of the edition of 1835 is 109 of the Nauvoo edition of 1846. It is also section 109 in the Liverpool edition of 1852.

Section 13 in the 1835 edition is 42 in the Lamoni edition and 42 in the Utah edition of 1876. Section 65 in the 1835 edition is 49 in the Lamoni edition and 49 in the Utah edition of 1876.

Section 101 of the 1835 edition is 111 of the Lamoni edition, and is left out of the Utah edition altogether.

All editions of the Doctrine and Covenants from 1835 to 1876, published by all parties of Latter Day Saints, contain the revelations quoted from sections 13 and 65 of the Kirtland or 1835 edition, and the section 101 of that issue. But in 1876 that section 101 was taken out, we presume by President Brigham Young's order without action of church or quorum so far as we have been able to learn.

Now, who has changed the revelations to suit themselves?

Those men who assert that we of the Reorganized Church have changed the revelations, are not well informed and make the statement in ignorance of the facts or in disregard of the truth. If ignorant, they are to be pitied; if willful, they are to be blamed.

"DEATH DUE TO A MORMON CURSE."

Peoria, Ill., Jan. 3.—From Salt Lake City comes a strange story to the effect that former Governor Ford of Illinois died in the most abject poverty, with the bones of his body literally protruding from his skin, and that this deplorable end of one of Illinois' best-known statesmen was directly due to curses pronounced upon him by the Mormon Prophet, Joseph Smith. Ford was Governor of Illinois during the Mormon war and at the time of Smith's assassination.

After leaving his office as Governor Mr. Ford moved to this city. His body now lies buried at Springdale cemetery. Careful investigation to-day in part substantiates the claims of the western Mormons. Governor Ford, as the representative of the law which was hounding their sect, incurred the deadly enmity of the Mormons and their leader and prophet. Old residents of this city also say they can recall rumors of a curse against the Governor, and they talk at length of the conditions surrounding his death and the end of his family. Governor Ford was a brilliant man and was eminently successful as a lawyer. But after the expiration of his term of office and soon after the alleged curse was pronounced he ceased to be as prosperous as formerly. He came to Peoria and established a practice, but misfortune followed him, his property dwindled away, and then illness came. At the time of Mrs. Ford's death, which occurred a few years later, the family had been reduced to poverty and the two children had been adopted by friends who could afford to educate them. Ex-Governor Ford survived his wife only a few years, and the discomforts of poverty closed thicker about him. He tasted the full bitterness of illness, destitution, and dependence, and died under the most deplorable conditions.

Former Governor Ford's son Tom, who was just starting on a life which promised to be prosperous, went west on a business trip shortly after his father's death, and was crossing the plains on horseback when a vigilance committee in search of a horse thief arrested him, and despite his protests hanged him to a tree. No one here knows what has become of the former governor's daughter.—Chicago Record.

PRESCOTT, Iowa, Jan. 4.

Editors Herald: — The inclosed clipping from to-day's Chicago Record I thought might be of possible interest. The author of the dispatch from Peoria virtually admits that Joseph Smith was something of a prophet. There is some comfort in this admission, whether Joseph Smith made the prediction or not. Very truly,

W. E. MESSENGER.

We think it improbable that Joseph

the Prophet ever uttered threat or curse against Governor Thomas Ford. The Governor had assured the prophet and his brother that they should be protected from personal violence, persuading them to accept asylum in the rooms of the county jail; and had then gone from Carthage to Nauvoo to assure and quiet the disturbed minds of the saint, and was at Nauvoo, or on the road between the two places, when the murder was done; so that the prophet did not know whether the Governor had been guilty of treachery or not; so that it is not probable that he either pronounced curse or anathema against the Governor. It is possible, however, that the agonized prayers of thousands of bereaved saints may have come up into the ears of the Lord as a complaint against the conduct of the Governor of Illinois.

We regret to see such things in print, and could wish that the dead might rest in peace till the judgment.

SHALL WE HAVE A STATE CHURCH IN THE PHILIPPINES?

The above question is suggested by the recommendations of Professor Jacob G. Schurman, President of Cornell University, Chairman of the United States Commission to the Philippines. In a late number of the Independent he has a paper entitled "Our Duty to the Philippines." The Saint Joseph, Missouri, Gazette, for December 28, 1899, quotes from said paper, as follows:—

Missionaries are needed in the islands and I hope they will be sent there in large numbers. There is plenty of work for them to do, and I hope they will go with a complete understanding of the situation to accomplish good. They must realize that they are contending with a Catholic educated population that knows nothing about the fine differences between Protestant sects and denominations. Therefore, it would be highly impolitic to send missionaries of different denominations to confuse the minds of the people. I do hope that when we send the missionaries we will decide beforehand on one form of Protestant Christianity. Send only one type of missionary. The Filipinos will then have Catholic Christianity and Protestant Christianity presented to them so they can take their choice. We have no adequate idea how confusing to the simple minds of an uncivilized people the different forms of our Protestant faith appear. The Chinese, who are more intelligent than the Filipinos, regard our different denominations as so many different religions.

I think the island of Mindanao is a more promising field for missionaries to begin their work in than Luzon. The influence of the Catholic Church has not been extended to Mindanao, and the simple natives would readily accept the type of faith which the Americans would teach them. It is possible that it would be dangerous to send missionaries to the interior of the island at present, but as conditions become more settled and the Americans are looked upon with a more friendly feeling, this place will be a rich field for the American missionary. We owe it to the Filipinos to give them the best in our religion as well as in our education.

Should the above suggestions be carried out, some one Protestant church must be selected for missionary work among the Filipinos, to the exclusion of all others.

Because the Filipino cannot discern the "fine differences between Protestant sects and denominations," a choice must be made for him. The only liberty left him from a religious standpoint is to choose between Catholicism and that form of Protestantism selected for him by somebody else. Who should make the selection the learned Professor does not suggest. But whatever person or body shall be delegated with the power of choosing the favored church shall decide which among our many Protestant churches is the best; for, as the Professor puts it, "We owe it to the Filipinos to give them the best of our religion as well as in our education."

The competency of the Filipino to judge between Catholicism and some favored form of Protestantism is conceded, but his ability to decide between Protestant churches is denied. So we are to decide for them, and in that decision we are to settle which is the best form of Protestantism. They being a "Catholic educated population," can decide between Catholicism and the best form of Protestantism; but having "the simple minds of an uncivilized people," renders them unfit to determine which is best of the Protestant churches.

This is going a step further than England, so far as the policy would apply to the Philippines, for while she selects a national church, she allows nonconformists to proselyte within her domains, but we, according to the learned Professor, should "send only one type of missionary."

Should this policy be adopted the "free exercise" of all but one favored form of Protestant religion will be prohibited in the Philippine Islands, which will certainly be a violation of the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States, which says: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," etc.

Professor Schurman would have Congress pass a law prohibiting the free exercise of some forms of religion in the Philippines, or else he would have them arbitrarily prohibited without law; unless he does not intend to prohibit, but to "send only one type of missionary" approved by the government, the remainder if prosecuting missionary work to do so without governmental approval, thus favoring a state church in the Philippines.

Had these suggestions come from a less prominent person we could afford to ignore them; but coming as they do from the Chairman of the United States Commission to the Philippines, we feel, in the name of fairness and justice, and in behalf of the Constitution of the United States, to protest.

TEXT OF THE POPE'S ALLOCUTION.

Rome, Dec. 15.—The text of the Pope's allocution at yesterday's consistory is published to-day.

The Pontiff began by announcing the appointment of the Cardinals deputied to open the sacred door of the Roman Basilica at the commencement of the holy year. He said he could have wished that the church enjoyed her former liberty in Rome and that she might thus have been able to celebrate publicly the contemplated ceremonies with the solemn usages of bygone years.

The Pope then referred to the fact that the Vatican was not invited to send a representative to the peace congress at The Hague, an omission which, he said, had been "censured" by all impartial judges.

ONLY ARBITER OF PEACE.

The Czar, he continued, invited the representatives of the most powerful nations, with a view of establishing peace. Yet there was none more worthy of an invitation than the Pope, who had endeavored to obtain and to make peace and to prevent conflict—an office which, by the divine will, was within the attributes of the papacy.

The Holy See had desired a place in that conference, continued the Pontiff. One voice had obstinately opposed itself to this desire, and had gained the point. It was the voice of those who, with the conquest of Rome, had deprived the Pope of his powers.

"What hostility," asked the Pontiff, "have we to fear from them when, even in the face of Europe, they do not hesitate to violate the sanctity of the rights and duties which naturally flow from apostolic power? Nevertheless, whatever the future may bring, we should certainly never, by God's help, be found on the side of those who are afraid."

GROWTH OF SANITARY SENTIMENT.

Paris, Dec. 17. — The city of Paris as a sanitary measure will invite the public by signs posted all over the city not to spit in the streets. The new demand will be made in the interest of the population to avoid the propagation of contagious maladies. Everyone is begged not to spit on the sidewalks, and the measure is taken in view of the alarming increase of consumption and at the urgent requests of several celebrated physicians.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. G. S. Lincoln, San Francisco, California, January 2:—

Bro. F. M. Sheehy delivered us an excellent sermon here Sunday morning. Our branch is in fine condition and all is going well with us. We are rejoicing in the truth of the latter-day work.

Bro. Sheehy's synopsis of his recent discussion with Miles Grant will be found elsewhere in this issue. He is to meet Elder Grant again in the near future.

Bro. L. R. Devore, Brooksville, West Virginia, January 3:—

Bro. L. D. Ullom and I have been blowing the trump among the West Virginia hills, and many have heard. I baptized four noble people recently, two of them on New Year's Day. The ice was heavy and had to be cut. Have preached forty-seven times since November 11. More calls than we can fill; prospects good; weather cold; health clever. A happy New Year to all.

Bro. M. P. Hansen, Plymouth, Massachusetts, writes of his gratification to read a reference to work that might be done in Scandinavia, and, naturally, he rejoices in the thought, expressing the hope that mission work be done in his mother country. Recent efforts by the church in Scandinavia—Denmark and Sweden—also in Germany and Switzerland, proved the untimeliness of such efforts. It seems apparent that we can the better reach foreigners in our own country, of whom there are thousands scattered throughout the Union, more readily, and freely, than abroad. Conditions abroad must evidently change in many countries before we can succeed there. In any event, we can convert the foreigner here, where we have free access to him, and until such time as the church shall be in condition to extend the work to every nation, and under circumstances reasonably favorable to success.

Bro. Charles Albertson, laboring in the Rocky Mountain mission, is interesting himself in trying to induce scattered saints in branches to take the HERALD. He finds many without it, hence ignorant of the movements of the church. We trust the ministry general and local will urge this matter upon the attention of our people. Every family ought to take the church publication, as should those otherwise situated, throughout the world.

Bro. W. S. Pender, of Kansas, was the first of the ministry to forward to the Herald Office, for the new year one dollar, the usual fee, for insertion of a marriage notice. Bear in mind, however, that Bro. Pender was the officiating clergyman, not one of the principals, in the ceremony.

Dr. Dowie's new bodyguard, the Volunteers of Zion, three hundred strong, were announced to parade in Chicago on Sunday, December 31. This bodyguard is announced to also have charge of the proposed new city of Zion, land for which, 6,000 acres, has been purchased, near Waukegan, Wisconsin.

Mr. Roberts followed with a five hours' address. Among other items the following is reported: "He said Congress certainly had some knowledge of human nature, and was composed of reasonable men, and they could not expect the people of Utah to abandon a practice which had been in effect for fifty years." There is scarcely room for a doubt that Roberts will not be seated.

THE TEN TRIBES.

And the King of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah and Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.—2 Kings 18: 11.

There have been many speculations as to the location of the "lost sheep of the house of Israel." England, Russia, and Scandinavia have all shared in the honors of being their home; but as yet no satisfactory evidence has been produced showing that the lost tribes ever inhabited either of those countries.

It is evident that they were led away to the north of Palestine; but how far north we are not informed. Some have supposed they must have been carried beyond the ice fields that shut us out from the north pole, and some have entertained a hope that our arctic explorers would discover the long lost tribes of Israel, but so far their hopes have not been realized.

Jeremiah says:—

Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord; and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you.—3: 12.

It is also declared, that when the Lord shall deliver them from their banishment or isolation, and bring them back to their fatherland, that their deliverance would be attended with such power that they would lose sight of the miracles performed at the time of their deliverance from Egypt; and instead of their saying:—

The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country.—Jer. 23: 7, 8.

It seems from the brief accounts that are given by the inspired writers, that if Israel is ever found, there will be but a remnant of them, and that they will be in a sad and benighted condition. Isaiah speaks of them as a remnant (11: 11); and 2 Nephi says of them: "They are in a lost and fallen condition."

There is one thing I have noticed in the historians that have been trying to locate the lost tribes, and that is they have never sought for them in the country where they were placed by the Assyrian king when led captive from Samaria. Assyria is north or northeast of Palestine, just where Shalmaneser located them; and here we find a people bearing strong evidence of being of Hebrew origin. They are called Nestorians; but they must not be confounded with the followers of Nestorius, Bishop of Constantinople, who was excommunicated for heresy A. D. 431; for these people hate the name of "Nestorian," as it was given them in derision by other Christians, and that because they, like the followers of Nestorius, opposed the introduction of pictures and images in the church, which then was becoming quite common.

These Nestorians call themselves, Beni-Israel, or children of Israel, and claim that they were brought there from Palestine some centuries before the Christian era; and if this tradition is true, that fixes their origin; for no other people was ever brought into the Midian cities excepting Israelites.

The Nestorians do not speak of their being Israelites with pride, but rather with shame, on account of the infidelity of their ancestors. They claim to have been converted to Christianity early in the Christian era. The Jews hate the Nestorians, calling them apostates; but acknowledge that they are descendants of Jacob. So we have the testimony of both Jews and Nestorians, which makes a pretty clear case.

That these people had an early opportunity of becoming converts to Christianity is provided for in the fact that the apostles Matthew, Thomas, and Bartholomew, all preached in that country, and the names of those apostles and the names of the old patriarchs constitute half the names of those people to-day. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Solomon, are very common.

History also supports the theory of these people being Israelites. Josephus speaks of the lost tribes being in Assyria in his day; and we have well authenticated history of their being there as late as the fifth century of the Christian era; and they certainly could not have migrated from there since, without it being noticed by the historians of the nations that surround them.

Doctor Ashael Grant, who was for many years a missionary among the Nestorians, informs us that their language is the same as that of the Jews; and their old manuscripts of the Bible, like those of the Jews, is written in ancient Syriac. They observe the making of peace offerings, just as ancient Israel did; the form being the same; the animal must be without spot or blemish, is to be slain at the door of the sanctuary, and the breast and right shoulder to be given to the priest that performs the rite.

Dr. Grant also says they make vows, and often consecrate a son to the service of the Lord; and they sometimes take vows of celibacy.

They are called Nazarenes by the Jews, and some of them take the vow of a Nazarite.

In the "helps" to the Oxford Bible, speaking of the Assyrians, it says: "The Semitic character of their language is unmistakable, and is allowed on all hands. Their physiognomy and physical type and manners are also clearly Semitic and render any doubt upon the subject impossible."

Those people claim to be Christians, but they have corrupted the doctrines of Christ and mixed them with Judaism, until they are neither Jew nor Christian in religion. They are indeed as represented by Nephi, in a "lost and fallen condition."

Doctor Grant found them strict in the observance of the Sabbath, and says that not long before his visit among the mountain or independent Nestorians, they had put people to death for desecrating the Sabbath. They claim that they abandoned circumcision many years ago; and received baptism instead.

The mountain Nestorians have lived in their mountain fastnesses from time immemorial; and until quite recently, the way to their country was inaccessible, and when Dr. Grant wanted a guide to conduct him there, the Mohammedan psha of Mosul said, "To the borders of their territory and no farther will I be responsible, for these mountain infidels acknowledge no psha or king, for from time immemorial, every man has been his own king." They are as much an independent people to-day as they were a thousand years ago; and one writer says that for fifteen hundred years no conqueror has ever penetrated their stronghold.

When Dr. Grant visited them he was met with suspicion, and had it not been that the fame of his medical skill had preceded him, would not have been permitted to enter their country. He says, after taking in the situation and viewing the homes and customs of the country: "Here was the homes of a hundred thousand Christians, around whom the arm of Omnipotence had reared the adamantine ramparts, whose lofty snow-capped summits seem to blend with the skies in the distant horizon; here in their munition of rocks has God preserved, as for some great end in the economy of his grace, a chosen remnant of his ancient church, secure from the beast and the false prophet; safe from the flames of persecution and the clangor of war;" and then adds: "Their customs, manner, language, and dress, are as they were two thousand years ago, strictly Jewish."

While the Nestorians of the low country are subject to temporal rulers, in spiritual matters they are only subject to the patriarch. The mountain Nestorians accept the patriarch as being absolute in both spiritual and temporal things; but in their temporal affairs he is only appealed to on extraordinary occasions.

As this article is becoming more lengthy than was intended in the beginning, I will simply call the mind of the reader back to second Kings,

add a few comments, and dismiss the subject.

"And the king of Assyria did carry away Israel into Assyria, and put them in Halah and in Habor by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes." The preposition "by" is italicised in King James' Version, and is what is called a supplied word; and Rev. J. E. Godby says it is not in the original text. Leaving out "by," and it would read, "In Habor the river of Gozan." Now "Halah" means mountain regions, and these mountains in Assyria is just where Shalmaneser placed the tribes—in the cities of the Medes, for these Nestorians occupy the very part of ancient Assyria that was called Media; and there is a river in the Nestorian country called Habor to this day; and Genesius tells us that Gozan and Zozon are the same, and means pasture ground. Then we find that Habor, the river of Gozan, is the river of pasture ground, and the Nestorians call their pasture ground Gozan.

In conclusion, if any young elder has an ambition to preach the restored gospel to outcast Israel, he need not provide himself with artic clothing, nor join an exploring expedition, but go to Assyria, climb the mountains, and tell them the ensign has been raised, and the message of the Lord to them is, "Return, O thou backsliding daughters of Zion. The way is being prepared; the highway is being thrown up; the sterility of the land is being blessed with refreshing showers; and again are vines planted on Samaria's hills. Then arise from your lost and fallen condition, and Christ will give you light."

WAYNE, W. Va., Dec. 23.

Editors Herald:—Thanksgiving Day was observed by our little branch in a way that its influence for good will not soon be lost sight of by many who were in attendance at our meetings on that day. Bro. G. H. Godbey came to our place in October, and after a series of meetings held at the saints' chapel and in the regions round about, had quite a tilt with a Christian or Campbellite preacher to the encouragement of the saints and the enlightenment of all who heard it.

A few days before Thanksgiving it was proposed that the saints give a free dinner on that day, which was readily acceded to and carried out to perfection. And O such a crowd as we did have, with the best of order and attention! Professor Lee S. Dick, one of Wayne County's leading public school-teachers, made the opening address on the origin and objects of Thanksgiving Day, which was received with the greatest attention by all who heard it. Following this, Bro. Godbey preached one of his masterly sermons, being aided by the Holy Spirit to such a degree that the truth was riveted on the minds of many that never heard this gospel before. Time can never erase it therefrom.

Following the morning exercises came dinner; and to say that all did justice thereto was putting it mildly. But still after the multitude was fed there was taken up several baskets full. Bro. Godbey again discoursed in the evening on the resurrection and the final home of man, which was new to many who heard it, and brought forth many expressions of approval. Prior to and succeeding this meeting, Bro. Godbey baptized six while here. One of that number was an evangelist in the Christian Church by the name of Lloyd, who was nearing the fourscore mark in years, and a leading man in the church, and was also one of the upper ten in society. Taking all in all this has been one of the best series of meetings ever held in this county. A great deal of prejudice has been removed, and many friends made to the cause. To God be ascribed all the praise, honor, and glory. Amen.

Your brother in the one faith,

KIBBIE, Ill., Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—About a month ago I went to Arkansas to see after a section of land my father bought prior to his death; and while there I was not idle. At Weiner I conducted two funeral services, one for Bro. John Roberts' wife; the people were well pleased, and the best of attention prevailed. The other service was at the silent city of the dead, the German cemetery, near Weiner. A woman had died very suddenly, a good woman, but her husband was a drunkard. He requested me to talk awhile. He said he was going to live a sober life the remainder of his days. I set forth the beautiful idea that was promised, that we would be rewarded for our works, and I asked the people to help him to reform. The scriptures say that no drunkard can enter the kingdom of heaven, but if he would reform he could meet his darling wife in that beautiful city above. In the evening, at the schoolhouse, I talked on the gospel of the kingdom, and confirmed it by using Galatians 1: 8, 9, showing that this is the only gospel that will save people in the celestial world. I held the people spellbound for one hour and a half, setting forth this beautiful faith of the Latter Day Saints. They were well pleased, and wanted me to stay and preach for them a week or two. Two schoolhouses were opened for me, but I could not stay longer.

I went from there to Morton to see some friends and relatives, and to finish up my business for my father's estate. A schoolhouse was opened at once. About a year ago two Utah preachers had held meetings there, and I was anxious to tell the people that we were in no way connected with them. I held meetings there three nights. The first night I could not get the people to sing; there were about fifty present. The next night they came prepared to sing; and the third night they had gathered early and were singing. This was encouraging to me. The crowd had more than doubled. One man said there was a schoolhouse two and one half miles north from there, and they wanted me there a week or two. They also wanted me to stay longer at Morton, but I could not. There are many saloons there, and I advised the people to vote them down.

The people promised that if a Latter Day Saint elder ever came there they would feed and keep him, and they would now. If there is an elder near there he will receive a warm reception at John Boyd's, and at several other places near Morton. I hope the presiding officer in that district will excuse me for intruding on his territory, but the good seed has been sown, and now will some one go there and cultivate, and reap in time of harvest? Returning home, I give God the glory, leaving the result with him.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 19.

Editors Herald: — Missionaries passing through Chicago are cordially invited to call and preach for us. All saints coming to this city are welcome, and we will be glad to see them. Here are a few colored saints trying to live their religion, and serve God the best way they can. Our desires are to our heavenly Father to see more come into the fold. I am in a struggle in order to advertise our missionary work, and get our business more extensively before the people, as well as in a desirable manner. I have decided to hold a protracted meeting until April 1, at the saints' meeting hall, to commence Sunday evening, January 7, at No. 1802 Armour Avenue. Elder G. H. Graves, the pastor, with able assistants, will be in charge. Song service at 7:30, preaching at eight. We extend to the world and to all preachers a free pulpit and an open Bible. All come, and take part with us, and we will do our best to make you happy.

In gospel bonds,

G. H. GRAVES.

Editors Herald:—After about a month's labor in the neighborhood of Hecla, I had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. Len Moore. I was called by letter from Bro. James Langton to hasten to the defense of the work at Park River. After consulting Bro. Caffall it was decided that I should respond, especially as one of the opposing faction, a Presbyterian, felt so confident of victory that he volunteered to pay expenses of hall, fuel, and lighting, amounting to five dollars per night. A conclave of ministers, all evidently desirous that the Mormon impostor, as they termed me, should be downed, only ended in each one declining the honor, and suggesting that the other brother was more competent. After six weeks of tedious waiting, nothing tangible has developed.

Accompanied by Bro. Langton, we turned to the more agreeable labor of preaching the restored gospel. We held a week's meetings in Cleveland township, with meager attendance. While there, was called upon to unite Bro. E. R. Davis and Sr. Marguerite Kinsfather in the most solemn of earth's com-pacts. They start out on the matrimonial sea with the best wishes of a host of friends.

We started in here by the invitation of Bro. James Henderson. It is a thinly settled country, and it is hard to interest the people; some do not attend meetings for months in succession. I visit as best I can from house to house, talking and distributing tracts.

The branch at Clifford prospers fairly well; the majority are striving to do their duty. Owing to the extremely low price of wheat, some are not able to pay as much tithing as they could wish, but nearly all have remembered the Lord's treasury to some extent. We hope to enter a few more names before we send our annual report to Bro. Kelley. Praying the blessing of our heavenly Father upon all departments of his work, I am your colaborer in the gospel,

WM. SPARLING.

Editors Herald:—I write to let those know who care to know, that we are still battling for the right, and we hope to be of that number that shall come off conquerer in the end.

I have not been able to do as much missionary work in the last few months as I desired, but hope to do more from now till conference. Our help is very scarce in this district. Bro. Moler is doing what he can, but it looks like lonely work for one in so large a territory with so little help as I can give.

I left home a week ago; have been preaching at Pine and Limerick. Will go to Weldon to-day for a couple of days. Spent one day there last week on elders' court. We pray the saints may see the necessity of doing the right so there would be no need of elders' courts.

I am glad in the Lord that the good work is moving along and hope we may be able to help more in the future than in the past.

Yours in faith,

S. J. JEFFERS.

MANCHESTER, Texas, Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—I am alone down here, so far as elders are concerned, battling away for the truth. We have now folded away another year, another mile post passed on life's road; and when I look back over the year I wonder if I have done all I could to spread the gospel. Thank God, I feel that I have. But the happiest thing of all is that God has greatly blessed me with his Spirit and has answered my prayers, and he has blessed me with visions, and the curtains of time have been raised, and I have seen wonderful things to come; and when I read Revelation 1:10 and learn that the brother on the lonely Isle of Patmos could say he was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day and that Spirit showed him things to come, I thank the Lord the same Spirit is with the saints in the last days.

And let me say, dear saints, that the Spirit is pleading with us to come up higher; and, thank God, many of the saints are striving to do so.

Some of the saints in this country have been blessed with beautiful visions, and the saints in general are striving to live nearer to God, and they seem to have great desires to pay their tithing and try to help spread the gospel. O saints, the great day is close, and if we want to see Zion built up, let us pay our tithing and put our shoulders to the gospel wheels and roll the gospel on to the ends of the earth.

Prospects for the work in Northeastern Texas are bright, but laborers are greatly needed; so let us pray that God will send other laborers into the field. I attended our district conference at Cove, Arkansas, on the 11th of November last, and what I enjoyed at that conference has a place within my heart that time will never fade away. The lone hills of Polk County, Arkansas, were made to tremble under the power of God's Holy Spirit.

I am at home during the holidays with my sick wife, but by the power of God's Spirit she is recovering, and I will start in a few days to tell the people of the beautiful gospel. So let us pray for a great ingathering into the church this year. I ask the prayers of all the saints that I may hold out faithful.

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

BEDISON, Mo., Dec. 23.

Editors Herald:—About six years since, Elder Henry Kemp led me down into the waters of baptism, and there satisfied a long felt desire of my soul. I was born of praying parents, who taught me to read and love the Bible. At thirteen I joined the Methodist Church, and then came the question of water baptism. I talked to the preacher, to the other members of the church, and they told me that it did not make much difference about that, and they mentioned so many good men who were in favor of sprinkling for baptism, that I chose that form—and "if it made no difference," it was the easier way, and like the child that I was, I was sprinkled.

Both before and after this event I had read of Christ's baptism, of John and Philip, and all the rest. So I began to think on the subject for myself, and many a time have I passed by the water and just longed in my very soul for some one to come and lead me "down into the water" as Philip led the eunuch, and set at rest the trouble in my soul. When I would go to church I would be ashamed of such thoughts, and would not want anyone to know what was troubling me. But as soon as I would go to God in silent, secret prayer (for I had read, "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God"), that same desire would come back to me with almost irresistible power.

While in this condition I was incidentally thrown in company with the Latter Day Saints, and for the first time in my life, heard the gospel of Jesus Christ. I didn't take time to hunt for the grammatical errors in the Book of Mormon, nor did I read all of the revelations of Joseph Smith, neither did I study the life of that man, to know whether he was good or bad, but I saw in the "epitome" more pure gospel than all that I had heard during my life. So I did not try to find any excuse, but began at once to do the things that were made known to me. And as I stood on the banks of the river, the thought came to me as plainly as if spoken, "This is the day and time for which you have prayed so long," and I was anxious to get into the water.

And now I know that the servants of God have authority on earth to administer in the ordinances of the gospel. I have seen many cases of healing by the power of God, but nothing appeals so strongly to my soul as the organization of the church. The saints in Nodaway district are trying to do what they can to push the work, though there are some who are letting their lamps burn low.

Bro. J. Arthur Davis was called here on the 17th, to preach the funeral of our old friend and neighbor, Inis Rasmusen, who was a native of Denmark. After the funeral, Bro. Davis stayed and preached four nights to fair and attentive crowds. At the close we heard some, not of our faith, say that he was the best preacher of any that had been here; and one fellow (to the surprise of us all) came up and dropped into Bro. Davis' hand something of a substantial nature.

While we sat and heard the words of life and glory offered to the people in the fair, candid, but vigorous way, this thought came to our mind forcibly,

"God is marshaling his army,
For the rescue of his truth," and we felt more than ever the blessing that comes through "study to show thyself approved." Bro. Davis has full houses wherever he has been, and we can hear him well spoken of wherever he has gone by saints and others.

May the kind Father assist all in this district who hold the priesthood to go to work at once and try to help roll on this work triumphantly.

Your brother in Christ,

E. S. FANNON.

NEWHOPE, Va., Dec. 28.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you on the 6th inst. I have held a few meetings in Powhatan County, in the neighborhood where Sr. Corson formerly resided. I found prejudice very high, and since leaving there I hear that a Presbyterian preacher was getting up a mob to run me out of the neighborhood. Well, I feel to say to such poor souls as Jesus did to the woman of Samaria, "Ye worship ye know not what; we know what we worship." "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." I baptized two before leaving there, an excellent young man, Bro. Willie Topham and his sister, Ocean, with whom I had a pleasant home. They have an afflicted sister whom I anointed, and for whom I ask the united prayers of those who may read this, that she may be fully restored in mind and body. Also, that her brother and sister, who are separated twenty-five miles from any other saint, may be able to meet all opposition and bear the message to others who will receive it.

This mission cannot be neglected. I returned to Richmond and procured a hall, and began services in the suburb called Fulton, where Sr. Corson now lives. The enemy had got his work in pretty well, telling the people we were just the same as the Brighamites; that we believed in "Joe Smith and the Book of Mormons," and this coupled with the editorials in the Richmond dailies about Mormonism in the Roberts case, and no distinction being made, but that every man and woman should do all in their power to put down Mormonism. This and the preachers from the pulpit caused the people to stay away, and we had but a small hearing.

I baptized Sr. Corson on Sunday after advertising it, and several were present who did not attend the meetings. I have added four in all to the fellowship of the saints since coming here in the mission November last, and trust that God has added them to the church.

I see by an article from Charleston that a delegation has been sent from Hampton County to the State Legislature asking for "a law to extirpate the elders of the Mormon Church from Ridgeland, where they have established quite a following." The stir in the Roberts case has caused this action, no doubt. The press of the country owe their readers an article showing the difference between the orthodox and the heterodox Mormons, if they will persist in calling us Mormons, as it is indexed in "What the world believes." It is plain to the mind of anyone who will try to find the facts, that Utahism is not Mormonism.

I will go next Wednesday about five miles from here, to try to open up the work in another new place. Arrangements are already made to commence services at that time.

STEWARTSVILLE, Mo., Dec. 9.

Editors Herald:—After reading the Herald I feel like writing a few lines as a testimony to the truth. I was led when very young to believe in what the people called the word of God, and I believed the word as I read it. There were a great many things I did not understand, but that does not bother me, as I understand more than I can practice or do in my weakness; and me not being learned has kept me from doing my duty, and I had to suffer for it for many years. I have been very badly afflicted, and feel it is because I have not believed the word of God, but God has always spared me. I have not been so I could hear the gospel for many years; but there are none so deaf as them that can hear and will not.

When I was ordained a priest I was told to go and labor in the branch; and I went and was blessed. And as no one else went, and I was young in the work, I suffered that winter. I was taken with a pain in my head that left me deaf. And when I go to church I cannot tell when the meeting is announced without I ask some one. Well, if we want God to bless us, we must obey his law.

I want to do all I can to advance the work. If we think we can do what we want to, and not obey the law, we will not be able to be gathered when the Savior comes. I exhort all to do their duties. Pray in your family and in secret. Teach your children to obey the law. Love one another and the Lord your God with all your might, mind, and strength, and your neighbor as yourself. Seek to build up the Church of Christ, and all things necessary will be added. All who do these things need not fear the windstorms. If they fall in battle for the truth they will rise again to shine in the Father's kingdom.

Now this year is nearly gone, let each one try next year to improve their faith. Take the Herald; don't miss those good things, and pay your tithing, and ask God to bless it, and see how you will prosper. If everyone would pay one dollar that don't pay any, the church would pay for the college and send the gospel abroad. In conclusion, I will say, that as it is my duty to assist the elders, if I can help I will do all I can.

Your brother in Christ,

F. T. DABIE.

ST. MARY'S, Ont., Dec. 28.

Editors Herald:—Reports from the different brethren, scattered as they are, show that we have had a splendid year, and all feel encouraged, hoping the incoming year will add much to the strength and development of the saints. It appears to me that the time has come for a complete consecration of all that we have, or will be, in order to be in touch with God and the work yet to be done in the gathering of the saints and the building up of Zion. These are questions the church must soon take up, hence the necessity of being prepared for their solution.

From June on till end of November I labored in the Bruce peninsula, for the most part of the time breaking up new ground. On the whole I find that country a good field to work; the people are not as creedbound as further south, and so with but few exceptions the work finds its way in. Many calls are made for preaching, but they cannot be very well filled till the winter ends. In three different places—Port Elgin, Colpoys Bay, and Stokes Bay—a little band of saints meet together regularly for worship and ere long I trust, God willing, to see them organized into branches.

The beginning of December found me in Woodstock. I went there to hear and inquire into the work of Chrismas, a divine healer, so-called. 'Twas but a few days till I had mailed the necessary information, and Bro. R. C. Evans appeared ready for action. Chrismas was laying claim to preaching the gospel in its fullness, but did little else than preach the idea of healing, and many professed to have been healed of various troubles. He was playing the part of Simon Magus, the sorcerer, giving out that he was some great one, and unto whom the people gave heed, supposing him to be the great power of God. The preachers opposed the healer, and denounced him as a fraud. This led Chrismas to challenge any minister to meet him on the platform, and oppose him honorably; and by their refusal he gained sympathy, and now has a little following that look upon him as their Jesus. Mr. Chrismas felt he had gained the day when his challenge was not taken up, and repeatedly charged the preachers and churches of being in apostasy; but his boasting was due to their cowardice, and not because of his bravery.

At first Chrismas and the people took right up with Elder Evans. The healer had him speaking at every meeting, until he saw a wedge coming in between him and the honest inquirer, then friendly relations ceased and hostilities commenced. The healer feared his overthrow, and was forced to retract his words, and seek shelter by an appeal to prejudice. Elder Evans had proved quite an attraction, making Chrismas feel somewhat uneasy, especially when following Chrismas in a speech he took occasion to talk along the opposite as true. This was Sunday evening and in the opera house, and by this time it was discernible that the healer was done with the Elder; but Chrismas afterwards found the Elder was not done with him.

On the following two nights a little ruffle was caused by our presence in their meetings, and their making an unkind attack upon us; but on the following Sunday we engaged the opera house and extensively advertised two lectures, exposing the method and deceptive work of Chrismas. Before this through the papers, Elder Evans challenged the healer to discussion; but he begged to be excused. He backed down and showed himself afraid of defending his much-boasted position. His cowardly evasion was in everybody's mouth, and when Sunday came, the people crowded the house; eight hundred in the afternoon, over one thousand at night. Expenses nearly $25, but we cleared that by collections. We could not continue to present our claims in full, but it may be more favorable at a later date.

Four were baptized—two of whom were sympathizers of the healer, so even at that our work was not a failure. Many friends were made, but we hope the blessed seed sown will grow until the people get to see it is worthy of bringing to maturity.

Yours in truth,

FREDERICK GREGORY.

ECHO, I. T., Dec. 5.

Editors Herald:—There is a small band of saints here; we have never had the privilege of being organized into a branch. There is a branch organization at Fairland, ten miles north of here. We will put our membership in there if there is not one organized here soon. I would like to see an organization effected here that we might meet often and enjoy the blessings promised the saints if faithful. We all attended the reunion at Berry's Ferry, in September, and all felt well paid for going. I had the pleasure of seeing my little sister Lola obey the sacred law of baptism, the youngest of my mother's family; also my little nephew. Our family are all in the church now that are old enough. This alone I think is enough to be thankful for. If we older ones will only do our duty and set a good example before them, that they may so live that they may never regret the step taken in their youth. I think parents sometimes make a mistake. I have often heard older people say, "I don't believe in persuading the young to be baptized." I do not think we do any harm if we persuade in the right way.

We have had considerable preaching here

of late, and prejudice has almost died out. Five years ago it was a rare thing for any of our elders to preach here without being molested in some way, and sometimes in a very rough way. Bro. Simmons has stood faithfully by us, and now he can rejoice with us to know that our preachers are received by outsiders more kindly than any other. Brn. Smart and Haden came in July and held a good meeting for us. Bro. Simmons came in October and preached ten sermons and presided over two prayer meetings. We felt greatly blessed and strengthened, in what the Lord did for for us through his administration.

Bro. I. P. Baggerly was here in November and gave us several good sermons. Bro. J. D. Erwin came the 3d inst. and left to-day, preached for us last night. We had been figuring on him staying and preaching for us awhile. He intended doing so, but was called away. Who will be the next? My greatest desire is to see the gospel spread, and to see it take effect among my people, the Lamanites. I fully believe that the days of persecution are over with us and that the very name Latter Day Saint is an honor to anyone. I am truly glad that the kind Father saw fit to give me understanding, and cause me to obey his perfect law. My earnest prayer is that I may be faithful and found worthy a crown that awaits the righteous.

I am your sister in Christ,

ELIZA DODSON.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—In reading the Saints' Herald last night I observed an article therein which at once drew my interest and attention, and would like to say that I am glad that I am in the gospel and this latter-day work. My case is similar to St. Paul's. He once opposed the church of Jesus Christ; so did I. He was converted by the Son of God; so was I, but only in this way, by obeying the ordinances and accepting his gospel and living according to the commandments found in this gospel and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

To give all the reasons why I love the saints and the Church of Jesus Christ is impossible. Love is not a given quantity; it cannot be measured off till none is left. Ask the patriot why he loves his country; the student why he loves to study the gospel in these latter days; or why Archimedes loved mathematics; or why Shakespeare loved the play. They could never give all their reasons, nor can I. If I give twenty I shall have forty left; if forty, I shall have four score left. I am to-day confessor. We have few confessors now; all are professors. This is easier. Once Christians were confessors. Then a man confessed his Savior at the risk of his life. Thank God, those days are past; and charity, like a heavenly dove, alights on our banners. Once bigotry reigned supreme in the world and the so-called sects and churches. Bigotry was monster-born, with the head of a man but the heart of a fiend. His reign was cruel. Bigotry is the husband of superstition. For a house to live in, they built the Inquisition. Their firstborn son was Sectarianism. They were warmed by martyr-fires, and solaced by the music of expiring groans.

The prosperity of the family resulted in the "dark ages." The Reformation routed the family by pulling down their house. But they wander now in disguise, of ten in priestly garb, tempting the church of Jesus Christ back to persecution. It is our duty to exterminate them, root and branch; and the Christ-like love manifested through his true saints, will do it. Bigotry, superstition, and sectarianism can no more endure the heavenly atmosphere of love and charity of God's true saints than the prince of darkness can the light of God's glory; which is the glory of God's true saints. Superstition, though deformed, leprous, and filthy, has this propensity; she loves religion.

"And heaven hath not a shrine so pure,
So holy, but this serpent, sin,
In hours we deem the most secure,
Beneath its altars will glide in."

I am glad the Church of Jesus Christ is not hemmed in by any human creed, bounded by any party lines, or limited to any human sect; but as faith was before creeds and truth before formulas, so the church was before sects and human creeds, it may be again.

The word "church" signifies not merely ekklesia, called out; but "kirk" or kuriakos, the Lord's; that is, the Lord's people. I am glad to find the truth as taught by Christ and not men. I was brought into this gospel through the presentation of it to me one year ago by Elder William Bradbury, of this city.

I graduated from Moody's school, Mt. Hermon, 1881. Entered the —— Christian Biblical School, Standfordville, N. Y. Studied the Bible two years; was ordained a minister of the so-called Christian Church. But have found out that I was not ordained by the right authority. Have been in mission work in Boston. Was stabbed several times. Left the church because they did not, neither do they at this day, preach the gospel. I am at present out of work and somewhat financially embarrassed; but trust Him who is able to do all things. Truly yours in the gospel,

WM. J. HOLDEN.

AUBURN, Iowa, Jan. 3.

Editors Herald:—The new year came in with a clear sky and a sunny face, looking cheerful and happy. May its loveliness foreshadow a prosperous and happy year for the church and a grand spiritual development for each and every member of the Church of Jesus Christ.

As my mind runs back over the past year I am conscious of having made a reasonable effort to discharge the duties devolving upon a missionary of the church; and, though I have not accomplished as much as could have been desired, it is hoped the labor performed will be approved of God and accepted by his church.

I have been kindly received and cared for at all times, by both saints and friends. Experience has taught the writer that the energetic, persevering, and careful missionary is always welcomed by the saints and receives of the best their homes afford; and, as a rule, those not of the church treat us kindly. The heavenly Father still provides for the servants of Christ. To him be honor and praise.

The few ministers we have in the Galland's Grove district are doing well, all things considered. Our Bishop's agent and missionary, Elder C. J. Hunt, is always busy, and his work is appreciated by both saints and friends. Elder J. M. Baker and wife have been doing some good work at Mallard and Ayrshire, and they expect to visit and do some work at Coalville and other points if all goes well. Bro. Baker is preaching and working in the interests of the Sunday school and Religio, and Sr. Baker is rendering needed assistance in Sunday school work, especially in the musical department. May their labors do much good and enliven and encourage all who need help where they may labor.

Bro. C. Joseph Carlson has been doing some acceptable work, and Bro. W. D. Bullard has not forgotten the work assigned him. His efforts are appreciated by those among whom he labors. Branch officers have not forgotten that it is their duty to nourish and feed "the Church of God which he has purchased with his own blood." That is right, brethren, look sharply to the needs of the flock; let none be overlooked or neglected. If any are falling, help them up, and steady them until they are able to walk alone; if any are lost and wandering in the wilderness, let them be sought and found and carried back to the fold in the strong and loving arms of the Shepherd; and when rescued, let all the church rejoice, as do the angels in heaven.

With the opening of the new year it might be beneficial if each and all the branch officers would redouble their diligence and spirituality. There is no work of more vital importance to the spirituality, life, growth, and prosperity of the church as a whole than that of properly nourishing and feeding the members of the church. God once said to the church: "Purge ye out the iniquity which is among you; sanctify yourselves before me." Yet every effort in this direction should be done in the fear of God and with love for the individual's wellbeing. It should be done in harmony with the letter and spirit of the gospel and the law of Christ. Working officers and ministers should be encouraged in the discharge of their duties by every member of the church. The officers' visits should be frequent and their teachings spiritual, whether delivered at the home or in the church. Study the needs of the flock you are caring for, and then feed accordingly, and God will bless and help you. This done in faith and with prayerful hearts, you will not lack for liberty or freedom of thought when it is your duty to teach.

Branches in our district are doing fairly well and are hopeful, yet in some of them there is still room for improvement. The wonderful love of God is manifest in every provision of the gospel and every precept of the law of Christ. But they can only be understood and appreciated as we reduce them to practice. It is by doing that which is required of us that we are permitted to come close to the Divine One and become partakers of the divine nature. Paul understood this

when he wrote, "How great is the mystery of godliness!" Jesus taught the same truth in these words: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

If we are good, and pure, and true,
We know what God would have us do;
And if we do that which we know,
Unto his image we shall grow.

Our hope will brighten as we go;
More love and wisdom we shall know;
The fruits thereof shall make us wise,
And help us to secure the prize.

Our home shall be a blessed place,
And love shall beam from every face;
Words of wisdom, deeds of love,
Will bring Thy blessings from above.

Love makes our home a place of rest,
And the food we eat, the very best;
Love gives the housewife health and cheer,
And makes our children seem more dear.

Love gives the hearth a brighter glow,
The Christians life a deeper flow;
Love makes the eyes to sparkle bright,
And fills each soul with heavenly light.

Love makes all nature bloom afresh,
And gives new life to hearts of flesh;
Love gives the rose a brighter hue,
And teaches saints just what to do.

Love makes this earth a blessed place,
And by it we shall win the race;
Love helps us to endure in faith,
And shows to us God's smiling face.

Hopefully yours,
CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Editors Herald:—The cause of righteousness is looking better in and about Jonesport than it has for a long time. The saints are more united, and they have come to learn that good preaching is not the only thing needed to keep them in touch with the divine influence. Through the indefatigable efforts of T. C. Kelley, submissionary in charge and his wise counsel, some difficulties of long standing have been adjusted to the seeming satisfaction of all. Unity in a measure is restored. T. C. is the right man in the right place; safe to be put in trust with God's work. We hope he may be sent here another year.

At present W. W. Blanchard is doing some good preaching there, thus increasing the interest. Some have already given their names for baptism. The local help are doing well in trying to act their part. I see no reason now why the work there should not move along nicely.

The work throughout the district is in fair condition; not only are the saints trying to be better, but the people are more anxious to inquire about the angel's message. The preaching is being sought for and listened to with more interest than ever before. Urgent demands are being made for the church literature, yet more or less complaints are being made, by some of the saints, about so much being said and written by those of the lesser quorums in ways that seem to be counseling the higher quorums; thus it would seem like the feet trying to furnish brain for the head.

It is thought, where satisfactory conclusions cannot be reached by that which is written, the lack should be supplied at the head, and not at the feet. Whether this may be puerile or not, we trust the good work may move on to the satisfaction of all concerned.

S. O. FOSS.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—For more than a year I have not written for your columns.

Last winter, in company with Bro. Mark Jensen, I held a very successful series of meetings at the Rising Sun schoolhouse, near Sioux City. One was baptized, and several others expressed themselves as intending to unite with the church upon our return, which will be in a short time. We were kindly cared for by Messrs. Parker, Hewitt, and Kirkpatrick.

We also visited isolated saints at Kingsley, administered to the sick, etc. The little child of Bro. Ora Van Sickle was immediately healed by the power of God; which rejoiced us all.

After Bro. Jensen returned home I visited Akron and preached ten times, to small congregations, considering the size of the town. Returned from Akron at request of Bro. Mintun to assist in tent work. Of this Bro. M. has written.

Have met with much kindness from saints and friends, which is highly appreciated. Through the efforts of Brn. J. E. Montague and Mark Jensen I was presented with a good fur overcoat in time to shield me from the bitter cold weather of last winter. And during the summer other friends raised means to purchase a good watch for me, which was greatly needed, as I was without a timepiece. For these expressions of good will I return my heartfelt thanks to all who assisted; and I pray God to abundantly bless them.

I attended and greatly enjoyed the Woodbine reunion; and since that time have preached at various points in the country, occupying schoolhouses. Have had excellent liberty and good audiences most of the time. Bro. George Montague has accompanied me part of the time. We have just closed a series of meetings in the Danish settlement west of here. Had crowded houses, most of the time, and interest excellent. I think some will enter the fold. I closed the series of meetings there in order to assist Bro. Montague in a debate with Elders Piepgrass and Otteson, of Utah. The following propositions were discussed:—

Resolved, that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints having its headquarters in Salt Lake City, and presided over by Lorenzo Snow, is the true and legal succession of the church organized by Joseph Smith and others in 1830. Nephi Otteson, J. M. Piepgrass, affirm; George Montague denies.

Resolved, that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints having its headquarters in Lamoni, Iowa, and presided over by Joseph Smith (son of the Martyr Joseph) is the true and legal succession of the church organized by Joseph Smith and others in 1830. George Montague affirms; Nephi Otteson, J. M. Piepgrass, deny.

Beginning Wednesday evening, December 13, at seven o'clock Elder Piepgrass "opened fire" by spending his two half hour speeches in reading from the Doctrine and Covenants in an endeavor to prove that Joseph the martyr was a true prophet of God. He made no effort to affirm his church the true successor as stated in the proposition, thus leaving nothing for Bro. Montague to reply to. So his time was occupied in showing that his opponent was evading the question, and also showing some of the ways in which the church of Utah had departed from the faith.

The second night was spent in much the same manner as the first. Both Piepgrass and Otteson tried to show that the Twelve were the proper ones to lead the church after the death of Joseph. They read from Roberts' book on succession: told of Brigham Young's election to the Presidency, his transfiguration (?) (so-called), boasting of it as a testimony to the people, and a sign of his acceptance with God. They compared him with Christ in his transfiguration on the mount. They also admitted during this speech that the temple in Nauvoo was not finished.

In replying Elder Montague read from Doctrine and Covenants 107: 10, 11, concerning the building of the temple. He gave his testimony from personal knowledge, that the temple was not finished at the death of the President and Patriarch. He also showed how the Twelve instead of leading the church by the authority of their own office, usurped the rights and authority of others; showed their manner of treating those who opposed them in any of their measures, citing such examples as William Marks, etc. That they introduced new and strange manners of procedure and doctrines contrary to the revealed will of God. He read from Brigham's writings in regard to Jesus Christ not being begotten by the Holy Ghost, also his teaching in regard to blood atonement, Adam God, etc. (Applause from congregation.)

In rising to reply, Elder Otteson plainly showed that his feelings were greatly ruffled. He forgot that he should affirm the proposition and spent his time in preaching and reading promiscuously from the Bible regarding the priesthood, etc. He claimed that the reason the temple was not finished was that their enemies came upon the people so the work could not be done, therefore they were excusable. He spoke of John the Baptist ordaining Joseph and Oliver, and asserted that they were ordained by Peter, James, and John, and called upon his opponent to prove that they were not so ordained, though he brought no proof at all to substantiate his claim.

Elder Montague in replying showed that God gave the people sufficient time in which to build the temple. That at first they were diligent, and the work progressed, but they became slothful, unwilling to sacrifice, etc., consequently were rejected, and suffered as before in Missouri. He said there was no issue between us on the point of necessity for God to call men to the ministry, etc., but God does not delegate his power to man to be used at his own discretion, but that priesthood is delegated authority to man to officiate in the Church of God. He read Brigham's statement about the "adroit thieves," "cunning gamblers," "great liars," etc., in Utah.

Otteson tried to reply by asking what objection anyone could have to their taking that class of men and making good citizens of them (?). As to Blood Atonement, he said it was approved of the Lord in the days of ancient Israel, but probably the law would never be in full force again, but that he was willing to do all that the Lord would command. He also thought it was not fair for Bro. Montague to quote extracts from Brigham's teachings, and declared that they were not willing to defend all that their leaders had said and taught. He made a weak attempt to defend the Adam-God theory, but could not bring himself to say that he believed Adam was the only God with whom we had to do. He read from the Saints' Herald to show that Jos. Smith rebaptized some parties in 1863, using that to prove that the Reorganized Church rebaptizes members as well as they of Utah. To which Bro. Montague replied by showing the difference between rebaptizing an individual who had wandered away into darkness or into other denominations, and the wholesale rebaptizing and reordaining of a whole following of steadfast believers, as was done at City Creek, Utah, and other places.

They tried to excuse themselves on the polygamy question by ringing in David and Solomon, of course. Then with customary effrontery declared that Joseph Smith taught and practiced it. Their proof of this was the affidavit of Law and Foster.

To which Bro. Montague replied that the testimony of a man's most bitter enemy availed but very little to establish a true record of his life and deeds. He told what kind of characters Law and Foster were, and the reasons for their bitter animosity toward Joseph. He also read the testimonies of Emily D. P. Young and Zina Huntington Young as printed in Herald; also Wilford Woodruff's statement in Abstract of Evidence, where he admits the having of many wives and concubines to be whoredom, and an abomination. To the most of these Elder Otteson made no reply, but refused to accept the testimony of Wilford Woodruff; which Bro. Montague was quick to show to the audience, as it seemed a strange thing that they should utterly repudiate the words of their former President.

In beginning the second proposition Bro. Montague gave a brief synopsis of the work from 1830 to 1844, calling attention to the changes that took place afterward. Read from tract, "Rejection of the Church;" showed the departure from law at Winter Quarters, etc.; showed the likeness between the manner of the first organization and the second. Read from Doctrine and Covenants how the successor should be appointed. (Sec. 27: 2; 43: 2.)

In replying his opponents completely changed base, and began to declare that the temple was finished, at least sufficiently for the purpose God designed it. But they said nothing at all of the way in which the successor was to be appointed; were very anxious for Bro. Montague to read the revelation referring to the building of the Nauvoo House.

Bro. Montague read from Brigham's own speech, "You cannot fill Joseph's place; God must do that." Many of the usual arguments were made on both sides, although the argument (so-called) of the Utah elders were mostly assertions only. One, that they thought their strongest weapon, was a statement in Vol. 46, No. 49 of the Herald, "That had there been no plural marriages, there would probably have been no need of a Reorganization." They thought this entirely did away with the idea of a rejection of the church, for you see it was polygamy that caused the new faction called the Reorganization to come into existence. But this did not prove so powerful a weapon as they had supposed. Bro. Montague also read testimonies of Lyman Wight, both that which is written and that which he had so often heard from the man himself as to the blessing, and setting apart of Young Joseph to succeed his father; also Joseph's own testimony, and that of James Whitehead. To which the Utah elder's only reply was a mass of vituperative abuse read against Bro. Whitehead, a truly Brighamite proceeding.

On the last evening they were not able to produce any argument at all nor anything that might pass for such, but filled up their first half-hour by thanking the people for the kind treatment they had received while among them, etc., and after Bro. Montague's last speech they both spoke, but could not occupy the half-hour. Neither tried to argue, but only told why they believed in the Mormon Church, etc., and openly avowed their belief in polygamy, etc.

The result with all thinking people is a complete victory for the truth, while there are those who hold that if one only asserts long enough and loud enough, "It is not true," whether any proofs back the assertion or not, it must be true. Of that class, however, it makes small difference what the opinion. Asking pardon if I have occupied too much space,

Your brother and colaborer,

HUBERT CASE.

TABOR, Iowa, Dec. 29.

Editors Herald:—Our work in this district is not suffering for want of energetic labor on the part of the ministry, either general appointees or the local brethren; all are trying to do their best; and notwithstanding the roads have been very rough, the saints and friends turn out to our meetings beyond our expectations. At the protracted effort put forth on Farm Creek by myself and Bro. I. M. Smith, the officers of the branch and members did their part nobly and cheerfully. I left Bro. I. M. there on Monday, December 18, to continue the effort, feeling perfectly satisfied it is in safe hands.

Went to Keystone for a few days; came here on the 21st; have held meetings since that time; had fair attendance, good attention, and excellent liberty.

Shall go to the church near Thurman, Saturday, the 30th, and for Sunday, and on to other places as the way opens before us.

It is impossible for us to fill all the calls for preaching, but shall do the very best we can, by the help of the Master.

Yours, still in the conflict,

HENRY KEMP.

DENISON, Texas, Dec., 1899.

Editors Herald:—Some weeks since I was reading in a back number of the Herald a piece on baptism, and was so strongly reminded of a bit of my own experience in coming into this Reorganized Church, that I felt as though I would like to write a few lines on this subject. Although we were living in Independence when the saints were first formed into a branch, there were some things, ideas, or principles on which we did not agree, or see, or think just alike; and you know "two cannot walk together except they be agreed." So we remained on the outside. I usually attended their meetings and sought to live a consistent Christian life. In many things we were one. They were my dearest friends. We were always brother or sister when we met. But after awhile I became dissatisfied with that manner of living. I did not feel that I was progressing—not even holding my own. I felt that I needed church fellowship, church privileges, the sacrament of the Lord's supper, which I felt was one of the most essential needs in order that my spiritual strength be renewed.

And in summing up the matter I made up my mind to lay aside all my differences and apply for admission into the church. When I had thought of becoming a member of the church I had supposed I would be received on my former or original baptism. With this consideration I sat down to write a note to the presiding elder, through him asking for admission into the church. When I came to the manner of being received, I hesitated a little, thinking how to word it. The thought sprang into my mind, "Why not come in by baptism?" I queried a little at that. For why should I be rebaptized? I had never doubted the church being established in the first place by direct revelation from God. But the question to my mind was answered thus: "That I might be freed from dead works; from hardness of heart and unbelief." I received it as the voice of the Spirit. I had had a good many such or similar manifestations from the earliest days, when I first belonged to the church.

I became a member of the church in April, 1831, one year after it was established, in Hiram, Portage County, Ohio, and I had thought a good many times that I had that gift in some measure, to know the voice of the Spirit when I have been humble.

I did not send my note, but went at once to where I expected to find an elder, and requested baptism. There were two present, and I was asked the question, "Why do you wish to be rebaptized?" I could be received on my original baptism. I made no mention of the impressions that had been made upon my mind, but made the reply: "That baptism was the door into the church, and I was on the outside and wished to come in; and I would not be satisfied to come in in any other way."

I was baptized the next Sunday by Elder F. G. Pitt, and confirmed under the hands of I. N. White and F. G. Pitt. When I was raised up from the waters of baptism there was such a peaceful, restful, satisfied feeling seemed to settle down upon my mind and heart, and remained there in such degree that it was to me a testimony that my heavenly Father accepted my offering; and that same feeling has remained with me, in a greater or lesser degree from that time until the present, and I believe will continue unto the end, and then I will hope for an entrance into that place of rest the Lord has prepared for his people.

One with you in faith and hope,

E. McLELLIN.

CHARITON, Iowa, Dec. 29.

Editors Herald:—Since my last communication, October 4, I visited the new saints near Eddyville, and I am glad to say they are all enjoying the blessings that have come to them by obedience to the whole law of God. Most of them had been members of the Christian Church, but say with one accord they have found something far better, as they now have the Spirit of God to bear witness that they have found the true Church of Christ.

I commenced a series of meetings at Union schoolhouse five miles north of where I first opened the work at Charter Oak. Here I held a six weeks' meeting with good results, uniting the work at Charter Oak, Sand Ridge, and Union, making many friends for the church. When I asked for the use of the schoolhouse the director looked at me and wanted to know if I was not a Mormon. I told him I was not. Announced a lecture on Mormonism for Sunday evening, and the house did not hold all that came to hear it; and I don't think there are more than two or three now in the entire neighborhood but what are our friends.

From here I went to Muchakinock, where I held a three weeks' meeting in the M. E. church. Made some friends, and some expressed themselves as being near the kingdom. We have not been able to get this church before. When I asked for the use of the church the old lady who seems to be about all that is left of their congregation said, "Yes, our congregation is gone, and I would welcome Beelzebub if it would but save the people from their awful condition, as the saloons are leading the people to the Devil." Bro. Beard was shut out of it after preaching one evening several years ago, and since that time their congregation has gone down to almost nothing. Perhaps it will be a testimony to Bro. McKiernan to know that his prophecy or warning to the M. E. people three miles north of Muchakinock has been literally fulfilled. He told them when they refused him their church several years ago, the time would come when it would be used for a barn, and now it is used for a shelter for cattle and horses.

I next went to Pekay, where we have not been able to get the use of the Congregational church, whose members received a like warning by Bro. J. S. Roth some years ago. I had no trouble in getting the use of the church, as their congregation is all gone but two or three.

While at Muchakinock I had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Benjaman Brown and Jennie Chambers, Frank Chambers and Nettie Humphrey, and since my return home I have been called back to perform the same ceremony for Edward Williams and Maggie Chambers.

I must say, in justice to Bro. George Longdon, much of the success of this new work in that country belongs to him. He hauled me every evening for fifty-eight evenings an average of nine miles a trip and furnished me a home.

Yours for the spread of the gospel,

W. H. KEPHART.

ARTHUR, Ont., Dec. 29.

Editors Herald:—I believe I last wrote to your columns from Longwood, in November, after which I visited my home for the first time since June, it being so far to my field of labor. After spending a couple of days at home wife and I and the two youngest children visited saints of Garafraxa branch and held a few meetings. It is indeed cheering to the missionary to meet, after a few years of separation, with those who have embraced the gospel through his labor as well as that of others, and find them still in the faith and taking a more active interest and seeking to live nearer to God than they had lived in other days.

I then came here and held meetings a couple of weeks and baptized one lady, who had been quite a prominent member of the Methodist Church for twenty-five years. I also held a few meetings in the vicinity of "Old Variety," where Elder McIntosh effected an opening about eighteen years ago, and where Elders Evans, Lake, Taylor, MacGregor, and others, have since done good work. I find some excellent saints at Variety and several socially prominent and good people interested.

From Variety I was called to a place between Corbetton and Dundalk, where a Mr. James Leader had promised his house to preach in and to care for an elder as long as he desired to stop. Accompanied by Elder Robert Whitehead, of Masonville, I went. We began meetings on Friday evening. Several questions were asked. Mr. Leader told the people not to be too anxious to have their questions answered that evening, that there would be lots of time next week. We left an appointment for 2:30 p. m. on Sunday, and I drove Bro. Whitehead home Saturday. I returned and preached Sunday, and at close of meeting Mr. Leader arose and stated a few of them had held a meeting on Saturday evening and had concluded there were already enough religions in the vicinity and we could not have his house any longer. I held meetings at Bro. French's a few miles from there for a couple of evenings.

I returned here and held a couple of meetings last week. Drove home Saturday, remained till Monday, Christmas evening, when Ethel and I attended Garafraxa Sunday school entertainment, which was not only a financial success, but a grand intellectual treat. I have visited Fergus since and am now here on some church business for to-night.

Would say to saints of Chatham district: I am now awaiting instructions from our worthy mission president as to whether I am to labor in your district this winter, or elsewhere. In bonds,

JOHN SHIELDS.

BANNING, Pa., Dec. 28.

Editors Herald:—I left home on the 8th for the State of West Virginia, laboring from house to house, giving the people the gospel. I preached twice in Friendship schoolhouse to very good congregations. Some seem very friendly to the work in Preston County. Sr. Dunns is the only member we have there. Bro. Rush and I were there a year ago. Sr. D. then obeyed the gospel and by her faithfulness is winning friends to the cause. Her husband is not a member of the church, but I think will be with us soon. If so, he will be a help to us.

When I left Preston County many invited me to return, and some said not to stay away too long. I next went to Morgantown and found my sister-in-law and her child very low. I administered to them and they obtained help. I was going to remain and preach, but on the 23d such a sorrowful feeling came over me that I knew I must go home, and while on the train at Uniontown I learned of a mine disaster near Brownsville, in which were some of my playmates of forty years ago. Eleven dead and eight injured were taken from the mine. We helped as we could and wept with those in such sore distress—wives, mothers, and children bereaved.

Yours in bonds,

JOSEPH MAXON.

ST. EDWARDS, Neb., Dec. 6.

Editors Herald:—I should like to say to the traveling elders, as this is nearing General Conference, and the ministers are going back and forth to conference, I should be glad if some of them could call on us, and if possible I will get them a place to preach in. They let me have the Presbyterian church for Bro. Belville to preach in last winter. I have lived here over eleven years, and an elder could have had a home at our house all these years. I should like to get the gospel before the people. I am all alone in the faith, very lonesome, and should hail the coming on an elder with gladness. Brn. Whiting and Gamet were here with the tent last summer a short time. The people came out very well to hear, and one man here told me since, Those men were all right, meaning Brn. Whiting and Gamet. I believe there could be a good work done here.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

NOT AS I WILL.

A MEDITATION FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Blindfolded and alone I stand
With unknown thresholds in each hand.
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know,
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid
By some great law unseen and still,
Unfathomed purpose to fulfill.
"Not as I will."

—Selected.

ANGUS, Iowa.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel impressed to write you and tell of my experience. I have tried to put it from me, not wanting to intrude again, but it follows me. You will remember I told you in a former letter that it had been shown to me that spiritualism was not of God. It was given to me in answer to prayer, asking him to show me just what it was. I have been warned by some of my brothers and sisters, who have feared I was drifting into spiritualism to beware; and here I want to thank all for their kind advice, for it had its influence. Yet while I did not want to believe anything that would conflict with the word of God, I confess I enjoyed reading the letters I received from my spiritual sisters and friends, and would find myself longing for the next one to come. They seemed to hold a fascination for me, and I want to tell you how glad I am that I have a dear Father to go to, for I know he guides me aright. He knows our every weakness, and I write this hoping it may help some other weak one like myself.

I found myself in a large room. It seemed to be a basement. It was lighted with a dim, unnatural light, and as I stood looking and wondering, a personage appeared before me. He stepped toward me and said, "I am Jerome, your husband." In my joy I sprang toward him saying, "O, is it you, Jerome? It does not look like Jerome. Tell me, is it really you?" But he would not speak again, and seemed to try to hide his face. His cap was pulled low down over his eyes. Finally I said, "Let me take your hand and see if it feels natural." He tried to keep me from it; but I reached and got hold of his fingers, but dropped them and sprang from him, saying, "You are not Jerome; your hand is not like his."

There seemed to be a power that kept me from going very near him, or he coming near me; and as I left him I looked back, and O, such a fiendish look was on his face I shall never forget! And it came to me so plainly, right then, that it was a wicked spirit, calling himself my husband.

Hoping to meet all my brothers and sisters in the sweet "by and by," I am as ever,

MRS. PAULINE RUBY.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Nov. 9.

Dear Sr. Ella S. Thayer:—This afternoon as I came in from our sisters' prayer meeting, Mr. Burton handed me the Herald of September 20, pointing to your letter addressed to me. I read it with both interest and pleasure more than ordinary; and when you have read this in return, you will know why you were impelled to write.

When I had finished writing the chapter you spoke of in August number of Autumn Leaves, I gave it to my husband to read, as was my custom to do. After having read it, he came to where I was sitting and said, as he passed the manuscript to me again, "The Spirit will truly bear witness to that testimony to others, as it has to me also, and you will learn of it sometime."

Those words of his had passed from my mind until reading their fulfillment in your letter.

All this is very cheering to us isolated ones, who have not the privilege of conversing with our brothers and sisters—those of our own nation and language. And these connecting links testify of the existence of the one body, though the members be remote from each other. How grand when the Spirit can have its perfect work in the body.

Yes, dear sister, it is cheering to know that those years of silence have not been altogether a blank, that some have been benefited by means of the pen while the voice was rendered powerless here.

PRIMARY WORK.

The object of primary work in our Sunday schools is very concisely stated in the old and familiar proverb, "Train a child up in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Then, too, when we take into consideration the fact that many of our states have established laws compelling the attendance of children in the public schools between certain ages, in order that they may receive a certain amount of mental culture; when we consider the anxiety of every true parent to give his child as high an education as is possible, to fit him to cope successfully with the adversities of life, in an intellectual line, it forces upon our minds the necessity of greater religious training. We, who have the privilege of being associated with children every day, know how impressionable their little minds are; how they watch and imitate every action of their elders; how great their confidence and trust is in any one they love: and how they give as a reason for many beliefs and words, "My teacher told me, or my mamma told me, and she knows;" and the same reason is often given for their deeds. When we, who are in the world every day, and are made to regret our being there because of the unavoidable contamination, often wish for purer, better men and women, is it not one of the best reasons why religious training should begin at the very cradle, and continue, constituting the most important training of a child's life? And will not this training make the pure and holy men and women which we so much need, or at least have a decided tendency in that direction?

As a primary teacher

in teaching is to try and present myself in the Sunday school room from five to fifteen minutes before any services begin. I have two reasons for doing this. One is that I may have an opportunity to speak to each pupil that comes on time, individually. The children appreciate this notice of them. There is generally one or two who have been absent on the previous Sunday. I like to tell those pupils that I am glad to see them, that I hope their parents will not take them visiting any more on Sunday; or that I am glad they are well (because I nearly always know before the week is over why any of my pupils have been absent). I like to ask this one how his sore finger is, and tell another one I wish they would build new sidewalks near her house, so she won't have to stay at home on account of the mud.

I like to be there early in order that I may get our class book, our basket for collection, the ticket box, and other little things that we shall need during the class hours, ready to take with us when we go to our room (for our primary class is fortunate enough to have a little room for its class work). I like to be there early to tell the children to get their money from their parents before time to collect the contribution, and also to distribute all of our articles that we have to take with us, among the different children, as they always like to help carry everything.

When the superintendent announces the song, no matter how much I may want to talk to some one, or how much I may long to take a last little peep at my lesson, I immediately take a book and find the place; because, when I attend to the exercises the children generally do likewise. When they see me find the place in a book and pass it to some one, they like to do the same thing, and thus win a smile and "thank you," and are learning to be polite.

AFTER WE HAVE MARCHED to our class rooms, the primary classes—we only have two in our school—all assemble in one room. Then we have our little songs. I find that they enjoy motion songs better than any other, and they sing them better. They all like to make the gestures, and not one of them thinks it is possible to make a gesture without singing the words, consequently we have good singing, especially on our motion songs. We usually have a prayer, generally the Lord's prayer, as the children have all learned that, and join in repeating it. Then the other class leaves us, and I take up the class book. The children help me in this preliminary work. Every week I assign the different tasks to the different pupils, and write it down lest some of us should forget—the children rarely do, however. One passes the basket for the pennies; another passes tickets; and another passes our bank for the Christmas offering, for we have a little plan all our own for getting a Christmas offering this year. The children do without one meal every week, generally Sunday breakfast, and sell this meal to their parents for money which they bring for their offering.

When we have finished with the preliminaries, I stand up. This action serves in place of calling attention, as children usually see every move a teacher makes, and especially if it is one of any importance. Another advantage of standing is the freedom of action and gesture which it gives, and I think enables me to control the class better.

TO HOLD THEIR ATTENTION

is the next important step. The best way to do this is to tell the lesson story ably. In order to do this the teacher must really feel the story, and I find that it requires a very careful preparation to portray the lesson to them with the earnestness that interests and fastens their attention. In my preparation of the lesson, the first thing is earnest prayer that I may be able to bring it down to their little minds in a pleasing and plain manner; my second step is a thorough knowledge of every little detail, because they are certain to ask the little questions that you have skipped over, thinking too small to consider. In this connection I find that blackboard drawings, pictures, and other objects are a great help. Another, and one of the best things I find, in impressing children and making them comprehend the leading points is to draw simple little illustrations in which they figure; for instance, suppose I should say, "Johnie, if your mother had been ill for a whole week, not able to eat one bit of food, and suppose when Sunday came she should say to you, 'Johnie, I feel like I could eat an orange, would you mind buying one for Mamma;' now remember, Johnie, it would be Sunday; would it be right to buy an orange for your mamma?" Johnie would not hesitate a minute, but would immediately say that it would be right, and the children will understand that "it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath." When it comes to the Golden text, I teach that just where it comes in, and the Golden text comes in at a certain place in almost every lesson. When they understand the circumstances pertaining to the text then they will remember it and appreciate it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS, TAKE NOTICE.

In another column appears a notice from the chairman of the "Improvements Committee" appointed at the last general convention. Please read and respond. The committee was appointed with a hope that some of the existing difficulties or defects in our work as a whole might be remedied or removed entirely by the suggestions they might receive. If you see where an improvement can be made, suggest it to some member of the committee. It will receive its merited consideration. But as time is short before the next convention, act promptly.

The Bishop of Liverpool has announced that he will resign early next year on account of poor health.

NEWHOPE.

Previous notice having been given, a few saints collected at the home of Bro. Isaac Coffman, and organized by electing Bro. J. L. Goodrich chairman, and Sr. Alice R. Corson secretary. There being no minutes of any previous meeting, at least none that we know of, we regard this the first conference of the Newhope district, and the first in Virginia. May it be the nucleus of a notable gathering in the near future, and may the request of this little body, which will be presented to the General Conference by its two delegates, for the next General Conference to be held at Richmond, Virginia, not be ignored, but be given a prayerful consideration and conscientious support. By this means we can get before the people, and there are many here who we believe would embrace the truth could we get them to hear. Ministers present: Elders 2; baptisms during year 4. There is only one branch in the district, and that is in quite a scattered condition, and the record in need of some overhauling and correction. Motion prevailed to appoint J. L. Goodrich and Maggie S. Coffman for this purpose. Report of Bishop's agent, Isaac Coffman: Receipts $172; expenses $60; balance due church $112. It is the request of this district that the General Conference send two missionaries to this part of the Lord's vineyard for the next conference year. All the authorities of this mission and appointments are sustained, and the general authorities of the church. Next conference to be called and time and place determined by the missionary in charge, or if he neglect, by the sub-missionary appointed by the General Conference. Elders J. L. Goodrich and P. P. Stark were appointed delegates to the General Conference.

EASTERN MAINE.

Conference convened at Jonesport, Maine, December 9, 1899; T. C. Kelley in the chair, Ada S. Kelley secretary. Invitation given to visiting brethren to take part in the business. Officials reporting: Elders T. C. Kelley, S. O. Foss, and U. M. Kelley; Priests J. N. Ames. L. A. Woodward, and F. P. Smith. Bishop's agent's report read and referred to auditing committee. Delegates to General Conference: T. C. Kelley, W. W. Blanchard, and S. O. Foss. Present district officers sustained. Preaching during conference was excellent, and no time went to waste in the morning testimony meeting. Reply concerning paper sent to congressman Boutelle in regard to seating of B. H. Roberts, received and read and was satisfactory. Adjourned to Beal's Island, on Saturday before the full moon in June 1900.

SHEEHY-GRANT DEBATE.

I cannot now give much of the details of my encounter with Miles Grant. I expect to have another debate with him, when we can arrange for the time. The place will likely be Oakland. The subject is to be: "Resolved, that the Bible and science teach Christ did not have an existence previous to his being born of Mary." He has just written a tract upon the subject. I have not seen it, so do not know what line of argument he will use to maintain or affirm that subject.

Elder Grant is a debater of much experience. This last one we held made the one hundredth and sixth debate for him. It used to be his custom to challenge any or all representative men, and agree to pay all the expenses as an inducement to have them meet him, so certain is he of success on this soul question and kindred questions.

I believe this was his first time to engage with one of our kind. Bro. D. S. Mills tried some years ago to have him and Bro. W. W. Blair meet during Grant's visit to California, but failed.

One difficulty a mortal soulist finds when he meets us is, that his guns are aimed at other forts than those manned by us. The eternal-sleep theory being a sort of a substitute for the sectarian dogma of endless punishment, consequently doesn't affect us much, we taking the "golden mean," the real position occupied by the truth.

The scriptural texts used by Elder Grant were those used generally by mortal-soulists. He varied a little though on his rendering of Genesis 2:7, when I pressed him on that point, and even went so far as to contradict his published statements as found in his work, "What is Man?" as the following will show: In laying his foundation argument, using what he calls "Ultimate principles;" "No thought no brain;" "No brain no thought;" "All things are either material or immaterial;" "Immaterialities are only attributes of matter;" "Attributes cannot exist of themselves, but are dependent upon matter;" "Life is an attribute, and does not exist separate from the material organization," etc.

When pressed upon the point as to what the "breath of life" (Genesis 2:7) was, "material or immaterial," he seemed to feel it necessary to make the strange statement that "life" was contained in the "breath." The breath being a vehicle that conveyed it; so we have this immaterial attribute which, as he says, does not exist away from its material organization, conveyed in atmosphere or common air, which is virtually saying nothing is conveyed in something; for the atmosphere has its specific gravity and is composed of parts of oxygen and nitrogen. In his published works he says it, "breath of life," is atmosphere, but now says it is not, but is conveyed in the air.

I took the ground, which he did not refute, that the "breath of life" is simply air. It is the breath of the life that is in the blood (Lev. 17:11–15), the life of the objective or "outward man." The "inner man" does not depend upon it, but exists without it. Common air has to do with the blood, acts upon and purifies it. That part of creation mentioned in Genesis 2 is the "outward;" the "inward" or spiritual man having been created previously, as found in the first chapter of Genesis. Verses 3, 4, and 5 of Genesis 2 with the marginal reading, "created to make;" for the reference in verse 3 gives the key to the matter as far as King James' Version goes. The Inspired Version settles the question definitely.

Elder Grant got hold of the spiritual creation of the "Inspired" through reading Bro. Haws' new book on the Sabbath, and brought it into the debate before I did. He seemed amazed at the idea; said he had traveled the world over but never heard of such a thing before; so the "marvelous work and a wonder" is still on duty. In fact, the logical inferences of that part of the "Inspired," that all things were created spiritually, strikes a terribly hard blow at our ordinary traditions. There was no argument brought against it, however, that availed anything.

Upon the subject that "thought is a function of the brain," and "no brain no thought," generally used by mortal-soulists, and heretofore supposed to be a settled physiological fact, especially by materialistic scientists, I successfully met the theory by the latest on the subject. Now that much data has been collected by the Psychical Research Society, material is at hand that deals the death blow to the simon-pure materialist.

Elder Grant makes much of what materialist-science has put in evidence on that line, one of his chief witnesses being Professor James, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. It so happens that Professor James has recently published a work, being a lecture he delivered at Harvard, which has shaken the dry bones somewhat along those lines. The title of the book is: "Human Immortality." It can be purchased for about one dollar. It is well worth the reading and study. For the benefit of those who may not have access to it I will include a few extracts:—

The subject of immortality is of such moment among men that the Professor incidentally referring, says:—

"There is a bibliography of more than five thousand titles of books in which it is treated."

"In the hour that lies before us, then, I shall seek to justify my appointment by offering what seems to me such grains of truth, two points well fitted, if I am not mistaken, to combine with anything that other lectures may bring. These points are both of them in the nature of replies to objections, to difficulties which our modern culture finds in the old notion of a life hereafter—difficulties that I am sure rob the notion of much of its old power to draw belief, in the scientifically cultivated circles to which this audience belong. The first of these difficulties is relative to the absolute dependence of our spiritual life, as we know it here, upon the brain. One hears not only physiologists, but numbers of laymen who read the popular science books and magazines, saying all about us, How can we believe in a hereafter when science has once for all attained to proving, beyond possibility of escape, that our inner life is a function of that famous material, the so-called 'gray matter' of our cerebral convolutions? How can the function possibly persist after its organ has undergone decay? Thus physiological psychology is what is supposed to bar the way to the old faith. And it is now as a physiological psychologist that I ask you to look at the question with me a little more closely. It is indeed true physiological science has come to the conclusion cited; and we must confess that in so doing she has only carried out a little farther the common belief of mankind. Everyone knows that arrests of brain development occasion imbecility, that blows on the head abolish memory or consciousness, and that brain stimulants and poisons change the quality of our ideas. The anatomists, physiologists, and pathologists have only shown this generally admitted fact, of a dependence to be detailed and minute. What the laboratories and hospitals have lately been teaching is not only that thought in general is one of the brain's functions, but that the various special forms of thinking are functions of special portions of the brain. When we are thinking of things seen, it is our occipital convolutions that are active; when of things heard, it is a certain portion of our temporal lobes; when of things to be spoken, it is one of our frontal convolutions. Professor Flechsig, of Leipzig (who perhaps more than any other, may claim to have made the subject his own), considers that in other special convolutions those processes of association go on, which permit the more abstract processes of thought, to take place, I could easily show you these regions if I had here a picture of the brain.

"Moreover, the diminished or exaggerated associations of what this author calls the Körperfühlsphäre with the other regions, accounts, according to him, for the complexion of our emotional life, and eventually decides whether one shall be a callous brute or criminal, an unbalanced sentimentalist, or a character accessible to feeling, and yet well poised. Such special opinions may have to be corrected; yet so firmly established do the main positions worked out by the anatomists, physiologists, and pathologists of the brain appear, that the youth of our medical schools are everywhere taught unhesitatingly to believe them. The assurance that observation will go on to establish ever more and more minutely is the inspirer of all contemporary research. And almost any of our young psychologists will tell you that only a few belated scholastics or possibly some cracked-brain theosophist or psychical researcher, can be found holding back, and still talking as if mental phenomena might exist as independent variables in the world.

"For the purpose of my argument, now, I wish to adopt this general doctrine as if it were established absolutely, with no possibility of restriction. During this hour I wish you also to accept it as a postulate, whether you think it incontrovertibly established or not, so I beg you to agree with me to-day in subscribing to the great psychophysiological formula: Thought is a function of the brain.

"The question is, then, Does this doctrine logically compel us to disbelieve in immortality? Ought it to force every truly consistent thinker to sacrifice his hopes of an hereafter to what he takes to be his duty of accepting all the consequences of a scientific truth. . . .

"But the more radical and uncompromising disciple of science makes the sacrifice, and, sorrowfully or not according to his temperament, submits to giving up his hopes of heaven. . . .

"I must show you that the fatal consequence is not coercive, as commonly imagined, and that even though our soul's life (as here below it is revealed to us) may be in literal strictness the function of a brain that perishes, yet it is not at all impossible that the life may still continue when the brain itself is dead. The supposed impossibility of its continuing come from too superficial a look at the admitted fact of functional dependence. The moment we inquire more closely into the notion of functional dependence, and ask ourselves, for example, how many kinds of functional dependence there may be, we immediately perceive that there is one kind at least that does not exclude a life hereafter at all. The fatal conclusion of physiologist flows from his assuming offhand another kind of functional dependence, and treating it as the only imaginable kind.

"When the physiologist who thinks that his science cuts off all hope of immortality pronounces the phrase, "Thought is a function of the brain," he thinks of the matter just as he thinks when he says, "Steam is a function of the tea kettle;" "Light is a function of the electric circuit;" "Power is a function of the moving waterfall." In these latter cases the several material objects have the function of inwardly creating or engendering their effects, and their function must be called productive function. Just so, he thinks, it must be with the brain engendering consciousness in its interior, much as it engenders cholesterin and creatin and carbonic acid, its relation to our soul's life must also be called productive function. Of course if such production be the function, then when the organ perishes, since the production can no longer continue, the soul must surely die. Such a conclusion as this is indeed inevitable from that particular conception of the facts.

"But in the world of physical nature productive function of this sort is not the only kind of function with which we are familiar. We have also releasing or permissive function, and we have transmissive function. . . .

"In the case of a colored glass or prism, or a refracting lens, we have transmissive function. The energy of light, no matter how produced, is by the glass sifted and limited in color, and by the lens or prism determined to a certain path or shape. Similarly, the keys of an organ have only a transmissive function. They open successively the various pipes and let the wind in the air-chest escape in various ways. The voices of the various pipes are constituted by the columns of air trembling as they emerge. But the air is not engendered in the organ. The organ proper as distinguished from its air chest, is only an apparatus for letting portions of it loose upon the world in these peculiarly limited shapes. My thesis now is this: that when we think of the law that thought is a function of the brain, we are not required to think of productive function only; we are entitled also to consider permissive or transmissive function."—Pp. 6–15.

Such is the line of argument pursued by this eminent scientist.

By trying to restrict the function of the brain to a superficial theory our mortal-soulist friend imagines he makes a point, but it does not bear the full blaze of investigation. They have not now what is termed a "working hypothesis." A theory or hypothesis in order to work, must go on "all fours," sufficiently at least to stand up while you are looking at it.

That the brain is a transmitter rather than a producer of thought—the instrument used by the spirit or "inner man," all in harmony with the axiomatic truth that intelligence is a property of spirit and not of matter.

That the "a spirit in man," does not depend upon the objective life, the life of the blood which needs the air, or its "breath of life" to sustain it, is evidenced in the well-authenticated cases of suspended animation, where as far as breath, air, lungs, heart, or any part of objective man is concerned, medical experts pronounce no life, as in the following cases taken from "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," by T. J. Hudson, pages 310, 311: "1st. A young lady near Indianapolis who came to life after fourteen days of suspended animation. Six doctors had applied the usual tests, and pronounced her dead . . . the patient revived and is yet living."

"2d. A lady who is now at the head of one of our largest orphan asylums of a western city, has been twice pronounced dead by the attending physicians, twice prepared for the grave, twice resuscitated by her friends. On the last occasion extraordinary precautions were taken in view of her former experience, all the tests known to her physicians were applied and all doubts were set at rest. She was a second time professionally declared to be dead and the physicians left the house. In preparing the body for burial it was accidentally pricked by a pin. Soon afterwards it was discovered that a small drop of blood marked the spot where the pin entered. This once more roused the hope of the family, and vigorous treatment soon restored her to consciousness. She is living to-day a vigorous useful woman. It is proper to note here that upon being restored, the lady declared that she had never for a moment lost consciousness, that she knew all that went on around her, perfectly comprehended the significance of all the tests that were applied, but felt the utmost indifference as to the result, and was neither surprised nor alarmed when it was decided that she was dead."

I have obtained the following statement from Elder George Hayward, well known to many of the readers of the Herald:—

We the undersigned citizens of Independence, Missouri, are well acquainted with Geo. Hayward, and consider him truthful and reliable.

Retired Citizen, JOHN B. NOLAND.
Banker, J. P. JONES.
J. W. PECK, City Physician.
S. H. WOODSON, Mayor.
J. V. B. MARTIN, City Alderman.
O. H. GENTRY, JR., Druggist.
A. W. COAKLEY, P. M.

I, George Hayward, was born February 17th, 1827, at Marshfield, England. I was between seven and eight years of age when I met with an accident that caused, as they thought, my death, from a blow on the head with a hop pick. The force of the blow stunned me so that I sat on the damp ground, from which I caught a very bad cold, resulting in pleurisy and inflammation of the lungs. When I went home that night I was sent down in a dark cellar on an errand. I remember I was very giddy and dizzy, and I wondered with astonishment when I went down in that cellar that I could see every object, even the mould on the wall, which at other times we could not see without a light, and when I came up out of the cellar I could not see anything.

That night I went to bed very sick, the doctor was called in; another doctor was called in; they consulted, and they said the sickness was due to the blow on the head, and the severe cold contracted from having lain on the damp ground. And after about two weeks I was pronounced dead by the doctors. I remember the words very well, although I was very young, "He is dead." I remember every item that was said; even when my stepmother sent for one of my older brothers, who was a very stout, hearty young man. I was lying on the bed which was facing the door. My eyes were partly closed. When the door was open I saw my brother John come in, and as soon as he saw me he shook with emotion so that he would almost burst. But my stepmother says, "It is no use to cry now. He is dead," but he shook the more. I understood everything that was going on. I did not suffer pain in any shape nor form. I was free of all pains, did not have any fear at all. They seemed troubled so much, but I could move neither hand nor foot nor finger to let them know that I was not dead.

After awhile the funeral was attended to, the coffin brought in, I was placed in the coffin. The coffin lid was closed, I heard the screws being tightened in the coffin. Air seemed not anything to me, I had no pain nor sorrow nor anything of the kind. The following day I was borne off upon the shoulders of several men. They used to carry the coffins on their shoulders in that day. I was taken to the graveyard. In England they do not have the second box like they do here, the coffin was laid gradually into the grave, and as it was lowered, it rubbed the sides of the ground, until it got to its place. In a little while I heard the clods falling on the coffin lid and the sound got fainter and fainter and finally died out apparently altogether. In a little while, I don't know how long, the sound began to come again from the top, over me; gradually it came nearer, and bye and bye I felt the coffin move, rising up from the ground, borne off, it appears. All this time I was conscious, and did not have any pain, no fear, did not trouble a particle. I felt perfectly happy and good. In a little while I heard two men talking, one said to the other, "He is alive." "You fool" the other says, "He has been dead since yesterday. You must be foolish to think such a thing. Come let us get at our work." Then I heard the peculiar noise of sharpening of knives, and again I heard the one say, "He is alive, I tell you." "No," the other says, "he is not alive." "Yes, don't you see his lips move, don't you feel the breath? Listen!" and he bent down to my mouth to catch the sound. With my eyes partly open I could see them, and then life came to me, to the astonishment of both. I was taken home to my parents by these men, they were the doctors who had received permission from the authorities to perform an autopsy, on account of a dispute as to the cause of my death.

From the force of the blow on my head, a piece of my tongue was bit off, and was sewed on again. Also my lip was cut about one inch from my mouth. You can see the cut to-day.

These items touching what science has to say upon the question as to man's immortality, as that term may be applied to the soul or spirit in man, may be of service to some who may not have access to libraries.

For a fuller reading upon the matter, get the proceedings of the "Psychical Research Society," which are published annually; "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," by Thomas J. Hudson, LL. D., also a "Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life," by the same author; published by A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago.

It is encouraging to note that our religion does not require us to "follow cunningly devised fables," but that every fact demonstrated by science adds another arrow to our quiver. We have nothing to fear but the encroachment of sin among our mortal members. When our lives are kept in touch with the holiness and purity required in Christ, we readily assimilate truth.

"Seek truth where'er it may be found,
Among thy friends, among thy foes;
On Christian or on Heathen ground,
The flower's divine where'er it blows."

Sincerely yours,
F. M. SHEEHY.

GENERAL CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

Once more I call the attention of those whom it may concern to the fact that branch reports are overdue from several districts, and that I would like them without delay, that I may copy them upon the General Record of names before the rush of work to be expected later in the winter. I write this upon January 5, 1900, up to which date the reports mentioned herein have not been received:—

For several years have come no corrections in the records of the branches in Manchester district, England, but, from correspondence received, it is likely that certain brethren will fully correct matters in the near future, although it may prove quite a task before all shall be perfected as to names, dates, places, births, baptisms, deaths, etc.

I trust that the officers of London, Birmingham, and Sheffield districts, of England, will send in at an early day their complete reports of all changes. Also that Eastern and Western Wales will see to their reports, that they are sent over.

From Northern California the last reports that came were those for March, 1899. If they held an October conference I am not informed. Central California reports for October, 1899, are due. The last reports from Southern California that arrived were for October, 1898. Please send me the later ones.

Branch reports from the Idaho May and November conferences have not yet arrived.

The following districts held conferences in September, 1899, but their reports have not yet been received; namely: Kewanee, Southern Nebraska, New York.

No reports have been received from districts that held conferences in October;

www.LatterDayTruth.org

namely: Central California, Southern California, Fremont, Little Sioux, Kentucky and Tennessee, and Northern Michigan.

From the November conferences reports are due as follows: Idaho, Northeastern Texas and Choctaw.

From the December conferences reports are due; namely, Southern Missouri.

I find that no reports have come from Oklahoma conferences for February, May, and October, 1899, and also a December conference was held from which reports should soon come.

No reports from Central Texas for July and November have yet arrived. I would like to receive all the above at an early date.

Also about thirty districts have appointed to hold conferences in January, February, or March, 1900, and I now ask their officers to kindly forward branch reports as soon after their sessions as may be done. And I thank all officers who have labored, or who are now laboring, to correct branch and district records, and to answer my letters wherein I have called for help to obtain harmony between branch, district, and general records, as to names, places, dates, pertaining to births, baptisms, confirmations, ordinations, marriages, deaths, expulsions, etc.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO MISSION.

Bro. James W. Gillen having left the Colorado and New Mexico mission, and his whereabout being unknown to us, that we may correspond with him, and the missionaries being solicitous to know whom to report to, we hereby give notice that until further orders, or until the sitting of conference in April next, the missionaries in the field over which Bro. Gillen had oversight, may report direct to the Presidency, both as to their labors and the needs of the mission.

JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

NOTICE.

To the Traveling Missionaries:—All are hereby requested to send in their reports to the sub-ministers in charge by the first of March, 1900, and they to report to me by the 15th of March. Report labor done during the last two years.

Missionary in Charge.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO RULES OF REPRESENTATION.

To all Saints in Christ; Esteemed Friends in Gospel Bonds:—Opportunity affording, the following resolution will be presented for consideration to the General Conference, beginning April 6, 1900:—

Resolved, that hereafter the following quorums—priests, teachers, and deacons—shall each be provided separate place and privilege on the floor of the General Conference assembly, when in business session, and that each member of said quorums when present, shall be considered an ex officio member of the General Conference, as members of other quorums.

The above resolution will be presented because it is believed to be in harmony with the gospel law, wherein it provides equal rights to all, and for the encouragement and development of these quorums. Also that God has placed an equal measure of responsibility on each quorum of the church according to its order; and whereas this responsibility rests on each of the above-mentioned quorums it is unjust to deprive them of a voice in the legislation of the church. It is "taxation without representation." Besides, Paul of old has said, "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you."

The church is greatly in need of these officers being developed to greater usefulness. Therefore, let it help bring them into such by the above resolution.

Your brother and colaborer in the Lord's vineyard, LEONARD HOUGHTON.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers, 35 cents each.

Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

Neatly bound in heavy paper covers; price 50 cents, mailed to any address.

TRUE CHRISTIANITY IS SPREADING.

Is Christianity progressing, standing still or losing ground? I have no hesitation in saying that real Christianity, that is to say, the Spirit of Christ, is more practically operative in the affairs of men to-day than at any time previously in human history.

If, however, by Christianity, on the other hand, we mean the organic forms in which it expresses itself in the various church organizations of the land, I think only one answer can be given to the question, and that answer is, the churches are not holding their own. It is much harder to get people to go to church than it used to be. And not in the case of adults only; even the children take more catching than they used to do.

And the reason for this state of affairs? The first reason, I think, is to be found in the churches themselves. They are not prepared frankly to restate the Christian beliefs and doctrines so that these may be acceptable to thoughtful men. I do not think, however, that the churches are altogether to blame for this, for I do not believe this special age and time are fitted for restatement. Rather are we living in days of flux; days which Matthew Arnold so sympathetically, so accurately describes as days in which

> The new is not yet born.

People expect too much of the churches if they expect them always to be ready with a new statement of ancient truths to meet unrest and discontent. The public is sometimes whimsical in its objection and unlearned and unreasoning in its criticism. But though this is so, making all allowance for it, as I say, I still believe that there is a grave fault to be found with the churches. They are mistaken at least in the emphasis they place on certain truths; too much stress on little things, too little attention to great things. They demand much too complex a statement of faith in most instances before they admit to membership. The consequence of this is very often that the scrupulously honest man they turn away, while the man not so scrupulous, the man who is willing to stand up and repeat any creed among his fellows on Sunday, if only he is allowed to regulate his life as he sees fit, without any special interference of Christian principle on Monday, this man comes into the church, while the other hesitates and stays outside. Complex confessions of doctrine should never be a basis of entrance to any church. They often keep the most honest men out and take the less honest men in.

I feel confident that in the future the tendency of the churches will be to hark back to apostolic precedent. We should not demand complex creeds of men at all before we admit them to church membership. As a matter of historic fact, the early Christians were not called on even to express faith in the doctrine of the Trinity before baptism. They were only baptized in the name of Jesus.

Now I observe that just so far as a clergyman is bold and capable in this duty, as I believe it to be, of restatement, just so far he draws the attention of good and intelligent men. They listen to his teaching, they come into his church. I know this country pretty well. I have traveled in every State in the Union, and wherever I go I find the people hungry for the great, simple truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but they have to be put to them in such a way that they can see them in their reasonableness, in their true relation to God's laws, in God's world, becoming visible everywhere.

Men do not want to give up their fathers' God. At least in crises of their lives they do not want to give up the habit of prayer. But ordinarily they haven't time, so busy are they, so strenuously must they follow their occupations, in order to hold their own in the race of life. They haven't time to think much about these things for themselves, or even to read the words of those who do think; and so, while there is a growing feeling of discontent with them regarding the old-fashioned methods of stating Christian truth, while they cannot quite believe in the sort of God their fathers believed in, cannot quite persuade themselves that their fathers' doctrine of repentance, regeneration, sacrament, conversion, etc., etc., is altogether a reasonable way of stating those things, yet they do not want to throw them all up. Therefore, as I say, what this large mass of intelligent men and women require is reverent but searching restatement of these foundational truths of Christianity—dressing them in a new dress, so they may not walk among men as guys, but shall appear to be what they are, reasonable, human, necessary.

There is, however, another side to this question. The fact that the people are turning away from the outward forms of Christianity is not altogether due to the want or fault of adaptability in the presentation to them of those forms. The church is no longer in the position that it was fifty years ago. This is chiefly, of course, true in the rural community, but it is also true of the church in the city. Men to-day can get by fifty different roads at the truth, where a generation ago they could only get most literally at it by way of the church. The diffusion of knowledge, the cheapness of publication, the provision which every community makes for the satisfaction of its aesthetic tastes, the cheapening of books, daily journalism—all these things compete with the church. They cannot supply, seldom even suggest, what in her is most valuable, but they make claim on time and on attention.

Then there is a third reason that I would dwell on for a few moments. Even thoughtful men have not yet begun to see the inconsistency they are guilty of in refusing to join a church. I am confident they are already beginning to see. But there are people of brains that have not yet had sufficient time to do their thinking. Now, when they begin to think, it will be increasingly evident to them that we must obey the law of association in religion in order to be good ourselves and do others good, just as truly as we must obey the law of association to defend our country, enjoy our evenings, gain education for our children or make money. In every important department in life we associate with our fellow men in order to obtain the best results which civilization offers us. In religion we must obey the same changeless law; we must associate with others in order to be good and in order to do good, just as truly as we must associate with others to get the best education for our children or university training for our boys. The man who associates with his fellow men in every department of life save the religious is glaringly inconsistent. He is a social being, a reasonable social being in every department of life, except in this one all-important department, and in that he remains a poor, belated egoist, for he is found repeating the thoughtless old saw:—

Higher criticism cannot possibly affect Christianity deleteriously, because all higher criticism means is, bringing the new knowledge that has come to us in the last hundred years or so into contact with the less accurate conclusions we had arrived at without that knowledge. To make a bugbear of higher criticism is exceedingly stupid, for it is to wilfully ignore higher criticism. A thing is not true merely because some one believed it to be true a long time ago. As to the scientific spirit of our day, surely almost every intelligent man knows that whatever his shortcomings may be, however his researches may prescribe his mind, as Darwin sadly confessed his had been prescribed, one great thing scientific man invariably stands for; no matter what language he speaks or in what clime he toils, he only seeks one thing, to one thing only will he bow, the truth. In a very real sense we can claim him as a follower of Him who said: "For this cause was I born; for this cause came I into the world, to bear witness to the Truth."

I would like to close by quoting some words of Mr. Lincoln. He was once asked why he did not join the the church, and this was his notable answer; it covers exactly, in my judgment, the ground that I have tried to hurry over:—

"I have never united myself to any church, because I have found difficulty in giving my assent, without mental reservation, to the long, complicated statements of Christian doctrine which characterize the article of belief and the usual confessions of faith. When any church will inscribe on its altars as its sole qualification for membership the Savior's condensed statement of the substance of both law and gospel, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself,' that church will I join with all my heart and all my soul."—Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, in New York Journal, Nov. 12, 1899.

WHAT THE HIGHER CRITICISM HAS DONE.

You ask me how the higher criticism has affected the Bible. The subject is a large one and incapable of being dismissed in a few words, but I will endeavor to answer it briefly:—

To Unitarians the higher criticism, so-called, is nothing new. It is a matter of two or three generations. There is no doubt that it has greatly advanced and enlarged the religious thought and action of mankind. The Christian religion is the simplest statement of abstract religion. It cannot be affected by a hair's breadth by any discussion as to the Jewish Scriptures. These Scriptures have been, and are, of immense use to the world. But the Christian religion assures us of the permanent presence now, with all of us who seek him, of the God who is Father of us all.

I have never been one of those who cavil at criticism of the Bible, if it be directed in a proper and becoming spirit. But it has not always been conducted in that spirit. Within my recollection, or the recollection of my father, I remember the storm of anger that swept over the English Church when Canon Milburn first referred to the patriarch Abraham as an Arab sheik. And yet it was probably the truth. I personally remember when the German "Ewald's History of Israel" was almost excommunicated by the Christian Church. And yet I believe that if John Henry Newman, leader of the so-called Oxford Movement in the English Church, and afterward a Cardinal Prince in the Roman Catholic Church, had been as well grounded in reading German as he was the Greek, the entire course of his life in religion might have been changed. Ewald, in the original, might have directed his thoughts into new channels.

In answering this question, or in attempting to reply to it at short notice, the words of an essay written by the present primate of all England, the Archbishop of Canterbury, when he was simply Dr. Frederick Temple, Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen, occur to my mind:—

"In confuting the tendency of the age, Christendom needed a firm spot upon which she might stand, and has found it in the Bible. Had the Bible been drawn up in precise statements of faith or detailed precepts of conduct, we should have had no alternative but either permanent subjection to an outer law or loss of the highest instrument of self-education. But the Bible from its very form is exactly adapted to our present want. It is a history. Even the doctrinal parts of it are cast in historical form, and are best studied by considering them as records of the time at which they were written, and as conveying to us the highest and greatest religious life of that time. The Bible, in fact, is hindered by its form from exercising a despotism over the human spirit; if it could do that, it would become an outer law at once; but its form is so admirably adapted to our need that it wins from us all the reverence of a supreme authority, and yet imposes upon us no yoke of subjection. This it does by virtue of the principle of private judgment, which puts conscience between us and the Bible, making conscience the supreme interpreter, whom it may be a duty to enlighten, but whom it can never be a duty to disobey.

He is guilty of high treason against the faith who fears the result of any investigation, whether philosophical or scientific or historical. And, therefore, nothing should be more welcome than the extension of knowledge of any and every kind; for every increase in our accumulations of knowledge throws fresh light upon these the real problems of our day. If geology proves to us that we must not interpret the first chapters of Genesis literally; if historical investigation shall show us that inspiration, however it may protect the doctrine, yet was not empowered to protect the narrative of the inspired writers from occasional inaccuracy; if careful criticism shall prove that there have been occasionally interpolations and forgeries in that book, as in many others, the results should still be welcome.

Even the mistakes of careful and reverent students are more valuable now than truth held in unthinking acquiescence. The substance of the teaching which we derive from the Bible will not be really affected by anything of this sort, while its hold upon the minds of believers and its powers to stir the depths of the spirit of man, however much weakened at first, must be immeasurably strengthened in the end by clearing away any blunders which may have been fastened upon it by human interpretation. —Edward Everett Hale in N. Y. Journal, Nov. 12, 1899.

CHURCH HISTORY, VOL. 3.

Bro. Criley requests us to make the following statement to the HERALD readers.

Appeals for subscriptions in advance for the issuance of the third volume of Church History have brought in less than one hundred dollars.

Because of the limited amount subscribed it has been impossible to issue the work heretofore. The Business Manager, at the late Woodbine reunion, proposed publicly that a number of the brethren undertake to secure sufficient subscriptions, or to furnish the capital with which to publish, if they wanted the work. Acting upon that suggestion one of our young brethren, an active and zealous worker in the mission field, has offered to loan the Herald Office one thousand dollars, that the History might be issued, and for one year without interest, if necessary, and which offer has been accepted.

However, Bro. Criley thinks the brother, who is a self-sacrificing hard worker in the field, ought not to be deprived of the use of his money on such terms; that all interested should bear their part of the burden. He therefore asks that the saints and friends interested in the work take hold with a will and send in subscriptions for the volume in advance. It will then be issued at once; and, in any event. He urges it upon the attention of all interested.

The Church History is a very important work. There is an urgent demand for the third volume, which ought to be backed up by prompt financial subscriptions. The volume will take up the history of events following the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and give a clear history of the apostasy, and of the rise, progress, and work of the Reorganization in its continuance of the work of the original church in succession under the presidency of Pres. Joseph Smith.

Much matter of great value and importance will be presented; all available sources of reliable and valuable information will be consulted and evidence obtained presented. The essential features of the latter-day apostasy will be presented, together with the development of the peculiar factions under which men aspired for church leadership.

The history of the Reorganization from its inception will include the leading actions of its General Conferences and councils, which will furnish the reader with information on church rulings, which will prove of great value to all interested in general and local church work.

Work on the History will be begun at once and be pushed to speedy completion, that the volume may be in the hands of subscribers early in the present year. The volume is needed and ought to be in the hands of the saints everywhere. Subscription prices the same as for volumes 1 and 2; viz., cloth, $1.50; cloth, leather backs and corners, $2.00; full leather $2.50; full leather, gilt edges, $3.00.

Address orders with remittances to Frank Criley, Lamoni, Iowa.

ANOTHER TESTIMONY.

Elder John W. Whittaker, of the Utah Mormon Church, in a discourse delivered in the Amphion Building, Williamsburg, New York, Sunday evening, January 7, 1900, stated in regard to the time when polygamy was introduced into the church he represented, as follows:—

PERSECUTION BEFORE POLYGAMY.

Go back to the founding of our church, April 6, 1830. There was no polygamy practiced or taught in Mormon literature until five years after that band of persecuted saints reached Utah. Before that they had been driven from State to State. Men and women were beaten, tarred and feathered, and some died under the hand of the secret assassin.—New York Herald, January 8, 1900.

The band of "persecuted saints" referred to, reached Salt Lake Valley in July, 1847, and five years after would bring it to 1852. This agrees with the fact that it was on August 29, 1852, that President Brigham Young produced the so-called revelation on plural or celestial marriage and had it presented to the church with a "You have got to believe and accept or be damned" sort of an indorsement.

We have reason to believe that Elder Whittaker is correct. Who will be the next to place himself in line of the truth on the point?

MANILA, Jan. 2, 6:45 p. m.—A naval officer who has arrived here from Guam brings a proclamation issued by Captain Leary, Naval Governor of that island, decreeing the absolute prohibition and total abolition of slavery or peonage, the order taking effect February 22.

Captain Leary also deported all the Spanish priests for reasons which were sufficient to him.

The prologue of the proclamation declares that the Spanish system of peonage, amounting to slavery, is a menace to popular liberty and a violation of the privileges guaranteed by the American constitution.

We know nothing of the reasons that have induced action against the Spanish friars, but are heartily in favor of the Governor's action against slavery or peonage. The proclamation ordering its suppression to date from the anniversary of Washington's birth is worthy the name and character of the great Father of his country. Now let the United States suppress slavery and polygamy in every realm subject to its control or influence.

UTAH ELDERS AT LAMONI.

The saints and other citizens of Lamoni have been entertained of late by a visit from some Utah elders, Messrs. Hansen and Bickmore, who being granted use of the Saints' church on Saturday and Sunday evenings, January 6 and 7, proceeded to address the large assemblies which gathered to hear them.

Elder Hansen was the leading speaker, being followed by brief addresses from Elder Bickmore.

Saturday evening's addresses were informal, being largely taken up with statements to the effect that they had come among us as friends, not to do us harm, but to do good; to get acquainted with us and that we of the Reorganized Church get acquainted with them. They testified to the uniform courtesy and kind treatment they had received from the people of Lamoni; the foregoing statements being repeated frequently, at length.

On Sunday evening Elder Hansen addressed the audience from the text: "The Son of Man has come to seek and to save that which was lost." He was followed by Elder Bickmore. With what was said on Saturday night the main issues between the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church were boldly plunged into and put forward for comparison. A close inspection of their teaching and practice was invited; a complete investigation of the whole field was vehemently urged. "Polygamy" and "sealing," for instance, were freely advocated and defended, and Joseph Smith was credited with those pernicious dogmas. However, the practice of "debating" was decried against. They had come not to destroy, but to build up the church; not to do harm, but good. Both churches could not be right. Their protestations of friendship were repeated frequently.

By request of the branch president, Bro. Heman C. Smith reviewed the two discourses, on Monday and Tuesday evenings following. The speaker stated that the personal friendship of the elders was accepted, that it was unnecessary to proffer it so often; that it would be freely accorded so long as their conduct justified so doing. However, they would be held responsible for what they advocated and defended, as representatives of the Utah Church. They had sprung the questions; we had not. He refuted the assertions made, for which no proof had been offered, and completely routed the elders upon every point at issue. He used simply the witnesses and conditions they themselves had made reference to, thus meeting and vanquishing them with their own weapons, including their witnesses and authorities, as published in their church works. They had introduced the matters in question, he simply accepted the invitation to inspect the Utah system.

Their assertions were clearly and overwhelmingly refuted; every semblance of their claims to be the church in succession were swept away.

The effort was continued later during the week, though after the first reply to the Utah elders they were manifestly crestfallen and subdued.

The efforts on both sides brought out large congregations of saints and friends, to whom the position of the Reorganized Church was confirmed, and the impregnable character of its work made manifest.

QUEEN VICTORIA SHOWS HATRED OF POLYGAMY.

INQUIRY INTO THE LIVES OF RESIDENTS IN A CANADIAN TOWN.

Washington, December 15.—Queen Victoria has joined hands with President McKinley in taking a special interest in the crusade against polygamy, and an investigation is now under way by the British Government concerning a polygamous marrying ground in Canadian territory for Utah believers in plural wives.

Admirers in this country of the Grand Old Woman of England, knowing well her respect for the sacredness of the marriage relation, will not be surprised that she has taken up the fight against a system that only belongs to barbaric races.

An attache of the British Embassy has just forwarded the Home Government full details concerning the practice of polygamy in the Gretna Green for Utah Mormons who wish to live their religion and at the same time evade the laws of this country.

This Mormon settlement of Cardston, Alberta, just over the Canadian border, is known as "Little Salt Lake" to the Mormons. They have founded a prosperous town and, by means of irrigation, have achieved wonders with the barren land.

Through the investigation carried on against Roberts and polygamy since December, 1898, the town of Cardston received considerable mention. Utah Mormons who believe in living the religion gave the preference to Cardston to going to Mexico when they wished to take new plural wives. It was a short cut to go up through Butte and Helena, Montana, to Cardston by rail, and there was then no danger of prosecution.

It is believed the British Government will be pleased to turn over to the Taylor committee the records of all marriages in Cardston since the enactment of the Edmunds-Tucker law, and steps have been taken to secure them if they have not been made way with. Plural wives of men high up in the councils of the Mormon Church have been frequent visitors to Cardston. The records of births in this Canadian town is said to be something phenomenal, but the children soon after found their way back to Utah.

The above, from the San Francisco Weekly Examiner, date not given, sent us by Bro. W. O. Wetherbee, San Bernardino, California, is republished for "what it may be worth." Whether the Utah Mormons, any of them, are guilty, as intimated, of going to Cardston to consummate polygamous marriages, we have no means of knowing.

SCIENCE AND CHRISTIANITY.

SPENCER'S PHILOSOPHY QUESTIONED.

ORGANIC EVOLUTION CROSS-EXAMINED. BY THE DUKE OF ARGYLE.

A discussion between two such men as Herbert Spencer and the Duke of Argyle can hardly fail to be interesting especially when relating to such a matter as "the factors in organic evolution." They are, of course, both believers in evolution, but with a difference. Mr. Spencer criticises the Darwinian formula of "natural selection" as a phrase which makes no real explanation as to the causal force in evolution. The Duke of Argyle makes the same criticism. But he does not stop there. He brings the same charge against Spencer's attempt to explain the world by his own pet phrase—neat and ingenious as it is—the "survival of the fittest." Both phrases he holds to be alike empty, illusory, and evasive when used in the futile attempt to account for a world infinitely instinct with evidences of adaptation and design by resort to an infinite lot of purely fortuitous happenings. Mr. Spencer, defining the hypothesis of Darwin, calls it "the natural selection of favorable variations," emphasizing the fact that these variations are "spontaneous," "fortunate," "fortuitously arising;" but these accidental variations as "the sole factor" are insufficient to account for organic evolution without being at least supplemented by his own "survival of the fittest" factor. And yet what Mr. Spencer sensitively and persistently resents is the suggestion of any mental factor in natural phenomena. He likes well enough the idea of "eternal energy," whether spelled with capitals or not; but with the supposition of an eternal Mind he will have nothing to do.

The Duke of Argyle, while heartily congratulating Mr. Spencer on the completion of his really herculean labor of building up his "Synthetic System of Philosophy," adds: "The attempt to string all the beads of human knowledge on one loose-fibered thread of thought called Evolution has been, I think, a failure. But the beads remain, ready for a truer arrangement and a better setting, in the years to come."—Chicago Tribune, Jan. 7, 1899.

The ministry and other readers of the HERALD will note the admissions in and appreciate the value of the foregoing article from the book review column of the journal named. They will see how greatly at variance, how far from unity are leading exponents of the theory of evolution.

It is probably known by most of our readers that the authorities referred to are among the shining lights of the world of science and of letters. It is apparent that there is as much speculation, inconsistency, and drifting in the realm of science as in theology, so-called, and that men and women who think as they should think will wait for science to justify its suppositions before submitting their judgments, upon which hang their eternal interests, to its "high claims."

The present attitude of evolutionists is one of mere cold, calculating theorists who ask the race to accept a theory of life and being lacking a semblance of heartthrobbing in it—a mentally-torturing cold-blooded materialism, presented for the acceptance of men and women who have hearts and souls as well as intellect. Our better nature and the divine word and Spirit teach us that "the greatest of these" things is love—"the greatest thing in the world;" hence that love for father, mother, wife, and child, and love for God and man, is written in Nature as indelibly as are the cuttings and washings of cliffs and soil by rivers, winds, and ocean surges, and the building up of continents, etc., to which, with similar mere material elements, the average scientist devotes his attention almost if not exclusively.

Let the present disciples of science give us a code of morals higher than that taught by the Christ; let science evolve a superior Teacher and type of the race; let her bring forth a superior Master and Creator of the universe than the Almighty, and inspire us with higher hopes and give us sublimer ideals for the present and future; and then demonstrate the truth of their theories as the truth of God has been demonstrated by the direct inspiration of the Spirit of love and of truth, to men and women of God past and present, and we may find some reason to consider their propositions. But while science confines itself to its imperfect knowledge of the seen, of which it knows but little, and is in ignorance of the whole or of any complete part of even that, it is subject to the limitations that bind to earth (and a small portion of it at that) with what its imperfect means enables it to see of the world of space about us.

Christianity is based upon the revelations of One who is in and through and who knows all things—God, Father, Creator, and Redeemer of man. It justifies itself for recognition and acceptance by the first utterance of its proclamation to man: "In the beginning God." It recognizes every necessity of and lays down a consistent code for the observance of the race. It demands of man his best—a perfect life. It promises and bestows upon man, the child, love and final redemption as son and daughter of the Most High.

It dignifies the race by such revelation of its high origin and final destiny, and is in itself the only true science of human life. It is the fool who says in his heart "There is no God." It is the wise who believes and knows that "Every word of God is pure; he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him."

The principle of Fatherhood, included in parental love (one of the principle elements of "Nature," and which science should not ignore or pass by) directs and keeps the helpless infant to the self-activities of manhood, and here, as in infantile years, divine care and love and instruction are essential to the more mature man. This the faith revealed in Christ recognizes, hence is comprehensively scientific, and grateful, and does not seek to ignore a Father upon whose bounty all men and all forms of life are dependent "for life and breath and all things."

An exposition of true Christianity in doctrine and principle—both in statement and in personal human life, in all that such implies, not overlooking the principles of human and divine love — will demonstrate the manifest divinity and superiority of the truth. And, last but not least, the Church of God, by which is meant the people, individually and collectively, are charged with the mission of giving a consistent, which means a true, an intelligent exposition of it in these last days; otherwise its claims, made collectively or individually, amount to what in themselves are also unscientific, hence lacking in practical character.

Bro. M. H. Bond was to begin a discussion with Elder E. Jensen, of the Utah Church, in Paine Memorial Hall, Boston, Massachusetts on Tuesday, January 9. Bro. Bond was to affirm the Reorganized Church to be the true church in succession, also that Pres. Joseph Smith is the legal successor in the prophetic office. Elder Jensen was to affirm the Utah Church, also Brigham Young as successor in the presidency of the church; the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, and revelations received and indorsed by the church up to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, to be the standard of evidence; all other history and testimony to be received for what it is worth. Notice of said discussion appeared at some length in the Boston Investigator, January 6. Elder Jensen obtained some notoriety in Boston during the past summer, from his lectures on Boston Common, hence the debate is likely to attract some attention. This, with Bro. Montague's debate in Western Iowa, and the visit of Utah elders to Lamoni, lends encouragement to our long cherished hope that the Utah Church would be forced to meet the issues. We hope so. Let the facts be fully given to the world in fair and open investigation, and error will not long survive.

A DUTY OF THE ELDERS.

One of the most imperative duties of the elders is to see that the law of God is kept. The Lord says to the elders in plain words:—

Ye shall see that my law is kept.—D. C. 41: 2.

And the reason why this is so, is set forth in the sentence following this quotation, and reads thus:—

He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom, should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine.—D. C. 41: 2.

Strict obedience to the law is required of all from the greatest to the least. None is exempt from the greatest to the least. For that reason provision is made in the law for the discipline and correction of those who disregard its provisions with reference to their duties and callings. It does not matter who the persons are, it does not matter what their names are, it does not matter what their offices are, it does not matter how high the position of trust may be, all are amenable to the law of God and subject to its jurisdiction. This is clearly apparent with respect to both the spiritual and the temporal departments of the church. It is not the humble members alone, but the chief officers, also, who are thus subject. This is made to appear very plainly with reference to the heads of the spiritual department in the following:—

And inasmuch as a president of the high priesthood shall transgress, he shall be had in remembrance before the common council of the church, who shall be assisted by twelve councilors of the high priesthood; and their decision upon his head shall be an end of controversy concerning him. Thus, none shall be exempted from the justice and the laws of God; that all things may be done in order and solemnity, before him, according to truth and righteousness.—D. C. 104: 37.

It is equally clear that the heads of the temporal department are accountable to the law, as the following shows:—

And even the bishop, who is a judge, and his counselors, if they are not faithful in their stewardships, shall be condemned, and others shall be planted in their stead; for, behold, I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven. And the day shall come, when the nations of the earth shall tremble because of her, and shall fear because of her terrible ones. The Lord hath spoken it. Amen.—D. C. 64: 8.

The scope of the law and the duty of the elders of various quorums to see that it is properly observed and obedience rendered is made emphatic in what follows:—

Should the church fall into disorder, or any portion of it, it is the duty of the several quorums of the church, or any one of them to take measures to correct such disorder; through the advice and direction of the presidency, the twelve, the seventy, or a council of high priests, in case of emergency; and in case the presidency is in transgression, the bishop and his council of high priests, as provided in the law; and the presidency and high council if the bishop, or his counselors, if high priests, are in transgression. The scriptures and the church articles and covenants, with the rules adopted by the church, shall govern in procedure.—D. C. 122: 10.

The pains and penalties due to the violation and disregard of the law are not limited to spiritual things; they apply also to temporal things. The Lord, speaking of the law of consecration, says:—

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord's storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—D. C. 70: 3.

The elders of the church have, in this last clause, a strong reason why they should see to it that the law of consecration is kept as well as all other laws. There is a very severe penalty attached to the disregard of this law, or even to the observing of it grudgingly. The penalty mentioned here is that "the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld." Those who wonder why prophecies fail, why tongues go wrong, why the sick are unblest in administration, have here a simple key to the mystery. It readily explains why the doctors find such a rich field of operations among the saints of Lamoni and elsewhere. And the church suffers the penalty of neglect to comply with the law of consecration in that the funds that would otherwise flow into the church treasury are diverted into the pockets of the physicians, while those who in this matter rob God are in turn robbed of health and money too. While this is bad enough it does not nearly express the full penalty that attaches to the transgression of the law of consecration. The pains are not done with in this life, the consequences follow into the time to come. The following makes this unquestioned:—

If any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—D. C. 101: 2.

Can anything justify the elders in neglecting to speak plainly concerning these things? When they hear the saints testify of their hopes of celestial glory and they know that this law, obedience to which is a chief condition of an inheritance in the celestial kingdom, is not observed, do they take the proper pains to disabuse their minds of the sad mistake? Certainly, a man cannot be in torment in hell with the wicked and in celestial glory at the same time. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." The Lord has clearly shown in the following revelation that only those who render compliance with this law will have a place in the celestial world:—

Verily I say unto you, The time has come, and is now at hand; and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion, or in other words, the city of Enoch, for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.—D. C. 77: 1.

The elders should be very faithful in regard to these matters. They should not knowingly permit candidates for the celestial kingdom to deceive themselves with respect to the required conditions, for "he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, cannot abide a celestial glory," and certainly consecration is included in the law of the celestial world. If consecration is not, then nothing is. If one man can neglect this commandment and yet receive this highest reward, another man can neglect something else, and so on until every principle of law is disregarded; and thus the law become a dead letter, null and void. We should pay strict attention to the things written concerning those of other times that we may avoid the mistakes made by them. In the following paragraph there is a lesson of grave import to us:—

Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—D. C. 102: 2.

Now it must not be supposed

because we are not occupying the center place in the organized condition required by the law of the Lord, that there is nothing to do in the work of building up Zion. It must be kept in mind that, primarily, Zion is the people, the saints, the pure in heart; the land is not, strictly speaking, Zion, but it is the land of Zion. Therefore whenever and wherever the saints are being built up in the most holy faith, the work of building up Zion is in progress. The work of character building among the saints is of transcendent importance compared with the work of piling brick and stone and mortar upon the land. According to the above quotation the characters of the saints are to be formed and built up by the practice of the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. These principles must be taught and studied and understood before they can be practiced. This will require a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together.

The foregoing shows that the saints must learn to be obedient to the things which the Lord requires at their hands, they must learn to impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and they must become united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom. In order that the saints may learn to do these things, and "know more perfectly, concerning their duty," there is a very responsible duty imposed upon the elders, and that duty is outlined in the paragraph following the one last quoted, and is as follows:—

I speak not concerning those who are appointed to lead my people, who are the first elders of my church, for they are not all under this condemnation; but I speak concerning my churches abroad; there are many who will say, Where is their God? Behold, he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys. Therefore, in consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly, concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands; and this cannot be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high; for, behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them, inasmuch as they are faithful, and continue in humility before me; therefore, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season, for the redemption of Zion; for, behold, I do not require at their hands to fight the battles of Zion; for, as I said in a former commandment, even so will I fulfill, I will fight your battles.—D. C. 102: 3.

In the above we have a clue to the reason why the people to whom it was addressed failed to accomplish their desire to establish themselves in the land of Zion notwithstanding their zeal, their courage, and their sacrifices. The people had not been properly prepared by a knowledge of their duty and the things God required at their hands. The people were not prepared because their teachers, the elders, were not prepared themselves. The elders were not prepared because they had not given sufficient heed to the directions of the Lord how to prepare themselves. A greater endowment of the Holy Spirit was necessary in order that the elders might comprehend the law and be able to teach it properly. The Lord kept the necessity of this before them from the time the first movement was made to go from the State of New York westward, first to Ohio, and then to Missouri. And in connection with the promise of the endowment there was the condition that they should teach one another, each according to his appointment. Men have no right to look for the fulfillment of the Lord's promises unless they comply with the conditions. The Lord makes this emphatic where he says:—

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.—D. C. 81: 3.

Now let us follow the movement of the people of the church as we may gather it from the record in the Book of Covenants and Church History. The first organization of the church was effected April 6, 1830, in the State of New York. From that time the gospel began to be preached in various places, numbers of people, here and there, accepted the doctrine, were obedient to the faith, and united with the church. In December of that year the movement westward was authorized by the following commandment:—

And again a commandment I give unto the church, that it is expedient in me that they should assemble together at the Ohio.—D. C. 37: 2.

The purpose for which the church should assemble together at the Ohio is set forth in a subsequent revelation as follows:—

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law; and there you shall be endowed with power from on high, and from thence, whomsoever I will, shall go forth among all nations.—D. C. 38: 7.

In paragraph 5 of this revelation is a commandment to teach one another in these words:—

But verily I say unto you, Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me.

Thus receiving the law, teaching one another, and being endowed with power from on high was associated by the Lord with the assembling together in Ohio. Concerning this assembling there is this further statement in another revelation:—

And inasmuch as my people shall assemble themselves to the Ohio, I have kept in store a blessing such as is not known among the children of men, and it shall be poured forth upon their heads. And from thence men shall go forth into all nations.—D. C. 39: 4.

This declaration, together with the quotation previously made from 38: 7, shows that the endowment with power from on high was intended to precede the going forth of the elders among the nations. As we pass along we shall find further evidence of this. Here now follows a commandment directing what they were to do when they were assembled together:—

And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given; and thus ye shall become instructed in the law of my church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me, that inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received. Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken, even that which ye have received. Purge ye out the iniquity which is among you; sanctify yourselves before me, and if ye desire the glories of the kingdom, appoint ye my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and uphold him before me by the prayer of faith. And again, I say unto you, that if ye desire the mysteries of the kingdom, provide for him food and raiment and whatsoever thing he needeth to accomplish the work, wherewith I have commanded him; and if ye do it not, he shall remain unto them that have received him, that I may reserve unto myself a pure people before me.

Again I say, hearken ye elders of my church whom I have appointed: ye are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high. Sanctify yourselves and ye shall be endowed with power, that ye may give even as I have spoken.—D. C. 43: 3, 4.

Here again it is seen that the teaching, instructing, and edifying each other by the elders is associated with their sanctification, purity, and endowment. Nothing can be clearer than that the saints will not be properly taught, the church will not be rightly directed, there will not be a correct understanding of the law and commandments, the elders will not have that degree of power in their ministrations that it is their privilege to have, and the disciples and the ministry will not be able to purge out the iniquity that is among them until there is a compliance with the commandment that the leading elders should meet together for the purposes named in the foregoing revelation. The necessity for the unity of understanding thus provided for and the resulting strength and power flowing from it is the main reason why the Lord instructed the elders of the Reorganization as he did in 1882. The instruction referred to is as follows:—

Ye cannot now prosecute missions in many foreign lands, nor is it expedient that the elders of the first quorums be sent out of the land of America until the work of the reorganization of my church be more fully established, and a greater unity of understanding between them be obtained.—D. C. 118: 1.

The foregoing shows clearly that, at that time, the reorganization of the church was not as fully established as was desirable to the Lord, neither was there sufficient unity of understanding among the elders to successfully "prosecute missions in many foreign lands;" hence it was not expedient that the elders of the first quorums should be sent out of the land of America until these things should be accomplished. This is in harmony with the revelations, already cited, which show that it was the design of the Lord that the elders should not go forth among the nations until they were endowed with power from on high and should have such a unity of understanding as to be able to give as the Lord had spoken. It is also in agreement with the example of Jesus upon the Eastern Continent in the meridian of time. He would not permit the apostles and seventies to go forth among the nations until he had held an assembly of forty days with them, "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God," and until they were "endued with power from on high." They were commanded to tarry at Jerusalem until this promise should be fulfilled. The record of the event as given in the "Acts of the Apostles" shows what wonderful results followed the obedience to the commandment of Jesus. If similar faithfulness and obedience were rendered to-day like results would follow; for "Jesus Christ [is] the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

When the elders assembled in Ohio in the early part of 1831, according to the commandment of the Lord, he gave them his law as he had promised. In this law there was a confirmation of authority and direction for the westward movement as follows:—

And, behold, it shall come to pass, that my servants shall be sent forth to the east, and to the west, to the north, and to the south; and even now, let him that goeth to the east, teach them that shall be converted to flee to the west; and this in consequence of that which is coming on the earth, and of secret combinations. Behold, thou shalt observe all these things, and great shall be thy reward; for unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom, but unto the world it is not given to know them. Ye shall observe the laws which ye have received, and be faithful. And ye shall hereafter receive church covenants, such as shall be sufficient to establish you, both here, and in the New Jerusalem. Therefore, he that lacketh wisdom, let him ask of me, and I will give him liberally, and upbraid him not. Lift up your hearts and rejoice, for unto you the kingdom, or in other words, the keys of the church, have been given. Even so. Amen. —D. C. 42: 18.

Note what is said above, "Ye shall observe the laws which ye have received, and be faithful." The law of consecration was one of the laws received, and which they were thus commanded to observe. The payment of one tenth of all the interest annually was not enjoined until several years afterwards, and, from the nature of the case, could only be binding or obligatory upon those who had as a beginning put all their surplus property into the hands of the bishop, as the law itself plainly declares. (See D. C. 106: 1.) This will be plain to all those who understand what the anual interest is. This, however, is not the proper moment to enter upon a discussion of this point, hence we will return to a consideration of the necessity for an assembly of the elders for mutual instruction, that they might be sanctified by that which they received, binding themselves to act in all holiness before God (D. C. 43: 3), and be endued with power from on high, which power would enable them to properly comprehend the law given unto them, and, also, enable them to declare it understandingly unto the nations.

But besides receiving power to comprehend and to declare the law, they were to obtain power to organize themselves according to the laws of man, that their enemies might not have power over them, that they might be preserved in all things, as we learn from the following:—

And it shall come to pass, that inasmuch as they are faithful, and exercise faith in me, I will pour out my Spirit upon them in the day that they assemble themselves together. And it shall come to pass that they shall go forth into the regions round about, and preach repentance unto the people; and many shall be converted, insomuch that ye shall obtain power to organize yourselves according to the laws of man, that your enemies may not have power over you, that you may be preserved in all things, that you may be enabled to keep my laws, that every band may be broken wherewith the enemy seeketh to destroy my people.—D. C. 44: 2.

The assembly that is under consideration seems to be more especially intended for the benefit of the traveling ministry and is not to be confounded with the school of the prophets referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 39-45, which is intended more particularly for the standing ministry, "the ministry in the church, beginning at the high priests, even down to the deacons."

The conditions upon which the blessing of the Lord is received in the assemblies of the elders as well as the things that hinder the blessings are set out in various revelations. The following are in point:—

And it shall come to pass, that inasmuch as they are faithful, and exercise faith in me, I will pour out my Spirit upon them in the day that they assemble themselves together. —D. C. 44: 2.

Behold, and hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together, whose prayers I have heard, and whose hearts I know, and whose desires have come up before me. Behold, and lo, mine eyes are upon you; and the heavens and the earth are in mine hands, and the riches of eternity are mine to give. Ye endeavored to believe that ye should receive the blessing which was offered unto you, but, behold, verily, I say unto you, There were fears in your hearts; and verily this is the reason that ye did not receive. . . .

And again, verily I say unto you, that it is your privilege, and a promise I give unto you that have been ordained unto this ministry, that inasmuch as you strip yourselves from jealousies and fears, and humble yourselves before me, for ye are not sufficiently humble, the veil shall be rent, and you shall see me and know that I am; not with the carnal, neither natural mind, but with the spiritual; for no man has seen God at any time in the flesh, except quickened by the Spirit of God; neither can any natural man abide the presence of God; neither after the carnal mind; ye are not able to abide the presence of God now, neither the ministering of angels; wherefore continue in patience until ye are perfected.

Let not your minds turn back, and when ye are worthy, in mine own due time, ye shall see and know that which was conferred upon you by the hands of my servant Joseph Smith, Jr. Amen.—D. C. 67: 1, 3, 4.

And if your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you, and that body which is filled with light comprehendeth all things. Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him: for he will unveil his face unto you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will.

Remember the great and last promise which I have made unto you: cast away your idle thoughts and your excess of laughter far from you; tarry ye, tarry ye in this place, and call a solemn assembly, even of those who are the first laborers in this last kingdom; and let those whom they have warned in their traveling, call on the Lord, and ponder the warning in their hearts which they have received, for a little season. Behold, and lo, I will take care of your flocks and will raise up elders and send unto them.

Behold, I will hasten my work in its time; and I give unto you who are the first laborers in this last kingdom, a commandment, that you assemble yourselves together, and organize yourselves, and prepare yourselves; and sanctify yourselves; yea, purify your hearts, and cleanse your hands and your feet before me, that I may make you clean; that I may testify unto your Father, and your God, and my God, that you are clean from the blood of this wicked generation, that I may fulfill this promise, this great and last promise which I have made unto you, when I will.

Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.

Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads. He that seeketh me early shall find me, and shall not be forsaken.

Therefore, tarry ye, and labor diligently, that you may be perfected in your ministry, to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time, as many as the mouth of the Lord shall name, to bind up the law, and seal up the testimony, and to prepare the saints for the hour of judgment, which is to come; that their souls may escape the wrath of God, the desolation of abomination, which await the wicked, both in this world, and in the world to come. Verily, I say unto you, Let those who are not the first elders, continue in the vineyard, until the mouth of the Lord shall call them, for their time is not yet come; their garments are not clean from the blood of this generation. . . .

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, Call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God; that your incomings may be in the name of the Lord; that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord; that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High.

Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and lightmindedness, and from all your wicked doings. Appoint among yourselves a teacher, and let not all be spokesmen at once, but let one speak at a time, and let all listen unto his sayings, that when all have spoken, that all may be edified of all, and that every man may have an equal privilege.

See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated; and above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace; pray always, that you may not faint until I come; behold, and lo, I will come quickly, and receive you unto myself. Amen.—D. C. 85:18–23, 36–38.

The foregoing citations show what manner of person an elder must be in order to have place in a solemn assembly. Many things have to be overcome that are usually indulged without restraint. One must cease from all light speeches, from all laughter, from all lustful desires, from all pride and lightmindedness, and from all wicked doings. One must cease to be covetous, cease to be idle, cease to be unclean, cease to be fault-finding, cease to indulge in unnecessary sleep. The elders who take part therein will be those who love one another, who have learned to impart one to another as the gospel requires, and who are clothed with charity as with a mantle. They will be those who have cast away their idle thoughts and have sanctified themselves to that degree that their minds are single to God, that they are clean from the blood of their generation, that they practice virtue and holiness before the Lord continually, and who to maintain this condition continue in prayer and fasting. Again they must strip themselves of jealousies and fears, they must be very humble and faithful before the Lord and exercise abiding faith in him.

These requirements are of a high order, indeed, but the Lord has promised that his grace shall attend the diligent, and that those who seek him early shall find him, and shall not be forsaken. And while the requirements are of a high order the blessings and privileges to be attained are correspondingly high. The Lord has promised that for those who fulfill these conditions the vail shall be rent, and they shall see God, and know that he is; their bodies shall be filled with light and they shall be able to comprehend all things; they shall be endued with power from on high and preach so that many will be converted. They will have the privilege of communing with the heavens and enjoy the ministration of angels. In their ministration of the gospel they shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb, or joint; a hair of their head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed, and they will not go hungry nor athirst.

THE GATES OF HELL DID NOT PREVAIL.

Number 46, volume 46, of Saints' Herald, has an article entitled, "The gates of hell shall not prevail." For the benefit of those who may be interested, I will give an experience which I had about ten months ago with that subject, which experience also caused me to investigate and meditate, the result of which, to me at least, is a plain understanding of scripture which before was only a matter of speculation. Here is the experience:—

I was preaching, and remarked that I had not much faith in deathbed repentance, when up arose a Baptist brother and wanted to know what I would do with the thief on the cross, and argued quite lengthily in favor of deathbed repentance, informing the congregation that the idea of the thief being a baptized believer was only presumptive, and could not be proven, etc. While he was yet speaking I received the argument which would effectually put him to silence, for it could not be gainsaid, and no attempt was made to gainsay it. But it was in a different light from any in which I had looked at the subject in question before. But the chain of evidence was complete and passed before me quicker than thought, and it probably took me twenty minutes of very rapid speaking and quoting scripture to reproduce it. And as it gives a different explanation of Matthew 16:19 than any I have yet heard or read of, and as light upon that subject seems to be what is desired by the writer of the before-mentioned article, I will here in brief give the explanation:—

It matters not whether the thief on the cross was a baptized believer or not. There is nothing in the text to prove either one or the other, and we are not here to speculate. Jesus simply stated to the thief what would happen to both of them before the day was spent, "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." It was no doubt comforting to him to know that they would both go to the same place, and as he seemed to have faith in the ability of Jesus to save, it no doubt gave him hope that Jesus would help him to make the best of his chances, etc. The statement of Jesus seems to be a short way of saying to the thief, We cannot attend to your case here, as such things must be done lawfully and in order; but we will both be in Paradise to-day, and then if you want to enter the gospel covenant there will be a chance for you to do so.

Now to prove that they both did go to the same country, and also that there was a chance for the thief to enter the covenant, we will examine the scriptures and see if we can find out where departed spirits, good and bad, go.

Luke 16: 28, I. T.: In hell he lifted up his eyes and saw Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom, etc. Here we have the wicked rich man, the righteous Lazarus, and the Father of the faithful, all in the same country and in speaking distance, and now there is only one question: Did Jesus, who was greater than man, also go there?

1 Peter 3:19, 20, I. T.: "For which cause also, he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; some of whom were disobedient in the days of Noah." Here we find Jesus preaching to the departed spirits of wicked men, some of whom lived in Noah's day, some no doubt in other ages of the world. One, in all probability, was the thief on the cross. What did Jesus preach to them? 1 Peter 4: 6: "Because of this, is the gospel preached to them who are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live in the spirit according to the will of God." So Jesus preached the gospel to the captives. That was about what he preached to men on earth. Peter was the man who instructed the church in this matter, because Peter had received special instructions from Jesus on these lines, and no doubt understood exactly what he was talking about. To learn how Peter found out, we turn to Matthew 16: 14. Here it seems that Jesus asked his disciples as to whether men had any idea who he really was, and it seems from the answer (v. 15) that they made only wild guesses (v. 16). But now he wants to know if his disciples knew, or did they have to guess also? But we find from Peter's answer (v. 17) that he, at least, knew, and no guesswork about it. Jesus, hearing his answer, says to Peter (v. 18), Simon, you are a blessed man, for my Father in heaven hath revealed this to thee. Verse 19: And now, Peter, since I have been identified to you by my Father in heaven, it is time for me to tell you that this shall be the foundation, that which supports my church, that which my church shall lean against, as against a solid rock. The knowledge of who I am and my power shall be a safeguard to my brethren against those who lie in wait to deceive. Peter, my Father in heaven will identify me to the church as he has to you, and then the church cannot be deceived. That is why John says (John 17: 2) it is life eternal to know God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. That is why John admonished the saints to try the spirits. 1 John 4: 1 says in the second verse, there is danger of being deceived unless you receive a revelation from God through the Spirit that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh. In other words, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of the living God. That is why Paul said to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 12: 3), "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost," They may believe it, or guess at it, but no man can say that he is unless he knows, and no man can know unless it is revealed to him from heaven.

And now back to Matthew 16: 19, last clause, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." What does it stand for? Was it not for that which Peter had received? Was it not that which Jesus promised to the church, that which should be sufficient to prevent deception? We think so.

But what about the gates of hell? Well, what is a gate, anyhow? In my mother tongue, the Danish language, it is translated, "the dors of hell." What is a door? Well, I guess all who are over eight years old know what a gate or door is, so we need not explain.

The following is about the sum and substance of the information which Peter received from Jesus: Peter, this is not a special privilege for you alone, but to all who gather upon the gospel platform, my Father in heaven will reveal the fact that I am the Christ, the Son of the living God. And when I have finished my work here on earth, the gates of hell shall not prevail any longer, but I will open them, and enter, and preach the gospel to the captives, and unto all who embrace it my Father in heaven will reveal who I am. ZION'S REDEMPTION FUND AND GATHERING.

My mind has been much wrought of late concerning the above heading. Zion is to be a place of safety to flee to (D. C. 45: 13) when wars, pestilence, etc., are raging. I believe every saint should be alive to the fact that a foundation should be laid (to bring about our temporal as well as our spiritual salvation. Our scattered property is in danger. The God of Israel is gathering the natural Israel and constraining them to look after their home in Palestine. I believe the same is coming to pass with Israel by adoption. The Heralds of late prove this. Naturally charity would help Herald writers considerably in their discourses about our home in Zion.

See in Herald of August 23, 1899, on "Movement of the Zionists." Dr. Herzl and the Ten Million Dollar Fund, purchased at $4.89 a share. This fund is for the purpose of purchasing their home in Palestine. All, mostly poor Jews, have these shares. In this case as in many others, the rich are slow to drop in line. A brother of the Canada mission lately had a conversation with a Jew concerning the gathering of the Jews. He learned from this Jew that he had $200 worth of shares in this fund, although he made a living by gathering bones, old iron, etc. What think ye, saints? Is this not quite an example to us as Israel by adoption through the gospel of our Lord?

In the parable contained in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 6, mention is made of Zion's redemption, the "olive trees" (the twelve apostles), "the watchmen" (elders), "the hedge round about" (charity), "high tower" (may mean higher perfection, godliness); at any rate, it means that the one watchman or prophet should be on this high tower so he could overlook the entire vineyard, or receive revelation concerning the enemy's doings. I believe this gives us to understand that we all should earnestly stand by our President, and live in such a way that he could feel that the saints in every direction are endeavoring to build this high tower, and sustain him thereon, so the Lord can use him to our good. Further, the parable says, "And while they were yet laying the foundation thereof," humanlike, they got into a fuss. Doctrine and Covenants 107: 10, 11 is an example of how Israel failed in imparting their money, according to the command of the Lord. Of course rejection was the issue.

I believe Bro. Hilliard was no doubt spiritually prompted, as well as others since, to write on this gathering subject. I am interested, and wish in my limited way to cast in my views with the rest. Would it not be in keeping with the commandments given to us, as Israel, to lay a foundation by starting a fund? Name of said fund may be agreed upon by all interested. This fund to have shares not less than $5.00 each, fund to be consecrated and set apart for the building up of Zion. Said fund should be guarded by the Spirit of revelation and the head counselors, and voice of the General Conference of the church. It requires solidity in such matters, so that all will feel free to take stock in the fund. Our spiritual affairs are guarded by the Spirit of revelation, why not this matter guarded the same? We are not afraid to trust the Lord with our spiritual salvation. Why the money matter?

If we had a $10,000,000 fund, same as natural Israel, don't you think this would make Bro. Joseph and Bro. Kelley and their counselors begin to see some light concerning Zion's redemption, as far as money could do it? Of course we require another large fund, of charity, peace, etc., and a willingness to act promptly to the Lord's commandments, and learn by the examples of the past. We may say we are sorry that Zion is not built up, so that we could gather. That reminds me of the story of the poor drayman, who lost his only horse in a collision on a city street. Many were standing round the poor drayman and his dead horse, giving vent to their feelings, "very sorry," etc. At this juncture a man exclaimed, "I am sorry just ten dollars' worth." Others soon had the same sorrow, and the poor drayman, to his joy, in a short time had enough to restore what was lost. It seems we want a kind of money sorrow, to make a large fund, so that when the Lord commands to purchase land, etc., all will be ready. When land is purchased in this way it will prevent all selfish speculation. Our whole aim will be the building up of Zion and her waste places.

Get your Doctrine and Covenants and read the following passages carefully:—

Purchasing lands.—42: 10.

That ye save all the money that ye can.—48: 2.

Wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints.—57: 1.

To receive moneys to purchase lands in Zion. . . . And an epistle and subscription, . . . to obtain moneys, to purchase lands for an inheritance for the children of God.—58: 10, 11.

The land of Zion shall not be obtained but by purchase. . . . And if by purchase, behold, you are blessed.—63: 8.

There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—98: 10.

If they pollute their inheritances, they shall be thrown down.—100: 3.

How necessary to give heed to the admonition given in section 98, verse 3, jarrings, contentions, envyings, strife, lustful and covetous desires. We must avoid that which would pol-

lute our inheritances, before we are gathered, or we will fall in the same affliction our former brethren did. It would be well for all to count the cost of us having our own selfish ways. Our tithing and offering fund will suffer, if it has to be spent in settling and getting in line those who kick over the traces. Meekness, charity, peace, patience, will save and progress our tithing and offering fund and make us fit subjects to be gathered to the land of Zion. See section 100, verse 5: "Moneys to purchase lands." Verse 3 speaks of a Moses man. The Moses man will be forthcoming when Israel is ready. Read section 102 entire: The Lord's will concerning redemption, law of celestial kingdom, wrong to keep moneys and not build Zion, etc. You also see in many of the verses a strict command to have all things prepared, and not go in haste.

In fact, the whole sum and substance is, money to purchase land, a willingness to get into a condition together. Therefore the preceding quotations lead me to be strongly in favor of Zion's Redemption Fund, or call it what you may. And as money talks, to start with, I am ready to take twenty shares at $5.00 each, as soon as a provision can be made for said fund, and the way prepared to consecrate the money for said purpose. If I am wrong in my belief, I stand ready to be corrected.

THE GATES OF HELL.

In Herald of November 15, 1899, is an article on this subject. The writer desires instruction; he is not the only one who desires to understand this as well as all other subjects pertaining to the gospel. Thirty years ago, when I began my ministerial labors, and for many years thereafter, in preaching the restored gospel, my mind was not clear on this subject. If the gates of hell should not prevail against the church, or as it was interpreted to me, that the perpetuity of the church should not be interfered with, how could the church be restored unless it had been lost, or had ceased to exist upon the earth. Now my mind is clear and perfectly satisfied; but that which satisfies me may not satisfy some others. In studying scripture it is best to lay this foundation, that God never contradicts himself nor makes any mistakes. If there is any conflict, it is always in us, the incorrect understanding we have of God's word. In this text, Matthew says:—

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matt. 16:13-18.

There is no reference made in this text in regard to the perpetuity of the church any more than there is to the perpetuity of the apostles to whom he was speaking. What is the church of which Jesus was speaking? It was a body of men and women, who through belief and obedience of the law of God, which we call the gospel, had become the sons and daughters of God. For brevity's sake let us call this church and gospel the power of God by which we are saved from sin, and the power of Satan, or the Devil. Who did Jesus come to establish this for? It was the family of Adam. Before Jesus came (and also since) the Devil had captured some of Adam's family, and confined them in hell as prisoners. The gates, more commonly with us called door, which is opened and closed at will by those having the enclosure in charge, through which prisoners are taken into this prison called hell.

Now the mission of Jesus was not only to those who were living in the flesh, but as the Prophet Isaiah said:—

And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited.—Isa. 24:22.

To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.—Isa. 42:7.

What have we upon record that Jesus did fulfill this prophetic statement?

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison.—2 Peter 3:18, 19.

John the Revelator made the fact complete when he said:—

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.—Rev. 1:18.

Thus we see that Jesus Christ held the keys (authority) of hell, and as he conferred them upon his chosen servants to carry on the salvation or redemption of man, the church could go on with power, and the gates of hell could not prevent it, or prevail against it.

ADAMSTON, W. Va., Jan. 8.

Editors Herald:—I would oftener report to the many who watch and anxiously scan your columns but for the fact that you do not seem spacious enough at present; many letters and articles are late in appearing. We often think it time for you to "expand" your proportions, so as to let in all the good letters and articles which may be offered. In this matter, at least, we believe in expansion.

Well, I have not been able to go forth very far from base this very, very cold weather; but still the work is not dead in this field. We were very busy the past year, having labored more abundantly than in seasons past. Have had four hot engagements with our most active enemy—"the Church of Christ"—Harkins, Oaks, Bunner, and Beard have done their best to down the work, and I am confident they completely failed, for the cause we represent is in far better repute in all those places,—Henderson, Mason County, West Virginia; Watson, Marion County; Philippi, Barbour County; and Cantwell, Ritchie County,—than ever before.

Another battle is pending with champion Ira C. Moore, and yet another with a soul sleeper, Mr. S. G. Shrout, at Watson, West Virginia, to commence on the 15th inst. He is to affirm that "The church of which I, S. G. Shrout, am a member, is the church of the living God in origin, organization, doctrine, worship, and practice;" and I to affirm: "Do the Scriptures teach that the soul or spirit of man is an independent, conscious, immortal entity after the death of the body?" Shrout is a Russellite Adventist, an offshoot of Millerism.

I wish to say that I am not the challenging party in any of these debates; but everywhere I go in West Virginia to preach, I have learned to look out for the elders of Campbellism, and I often think of the old song, "The Campbells are coming."

I have no help, yet I have been hoping that Bro. Devore would show up while I was at home; but the last we heard from him was indirectly from Big Bend, Calhoun County. He was at that place in December. I have concluded to take with me Francis, my son, who is now a member of the church, and a faithful student of the books of truth.

The saints held their regular monthly services here yesterday, and the feast of the heart and soul on "the words of eternal life" seemed to be enjoyed with a keen relish indeed. The committee appointed some time ago on procuring or building a house of worship reported, and called for continued contributions. A sister sent her name for five dollars, which swells the subscription so far to about thirty dollars for a beginning. Our young sister, Edna Kidd, recently had her name changed. She married a young man by the name of James Boyles, a son of one of our friends, Emry Boyles, of Adamston. Sisters Henderson and Nellie, her daughter, attended services here. They live at Bridgeport, where Bro. H. is doing well in the tanning business. We count Bro. and Sr. B. Leason,

and their two daughters, Etta and Lottie, and Bro. and Sr. James Griffiths, and Sr. Ada Jarrith, all of Watson, Marion County, as members of our branch.

Our work at this place is in good condition, and we are all happy in the blessed comfort and hope of the soul. Our amiable young sister, Miss Linnie Conoway, has been on an extended tour into Marion County, to visit her brothers, and at Columbus, Ohio, to visit her sister, and comes home to enjoy home and communion with saints with a relish new and unknown before.

Will go from Watson, after the fight for the soul-awake, to Philippi, where Bro. Chas. Westover, a Utahite, awaits me, with whom I have been grappling on paper. I intend, if possible, to "convert a brother from the error of his ways and save a soul from death" —Utahism.

A good opening is made at Philippi; many friends about Lillian. Campbellites kick hard there, but they are neighborly, and willing to "live and let live." They are a splendid people out there with few exceptions. The town of Philippi, where we had the "scrap" with Bunner, in the courthouse, is apparently brim full of friends, and we met with kindly greetings, and some inquired for "the old fat fellow"—Bro. Godby.

I have cut Mormonism loose from Utahism; the former is from above (as to principles and revelation), the latter is from beneath. Hope our brethren, and especially our editors, will quit calling Utahism, Mormonism; as well call Mormonism Utahism, then blush for very shame! Mormonism is a "light that shines in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not." It was the morning star of the dispensation. Its brightness dims only under the brighter and more glorious effulgence of the rising "Sun of righteousness, with healing in his wings." Utahism is the "mire," to which "the sow that was washed returned to her wallowing;" the drunken vomit which false brethren and wicked apostates have spewed upon the church and the truth. Mormonism is divine; Utahism has outgrown its old sheepskin—it can no longer hide itself. Let us never again call it by, even the nickname of the "other sheep which are not of this fold." D. L. SHINN.

NELSONVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 6.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Moler closed meetings before Christmas. We were shut out of the churches and halls; but the colored M. E. people opened their doors to us, and gave us an invitation to come again; said we could have their church whenever we wanted it. We had a fair hearing, and since Bro. Moler left, many have asked when we were going to hold meetings again. The Christian Church was divided, and had a good hall, the only one that is on the first floor in town, and when they went together again, I took the advantage and saw those who had the hall in charge and secured it for three months, commencing January 10. Bro. Moler will commence meetings on that date; he had good liberty when here last, and made friends to the cause. One old infidel came and asked questions, and he told me if there was anything in the Bible, we had it; and that the elder was the smartest man he ever saw. And through his talk around town, several have asked me to let them know when we will have meetings. I advertised our meetings through the newspapers, and have six or seven hundred "Epitomes of Faith" and one hundred "Truth Made Manifest" to give out yet. I have already given out seven hundred "Epitomes of Faith," fifty "Truth Made Manifest," and eighteen "Voice of Warning."

Prejudice runs high, on account of the case of B. H. Roberts.

We would like to see Elder L. R. Devore or Elder J. F. McDowell come this way to help Bro. Moler, as he is almost alone, and these elders' mission field is in this district. I am of not much good to him, only to help open up new places and preach now and then, as I am a miner and have to look after my family and the temporal needs of the church in this place. Those who come will find a welcome home with Sr. Hull and G. W. as long as they will stay.

Yours in the gospel bonds,

G. W. HULL.

REED CITY, Mich., Jan. 5.

Editors Herald:—So many say to me, "Why do you not write to the Herald and Ensign sometimes? We never hear from you through the church papers?" Well, I am always busy at church work. If not at one part it is another.

I have just ended another year's work, and have sent my annual Bishop's agent's report to the Bishop; and I must say for the Northern Michigan district that it is the largest report ever sent in for this district. We have raised in tithes and offerings over twenty-two hundred dollars; this is a splendid showing when we consider that some of the most wealthy ones have not paid in anything this year, they having previously paid up their tithes and offerings.

Previous to the making up of my report, I was visiting several localities, where we thought we were needed, and trying to build up and strengthen the saints, etc.

During the year now past—one year more before the century ends—we feel safe in saying that as a rule the saints are having a more perfect understanding of the work, and of its needs, etc., and are helping considerably. Yet it seems harder to get the world interested in the work than in the past years; in fact, they are more interested in fun and frolic and the pleasures of the day.

This last summer we have labored in some new places, and on the rounds we came across some who have been investigating the Seventh-day Adventist claims, and who have been informed by them that they have met our men and debated with us and whipped us out, etc. Among the number who have so reported (that he met me in Isabella County, this State, and whipped me right out slick and clean, so I could not answer a thing) was Mr. Weeks; and as some of those who are hearing such reports and are taking the Herald, I wish for the benefit of all to say, the statements circulated by Elder Weeks of that faith, as I have learned them, are not true. The facts concerning my debate with Mr. Weeks in Brinton, Isabella County, are these: Mr. W. did the challenging; I accepted it, and we met according to agreement. He was determined that one of their members should be the chairman; I consented to it, believing him to be an honorable and honest man. We debated for three evenings, each speaker occupying two half-hour sessions alternately, each evening. At the close of the discussion a vote was taken (although we cannot always decide by that, as people are sometimes very prejudiced) which resulted about twelve for Mr. Weeks, and the balance of the whole congregation for me. If I was so beaten and whipped out in my arguments, how did it happen that he only had about twelve persons out of about three hundred who heard it? How was it if I was whipped so badly, that I happened to show their mistakes to so many, and baptized them afterward? And how was it too that their best man (Mr. Tanner) whom he would have as chairman of the debate, and who with his wife were shortly after that debate baptized into the church of Latter Day Saints, although they were, and had been strong Seventh-day Adventists for a number of years? Let Mr. Weeks answer.

And why does Mr. Weeks shun me ever since? Why should he a few months since challenge a couple of our brethren whom he thought were not very well posted on that subject, and state before the public that the arrangements were to be made, and the matter settled at his following Monday evening preaching service at what time their debate should commence, at which time one of the brethren drove his rig many miles to bring me there on time? I arrived there about one hour before the time, when, to the astonishment of many and presumably all, Elder Weeks did not appear, and by the request of the school officers I had to fill his appointment. Can Mr. Weeks tell why he did not appear? I preached a gospel sermon, after which, by the request of that officer, and by vote of that congregation, I preached the following evening upon the Sabbath question, and Mr. Weeks appeared not.

If Mr. W. believes his own story, why does he hide from me, and seemingly dare not put in an appearance at his own meeting when he thinks J. J. Cornish will be present? If he whipped me out so nicely at that time, he can do so again. I am prepared to meet him or any of their men at any proper time and place and discuss with them upon their hobbies,—the soul and Sabbath questions.

We have recently had a "flying visit" from the Bishop, Bro. E. L. Kelley, who in company with me (except at the last named place) visited and preached at Reed City, Freesoil, Cadillac, Hersey, Farwell, Coleman, and Bay City, all in the Northern Michigan district. The saints appreciated his visit and good counsel very much.

I start to-morrow again, this time for South Boardman. I intend to visit all the branches and also little companies of saints throughout the district during the winter if possible. Almost all, so far, that I have been enabled to reach, are doing all they can to live consistent lives, and lending a helping hand in many ways. The traveling ministry are all of them alive to the work, and no disunity among any of us that I know of. And among the local forces all (or nearly so) are doing something, especially some, who are doing considerable. I am glad to say, also, that the good Lord is wonderfully blessing us in the healing of our sick, etc. So many wonderful manifestations, in which the physicians have said they "can't recover," they "must die," with, "it will be a miracle if they ever recover," etc., etc.

Let no reader of the Herald think because I have not written much to the press, that I am asleep or not doing much. Taking care of the field and district, and the Bishop's agent's work, etc., keeps me busy. I am in the faith, and I believe I feel as zealous as ever. I have need to be, the signs are coming thicker and faster, which says the "end is nigh." I am glad I am living, and that I am in the glorious latter-day work.

In faith and hope,

J. J. CORNISH.

LONDON, Eng., Dec. 27.

Editors Herald:—In your issue of December 6, pages 785, 786, I notice an article referring to my letter which appeared in your issue of October 18; and although I cannot help thinking the brethren whose signatures are written under said article would have acted more discreetly in communicating with me personally on the matters referred to in their article, rather than using the columns of the Herald for raising queries as to my work in my ministerial capacity, and to cast a reflection upon me personally, I would not have considered the article worth replying to if I did not feel for the sake of my reputation that I was in duty bound to do so.

I may at once say that I believe properly authorized appointees of General Conference to be powers sent from God, as I do not doubt that such is the belief of the church in this country. I can only regard the frequent use of the words powers sent from God in inverted commas as a palpable endeavor to belittle the missionaries now in this land, which is much to be regretted in the absence of any proof of wrongdoing or neglect of duty.

However, after the treatment meted out to the President of the Mission at the Mission Conference held at Manchester last August, I cannot say that I am altogether surprised at the tone of the article under consideration. There a determined attempt was made to compel the president to be cross-examined on a question that had already been clearly and sufficiently answered, and without going into details, it will suffice me to say, that no one who was present at that conference can deny that there was a very manifest effort on the part of some who ought to have known better, to get their own way, without any respect whatever being paid to the chair or to the accepted rules of order governing such an assembly.

As to the queries put to me: While I cannot help feeling that this is a very strange and impertinent way of seeking information that could have been obtained in an official manner, I will answer them in detail.

Query 1. From the time when I returned to America in 1889 till the appointment of Elders Gillen and Griffiths to the European Mission in the year 1892, the responsibility for branches outside of districts was vested in Elder Thomas Taylor as president of the mission, and the then secretary; and I repeat that during the whole of that period, the Broadclist and Plymouth branches were never once visited by any of the English ministry.

In the article referred to are the words, "In 1892, as before-stated, this responsibility ceased, so far as local ministerial supervision applied, and has been since that time to the present with those designated by Elder Newton, as 'the powers sent of God.'"

It would be interesting to know in what manner the Broaclist and Plymouth branches were supervised in the interval between 1889 and 1892, beyond the fact that the licenses of the Broadclist officers were demanded for indorsement, and for some reason not yet explained, were never returned.

I am asked if I have during the eighteen months I have been in this country shepherded or visited the "sheep and lambs" that I allege to have been so much neglected at Broadclist; and I have to say in answer that I have visited the members of the Broadclist branch the most of them nine times since my appointment to this mission.

Query 2. If the Broadclist and Plymouth branches were not visited by the American missionaries from 1892 till the time when Elder Caffall went there, it was a neglect of duty, in the same sense that it was a neglect of duty that the branches remained unvisited during the time it was under the supervision of the president of the English mission prior to the appointment of Brn. Gillen and Griffiths.

Query 3. This is already answered in my reply to query 2, but I want to add that Elders Caffall and Pitt have visited the Broadclist and Plymouth branches.

Query 4. No, I do not think it is passing strange that Elder Caffall did not mention anything about the licenses alleged to have been withheld from the officers at Broadclist. He may not have been made acquainted with the facts. If he had, I am sure he would have inquired into the matter, and would have done what was right and proper. Even now it would be interesting to know why the licenses were kept from the Broadclist officers for over six years. If there was no reason for this, was it a neglect of duty?

Query 5. I may be pardoned for saying that this is such a ridiculous query, that I can hardly look upon it as being seriously made; but to all whom it may concern, I state that my information was obtained from the officers of the Broadclist branch themselves, which I look upon as a thoroughly reliable source.

It was stated in the conference that the time had now arrived when the English mission could very well get along without any missionary help from America, and in opposing the suggestion I pointed out the fact that if it had not been for the American missionaries, Broadclist and Plymouth at all events, would have been entirely neglected. I am looked upon as the father of the Broadclist branch, having organized it when I was in this country in 1888, and I naturally feel considerable interest in its welfare. It was a case in point, and that is why I "persistently" refer to it.

As to the last paragraph in the said article, it will be seen from the official report of the conference that a resolution recording appreciation of the services of the president of the mission and myself was unanimously supported. Most of the brethren in supporting the resolution eulogized me in the most extravagant terms, and it was stated that no one who had ever come to this country as a missionary was to be compared to your humble servant, etc., etc. In fact, I was everything that was desirable. Now, however, a cowardly inference is made that I am a "busybody and meddler, and to the local presiding ministry a source of weakness rather than a pillar of strength."

Wonderful consistency all this, and I do not know whether I am to believe the verbal or written statements of my brethren about me—there is such a contradistinction in it all. I cannot help feeling, however, that the article was written in the most vindictive spirit, and that it is totally unworthy the profession of the men whose signatures appear to it. I have never expected, and never shall expect, to be able to please everybody; that was beyond the power of the Master, and is certainly beyond the reach of mortal man. My desire is to help and build up in spiritual matters, and not be a "busybody" or "meddler." I am always willing to recognize a fault, and express sorrow where I may have offended.

As a minister for Christ, I seek power through humility and integrity, and have no desire to associate with men who have no respect for these divine principles.

In bonds,

WILLIAM NEWTON.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—We have brethren G. T. Griffiths, missionary in charge, and D. A. Anderson, who is also laboring in this district with us. These brethren were also here in October, looking after church interests, Bro. Griffiths staying about two weeks and Bro. Anderson about five, so you see we have had time to become somewhat acquainted with them, which we trust will always be an encouraging one. The missionary in charge is setting the churches in order in this mission as best he can, and in his work many dead branches fall before the pruning hook—a sad thing to think of, but the Lord has said it must be done. Dead branches cumber the ground. There has been a Religio started here, under the supervision of Bro. Anderson, which promises good results. This young man has won the confidence of the saints by his godly walk and conversation, and has proven himself a useful man in many ways. A good man's steps are ordered by the Lord.

We desire to inform his many friends that he was ordained to the office of an elder in this city on December 27, by Apostle G. T. Griffiths, assisted by the writer. The Spirit of revelation was manifest through the spokesman, bearing witness of divine approval, with good promises for the future, on condition of faithfulness. The saints present all felt the holy influence of the good Spirit, causing many to shed tears. Previous to the ordination, at the request of the missionary in charge, a vote of the branch was taken, as provided for in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 16, all voting aye. We were pleased to see the law honored by the common consent rule being used, and have much assurance that it was acceptable to God. Thus the young man from Lamoni, of the general missionary force, was authorized to lay on hands as well as baptize. We wish him God's speed. May the Lord of the harvest send more laborers into his vineyard, for it is ripening very fast.

The saints here are hopeful, and are improving in many cases. Bro. Anderson leaves for Los Angeles to-day, while Bro. Griffiths goes to Stockton. Last night we watched the old year out, and had a right good time; Bro. Griffiths telling us all about his appetite while aboard the Atlantic liners amid the angry billows. Let the power of the highest overshadow Christ's ministers, is my prayer. GEO. DALEY.

FAIRLAND, I. T., Jan. 4.

Editors Herald:—The work is progressing slowly but surely. We have two branches now in this country—one at Maysville and one at Fairland. We also have material for two more branches. Bro. Moore has promised us a visit in March, then we expect to organize those two branches. I have created some interest in Benton County, Arkansas. Have made some good, solid friends in that county, and aim to go again soon to look after the interest there. Benton County is where my family are located. I find no trouble in opening new places, but what is the use of breaking up more ground when we can't cultivate what we already have; to me it is unwise. Let us cultivate the ground already opened up, until God shall raise up men to hold the fort and take care of what we already have in hand. We have had a hard fight in North Arkansas and Indian Territory. We missionaries have been compelled to do all that has been done. But I am thankful that God is hearing and answering our prayers by raising up local help. In the past few months three good men have been called and ordained, two elders and one priest; all men of excellent qualities, full of zeal and faith, and in a condition to give most of their time to preaching. I also know of two or three other men God will use by and by to do local work, besides several noble young men of promise that will be used later if they improve their time and talents. May God help and bless them is my prayer, and raise up an army of good, solid, wise workers, to do local work, so we missionaries can spread out and open new fields and have good solid locals to cultivate and take care of the grain. I would rather open up than cultivate, because it is my calling. We need wise presiding men in this country; we need men of faith; we need men of God, taking the oversight of the work, not by constraint, but with a willing mind.

But, O Lord, don't send us any more growlers, for Jesus' sake. Don't send any more faultfinders. No, Lord, we pray thee, do not send any more to spend church money and lie around and do nothing. Our Father, we do pray thee not to send any that will lounge around saints. O Lord, we further pray if you have got any such characters as above-described in our midst, or in this great Southwest mission that you will call them in. Yes, Lord, call in all the growlers, and all the faultfinders, and all those jealous fellows, and send men of God; men above little things. Yours in hope of an answer to this prayer in the spring,

S. W. SIMMONS.

GREENLAKE, Wash., Dec. 30.

Editors Herald: — Since last writing we have visited a number of places, Mount Vernon being the last. We had a good interest there; had the use of the Christian meeting house. It seems so good to be treated kindly that one feels like calling special attention to it. O, how much better it would be for all, if men who call themselves ministers of Christ, would follow the golden rule; preaching would be almost without a cross then, and of course not so much reward, so perhaps it is best as it is, at any rate we should not murmur.

A minister of Ballard—a suburb of Seattle—who owns a church, has permitted us to hold meetings in it. He came out of the Baptist Church, went into the Campbellite; left it and now stands alone; says of all the churches he knows of, we seem in many respects the nearest right. He invited us to preach on the apostasy and future punishment; the Holy Spirit helped us. He invited Bro. Enge to speak in his church, who did so a number of times with good effect. The last night I spoke there, at the close gave permission to any to ask questions. A gentleman arose and said he did not wish to ask questions, but wanted to make a few remarks. I told him, No; I had no time, as it was then quite late, and that if he spoke it would necessitate my replying, which would take the nature of a controversy. He said I was mistaken, there would be no controversy. I told him to go ahead. He arose and said, "I came here to-night expecting to hear something very different from what I have. I came prepared to refute it; but must say I have listened to a splendid sermon—the best I ever heard on the subject. Your arguments are unanswerable." I stopped him long enough to confess to the audience that I was mistaken.

The minister—Mr. Fletcher—came to me and said he was much pleased that our position was well taken. He has invited us to return and hold some more meetings, which we intend to do. We are strongly inclined to think he will see the light and have fortitude to walk in it; but as a rule I have not much faith in the ministers of the day accepting our work. It is our duty to do all we can for all classes, but it does seem to me that punishment is all that will help many of the so-called ministers.

We intend to go south—one or both of us—into Oregon, between this and March, perhaps into southern Oregon. All desiring preaching in these parts of Oregon will please write us here. At Mt. Vernon we baptized two noble souls and left several almost persuaded. We were the guests of Mr. and Sr. Pinn, Sr. Holton, and Mr. Bishop, who treated us very kindly.

We think of attending the General Conference, if all goes well and money is not too scarce. I wonder what awaits us there. Of late I have a strong desire to see into the future, more so than ever before. I never cared to know of its secrets before; but of late I do. I look forward to the coming conference with considerable anxiety, but trusting in God that all will be done for the best, and that we may more fully know his will.

May God bless all, and hasten the redemption of his people and their land, is my daily prayer. HIRAM L. HOLT.

GROVEHILL, Iowa, Jan. 8.

Editors Herald:—Came to this place over two weeks ago; have been preaching here and at Oran Center. The latter place gave me quite a fair congregation and splendid attention. At this place there has been a great deal of preaching in the past, and that too by some of the best talent; so that when a smaller gun is heard, the sound thereof soon dies away. Will go from here to Floyd County this week, and try and make a new opening near the west line of Chickasaw County. Will go from there to district conference, which convenes at Arlington in February.

The district is rather looking up spiritually. The conference held at Fairbanks last fall was a feast of good things to all who attended. Bro. Lambert's presence was a great blessing to the saints, for they all so appreciated his sound logical sermons. O, that the saints who heard Bro. Lambert would endeavor to live in harmony with his advice. I hope visiting saints, or those attending conferences, will not, as some have done heretofore, make their presence disagreeable by remarking to those with whom they may stay, that their accommodations are not agreeable, especially when it is clearly seen that the resident saints are doing the best they can. Sometimes remarks of this kind impede the progress of the saints, spiritually, for a season. May God's blessing be with the saints throughout the world, I pray.

CONIFER, Colo., Jan. 1.

Editors Herald:—As I sit here writing I can look out at the window and see a beautiful picture—nature in her beauty—the sun shining on the mountains covered with snow and pines. It is grand—the eye does not grow weary looking at it. How thankful we should be for the beauties of nature. Am thinking of the old year that is gone and the new one which has been ushered in. We have all sown seed of some kind during the past year—has it been for good? We may not see the fruits immediately, but may in the future. Let us take a retrospective view of the past year and see if we can discover any place where we have made mistakes, where we could have done better; if so, let us resolve to profit by past experience and make improvements in our lives during this new year. Let us "turn over a new leaf," begin on a clean page, and see how free from blots we may keep it. Let us remember this:—

"The tissues of the life to be,
We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny,
We reap as we have sown."

Then we should be very careful to sow good seed. There is something for every one to do in the army of the Lord. We cannot sit down and fold our hands and wait for an opportunity to do "great things;" but if we would be blessed we must be ready to do anything that we can do, whether great or small. God looks at the heart and not the outward appearance. It costs no more to be cheerful and pleasant, to have a smile and kind word for those about us, than it does to be cross and fretful, which will throw a gloom over all. We may dispel gloom, sadness, and everything that is disagreeable by a little "sunshine in the soul." Let us make an effort to "come up higher" in this new year that is before us, and the Lord will bless us.

Your sister,
LILLIE BAKER.

The primal duties shine, aloft like stars.

Are scattered at the feet of man, like flowers.
—Wordsworth.

WHY NOT?

Husband, why not notice your wife's kindly efforts for your happiness? And then why not cultivate your appreciation of the same and develop it, till it unconsciously manifests itself to her? You cannot tell how such a course on your part will stimulate and inspire her with power to make greater efforts.

Yes, you can tell, if your experience has been similar—the reverse, however. What if both parties have lost their interest in the other's happiness, cannot each try to live for the other as—as when? Before the legal authority pronounced you one—and awhile after.

Surely it cannot be a very great trouble to you—after you get used to it—to say, "Wife, your bread is good," or "fine," as the case may be, and it will give her the understanding that you know that she is trying to be thorough in her business. Don't tell her 'tis good, thinking that she don't know it; for if a woman can make good bread she certainly knows it. And no one knows how badly a faithful wife feels when she fails to come up to her own views in her work—let it be bread, the staff of life, or a well managed household,—the comfort of life. Not an overnicely managed one, neither a slack, haphazard one; but such a management as will give attraction and comfort to the family as well as to guests. Shall we softly say to the gentleman of the house, "You have much to do in this department of business, as well as the lady?" What, if you never scrape your boots when coming in from the stable or from farm work, and never teach the boys to do the same; and then, if you take off your cap, coat, or other garments, and leave them on chairs or sofa in the sitting room, or in any other part of the house, and invite friends before she has time to put them in a proper place, who is answerable for the same, and who is it that causes unnecessary work? And besides, what if you should put in a little more wood, when the baking did not require it, and if the bread should be scorched, who should be scolded for the same—if any scolding is done? Still more, if you should rebuke her for burning so much wood, and even exclaim: "There, don't put in any more wood; the room is as hot as an oven now." And what if she obeys like a good docile woman that does not fully realize that she is baking that bread and will be held accountable for its quality.

We take bread for an illustration; but, sisters, we all know that the same principles sometimes apply to many other affairs in the household, and we have known somewhat of their practice—have been there and have come away, so why not speak of it in a pleasant manner though? We think the many promises given to him that overcometh are meant for her that overcometh just the same, and that she has as broad a field for experience in that direction as he.

Well, sisters, I fear that some of you have heretofore felt a little displeased with Sr. Almira's plain speaking, but she could not tell all of it in a few short essays, but tried to tell as she thought as far as she went, so now will proceed: She has always tried to show that woman is, shall she say it, can she say it, and not disturb the peaceful minds of some of the men? Well, we will run the risk. She can be a little superior to man, or was designed to be. How do you know? Who was the designer? say those who have not seriously pondered the subject.

First, in the creation woman was the last and the crowning work of the Creator. She was the one by whom the fall of man was brought about; and later on, woman was the one by whom the Redeemer was ushered into the world, that all who wished to be saved from the fall might be saved. Man was not chosen to perform the act of the fall, nor to assist in introducing his Savior into the world. That shows, without argument, that the Upholder of all His creations designed woman to be greater than man. Yes, brothers, it is of no use to spend time in arguing the case, because some of our sex have fallen and dragged some of yours down on their level. We are speaking of the design in the beginning, not of the failures made by those who have yielded to temptations.

But, say many, "Women were not as noted anciently as in modern times, or at least they are not spoken very highly of in the Bible."

Why not? Because, when the writers were not under the power of inspiration, they felt a little selfish, and did not give all the worthy ones a fair show—or that is our opinion. But Sarah, Hannah, Ruth, Abigail, Mary, Elizabeth, Lois, and others familiar to every careful Bible student, to say nothing about the many who lived quiet lives and imparted their good qualities to succeeding generations, as is the case with many to-day, whose names will never be recorded in history, but will have a place in the Book of Life.

"But," says one or many, "we can't be one of them, or like them." Certainly not; but whoever nobly, faithfully fills his or her allotted sphere, will not be forgotten in the day when the account of stock is taken—will be rewarded according to intents and purposes.

Will the reader please turn to the fourth chapter of Esdras and notice particularly from the fourteenth verse to where the strength of wisdom is spoken of, and you will clearly understand that woman was then considered strong in both good and bad. That was the thought of a man of letters more than five hundred years before Christ. The writing of the third illustration showed that wisdom is greater than woman, not man. No woman ever became strong in good without an effort. No, no; it is by untiring effort that one rises in the scale of virtue and power. The most eminent of our sex have climbed high hills of opposition before attaining the much desired object. Some have been reared in the depths of poverty and ignorance, but were led up higher by the hand of some self-sacrificing person, and thereby qualified to perform a Christ-like work. How great are the possibilities of women. How great in this age are the facilities for the attainment of those possibilities, and consequently how great should be her achievements, not only in public but in the many little cares and perplexities that accompany every household.

"O," says the young aspiring lady, "I don't care for domestic labor! I want to shine in society!"

Why not? The progress and success of every enterprise—from chopping wood and washing dishes to the presidential chair—can be traced back to the home instruction; and on whom does the most of it rest? Let reason answer.

Solomon said, a "wise woman builds her own house." He had wisdom, so saw the facts of the case; but poor soul, he was not wise enough to heed his father's counsel—was too much taken up with idolatrous women. We think he saw wherein he erred, and pointed out in his writings some of the dangerous paths in life, that others might take warning.

He also compared the church to a woman; so did the angel to the revelator. He spoke of two classes; but the good, the pure, the true, is the one to be the "Bride, the Lamb's wife," and that is the state that every brother and sister should strive to attain. That which we have done, is done; that which we have not done, remains undone. But let us, either old or young, strive to rise above our many mistakes, and firmly set our feet on the rock of truth and right. "O, I can't" is whispered to us. Why not? Patience and perseverance, attended by the blessing of God, will accomplish his design. Our time is short, and we must be up and doing ere the day of life is spent. Every good housekeeper does her work in the proper time, so does every laborer in the house of the Lord, or in the Lord's work.

Woman has been called "queen of angels," so we can safely say that she should strive to be queen of her home—ruling by a scepter of love, not a rod of authority in every unpleasant occurrence. Men build houses, but women more generally make the homes. That seems to be their part of the business more especially. Have not the best men of every age spoken of their mothers, their wives, their sisters, with great reverence? And even the lower classes of men have done the same. No man ever was so low that he did not respect virtue and true womanhood!

So, dear sisters, let us do all we can in the now to help on the point in question. We are very glad that our writers and our speakers are striving to hold up those beautiful points to the world. Then let us all exclaim, "God speed the work!" Why not?

PRIMARY WORK.

(Concluded from last week.)

In the lessons we frequently come to

or at least unfamiliar words. I do not think it advisable to simplify the word, but rather teach the children the meaning of the new word; it makes them feel that they can master hard things. When we come to an unfamiliar word I usually explain the meaning of it, and then use it in two or three sentences; then require each of them to form a sentence, using the word; and by the time it has gone to every member of the class, the word is no longer unfamiliar.

Of course I have

and it is not always the same pupil that is restless. The older primaries seldom have any time to spare to become so, as they think more and ask more questions, and you can bring more thoughts to their mind. When my children do get restless, however, I sometimes try a song, at a good stopping place; but more frequently ask questions on the lesson, asking those who can answer not to speak, but stand. Sometimes I go back a lesson or two; this standing rests them. Sometimes I ask questions in this way, "Hold up as many fingers as there were men cast into the furnace?" This is a pleasant diversion.

DISTRIBUTION OF PAPERS.

When we have finished the lesson I give them each a Hope. We have a little exercise in our class at this part of the program. During the week we try and do something to make some one happy, something that no one asks us to do, and before each child receives his Hope he tells his "good deeds." Then sometimes there are picnics or socials that have been arranged for the pupils. I usually explain every little detail, so that they will know just what to do; of course I know about these things, as they are always discussed at teachers' meeting. We generally have a picture of the leading point of the lesson, on the blackboard up stairs. I usually tell the children there is a picture on the board, and it may represent this, or it may represent some other scene, and when they go up stairs during the review, which is frequently tedious to primaries, they are absorbed and interested in studying out just what the picture means.

AMONG MY SUCCESSES

as a primary teacher I count the very good attendance of my pupils. This, I believe, is due to the fact that I make a list of the absentees at the close of each session, and before the next Sunday comes, make it a point to visit and find out why. By doing this I gain the interest of the parents and their coöperation. When a parent finds that the teacher is interested in his child it pleases him, and he is generally more careful that the children should be present at all times. Another success is the love and confidence I have won from the children. Love of children is something to be appreciated, and when I have the parents tell me that their children think whatever their teacher tells them is exactly right, and how careful they are to do everything their teacher asks them, it makes me thankful indeed. While it brings added responsibility, yet I am glad to have such a precious responsibility, and only pray that I may bear it with honor to our Father. Another success is that my children are learning to be unselfish and kind to each other, and I think it is good to encourage this, even if we step aside from the lesson to do so. When I see one child give up her penny because another child has lost his, or when I hear one express sorrow because another has not been able to enjoy some good time that the class has had, it makes me know that they are learning kindness. I feel that I have made another success in the fact that the Sunday school is not a matter of Sunday only, with the majority of my pupils; I do not think a day passes but they remember their Sunday school. In order to bring this about I have entertained my class at my home and other places; I have remembered them and worked for them in ways that I felt they would appreciate. On last Easter I gave each one a package of flower seed, Nasturtiums. Almost every one had success with their flowers, and nearly every Sunday the children came with handsful of Nasturtiums for the church and for the teacher. They have learned to take care of their tickets and return them because two or three of them have saved a sufficient number to gain a present for their attendance and care in preserving the tickets.

As I have always tried to repair everything that seems to be wrong, I cannot tell you wherein I have failed. My successes have not been unqualified, and could have been more brilliant if I had had more time to think and work. But I realize that I am not always able to reach and hold the attention of all of the children, and sometimes this inability causes the lesson to be almost a failure. Another thing that I am deficient in is the library subject; this is largely because I have not had quite enough time, and it has not been impressed so vividly upon my mind as a failure. I think I shall try to make progress along this line in the future.

THE AGE WHEN CHILDREN MAY ENTER THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

varies with the child. Some children, though very young, are easily controlled and may enter earlier than others who have no idea of what the words "do" and "don't" mean. Some at three years old will grasp thoughts that other children of five will scarcely comprehend. I think a safe rule is to send them when they are old enough to understand what you mean when you say, "do this," or "don't do that." I do not think we can begin too early in this very important work of religious training. If we send them to Sunday school, there they learn order in such a pleasant way that they do not realize they are learning; they learn that they must stand up at a certain time, and march at a certain time, be quiet at certain times, and sing at certain times. They learn in the Sunday school that there are other children in the world, and that they must give up to others; they must share their teacher with others, and divide the attention, which they may have received entirely before this, with others. I find that the Sunday school tends to make children unselfish and docile. I find that children who are not permitted to attend until they are six or seven years of age are selfish, generally spoiled and petted; they are troublesome because they have never been taught order, and if they are timid you must coax them in every step, and help them over the embarrassments of learning, thus taking a great deal of time; whereas, if they came in younger, before they grew to be self-conscious, all that would be necessary would be to tell them to do this or that. I find that children not sent young are hard to interest, because their minds have never been trained to think on one thing for a minute; and they are, generally speaking, much more difficult to teach and manage than children who are permitted to enter as soon as they can understand yes from no.

PROMOTION.

The age when a child should leave the primary department also varies with the child. When a child becomes so advanced that he can grasp the lesson story and only half listen, when he wants to tell everything about every lesson, then it is time to advance him; because he is gaining nothing in that grade, and is often a hindrance to the progress of others. The teacher of course should be the judge of this, and I believe the age for promotion is from about six to eight years.

If these thoughts shall be the means of assisting any primary teacher to better understand the precious charge given to her, the effort will not have been in vain.

Conservative Congregationalists in Eastern papers complain that President Hadley's vested choir, chants and reading of scriptures with musical interludes at Yale University devotions make too radical an innovation to be consistent with Congregational simplicity.

Sunday School Associations.

DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION OFFICERS.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE.

About December first I mailed a circular letter to the superintendent of every district association in the church, as nearly as my incomplete directory would admit. At least some person in every district was addressed. This was to obtain information that is very much needed by the officers of the general association. Up to the present time we have received replies from but a part of the districts. Some were very prompt, and have our hearty thanks for the same. We feel quite sure that all the letters have been delivered or they would have been returned, as all envelopes bear my return card.

We give a list of the districts not yet heard from. If the officers of any of these districts have not received the circular letter, please write me at once and one will be sent. If the blank has been laid aside, please hunt it up and fill out and return:—

Southeastern Illinois; Texas Central; Spring River, Kansas; Southern California; Ohio; Central Nebraska; Northern Nebraska; Eastern Maine; Western Maine; Northern Michigan; Independence, Missouri; Kewanee, Illinois; Northwest Kansas; Northern California, Pittsburg and Kirtland; Southern Missouri; Northern Wisconsin; Southern Wisconsin.

We sincerely trust that no one will neglect to give us their hearty and prompt coöperation in this as in all other work for the Master. Yours for the work,

T. A. HOUGAS, Gen. Supt.

HENDERSON, Iowa. 32t

THOSE PRIMARY CARDS.

Only six lessons of the quarter are illustrated. The cards have numbers at the top corresponding with the numbers of the lessons in connection with which they are to be used. This will answer many questions received at the office asking why the rest were not sent.

First Asst. Supt.

MRS. ETTA SPRINGER, Supt.

To all Interested in Sunday School Work:—Surely when I address this notice, as I do, I have a right to expect that all who claim the name of Latter Day Saints will understand it means them.

At the last general convention of the Sunday school association a committee on improvement, consisting of J. F. Mintun, Magnolia, Iowa; George Blair, Lamoni, Iowa; M. C. Fisher, 694 Washington Street, Boston, Massachusetts; Miss Louise Palfrey, Macon, Missouri; and Mrs. B. C. Smith, Independence, Missouri, was appointed, and have by all legitimate means sought to understand our duty, and so far as understood do it; and believing it to be a duty to again call your attention to this committee, we urge you to send or present to any one of this committee such suggestions as you may think in your judgment will perfect our work, or at most improve the Sunday school work in any of its features; namely, quarterlies, class books, records, changes in constitution and by-laws, etc., and to have your ideas upon such subjects as, "Shall we provide programs for holiday entertainments?" "Shall we follow the international committee's outlines for lessons to be used in the quarterlies?" "Shall we have a Sunday school missionary?" "How shall we secure space to represent the Sunday school work, as it should be represented," by the 15th of February, 1900, so that the committee can by correspondence have time to consider them?

OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

There are a number of saints in the abovementioned states whose names are not on the general church record. It is necessary that all should be, that the record may be complete. The proper way to get your names there is to have them put on the nearest branch record. The way to do that is to send your letter of removal, which you must get if you have ever belonged to a branch; if you have never belonged to a branch, send your certificate of baptism to the clerk or president of the nearest branch: they will enroll your name and return certificate.

Now please tend so this as soon as possible, as we desire to straighten up the record before General Conference, and the branches will please send in their reports so as to be in time. I will now give the addresses of branch presidents and secretaries: Elonzo Crebbins, Bridge, Oregon; Mr. W. Taylor, Drain, Oregon; Mabel Watkins, Sweet Home, Oregon; Mrs. Cora Earhart, Green Lake, Washington; Samuel Crum, Castle Rock, Washington; Mr. T. Clothed in a robe of raiment white,
Mother has winged her way,
Into the beautiful heavenly light,
Out of the shadows of earth's dark night
Into the light of day.

Angels who watched for her coming, I know,
Left the pearly gates ajar,
And with beaming eyes and face all aglow,
As she entered the portals they each hovered low,
And placed in her crown a star.

Methinks I can see her so beautifully fair,
Clothed in her raiment white,
With a crown on her head and a harp in her hand,
Ever to dwell in that beautiful land
Where Jesus himself is the light.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

Neatly bound in heavy paper covers; price 35 cents, mailed to any address.

The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

GOVERNMENT REPORTS SHOW MORE UNMARRIED MEN THAN SINGLE WOMEN.

Some one has proposed a husbands' union for the protection of husbands; just what they are to be protected from is not yet stated. Possibly the union is to be founded on the same lines as the School for Wives, established in England.

Still better are the marriage schools which are being developed in Germany on practical lines. They are for girls and women only, and the value of such a training cannot be overestimated. Girls leave the marriage school competent to undertake the management of a house—and of a husband. The girls who have been graduated from these schools have been extra lucky in getting married, so it is said.

Another society which has been organized in Denmark is the Celibacy Insurance Society. Its object is to provide for those women who either cannot or will not provide themselves with husbands. The premiums begin at the age of thirteen and end at forty, an age at which it is supposed most of the members will have abandoned all thought of marriage. Such being the case, the woman receives an annuity for life. If she marries at any time she forfeits all her rights.

Old maids in the United States are outnumbered by the bachelors, although it is popularly supposed that the contrary is the case. To come to exact figures, there are 7,427,767 bachelors and 3,224,494 spinsters. This is upon the authority of a government report. Even in Massachusetts, where it was thought that old maids constitute a large proportion of the population, they could each find a single husband and then not exhaust the stock of single men, for there are 226,085 men and only 219,255 women who have not yet entered into the bonds of matrimony.

New York State has 120,000 more bachelors than spinsters. Only one State in the Union has more female celibates than male and that is California, in which there are 59,456 of the former, and 22,829 of the latter. The State of Washington has, perhaps the largest excess of forlorn single men—80,537 all told, the unmarried women numbering only 9,181.

Out of an equal number of bachelors and widowers between 25 and 30 years of age, thirty widowers remarry for every thirteen bachelors who enter the bonds of hymen for the first time. For every spinster married between 30 and 65, two widows are remarried. Both facts are eloquent in favor of the comparative advantages of matrimony.—New York Sun.

AIM AT MUNICIPAL REFORMS.

Dayton, O., Jan. 14—The annual meeting of the League of Ohio Municipalities will be held here on January 16, 17, 18. This year's convention is given significance through the prominence the proposed municipal code will have. The code was prepared by Judge D. F. Pugh, of Columbus, and Edward Kibbler, of Akron, who were commissioned for the purpose by ex-Governor Bushnell. It involves a revolution in the form of city government, and its features have been the subject of addresses by lawyers and others for months. It is to be introduced in the Ohio Legislature.

In the reforms proposed in the new code, the predominant feature relates to civil service regulations similar to those of the national government. The desire is for economy and a higher standard of work. It is intended to apply the bi-partisan idea to all administrative boards. The ownership of all public utilities is also embraced in the scheme.

Among the addresses to be made before the convention in regard to the proposed code are the following: "Water works," J. J. Pater of Hamilton; "City treasurer," O. E. Barren, Columbus; "Civil service system of cities and powers conferred upon the governor," Mayor W. E. Young, Akron; "Parks and public grounds," Professor F. A. Brady, Columbus; "Municipal charity," L. B. Gunckel, Dayton; "Creation of sinking fund," Martin E. Gemunder, Columbus; "Age limit of municipal officers," Mayor Arthur O. Archer, Cadwell; "Finance and taxation of cities and powers to borrow money and issue bonds," H. P. Boynton, Cincinnati; "Legislative department of cities," H. S. Cartwright, Wilmington; "Municipal ownership of street railways and telephones," Mayor Samuel M. Jones, Toledo; "Individual responsibilities of councilmen," E. P. Matthews, Dayton; "Division of cities into councilmanic districts," ex-Mayor Samuel L. Black, Columbus; "Police department," Max Burgheim, Cincinnati; "Executive department," Mayor Gustav Tafel, Cincinnati; "Nomination and election of officers," Mayor J. H. Farley, Cleveland; "Changes in the health department," State Health Officer C. O. Probst, Columbus; "Licensing of occupation of streets and alleys," Mayor Huntington Brown, Mansfield. Chicago Tribune, January 15, 1900.

TIME TO THINK.

Writing in the Educational Review on "Changing Types of Modern Thought," Professor R. M. Wenley of the University of Michigan pleads for time to think. He believes there is a growing recognition that some thinkers should spend their time in thinking instead of in investigation.

During the present generation one phrase has been repeated constantly as if it summed up the whole truth: "It is an age of criticism, of unrest, and of doubt." Professor Wenley believes that appreciation has now come of the partial nature of the statement and that it embodies a half truth and perhaps not even this.

Instead of being an age of criticism the nineteenth century, particularly the latter part, has been a period of acquisition principally, and of startling acquisitions at that. The mathematico-physical sciences have transformed themselves; there is a new astronomy, chemistry has completely changed its face, and physics has been extended in marvelous ways. Molar phenomena have fallen back before molecular. Besides the revolutionary alterations an entire new range of sciences, such as physiology, biology, histology, pathology, bacteriology, and experimental psychology, has arisen. Historical science has shifted its sweep so economics, sociology, anthropology, historical theology, and archæology have been changed beyond recognition or have come into actual being. Every science has dragged to light facts previously unheard and thrust novel conclusions upon an amazed public. The reality of these investigations has been proved to the masses by endless inventions which have combined to render the life of the average man a thing of comfort and luxury such as his near ancestors could not command even if rich. "If any man be here to denounce science," as the preacher said, "then let him begin by turning off the electric light."

This eager search for new scientific facts has left scientists too dazed to think of any other but their own. The need is for comprehensive consideration of all. Philosophical problems shot up amidst changed conditions assembled by the sciences are becoming more urgent. A philosophy of evolution is the most crying need of the day. The world has had little use for philosophers during the last few years, but it is their services that are needed now.—Chicago Tribune, January 20.

GAUNT FAMINE IN INDIA.

London, Jan. 20.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Calcutta, dated yesterday, says:—

"Speaking in the Vice Regal Council this morning Lord Curzon said that the country is face to face with famine. The water and food and cattle scarcity in the particular areas affected is without precedent in character and intensity.

"Three years ago Lord Elgin, at a public meeting in Calcutta, said that 1,250,000 persons were on the relief rolls and that the occasion was without a parallel. Now, however, nearly 3,250,000 persons are in receipt of relief.

NO HELP FROM ENGLAND.

"Lord Curzon said he was afraid it was too much to expect England to again come to the rescue or that this country could expect more than passive sympathy from anywhere outside. With patience and fortitude, he continued, India must pursue the task of relieving her own people, conscious that although not engaged in stirring deeds affecting the fate of empires, yet performing its duty, trying to do what war on its face could not do, to save from death many millions of human lives.

HEROISM OF THE OFFICERS.

"'When I was at Jubbulpore, and again at Nagpur,' Lord Curzon said, 'I saw modest tombstones to officers who had perished in the last famine. These men did not die on battlefields. No decorations shone resplendent upon their breasts. Simply and silently they laid down their lives, broken to pieces in the service of the poor and suffering among the Hindoo people. Only last week there was admitted to the Calcutta Hospital an English officer, shattered in health and with paralyzed limbs, who had done nothing but wear himself out in famine work in the central provinces."

EXTENT OF THE FAMINE.

"The official estimates show the cost to the government of the relief works, etc., to the end of March will be 40,000,000 of rupees. About 22,000,000 persons are now affected in British territory, and about 27,000,000 in the native states."—Chicago Tribune.

DR. WALSH ON THE THEORY OF EVOLUTION.

One of the most notable articles that the Catholic World Magazine has published for a long time is a review of the wonderful discoveries during the last fifty years in the science of biology. It is astonishing how much biological thought and expression has entered into our daily life, and while we imagine that biology is a science for scholars, a little consideration will make us realize that it has an intensely practical side, and of the many scientific truths there is none that is able to conduce to our comfort and safety as its deductions. Dr. Walsh, the author, is a man of mature studies and he possesses the latest information from the European schools. He makes some most interesting statements about the theory of evolution which should be everywhere noted. Among other things he says in effect that Origin of Species, which now has been published for forty years, was accepted in the beginning without question by a great many, but is now subjected to the white light of scientific criticism and many conclusions that it stood for are now entirely rejected. For example, the theory of sexual selection has been entirely rejected and natural selection has taken its place. Dr. Walsh also says the opinion as to whether one species may ever be transmitted into another is more generally doubted now than it was ten years ago. He finally makes the following admissions concerning the theory of evolution:—

"As a matter of fact, far from being able to show how species have been converted into one another, we are not even able to point out a single case of the undoubted transmission of even one acquired character. A good many cases presumed by various observers to be examples of such a transmission have been reported, but all of them so far have proved to be illusions when submitted to the judicious criticism of serious biological criteria. Medical men still cling to the idea that acquired characters are transmitted, and that, too, very commonly. A great many of the claims now so frequent as to the heredity of predisposition to disease, and even of disease itself, assumes that the transmission of acquired characters is an accepted principle. As time goes on, however, medical men have learned that at least it is not disease itself that is transmitted. Tuberculosis and leprosy, and like diseases, have been removed from the category of directly hereditary diseases within the last few years, and the predisposition to disease is now recognized to be rather a general lowering of resistive vitality than a specific tendency to the acquirement of any particular disease, or even a lack of organic resistance to one rather than to any other disease.

"Occasionally in the medical journals we meet with reports of cases where mutilations are said to have been transmitted. This brings the whole matter very properly back to the realm of coincidences, where it belongs. In general it may be said that this is the great crux of the theory of evolution, the corner-stone which must be secured before a permanent scientific edifice can be built. We are no nearer a demonstration of the actual transmutation of species now than we were forty years ago, when Darwin's theory first disturbed the scientific world. On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that forty years are not much in the history of human knowledge and that the theory of evolution, far from being definitely settled, is, in the opinion of present-day biologists, only just beginning its development. Professor Henry Osborn, of Columbia University, said not long ago: 'My last word is that we are entering the threshold of the evolution problem, instead of standing within the portals. The harder tasks lie before us, not behind us, and their solution will carry us well into the twentieth century.'"

DISCOVERY IN TEXAS—A WALL THAT EQUALS THE CHINESE.

Science and survey are bent on proving that this continent is by no means the raw young patch of earth early discoverers believed it. . . . In Texas the other day a vagrant investigator came upon a monument that fairly startles the learned world, and will result presumably in a new theory of the original settlement of the continent. A wall, twenty miles long, over fifteen feet high, and equally thick, is found, running northeast and southwest, near the present prosperous town of Milano. The top level of this extraordinary structure is far below the present surface, which is made up of a thick layer of loam and the debris that accumulates over long neglected ruins. The discoverer pronounces the wall as in every sense solid and well built as that long time wonder the great granite circumvallation of China. Evidences remain that originally the wall was flanked at regular distances, which would indicate that this enormous structure was built by one people as a defense against another. There are evidences of inscriptions here and there on the entablatures, but the characters are in a tongue unknown to modern linguists, and until the key is discovered the ruins will serve no definite scientific ends save as proof that no part of the world is old or new so far as human presence is reckoned. . . . —Illustrated American, June 22, 1895.

ALLIANCE TO RESIST EUROPE.

City of Mexico, Jan. 13.—There is much comment in the press regarding the article in the London Spectator, which predicts that some day Europe will attempt the partition of South America, Germany taking Brazil. It is held that the Latin-American countries should join in a league for the common defense, and that if the United States joins, making a pan-American alliance, it should guarantee territorial and political independence of the Latin-American countries.—Ex.

LORD LORNE ON THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

In his presidential address to the Public Health Congress at Blackpool, the Marquis of Lorne said it was conceivable that imagination might aid antiseptic treatment. Drugs and the knife and acids might be helped by mental telepathy. There were always more things in nature than were dreamt of in their philosophy. Sir William Preece, he said, had lately spoken of Moses with great admiration, evidently considering him the first great president of a sanitary congress. His Lordship urged his audience to agitate, and make the agitation a hardy annual, for less smoke and purer drains. Speaking of the training of nurses, he asked what, after all, was the value of all the drugs and all the doctors unless there was good nursing.

LAMONI, IOWA, JAN. 24, 1900.

PRES. LORENZO SNOW DEFINES THE POSITION OF THE UTAH CHURCH.

POLYGAMY AND UNLAWFUL COHABITATION.

From the reading of the various editorials and articles of the public press it is evident that there is much misconstruction and misunderstanding as to the present attitude of our church respecting the subjects of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation; and, believing that many good and conscientious people have been misled and much adverse criticism occasioned thereby, I feel it but just to both "Mormons" and non-"Mormons" to state that, in accordance with the manifesto of the late President Wilford Woodruff, dated September 25, 1890, which was presented to and unanimously accepted by our General Conference on the 6th of October, 1890, the church has positively abandoned the practice of polygamy, or the solemnization of plural marriages, in this and every other State, and that no member or officer thereof has any authority whatever to perform a plural marriage or enter into such a relation. Nor does the church advise or encourage unlawful cohabitation on the part of any of its members. If, therefore, any member disobeys the law, either as to polygamy or unlawful cohabitation, he must bear his own burden; or in other words, be answerable to the tribunals of the land for his own action pertaining thereto.

With a sincere desire that the position of our church as to polygamy and unlawful cohabitation may be better understood, and with best wishes for the welfare and happiness of all, this statement is made, and is respectfully commended to the careful consideration of the public generally.

LORENZO SNOW.
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.
SALT LAKE CITY, January 8, 1900.

PRES. SNOW'S DECLARATION.

The foregoing announcement from the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is entitled to respectful consideration. Not only should it be heeded by members of the church, but by all people, everywhere. Its promulgation is necessary in view of the charges that are made that the "Mormon" church seeks to become "a law unto itself" and sets itself above the civil government. It is not expected that it will have any particular effect on persons who desire, wilfully, to misrepresent the church and its authorities, its doctrines and its purposes. But there are hosts of good people who have been deceived by false reports, and it is for their information as well as to place the church in its true position before the world, that this official declaration is made.

The President's statement is gratifying to us because it authoritatively asserts what the Deseret News has advanced editorially. The church teaches obedience to secular law. It does not advise nor encourage any species of lawlessness. It supports the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of Utah and all laws passed in pursuance thereof. It has its own sphere, which is ecclesiastical. While it gives counsel and promulges rules for the guidance of its members as to individual conduct in all the affairs of life, it does not interfere in any way with the free agency of men and women, dictate to them how they shall vote or to which political party they shall belong, or hinder them in any lawful course as to business or other personal affairs.

There are persons in all religious bodies who act contrary to the faith they profess. The church or society with which they are connected is not accused of such derelictions by just and sensible people; they are charged only to the erring individuals.

The Latter Day Saints should ponder well this declaration from the President. It is of great importance. If there is any deviation from the path which he defines, it will be on the personal responsibility of the individual that pursues that way, and he must take the consequences whatever they may be. The church must not be burdened by the weight of anything that is contrary to its teachings.

We believe the permanent, reasonable residents of this State, "Mormon" and non-"Mormon," will be pleased with President Snow's announcement, and will accept it in the spirit that prompted its publication. And we hope that it will aid in the establishment of that abiding peace that is necessary to the harmonious action of all classes, creeds, and parties, without which Utah cannot achieve the success as a commonwealth that its best people desire to secure.

The foregoing we take from the Deseret Evening News, for January 8, 1900. It is interesting to the readers of the HERALD because of the attitude of Congressman-elect B. H. Roberts, whose seat in congress is at the present held in abeyance for the reason that he is charged with being a practical polygamist; that is, that he is "living in the repute and practice of marriage" with two or more women as wives, as the general public understand that attitude.

Mr. Roberts has given the public to understand that in the fixing up of the affairs of statehood for Utah, it was understood that the status of those men who had married to a plurality of wives was not to be interfered with, but that the "ceremony of plural marriage" was to be forever abandoned. That the effect of this was to be to leave those men who "found themselves" in the condition of having married wives before the manifesto of Pres. Wilford Woodruff, in 1890, so that they were not expected to abandon their connection with those wives. President Snow himself in a statement touching the situation of those men who found themselves in "existing condition," was in effect that "reasonable men" would not expect those men to cease those relations.

The letter of the venerable President seems fair to the view; but why did not President Snow state that the living in polygamous relations with plural wives was disapprobated by the church, and that those guilty of it would be dealt with by church authority? While it may not be quite so bad to say that "the church" does not "advise or encourage unlawful cohabitation on the part of its members," as it would be to remain silent in regard to such violation of law, it is certain that to abstain from direct disapprobation of it is to give a sort of license to the doer of it in that notice is virtually given to the transgressor that the church will not interfere with him if the executors of the law of the land do not. Keep out of the clutches of the officers of the law, and we will not disturb you.

In a revelation given August, 1831, the Lord told the church in Zion, "thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it;" and referring to the proper action of the church in cases of wrongdoing, fornication and adultery being parts of the things included, "If he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she shall be delivered up to the law, even that of God." The law of God demands that the transgressor, the lawbreaker, the violator of the law shall not be shielded, but shall be rebuked, and punished; if he will not repent and abandon his wrongdoing.

In this case, the world outside of Utah, and we believe the world (the Gentile) in Utah as well, have been impressed with the belief that the leading officers of the Mormon Church have too frequently taken advantage of their high position to give counsel in public that has been construed by "the faithful" to encourage them in the continuance of their plural marriage relations. But, if now the significance and gravity of the situation is dawning on the venerable President's mind, and he sees that the course which has been pursued has been such as to mislead the public in and out of Utah, in regard to the real intentions of the church, writing of it in its official character, are to make their membership live in accord with the institutions of morality known and recognized by the nation, then we can give approval to such movement and wish it success; though we may conceive it to be possible that young Utah is the moving power behind the throne in the case.

It appears from the tenor of President Snow's statement that no notice will be taken of the acts of those members who may choose to transgress the law by the practice of plural marriage; that is, living with two or more women as wives, on the part of the church; that so far as the church is concerned, these violations of the law will not be punished by the church, nor will those committing them lose standing or prestige in the church, because of those violations when committed.

Out of a number of statements of some leading men in Utah, gathered by the Salt Lake Tribune, we quote one, which it seems to us is a fair statement of the impression made on the general public in Utah by President Snow's statement.

E. E. Rich—I see nothing in it to guarantee any change in the practice of men who have more than one wife—if they are willing to take chances, and it would appear that at least a few of them are.

The Constitution as I understand it, precludes "polygamous practices." It will not do to whip the Devil round the stump by attempting to define the differences between polygamy and unlawful cohabitation. Unlawful cohabitation certainly must be a result of having more wives than one.

Mr. Rich is right in his statement. In the teaching of celestial marriage by the leaders of the church in Utah—the unimportant two per centum who only have been in its practice—the ceremony of marriage in the celestial bonds, was only the prelude to the entering in upon an era of begetting a numerous and glorious progeny, to constitute the personal kingdom of the "man with the priesthood." To argue that the marriage ceremony was and is innocent of any intent or purpose of the practice of marriage under sublunary conditions, is foolish in the light of the past history of the people of Utah. Hence any attempt to hoodwink the people not of the "two per centum" populace, into the idea that the church intends to deal fairly with the people of the government, is idle.

President Snow has it in his power to say, The ceremony of celestial marriage has been abandoned by the church; and the practice of living in the "practice and repute of plural marriage" having been declared by law to be unlawful, the members of the church, without distinction, are required to abandon such relations.

Such a declaration, with an example or two, would go farther toward pacifying this vexing controversy and contention than any amount of negative platitudes which may mean, Yes, the church does not advise, or encourage it; if you get caught, don't blame the church; but don't get caught. The church should say in unmistakable terms that the members should obey the laws; and if they do not they will be punished.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ORDINATION OF ELDERS.

Did General Conference some years ago pass a resolution to the effect that a recommendation from a branch to district conference for the ordaining of some one to the office of elder should have the sanction of the missionory or submissionary in charge? If so, please answer in next Herald; also where and when such resolution was passed.

We know of no such resolution. The following, adopted by the General Conference, April 13, 1886, may be the one in mind:—

Resolved, that in organized districts, no one be ordained to the office of an elder, without the voice of the district or conference be had ordering such ordination, or by sanction of the missionary in charge.

AN IMPORTANT CONCESSION.

We have long contended that it would not have been necessary for the Latter Day Saints to have left the United States and gone to Utah at so much cost and suffering, after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, had they been faithful. We have maintained that God would have protected them and they could have lived and flourished in the States had they kept the commandments of God, and that their being driven was in consequence of their transgression and disobedience.

It is therefore quite gratifying to learn that this is now conceded by the President of the Church in Utah. On the opening day of their late semi-annual conference, October 6, 1899, their last accession to the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, Rudger Clawson, was one of the speakers, and among other things said:—

The Lord has said in these last days that he will not be mocked, and that we cannot disregard or treat lightly his words. We know that many troubles and evils have come upon the people from time to time because of the disregard of the word of the Lord. We have been told, publicly, by the President of the Church, that if the Latter Day Saints had heeded strictly the word of the Lord delivered to them through the Prophet Joseph Smith, they would now have been established in those eastern lands from which they were driven, and would be to-day the wealthiest community upon the earth. The Lord would have watched over and delivered them out of the hands of their enemies.

We quote from the Minutes of the Conference, published by the Deseret News in pamphlet form, pages 4 and 5.

Elder Clawson goes on to argue that God might have led them to Utah and "also established" them there, but it is not material whether he would have done so or not. Our contention is admitted, that they were compelled to go there because of disobedience, and because they had forfeited the privilege of securing God's protection here.

What will be the next development? We patiently wait.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Every man whom God chooses has a work intrusted to him. He may do that work, or he may not. He is simply chosen to give him an opportunity. If he does not appreciate this opportunity and manifests his lack of appreciation by indifference, neglect, or other phases of faithlessness, the work will be performed just the same. God will select other men upon whom he can absolutely depend to do that which had been assigned to the other. Proof:—

In consequence of transgression, let that which was bestowed upon Heman Bassett, be taken from him, and placed upon the head of Simonds Rider.—D. C. 52: 8.

But, behold, verily I say unto you, There are many who have been ordained among you, whom I have called, but few of them are chosen: they who are not chosen have sinned a very grievous sin, in that they are walking in darkness at noonday.—D. C. 92: 1.

Who is responsible for this "walking in darkness" and consequent loss?

Let us not, therefore, deceive ourselves with the thought that the final triumphant success of the kingdom of God depends upon our faithfulness; No; his kingdom will move speedily forward and he will shortly inaugurate his peaceful rule and reign though we, as his servants, through our own indolence or folly may, unhappily, forfeit our right to participate in its triumph.

The designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to nought, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round. Remember, remember, that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men.—D. C. 2: 1, 2.

The principal assaults of the adversary are directed against the priesthood, and well they may be; for, from thence comes his chief and only formidable opposition. Men who are not enclothed with the priesthood cannot successfully combat his errors and defeat his intrigue and connivance. No one has a greater appreciation of this fact than Satan himself.

And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye? And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them.—Acts 19: 15, 16.

The danger of failing and forfeiting the privileges and possibilities that are conferred upon men through the priesthood is not confined to the lower offices in the church, nor is it confined to those who, through diffidence or neglect, came under condemnation by failing to "lift up their voices" in promulgation of the truth. The danger invades the highest offices in the church. How sad, how lamentably sad, that some who have "borne the heat and burden of the day" should thus fail. I cite what the Lord said to one of the brightest lights "in this last kingdom." Note it well, ye who will; note and profit by its admonition.

I, the Lord, am not well pleased with my servant Sidney Rigdon, he exalted himself in his heart and received not counsel, but grieved the Spirit; wherefore his writing is not acceptable unto the Lord, and he shall make another, and if the Lord receive it not, behold, he standeth no longer in the office which I have appointed him.—D. C. 63: 14.

God commanded him to do this "writing." He did it, yet the Lord refused to accept it when completed. How sad, how deplorably sad, that we should do a work which God has commanded, and perform it in such a way and with such a spirit that the Lord cannot accept it at our hands! And a work so important, resting upon "the heads of the church"! Trusting to our own strength, to our own wisdom, and so incur the displeasure of God! One more opportunity only is offered the gifted man of God. If he fails in the next effort, he can no longer find shelter, not even beneath the extended patience and infinite mercy of God; "behold, he standeth no longer in the office which I have appointed him."

With such grave responsibility upon the priesthood, and more especially upon the occupants of the leading quorums of the church, no wonder they are made the targets of Satan's poisoned shafts, as Jesus' warning indicates.

Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not.—Luke 22: 31, 32.

Also, to Lyman Wight:—

Let my servant Lyman Wight beware, for Satan desireth to sift him as chaff.—Doc. and Cov. 52: 3.

Nor does the mere ordination of an individual to an office, no matter what the office may be, so thoroughly excite the envy and jealousy of Satan and so arouse his ire and his opposition, as to see this same person keeping the "whole counsel of God." The Devil knows full well that his evil purposes are in no great danger of being thwarted so long as God's priesthood can be kept in darkness, doubt, and unbelief. He also knows they will be in that condition, and that the Lord will not be with them, unless they do as he directs.

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.—D. C. 81: 3.

Who knows the full import, the real significance of that statement, and who appreciates it to a greater extent than Satan himself? Do those to whom God has committed the responsibilities of the priesthood? The adversary knows, and we ought all to learn, that conferring priesthood upon individuals simply confers upon them certain conditional privileges; or, in other words, it places certain possibilities within their ultimate reach; possibilities and privileges that are "as high as the heavens, deeper than hell, and as broad as eternity." Do all who have been endowed with the authority of the priesthood in our times, or does any enjoy the full immunities contemplated by our heavenly Father, through such ordination? Have all, or has any climbed the pleasing heights and attained the full fruition that the priesthood was conferred upon them to bestow? To assist in arriving at a correct answer to these queries, let us pause long enough to ask: What are the immunities referred to? What is the full fruition of priesthood bestowment?

The power and authority of the higher, or Melchisedec priesthood, is to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly and church of the Firstborn; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant. The power and authority of the lesser, or Aaronic priesthood, is, to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, agreeably to the covenants and commandments.—D. C. 104: 9, 10.

And this greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh; for without this, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live. . . . Now, this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God; but they hardened their hearts and could not endure his presence, therefore, the Lord in his wrath (for his anger was kindled against them), swore that they should not enter into his rest, while in the wilderness, which rest is the fullness of his glory. Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst, and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holds the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance and of baptism, and of remission of sins, and the law of carnal commandments, which the Lord, in his wrath, caused to continue with the house of Aaron, among the children of Israel until John.—D. C. 83: 3, 4.

From the above we learn:—

1. That it is the privilege of the high priesthood to enjoy great spiritual blessings, including the possibility of coming into the presence of God, the Father, and Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant.

2. The power of godliness is conferred upon the people through the authority of this priesthood.

3. That Moses designed, through the potency of the priesthood, to prepare all the people that they also might behold the face of God.

4. The people hardened their hearts and could not endure his presence.

5. God was angry because of this failure, and withdrew the high priesthood from them. But in Moses' day many of the priesthood actually succeeded in beholding God.

Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and they saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness.—Ex. 24: 9, 10.

But when the cry was raised then: "Come up higher," the people failed, and the Melchisedec priesthood, the only means ordained of God for their perfection, so that they might abide his presence, was taken from them.

In our time, the people must prepare, not only to behold the Savior, but to reign with him; for he will return to the earth whether they are prepared or unprepared to endure his presence. Hence, the prophet wrote:—

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? And who shall stand when he appeareth?—Mal. 3: 1, 2.

If the people now do not perfect themselves for the coming of the Lord, the failure will be much more disastrous to them than the evil which befell ancient Israel. Ancient Israel lost the high priesthood; but who can estimate the loss of being unprepared for the coming of the Savior to immortalize the living saints, to resurrect the dead, to rule and to reign? What momentous issues! What grave responsibilities are involved!

Some years ago, the cry was made, "Come up higher." How much higher must we come? Until we can endure and elicit the presence of the Savior. To whom does this exhortation apply, — priesthood or people? To both. First to the priesthood, eminently and preëminently; afterward, to the people; for it is only through the potency of the priesthood that the people can be prepared to abide his presence. Can we reasonably expect the people to be prepared to endure the presence of the Savior, when the priesthood has not reached that attainment? In comparing the priesthood with the people, at this time, does the language of Jesus apply?

And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's [the people's] eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother [the people], Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye.—Matt. 7: 3, 4.

How can the priesthood remove the "beam," so they may more clearly see the "mote"? By doing what God has plainly commanded them to do. "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." The Lord has promised a great and necessary endowment to the priesthood. (See Doc. and Cov. 85:18, 19; 92: 2, 3; 102: 3–10.) This endowment was to be conferred in the "Solemn Assembly." (See Doc. and Cov. 85: 20–36.)

We can begin, and begin now, to prepare ourselves for the "Solemn Assembly." We are told how to do this, in order that the "Assembly" may meet with the favor of God, and prove a success. For the necessary personal preparation for it, please read carefully Doctrine and Covenants 85: 19–21, etc., and then appropriate, and appropriate without delay, the wholesome instruction contained therein, and my word for it, you shall be prepared when the "Solemn Assembly" meets, and you shall not be in any sense disappointed.

Let us prepare ourselves thoroughly for the coming of our Lord, and let the impulse of every heart be, "Even so, come Lord Jesus, come quickly."

How much longer will God give his priesthood to prepare themselves for this solemn conclave, which he has promised to so abundantly bless with his Spirit, and his presence also?

Undoubtedly the following language will apply, and soon apply, either to the great disparagement and discomfiture, or to the joy and satisfaction of many of the priesthood of the Reorganization, namely:—

There has been a day of calling, but the time has come for a day of choosing; and let those be chosen that are worthy; and it shall be manifest unto my servant, by the voice of the Spirit, those that are chosen, and they shall be sanctified; and inasmuch as they follow the counsel which they receive, they shall have power after many days to accomplish all things pertaining to Zion.—D. C. 102: 10.

May not many of us be disappointed, and grievously disappointed, because we are not prepared for this endowment of power? For only those who make the necessary preparation can be thus endowed.

At midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.—Matt. 25: 6.

And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever.—Dan. 12: 3.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Our country is full of organizations and secret societies, and more are coming into existence, made and organized for the benefit of those only who belong to them. These organizations are governed by men of the world, and for worldly purposes. As the church has ever held it to be contrary to the Scriptures given for anyone who belongs to this church to join these human organizations, it becomes our duty to give our reasons for it when called upon to do so; though we are aware that this subject may make some enemies, because there are some who are members of these secret orders and who may become enemies to any man who speaks publicly against them, as we know from the past.

It is wrong for any Latter Day Saint to join these secret orders, from the fact that the gospel is a perfect system. It contains all that the saints ought to believe and practice in order to do the most good for the human race. The main point in this argument is the perfection of the gospel of Christ as a law to any member of the Church of Jesus Christ to be governed thereby. Paul says:—

And all scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.—2 Tim. 3:16, 17, I. T.

And again the perfection of God's law is set forth in language like this:—

But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.—James 1:25, I. T.

The gospel, with its righteous laws, its eternal truths, its sacred obligations and duties, is more than earthly blessings; is as far above the drapery, the mystic ceremonies, the hidden signs of the secret orders, as the heaven is above the earth, and we cannot add these human mysteries of earth to the righteous and perfect law of God without putting in danger the welfare and spiritual safety of man. I contend for the obligations and duties given in the law of God, without any addition and inventions of men, while my opponent contends for those obligations and duties made by the secret orders of to-day, that you may take them upon you by a solemn pledge or oath. The gospel tells you that you cannot serve God and mammon; you cannot serve two masters. The rites and ceremonies of the secret orders differ very much from the rites and ceremonies of the gospel.

It has been said by some that all the duties and obligations of the secret orders are contained in the law of God; that they teach nothing but what is contained in the Bible, and that Jesus Christ himself was a Mason and all his disciples belonged to the same order. If this be true, what is the need of me joining it? for I am already under the law of God, and if they teach nothing more, then they would be a perfect blank to me, a useless cumbrance; to benefit me nothing if they add nothing to the law of God which I already have. But the truth is, they have numerous ceremonies of their own making to protect themselves against the rest of society, conferring its special benefits upon the favored few who separated themselves by the secrets of the order from the great mass of mankind, making laws of their own invention for their special benefit. There are good and evil mixed together more or less in all the institutions man ever made, for a stream cannot rise higher than its fountain. No secret order can be free from the human imperfections of those who formed it. On account of the human laws and ceremonies which are incorporated in them, we protest against the saints going into them, and if the saints go in these orders, they bind themselves hand and tongue to perpetual secrecy. Surely, this is not found in the gospel of liberty.

It has been said that these institutions have done a great deal of good, and for that reason the saints are under obligations to go into them because there is some good in them. Then we must go in everything that has some good in it for the same reason. A member of the church gets sick and poor. It is the duty of the church to attend to his wants. But how shall the church attend to that duty when its members, supporting these secret orders and societies instead of the church, the treasury of the church gets empty and those of the societies get full?

It has been said that the church does not handle the money aright, therefore we will draw our support and join these societies, and when we are in need we are supported. Is this all the reason you bring forth to support your theory? It is written that every individual must give an account for the things placed in his hands, and if I understand the law concerning that matter aright, nothing is my own, but God has placed me as a steward over these things, and he will also call me to an account. And those who are intrusted with the special duty to handle the finances of the church God will also take into account for their stewardship. And if we are placed as stewards over some other portions in God's kingdom, where such things are placed in our hands to support the church and his cause, using them for other things, God will take us into account.

But some of the members of the church support these orders and societies; yea, even some of those who hold the priesthood of God join hands with the secret orders of to-day. We see the church exhausting every means to raise money, but this money is not raised for the poor and the needy, nor for the families of those who are sent out to preach the gospel of Christ, nor for the orphan and the widow; but it is for the fine and costly churches which have been built in some places and where thousands of dollars, yet unpaid, have been spent for unnecessary show and pride of a few individuals.

Not one of God's truths or virtues, not one good thing in the revelations of God, was hid in the vaults of a secret lodge, for the benefit of a special few. The Savior said to his disciples:—

What ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops.

Let your light shine before men.

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

There we see the love of God embraced the whole human race. In this age we have secret orders for almost every purpose, and in this way our country is flooded with secret orders. The secret orders have become a ruling power in this nation; their influence is felt everywhere in town and country. If there is any good or truth in these orders, every principle of philanthropy and love would say its benefits and blessings ought to be universal, and not alone for a favored few, and we cannot see how it possibly can be right for a saint to join an order and to work for only a few since he has covenanted with God to work for the welfare of all mankind, for in fact I believe that every Latter Day Saint should be a missionary indeed.

It becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor.—D. C. 85: 22.

When we look upon the principle of charity laid town in the doctrine of Christ, and the labors of his disciples whose lives have been spent for the benefit of all mankind, following their example in preaching the gospel to the poor, do we not see an example before us worthy of being followed by all? And when we contrast it with the Christian of to-day going into the secret orders, lodges, and rings of the world, each one at work for the interest of self, we are constrained to condemn them and made to fear for the welfare of the poor who are excluded from their charities and turned away to live and die want, while the richer classes are combined together in the interest of rings and lodges from which the poor are excluded. Though the poor laborer may make one strike after another, it only fastens upon him more closely the power of these organizations and corporations, which work for their own interest, leaving out the great mass of the poor to sink deeper in want as these self-interested combinations grow in power.

When we take upon ourselves the name of Jesus Christ by baptism and make the solemn covenant with him to serve him, and him only, is it not the most solemn covenant that can be made by men? And the man who has pledged himself to live by the laws and commandments of God, can he also make a pledge to live by the laws and secret oaths of the orders and lodges at the same time?

When a man joins the secret orders, they make him take an oath or pledge that he will keep the secrets of the order, and that he will obey the requirements of that order. He pledges himself to all this before he knows to what he has pledged or taken oath. The oath or pledge taken before a knowledge is obtained is a governing power over the man; his judgment, his conscience, his actions must yield to it. There is no alternative but to yield to the power of the oath, though it is against conscience, judgment, reason, or argument.

These secret orders are called charitable institutions, which has a tendency to commend them to popular favor; but this is not strictly true. Their charity is like the charity of an insurance company. You pay them so much money, and they, under certain circumstances, will, if you need it, pay you back in some way. It is a strange kind of charity that wants you to pay money first, then keep paying for the lodge to spend as it may think best. Therefore when you call them charitable institutions, we conclude it is a wrong name, and very far from that institution which God has set up and the plan and law given to his people as a society. If we will pay up our dues and fees into that society we will be blessed in our deeds, and the gospel will be preached in all those places where they are crying to-day for the bread of life, and those who are going out to preach will not have to return or remain at home because there are no means in the hands of the Bishop and his agents to pay to them their allowance for the families, and they will not have to live on credit, and the poor will indeed rejoice in the Lord.

THE TEN TRIBES.

In an article under the above head, in Herald for January 10, the writer attempts to show that the "lost tribes" of Israel are the Nestorians in Assyria. There are a few statements made by the Lord that I wish to refer the reader to; but first, as the prophets repeatedly refer to them (the lost tribes) being in the north country, we want to find the location of these Nestorians, that we may know if they are in the north country.

As Halah is one of the places mentioned by the brother, and as it is in the "mountains of Assyria," and near to the land of the Medes, we will locate it.

Halah is only about thirty-four and a half degrees north latitude, or equal to a point about twenty-five miles north of Los Angeles, California. From its geographical location it could hardly be said to be in the "north country." But if the thought is sought to be impressed that it is in the north because it is north of Jerusalem, let me say that it is more than three times as far east as north, or about two hundred miles north and six hundred and fifty miles east. The prophets would have come nearer the truth if they had said east instead of north, if that is the people they refer to.

My principal objection to the statement that the Nestorians are the lost tribes is raised because of the lack of the people referred to filling the conditions the prophets have spoken of concerning them.

In the Book of Mormon we read:—

And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister. For they of whom I speak, are they who have not as yet heard my voice; neither have I at any time manifested myself unto them. But I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice, and shall be numbered among my sheep, that there may be one fold, and one shepherd; therefore I go to show myself unto them.—Book of Nephi, 7: 3, small edition.

Jesus says, as quoted above, "neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister."

The brother says the apostles Matthew, Thomas, and Bartholomew visited and preached to the Nestorians. It seems to me that in a region where the apostles could, and did, go to preach, would be in some parts of the land round about. It seems also that Bro. C. finds no evidence that Christ visited that people, but that three apostles did. Jesus said, as quoted above, "Therefore, I go to show myself unto them." If Jesus had visited them, they certainly would have had some record or tradition of it, as they have of the apostles' visit unto them. Under these conditions I believe it is fair to presume that Christ did not visit the Nestorians. Speaking of the "other sheep," Jesus said, "I shall go unto them, and they shall hear my voice." He, I believe, visited the lost "sheep" or "tribes," as he says. We know he visited "other sheep" on this land, and a record of that visit was made and preserved. Where then are the people he visited—these other sheep?

NORTH COUNTRY. BEYOND THE ICE.

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. . . . And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy. Behold, this is the blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the richer blessing upon the head of Ephraim and his fellows.—D. C. 108: 6.

From this revelation we learn that there are "tribes of Israel" in the "north countries" that will "come in remembrance before the Lord," that their own prophets will "hear his voice" and will not wait longer; but will "smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence." That a highway will be cast up in the midst of the ocean, or "great deep." The "lost tribes" must be beyond the ice, or it would not need to flow down at their presence, and then a highway cast up, by which they could come forth. If Doctor Grant and others could go in there and visit the Nestorians, it would not need the power of God to move the rocks and ice so they could get out—would not require the great power of God manifest, that would cause the children of Israel to say, "The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the east country." But the breaking through the ice from the north country, and the casting up of the highway in the midst of the great deep, will be a work so great that will cause Israel to forget the deliverance from Egypt, and they will say, "The Lord liveth which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country."

The Nestorians may be Israelites, but it is not necessary to believe they are the lost tribes to believe that. Farther than that, it does not seem to me they would be very badly lost if they always remained where the Bible says they were placed by the King of Assyria, only about eight hundred miles from Jerusalem.

THE TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

Even a child is known by his doings.—Prov. 20: 11.

A good child is most sure to make a good man or woman, and vice versa. To do wrong is the natural inclination of most all children. As bad children make wicked men and women, who invariably injure the morals of our country, we can see at once that those whose duty it is to look after the training of the minds of children have a duty to perform which cannot be overlooked without material injury to society.

Says one, "I know my children sometimes disobey by permitting both their temper and appetite to overcome their better nature, notwithstanding my repeated instructions to them, therefore I am at a loss to know just what to do."

Dear parent, if you are at a loss

in this respect, do not allow the confidence of the child in your ability to control to be lessened for one moment by revealing such to your child. Let me ask the parents this query: Do your children often associate with others, whose habits are equally as bad or worse than those of your own? The answer to this query is most sure to be in the affirmative, notwithstanding your neighbors may belong to the church. Now what is to be done under the circumstances? It is quite easy indeed for people of ordinary intelligence to see that something must be done and that quickly, too, but to give a plain, simple rule by which such trouble may be at once removed, requires more wisdom than the writer claims to possess. Neither do I believe that anyone can give any rule by which every child may be properly trained, because the means by which one child may be properly corrected will not, when applied to another, always effect the same happy result. As one cannot of himself devise a means whereby the habits and morals of children may become pure and commendable, it behooves us to employ counsel. Truly in unity there is strength, but in division there is weakness. Also in counsel there is wisdom. In view of these self-evident truths, I suggest that those who are at present standing alone as regards the best plan of teaching their little ones "the royal path of life" seek to counsel with others who, like themselves, are burdened to know how to train the sweet innocents committed for a time to their charge that they may bear each other's burdens, and thus fulfill the law of God.

Perhaps one exclaims, "Some children are so full of sin that no amount of training will bring about the desired results."

Let us not err by reaching such conclusions. I know it is written, "In sin did my mother conceive me." But remember that sin is not imputed where there is no law, and that without the law sin is dead. (Rom. 7:8.) While some are worse than others, I certainly think that such by proper training may become obedient. I believe the wise man, Solomon, spoke the truth when he said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." From these deductions we can see clearly that notwithstanding the burden and care which have been on the minds of many parents because of disobedient children, that this burden may be partially removed at least.

Let fathers counsel together in regard to this matter, as well as through the church publications. Let the mothers and sisters counsel together in the same way, as well as in the family circle and in the society known as the Daughters of Zion, then fail not to put your theories into practice, and surely God will bless you. By this means your children will grow up to be an honor to their parents, as well as a blessing to society, while the great work of preparation in which we are so earnestly engaged will be materially aided. In the one faith,

SOMERVILLE, Mass., Jan. 15.

Editors Herald:—The conflict with Elder Jensen, of Logan, Utah, at Paine Memorial Hall, in the city of Boston, ended Friday evening. The attendance of strangers was small, a number of reporters being present the first night; but their reports, however, would fail to give anyone anything like a true idea of the merit or principle involved in the discussion, as and, in fact the detailed evidence, drawn largely from the books, in regard to "lineal priesthood," "succession," "authority," etc., in affirmation of the position held by the Reorganized Church, was almost entirely "Greek" and out of the range of ordinary reportorial comprehension, to the men whose business very largely is to report scandal, gossip, political news, a dog or a prize fight.

The contest, however, especially the last two nights, taking on in some respects the features of a prize ring encounter, which would have furnished excitement enough in all probability, and points for a sensational Boston reporter, as an intellectual "sparring" encounter; although to use an expression made by one present, at the close of the second night's meeting, that "Jensen was not only down," but "knocked clean over the ropes."

Well, this may not be a fine way of putting it, but it was intended to represent the facts, as will be admitted by ninety-five per cent. of the people present.

It is true that the most of the audience was composed of our people, but the sentiments of strangers expressed was the same. Brighamite converts, Jensen's brethren and sisters in the faith of the Utah contention, located in Boston and suburbs, were conspicuous by their absence; and when asked if they had announced this discussion to their flock, or in their meetings after articles were signed and before it took place, they said No; and when asked the reason, told us that "they thought they were so strong in the faith" that "it would not change their views;" to which we replied that if their "converts possessed honesty and brains," there was danger, and the fact of their keeping them away from the discussion amounted to a confession of the truth of this opinion.

We cannot—need not—attempt a detail of all the cowardly and contemptible evasion and subterfuges this champion of Utah Mormonism was in the end driven to in vain attempt to cover up or apologize for their history, when from the time of "transfiguration" of Brigham Young and the assumption of not only all the "powers" and "keys" which "Joseph" the Prophet held, but of "keys" and "powers" which he never claimed to hold, and of which "the written word never spoke of, nor never" would; that is, according to Brigham Young (see Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 667,); and when forced by the logic of events to abandon the absurd position of a "body" without a head, or a church "Presidency" absorbed by or vested in the Twelve Apostles, Brigham Young and his two counselors, assisted by four Apostles, voted themselves into a "Presidency" of the High Priesthood; for which, according to all previous argument, there existed no necessity, and so on, down to the time when the prophecy of triumphant success of polygamy in the world, by Brigham Young, was crowded down the throat of that last surviving, attenuated, and emasculated prophet of the "Mormon god of Utah" by "Uncle Samuel," and we have the open confession and avowal through this "revelation" or "manifesto" that the "Mormon god" is not only a liar, but like the most of his representatives we have as yet met in open or fair encounter, a "quitter" of the most pronounced type.

Notwithstanding, the prophecy of this "successor," this "Lion of the Lord," that the doctrine of polygamy would "sail triumphantly above the prejudice and priestcraft of the day," etc.; that Orson Pratt, the "Guage of Philosophy" has told us that they would all "sooner die than deny this principle" (see the Seer, published in Washington, D. C., January, 1853); that Cannon went into hiding, Roberts and others went to prison for the sake of their "religion;"—yet this same Champion Roberts tells us and the American people lately in Washington, D. C., that their Mormon god has given up the fight with Uncle Sam and that "polygamy is dead," and that "the fountain of evil is dried up." Selah!

Elder Jensen evidently got frightened and in all probability met with some surprises in church history. He positively refused to meet his side of the proposition or affirm in law or evidence Brigham Young as prophet or successor, or the legal status of their church, save in the old "prosperity" argument, temple building, "baptisms for dead," etc., ad libitum, ad nauseum.

No attention whatever was paid to our legal references from Doctrine and Covenants in regard to the land of Zion, place, time, or manner of gathering, as against Utah, Mexico, or Canada.

He opened and closed his defense of polygamy with statement of affidavits concerning Joseph Smith's connection with it; no attempt whatever of support from the books or natural argument; and was shocked as he asked me during my reply if I would not receive it, — or "what would" I "say or make answer to the Lord if he revealed or told me it was true." And I quickly replied that I would tell him he was a liar; that I would ask him whether the Book of Mormon, the Bible, all the revelations which God gave to his church as long as he had a church with a genuine head, were things to be relied upon or not.

When was he lying, then or now? For lie he had, if they spoke the truth or were his real representatives. But that the God I had learned to bow my knee to was a God that walketh "not in crooked paths" "neither doth he vary from that which he hath said;" a God who had declared, "I change not," etc.

Jensen wants no more discussion. The gratifying results of the debate are entirely with us if there are any; and, without doubt, there are in my mind as well as in the minds of all the saints who stood by us so nobly. Brighamism is down. It is not possible to furnish a successful champion for it, when humble, careful, prayerful, studious, God-fearing men in this ministry of ours stands like a rock opposed to this infernal misrepresentative of the angel-restored message of the gospel—by men who "hold the truths"—as relates to first principles of the letter of it—"in righteousness."

I feel so thankful to the great and good God who by his Spirit's aid has given us the victory. With him and under his direction we have nothing to fear.

May the day of emancipation for the honest in Utah be hastened, and the overthrow of a system of Jesuitical espionage over the mind and conscience of men that has no parallel save in the true history of "The Sons of Loyola" soon become a part in the history of this our great country and in the closing pages of the history of "apostate Mormonism," is our most fervent prayer.

In gospel bonds, yours,

M. H. BOND.

NEW YEAR'S, 1900.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, Jan. 8.

In one's friendly correspondence we sometimes regret to depict in our scene painting the dull, dark shadowy vistas, such as were around the saints here on the last Sunday afternoon meeting of the old year.

A brigter scene is now before us, for seldom before, as on the afternoon of the first Sunday of the new year, has the glorious sunshine come bursting in, at the windows facing the golden sunsetting, on a more happy gathering of saints here.

There came into our midst the angel of peace. There was no going out and in of the restless ones as on the Sunday previous, for the presiding elder forbade such indecorous behavior during so solemn an hour. There was no suggestion, as on that occasion, of an evil spirit's presence, and there was no need of rebuke, either from apostle or elder, as then; for the spirit of love filled every heart to the brim. It was sacrament meeting. All present rejoiced in partaking, all together knelt in prayer, and all sang together in harmonious hymns of praise.

Into the dying 1899 evil had crept, among the saints; but the ushering in of 1900 was under more auspicious conditions.

The streets of old Independence were unusually quiet. Although it was a winter's day, not a fleck of snow was seen, and not a breath of chilly air was felt. The doors of the red brick churches in town were thrown open, and, perhaps, as those of the gilded saloons were closed, their fleering keepers had also gone a worshiping. The whole city, for once, was bathed in a sweet Sabbath sunshine of quiet. The very air was restful.

The Temple Lot, though seared and brown, lay out in the broad sunlight in a calm solemnity, peculiarly its own. The dry leaves, cuddled here and there in little tufts, were whispering to each other of a bright hope for the future, and the swallows near the church eaves softly preened their pretty wings.

The vapors of the placid Kaw Valley made the great city beyond look like an amethyst set in silver light. The opal sky was flecked in the north with clouds of pearl, and the angels, Mercy and Truth, looked lovingly down on a people of whom some well nigh thought to say, "The world was not worthy."

"This weather," said Bro. Albert to his guardman chief outside, "reminds me of my own sunny Southland." "Look yonder! we must to our duty!" and as the two glanced over toward the hitching posts, lo, Bro. Ellis' white-faced Darnaway was in the act of kneeling, and another brother's sleepy pony, harnessed and hitched, lay on its side in languid repose!

The worshipful solemnity within the big church building exceeded all. Even the puissant black iron brother standing apart was a worshiper, and no silent one, for in his big red mouth the very stones cried out as they warmed the saints and craunched and crackled forth vehemently,

> The flame shall not hurt thee; I only design
> Thy dross to consume, and thy gold to refine.

Bro. E. Short related to the attentive listeners a most remarkable instance of "the visitation of angels," which gift the thrilling and oft-repeated testimony of Sr. Peterson attested. Sr. Newkirk we had not seen before for many long weeks, as her life had been despaired of by the physician and some of the saints. With head uncovered, for she could not bear the weight of its covering, she stood in the midst, and with tremulous voice tried to express the gratitude she deeply felt. Every heart was touched.

The elder on entering the room discerned by the Spirit that what he had desired concerning himself would be granted, that "the word" would be given to him through Sr. McCallum; but in her stead, although much impressed to speak, and word for word was given her, Sr. Gould gave the soul-stirring message which we cannot repeat in full. "My saints," said the voice, "ye are my children in very deed. I am pleased with your sacrifices and your deeds of love. Be faithful, and ye shall see me with rejoicing when I come. My servant George, mine eye has been over you in the hour of temptation and trial. Your discouragements and your weaknesses have not been unnoticed; but, verily, you are my son, and I will bless you."

Many more deep stirring words were spoken, and all felt the heavenly influence, and every heart was touched as with fire. From yonder in the far corner were heard the cadences of a sister in prayer. They were as soft as the caresses of an infant's hand on its mother's breast. Another and another, here and there, knelt in prayer, and a half dozen young people were moved to "stand up," and among them the younger Joseph Luff.

Bro. May, whose testimony, if not as glowing as some, was full of "intelligence and wise counsel." He imparted hope and joy for the future of those who should be faithful; "for," said he, "I can plainly see, as it has been given me to know, that we as a people shall be more blessed this year than we have been in the years of the past."

With encouragements like this, with faith increased, the star of our hope undimmed, and the assurance of our heavenly Father's watchcare over us, we have thus begun a happy new year. ABBIE A. HORTON.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Jan. 11.

Editors Herald:—It is a long time since I have contributed to your columns. To-day while meditating upon the needs and demands of the work, the thought advanced by Bro. Lake last night in prayer meeting has recurred again and again. That while we are all satisfied with the divinity of our glorious work, we speculate and mourn too much upon the frailties of the human agents who are conducting the work. As it was said, The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, together with the signs of the times, wars, rumors of wars, tidal waves, famines, pestilences, etc., are all fulfilling the predictions made, and all are proofs of its divinity. Men's hearts are failing them for fear as they look into futurity, but they cry "Peace," "Peace," and seek by combinations and trusts to hoard up to themselves riches, and oppress the poor. They forget the divine injunction regarding the "oppression of the poor." Truly a day of reckoning will surely come. Is it by the wickedness and perversity of the nations, that God's people must learn wisdom, humility, and unity? "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord." Have we heard the mandate in vain?

Last Sabbath (January 7) during the sacramental prayer over the wine, these words struck me with peculiar force, "That they may witness unto thee, O God, the Eternal Father, that they DO ALWAYS remember him." I have listened to that prayer hundreds of times, have striven to understandingly say Amen to it, and make it truly my heart's desire. But never did I realize how far short of the covenant I lived. "Always," comprises every thought, word or deed of our lives. When tempted to say a disparaging word of our brother or neighbor, are we "always" remembering "him"? When angry passions rise and hasty words fall from our lips, are we remembering still the "always"? Amid the trials, perplexities, and afflictions of daily life, if we "always remember him," we may always have his Spirit to be with us. Can we have a more congenial burden-bearer than the Holy Spirit, the Comforter? By it we gain access to our Elder Brother, who has said "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." It is only the dross of earth that makes our burdens heavy.

Again, when prompted by the Spirit to perform some task, do we think of the "always" in our covenant? If we did, I think there would be less grieving and quenching of the Spirit. We would be more faithful at home and abroad, more valiant in testimony, more prayerful in Spirit, serving the Lord. If we were to meditate upon and study more the divine side of our blessed work, how trifling and petty would seem the annoyances, which now loom up like mountains in our pathway. If we had the Spirit of our Master always with us, instead of being cast down and vexed with our brethren, we would feel grieved at their wrongdoings, but still would cherish and love them, and bear them up on the wings of faith and prayer, that the Lord would show us and them what we had to overcome and give the needful strength.

If we were as ready to fly to our heavenly Father, and tell our grievances, as we are to go to the officers of the church, think you there would be as many elders' courts? The time and means thus spent could be used more advantageously in carrying the gospel to those who have not yet had opportunities of hearing the angel's glad message, the gospel restored in latter days.

May the Lord help us all to truly desire to "come up higher," and, "always remember him." Your sister in the faith,

HATTIE R. GRIFFITHS.

COVE, Ark., Jan. 12.

Editors Herald:—This leaves me well, all but a cold, and still contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. The hope of my life is to see the latter-day work survive in the South and build up and do something in redeeming this southern people. It has made wonderfully slow progress in the South for some cause; never has accomplished much. The missionaries have never made a solid effort to get it before the people.

The Lord has made it known to us through the gifts, that he has many people in this southland country, and said "Go forth, mine elders, and I will bless you." Now is the opportune time to do a great work in these parts.

Bro. J. W. Jackson is determined to do his duty. He says if he can't get money to pay the railroad he will take his grip and foot it to reach the people. Bro. Jackson is a noble worker and has picked up courage to do his duty. He can do a great work, no doubt. He is going to move back to his farm and leave his city home in Cove. The saints regret losing him, but he thinks best to return to his farm at Euclid, Arkansas.

A brother missionary once said to me: "You try to do too much." Laziness always wants company; drones will finally drop out of the missionary force. They may humbug the church for a short time and be jealous of those doing their duty, but can't stand long.

Inasmuch as the second coming of Christ draws near, let us be up and doing. If the church feeds and clothes us, what more do we need? Remember what the Lord said to his disciples in New Testament times; also, "The love of money is the root of all evil." (John.) We make great efforts to prepare for a few days of life here, and to have some of the things necessary for a few days of enjoyment. Why not prepare for eternity and lay up treasures in heaven?

When I see preachers sent out into the world to preach the gospel, neglecting their duty to financier and make money, at the same time lacking nothing, they must be infidels to some extent, not believing what the Lord has said to his servants.

I am receiving letters from different parts, "Come, and preach us the gospel," hence must keep busy to do my duty. If the Lord calls me to make money and pay my tithes to spread the gospel, I am willing to do it, but if he has called some to preach, others to financier, let us do what the Lord tells us to do, and trust him for his promises.

BIEBER, Cal., Jan. 9.

Editors Herald:—Since coming to this part of this State and "agitating" the "waters of baptism," the feelings of some have been greatly wrought upon by articles in divers papers upon the subject of "Mormonism," one of which being in this region, I replied to; as you will see by inclosed clipping from the Fall River Tidings, January 5. Each additional baptism has seemed to operate upon them as the red cloth does upon an angry bull who vents his rage by bellowing.

Hope to baptize more soon, as some have expressed a desire to that end. I haven't seen better material than those already baptized. Hopefully,

Editors Herald:—We are still doing all we can for the cause with varied success. At times we feel discouraged, and at times much encouraged. We cannot always estimate correctly the good we do, nor perhaps the harm we may do at times.

I mention one little incident on the side of good. Of course that is the side I will speak of if at all. The last meeting I held at Mount Vernon I was alone; Bro. Chase went home to be with his family during the holidays. I was lonely and felt "blue." Guess I looked that way. I did not enjoy much of the Spirit and felt at the close of the meeting that perhaps I might as well have gone with him; but I sold four Voices of Warning. A few days since a sister wrote us that a man who bought one of them told her it was one of the most wonderful books he had ever seen; he was just delighted with it; said he was prepared to buy and read anything we might recommend. I think he is in a fair way for the kingdom.

We have just closed a series of meetings in Ballard, where we held forth in Mr. Fletcher's church. He is a liberal-minded man and very near the "fold." The last night, or next to it, I was just one hour answering questions.

A gentleman who owned a printing press was present, and said to us, at the close of one of our meetings, that we ought to have a lot of dodgers gotten out and scattered. I said, "Yes, but they cost money." He said no more, but the next evening came to me and showed me some he had gotten out that day, and said he had scattered a lot of them. I inclose one. It shows kindness and a knowledge of the ways of this world. Such kindness is so seldom met that we always feel like mentioning it. You may publish the notice:—

"Now holding forth, at Free Church, corner Crofard and Second Avenue, two of the best logicians and theologians that have visited Ballard. Services at 7:30; admittance free. A full house expected. Will you hear them and do a little thinking for yourself? This may be the last evening. The subject, 'How we may know who are called and sent of God.'—A CITIZEN."

We commenced meetings here last night. I am alone at present. Bro. Chase has been holding at Anacortes. All goes well in these parts, but rather slowly. We have lots of calls for preaching, which seem to come in faster as the time grows short. It looks now as if Mit and I will have to work separately for the next six weeks if we fill the calls, and we want to do so if possible before leaving the mission. He will go to conference; I think I will. We go south into Oregon now soon.

Address us, Green Lake, Washington.

BARTLETT, Iowa, Jan. 17.

Editors Herald:—We are still on the move in the interest of the work. Had a good attendance last week at McPaul, and the very best of liberty in presenting the word of life to many attentive listeners. Some, we think, are very near the kingdom. We were treated the best kind and our wants not forgotten by saints and friends. May the love of these dear ones never grow less for this the work of the Master.

The saints of the Plum Hollow branch are still in the faith, most of them trying to do the best they can. At their last business meeting Bro. William Leeka was again sustained as president of the branch, also other officers in their places, without the least controversy whatever. This shows well for the branch. The election of officers for the Sunday school went off peacefully and we think wisely. They have an excellent school. They are good workers in this line of work.

The brethren are laboring to the best of their ability in the missions appointed them by district conference. Brn. A. J. Davidson and W. W. Gaylord, also Moses, associated together; and Brn. J. C. Moore and L. D. Frederickson with Charley Roberts, general helper for all, when needed.

I came to this place last Saturday; have had fair audiences and the best of attention notwithstanding the roads are very bad. I never had better liberty in all my work than of late, in preaching this grand old gospel. The truth is powerful indeed; it "must prevail," for "God is truth."

I leave here the coming Saturday for Glenwood, for a week or more, as the needs of the work demand. We hope for a good attendance at our district conference to be held at Hamburg, February 10, 11. Will the saints

please bear in mind that the delegates are to be elected for General Conference. We hope all will take notice.

Bro. I. M. Smith is now in Coin, we trust having good success in his work and labor of love for the cause and salvation of souls. Bro. D. R. Chambers is in Fontanelle, trying to build up the work in that town and suburbs. He has been blessed in his work. We pray for his success and that his faith may never fail him. We hope to meet with the brethren of the Pottawattamie district in the Bluffs, I think the 24th and 25th of February.

To my fellow laborers and coworkers, in this field: Let us press forward in the line of duty trusting in the Master and his precious promises; for they will verily be fulfilled unto us if we do our part well. I have been suffering from cold and throat trouble, but thanks be to our loving Father, I am much better.

Well, brethren, "on, on to the victory." eternal life is ours, with all its glorious conditions if we can but endure to the end. Let us hold fast.

Yours truly in gospel bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

TYRO, Kan., Jan. 15.

Editors Herald:—It is nine months to-day since I embraced the gospel of Christ. There are no saints living within thirteen miles of me, so I am alone. I first heard the true gospel preached by Elder W. F. Clark, about ten years ago, and he it was who led me down into the waters of baptism, on the 15th of last April, and O, what a load seemed to be lifted off my shoulders! I felt like I had something worth living for.

I would not give the enjoyment of the past nine months that I have had serving God for the rest of my life, with all the enjoyments the world can afford. O, how I long to live where there is a band of saints!

If there should be any saints passing through I would like to have them stop with me. I live one mile north and about two miles west of Tyro, Kansas. Any one coming will be welcome.

Yours for Christ,

WILLIAM HANSEN.

HILO, Hawaii, Jan. 6.

Editors Herald:—The natives say their beautiful islands are in a "pilikia," and we heartily agree with them. A few weeks ago a Chinese doctor in Honolulu reported a peculiar death which a post-mortem examination revealed to be the black plague. Chinatown was at once quarantined. The germs are said to have been brought into the country in Chinese freights. Business was paralyzed for a time. When the news reached Hawaii, public meetings were held, committees of safety appointed, and a rigorous cleaning of Chinatown and other filthy sections began. From other sections of this and other islands came a call for food supplies, and prices jumped, especially on rice, the food of plantation laborers. The poor man's extremity was the rich man's opportunity.

A week of anxiety passed, then came word that the plague was stopped and quarantine raised. We breathed free, congratulated one another, and felt that the serpent had been driven out of our island paradise. Alas! we reckoned without our host who was destined to give us another scare, perhaps several of them. The next steamer brought word that death from the plague had occurred in several parts of Honolulu, and that drastic measures had been adopted by the Board of Health to stamp it out. The body of every plague victim is cremated, the building where they die given to the flames. The forepart of this week one entire block, where about three thousand souls, Chinese, Japanese, and natives were crowded together, was given to the flames and the people taken to a detention camp where sanitary conditions are good. The first regiment, National Guard of Hawaii, armed, are enforcing the quarantine. We learn the death rate is increasing.

Yesterday when the steamer arrived and we learned that a crowd of Japanese from Honolulu were on board, people determined they should not come ashore. Upwards of two hundred men, many of them armed, were determined to prevent their landing. They are in quarantine on an island; last night they tried to escape, but the fear of bullets stopped them. When we think of the progress of the plague during the past few years, first in India, then in China, Egypt, Japan, Portugal, South America, Hawaii, at the entrance of New York City, and other places, we begin to think that the word of God is about to be fulfilled (D. C. 45:4), "There shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved; but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die." (Also sec. 94:5).

The black plague has been more terrible in its ravages in past generations than any disease known to man; it has always advanced slowly until it encompassed the nations, then suddenly carried away millions of people. While the wars and rumors of wars, the earthquakes, the famines and disasters on land and sea, are signs to the children of God that his word is fulfilling, so it seems to me that the "overflowing scourge" is at hand to "vex all people" by "the report thereof," and "it shall not be staid until the Lord come." May all the children of God be found in "holy places," and thus escape.

I have been permitted to attend two Chinese meetings and speak upon the divinity of Christ; they seem desirous of learning. Shall we ever be able to place the gospel before them in their own language? The Christmas and New Year festivities here would have been appropriate had they been celebrating to the heathen god, Bacchus. Possibly because I came from a prohibition State and have not been accustomed to such sights; but the number of drunken people surely filled my heart with sorrow, and revealed plainly the besetting sin of the people here. We are not making the number of converts that I hoped to. "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way." They have found something in Catholicism and Mormonism that promises fair and gives freedom of action. The gospel will not cover a multitude of sins.

While there are many things to discourage, we are still trying to tell the "old, old story of Jesus and his love." Bro. Poepoe is developing into quite a good conversational preacher. Brn. Waller, Ingham, and Kauni, are faithfully watching the flock in the city.

Trusting that the Divine hand may be over us all in love, as the darkness deepens about us, we remain, Respectfully,

U. W. GREENE.

WESTERN, Neb., Jan. 16.

Editors Herald:—Southern Nebraska district Sunday school association convened at Wilber, Nebraska, January 12 and 13; a very interesting entertainment was given by the Sunday school; large crowds in attendance. The business session passed off very peacefully. W. M. Self was elected superintendent, H. W. Belville assistant superintendent, Charles Woods secretary, M. H. Forscutt assistant; E. Roberson treasurer. Delegates were chosen to attend General Convention. Our Sunday schools in this district are doing very nicely. We organized a school at Elmwood, January 7. All seem to be alive in the work. Conference was a success; the preaching was good, and all were strengthened and edified. In our business sessions peace and harmony prevailed. J. W. Waldsmith was sustained president, E. D. Briggs and M. H. Forscutt secretaries. Our district needs more missionaries. The harvest is truly great, but the laborers are few. Many calls for preaching. Bro. Waldsmith and I came to Western, and are holding forth every night; don't know what the results will be. We will try and do our duty at least, and hold up the truth before the people. We are staying with Bro. William Brolliar and family; they help all they can in playing the organ and singing. We hope some will believe and unite. We live in hope, and labor for the Master. W. M. THE LAMONI SISTERS' MITE SOCIETY.

Among the many organizations for good in Lamoni it is doubtful if any has been of greater advantage according to the number taking part, than the Sisters' Mite. The organization was formed in the year 1882, with only a few members, and little or no capital invested. At present the society has a neat and commodious building of its own in which to carry on its work; and the past two years the young people have occupied the building on Wednesday evenings for prayer meetings.

The building is located on church lot, but the society have the use of the land free until the church shall need the lot for use, when the society, after due and timely notice, have the right to move the building elsewhere.

The sisters' methods of work have been to gather up goods and make up useful articles and make up clothing for poor children—who needed aid. It also sent at various times to different parts of Nebraska during the time of loss of crops in that State, boxes of clothing and bedding, to the great relief and comfort of many worthy parents and children. All of this work has been accomplished by diligence, duty, and needlework.

The bills of the cash payments for the past few years amount to $1,306.56. The business seems to be done in an orderly, systematic, and safe way, and the society should double the number of sisters in Lamoni who are now members for members and helpers.

Any one of these officers will be glad to meet and welcome help from any sister who wishes to join and work.

In noting the work of this society it is only proper to say that it is but one of the many in the church that has rendered the efficient service possible in such organizations. Prominent in aiding the church work to our knowledge for years have been the sisters' societies at Independence, Missouri, Armstrong, Kansas; Bevier and St. Louis, Missouri; Montrose, Iowa; Plano and Chicago, Illinois, and Boston, Massachusetts; and many others which in their work, like Dorcas, will be manifest in time to come.

All who can thus aid let them be wise and have part and lot in this work. K.

COIN, Iowa, Jan. 19.

Editors Herald: — The gospel of Christ grows dearer to my soul, day by day, as its beauties, its grandeur, and its sublimity, are unfolded to my mind. I have just finished reading the article of Bro. Duncan Campbell, in Herald for January 17, and I feel like saying, "O for a faith that will not shrink."

The duties and responsibilities of an elder in the Church of Christ are, indeed, too much for mortal man unassisted by the Spirit of the Master. That I learned, first, from the word of God; but it remained for bitter experiences and scalding tears of regret to burn the full sense of that truth into my soul and stamp it, indelibly I trust, upon my very being.

The Lord has said that, "The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world;" but, at the same time, he said, "yet they must be without blame in word and deed."

"Cast away your idle thoughts and excess of laughter far from you."

"Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your . . . light mindedness."

"Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth."

"Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ."

"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers."

"Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks."

Brethren, of the ministry, the time is too short and souls are too precious in the sight of God for us to waste our time in "light speeches," "foolish talking," "jesting," and "laughter;" these things are not "good to the use of edifying," are not such as "becometh the gospel of Christ," neither do these things "minister grace to the hearers." The elders are commanded to be "ensamples to the flock," and to "be sober, be vigilant." "Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity," was the admonition of Paul to Timothy.

It may be all right for men of the world to get together and bandy jokes, indulge in foolish talking, jesting, and laughter; but, while darkness covers the earth and "gross darkness the people," ministers of Christ cannot afford to thus trifle away their time; while Zion is unredeemed, the saints of God scattered, and the poor of God's people neglected and left to struggle out an existence in poverty, ministers of Christ should observe the admonition, "ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth." The conditions confronting the church at the present time are too serious and too intricate to attempt their solution by human wisdom. We must have help; and nothing short of divine help will suffice. Can we get divine help? Yes, we can get it; but we shall never get it till we place ourselves before our heavenly Father in the proper condition of mind and spirit, and we have much to overcome before we reach that condition. There is no use of trying to deceive ourselves; no use of trying to close our eyes to existing conditions; and it is worse than folly for us to try to shirk the responsibilities which God has placed upon us. Those responsibilities are of such a character that they must be met, in the fear of God, or we shall surely suffer loss.

I do hope and pray that, when the General Conference shall assemble next April, we may come together with an eye single to God's glory, leaving self and selfish interest altogether out of all our deliberations, and that the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit may direct in all things.

At present writing I am preaching in Coin, Page County, Iowa. Have preached eleven times, in the opera hall, to fair-sized and attentive audiences. Some are surely interested, but what the result may be is more than I can tell. We can only plant and water; the Lord must give the increase, if there is any. "No man can come unto me except the Father draw him," was the teaching of the Savior. "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved," is the teaching found elsewhere in the Bible.

Bro. and Sr. Russell Kykendall and Bro. and Sr. Charles Wood live here, and are zealous for the truth and anxious that their neighbors and friends should hear the glad tidings of great joy. Sr. Celia Richards, of Glenwood, and Miss Clara Davis, a member of the Methodist Church, I believe, are helping much in the music. Miss Davis is organist and Sr. Richards is chorister. Sr. Ray, Sr. Mamie Pace, and Sr. Ora Beckstead came down from Shenandoah and staid over last Sunday, blending their voices with our small choir here in singing the songs of Zion. May the Lord bless all. Am fairly well, in the faith, and hopeful of final success.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

PERSIA, Iowa, Jan. 18.

Editors Herald:—After concluding my series of meetings at Logan, I assisted in meetings at Missouri Valley and Magnolia, and enjoyed the quiet of Thanksgiving Day at the home branch and at home, the Spirit evidencing the approval of God in honoring the proclamation of our rulers.

Began a series of meetings about eight miles east of Woodbine, the 1st of December, which continued till the 21st, delivering twenty-seven sermons, resulting in a better understanding by the saints of their duty. Bad roads and stormy weather worked disadvantageously to many coming from a distance. Was kindly cared for by all, and remembered as one depending upon those where ministering for sufficient to meet expenses for clothing, postage, and traveling, for which remembrance may God repay them.

Here is where Bro. S. B. Kibler organized a Sunday school, and has kept up regular appointments every two weeks. Was taken to my home by the kindness of Bro. Henry Sparrow, where I rested a few days. Rested did I say? Yes, like most of the missionaries rest when at home, if they do their duty. So many things needing repairing, that but little time can be used for purely visiting or resting.

On the closing day of the year I began a two weeks' meeting at Woodbine, assisted by the local help and Bro. Charles Derry, who was detained at home because of the affliction of his self-sacrificing companion, who so far recovered as to be present the last day of the meetings. The services were much better attended than a year ago, and a much better spiritual feeling was seen than for some time. The Religio has been reorganized, and is doing nicely, and the Sunday school is progressing excellently, both of which are rendering their share in the preparation of a people for future usefulness and reward. The saints generally are succeeding financially and forget not to distribute quite generously according to the law of tithing, and a few remembered the needs of the missionary, for which may God prove to them that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

In this district there seems to be a general and gradual awakening, except in one or two places; and the missionaries, with the district and branch authorities, are working together harmoniously. Indifference seems to be the most noticeable sin, and the hardest to effect a removal of; but a determined effort is being made to arouse the stupefied ones, and to encourage the wearied ones not to cease their activity, even do they feel their strength failing. Men of God should always pray and not faint, neither should they be wearied in well-doing, even if it is the judgment of others that their labor is not as effectual as it should be, and even you yourselves might so decide; yet if doing the best you can, sacrificially laboring under the direction of God and appointment of his children, do not relinquish your position or place of action, against evil or error, because of the judgment of others, until you are satisfied that it is God's judgment you should so relinquish it, and then only do so to occupy in a more advantageous position to overthrow the enemy of righteousness and peace. Should the judgment of the whole world (and that is about the condition that has existed several times) be that God is not ruling and executing his law to suit them, would he resign? We think if he should listen to the majority now he would resign from being Lawgiver, or the one as executor of the law through his appointed agents; hence I conclude it poor policy, and ofttimes damaging to the work, for an official to resign a position he is satisfied he is occupying acceptable to God, even if a large minority conclude that his labor is not effecting the greatest good; besides, everyone desiring such action must or should first decide who can occupy more effectually.

God's work is to be governed by common consent by those who are exercised "by much prayer and faith," being directed by the Spirit of God, and not by the spirit of personal preference, or of dislike, resulting from their opinions not being accepted, as the will of God.

Services began here Tuesday night, and will continue until we feel the work at present demanded is done. Elder Jas. A. Donaldson will render assistance a portion of the time. Membership and officials manifest a deep interest in the success of these meetings.

With hope in the final triumph of Zion, I am, Your fellow-helper,

J. F. MINTUN.

P. S.—The interest and zeal of the membership where tent service was done last summer is not waning. Sacrament services are kept up each month this winter in those localities by the local and general ministry.

With babies in whooping cough the great danger is from starvation and strangling; indeed, the strangling is the result of starvation, for the child's strength is so reduced through lack of nourishment that he has not strength to throw off the phlegm that is choking him. He takes food enough, but the coughing fit follows and the food is thrown up. Guard against this by nursing him immediately after a coughing fit, that the milk may be digested before the next fit comes on. We have experienced the greatest relief in whooping cough from the use of chestnut leaves, giving the little ones tea made out of them, and having the older children eat the leaves freely.

Most diseases of childhood are those connected with growth, which entails great strains upon the system for building material; hence we need to guard against debility by keeping up nutrition. Nature usually provides for this by giving the child a good appetite. If he has been accustomed to eat the right kind of food you can trust largely to his appetite. There are cases, however, in which you must aid nature. We saw this in regard to whooping cough. It is much more noticeably the case where poison has been swallowed. Nature calls up all her forces to fight the intruder, and the conflict is exhausting. Supply the waste by milk, broth, or beef tea. This can be prepared very quickly by broiling a piece of juicy steak, cutting it into half inch bits, pouring on sufficient boiling water to cover it well, and letting it steep six or eight minutes. This is very nourishing and more palatable than beef tea made in a bottle, besides being much more quickly made.

Never resort to alcoholics "to keep up the strength," nor for any other purpose. Science has fully demonstrated that alcohol is a poison, a paralyzer of force, not a true stimulant. Dr. Nathan S. Davis, late President of the American Medical Association, and one of the highest medical authorities on the continent, says: "For more than thirty years past I have faithfully tested the matter by an ample clinical experience both in hospital and private practice, and I have found no case of disease, and no emergency arising from accident, that I could not treat more successfully without any form of fermented or distilled liquor than with." We commend to your thoughtful attention, especially if you have any doubts concerning the uselessness of alcoholics as medicine, Dr. Davis' lecture on "Alcoholic Liquids as Therapeutic Agents."

Here are some other testimonies on this point from leading physicians in England and America:—

Dr. Andrew Clark, physician to Queen Victoria, says: "Alcohol is not only not a helper of work, but a certain hinderer."

Dr. James Edmunds states that in the London Temperance Hospital the mortality is four and a half per cent less than in any other hospital taking the same run of cases. Alcohol has been used in this hospital only twice in twelve years; it is not used in making tinctures, a solution of one part glycerine to two of water being substituted.

Dr. James R. Nichols, editor of the Boston Journal of Chemistry, says emphatically that the banishment of alcohol would not deprive us of a single one of the indispensable agents which modern civilization demands. "In no instance of disease in any form is it a medicine which might not be dispensed with and other agents substituted."

At a late meeting of the British Medical Temperance Association, Dr. Ridge cited a case in which a very severe surgical operation was successfully performed without alcoholics. The great danger in such cases is from collapse, and alcoholics have been considered the only specific against it. In this case the collapse was extreme, the temperature falling two degrees. The patient rallied without alcoholics, "Therefore," says Dr. Ridge, "one must feel skeptical whether in cases of similar recovery with alcohol, the result is due to the use of it." He thinks reactionary fever is higher when alcohol has been administered during the collapse.

"What shall we use instead of alcoholics?" you ask.

Florence Nightingale, in her "Notes on Nursing," strongly recommends tea to prevent "sinking." In the Crimean hospitals she ordered tea given to the patients about three or four o'clock in the morning, the time when vital forces are weakest, and deaths from exhaustion most liable to occur. She also recommends coffee, hot milk, and beef tea, but tea first. She adds: "A little tea or coffee restores quite as much as a great deal, and a great deal of tea, and especially of coffee, impairs the little power of digestion they have." I have personally tested the efficacy of a few swallows of tea to start the heart's action in the last stages of heart disease, when it had been supposed that nothing but brandy or whisky would accomplish it.

Miss Willard relates an incident coming under her own observation. A young girl having heart disease was subject to spasms of intense pain which it was thought nothing but brandy could relieve. At one time the attack came on when it was impossible to procure brandy. Hot water was administered in frequent doses, and brought relief more quickly than the brandy was accustomed to do, and was followed by much better effects.

I knew a very severe case of typhoid pneumonia in which the patient, himself a fine physician, refused to take the whisky prescribed. His physicians declared that he would die if he did not take it; he did not take it and he recovered, and believes firmly that he should have died if he had taken it.

Typhoid fever is thought by many impossible to treat successfully without alcoholics to tide over the sudden failure of vital energies which accompanies it. But observe that the liquor is given with milk, or alternating with it, or beef tea. Wise physicians, as they studied the effects of alcoholics, some time ago began to doubt whether it was as effective in this direction as they had supposed. Investigation showed that alcohol had no food value, and food was what the exhausted nerve and other cells needed, food in such form as they, in their weakened condition, could assimilate. Milk and beef tea furnish this food; alcohol does not. This explains the fact stated in the text, that in such cases if the milk or beef tea which had been given in connection with the wine or brandy was withdrawn, the patient sunk, but if the alcoholics were withdrawn and the milk or beef tea continued, he gained.

Collapse, the sudden failing of the vital powers after a surgical operation, in typhoid fever or in cholera, consumption, and heart disease, are the cases in which many temperate people believe that nothing can supply the place of alcoholics. The facts here cited and scores of others which might be given, prove this idea to be a mistake. Temperance hospitals where all sorts of diseases are treated and all sorts of surgical operations are performed without alcohol, and with a larger per cent of recoveries than where it is used, are educating people up to a belief in the successful treatment of disease without alcohol. In syncope, nervous prostration, and sinking, cases in which alcoholics are often used, Dr. Davis thinks ninety-nine out of a hundred need only a restful position in the fresh air, with dashes of cold water upon the face and chest. If the case is too severe to yield to this treatment, carbonate and aromatic spirits of ammonia and preparations of camphor are more speedy and efficient remedies than alcoholics.

Instead of alcoholic tinctures the saccharated extracts are now largely used, and besides being free from alcohol have the advantage of more uniform strength than is possible with alcoholic tinctures.—Childhood; Its Care and Culture.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Will the Prayer Union please fast and pray for the recovery of my husband, Joseph Graham, who is lying at the county hospital in Denver, Colorado, with a stroke of paralysis, and remember me in my loneliness and spiritual welfare, and that God will restore my husband to me, if it is his righteous will. THE POWER OF PRAYER.

"For when thou pray'st the vision's cleared,
The voice is toned, the will's subdued,
The dear are to thee more endeared,
And the soul's failing strength's renewed.
In prayer the purest words are spoken,
The mind receives heaven's holy light,
The heart is given the Spirit's token,
The hands are charged with wisdom's might.
Therefore, take time to pray."

THE PRAYERFUL SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

Since the things of man are understood by the "spirit of man," and the things of "God by the Spirit of God," no one devoid of God's Spirit has any place as teacher in our Sabbath schools.

If we would enjoy the "Spirit" we must make of ourselves a "burnt offering," and with humility and purity of heart make a daily sacrifice at the altar of prayer. Is there a teacher who is self-sufficient? If so, we have no place for him in the Sabbath school. Is there one who feels his weakness and lack of ability to successfully present God's truths? To him we would say, "Ask of God, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not." In teaching, the spirit enjoyed by the teacher flows on the stream of instruction as "oil from bottle to bottle," and if the spirit be a godly one, the children are influenced in a godly direction; but if the teaching be not directed by the divine support, it will not be the best.

We learn from the Scriptures that spiritual strength was always obtained through prayer. How ardently did Moses plead for strength! How often Paul wrote to the saints, beseeching them to pray always and without ceasing. Our dear Savior, himself, emphasizes the necessity of prayer in preparation for work, in his forty days in the wilderness, as well as on that memorable night in Gethsemane. Nor was that all, death claimed him with a prayer upon his lips.

If we are to be followers of Christ, can we do so without constant, earnest, fervent prayer? Prayer enables the teacher to better hold the attention and interest of the class, because when led by the Spirit, the teacher has better self-control, and the influence of the support she is enjoying is felt by the pupil, thus enlightening their minds as well.

Teachers, live prayerfully: prepare prayerfully; and teach prayerfully, and God will surely bless your efforts. E. H.

THE TEACHERS' WORK.

Much of the success of a church depends upon its Sabbath school, and much of the success of the Sabbath school depends upon its teachers. The responsibility does not all rest upon the superintendent, nor upon the staff of officers. Nor does the success of any school depend entirely upon its principal, nor upon the board of education. Much may be done by the officers, superintendent especially, to make the school interesting, orderly, and successful; but the real work is done by the teacher.

The teacher has it in his power to teach, lead, and influence his class for good or evil. The teachers—whether school-teachers, Sabbath school teachers, or parents—are the real character-builders. Their teachings and influence have greater effect than they know. Therefore, great responsibility rests upon the teacher. The Sunday school teacher has power to put his own construction on the subject in hand, emphasize points, and draw the minds of his pupils into the channels in whichever direction he may take. "As the twig is bent, so will the tree incline."

We read and hear much about "teaching the Quarterly instead of the Bible." While we do not think it the wisest plan always to teach the Quarterly, we have seen cases where it might have been safer to have taught the Quarterly; for the teacher does not always use wisdom and discretion in his interpretation of the Scriptures. He should at least use the Quarterly as a guide. I once had a Sunday school teacher whose interpretation of the Scriptures was very erroneous; had he been better acquainted with the Scriptures, better informed upon the subject at hand, and taken the Quarterly for his guide, he would have avoided the errors which he was endeavoring to instill into the minds of his class. A teacher should be thoroughly conversant with the lesson before he comes into his class.

Not every good Christian man or woman is qualified to be a teacher. A person may have knowledge but not the power to impart it to others. It is not necessary to be a good orator in order to be a good teacher. In fact this is generally a drawback, especially if the pupils are young, for the simplest language is necessary in explaining to children.

In order to be

first, one must be thoroughly interested in, and have a genuine love for the work; next, he must understand the lesson; next, he must come to a level with the children, teach and explain in simple language, and interest the children in what he is teaching. To teach a senior class one must be well informed, and thoroughly understand the lesson; for a teacher must necessarily know what he is to teach to others. The intermediate class is generally the easiest to teach; the pupils in this class are old enough to read and learn their lessons, and are easier to interest in the lesson than the very young children. The primary class is the hardest to teach successfully. This may sound strange to some. It is hard to interest very young children in religious subjects; they are naturally playful, and it is hard to hold their attention. It is well to use a blackboard with young children, and diagram or illustrate the points you wish to most impress upon them, or to use pictures. Children are always interested in pictures. An illustrated children's Bible is good, or if one is handy with a pencil, draw a sketch of the points to be impressed, beforehand; even a rough sketch will always interest children. Often you will find pictures in papers or periodicals you can cut out, that will illustrate a subject. Another way is to impress a point upon children's minds is to tell anecdotes, or short stories, to illustrate a subject, being careful to emphasize the point you are teaching. Children all like stories.

THE PRIMARY TEACHER

must be careful not to try to teach too much in one lesson. If you can thoroughly impress one or two points, you will have accomplished all that can be desired with small children; but let those one or two points be the important ones of the lesson.

Don't be too strict with small children. Enter into the spirit of the lesson with them. Encourage them in asking questions. Be interested in and try to understand each child.

Sometimes it is well to encourage the children by offering a card or a picture for the best learned lesson, or for committing to memory the golden text. This will sometimes awaken interest or arouse ambition.

The lessons should be learned before Sunday school is called to order; especially by the older classes, or those able to learn their lessons. In the class is no time nor place to study the lesson, especially for the teacher. The lesson should be learned, the references all marked or learned at home, and the time all devoted to explanation, discussion of lesson, etc., in the class. The lesson becomes dull and tedious if we have to read it, hunt up the references, etc., during the class hour. If a teacher is indifferent, the children will be the same; one cannot go through the list of questions on the lesson in a mechanical sort of way and awaken any interest in the class. He must enter into the spirit of the work, awaken interest in it, and work with a will if he would see the Sabbath school flourish and be a success.

Remember the cause is a worthy one—a glorious one; for the boys and girls of to-day are the men and women of to-morrow."

Sunday School Associations.

DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION OFFICERS.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE.

About December first I mailed a circular letter to the superintendent of every district association in the church, as nearly as my incomplete directory would admit. At least some person in every district was addressed. This was to obtain information that is very much needed by the officers of the general association. Up to the present time we have received replies from but a part of the districts. Some were very prompt, and have our hearty thanks for the same. We feel quite sure that all the letters have been delivered or they would have been returned, as all envelopes bear my return card.

We give a list of the districts not yet heard from. If the officers of any of these districts have not received the circular letter, please write me at once and one will be sent. If the blank has been laid aside, please hunt it up and fill out and return:—

Southeastern Illinois; Texas Central; Spring River, Kansas; Southern California; Ohio; Central Nebraska; Northern Nebraska; Eastern Maine; Western Maine; Northern Michigan; Independence, Missouri; Kewanee, Illinois; Northwest Kansas; Northern California, Pittsburg and Kirtland; Southern Missouri; Northern Wisconsin; Southern Wisconsin.

We sincerely trust that no one will neglect to give us their hearty and prompt coöperation in this as in all other work for the Master. Yours for the work,

T. A. HOUGAS, Gen. Supt.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our Father, after many years of patient suffering upon the part of our sister and friend, Sr. Eliza Stubbs, to remove her from this world to a place beyond the River of Death; be it

Resolved, that we as a society, with whom Sr. Stubbs was for so many years intimately associated, hereby express in a measure our great sorrow and regret upon her passing from this to a life beyond; yet do we realize that what to us is a heavy sorrow, must be for her a glad release; "Blessed are they who die in the Lord."

Be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be presented to the daughters, who for so many years patiently and lovingly attended their invalid mother, that they be entered upon the record of this society, and published in the Saints' Herald.

MARIE H. CLARK, Pres.

GENERAL CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

Once more I call the attention of those whom it may concern to the fact that branch reports are overdue from several districts, and that I would like them without delay, that I may copy them upon the General Record of names before the rush of work to be expected later in the winter. I write this upon January 18, 1900, up to which date the reports mentioned herein have not been received:—

For several years have come no corrections in the records of the branches in Manchester district, England, but, from correspondence received, it is likely that certain brethren will fully correct matters in the near future, although it may prove quite a task before all shall be perfected as to names, dates, places, births, baptisms, deaths, etc.

I trust that the officers of London, Birmingham, and Sheffield districts, of England, will send in at an early day their complete reports of all changes. Also that Eastern and Western Wales will see to their reports, that they are sent over.

From Northern California the last reports that came were those for March, 1899. If they held an October conference I am not informed. Central California reports for October, 1899, are due. The last reports from

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Southern California that arrived were for October, 1898. Please send me the later ones.

The following districts held conferences in September, 1899, but their reports have not yet been received; namely: Kewanee, Southern Nebraska.

No reports have been received from districts that held conferences in October; namely: Central California, Kentucky and Tennessee, and Northern Michigan.

From the November conferences reports are due as follows: Idaho, Northeastern Texas and Choctaw.

From the December conferences reports are due; namely, Southern Missouri.

I find that no reports have come from Oklahoma conferences for February, May, and October, 1899, and also a December conference was held from which reports should soon come.

No reports from Central Texas for July and November have yet arrived. I would like to receive all the above at an early date.

Also about thirty districts have appointed to hold conferences in January, February, or March, 1900, and I now ask their officers to kindly forward branch reports as soon after their sessions as may be done. And I thank all officers who have labored, or who are now laboring, to correct branch and district records, and to answer my letters wherein I have called for help to obtain harmony between branch, district, and general records, as to names, places, dates, pertaining to births, baptisms, confirmations, ordinations, marriages, deaths, expulsions, etc.

To the above notice I add that the difference between it and the previous one, in January 10th Herald, is that the Southern California, Fremont, Little Sioux, and New York reports have come in since then, and that I overlooked the Little Sioux reports in making up the notice and stated they had not arrived. They came November 16 from Sister Strand, to whom I apologize for my mistake.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 18.

PREVENTION OF SEA SICKNESS.

We enclose a receipt for sea sickness, which has the endorsement of men who claim to know its value; and seeing the trying experience of Bro. U. W. Greene, we give it herewith, to those who care to try. It sounds largely like common sense. "Before entering upon a voyage, use a light diet; take a mild purge; on ship board, lie in a recumbent posture in open air, and drink a pint of sea water." A. M. FYRANDO.

NOTICES.

A misunderstanding having arisen in regard to appointments for preaching outside the limits of the Lucas branch, the matter was taken up at a business meeting held by the branch, January 8, 1900, and the following resolution passed:—

Resolved that we do not know of anything on the branch records that is intended to prevent the priesthood from making appointments outside the branch.

Resolved that the above resolution be published in the Saints' Herald, with an explanation of the same.

T. A. JOHN, Pres.
J. W. TALBOT, Sec.

Report labors done during the last two years. Those that report to me, address me at Lamoni, Iowa, care of H. A. Stebbins.

J. H. LAKE,
Missionary in Charge.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Northeast Missouri district conference will convene February 10 and 11, at Bevier. All who can should attend. Business of importance; also delegates to be elected to General Conference. The general missionaries to district will be present, and a good time is expected. J. A. TANNER, Pres.

Conference of Eastern Iowa district will convene February 17, at Arlington, at ten a. m. All are invited to come, as well as officers, to see that correct reports are sent. Come on the 16th to Arlington, Iowa. Trains will be met on that day. If anyone comes on any other day or to any other station, write to Charles Brooks, Arlington, Fayette County, Iowa. C. E. HAND, Pres.

Conference will be held at the hall, 67 (old No.) Fourth Avenue, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, February 24, at two o'clock. Branches comprising this district will send by delegate their reports, giving number of actual resident members so far as known, and all others under heading of scattered members, that a true status of resident numerical strength be obtained. We also desire that the present spiritual condition of branches be reported to this conference. Let there be as full an attendance of all concerned, as practicable. Visitors come to hall, and places for tarrying will be there assigned.

E. E. OMOHONDRO, Sec.

Conference of Northeast Illinois district will convene at Plano, February 10, at ten a. m. Priesthood counsel at two p. m. We hope that all saints who can will attend, and help make conference a success.

HENRY SOUTHWICK, Pres.

Northeastern Kansas conference will convene at Netawaka, February 10, at ten a. m. Let all the saints be present that can and enjoy the Spirit of the Lord. As arranged at our last conference I appoint the first Sunday before conference, February 4, as a day of fasting and prayer, that the will of the Lord may be more fully known concerning the ordaining of brethren whose names were presented for ordination at our last conference, and that his Spirit may assist throughout the conference.

SAMUEL TWOMBLY, Pres.
JAMES W. BURNS, Clerk.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING.

BORN.

JONES.—To Sr. Lucy and Bro. Thomas Jones, November 17, 1899, at Nantyglo, Wales, a daughter. Blessed November 30, by its grandfather, Elder John Jones, and named Maud.

MARRIED.

SMITH—BLOOD.—At Somerville, Massachusetts, in the Broadway chapel, January 14, 1900, Elder John Smith, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, to Sr. Kate E. Blood, of Boston, Massachusetts, Elders M. H. Bond and R. Bullard officiating. The ceremony was performed after the morning sermon, before the meeting was dismissed. The saints flocked to congratulate bride and groom, and to bid them Godspeed, as they left immediately after the ceremony for their home in New Bedford. They are both good saints and faithful workers for the Master. May the Master grant them many happy years together, and of usefulness in his service.

DIED.

JENKINS.—Ralph Jenkins, Sen., was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, August 22, 1815; died January 5, 1900; was married twice: to the first union was born seven children; two sons survive him. He joined the church in the 30's; was ordained an elder, and continued strong in the faith to the end. Was buried from the saints' church at Galland's Grove, Iowa; services in charge of R. Wight, sermon by Elder C. J. Hunt.

CLOSSON.—At Porcupine, Wisconsin, November 6, 1899, Father C. E. Closson. He was born June 9, 1822, at Alftee Gefle, Sweden, and was baptized September 19, 1880; at his death he was 77 years, 4 months, and 27 days old. He leaves an aged companion, two sons, and two daughters to mourn. His departure from earth life was a joyous one. His children gathered at his bedside, and a pleasant visit passed between the family and him. After which he requested them to retire, stating that he was all right. Not thinking the end so near, all but two who had concluded to sit up with him were retiring, when they were summoned to his bedside, only to find that his spirit had flown to the paradise of God. He did much in building up the work in Wisconsin. His home was a free home to the saints, especially to the ministry. They were always ready to give of their means to the poor and needy. Many an elder's heart has been made glad when liberally supplied from Father and Mother Closson's purse. Funeral from the Saints' church in Porcupine, sermon by Elder F. L. Sawley.

KINSEY.—Mrs. Catherine Kinsey was born in Canada, October 22, 1807. She married Josiah Fuller, and in Ohio they united with the church in the early '30s; in Missouri her husband was killed by the mob at Haun's Mill, October 30, 1838; she was then driven to Nauvoo, Illinois, where she remained until the fall of 1843, when she left with her children for Canada, where she was married to Mr. Kinsey, who died in 1871, since which time she lived a widow. She died while eating supper, December 25, 1899, near Leutz, Michigan, aged 92 years, 2 months, and 3 days. She leaves five sons and two daughters. Mrs. Hooker, of Spokane, Washington, is the oldest daughter, and the only one of her children who came back to the church. Thus the aged landmarks are passing away. Farewell, farewell dear mother.

LUMLEY.—Frances Ernst, wife of Bro. Thomas Lumley, was born April 11, 1831, in Toronto, Canada, and died January 8, 1900. She was baptized near Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 19, 1870. For four years previous to her baptism she was blind. After baptism, through the administration of laying on of hands, her eyesight was restored. To the close of life she bore a faithful testimony to the power and goodness of God, and to the truthfulness of the latter-day work. Funeral services at the saints' church in Deloit, Iowa, by Elder C. J. Hunt.

DAVIS.—At Irvington, California, January 14, 1900, Sr. Elizabeth Ann Davis. She was the daughter of Orin and Amy Ann Smith. Was born at Bodega, Sonoma County, California, June 7, 1847. At her death she bore the distinction of being the oldest "native daughter" born of white parentage. Her parents came to California in 1846, around Cape Horn, on the ship Brooklyn, which bore a large number of eastern Latter Day Saints, under the charge of Elder Samuel Brannan. She was married to Peter Canavan in San Francisco, in 1868; in 1886 she married Hiram Davis, who with two children Eugene and Faustine, still survive her. Funeral services at the residence, a large number attending. The sermon was by Elder F. M. Sheehy. The remains were interred in the cemetery at Irvington.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

Neatly bound in heavy paper covers; price 35 cents, mailed to any address.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

DANISH HYMN BOOK.
Salmebog Til Kirke-og Husandagt. Udgivet og Forlagt af den Gjenorganiserede Jesu Christi Kirke af Idste-Dages Hellige. Cloth, leather backs $0 75

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

NEWS FROM BABYLON.

PASTOR LIKES WORLDLY WAYS.

Oakland, Cal., Jan. 21.—The Rev. James C. MacInnes, pastor of the Oak Leaf Congregational Chapel, in announcing his retirement from the ministry, said:—

"I believe in dancing and a long list of other things that are tabooed by churchgoers when indulged in by ministers. If a man needs a drink he has the right to take it. When I meet a man on the street I like to slap him on the back and say, 'Hello, there, Bill,' in a good hearty voice.

"I believe in God and Christianity, but the church is burdened with false ideas and full of sinful hypocrites, and some of my friends who might be called 'lushers' are infinitely better than these frauds of piety.

"The ministry is no place for a young man who wants his personal liberty. He must use too much hypocrisy and overlook too much hypocrisy in others."

SUGGESTS BOXING AS CHURCH ATTRACTION.

New York, Jan. 22.—"There are 60,000,000 sinners in the United States. Not one man in 10,000 to-day stops to think of God until he is ready to die," said the Rev. Len D. Broughton to-day. The long, lank revivalist from Georgia seemed to be much in earnest. He is conducting meetings at the Y. M. C. A. rooms and the Greene Avenue Baptist Church, in Brooklyn.

"Religion is going backward," he said. "The power it once had is diminishing. The people of less intelligent ages were guided by God in all their actions. Now the church has no power.

"It is the fault of the church, too. Ministers are at a standstill; they are slowly losing their power. As a drawing card the church ranks only sixth in the list of public attractions. It should be made to read first.

"How do I rank public attractions? First, theaters; second, prize fights; third, cake walks; fourth, kissing parties; fifth, dances; sixth, churches; seventh, funerals.

"That list shows that the church must be made as attractive as the theater and the cake walk. Something must be done to bring the people into the churches, not on Sundays, but every day of the week. To do this we must make the church both a business proposition and a place of attraction.

"If it is necessary to bring people to church we ministers might even go so far as to have a service where the biograph could be introduced with biblical pictures, and with other pictures, too.

"For the men who put prize fighting ahead of God we might go so far as to have a few rounds of boxing before each service.

"Perhaps a one-act comedy might induce the theatrically inclined to stay until the sermon was over.

"Then, to attract many others, we might turn the church into a temporary café, where we might serve drinks between prayers."

FATAL EARTHQUAKE IN MEXICO.

Colima, Mexico, Jan. 21.—An earthquake shock began here fifteen minutes before midnight on Friday and assumed serious proportions at Tenimata, near here, many houses being badly injured and some of light construction wrecked. There was great consternation and people rushed into the streets, some barely escaping with their lives.

Seven people were killed outright and sixty were wounded. Local scientific men believe three earthquakes traveled from under the Pacific Ocean and that when news reaches here from the coast there will be interesting details.

The Governor of the State of Colima has appointed a commission to inspect churches and public edifices, while owners of houses injured in the earthquake will be compelled to put them in a condition of security.

Guadalajara, Mex., Jan. 21.—At midnight on Friday an earthquake shock cracked the arches and staircase of the State Palace and the porticos of the university and the Segallado Theater, the latter one of the most massive structures here. The churches of San Francisco and San Jose were damaged.

The Church of San Francisco is one of the finest edifices on the continent and is locally known as the Golden Cup from the magnificence of its interior. The government has closed Sagrario Church, fearing the dome will fall in.

Carmen barracks were badly damaged and news from Zapotlan and Sarula state several houses were demolished. The shock was felt severely at San Blas on the Pacific, and noises underground were heard.

City of Mexico, Jan. 21.—The City of Mexico came off comparatively unscathed in the quake, few accidents occurring here or in the suburbs, although some adobe huts in the suburbs fell and one bridge was partly wrecked. The Church of the Three Kings at Atzchatzalco, in the suburbs, was cracked, and will be closed for repairs.

CATHOLIC PRELATE OF NICARAGUA MUST OBEY CIVIL LAWS.

Managua, Nicaragua, Dec. 16.—Difficulties which have arisen now make doubtful the return to Nicaragua of the Roman Catholic Bishop of this country, who was expatriated in November for criticising the law in regard to the care and distribution by civil authorities of money and property donated by individuals to the church.

It is now announced that the Bishop and all other persons who have been expatriated by order of President Zelaya, shall, as a condition of rehabilitation, obligate themselves to obey the laws of Nicaragua and otherwise conform themselves to the existing conditions of the country.

WHAT ZIONISM IS.

Zionism is not of recent origin, though its name, in its present meaning, is of modern coinage. It represents the national idea in Judaism, the fervent longing of the Jews to become united once more into a nation, inhabiting the land that, according to the scriptures, had been promised them by God. Ever since the destruction of the Jewish empire the exiled Jews have prayed for the restoration of Judea and their national independence, and Zionism is nothing but an attempt to realize these hopes. There are, at this time, not less than twenty-five colonies, most of them thriving and self-supporting, in Judea, Samaria, Upper Galilee, and in trans-Jordanic regions, with a total of 4,500 colonists and about 1,000 hired Jewish laborers. The Turkish government, which at first did not look friendly upon Jewish colonization, is now inclined to favor the movement and lend its passive support, owing to the friendly intervention by Emperor William during last year's visit to the holy land.

AGNOSTICISM.

Agnosticism is a good deal more a fad than it is a philosophy, and is due not so much to the fact that people think as to the fact that they have never learned to think, and consequently are made tired by thinking and want some plausible excuse for quitting it. So far from God being unknowable, I know of no being that has so universally and everlastingly laid himself open to inspection as he has. The universe is intelligently constructed, and intelligent construction is something of which intelligence only is capable. Everything that nature contains gives some hint as to the kind of being that that creative intelligence belongs to. Everything that a man does tells us something about the man. If a person writes me a letter I infer from the letter something as to the quality of the person that writes it, and if he keeps writing to me I come in time to know a good deal about him, even though I may never have heard him speak. Or, if I look out of my window and see a man at work I shall, after a quarter of an hour's watching, have some rather definite idea as to what sort of a fellow he is, and if he has a job that keeps him employed in front of my house a week I shall have become fairly well acquainted with him by that time, though we may not in the meanwhile have exchanged a word. For me to say at the end of a week that I stand toward the man in merely agnostic relations and could not know anything about him because we had not chatted together would be to convict myself of being either an idiot or a faddist. Now, the Creator has been working in front of my window ever since I was born; his works lie around on every hand, and every atom of all those works betrays to some extent the character of the maker. That is the way that in all interhuman matters the mind works, and it would work in just the same way in regard to divine matters if either we were not so brain-tired that we did not care to think so far, or so wicked that a world without God would be a more comfortable and cozy one to us than a world with God.—Rev. Dr. Charles. H. Parkhurst, in N. Y. Journal.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Knowing that tuberculosis is now not only preventable but curable in its early stages, the British Association for the Prevention of Consumption wishes to spread the knowledge abroad. This is its purpose in calling an international congress to be held at London in 1901. The series of resolutions invites representatives of medical, veterinary, and sanitary science and also the principal officials of municipalities to attend a convention to discuss the disease. The fact that the Prince of Wales has consented to preside over the sessions of the congress and open it in person shows the importance which is attached to the congress.

The British association has been in existence three years, and it is asserted that the decrease in the death rate in Great Britain from tuberculosis may be attributed to its efforts. In its work it has had the greatest possible encouragement from the foremost men, including not only the royal colleges of physicians but the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Northumberland. There is no movement in the United Kingdom which has awakened greater popular interest, and the congress is intended to start a wave of the same sort around the world. Here, in the United States, the ground is well prepared for such a movement. The interest taken in the disease is great, as is shown not only by the work of the local health officials and physicians but also by the founding of several hospitals especially for the treatment of the disease. There can be no doubt that the congress will be well attended by Americans.—Ex.

ANIMALS LEADING DOUBLE LIVES.

In his book, "Wild animals I have known," Mr. Thompson says he is convinced animals are creatures with wants and feelings differing in degree only from our own. Man has nothing that the animals have not at least a vestige of; the animals have nothing that man does not in some degree share. Of the eight stories or personal histories told of the various animals, Raggylug, Lobo, Bingo, etc., that of Wully, the dog, is perhaps the most remarkable. Two mongrels raised as sheep dogs were faithful guardians of their flocks by day, but at night they were transformed into bloodthirsty and treacherous monsters, killing for mere lust of blood both sheep and dogs. Their double lives curiously recall Stevenson's story of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."—Ex.

The translation of the New Testament into the Corean language has been completed.

Of the 34,000,000 people in South America it is estimated that 30,000,000 have never seen a Bible.

In a recent sermon the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, referring to the action of the New York Presbytery on Professor McGiffert's case, said: "The Presbytery of New York has had the courage to say that a difference of opinion in matters not vital shall not be made a ground of strife which would be fatal. They have declared that a man in the Presbyterian Church may hold views which the majority of his fellows do not share without thereby becoming a heretic or an infidel. Sooner or later it was necessary for some one in the church to take that stand, or else the church would sink in a mass of ruins, shattered by fraternal strife."

In the February Number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly Prof. John Trowbridge of Harvard University, sounds a much-needed warning against the South Sea Bubbles in Science which have been so numerous and disastrous during recent years. The Keeley motor, gold from sea-water, energy from nothing, and many others of the absurd propositions which have recently been used to rob the public, are moralized upon.

Charles Augustus Briggs, a professor in the Union Theological Seminary, whose recent expulsion from the Presbyterian and immediate entrance into the Episcopal Church attracted much attention, contributes a very timely and peculiarly appropriate article to the February number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, under the title Is the Christian Religion Declining? He points out that the answer will depend upon the point of view, but in his opinion it is advancing instead of declining.

An important and timely article on the Decline of Criminal Jurisprudence in America is contributed to the February number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, by Gino C. Speranza of the New York bar. It is an article which all lawyers interested in anything beyond the mere dollars and cents of the profession cannot afford to miss.

The veteran geologist, Prof. Joseph Le Conte of the University of California, has the first of two papers telling the story of what the Nineteenth Century has done in advancing Geological Science in the February number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly. Professor Le Conte is the author of one of the most popular geologies ever written, and owing to his simple and easy style, the present history will be found very interesting and readable by the general reader as well as the geologist.

The Bishop of Zips, Hungary, has declared against the charges of ritual murder by Jews, who were charged with the same at Nameszto. The Bishop refers to the sad experience connected with similar agitations on previous occasions, and warns the clergy in energetic terms that they can have no other result than to incite the ignorant populace to the commission of outrages.

The first Russian orthodox church in America is to be erected in New York at a cost of $36,000.

DIVORCEMENT.

A sister, a widow of some years' duration, in a letter writes substantially as follows:—

This church has always been so opposed to polygamy; which I maintain as correct that the church should so fight against it. But now we have another monster to fight among ourselves; one that should not be tolerated, and that is divorcement and remarrying of the members to other persons while their lawful companion is living. I think the church should preach against this, and not retain as a member any man or woman who gets a divorce and marries another man or woman while the lawful companion is living.

I find nothing in God's word that authorizes anyone to get married while the legal companion is living; as God never instituted divorcements. Moses did that, therefore as this church is Christ's, none should be retained as a member who has got a divorce and remarried some one else after they joined this church, and the former legal husband or wife still living. We have such living in the church, and the church sanctions it as nothing is said to them or of them as transgressors of laws.

This has been and will continue to be a stumblingblock and an eyesore to me until I am convinced the Lord approves of such doings among the saints.

I think the church should also teach against marrying out of the church; so all could understand the law in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants on marriage.

The saints do as they please now for all the book reads of those marrying out of the church being weak in the faith. I have not dared to get a husband from the world, for fear to displease the Lord, because of that item in Book of Doctrine and Covenants. So, of course, I have to be alone, as some in the church have braced up to ask me who have been divorced; but when I found that out, I had no use for such; so of course I had to remain alone (too bad anyway). A man of family I would not take; while those in the world have been all single and good looking too, but had no church principle in them. So I stand on the word "weak in the faith," (Book of Doctrine and Covenants,) if I marry an outside Adonis. Perhaps I have stood in my own light on that subject the past ten years. If I had taken what came along I might have gotten along better; but that word "weak in the faith" is what stands between me and taking an outsider for my husband. In the church papers I read frequently, Mister so and so married to sister so and so; Brother married to Miss or Mistress, showing that one or the other is out of the fold, when both should be in Christ's fold. And some in this faith even get married to infidels; and yet they testify they are as strong in the faith as ever. I cannot swallow that, and do not believe they tell the truth; when the Book of Doctrine and Covenants teaches they shall be considered weak in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. I believe that revelation to be of God, and the truth, so to me their talk is false about being strong in the faith when they marry outsiders to please themselves. (Who is right now?)

We can appreciate the dilemma which this sister find herself in.

That there is too loose an observance of the institution of marriage in society is beyond question; and that there is too little regard paid to the true rules of life in the domestic relation among the saints may be admitted, and a better condition of things in this regard is desirable.

The sister's comment is sharp and shows that she reads the word and thinks upon what she reads. What she calls a revelation, however, is an article prepared and presented to the church many years ago in a solemn assembly at which all the leading quorums of the church were represented; and which was adopted and became the rule of practice for the church; and to all intents and purposes its terms are now of force with the people of the church. The passage referred to is found in section 111, paragraph 1, of the 1897 edition, Doctrine and Covenants:—

We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The same authority which caused it to be written that members marrying out of the church would be considered to be weak in the faith, also caused it to be written that while the marriage rite ought to be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest, those desiring that other persons authorized to marry by the laws of the state should officiate are permitted to do so; and also that it is not right to prohibit persons who desire to marry outside of the church membership from doing so.

In many localities where the church exists it is a necessity for both men and women that this permission to marry out of the church is in existence in the rules, because of the fact that eligible companions in wedlock are not there in the church, and if members would marry either from the necessity of passing age or inclination they must either seek for, or be sought by those who are not members. Besides it is said that "Love is blind;" and it frequently occurs that the blind god shoots his arrows without regard to racial, national, political, social, or church boundary lines; and as it is also said, "Love goes where it is sent," one cannot always so control liking or loving in such way as to conform to the caste lines of sectional or church rules.

This privilege to members to be married by other than church authority, and to marry outside the church, without the fear of church displeasure or discipline makes it not proper for the church to now prohibit such marriages.

The question of divorce and remarriage is a much more serious one, and a more certain and closer observance of the rule of right in this particular ought to prevail. But we believe that there is danger in extremely rigid construction of the words of Jesus in Matthew 19 and Mark 10.

The views of the church are expressed in the article presented by the President and Bishop adopted April 11, 1896, and published in HERALD supplement for the General Conference minutes of 1896. If these are examined, it seems to us that extreme views and ultra expressions of opinion will be avoided by all.

We crave our sister's pardon for following her expression of opinion by these remarks, but it seemed opportune.

FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Bro. Daniel MacGregor, up at Chilliwack, British Columbia, is having a pretty warm time with several of the clergy and their adherents who are doing all that they can to discourage him and prevent his work from reaching the people. He writes under date of January 15:—

I never struck a place with so much downright deviltry and contemptible means as are here continually being manifested toward our work. It is nothing but fight! fight! fight! I sometimes wish I was in some other locality, but I cannot leave here, there being no one here to take charge of branch. "W. G. Mahon," herein referred to, is a combination of meanness, egotism, farwerism, one who does not stop at one lie. The J. K. Wright is very like his venerable predecessor in matters of oppression and grinding. He preached an "expose of Mormonism" last summer when on his own perch, six miles from my "sphere of influence." I could not then spare the time to follow him up. Now that my work had lessened in my part I felt quite at liberty to pay my usual devotions to slander-bags of preacher-types. Minister of Education has received letters from this section from the professedly pious, thereby influencing him against me, so much so that he has written trustees of school I preach in, intimating his opposition to "Mormonism." I have written him explanation, sending epitome. Have only received from him an acknowledgement of receipt of letter.

The Devil is fighting hard against the permanent establishment of the work in this new field. Learning of a movement on foot to oust us from school I have withdrawn before any official ruling obtains barring me eternally from all British Columbia schools. I have been denied use of our local press, turned out of two schools, refused Orange Hall, and nearly put in jail. Have been lied about and slandered by my usual "dear pastors," until something had to be done. I went fifty-five miles down the river to get these posters printed. There is a great howl now among sectarians. Methodists are condoling Presbyterians and vice versa. I am posting them up all over the country. I am certain the people are seeing them, for they do not remain up twelve hours.

No acceptance of debate yet. If there is any, I shall meet them in the name of the Lord, and feel assured that Babylon will crumble. "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me."

Maggie is well. We have nice comfortable rooms out in the country.

The poster referred to is a large well printed halfsheet challenging W. G. Mahon outright, and inviting John Knox Wright to meet Bro. MacGregor on the usual topics, the claims of the churches, etc.

Bro. MacGregor is doing a good work, and it appears that the adversary desires to stop him. Let us remember our brother of the clan MacGregor in his fight for truth.

PECULIAR.

It appears that Elder E. Jensen, with whom Bro. M. H. Bond discussed in Paine Memorial Hall, Boston, did not notify the adhering members of his Utah Mormon faith, of the time and place of holding the debate, nor invite them to be present. When asked why he did not notify them he replied in substance: "Our people are so strongly grounded in their belief it would have done them no good to be present." So, that, notwithstanding the members of the Reorganized Church were notified by Brn. Bond and Bullard of the discussion, and all were present who could be, the brethren of the Utah faith were absent, except Elder Jensen and his co-helper.

What a small trick that was. We wonder how the brethren of the Reorganized Church would like that sort of treatment from the elders. Intelligent and thinking people prefer to be treated fairly.

AN elder of the Utah fraternity published in the Evening Gazette, Reno, Nevada, for January 17, announcing that a discussion would be held some time in February, at some convenient place, to be decided upon between himself, James Gault, of Reno, and Thomas Daley, of California, without any previous notice or consultation with Bro. Daley. To this Bro. Daley replied in the same paper for January 24; stating some points of our faith, and that he lived at 508 Fifth Street, Reno, and would represent our faith and answer any questions concerning the church and its faith.

Rather queer tactics that advertise a discussion stating questions to be discussed without consulting the proposed opposite disputant.

We cite the questions as stated by Gault:—

First.—Does the Old Testament teach polygamy? Aff., James Gault; Neg., Thomas Daley.

Second.—Has the Old Testament been fulfilled by the coming of Christ? Aff., James Gault; Neg., Thomas Daley.

Third.—Did Christ establish any church while on earth? Aff., Thomas Daley; Neg., James Gault.

Fourth.—Where is the headquarters of the Latter Day Saints Church—at Lamoni, Iowa, or Salt Lake City, Utah? Aff., Thomas Daley; Neg., James Gault.

Fifth.—Is baptism by immersion dead works? Aff., James Gault; Neg., Thomas Daley.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

The Topeka Daily Capital, a leading and influential paper of Topeka, the capital city of the State of Kansas, is to figure in a unique experiment.

Mr. Charles M. Sheldon, pastor of the Central Church, is to be given entire charge of the paper, its staff of editors, proof readers, and typesetters, pressmen, and all other employees, to edit and issue the paper for one week, as he may choose, in a proposed effort to give to the Topekan and Kansan public a Christian daily paper.

Mr. Dell Keizer, President of the Capital Publishing Company, has in a well-worded note proffered the use of the paper, plant, and good will, for the term and purpose named; and Mr. Sheldon has accepted the offer "in the spirit that prompts it;" and stipulated that the experiment shall occupy the week beginning March 13 next.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Sheldon has duly considered the methods he will employ. It is, however, a serious thing for any may to put himself into a position in which he will be required to say in practice as in theory, This is the way Jesus would do. Mr. Sheldon may do as hundreds of others are essaying to do, asking and trying to answer the question, What would Jesus do? But it is but an experiment, and speculative from a human standpoint to say, "Thus would Jesus do," when deciding upon each and every component part of a modern daily newspaper in a modern city like the Kansas capital.

Mr. Sheldon has not yet in his ministry, successful as he is reported as being, done and taught as Jesus did; and as he commanded his disciples to teach; nor will he in his week's issue of the newspaper to be intrusted to his charge.

If he had he would not now be so frankly offered a great newspaper plant to try a man's caprice at determining what the Savior would do. However, we heartily wish Mr. Sheldon and his assistants, whom we do not doubt he will wisely choose, the utmost success.

The time, one week, is by no means a period sufficiently long to permit the experiment a fair trial; for the reason that the patrons of the paper, good, bad, and indifferent, will all be thoroughly informed that the character of the paper will be under change for only one week, and they will out of curiosity, morbid, or genuine, put up with whatever they may think is short of the mark, or overdone as they see it. This is true of subscribers, readers, and advertisers. Nor is there likely to be any loss to the publishing company, for from the date of the proffered use of the paper until the 13th of March, the Topeka Capital (paper and city) will be advertised all over this broad land and thousands of people will subscribe for the paper, who, but for this notion of Mr. Sheldon's, would never have heard of it, and for that week the mails will carry immense numbers far and near. We even advise those of the saints who may be interested to see what Mr. Sheldon's idea of a Christian daily should be, and under his management is, to subscribe; and learn at the same time "What Jesus would do," if he saw things as Mr. Sheldon sees them.

Last July, at a great Christian gathering, Mr. Sheldon asked a question which had no answer at the time, nor has been answered since:—

"In this day, when philanthropy munificently endows our institutions of learning, is there here a man who, recognizing the potency of the public press to make or mar our civilization, will contribute a million dollars to establish a daily Christian newspaper?"

The endowment of a press, with means to run a full year or longer, if the ideal was not realized in that time, would perhaps test the ability of Mr. Sheldon to interpret his idea of what Christ would do; but the pitiful test of one week, under the existent conditions surrounding the Capital, will not determine the practicability of such a venture.

Christ wrought without the factitious aid of shekels of gold and silver, but in these modern times neither rags, straw, nor wood pulp are wrought into paper for the sake of the "Christ idea;" nor do men delve for ore, smelt and roll, and manufacture the iron, brass, and steel of the modern press; nor shape the matrices and cast the type, which go into the modern newspaper for the love of the Master only. A few men may be found who will work in an enterprise of the sort for a time without hire, or until their little means shall be exhausted, but the field of workers must be paid; all of which will need solving

when a Christian daily newspaper is run to successful finish.

We shall be pleased to witness the experiment. And in the meantime by this article help to give the Capital Publishing Company's Daily Capital a magnificent advertisement, which it is sure to get. We commend the worldly wisdom of Mr. Keizer and wish Mr. Shelden a magnificent success.

LARGE TYPE NEW TESTAMENT.

REDUCED IN PRICE.

In response to a general demand for a low-priced edition, another Large-Type Edition of the New Testament, Inspired Translation, has been issued at a popular price, and thus placed within the reach of all. It is printed on good book paper, from the same plates as former editions, and from clear, large type and is bound in good substantial cloth binding.

In order to make the work accessible to all the price has been fixed as low as possible to make it. The book is on sale at sixty-five (65) cents per copy. However, where branches will collect orders and have the books shipped by freight, they will be furnished at fifty (50) cents per copy, purchasers to pay freight charges. Such charges would add but little to the purchase price, hence branches may obtain the books at a low figure.

The New Testament, large-type edition, cloth; by mail 65 cents per copy; orders of six or more, by freight, charges to follow, 50 cents per volume.

Address orders to Frank Criley, Lamoni, Iowa. 2-t.

CHURCH HISTORY, VOLUME 3.

Work is now progressing on Volume 3 of the History of the Church, which will be completed as soon as possible. The work will be pushed so far as the resources of the office admit.

As in the former volumes matter of much importance and great value will be given to the student of the great latter-day work.

The volume takes up the historical narrative at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in 1844, and recounts clearly the history of the church from that date. A brief account of the various factions will be included, though the history of the church proper is the theme around which the facts narrated are woven into connected philosophical, logical, narrative.

The rise and progress of the Reorganized Church in legal succession includes an account of its leading conference actions and general development, matter of importance historically and invaluable to the active participant in the present work of the church.

Prices the same as former volumes: cloth, $1 50; cloth, leather backs and corners, $2.00; full leather, $2.50; full leather, gilt edges, $3.00.

Considerable expense attaches to the issue of the work, orders must therefore be accompanied by remittances in advance. Address, Frank Criley, Lamoni, Iowa.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

I am conducting or helping in a series of meetings in our new church here. I hope to be at the next General Conference.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. J. W. Metcalf, Louisville, Kentucky, writes that before the late discussion between Bro. S. W. L. Scott and E. G. Denny, of the Christian Church, held at Louisville of late, the contest, the participants, and the course and outcome were shown to him in vision and so clearly that he identified the participants when he met them, not having seen them, or Bro. Scott at least, before. Of this he sends signatures of witnesses in attest, to whom he related the matter before the discussion. He was confirmed in the faith, by both the vision and the discussion.

District officers, of both church and the Sunday school associations, are hereby notified that conference and convention notices are often sent in duplicate, or separately, by both the president or superintendent and the secretary, and that in such cases the HERALD will publish only the first received. They are requested to make such notices as brief as possible. Our space is limited and we cannot sacrifice it to notices of unnecessary length, though willing to insert all necessary features of said notices.

Bro. E. S. Conway, Barnesville, Minnesota, writes that he loves the work and seeks to know more of it, though isolated from church privileges where he does not hear the word proclaimed. He thinks some would obey there could they be labored with by a minister.

Government inspectors condemned 155,502 animals examined at abattoirs last year. This, with the thousands of milch cows infected with tuberculosis and other diseases, manifests the wisdom and prescience of the Lord in the Word of Wisdom, in which the people of God were and are admonished to partake "sparingly" of flesh diet. There was no means then as now of verifying the urgent necessity that now confronts us of living strictly in harmony with the Word of Wisdom, but the progress of science with the increase of disease, corruption, and epidemics, is making manifest to us in no uncertain way that evil times are upon us. Indeed, in all lines of human endeavor, religious, social, and political, and indeed, in the very elements of earth and space about us, the Devil is at work with the forces of evil, seen and unseen, that do his pleasure, striving for the subjugation of humanity. It behooves the saints to be awake and alert, rightly discerning the signs of the times and rightly exercising their personal agency. But discrimination and frankness and determined adherence to right, at whatever apparent cost, are essential individually if we escape blindness, darkness, loss of integrity, and final failure. The minority resolution, which declared that Roberts was entitled to a seat, that the oath should be administered and he should afterwards be expelled, was first rejected, by a vote of 244 to 81. Through the Boston Evening Transcript, January 19, Bro. M. H. Bond addressed the citizens of the New England metropolis on the general subject of "The Latter Day Saints on Mormonism." Bro. Its representatives are mostly self-made men, while the young men sent out by the Utah Church are almost without exception mere echoes of what they have imbibed from their leading men, at least so far as the facts of latter-day church history, since the days of the movement under Brigham Young, are concerned. There is a widening field and a better day dawning for the Reorganization.

EQUALITY.

I am going to run the risk of being called presumptuous by some of your readers who will no doubt say, "Give us a rest on equality," by advancing a few thoughts upon this, one of the very knotty problems. And in doing so I do not seek contention, but to draw out deep and far-reaching thought upon this subject, for it is evident to me from the present agitation upon this line that the church will soon take action with regard to this matter. And from my standpoint I believe there will be need of more revelation before a satisfactory solution of the problem will be reached.

Equality in the fullest sense of the word would be (to my limited understanding) out of harmony with physical laws as they develop themselves in all animate nature. For the very elementary elements of which all things are composed are unequal, and when we examine any and all forms of life, might seems to constitute the right, especially under extreme circumstances governed by the first law manifested in all living things; i. e., self or life preservation. This law in all of its many ramifications speaks through the Creator-given laws of agency, talents, heredity, ante-natal and natal conditions and environments over which no living creature has control until long after the characteristics of inequality have been planted, even before conception, gestation, and coming forth into the world. Then most assuredly if these propositions are true, equality must be limited in some sense of the word. This opens the door to an endless conflict of opinions as to how and where equality shall commence and end. And I am fully persuaded, from the various opinions of able writers in our periodicals, that past and present revelations, with all the wisdom of the wise so far as evolved, are insufficient to draw the line of equality without more revelation. I am a strong practical believer in God-given equality. Therefore believe that the church should move forward lawfully and practically just so far as the revelations of God are plain and definite and are agreed upon by the councils and quorums of the church. That these quorums are a unit upon gathering, tithing, surplus, and sacrifice, therefore let them, as has been suggested by Bro. T. W. Williams, step right to the front like good and great generals and put into practice all that they are agreed upon, with prayer, patience, and perseverance, and there will be no trouble about the flock dropping into line, and there need be no trouble about more revelations as they are needed. It is not necessary to repeat that the church is under condemnation and will remain in that condition until the shepherds lead the sheep like as the Master did. He led the way and said to the sheep, Follow me and you shall find pasture. So must all shepherds do if they are like him.

And right in connection with this article I wish to let it be known that I have labored faithfully for the church until temporal matters have become very unequal, as I have neither a foot of land nor a dollar in money of my own, and I am now, through sickness, incapacitated for the ministry, and wholly dependent upon the church. But I am making an effort through my book on the Sabbath question, to free myself from this unequal condition. Not that I am afraid that the church will not provide for me, but I am of an independent nature and would much rather give than receive. I therefore ask all the brethren and sisters who wish to practically help settle my unequal condition and the Sabbath question, to send twenty-five cents for my book to No. 922 Third Street, Oakland, California. If anyone is not fully satisfied with the book, send it back and get your money.

SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS.

Of all questions that are presented before the human mind for solution, the simple query, What shall I do to be saved? has probably demanded the most attention, and has called out the greatest variety of answers. And of all questions, it is the one that always, on being correctly solved, squares itself before its subject again and demands another solution from a different standpoint. In fact it is a question which never will be completely answered until our salvation has been made a complete and perfect reality.

It is not my purpose in this article to enter into an elaborate discussion of the many phases of this question, but I desire to present a few extracts from the sacred records, which bear upon one phase of the subject that has, in my opinion, been left too much in the dark.

This fact has been made more apparent to my mind of late by the advent into our religious circle here (Lamoni) of a representative of the Holiness Faith in his defense of the position that water baptism is an ordinance of the Jewish law only.

I was several years ago converted to the Holiness idea, and have been an advocate of it ever since. The more I search the Scriptures for light on the subject, the more firmly am I convinced that the doctrine of Sanctification is true.

In conversing on this subject, I am met on every hand almost, from the ambitious traveling missionary to the gray-haired Mother in Israel, with the apology, "It is impossible to live without sin." "We can't keep all the commandments." And sometimes I can almost hear the echo of the old Calvinistic refrain, with the idea that we commit sin with almost every breath that is drawn, and that the "imaginations of the heart are evil continually."

But, without consuming time and space with useless argument, let us "to the law and to the testimony" and see if there is any light in this relic of Calvinistic depravity.

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.—Matt. 5: 48.

How is our Father in heaven perfect? Does this mean that we must be as perfect in wisdom, love, power, justice, mercy, knowledge, etc., as he is? Or is it to be understood in harmony with the idea taught in the parable of the talents: "From him to whom much is given much is required"? "Our Father" is perfect in his sphere. So may we be perfect in our sphere. But as his sphere is infinite in comparison with ours, so is his perfection. Our sphere is comprised in obedience to his commands so far as our capacity for a comprehension of those requirements may reach. We can be perfect in this obedience, which merely means to do the best we know how under all circumstances. If we make a mistake as a result of our incapacity, we have not sinned.

If a man love me, he will keep my words.—John 14: 23.

Then if we contend it is impossible to live without sinning by keeping "my words," we simply admit we are lacking in the Divine Love element.

He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him. He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.—2 John 2: 4-6.

Eternal life depends upon knowing him, and the above tells us how to test the claim for that knowledge.

To show that people professed sanctification in the days of the apostles, read:—

Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints.—1 Cor. 1: 2. (See Jude 1.)

But I am told by one in authority, "Sanctify means merely to call out and set apart from a common to a holy use." Very well; but is that the most common meaning? Webster says:—

Latin sanctificare; sanctus holy + -ficare to make. 1. To make sacred or holy; to set apart to a holy or religious use; to consecrate by appropriate rites; to hallow. 2. To make free from sin; to cleanse from moral corruption and pollution; to purify. Sanctify them through thy truth.—John 17: 17. 3. To make efficient as the means of holiness; to render productive of holiness or piety.

In all of these the idea of purity and holiness is very prominent. And we believe that so long as God cannot "look upon sin with the least degree of allowance" he will not call anything holy or sanctified that has any sin mixed up with it.

According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love.—Eph. 1: 4.

Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.—2 Cor. 7: 1.

Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that the people in Ohio call upon me in much faith, thinking I will stay my hand in judgment upon the nations. . . . And inasmuch as they do repent and receive the fullness of my gospel, and become sanctified, I will stay mine hand in judgment.—D. C. 39: 5.

And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, . . . that ye may know how to act and direct my church how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given; and thus ye shall become instructed in the law of my church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me.—D. C. 43: 3.

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies.—D. C. 83: 6.

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom. . . . The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore it shall be santified.—D. C. 85: 5, 6.

Those who are so anxious about the gathering and temple building would do well to consider the following:—

Behold, I will hasten my work in its time; and I give unto you . . . a commandment, that you . . . prepare yourselves; and sanctify yourselves; yea, purify your hearts, and cleanse your hands and your feet before me, . . . that I may fulfill this promise, this great and last promise.—D. C. 85: 20.

It seems to me that in the light of these plain statements of scripture, and much more that might be presented, we all ought to feel free to say, in harmony with section 17: 6:—

And we know that justification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is just and true; and we know, also, that sanctification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is just and true, to all those who love and serve God with all their mights, minds, and strength.—D. C. 17: 6.

One thing is certain; so long as we set up for ourselves the imperfect standard of what we consider our possibilities, we never will attain to perfection, even in our little sphere; but if we will look to him who only is our pattern, and order our conduct according to the conclusion drawn from the answer to the question, "What would Jesus do under the circumstances?" we will, I believe, freely conclude with the apostle, that his commandments are not grievous.

May the Spirit of the Meek and Lowly One enlighten and encourage us, that we in very deed be not forgetful hearers, but doers of the word.

THE GOSPEL RESTORED.

The title of this article presumes that the gospel of Christ was not perpetuated in its purity among men from the time of Christ's personal ministry till now, and that when it had long been absent from earth it was restored.

Should this treatise have been entitled, "The Gospel Reformed," it might seem more acceptable. Having chosen of preference the title, "The Gospel Restored," the writer will attempt to maintain that it is God's plan and therefore the proper thing. The gospel in its purity and fullness includes of necessity a divinely called, appointed, authorized ministry. Such delegated authority God committed to men in the days of the Savior that they might represent him in fact, in ministering in word and in ordinance.

This divine authority God alone could bestow, hence when the gospel became perverted, when man-made theories supplanted gospel truths and by this the counsel of God being set aside, men forfeited their right to this divine authority. It therefore needed to be restored.

Again, when the entanglements of a multitude of man-made theories existed as manifest in the many sects and creeds, with which many an honest searcher for truth has been bewildered, for God to restore, anew, the gospel, would bring certainty. Restoration, then, it is clear, has the preference in fact, as against the effort of men to reform, with the present multitude of conflicting faiths as the result, evidencing, as saith scripture, that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," and opposite to and in violation of the divine injunction of Paul:—

> Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.—1 Cor. 1: 10.

A multitude of conflicting faiths is not the same thing. The Savior prayed:—

> That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—John 17: 21.

The one church, gospel, kingdom of God, kingdom of heaven, established in his day by the Savior, he himself foretold, would not continue in its purity and fullness among men. He said:—

> From the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.—Matt. 11: 12.

In opposition to this plain statement of the Savior, Catholicism claims that in itself the church has continued. They cite in evidence the Master's saying, "I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Continued perpetual existence is not needful to fulfill this. But when the restored church shall finally prevail, as it will, this will be fulfilled.

It is profitable at this juncture and in this connection to note that the claim of Catholicism of perpetuity is by its own violations defeated. The offices of pope and cardinal are nowhere to be found in the New Testament. If the change consisted only in name, that is not allowable. Paul said, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets," etc. The dogma of infallibility, that Christ spurned, the popes have claimed and been credited with. The celibacy of the priests is not scriptural nor consistent with reason.

The praying of souls out of purgatory. The selling of indulgences. The establishing of confessionals and forgiving of sins, with many other innovations, defeat the claim of perpetuation and establish the fact of violation, disruption. The work of the several reformers is in evidence of this. They saw this dismal disintegration. The innovations, then, of Catholicism, causing the deterioration of the church and gospel, and the efforts of the reformers to rectify, is conclusive evidence that the statement of Christ, "the violent take it by force," was fulfilled. A restoration is therefore necessary, as will more fully appear as we proceed.

If it is by the teaching of the Bible that Catholicism is adjudged and proven wrong, is not the work of the reformers to be approved as right, or found not right, in the same way? Christ and the apostles, with all the ministry of that time, taught the same faith without variation. The reformers successively taught differently. All could not be right, as they differed. All could be wrong, however, if none of them was found in exact harmony with Bible truth. Every successive effort at reforming adjudged all previous ones not a success. If not, why present something different?

Which one of the reformers established a church with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers? Who of them taught as the principles of the doctrine of Christ, faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, eternal judgment, just as found in Holy Writ? Has the diversification of the Holy Spirit and its gifts been taught by any one or all of them as found in 1 Corinthians 12? Who could take the Bible as a pattern and locate the church of Christ in its every feature in the work of the reformers? Their successive differing efforts show it was not to be found.

It is forcibly suggestive, too, that there should have been division after division, branch after branch, church after church from the same original. Note the variations of Methodism, of Presbyterianism, of the Baptists, and others. Is this ever continuing division the evidence of true position? If so, how would error be characterized? The renowned Philip Schaff declared some years since, "We must have something more humane than Calvinism, more divine than Armenianism." Presbyterians condemned the Calvinistic creed in their General Assembly of 1892. The "Old South Church" (Congregational) of Boston set it aside in this year of grace 1899. The great Methodist Episcopal Church in quadrennial session in 1896 at Cleveland, Ohio, appointed a revising committee of seven. Bishop John H. Vincent, D. D., LL. D., of that same church, said in conference at Marion, Iowa, in October, 1898, in his lecture, "To-morrow:" "The church of the future will be a church of revision in doctrine and polity." And so the process of changing, reforming, is yet to go on. It is of importance, too, to note that a part of the Reformation, Protestantism, seems to have described its circle and is returning to Catholicism! Who did not note that the "Grand Old Man," Gladstone, not long before his demise, made overtures to the Pope, to secure recognition of and for the ministerial authority of the Church of England? But the Pope said, No! Numbers of the clergy of the established Church of England, as also of the laity, have since joined the ranks of Catholicism. The establishment of the confessional in five dioceses of the established church in England is reported. We are surely not yet in "the land where changes never come." What of all this reforming, creed building, organizing of churches, doctoring the creeds, setting them aside, dividing and redividing churches, etc., and the grand finale of a partial return to Catholicism! Truly, "Wonders never cease," as saith a modern proverb.

"God is not the author of confusion," said Paul. Just so. The restoration of the gospel, then, was necessary, and God provided for it. The prophetic announcement of Isaiah comes ringing down the corridors of time:—

> And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.—Isaiah 11: 11.

In the next verse it is enlarged upon.

He shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

By this and the whole context, "that day" of verse 11 is clearly the preparation time of the second coming of Christ.

God, then, was to set his hand again, the second time, to recover the remnant of his people, etc. First, Who was his people? Was it not Abraham and his posterity through whom the "kindreds of the earth" should be blessed? Did they not come out of Egypt en masse as twelve tribes? Were not nine and a half tribes led away in the days of Shalmaneser king of Assyria, who have ever since been called the lost "ten tribes"? Was it not Judah, the remaining two and a half tribes, the remnant, that God specially interposed for, sending Christ to them? Did not Christ say, I came to my own, and they received me not? Christ coming to this separated remnant, and they rejecting him, would make a second setting of God's hand necessary if they should be recovered. All that God did for the twelve tribes as a whole was not a work for the remnant. Sending Christ to Judah was the first in their interest, and while in a small compass of territory. But when setting his hand again the second time, it is to recover the remnant from a widely scattered condition, from the several lands mentioned in Isaiah 11: 11, including the islands of the sea. In the year 70, or about forty years after Christ came among them, at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and the disruption of the Jews as a nation, they scattered and have continued so to do till now. Some time then after that scattering, as also Christ's effort in their behalf, God would set his hand the second time to recover them. As the establishment of the gospel and the organization of the church was what was done in the Savior's day, so the setting of God's hand the second time must be the same thing reproduced. The same gospel and church restored.

The Savior was asked in Matthew 24 by his disciples when the destruction of Jerusalem would be; what the sign of his coming and of the end of the world. He cited many successive events, and in verse 14 said:—

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

The uninterrupted continuation of it from his day on down could not be a sign of the end. As the violent were to take it by force and as God was to set his hand again the second time, that would mark the soon coming end. It is significant, too, that Christ said, "this gospel." Not some gospel, nor a gospel. It was to be that same unchangeable gospel and church.

In harmony with these express prophecies of Isaiah and Christ as to the gospel and church being restored, is that of John on Patmos in the year 96, twenty-six years after the destruction of Jerusalem. In Revelation 14: 6, 7, John says:—

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.

As this should be near to the hour of God's judgment, the three prophecies agree as to the time. John says it was the everlasting gospel that was to be brought by an angel to earth. The explicitness of, "and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," shows it would not be on the earth at the time. God having employed angels in time past, John says, "I saw another angel." After men had tried their hand at reforming, and had declared God would no more reveal himself as of old, it pleased God to send this angel to Joseph Smith, an unlettered youth of fifteen years. Thus the work of the restoration of the gospel and church just as it was in Christ's day began, and in a few years was consummated.

Another splendidly interesting, plain, and conclusive argument is found in Daniel 2 and Isaiah 29. Nebuchadnezzar the king dreamed. The dream went from him. The magicians, astrologers, sorcerers, and the Chaldeans were called upon to reproduce the dream and interpret it or die. Daniel came to the rescue and presented the dream and interpretation as found in Daniel 2:31–44. The then existing kingdom of Babylon was to be succeeded by the Medo-Persian, it in turn by the Grecian, and the Roman to supplant the Grecian. The fourth section of the body of the image, the legs, represented the division of the Roman Empire which occurred about the fourth century of the Christian era. The division of the divided Roman kingdom (the Eastern and Western) took place, and those monarchies in their changing forms, but still monarchies, have continued to exist, representing the toes of the image, known to history as the "ten kingdoms." (See Nelson's Cause and Cure of Infidelity, pp. 364, 365.) Bishop Lloyd, Mr. Mead, also Sir Isaac Newton support this position.

And in the days of these kings [the ten kings or kingdoms] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever.—Dan. 2: 44.

This did not refer to the Savior's work in his day, for then the Roman kingdom was at the zenith of its power and had not sustained division. The work he did was established among the Jews, but was left to OTHER people, the Gentiles. He said of the work of his day:—

From the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

Hence this renewal, at a later day, as seen and foretold by Daniel, and as we have just recounted in the above.

Isaiah, in the latter half of chapter 29, recounts a "marvelous work" God purposes doing at a time when, and of which he says:—

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest.

The restoration of Palestine to its former fruitfulness began in 1853 and has been increasing since, as is known. A "little while," then, before this wonderful change in this land, and for the reason the Lord himself gives, God did a work.

Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.—Isa. 29: 13, 14.

This is the Lord's description of conditions just prior to the restoration of Palestine. His arraignment of those who built churches and formulated creeds continues thus:—

Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us? Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?—Verses 15, 16.

"Lip service," "works are in the dark," "Turning of things upside down," all grew out of men's efforts at church building and creed making, of which, in this description and arraignment, God said, "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish." The division, error, and confusion resulting from the work of man in straying from the true gospel and church of God made it necessary he should restore the gospel and church as of old. This he did in 1830, and from 1853 increased the fertility of Palestine as a sure landmark to witness it.

Reader, please examine by the Bible, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as to being the original church and gospel restored.

NAPOLEONIC THEORY.

In an article addressed by Bro. H. B. Emerson of July 8, to the Saints' Herald, I note his remarks:—

1. In regard to my Napoleonic theory being a very odd one. He states that there is no need for a Napoleon to rise from the dead, as there is one here who is impatient to rush upon his awful destiny. That may be so, but I have nothing to say in regard to him, as I see nothing in prophecy in regard to him, and I shall feel exceedingly grateful to Bro. Emerson if he can kindly direct me as to where in the scriptures I can find the statements that he makes in regard to him! My Napoleonic theory may be a very odd one, but I would ask, Is it not according to prophecy?

2. I would also ask Bro. Emerson, if the Papacy is the beast which, or where then is, the woman whom the beast carries? I should also feel grateful if Bro. Emerson will be so kind as to direct me to the portion of scripture where it is shown that the Jews are to place this latter-day Roman prince upon the throne of France, as I have so far failed to find in prophecy any intimation that France is to be the scene of his actions. It, however, is very plausible and likely, as France at present may be considered the most powerful of the Roman states. But how about Turkey? Is not the drying up of the great river Euphrates or Turkish Empire, to take place before the Jews can be fully reinstated? (See Rev. 16:12.) The river Euphrates is generally believed to represent the Turkish Empire, which is founded upon the banks of the Euphrates.

3. In addition to the circumstance of Louis Napoleon having supported the Papacy at Rome for twenty-one years is the fact that the number of his name so exactly accords with the prediction in Revelation 13: 18, as should be 666, and is distinctly shown to be the number of a man and not of a system, as that of the papacy vicarius feliai dei, the vicar of God on earth; the Papacy is a system and not a man, and therefore cannot be that which the prophecy indicates, whereas the names both Louis and Napoleon, when applied to the languages from which they are derived, accord exactly with the prophecy as follows: Louis being a word of Latin origin, becomes Ludovicus, and when reduced to figures according to the respective value of the Roman letters, amounts precisely to 666, as is shown thus:—

50 5 500 0 5 1 100 5 0=666

When the word Napoleon, which is of Greek origin, is written in the dative case in Greek, the usual Greek form of dedicatory inscriptions upon the foreheads of devotees, or temples (e. g. Acts 17: 23), it becomes Napoleonti, which contains the fatal number 666, which is thus shown, according to the value of Greek letters:—

N A P O L E O N T I
50 1 80 70 30 5 70 50 300 10=666

Thus has wisdom been given to those of understanding to decipher the number of the beast, given by St. John in the first century of the present era.

Yours in bonds of Christian fellowship. I. S. HENRY.

PAPEETE, Sept. 29, 1899.

WHY WAS IT SO?

In or about (according to Bible chronology) the year 52 an exigency confronted the church, necessitating an assembly of apostles and elders (see Acts 15:1–29), from which we learn: 1. That the exigency was precipitant, or threatening to the peace and spiritual growth of the whole church, hence the leading officials of Christ's church were but discharging a duty in assembling, considering, and reaching a decision as a preventive to disorder, and possibly a division in the body. For God's words reflect the fact that Christ gave gifts unto men, by and through which general and local officials were authorized to coöperate in their several capacities to prevent the church from being tossed to and fro, etc., (Eph. 4: 8–16), which fact involves a necessity for an intelligent discrimination between the duties, prerogatives, etc., of these general and local officials, that there may be an intelligent coöperation between local and general officials as a preventive to schism in the body. For were it otherwise, the claim as to the verity, and therefore the imperativeness of God's word were, to say the least, invalid.

A constant study of the blighting effects of a universal apostasy attributable to a divergence from the simplicity of the truth, as it is in Christ, will, I think, prove an effective stimulus to subjugate and overcome that which might lead to a depreciation of given and accepted law as God's word reflects.

As a body we labor to convince the world as to the consistency of abiding gospel conditions; thus being brought into a relationship with God, ought we to be less zealous in a practical demonstration of our faith in those conditions for the perpetuity of this relation we claim to have obtained? For consistency is never so apparent as when we practically demonstrate a like consistency in ourselves we essay to teach others; for if we fail in this, we will be quite apt to evince a zeal not according to knowledge, in which event we might prove a hindrance, rather than a help to the body. And I incline to the opinion that a thorough understanding as to the imperativeness of present duty and a practical observance of the same will greatly tend to prevent the exhibition of a zeal not according to knowledge, and prove effective in preparing us for coming events, however grave those events.

2. Those officials assembled at the then headquarters of the church, Jerusalem, with the whole church or that portion of the church (so adjacent to the headquarters as to render their assembling practical) acted and decided for the benefit of those afar off, as for those assembled, the welfare of the whole church being involved.

3. The decision reached and imposed upon the whole church was valid, therefore imperative in the light of the fact of their being led or inspired by the Holy Ghost. (Verse 28.)

4. The narration of the above procedure affords no evidence that this assembly either met pursuant to adjournment, or adjourned to meet at a stated time which is presumptive evidence that the then existing exigency necessitated the gathering and authoritative action. And in view of this necessity, the leading officials were justified in calling the assembly. Then, too, this thought is compatible with the following: "Said conferences are to do whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time."—D. C. 17: 13. How then in view of the recognized divisions of God's moral vineyard; namely, missions, districts, and branches, each department being authorized to act according to the gifts and callings of God unto them, or by what known rule, law, or precedent are district or general conferences permissible, unless for the transaction of business which concerns the whole body? and no one of these several departments is authorized to transact, who will tell?

I am not prepared to concede that the frequent gatherings of the church in its incipient stages afford a warrant for similar gatherings as the church progresses; helps and governments being added, which was not possible in its incipiency, for were it so, the formation and recognition of governments within a government were purposeless, or so I believe, and trust the expression of one's belief may not be thought treasonable.

5. The promptness of our predecessors in being stimulated to action and fearlessly meeting the exigency, reflects some light on the reason assigned for God placing the members in the body as it has pleased him (Eph. 4: 14). Nor does the fact of their authorizing certain brethren (verses 22–25) to visit the saints scattered abroad, to tell them of the action of the Jerusalem assembly. Furnish evidence of a desire on the part of this assembly to deprive those scattered members of garanteed rights under the everlasting gospel, since none are exempt from divine injunctions.

6. These predecessors performed the part of diligent watchmen, hence blew the trumpet to apprise the church of approaching danger, making plain to their understanding the way of escape. How sensible, and what palpable evidence of God imposed diligence.

To boast of bravery may be easily done; but a practical evidence of gospel bravery may sometimes prove unpleasant to say the least. But it is not made to appear that our predecessors halted in the line of duty to consider whether its performance would please Richard or offend or vex Jonas, preferring to evidence gospel promptness in the adoption of principle as the polar star rather than evade it by the formulation and adoption of some policy for its evasion. For fearing God they evinced an indifference, as to the exhibition of any other kind of fear. How blessed are the effects of a holy boldness. O for such a boldness now and forever.

In conclusion I believe it was so because it was right to be so; therefore their procedure injured no one. And in their action we see an example worthy of imitation. If duties attaching to our several positions are God given, we do not err in their performance; but evidence of wrong doing is made visible in a failure to perform such duties in the fact of the law declaring those failing in these duties are not worthy to stand (D. C. 104: 44).

A wise mariner knows of his latitude and longitude, and by virtue of such knowledge obtainable and retainable, by a constant study of the chart, with proper observation, we are essaying to steer our frail barks over the temptuous sea of time, what of our spiritual latitude and longitude? What of our chart? Is it bedimmed, or are our visions obscured?

JAMES CAFFALL.

Letter Department.

NANAIMO, British Columbia.

Editors Herald:—It is with feelings of joy and sadness intermixed that I am impressed with, as I pen these few lines to you and all saints that may read them. Joy arises from the knowledge of the gospel and its attending blessings unto us as weak mortals of the dust. Sadness comes over me partly from the knowledge of my many failings to respond to the delightsome admonition to come up higher, and by taking into consideration the teeming hundreds of humanity that turn a listless ear and an indifference to the angelic message delivered to the world through the chosen Seer Joseph.

I came to this place in April, 1898. I tried to get the use of some of the places of worship, that I might present the gospel to the people as best we could, and according to our understanding; but, alas! our effort was fruitless. We then canvassed a few tracts, also attended the Bible class of the Methodist Church, endeavoring to draw them out in discussion sufficient to create an interest, but to no avail; they commenced to absent themselves from the class, until I was the only adult member left, with the teacher. Then I ceased going altogether, but I understand they have again formed the adult class.

I then made application for a missionary to be sent; one who could spend his whole time in the canvass of this large field, for my hands were tied, being compelled to labor for the bread that perisheth; neither did I feel equal to the task. Bro. R. C. Evans was prompt to act, and by the spirit of revelation Bro. D. MacGregor was assigned to this mission, and entered upon the duties of a missionary with a vim and determination that is sure to win for him a reward if he remains faithful. He is a qualified minister of the gospel, undaunted by the presence of Satan and powers of darkness. Go on brother.

Bro. MacGregor has already mentioned our efforts, both here and in Wellington; also his grand success in the Chilliwack region. Since his departure I made application to the city council for the use of the town hall and obtained it. I announced meetings through the papers, also posted a sign on the building; but to no avail, not one came out. I repeated the effort, but it was fruitless. I replied to an editorial article in the Nanaimo Herald, but it drew no fire. I now send you an article I got in the Nanaimo Daily Free Press. He has promised to allow me space every week, unless otherwise crowded.

Bro. MacGregor spoke of no spirit being in this place—not enough to even stir to opposition. By my mingling with all classes at my work as a miner I come in contact with many spirits that are not of God, who contend and strive for supremacy over the law of life in Christ Jesus. One of the mine officials came into my place of work, in his line of duty. He was a stranger to me, yet he knew who I was; he also was acquainted with what church I was identified. He asked me if I had not been in the habit of ministering to the sick by the laying on of hands; and asked other questions. He made statements that were true, and said he had spiritually discerned it the minute he saw me. When I became more acquainted with him, I find he is the presiding officer of the Spiritualists in this place, of whom there are large numbers. He says he has spoken in tongues and interpreted; has prophesied and it has come true; has ministered to the sick and they have been healed. He says that himself and wife have sent handkerchiefs to persons who were afflicted and they have been restored. In fact all that is promised to the saints they claim to enjoy.

How often I have pondered over the statement the Master makes relative to the elect being deceived, if it were possible. Saints, pray always, lest we enter into temptation. Truly Satan is pressing his cause, and it is startling how successful the sophistry of the mediums are in deceiving the masses. I ask all saints to remember us, as we are isolated from you and surrounded with the influence of evil.

Let us fast and pray often until General Conference convenes, peradventure the Lord may direct the initiatory step preceding the gathering. Methinks with Bro. Griffiths, that more righteousness collectively, must prevail before we resemble Zion, and I do not forget that my house is glass. God help us to make this a banner year for the Reorganization. My greeting to the Des Moines district of Iowa is that peace and unity may prevail pending the glorious millennial reunion.

Yours in the conflict unto the end,

WM. JOHNSON.

BELLEVILLE, Ill., Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—Met both Brn. Kelley and Hilliard here and at St. Louis. Hilliard spoke twice and Kelley once at Belleville. I continue to 23d, when I occupy at St. Louis for a few days, and on to Springfield, Missouri, to look after the interest of the work. Bro. E. L. spoke in St. Louis at eleven and night, Sunday. I heard him at eleven, and it was a masterpiece of good judgment and wisdom, of how to teach and practice the "what is written."

Bro. Hilliard spoke at Cheltenham mission at night. He scarcely ever fails to be the right man in the right spot.

We find some of the saints undergoing a trial here and there. I hope they will not lose sight of the real worth that should come to them out of some of these "fiery trials." It is no less burden and trial to the elder that will attempt to see that the law is kept. If faithful to the end, both will rejoice; one because he had a duty to perform, and did it; the other because it was done for their special good. All is bound to work well to the careful thinker and a lover of the truth more than self. Real good meaning people get careless at times, and leave undone many important things that would make up their reward at the end. The prophet said: "The burden of the word of the Lord" came unto him. It was a "burden" because he was asked to deliver it to a people that were living beneath their privilege, and he feared they would reject both him and the message. Thus, it is a "burden" oftentimes to presidents of branches, districts, and missions, to present the word just as it is found in the books to many of the saints.

However, there is a growing disposition in the church throughout my mission, to "come up higher." I can see bright spots ahead of us, though we are tried at times till we nearly "faint by the way." The Spirit said not long ago, "that if the elders would keep the word of wisdom, observe the law of tithing, and the other commandments, the time was not far off when they would enjoy the power of the Spirit in such a degree, that they would not need to hold long fruitless protracted efforts to gather out the honest in heart from their congregations. They would be called to hasten from one congregation to another to occupy the many doors that were opening to them, as the hastening time was at hand," etc. Why will the elders—the local elders more especially—sell their reward for a clever cigar, or a cup of "strong drink," etc., and fail to teach the Word of Wisdom and the law of tithing by practicing both as is written? What excuse can they make to the Master when he brings his reward to give to every man according to his works?

I ask what? Let every one examine himself, not his brother, and we will be able to solve the problem. My prayer is, may it be so. I. N. WHITE.

WILMINGTON, Ill., Jan 22.

Editors Herald:—I came here on Saturday the 13th. Not finding any public place for holding meetings, we decided to try preaching at residences; so beginning Sunday night at Bro. Kahler's, I have preached at various houses in the neighborhood each night, three of the times being at the homes of "outsiders." The interest manifested last October, when I assisted Bro. Moler in tent meetings here remains, and it appears as though there should be an ingathering here some time in this century. Our average congregation is above thirty, and we have had as many as fifty, and we think that good for neighborhood meetings from house to house.

I have noted that a great many Protestants are quite willing to be taught our peculiar beliefs, so far as they can hold those beliefs and remain where they are; but when we show them they ought to be elsewhere spiritually, they reject our teachings, however logical and scriptural they may be, and call us narrow minded, bigoted, or conceited, because we wish them to come our way. They are willing to allow us to add to their knowledge (?) and experience, but quite unwilling to accept and move upon a new basis of knowledge and experience.

I observed a noteworthy case of this kind some time ago. A good Protestant sister listened with open ears, eyes, and mouth to our preaching for a week, indorsing every word of it. I knew her church did not teach as we were presenting the truth, but she did not seem to see that that was any argument against her church. Finally I spoke upon the apostasy and incidentally mentioned the origin of her church. That settled it; she came to our services no more. That sermon had impressed her thus: "If he is right, I am wrong, and since I and my church must be right, he certainly is wrong with his church." But I am of the opinion that this church will continue to get along very well without those who venerate their church connection and personal religious experience above the word of God.

Well, Bro. Editor, you set your foot hard on my article on Christmas. It strikes me that when you put your editorial comment before my article, you followed the example of the father who whipped his boy for what he was going to say. But Bro. Editor, the writer is just like that boy was after the whipping; he feels all the more like saying it, and still believes as he said before, that if Latter Day Saints are to celebrate Christ's birth they should choose another time and other means than those so popular in the world. In this connection, we invite all to carefully reread the report in the letter department of Herald for January 3, of the celebration of "Christ-mass" (compositor don't leave out that hyphen between Christ and mass) at the center. That is a fair type of such entertainments among the saints; and if Christ is in them at all, he is so buried beneath worldliness, "papers, pins, popcorn, candy sacks, prickly boughs, empty baskets, pecks of dust, books, dry goods, and a big tree" (the latter borrowed from the heathen) that it requires more discernment of spirit than I possess to find him. Let us quote the closing paragraph of that report:—

To summarize, youthful appetites were appeased, and the wishes of the patriotic and pathetic, the festive and the funny, and the pious and worshipful were all gratified; and as we reached the open air, we seemed to hear again the melodious strain, "Glory to God in the Highest."

I would suggest that when God is to be glorified by the satisfaction of youthful appetites, that the home or public eating house is the proper place for that, that those who have a surplus of patriotism to dispose of, go to the Philippines and fight, or join the throng of politicians, who are howling anti-expansion; that those who have a special yearning for the pathetic, follow Clara Barton or go to a funeral, that the devotees of the festive and the funny go to the comic opera. Then the desires of the truly pious and worshipful may be the better satisfied in the house of God. And it is my honest opinion that when these other classes "go to their own place," the church will choose other means if not another time of celebrating the birth of the Savior. In conclusion let me ask, How many elders' families could be supported for a year by the money the saints put into an hour's entertainment on the 25th of last December? And which is more important, the preaching of Christ's gospel in all the world, or the appropriate (?) celebration of his birthday?

Your brother,

ADAM J. KECK.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 19.

Editors Herald:—Utah Mormonism has no added charms for us through what we have heard and observed during the debate (?) between Elder E. Jensen, of Logan, Utah, and Elder M. H. Bond, of Providence, Rhode Island, representing the Reorganized Church. The city of Boston has not been converted to either church, as they did not turn out to hear; neither did the press inform them, as they have very little use for our claims. The friends and converts of Mr. Jensen were very conspicuous by their absence, as they were not informed of the debate, as "they are grounded in the faith," as their elder informed us when asked why they were not present. O, these guileless, unostentatious representatives of Utah's paradise—so "umble," are they, after the Uriah Heap pattern! When arranging for the debate, introducing propositions, etc., there was to be nothing of a personal character of course. "There is no need of signing propositions; I presume there will be no trouble," etc., etc., in that bland, smooth tone and gentlemanly exterior characteristic of a Utah elder when upon Josephite territory.

Now this was just as thin as a bridal veil to the searching light of discernment granted by our heavenly Father to those who are trying to heed the counsel of his Son who said, "take heed that no man deceive you." Well, this veil fell off during the debate and revealed the spirit of Brighamism into which these elders have been most assuredly baptized.

The question of succession was the only one touched by Elder Jensen, and he harped upon that one string from beginning to close of debate, taking B. H. Roberts' position of the Twelve being next authority to the President, hence Brigham Young the legal and rightful heir to the throne he occupied.

Elder Jensen clung to that part of paragraph 11, section 104, Doctrine and Covenants, which reads: "The twelve traveling counselors are called to be twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world: thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned." He continually ignored the twelfth paragraph, which reads: "The twelve are a traveling presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews."

Elder Bond clearly defined the difference between a Standing High Council as represented by the Presidency, and a Traveling High Council as represented by the Twelve Apostles. He also showed by paragraph 14 that the High Councils in the stakes of Zion are equal in authority in the affairs of the church in all their decisions, to the Presidency or Traveling High Council. The calling and setting apart of Joseph to the Presidency was antagonized by Jensen dwelling particularly upon the sixteen years between the prophet's death and the Reorganization; contrasting the scattered condition of the members who constituted the "Josephite" church, and the church in Utah, who were united and who showed their loyalty to God and the prophet by their fruits; temple building; baptisms for their dead; increase of numbers; power, etc. This was just the kind of text that suited Elder Bond. He had sufficient material on hand from their own books and other authentic sources to show what their fruits had been. Myron did not spare them, but he gave facts, if their own works are reliable.

Elder Jensen made no reply whatever, but read extracts of newspaper clippings as gar-

bled and as unlike the articles themselves as anything could possibly be. Whenever there was a paragraph that spoke of their industry, thrift, etc., this was dissociated from what preceded it, or what followed, while in the same article it would lay bare some of Utah's most devilish work, making strong contrast between the now, since Gentile enlightenment has made advancement there, and the days under the ruling of Brigham Young. Elder Bond turned all this to good account, and the saints who attended and heard both sides, and the few outside attendants, were able to see who had the facts and whose history would best stand the light of investigation.

Our elders need have no fear whatever of meeting Utah elders; but if they are like Elder Jensen they won't debate, for they are afraid of the light. They may accept your challenge if it is made in a public place, where there are a few of their own people; but they will dodge the issues under discussion and kill time.

The debate was held in Paine Memorial Hall, Boston, where Elder F. M. Sheehy met one of Colonel Ingersoll's apostles in debate some years ago. The Boston saints are not ashamed to recognize either F. M. Sheehy or M. H. Bond as representatives and defenders of this grand cause of latter days. Elder John Smith acted as chairman, as there was none other responded when an independent chairman was asked for.

CLEAR LAKE, Ind., Jan. 20.

Editors Herald:—We are very busy. If the saints will consider the work to be done in a branch of one hundred and fifty-seven members, and four points to hold sacrament meetings at, a distance of six, eleven, and twenty miles from home, I think they will conclude we are busy, with district president's duties added. Such is the condition, and only one priest and one teacher to help. But we have been ably assisted by our priest, J. Emerick, and our teacher, D. B. Teeters, who have been attending to branch meetings in our absence. We have also been assisted by the brethren of other branches. Bro. Granger, of Coldwater, Michigan, comes over and helps us some times; and Bro. Stroh, of same place, came over last Sabbath and met us at California, Michigan, and instructed and encouraged the saints at our regular appointment for sacrament at that place. We occupied in the evening.

We expect him to join us this week at our home church on Wednesday evening and from here to Flint, Indiana, over Sabbath, the 28th, then to South Scott over Sabbath, February 4. We also expect Bro. Granger ere long to take the field. He has been detained at home for some time getting ready for more effectual work.

We have been nearly over the district and expect to get over all before our spring conference, if the Lord so will. We have been visiting some isolated points where there are no branch organizations, and will continue to so do as fast as we can, believing such ones have a right to claim our attention as well as branches where local officers are appointed to look after the flock.

We will try to visit and continue to expound, exhort, and advise all to be faithful to the end. There is so much to do that we feel the time is short to do it.

Yours in bonds,

G. A. SMITH.

WESTERN, Neb., Jan. 20.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference convened at Wilber, Saline County, Nebraska, on Sunday, the 14th, and held over the 15th. We had a good, peaceful, and interesting conference, though not so largely attended as we would liked to have seen; no general authorities of the church present, only the local ministry. Bro. Forscutt was prevented from meeting with us, on account of the critical condition of Sr. Forscutt, she being prostrated at the time with a very severe attack of pneumonia.

After the conference Bro. W. M. Self and I came here, and are holding meetings four miles northwest of the town of Western, near the residence of Bro. W. H. Brolliar. We have had a fair interest thus far, but our meetings have not been so largely attended. The condition of the roads through the country has made them almost impassable, which prevented many from attending conference as well.

We will remain here for a time, or as long as the interest seems to justify. Our conference adjourned to meet at Nebraska City, in May.

I understand there are no less than eight Utah elders at work in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Your brother,

J. W. WALDSMITH.

JACKSON, Wash., Jan. 16.

Editors Herald:—It makes no difference what you think; it will go down to history, "Reflections on Necessity for Truth, Both in Theory and in Practice," as the first editorial in the twentieth century, and I wish that all would read it and take it to heart. "Men cannot labor for the praise or commendation of their fellows and be real genuine, true in service of God." "Such as labor for praise love themselves." But that doesn't forbid us to give praise, and I say that "sermon" is worth a year's subscription.

To whom is praise due? to you? well, yes; but it is due to the Spirit that prompted you. "Do we love to go only among those who love us, who especially please and pander to us, whose position is popular in society, who can entertain sumptuously and minister to our comfort—without regard to the poor?" Surely we love to go in good company; who will deny it? It is better to be in company where we can feel inferior, rather than superior, thereby do we learn to come up higher. But the poor! See there is our duty. The Holy Spirit is the same in the poor man's heart as in the senator's. They that are below us in standing, help them to our level, while we also strive upward. If they hunger for knowledge, teach them; if for bread, do help them. The poor who come to Jesus, and receive his Spirit will not be lazy; there will be that same wish to be more perfect, to overcome every weakness in their nature and to be useful in life. Yes, if we will but follow as the Spirit leads, we will some day reach a millennium where there will be no poor, but all equal.

That is right, brethren, do stir us up, or we may go to sleep.

Yours for "truth in practice,"

PEDER J. BEBE.

BURNHAM, Mo., Jan. 19.

Editors Herald:—I wrote you last June, telling of the prosperous outlook for the Pomona branch. Since that time three more have been added to our number—Sr. Randall and two of our Sunday school boys. Our church was dedicated at the quarterly conference, December last; but I am afraid that his satanic majesty will once more take charge of our branch. His cloven foot was plainly seen at our business meeting a few nights ago, when our faithful and worthy brother, J. B. Graham, resigned the presidency of the branch. Our prayer is that God will reward him for his faithful labors at this place. His two and a half years as president here has been trying on him, as the wickedness of the branch was terrible when he took hold of it. We have brethren here who are seldom or ever seen at prayer or testimony meeting; but when a business meeting takes place, they are there, and you would actually think that their salvation hinged on the Book of Rules. Then there are others whose conduct at business meetings would make any Latter Day Saint blush with shame. Then we have others who are such sticklers, that if matters at business meetings are not transacted in accordance with their ideas, they don't ask the president of the branch for information, nor the president of the district, nor the missionary in charge, but they must step over all and ask the apostles for their information.

Yours for the truth, and nothing but the truth, in Christ Jesus.

W. R. STEELE.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 20.

Editors Herald:—The work in Southern California is on the move. We have opened up Redlands, Riverside, Cucamonga, and Santa Ana, and next week we hope to reach Pasadena. A number have been baptized. Brn. Chatburn, Anderson, and Barmore are all at work and doing well. Bro. Dana writes encouragingly of his work up in the Santa Marie country with Bro. Keeler. A number were to be baptized shortly. We expect a large attendance at our coming district conference on February 16-18. Bro. Griffiths will be in attendance. Will obtain railroad rates. Weather lovely, but rain holding off unusually long.

Permit me a word more as to the resolution that obtained at the last conference of the Southern California district. The same was published in the conference minutes of the Herald and Ensign. By solicitation, a copy of the resolution was sent to Bro. Ordway, he volunteering to send the same to the various branch presidents for consideration and action. Not having the time and means at our disposal, we acquiesced. Bro. Ordway sent this resolution and another one to each branch president. The resolutions stand upon their merits. They have nothing in common. The passage of one is not dependent upon the other.

I am particularly interested in seeing the priesthood of this church stand as one man on things vital, and that perfect confidence shall be maintained in all departments of church work. No better plan presents itself than a council where each and all may be free to express themselves along lines material. This is the reason why the resolution was submitted. It is to be hoped that the presentation of this resolution to branch presidents will not provoke any unnecessary agitation. If the saints would like to see a council of the priesthood, they can so express themselves. If they do not, then they can ignore altogether or vote no, and no harm is done. The only point involved in the resolution is this: Is it time that there should be a council of the priesthood?

I trust that no one will be prejudiced to vote against this resolution because of any antipathy that they may have against the other. Each resolution stands on its merits. As one I feel that the gathering will not be forced upon the people, but rather God and the leaders await the expressed desire of the people and the moment that the people are anxious and ready for it to be brought about, at that moment the loving Father will move upon his servants to effect it. Am I wrong in believing that the saints are willing to move forward a step?

This resolution is not intended to convey to the saints that we have not confidence in the leaders of this church, but rather, by its general adoption, to convey to the Presidency that we have, and that we are pledged to uphold them in the carrying out of the law of God.

Yours for the truth and the right,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

VALLEY JUNCTION, Wis., Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—We appreciate reading the news from the different parts of the world, as to how the gospel wins its way to the minds and hearts of honorable, honest men and women; and as we like to hear from others, perhaps they would be pleased to hear of the progress of the work in Valley Junction. We have generally large congregations, with a good interest manifest; a large, orderly Sunday school, and a fine Religio of about sixty members, half or more of the members are not members of the church. We take the Autumn Leaves and study and carry out the lessons contained in them for the society, and one pleasing feature we note is often hearing the statement, Well, this is the best Religio, or Sunday school, or sermon we have attended or heard, which means to us progression along these lines of work.

We have a nice, neat, snug church building, though we owe quite an amount on it. We are glad to have such a substantial building to worship in. Our people are and have been working every way to meet our first payment, which is due next month, February, but we are short of the means. And we think in this case it is no harm to ask for a little donation from those who are interested in the advancement of God's work. A very small amount from each, and quite a number giving, would ease the burden on us; and we are assured the givers would be blessed of the Lord. Some have helped already, for which we are very thankful. If any should send us a little help, send it to Elder A. L. Whiteaker, Valley Junction, Wisconsin, who is treasurer of our building committee. This brother has worked, sacrificed, and planned in every way to build the church, and get it paid for. I will close for this time, praying that God may bless the Herald in its noble mission work, with all saints throughout the land.

WOODBINE, Iowa, Jan. 13.

Editors Herald:—I have secured three hundred circulars like the enclosed for distribution here, and it will be published in both papers here next week. Both papers published over a column article last week, one of which articles I send you under separate cover. Close a series of two weeks' meetings here Sunday night. A better interest on the part of the membership is shown than a year ago, but the non-members seemed to be fixed in their indifference and opposition, although much prejudice is removed by the Roberts episode, several acknowledging that it has shown our true position more plainly than anything that has hitherto transpired.

Begin a series of meetings at Persia next Tuesday night. J. F. MINTUN.

[The circular referred to is a brief digest of the history and views of the church, quite clear and expressive, by Bro. Mintun.—Ed.]

TOLEDO, Ohio, Jan. 24.

Editors Herald:—I am trying to advance the truth. I went to Conneautville conference last fall and spoke two or three times after conference, and then went to McGraw and labored some, also at Excelsior union church. The people were real friendly to me, and I had a good time while there, and feel good was done and seed sown that will bear fruit in the future.

Brn. Robley and I. M. Smith are much thought of in these parts, for the good work they have done, which is encouraging, and which I was glad to hear. While there Bro. Robley handed me a dispatch from my wife, saying my little boys were very sick, and to come home; so I went home, stayed till after holidays, and now I am here. But the work is in poor condition at this place.

There is a preachers' union here and they started out to hunt the Mormons, as they call them, and did not find what they expected when they started out, and Bro. Ulrich got a little hearing in the Toledo Bee. I will send it to you. It is a little late. But I send it as soon as I got it. I hope the time will come when people will see us as we are.

Hopefully,

Editors Herald:—Sharing with you the desire to commend whatever will be promotive of truth I urge the saints who desire further light upon the Sabbath question to purchase and carefully read Elder Albert Haws' "Sabbatarian Theories a Delusion." A small, handy, pocket volume of 113 pages, it contains much of interest to those who hold to the idea of a Sabbath as still binding on the Christ-followers, yet believe that the Seventh-day Sabbath observances under the law are abolished. Twenty-five cents to the author, No. 922, Third Street, Oakland, California, will secure the little treasure.

Yours respectfully,

MARK H. FORSCUTT.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Dec. 16.

Editors Herald:—A few weeks ago I got a letter from Bro. J. W. Peterson who was in Hikueru, that he had been forbidden by the judge to preach by an intrepreter, upon the claim that he was thus teaching the natives the English language. Upon receipt of this intelligence I immediately communicated with the American consul, and protested against that act of the judge, as it was interfering with the rights of free speech of the American citizen in a friendly nation.

The consul at once forwarded my letter and protest to the then acting governor, who replied that as the governor would be in Papeete in less than a week he would not interfere in the matter until he came.

After the arrival of the governor the consul called upon him and presented the case to him. He at once liberated Bro. Peterson, and said he was at perfect liberty to preach in his own meeting houses in English or any other language, but he had been informed that Bro. Peterson's offense was in preaching on the streets, which is contrary to law. I think this statement is incorrect, and that the governor has been misinformed, but am not sure. However, Bro. John is at liberty again, and we are wondering where the enemy will strike next.

Seeing that these people are starting in afresh to make us trouble I have concluded to stay here until after conference to help what I can during conference; for we expect quite a number here from the other islands, and the enemy will surely try to annoy and disturb.

We will try to get off on the mail vessel which will leave here about April 15, as we expect our conference will adjourn by the 10th or 11th.

Emma and I are fairly well and all things are moving on as usual.

We expect some forty or fifty of the brethren here in January or February to build the conference house, and otherwise prepare for conference. In bonds,

J. F. BURTON.

Editors Herald:—I have carried bodily ailments from my birth, but have grown stronger since I was baptized. I was also afflicted with a tapeworm, with which I suffered much. I was treated nine different times for it and by leading physicians, but all failed to get the head; and I had been in the church near a year, when I began to think I ought to be obedient to God's command and ask to be healed; and yet I did not quite believe I would be healed, for I did not expect God to ever take away my afflictions. But I wished to obey his command.

We are told to fast and pray. Well, I laid by my luxuries for about a month, when Bro. G. H. Hilliard came to this place; yet I did not think I would be healed, but thought I would grow stronger, which I did from that very hour. I ate a hearty dinner and felt well and realized no more of the trouble. That has been more than a year ago; have been on the mend ever since. I gained forty pounds in flesh and everything has seemed to change for the better, and I thank my heavenly Father for his goodness, and I wish to serve him the rest of my days.

My companion is not a member; one brother and self are all that came out of my mother's family. I often think the Lord does take his people out as the shepherd pulls his sheep out of the lion's mouth, two legs and an ear.

Those I loved best and were dearest to me were those with whom I wished to share the good things of the kingdom, but to my disappointment they were the very ones to turn against me and are my enemies. May God protect all the saints from the sorrows which I have to bear, is my earnest prayer.

A branch is organized here of about eighteen members which meets at different homes. I do not take any paper, but someone gives me one once in awhile. I read and give it to someone that I know likes to read it. I would advise people never to destroy or burn the church papers, for they don't make very good fires anyway. I tried that myself when in the dark.

Your sister in love of good and truth,

MRS. C. H. LUFKIN.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Keep on praying—
Be not afraid
To seek God's aid
He knows, indeed,
Thine every need.

SWEETWATER, Texas.

To the Mothers' Home Column:—I address a few lines, as it had been rather neglected, and I feel like I am one of the tardy ones. I have been blessed in reading its pages many times, and given very little in return, for which I plead no excuse except inability in writing properly. In Sr. Burton's jots I have been made to see why she could break up her family and leave her dear children and go into far distant lands, when they needed a mother's care. Yes, I have wondered why it was; but now I see, her Savior ever with her to give her strength. Am sorry her story is closed, and hope it will come out in book form. It gives strength and comfort to each other to hear of the blessings received, especially the sisters whose companions are in the mission field. We are on the outskirts, with no saints but my own family, and not one who inquires for the true way; but God the Father remembers us, and we realize his watchcare, and trust he is guiding our footsteps. We are doing what our hands find to do.

I wish to relate one of the many blessings received, which happened a few years back, while my husband was away in the mission field, and hope it will strengthen some one.

One morning I was suffering with my head, it seemed it was pressed to the pillow so I could not raise it. I exclaimed in anguish, Oh, my mother! At the sound of my voice I opened my eyes, and a personage stood at my bedside. I looked up and said "O, mother, he is killing me!" She looked at me and smiled, and turning, walked away, crossed the room, and passed into the next. As she passed out of sight, I thought of my head, it was better.

Now I do not think the dead can come and go at their own will; but I do believe my own dear mother, although she had passed from this life nearly fifty years before, was sent as an Angel of Mercy to her suffering child.

O, what a comfort this has been to me in my lonely hours, to know we are not alone, and it will be till I am called to dwell with those gone on before! Now with the deepest feelings of humility I ask an interest in the prayers of the Prayer Union, that I may be found faithful. I also ask their prayers for my husband, that if it is the Lord's will he may be healed of catarrh of the head and blindness of one eye. He believes his eye will be restored, but will not let a doctor touch it or take medicine. He so much desires to do the Master's bidding, but is much hindered. I, too, am afflicted; pray the Lord to heal us, if it is his righteous will, that we may be more useful.

Your sister in the faith,

SOPHIA WIGHT.

FANNING, Kansas.

Dear Sister:—I have been thinking of writing to our Home Column for a long time, to thank our many sisters who write such motherly and good advice. Can truly say I have received much comfort and help, both in the Home Column and Autumn Leaves. I think the Daughters of Zion Department good. Am glad to hear of the noble work they are doing. We are so scattered here in this branch; most of us live in the country and it would be hard to get together, or I would be much in favor of having one organized here, as there are so many young mothers who need the assistance of the older ones, yet we receive much benefit from the church papers. We go to Sabbath school almost every Sabbath. Since we got the Zion's Hope at Sabbath school the children are more anxious to go, and that includes myself. I gain many new thoughts by reading the Hope. We all greatly enjoy reading the stories.

Being young in years when I lost my mother, I was left to make the best of life I could; but not till I became a mother myself did I realize what a great loss a mother was. O, the responsibility that is resting on a mother! O, the loneliness, the anxiety, the care, no one can realize until they are placed in such position themselves. Though I do not complain or think my lot hard, for I think motherhood one of the Lord's grandest gifts for a true woman. What I desire is to try to do myself and children equal justice; to teach the children manners and respect toward parents. We must be the example ourselves. O, how closely we are watched! Almost every day I can see some of my own actions in the children, if I watch them or listen to them while at play, and as I do so, I think how careful we should be of our own actions, realizing that they are forming characters that will last them through life, knowing as we do, the Lord has said his work must go on, and will. What the young generation has to pass through with we know not, but hope we will ever be found doing what we can for the cause we love. As I think of eternity, O what is this life, with its few short years of pleasure, and the many sins all over the earth? And as I think of the few of God's covenant people, it makes me rejoice and praise him that I have been so favored as to live in this day and age in which we do.

Dear sister, I have been noticing the Home Column lately, and see so few of the sisters writing. I thought perhaps the older ones are silent now for a while, waiting to hear from the younger element of the church. Feeling so, I was impressed to write, though I feel my weakness. Knowing the Lord will bless us if we but put forth the effort in the right direction, I remain your sister, MARY J. HOPKINS.

TAYLORVILLE, Ill., Jan. 8.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I will try and write a few lines, which I have often thought of doing, but thinking I could not write of much interest, would not write. I have been asked several times why I did not. Now I will venture this evening to tell you of the work here. There are seventeen saints; Bro. Abram Jones a priest, and Bro. Thomas Lilly a deacon. We have Sunday school on Sunday morning; prayer and testimony meeting on Sunday afternoon and Wednesday night; and preaching on Sunday evenings, all at our house, as we have no public place to meet in, and people are so prejudiced it is hard to get a place. We have organized a sewing society and Prayer Union, and meet every Thursday at Sr. Lilly's. Have not done anything towards sewing yet, but hope we will soon have things in working order.

It is my desire to see this work go on, and also to be a helper, although I have not been in this work very long—it will be four years the 29th of February. I thank God for the knowledge that he has given me, and the many testimonies that I have received. He has comforted me in sad bereavement, and has been with me in trials and temptations.

Dear sisters, no matter how hard the trials seem, O what comfort comes to our depressed soul when our trust and confidence is in our heavenly Father! I rejoice in this latter-day work, although it was hard for me at first to leave the ways and lusts of the world, but I thank my God for bringing me out of darkness into light; and now that I may still live faithful and learn more and more of our Savior's teachings, that I may still come up higher and higher, until I reach that state of perfection is my prayer daily, and that I may see my three children in the kingdom. My husband has only been in four months. O, that they all may come, that we may meet our two little ones that have gone; one was eight and the other six years old. Though we often miss their pattering feet and their little voices hushed so still, yet we know they calmly sleep within the Savior's fold, and can safely say, Sleep on, dear ones; sleep on, to arise in glory at the first resurrection day. I love to read the Home Column, and often wish that more would write. There are interesting letters, and I learn a deal by reading. I don't feel this has much of interest, although it may be welcome to some. I hope so, anyway. It is my desire to do good unto all, and this being my first attempt, will try and do better next time. As ever your sister in the one faith, ALICE M. SIMPSON.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

SOME time ago we mailed an installment containing the reports of the Woodbine and the Reynolds, Iowa, reunions, which has no doubt been lost in transit. This we very much regret, for they were reports of interest. The report of the Woodbine reunion was furnished us by Bro. J. F. Mintun, who had the Sunday school work in charge. He reported a large amount of work done. Circumstances made the work a little discouraging at first, but earnest and persistent effort which always characterizes Bro. Mintun's work in any line, caused the discouragements to disappear, and the whole affair took on a more pleasing aspect. At one time the Lord saw fit to speak through the gift of tongues and reprove the indifferent and to encourage the laboring ones. The General Superintendent dropped in for the last two days of Sunday school work and enjoyed with the rest the results of their efforts. We feel that much good was done.

Sr. Roxanna Gaylord, who had the Sunday school work in charge at the Runnels reunion, reported that the work was new and laborers more or less scarce, but that they held some very interesting sessions of Sunday school work. The work is new in this reunion. And we might say so, too, is the reunion itself. It is always harder to carry on the work in a new place, or at a new reunion, than at a place where it has been previously planted and has won the commendation of the saints there. We wish the reunion abundant success. So too with the Sunday school and Religio work connected therewith. May the Lord "bless the sower and the seed."

WHY do we not hear from you? We address now the negligent district superintendents, to whom we addressed a circular letter late last November. Did you not receive the letter? Some one did, for it was not returned to me. We need the information that it would bring, and cannot well complete our work as we like without it. Please attend to it yet. Never too late to begin to do well. We know that the time of many of our workers is very limited, and that opportunity for work other than that required to provide our daily bread is sometimes sadly wanting. But it does seem that if we would, we could appropriate some few moments each day to our "labor of love," and in those "few moments each day" we could accomplish a great deal, if we would.

A brother who was a coal miner, asked us at one time how a man that worked in the mine from seven o'clock in the morning till six in the evening could find time to get his Sunday school lesson and prepare any other work asked of him. To some it may seem that he has a long day to work, and that he would need the time outside thereof for rest. His day is not yet as long as that of the average farmer, many of whom will prepare their lessons and do an almost endless amount of work, and go from a few to many miles to attend the Sunday services. We are one of that class, and know about what their hours are. Through the cropping season they will arise before five o'clock in the morning, and it is often eight in the evening before they can say their work is done, and yet they are as a class as well prepared for their Sunday work as any other. We have in mind a brother who does his own work on the farm and regularly superintends two Sunday schools on Sunday, beside other church work in the branch. Another brother, who was a bookkeeper carried his regular work through the week and visited or conducted two or three sessions of Sunday school on Sunday. Two others working together, one a teacher and the other a proofreader, would carry their regular work and go from ten to thirty miles and superintend or care for one and sometimes two schools on a Sunday. A sister who has the cares of the wife and mother in her own household, superintended a district for years and visited many distant schools, beside conducting a school in her own home. She also did considerable circular letter work, to keep up the life and interest in her district. Still another: a farmer carried on his own work in the field, superintended the local school, and also his district, and was at the same time district secretary. He visited various schools in his district, and attended five reunions in the interest of Sunday school work, and five district conventions in one year.

And now to return to our brother, the coal miner. He had all his time in the evenings in which to do the work that will rest a laboring man, reading, studying, praying. What do we need more? This is not so true of our brothers and sisters in the offices, who need to get a little physical exercise outside of office hours. We need not carry the discussion farther. There is a principle that is true in all cases. You may find an exception now and then, but they are few. Anyone who is determined to find time for church work will find it.

Think again, of the workers of whom we have written above. They are not the only ones of the type, but rather a few out of the many. If they can find time to do what they have done for years, cannot you find time to get your lessons, to prepare your work as officers of your school, and to coöperate with the officers of your district, or of the general association, to make the work improve? We feel sure that you will answer, Yes.

May the Lord help us to utilize in a good work time that otherwise we would idle away, or spend in ways not so commendable.

IT is easier to consecrate our sentiments to Christ than our full capacity for service. It requires so much less effort to think than to perform. When the actual work of the church needs doing, there is apt to be a lack of physical energy at its command. Most churches and Sunday schools have to lament a dearth of fresh, buoyant energy to encounter the physical fatigue which certain kinds of Christian work entail. There are plenty of planners, but few performers. The need is that people who profess a willingness to consecrate their bodies to Christ as their reasonable service, shall realize that this means bodies in motion for Christ, arms and legs whose muscles are held in readiness to run the errands and perform the manual labor the church needs. Consecrated bodies are at a premium. Saints in repose are not so urgently in demand.—Sunday School Times.

Professor Charles H. Briggs, of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, promises to be as great a disturber in the Episcopal Church as he was in the Presbyterian. Already his sermons and writings are provoking dissension, and the church papers are lining up for a battle royal in 1901 when the annual meeting of the highest administrative body of the church will meet at San Francisco.

A PRAYER.

Lord help me to repent
And put away my sin;
O cleanse me, Lord, from evil thoughts
And give me peace within.

O, help me, Lord, to love
And all thy laws obey;
And may it be a pleasure, Lord,
To walk the narrow way.

O, take me out of self;
I trust only in thee
To take me through this weary life
And through eternity.

Lord let thy grace abound
In this poor heart of mine,
That I may walk in wisdom's ways
And keep thy laws divine.

O may my life be such
That I may win thy smile!
And let me hear thy mild voice say
I am a worthy child.

And may I ever feel
In temptation's trying hour
That thou art ever near me, Lord,
To break the tempter's power.

And, when all struggles o'er,
My earthly work is done,
O may I hear the Father say
My child, come home, come home!

GENERAL SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

District Secretaries and Secretaries of Schools not in Districts of the General Sunday School Association; Notice:—

For fear the letters which are addressed to you personally, will not reach you, and in order to bear in mind the necessity for making a prompt report of your district or school, ample time to have it incorporated in my general report to the association, you will kindly take notice of the following instructions:—

It is expected that the reports from the local schools made to the last district convention prior to the General Convention at Lamoni in April, will be the basis on which you make your general report, and as it is at this district convention that delegates are selected to represent your district at the General Association meeting, it is necessary, if you have not yet notified your local secretaries, to do so now, and send blank reports to them requesting them to have them filled out properly without fail and sent to you. You will then please compile your district report, and send it to me at once, or not later than March 20th. Also send a list of the delegates chosen to represent your district. The constitution provides for the election of officers for the ensuing year at this meeting, and you will therefore kindly insert the full names and addresses of the officers thus selected, on the report. Please see to it that this is not overlooked, as these officers are "ex officio" members of the General Convention, and unless you furnish their names, we do not know them.

Secretaries of schools not members of district associations will send their annual report to me, also list of delegates and names of officers, similar to the manner above described. W. N. ROBINSON, Gen. Sec.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo.

EASTERN MISSION.

To the Ministry Under General Conference Appointment in the Eastern Mission:—

Please forward your reports for the last year, giving items required, such as number of sermons preached, baptisms, etc., with any suggestions relative the work you may think to be important and useful, so that a full report may be prepared, by the missionaries in charge, for the General Conference.

Where there are elders in charge of certain "fields of labor," (and there are not many, as it was impractical to appoint them,) they will please secure the reports of those reporting to them and arrange and send them in. All reports should be in by the 1st of March. Direct all communications to Wm. H. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa.

WM. H. KELLEY,
JOSEPH LUFF,
Missionaries in Charge.

CREDENTIALS OF DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

District officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts in the coming General Conference, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate the organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed to fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the district appointing, with name of district and place and date of holding of conference, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary.

Attention is called to the following, adopted at last General Conference:—

"Resolved, that the Secretary be and is hereby authorized to devise and have printed a blank form of delegate credentials; and that a copy or copies be sent to each district or branch entitled to representation, prior to the convening of each General Conference."

Said blank credential forms are now being mailed to district secretaries. Any who fail to receive them will be supplied promptly, on request, with address.

R. S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

Dear Saints of Northeast Missouri District:—I wish to call your attention once more at the commencement of another year, thanking you for the sacrifices you have made the past year in observing the law of tithing and free will offering, trusting your love for God's cause will continue during the present and closing year of the nineteenth century. I am happy to inform you, without flattering, that after taking all things in consideration, especially the six months' strike among the miners in Bevier and Higbee, the two largest branches in the district, it is somewhat astonishing to me that you have done so well. This is very evident that God is in this work, and that he blesses his children when they are trying to observe his laws and commandments. When comparing the last year with the previous, I find the receipts away beyond any other year since the organization of the district. This is encouraging.

Go on in faith, ye saints, go on,
Fear not, the cause is good.

But notwithstanding that the last year has proved to be a blessed one financially, I am inclined to be doubtful as to whether we have done all that we could have done in tithes and offerings, as I am not a competent judge in this matter. I leave it for each saint to be his own judge, as every one is steward over his own goods, and responsible to God only how he disposes that which God has entrusted to his hands. I am confident, however, of some that they have the will and desire to observe what God requires, but are not able; nothing is required of such. And in case any are in need, the Lord has provided in his law that they should be cared for out of the means or tithing paid by the saints. How many are willing to observe God's holy law. The promise is on condition to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded. How many are willing to observe the law of tithing this year? If there are any who have not started to pay tithing, begin now, and try the Lord according to the Prophet Malachi (chapter three) and see if he will not open the windows of heaven and pour his blessings upon you.

We have a little band of workers in Bevier that is worthy of imitation, entitled the Bevier Sisters' Sewing Society. They never come out on strike, but continue sewing away, with the only object in view to help the latter-day work. Not only aid the work locally, but generally. They doubled their offerings to the Bishop last year, as compared with the previous year. Don't get weary, sisters, of well doing; you shall reap if you faint not.

A word to those that hold back their little mites, because they think they are small. Don't forget the widow's mite. The Lord judges our hearts and not our outward show. If you have a nickel, or a dime, to help the good work along, hand it over to the solicitors appointed in various places through the district. Bro. W. C. Chapman is the proper one to receive funds at Higbee, Bro. E E. Petre at Pollock, Bro Edward Gibson at Salt River, Bro. M. A. Trotter at Carrolton, and Sr. Rosa Cochran at Boonville. All those solicitors have worked faithfully in the past, and are commended to the confidence of the saints in their localities. Perhaps Bro. Trotter has moved to the Pacific Slope, as he intended. If Bro. Trotter has left, the few saints there will please forward to my address below.

I wish to call your attention, saints, when sending money to my address. Don't forget my initials and number of Post Office box, as others are receiving my mail, sometimes with money orders.

Before I close I feel like impressing upon every family in the district to get the Herald. I believe it the duty of every family in the church for many reasons; not only an aid to the church financially, but also spiritually. We learn the movements of the church, enabling us to act accordingly. Those families who are not getting the Herald in this district are ignorant of this appeal, hence are not prepared to comply with it. Let us all put our shoulders to the gospel wheel and unitedly help to bring forth the redemption of God's people, is my prayer.

SECOND QUORUM OF PRIESTS.

The officers of the Second Quorum of Priests desire that each member of said quorum will send in a written report to the secretary not later than the 20th of March; and it is desired that EVERY ONE will respond to this request, as many of the quorum have not been heard from for many years. Please be prompt, brethren. Address: Lamoni, Iowa.

URGENT NOTICE.

We are in especial need of items which will enable us to write brief but accurate biographies of the following men who were among the first members of the Quorum of the Twelve in the Reorganization:—Reuben Newkirk, David Newkirk, George White, John Cunningham, Daniel B. Rasey.

Anyone who knows anything in regard to them, such as time or place of birth, early life, religious experience, especially with the Latter Day Saints, time and place of baptism, time and place of ordination or ordinations, ministerial work, time and place of death, etc., will confer a favor by addressing the undersigned as soon as possible.

HEMAN C. SMITH,
Church Historian.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 30, 1900.

NOTICES.

There will be a priesthood meeting succeeding the conference at Arlington, Iowa. The subjects to be discussed are: Oblation and consecration; the judgment; the gathering. What about the lesser officials of the church agitating the minds of the saints over matters where the Presidency and Twelve have not fully decided? What about the ministry indulging in games such as dominoes, checkers, etc. After tithing has been paid on all that we possess, in what does free will offerings consist? I hope the brethren will study on the subjects.

J. R. SUTTON.

BORN.

SKANK.—To Bro. Fred and Sr. Ethel Skank, of Henderson, Iowa, October 22, 1899, a daughter. Blessed by Elders H. Kemp and I. M. Smith, and named Vera Gladys.

ROBERTS.—To Bro. Charles and Sr. Lucy Roberts, of Tabor, Iowa, May 6, 1899, a daughter. Blessed January 5, 1900, by Elders H. Kemp and William Gaylord, named Blanche Anna.

MARRIED.

MORANT—RICHARDS.—September 17, 1899, at North Platte, Nebraska, Mr. Hay George Samuel Morant and Miss Jessie Richards were married on Sunday morning at seven o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, by her father, J. C. Richards, who is a priest in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. After the ceremony, which was a very brief one, an elaborate wedding breakfast was served. Only relatives and a few intimate friends were present. Some very nice wedding presents were received. Mr. and Mrs. Morant left on the morning train for the exposition at Omaha, where they will spend a few days. The bride is the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Richards, and is a very charming young lady. The groom is a popular cattle man, who has made his home in Lincoln County for a number of years.

DIED.

WARNOCK.—At Farmington, Iowa, Mary Warnock, whose maiden name was Scott, departed this life January 16, 1900, aged 91 years, 2 months, and 2 days. She was born November 14, 1808, in County Armagh, Ireland. When ten years of age she came to Canada with her father's family, where she grew to womanhood. On July 19, 1833, she was united by marriage to William Warnock, who preceded her to rest 2 years, 11 months, and 4 days, in his ninety-sixth year. Grandma Warnock (the endearing name by which she was known) was the mother of eleven children, eight of whom preceded father and mother to the spirit world; and three—Robert, Sarah, and Susan—remain to bear the burden of sorrow that now rests on the home. She was reared in the Presbyterian Church—being of Scottish descent;—but in 1837 she with her husband, heard the preaching of Latter Day Saint elders and united with that church. One year later they removed to Caldwell County, Missouri. In 1842 they returned to Canada, and resided there until 1871, when they came to Farmington; here they have since made their home. Sr. Warnock has lived a true Christion life; was a great help to the church, and until the infirmities of advancing age made her virtually a prisoner at home, she was always in attendance at worship. Her home was ever open to the ministry, and she did not forget to help them otherwise. For several years she has been a great sufferer, but has endured it all with extraordinary patience; and in all this has had the faithful care and efficient nursing of her daughter Susan, who supported her in her arms in the last trying ordeal of death. This came to her at last unheralded and unanticipated, but found her prepared to go. She had many times said she was "ready and anxious to go, and would be glad when it was the Lord's will to call." So when the call was made, she passed painlessly and peacefully to rest. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Funeral services at the residence, Elder James McKiernan in charge; Elder F. M. Weld, of Lamoni, Iowa, was the speaker. There were present her son, Robert, and daughters Sarah and Susan, and many friends to attest the respect in which Mother Warnock was held. The interment took place in the Farmington cemetery.

HEALEY.—Bro. John Healey died at Hanley, England, December 27, 1899, aged 49 years, 21 days. He was born December 5, 1850, at Burslem; united with the church September 11, 1882; ordained a priest August 19, 1883; and up to the last strove to do his duty and was faithful until death. Bro. Healey was buried in the Hanley cemetery.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this despensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

A REPLY TO DR. HAECKEL.

"When what is called death occurs that which was living resumes a state which possesses the potentiality to acquire another form."

All sorts of misty ideas prevail on the subject of the immortality of the soul. Some speak of it as being a kind of ethereal being; some as if it were made of thin matter; some merely hold that in some unknown way it continues to exist.

After a study of all these fantastic theories science is unsatisfied with any, and is forced to state its conclusions: The belief in the immortality of the human soul is a dogma in utter contradiction to the facts which investigation has proven to be true.

The only immortality for man is that of the transmission of his character to later generations through his children, or the influence which he exerts on the world of thought while alive.

—From Professor Ernst Haeckel's article on "The Immortality of the Soul," printed in the Journal's End of the Century Supplement.

Dr. Ernst Haeckel was good enough recently to entertain us here with his views on the absurdity of immortality and the obviousness of the descent of man. These views are interesting in several respects, yet chiefly because of the indifference with which they have been received. That, though, was to be expected. Among pathologists there is a malady known as epilepsy of the epiglottis. The patient tries to speak. He foams at the mouth instead.

The complaint, once epidemic, coincided with Darwin's publication of analogous views. The world has been inoculated since. These ideas and their sporules no longer infect. They have lost the contagion of their pretended youth. Prior to Lamarck, who was Darwin's precursor, Diderot intercepted them. That, of course, is but the day before yesterday. It is ages ago from the cataleptic reveries of antediluvian Hindus that they first emerged. The circumstance is suggestive. It evokes the fable of the lion and the lamb—modern science lying down with a primitive creed. But the circumstance, though suggestive, is otherwise unimportant. The descent of man, while theoretically entertaining and, in point of age, highly venerable, is unproven still. How the future may treat it we may surmise and never know. One thing is certain. Originally a heresy, it has time enough ahead of it to become a superstition yet.

But let us take it for granted. Everything is possible. It may be that we are, all of us, second cousins of the catarrhine anthropoid ape. If the relationship exist it were snobbish to disavow it. Moreover, though by smart people such relationship may be regarded as vulgar, there is in it nothing whatever which precludes another life. Ganz im gegentheil, to talk in Dr. Haeckel's language. Quite on the contrary.

We all know that prenatal existence runs through the various phases of inferior life. We all know, too, that that fact evolution takes and expands. We know, furthermore, that if evolution proves anything, it proves that the physical part of man is the product of a long series of changes. Now, Nature is curiously cautious. She neither adds nor subtracts. She holds fast to what she has got. She does not increase her possessions, neither does she diminish them. What she does is to tinker at them all the time. She puts them up, pulls them down and sets them up anew. The physical alterations Dr. Haeckel asserts, the spiritual developments he denies. But whoever is so foolish as a wise man? The law of conservatism of energy holds as good for things immaterial as for things material. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. We are willing enough that Dr. Haeckel should play judge, but we can't let him play jury, too. If we did, he would stultify himself in his own court. For he would not let a poor rule work both ways. He knows how the ages have prepared our tenements. As a consequence, he should be more polite to his colleagues in physiology than to turn up his nose at their demonstration of the fact that just as a bird fashions a nest, so does the soul fashion the body; that just as the butterfly rises from the chrysalis, so does the spiritual rise from the flesh; that just as two and two don't make five, so it is impossible for death to be.

Nature, we have noted, is a great hand at preserving her stock in trade. That stock is energy. Her supply of it is uniform. She transforms it, transmutes it, and transposes it, but never does she suffer a particle of it to go astray. She may store it in fungus or oak, in worm or man, but on to it all she holds very tight. It is for this reason that she won't hear of such a thing as death. What seems to us, or rather to Dr. Haeckel, to constitute that condition is to her but the constituent of a change. Nothing dies. When what is called death occurs that which was living resumes a state which possesses the potentiality to acquire another form. The tenement has crumbled and the tenant gone forth. But just where, lacking omniscience, we are unable to state. It is the great enigma.

It would be convenient to say that that enigma was solved long ago. It would be convenient, but it would not be true. Myriads of those good people who like to have others do their thinking for them have pinned their faith on a residence right over head because they have regarded it as a universal belief. It is by no means a universal belief. Even if it were, the fact would prove nothing. Every universal belief is erroneous. It was once a universal belief that the earth was flat. The majority is always wrong. Christianity, moreover, embraces but one-tenth of mankind. In its strongholds there are dissidents. Oxford has done with dogmas. The faith of metaphysical Germany would enjoy a large and ample playground on the head of a pin. Thinking France is frankly atheistic. Scratch a student and you find a pagan. Wherever there is thought there is negation.

That negation is the denial of certain fairy tales. Primitive fabulists erected an edifice of dream which they called Creation. It was composed of a cellar, a ground floor, and a roof garden. In the cellar they fitted a furnace. On the ground floor man lived and moved and had his being. According to his behavior so was he tossed in the surface or put in a lift and shot to the roof.

We don't believe in that any more. We admire the simplicity of the idea,

but not its sense. We know that the earth stands to creation as a drop of water does to the ocean. We know that in the relatively narrow sphere to which observation is at present confined there are not less than three hundred million worlds. We know that they don't revolve there just for the fun they may get out of their own gymnastics. We know that the energy loosed among them cannot be dissimilar to that which is recogniza ble here. We know by way of corollary that there also must be sentient beings. We know, furthermore, that evolution shows that sentient beings have not fallen from a loftier estate, but are rising to one. The deduction is obvious. Not the dwellers on this planet alone, but those of the universe in its entirety are en route for higher things.

Dr. Haeckel thinks otherwise. Very good. At the Straits of Gibraltar, or rather, to be technical, at the Pillars of Hercules, which is the same place with another name, early geographers used to jot on their maps Hic deficit orbis—Here ends the world. The poor chaps had no suspicion whatever that beyond that world of theirs there stretched another twice as great. Dr. Haeckel's views strike us as being quite as primitive.—By Edgar Saltus in New York Journal, Jan. 14, 1900.

NOT AN AGNOSTIC.

Despite the cold a large audience was gathered at Plymouth church last night which listened very attentively to the sermon on "Why I am not an agnostic." Mr. Van Horn took for his text 1 Samuel 17:55: "As thy soul liveth, O, King, I cannot tell." These are the words typical of the agnostic, the man who cannot tell, who does not know. The context makes it clear that the speaker might have known and that he ought to have known. And this is preëminently true in ethical and moral relations. There are those who say that even if there are spiritual facts and entities it is yet impossible for man to know that he knows them. The philosophical argument is that the finite cannot know the infinite; that even if there is a God, by his very perfections he is placed beyond the range of sure knowledge by imperfect and foolish man. But this begs the question, for it assumes that God cannot or will not manifest himself in such form that man can see and know. And this which philosophy has no right to deny is just what revelation declares; and revelation is backed up by the experience of thousands of reputable characters and credible word who declare that they have had such experience as to assure them that God is, and that he may be found and known beyond question. And as G. J. Romanes has said, "Faith, trust, and confidence are as useful in ascertaining truth as is reason."

But it is claimed that science gives no demonstration of spiritual acts; the anatomist declares that he finds no soul, the biologist that he discovers no such thing as spiritual life or spirit. It should be remembered that the specialist is the man least able to discover or appreciate truth out of his own line. Darwin became the authority upon natural selection, but lost his appreciation of poetry and art. The man who deals with the purely physical is least apt or able to discern the spiritual. This is the danger of our time to men of business; the one who masters his business must give himself to it with such absorption that he has no time for his soul, and so comes to lose his power to perceive the things which are moral and spiritual. Yet there are scientists who find God in nature as did Hugh Miller in the rocks, Asa Gray in the flowers, and Kepler in the stars. Lord Kelvin, as president of the world's greatest association of scientists, declared that all things "come back with irresistible force, showing one everlasting Creator and Ruler."

And if man can know God, then he ought to know him. Nothing can excuse him from the duty of finding his heavenly Father and showing filial duty. This is the supreme meaning of life. This alone gives sense of duty done, of satisfaction with living, of blessedness. And how dies the agnostic? As the fool dies. In doubt when he might have known; in despair when he might have had certainty; out into the dark when he might have stepped into still greater light. And condemned for it all because he ought to have known the things which he might have known—the things that belong unto the everlasting peace.—Iowa Capital, Monday, January 29, 1900.

BIG PROFITS OF STANDARD OIL.

New York, Jan. 29.—The stock of the Standard Oil company sold to-day on the curb in Wall street at $520 a share on rumor that the company is to pay dividends equal to 45 per cent on its capital stock of $100,000,000 during 1900. Mr. Rockefeller has raised the price of kerosene, which will add about $30,000,000 annually to the revenue of the company.

It is said that the visible supply of petroleum in the United States has not been so small in twenty years as it is at the present time, and that the trust holds a complete corner on the market.

To-day the stock in hand was only 8,000,000 barrels. Fifteen years ago it was 20,000,000 barrels.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 29.—A statement by S. C. T. Dodd, solicitor of the Standard Oil company, as made public by the Industrial commission, shows that the company's dividends have varied from 5¼ per cent per annum in 1882 to 33 per cent in 1897.—Chicago Tribune, January 30, 1900.

RELIC OF JERUSALEM.

Strasburg, Jan. 20.—The seven-branched candlestick of the Temple of Jerusalem has most strangely been discovered in Rome. The workmen who are occupied with the task of laying the foundations in the Tiber for the Cavour bridge have found this ancient, sacred ornament buried in the mud of the river.

The candlestick, which is still in a remarkably good state of preservation, is made of bronze. It answers precisely in form and appearance to the celebrated seven forked candelabrum of the Jews which Titus, the Roman General and Emperor, after the destruction of Jerusalem, brought to Rome.

A facsimile copy of this candlestick is to be seen upon the triumphal arch of Titus in the vicinity of Forum Romanum. But how or in what extraordinary manner this wonderful ornament of the Holy City's temple got to be imbedded at the bottom of the Tiber remains at present an unsolved mystery.—Chicago Tribune.

SMOKING STUNTS THE GROWTH OF BOYS.

Whatever difference of opinion there may be upon the advisability of smoking for men, there is none as to its pernicious effect upon boys. It affects the action of the heart and reduces the capacity of the lungs. Young men who are being trained for athletics are not permitted to smoke by their trainers because, as they say, "It is bad for the wind." The argument that will appeal most forcibly to your boy is that smoking will stunt his growth. It has been proved that youthful smokers are shorter and weigh less than their comrades who do not smoke. Cigarettes are particularly injurious. Nicotine, the active principle of tobacco, is said by chemists to be, next to prussic acid, the most rapidly fatal poison known. The tender tissues of a growing boy cannot absorb even a very small quantity of it without most injurious results.—February Ladies' Home Journal.

STARVES HERSELF TO DEATH.

Kokomo, Ind., Jan. 30.—Mrs. Lydia Cox, a Quaker church worker, died to-day. A few weeks ago she assisted in a revival for a new sect known as the "Church of Holiness," which dances, shouts, goes into trances, and believes in Christian science. A month ago she ceased to eat, declaring the Lord had called on her to fast for the sins of the world. Friends tried in vain to dissuade her. She refused all nourishment and died.

LAMONI, IOWA, FEB. 7, 1900.

B. H. ROBERTS EXCLUDED.

The House of Representatives, of the United States has by a vote of 268 to 50 excluded Brigham H. Roberts from a seat and voice in the legislative councils of the nation.

There were two opinions held in both the committee and the House, as to the course of procedure. One was to the effect that Mr. Roberts should be sworn in and then expelled; this was the view of the minority of the committee; the other was that he should be excluded at once; this was the view of the majority of the committee, and, as it turned out, of the majority of the House as well.

In reply to a question as to what his people would do about it, he remarked that he did not know; it might be that the State of Utah would make an appeal of the case to the Supreme Court of the United States.

It is possible that this rebuke so publicly given by so large a majority of the body of lawmakers of the nation to an aspirant for legislative honors, who has for years set the laws of the United States and its institutions at defiance, may not be acquiesced in by Mr. Roberts and a part of his constituency, and they may seek relief from the intolerable nature of this rebuke in an appeal to the Supreme Court, the highest tribunal known to American jurisprudence; and, we could almost be pleased to see this done. For, we are persuaded to believe, that should it be done, the lesson which would be read the ruling "two per cent" polygamous class of Utah's Mormon population would be of lasting benefit to that misguided host.

In the progress of the contest in Congress, before the committee and in the House, Mr. Roberts has stated in effect that the marriages for the carrying into repute and practice of which he was being brought in question, were entered into under the solemn sanction of the church; that he could not be absolved from the sacred obligations thus assumed or imposed by any act or process of law; and that even the church itself could not release him, or by an edict compel him to desist from the associations entered into by such marriages. So, whatever the issue before Congress might be, Mr. Roberts has served a sort of quasi personal notice on the government and the nation through Congress that he proposes to continue to disregard the laws. His bravery may be admirable, but his assurance and judgment are unpraiseworthy.

Mr. Roberts is reported to have said that Christ never condemned plural marriage.

We may not know how extensive the reading of Mr. Roberts has been, but the Christ did say regarding the marriage law, the union of husband and wife, "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave unto his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh." This is stated by both Matthew and Mark as having been said by Jesus who is the Christ.

This same Christ said: "Whosoever putteth away his wife, for any cause; save fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery." (Matthew 19 and Mark 10.)

In both of these passages the terms are "cleave unto his wife," singular number; not three, like Mr. Roberts; nor nineteen, like President Brigham Young. "They twain," two not three nor nineteen.

Again, all Utah Mormons, including Mr. Roberts, hold the Book of Mormon to be a direct revelation from the Lord to this generation; so do the "Mormon" churches, so called, of all classes and all organizations. In that book is stated the fact that the "word of the Lord" came to Jacob to get him up into the temple on the morrow, the day after the one on which the command came to him, and "declare the word" which the Lord (the Christ) "would give him." On the day designated Jacob went up into the place assigned him and among other things stated, "Hearken unto the word of the Lord, There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none."

This voice "out of the dust," was reinforced in 1831 by the command given to the church that they should "remember the New Covenant, even the Book of Mormon . . . not only to say, but to do, according to that which is written" therein.

Further still, this same Lord, the Christ, gave a revelation of his will in 1831, in two significant statements: "Thou shalt love thy wife, with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."

There could have been no more positive statement condemning the opposite to this rule than the rule itself. As in the words of the Christ as stated by Matthew and Mark, the word wife is singular again, and the words none else, mean surely, no one, not anyone else. Language cannot be more specific. Further still, this same Jesus, the Christ, in answer to an inquiry made upon an occasion when if a different rule had been contemplated by him, he could have stated it then, made this statement:—

> Marriage is ordained of God to man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh.

This is made more striking by the added information:—

> And all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.

In these statements this Christ, whom Mr. Roberts says did not condemn plural marriage, gave to the church his rule of law, which is again in the singular member "one wife," and also stated that this was the law at the creation. How Mr. Roberts could forget these statements is passing strange. The only reason why he did it, that we can see, is that his wives had turned his heart, like Solomon's wives did his, and he is capable of committing folly.

Joseph Smith, in one of his impassioned appeals for justice to his people at the hands of the American nation said of Congress that it was "supreme in its sphere;" the highest law of the land. This was written in an effort to point out a way to remedy a condition the result of lawless disregard of the laws of the land by mobs led by religious bigots, who in the garb of devotion to God disregarded the rights of men and the power of courts and executors of the law. It would be a strange spectacle to Joseph Smith to witness a professed follower and lover of him and his religious teaching standing at the bar of the House of Representatives, asking for immunity for acts and practices which Joseph Smith by the aid of divine inspiration had declared an abomination before the Lord; and demanding for himself, an avowed apologist for and practicer of those acts and practices, in spite of and disregard for the law of the land, a seat and membership among the lawmakers of the Nation; notwithstanding the man whom Mr. Roberts professes to honor told the church which Mr. Roberts misrepresents,—by inspiration of Jesus Christ, that the man who "keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

That same Jesus Christ whom Mr. Roberts so erroneously asserts did not condemn plural marriage knew from the first that the "marvelous work and a wonder," the sending of the restored gospel message, would be on the American continent and under the human laws and institutions of the United States. Surely he could have made no such huge mistake as that which would permit a paltry "two per cent" of the men of the church to vitiate and make void all the commands he gave the church at its inception and during the period of its hardest struggle for permanent existence under the constitution and laws which he had "raised up and inspired wise men" to enact and establish, by the giving a permissive revelation or command so loose and disjointed, and in some of its provisions so vicious, as is the so-called revelation on plural or celestial marriage. Pres. Brigham Young spoke truthfully, whether by inspiration or by human sagacity, when he said of the doctrine of that so-called revelation: "It will damn more souls than it will save." After over half a century of practice, a period of jealousies, heartburnings, bickerings, and apostasies within the church,– and misunderstandings, cavillings, opposition, just indignation, censure and condemnation from without, the chief advocates of the system admit that all cannot become active participants in the advantages claimed for the doctrine, and claim that not more than two per cent of the Mormon people have practiced or are now practicing plural marriage. So; the two per cent comprising the leading men of the priesthood, presidents, apostles, bishops, high priests, seventies, patriarchs, compose the number who will be saved while the ninety-eight per cent who are not in the practice and cannot be, are the "many more" whom the doctrine will damn.

Mr. Roberts makes the inconsistent plea that Christ did not disapprove nor condemn plural marriage. Nowhere in the word of God, in any book we ever saw, read, or heard of, is there any direct word of God stating that a man shall not have three feet, three hands, three eyes, two noses, two mouths, and two tongues; yet he fashioned man as we find him; and any departure from the type of manhood or womanhood is recognized and known as a deviation from God's law and is regarded as being disapproved of by God; nor has it ever been expected, believed, or sought that God would or should speak in direct condemnation of such departure from the general rule. The rule is known, the deviation is a deformity or a monstrosity. So in this marriage question, God at the creation gave the rule; that rule was monogamic, one man one woman, one husband one wife. This rule has been twice enforced, in the dealing of God with Noah and his sons, and with Lehi and his sons. Any departure from this rule is a deviation from the expressed provision of the wisdom and will of God. There was no need that God should in set terms condemn plural marriage. He enacted the law at the creation of man. Any deviation from that law is a deformity or a monstrosity.

So far as the church organized in the United States, April 6, 1830, is concerned, and has been or can be affected by divine command condemnatory of plural marriage or polygamy, the Lord has condemned it:—

> There shall not any man among you have, save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none; for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.
> Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else.

The chastity of woman is best conserved by the Lord's rule given above. In asserting the rule the opposite to it is condemned, in the common sense way to understand the language used.

There should be no longer any misunderstanding of the attitude of the people of the United States, now that Congress has said that Mr. B. H. Roberts, a polygamist, Congressman-elect from Utah, cannot be recognized as such and be given a seat in the House of Representatives. We bow to the decision and feel assured that the House did well and dealt justly.

In a reported interview with Mr. B. H. Roberts, said to have been had after the vote to exclude him from a seat in congress had been taken, he is made to say:—

> Such a position, however, is but transitory in Utah, and comes down to the Mormon people from conditions growing out of the plural-marriage system of the past. The condition here referred to, however, is rapidly passing away. From authoritative figures officially collected recently by the Mormon Church it has been ascertained that at the time of the discontinuance of plural marriages under the authority of the late President Woodruff's manifesto, in September, 1890, there were 2,451 polygamous families throughout the whole Mormon Church. Since then it has been ascertained that 908 of these families have ceased to exist, through death, divorce, or abandonment, leaving at the present time but 1,543 polygamous families in the church throughout the world, and, as most of these are well advanced in years and all beyond middle life, the system will soon be obliterated from the earth, and under these circumstances there has been little excuse for the extraordinary efforts put forth throughout the country to crush out a system of marriage already practically dead and abandoned.

Two points in this are quite striking; one, that since the September, 1890, a period of ten years, there has been a decrease in polygamous families in the Mormon Church amounting to more than one third the whole number; that is, out of 2,451 families in 1890, 908 have ceased to exist.

The causes assigned for this astonishing decrease are death, divorce, and abandonment. Looking at these causes from the point of view taken in the plea that Mr. Roberts made that even the Church could not now take such action as would annul the obligations to plural wives, so sacred were they, it is very peculiar, for the reason that the document under which it is claimed that the church sanctioned these plural marriages, contains no provision for divorce. How then do the church authorities manage to dispose of polygamous obligations so sacredly entered into? Is it by appeal to the civil courts? It can hardly be, for the reason that should there be an appeal to the court for the dissolution of a polygamous marriage, it would be necessary to allege the fact of such marriage, day and date, and place of consummation. But under the common law polygamous marriages are not legal, but void; and he who would plead a polygamous church ceremony would make himself or herself liable to prosecution for bigamy, or worse. Hence, we hardly see how divorce as a cause of decrease in polygamous families can apply.

Of course death is slowly undoing much of the wrongs of the past, and if two more decades will witness the extinction of polygamous practices, then may there be hope of a rehabilitation of the church in Utah freed from this incubus.

The United States government has been using justifiable means to compel due deference to the laws and institutions of this land destined to the development of the angel's message, and Congress is but doing its part when it says in unmistakable terms that no polygamist shall hold and occupy a seat in the House of Representatives when it is known that he has been chosen and elected as such. There has been a need for these "extraordinary efforts put forth" to stop the continuance of a practice offensive to the laws of both God and man.

PITHY AND POINTED.

Bro. M. T. Short is pleading hard for the cause at Warrensburg, Missouri. In the Standard-Weekly of that place for January 26, 1900, Bro. Short gets the following; pithy and to the point:—

WHY I BECAME A LATTER DAY SAINT.

Editor Standard-Herald.—All other things being equal I would rather belong to one of the nominal churches, and be honored, praised, and aided to prominence, power, and perhaps wealth and luxury than to adhere to an unpopular faith.

At the stern call of duty Saul of Tarsus exchanged Judaism, and the Jew's religion, for Christ, and Christianity, and thenceforth went forth to build up what he had hitherto sought so ardently to overthrow, and extirpate. Thank fortune I never was like him a vile persecutor, inspired with a blind fanatical zeal. Through painstaking investigation, and a readiness to hear and learn, and a willingness to believe and obey the truth, I was led to embrace the doctrine and labor in its interest. A prayerful, careful, humble heart will lead the happy possessor thereof to hunger and thirst after righteousness, even the gospel. Fidelity, integrity, persistence, consecration, honesty, sobriety, and benevolence, coupled with a well-informed judgment and a contrite spirit, will help a person out of darkness, doubt, and death into the marvelous light and liberty of salvation, relative here, and full and complete in the great, grand, and most glorious hereafter. The saints' philosophy inculcates an all-wise, omnipotent, eternal, personal God; who is our creator, benefactor, and preserver. They stoutly advocate the divinity, mediatorship, authority, and power of Jesus the Christ. The omnipresence, influence, and supervising energy of the Holy Spirit is a factor in our belief. Original sin, or the primeval fall, necessitated an infinite atonement of the Lamb of Calvary. Unconditional death, on our part, came from the transgression of the original pair in Eden. In like manner through the obedience of the God-man comes life to all, both the devout adorer and the most abandoned wretch. Through the sacrifice of the cross however all may be saved up to eternal life, with a fullness of glory, when they hear the great message of reconciliation expounded in demonstration of the Spirit, if they but believe it with the whole heart, yea without any mental reservation whatever.

When a person has the requisite faith he will speedily be sorry for and repent of all of his past sins, both of omission and commission. These sins should be eliminated, or canceled by baptismal remission, the washing of regeneration, a rising from the watery grave to walk in the newness of life, the washing away, etc. The Holy Ghost as an abiding comforter is obtained through confirmation, or the laying on of the hands of the eldership or ministry. This ordinance of course must be administered to baptized believers by those in authority. It is a condition of eternal life, and as such ranked as a principle of the doctrine of Christ to retain the good Spirit and enjoy its fruits, gifts, and manifestations, one has to live worthy of the high vocation and calling. Our church in organization, ordinances, doctrine, experience, hope, blessings, and divine authority agrees with the New Testament institution, hence we wish for its welfare, growth, development, and final redemption and ultimate glory. We adhere to the literal resurrection of the dead; the second advent of our Savior, the millennial reign of peace, purity, and good will, the subjugation and redemption of the whole earth; the great restoration from evil and woe; the overthrow of the evil one, and his emissaries; the complete victory over death, hell, and the grave; the glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life of man; and, in fine, much peace, happiness and joy here, and a fullness of pleasures forevermore hereafter. We wish to prove all, hold to the good, and bid all godspeed in all that is laudable, uplifting, and divine.

M. T. SHORT.

Our big brother used to live on the frontiers and shoots straight. Of his effort at Warrensburg, Missouri, Bro. Morris T. Short writes:—

I am having well attended meetings. The hall hire is one dollar and a half per night, but the money has come to the front by saints and friends who attend. I preach six or eight miles out in the country to-morrow, so that the Episcopal church has the hall then. I, however, will resume my labor and series here Monday night.

The Brighamites, four in number, who are doing this town, heard me versus the harem, and one by the vote of the house did make a fifteen minute's sickly evasive reply. The young adventurer's name is Smith and a true one he claims to be in Israel. I loaned the quadruple grand "Successor in Church President," but zounds! they appear to be "established"—in what? When this empire of benighted lust will perish the good Lord only knoweth. It is brazen faced, persistent, up and coming, and displays an adhesive energy and devotion worthy of a good cause. I gave the Journal-Democrat the manuscript I penned, but he did not find it available, but in the place thereof gave his readers his delectable effusion of "Mormons scraping each other." The daily gives us friendly advertisements, etc. I am feeling at my best, and surely I am blessed, for the work's sake mainly, I presume.

Last night I was away up the mountain height, and sent forth an avalanche of truth. It is a pleasure and profitable I judge to deal forth food divine while in the light of the cross and in the line of ministerial duty. I breathe an inward prayer for grace, wisdom, and courage to battle on for the right.

AUNT KATHARINE SALISBURY DEAD.

By telegram from Bro. Don C. Salisbury we learn that Aunt Katharine Salisbury, sister of the Martyrs and the last of the family of Joseph Smith the Patriarch, and Lucy Smith, died at the residence of her son D. C. Salisbury, near Carthage, Illinois, on Friday, the 2d inst. Pres. A. H. Smith went on from Lamoni to attend the funeral, to take place on Sunday, the 3d. Further particulars and obituary next week.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. D. Stead, Talorville, Illinois, January 31:—

The work here seems to be prospering at present. We are occupying the miner's hall, a very nice and commodious building, seating two or three hundred people, heated by steam, lit up by electricity. Those who have been attending seem to be interested. Baptized two Sunday. There are others who express themselves as believing the angel message and may obey before I leave. Bro. Morris will be here next week to organize the saints here, into a branch. I baptized three in Pana just before coming here. I have done more work in the past two weeks than I have ever done since I came into the church in the same length of time, blessing children of parents in the church and out of it, administering to the sick, baptizing, confirming, preaching, and talking during the day, and some evenings almost half the night I am feeling reasonably well for me physically, and never felt better spiritually.

Bro. F. C. Smith, Temple, Ohio, February 1:—

I baptized two at Toledo on Sunday (zero weather); one a mother, and bessed her boy. There are honest souls yet to obey, but there is not the interest there used to be out this way to believe and obey the truth.

The Russian press constantly asserts that with England's preoccupation in Africa, Russia's opportunity has come. Russia is seemingly acting upon such lines of policy, for she has secured control of the custom houses and ports of Persia on the Persian Gulf, where England has hitherto exercised a dominating influence. Rumor has it that the Russian fleet has been ordered off the west coast of Algiers where a junction may be formed with the French fleet if occasion requires. London and Berlin advices report the loan of Russia to Persia of 22,500,000 rubles and state that Russia is practically given control of Persia.

Russia, like the prevailing plague, is slowly but surely extending her influence and intrenching herself abroad in the world. Following her action in the far east and in Persia comes the news that confirms her action in Persia, Afghanistan, and China, in securing territory in Persia, in massing troops on the borders of Afghanistan on the confines of India, and in procuring the deposition of the Chinese emperor. Russian spies now are at work in Sweden, which has caused the Swedish press to urge the government to protest. It is urged that Russia is encouraging Norway to rebel against Swedish domination as a pretext for Russia's interference, that she may thus seize ports of Norway.

Italy is making demands on China, supported by her fleet.

Forty-one deaths and fifty-two cases of plague are reported from Honolulu, up to January 25. The Argentine Republic is charged with suppressing news of the plague.

Italy is planning for a new army and asks for 400,000,000 lire to provide for defenses of the state. Influenza, floods, and other disorders cause continued anxiety in Italy. The doctors are powerless to check the influenza epidemic.

France will punish the French cardinal and the bishops and archbishops who encouraged the Assumptionist Fathers in resisting the government's action against them. The tendency is to bring about a crisis between church and state in France.

The French government has asked the Chamber of Deputies to consent to an expenditure of 900,000,000 francs for additions to the navy, coast defenses, etc. Of this sum 470,000,000 francs are wanted for 179 vessels to be added to the navy. The great activity at Marseilles indicates that France is preparing to send large contingents of troops to the Franco-African possessions and to Indo-China.

A serious revolt of Egyptian troops, caused by withdrawal of British troops, is reported from the Soudan. The French press continues to urge an attack upon England in view of her situation in South Africa.

Attention is called to the notice of amendment of the Articles and By-laws of Graceland College,—in our Miscellany Department, — provided for by action of the General Conference of 1898. Please notice it, all whom it may concern.

Hon. G. W. Bartch, Chief Justice of Utah, is credited in a Washington telegram with the statement that only 1,544 of a Mormon population are now living in polygamy. Just how he became possessed of such exact figures is not stated. But, in any event, that number is just 1,544 too many and that number more than the law allows.

Graceland College reports a total enrollment of sixty-one students since the opening of the year's work. President Harkness is much encouraged by the prospect and is laboring diligently to make Graceland a success and the leading educational institution of Southwestern Iowa. New students are being constantly enrolled and are doing good work. One of our Graceland College graduates, now taking a special professional course in one of the leading universities of the country, remarked to the writer that he was gratified because of having been permitted to pursue his college studies at Graceland. The chief reason was, that he had received closer personal attention from the faculty, because of the not overcrowded conditions under which his instructors had been able to more closely note and keep track of his progress. At the old established schools, where classes were very large and often crowded to the utmost limit, such close attention and favorable progress was hardly possible. He could therefore recommend Graceland for that and other reasons. To those who may be considering the question of education of their children we recommend Graceland as to its faculty and essential facilities. Professor Harkness has a wide reputation throughout the State of Iowa and the Middle West as a competent and successful educator. We may remark that he is preparing some special normal work for the benefit of teachers. Write him for new circular and catalogue, addressing him at Lamoni, Iowa.

Bro. Frank Criley visited Independence on the 3d and left for Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, on the 5th.

Original Articles.

UNDESIRABLE CONDITIONS.

Several articles, within the past year, have appeared in the Herald concerning Zion and the gathering of the saints, which indicate in some degree the interest being taken in the subject. There is one phase of the subject which seems to have escaped the consideration of those that have written, or has been overlooked purposely or otherwise, I cannot say.

Compared with others of the communities in which we reside, who are not of our faith, our numbers are very small, and especially in the large cities, and as a result we are separated from each other socially, and only have the pleasure of each other's company at the church meetings, thereby losing whatever good should come from our social relationship.

The mad race for wealth and general disregard of all religious obligations make men so that they have no consideration for the welfare of others, and because of this, unusual long hours and on the Lord's day, work is required by men, who employ others to work for them, thereby depriving them of all the good that a loving Parent designed should come to his people by a proper observance of his law.

Many of our young sisters in the cities are compelled to stand for ten hours or more behind a counter, and on Saturday until nine p. m., which unfits them for duties on the Lord's day, or so impairs life's energies, that what work is done is amid difficulties and anxieties which must in time impair their usefulness to the church and Sunday school.

The trades unions are now so powerful that it is very hard for a young man to get a chance to learn a trade, unless he possesses what is commonly called a "pull." It may be political, or religious, or a social one; but it must be one that appeals to the peculiar makeup of the one that the favor is sought from, otherwise their chances are poor indeed. Not only does this condition apply to young men learning trades, but to all classes of labor in general. The writer works for a corporation that employs over four hundred men and I feel that the truth is being spoken when I say that more than three fourths of that number have obtained their employment by means of the "pull" that they had. So that in order for a Latter Day Saint to have a "pull" he must sear his conscience and do that which he knows God forbids him to do. Certainly there are honorable exceptions to the above conditions, nevertheless it is the general rule.

The rich live at ease in the lap of luxury and care not for those whom they employ. Their selfishness makes them lose all humane feeling, and they care not how much suffering they may cause, so long as their desires are gratified. The petty annoyances that they heap on those in their power is not possible to describe; it must be seen to be realized. I have seen men working in buildings where the temperature was 70 degrees above zero compelled to go out and work where it was 10 degrees below. It was impossible to use clothing enough to prevent a chilling of the whole system. I have seen men compelled to work twelve to fifteen hours without food; and again, places where men work seven days in the week, when changing from night to day shift, instead of a rest, it is twenty-four hours of constant work.

A spirit of deep-seated hatred has grown up between employer and employed; a desire and determined purpose for revenge is planted in both and they use it whenever opportunity presents itself.

When our boys go to work in factories or other places, they are constantly surrounded with companions whose lives are immoral, and their conversation vile, obscene, profane, and whose aspirations do not reach above the immoral; but they delight to revel in the most loathsome conversation that it is possible for human tongue to utter.

It is very expensive to live in the large cities where many of our branches are found, by reason of which it is very hard for persons to get much of the comforts of this life. Certainly I expect to see cities in Zion, but where God directs its government, directly or indirectly, it will be better than those that are now run by saloon keepers, gamblers, and prostitutes.

It is impossible for the branch officers to look after the affairs of branches. They must work and toil like their brethren, and being so widely scattered, it is not possible to do much visiting among the members.

Society has put a ban on religion; it is contrary to modern etiquette for persons of different religious belief to talk of religion in a promiscuous gathering; it is not considered good manners to talk of such things when visiting your neighbors. Men may work beside each other for years, and if they ever learn of each other's religious associations it is by mere accident; they purposely avoid all reference to it.

While these conditions exist, how can we expect any spiritual or intellectual growth when we live our daily life among such surroundings? It would be as reasonable to expect to find flowers growing in the desert of Sahara or oranges in Greenland.

The sandy foundation on which nearly all business stands, the wild speculative spirit which takes fast hold on nearly all Americans, makes another financial crisis and commercial panic a certainty in less than twenty years, and woe betide those caught in it, for the spirit of revenge, the desire to destroy life and property, will exceed anything in our country's history, I know to some extent the deep-seated feeling of hatred that exists among the masses, and when it breaks forth it will be something terrible.

Is it not about time the church was seeking out the wise men to lead and direct the saints in the gathering; not as a raging, disorganized mob fleeing in haste, but systematically, orderly, in the spirit of wisdom. Many of the saints are waiting for some one to lead them. They are willing to follow, and have no desire to run ahead of those whom God wishes to lead his people, but will loyally support those whom God sends to guide them.

PAUL PARKER.

NO COMPROMISE.

I am often pained and disappointed by hearing of the compromise with evil that is made by well-meaning people, and sometimes even by saints, whose motto should always be, "no compromise." If a thing is evil, it should be let entirely alone. "Touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing," whatever it may be.

Some think me too extreme on the tobacco question. But there is no middle ground; either it is good or it is evil. And we know by scientific knowledge,—to which has been added God's word against it, also by observation,—that it is altogether evil.

I was talking with a brother not long since, who thinks it wrong to use tobacco, but does not think it wrong to sell it. I could not agree with him. "Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips," since the bottle contains that which will work him physical and spiritual hurt. Will not the same principle apply to the plug, the twist, or tobacco in any form, since it, too, doth work evil and that only?

If it is wrong for me to do a thing, is it not wrong for me to place the temptation in the way of a weaker brother, or sister, for the love of gain? "Filthy lucre" indeed is gain gotten in a traffic of unclean things. If the use of an article is wrong and hurtful to mankind, then it is wrong to raise, manufacture, sell or assist in any way in its use.

One cannot sell the evil stuff if it is not raised or manufactured, and if it is not sold it would not be used to such a great extent; therefore the grower, the seller, and the manufacturer, are alike entangled in the evil, though they may never taste it themselves.

"Whether ye eat, or whether ye drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," says the word; and we may add without irreverence, whether ye buy, or whether ye sell, or whatever you do, do all to the glory of God.

So if I were a grocer I would not sell tobacco or anything else my conscience would not allow me to use. If I lost custom, very well. God would overrule that for my good, and the few paltry dollars should never be allowed to tip the balance in favor of anything spoken against by our Lord.

The principle that it is right to sell whatever the world demands would also make it right to sell whisky, obscene books, and all the other foul and evil things for which the world always has a demand. It would make it right to open and run theaters, dance halls, rum shops, and opium joints, and houses of ill repute, because the world demands them. The money of a saint should be clean money. It should not be made by any traffic, or in any business on which God's blessing could not properly be asked. Could we conscientiously pray God to bless the plug of tobacco to our neighbor's use, or the bottle of beer, or the glass of strong drink? Would it not be a mockery?

But we can ask Him to bless the food we sell, the clothing, the good books, or any necessary or useful article. Shall a child of God engage in anything that will not meet his Father's approval? If he does, even though he may not lose his sonship, yet the loss of his Father's approving smile will far outweigh the few temporary benefits and pleasures he obtains by so doing.

But it is said, If I don't sell these things some one else will, and I might as well make the money as any one else. True, others will sell, but they will bear the spots; while we, God's children, are to be "unspotted from the world." We are to such a great extent "our brother's keeper." "No man liveth to himself alone," or if he does or could, he would not be fulfilling the part for which he was created. Every act we do has its influence for good or evil, or as a good sister in the Christian Church used to say, "We should remember that everything we do touches chords that will vibrate through all eternity;" and as the chords of our lives cross and recross other lives, so the vibrations are conveyed to them, and how far reaching they are we can never know this side of eternity. But we can determine whether the vibrations we send quivering over the chords of humanity shall awaken the notes of love, joy, peace, purity, or the discords of hatred, strife, impurity, and all manner of evil.

The influence of tobacco is unclean, and evil altogether. I have watched

it closely. It destroys all the finer sensibilities of a person's nature. A tobacco sot, if I may so express it, is generally unclean in his personal habits, in his dress, and in his speech. There are cases to be sure where the love of cleanliness is naturally very strong where tobacco may not destroy it completely, but exceptions only prove the rule. Tobacco using destroys the tender chivalry of the man, and changes him from the protecting husband, brother, or friend of the woman, to a selfish, bestial caricature of a man, regarding his own personal pleasures that he finds in his quid or his pipe, far higher than the comfort or the welfare of wife, daughter, or sister.

"If the smoke makes you sick, go out of doors." I have heard that remark made many a time, when the sickening odor of tobacco has made the delicate long-suffering wife exclaim against it. No matter if the scent of the nicotine soaked pipe makes her turn sick and faint, yet it must occupy its place of honor—dishonor rather—on the mantel. The use of the vile weed also rouses into activity the baser passions, thus proving the old doggerel we children used to sing at school had much truth, if no poetry, in it:—

"Tobacco is a stinking weed,
From the Devil it doth proceed;
It picks your pockets, burns your clothes,
And makes a chimney of your nose."

Who that uses it but what wishes he had never begun the filthy practice, unless lost to all desire for good? What father who cares for the welfare of his sons would advise them to begin its use? Ah! they know too well it is slavery, and that of the hardest kind to escape from.

But the farmer who raises it will say, "I can make more money that way, and thus have more to give." But I notice that they do not give any more than those who make perhaps less in other ways, and is it not better to give a farthing gift with God's blessing on it, and on the way it is earned, than to give thousands earned by dealing in evil things?

I have often been called a crank on this, as well as other things, to which I reply, "I don't mind being a crank if I can only turn the wheels of reform, and in the right way. Better be called a crank than to be a brake or a clog to hinder." A life of godliness is a continual warfare against evil, no matter what its guise; and too often it comes in such pleasant guise as to make it hard to recognize the evil. But the Spirit of Truth will show us the evil just as soon as we determine to abandon all evil. While the Master would not condemn money making in itself, and we are commanded to be diligent in business, yet the love of gain should not blind us to the evil of certain things. Let us ask ourselves daily, What would the Master say? I am quite sure the answer would never be to do anything to help along the tobacco industry, which is only helping to forge chains for the bondage of some weak soul, even if we are not in bonds to the evil habit ourselves.

O Saints, if there are any among you, who through love of gain are trafficking in this or other evils, pause and think if it is becoming a saint. "As becometh saints." Keep unspotted from this and all other evil things, and let us fight them whenever and wherever we meet them, and let our watchword be to this and all other wrong habits, "No compromise."

ALICE R. CORSON.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

It is possible I may submit a few thoughts under the above heading without offense to Herald readers. I disavow any such design. But morbid sensitiveness is easily aroused.

The fact of antagonizing influences necessitates the assertion of individuality with a view to a decision of character leading to self-government. The necessity therefor is seen in the fact of Christ's recognition of divine and satanic powers, together with the declaration, namely, "No man can serve two masters." Therefore man, possessing a sound mind, with a conception of manly dignity, will decide for one and against the other. Such a decision, when practically observed, will be a preventive to double mindedness, which leads to a nonstability, indicative of a vacillating procedure, necessitating some evasive policy, to hide if possible the inconsistency of such a procedure. For it is said, "Vice can deceive under the guise and shadow of virtue." More's the pity, but so it is, which fact looms up to the sober thinker, leading to the conclusion that the Adamic evil propensities are not yet entirely subjugated.

Christ's decision as to the impracticability of serving two masters is in harmony with a scripture warrant of a time for a righteous retribution. Then, too, his explanation of the narrow and broad ways (Matt. 7: 13, 14) are God revealed truths, nicely connected, to be studied and appreciated, even by an ordinary mind. They are just what they are, nothing more, nothing less, replete in themselves, mandatory or restrictive. But satanic influence has even been brought to bear against the truth in a deceptive manner. The reason Christ assigned for this antagonism was, that he, his satanic majesty, abode not in the truth, pronouncing him a liar from the beginning.

From the narrative given of Christ's being confronted with his satanic majesty subsequent to his baptism and forty days' fast, we do not learn of his total denial of the scriptures; but Christ's fervency in the advocacy of the written word affords a warrant for belief that his propositions were antagonistic to God's designs as reflected by the written word. Then we discover in Christ's advocacy of the written word, that this enemy essayed a misapplication of the written word. Hence it is made to appear that Christ's loyalty, on this important occasion, afforded evidence as to the futility of his efforts to inveigle the obedient Son in the meshes of disloyalty, so his satanic majesty left him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him.

Christ accepted the decrees of his Father by the exercise of his will power. (John 10: 17, 18.) And the fervency he demonstrated in the advocacy of the written word, in the inception of the ministerial work committed to him, was visible to its grand termination. He conquered, giving the most palpable evidence of self-government. His weapon, the written word, being aided by the Holy Ghost. (Acts 1: 1, 2.) Shall we anticipate more or be satisfied with less?

It may be claimed that Christ more effectively resisted temptation because of the superiority of his strength. Well, his superiority will be readily conceded; but the fact of his trials and sufferings being more intense, ought not to be overlooked, for with this fact in view we may believe his trials were proportionately great; for this would suggest an equality in a certain sense; so that if Christ had greater strength, his trials were according to his strength. We having less strength, and our trials being proportionate, and overcoming according to our strength, we then, if overcoming, are equally loyal with Christ, having overcome according to our strength. But we learn that Christ was in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin. In view of these facts and the promise of strength as our day demands, I could formulate no justifiable excuse for failing to resist because Christ possessed greater power than I.

But self-justification appears a prominent trait in the human character, perhaps attributable to the exalted opinion entertained of "self." But Christ's promise, namely, He that humbleth himself shall be exalted, and he that exalteth himself shall be abased, is very suggestive, and the necessity for an occasional halt for self-examination, is, to the sober thinker and student of the word, a very essential work. For we are very largely, if not altogether, what we desire to be.

In his study of the vital question of religion, man meets with the stimulating promise of being filled with righteousness, if thirsting for it, but this suggests to him a corresponding abhorrence of all that is unrighteous. Thus his will power or choice is taxed in the very incipient stages of his investigation. And his acceptation of God's saving method is attributable to a decision, as a result of self-government, which is a necessity, in view of the impracticability of serving two masters. So he receives the one and rejects the other. But as his acceptation of the gospel constitutes him a subject or citizen, and not a sovereign, a practical demonstration of loyalty to God is a necessity as the years go by; hence the necessity, by studiousness and a godly life, to increase the proficiency, that evidence of self-government may be more visible, as he or they move in their appointed place.

The success of the body as a whole is secured by the legitimate spiritual activity of the several integral parts thereof.

But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. —Eph. 4:7.

From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Verse 16.

Thus we learn: 1. That every one of us receives grace according to the gift of Christ. 2. That the whole body is compacted by that which every joint supplieth. 3. The result of this coöperative work of every joint or part supplying or working according to the gifts and callings of God is that every part makes increase in the body unto the edifying of itself in love. And in view of this grand result, attributable to the activity of the several integral parts, what greater stimulus to activity could we expect?

Sensationalism may be the prop or support to a religion brought into being by human wisdom, but the success of the everlasting gospel is only attributable to an intelligent obedience to God's mandates reflected by this everlasting gospel. Said the great Teacher to his chosen disciples, Go and teach whatsoever I have commanded you. They were therefore under restraint. Then the command to teach affords a warrant for belief that by God's grace they were competent to teach, having learned what to teach; therefore in view of antagonizing influences offering inducements to teach and believe other doctrines than Christ commanded them, they found it requisite to practically evince self-government in refusing to teach contrary to that Christ revealed, yet we find some vacillating, unstable, etc., confusion and disorder in the body or church under apostolic jurisdiction, with its blighting effects.

From President down to the last baptized member, self-government is an absolute necessity in a twofold sense: 1. That we may practically evince a God-imposed spiritual rectitude. If we are ignorant as to what would constitute a spiritual rectitude, we may learn from one of our predecessors, who has long, long since passed from this mundane sphere. Listen:—

And now, behold, the king walketh before you: and I am old and grayheaded; and, behold, my sons are with you: and I have walked before you from my childhood unto this day. Behold, here I am: witness against me before the Lord, and before his anointed: whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you.

What a proud moment of his life that must have been for the grand old Samuel, as in his godly dignity he challenged those before whom he had walked all his days, to lay one of those demoralizing practices at his door, and what superlative joy must have throbbed his soul as the air was being rent with their response,

Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand.—1 Samuel 12.

What a record for a man to have made. Those evils he enumerated are visible to-day, if credence is to be given to newspaper reports. O, where are the Samuels, that by a practical demonstration of this rectitude we may stimulate others, according to the gifts and callings of God unto us, to aspire to a like rectitude. For it were no more absurd to anticipate the draining of the sea with a wooden bucket than to anticipate spiritual progress among ourselves if failing to work and decide so that we may live in each other's confidence and affections. 2. Self-government is requisite to practically demonstrate a zeal according to knowledge. For knowledge being power, and said power properly exercised, it will be a preventive to stopping short of, and transcending law-imposed duties. So stimulate us to aspire to a gospel equilibrium. Negligence in present duty is productive of much evil, but a zeal not according to knowledge leading to transcending duty, assumption of power leading to teachings that may reflect on somebody, creating unpleasantness, which may be little better than indirect accusations, would prove most effective in preventing peace, and may prove most effective in creating strife, heartburning, etc. Let every man learn his duty; teach according to the office appointed; are divine injunctions, rendered more formidable because of the declaration that those learning not their duty are not accounted worthy to stand. (D. C. 104:44; 38:5.) Further: On the hypothesis that all are innocent until proven guilty—and the proof of guilt is attributable to a law-imposed procedure consisting of labor, inquiry, and decision, pending which the accused is entitled to defense, explanation, repentance, and forsaking—the climax of the incipient steps is the presentation of the law-required amount of unimpeachable evidence before a competent tribunal; and all this being done, lest justice should be subverted, appeal is permissible, if a necessity or a just cause exists therefor. Therefore, if by innundoes, indirect charges, etc., one feels he is arraigned as an evildoer without the above privileges which belong to the accused, it may be more effective for strife, etc., than would a legal trial. No wonder that the law should be so explicit and mandatory, imposing measures to culminate in dealing with the negligent, or those showing themselves not approved. Why should the loyal, orderly, and God-fearing members be annoyed and perplexed by the disloyal, disorderly, and rebellious, in view of the explicitness of the law, "He that sinneth and will not repent shall be cast out"?

Then I believe the acceptation of an official position in the church of the living God is tantamount to entering into a covenant with God to acquit oneself on the duties attaching to the accepted position.

I incline to the opinion that the instruction found in paragraph 18, section 17, Doctrine and Covenants, when properly carried out, is very stimulating to the newly baptized members, as is the observance of the seventh paragraph, when practical. Nor do I believe that the 20th paragraph, section 42, ought to be altogether ignored, "And again I say unto you, that ye shall be watchful and careful, with all inquiry," etc. What is a watchman for, if not to watch?

I could conceive of no advantage to accrue to me, if possessing the power, to lessen what is known as human liberty, as I could conceive of none in a failure to discriminate between human rights and God's decrees. I would not attempt a lengthy disquisition as to whether God's government is a theocracy or some other "ocracy," as it suffices me to say it is a verity, being similar in its construction to human governments, but being of divine origin. It cannot be improved upon, modified, or changed by human wisdom or power. Nor does the fact of many integral parts afford a warrant for belief that special privileges, class legislation; or the centralization of power for unrighteous purposes is guaranteed to any one or more of the integral parts, for all are alike amenable to given and accepted law, and this on the hypothesis that whatsoever is governed by law is preserved by law, etc. And the fact of God having spoken to his servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, precludes justification for a failure to understand and act in the light of given law.

The claim of three departments in God's government; namely, executive, legislative, and judicial, would not be extravagant; nor would it suggest that intrigue, deception, etc., said to exist in the political arena, would be in any degree permissible in essaying to work or act in any one or each of these departments, law being the rule of action given by the Superior to the inferior, which the latter must obey; and yet the present conception and use of common consent may aid unscrupulous men in the perpetration of nefarious schemes, for coöperation in unlawful measures seems sometimes more easily obtained than for lawful and God-imposed work.

I think of nothing more sacred, solemn, and important than that known as ordination, by and through which men are elevated to positions of trust, to deal with the souls of men. And a due study of Doctrine and Covenants 17: 12 tends to heighten rather than decrease the solemnity, etc. And what a trifling affair may ordination be made to appear under the method of common consent, for a competent official may be deposed and a less competent one elevated, an ordination effected by a majority vote of a ten-year-old boy.

From the above I learn: 1. That every elder, priest, teacher, or deacon is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto them, and he is to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one who ordains. And I incline to the opinion that appointment and ordination, if not inseparable, are quite closely connected; that the direction of the Holy Ghost for appointment is as essential as is its presence in ordaining; and I think one being placed in a position of trust, with a proper conception of his responsibility before God, is as likely to act properly in the matter, and his procedure receive Heaven's approval, and more so, than the ordination would be proper, etc., under the method of common consent, for it cannot be that all elevated to positions of trust are destitute of a conception of their responsibility. If any are, or are thought to be, inquiry should be made.

I am not a linguist, logician, collegian, graduate, cultured, educated, or refined, but rank among the illiterates. My expressed sentiments, therefore, on the method of common consent, may be erroneous, which I will readily concede if it is demonstrated. Common consent is traceable to the inception of the latter-day work on this wise: Joseph and Oliver were appointed and commanded to ordain each other to the Melchisedec priesthood, but were to defer ordination until the newly baptized members should assemble to, as Joseph stated, decide by vote whether or not they would accept them as spiritual teachers. That they could have refused to accept I concede, but that they could have appointed others in their stead by virtue of the right to vote, I deny. Their voting therefor neither added nor detracted from the legitimacy of the appointment, but gave them the privilege of voluntarily placing themselves in harmony with God in receiving those he had sent.

From section 27, Doctrine and Covenants, the facts appear: 1. Joseph was to be appointed to preside over a coming conference by the voice of it. 2. Oliver Cowdery was to assist in adjusting the then existing difficulty, and authoritatively informed that nothing contrary to the church covenants was to be appointed to any of this church, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith. Thus was the imperativeness of the church covenants imposed; nothing contrary thereto was to be granted to anyone in the church; to which all were commanded to consent, thus showing a unanimity of feeling in standing by the church covenants. If this does not form a basis for belief in the verity of the church covenants, I am at sea. Who will attempt to prevent me being overwhelmed? If it does, how would the permission of another verity to overthrow or set to one side the first verity, be legitimate?

Common consent has built us a college, whereby the little bit of law prohibitive of contracting debts has been overlooked (D. C. 64:5); and by common consent reunions are increasing, necessitating the expenditure of thousands of dollars annually. Now wouldn't it be better to pause a little, and consider the consequence of being in bondage, with corresponding efforts to release ourselves therefrom?

Pay the debt thou hast contracted with the printer. Release thyself from bondage.—D. C. 18:5.

Wouldn't it be better to sacrifice luxuries for a time and be free, than enjoy them and be in bondage? Has not Christ promised to be with the twos and threes whenever and wherever they meet? What more is obtained at big reunion meetings save the gratification felt by or through large gatherings? Who will tell?

He who is financially involved, wishing to cope with the exigency, lops off luxuries and contents himself with the necessities; but the careless and extravagant rush heedlessly on to ruin and disgrace.

I am not opposed to reunions in localities in which the work is little known, and a few saints, scattered and deprived of church privileges, may be occasionally brought together for a few days. But I say that in view of our present financial status, and pressing demands for an increase of laborers in the Lord's great harvest field, the church cannot afford to sustain and keep up the big reunions of years' standing. Then consider the last plea of the Business Manager of the Board of Publication, and the big debt they are staggering under.

In conclusion, I verily believe, in view of exigencies confronting us, it were better to forego the pleasure of big reunions and General Conferences (except when a necessity exists for the latter), and let an increased interest and godly zeal be seen in stated branch meetings, and corresponding efforts to release ourselves from bondage, with a corresponding sorrow for permitting ourselves to be inveigled in bondage, and in the future pay more earnest heed to Christ's instruction found in Luke 14: 27–30, with less desire for Gentile customs, evincing a greater proficiency in self-government, as the years go by.

LOST TRIBES.

I see in Herald for January 24 that Bro. D. M. Rudd takes some exception to my little article on the location of the ten tribes; and I am willing to admit that, if I had said the Nestorians were all of the lost tribes and their location was not east of north from Palestine, the brother would have made a point. But as I did not say nor believe that, Bro. Rudd has fired at random.

He did not try to prove that the Nestorians were not Israelites; he did not try to prove that the Nestorians do not inhabit the country where Shalmanezer placed them, about 721 B. C.; and finally, he winds up by proving that there are tribes of Israel in the north country that would come in remembrance before the Lord. Now if I had denied that, the brother would have made another point.

Respectfully,

J. C. CLAPP.

The Revue Scientifique contains an interesting paper by Professor Klossovsky entitled "La vie Physique de Notre Planète Devant les Lumières de la Science Contemporaine," in which the author regards the earth as a living organism whose functions are all closely connected according to certain laws. Even the variations of terrestrial magnetism are connected with a system of currents which traverse the earth's atmosphere and are correlated with its cyclonic activity. He considers, also, that the magnetic and electric fields have an influence on the progress of phenomena at the surface of the earth. The professor's idea of the earth as an organism is, however, not new. It originated many years ago with Guyot.

ALBION, Idaho, Jan. 4.

Editors Herald: — The denizens of the desert, or "wilderness of the people," sometimes come in remembrance before the Lord, and his people also. It is not always those whose surroundings are the most congenial, as far as natural conditions extend, which bring forth the most fruit unto righteousness. John the Baptist was in the desert until the time of his showing unto Israel. What is wanted to-day, far more than privileged conditions, is a natural or cultivated disposition in all of us "called to be saints," to study the "written word" with an open heart, to accept it, as able to make us wise unto salvation.

This is not all that is needed either. The Comforter is to be our instructor, to give us an understanding of the word, written for our admonition and learning, as well as peace and sweet assurance that we are the "children of the highest." The testimony of Jesus is not restricted to any one class, poor or rich, ignorant or learned, as far as the wisdom of man goes. But how nice it must be to be learned and humble, loving followers of Christ, with the inspiration of the Comforter to lift up the heart and beget desire to "seek knowledge by study as well as faith;" it seems utterly inconsistent with our faith to plead we have no time to read or pray. If would-be saints find no time for these requisites to "come up higher," what degree of the Master's Spirit is realized?

"These shall all be taught of God," is written as an incentive to comply with the whole counsel of God—the gospel law. Having obeyed the law of adoption, we have simply entered the high school, to be "taught of the Lord" in all the wisdom of the Lord. The church is designed to be a grand coöperative, mutual aid society. A certain portion of our time must be consecrated specially to the development of the spiritual appetite. Carnal desire is an abnormal condition of the inclinations, which is easily proven, as the hope of eternal life, grows under the holy influence of love, as it is being perfected, sanctifying all our desires, to perfect obedience, "hearkening to the voice of the Spirit."

Gross stupidity, in learning the voice of the good shepherd, is manifested by many professing godliness. It may not be so much stupidity after all, if I judge others by my experience, for my understanding was far better than my disposition to obey, or always say, "Father, thy will be done," and not mine. How gladly would I look back over my pathway and say I never said or did anything to grieve that heavenly Spirit, which brings such peace and sweetness to mind and body, when we continuously hearken and obey from a loving desire to win the favor of the Lord. No one will wait to be commanded to do anything where love is the guiding star of all our ways. To truly learn that His ways are "ways of pleasantness and all his paths are peace." This enlists all the inclinations of the mind of man, to reciprocate the love Him in whom centers all of the virtues which bless this beautiful world He created for the happiness of man. I am filled with sorrow when I see and hear so many people talk and act as if they saw only clouds, and rubbed against nothing but briars and thorns, going out of their way to stumble over the rocks into the pitfalls of life. Truly the carnal mind is at enmity with God. It is not subject to God, nor can it be.

"Come unto me all ye ends of the earth, buy milk and honey, without money or price."

"Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." "Ye shall find rest to your souls."

So many esteem life as a journey through a trackless desert, without a compass or guide. "Traveling through this wilderness." This is only true of those who are lost in mists of folly. Aliens to God. Many professed saints are wanderers among this giddy, foolish throng. The Lord never intended his children to walk in darkness and gloom. None on earth should be so joyous, or see so much pleasantness and sunshine in life as saints.

This reminds me of an incident at a baptism of four young maidens into the kingdom, at Hagerman, Idaho, in Gridley Creek, December 16; while hymn No. 531 of the Harp was being sung, the sun shone out so bright, it was a veritable repetition of the occasion which inspired the writer. May those covenants made with the "Prince of Peace" by those dear young maidens be kept before their eyes as a continual reminder of the golden day of their lives. To those who in the love of their hearts step forth for burial with Christ, to come forth to the "new life," by the "new birth" of "water and the Spirit," that day should be the most cherished and remembered of all the days of earth life in the flesh. Some good designer should arrange a certificate for framing, more attractive than any marriage certificate ever hung in any parlor, where fond hearts were united to walk lovingly as one till death severs the ties so dear to loving hearts. To be wedded to the Lord, walking in the bond of that covenant, till the rays of the Sun of righteousness arises in the heart, and shedding their searchlight far out over mountains and vales, and enlightening the eyes of our understanding to see our heaven-ordained privileges. The destiny within the reach of all who are truly born of God, under the inspiration of that "Teacher sent from God."

What blind mortals we children are. How "past offenses pain the eyes," when we begin to discern the deep wisdom of him whose "delight is with the sons of men." What a mighty searchlight is the Spirit of the Lord. Human eye or ear hath not seen nor heard what a grand provision a wise Father has made for his children in the mansions prepared in bringing about the "immortality and eternal life of man." Were our days spent from life's early morn to learn and walk in the light as He did, who came to do his Father's will, to always do those things which please the Father, what an Eden this little world would be. To many, "all the world is dark and dreary, everywhere I roam." "Here o'er this ruined, dark creation, sadly I roam." "Ever learning, but not able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Ever condoning sin in themselves and others. "Life is too short" to overcome all our "sins of convenience."

If we "cannot cease from sin" in behalf of our duty, as ambassadors for Christ, let us cease excusing ourselves and others in folly. For every idle word we shall give account in the day of judgment, for the misuse of our God-given faculties. "Come up higher;" sin excuses sin. Can no one call upon the Lord out of a pure heart in our day? If the heart be pure, will any impurities come out of it? Let us answer this each and all.

When the Master called me into the harvest field, a special charge was given to teach his gospel law according to what was "written," as the "Spirit of truth" should shed light upon it. To spare no diligence in calling upon the people, saints or sinners, to give heed to what is noted in the scriptures of eternal truth, for by giving loyal heed to those things, He will hasten Zion's redemption. For said the Master, the days are quickly coming when those servants, called to bear the vessels in my house, who weaken the straitness of my words, which hath gone forth from my mouth, shall not be able to stand. I am pleading with my people to come nearer to me and sanctify themselves, that I may cleanse them every whit from the blood of this generation, and there be some who weaken the strength of my people, by their example, in word and deed. It is not my privilege to exercise the prerogative of him who forgives or condones according to his own free will and pleasure. As the Spirit forgives, we may.

Years ago, the man the Master chose to counsel and direct the remnants scattered abroad, admonished them to cease from all their "sins of convenience." Had the shepherd's voice been heard and heeded, the gospel law would have been honored, magnified, and made beautiful and glorious in the sight of the nations even now. Every servant should be honored in his calling; otherwise the armies of Israel suffer reproach by the Gentile spirit. But "from the rising of the sun, my name shall be great among the gentiles." Are we, who claim the electric light, to be outshone in zeal for good works by those who "walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks which ye have kindled."—Isa. 50: 11.

We call upon the Lord to, "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake, as in the ancient days, in the generations of old."—Isa. 51: 9. Suppose he should answer this prayer indeed, where would we sleepy saints be found? "If the fire scathe the green tree, what would become of the dry?" and "if the righteous scarcely be saved, where will the ungodly and the sinner appear?" "Awake unto righteousness and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God; I speak this to your shame."—1 Cor. 15: 34. Now, even in "the wilderness of the people," some are learning the truth as it is in Christ—getting the knowledge of God. This knowledge is more desirable than all the fleshly sacrifices and burnt offerings of all ages.

By the prophets we see some men and women as well, through the ages, have dis-

cerned the true destiny and privilege of man, and stepped up to the gospel table. Neither have I any wish to appear stronger to fulfill the pleasure of the Lord than my "fellow servants." The sooner we learn the true intrinsic value of what is conferred upon us by the "laying on of hands," the better for us and all the world. For "the word of the Lord is given to the upright." Are any upright among men to-day? "The fear of the Lord is to depart from evil." "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." I dare say we who have entered into covenant with the Lord, agreed to be upright. All who truly enter the bond of the covenant, will heed neither allurements nor the frowns of the world. The heavens may roll together as a scroll; the earth, with its mountains and vales, may pass away, but all shall be well with those whose love flows into that "bright crystal sea."

Some of our contributors to the Herald and Ensign give us history of their goings up and down in the land, and I thought of the class of readers who might be interested in this feature of the missionaries' experience. This shows that different workers supply the varied food, for the literary table. Bro. S. D. Condit and I had a ramble in the Idaho mission wagon about two hundred and thirty-five miles westerly from Logan, Utah, in November and December, of which I may write more anon, if he does not; but on this trip to Hagerman, ninety miles west of Albion, my home, the four baptisms occurred at the hands of Elder S. D. Condit, and these maidens were confirmed on Sunday, December 17, at Hagerman, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Myron J. Durfee, the parents of two of the ladies, in a sacrament and confirmation meeting. Three children were also commended to a loving Father's care.

On our return we stopped over night with Mr. John Sawyer and family, twenty-five miles up the Snake from Hagerman. Mr. Sawyer going ten (round trip) miles to get hay for our team over night. What shall be his reward? We commend his kindness of heart, for he and family were most cordial; asking us to stop with him when around their way. However, I must say I have always been favored in meeting kind people in my rambles. One special instance, a Brighamite Bishop, at one time, who kept a home for the public, where I stayed about a week; when asked what I owed him, replied, "Nothing at all," though I asked him the privilege of staying as a lodger, when I stopped with him, and expected to pay for my accommodation. I do not boast of this, but thank the Master and they for favor and kindness.

Visiting from house to house and talking gospel themes, I discern an undercurrent of sentiment, showing a latent desire for more than their everyday experience affords. This, if warmed up, and cultivated, would bring forth fruit unto holiness. There is a stupor, or lethargy resting heavily upon the people, which if not shaken off, even if it requires the calling forth every energy of the individual, will sink us lower and lower in inertia, spiritual starvation, and death. A mighty struggle may be in the pathway of most people who essay to shake off the fetters which bind the people to their idols, but the reward is worth far more than the cost even if the bitterness of the struggle, at its first onset, continued for ages. There is always sunshine above the clouds. Some people remind us of the miners' hopes and fears; to-day they find a pocket of rare metal, to-morrow it pinches out, and their hopes drop below zero. And so it goes on from year to year, but few appear to find the true fissure vein. Even here the vein seems to pinch very narrow; but to those who watch, pray, and work, with the determination which sees success ahead, even if the clouds hover and storms descend, and the winds blow as though the God of nature opposed them; if they look upward and ahead, the vein widens, the storms blow over, the winds nestle down as a little child in its mother's arms. Then the clouds lift, and behold the glorious sunlight shines forth brighter than ever. Then all earth and heaven are smiling welcome to the strong unconquerable determination to overcome every opposing obstacle in the way. Then we take fresh courage and grow stronger in courage and zeal.

We inwardly feel the tide is inward, and say in our heart; "by Thy grace I will succeed." Stronger than ever we meet the hindering causes. A Napoleon or Grant, who knew not defeat. "There shall be no Alps." What is the glory of Grant or Dewey, beside the victor's wreath to us who shall overcome in this warfare, to subjugate the desire to sin—to subdue sin in ourselves? Verily, their glory is like a flitting sunbeam —firefly light—compared to electric light. However, we love to honor those who have the vim, which brings success, under the blessing of the Prince of Peace. Our nation is not as pure at its head as we would like to see. Still its destiny is to stand head and shoulders above every nation under the heavens, and this by the determinate counsel of the Holy One of Israel. Many of its leading spirits are of earth's noblest sons and daughters. No such a political power for good among men ever graced the footstool of heaven's King, or ever will succeed it. "This twig of the high cedar," even the topmost branch, was not planted in Joseph's land for naught. It will serve its purpose—carry its message and fulfill its mission to man, to earth's remotest bounds,—civil, political, and religious liberty.

The Lord uses the best material at hand to bring about his counsel. The heart of this nation is more righteous still than many who claim divine light, and yet would supplant with lustful greed the law ordained on Eden's soil, to govern sexual affiliation. The Lord of glory is an expansionist. He sets up nations and gives nation after nation for its life; when they fail to fulfill his counsel and pleasure, he roots them up by the agency he chooses, and none shall say it shall not be. When Israel came out of Egypt, nation after nation went down before the people of his choice, because the cup of their iniquity was full. It is easy to get the knowledge of God if we only desire it. "Ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace," but in the general corruption, the Lord has decreed to gather the riches of the earth, as a nest in the house of Israel; yet the reputed avarice of that people is proverbial. The "remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest."—Micah 5:8.

Let us fulfill verse 7, saints of latter-days, if you really want to see the arm of the Lord stretched forth in power, turn your hearts wholly to him, break every band or fetter which holds you slaves to folly, and get you in secret prayer, as well as lifting up your hearts at all times, in pleading to the Lord for Zion's weal. You are too careless; many, but not all. The Lord loves a lover, especially if the heart be pure. Love enlists all the tendrils of the heart, for the accomplishment of its purpose. If the purpose be to establish truth and righteousness every day, by example and precept, searching out what manner of life to lead, that we learn to "keep our vessels in sanctification and honor" before the Lord, "the oil of gladness" is ours. We shall be as the "apple of his eye."

How shall the saints be stirred up to seek to walk with a perfect heart before the Lord, that he shall come forth and serve us—that he come near to us as a swift witness against sin in every form, that the Lord is indeed sending forth judgment unto victory, then shall the nations turn to the Lord, or what is left of them. For when his judgments rest upon the land, "the people will learn righteousness." May the Master wake the people up, especially the sleepy watchers. For this blessed day, I shall watch, pray, and work. Yours for Zion's weal,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

CANTON, Ill., Jan. 25.

Editors Herald:—Once more an opportunity has been granted for us as a branch of saints to hear the gospel trumpet sounded. Elders J. W. Adams and F. A. Russell have been holding aloft the banner of King Emmanuel for about two weeks in our neat little chapel. While our crowds were not as large as we desired, yet in a city where prejudice ranks so high the people did fairly well in turning out and paid strict attention to the gospel truths that were explained so beautifully by those humble servants. Our hearts were made to rejoice when at the ending or nearly so of these meetings a promising young lady giving up all previous pleasures, presented herself for baptism, which was attended to by our cheerful young brother, F. A. Russell. How encouraging it is to see the young enlisting in the army of the Lord. And while they do so we feel like saying unto them,

Be faithful to your mission,
And service of your Lord;
And then a home in glory
Shall be your great reward.

Every effort is being made throughout the world to discover amusements that will be entertaining for the young especially. O, how many will be prepared to meet Christ at his coming? We so often hear the song sung, "Nearer, my God, to thee." Do we realize to the fullest extent the meaning of these words? As each day goes by just one day nearer are we to the end of our life's journey. Are we each day better qualifying ourselves to meet this great end? We all know that this great race is not run without patience and perseverance, and it is not a rare thing to have the finger of scorn pointed at you when trying to live a Christian life. But just such things cross our pathway to test our faith, but we need not fear, for God is near, and whatever we undertake to do in this life, whether pleasing or displeasing, or however it may be, let us not forget to lift our eyes heavenward and from a true heart say, Father, thy will be done, and not mine. I close with these words:—

May we who know the joyful sound,
Still practice what we know;
Not hearers of the word alone,
But doers of it too.

A sister in the faith,

MAGNOLIA SPRINGS, Ala., Jan. 10.

Editors Herald:—It has been more than eight years since I heard one of our elders preach; and oh, what trials and afflictions and persecutions I have passed through in those few years! No saints in this vicinity except myself and Sr. Belle Arnold, of Illinois, who lives with me. We are surrounded with dancers, card players, and scoffers of religion—all good people otherwise.

While I take no part with them, yet I have failed in my duty. I have strayed far from the old paths. Yet in all those dark days of trials and persecution, I have never regretted hearing and accepting of the restored gospel. Nothing can ever shake my faith in the Book of Mormon. It has been the anchor that has kept me from drifting on the rocks of infidelity.

Last night while alone and thinking of those things, the inclosed verses came into my mind. If you think them worthy a place in the Herald, publish them; if not, give to the waste basket; and ever remember the isolated ones in your prayers.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
MARY LEAVINS.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Jan. 24.

Editors Herald:—It has been a long time since I wrote to the Herald. I am still living in the faith of the gospel, and laboring for the good cause, and feeling well in body and spirit. The longer I live the more clearly I can see the word of God being fulfilled. I think the world is changing. I do believe and say that this year will be a fruitful year for the planting of souls in the Church of God; and I believe they will take root and grow better and stand firmer than in years before.

I believe the Lord is working to honor the words of his prophets in these last days. While he gathers the honest, the wicked slay the wicked. I hope all the saints will be very wise and not be moved by seducing spirits, for there are many.

We have had a pleasant time in our branch these last few weeks. I say pleasant time because many came into the church. Bro. T. W. Chatburn came and spent a while with us. He did a good work in the Sunday school. He is an excellent man for that work. Some say he is good for any part of church work. He preached for us; had full house, full of life and the Spirit of God. He baptized seven or eight good prosperous souls.

Our branch is growing fast. More are about ready for baptism. Our president is a good, faithful worker, and all the officers work in harmony, and all goes well. We have little to complain of. We have a fine Sunday school, Bro. George Wixom superintendent. He has good helpers, and all goes well for the good of all.

I am laboring in and around the city. The branch is scattered. The brethren in charge thought it best under the present circumstances. I visit from house to house and talk to many who do not come to church, and show the difference between our church and the Utah church. The Utah elders are here, but will not come where we are. I hope this will be a fruitful year. It has made a good start here and in many other parts of this land. I am encouraged to move steadily onward in God's work. The elders can plant the seed; God only can give the increase.

Yours in bonds,
W. M. GIBSON.

MACON, Mo., Jan. 30.

Editors Herald:—When I last wrote you it was on my arrival at Moberly to attempt cottage meetings, and the first one was such a success that I was greatly encouraged, and especially so as I had the choice of four cottages, and there was quite an interest manifested in our efforts to tell the gospel story. O how soon our brightest hopes are snuffed out like a candle! for the night of our first meeting it began raining, and we had all kinds of stormy weather for about three weeks, so that it was mud and slush, and the proper sign for this portion of the State, and set in the middle of the road, would have been:

No bottom! Almost needless to say the undertaking of the cottage meetings was a fizzle. That I should not be overcome with the b-l-u-e-s, I betook myself to pen work, perhaps if the product has not found its way into the waste basket, it may help others, as the producing aided the subscriber.

Thinking that the coal digger and the farmer had more grit to face the storm and mud, hied me away to Oak Grove schoolhouse, and lodged with Bro. William Vaughan. Experiences here were not of a character to impress me that the millennium was fully inaugurated. The interest was so indifferent, that it was a case of three times and out. I spent the most lonesome Christmas whose picture hangs on memory's wall. The opportunity of active labor for the spread of the gospel is a most helpful means of bearing up under earthly trials. Thank God for the privilege of working.

Before the old year expired I went to Bevier, and at once entered upon active service, co-operating with the branch. The most of January has been warm and springlike, with occasional showers, and although the wild birds made music in the glen, and the wild flowers were blooming in the dale, and the up-to-date man, planted his early potatoes, all these did not give us passable roads, or prevent this snug cold snap. So I kept preaching of evenings, and writing by day, and all with an earnest desire to promote our cause among the people. And although suffering with a severe cold, He that cares for the sparrow, granted his Holy Spirit in the preaching of the restored gospel.

One event I wish to mention in particular: There are a number of young peoples societies in Bevier; all were invited to meet in one of the churches January 7. The Religio to the number of about sixty responded to the invitation, and composed about one half of the audience. The subject for the evening was prayer, and from my point of view, the Religio bore their part of the exercises nobly and worthily. Short addresses were made by Brn. F. T. Mussell, J. A. Tanner, W. T. Maitland, and R. M. Elvin. Although the Religo is not yet a year old at Bevier, and the only local in the district, and without the aid of experienced workers, save an occasional visit from Sr. Louise Palfrey, it is making evident progress and is helpful to all who are taking an active interest. The missionary can well afford to speak a cheerful word for this institution for good, so that when there is fulfilled to us, "These sons of my servants are called, and if faithful shall in time be chosen to places whence their fathers shall fall, or fail, or be removed by honorable release before the Lord and the church" (D. C. 124:7), there shall be found a phalanx of intelligent, well-informed, spiritual men, who will successfully carry on the work of the Lord.

Of late I have examined much that is the output of Utahism in defense of their organization, and in this connection I think it wise that we should be thoroughly acquainted with their position; but first of all there is a necessity for our familiarity with the standard books and history of our own church. I fear there are too many of our people that are not sufficiently informed, both in doctrine and in history.

The vote in the House of Representatives of 268 to 50, excluding B. H. Roberts, would look as if he was a "mis-sent" package, he may now return to his mountain home singing: The cruel war is over no poly-chob need apply. It would appear that Utah has abandoned the cause of the unconverted polygamist, as there is a special election called to fill the "vacant seat." The papers state that Roberts' friends are talking of running him for Governor of Utah. That would be another indication that Utahism is chained to the dogma and crime of polygamy.

While gospel topics are the chief subjects of our consideration and study, nevertheless we cannot separate ourselves from the practical side of life. To make my meaning clear, I lodged for four weeks with a coal miner, who has a wife and three children, all depending upon his daily toil. This man is but an example of what I have every reason to believe of many honest, willing toilers, who desire to be upright and just with man and God, and uncomplainingly willing to continue at the workaday task, and subsist on the from "hand to mouth" condition.

The situation as I see it is about thus: Last May there was a strike which continued until the early part of November. The coal operators kept their mines in operation with those who according to the miners' code are called "scabs." When the strike ended the miners were put to work, but by the new year, there was an over-supply of coal on the market and the miners are not averaging more than a day per week at the present time. These operators keep what is usually known as a company store, where their employes are under the necessity of trading, as the operator keeps back two weeks or a month's wages, and cash is only paid out on pay day. When the wage kept back is eaten up, that ends the trade, as there is no credit for the miner.

Often the dwellings occupied by the miners, are the property of the companies, and in that case the house rent must be the first thing paid. Again the miner has to pay from ten to fifty per cent more for his supplies than they could be had at an independent or individual store. Could you blame me, if while eating, there should arise in my mind, Are you eating the children's bread? How my heart goes up to God for the time when his people will not have thus to suffer.

For almost a week I have been under the rooftree of Bro. F. Palfrey, laid up for repairs. One baptized at Bevier last Sabbath.

There have been so many moved away, and indifference upon the part of others, that the outlook is not what I should be pleased to see it; but the work is the Lord's, and if we faithfully labor we should be satisfied with results and the situation. So with a steady pull we will try not to "joggle the boat."

In bonds,

SPOKANE, Wash., Jan. 28.

Editors Herald:—We have only nine members living in this city at present, and only five of those obey the commandment of assembling together. We meet at No. 1007 College Avenue every Sunday at 2:30 p. m; also by invitation of neighbor Bucknell we have meeting at 7:30 p. m. at his residence in our immediate neighborhood, where prejudice seems to be lowering. Our little meetings are really a feast of good things, where we feel the presence of the Holy Spirit, which fills our hearts with joy and gladness and strength to bear our trials, which without those blessings would be almost unendurable; but we realize that we have just enough trials to keep us in the straight and narrow way. If we could have some good minister come here and stay a while, there might be some worthy ones gathered into the fold. We expected Bro. D. L. Harris, with the understanding that he could stay a month, and money was sent to help him on his way. We were also told a few months ago that Bro. Griffiths was coming here, but we haven't yet seen either of those estimable brethren. Shall we yet see them? Neither do we ever see our president. We are a little flock without a shepherd, struggling along as best we can.

In the last Herald is a letter in which Bro. Holt says: "O, how much better it would be for all, if men who call themselves ministers of Christ would follow the Golden Rule!" Amen to that, Bro. Holt; and let me add, if they would adhere to the law as found in the church books, how much less pain our hearts would feel. If such men would never cast aside the law of the Lord and say, "We can't always under all circumstances, keep the law to the letter. In some cases we have to use our own judgment." O, what is man, and what is his judgment, and how dare man trifle with what the Almighty has given! I hope mercy will be extended to such men and they be given time to repent and come up higher.

Ever your sister for the advancement of truth and purity of life,

S. F. HOOKER.

CUCAMONGA, Cal., Jan. 27.

Editors Herald:—After an absence of about three weeks, at Los Angeles and Santa Ana, the writer returned to this place the 7th inst. The interest and his influence increased while he was away, for the leaven had been at work during his absence. Mr. and Mrs. Wingerd, formerly of the Dunkard Church, were baptized Sunday, the 14th. I dreamed of baptizing them while away. They are good people, the very soul of religious honor, and will be helpful to the cause. Others have been convinced and many friends made. We trust the former, at least some of them, will be obedient soon. The local press has made favorable mention of our work, for which we are thankful.

The last paragraph of Bro. S. W. Simmons' letter in Herald of the 17th was read with much interest. "Them's my sentiments." In one of the Ensign editorials we find these words: "The tattler, fault-finder, and chronic grumbler will have no inheritance in Zion." They are surely true. In the latter-day revelations there are in substance these statements "Cease to find fault one with another;" "Sustain each other;" "Let nothing separate you from each other." In James 3:17 we read the following language:—

"The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy."

Please weigh each feature carefully, reader, and see if you have such wisdom.

Yours in hope,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

ARROYO GRANDE, Cal., Jan. 27.

Editors Herald:—I left home in October last and will not return until our spring conference, to be held at Santa Cruz. Am holding cottage meetings here, and am having fairly good success. Have baptized seven this month so far; the youngest one thirty-five, the eldest seventy-seven years of age, with good prospects for more in the near future.

This is a new field for gospel work. There have been none of our elders in here for many years and it is like a new field.

Your colaborer,

E. KEELER.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 29.

Editors Herald:—The work here now is getting along very well at present. I closed my protracted meeting Sunday evening, January 28, on account of moving my mission to the south part of the city. The dear saints here have done all they could to help me.

My last attack upon the enemy will be the means of bringing a few into the church. A fine lady tells me to-day that she intends to obey the gospel just as soon as the water in the lake gets clear of ice, and three or four more also say they will obey, and I think it is only a matter of time before it will be a mighty fight here for victory among those that oppose the truth.

Surely I can say it is a fight and a hard fight to get this gospel before the people; but I intend to fight the battle to the end.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, after I move from No. 1802 Armour Avenue my next address will be No. 508 Thirty-Seventh Street, about five miles from here. My present address is No. 1806 Armour Avenue, Chicago, in care of Sr. H. Bacon. Write to me at that address, and oblige,

Your brother in Christ,

ELDER G. H. GRAVES.

MARLIN, Texas, Jan. 24.

Editors Herald:—We feel grateful to our heavenly Father for bestowing so many blessings upon his people in the Southwestern mission. Many have been made to rejoice and every manifestation given to the saints presents a brighter day ahead, near at hand. Yes, the awakening day is at hand. O, may the good Lord permit us to be blessed with his people at that time!

Sixteen years ago while laboring in the Lamoni branch, I was permitted to see many things that would transpire, and all have been literally fulfilled, with the exception of the awakening time, and, as I understand, that great event is near at hand, when God will more abundantly bless his people. O yes, we need more help from God. We need a greater endowment of the Holy Spirit. We need more unity and love, and it will soon be given.

I do not mean to say that our Savior is coming this year or next year in power and great glory; no, I do not know when that will take place; but the preparatory work is the preaching of the gospel, and bringing ourselves in subjection to God's law.

Bro. Duncan Campbell's article in late Herald is a good one.

The work in Texas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory is onward, and the reports from Arkansas are good. All seem to be doing well, as my late report to the Presidency shows. Of course we want to improve and do a little more good as we progress in the gospel.

Some parts of the field are suffering for the want of help. I have tried to use my time where others could not go. I have not been able to reach many pressing calls. I have not spent any time in Northeast Texas and Choctaw District, as Brn. J. D. and E. A. Erwin have done labor there, and Bro. Bailey being district president, I have felt safe in them doing well. Arkansas needs more laborers, as also Texas. May the Lord bless us to do good is my prayer.

"SABBATARIAN THEORIES A DELUSION."

I have just read the little work written by Elder Albert Haws, entitled, "Sabbatarian Theories a Delusion." It is a forcible and clean-cut argument, bristling with points, and will be found a pesky thing for Saturday-keeping folks to deal with. A kind of modern machine gun charged with smokeless powder and explosive bullets, and when operated you may expect to see Adventists lying around as if studying the course of the Pleiades or locating the Swan or Great Bear. Sells for 15 cents, worth one dollar.

I just closed a series of meetings at Decatur, and as a result six were baptized, all adults, and several more very near the kingdom.

I just returned from our conference at Omaha. Had a very good spiritual conference. My heart is made glad at the prospects of the work. I hope to be able to do a good work in these parts.

SABBATARIAN THEORIES A DELUSION.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1900,

Editors Herald:—The book with the above title, by Elder Albert Haws, appears upon reading to leave nothing unanswered that has been presented by the Seventh-day Adventists in advocacy of the Mosaic Sabbath being continued under the gospel dispensation. It is a book of much merit, and any who desire to become acquainted with the absurdity of the claim for an Edenic Sabbath will do well to read this work. It is sold by the author at No. 922 Third Street, Oakland, California, or can be had at the Herald Office, Lamoni, Iowa. The price is fifteen cents.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo.

Dear Editor:—Since so much has been said against wearing corsets, I think it only fair to give the other side a hearing, so send you the enclosed, which I have written for the Herald, if you think it worthy of publication.

Yours respectfully

SARAH A. DAKE.

THE PLEA OF THE CORSET.

Just listen to the pleadings of the corset, much abused,
I do not harm the ladies, although I'm greatly used;
And though the ladies like me, my morals I keep right,
I do not use tobacco, if they don't lace I don't get tight.

I make the ladies look so pretty, trim, and neat,
That when they go out walking they look well upon the street;
Their dresses and their jackets fit over me so well,
I often help them out in cutting quite a swell.

But when my brother's coatsleeve comes along in so much haste,
And before the lady knows it gently steals around her waist;
He gives her one tremendous squeeze and makes me fit so tight,
I break in forty pieces, and hurt with all my might.

They say I've many victims, but I think I apprehend,
The average life of women is longer than of men;
I help to keep them warm, I hold the body straight,
And then to tell the truth, I make them look first-rate.
Behold the English ladies, the French, and Scotch as well,—
For many years they've used me, with them I always dwell;
And now, my dearest brothers, if you hunt the world around,
A healthier class of ladies than these cannot be found.

I've seen these jumbo women, with a waist they call immense,
When seated at the table they eat with no pretense;
They work well at cooking, and do it up quite right,
While appetite and victuals are both way out of sight.

When asked to buy a corset, I've heard them oft exclaim,
"I never wear a corset," "I doctor all the time;"
I fancy that the grocery men, and doctors too, both hate
The very name of corset, I reduce their bills so great.

Then, too, that narrow shoe sole that dampens with the dew,
Too thin to be protection, but chills the body through;
The ladies catch their death of cold by such imprudent acts,
Then the doctors blame the corset instead of telling facts.
And there's that heavy dress skirt that weighs near twenty pound,
Together with their underskirts, all o'er the hips are bound;
They are girted at the waist to keep from slipping down,
But the corset does the mischief, so goes the word around.

Now if a brother wants to take, to cheer his lonely life,
Who goes without a corset, a darling little wife,
I refer him to the Lamanites; their dusky maidens sweet,
Go dressed without their corsets, I think they'd suit complete.

They are not strong, however; consumption is their pest,
They're large around their waist, but narrow through their chest;
Methinks to wear a corset perhaps 'twould do them good:
'Twould help expand their lungs, and lessen some their food.

I think that when an elder's called the gospel true to preach,
About the ladies' corsets he is not called to teach;
And while he's talking 'bout them, and speaking of their looks,
He'll magnify his calling if he'll study up his books.

I know I have my faults, but have my virtues too,
And often I am blamed for things that others do;
Many enemies I have, whose actions I deride,
Since they have told my failings, you have now the other side.

SARAH A. DAKE.

ABIDE WITH ME.

When the flowers bloom about me,
When the sun lights up the sky,
When the birds are sweetly singing,
When no evil thing is nigh,
Fold me in thine arms, dear Savior,
Hold me closer, Lord, to thee,
While the flowers bloom about me,
Father, O, abide with me!

When the night falls dark about me,
Clouds have gathered in the sky,
When the birds have ceased their singing,
When the blossoms droop and die;
Yet shall I sing on as gladly,
Though thy face I may not see,
If thine arms of love enfold me!
Father, O, abide with me!

Yes, abide with me, my Savior;
Every joy would lose its sweet
If I wander from thy presence—
O, I pray thee, guide my feet!
Yea, thy word shall light my pathway,
Give me life and love and thee,
Thou hast said thou'lt ne'er forsake me,
Evermore abide with me!

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE SECRETARY.

The one, on whom rests a great responsibility; one of the few, to whom the school looks for the creation of activity and interest; the one, whose work will be used as a future reference; the one, whose record will stand for years, a monument to accuracy and industry or to carelessness and indifference; the one, to whom the district looks for an accurate statistical report of the school, is the Sunday school secretary.

The office of secretary is the window through which we view our school.

We have in mind a very remarkable shop window. Not that there was anything so remarble about the window itself ('twas but a plain plate glass, set in wood, like a dozen or more others in the same town); nor was there anything out of the ordinary in the goods contained in the shop. But that which attracted so much attention and caused a greater number to enter, was the ingenuity of the one who stood behind the window.

With the same class of goods which had occupied the place for years, together with available improvements which are always in demand, he contrived. quite frequently, to present to the eyes of his customers, something interesting and attractive; his object being, not to deceive any, but simply to get people to SEE his goods.

To you, Sunday school secretaries, belongs the grand privilege of draping the "Sunday School Window;" your object being to cause the school to see itself.

The old and uninteresting way of draping the window, that of simply "reading the report" of the school at the close of each session, we are glad to say, is being swept away by the tide of progression. The great objection to this way is that, for the major part of the school, the time is wasted. Not only is the time lost, but also the opportunity of arousing interest and proffering incentives.

If you read your report on last Sabbath, put it on the board this time. If you reported your school as a whole one time, compare the classes another time. If you compared your classes, last Sunday, on a basis of attendance, compare them the next time on a basis of preparation or punctuality. Frequently compare attendance or preparation of the lesson of officers, teachers and pupils. Let your officers and teachers know that at the close of the quarter, their record will be placed upon the board. It will be a wholesome stimulus to better work and needs cause no offense. It does us good times to be shown our deficiencies as well as our effeciencies.

Keep your school constantly wondering what you will do next, and we assure you, your report will be heard, your efforts appreciated, and your members aroused.

In the light of the past we view the present. By our past successes and failures we measure our present state of progression and may profit by it.

The history of our schools lives only in memory and in the records kept by our secretaries. Hence, the need of care being taken that the records are properly filled out during each session.

"Procrastination is the thief of time." Not only is this true in the work of keeping the record, but in sending in the reports.

How well we do feel when our district secretary is able to say to the convention that every school in the district has reported in due time! We then think that our district is awake in at least one line of work, and we infer that it is alive in other respects.

Our secretary can then show us our district as a whole, and by comparing with past reports we may determine whether our numbers are increasing or diminishing; whether our libraries are growing; and whether we are in the forward rank of advancement.

DEVELOPMENT OF TALENT.

Webster tells us that talent is an endowment or gift bestowed on us by the all-wise Creator. He then requires us to develop the talent, or make the best use of it we can. Not to bury it or hide it away, doing ourselves an injustice, also those whom we might have benefited by it if we had made proper use of it. We believe that God has given to each one of us certain talents, and if we seek to develop that which he has already given, he will add unto us other talents; as is written in Matthew chapter 25. To some are given talents to preach, to sing, to play on musical instruments, to teach, to write good books, and many others we could mention. If each of these talents are developed it is for the good of the work. For we read that our heavenly Father knows how to give good gifts unto his children. He has given us these talents for the edifying of the work. Have you any of these talents? Have you developed them? If not, why? Begin now, for now is the accepted time.

"ZION'S GLORY."

COMPOSED BY BRO. F. R. TUBB.

'Tis the glorious light of Zion
Gleaming o'er the distant wave,
Calling to the far, stern battle,
The true-hearted and the brave;
Calling both for young and aged,
Calling both the weak and strong;
To the never-ending battle,
To the glorious vict'ry song.

Christ our everlasting Leader,
Bids us hope, and work, and strive;
Saying, If ye keep my statutes,
Ye shall save your souls alive;
If ye keep your armor brightly
Gleaming with a constant zeal,
Ye shall tread the slopes of Zion,
Ye shall climb that Holy Hill.

See, the blood-stained banner blowing,
As the breeze floats swiftly by;
On its beauteous pinions flowing,
Read the words of hope and joy:
"Christ our Leader; hope our guerdon,
Faith our noble panoply;
Everlasting life the burden
Of our glorious battle cry."

See! Our ranks are filling, surely
We shall conquer, if we stand
Ever nobly, ever truly
As a firm united band.
Then our foes shall flee before us,
As the great Assyrian host,
With Christ's blazoned banner o'er us,
Shall we deem the battle lost?

GENERAL SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

District Secretaries and Secretaries of Schools not in Districts of the General Sunday School Association; Notice:—

For fear the letters which are addressed to you personally, will not reach you, and in order to bear in mind the necessity for making a prompt report of your district or school, ample time to have it incorporated in my general report to the association, you will kindly take notice of the following instructions:—

It is expected that the reports from the local schools made to the last district convention prior to the General Convention at Lamoni in April, will be the basis on which you make your general report, and as it is at this district convention that delegates are selected to represent your district at the General Association meeting, it is necessary, if you have not yet notified your local secretaries, to do so now, and send blank reports to them requesting them to have them filled out properly without fail and sent to you. You will then please compile your district report, and send it to me at once, or not later than March 20th. Also send a list of the delegates chosen to represent your district. The constitution provides for the election of officers for the ensuing year at this meeting, and you will therefore kindly insert the full names and addresses of the officers thus selected, on the report. Please see to it that this is not overlooked, as these officers are "ex officio" members of the General Convention, and unless you furnish their names, we do not know them.

Secretaries of schools not members of district associations will send their annual report to me, also list of delegates and names of officers, similar to the manner above described. W. N. ROBINSON, Gen. Sec.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo.

Miscellaneous Department.

TO THE SEVENTY.

The Seventy are requested to meet in joint session at the Mite Society rooms, Lamoni, at nine a. m., Tuesday, April 3. It is desired to devote the first meeting to prayer and a general interchange of thought and feeling. To the end that our meetings may be profitable to ourselves directly, and indirectly to the church as a whole, let us come together in the spirit of peace and of progress. Let it be remembered that the Seventies have duties to perform in the councils of the church as well as in the missionary field that make it necessary for them to be in possession of a goodly degree of the Spirit of light and truth. The Spirit of God is as needful in council and in conference as it is in the preaching of the gospel to the world. The same conditions are requisite in order to enjoy its presence in the one case as in the other. The Lord said in an early day, "to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work," that "no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things, whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."

And to the elders of the Reorganization the Lord has said directly: "There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ." Should we expect that any less would be required in those assemblies of the elders and saints convened to do business for God and his kingdom?

The high order of spiritual qualifications required of the Seventy, in common with other leading quorums of the church, in making decisions of general import to the church, is thus set forth in the law providing for their organization: "The Seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world—thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling; and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the Twelve especial witnesses, or Apostles, just named. And every decision made by either of these quorums must be by the unanimous voice of the same; that is, every member in each quorum must be agreed to its decisions, in order to make their decisions of the same power or validity one with the other. . . . Unless this is the case, their decisions are not entitled to the same blessings which the decisions of a quorum of three presidents were anciently, who were ordained after the order of Melchisedec, and were righteous and holy men. [Carefully notice what follows.] The decisions of these quorums, or either of them, are to be made in all righteousness, in holiness and lowliness of heart, meekness and longsuffering, and in faith and virtue and knowledge; temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity; because the promise is, if these things abound in them they shall not be unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord."—D. C. 104:11.

Special attention is called to these requirements and conditions, for the reason that they cannot be put on or off at pleasure, as a man may don or doff a garment. A man cannot of himself, at a moment's notice, become meek and holy and lowly, having faith and patience and charity, and all the graces enumerated above. They must have become habitual to him by an earnest, prayerful, and constant endeavor in their cultivation, in order that he may be sure of their exercise when the emergencies and exigencies of his duties call for them. They must become ingrafted in his temperament and constitution, so that their exercise may be spontaneous on all occasions and under all circumstances. Hence the need that we do not neglect or put off these things thinking that we can assume them at pleasure when occasion calls for them at conference time.

You are called together at an early date, in order that we may not be hurried in the transaction of our necessary business, as we sometimes are, and that we may be ready to give due and proper consideration to such matters as may come before us during the session of conference.

Reports should be forwarded by March 15, and do not forget that they are to cover two years. Members of the second quorum will send their reports to Columbus Scott, Lamoni, Iowa. The members of the first quorum, who are under General Conference appointment, will of course report to conference, and these reports are, according to rule, accepted as quorum reports. Those of the first quorum not under General Conference appointment are requested to send their reports to R. S. Salyards, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

Praying that the Spirit of the Master may be with us in our assembling,

We are your colaborers,

DUNCAN CAMPBELL,
President First Quorum.

C. SCOTT,
President Second Quorum.

IOWA AND MINNESOTA MISSION.

The last missionary reports, before the holding of the General Conference, will come due on or about March 1, from those not in charge, and on or about March 10, from those who are in charge of "fields of labor." Please be prompt, so that we can present a proper list of applicants to the Quorum of Twelve, which meets March 15.

Please remember that the essential items to be reported are: Number of sermons preached; number of baptisms; ordinations; new openings made. The reports must cover the entire year, and it would be better for them to cover the entire conference term, that is, the past two years, for our last annual reports were not complete. As before, tell us whether you are an applicant for future missionary work; and if you are, what amount (per month) will support your family? Give the number of your dependents, respective ages of your children, etc.

Unless otherwise stated, we will take it for granted that you are available for any field; but if you mention your preference of fields, it will be considered, but not, necessarily, granted. New applicants will be considered, but we cannot tell who will be appointed from the new list or the old.

Your coworkers, in love,

J. R. LAMBERT.
HEMAN C. SMITH.

SOUTHWESTERN MISSION.

To the Ministry of Southwestern Mission:—I kindly ask you to report to T. J. Sheppard, Oklaunion, Texas, so reports may reach us by March 10. We ask for a report for two years. Do not fail to give all items. State how much your family will require per month. . 2t A. J. MOORE.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of Northeast Texas and Chocktaw district; Greeting:—Having been continued by our Bishop, Bro. E. L. Kelley, as Bishop's agent of your district, I beg to ask of you as you have so nobly assisted the church in times past, the same liberality in your tithes and offerings in the future.

The battle is on, and never was there a time when there was a greater need of laborers than at present, as the field is white for the harvest, and the Lord has promised to bless his people during the year 1900, inasmuch as they are faithful, as they have never been blessed before.

We hope if possible to add two or three new laborers to the district after conference, as we hope there will be sufficient funds for their maintenance. Our district, financially, is in a very favorable condition, and all the missionary force seems to be doing all they can to advance the work; so let us move forward with courage, for the signs of the times certainly indicate that the victory is not far distant. A. L Newton will act as sub agent at Cove, Arkansas; E. A. Erwin in the Manchester and Lydia branches; and Bro. Peter Adamson at Wilburton. Any money turned over to them will be receipted for and thankfully received.

that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the district appointing, with name of district and place and date of holding of conference, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary.

Branches not in districts are each entitled to one delegate and one vote.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting," are as follows:—

Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference:—

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation, (the full delegation not being present,) they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes."

Attention is called to the following, adopted at last General Conference:—

"Resolved, that the Secretary be and is hereby authorized to devise and have printed a blank form of delegate credentials; and that a copy or copies be sent to each district or branch entitled to representation, prior to the convening of each General Conference."

District secretaries and secretaries of branches not in districts who fail to receive credential blanks will be supplied promptly on receipt of postal card with address.

DIED.

SPEER.—Sr. Kate M. Speer passed from this life January 20, 1900. Was born April 16, 1859, in Oran Township, Fayette County, Iowa. November 16, 1879, was married to Mr. Samuel R. Speer; to this union was born four children, who with a faithful companion survive her. While residing near Oelwein, Iowa, she was baptized. The death of Sr. Speer has removed a devoted saint of God, a faithful companion, and a loving mother. Funeral sermon in M. E. church at Emmetsburg, by Elder J. R. Sutton.

STONE.—At Mission San Jose, California, January 19, 1900, Mary Jane Stone. Born in Sussex, New Jersey, August 7, 1830. With her parents she lived in Nauvoo. Her father was killed by the mob during those troublesome days. She was married to John Murdock, who died during the exodus west from Nauvoo. She was among the early pioneers that settled in Salt Lake Valley, where she married Samuel Holmes, and later on they moved to California. Seven children were born to them, six of whom still survive. Mr. Holmes was killed by an accident in 1866. In 1870 she married Mr. B. H. Stone, from which union there are two daughters living. Becoming convinced of the departure from the faith of the original Latter Day Saints by the Utah Church, she renounced it and was baptized into this church in 1870. Funeral sermon in the Christian church at Irvington, by Elder F. M. Sheehy.

LARSEN.—Near Moorhead, Iowa, January 12, 1900, L. John Larsen, aged 22 years and 19 days. He was born December 24, 1877, at Downer's Grove, Illinois; was baptized at Logan, Iowa, October 4, 1890. He was the eldest son of Bro. and Sr. Anders Larsen, and leaves his parents, four sisters, and two brothers to mourn. He was a faithful, earnest, consistent member of the church, respected and loved by all who knew him. Funeral services were held at the chapel, Moorhead, Iowa, in charge of Elder George Montague.

LIGHTFOOT. — Levi Lightfoot was born in Pennsylvania, March 13, 1817, and departed this life January 15, 1900, at Omaha, Nebraska. He was baptized into this latter-day work in 1842, and after the death of the Martyr he remained neutral until the rise of the Reorganization, when he was baptized by Bro. James Blakeslee, at Sandwich, Illinois, October 6, 1859. He bore a faithful testimony to the truthfulness of this glorious latter-day work even unto death; 58 years a member. He was twice married, and leaves a wife and ten children to mourn. Funeral from the chapel, Omaha, Nebraska, Elder F. A. Smith preaching the sermon. Another veteran gone to rest.

BLAKEMORE.—At Bevier, Missouri, January 18, 1900, Cecil Blakemore. Born December 10, 1899. Service from the house, sermon by Elder J. A. Tanner.

HALL.—Andrew Hall died December 22, 1899, at his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa. He was born January 4, 1817, in Belmont, Maine. Married to Sarah Jane Moody, January 19, 1839, who died in St. Joseph, Missouri, December 11, 1860, leaving him three sons and five daughters, all of whom are living, as also are thirty-five grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren, a total of fifty-seven. On September 22, 1864, he married Celelia Cathrine Jensen, who survives him. Bro. Hall was baptized into the church February 16, 1843, and was ordained an elder in April the same year. He was ordained a seventy in April, 1844, at a conference in Nauvoo, and at once took a mission to the East, where he was at the time of the martyrdom of the Prophet and Patriarch. Later, he received his patriarchal blessing from William B. Smith, the promises of which have been realized so far as the writer knows. After the dispersion of the church he followed Brigham Young to Winter Quarters; but unable to approve the teaching and practice of that body, he left them, later going to Preparation, Iowa; however, he did not remain long. After hearing the elders of the Reorganization he was baptized August 17, 1861, and ordained an elder. Bro. Hall was Bishop's agent for Pottawattamie district twenty years, serving under Bishops Rogers, Blakeslee, and Kelley, only resigning when incapacitated by his infirmaties. He was a diligent student of church history and the revelations, conscientiously striving to keep in harmony with the same. Faithful to the end he enters into rest, with the confidence and respect of those who knew him best. He was buried in Walnut Hill cemetery from the Saints' church, Elder Mark H. Forscutt, officiating. J. CHAS. JENSEN.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Advance sheets of the thirteenth annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, issued yesterday, embody a strong plea to Congress to enact necessary amendments to the interstate commerce act. In its last annual report, the commission says, attention was called to the vital respects in which the present law had proved defective and inadequate; that the present law could not be enforced; and that until further legislation should be provided the best efforts toward regulation must be feeble and disappointing. It is pointed out that the requests of the commission for needful amendments have been supported by petitions and memorials from agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial interests throughout the country, yet not a line of the statute has been changed and none of the burdensome conditions which call for relief has been removed or modified.

The existing situation and the developments of the last year, the commission says, render more imperative than ever the necessity for speedy and suitable legislation. Nine-tenths of the people, it is stated, do not know that any railroad company can charge for its service whatever it may please, without any real power in the commission or any other tribunal to regulate the amount of such charge when complaint is made.

It is also stated that shippers have been practically unanimous in favor of a single classification of freights, one that will be uniform for all roads and all sections of the country and reasonably stable.

Dissatisfaction with the present statute has frequently been expressed in resolutions adopted by various national organizations, composed of business men, manufacturers, and farmers, and by the national convention of Railroad Commissioners. Such a movement of associated producing and shipping interests, representing, it is said, an amount of invested capital exceeding the aggregate capitalization of all the railways, is a clear indication of the popular demand.

VAST SCHEMES UNDER WAY.

The report further says:—

It is a matter of common knowledge that vast schemes of railway control are now in process of consummation, and that the competition of rival lines is to be restrained by these combinations. While this movement has not yet found full expression in the actual consolidation of railroad corporations, enough has transpired to disclose a unification of financial interests which will dominate the management and harmonize the operations of lines heretofore independent and competitive.

This is to-day the most noticeable and important feature of the railway situation. If the plans already foreshadowed are brought to effective results, and others of similar scope are carried to execution, there will be a vast centralization of railroad properties, with all the power involved in such far-reaching combinations, yet uncontrolled by any public authority which can be efficiently exerted.

The restraints of competition upon excessive and unjust rates will in this way be avoided, and whatever evils may result, will be remediless under existing laws.

ADVANCE IN FREIGHT RATES.

Regarding the enormous advance in freight rates during the last few months the report says:—

"Coincident with these schemes of unified control, and while this exceptional movement of traffic continues, the carriers operating throughout an extensive and important territory have recently made substantial and, in many cases, large increases in their scale of charges. These advances in rates have been mainly effected by concerted and agreed changes in the classification of freight articles by roads, both connecting and competing, which use the same classification and make the same a part of tariffs filed by them under the law.

"Numerous articles have been taken from the class in which they were formerly placed and put in a higher class, to which a higher rate is applied; and many articles heretofore on the commodity list have been included in the classified traffic, with the result of materially increasing the charges imposed thereon.

"Advances of rates in this manner have been made on hundreds of articles, many of which are necessaries in general use, and constantly moving from place to place in the process of distribution."

The fact that such extensive increases in railroad charges have been brought about by the method described is considered to furnish a weighty argument why effective measures should be adopted to secure compliance with the primary requirements of the act.

SHIPPER HAS NO VOICE.

These advances in rates, it is pointed out, have been made without opportunity for shippers, dealers, or consumers to be heard. Reference is made by the commission to the nature and number of complaints and protests on account of these changes in classification, and the consequent increase of rates and readjustment of rate relations.

Reference is also made to the several conferences with executive railway officials during the early part of the year, when general demoralization in rates was found to exist and published tariffs were disregarded. On competitive traffic between great business centers the published tariff was little more than a basis from which to calculate concessions and discriminations, with the result that shippers who failed to secure these unlawful favors were in many cases forced to do business at a loss and in some instances were driven out of business. Unfortunately, the commission says, it cannot punish these infractions of the law.

VARIOUS CASES INSTITUTED.

Twenty-three cases have been formally instituted before the commission since the last annual report. The whole number of petitions filed with the commission during the year was 205, and 474 railroads filed answers thereto or otherwise appeared. Fifteen civil cases are pending in the federal courts to enforce orders of the commission. Indictments for criminal violations of the statute have been found by federal grand juries and are awaiting trial in Louisiana, Texas, and Georgia.

Concerning the refusal of the Circuit Court for Northern Illinois to declare unreasonable the terminal charge of $2 per car made on live stock brought into Chicago the commission says:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The court seems to have overlooked what it believed to be the dominant consideration in the case, namely: that if the through rate to Chicago was a reasonable rate before January 1, 1894, it became an unreasonable rate when the $2 terminal charge was added on that date. To make a reasonable through rate represent less service than formerly, and add on another charge for the part of the service formerly covered by the through rate plainly may make the total charge unreasonable.

The report concludes with a statement of the proceedings of the national convention of Railroad Commissioners held at Denver in August last.—Chicago Tribune, Jan. 16, 1900.

AN APPARATUS FOR SEEING WITHOUT SIGHT.

Dr. Peter Stien, a Russian physician now living in London, is working on an apparatus which he says will enable the blind to see no matter how badly the natural eyesight is destroyed. He has not yet entirely perfected his device, and for that reason will not make its details public, but he has accomplished enough to convince those who have tested it that it will be entirely successful. Blind persons have been made to see by it. The same principle somewhat differently applied will restore hearing to the deaf.

"Man," says Dr. Stien, in explaining his invention, "does not really see with his eyes, but with his brain. The eyes are only an instrument for receiving images, which are conveyed to the center of perception in the brain by the optic nerve. The blind man who perceives the size, shape, and nature of an object with his hands sees in a limited sense. If men had evolved without eyes, but with all their present brain power, they would doubtless be able to see by some other method. Some of the lower animals have no eyes, but perceive light with their whole bodies.

"Now, if an image of material objects can be conveyed to the brain by some other agency than that of the eyes, it follows that a blind man who has a sound mind will be able to see perfectly well. This is exactly what my invention accomplishes.

"An image is gathered on a screen instead of on the retina of the eye and is conveyed directly by an electrical current to the brain. Such a use of the electric current has already been foreshadowed in the process well known to science as cataphoresis. By this it is possible to convey medicines, anesthetics, and other substances into the interior of a man's body without his being aware of it. By its aid cocaine can be sent through the solid bone, conveying insensibility to nerve or marrow.

"My invention may be compared in certain respects to the telephone, which receives an impression of the human voice and reproduces it artificially somewhere else.

"The full development of this invention and the principles upon which it is based will lead, I hope, to many wonderful results. The invention will not only be valuable in enabling the blind to see, but it will convey an image of a scene miles away, just as the telephone conveys the voice. In a slightly varied form it will also enable the deaf to hear.

"I may point out to you that the mere fact that we can see images in our dreams, in the dark, and with eyes closed, is proof of the possibility of seeing without eyes as we at present understand them."—Selected.

OLD AGE A DISEASE.

As a working hypothesis, we should assume senility or old age to be a disease. In other words, it is the resultant of a series of changes which we may some day understand and control. The assumption that human life may be indefinitely prolonged is not new; neither has the search for a panacea been confined to modern scientists. The elixir vitæ of the alchemists finds its modern expression in the numerous rejuvenating lymphs. That we shall discover a catholicon seems more and more doubtful as science advances. The recent experiments with specific animal extracts seem to indicate that certain tissues and organs are affected by these extracts while others show no change. These results emphasize the importance of making a careful study of the changes going on in cells, tissues, and organs between birth and old age, that we may detect the initiatory degenerative changes, and thus be able to administer a corrective long before these changes have assumed the proportions of a so-called disease.

CURE FOR PNEUMONIA.

A recent letter from Miss Amanda I. Jones, of Junction City, Kansas, says: "I want to say that a recipe for pneumonia published in your 'House and Farm' department last winter came just in time to save my life. Nothing but those onion poultices did it—nothing could have done it, so extreme was the case. Publish that over again please—save some other poor 'woman-body' (or 'man-body,' if you like)."

The recipe referred to follows:—

"Take six to ten onions, according to size, and chop fine, put in a large spider over a hot fire; then add about the same quantity of rye meal and vinegar enough to make a thick paste. In the meanwhile stir it thoroughly, letting it simmer five or ten minutes. Then put in a cotton bag large enough to cover the lungs, and apply it to the chest as hot as patient can bear. When this gets cool apply another, and thus continue by reheating the poultices, and in a few hours the patient will be out of danger. This simple remedy has never failed in this too often fatal malady. Usually three or four applications will be sufficient; but continue always until perspiration starts freely from the chest. This simple remedy, says the New England Grocer, was formulated many years ago by one of the best physicians New England has ever known, who never lost a patient by this disease, and won his renown by saving persons by simple remedies after the best medical talent had pronounced their cases hopeless. Personally we know of three persons who were saved by the remedy last winter in Boston, after their physicians had given them up to die; and if a record were made of all similar cases during the last six years it would fill a good-sized volume.—World's Progress.

TO ALMOST every girl there comes, between girlhood and womanhood, a time when she feels prompted by her own vitality to take some share in the world's work. It accounts for much that is vigorous in church and social life. Cornelia Atwood Pratt writes of this period, in the March Delineator. Her article is thrilling, and will in itself do much to induce directness of aim. In the same number, as if to add meaning to Miss Pratt's thoughts, there is a well illustrated article, of great interest to women, dealing with the leaders of Women's Colleges, and some of the co-educational institutions.

A timely article in the March Delineator is devoted to the details of growing Seeds, Plants, and Bulbs. The timeliness is outweighed, however, by the fact that the article is designed to open up to women a new line of healthful money-making.

The Delineator is devoted solely to the interests of women, and in many of its main features is an invaluable guide to the thrifty women who have to make their own clothes, as well as to the women who purchase clothing, yet desire advice and suggestions in doing so. (Fifteen cents; all newsdealers.)

In the February number of the Review of Reviews appears an illustrated character sketch of the late Dwight L. Moody by Mr. George Perry Morris, who writes a discriminating estimate of the evangelist and his world-wide work.

Supreme Court of Indiana held that where local Boards of Health order children in the public schools to be vaccinated the order must be respected or the children must stay out of school until the danger of epidemic has passed.

ENGLISH SUPREMACY IN DANGER.

Without attempting in any way to interfere with or to interpret transpiring events politically, we cannot fail to notice some things which point to the danger of a serious loss of prestige, possibly of political power, to England.

We quote below notes from the public press on three important factors to be considered in forecasting the position of the continued supremacy of the British Empire.

The first note indicates Queen Victoria's decided aversion "to the heads of titled families going to the war." Who then shall do the fighting?

London, Feb. 3.—The Queen sent for the Duke of Marlborough after he sailed for Cape Town, and, learning that he had gone, asked for the Duchess, but she was in Paris. The Queen is said to be averse to having the heads of titled families go to the war, and the Prince of Wales, it is understood, shares her view.—Tribune.

The second note indicates the class of society in England from which the officers of the British army have hitherto been selected and the reason assigned for their apparent failure so far in the South African war:—

A British officer, who for years has acted as an instructor of candidates for commissions in the British army, gives the following explanation of the mediocre intelligence of British officers.

"The secret of our national weakness lies in the fact that the aristocracy and the class commonly known as society, both in town and country, provide ninety-nine per cent of our regular officers. This society is suffering from carefully induced cerebral atrophy, caused by a persistent neglect of intellectual training and a mode of life that is dissipated."

He demands "the suppression of the diseased oligarchy which now governs the country to the exclusion of the physically and mentally healthy middle class."

Arnold White, a well known publicist and Unionist, dilates on the same theme as follows:—

"There has been no scandal in connection with any branch of the public service open to public scandal, and the breakdown has resulted from departments where the staff was chosen entirely from a small privileged caste.

"The British army in its higher branches is a great social rather than a fighting machine. If this war is to be won and our flag is to fly over Pretoria the English democracy must reclaim the power with which it has parted, and by a silent, peaceful revolution insist on fitness and efficiency becoming the qualifications for public employment.

"In the navy this is the rule to a large extent, hence this is alone our national safety. —Chicago Tribune.

The third note refers to the condition of the government in regard to available material to replenish the ranks of the fighting forces, and seems to point out one of the gravest conditions of the general situation:—

Every land fighting force in Britain is already exhausted. When the last reinforcements now preparing have gone, these islands, with the exception of a battalion of guards and a few remnants of other regiments, will be garrisoned only by militia and volunteers.

The volunteers can be called for active service, but England would then be left with the militia and the fleet for its only defense. The Imperial Yeomanry experiment has taught the War office that reliance on raw levies is reliance on a broken reed. Roberts and Kitchener, seeing that the only hope of salvation is in raising a colonial mounted infantry, are offering every inducement to recruits throughout Cape Colony and Natal.

Australia and Canada have also been again appealed to, but the volunteering ardor is dying down.

A little thought upon what a consideration of the foregoing will present will show that there is some reason for apprehending trouble for England not looked for when the war with the Transvaal Republic began. How well the great empire may meet the emergency, and what the definite result of present warlike movements will be, is a matter of speculation as yet. But it is suggestive that when ninety-nine per cent of the officers of the army are from the fashionable society class, which an experienced officer practically pronounces incapable upon principles that point to national decadence, and that reliance for safety must rest upon the middle classes, not as yet largely represented to any extent in the controlling army element, and that the material from which the ranks, the fighting ranks, are to be replenished is exhausted; taken with the aversion that the sovereigns in fact and prospective are averse to the heads of the titled families taking the risks of war to which other subjects are exposed, there is an object lesson worth attention.

Should England be badly crippled in her resources of men in this war with the Boers, or her supremacy long held in abeyance by the fate of battles, some of her dependent colonies and provinces may take advantage of the situation and still further complicate the conditions of national prestige and power.

Surely there are wars and rumors of wars, notwithstanding the Peace Conference lately held at the request of the Czar of Russia.

A STATEMENT OF RECANTATION, BY QUINCY ANDERSON.

In the National Baptist Flag, Bolivar, Missouri, for September 21, 1899, and the Baptist Missionary, Aurora, Missouri, of about the same date, there appeared communications from one of the members of the church renouncing "Mormonism," giving his reasons therefor. Subsequently after maturer reflection and a better examination of the faiths of the church, Mr. Anderson reversed his conclusions, and wrote a communication to each of these papers, recalling his renunciation, giving his later conclusions and the reasons for them, asking that his letters be published. This these journals refused to do. He writes us as follows, asking its insertion:—

OZARK, Missouri, Jan. 31, 1900.

Editors Herald:—I wish to ask space in the Herald to say, I have been a member of the Reorganized Church for over four years; and because some of the elders, who organized several branches and then let the branches die out and also predicted certain things that did not come to pass, this last spring I concluded that the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants and the restored gospel was a fake and a humbug. I thereupon wrote two pieces in two Baptist Church papers; namely, Ray's Baptist Flag, Bolivar, Missouri, and the Baptist Missionary, Aurora, Missouri, renouncing "Mormonism."

About five or six months after doing so, after giving Mormonism a deeper study I wrote another piece to these Baptist papers, taking back my renouncement of Mormonism; which communications were not published.

For the benefit of my brethren, and all the readers of the Herald I write this letter to state, that I take back my renouncement of Mormonism, and that I no longer believe that because certain elders predicted false prophecies and let those branches die out, that it is not a reason that the restored gospel is a fake or a humbug, or that the revelations of God given to Joseph the Martyr and Seer are not divine. And I will further say that the revelations I referred to in my renouncement of Mormonism in those Baptist papers do not mean to purchase Zion by bloodshed; but those revelations I find after a close comparison have reference to Zion being redeemed by the judgments of God both on his saints and their enemies; and, after God gets through scouring both, then Zion will be redeemed.

Another revelation I referred to in my pieces against Mormonism in those Baptist papers, reads like this:—

"Verily I say unto you [Joseph] that as I spake unto Abraham concerning his seed, I also say unto thee, that in thee and thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed."

This I said in my pieces in those Baptist papers meant that Joseph Smith the Martyr was a God, and his seed after were the sons of God; but I find that this revelation has a different meaning. Those that are worthy of the blessings of God, he will bless them through his chosen servants of the seed of Joseph (Smith), which is also the seed of Abraham; and this revelation does not mean a plurality of Gods.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

My points I took against Mormonism in my two articles in those two Baptist papers cannot be established; and I no longer hold that Mormonism is a fake or a humbug. And I further say that by the experience I as a young man have had, I have enough testimony to justify me in saying that I know that God called Joseph and used him as an instrument in bringing back the gospel authority; also in translating the Book of Mormon, and organizing the Church of Jesus Christ, April 6, 1830, which church I now believe in, which I know is the only true church of God.

With these remarks I bear my testimony to the divinity of the restored gospel, and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. QUINCY ANDERSON.

OZARK, Missouri.

THE Initiator, a new news journal now in its second year, and published at Magnolia, Minnesota, has in its issue for January 12, nearly a column of an article from the pen of Bro. James Caffall, which we give, with the editorial comment, which is more than fair, judging from the treatment some of the newspapers give us:—

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

AN ARTICLE DESCRIPTIVE OF THEIR FAITH.

Editor Democrat:—Religious worship is a theme too serious for any sober thinker to ever question the right of any individual to to serve God according the dictates of his own conscience. For on the hypothesis of religion being a personal affair, it were cruel and unjust for one of God's creatures to persecute another because of his proclivities; nor can there be any justification, in view of the facilities for obtaining information, for one society to misrepresent another.

I offer no apology for choosing to believe, and as far as practicable, defend the doctrine and religious practices of the Latter Day Saints, as the mere fact of this choice injures no one. But, sir, we are frequently charged with affiliating with the Salt Lake Mormons, but nothing could be further from the truth.

Subsequent to the death of Joseph Smith, June 27, 1844, who was the founder of the Latter Day Saints' Church, a disruption took place culminating in a number of the members migrating from Nauvoo, Illinois, under the leadership of Brigham Young, to Salt Lake, who in the year 1852, gave publicity to and advocated polygamy as a doctrine of the Latter Day Saints. But, sir, this claim was invalid, for no church discipline from Luther down more strongly advocates monogamy as the order of marriage and can deny polygamy, adultery, disloyalty to earthly governments, etc., than that prepared and received by the Latter Day Saints to govern them in organized capacity.

Few, comparatively, of the whole church at the death of Joseph Smith, indorsed the position of Brigham Young. Then, sir, the disruption, confusion, etc., attendant upon the death of Joseph Smith, was similar to that which would have occurred among others, attributable to the loss of a leader.

Some of the members remaining in Illinois and other States, in process of time, began to rally their forces, some among whom were stimulated anew on learning of the advocacy by Brigham Young of polygamy and kindred evils. In the advocacy of the original doctrines of the church, reaching a partial organization in 1852, it culminated in a more thorough and complete organization in 1860, in receiving the eldest son of Joseph Smith according to the laws and provisions of the church as the legal successor of his father as President of the Church. And among other distinguishing features, we were incorporated according to the laws of the land, in contradistinction to the Utah Church, as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, since which time branches, district conferences, and missions have been established in nearly every State in the Union, in England, Wales, Australia, South Sea Islands, and recently missionaries have been sent to Germany.

We believe and teach doctrines found in the New Testament, believing from those scriptures radiates light reflective of the pattern of the organic structure of that church Christ said he would build.

As to the Book of Mormon, it is identical, too, in doctrine, precepts, etc., found in the Bible and may be read by the most virtuous and pious among men, irrespective of proclivities.

I am not so sanguine as to think that this explanation, protests, etc., will at once convince all who read as to the justness of our cause, but may help the sober thinker and the tolerant to a further investigation.

The headquarters of our church is at Lamoni, Iowa, at which place tracts and books may be bought illustrative of our faith, by applying to F. Criley, Lamoni, Iowa.

Very respectfully,

JAMES CAFFALL,

The editorial follows:—

We publish the above article at the request of an old friend, who we have known for the past thirty years, a man who has a reputation for honesty and integrity based upon practical Christianity. He is a member of that persecuted sect referred to in the communication above. We have met many Latter Day Saints in our travels, and have found them good people in every way. They are as much opposed to polygamy as practiced by the Utah Mormons, as any other church people, and yet they are ostracized and abused, not allowed to preach in churches of other denominations. We cannot understand why this should be so, unless it is because they preach Christianity as taught by Christ and his apostles, and thereby bring down the wrath of the powers that be, and are persecuted the same as those who would have our government practice the principles upon which it was founded.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

SECRET SOCIETIES; ELIAS AND ELIJAH.

Has the church ever held or does it now hold that it is wrong for the saints to unite with secret societies, such as Masons, Odd Fellows, and others?

A.—The church has never made any ruling or order in reference to the subject, that we know anything about.

Who is the Elias spoken of who should come and restore all things, Matt. 17: 14, Holy Scriptures?

A.—In both the King James' Version and the Holy Scriptures, Jesus is stated to have said that John the Baptist was Elias—if they had received him. But in the Holy Scriptures John is stated to have been the Elias whom Christ sent to prepare the way before him; but the Elias who is to yet come is to be able to restore all things.

The last verses of the last chapter of Malachi, state that the Lord would send "Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." And the Prophet Joseph referred to it as seen in Doctrine and Covenants 110: 17.

Hence, we conclude, that if the one referred to in Matthew 17: 14, Holy Scriptures, is not Elijah, it will be one still mightier than he, one who will have power to restore all things that have been lost, or which by the unbelief of men and nations have been disarranged or disturbed. If any other than the Lord Jesus Christ has now, or will have power to restore all things as they should be, we are not aware of who it is. But a preparatory work is to be done, hence an Elijah, a prophet, a restorer will come, in plenty of time to do the task assigned him; and as the name Elias and Elijah are the same and the meaning is "Jehovah is my God," it is probable that anyone sent by God to do a work for man may be said to be sent in the spirit and power of Elias, or Elijah.

THE HASTINGS ANTI-INFIDEL LIBRARY.

Many of our readers, especially those of the ministry, have heard of and read some of the "anti-infidel" literature published by the late H. L. Hastings, Editor of The Christian, of Boston, Massachusetts, whose labors were devoted mostly against the drift of modern evolution methods, including the work of the higher critics, in their attacks upon the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. Some idea of the character of his special work in defense of Christianity may be obtained from noting the titles of the works he published, among which we mention the following, a few among the many: "The Inspiration of the Bible;" "Atheism and Arithmetic;" "Corruptions of the New Testament;" "The Separated Nation;" etc. With these works Mr. Hastings also issued "A Study of the Pentateuch," by R. P. Stebbins, D. D., "Testimony of History to the Truth of Scripture," by Rawlinson; "Errors of Geological Evolution," Patterson; "Egypt in History and Prophecy," the same; with numerous other publications, all of which are published in popular editions at low prices.

We have secured a set of these publications for the Church Library, and find in them excellent matter, well prepared to meet the arguments of skeptics of about all shades of opinion; prices range from 15 to 40 cents.

However, while calling general attention to the foregoing, it is with a view to calling especial attention to Mr. Hastings' leading work, "The Inspiration of the Bible," that we have written.

A special memorial edition of this able and popular work is now being issued under the patronage of leading clergymen throughout the United States and Canada, in the interests of Mrs. Hastings, widow of the deceased editor.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Mr. Hastings devoted himself and his means to the defense of Christianity, and this popular lecture is now issued in the interests of his widow, to free her home from incumbrance.

This memorial edition of Mr. Hastings' lecture on the Inspiration of the Bible is published in large type and contains a portrait of the author. It may be had at ten cents per copy postpaid. Address, H. L. Hastings Pub. Co., No. 49 Cornhill St., Boston, Mass.

WE have received, from Bro. J. C. Crabb, we presume, copies of the Peoria, Illinois, papers, Star and Herald-Transcript, containing articles from Bro. Crabb on the Roberts case and the curse alleged to have been uttered by Joseph Smith, the Martyr, upon Governor Thomas Ford, which we noticed some time ago.

Bro. Crabb is a pungent writer, making his points without a waste of words.

Our brethren abroad in the field and at home are all on the alert, and improve every opening in the various journals to correct current misstatements and get the facts before the people.

Mr. Roberts is excluded from the House of Representatives, but is now asking that he be paid mileage, to cover the expense of his travel to and from the capital city of the nation. It is quite possible that his claim for mileage should be allowed and paid, as he was elected and went to Washington on the presumption that he would be sworn in and allowed to serve as a Congressman, the same as others. It is fair to presume that he would not have incurred such expense had he not thought that he would be admitted as a member of the House.

But what a spectacle it would have been, a man standing with upraised hand swearing to honor the Constitution and obey the laws of the United States, when at the same time he was living in direct violation of the laws of the State from which he came as a representative, and also the laws of the government which he by oath would be pledging himself to honor and obey.

ELDER LOUIS A. KELSCH, President of the Northern States Mission, of the Utah Church, accompanied by Elder Hansen, in charge of Iowa, and Elder Christiansen, in charge of Nebraska, held services in the Saints' church, Lamoni, on the evening of the 29th ult., Elder Kelsch being the principal speaker. Elder Kelsch devoted much of his time in asserting and repeating that he and his coworkers were servants of the Lord, that they were "very humble," and in relating his personal experiences, such as dreams, etc., and in bearing his "testimony." He made a lengthy effort to make points for the Utah Church, and in which he signally failed. One thing he did, however, that, to us at least was a new departure; viz., he indorsed all the teachings and doctrines set forth in the celebrated and notorious Journal of Discourses, including polygamy, Adam-God, blood atonement, etc., etc.

Bro. Heman C. Smith asked Elder Kelsch if he would be present to hear his review on the following evening. But, no; Elder Kelsch stated that he "had a railroad ticket to Kansas City," hence must go. Bro. Smith's review on Wednesday evening was a clean sweep of the field, and it was doubly apparent, though comprehended by the masses of his hearers by this time, that the Utah Church had a weak cause and weak and uninformed instruments to advocate and defend it.

An offer to discuss propositions involving the claims of the two churches, at Lamoni and in Salt Lake City, made by Bro. Smith, resulted in an indefinite reply from Elders Hansen and Christiansen, present.

SR. KATHARINE SALISBURY'S obituary, forwarded by Bro. James McKiernan, will be found in the regular obituary column of the HERALD, present issue. "Aunt Katharine" has gone to rest, after years of faithful adherence to the truth and constant testimony to the divinity of the latter day work. She was a historic if not a heroic figure in the Reorganization; the last of her family, firm and devoted to the angel's message, true and staunch in her devotion to the faith delivered to the saints in her childhood. She leaves an honored name and a record of faithful service to her family and the church. Peace to her memory. Her reward with that of others of her sainted dead is sure and eternal. For her with them there remains the crown. She has finished her course; she has kept the faith.

The death of Sr. Salisbury as the last of her family, in connection with the admonitions and promises to the church of things to be consummated during "this generation," together with the signs of the times, indicates something of the nature of the conditions and importance of the period of time in which we live. She, with others of the early days of the church, have well done their work. The faithfulness and devotion of those men and women who labored so fervently and into whose labors we have entered should prove to us an added inspiration for good. May we profit by their example and take renewed courage from their success.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. E. L. Kelley, writing from Independence, Missouri, February 5, on business, incidentally says:—

Good meetings here yesterday and the branch raised the money to meet present demand on church. Bro. Luff got in last night. Looks natural, but considerably worn.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Mr. James H. Canfield, Librarian of Columbia University, New York City, in a late letter received January 29, 1900, acknowledges the receipt of the following sent by order of Bishop E. L. Kelley to the library:—

"Christian Sabbath," "What is Man?" "True Succession in Church Presidency;" "Book of Mormon;" "Doctrine and Covenants;" "Holy Scriptures;" "History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," volumes 1 and 2; "Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Case U. S. C. C."

Bro. W. W. Whiting appeared in defense of the work in the Home Rule, Ainsworth, Nebraska, January 25.

The French government will prosecute the Catholic order of the Sacred Heart with other religious communities. Most women of the aristocracy of France have been educated in the Sacred Heart schools. The government believes that young women as well as young men should be trained under republican principles. The Jesuits are also marked for prosecution.

It is believed at Rome that the Pope will remove the ban against participation in Italian politics by Catholics, with a view to strengthen the Catholic warfare against Masonry and socialism.

London advices of the 10th report a growing opposition to the South African war, which however, is met by mob violence in some quarters by those who favor it. General Buller, at last accounts, had been obliged to retire again across the Tugela River, to escape a trap set by the Boers and to avoid their heavy artillery. It is acknowledged that while France, Russia, and Japan, are pushing forward in China, England is losing in influence and prestige at Peking. Aside from the sensational rumors from French sources, there is much cause for anxiety in prevailing conditions in the Soudan. The present Khedive is unfriendly to British rule, and the Soudanese native troops, now well drilled and equipped by the British, are turbulent and restless. The famine in India continues to spread; four millions are now actually starving, with about forty to fifty millions affected. The supremacy of

Russia in Persia and of France in Morocco is conceded, also the paramount influence of Russia in Afghanistan. Russia is centralizing her troops in Central Asia. She has also secured important concessions in Corea.

The European coal famine predicted by scientists over thirty years ago is now a reality. Over half of Europe is without sufficient bituminous fuel. No city has suffered more than London, where prices have advanced to eleven dollars a ton. The poor are suffering keenly during the recent bitter cold weather. Decreasing supplies and the pools of the mine owners, together with scarcity of miners and short-time work, with strikes for higher wages, mine troubles, and short supplies, are playing havoc with European economics.

The Carlists are again active in Spain.

The plague continues in Northern Japan with numerous deaths among the medical brigade. Improvement in conditions at Honolulu is reported.

AN OPEN LETTER.

ADAMSTON, W. Va., April 12, 1897.

"REV." D. O. DARLING,
Columbus, Indiana,

Dear Sir:—I notice your communication in the Telescope of February 24, in which you profess that you know the history of Joseph Smith; but when you attempt to state the same you begin by saying it is said, etc.

It is said of him that he was ignorant, an idler, and given to thieving. Both he and his father were superstitious and believed in witchcraft. In digging a well he found a peculiar-shaped stone which he called a "peepstone," and said he could find lost things with it. He soon learned that the people liked to be "fooled," and finding the manuscript of an unpublished novel he pretended to have found it under a great stone through the direction of an "angel," and "translated" it behind a sheet stretched across the corner of his room!

That which was "said of him" by his enemies is not reliable history; and it is evident, from your writing, that you have no other. You want no other in fact. Why do you assert you know, when you do not. It is a fact that you are only reiterating the lies of sixty years ago,—told for the purpose of enraging the rabble with prejudice, to the intent they might be induced to destroy him and as many of the saints as possible.

You mistake when you imagine these lies will effect what they did at that time. True, there are men in your ranks who are often incited to persecute in various ways sneakingly; but the law will protect the Latter Day Saints now, for it is understood that all religious lying and mobbing is done in the interest of the dominant sects in any community where such things occur; and that the leaders and teachers (preachers dignified with "Rev." before their names) are either directly or indirectly responsible. You seem to be wonderfully surprised that "so little is said to warn the innocent and unsuspecting," etc.

It is said [here you are again with your knowledge] that more than a hundred missionaries from Salt Lake are at work in Indiana alone.

It matters not to you what is said, whether true or false, so it is said in such a way as to scare "the innocent" away from their meetings. "They are on a salary, yet they beg their meals and lodging." A hundred missionaries in your State alone—all fed, and lodged, and cared for gratis. Is it any wonder you are alarmed! The people of Indiana are supporting the preachers of the "Mormon Church!" Does this not fill your clerical soul with jealousy? No wonder you would have something more said—a few more lies manufactured. O, how dearly you love them!

It is not my purpose to criticise, in detail, your sweet batch of lies; but I will notice the coloring you put on the circumstance of his death, so as to justify that "infuriated mob" in their bloody work:—

From all of these places he and the "saints" were run away, there being so much obnoxious teaching and thieving (as it is said) that the citizens would not endure it. For many misdemeanors Smith was finally arrested, and in an attempt to escape from jail and justice an infuriated mob ended his career.

"As it is said"—here you are again with your knowledge of history. Where is it said that he was attempting to escape from justice, when seeking to save his life from the bullets of that "infuriated mob"? If he had been "arrested," and in "jail," why was not the "thieving" and the "many misdemeanors" proved, and the culprit, if such, punished according to law? Your learned ignorance blinds you to the fact that Joseph Smith cannot be so connected with Utahism as to be held responsible for polygamy, and their assumption of the name of the church. But no, Mr. Smith was never convicted of any such crime, nor could he be, as he was tried and cleared many times; and hence the infuriated mob had to be employed. Whence came their fury? Was it not the spirit of their leaders—political and religious, that inspired them? And is it not true (you know) that these very slanderous tales and lies,—reproduced by you and your brethren, Musser and Falcomer,—helped to fan the flame of prejudice to fury and murder them, and is intended by you to work similar effects now? Of course the conclusion may be logically drawn from what you say, that you would have us all killed as Smith was. "A den of rattlesnakes could have the preference in YOUR house." Then, indeed, would you not slay them?

The fact, sir, that you have an especial fondness for snakes is not surprising to students of the Bible. Your father (spiritually) at one time took the form of a serpent when, in the Garden of Eden, he deceived the woman.

And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die.—Gen. 3:4.

If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham. . . . Ye do the deeds of your father. . . . The lusts of your father ye will do: he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.—John 8:39, 40, 44.

You not only rejoice in his lies and reiterate them, but you justify the persecution and the murder of the saints, and glory in the deeds of "an infuriated mob which ended his career," and thereby took him, as it was thought at the time, out of the way of your "Clergy." But not so. Although he is at "rest from his labors," you are compelled to cry out in great alarm, that he, "though dead, yet speaketh," and "his works do follow him." (Rev. 14: 13.)

Mr. Smith has been in his grave now over fifty years, and yet you, self-styled and self-"transformed" apostles of Jesus Christ, are all afraid of his ghost! Why do you not do to his as your mother did to the bones of Wickliffe, burn them? But that would not stop the work. "Oh! what shall we do!"

The next decade will see them planted all over the Central and Southern States. Their admirable tithing system gives them plenty of money at all times to carry their doctrines wherever they desire, and to-day they have missionaries in nearly all parts of the civilized world. Is it not time to awake?

If the people called Mormons are increasing as rapidly as you seem to think, do you not think it time for you to manifest a better spirit in reference to them? Indeed, one should wonder that the system inaugurated by Mr. Smith—a "thief," "an idler," and one so "ignorant," should at this late day—nay, in "this enlightened age," obtain such wonderful patronage and progress in the world! The great influence of the "mother of harlots,"—are the popes and prelates of her numerous progeny, called "Protestantism,"—have done their best for fifty years to crush the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; but,

Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come!—Rev. 18: 10.

And the merchants of the earth [preachers] shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more.—Rev. 18: 11.

The business of sectarian ministers is somewhat injured no doubt by the rapid growth of the so-called Mormon Church, and not only does your "Rev." self and coworkers suffer loss, and complain of it through the press; but the ministers of various other denominations are "weeping and mourning." If the Mormons succeed, alas, alas! our institutions will go down, and "no man" will hire us to preach "any more." And the lying, and driving, and killing of Mormons proves in vain! They still "increase the more opposed," as said by the angel to Joseph Smith in 1827. "The hour of her judgment is come." There must be something in the preaching of the saints that savors of judgment—"truth hurts," we are told. I have often been rejected and shut out of schoolhouses and churches for preaching the plain truth—the Bible, and for that alone. The word of God is the judgment.

The word that I have spoken the same shall judge them in the last day.—John 12: 48.

The preaching of the word, just as it reads in the New Testament, is quite an offense to those who go by their creeds. The judgment then, is "the testimony"—the true gospel. This, we read in Daniel 7: 22, was to be "given to the saints of the most high." Now, Bro. Darling, who are you fighting? Do not "kick against the pricks." D. L. SHINN.

THE FRUITS OF OUR SOCIAL SYSTEM.

Bill Nye said, "I love the rooster for two things: first, because of the crow there is in him; second, because of his spurs to back up that crow." The church has this backing up power to maintain its positions.

As our ideals are formed, so we progress or retrograde; as we progress, the ideals of yesterday are supplanted by those of to-day. There is a logical reason for the dissatisfaction with the condition of the industrial world in our own and foreign countries, in fact for the universal unrest that is growing so steadily, that the alarming cry is being sounded by statesmen, poet, and patriot. The government of the United States is not our highest ideal to-day—thank the Lord for this glorious government though. We must be somewhat subdued in our crow when we consider what condition we are in, viewed from the opportunities we have had placed within our reach. It has been said that "sometimes there is more dynamite in an idea than there is in a bomb." Andrew Carnegie ought to be hung(?) for doing more damage to the country than all the anarchists in it, as he is placing libraries all over the land, filled with "good books" containing ideas that force the ideals of the readers higher, making them discontented with the comforts of a cold dog before a warm fire, and awaken him to consciousness that while he must live by bread, he wants time for something additional to a table bill of fare.

In the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants we learn of God's plan to have an ideal city, inhabited by ideal people—Christ people, a city of harmony—Zion. Are not the people being educated to demand that city shall materialize? The Doctrine and Covenants says the time will come that his people will be the only ones that will not be at war with one another, and all those who will not take up their sword against their neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion. In book of Revelation the statement is made that the time is to be, that unless you have the mark of the beast in your hand or forehead, you can neither buy nor sell. Men feel the storm brewing, the time is rapidly drawing near when there shall be a solution of the problem of "an irresistible force coming in contact with an immovable object." Capital and labor will contend for their lives. The individuals will not be wholly to blame, it's the system. Are the world and the saints not being prepared for the system Christ has originated? Let us see. Here is "Joseph's land," the land of "benedictions," blessed of heaven above all other countries; and what do we find men have done with this magnificent farm, on which is raised enough to abundantly supply all with not only necessities but luxuries, with improved machinery capable of doing work that thousands and thousands of men could not do; what has become of all this wealth? Where is it going? Why should it be necessary for the Salvation Army to feed three thousand poor on Christmas in our city?

Carefully examine the drawings made by Eltweed Pomeroy, which, he says, would be a conservative estimate for the whole country. What a terrible burlesque on a government supposed to be of, for, and by the people. Can we discern the signs of the times?

Noah Webster, more than a century ago, said: "An equal distribution of wealth is the foundation of the republic." Daniel Webster, on this point, said: "Liberty cannot long endure in a country where the tendency is to concentrate wealth in the hands of the few." Wonder what these old patriots would think if they could arise from their graves and listen to Chauncy Depew making this statement, which he did in 1896: "There are fifty men in New York who can, in twenty-four hours, stop every wheel on all railroads, close every door of all our manufactories, lock every switch on every telegraph line, and shut down every coal and iron mine in the United States. They can do so because they control the money which this country produces." Money is power, and look at the illustration and see how power is being concentrated in the hands of the few.

Here is the observation of an observer: "Whoever has talent for observation and taste for the study of political revolutions, cannot fail to discover that we are standing on the threshold of a great conflict,—a conflict of concentrated wealth on one side, and the organized wealth producers on the other. The longer this issue is kept in the background, the harder the struggle will be when it does come, for come it must. The older a form of government is, the less it suits the present condition of the world."

Patrick Henry, the patriot, said: "We can only judge the future by the past."

When Egypt went down, two per cent of her population owned ninety per cent of her wealth. When Persia went down, one per cent of her population owned the land. When Babylon went down, two per cent of her population owned all her wealth. When Rome went down, 1,800 men owned all the known world.

Where do we stand as wealth producers? Is there any reason why 6,000,000 American workmen should walk the streets looking for work, as was the record several years ago. It is estimated that there are 2,000,000 men out of employment, on an average; constantly out of employment.

The census report tells us that as a nation we create, every month in the year, $150,000,000 more wealth than we consume. The per-capita wealth in 1870 was $7.80; in 1880 was $8.70; in 1890 nearly $1,000. Wealth is increasing in this wonderful land.

Ex-Senator Ingalls, in a speech delivered in the Senate, said: "Every time the clock ticked above the portal of that chamber, the aggregated, accumulated, permanent wealth of this country increased more than seventy dollars. Sir, it rivals, it exceeds the fiction of the Arabian Nights. It is without parallel or precedent."

But who has all this wealth? Is it in the possession of the workers who have produced it? Mr. Holmes, Mr. Spahr, and Mr. Shearman have investigated the subject along different lines and reached practically the same results.

Mr. Taubeneck, in an article in the Arena of September, 1897, and from which I have made extracts, says, in reviewing the report of Mr. Shearman, "According to this report, which no one as yet has had the courage to challenge, 93.3 per cent of the families in the United States live upon incomes less than $400, and 98 per cent on less than $1,000."

Mr. Shearman says: "The earnings of four fifths of the families in the United States do not average as much as $500 per annum."

Mr. Taubeneck asks that as within the last thirty-five years 25,000 persons out of a population of 70,000,000 have absorbed the wealth that it took the American people 270 years to accumulate, if this process is permitted to continue, how long will it be before we will be like Egypt and Rome before they fell?

Senator Ingalls comments, in a speech in the senate, on Mr. Shearman's figures as follows: "Mr. President, it is the most appalling statement that ever fell from the lips of man. Our population is sixty-two and a half millions, and by some means, some device, some machination, some incantation, honest or otherwise, some process that cannot be defined, less than a two-thousandth part of our population have obtained possession, and have kept out of the penitentiary in spite of the means they have adopted to acquire it, of more than one half of the accumulated wealth of the country.

"Our society is becoming rapidly stratified, almost hopelessly stratified, into the condition of superfluously rich and hopelessly poor. We are accustomed to speak of this as the land of the free and the home of the brave. It will soon be the home of the rich and the land of the slave. . . . A financial system under which more than one half of the enormous wealth of the country, derived from the bounty of nature and the labor of all, is owned by a little over 30,000 people, while 1,000,000 American citizens, able and willing to toil, are homeless tramps, starving for bread, requires adjustment. A social system which offers to tender, virtuous, and dependent women the alternative between prostitution and suicide, as an escape from beggary, is organized crime, for which some day unrelenting justice will demand atonement and expiation."

Yes, and here is how unrelenting justice is going to dispense justice: "Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom you seek, shall suddenly come to his temple. . . . And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right!"--Malachi.

Jesus Christ is going to take a hand at governing this planet. We have tried to do so for at least 6,000 years, and now with all our boasted wisdom and wonderful improvements an unknown poet springs into prominence by writing the "Man With The Hoe," awakening the public conscience with:

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes upon the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within his brain?

Is the thing the Lord God made and gave
To have dominion over sea and land;
To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;
To feel the passion of Eternity?
Is this the Dream He dreamed who shaped the suns
And pillared the blue firmament with light?
Down all the stretch of Hell, to its last gulf,
There is no shape more terrible than this—
More tongued with censure of the world's blind greed—
More filled with signs and portents for the soul—
More fraught with menace to the universe.

What gulfs between him and the seraphim!
Slave of the wheel of labor, what to him
Are Plato and the swing of Pleiades?
What the long reaches of the peaks of song,
The rift of dawn, the reddening of the rose?
Through this dread shape the suffering ages look;
Time's tragedy is in that aching stoop;
Through this dread shape humanity betrayed,
Plundered, profaned, and disinherited,—
Cries protest to the Judges of the World,
A protest that is also prophecy.

O masters, lords, and rulers in all lands,
Is this the handiwork you give to God;
This mostrous thing, distorted and soul-quenched?
How will you ever straighten up this shape;
Touch it again with immortality;
Give back the upward looking and the light;
Rebuild in it the music and the dream;
Make right the immemorial infamies,
Perfidious wrongs, immedicable woes?

O masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
How will the Future reckon with this Man?
How answer his brute question in that hour?
When whirlwinds of rebellion shake the world?
How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—
With those who shaped him to the thing he is—
When this dumb Terror shall reply to God,
After the silence of the centuries?

In a few months after being published in a California paper, why should this poem create such a discussion all over the land? Is there not a God of heaven working on the people, giving them to understand that a change is coming upon the earth? Are there not prophets outside of our church? There was nothing uplifting in the slavery of the black man. Therefore the first elders condemned it. There is nothing elevating in the terrible industrial slavery of the white man, with his ten, twelve, and fourteen hours of daily toil. What time for mental or spiritual improvement has the modern worker? Our cities are full of the "hoe men." Here is a copy of a notice posted in all the factories of Pennsylvania: "All children under sixteen years of age employed in this factory must have their names posted here." It is necessary for the children to work so they can help to bring the income of the family up to the $400 a year mark. Yesterday a delicate looking lady, with a child of thirteen, asked me if we could give her little girl work, as she needed her help. They come in right along, looking for work. You can get all you want of them to work ten hours a day at $1.50 per week. The Lord is not going to forget that he spoke to Malachi about the widows and the orphans. What can you expect but a "hoe" man or woman, when children are deprived of any child life, and forced to struggle for an existence at such a tender age, and this in a land flowing with milk and honey, accumulating a surplus of $70 every second. "Come quickly, Lord Jesus."

This church don't want any apologists for this terrible system. The world has outgrown it, and it is finding it out.

Jerry Simpson writes in the Illustrated American as follows: "Now when the demand is for statesmen who understand that our government must be reorganized, and its laws adjusted to suit the new conditions of the times, they are confronted by the same race of doctors who expect to cure the fever by scraping the tongue, instead of giving them the medicine that will eradicate the disease from the system. . . . But the storm is gathering, and I trust there will soon appear on the surface, men who understand the true condition of the republic, with heart and brain to apply the remedy. It is my hope that this last, best effort of mankind is not to be a failure. My hope is that we will emerge from this trial-hour with a grander and better government than any the world has ever known; the government that Jefferson dreamed of, in which there should be no excessively rich or extremely poor."

That is just what Jesus Christ is going to do; get rid of all the rubbish, purify the world, start out with the "government shall be upon his shoulders," where every one "shall sit under his own vine and fig tree, they shall not build and another inhabit, they shall not sow and another reap." Jesus Christ is interested in this question of good government, and is going to be elected by a large majority, because "every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that Jesus is the Christ."

Alfred Russell Wallace, the scientist of world wide reputation, has lately published a book entitled "The Wonderful Century." In it he records the noble triumphs of science, art, literature, invention, etc.; but also dwells at length upon our many failures. He says in the preface: "Of even greater importance, though less special to the century, is the perennial problem of wealth and poverty. In dealing with this question I have adduced a body of evidence showing that, accompanying our enormous increase of wealth, there has been a corresponding increase of poverty, of insanity, of suicide, and probably even of crime, together with other indications of moral and physical deterioration. To the facts I have set forth, I earnestly call the attention of all those who have at heart the progress of true civilization and the welfare of humanity."

In the closing chapter of his book, he says: "But the more we realize the vast possibilities of human welfare which science has given us, the more we must recognize our total failure to make any adequate use of them. With ample power to supply to the fullest extent necessaries, comforts, and even luxuries for all, and at the same time allow ample leisure for intellectual pleasures and æsthetic enjoyments, we have yet so sinfully mismanaged our social economy as to give unprecedented and injurious luxury to few, while millions are compelled to suffer a lifelong deficiency of the barest necessaries for a healthy existence. Instead of devoting the highest powers of our greatest men to remedy these evils, we see the governments of the most advanced nations arming their people to the teeth, and expending much of their wealth and all the resources of their science, in preparation for the destruction of life, of property, and of happiness. With ample knowledge of the sources of health, we compel the bulk of our population to live and work under conditions that greatly shorten life; while every year we see from 50,000 to 100,000 infants done to death by our criminal neglect.

"In our mad race for wealth, we have made gold of more worth than human life; we have made life so hard for the many that suicide and insanity and crime are alike increasing. With all our labor saving machinery and all our command over the forces of nature, the struggle for existence has become more fierce than ever before; and year by year an ever increasing proportion of our people sink into pauper's graves. But the flowing tide is with us, we have great poets, great writers, great thinkers to cheer and guide us on the way, and an ever increasing band of workers to spread the light and help the good time coming, and as this century has witnessed a material and intellectual advance wholly unprecedented in the history of human progress, so the coming century will reap the full fruition of that advance, in a moral and social upheaval of an equally new and unprecedented kind, and equally great in amount. That advance is prefigured in the stirring lines of Sir Lewis Morris, with which I may fitly end my book."

There shall come from out this noise of strife and groaning
A broader and a juster brotherhood
A deep equality of aim, postponing
All selfish seeking to the general good.
There shall come a time when each shall to another
Be as Christ would have him, brother unto brother.

Pray, what will this be but the Millennium, and didn't Joseph Smith also prefigure it when he said, by the Lord's Spirit, "And this generation shall not all have passed away until all these things shall have been fulfilled." What is the cause of all this social, progressive disturbance? Did the advent of the angel with the kingdom of heaven have anything to do with it?

PITTSBURG, Pa., January 16.

Letter Department.

HONOLULU, Hawaii, Jan. 23.

Editors Herald:—By this mail I am sending you a newspaper containing the account of the burning of a portion of our city, occupied principally by Chinese and Japanese. Of the existence of bubonic plague, my former letter would inform you. The Board of Health have been for the past few weeks fighting against the pestilence, and are still burning infected houses whenever new cases are found. Business is demoralized, and the strain upon the community has at times been intense.

Brn. Greene and Poepoe returned from Hilo last week, as they were afraid on account of existing conditions there that they might be shut off entirely from communication with Honolulu. Bro. Greene is at present staying at my house and is helping me out by doing inspecting work amongst the houses in the neighborhood. It is impossible to do any missionary work, as churches are closed, and no one is allowed to go from the city into the country districts without a pass from the Board of Health.

Saturday last was a day that will be long remembered in Honolulu; and it is fortunate that the Japanese and Chinese in the quarantine districts that were burned did not start a riot. You may imagine what a difficult task it was to control about five thousand Asiatics when homes and goods were being burned, and keep them from breaking through into the unquarantined parts of the city. It was sad to see the crowds of men, women, and little children, hungry and homeless, walking through the streets guarded by men armed with guns and clubs. Some of the poor creatures were carrying what little furniture they had been able to save; some unable to carry their burdens further, had to leave them in the streets. Some of the Chinese women with their little feet could scarcely walk and had to be assisted along by men. But the account you can read if you feel interested. It makes one's heart feel sad to witness such scenes, and makes one long for Zion's redemption. Oh! may it come speedily.

One can, after passing through scenes of this kind, readily understand how easy it will be for the whole world to be put in commotion and the prophecies fulfilled; and it deeply impresses a Latter Day Saint that it is necessary above all other things for each one to live his religion. I firmly believe that there is nothing but the power of God can enable an individual to pass through the times that seem to be ahead of us without fear. One needs the Spirit's presence to enable one to be cheerful and to preserve equanimity of mind under such conditions.

Well, I am thankful that I have the precious hope that comes to those who obey the gospel to cheer me under these trials. My wife would like to leave with the children for California; but the Lord directed me to stay here for a time, and to keep my family with me, and I am going to follow his counsel. He has so far protected and blessed me and mine, and will, I trust, continue to do so if I am faithful.

The schools are all closed at present and my children therefore cannot follow up their studies; but I hope this interruption will not last long.

I should very much like to be present at the coming General Conference, but am afraid it is impossible for me to get off. Elder Greene will probably be there, as he seems anxious to return, and if things continue here like this he will not be able to carry on any missionary work; so I think it is perhaps best for him to leave.

In talking with him the other day I said if delegates could be sent from a good many branches where conditions prevailed such as there are here, it would insure a good conference, as men sent from such places would undoubtedly be humble and prayerful and anxious to do the Lord's will, no matter what it might be. Well, I hope anyhow that you will have a good conference and that good results will follow the work done there.

I am ready and willing to continue in the Lord's service and do all I can as I have opportunity.

Communication with the other islands is interrupted.

With kind regards, yours in the one faith,

G. J. WALLER.

HONOLULU, Hawaii, Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—It would be pleasanter could we report improvement in the situation here. The hearts of the Hiloites failed them for fear. As they concluded to have "no communication with Honolulu until thirty days after last case of plague, here, I thought it better to face plague conditions than be out on that island with shortage of provisions, so with Bro. Poepoe returned on the last steamer from there.

Found Honolulu just recovering from shock occasioned by death from plague of a prominent woman and the closing of a large dry goods store in consequence. They had thought white people immune from plague. Saturday the authorities ordered the burning of an infected section, and the fire escaped from control. Upwards of one million dollars worth of property in Chinatown was destroyed. Thousands of panic-stricken quarantined refugees ran hither and thither only to find soldiers barring egress. All the National Guard, the United States garrison, with thousands of citizens, and latter armed with axes, clubs, and every conceivable weapon, surrounded them, and finally they were marched through the principal streets to Kawaiaho church, where they huddled together wondering what next would happen. The scene beggars description.

About seven thousand were thus thrown on the government's hands. Many of them had been prosperous merchants who found themselves in a day bereaved of all, dependent on charity, and still prisoners in quarantine. It appears that the "overflowing scourge," the "flame of devouring fire," the shortage of food supplies, panic, hearts filled with fear, etc., are changing the "Paradise of the Pacific" into a habitation not to be desired.

From the wickedness and worldliness existing we have long felt that the judgments could not be far away and would be necessary ere people would listen to the last witness of God ere the end comes.

The saints are all well. Bro. Poepoe baptized one the afternoon we left Hilo. Bro. Waller will forward papers. No public services allowed. Respectfully,

U. W. GREENE.

Editors Herald: — My health has been greatly benefited by my change to Colorado, and I have every reason to believe that I shall get sound and well in this climate. I find that Colorado is a hard field in which to make converts. People generally are indifferent in regard to religion; other churches find it so as well as we. It is a hard place to get an audience, and a very difficult matter to get them interested. As a rule it is hard to get people to attend a series of sermons. It often occurs that the preacher will have almost a new congregation every night, until he has none. Take it outside of branches and one dozen would be a fair estimate of the average size of an audience. We are therefore not making many converts out this way, neither are we likely to.

It may be the fault of the missionaries, as some are inclined to believe, but the question that arises in my mind is, would those complaining do any better were the church to send them out? They may honestly think they could, but when it comes to practical experience in the field, their estimate of their own abilities would most probably be very greatly reduced and their understanding be considerably enlarged.

It would certainly be a good thing in some respects if many of our people could have a little practical experience in missionary service. So far as I am individually concerned I can easily pick out men in the church that are much better qualified for any field than I am, and it may not cost the church any more to keep them in the field, but the question arises, are there enough of this kind of elders to supply the demand? If not, the church will still be under the necessity of "enduring" the services of less competent men. But when the time is ripe for a change, the writer will cheerfully retire to local work, and consider it a privilege.

One thing I notice about the work here is, that the law has not been taught and enforced as it should be. Some have imbibed the idea that there is no law in the church to prevent members from attending dances, as often as they will. While there is no specific command, "thou shalt not dance," the same might be said of gambling, or horse racing, or visiting billiard and card rooms; but who would say that the church could tolerate such evils? Unchristianlike conduct of any character is a just cause for complaint, and under the rules and practice of the church may be legally dealt with. Yes, individuals who persist in dancing, after due labor has been performed, may be expelled from the church, on the ground of unchristianlike conduct.

I may possibly be branded as a faultfinder, but I will offer a few general suggestions as to the rights of individuals, branches, and officers, general and local. A missionary has no right to meddle with branch affairs, except under conditions defined in the law. Branches when in need of assistance should appeal to district authorities, or, in extreme cases, to the missionary in charge. A missionary laboring in a branch should certainly consult with its president, and labor in harmony with him; but he is under no obligation to cater to the whims of every individual member. Missionaries when not laboring in branches are not subject to branch authority, and should use their own judgment about their movements. If it works well for a missionary to mind his own business, would not the rule work both ways equally as well? When any one branch assumes to run a whole mission, and its missionaries, it is liable to neglect necessary work closer home.

It is fair to presume that missionaries are better capable of judging as to where and how their labors should be bestowed than local workers, who know little or nothing of conditions outside of a given locality. Simply because a missionary may labor for a time in the vicinity of his own home does not necessarily follow that some "watchman" shall suddenly proclaim him to be a slothful servant. He may be just where the Lord wants him, for the time being. Simply because his family are located there is no reason why he should leave that particular locality to the control of his Satanic Majesty, and go on a hop, step, and jump across his mission field to where his family cannot see him, or he see them.

An elder is neither a tramp nor a hired man. If he is unworthy as a missionary, he should be dropped from the list; but if accounted worthy to be sustained by the church, his family are entitled to as good a living as the average Latter Day Saint. When they receive their allowance it belongs to them, and they have a right to use their own judgment as to its use.

Again, let me say that I believe it to be a poor policy for a man to try to build himself up by tearing down some one else. I have often noticed men trying to do this. Recently in reading the writings of some in the church papers I see this disposition crop out very prominently. (Whoso readeth let him understand.) Brethren, it sounds bad to hear a man, talk or write, holding himself up as a model. Such a person may be a model, but my observation has caused me to be a little slow to form such a conclusion. No one man should set himself up as the sole judge of all important questions in the church. Other men may know some things that he is not aware of. It is not always the man that writes the longest letters to the church papers that is doing the most good. "Still water runs deep." Thunder has never yet killed anybody, that we know of. It is no evidence of culture, or refinement, or even of wisdom, to be able to point out defects in another. If a man comes to me and comments unfavorably on the faults and shortcomings of other missionaries, I am satisfied that he will treat me the same way when he goes to some other place; for a person of this kind usually manages to discover some imperfection in most every one.

It may be the calling of some men to pick up all the little defects they may find in missionaries, while following after them, or being with them in their fields, and straightway go to some other part of the vineyard and tell about it; but I doubt it. This applies to men in high as well as low places in the church.

Now, I will venture another suggestion at the risk of being called a grumbler, or of having this paper reach the waste basket. The General Conference is soon to convene, and questions of a more or less important character are likely to arise. The "gathering" is likely to be an important theme of discussion. Judging from articles in the church papers, and from other sources, I have no doubt but that some of the brethren will be "loaded for bear." From impressions received in listening to some of the speeches in conference in times past I could not escape the conclusion that some of the speakers thought that it was next to impossible for the Lord to speak in General Conference. Experience has taught me that it is a very easy thing for the Lord to speak, even through a very weak vessel, while in our mission field. Why should it be less so in our General Conference? In thinking over this matter I have concluded that it is just as easy for Him to speak in General Conference as in any other place if necessary.

I believe that the church is fairly well united on most questions, and that the saints as a rule are trying to do their duty and advance; therefore I see no reason why we should resort to any great extremes, or that we should move out in any doubtful enterprise until we have more light; and to move on and do our work faithfully in a general way, and abide the Lord's time, seems to me to be the surest way to get more light. I I have probably said enough for one time, so I close. In gospel bonds,

GAINSBOROUGH, N. W. T., Jan. 29.

Editors Herald:—I am still in the faith and looking forward to the time when we shall meet around the throne never to part.

I left my home in Ontario (my home branch was Cameron) two years ago next March, alone, and came here and have remained here. Then in one year another brother came out, and then the next harvest another brother and his wife came out, and during that time I have not been permitted to meet with any of the saints; but I hope the time is not far distant when some of the elders will come out here to stop for awhile and preach; and I hope there will be a branch raised up here that will do honor and praise to the Master.

I would love to meet now with some of the saints in prayer meeting. I would enjoy it. I understand Bro. Dannie MacGregor is in British Columbia, and if he is going down through Canada it will not be much out of his way to come here, as he would come down the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railroad till he came to Moose Jaw, then branch off to the south onto the Souris branch and come down by Estevan. The Souris branch only runs to Estevan, but there is a line connects the Souris branch and the main line, and that is right on his way to Winnipeg, and then come on down to Gainsborough, which is my post office, Assinaboine, Northwest Territory, and then I live just three miles straight north of the station, and if he writes me before, I will meet him at the train.

I am on a place of my own, so come along, Bro. Dannie, we will try and take care of you while you are here, and if you are coming just write to me and direct to John A. Braden, Gainsborough, Assinaboine, Northest Territory. That will catch me at any time.

Your brother and fellow workman in the faith, JOHN A. BRADEN.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Feb. 1.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you I have been busily engaged, yet have not done much preaching. I held a few meetings at South River at the home of Mr. John Powell, a friend of mankind. I was generously provided for by his excellent family—wife, sister-in-law, and daughter. This is a place where none of our elders have been before. I certainly hope they will soon obey the latter-day message, —the "everlasting gospel."

Mr. Powell related to me the existence of a society of saints near North Garden, in Albemarle County, whom he thought were our people (they are not the Utah Church, Mr. P. says, who is well acquainted with the Brigham Young Church) as they are called "Mormons." Their history as near as I have been able to learn, and as told me by Mr. and Mrs. Powell is as follows: A few years ago a "preacher from the West" came into that neighborhood and after a time succeeded in getting quite a number of converts and in building a house in which to worship; but having no name for the church or the society, concluded to ask God for the name, which when received was "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," which was inscribed over the door in large letters, after which their enemies called them "Mormons." I have written to them for information, and desire to visit them before long.

I have visited some of the scattered saints in this mission; was at Dayton a few days and domiciled with Bro. and Sr. Noah Bowman and wife. We found Sr. Bowman weak in body and somewhat despondent, but strong in faith and good works. We anointed her before leaving and left her much improved in health and spirit, and very hopeful for the future. Bro. Bowman went with me to see Sr. Barbara Carver, whom we had heard had forsaken her faith. We found the report untrue, and the sister without much opportunity to spiritually develop. We gave such encouragement as we could, and after a short visit of only three or four hours had to bid her good by, and "God bless you." I also took dinner with Bro. Brown at Roman, Virginia, on my way back to New Hope.

Spent two or three days with our aged and genial brother, Samuel Wine, who conducted me by carriage to Dayton and then again to Bro. Isaac Coffman's where I again held one or two services. Receiving a letter from Sr. Taylor informing me of the illness of Sr. Orr and desiring that I anoint her I proceeded in that direction, holding two services in Richmond at the house of Sr. Corson. Interest is much better in Richmond, the work of our recently baptized sister, A. R. Corson, who by her earnest and persistent efforts among her new neighbors has made many friends and is removing much prejudice. We expect to call on them again on our return homeward and hold services there.

I arrived here (Newport News) on the 29th to visit a few of the scattered saints and to anoint Sr. Orr, who was patiently awaiting my coming which was only a few hours before her departure to the spirit land.

I will hold a few meetings here, and probably some at Hampton, before returning. I want to spend a week with Bro. Odell, at Centerville, West Virginia, on my way home (about last week in February) and a week or ten days in Lawrence County, Ohio, and a week at home before going to General Conference.

May the good Master prepare the hearts and minds of all for reception of truth,

Yours truly,

J. L. GOODRICH.

EAST PHARSALIA, N. Y., Feb. 4.

Editors Herald:—By Bro. W. H. Kelly's direction I entered this State the closing days of September. Did service some weeks at Greenwood, Steuben County, where abide some devoted, kind, and generous saints who hail the coming of missionaries with delight, and have felt visits from them were all too scarce.

Weekly prayer services were established and Sunday school work begun. Limited numbers, no officers, and the scattered condition had previously prevented. The change in place of residence of some, and the baptism of two by Elder F. C. Smith last spring made conditions much more favorable than in other days. May success attend the workers there.

Later and for some time I occupied at Vermillion and Palermo, Oswego County, where Brn. Sheehy, Blanchard, W. J. Smith, and W. H. Kelley had done service. We have staunch supporters, brethren, sisters, and friends, who have maintained the interest of the work and purpose so to do in the days to come. Hospitality was full and freely extended by many. One person's objection closes any schoolhouse. It can readily be seen but little is to be realized from use of schoolhouses in New York. Churches cannot often be had, and when accessible, halls usually expensive.

I did what I could under existing conditions. Secured insertions in the Elmira Advertiser, Syracuse Post-Standard, Mexico Independent, and Oswego Palladium. In the four papers I had six articles, one in each, and two in two of them.

On January 23 I reached Springvale, Chenango County, held a few services in the union chapel. A few devoted saints and some very loyal friends abide there.

On 29th I reached this place where for some time a chapel has awaited dedication. Three families of not large means built this chapel; five members, and four who are not. Its size is 18x26, vestibule in addition, the material and workmanship good. The outside is white, walls and ceiling are finished in cherry and ash in alternate color, heavily varnished. It is nicely carpeted and well furnished in other respects. Such a building would be a credit anywhere. Bro. E. W. Griswold, wife, and son, Bro. George Rathbun, wife, and sons, Mr. Ray Lewis and Sr. Lewis his wife, have so manifested their faith by works.

The estimated value of the chapel is four hundred dollars. Every expense had been met, insurance included, the property deeded and duly recorded to the church in the name of the Bishop. In this county where the Seer was married and had an abode for a time, the church has an habitation.

A few services prior to the dedication were sparsely attended. Whatever other hindrances, there was and is rank prejudice, among the rest. The weather being far below zero, was at least not a help.

The dedicatory service was only fairly attended, being held to-day. Beautiful floral decorations enlivened the scene. Mr. Freeman Burlingame, the builder of chapel, his wife, Sr. Lewis and daughters Mary, Genesee, and Ada, also Sr. Mabel Burlingame, from Springdale, were in attendance, aiding excellently by presence and in the song service, which was good, and depended almost entirely upon these visitors.

The preacher read the 111th psalm, and found a starting point in the first part of verse one of psalm 127, and discoursed with liberty on "What shall be taught as gospel truth?" offering the dedicatory prayer in its time.

A good feeling prevailed and the faces of those who had so earnestly and cheerfully toiled to erect the chapel were radiant with joy.

Brn. Henry C. Smith, Warren Peak, H. H. Robinson, Sheehy, Blanchard, Kent, and W. H. Kelley are remembered here. Bro. Israel L. Rogers' birthplace is very near here. He contributed ten dollars to the chapel and Sr. Heavener twenty, if memory serves me right.

One copy of the Voice of Warning did much in beginning the work here. Much is also attributed to the Ensign.

Present demands here being supplied, Scranton, Pennsylvania, is the next point, and points along the line homeward bound. Should I not be permitted to attend Sharon, Pennsylvania, conference and the anticipated dedication of chapel there, it will be explained by duty pointing elsewhere. Cannot tell now; have in mind, however, the kindly request to be present.

During this year's mission have not been at a conference or reunion, and not in the vicinity of a branch since June. May need to be disciplined soon, or perhaps now.

In bonds,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 5.

Editors Herald:—The Philadelphia district conference closed here last evening under pleasant and encouraging surroundings. Rain coming on kept many away from the closing service, but there were a sufficient number present to give interest to the occasion. An excellent spirit prevailed during the sacrament and social service, the larger number taking part in the meeting, indicating confidence and devotion.

The usual interest was shown in the Sabbath school exercises. The school was led in the morning by Bro. Daniel Carter, of Baldwin, Maryland. The Sabbath school is made a chief feature of the work in Philadelphia, and it has a number of good workers who take part in aiding in conducting it.

There was an accord in the business sessions. Apparent improvement is being made by the constant supporters of the work, and and the cause is gathering force.

Bro. Robley is rather of a favorite laborer, but there are others, also, who have place in the warm hearts of the Philadelphia saints, who are never stingy with manifest appreciation and esteem for servants of the church.

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Feb. 5.

Editors Herald:—Who is that of the missionary force that goes home to "rest." In the case of this scribe it's another word altogether. Since coming home from the East a little over a month ago he has had the care of a new boy and a sick wife, with the thousand and one little duties that naturally come up about a place; carried on a meeting of nearly two weeks duration, at Armstrong, Kansas, preaching fourteen times and going back and forth nearly every night, a distance of ten or twelve miles; preached once at Independence and once at Chelsea Park, Kansas; have administered to the sick about thirty or forty times; have been "under the weather" part of the time, and filled in part of the odd hours cutting wood. I'm looking for the "rest by and by," but it hasn't got here just yet.

At Armstrong the interest was good, especially among the saints, and I found them to be saints indeed. Bro. Pease ably presides assisted by Bro. Bernard, priest, and Bro. Malott, deacon, (the teacher's name I did not learn, or have forgotten,) and so far as I could discern, everything moves along nicely at Armstrong. The membership, too, are alive to duty and by prompt attendance, faith and prayer, did much to make the meetings pleasant and successful. They also rendered needed and much appreciated financial aid.

I would like to write a list of names who are entitled to credit along this line, but time would fail me, and the value of Herald space forbids. Suffice to say, the Armstrong saints have shown themselves to be "disciples" according to the Lord's own test. (See D. C. 83 : 16.) In my heart, as long as memory lasts, there will be a warm corner set apart to the fond recollections of the many kindnesses, of both the officers and members of the Armstrong branch. May heaven's richest blessings be theirs.

At Chelsea Park, also, there are those who are of the class known as "good saints." But how could there be a bad saint? Their spiritual skies, however, are not without clouds. But I think the difficulties are not so serious but what they may be removed without any serious harm, provided the Spirit's aid is sought and accepted in the effort to remove them. Brethren may differ in their understanding of the law, but they should remember that it is not a sin to honestly differ. If it is a sin for my brother to differ from me, is it not as sinful for me to differ from him? Why not? "Who made me a judge or a divider over you?" (Jesus.) "Who art thou that judgest another?" (James.)

Again (chapter 4 : 11) he saith: "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge." See? Of course you do. Very well, then, "Why dost thou judge thy brother, or why dost thou set at naught thy brother" (Rom. 14 : 10) because his understanding of the law is different from yours?

"Let us therefore not judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way" (v. 13).

But I set out to write a short letter, not a long sermon. As I look at it there is no occasion for serious difficulties at Chelsea, and I hope to soon see or hear of the clearing away of the clouds now, to some extent, darkening their spiritual horizon. Blessings on each one, and many thanks for their kindness and substantial aid.

I left the "Pine Tree State" on December 26 last. It may be late to talk about it now, but the Christmas tree and entertainment at Stonington, the evening of the 25th, was enjoyable indeed. The Sunday school, with Bro. A. C. Dunham as superintendent gave an excellent entertainment in the way of suitable songs, recitations, music, etc., while the saints generally aided in loading the tree with tokens of love and good will for those whom the ties of nature, affection, and good fellowship had made dear. The occasion was pleasant and all seemed to enjoy themselves. The children did their part well and manifested a talent of which anyone interested in the latter-day work may justly feel proud. Again I would like to mention names, but there are too many. However, Master Allen Cleveland, and his little sister Pearlie, and a still smaller sister whose name I cannot recall, who with their parents, came recently from Prince Edward's Island, and none of whom belong to the church, deserve honorable mention for their assistance in making the entertainment a success, and for exceptionally well rendered parts. I hope they with their parents may continue their association with the saints until they shall feel and really be at home with them.

Bro. Dunham is a faithful worker in the Sunday school and in the church; and as for patience, well, he's not far from Job anyway. If they are not in the same rank, then I am sure Job doesn't have much advantage. Anyway, such patient, zealous, faithful, unselfish work as is being done by the superintendent of the Sunday school at Stonington, cannot fail to bring its reward.

The conference at Jonesport, December 9, 10, was pronounced by quite a number to be the best in the district for years. The spirit of unity and good fellowship was present and enjoyed to an extent greater than for some time hitherto, and recent letters from Bro. Blanchard bring the news of a still greater interest, and also of the baptism of a number.

The talent of the newly baptized, if properly used, and I doubt not that it will be, will add greatly to the strength of the branch and to its power for good. So may it be.

I am grateful indeed to the saints there, as also at Indian River, South Addison, Beal's Island, West Surry, Little Deer Isle, Stonington, Dixfield, Canton Point, and in fact all through the State, for their uniform kindness to me. May God abundantly reward them all.

I wish to say, to the credit of the saints in the Western Maine district, that a gratifying improvement in the finances of the district has been made. For this credit is due to Brn. S. G. Cunningham, West Surry; J. J. Billings, Little Deer Isle; J. H. Robbins, Stonington, and J. E. Eaton, Mountainville; not for amounts paid more than others, but for their assistance as branch agents. And now at the opening of the last year of the century it is my pleasure to commend you all for the improvement made, and I hope you may be prospered of the Lord to continue all this year as you did the last five months in the old year now gone, and if so your record will be one of which you will be proud at the close of the year and of the century.

For the present I will continue to act as agent for the Bishop, and the brethren named above will act as heretofore in their respective branches. Receipts will be sent promptly for all tithes or offerings anyone may wish to give.

With best wishes for all the children of peace, I am, Yours in bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

OAKLAND, Cal., Feb. 5.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday was our monthly sacrament service and was marked by a rich bestowal of the Spirit, to the comfort and edification of all. The gift of tongues was manifested with great accompanying power. Some say it was the best meeting held here in years. It fills our heart with joy and praise and gives us a desire to press on in this great work.

Our little chapel at the corner of Sixteenth and Magnolia will soon be completed, and we expect will be dedicated on February 16. We hope that even our furniture will be paid for, and intend to exert every effort to that end.

We have been much interested in the past few months in reading the various articles on gathering, consecration, etc., and it has caused us to think a great deal on the past, present, and future of the church. It seems sometimes that we are like the people who sing, "Jesus paid it all," and we are wanting God to help us when we won't help ourselves.

If the church members live up to the gospel standard and faithfully discharge their duties, the gathering will follow as naturally as for water to run down hill. How will they understand their duties unless they are taught? I find many of the local ministry full of zeal and anxious to do all they can to push on the work, but they need counsel and advice, and in many cases some one to take the lead. It is beyond my comprehension to see the wisdom of leaving a large branch without a competent pastor. Why go and convert others and leave those we already have converted to starve, and eventually many of them to go back into the world? If high priests or elders were placed in charge of all large branches and districts, who could devote their entire time to the work, it would settle the question of seventies being in branches; there would be no necessity for their presence and they could wait upon their duties.

The great drawback to our work now is not in the missionary branch, but in the presiding branch. Supposing a good, competent elder was located for a term of years here in Oakland, see what a field he would have for work, and still build up the members in the branch. He could reach nearly one hundred thousand people on this side of the bay, and be busy day and night, if he didn't wear out. Bro. Sheehy says, this is my "hobby," but I really can't see how the saints can be brought to the standard of righteousness required in the gospel except by this character of work. We have plenty of saints in this mission who are thirsting after righteousness and with proper leadership would be a great power for good, and are now, to the best of their knowledge.

At Santa Rosa last week we had the pleasure of meeting with the saints, as well as at Windsor. There are many splendid members at these places, and we believe there are brighter days ahead for them.

One of the missionaries in Utah advises the saints to freely entertain the Utah elders, and does not think that 2 John 10, should be applied against them. It seems to me that when men come to us claiming to be ministers for Christ, and after we have shown them the light as we understand it, and they still refuse it, that our obligation to feed and shelter them is ended. John says, "For he that biddeth him Godspeed, is partaker of his evil deeds." Especially does this apply to us, because we are engaged in teaching that Joseph Smith was not guilty of the crime of polygamy, and these disciples of Brighamism are busy "bearing their testimony" that he was the husband of many wives, right in the face of two court decisions to the contrary. I believe that we ought to be charitable in all things, but I confess that it tries my patience when men find it necessary to uphold their system by so much misrepresentation and deception, and absolute rejection of the written word in favor of keys that they alone have access to. Then, too, we have granted them the use of our churches in Independence, Omaha, Lamoni, and elsewhere, and have met them on their own terms. Will they be honest and fair with us and meet us in Salt Lake City, Ogden, and Logan, in their churches? If not why should we shelter and feed them when we are convinced that they are deceiving the people.

We have signed propositions with one of their elders here for a debate, and now he absolutely refuses to meet the issue. Owing to surrounding conditions I have read up on this question this fall, and am more satisfied tha never of the latter-day apostasy. There can be no standard in this work, but individual righteousness and strict integrity to all truth. May God help all of his people to live up to their great privilege in the gospel, is my prayer.

Yours in Christ,

FRED B. BLAIR.

ELLENSBURG, Wash., Jan. 27.

Editors Herald:—The saints are all striving to do the Master's will. We are somewhat scattered and can't meet very often, and as ministers are few in this field, we do not hear much preaching. We had some meetings; Bro. Holt and Bro. Chase and family stopped at Ellensburg with the tent, but with poor success, as prejudice ran high and people would not turn out; still, some are investigating.

I think we have some of God's people here that will come out in time. If we could have more elders in this field I think lots of good could be done.

One word, dear saints, in regard to tithing: Let us all do all we can in this respect and try and get more elders in the field. If we can't send all we owe, send all you can. Don't wait to get too much before you send. If it is but twenty-five cents, it all counts.

I feel more determined than ever to do what I can to spread the gospel. My house is open for all elders, a home while they stay, and all are invited to stop that can. I live nine miles southeast of Ellensburg.

I feel it my duty to write now and then to the Herald, and I do like to read the letters in the Herald, as we can't go to church. What I can read is all the spiritual food we have. I do rejoice in this latter-day work, and I would love to see more serving God. We have a union Sunday school, which we attend to try and instruct our children. O, how I would love to be in a good branch once more! When the right time comes I want to go to Zion and be with the dear brethren and sisters and all be as one family.

I want the saints all to pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end, is my prayer. Yours in gospel bonds,

WILLIAM T. SHELDON.

WALKER, Mo., Feb. 3.

Editors Herald:—Since last March I have preached one hundred and thirty-three sermons, baptized twenty, and while many times I have felt more like being in bed than in the sacred desk, my Master has held me up by the power of his Spirit, for which I thank him.

I am feeling very much better now, although for the past month I have been laboring under a bad cold; yet I have averaged one sermon a day.

I was preaching at Fort Scott, Kansas, when the two Sylvers were lynched. I was speaking to a very good congregation, while the two unfortunate boys were being pulled up to a tree in the courthouse yard. I went and saw them after they were taken down. Poor fellows! they still had the ropes on their necks, handcuffed, and legs chained.

We have a very good interest at this place, hope some will obey. The few saints here are doing well, under the leadership of Bro. Leeper. Yours very truly,

J. C. FOSS.

NASHVILLE, Mo., Feb. 7.

Editors Herald:—We are having one of the best meetings ever held here. Three years ago Bro. Cather held a debate here with Blalock, a Christian preacher. After the debate the Christians and Methodists closed their churches against us, thinking it would stop the gospel. Two years ago last July the writer put a tent in the town and held a series of meetings and baptized five adults. Three were from the Christian Church, one from the Methodist.

Persecution has been against them ever since. They have bought the public school building, bought a lot, had the building moved upon it, and have put a good foundation under it, and put new seats in it, and they have a building 26x40, all paid for, and only four heads of families here. Brn. Miles, Royer, and Andes have paid for it all except a few dollars. They have made a great sacrifice, because none of them are wealthy.

The building is in good shape, except they need a new roof, as the old one leaks. They want to have it dedicated so they can deed it over to the Bishop, but do not feel like dedicating it to the Lord until a new roof is on. It will cost about thirty dollars.

I appeal to the dear saints in general, and especially in Spring River district, to send them your aid and help them out. They are not able to put the roof on. Please don't pass this by unheeded, but reach down in your pocket and send them something. Send all moneys to B. F. Miles, Nashville, Missouri, which will be thankfully received.

They have a good Sunday school here. Prejudice is giving way; some are interested; very near the kingdom.

Colaborers, I am ejoying the greatest degree of the Spirit I have ever had in preaching and administering to the sick. To God be the glory. I am in the conflict till the victory is won. May God bless all the departments of the work of the Lord. Regards to all the dear saints.

The Mission World thus summarizes the progress of Christianity among the Jews: "There are in the Christian Church over one hundred thousand proselytes from Judaism, and in the Church of England two hundred and fifty of the clergy are Jews or the sons of Jews. As each Lord's day comes round the gospel is proclaimed in more than six hundred pulpits of Europe by Jewish lips. Over three hundred of the ministers of Christ in Great Britain are stated to be Hebrew Christians."

HEALTH HINTS.—CONCLUDED.

Some children are greatly addicted to nose bleeding. An occasional slight flow of blood from the nose often seems a relief; but if it continues till the patient is weakened, it must be stopped. Applying ice or cold metal to the wrist, or to the back of the neck will usually check the flow. A still simpler remedy that I have often found successful with school children, is to roll a bit of white paper to the size of the child's finger and insert it under his upper lip. If the bleeding is persistent, plug the nostrils with common salt, or with cotton batting moistened with hamamelis, Pond's extract. Frequent and prolonged nose bleed shows a degenerate condition of the blood vessels and a low tone of the whole system. This may result from too little sleep, too much violent exercise, or too little of the right kind; breathing impure air, taking stimulating food and drink instead of that which makes good blood, and thus nourishes the body.

Or the blood may have become impoverished through practices of which you think it such a shame to speak; that multitudes of children are going down to death for lack of warning and instruction their parents ought to have given them, but did not. Oh! it is pitiful the number of children who are destroyed and destroying themselves; literally "perishing for lack of knowledge." Look well to this matter in your own household. If you have neglected your duty, repent of it before God and bring forth works meet for repentance by redoubling your diligence. If you do not know how to commence the work, send to the Sanitary Publication Company, Chicago, and procure the little books, "A Father's Advice to His Son," and "A Mother's Advice to Her Daughter;" read them yourself and then give them to your children. "There is a healthy knowledge, and there is an unhealthy, unclean ignorance." It is every parent's duty to impart the first, and thus guard against the second. "Mental purity must give a helping hand to self-restraint," without which there is no sound health for body or soul. We may use the body for promoting the higher moral ends of life, or as a mere machine for the manufacture of pleasurable sensations. If we put it to the latter use it will, like all mere machines, soon wear out and cease to give even the pleasure for which we have sacrificed its higher uses. But if it be well strung by temperance in all things, and have general vigor and perfection of senses, it will give pleasure as well as subserve higher ends. Such a body is like an Æolian harp. If it be well strung it matters little which way the wind blows, it yields sweet music. Nature is man's counterpart; our senses are made to respond to the whole of it, and so give pleasure. As Mark Hopkins says: "When God would secure to man the highest, best balanced, most long-continued action of mental and moral power, he does it by giving him a sound physique," and, "Whosoever can so control the body as to produce all desired movements in the easiest and most graceful way, and so as to think by it with all possible power and facility, has attained perfection in the control of the body. He will only need the choice of right ends to the attainment of which his thoughts and movements shall be directed."

In a body thus tempered and trained it is a much easier thing for the soul to attain to the beauty of holiness than in one distorted or diseased. We are commanded to be "strong in the Lord," and we cannot believe that the body is exempt from this command. "May the beauty of the Lord be upon you," is no idle form of benediction. We believe that our Father intended his children to have the strength of faith, the beauty of holiness within, and that these shining through should make the body beautiful, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun," and in strength like "an army with banners."—Childhood; its Care and Culture.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Feb. 2.

Dear Daughters of Zion:—One of those rare moments have come when the little ones are all safe in slumber-land, and I feel free. Feel, "the angels watch o'er them keep," and before I lay myself down at their side, I can allow my thoughts undisturbed liberty.

Reading of the Home Study Class of the Religio for those who could not attend their meetings, and afterwards thinking how I longed to attend your meetings, I thought, "why, I am a 'Home Class' member of the Daughters of Zion."

I almost believe I have read every word you have ever published, and looking back I now feel that God directed my thoughts in earliest girlhood to the immeasurable importance of fatherhood and motherhood, and so led and taught me, that with the knowledge thus gained, I would as soon leave my little ones ungarded for any space of time as I would leave—if I possessed it—a crown of precious gems, where chance or convenience would dictate. And are not these precious souls my jewels—the crown of my womanhood?

Ah! woe is me if, with the help of my all powerful Father, I neglect the smallest duty of their care, and present them to him in the day of awards, tarnished—their lustre gone.

And is not Satan as dangerous and cunning an enemy as any thief would be were I a possessor of earth's finest gems?

Ah, yes. Thank God that I realize this, and also that he is so wise and powerful, and withal so willing to give that we, as parents, can obtain by diligent, constant prayers, sufficient wisdom to bring (not teach them, then fail to see that they do as taught) them up in the way they should go, and that the sure consequence will be "and when they are old they will not depart from it."

God bless the work of the Daughters of Zion, is the prayer of one who is with you heart and soul.

THOSE PRIMARY CARDS AGAIN.

Everybody please take notice. The business manager of the Herald Office informs me that there are many letters of inquiry and some sharp criticisms upon him for not filling all the orders for cards that have been received. In fact they are so numerous that it would be well nigh impossible for him to write and explain it to all. We wish to make here an explanation that will remove all blame from the Herald Office management, for no fault is theirs. They have done exactly as they were instructed.

1. The card illustrations were put out as an experiment. And it was not expected that we would reach every one that might choose to try them.

2. We took the mailing lists of the Primary Quarterly and sent out about double the number of cards as quarterlies. Some others were sent upon request, but the supply being limited we could not supply all. Many seemed to think that all that was necessary was to send in a very large order and "be sure to have enough." Some ordered who did not take the Primary Quarterly and wanted a copy or two of the quarterly "throwed in." We would gladly have complied with their requests had it been possible. But, as stated above, the cards were issued as an experiment, and to try the experiment sufficiently extensive to make it of any value we decided that it would be necessary to send them out free. They are very expensive. We therefore concluded to have but a part of the lessons of the quarter illustrated. And if you have a few sets of the lessons illustrated you have enough to give the system of illustrating the lessons a practical test. Give it a careful test and when General Convention comes, be ready to express your views as to whether or not the system of illustration is a practical one, and, too, whether or not you can afford to pay for them as they cannot again be sent out free. There is no better way to test any method than by actual experience with it. This you soon will have had. Let us study carefully and see if it is wise to continue the illustrated cards for the primary grades.

We hope that this explanation of the matter may remove all thought of complaint that may have pervaded the minds of any. And, too, that all who have written the Herald Office for explanation will consider this as in answer to their inquiries.

Ever hopeful for the success of the work, we are Your brother and colaborer,

T. A. HOUGAS, Gen. Supt.

"Many superintendents are accustomed to offer a pre-view of the next quarter at the quarterly review, taking a forward as well as a backward look."

"We cannot expect to be estimated solely according to our intentions. One cannot safely estimate himself by what he intends to do. A thousand of the best intentions will amount to nothing unless accompanied by some actual doing."

A teacher who does not study the lesson, who can do nothing but ask prepared questions, and who cannot intelligently review the answers given by the scholars, can never expect to interest the scholars, or induce them to study the lesson. Likewise, the teacher who conceives it to be his or her duty to prepare a lecture, and take up the entire time allotted to delivering it, cannot expect the scholars to study or to learn. In every class there will be found diverse talents as well as dispositions. Some can more readily be interested in biographical, others in historical, and again others in doctrinal studies. It is the duty of the teacher, while giving general instructions, to employ and take advantage of the special talents and inclinations, for the general good of the class.—Sunday School Times.

A SONG OF HOPE.

Children of yesterday, heirs of to-morrow,
What are you weaving—labor and sorrow?
Look to your looms again; faster and faster
Fly the great shuttles prepared by the Master.
Life's in the loom;
Room for it—room!

Children of yesterday, heirs of to-morrow,
Lighten the labor and sweeten the sorrow,
Now, while the shuttles fly faster and faster,
Up and be at it—at work with the Master.
He stands at your loom;
Room for him—room!

Children of yesterday, heirs of to-morrow,
Look at your fabric of labor and sorrow,
Seamy and dark with despair and disaster;
Turn it—and lo, the design of the Master!
The Lord's at the loom;
Room for him—room!

To the Brethren of the Northern, Central, and Southern Nebraska Districts of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Brethren:—Whereas, it seems to us the part of wisdom that the boundary lines of the districts of the State be rearranged, so as to form only two districts of the territory now comprising the above-named districts, we do respectfully request you to consider the following proposition at your next conference: That each district authorize their delegates to General Conference to confer with the delegates from the other districts to consider the propriety of a division along the following line, or some other they may agree upon: Beginning at the Missouri River and following the south line of the following-named counties, Sarpy, Saunders, Butler, Polk, Merrick, Howard, Sherman, and Custer. The west line may remain as at present.

D. M. RUDD.
F. A. SMITH.

The resolution was adopted.

The matter of gathering and consecration, as sent out by the brethren from California, was referred to a committee consisting of James Caffall, D. M. Rudd, and Oscar Case, who reported as follows: We your committee, after mature consideration, submit the following: First, While we consider the matters submitted by the brethren in California, namely, gathering, consecration, etc., of paramount importance, it is made to appear to your committee, that forasmuch as the Presidency have general supervision over the whole church, when a necessity exists for a special council, whether consisting of the priesthood or the entire church, for considering an action on gathering, etc., it will be their right to so advertise to the body. We, therefore, are of the opinion that the act would be premature. Second, We by no means question the right of the brethren in California to petition the body on any matter they please, but think with due deference to the brethren of California, that as a district you know whether or not you desire to so petition. Third, The following is found in Doctrine and Covenants, page 355: "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me."

JAMES CAFFALL.
D. M. RUDD.
OSCAR CASE.

The above report was on motion adopted. Resignation of F. A. Smith as member of tent committee, and James Huff elected to fill the vacancy. Bro. James Caffall urged the saints by way of advice, that a fund be created to pay the necessary expenses of district officers. District officers were instructed to issue letters of removal to members of disorganized branches when requested. Preaching by Elders James Caffall, Oscar Case, and D. M. Rudd. Adjourned to Columbus, Nebraska, May 25, at 7:30.

THE LAKE MISSION.

To the Ministry in the Lake Mission; Greeting: — Dear brethren, having been placed temporarily in charge of the mission, I wish to make a few suggestions regarding reporting. Your next reports, which should be made promptly on March 1, are important, as they form a basis for appointments next year. At that time each report should contain a statement of the desire and opportunities of the writer for future labor; the number of dependents, including wife and children, should be given, and the ages of the children stated; and if there are any peculiar conditions requiring special consideration, they should be presented. State also the probable amount which will be required to sustain the family, not including your individual expenses.

All are not required or expected to report directly to me, however. My predecessor, Elder E. C. Briggs, appointed the following brethren in charge of "fields of labor," as follows: J. J. Cornish in Northern Michigan, Andrew Barr in Eastern Michigan, S. W. L. Scott in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, and George Jenkins in Southern Indiana. I recognize these appointments, and expect others to do so. I hope, therefore, that every one in the Lake Mission, under General Conference appointment, will take notice and report to these brethren promptly on the first day of March, so that they may summarize the reports and forward the necessary items to me as soon thereafter as possible, as the Quorum of Twelve meets on March 15, and all should be in my hands by that time to insure consideration. Your brother and colaborer,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

HIGH PRIESTS' QUORUM.

To the Members of the Quorum of High Priests in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Greeting:—

Beloved Brethren, as the time for the General Conference is near at hand, it becomes our duty as members of said quorum, to report either in person or by letter to the quorum, an account of our labors and standing in the great work in which we are engaged. Those who are laboring under General Conference appointment are respectfully requested to report their labors, and where; also in what capacity, whether as presiding officers or as traveling ministers. Those who are local, and not directly under General Conference appointment, are also requested to report their labors, as it is expected that none are idle in this great cause. God "expects every man to do his duty," but every man according to his ability, which comprises his circumstances—physical, mental, and spiritual—hence the quorum will expect a good report from its members. Please send all reports to Bro. H. A. Stebbins, secretary of the quorum, Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, by request of the Presidency of the quorum, by April 1, 1900.

DISFELLOWSHIPED.

Notice is hereby given, that at a business meeting of Union branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Indiana, held Saturday, January 27, 1900, Leonard F. Daniel, who was an elder in said church, was disfellowshiped, and his name ordered erased from the church record of names of said branch; said Leonard F. Daniel having been duly charged, tried, and convicted before an elders' court of said Reorganized Church, duly called, and sitting at West Pullman, Illinois, November 14, 1898, upon the charges of adultery, tattling, unchristian conduct, insulting women, and lying, which conviction was had by due testimony and confession of said Leonard F. Daniel to said court.

Further, the said L. F. Daniel having sought, and we believe having gained, admission to the Christian Church, commonly called "Campbellites," upon his standing as a member and elder in said Reorganized Church, since his conviction before said court, and before reconciliation with said Union branch, the action of the said Union branch is had in his case and he is disfellowshiped from said church, and his name erased from the roll of said Union branch.

SOUTHEASTERN MISSION.

Will the elders and priests of the Southeastern Mission please report to me the first of March, the number of sermons preached, number baptized, new openings made. State the time you spent in the mission, putting in all labor performed during the last two years. Those desiring missions will give number dependent upon them, giving ages of children, and the amount needed for their support a month. M. M. TURPEN.

GENERAL CONFERENCE BOARD.

The rate of board has been fixed by the Lamoni branch at $2.50 per week. The committee will have some places where free entertainment can be had, but no one should count on free entertainment and board unless they have made arrangements with the committee before arriving in Lamoni. We will try to aid any who cannot pay by helping them to secure such places, but arrangements must be made with the committee before coming.

All persons desiring the services of the committee should write the secretary or president in due time, stating what you desire, when you expect to arrive, etc. If you have preferences, we will try to give them due consideration.

Persons who accept invitations from friends, and make their own arrangements, need not communicate with us, but when you arrive we will assist such to find their places, if desired.

When you decide to come, if you desire us to assist you in any way, write us early, so that as many as possible may be assigned to places before the sessions begin. Committee,

CREDENTIALS OF DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

District officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts in the coming General Conference, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate the organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of the district appointing, with name of district and place and date of holding of conference, is sufficient. Separate individual credentials are not necessary.

Branches not in districts are each entitled to one delegate and one vote.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting," are as follows:—

Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference:—

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation, (the full delegation not being present,) they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes."

Attention is called to the following, adopted at last General Conference:—

"Resolved, that the Secretary be and is hereby authorized to devise and have printed a blank form of delegate credentials; and that a copy or copies be sent to each district or branch entitled to representation, prior to the convening of each General Conference."

District secretaries and secretaries of branches not in districts who fail to receive credential blanks will be supplied promptly on receipt of postal card with address.

Harden was born in Green County, Illinois, April 26, 1832, and came to California in 1849; was baptized January 22, 1875, and died at his son's residence in Benecia, California, January 9, 1900, aged 67 years, 8 months, and 13 days. She was the mother of eight children, three of whom survive her. She leaves a brother, Elder Francis A. Evans, and a sister, Elizabeth Jenkins. Was baptized by Elder John T. Phillips in Wales.

SALISBURY.—At her home, near Fountain Green, Hancock County, Illinois, at ten a. m., February 2, 1900, Mrs. Katharine Salisbury. Her maiden name was Katharine Smith. She was born in Windsor County, Vermont, July 28, 1813. She was the eighth of ten children born to Joseph Smith, Sr., and Lucy Mack-Smith, and therefore sister to Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who were killed in the "old jail" at Carthage, Illinois, June 27, 1844. She accepted the gospel by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and was baptized in June, 1830, by David Whitmer, and was a charter member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. She endured all the troubles, privations, and persecutions incident to the prejudice and bigotry of the so-called religion with which the church was assailed in those days. She was married to Wilkins Jenkins Salisbury, January 8, 1831. To them were born eight children, three of whom survive: Solomon J., of Burnside, Illinois; Don C., of Carthage, Illinois; and Frederick, of Fountain Green, Illinois. Her husband died in 1853, in Webster, Hancock County, Illinois, and five of the children preceded her to the grave many years. She came to Hancock County in 1838, and for many years lived at or near Webster; of later years her home has been near Fountain Green. When "the Mormon troubles" of 1846 came on, and the "exodus from Nauvoo" took place, she with her family, along with the family of Joseph Smith, refused to acknowledge the leadership of Brigham Young, and contended that Young was leading the church astray. The church was reorganized April 6, 1860, and came out declaring the original principles, faith, doctrines, and practices of the original church, and rejected the doctrines of "Adam-God," "polygamy," and "blood atonement," along with Brigham Young's leadership. She, in 1873, united with this reorganization, because it furnished an expression of belief in harmony with her faith in Christ, in whom she had a firm, deep, and abiding faith that prompted her to "endure all things" for what she regarded as his cause. Hers was the material and spirit of which martyrs are made. She had been ailing for about two years, but no violent symptoms developed until about a week before her death. She was able to attend to her housekeeping duties up to within twenty-four hours of her death. She was ready and willing to go, and departed in the full assurance of faith, at the age of 86 years, 6 months, and 4 days. The funeral services were held at the Webster church, at two p. m., February 4, 1900, Elder William Lambert, of Adrian, Illinois, in charge; Elder James McKiernan, of Farmington, Iowa, preached the sermon. The interment was at Webster cemetery. A large audience of neighbors and relatives attested their respect for her by their presence at the services.

WIGHT.—Juanita Merle, daughter of Bro. J. W. and Sr. Elizabeth Wight, was born May 3, 1896; died February 6, 1900; aged 3 years, 9 months, and 3 days. She said to her mamma she was going to see her sister, and her last words were, "Good-bye, Mamma." She passed peacefully away. This is the second death in the family of Bro. and Sr. Wight during the year, another little daughter having passed away in the spring of 1899. Juanita was the only remaining daughter, and was greatly beloved. Funeral services at the home; Elder R. S. Salyards in charge, sermon by Elder J. R. Lambert.

JOHNSON.—Mrs. Mary Johnson was born in Aberdare, South Wales, September 6, 1843. Came to this country in 1849, locating in Fulton County, Illinois. Was baptized March 9, 1873, remaining true to the faith till death, February 2, 1900, at Canton, Illinois. She had the privilege of attending a series of meetings shortly before the summons came, and there requested that when she died, hymn 164 be sung—a loving message for her to leave to her children: "Receive ye the word, as taught by the Lord." She was married to Mr. John Johnson, March 26, 1860, who died November 13, 1893. Funeral services in charge of Elder F. A. Russell.

PETT.—Bernice Leo, son of Bro. Fred and Sr. Alwilda Pett, was born December 26, 1892, at Arion, Iowa. While returning from school at the noon hour, he was struck by a passing street car and instantly killed in front of his home in Omaha, Nebraska, January 29, 1900, aged 7 years, 1 month, and 3 days. He went to school Monday morning light-hearted and happy, as he always was; but the opening of the afternoon session of school found his little seat vacant, and his schoolmates sadly realized that dear little Bernice would meet with them no more. Leaving sad hearts here, he has returned to God, who gave him, as innocent and pure as when sent to earth. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel, Galland's Grove, Iowa, and the remains laid to rest in Holcomb cemetery to await the morning of the first resurrection.

BEST.—Sr. Ida May Best (maiden name Davies), born in Cheltenham, St. Louis, Missouri, February 8, 1870; died in St. Louis Baptist hospital, January 31, 1900, aged 30 years had she lived till the 8th of February. She leaves husband and five children to mourn. Was baptized when ten years old. Funeral conducted from the church at Cheltenham, by J. D. White.

ORR.—Susan M. Eckert Orr, at Newport News, Virginia, born May 18, 1849; died January 30, 1900; baptized November 9, 1896, at Roxbury, Virginia; married to William T. Orr, November 21, 1867. Funeral services by J. L. Goodrich, assisted by Rev. Lundy R. Wright, pastor of the Baptist Church. I arrived only in time to be recognized by our dying sister, and immediately anointed her, after which she expressed herself as feeling better, but in a short time she fell into a swoon, from which she did not rally, and died the next day. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn.

HOLCOMB —At the old home in Grove Township, Shelby County, Iowa, February 2, 1900, Homer C. Holcomb, aged 20 years and 8 months. He was baptized August 11, 1889, and manifested much faith in Christ before he was called to depart. Bro. Homer C. was the son of Harmon C. and Nora Holcomb, who crossed over the river of death some years since. Sr. Mattie Clothier is the only surviving member of her father's family. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel, Galland's Grove, Iowa, by Elder C. E. Butterworth, assisted by Elder John Pett. The remains were laid to rest in Holcomb cemetery, in hope of a glorious resurrection.

MANTLE —At Troy, Illinois, January 31, 1900, Bro. Joseph Mantle, aged 63 years, 11 months, and 9 days. Deceased was born at Brierly Hill, England. Joined the church at Linn, Missouri, in 1861. Funeral from Baptist church at Troy; sermon by Elder J. D. White.

COLE.—At the home of Mr. Daniel Howarth, Dunlap, Iowa, January 30, 1900. Elizabeth Cole, aged 77 years, 2 months, and 24 days. She was born at Butwell, Somerset, England, November 6, 1822; was baptized at Galland's Grove, Iowa, September 7, 1864. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel, Galland's Grove, by Elder C. E. Butterworth, assisted by Elder John Pett. The remains were laid to rest in Holcomb cemetery.

NOVIES —Sr. Eliza Novies, wife of Andrew Novies, was born in England; died January 25, 1900, aged 68 years, 11 months. Funeral conducted by Elder J. D. White. Deceased was member of old organization forty-nine years ago.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

"THINGS WORTH KNOWING IN PSYCHICAL RESEARCH."

On account of statements which have been made by the press concerning Prof. James H. Hyslop's views regarding the question of the immortality of the soul—statements which, he says, are enormously exaggerated and which put him in a false light—he has found it desirable to correct these erroneous impressions and state the precise nature of the problem presented to students of psychical research at this time. It has been said in most of the papers of the United States that Professor Hyslop has promised that he would "scientifically demonstrate the immortality of the soul." This he absolutely denies, and refers to his article in The New World for May, from which we have already quoted, for a true statement of his views. He says (in The Independent, October 12):—

"If the public expects my results to be in any respects different from what has already been published on the Piper case, it may prepare itself for disappointment. Those who have not been impressed by Dr. Hodgson's report may as well let mine alone. I pretend only to confirm his conclusion, not to do anything better, unless, because of the improved conditions under the Imperator regime, the sittings can be said to be better. But it is absurd to hope from me any miracles that will convince presumably intelligent men over and above disappointment with such an astounding piece of work as Dr. Hodgson's report represents. The trouble is that the public and 'scientific' men alike read that other work of the Society for Psychical Research with a priori preconceptions of what ought to be obtained in 'communications,' and do not study the problem carefully enough to know what it is, and what the inherent difficulties are likely to be in such a thing as real or apparent communication between two worlds. They have wholly forgotten the slow development of invention and discovery, as in electricity, the telephone, graphophone, etc. If we are scientific we have no right to expect anything involving our a priori theories about the matter. What scientific men mean by saying that what has already been published is disappointing I cannot understand. If they mean that they are still skeptical I can appreciate their state of mind, as that is very healthy when you have not had a long experience in all aspects of the subject. But to complain of disappointments is to acknowledge preconceptions of what ought to be that should never infect the spirit and methods of any man who lays the slightest claim to being scientific. There seems to be a general demand that 'spirits' should show a very lofty estate and engage in the most elevated conversation, without defining what that conversation shall be. People demand that they shall show superior intelligence, tell the conditions of life in which they live, and perform all sorts of miracles. The messages are supposed to be unattended with any difficulties that should make them incoherent. Now there is not a shadow of excuse for all this, and a thousand other equally absurd things. To start with, there is no reason to suppose scientifically that there are spirits of any kind, much less that they have any 'high state.' The scientific man has no business whatever in expecting or demanding that 'spirits' shall satisfy his preconceptions of what a transcendental existence shall be, or of what communications shall consist in. His sole business is to see whether the facts force the explanation to choose between a belief in the continuity of consciousness and an inconceivable amount of telepathy. Whether spirits are sane or insane, coherent or incoherent, has nothing to do with the problem, and a man only makes a fool of himself when he repudiates the case because his preconceptions are not realized, and because his illusions about a transcendental world are not proved to be true. Nor is the question one whether supernormal phenomena represent more intelligence than can be attributed to the brain of the medium in its normal action. But it is solely whether the facts acquired can be attributed to any normal means of acquiring them, and whether they are evidence of personal identity, or the persistence of the consciousness once known to exist."

Dr. Hyslop states a few facts concerning the Piper experiments conducted by the Psychical Research Society. These facts, he says, while they do not prove anything in favor of spiritualism, leave both the general public and scientists without a shadow of excuse for their "presumptuous and supercilious attitude" toward these investigations. He makes the following statements.—

"1. None of Mrs. Piper's experiments are conducted in the dark. All are in broad daylight.

"2. There is no cabinet or mechanical apparatus, as is so common in 'spiritualistic' performances.

"3. There is no slate-writing with its inevitable accompaniments connected with the affair.

"4. Mrs. Piper's life and conversation show none of that theoretical and personal interest in the subject that characterizes the professional 'medium' with his doctrine of magnetism and electricity.

"5. Mrs. Piper has nothing to do with the arrangements for the experiments and sitters. These are all managed by the officers of the society that has her under contract.

"6. All the slate-writing that I ever witnessed was done out of sight and not ostensibly by the hand of the 'medium,' While Mrs. Piper's automatic writing is done in clear sight with her own hand, and on paper and with a pencil of your own furnishing.

"These facts and differences will not make phenomena genuine for any theory, whether secondary personality, telepathy, or spiritism, but they dispose of the assumptions that are usually made when this subject is mentioned, and which are too well supported by general experience against the genuineness of anything that claims to be supernormal. You may insist upon more rigid conditions still, if you like, and if it be possible to do so. But as I am not contending for the genuineness of the case in this statement of its characteristics, but only the difference between it and the usual instances which give the popular conception of 'spiritualistic' phenomena, I am not concerned with the question whether they are valid or not. They force the public, however, to consider the Piper phenomena with more patience than it is accustomed to do, whatever the explanation that may recommend itself in the end. And we must remember also that the whole case for supersensible knowledge does not depend solely upon this single instance of significant facts. There are thousands of other experiences, such as apparently very important coincidences, apparitions, and mediumistic phenomena, that are on record and many of them exceedingly well authenticated. But they generally lack in the features which give the Piper case its great value. They are: (1) The care taken to exclude all the ordinary reasons for suspecting fraud. (2) The long and sustained period of experimentation with the case, involving hundreds of persons under the strictest conditions of secrecy and care. (3) The completeness of the record made of the facts at the time of the experiment and without any dependence upon memory alone. (4) The fact that the results of this case are experimental, and, to some extent at least, under our control. (5) The knowledge of the antecedent circumstances and conditions connected with the phenomena. . . .

"As Professor James has remarked, not one breath of fraud has ever yet been able to sustain itself. You may still think that this is possible, and I for one shall enter no complaint if only intelligent and scientific reasons are given for this accusation."—Literary Digest.

IS CHRISTIANITY DECLINING?

It is not an exaggeration to say that many orthodox Christians look upon Professor Briggs, notwithstanding his recent affiliation with Episcopalianism, as an enemy of Christianity, engaged in an effort to break down the Christian church by his investigations in the domain of higher criticism. It will be of interest to this class, as well as to the public in general, that Professor Briggs has discussed the question, "Is the Christian Religion declining?" in the February number of the Popular Science Monthly, and answered it in the negative. Both Professor Briggs and his critics answer the question alike, but they formulate their replies from different points of view, not agreeing upon what is essential to the Christian religion.

In this disagreement it is not for the Tribune to decide which is right. It may be interesting, however, to state to its readers the grounds of Professor Briggs' belief that there are evidences of a healthy advance of Christianity. He affirms that historical Christianity has failed to reach the ideals presented by Jesus in his teachings, and that this failure is made good by the ethical enthusiasm of the present time, which "is an evidence that Christianity is about to enter upon the last and highest stage of its development." He further declares that dogma has had an exaggerated importance in the past and that "the effort to throw off the bondage of the popular and scholastic dogma is an advance and not a decline—an advance into the realm of freedom"—in other words, "a determination to know the truth and to hold nothing but the truth."

The chief factor in the Christian religion, according to Professor Briggs, is "the fundamental one of the Christian life and the Christian institution," but there are several types of religious life and these vary according to temperaments, nations, and races. The religion of one great center cannot be used as a test of religion in others. Professor Briggs dwells upon this point in considerable detail by a comparison of religion in Great Britain and in the United States. He finds that the latter occupies an intermediate position attained by the assimilation of the British and continental types of religion, as is shown by the fact that it is no longer a badge of good citizenship or test of social propriety to attend public worship in this country, and that the pulpit is no longer "the chief means of instruction and of intellectual and moral stimulation for the people." Even this last does not convince him that Christianity is declining. He says:—

> Those who think that the pulpit is everything in the public service naturally suppose that with the decline of the pulpit Christianity declines, but those who think that public worship is the essential thing in the church rejoice at the changes that are taking place, and hold that Christianity is advancing.

Professor Briggs does not believe that there is any real evidence for the charge that biblical criticism has undermined faith in the Holy Scriptures; on the other hand, he believes it makes the Bible "more attractive to the people, and its reading and exposition more interesting and influential in the church." His conclusion is that Christianity "is passing through a transition state, putting off antiquated dogmas, customs, and methods, and adapting itself to the modern world and transferring itself so as better to accomplish its work." His enemies may not entirely agree with this, but they will not dispute his assertion that Christianity is not declining, and that "in no age has it made more advance than in the century now drawing to a close." In this at least they are agreed.—Chicago Tribune, January 28, 1900.

A REMARKABLY RICH COUNTRY OPENED UP TO MERCHANTS, MINERS, AND FARMERS.

By the first of next April the completion of a new extension of the Burlington Railroad system will open up an entirely new section of country. A territory never before accessible for lack of railroads, but which is wonderfully rich in mining, grazing and agricultural possibilities.

It has already been completed from Alliance, on the Burlington's line in Northwest Nebraska, 37 miles south to Bridgeport, on the North Platte River. From there a line is rapidly being constructed, about 100 miles, along the north bank of the North Platte to Guernsey, Wyo., which will probably be the railroad and commercial center of what is known as the Hartville mining district.

Three years ago the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, with a paid up capital of $25,000,000, owning extensive rolling mills in Pueblo, Colorado, began to investigate the ore of this district. They mined several hundred thousand tons and shipped it out to the smelters at Denver and at Pueblo. One year ago, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company entered into a twenty years' lease of a portion of the Hartville mines, and since then have constructed a railroad from Badger, Wyoming, to the mines, a distance of fifteen miles, at an expense of $300,000. By the terms of the lease, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company is compelled to take out at least 500 tons per day, and the amount of iron ore that must be taken out is increased 25,000 tons each year until the minimum product of 1,000 tons per day is reached. This should be a sufficient guaranty that a period of commercial activity never excelled in the history of the West is about to be inaugurated in the Hartville mining region.

The stock business further back from the river is carried on extensively, and there is reason to believe that Guernsey will be a busy shipping point for live stock.

This new field of industry is attracting the attention of all classes of people. The capitalist, the merchant, the miner, the stockman and farmer all see an opportunity which rarely occurs, and those who are first in the field, as usual, will reap the reward. J. Francis, the general passenger agent of the Burlington Railroad at Omaha, Nebraska, states that he is every day receiving inquiries about the new country from all sorts of people, and that evidently there will be a steady tide of emigration Guernseyward during the coming spring.

SKELETON OF A MASTODON UNEARTHED.

The Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railroad is spending in the neighborhood of two million dollars in reducing grades and straightening curves on its main line between Chicago and Omaha. At Rome, Iowa, the line crosses the Skunk River, and there a gang of men have been employed excavating for the foundations of a new double-track iron bridge. At a point fifteen feet below the river bed, under the quicksand and just above the blue clay strata, foreman Peter Mattson came across a T-shaped bone three feet high and four feet eight inches wide. It was taken out and carried in the tool car to Batavia, where it now is. Those who have since examined the bone pronounce it to be undoubtedly part of the skeleton of an animal of prehistoric times, probably that of a mastodon.

TWO RESOLUTIONS.

We have seen the type-written copies of two resolutious or petitions, which are being circulated by some of the eldership in various branches and districts, asking that they be voted upon; one of which is to the effect that the church authorities be requested or petitioned to call a Solemn Assembly to take into consideration "the gathering" and other subjects kindred to it, with a view to perfecting such gathering pursuant to certain provisions of the law, which it is held should govern in the case; the other, to the effect that on and after the next April session, all resolutions, by-laws, or acts affecting the church, other than such as occur in routine business, shall, after being adopted or passed by the conference, be printed officially and sent to the various branches for ratification or rejection, before becoming of binding force upon the church; and that all laws, amendments to rules of procedure, and revelations contemplated to be presented to the church, shall be sent to the branches for consideration and vote before presentation, thus securing to the branches what would be known as the "initiative and referendum" in lawmaking.

We have not received either of these resolutions or petitions in an authoritative way, but they were handed to us by the hands of a middle or disinterested man, without comment or remark indicative of what he thought of them, or what ought to be our attitude toward them as Editor of HERALD.

The right of petition is one of the vested rights of the citizen, one of the recognized remedies to which the people may appeal for the redress of wrongs, the suppression of intolerable evils, and the general bettering of conditions among the people. Hence, we do not stand in the way of the exercise of the right by those who choose to apply to that remedy.

Just how the object sought to be effected by these resolutions or petitions coming before the conference will be accomplished, will, we suppose, be discovered on their presentation and consideration, hence we have little to urge concerning them.

It seems proper for us, however, to suggest to those branches and districts before whose business sessions these documents may come for action previous to the April session of conference, that they consider the probable result to ensue if the requests made should be carried into effect.

We believe that an airing of the subject matter of these two documents before they reach the doors of the conference might be of some benefit, and possibly lessen the hurt sure to come to some when the body of elders gets the subject before it.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 43: 3.

In reading Bro. Duncan Campbell's article in Herald of January 17, page 37, fourth line from top of article in Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3, 4, "And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment that when ye are assembled together ye shall instruct and edify each other that ye," etc. This word reads he in my Doctrine and Covenants, and to my mind puts quite a different construction on the passage.

I had occasion to call the attention of a brother to the same article in the Herald and he had not noticed the words ye and he, so in looking into his Books of Covenants, as he has three of them, one a Liverpool edition of 1849, another a Plano edition, and a third one of Lamoni edition,—two of the three have the word ye and one the word he. So I would very much like to know which in your judgment is correct, as I have educated myself that the word he was correct, and refers to Joseph Smith; that after he should listen to all the varied gifts that are given to the church he should know how to act upon the different points of the law, and so the church become sanctified by the same.

Kindly let me know at your earliest convenience, and greatly oblige.

In the 1835 or Kirtland edition of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the passage reads as follows:—

And now behold I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church how to act upon the points of my law and commandments which I have given, etc.

The next, the Nauvoo edition, published in 1846, reads the same, as follows:—

And now behold I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church, etc.

The next, the Liverpool edition, 1852, reads the same.

In the Lamoni edition 1880, which is the same as the Plano edition, the passage reads:—

And now behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that he may know, etc.

The last edition, the Lamoni edition of 1897, renders the passage correctly:—

And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know, etc.

The 1897 edition was corrected by the 1835, the edition accepted and indorsed by the General Assembly of the Church. How the error crept into the Plano edition we are unable to state. Other errors in it have also been corrected in the last (1897) edition. The passage as rendered by the 1897 edition is in harmony with other parts of the organic law of the church, which places the responsibility of acting for the church upon the various quorums of the priesthood, according to calling and functions provided for in said law. They act for the church, every quorum and every man, in the sphere of each. All must therefore know how to act, intelligently and comprehensively, hence the provision of the law that not only Joseph Smith, but that all "ye," shall know "how to act," etc.

All were to join in instructing and edifying one another, — that when they labored among the churches and in the world they should "know how to act upon the points" of the law, etc.

The passage with the word "ye" is, in our judgment, manifestly the correct rendering.

BRO. ELI T. DOBSON, formerly of St. Joseph, Missouri, has of late lolated at Deloit, Iowa, the place of his childhood's home, and established himself in business.

Deloit lies on the north side of the Boyer Valley, and by the finishing of a line of the Illinois Central Railway this last fall has excellent market facilities, reaching St. Louis, via Omaha, and Chicago, direct.

Bro. Dobson is in a situation to offer chances to some who would like to settle in a comparatively new and thriving town, to secure homes and possible chances for prospective success.

Bro. Dobson seems also to be awake to the cause; in a late letter to the editor he states:—

I am glad for the sake of the Saints now here; I am glad for the church's sake which we may honorably represent here, with some distinction too; and I am further glad for the opportunities now presented for wide-awake Saints in these parts to build solidly, and wisely, and in view of the "oft-quoted" sage's advice to the Saints to build permanently and solidly in the "regions round about," I feel sure you would approve of such building at Deloit. It may not be "central" Zion, but if Saints ever get numerous enough to cover one State (size of Kansas for instance) we can't all be in the State capital, can we?

AT a recent session of a Parliament of Religions held in the Unitarian Church, Oakland, California, in which Rev. Father H. H. Wyman presented "The Claims of the Catholic Church on the Modern World," Rev. Benjamin Fay Mills, a somewhat noted evangelist, but now pastor of the Unitarian Church at Oakland, said:—

We must all realize that we have come through the Catholic Church. If I were not a Unitarian I would be a Catholic. It is but a difference of freedom of belief and authority. The Catholic religion has done much for the enlightenment of the world, and we are all agreed that the Catholic Church has been a messenger of mercy.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

The following extract is from a letter to Bro. White from Bro. Slover in regard to the late debate with Braden:—

BRUBAKER, Ill., Feb. 8.

Brother White:—I have been here in the vicinity where your late debate was held, for several days, and have been greatly comforted in presenting the gospel; but on account of so much rain and mud only a few could get out to hear. It is the sentiment of everybody except Campbellites, so far as I can hear, that Braden was completely knocked out in the debate, and I have been wondering what will become of those people who heard our work presented so powerfully, and make such an admission, and then at the same time reject the light. Surely such people will come under great condemnation.

How a lady correspondence, not of the Saints' Church, speaks of Bro. White and the saints in the Lowry City (Missouri) Independent, for February 9:—

Elder I. N. White, of Independence, Missouri, has been entertaining and instructing the residents of Lowry with lectures on topics of the gospel, illustrating the same from a large chart. We understand he handles his subject in a masterly manner. These lectures have been free.

I would like to say to the public in general, to come out and hear these people, and learn more of their religious belief before you condemn; there is much to be admired in their teachings, and many things that are worthy of imitation by others. As a Christian sect they are remarkably free from many of the faults which cling to the larger majority of people. One thing in particular that they never indulge in is slander. If they cannot say any good of anyone, they let them alone; they do not try to paint a person's character any blacker than it is, and they usually find out their good qualities and speak of those instead of the evil. It has been my fortune to know a good many of these people, and in many different places, and I have always found them the same everywhere—clean in morals and in speech.

Elder John Kaler, Sydney, Australia, January 14:—

We just closed the best conference I have seen in Australia. The future outlook for the work is good. Bro. G. R. Wells leaves in a month for Lamoni. All well and happy. Happy New Year to you and all Saints.

Bro. John Kaler, writing to Bishop Kelley from Sydney, Australia, January 14, says:—

Our late conference was exceptionally good. Bro. Wells leaves for Lamoni, February 6, accompanied by Sr. Wells and baby. The conference voted forty pounds to send them to San Francisco. Nine baptized lately here in Sydney; work is onward. Love to all Saints.

Bro. F. A. Smith, Louisville, Nebraska, February 8:—

I am here holding a few meetings. It turned cold and stormed so hard no one came out. It is cold to-day, but clear, with quite a snow on the ground. I will return to Omaha on Sunday morning. Inclosed find an obituary notice. I preached the sermon at Beatrice to a crowded house in the Christian church with the Christian and English Lutheran ministers to assist, with fine attention and good liberty.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Morris T. Short has written in a vein somewhat antagonizing the right or propriety of sisters and, we suppose, what are known as laymembers, to act as delegates from branches or districts to General Conferences. We hope that the different branches and districts which propose to be represented in the ensuing April session of conference, will not be deterred from making their choice of delegates in accordance with existing rules and regulations, remembering that "membership in good standing" is the only prerequisite qualification required of delegates to the conference. It will be time enough to change our action when the rule shall be changed.

Labor wanted. Bro. James W. Whitley, living at Bridgeport, Douglas County, Washington, thinks there is a chance there for the labor of an ensign bearer. He suggests that whoever comes should go to Spokane, thence by rail to Cooley City, thence by stage to Bridgeport. He says, "Every body knows me," hence he would be easy to find. He would be glad to be at the April Conference, but his means will not allow.

Bro. J. F. Mintun, of Magnolia, Iowa, has been having a tilt with one Frank Gilson, in the Sioux City Tribune and Woodbine Chronicle, about the origin of the church, its doctrines and its history. Bro. James Frank seems able to defend the cause with his pen as well as a preacher.

THE FACTIONS ON POLYGAMY AND SPIRITUAL WIFERY.

BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH.

The impression prevails with many that the factions into which the church divided after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1844 did quite generally adopt the theory and practice of polygamy or some form of spiritual or celestial wifery.

Upon the supposition that this theory is correct it is reasoned, that the doctrine must have had a common source, hence it must have been taught or practiced, or both, prior to the death of Joseph Smith, as these factions had no fellowship or communion with each other afterwards. The strength of this reasoning is apparent, and if the premises are correct, then there is strong circumstantial evidence in favor of this doctrine having been introduced by Joseph Smith, whom they all recognized as a prophet of God. It is then both legitimate and highly proper to inquire into the premises of this argument, Did these rival factions as a rule adopt polygamy, or did they quite generally reject it?

If a general acceptance of the dogma of polygamy is evidence that the original church from which they sprang favored it, then a general rejection of the principle is evidence that the church in which they had their origin was opposed to it. We therefore submit some authentic records touching upon the attitude of these parties regarding the subject.

SIDNEY RIGDON.

The organization under Sidney Rigdon, who was one of the counselors of Joseph Smith, expressed itself in the following vigorous language, in the Messenger and Advocate, published by Sydney Rigdon at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, March 15, 1845:—

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS, OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

Whereas, the connection which has heretofore existed between ourselves and the people calling themselves the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints renders it necessary that we publish to the world a succinct statement of facts relating to the position we now sustain to God and our fellow men; and

Whereas, in consequence of the rejection by that people, of what we undoubtedly deem to be the order of the church and kingdom of God, and the introduction of doctrines and practices clearly inimical to the law of God, and altogether subversive of the laws of the land, abrogating the marriage contract, and substituting under the professed sanction of Heaven, a system of extreme licentiousness, uprooting every legal restraint, and eminently calculated in its very nature to produce the entire destruction of every virtuous tie, and pouring contempt upon every holy principle contained in the revelations of God to his creature man, and must inevitably entail upon that people abject wretchedness and woe, subjecting them to the righteous condemnation of every virtuous intelligence, whether in heaven or on earth; and

Whereas, the better to conceal the justly odious system of poylgamy, duplicity, hypocrisy, and falsehood are inculcated as virtues, the most sacred obligations constantly violated, and families and individuals plunged into irrevocable ruin and despair; therefore

Resolved, that we hold no fellowship with the people calling themselves the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and can have no communion with them, unless they repent and obey the principles of righteousness and truth.

Resolved, that we maintain the truth and the truth only, at all hazards, renouncing at once and forever, the unsanctifying dogma that it is sometimes lawful to lie.

Resolved, that our subjection to the law of God impels us to yield implicit obedience to the law of the land.

Resolved, that we maintain and do earnestly contend for the faith which was once, and is again, delivered to the saints, contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Covenants.

Resolved, that we feel it a solemn and imperative obligation we owe to God and our fellow men to disseminate to the extent of our ability, correct information regarding certain pernicious doctrines and practices which are secretly taught by the leaders and many of the members of the society called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; verily believing them demoralizing and destructive, combining all the worst features of barbarism, and containing all the elements of the wildest anarchy, and would if unchecked by the power of truth, ultimately extinguish the species. —Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, p. 176.

JAMES J. STRANG.

Though Mr. Strang did teach and practice polygamy years afterward, it is evident that he did not so do before 1848.

It was not claimed by him, nor is it claimed by his adherents, that he received this doctrine from Joseph Smith or from the church at Nauvoo; but from the Book of the Law which Mr. Strang claimed to have translated from plates by himself found in the earth. This also appears from the following quotations, all of which are taken from publications issued by authority of Mr. Strang and his organization.

At a conference held by them at Kirtland, Ohio, August 7–10, 1846, they adopted the following:—

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Resolved unanimously. That we utterly disclaim the whole system of polygamy known as the spiritual wife system lately set up in Nauvoo, by the apostates who claim the authority there, and will neither practice such things nor hold any fellowship with those that teach or practice such things.—Voree Herald, September, 1846.

This was confirmed at a General Conference held at Voree, Wisconsin, October 6–19, as the following will show:—

The proceedings of the special conference, at Kirtland, of August 6, 7, 8, and 9, were presented by President Strang.

On motion of General Bennett, resolved unanimously, that this General Conference cordially approve of the reorganization of the stake of Kirtland, and of the proceedings of its special conference.—Voree Herald, October, 1846.

In Zion's Reveille for July 22, 1847, is an article from the pen of the editor, James J. Strang, entitled, "Polygamy not Possible in a Free Government."

In the same publication for August 5, 1847, there is an article from the pen of John E. Page, one of the Twelve Apostles at the time of Joseph Smith's death, from which we extract the following:—

TO THE SAINTS; Greeting:—

Our eyes and ears are sometimes saluted with communications from abroad that there are persons who profess to be adherents to President J. J. Strang, who are privately teaching and some practicing what is called the "western camp doctrine," or, in other words, "spiritual wifery" or polygamy. We also hear that there are some persons who do President Strang the injustice to say that he justifies the principle above stated.

This is to say emphatically, and we mean just what we say, and if our course in the future does not prove us true in this matter then let that execration rest on us that is due to such a course of conduct, that we believe ourself to be as much ingratiated into the confidence of President Strang as any other man. (This we say without egotism, merely to discharge a moral duty.)

We have talked hours, yea, even days with President Strang on the subject of the temporal and moral condition and character of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and we find to our utmost satisfaction that he does not believe in or cherish the doctrine of polygamy in any manner, shape, or form imaginable whatever.—Vol. 2, p. 83.

The same publication for August 12, 1847, contains a card from James J. Strang relating to the above, reading as follows:—

Elder John E. Page has referred me to an article in No. 20 addressed "To the Saints; Greeting." In the remarks he has there made he has justly and truly represented my sentiments. I am only astonished that it should be necessary to state them at all. Within three years I have, in the work of the ministry, traveled over sixteen thousand miles, visited all the States north of the Carolinas but three, most of them several times, preached to large congregrations in all the principal cities and in most of the large branches in the country. And I have uniformly and most distinctly discarded and declared heretical the so-called "spiritual wife system" and everything connected therewith. It is a well-known fact that several men of talent and influence have separated from me and from the Church of God, merely because I would not in any manner countenance such a doctrine. One of them, Reuben Miller, has, in a pamphlet extensively circulated, given as a reason for separating from the church and becoming a Brighamite that I did not believe in the "spiritual wife system." I have recently refused to ordain a man to a high and responsible office, although a warm personal friend, and after he had been sustained by the unanimous vote of a General Conference, for no other reason than that it was discovered that he believed in "spiritual wifery." I now say distinctly, and I defy contradiction, that the man or woman does not exist on earth or under the earth who ever heard me say one word, or saw me do one act, savoring in the least of spiritual wifery, or any of the attending abominations. My opinions on this subject are unchanged, and I regard them as unchangeable. They are established on a full consideration of ALL the Scriptures, both ancient and modern, and the discipline of the church SHALL conform thereto. But I do not profess to be omniscient, and if any are found in this fault, not in my presence, it is necessary that those who know the facts present them to the proper council and attend to it. If, like many I know of, when a brother finds others in this sin he renounces the prophet and denies the faith, or like others STANDS STILL, HIS damnation is sure. I know little difference between the heresy in the one case or the other. JAMES J. STRANG,

President of the Church.

VOREE, August 6, 1847.

—Vol. 2, p. 88.

The October conference minutes for 1847 contain the following entries:—

James M. Adams, apostle, excommunicated for apostasy and believing the spiritual wife system. Delivered over to the buffetings of Satan till he repent. And the whole congregation lifted their hands against him.

Benjamin C. Ellsworth, excommunicated for teaching and practicing the spiritual wife system. Delivered over to the buffetings of Satan till the day of the Lord. And the whole congregation lifted their hands against him.—Gospel Herald, Oct. 14, 1847, vol. 2, p. 122.

On December 23, 1847, J. W. Crane was tried before the First Presidency, J. J. Strang being present, and convicted under nine counts, the third being:—

Heresy; teaching that it is right to plunder unbelievers; three witnesses. Teaching that saints may have other women than one wife; five witnesses.—Gospel Herald, vol. 2, p. 192.

These extracts show conclusively that whatever Strang may have subsequently taught on this subject, he did not receive the doctrine until more than three and a half years after the death of Joseph Smith.

In addition to the above we quote from a letter of Charles J. Strang, son of J. J. Strang, under date of July 18, 1882:—

In 1846, at Voree, Strang pronounced a curse upon certain ministers, a portion of which I here quote: "As for those who, as gospel ministers, have assumed to teach such damning, soul-destroying doctrines (that deceit, fraud, lying, perjury, plundering unbelievers, polygamy, fornication, and adultery are required by the command of God in the upbuilding of his kingdom) in the name of God and the Lord Jesus Christ, may their bones rot in the living tomb of their flesh; may their flesh generate from its own corruptions a loathsome life for others; may their blood swarm a leprous life of motelike ghastly corruption, feeding on flowing life, generating chilling agues and burning fevers. . . . And I prayed unto God, saying, Oh, God, curse them not, and let me not raise my voice against my fellows! But he said, Curse, curse, curse! I will altogether curse, until they return to me, for they have perverted my law and deceived my servants; unto the Destroyer shalt thou deliver them, for their prayer is sin."

CHARLES B. THOMPSON.

Charles B. Thompson claimed to be the Baneemy spoken of in Doctrine and Covenants 102:8. He located at Preparation, Monona County, Iowa. He placed himself upon record, by presenting the following as revelation from God to him:—

And, behold, polygamy, or a plurality of wives, is an abomination before me, and is forever forbidden, in this my Holy Presbytery of Zion, saith the Lord Jehovah.—The Law and Covenants of Israel, pp. 184, 185.

J. C. BREWSTER.

The organization under Hazen Aldrich and J. C. Brewster, usually called Brewsterites, which operated at Kirtland, Ohio, and Springfield, Illinois, from 1848 and after, and some of whom emigrated in 1850 to New Mexico or California, were equally emphatic on this point.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

In an article against polygamy by J. Goodale, one of their Presidency, on July 29, 1849, occurs the following:—

> The above is sufficient to silence every one that would dare to teach the doctrine of polygamy and at the same time pretend to believe in the Book of Mormon. And I believe that there is not one of the different and conflicting parties into which the church is divided, that teach or believe the doctrine of polygamy, except that which has gone west under the guidance of Brigham Young; and yet they are accusing all of being apostates that cannot and will not follow their teaching in all things.—Olive Branch, vol. 2, p. 20.

WILLIAM BICKERTON.

The declaration of the company or organization under William Bickerton was no less emphatic upon this point. Here is their declaration found in their articles of faith published in a pamphlet issued by them called the Ensign, page 20:—

> We believe that a man shall have but one wife, and concubines he shall have none; for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women, and whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts. Again in the second chapter of Malachi, verse 15: "And did he not make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."

So far as we have learned, polygamy and spiritual wifery were confined for at least three years after the death of Joseph Smith unto such organizations as were controlled or influenced by members of the Quorum of Twelve. The logical inference therefore is that if there existed a common school where these theories were inculcated, that school must have been in the Quorum of the Twelve over which Brigham Young presided.

This inference too is made stronger when we consider a statement made by Brigham Young, on June 21, 1874, as reported in his organ, the Deseret News of July 1 of that year. While speaking on this doctrine he said:—

> While we were in England (in 1839 and 40), I think, the Lord manifested to me by vision and his Spirit things that I did not then understand I never opened my mouth to anyone concerning them, until I returned to Nauvoo; Joseph had never mentioned this; there had never been a thought of it in the church that I ever knew anything about at that time; but I had this for myself, and I kept it to myself.—The Messenger, vol. 1, p. 29.

It is only necessary to say in conclusion that when Elder Young in August, 1852, desired the church to approve of the revelation authorizing polygamy, he gave it a date nine years previous to its presentation, and connected Joseph Smith's name with it. He well knew that the name of Joseph Smith was revered and honored by the people, and anything presented in his name would be more likely to be approved than if coming in his own name.

It is also quite significant that the witnesses by which Joseph Smith's complicity with the doctrine is sought to be established, have in a large majority of instances been themselves implicated in the practice before testifying.

We have presented these historical truths with but little comment, leaving the readers to form their own conclusions. Our position, however, is, as often before stated; viz.: The paramount and vital question is not, "Who practiced polygamy, but it is this: Is it right?

We have hitherto answered in the negative, and the more we investigate the more are we confirmed in our verdict.

TITHING OR CONSECRATION, AND GATHERING.

Inasmuch as these topics are engaging the attention of many of the members of the church at present, as is shown by our publications, I have been induced thereby to examine the records anew, with the desire to learn if possible what the Lord desired of me in reference to these matters, for the purpose of bringing myself in harmony with his will; and thinking it may help some others in their investigation, I offer a few of the thoughts concerning these matters which I observed during the brief examination I have been able to give to these subjects.

I believe that the commandments and promises given to the church from 1830 until the present time concerning tithing, consecrations, and gathering, are recorded in the three sacred books of the church, and in the "Church History," and the decisions of councils, and the counsels of the elders, which are published in the Herald from time to time, from which I gather the following views of the subjects forming the title of this article.

From the editorial in Herald of December 1, 1875, I copy the following definition of the word "consecration":

> The act by which any sort of property, money or its value, is set apart for the uses of the church, is an act of consecration; the sum paid, or the property given, is "surplus," or "tithing," or "consecrations," or "freewill offerings," and either of these comes legitimately under the general head of "the tithing of my people," as saith the Lord.

The Lord informed the church in 1838 (D. C., sec. 106) that all the surplus property which a man owned was to be put into the hands of the Bishop, as a beginning of tithing, and after this consecration of the surplus, one tenth of the interest annually should be paid to the Bishop; and this is to be a standing law forever, concerning tithing; and by this law the land of Zion is to be sanctified.

When a person wishes to begin paying his tithing, he will take account of his property, and all the wealth which is in his possession more than is enough for his support is to be consecrated to the church, as a beginning of tithing; but if he finds that he has no property in his hands more than is necessary for his support, he has no surplus; but desiring to consecrate by sacrifice, and finding that the prophet of old consecrated one-tenth of all his possessions, and not wishing to have property untithed in his possession, and not finding any other law for a beginning of tithing, he, by sacrifice, makes a surplus of the one tenth of the value of his possessions, and after this consecration of his surplus by sacrifice, he pays one tenth of his interest annually.

After this he accumulates a surplus again. He then reads:—

> And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the Bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants.—D. C. 42: 10.

Then after that first consecration he makes a second one; and thereafter as often as he finds himself with a surplus he consecrates it to sacred uses in the church.

Thus those who have a large surplus and those who may be able to make a surplus by sacrifice are equal in temporal things, for each has only what is necessary for his support; although one may need a hundred thousand dollars to carry on his business, while a much smaller sum would suffice for another business, but both be needful.

Those who have no property, and those who have previously tithed themselves, and wish to consecrate by sacrifice, do so by freewill offerings. And the poor who are not able to care for themselves the Bishop will provide for with the funds placed in his hands by those who have consecrated of their properties for the support of the poor, that they may be amply supplied according to their wants when Zion is purchased, by these consecrations, then those who gather there will, after laying all things before the Bishop, receive an inheritance by consecration from the church to them, and are made stewards over their own property.

Thus all those who obey the law of tithing are equal in things temporal, for all reserve or receive only sufficient property for their own support. This is equality. And those who obey this law, by tithing and consecration of their surplus, are working for the common good of the whole body, and are not working for the purpose of accumulating wealth for themselves. This is coöperation. And everybody in the church,—the priests, teachers, members, elders, bishop and his counselors, and agents, those who administer in spiritual things, and in literary things, are to have their stewardships, "that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants." (D. C., 42:10, 19.) This is all things in common.

The instruction in the records concerning the finances of the church may therefore be properly placed under the heading of "surplus" and "one tenth" and "freewill offerings," which are consecrations by which Zion is to be redeemed by purchase, and is the law by which the land of Zion is to be sanctified (D. C., 106:2); and many of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants are instructions concerning the working details of this law, and need not be further referred to here.

So far as finance or property is concerned, this seems to be God's plan of "coöperation" and "equality," and of "all things in common," and to me is as far superior to the methods of men in these things, as is the sun at noontide to the fleeting will-o'-the-wisp of the dreary swamp.

The revelation in section 114 was in reference to tithing, commanding the Twelve and the Bishop to execute the law of tithing, and the Lord confirmed that revelation in the revelation of 1894 as was decided by the council appointed by said revelation, which states:—

> Resolved that paragraph 5 of the revelation of April 15, 1894, relating to the duty of the twelve under the authority of the revelation of 1861 (D. and C. sec. 114), teaches that said revelation is still in force.—D. C. 123:24.

The last counsel of the Lord to the church, therefore, is "the Twelve in connection with the Bishop are to execute the law of tithing."

In the agreement between the Twelve and the Bishopric, as effected in April, 1878, and referred to in section 122:5, and 123:24, we find the following as a definition of the word execute:—

> The word "execute," as used in the revelation of 1861, is, in our view, to be construed to mean to "carry into effect," to set in motion legitimate forces, to put existing laws into active operation.—Herald, February 21, 1894, p. 123.

Therefore, "to set in motion legitimate forces, to put existing laws into active operation," concerning tithing, is here made the duty of the TWELVE and the BISHOP; and as it is the last counsel of the Lord to us concerning this matter, it ought to be decisive with us.

I understand that the Bishop is always ready and willing to receive tithings by consecrations, of surplus of one tenth of annual interest, or of freewill offerings, whenever the saints are willing to thus consecrate of their properties to the Lord.

GATHERING.

A revelation was received in Kirtland as early as 1831, instructing the church concerning a gathering into the regions round about. It says:—

> It is necessary that ye should remain, for the present time, in your places of abode, as it shall be suitable to your circumstances; and inasmuch as ye have lands, ye shall impart to the eastern brethren; and inasmuch as ye have not lands, let them buy for the present time in those regions round about as seemeth them good, for it must needs be necessary that they have places to live for the present time.—D. C. 48:1.

And in 1833 they were commanded to continue to gather in the regions round about the land of Zion. (D. C. 98:9), and in paragraph 10, this section, they were informed that the way to establish Zion was to buy those lands (Jackson County and the counties round about), and gather together upon them. And they were told that there was then in store a sufficient to redeem Zion, but they would not hearken to the voice of the Lord. They would not obey. And in 1834 they were informed in Doctrine and Covenants 102:2, that they might have been redeemed then, but instead, they were rebuked for their transgressions, and informed that the time and opportunity for purchasing lands in Jackson County and adjoining counties, by the church, for the establishing of Zion had passed, and certain tokens were given, to let the church know when the church should again begin to buy lands in those counties, it is as follows:—

> But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ. . . . And let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption. . . . And inasmuch as they follow the counsel which they receive, they shall have power after many days to accomplish all things pertaining to Zion.—D. C. 102:9, 10.

Thus those who are to assist in the accomplishment of all things pertaining to Zion are those who obey counsel; and the commandments which God has given concerning Zion and her law, is to be executed and fulfilled after her redemption.

And this revelation so modified the former revelations concerning the gathering to Zion and the purchasing those lands, that the church is commanded, virtually, not to attempt it until those signs are fulfilled.

Lands which might have been purchased for hundreds of dollars then, would now require millions to purchase them: therefore, the wisdom and necessity indicated in that instruction to the church—to wait until the church becomes very great before attempting the redemption of Zion by purchase.

When those commandments to gather to Zion, and to purchase those lands were revoked, until the set time should arrive, there was left to them the instruction to gather into the regions round about; and so time passed without further change in these instructions to that church, which as a church was rejected.

The first revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants to the Reorganization concerning gathering was received in March, 1873, and says:—

> Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.—D. C. 117:11.

In this revelation there is no intimation given concerning gathering to Zion, for as the signs spoken of in section 102:9 were not yet fulfilled, there was no need for further instruction concerning that matter. And this revelation of section 117:11 places the Reorganization close to the position which was occupied by the church in 1844 upon this subject, and we are to follow the commandments to gather into the regions round about as they were commanded, until it shall be otherwise given to us from the Lord.

The next statement in the revelation of 1873 is, that in connection with these commandments, the "counsel of the elders" are to guide us in this matter of purchasing lands and of gathering into the regions round about, until the Lord gives us further instruction.

It may be proper to ask, Who are "the elders of the church" who are to counsel the church concerning gathering into the regions round about?

In the revelation of Doctrine and Covenants 122:6 we are informed who those elders were who should aid the Bishopric in the matter of purchasing lands, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people, and named the Presidency, the Twelve, the conferences, and the general assembly. And when houses of worship are to be built, the councils or other officers of the branches or stake where such houses are to be built, are also to assist in that council.

Therefore the Bishopric, the Presidency, and the Twelve are the council of elders who are to direct the church concerning purchasing lands and the gathering of the people into the regions round about; all the elders of the church may also assist, but it must be in conferences or in the general assembly.

In the Herald of May 15, 1875, beginning at page 295, we learn that the spirit of gathering was prevalent, and the elders in that conference concluded that it was time to begin the gathering into the regions round about, as they had been instructed concerning this matter. The following prevailed:—

> Be it resolved, that a standing committee of five be appointed by this conference, whose duty it shall be to select and make such location as is contemplated in the foregoing preamble, and arrange for and effect the purchase of lands, locate a town site, and perform such other acts as are consistent with the making of such locations, and consummating such purchases.—Page 299.

Those five persons were Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair of the Presidency, I. L. Rogers and David Dancer of the Bishopric, and J. H. Lake of the Twelve.

These men performed their duty according to the "counsel of the elders" in conference assembled, and purchased lands in the regions round about, and thus made a place of gathering and the centralizing of the chief authorities of the church and establishing the publishing house, and thus they fulfilled their part of that work; and after they had thus done, they advised the saints to gather cautiously, and carefully, and with all things prepared before them; and say also: "We advise all who may intend going into that region of country to settle, to consult with Bro. E. Banta, and if practicable, get his assistance to buy land." Bro. E. Banta was one of the Bishopric. (See Herald, October 15, 1875, page 625.)

This was in unison with the word of the Lord (afterwards received) that the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric were to purchase lands and arrange for the gathering into the regions round about.

In the revelation of 1894 the Lord ordered a council of the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric to tarry in Lamoni after conference, to counsel together and agree on the things of the law, and the general affairs of the church. They complied, and this is "the counsel of the elders" of the church concerning

LOCATING IN REGIONS ROUND ABOUT.

Resolved that all parties wishing to change their location be recommended to correspond with the Bishopric for information.

This is the same as the counsel given in 1875, and from all these instructions we learn that the elders who are to counsel the church concerning buying lands, and the gathering of the saints, are the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric. And the counsel of all other elders should be in close harmony with their counsel, or there will result confusion, distrust, and loss. And we should all remember that those officers are the only ones whom God has appointed to counsel the church in those matters, excepting in conferences and general assembly.

The last authoritative counsel of the elders of the church, which has been received by the church, was in 1894, and we have been plainly informed that "the counsel of the elders of my church," with the "commandments to gather into the regions round about," shall guide us in this matter "until it shall be otherwise given of me," saith the Lord. And as a church we will progress much faster in gathering, and in all righteousness, when we have learned the truth, that it is better to obey than to sacrifice.

PAPEETE, Dec. 20, 1899.

"WORD OF WISDOM."

In the Word of Wisdom "the order and will of God" is shown, and is "adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all Saints, who are or can be called Saints."

I have noticed that a spirit has directed some in their writings that contradicts the idea that the "order and will of God" is adapted to their capacities, and is manifest in such sayings, "Tobacco doth work evil and that only;" "It is wrong to raise, sell, or assist in any way in its use."

That tobacco and strong drink have and are working an untold amount of injury no well-informed person can successfully deny, and I hope no one who bears the name of Saint would have a desire to deny; but this should not lead us to say that tobacco works evil only, for in this "order and will of God" it is revealed that it is good for "bruises and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill." In this it is stated that it is "to be used," and how it is to be used, and for what it is to be used, and hence we should not be led to the extreme idea that it should not be raised or sold by any body; and yet we can say just as emphatically and effectually that it should not be used as it is generally used, without judgment, for chewing, smoking, or snuffing, for the same "order and will of God" says "tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but"—and here follows what God in his wisdom has revealed it is good for—"is an herb for bruises and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill."

Another extreme view is also expressed in reference to what is called "strong drinks" when it is said, "they are wholly evil, and should not be manufactured or sold," for God has revealed that they are for the washing of the body, but are not good for the belly. This is at least one of the things that going within a man defiles him, but to use it without the body does not. God has considered that the more effectual way to counteract the evils that would exist among men in the use of "strong drinks" and tobacco, would be and is to instruct them what they were not good for, and then tell them what they were good for, and I believe to go to the extreme views to which I have gone in the past, and to which others have gone, results in strife and contention, and will not result as we have desired, because not being willing to consent to the "order and will of God" in all things.

Another extreme view — ofttimes jestingly expressed, but sometimes seriously expressed — is that "hot drinks" includes water or anything of a fluid nature that is used for a drink at meal time that has been hot, or is warm when drank; but we see the reason that God has given for this Word of Wisdom being revealed is directly applicable here, which is: "In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days." Hot drinks that are used formed from manufactured articles sold for the making of "hot drinks" are included, no matter what their name might be, in the decision that they "are not for the body, or belly;" but certainly no one can consistently say that drinks made from grain, prepared by the good housewife would not come under the head of "strong drinks," or water boiled, and used while warm or when cold, would come under this decision of the heavenly Father.

I think it better to accord to everything its place and use as designated by the Lord, and believe by so doing our warfare against evil will be more effective, and we will be much less liable to cause the spirit of strife or contention to exist, which God says is not seemly in his sight.

Believing in God's wisdom as supreme, I am,

ECCE HOMO.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Jan. 29.

This is by no means a new book, but we have just given it a cursory reading, and many pages of it have proved interesting indeed.

The popular preacher who is in the habit of calling attention to certain points in his sermon and drawing up-to-date comparisons, generally excludes that which would reflect light on the peculiar doctrine of Latter Day Saints. He grows eloquent while portraying the overthrow of the Egyptians at the Red Sea, comparing it to the entrapping of the British by the Boers at Spion Kop; but when discoursing upon the life of Moses, skipping lightly over the idea of his lack in oratory and the supplying of Aaron as spokesman, fails to compare together the call of men to the priesthood in ancient and modern times, and thus bring a great truth to light. If anybody should be free to analyze and investigate all things pertaining to modern Christianity, it should be the ministry of this enlightened age, and none the less the humble laity. So then, we quote a few passages from Ecce Homo whose author declines to be announced on the title page.

First is heard the call of John the Baptist: "His restlessness had driven him into the desert where he had contended for years with thoughts he could not master, and from whence he had uttered his startling alarum to the nation, 'The kingdom of heaven is at hand!'"

Concerning membership in Christ's kingdom, the writer says the Jews had been wont to receive truth by proclamation from the prophets:—

"They watched the prophet to see if he were honest and if his proclamation shook their hearts and stirred their blood and seemed to bring them into the presence of the Invisible King; they then felt sure of its truth and safe in following it."

Speaking of Christ he says they naturally fell at his feet and considered his words oracles of truth.

The reason why the doctrine advocated by Joseph Smith is generally regarded as erroneous must be because it is and has been refuted mostly by the so-called gifted ones—the chief religionists of the day; for we find this statement relating to the men of the past.

"It would appear that where the processes of thought have never been analyzed and reduced to method, there is no means of discovering the error of a gifted man except through the emphatic contradiction of one who has won the reputation of being more gifted." "Many persons rest content with saying that they believe, and acting as if they did,—a melancholy end of Christianity indeed! Can there be such a disfranchised pauper class among the citizens of the New Jerusalem?" "Assuredly, those who represent Christ as presenting to men an abstruse theology, and saying to them peremptorily, 'Believe or be damned,' have the coarsest conception of the Savior of the world. He will reject, he tells us, those who refuse to clothe the naked, or tend the sick, those whose lamps have gone out, those who have buried their talents, not those whose minds are poorly furnished with theological knowledge."

We are quoting only a few of the many striking passages, and might think it almost surprising (only for good reasons) that we do not find amid its opulent truths some reference to our modern prophet as well as to the three worthies of a very early century, Seneca, Epictetus, and Aurelius. They were good men, teachers of profound philosophy; but Joseph Smith came out from the desert of ignorance and fanaticism clothed in the garment of humility, and gave, as one called of God, a proclamation to the world.

This great man's calling is not silently passed by because of his illiteracy or poverty, for Epictetus was but a poor deformed slave; but why does not the author open wider the vision of "Ecce Homo" and let in the full glory of his Father's plan? Fragments of it could be gathered all through the early centuries, even from the hermits in Egyptian deserts, like Paul and Antony, living in mountain caves and clothed in naught save tunics woven of palm leaves. Why not? Because now the gospel cannot be displayed but through the letting of the latter day glory into our souls!

But to return to our book. Its author says, "If we isolate Christ's teachings from his life, we may come to the conclusion that it contains little that could not be found elsewhere, and found accompanied with reason and explanation."

Philosophy hopes to cure the vices of human nature by working upon the head, and Christianity by "educating the heart." "Of these two influences—that of reason and that of living example—which would a wise reformer reënforce? Christ chose the last."

As an example of the magical passing of virtue out of the virtuous man into the hearts of those with whom he comes in contact, the author relates the instance, as recorded by John, of the woman brought before Christ by some of the leading religious men of Jerusalem when "the mighty power of living purity had done its work." "He had refused to judge a woman, but he had judged a whole crowd. He had awakened the slumbering conscience in many hardened hearts, given them a new delicacy, a new ideal, a new view and reading of the Mosaic law."

"Whenever Christ denounces any vice, it is with the words, 'Be not you like the actors.' It is only the actor who begins by frowning at it in others. But there are subtle forms of hypocrisy which Christ does not denounce, probably because they have sprung since out of the corruption of a subtler creed." This class, he says, patiently turn the left cheek, walk the two miles, bless those who curse, and pray for those who use them spitefully: the outward signs of love are not found wanting, and adds, "They were hoping to be paid for their performance out of the incorruptible treasures, and to impose by their dramatic talent upon their Father in heaven.'

This reminds us of the paradox uttered by Bro. Hilliard last Sunday, for he said there were Latter Day Saints who would willingly die for the Master's cause, who would not live for it.

The author says the position given to the outcast class was what we may call "citizenship without emancipation." He cites Paul writing to Philemon to receive back the slave Onesimus, no longer as a servant, but as a brother beloved.

The Holy Spirit he defines as a "a divine inspiration," but being no tardy student he cannot stop to analyze the Scriptures old and new in reference to the manner it was conferred, and for what purpose.

"Of what nature," he asks, "is the enthusiasm Christ requires?" "What is the passion if such a passion there be, which can lift a man clean out of all sin whatever?" "We may discover that a love for humanity as such exists, and that it is a natural passion which would be universal if special causes did not extinguish it in special cases; but like all other human passions it may be indefinitely increased and purified by training and by extraordinary agencies that may be brought to bear upon it.

Now this was the passion upon which Christ seized.

"It is natural to man to love his kind, and Christ commands us to give nature play.

"The most lost cynic will get a new heart by learning thoroughly to believe in the virtue of one man. Our estimate of human nature is in proportion to the best specimen of it we have witnessed." This to us is a lofty and noble sentiment and now we reach the climax in these glowing words:—

"If some human beings are abject and contemptible, if it be incredible to us that they can have any high dignity or destiny, do we regard them from so great a height as Christ? Are we likely to be more pained by their faults and deficiencies than he was? Is our standard higher than his?"

An eternal glory has been shed upon the human race by the love Christ bore to it. Christ believed it possible to bind men to their kind, but on one condition—that they were first bound fast to himself. "So vast a passion of love, a devotion so comprehensible, elevated, deliberate, and profound has not elsewhere been in any degree approached save by some of his imitators. They have said, 'I live no more, but Christ lives in me.'"

Concerning the Lord's Supper the author tells us that a union subsisting only in Christ is what it sacramentally expresses, and to humanity He says: "Cling to me; cling ever close to me."

Christ's law of philanthropy embraced first,—relieving the physical need; second, attending to the betterment of the neglected, outcast, and depraved; third, forgiving personal injuries.

He also tells us that devoted Christians think they must needs be most Christian when they cling to the New Testament Scriptures, and what they do not contain cannot be a part of Christianity, and concludes it to be "a great mistake arising from widespread paralysis of true Christian feeling in the modern church."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Here is another good passage about a Christian life:—

"He must be a soldier in the campaign against evil, and not merely pay the war tax. But then it is too much to expect that he should find work for himself. Spenser allegorizes ill when he represents his Red-Cross Knight as pricking forth alone in quest of adventures. At least this sort of soldiery is long out of date.

"A flourishing church requires a vast and complicated organization which should afford a place for every one who is ready to work in the service of humanity. The esprit de corps is strong among them."

The writer in speaking of the Pharisees, or "Legalists" as he calls them, says Christ saw that in the hands of these teachers were laid the life and salvation of the nation, and that they had not the enthusiasm of humanity which dwelt in himself. He observed their teachers. and he found they were mountebanks. "If a divine revelation be the first of blessings, then the imposture that counterfeits it must be by far the greatest of evils."

A very interesting chapter on the righteous anger of Christ follows, showing the difference in his feelings toward Roman authority and Jewish Pharisaism.

The principles of the gospel as believed and understood by us as a people have little place in Ecce Homo; but this volume, its author, J. R. Seeley, says is a comment on "the enthusiastic virtue" Christ came to introduce, and his biography he declares may be summed up in the words, "He went about doing good." So, with this explanation, the humble reader is well repaid for its perusal, and we think may safely place it upon the shelf with the other "good books."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

GRINNELL, Iowa, Feb. 7.

Editors Herald:—Leaving home shortly after holidays I stopped in Moline and organized a Sunday school, which bids fair to bring forth good results. The Rock Island branch now has two schools under its care, which is indicative of activity. Sr. Louise Suman, with an able corps of assistants, has charge of the Moline school.

From here we next go to Canton. Here we find some things to encourage and some to discourage. But let this be remembered: an upright life manifested by those who are "called to be saints" will never discourage. We, Bro. J. W. Adams and self, continued here for two and one half weeks, endeavoring to instruct the saints, and inviting them to heed the admonition, "Come up higher!" Had a fair attendance of non-members, part of the time. The Book of Mormon seemed to scare some of them. Query: Should the ministry keep that book in the background for fear it will scare somebody, or fearlessly present its claims? If it is "for the convincing of Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ," why don't we make more use of it? The world is energetic in denouncing it, and it occurs to me we should be equally zealous in keeping it before all we can.

We mention as some of the results of our labor at Canton, that a Religio has been organized, and several of the young people, and some of the older ones, are going to work in earnest, and study the books. A young sister, Sr. Harriet Grim, but recently baptized, was made president of Religio, and seems to be taking hold of the work in earnest. It is no trifling thing to be a true Latter Day Saint in this day of evil influences. May God bless the young saints and help them to be active and faithful.

From here we went to Kewanee to be with the saints a week before conference. There seems to be manifested here among the saints that spirit of indifference. While they have succeeded in erecting a very neat brick church here, we would be glad to see greater activity. A soldier who will sleep at his post is not considered faithful.

Our district conference and Sunday school convention were held here February 2-4. Peaceable sessions were held. Was called by phone to Canton to have charge of funeral services of Sr. Mary Johnson, who died on Friday night, very suddenly. An obedient child and a loving mother called home. Preached to the saints a couple of times, then coming home to assist in caring for the conference visitors. Expect soon to be in my field again. Ever for the truth,

F. A. RUSSELL.

DOW CITY, Iowa, Feb. 9.

Editors Herald:—We of the Galland's Grove district are still rejoicing because of the light, truth, and spiritual power accompanying the preaching of the gospel restored. "The gospel of Christ" is still the power of God unto salvation unto all who believe and obey its glorious precepts. There may be and evidently are many discouragements connected with our work, but there is little or no time for the true soldier of the cross to faint or rest discouraged by the wayside. The minister should be cheerful, happy, courageous, good, kind, and true, regardless of how others may feel or act in order that as a servant he may successfully accomplish the work assigned him by the blessed Master. The interest of the work demands it of him, and God will stand by to encourage, help, and bless each and every minister and member who will in humility make a consistent effort to discharge their every duty.

While it is perhaps true that we are not as fully developed as our Father would have us to be, there is much encouragement in the knowledge that we are steadily advancing, and our hope brightens and the prize seems nearer as we press forward with our hands grasped by the divine hand, as we feel the force and power of the Holy Spirit as it flows from the Holy One. Who is as happy as the true practical Christian? To none is life so grand as to those who walk with Jesus.

For them the clouds do flee away,
And heaven comes in view;
The saved are seen, in endless day,
With Jesus ever true.

While at Benan a short time ago the writer attended a very pleasant business session of the branch, at which, in harmony with the promptings of the Spirit, Bro. George Juergens was ordained to the office of teacher and Bro. Orman Salisbury to the office of deacon. May the Spirit greatly assist them in their work.

The few sisters at Lake City hold regular prayer services in connection with their society meetings, by which they are keeping themselves alive in the work and helping to bless others. The sisters of Auburn and vicinity are doing likewise and by their efforts have purchased an organ for their church.

Elder C. J. Hunt is at Sac City with Bro. C. Joseph Carlson, looking after the interests of the work at that point. Good news comes in from the northern part of the district, where Elder J. M. Baker and wife have been laboring in the interests of the church. They succeeded in organizing a Religio at Mallard and Coalville and assisted in Sunday school work at the same points. Their work is appreciated by both saints and friends. The elder did some excellent work as a minister of the gospel and district officer at Mallard, Ayrshire, Coalville, and near Cherokee.

The writer has been very busy with ministerial work and has been blessed in his efforts, but is at home resting, at this writing, because of throat trouble, which he hopes will soon pass away. The saints have much enjoyed Elder Charles Derry's labors in the district and will be glad to have him return whenever he can do so.

Local ministers and branch officers are, as a rule, doing well, and the branches are doing fairly well. The Sunday school work is in a good working condition in most of the branches, which is very encouraging.

So far as we know scattered saints are being visited and encouraged, and are doing real well, all things being considered.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

MANCHESTER, Eng., Jan 30.

Editors Herald:—Before this reaches your readers we expect to be speeding across the Atlantic in the beautiful steamer Campania, homeward bound. We expect to attend General Conference, and we leave a little early in order to escape the rough March gales.

I have just returned from a tour over a part of my field of labor, and in a few days will be ready to start on our long journey. We have arranged to leave Liverpool February 10. Bro. Newton, wife, and daughter, Bro. Tucker and family from Broadclyst, and perhaps one or two others, expect to accompany us; over a dozen in all.

I appreciated the favorable opportunity of visiting most of the Saints just previous to my departure. Complying with a request to attend the Sheffield district conference, I was enabled to attend the Manchester conference, which convened one week earlier, and was welcomed at the home of Bro. and Sr. Clark. This conference was not very largely attended nor was there much new business. The principal item was a resolution on missionary labor in this country (a favorite theme). This was discussed at length and material furnished for a comic picture, which we are tempted to give, but forbear, lest some should fail to see the joke and go to speculating on the "social economy" lines suggested. The result would certainly be disastrous. "Dynamite" would not be in it. The resolution was finally tabled. The long debate caused us a walk home in the pouring rain, the cars having stopped. Sunday meetings were well attended and the good Spirit was present; all felt well. The singing was excellent. Manchester is getting far ahead of some of the other districts in music.

Bidding the Saints at Manchester farewell, the next Saturday found us at Sheffield. Their conference was small. The work in this city, we regret to say, has for some time been going in the wrong direction; and it is quite apparent that it cannot go much farther the same way without going out entirely. This seems to be realized now, and a strong request is made for help in the form of missionary labor. Sheffield contains some excellent Saints. It will be too bad to see the work die after the long struggle of the few to maintain it; hence we hope that the needed help will be furnished. A very kind spirit was manifest. We shall not soon forget the kind words of sympathy and encouragement. We learn that one has given his name in for baptism since we left, one whom we believe will prove a good worker. May God draw in many others to sustain the work there, is our prayer.

While so close to Clay Cross we could hardly deny ourself the pleasure of spending one night at least with this little band of Saints. Though making little show in worldly things, and a meeting room of humble proportions, one would need to travel many a day to find a more generous and devoted little company of Saints. We met in their little room. The good Spirit met with us, and we enjoyed it. In saying good-bye we felt that we were indeed parting from friends. This branch expect to build a meeting house soon. If they can secure a lot, a building will doubtless go up next summer. And then, if they retain their present spirit of humility and diligence, they can hardly fail to prosper.

From Clay Cross we took train for Leeds; met with the good Saints of Burley, and was pleased to see the spirit of love and unity manifest. We did not see a sign of the old trouble that had disturbed the work here so long. The signs are cheering for better days for Leeds. The ordinance of blessing was administered to Bro. and Sr. J. W. Rushton's little daughter "Dorothy," a sweet little pet who arrived a few weeks since, to brighten their home. May it receive the Savior's blessing.

Our next visit was at Birmingham. Here we met our worthy brother, Thomas Taylor, and other Saints; a nice class of people, but would like to have seen more spiritual life manifest. Perhaps it was because our stay was so short. They still live in hopes of securing the hall during the week nights, when better opportunities will be furnished them. I understand they now have meetings on Sunday only.

While at Birmingham we received a kind invitation to visit Stafford, which we accepted, and felt well repaid. We met at the home of Bro. Dyche. After preaching and social greetings, those who could do so remained, and we had just a grand musical feast. We will not say when we retired, but we shall long remember our last visit to Stafford.

On our way to Wales to attend the conference of the western district we stopped over one night at Lydney and joined them in prayer service in their new chapel. The good Spirit was present to cheer and counsel, but the adversary is by no means asleep in Lydney, and the little band of workers there will need be very faithful in order to continue the work so nobly begun, and to make it a success. They realize the need of help, and are praying for it; yes, and are willing to sacrifice for it, too. May God bless this little flock.

Our next visit was to Cardiff. Here we met a large number of Saints in their neat little meeting room, as we supposed for prayer and testimony; but we learned afterward that the night had been changed, and the president, Bro. Gould, gave the missionary to understand that he had to "be subject to the powers that be" for once, and quietly submit. Then in a very neat speech the district president, Bro. A. N. Bishop, presented a beautiful Album to "Bro. and Sr. Pitt," and a like gift to Bro. and Sr. Newton, from the Cardiff and Lydney Saints. The Sunday school presented us with a handsome pocket book. Needless to say we spent a very pleasant evening, grateful to the Giver of all good for the kind friends to help us along life's journey. We rejoiced to know that the seed planted in Cardiff was bearing fruit, and that so far the efforts of the adversary to destroy the work had been in vain. May God keep this little band steadfast. Here we presented another little lamb to the Master for his blessing, a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Gould, a dear little cherub.

Last Saturday we reached Llanelly, Wales. At one time a large branch was located here, but now, partly through wrongdoing on the part of some, and many moving away, the branch has become almost disorganized. In fact, the entire district is in rather poor condition, but there are some faithful workers still left; and for their sake, as well as for the sake of many who have not yet come to a knowledge of the truth, we hope the work will yet revive. The conference was poorly attended, and not very much business done. We hope those in charge will come better prepared next time, so that full reports from all the branches may be furnished the General Church Recorder.

We arrived home yesterday; found Sr. Pitt better in health, and hard at work finishing up her work. She was very ill just before Christmas, a great disappointment, as she had a lot of goods made up to sell, and in consequence of illness all was left on her hands; but lately fortune has favored her far beyond expectations, and she has succeeded in disposing of most of her work, so that her ticket home is secured.

Though all has not been sunshine since we came to this land, yet under the darkest cloud we have seen God's loving hand; and while we regret not having accomplished more, we have tried to be faithful, and trust that some good has been done.

My address in America will be, No. 1472 North Halstead Street, Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A. We would like to have visited others, but trust if we never meet again here we shall meet in the better world.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

HARLAN, Iowa, Feb. 10.

Editors Herald:—On the 4th inst. we were summoned here from Los Angeles, California, because of the very dangerous illness of Mother, who has twice been stricken with paralysis; the last stroke occurring on the 28th of January; since which time she has lain in an unconscious condition, taking no nourishment save a very little in liquid form.

We arrived here on the 8th in a blinding snowstorm with the mercury close to the zero mark; quite a change indeed from the flowery climate of Southern California.

We left Bro. Griffiths and his corps of workers doing fine work in the Golden State. The policy inaugurated by Bro. Griffiths has resulted in much good and a better understanding of the law, and we feel sure his policy should be continued for the best interests of our work there.

In the seven months we were in Southern California we preached one hundred and ten sermons and baptized thirty-seven. We have not in all our ministerial experience found better openings or a greater desire to hear our message.

The Saints of California have been very kind to us, and we thus express our appreciation; and hope the efforts given and the benefits obtained may be equal to the kindness and loving considerations we have received at their hands.

Those to whom we made promises to call on our way East, will accept our excuse, we feel assured; and we are very sorry indeed the conditions were such as to preclude that which to us would have been a pleasant visit indeed.

Yours in bonds,

T. W. CHATBURN.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Jan. 12.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have pretty well recovered from the effects of whooping cough, and am once more out in the field, seeking to extend the interests of the cause we love. I visited Geelong district and had an enjoyable time there for a few weeks, among strangers who are quite interested in this latter-day work. In my visiting I loaned a number of Bro. I. M. Smith's pamphlet on the atonement, which were well received, and pronounced the best ever seen on that subject. So say I. Several are near the kingdom at this point, and I trust they will soon enter.

I rode one hundred and fifty miles on a bicycle to Strathbogie, and labored there for a month, encouraging the few scattered Saints, and seeking to influence others by the simple truth to come to the light; but found it difficult to get them together, except on Sundays. However, I baptized two ladies, who are worthy the name they now bear. I called at Geelong and baptized another lady; and from here I went to Queensferry and attended the district conference; and the few Saints who managed to attend were amply repaid, for the Spirit was richly bestowed upon all present, and the Saints received wise counsel and instruction from the Lord, which if strictly heeded will tend to lighten their burdens and greatly advance this latter-day work.

The work is not what it should be in Victoria, and we pray for more laborers to be sent to assist us to gather in the harvest. I came six hundred miles to Sydney to be present at their annual conference and assist as much as I could to get arrangements made for another year's campaign, and we had a most enjoyable time. A number of Saints have gathered in from the districts round about to participate in the Sunday school convention and other exercises incident to such gatherings.

All our missionary force was present, and acted their little part quite acceptably, if I am permitted to act as judge. And last, but not least, the social meetings, were such as never to be forgotten by many; for to sit as we did and all be taught of God, was heaven on earth, with "joy unspeakable and full of glory." Two were baptized, and several will follow next Sunday. In bonds,

PLANO, Ill., Feb. 12.

Editors Herald:—I left home January 22 to return to my mission field. I stopped at Columbus a few hours, visiting with Bro. David Green's family and Sr. Eichorn. There are about twelve scattered members in Columbus, most of whom seem desirous of having the work introduced in that place. The Brighamites are making considerable effort there, and our people there think that an effort should be made to counteract their influence.

The greatest drawback is that they are nearly all poor, and cannot do much financially. I have been thinking that it would be a good plan to solicit aid from the various branches throughout the State for the purpose of introducing the work in the State capital. What think you, ye Saints of the Ohio district? The Saints desired the writer to remain a few days, but as we had been away from our field for one month we felt it our duty to tarry no longer.

On the 23d I arrived at Wilmington and found Bro. Keck busily engaged in holding meetings from "house to house," with good interest and attendance. We continued the effort till the 5th inst., the interest still continuing; this interest the result of our effort with the tent last October. While there this last time the M. E. minister made an effort to counteract our work by circulating some anti-Mormon literature. This we examined before the people, and showed it up in its true light. We also called upon the minister and had quite a talk with him, which culminated in a request to use his church to set forth the differences between us and the Brighamites, and, of course, resulted in our being refused. However, without any request, the minister promised to circulate no more of such literature. The effort did not hurt our cause, but rather did it good. On the other hand the minister lost friends.

The conference of this district has just closed; good attendance, and business lively; preaching by J. C. Crabb, J. M. Terry, F. M. Cooper, and the writer. Ministry now dispersing.

Hoping for the adjustment and final successful regulation of all the affairs of the work, I am, In the faith,

H. E. MOLER.

BEVIER, Mo., Feb. 9.

Editors Herald:—While the gathering is still agitated, the scattering continues. On account of the long strike last summer, and the slack work this winter, the Saints are departing for the east, west, north, and south. Nine members are leaving here for Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Will Bro. W. H. Kelley please take notice to the following address: Dan'l Edmunds, No. 340 Main Street, Cooperdale, Johnstown, Pennsylvania; Twenty-first ward.

May the losses of this district be the planting of the ensign elsewhere for eternal good.

Has been stormy and cold for a few days. Sunday school convention is now in session here, to be followed by district conference.

On duty,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

NEW PORTO, N. S., Feb. 7.

Editors Herald:—While the weather is remarkably changeable this winter, matters relating to our peculiar work remain with almost too much of a fixedness. The firm unchangeableness of the good old gospel we rejoice in, of course; but the rigid, crystallized, adamantine, diamond-edged pose or attitude of sectarian opposition to the latter-day angel's message of light is to be deplored in the "province by the sea."

Not long since I was the recipient of a little courtesy from one of the popular clergy; so not to be outdone in magnanimity I wrote him a kindly note of thanks, inclosing an "epitome" with the current copy of the Herald. In a few days I received a note in reply stating that he did not want me to think him in any way courteous to the "Mormon faith;" and said that he would rely upon my honor that wherever I mentioned the circumstance I would be sure and state that he acted under false pretenses, as he thought I was an Adventist. I should have taken pleasure in referring to the matter to the honor of a grand, broad-souled brother in Adam, but as he has denied me that pleasure, I must submit gracefully and continue my search for that kind elsewhere. It is fortunate, however, that our cause has something more substantial to rest upon than the smile of our popular contemporaries, this being a sample. After all, I presume it is just as well, for "smiles" sometimes have a tendency to prevent us from doing our duty in a thorough proclamation of the gospel.

We regret also that even in the church there is a little of this changelessness in some instances, while in others there is encouragement in the progress made.

What we have not got or attained to, we can hope for all right.

One of the pleasing features in our experience this winter was a "religious" concert in South Rawdon, which was a decided success, considering the number; a gratifying proof of what hopeful perseverence can do.

Still endeavoring to keep the "campfires" burning, we look forward to the time when war shall cease and "all His works shall praise him." H. J. DAVISON.

LEICESTER, England, Jan. 22.

Editors Herald:—The pages of the Herald are read with deep interest, as they come each week laden with that which is most precious to the children of God. It many times cheers the drooping spirit, and makes one feel thankful he is in this great latter-day work, which we all so much love.

I have had quite a number of years experience in this work, and I know it is of God. I want to be faithful to it, in keeping the commands of God.

I am looking for the time of the gathering to come, when we can be separated from the evil in the world, but I am satisfied of this: if I want a place in Zion, I must keep the full law of God, the temporal law as well as the spiritual.

We are a small band of Saints here, trying to let our lights shine. We have been much encouraged by the missionaries that have come amongst us, from Bro. Gillen to our worthy Bro. Pitt. We look upon them as men of God. They will always be received in our branch here, as long as I have charge. It seems to me that a number are needed in this country, and as all seem backward at taking up those duties here, the church must act as it deems best.

Yours in bonds,

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio, Feb. 8.

Editors Herald:—I wish to say through the Herald, that I have just finished reading Bro. A. Haws' book relative to the Sabbath question, and pronounce it a grand work. His points are clear, and the beauty of the work is, his arguments are brief but very conclusive. This work ought to be in the hands of every one who expects to meet the Sabbath question, or even desires to be informed in regard to the same.

I came here a week ago, and found things not in as good condition spiritually as I would like. Quite a number are asleep spiritually, while some few are striving to advance the interests of the work. There is great need of an elder here. They were told last Sunday if faithful, prayerful, and diligent, there would be an elder from among them called and ordained.

Although I am president of this district I have not visited this branch for about twelve months, and the Highland branch (to which place I go from here) I have not visited for twenty months. It is hardly doing justice to the branches, but what will be done? I am almost alone, and while I have been trying to open up the work in new places the branches have suffered more or less; but I still have hope that at the next appointing of the ministry they will graciously remember the Ohio district. We need two or three young, active men who are willing to push out into new fields. Shall we have them?

There is considerable agitation concerning gathering and consecration, but I think it will do all good to read the article in Herald relative to the same by G. T. Griffiths and put the thoughts suggested into practice. My prayer is that we may strive daily to purify ourselves that we may be prepared for whatever the Lord may have for us to do, when he shall direct how to do it. I am still in the race, and have hope of continuing to the end.

JAMES MOLER.

VICTORIA, Australia.

Bishop E. L. Kelley:—You will find inclosed my annual report for the year ending December 31, 1899. I am pleased to report to you that the church is in a better financial condition all around than last year; although Victoria can only keep her head above water at present. The treasury could only furnish Sr. Butterworth with a little less than fifteen shillings per week, which is only half the amount some others receive in the church, with no larger family; but we have managed all right and are willing to sacrifice all we can for the cause.

You will see by my report that I have not drawn on the Bishop's agent, and $3.12 in my report is for tracts to distribute among the people. The New South Wales treasury is in better condition; but we are paying Bro. Wells two hundred dollars to help him on his way home, which brings it pretty low again.

I am pleased to inform you that several prophecies were given at our late conferences in Victoria and New South Wales that the hastening time has come upon us, and the Lord will do great works in gathering in the people, if the Saints are faithful, and stand in their own place.

Why Bro. Wells is leaving for America, I am at a loss to know. We need laborers greatly at present, and they should be coming here instead of going away.

I wish you would urge the sending of some young active brethren who are anxious for the field, and who can pay their own fare to Australia. They can get experience here worth coming after, and would receive a hearty welcome.

We also need a good experienced overseer to take charge of this mission. Of course I do the best I can, but am willing to give way at once for a better.

Bro. Gomer has arranged to sail from Sydney, February 6, I think, and can communicate to you all about the mission. Ever praying for the progress and triumph of the cause we love, I will close, wishing you all a joyous time at the coming conference.

Yours in Christ,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

P. S.—It will be twelve years next April since I was sent to this land. Don't you think it's nearly my turn to go to conference?

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Feb. 12.

Twenty-two of the Utah elders have been here on a visit. The meeting on Tuesday night, which was conducted by Elder Kelsch, was opened by the singing of,

"O Zion, dear Zion, home of the free;"

"Israel, Israel, God is calling;"

Prayer following.

The speaker felt the weight of a great responsibility. He panegyrized "knowledge" freely. It always accompanied faith and works. It was a knowledge, not mere belief, that he had concerning the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith. It was a knowledge of "this work" which would be given to us all through a prayerful reading of the books. It was a knowledge that he had that Brigham Young, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, and others mentioned were true prophets of God; and a knowledge of there being more revelations locked up in Utah church archives; (one relating to the plan of the temple to be built, and which have never been printed as yet) was a certainty with him.

Bro. Robert Parker, who discoursed on Wednesday evening, had good liberty; and started out with the statement that as to testifying of the gifts of the gospel, the Saints here are accustomed to be thus exercised, and to enjoy the gifts and blessings, healings, prophecy, etc., to a marked degree. He stated this, referring to the length of time Elder Kelsch occupied in like testimony in his opening remarks the night previous. Not a point touched upon by that elder was uncommented upon by Bro. Robert; even the rising to their feet of the twenty-two Utah elders occupying front seats who testified that "they knew Brigham Young was a true prophet of God."

The allusion made to the doctrines of blood atonement and Adam-God was also well noted. The gentleman on that occasion stated that time would not permit him to dwell upon the subjects, although he "would have dearly loved to talk at full length upon those beautiful doctrines." Bro. Parker's effort gave entire satisfaction to the brethren, and he evidently enjoyed the help of the Spirit.

On Thursday evening "the elders" again met, maintained their wonted mental equilibrium, and, as it was their last evening to speak, they greeted us with the song,

"O Babylon, O Babylon, we bid you farewell!"

Elder Hansen announced that, as had been said, Brigham Young was the greatest man living of his time, and he then took up the thread of Bro. Parker's discourse the evening previous, corrected several alleged misrepresentations of passages quoted from the Doctrine and Covenants, told of the many pressing invitations extended to his people to settle in different places, reminded the Saints of the Reorganization of not living up to the law of consecration, seeing they "talked so much about the gathering in the region round about," and finally somewhat surprised the audience by declaring that no questions would be answered, "only in a systematic manner." He referred to the questions of the evening before. We could, however, receive entire satisfaction in that regard, he said, by calling at his office in Kansas City or by securing their services in future discourses.

The best one of the series was the lecture of Bro. Parker on Friday evening. At first he showed the difference between our people and theirs as to entertaining the elders and furnishing opportunities for preaching. There was a vein of humor discernible throughout, while he adhered closely to his text, which was a full reply to the statements made the evening previous, with much pertinent information in addition. He spoke of the "lovableness of Brigham Young," and facetiously remarked that it was "no wonder his nineteen wives loved him so well!" He also said if the Utah folks ever wished to find grace and favor here in Zion "they must not try to introduce to us their polygamous doctrine, accompanied by Sally Jones and Susan Stevens." Elder Hansen had stated that the martyred prophet was a highly educated man, being well versed in many languages. Bro. Robert could not indorse the statement, but he would admit that he had made wonderful progress in learning, and God had freely helped him.

Concerning the law governing the church, much was read from the Doctrine and Covenants, to which all paid close attention; and the large number of young people at the meetings attested the good interest taken by them in matters of so great importance. The definition of words commonly spoken of but not as generally understood, for instance, "oracles," was given by the speaker, and the "enemy combined" in secret chambers was plainly pointed out.

While speaking of the progenitors and the sons of the Martyr the speaker paid a tribute of respect to him who sits at the head of the Reorganization, a tribute which, could it have been heard by them, would have no doubt met with a hearty response from every true Latter Day Saint in the church. His ordination, blessing, and life to the present time, as President of the Church, were in a few timely remarks discussed.

But the time for dismissal had arrived, and although a few scathing words had been spoken on both sides throughout the meetings, there seemed to be good order and excellent interest shown. As is said concerning the lovers of books, some among us may have been exercised to contradict and confute, some to believe and take for granted, while others, not so wise, perhaps, to weigh and consider. After a little time given to weighing and considering is brought to mind a verse in yesterday's lesson which contains the words of the Savior to the Jews who accused him of having a devil: "Judge not according to your traditions, but judge righteous judgment." After all parties had been heard this would no doubt have been an appropriate exhortation to the young Utah elders; but it seems almost impossible to discuss the "rejection," "apostasy," and the perverted and added doctrines and covenants without some degree of acerbity, sarcasm, and many contentious questionings.

One of the kings of ancient America once exclaimed, "How blind and impenetrable are the understandings of the children of men; for they will not seek wisdom, neither do they desire that she should rule over them. Yea, they are as a wild flock, which fleeth from the shepherd, and scattereth and are driven and are devoured by the beasts of the forest;" and one of the saints of the second century tells us, "I saw all the snares of the enemy spread over the whole earth, and I sighed and said 'Who can pass through these?' And a voice came to me saying, 'Humility alone can pass through, where the proud can in nowise go.'"

The minister who preached on Sunday morning, in the course of a very eloquent address, remarked, that although he had "always desired to present a character pure and deserving of emulation, it was only by many tears and fervent praying that he was enabled to avert the unholy word and overcome the pressure brought upon him to bring evil unto the church." Through experience he had learned to pity and to have charity for those who through weakness had caused such an offense. In the hour of trial the demons who followed and tempted the Saints of all ages had been "after him," and like them he had been made to see "there is more of mystery in the dealings of God than he had ever thought could be."

To use the closing words of his sermon, "May we be careful in our observation of all things that are presented to us: May the good have free course in us and His name be glorified." ABBIE A. HORTON.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, Feb. 16.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Mark Jensen and I have just closed a series of meetings at Climbing Hill, Woodbury County. Interest was excellent throughout, while the speakers were blessed of the Lord with splendid liberty. Three were baptized, all adults and people who, I believe, will be an honor to the church. Several more are nearly ready for baptism, at that place, and I shall not be surprised if there is a branch organized there in the future.

I find that Northern Iowa is an excellent field for labor, and that there is room for a half dozen energetic workers to spend all their time.

We went from Climbing Hill to College Corner, about six miles northwest of Smithland, where we began a series of meetings, but finding that the schools and all public meetings were being closed on account of smallpox, at Mapleton and vicinity, we closed our meetings, and returned home. We found Bro. George Montague quite ill, the effect of overtaxing himself in preaching while suffering from a severe cold in the throat and chest. After administration he began to improve, and is now much better, though still confined to the house. There is a great deal of sickness, and since my return I have been called many times to administer. All meetings have been closed here also, on account of the smallpox scare. Two deaths are reported from Mapleton, and several new cases.

We will begin a series of meetings eight miles west of here, on Monday evening, unless prevented by sickness.

Ever praying for Zion's welfare I am,
Your brother in Christ,

EDITED BY FRANCES.

If, invisible ourselves, we could follow a single human being through a single day of his life, and know all his secret thoughts, and hopes, and anxieties, his prayers and tears and good resolves, his passionate delights and struggles against temptation, we should have poetry enough to fill a volume.—Longfellow.

RESTING UNDER A CLOUD.

"Under a cloud." Ah! yes. But are we resting? Ah! no. We have not felt willing to be under the cloud at all, so of course have not rested; but have fretted and worried as time passed, and it did not disappear. Especially as we could not see, search as we might, wherein we had failed to do all that any mortal could, under the same circumstances.

With tears, with fastings, with prayers have we besought the Lord that we might pass from under the cloud,—but it still remains; and others, viewing us through its dark haze, see us as we are not.

We feel, from the depths of our inmost heart, that we are blameless before our God, in that we have done the best we could; so now we say, "Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done." And are trying to "rest" under the cloud.

Ah, well! So it was with our Master. As memory brings before us the book of our life's experiences, which day by day is being written, we see, ah! so plainly, that the nearer we strive to make our character like unto his, the nearer is our life's experience like unto his. To strive, to suffer, and to fail in the eyes of the world, and also in the eyes of some of the household of faith.

Such is the ordeal which is to fit us—to make us prepared—for the future life. And now bursts on the vision of the mind the picture of a life so grand, so noble, so high above what even our senses can now conceive, filling the soul with a sense of exquisite harmony and an onward, upward sweep of surging aspiration such as one, in a faint degree, feels when listening to a grand anthem—one of the masterpieces of genius.

And with this benediction of that within us which is of the Divine, we turn our faces Calvaryward and repeat, "Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done." APRIL.

WHO IS MASTER?

He was a moody, quick-tempered young man. He resented authority, and was always talking about the time when he should be independent. At last he reached his twenty-first birthday, that period when the law recognized him as no longer a child. With eagerness he had for years looked forward to this day of freedom from constraint and authority. No one could be more excited or pleased than he. While he was congratulating himself, he met a friend that morning.

"At last," he said, "I am my own master. No one can order me about now. I shall do as I please."

"I do congratulate you," said his friend; "but are you sure you are not making a mistake in your acceptance of the word 'master'?"

"A mistake?" repeated the young man in surprise. "There can be no mistake about it. I am of age to-day, and I am absolutely my own master."

Then, said Richard Miller, who tells the story from his own experience, the young man's friend blandly suggested: "In that case you will certainly never lose control of your temper."

The young man's color rose as he heard this interpretation of independence. His outbursts of temper were well known. "I don't know that I have thought of it in that light," he replied.

"Then, there is the matter of cigarettes," continued his pitiless friend. "You told me the other day that you did not see how you could give them up; but now that you are absolutely master, I suppose you will smoke them no more."

The young man made no response.

"As one who is absolutely master of himself," continued his friend, "is never led by outside temptations to do anything of which he disapproves, I suppose you will give up the somewhat questionable company you have been keeping, which has proved a source of anxiety to your father and mother?"

The young man did not reply. He was surprised and stirred by this view of the kind of master that should govern his conduct. Fortunately he had a conscience, and it was touched.

After a few moments of silence he looked up and said, "I thank you for your frankness. I see I have been an awful fool. I shall not say anything more about being my own master until I am reasonably sure that I am better able than I am to-day to restrain and overcome the defects of my own nature. I have taken altogether too narrow a view of the responsibilities involved in being one's own 'master.'"—Sel.

THE SUNDAYS OF MY CHILDHOOD.

With great pleasure we children always looked forward to the coming of Sunday, for on that day we had our dear mother home with us all day long. Death deprived us of a father's love and care while we were all very young, and while we had a comfortable home to shelter us, yet our mother had to toil daily for our support, early and late, week in and week out. She worked at the woolen factory, running the largest loom the factory contained; but when Sunday came, then we had her home with us. So for that reason more than any other, we looked forward

longingly to the day. We were early taught that Sunday was a day of rest, and that God had set apart one day out of seven that we should keep holy and sacred to his name. We never did any work on Sunday that was not really necessary, and we never brought out our playthings, or run or played on that day as we did week days. Every toy was put away on Saturday evening, there to remain untouched until Monday morning. Still we never thought of Sunday as being long or tiresome.

First on Sunday morning we went to Sunday school. This we never thought of missing, unless sickness or very bad weather interfered, and in case of sickness only the sick one remained home, for all were anxious for the Sunday school paper and a nice book from the library.

We nearly always stayed for church, for mother would come to church, and while she never said we must stay, yet we knew she was glad if we did; and as we always liked to do the things that pleased her, we stayed. Then after dinner was over, she would read aloud to us from our paper and book; and when tired of reading, how we loved to all gather around her and sing. In those days we had no "Gospel Hymns," or any of the many nice song books of the present day, but depended on the old Methodist Hymn Book for our songs, as our people were all Methodists, and mother's favorite hymn was "Coronation." I can scarcely remember a time when I was not familiar with that hymn, and our baby brother would carry the tune all right when he could not speak a word of it plainly. Then when evening came, if the weather was fine, we would go for a little walk, but never thought of running or jumping or making any noise like on a week day, for we remembered that Sunday was God's holy day, and we must not do anything that would be displeasing to him, or that we would be sorry to remember. And just as Sunday always seemed so different from other days to me in my childhood, so it does now in later years, and I suppose it always will; for it seems to me when the weather is fair that the sun shines brighter, and the birds sing sweeter and in a softer tone, and all nature looks more solemn and peaceful, and even if the day is cloudy and dreary, there is still a hallowed feeling that separates and sanctifies it from all other days for me, and I am thankful for the kind and loving mother who taught me to "always remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy."

Sr. Emma Sutherland of Bandera, asks the prayers of the Prayer Union, if it is the Lord's will she may be healed of white swelling, as she is almost helpless; that she might be able to do good and go about among her children. BENEFIT OF A LIBRARY AND HOW TO CONDUCT ONE.

I think the next best thing to good friends is good books. No thoughtful person will question this. It seems needless to try to tell the advantages of having plenty of good literature within one's reach, since almost everyone here fully realizes what the benefits are. But many, very many, are deprived of these benefits. With the wealth of good literature that is in the world, no one need have his desire for good reading unsatisfied. One difficulty is, a large number have no such desire. They do not care for reading, or perhaps they like to read the gossip in the late paper, to see who got married, or who entertained, and how the ladies were attired, and who won the first prize. Then there are a great many who would rather read the latest novel by Haggard, or some book of a similar character, but for the really great works of both ancient and modern writers they care nothing. It is among these and the children in such homes that we need to work. We must try to arouse, or if necessary create a love for something better. Where there really exists the taste for good reading, there will usually be found a way of gratifying it. If we can do something to aid such a child in obtaining the proper kind of literature, it is a good work, and one that will do much to help him in his struggle for the mastery over evil. But it is not for these I plead, but for the other class. It is they that we most need to help, by placing the best literature within their reach, placing it where they can have the benefit of it without money.

Is it necessary to refer to the many, the whole course of whose lives has been changed for the better by the books they have read? The sad picture of those who have been led the downward road because of the ruinous literature on which they have fed their minds is too familiar to us all to need repetition. If we recognize the great law of social influence, we must recognize the power of this silent force that is working for either good or evil all around us; a force that is none the less potent for its being exercised through the medium of the printed page.

We are all, to a greater or less extent, hero worshipers, and our heroes do much toward molding our destiny. If our heroes are pure and noble, our lives will be purer and nobler for having known them. If the reverse, of course the results will be the opposite. So it is of the greatest importance that the heroes of the children should be the best men and women, and not a desperado, or the leading character of a dime novel. The child that loves good reading is not likely to go very far astray. If he does take a wrong step, there will be a strong influence drawing him back into the path of rectitude. His evenings, as he grows older, are likely to be spent at home in the company of some good book, while if he had never learned the enjoyment of such association, he would perhaps be in the company of gay companions who would lead him from the path of honor and virtue. Let the taste for good literature be acquired, and there is little or no desire for the vicious.

It is to urge the necessity of giving the children of our Sunday schools this privilege—the privilege of talking with the great and the wise of all ages, that this paper is written. We are so often told "we are known by the company we keep." This is just as true of the books we read as of the people with whom we associate. Let us see to it that every child in our schools is given the opportunity of keeping the company of the best books, and that he is shown the advantages derived from them. It is said that every lesson a child prepares affects his whole after life. Is this not equally true of every book that he reads? Can we then overestimate the importance of this great factor in the school of life? When we realize that what he reads to-night affects the reader with its ever-widening circles, leaving its impress on the lives of all those he comes in contact with, is it not of the most importance on our part to do all in our power to provide him with the best literature the world affords?

Let us then put a library of carefully selected books in our Sunday school. As the church is coming to a better system in its various departments, I can more readily see the necessity of the same in our reading, in order to keep pace with its onward movements. Books are our universities, where souls are the students. Books are the looms that weave rapidly man's inner garments. Books are the levelers—not by lowering the great, but by lifting up the small. Thank God for books, cheering our solitude, soothing our sickness, refining our passions, out of defeat leading us on to victory. That youth can scarcely fail of character, happiness, and success, who day by day goes to school to sages and seers; who by night hears Dante and Milton discourse upon Paradise. "No child can be called fatherless who has God and his mother." No youth can be called friendless who has God and the companionship of good books.

Of what shall our library consist? First, the publications of the church—every one. Outside of these there is a very wide field from which to choose. Some histories, biographies, books of travel, works on science, poetical works, the writings of some of the greatest theologians of the world, some books that are not beyond the comprehension of the child. Let there be found such works as "Uncle Tom's Cabin;" "In His Steps, or What Would Jesus Do;" "The Life of Jesus," etc.

Let us teach the children to use the library by visiting it freely ourselves. Get a few books to start with, and add to the number as rapidly as we can. In "conducting a library," we should select some one who has read a great deal and knows how to select books suitable for children to read, and then the one conducting it should know how to keep track of them.

THOSE PRIMARY CARDS AGAIN.

Everybody please take notice. The business manager of the Herald Office informs me that there are many letters of inquiry and some sharp criticisms upon him for not filling all the orders for cards that have been received. In fact they are so numerous that it would be well nigh impossible for him to write and explain it to all. We wish to make here an explanation that will remove all blame from the Herald Office management, for no fault is theirs. They have done exactly as they were instructed.

1. The card illustrations were put out as an experiment. And it was not expected that we would reach every one that might choose to try them.

2. We took the mailing lists of the Primary Quarterly and sent out about double the number of cards as quarterlies. Some others were sent upon request, but the supply being limited we could not supply all. Many seemed to think that all that was necessary was to send in a very large order and "be sure to have enough." Some ordered who did not take the Primary Quarterly and wanted a copy or two of the quarterly "throwed in." We would gladly have complied with their requests had it been possible. But, as stated above, the cards were issued as an experiment, and to try the experiment sufficiently extensive to make it of any value we decided that it would be necessary to send them out free. They are very expensive. We therefore concluded to have but a part of the lessons of the quarter illustrated. And if you have a few sets of the lessons illustrated you have enough to give the system of illustrating the lessons a practical test. Give it a careful test and when General Convention comes, be ready to express your views as to whether or not the system of illustration is a practical one, and, too, whether or not you can afford to pay for them as they cannot again be sent out free. There is no better way to test any method than by actual experience with it. This you soon will have had. Let us study carefully and see if it is wise to continue the illustrated cards for the primary grades.

We hope that this explanation of the matter may remove all thought of complaint that may have pervaded the minds of any. And, too, that all who have written the Herald Office for explanation will consider this as in answer to their inquiries.

Ever hopeful for the success of the work, we are Your brother and colaborer,

T. A. HOUGAS, Gen. Supt.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

EXPERIMENTAL KNOWLEDGE OF GOD'S EXISTENCE.

Professor Royce, of Harvard, has said that in physical science it is "useless to try to do without assumptions, and equally useless to undertake the demonstration of these assumptions by experience alone;" and that "unless you make these assumptions, the spirit of science is not in you." Similarly, says Emma Marie Caillard (in The Contemporary Review, December), "developed religion has its assumptions, and unless we can make them, the spirit of religion is not in us." She continues:—

"The great special postulates of science are for the satisfaction of the intellect. The great special postulates of religion (and we shall refer to both sets more particularly before long) are for the satisfaction of what Scripture call the 'heart;' and it is mere cant, and very mischievous cant, to say that either heart or intellect has more right to satisfaction than the other. Both equally enter into the constitution of man, and their rights are equal. That being so, we should perhaps expect to find what, in fact, we do find—that their special postulates have a fundamental trait in common. Both alike imply the existence of external reality. To any reader even slightly versed in philosophy it would be superfluous to insist on the fact that external reality is not a direct datum of consciousness. It is a commonplace that we can only directly experience our own subjective states. These lead us to infer something outside ourselves to which they are due; and they may be broadly divided into two classes. (1) Those which are sense-impressions and which lead to the universal yet individual belief in an external sensuous world; (2) those which Lotze calls 'emotions of the mind, attitudes of longing, of devotion, or enthusiasm,' which lead to an equally universal and individual belief in an external supersensuous world. Since these beliefs are due to the 'combining and comparing power of reason' working on impressions in the one case physical, in the other metaphysical, it is obvious that in both cases the kind of world believed in must, in its details, largely depend on culture, age, environment, and personal capacity. Certain broad features are, of course, unalterable. Thus the sensuous world is conceived by all men as subject to the limitations of space and time, the supersensuous world as independent of such limitations."

This fundamental postulate of religion the writer calls the primary "venture of faith." "It is a venture, because, though the postulate of a supreme and eternal righteousness may well be capable of verification, it is exceedingly doubtful whether by us as we are, under our actual conditions, with our present limitations, the method of such verification is discoverable." She continues:—

"The postulate of supreme and eternal righteousness excludes the conception of an entirely impersonal universe where the only relations are between things, and can be expressed in terms of so-called natural laws. Such a universe has no place for righteousness, supreme or subordinate. It is neither moral nor immoral, but non-moral, just as is inorganic nature, considered simply as such, and not in connection either with sentient or self-conscious beings. These latter are indispensable in a moral universe, and if it is to be indeed a cosmos, and not a chaos where each individual asserts his own independent ideal, then there is needed a moral standard, one by which all other standards are to be tested, and all moral judgments themselves appraised. Such a standard must be personal, or it is no criterion for personal beings; and supreme, or it is of no value to them. To postulate that infinite goodness is at the heart of things is, therefore, to postulate a supreme moral personality. In other words, it is to postulate God. . . .

"Put in other words, the suggestion is that those who are uncertain what mental attitude to take up toward this supreme question, and who yet feel that it is supreme, should adopt the divine personality as a working hypothesis, and put it to the crucial test of experiment.

"A fair-minded survey of history is the best justification of the attempt here suggested. However we may account for the fact, there is no doubt that character, more than intellect, more even than genius, has been the controlling force in the checkered career of our race. To recognize this, however, is to recognize the ascendency of the moral over all other characteristics of mankind, and such an ascendency is hardly compatible with a non-moral constitution of the universe unless we regard man as an abnormal and unimportant excrescence on the cosmic order, toward the understanding of which a study of human nature can give no help. A moral constitution implies, however, as we have seen, a supreme moral personality."

The hypothesis of the divine Personality, says the writer, is to be verified by the test of personal, subjective communion—which is the second great venture of faith. It is to be through a revelation of "the divine spirit to our spirit, of whose reality and significance we cannot stand in doubt." Individual certitude "can only be attained by direct individual experiment, made in purity of purpose and singleness of heart."—The Literary Digest, February 24.

RELIGIOUS TENDENCIES IN JAPAN.

Dr. Michel Revon, late professor in the Imperial University in Japan, who for seven years has carefully observed the religious movements in the island empire, says that no one can be in doubt as to the changes which the modern scientific spirit is making in the old religious beliefs of that people; the tendency of the modern Japanese mind is toward agnosticism. In The Independent (December 28) he says:—

"An interesting effort is now being made by some of the more thoughtful to adapt Herbert Spencer's philosophy to the religion of Buddha—and the two coalesce surprisingly well, for Buddhism is at bottom only the doctrine of evolution in mystic form, plus a certain amount of superstition, and this extra element of superstition is rapidly disappearing, so far as the educated classes are concerned.

"This interpretation of Buddhism by modern science seems likely to increase somewhat the hold on Japan that the Buddhist priests first gained by explaining that the Shinto gods were reincarnations of Buddha.

"The new scientific spirit is entering even into Shintoism, the original religion of Japan, and the faith to-day of the Emperor and of perhaps a majority of the most enlightened Japanese who are not already pronounced atheists. The strength of Shintoism to-day is indicated by the fact that only a few years ago it made a determined contest with Buddhism for designation as the state religion of Japan. Neither succeeded, however, and it has been decreed recently that no religion whatever shall be taught in the public schools.

"It is a fact that the word 'Buddhism' no longer has a definite significance in Japan. Many who through life are Shintoists ask when dying for Buddhist burial — sometimes for no other reason than because it is more gorgeous than the Shinto ceremonial. Many others are Buddhists only in name, and atheists in fact. From that stage there is every gradation back to the complete and literal acceptance of the doctrines laid down by Saka-Munyi.

"This new and increasing tendency toward agnosticism has retarded the progress of Christianity in Japan, and actual converts have not increased in proportion to the increase in population. Many who embrace it in the belief that it is responsible for the advance of Western civilization drop it when they encounter the miracles of which it tells. Some have been known to adopt it temporarily for the sake of learning the language. The attitude of another class is indicated by a pamphlet written some years ago, in which it was seriously explained that Christianity was very good for the Western people, as it helped to restrain them from murder and robbery and the other great black sins to which they were naturally addicted; but that the Japanese needed no such religion, for they were naturally good."—The Literary Digest, February 17.

CROPS RAISED DURING 1899.

The wheat acreage was 44,592,516, the production 347,303,846 bushels, and the value $319,545,259, the average yield per acre being 12.3 bushels and the average farm price per bushel on December 1 was 58.4 cents.

The corn acreage was 82,108,587, the production 2,078,143,933 bushels, and the value $629,210,110, the average yield per acre being 25.3 bushels, and the average farm price per bushel on December 1 was 30.3 cents.

Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard University, is the author of a thoughtful article entitled, The Transplantation of a Race, which will appear in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly for March. It is a discussion of the forces which led to the introduction of the negro into America and the conditions attending his acclimatization. Professor Shaler, who grew up in the South, throws quite a new light on some of the pressing aspects of the race question, and his articles are sure to prove extremely valuable in the North by giving their readers a just view of the real problems which the South has got to meet in its struggle with the negro question.

An unusually interesting article discussing the so-called Typical Criminal from the practical man's standpoint will appear in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly for March. The author, the Rev. Samuel G. Smith, who has been Chaplain of the Minnesota State Prison for a number of years, and hence has had an unusually good opportunity for a study of the criminal classes, is of the opinion that there is no such thing as the "typical criminal," and especially that there are no physical signs of degeneration by which he can be tagged and put into his appropriate class of degeneracy, as the modern criminologist is so ready to do offhand, after a brief anatomical survey.

Prof. E. P. Evans, who has attained a perhaps not entirely enviable reputation by his unearthing of absurd and oftentimes brutal relics of old superstitious beliefs, many of them necessarily of religious origin, will contribute a paper, entitled a Survival of Medieval Credulity, to the March number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, which describes in detail a number of the most ridiculous and in some cases exceedingly vicious superstitions, and the forms connected with them, which are still religiously believed by large numbers of the inhabitants of certain European countries.

Prof. E. W. Scripture, of Yale University, has an interesting and instructive article in the March number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, entitled Cross Education. In it he discusses an important psychological principle which is commonly overlooked in practical education.

LETTER OF CORRECTION.

Bro. Arthur Leverton, of Bothwell, Ontario, feeling that he was wronged by the statements of Rev. W. H. Cooper in a letter published in the Mitchell Recorder, which he replied to in a later issue of said paper, asks us to publish his reply so that those of the Saints who may have read the Cooper-Leverton debate as printed in pamphlet form by Rev. Cooper, may have a statement of facts by Bro. Leverton in his own defense. We give the letter below:—

THAT OLD DEBATE AGAIN.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of January 12, I see a letter from the pen of Mr. W. H. Cooper, which I kindly ask for space to make reply. The truth half told is the most misleading falsehood. As Mr. Cooper says a committee of three took it upon themselves to get the Cooper-Leverton debate printed in full. Our speeches to be taken down and printed just as they were delivered by each of us from the stand. We both agreed to this, reserving the right to revise in order to correct any word or statement that might wrongfully be taken down.

The committee then entered into an agreement with the printer to publish the debate in pamphlet form for the sum of forty dollars. The debate then proceeded, but to the astonishment of the committee, they were told the debate could not be printed for less than sixty dollars. Upon this statement one of the committee dropped out, the remaining two agreeing to pay the sixty dollars. After the debate was over, I was told that the debate should never be published in full as it took place—I will leave the reader to judge why. So the next report we got from headquarters was that the debate could not be published for less than eighty dollars. At this statement one of the two dropped out. The one left agreed to pay the eighty dollars if the debate was published correctly as it took place, he offering to pay the money or the greater part of it in advance.

This was the statement of the committee to me, which I have every reason to believe was correct. As the printer told me himself that he did not consider the last man on the committee was responsible, the matter had all fallen through. So from the above being the facts it is easy for any intelligent mind to see why the committee all dropped out. I then saw Mr. Cooper and the printer and had some talk with them about the matter.

When the printer told me he had decided to print a synopsis of the debate upon his own responsibility, I told them I would agree to that providing our speeches were cut down equally alike. It was stated to me that certainly would be done. After a considerable time had passed over, I met a party connected with the printing staff who told me the synopsis of the debate was printed, and would be ready for sale in a few days. I then said, I suppose you are getting it out yourself as agreed upon; when to my great astonishment he said, O no, Mr. Cooper is getting it printed himself. I then asked, Is he getting it out anything like fair? The reply was, There is nothing fair about it. Why, he said, Cooper rewrote all his speeches before they were allowed to go in print. I have a letter from Mr. Cooper confessing to me that he rewrote all his speeches after the debate, before they were printed. If Mr. Cooper was satisfied with his speeches, as delivered in the debate, and thought he gained such a victory, what did he rewrite them for before they were printed? I leave the reader to judge.

After Mr. Cooper decided to print the debate himself, he never sent me word that he was going to get the debate printed himself; that he was going to have his speeches printed in full after he had rewritten them, but kept me in the dark in regard to his doings. If this is honorable or Christian, then I pray God to deliver us from all such Christians, for I do not wish to dwell with them in their final home.

Mr. Cooper said I had my speeches to revise. I never had one of them in full. I never had more than a synopsis of any of my speeches, and four or six I never had at all, and never saw them until I saw them in their mutilated state as printed in Cooper's book. The synopsis of the speeches I did have were in such a confused state that it was impossible to make intelligence out of them, without rewriting them all over again. This I should have done which I did not, thinking it was only a synopsis to be printed anyhow, which was very unsatisfactory; but had I known that was what the Rev. Mr. Cooper was doing, I would have been with him; but his success depended on keeping me in the dark, which he did on account of the distance between us.

Mr. Cooper says: "Mr. Leverton's friends, the Mormons." Why is it that Mr Cooper is not gentleman enough to call us by our proper name? He knows we are not Mormons in the sense that term is commonly used. The only object that I can see that he can possibly have in view is to mislead the public mind and get them to believe a falsehood; viz., that we are believers in the doctrine of polygamy, and other corrupt doctrines taught by the Mormons of Salt Lake City. If Mr. Cooper was a Christian he would not do this to create a prejudice against an innocent people; for he knows we have nothing to do with the Mormons of Salt Lake City. Neither do we believe in any of their corrupt doctrines.

I was never called over the coals by the Latter Day Saints conference—"Mormon conference" Mr. Cooper has it; nor did I have to make any excuse regarding the debate with Mr. Cooper. The victory of a battle is generally told by the results, where the battle takes place; and the results in this case were that seven connected themselves with the Latter Day Saints' Church immediately after the debate, stating they were convinced during the debate that we had the truth. Friends were made to us which were never friends before. I am told that two who joined the Latter Day Saints after the debate had always before been favorable to Mr. Cooper's church. Now what were the results on Mr. Cooper's side? He did not convince one who was favorable to the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints Church that he had the truth. I never heard of one joining his church as a result of the debate; but I did hear some say that some of his own people were disgusted with the way he used the Bible in the debate. Now the Latter Day Saints have not been lying about it ever since; they have had no occasion to. There is already too much of that kind of practice found in Cooper's little book. Mr. Cooper says I offered to meet him again, etc. The fact is when I saw the deception, fraud, and falsehood all combined in the so-called printed debate, I sent Mr. Cooper a challenge to meet me in public debate again. It is true Mr. Cooper said he would meet me again in public debate on the condition that I would allow certain histories and writings of some uninspired men to be taken on equal authority with the Bible. This I would not agree to, and I think there is no sane man who has the proper respect due the holy word of God who would agree to such a condition. But it proves one thing to my satisfaction; that is, that Mr. Cooper knew that the Bible would not prove the doctrine he believed in. If it had been an infidel I had been dealing with I might not have been surprised for him to have demanded such a condition. But for a reverend gentleman, a Christian minister, to demand such a condition, it must to all honest thinking people and lovers of the Bible, let him away down in the scale of unbelief.

I will now say in conclusion that if Mr. Cooper or any of his sympathizers wish to renew the fight all they will have to do is to send us a challenge to meet them on fair propositions, equal privileges with themselves; the Bible to be the standard of evidence, and we are ready and will only be too pleased to accommodate them. Let the truth be known, is our motto; and the truth is that Mr. Cooper's speeches, after he rewrote them, appear in full in his book while only a small part of my speeches appear there, only about one tenth of some of them.

INDWELLING PRESENCE.

Here is a young sister's understanding of "the Indwelling Presence."

The following paper was witten by a Sr. Miller, at Dunnville, Ontario, and was read by Miss Mina Hoppel at the Baptist Young People's Union. It was sent us by Bro. R. C. Evans. It is worth repeating in the HERALD.

"I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."—Gal. 2: 20.

Those who are baptized into Christ are baptized into his death, and have put on Christ and walk into newness of life. Having thus broken off all relations with the world and its evils, and having been adopted into God's kingdom, they have formed a new and divine relationship and are entitled to the seal of their adoption, which is the Holy Spirit. The Spirit of God dwells in the church as a body and in the members individually. Paul said to the Corinthian saints, "Know ye not ye are the temple of God, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?"—1 Cor. 3: 16. Also in verse 9, "Ye are God's building." The church, without God's Spirit in it, would be as a body without life, and its service would be but mere form. Each member of the church should have the Spirit dwelling in him. The indwelling of the Spirit is dependent upon ourselves. The sacred record teaches us that the ancient temple impressed strongly the thought of purity, perfection, and holiness.

Be pure! The Holy Spirit will not dwell in an unholy temple. It is shed forth upon those who are pure and true, and dwells in them as in holy temples. It is the pure in heart who shall see God.

Be perfect! The Holy Spirit will enter the temple of our hearts and remain with us if we obey its teachings, but upon us is laid the imperative necessity of rising to a purer and higher life. It will patiently and faithfully guide us to a higher plane if we make the effort to rise, but will not remain with us if we are satisfied with ourselves and are content to remain in a weak and imperfect state. The voice of the Spirit even now is, "Come up higher." To be perfect should be our high aim. The Holy Spirit is sent to guide, restrain, and develop us. It will guide us into all truth and make us like the perfect One, who is the Spirit of Truth. We cannot develop in the Christian life without the aid of the Holy Spirit, any more than a plant can grow without the aid of the sun.

Be holy! "If any man defile [or destroy] the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—1 Cor. 3:17. "Be ye holy, for I am holy."—1 Pet. 1:16.

"The Son of God who loved me, and gave himself for me." When Christ was leaving his disciples he promised to send them the Paraclete. Had not Christ died we could not have the Comforter—sometimes termed Advocate. It was to be an abiding Comforter, and supplies to us the place of Christ's personal presence. A visible Savior was only known to a few of Christ's followers, but the Comforter can come to us all—each heart may enjoy the ministrations of the Holy Ghost. The "indwelling presence" fulfills many needful offices for us. It is a physician in time of sickness, a kind friend in trouble, a comfort in distress; gives strength in times of weakness and temptation, encourages us to do our duty, and also enlightens our minds and gives us knowledge from on high while studying God's word.

Lake Erie is considered the most shallow and dangerous of all the Great Lakes. We have nearly all of us seen the reefs partly underlying the water encircling Mohawk Island, but the sailors are not left to navigate unguided through the darkness and mists, for a revolving light is placed high in the lighthouse where all may see it, and sail clear of the unseen dangers, and reach the harbor of Port Maitland in safety. So there is a Light and Indwelling Presence to guide us into the paths of truth and righteousness, and keep us clear of the rocks of error and superstition, that we may not be stranded on the shores of skepticism and unbelief.

Have you this Indwelling Presence in your hearts?

FROM THE SOCIETY ISLANDS.

Bro. John W. Peterson wrote from Hikueru to Bro. Joseph F. Burton at Papeete, under date of December 20, letter forwarded to Bro. Heman C. Smith, from which we extract:—

We have been having lively times since last I wrote. William [a native as we suppose.—Ed.] continued his discussion with the Catholics, in a regular, formal way, each speaking ten minutes alternately; the people were keeping very quiet for natives.

Last Sunday they had continued about an hour and a half, when William got them so confounded that they just stood and looked at him, when the time came for them to speak. And then some one yelled the word which in the native means "confounded," and then many others yelled, and then everybody yelled, when the Catholics broke and ran for the road.

Bro. Johnson and I were in the (our) house at the time talking debate with a Mormon white missionary, which he came to see about. Of all the yelling I ever heard I heard it then. I ran out immediately and closed the meeting, and ordered everybody to their houses at once; and in a few minutes they were all dispersed.

Mr. Martin came down to make some arrests, but there was no one to arrest; besides, his wife told him that the Catholics were to blame, and he went back almost as quickly as he came. Many Catholics I hear are puzzled.

ANTI-MORMON LITERATURE.

We are constantly being asked to answer tracts and articles appearing in various newspapers, magazines, and periodicals of the day, assuming to give history and facts in regard to "Mormonism," Joseph Smith, and the church, but really misrepresenting the church and stating things as facts of history which are but suppositions and falsehoods, told and written to deceive.

It is utterly out of our powers of body and mind and purse to respond to these various demands. We have not the time to devote to them, could not possibly attend to a hundredth part of them, as the name of these many misrepresenters is Legion, and they are constantly increasing.

We have no opportunity to get matters of correction into many of the papers and journals in which the incorrect statements occur, and many of the magazines refuse to permit replies to articles printed in their pages in reference to the Mormons, there being but few of them sufficiently liberal to permit both sides to be heard. The religious (orthodox religious) press are constantly filling their columns with statements concerning "Mormonism and the Mormons," more or less misrepresenting and slanderous of both the people in Utah and the Reorganized Church, to which no possible reply will be permitted, the publishers and editors seeming to think it is their duty to "destroy" the faith of all classes of believers in the angel's message.

There is a constantly increasing number of new books being written against the faith and the people; some in the nature of novels, like Miss Lilly Dougall's; some in the form of "expositions" of "Mormonism," like D. H. Bays' work, J. H. Beadle's work, or Stenhouse's "City of the Saints;" some in the nature of pamphlets and tracts, like Patterson's "Spalding Story," or R. B. Neal's tracts; and some in the form of journals like the Kinsman, of Salt Lake, published by the Presbyterians.

All we can do is to persistently push our gospel work as we have opportunity, attending to our own business, dealing fairly and honestly with both our friends and our enemies, never betraying the one, or going out of our way in the slightest to avoid or to do injury to the other; and leave the result with the Lord.

Our brethren in the various fields are watchful and careful, and wherever there is an opportunity to set the cause right before the people they do it in an excellent way.

Trust in God and go forward, should be our watchword, until he comes.

We have not the means to publish and circulate tracts and books specially designed to meet and refute the books and articles written against the church and its work, and can do but little in this regard.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it a transgression of the law and ruling of the church for Saints to attend dancing parties and participate therein?

There is no law of the church upon the subject of dancing that we are aware of. Several attempts at legislating upon the topic have been made at different times, and the following rule finally passed at the April session of 1896, at Kirtland, Ohio, action had April 14, eighth day of the session.

Resolved, that the practice of dancing should be discouraged, and that the members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice, as being one likely to lead their minds from Christ and the gospel.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, with his characteristic and accustomed energy, is doing what he can to advance the interests of the publishing department. He writes from Deloit, Iowa, February 22, as follows:—

Our district conference closed Sunday eve; attendance and interest good throughout. By permission of the branch book agent, Sr. R. Miller, I ordered twenty-five dollars' worth of church books, sent by freight, and placed them on sale during Friday and Saturday sessions. Bro. W. D Bullard took charge of sales while I was busy as Bishop's agent. Sale of books was a success. Some not of the church bought liberally. I believe that every district conference, in the whole church, should have an active agent, selling books, etc., during intermission. I am proud of the church publications and note the growth of the publishing department with interest.

Bro. C. L. Snow, writing from Kirksey, Kentucky, February 1, 1900, gives the Saints of his region some good advice, of which the following is a part:—

Most of my labor for the last few years has been in new fields. By the advice of our missionary in charge, I have been laboring lately among the Saints, and can see very clearly that those Saints who take the church papers are keeping up with the work; while those that fail to take them are going back.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

So let us all try to get the church organ in every family in this district this year. Send your orders through D. W. Cook, Sedalia, Kentucky. He is our agent for the Sedalia branch. If this is too much trouble elect an agent in every branch to tend to this business. Ever praying for the Lord to be with those that meet in conference, April 6, 1900.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, Deloit, Iowa, refers, in a late letter, to a special article in course of preparation for the HERALD. We shall be glad to present it to our readers, knowing something of Bro. Hunt's knowledge of the subject from his earlier efforts:—

My article on Isaiah 20 and Ezekiel 37:15–20, is nearing completion, and will be knocking for admission into the Herald soon. Our energetic Bro. Terry, of Chicago, has secured for use cuts of the "sticks," "rolls," and "rods" used in old Bible times, which will have place in the article.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A card from Bro. F. G. Pitt, dated Brooklyn, New York, February 21, announces the arrival of himself and Sr. Pitt, and Bro. William Newton, wife, and daughter, from England. Bro. Newton and party would proceed west at once; Bro. and Sr. Pitt would remain in Brooklyn until over Sunday, the 25th, to attend district conference, expecting to reach home —Chicago—March 1. We welcome these brethren and sisters home again after their protracted labors abroad.

Arrivals during the past week include Bro. E. C. Briggs, from Michigan, and Bro. H. A. Stebbins from points in Kansas, also Bro. D. W. Wight from the Rocky Mountain mission.

At a late meeting of workers of the Religio-Literary Society of the Decatur district a district Religio was organized with a full corps of officers, with a view to extending the Religio work throughout the Decatur district. Success to the movement. Our young people in the branches will be benefited by taking an active interest in the Religio work.

The Business Manager of the Herald Office states he has an express order from Alpena, Michigan, dated December 27, 1899, for $5.68, with no instructions or letter accompanying. He desires information from the sender. He also wishes us to state that orders frequently come amounting from one dollar to five, without accompanying letters. Parties therefore who do not hear from their remittances should write again and be sure that addresses of senders, with full instructions, are given.

Bro. and Sr. J. F. Burton write from Papeete, Tahiti, that they expect to leave the islands for America on the vessel leaving there in April, consequently they will not get any mail which leaves America after March 1. After that date address them care of No. 3010 Sixteenth Street, San Francisco, California. They expect to reach San Francisco about May 15. Bro. Burton is just recovering from another sick spell.

Persons ordering the Church History will, in all cases, please mention the volume wanted. Orders come without naming the volume. Please take notice that the price named in advertisement is for one volume only —any one volume.

CAN IT BE?

Can what be? That the doctrine or principle of the "laying on of hands" for the conferring the Holy Spirit can be set aside by two scriptural citations. That seems to be the proposition of Rev. William B. Campbell, as follows:—

If the "inquirer" happens to be sufficiently familiar with the Bible to quote Luke 11: 13, to show that asking is the only condition which Christ requires for the receiving of the Holy Spirit; or Acts 2: 3, 4 to show that there was no "laying on of hands" on the day of Pentecost; they explain away all these passages and any others of similar import.—Tract No. 1, Social Service Series D.—Anti-Mormon, pp. 11, 12.

It is quite evident the intention of the author of the above to teach the public that the Holy Spirit is obtainable by the individual who is the receiver of said Holy Spirit, simply upon their "asking" for it. Millions of these tracts have been placed in the homes of America during the past month, and this "open door" gospel theory of an "expansion" upon ancient teaching and practice will be unquestionably received and adopted by the multitudes as if they were "more to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honey comb." (Ps. 19: 10.)

Like John's little book, these words may be sweet, but the aftermath may prove most bitter indeed. However, to deal fairly, let us put the citations before the reader under a careful examination. First:—

If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Holy Spirit to them that ask him.—Luke 11: 13.

Let us get clearly before our mind:

1. Who is the speaker?

2. Who are the parties spoken to? and

3. What is the subject matter spoken of?

Christ was the speaker; see Luke 11: 2. The personal pronoun "he" refers to the Teacher; and the disciples of Christ—who were members of the body of Christ, the church, are the parties instructed by the great Teacher upon a specific topic. Prayer was the subject matter upon which Christ was instructing his followers. These disciples, without the shadow of a doubt, had faithfully complied with every gospel commandment, and were not ignorant of the fact that their love for Christ was to be manifested in harmony with his word:—

If ye love me keep my commandments.—John 14: 15.

Perhaps those disciples were not educated in a gospel "expansion" theory, but relied on the word of the Lord:—

Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.—John 14: 17.

Here is most positively taught by the Savior a marked distinction between the membership of the church, the disciples, and the people of the world. A little more light will be helpful, and here it is:—

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost [Spirit], whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14: 26.

The proposition will stand about thusly: the unbeliever, the unbaptized, worldly-minded, know not the Holy Spirit; that is, they cannot see—no, not so much as even understand the manifestation thereof, and like those on the day of Pentecost, who, blinded by unbelief and "mocking, said, These men are full of new wine" (Acts 2: 13). And be it said to the credit of those mockers of the apostles, that their ridicule was just as sensible as the ridicule of the would-be wise mockers of the present age. To the unfortunate unbeliever in the never-failing promises of God, we may say:—

How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?—Rom 10: 14, 15.

And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.—Heb. 5: 5.

God doth not grant unto men salvation in a haphazard method. No; salvation does not go glinting about like zigzag lightning. We are begotten by the "word of truth" (James 1: 18), and "born of water" (John 3: 5), and made alive by the Holy Spirit; for Paul said, "but the Spirit giveth life." (2 Cor. 3: 6.)

To the disciples—the church membership—it is granted that they are to have the guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead them into all truth; that is, into all saving truth—into all necessary truth for their salvation; not that the disciple is to possess and to comprehend the fullness of all truth in an instant of time, that only once in life is to be the administration of light, knowledge, and understanding of the things relative to the divine life by the visitation of the Holy Spirit. Nay! that is not the instruction of the inspired word, but on the reverse. There is a promised companionship of the Holy Spirit to the disciple of Christ, and as he promised:—

And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever —John 14: 16.

Without a multiplicity of words, or a long drawn out controversy, Christ was to his disciples both Teacher and Comforter; and he was to be removed from their immediate presence by his death and ascension to the throne of his Father. But before his passion, in crucifixion, he gave the pledge—"another Comforter." For what? To fill the place of the great Teacher; therefore, the Holy Spirit shall not only administer comfort to the disciple, but also be a teacher, and thus we may understand "that God is no respecter of persons;" as also, "For I am the Lord, I change not." So we may expect that the bestowal of the gift of the Holy Spirit—in all ages of the world and among all disciples—will be of a sameness. It was Isaiah who taught:—

Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts. For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little: for with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear. But the word of the Lord was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken.—Isaiah 28: 9–13.

Let not the doctor of divinity, the collegian, churchman, or common folk, pooh this away with the cry of too much tautology, for be it remembered God hath said:—

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. —Isaiah 55: 8, 9.

This was said by way of explanation of God sending his word unto man, for the gifts of the Holy Spirit are the gifts of God to men, as it is said:—

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.—1 Cor. 12: 7.

The gifts as named by Paul are: "word of wisdom," "word of knowledge," "faith," "healing," "working of miracles," "prophecy," "discerning of spirits," "divers kinds of tongues," and "interpretation of tongues." And we are authoritatively and inspirationally told in "dividing to every man severally as he [God] will" (1 Cor. 12: 11), "it is the same God which worketh all in all" (1 Cor. 12: 6). Who shall say to our God nay? Can you now perceive, kind reader, that it is those who have complied with all the principles of the gospel, including the principle of the "laying on of hands" for the reception of the Holy Spirit; they are the disciples that are permitted in the hour of their necessity, to ask God, and the Holy Spirit is promised; for they are entitled to this blessed privilege in consequence of having obeyed God, and complying with his commandments, for it was Jesus who said:—

And I know that his commandment is life everlasting.—John 12: 50.

Instead of the instruction of Christ in Luke 11: 13 "explaining away all these passages and others of similar import," it is a strong confirmation of the gospel provisions that those who have cheerfully and faithfully observed all the principles of the doctrine of Christ, they may ask and they may receive. To those who may think contrariwise to the contents of this paper, allow me to exhort you to carefully, prayerfully, and impartially consider the following:—

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 1: 9.

Pilgrim to the bar of God, which will be the safer plan: follow the counsel and teaching of uninspired man, who too often "teach for hire" and "divine for money;" or, to follow the doctrine, inspiration, and counsel of the true and unchangeable God?

Now for the second scripture named by Rev. Campbell, that he thinks disproves the "laying on of hands," for the obtaining of the Holy Spirit. It reads:—

And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. —Acts 2: 3, 4.

We do not expect to find any professor so inordinately ignorant or presumptuous as to undertake to have us believe that those on the day of Pentecost who spoke as the "Spirit gave them utterance," were either unbelievers or unbaptized persons, for the recorded narrative tells us that "Peter, standing up with the eleven," would seem to indicate that it was

Peter and his associate apostles that received and manifested the gift of the Holy Spirit on the memorable day of Pentecost, and it is by implication taught that these men had never received the imposition of hands for this the reception of the Holy Spirit. What is the impression created by the reading of the history and promises to these men? Matthew, after recording the call and naming the twelve apostles then adds:—

These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.—Matt. 10: 5–8.

Would all this responsibility and important duties be imposed upon unordained men — ministers? Surely not! Jesus said most specifically:—

Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you.—John 15: 16.

The Bible clearly and most emphatically teaches that ordination is accomplished by the "laying on of hands," and it is praiseworthy to credit the Christ with consistency in the appointment of fit persons to be his special witnesses, and invest them with the requisite authority to acceptably perform that task or duty imposed. There is not as much danger of committing a blunder and being in error to conclude or believe that the apostles were all baptized persons, and had received the "laying on of hands" at the commencement of their ministry for the reception of the Holy Spirit as there is in making a denial of their never having received the "laying on of hands." For as the ministration of the Holy Spirit is the ministration of life, and all the gospel principles are for life, even for eternal life, why should any man or any church turn away from and deny those things God "hath set" for our redemption and exaltation? It is not a foregone conclusion fixed and sealed unalterable that Pentecostal endowment was the first and only endowment of the Holy Spirit bestowed upon the apostles, for it was Peter who said:—

And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell upon them, as on us at the beginning.—Acts 11: 15.

I am well aware that this usually is applied to what took place on Pentecost day, but I am not sure that the word "beginning" indicates or signifies the day of Pentecost, and prefer believing that from the beginning of their ministry they were in the possession of the companionship and guidance of the Holy Spirit, for without the Holy Spirit they were not able to testify that Jesus was the Christ (1 Cor. 12: 3), and the gift of eternal life is made dependent upon the disciple possessing the knowledge of God and of Christ (John 17: 3). After the crucifixion and before his departure to the land of never-fading flowers, Jesus said:—

Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost.—John 20: 21, 22.

In the Patriarchal age the bestowal of blessing was through the "laying on of hands." Would there be an encroachment upon, or violation of, any statement or commandment in Holy Writ, or a tresspassing upon the precincts of forbidden ground, to believe that when our Lord said to the apostles, "Peace be unto you," and "breathed on them," that it was their setting apart by the Son of God by the "laying on of hands" for the great spiritual endowment received on Pentecost day? We are not left in the field of conjecture, or the darkness of misleading metaphysico-theological explanations, that the promised endowment of Pentecost was a necessity for these men, that they might receive their divine diploma, with the sign manual of Jehovah affixed to their world-wide commission to go and preach the gospel. Time and preparation were essential to their obtaining that most wonderful and much desired Pentecostal endowment, hence we read:—

And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.—Luke 24: 49.

These men thus addressed were the ministers of Christ, to whom were committed the "keys of the kingdom of heaven," and to whom it was said:—

Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.—Matt. 18: 18.

Be it understood that according to the chronological table followed by most scholars, the above language of Christ was made use of to his disciples in the year 32, and the following year he was put to death, so we learn from the word of God that the apostles prior to the death of Christ, had authority to

1. Preach.
2. Teach.
3. Heal the sick.
4. Cleanse the lepers.
5. Raise the dead.
6. Cast out devils.
7. Bind on earth.
8. Loose on earth.

But ere they separated to go into all the world upon their missionary work, there was for them a heavenly table to be spread with the richest of God's blessings, even the endowment of God's Holy Spirit, the greatest, the best of all endowments; and at the city of Jerusalem on Pentecost day, was the place and time for the apostles of the Lamb to receive this great endowment. Do we hazard any hope of eternal life in believing that the necessary steps of preparation of the apostles to the receiving of the Pentecostal endowment was the "laying on of hands" and prayer? That which seems to be proof of the "laying on of hands," reads:—

And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.—Luke 24: 50.

As a believer in the principle of the "laying on of hands," I can easily perceive that principle in the foregoing scripture. Prayer as a prerequisite is taught me in the following:—

These all [the eleven apostles] continued with one accord in prayer and supplication.—Acts 1: 14.

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.—Acts 2: 1.

Now permit me to say, the teaching of the Bible confirms me in the belief that the obtaining of the Holy Spirit is resultant for our observing and keeping inviolate all the principles of the gospel, and while there may be many who will apply the Missouri proverb, "show me," we can cite the word:—

And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written everyone, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.—John 21: 25.

If we were sure that we had a true and complete history of all the acts and words of Christ, it would possibly put an end to much of the ipse dixit of would-be-divine teachers; but in the absence of a complete and undisputed record of all that was done, said, and commanded, we are under the necessity of picking up the threads of gold as found in the fragmentary writings that have come down to our time, and from them seek to learn what will be pleasing to our heavenly Father, and that by observing them will win for us the crown of eternal life. Fighting against what has come down to us will neither add faith nor hope, but might be fruitful in turning both us and others away from the gospel of salvation. Wise and timely was the inspired counsel:—

Take heed that no man deceive you.—Matt. 24: 4.

Let no man deceive you with vain words.—Eph. 5: 6.

And this I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. . . . Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ.—Col. 2: 4, 8.

But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguilded Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.—2 Cor. 11: 3.

With the unfurled banner of King Immanuel at the masthead we may outride every storm.

For saving truth,

OWEN'S HILL, Tenn., Feb. 1.

Editors Herald:—I am very glad to say the work is in better condition here than it has been for, oh! such a long while. We have Sunday school every Sabbath morning and prayer meeting every Wednesday night; and, dear saints, what a wonderful amount of strength there is to be gained from prayer meetings!

We have been fasting on Thursday before the first and fourth Sundays in each month, but now it is changed to Wednesday before the second and fourth Sundays. Would be so glad to have all the branch fast with us, though they are situated so they cannot be present, yet I am sure they would feel better if they would only fast and pray with us. Our object is for the progress of the work here in this branch, and a unity of the faith. The Spirit attends our efforts to a marked degree.

Brn. C. L. Snow and J. H. Adair held a series of meetings for us, beginning Saturday night, January 20, and continuing till Thursday night, the following week, with increasing interest. We listened to some excellent discourses indeed. Had several lectures, from Bro. Adair, on duty, which, if put into practice, would be an advancement to the cause here. Bro. Charlie's subject was, "The final destiny of man;" and I must say he handled the subject so nicely and minutely that anyone could see the beauty and grandeur contained in the promises of the glorious gospel of Christ. It is grand to listen to such discourses, especially when accompanied by the Spirit.

Then Thursday was our regular fast day, so we met at the church-house at ten a. m., and had prayer and testimony meeting, and another lecture on duty, by Bro. C. L., as Bro. Adair left for home that morning. O, that day will long be remembered by those present! Our speaker said he could have preached all day long.

We are now expecting soon to see a brighter day dawn here, and the gloom to roll back and give place to a more brilliant ray of light. We are striving so hard to bring the work to the front, and praying so earnestly for the return of those who seem to be indifferent, that the Lord surely will not turn us away unheeded. He has promised to bless, if we continue faithful, and we would be so happy could there be an ingathering here. If we could only have more preaching, I think there certainly would be some baptized.

We have only had preaching a week or two since our new church has been erected. It was quite a burden for such a few to put up so large a building as it is and then have no more preaching than we have. We have been expecting Bro. Turpen back for some time, but as yet he has failed to make his appearance. He will never be forgotten by the saints at this place, for it was through him we have been promised grand and glorious blessings. Where are you, Bro. T—? We are anxious for your return to have another series of meetings.

I think the letter in the Ensign, from Bro. Constance, so nice and interesting. How we love to read such letters!

Our quarterly conference convenes next Saturday and Sunday at Sedalia, Kentucky. May the blessed Spirit of the Master be present. May the Lord help us to live worthy of imitation and help the honest in heart to come out from the world. We feel happy and very hopeful. Surely the grand work of God is moving onward. My whole desire is to live a pure and devoted life to Christ and his work, to be a zealous worker in the glorious cause we all love so well. Ever praying for Zion's weal and the "gathering," I am, Your sister in Christ,

ELLA ROBERTS.

SPRINGFIELD, S. D., Feb. 5.

Editors Herald:—We have had no one to promulgate the gospel since Bro. Caffall was here last July. There is a number of saints around Springfield.

There is an evangelist here now by the pet name of "Cowboy Charlie." He claims to be from Minnesota and was there when the awful Indian assassinations took place, when they broke out in the 'sixties. The negro who led the Indians to commit that horrible crime lives at Santee, Nebraska, and is married to an Indian woman.

"Cowboy Charlie" has traveled over most of the United States and was in Utah in the days of Brigham Young. He says the Utah Mormons were always very kind to him, although he does not believe as they do. He thinks there should be but one church in the world, and that Jesus Christ intended that all the people in the world should be one in faith and in understanding. He says the gospel is eternal and that it will be the same throughout the endless duration of time. He believes in the unchangeability of providence and as Almighty God created the sun and the moon to stand in the heavens to give light for ever, so the gospel is the same.

Yours in the faith,

HUGH D. ALLEN.

LEOTI, Kan., Feb. 4.

Editors Herald:—May I speak on the twentieth century? I cannot believe we are living in only the nineteenth century yet. To prove it, no one would buy a horse by the pound and pay for two thousand pounds when it only weighed nineteen hundred, or anything else. They would want another hundred pounds added to make two thousand pounds. So on the same plan this hundred years will have to be ushered in before the twentieth century. Is my theory right or limp? But I do sincerely hope one of our elders will find the way here before it is ushered in, at the least.

We have a splendid M. E. elder and quite a class here built up this winter. He is seeking for more light, and is not satisfied. He came in answer to prayer and was sent back also, and I hope he will be again, for a great work needs doing here, and he is paving the way. I rejoice in his efforts. Now, why we are left entirely in the cold, I cannot see.

So many that requested our elders to come have moved away or are dead. Mr. Haines, Dr. Wright, Travillo; Mrs. Jenneson, J. Denning, and W. C. Jones, from Allendale, Missouri: have all passed to the other world. Mr. Kontz has moved away, as a great many more that would have welcomed one of ours at Leoti.

I live twelve miles southwest of Leoti; the railroad runs direct from Great Bend, Kansas, to Pueblo, Colorado, then to Denver. Our elders often go to Ness County. My inability to walk most of the time keeps me right here to work most of the time in bed, for the last nine years most.

Your sister,

MARY E. TURNER.

MOLINE, Ill., Feb. 12.

Editors Herald:—Feeling that a few items from this part of the "vineyard" might be of interest to readers of the Herald, I will endeavor to tell what I can of the progress of gospel work here. A Sabbath school has recently been organized in Moline, and from its inception has proven a success; Sr. Lulu Suman is superintendent, and one of the chief promoters. Though we are few in number, we are not so weak in faith as to entertain any doubt of continued success and increase in numbers.

Our sessions are held in a hall on Sixteenth Street, and to say they are enjoyed by those in attendance, is not enough. We feel that our Sabbath school is an absolute necessity—something we cannot longer get along without—and therefore we feel it has come to stay. My earnest prayer is that it will stay, and that God will prosper it and bless every effort put forth for its advancement.

Our Religio Society is composed of members who gather from the three cities—Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline—each Sabbath afternoon and assemble in a hall in Rock Island; first holding a session of Sabbath school, then listening to a sermon or enjoying a season of prayer, as the case may be, after which comes the Religio session. You will at once realize that it is a faithful band of Saints residing here, when you take into consideration the self-sacrifice and patience required for us to get together regularly, being scattered through the three cities, and depending on the uncertain street car to bring us together.

A lively interest is taken in each department of gospel work here, and it does the soul good to see with what eagerness the work is entered into by both old and young. And it should be so; onward and upward is the cry that should ring constantly in the ears of all true saints. Must we hesitate and keep silent because we may have made mistakes in the past? I say no! All the more reason why we should awaken to a full sense of our duty and repent of our follies. Look not back at the dark past; you cannot dispel the clouds that have been. Will our heavenly Father ignore the earnest efforts of an honest heart to throw off the yoke of sin, and leave it to struggle alone? We think not.

Our faith is centered in a living God—one that takes cognizance of the weakness of his people, one who has promised the comfort and aid of his Holy Spirit to those who earnestly strive to fulfill the requirements of his law.

Bearing this thought in mind, we propose to keep right on striving for the right, and let no thought of past failures deter us in our spiritual growth and progress; ever reaching out for every opportunity to improve, and this brings to mind some good advice that a sister once gave us: "Never stoop to pick up an unsound apple from the ground, but rather reach up and pluck a sound one from the tree." Let us set our mark high, and aim high, so that if we miss the mark it will be to go above and not below it.

Bro. Alma Whitehouse has taken up his abode in Rock Island, where he will be employed in two lines of labor—ministerial and manual. We rejoice and welcome him heartily.

One serious detriment to our spiritual welfare is the absence of a regular weekly prayer meeting. We regret this very much, and trust the time will not be long until arrangements can be made for a regular weekly session; for no branch or body of Saints can prosper and develop spiritually, as they should, without the prayer meeting. May peace and harmony, and the spirit of love and truth abide with all.

In the gospel, your brother,

L. M. PRUDEN.

HAPPY, Kan., Feb. 14.

Editors Herald:—At present I am holding meetings at Prairie Home schoolhouse, between Hill City and Wa Keeney. We are favored with an attentive audience, and a good choir and organist. We came in time to commence meetings three days before we did, being hindered by a severe storm of wind and snow, the weather now is very cold.

We held a few meetings here about a year ago, and are glad to learn that a favorable impression was made. A class of intelligent people have settled in this vicinity, and many of them have attained unto considerable wealth by utilizing the Buffalo grass with herds of cattle feeding upon it; wheat and corn are growing here also.

I am stopping with Bro. Henry Morrell, the same place that I stopped at when here a year ago; but O what a great change has taken place in the domestic line. Then brother Henry was holding down his homestead by keeping bachelor's hall, doing his own cooking, sweeping, and washing of dishes, and was a bachelor indeed; but now the little home puts on a more cheerful appearance, and is made exquisitely happy by the presence of a worthy little woman that Bro. Henry tenderly calls wife. Sister Blanche, although young in years and young in the cause, is a saint in very deed, and greatly aids the missionary that comes this way, by taking a prominent part in the song service, and sparing no pains in making the meetings a success.

Bro. Morrell says there are a few quarter sections of land near him that can be bought for four hundred dollars, that he would like to see occupied by Saints, so they could have a Sabbath school.

Bazine is the center of attraction for gospel work in Ness County, and it looks favorable that a church edifice will be erected there before long by the Saints; and I am informed by the brethren, that there are several tracts of land near by that can be got reasonable, both school land and deeded land. A good chance for Saints living in remote places in the county and adjoining counties, who would want to change localities for the benefit of Sabbath school and church privileges. Brethren H. E. Ebert and I. Whiple will give information on that line to anyone inquiring.

The saints in the west part of the district ought not to abate their interest in the Sunday school work; there is material there, if properly used, that will make the work a success. It is the little things that count. It takes the seconds to make the minutes, and the minutes make the hours; and it is the little apples that fill the measure as well as the larger ones. But the Sunday school is no longer a small thing; it has outgrown its infant clothes, and has become a giant in the land, and its irresistible strength is wielding a powerful influence for good, which is modifying society everywhere.

The lessons in the Saints' Quarterlies are so systematically arranged that they are a mirror to the Scriptures, and reflect new light upon the text, so that the study of the Bible is not only instructive but highly entertaining.

The young folks in that new country want some place to go. Nature demands it, and the Sunday school would answer this demand in a measure. A good live Sunday school would be a source of attraction for miles around, and if continued with a Christian zeal, within a few years, that beautiful prairie country would be all aglow with gospel light, and many would be walking in the light of God, and when the time of reckoning comes, those who have borne the burden and sacrificed for the Sunday school cause, will receive their reward, as well as those who have borne a greater burden.

We reluctantly bade Bro. Mannering goodbye, as he returned to Missouri. Bro. Pender was to commence a religious discussion on the 14th, at Brownell, with Elder Collins of the Christian Church.

In gospel work,

J. M. BROWN.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Feb. 17.

Editors Herald:—I have just arrived home from a month's visit and labor in Clinton district. I averaged about a sermon a day. The conference at Coal Hill was a very good one. The good Master spoke to us in tongues, and the interpretation was that if faithful, great blessings were in store for his people. Why, yes? Don't you think that our noble brother, Abner Lloyd, has given up the use of tobacco. He's a noble man, and the Saints love him as the presiding elder of their district.

Bro. Beebe, Bishop's agent, is doing fine, and is well liked by the Saints, and they express no fear of placing the tithes and offerings in his hands. Bro. F. C. Keck is having trouble with his lungs, and at present is housed up at home—a very good place for him, so his "rib" can look after his wants. Bro. R. T. Walters is going into Kansas, by order of I. N. White, missionary in charge, for a month. We met our noble brother, D. E. Tucker, at Lebeck; he looks fine, and feeling well in the work, after being shot by some "Reb." Old Brn. Sorey and Welch have the harness on, and are still at work for the Master; Bro. Lee Quick preached a cheering sermon on Saturday evening of the conference.

The Baptist minister at Walker attended our conference, and said he had enjoyed himself nicely. One of his members told me her minister was going with us. I hope so. At Walker I had four ministers out to hear me. The Methodist minister told the Baptist minister to go and hear the Saints preach, and he'd learn something. But he'd never learn anything where he was. What do you think about the other man? Well, the world do move, so does the kingdom of God.

Yours in the one faith,

J. C. FOSS.

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Jan. 24.

Editors Herald:—Although I feel unworthy to take up so valuable space of our beloved church paper, I will nevertheless write, hoping that by the power of the good Spirit I shall be able to keep myself in bounds.

Sr. Douglas requested me, as I understand to write my life story to the Herald; I should, however, not have written as yet, were it not for some errors I found on page 794, December 13, 1899 issue, which I consider my duty to correct.

Sr. Douglas is not, as you state, my mother, that is, not according to the flesh. I was baptized September 13, 1897, and saw her, I think, but once before that time; when we afterwards got acquainted I once made the proposition upon a scripture passage to call her mother, and since that time did so, especially by letter; and she truly is a good mother to me in the spirit. I am Argentine by birth, and having a chance to embark on the Argentine training vessel "Presidente Sarmiento," I did so, and left San Francisco with the intent to return to Argentina, but not for to go to Manilla with the soldiers. After a voyage of over one month and a half, we arrived in Yokohama. The trip was so extremely slow, for the reason that we went mostly by sail. I was then fully disgusted of the life on ship, and left.

My mother, Mrs. A. Mehrkens, is with my sister in San Francisco; she being contrary to my intention of going to Switzerland, etc. I relinquished my purpose for to take up a far better one; namely, to go, if possible, to the land of Zion, for to remain there until I should know or believe it the Lord's will to go elsewhere. Bro. T. W. Chatburn kindly wrote me a letter, strongly reminding me of Zion. If you should find my letter unworthy of place in the Herald, I pray, not to publish. I will however proceed relating my life story, which is not so very agreeable neither, as I cannot permit myself to put everything in public writing; but as regards the marvelous hand of God, I rejoice, looking back on my young life.

I was born the 1st of October, 1879, and about one year later "sprinkled" and oiled in the Catholic Church in Salta, a city way up in the northern part of the Argentine Republic, South America, at that time far from any railroad; as I understand, in an unhealthy climate near the tropic, situated in a valley surrounded by mountains, the river Salado flowing above the level of the city.

My father was interested in a silver mine in those regions, also in a brewery; being by trade a watchmaker, he held a jewelry store, and, I think, did quite well; but after my mother left on a business trip to Europe, in about 1884, taking with her my elder sister, Pauline, and me, for to provide for us in some colleges in Europe, what I may call misfortune happened to us, and my dear mother had to start again in Argentina a hard struggle for life, in which she nobly endured unto the present day, having continually the temporal welfare of her children in view, without ever losing her energy; and I hope the good Lord will reward her, if it be so his will, by the hand of her son, for whom (me) she so long zealously toiled, more than I know of. Pauline died in the College of Girls, in a village in South Germany, after a long sickness, having had two or three days prior to her death a beautiful and lengthy vision, seeing the New Jerusalem and the Savior, who talked with her. She was then, 1888, nearly thirteen years old. I had entered the village with her in June, 1885, and remained there in the College of Boys until 1895. I thank my heavenly Father that he so kindly provided for me. My poor parents were not, what we may call religious, and almost the first I heard of God and the Bible was in Wilhelmsdorf, said village. I received what was told me as a child, the Lord Jesus blessed me and kindly used me already then as an instrument to gladden the hearts of some by the sweet name of Jesus. Yet I soon was led to doubt the church, to which I was confirmed in April, 1894, to be perfect in doctrine, and the scripture, you shall not call yourself as being from Apollos, Paul, etc., as if Christ were divided, began to trouble me.

My loving mother, however, found the means of bringing me back to Argentina, so I left the College in February, 1895, for to witness few days afterwards awful wickedness on board a French steamer, which on its next voyage was wrecked. I continued reading the Bible until I came, after one month's sea travel, to Buenos Ayres, capital of Argentina, where my mother (whose dear face I had forgotten, or almost) expected me with Lucia, my younger sister. But having resided for so long a time mostly among religious people, I was very much surprised to find that there was no family prayer whatever, nor any usual Bible reading, so that I myself dropped my hands and loved the book without reading the word, until the Lord, as I believe, brought us back in his own wise way to Switzerland, where I felt very unhappy with only the books and no word; so that I at last, on lack, as I thought, of anything else, attended meetings of the Salvation Army, where I was induced to kneel down for prayer as a repenting sinner, which I also after some hesitation did, without, however, satisfying me; so I came the next time again in front, kneeled down and prayed a most fervent prayer, and I know the Lord heard me, looked in pity, and because of my willingness and earnest desire to follow in his footsteps, kindly guarded me so that I did not join any of the daughters of the great harlot, but stayed out, although being taught especially that it would be good to join the Salvation Army, etc. But I answered: "Prove all things, and the good hold fast."

My elder brother, Albert, had a business in Guatemala, so we went there. My mother, my sister, and I, expecting at least one million; the Father however had otherwise thought, and we failed to realize the riches of this world. I continued to find opposition regarding religion in family, perhaps more so after being in a greater family circle; they thinking I was going to get crazy, or something of the kind.

I longed after some religious surroundings, and found the only Protestant chapel of the Christian Endeavorers in the city, whose meetings I attended about as regularly as I could. It was there that I met the man who became the first one to tell me that God Almighty had restored his gospel to mankind, and again bestowed his blessed gifts upon his children. It was Bro. Purfürst, then a Utah Mormon, who induced me to go to San Francisco and "Zion" (?), Salt Lake City. Oh! I thank Jesus, our Savior, for his kind guidance towards me who am unworthy; ever, ever will I glorify his name. Help us, our God!

We came to California beginning 1897, and resided in Oakland. I looked after the Utah elders in San Francisco, but could not find them; they had moved. I at last found out the residence of Elder Nye, but when I came there nobody answered the bell; I had the address of their church, but found only a dancing hall, when I went there Sunday at the right time. They had also moved their meeting place. But in Oakland I found, through the directory, what I thought to be better than nothing, since they anyhow had a "little more" light than the other churches, namely the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Bro. A. B. Purfürst came soon from Guatemala, visiting us in Oakland. I told him, it's anyhow a question whether the Reorganized or the Utah Church is the Church of God. He said, that yes, it is a question for me, but he knew that Christ organized his church but once in these latter days, and not for to again reorganize it. I saw quite clear therein, but it would not fully satisfy me.

After he had been some time away I wrote him to Los Angeles (being very sorry that our ways were parting) that I could not understand how he, knowing the doctrines of the Reorganized Church, could have joined the Utah Church; he soon replied that since the time he had left us he had much studied, etc., of things he had not seen in Salt Lake City nor elsewhere, with the result that he was again baptized into the Reorganization, and could with best conviction only advise me to do the same at earliest time, etc. I was overjoyed!

But lest I write too much, I would only say that although far away, having come probably contrary to the will of our good Father, I yet trust in the Lord of the Saints who are, in my mind,—the only people who know him as he is, that is, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever,—and I rejoice in this glorious work; my greatest desire being to daily come up higher, and please the heavenly Father in all my ways, praying daily that he may bless his people, so we may glorify him always. Let us sway the banner of love and truth everywhere; I try and give my testimony also here in Yokohama.

Your humble brother in Christ,

E. AUGUST MEHRKENS.

WEST BRANCH, Iowa, Feb. 20.

Editors Herald:—In reading the Herald and listening to the testimonies of the faithful, my soul is filled with joy and gladness, to think that my heavenly Father has been so merciful to me and brought me back to the marvelous light of the gospel of peace.

I was baptized in Missouri by Elder Kinyon, about 1870 or '71. I was taken to the water on a bed placed in a wagon. I was then about fifteen years old. I had chills and fever and had been very low. Through baptism and confirmation I was instantly healed, so that I could go anywhere alone. I think the name of the branch was Wakenda, about five miles south of Tinnie's Grove.

In my confirmation Bro. Kinyon foretold my being ordained an elder. With my father's family, I came to Iowa the following spring. I heard the gift of tongues once while in Missouri; think it was given through a Bro. Carter. My parents and I deposited our letters with a little branch we found in Boone County, west of Boonesboro and near Coal Valley, in the year 1875 or '76, while there was contention in the branch.

I was ordained an elder, and then appointed president of the branch. Of course I was ignorant of the laws governing such a high office. I never felt that I was in the right place, for I was not worthy or qualified; but I filled it as best I could, and had but little help, aside from faultfinding. Finally the branch disorganized. Let me say here that one of the elders that helped to ordain me left the faith and took up spiritualism; another went to the Utah Church, and the third went blind and died in the poorhouse. Let this be a warning to those holding like office.

About 1884, I think, the branch at Boonesboro was organized and is still running, I believe. About 1886 or '87 I got completely discouraged, and gave up to the Devil, and declared it all a fraud. I was misled by the spirit of the Devil that took possession, not of me alone but of others. They pulled through, but I was too stubborn to listen to good advice; I felt that I had been wronged, and so I had, but that did not help matters with me. I had received many witnesses of the truth of the latter-day work, but I got it into my head that if the Spirit would lead me wrong in one thing it would not do to depend upon it at all. Here is where the Devil wanted me, and he got me too. Here is one of the witnesses that I received about 1883 or '84. I had fasted and prayed often to know the divinity of the Book of Mormon (which I doubted), and one night just after I had retired a light appeared in my room; and I looked and just in front of me was an open book resting on a golden easel, and across the pages in large print the words, "Book of Mormon." I thought then that nothing could turn me, but alas! I was overconfident, and fell. Had I taken the advice of some of the elders of whom I wish to hear from again, —W. C. Nirk, J. S. Roth, R Etzenhouser, I. N. White, Shimel, J. F. McDowell, Baker, W. F. Clark (then a priest,) I would have come out all right. But now I feel that God for Christ's sake has pardoned my awful blunder. I must succumb to this message: "Moroni, It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks!" O, how I long to be united once more to the elect of God.

We have a nice little home, and any that come, if they will, stop here I will try and get a place for them to preach. Pray for me and mine, dear Saints, that the blessings of God may comfort us.

In the hope of the gospel,

I. M. LANE.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Feb. 14.

Editors Herald:—In nearly every community of this broad fair land of ours there seems to flourish one or more of those debasing institutions known to us by the name of saloon. Their presence in our midst is an abomination—a withering blight upon everything within the radius of their influence. Yet how alluring they are, enticing our guileless youth to enter their domain and join in the elusive race after the phantom pleasure; but when our boys wish to retrace their steps, they find themselves in the predicament of the innocent fly that has been entrapped within the spider's web. They soon lose the power of resisting the evil influences that are being thrown around them, and yield themselves willing victims to the enslaving power. For when that huge octopus, "strong drink," has once fastened its fangs upon them, it requires a herculean mental power to wrench themselves from its grasp.

I think few will deny that the habit of using intoxicating liquors as a beverage, is the most pernicious evil under the sun. Not only does it cause premature decay of both body and mind, but it destroys the tender affections of the heart; and yet more, it transmits a depraved appetite to offspring yet unborn.

A man given to the use of strong drink soon becomes incapable of realizing his condition, and soon runs into abuse of the fancied pleasure, till at last he seeks only his own gratification. Just here comes the remark of some deluded youth, "Ah, there is no danger of me becoming a drunkard. I can drink or I can let it alone." I have heard that assertion from lips that to-day are moldering within the drunkard's grave. The fact is there is no safety except in total abstinence, for the "charm of the serpent," as well as its sting, lurks within each glass of the vile compound.

If a man has no natural craving for strong drink, yet indulges in it, he shows the weakness and cowardice of his nature in not being able to say "No," to false friends who tempt him to drink. Were a brave man, a Daniel or a Joseph in his place, one who would not be afraid to stand by his convictions of what was right, he would exert an influence for good that would be felt throughout eternity. For no matter what some may say to the contrary, our conduct here in this life will surely reflect upon our destiny in the life that is to come, since the decree has gone forth, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." There are a multitude of people in this world who are ever ready to exclaim in the language of the Prophet Balaam, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his," forgetting that to do so they must first live the life of the righteous.

To-day I witnessed a scene to make the heart of any mother quail with apprehensive fear. A carriage, in which were seated two men and two young girls, drew up in front of one of those gilded palaces of vice. Soon an attendant of the place appeared, and after taking their order, reappeared bearing a tray on which was four well-filled glasses. And those dainty girls placed the delusive drink to their lips, never heeding the gentle admonition of conscience bidding them beware of the hidden sting. As they drove on their way, I caught a glance of their sparkling eyes, and their merry voice came back to me on the morning breeze; and looking after them, I prayed, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

I once heard a young girl say she did not object to a man taking a glass of liquor, if he did not become intoxicated. I felt only contempt for her at the time; but years after, I met her again by chance, and was not surprised to learn that she was then the abused and neglected wife of a dissolute husband.

One night, I sat with her to watch by the cradle of her sick child, while the little lamp of life burned low and yet lower, till at last the tiny flame went out forever. The mother's heart was nearly breaking at the thought of a separation from her child, yet she acknowledged the wisdom and goodness of God in taking it to a better, brighter home. She spoke to me of years that were passed—spoke in a suppressed, sorrowful tone of voice, that told of hidden tears. She said she knew at the time of her marriage that Charlie drank some, but never expected him to become a slave to the blighting ruin, as he had done; and I felt too much sympathy for her then to say, "I told you so."

A little after midnight the erring husband came home from the village saloon. He was singing some ribald song. His wife met him at the door, and said, "Hush, Charlie, baby is dead." But he answered her in language not suited to polite ears, and would have struck her, but I let my presence be known.

Girls, do not say this is an isolated case; that but few fall to so great a depth. You have only to look around you to see the havoc this dreadful drink habit is doing in homes that otherwise would be prosperous and happy. And because women and children are the greater sufferers from this cause, I appeal especially to them to do all within their power to overcome the evil. I think our girls and young women have it within their power to crush and banish the vice from civilized communities, were they to look with withering scorn and contempt upon all who in any way give it their countenance not giving the least respect to any of its votaries. Men would then be unwilling to become ostracized from the society and esteem of their lady friends in exchange for the wine cup. And in time the custom would become unpopular and soon die out for want of support or be banished exclusively to the haunts of crime.

Dear girls, as you value your own happiness and the welfare of those you love, give no leniency to this ruinous sin. You would not speak to a fallen woman on the street, or admit one to your home; but you will give the warm hand of friendship to men who are equally as vile as she.

To those sad, unfortunate ones who have members of their own household that are under the sway of the destroyer, I extend my heartfelt sympathy, and advise great patience on your part. Be not given to angry or hasty words, which will drive the erring one from home; but do everything to make home attractive to him, and also be firm in your own convictions of right, and never be ashamed to let them be known. Then in prayer and Christian hope press on, knowing that for you all sorrow will have an end. Even this gigantic and hydra-headed monster, intemperance, will finally be subdued and put under the feet of the Son of righteousness when he comes to reign upon the earth.

Then, dear Saints, lift up your heads and dry your tear-bedimmed eyes, for the time is drawing near when, if you have been faithful, you will be called to enter into the "marriage supper of the Lamb."

Editors Herald:—I seldom see letters in the Herald from Northwest Kansas district, and often wonder what the Saints are doing: Busy working for the Master perhaps, and have no time to write. Yet how eagerly we look through the letter department, and how cheering and encouraging to find a letter from some one we have known. Most of our little band of Saints are faithfully working in the Master's cause.

We have a nice little Sunday school. Quite good interest is taken, and O how grand and beautiful are the lessons—the Life of Christ! I cannot understand how anyone can study those lessons and not want to be more like him.

Last evening the M. E. preacher based his remarks on Matthew 24, placing special stress on the danger of being deceived. "Take heed that no man deceive you." I thought how needful are these words, yet they who are warning us are the very deceivers themselves. He said, "The old-time religion of a hundred years ago is good enough for me. It was good enough for Father and Mother, and it's good enough for me." Well, I thought maybe it was good enough for him, but not good enough for me, or anyone else who has enjoyed the blessings and light of the restored gospel. It seems to me, according to his ideas, we might still be living in the Dark Ages, under the authority of old Rome. "Keep in the old paths," he quoted; and I thought if this had been kept from Christ's time, the reign of the Prince of Peace would have long ago been ushered in. May we who have received the truth and the light ever be found abiding therein, is the prayer of your sister, NETTIE C. JOH.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

DETROIT, Mich., Feb 22.

Editors Herald:—I arrived in this city November 9, 1899, and began work as a missionary. I have endeavored to do my duty, since then, trying to improve every opportunity to advance the work that presented itself. How far I have been successful, lies with the great Judge of all to say. Our meetings have been so arranged that I have been occupied nearly every evening since I came. I see some indications of general advancement all along the line.

I had hoped that I would have a better opportunity for reading this winter than usual, but in this I have been disappointed. Yet the work has been of such a character that I have done more reflecting and learned more by observation than usual.

On account of what has been published in the Herald from the pen of Rev. Hill, the Adventist minister whom I met twice in public debate in 1898, I copy a letter that was published in the Brownville, Nebraska, Sun, of February 10, 1900. It will be of interest to those Nebraska Saints that were so much interested in the affair:—

"Friend John:—You ask me for what I know about the Peak-Hill engagement at College View with whatever I may have gotten of the opinion of the public concerning the claims of each to the victory in that ludicrous though somewhat interesting affair.

"Following are the facts without any attempt at journalistic embellishment:—

"At any rate Mr. Hill's commercial instincts are (trusting him to report himself correctly) again triumphant. He has again thriftily turned the matter of a debate into profit by writing the whole of it out in that fine Italian hand of his, and has had it published in book form and is now meeting so far as the capacity of the presses will permit, he says, the growing, the almost hysterical demand for it throughout this broad land of ours. I have been unfortunate in never having seen this interesting volume, so of the contents I cannot speak at all (what do you call it—ex cathedra?) authoritatively, but I am informed by those who are—take my word for it—perfectly fair-minded, that Mr. Hill has in this case done an over-careful piece of editing; that he has never permitted Mr. Peak to get the better of him in a single instance; that his omniscient manner at no time forsakes him, and that he never fails to justify it; that his lucubrations (they were all done in the dark) are always drawn out to the vanishing point and invincibly punctuated, whereas Peak is given, very prudently, only the briefest and most untenable positions and hardly an exclamation point to his credit.

"Now, as I have said, I have never seen the book, but I happened to be in College View at the time of the discussion. After a considerable squabbling (the cause of which will be explained later) they came to terms and agreed to meet in the public school building.

"At this time the uninitiated, the simple, the recluse, the white of conscience might be seen swaggering about speculating upon Peak's staying qualities and the probable sensitiveness of his epiderm, for 'Bro. Hill' as a dyspeptic enthusiast gave it out to me, 'is a caustic fellow and will make him [Peak] smart.'

"Now I had nothing to do but cultivate the confidence of this primitive people, and though I attended but few of the Hill-Peak seances in person, I contrived to keep a pretty definite forefinger on the pulse of the engagement by watching the before-mentioned recluse and white of conscience. It was in a small way another illustration of Briton and Boer.

"At first smiling superiority without a dream of defeat; but later when Mr. Hill began the defense of his creed the confident smile gave place to a grave thoughtful expression unseen before, and as time wore on it galloped through all the phases of alarm into absolute panic.

"You see this was the second gabfest in which Messrs. Hill and Peak were the entertaining committee, and those who were really on the inside knew that Hill was quite an inadequate spieler when backed up against our little Mormon. Hence, the interdiction of Johnson, the bewhiskered, and some others, when asked for the use of the College View church. Now this Johnson spoken of above is a Scandinavian person possessing a profusion of blond beard and a pull connected in some occult way with another blond bearded 'illustrious obscure,' Olsen by name, a former president of the Adventist Conference and owning abundant power to keep the discussion out of the College View church if he thought best.

"Now this Johnson is a shrewd fellow withal, and after taking the dimensions of Bro. Peak, decided that a discussion in the church (rembembering the disastrous results of Hill's former experiment) would be inexpedient. Hence the interdiction.

"Elder Hill makes it a point to twitter self-congratulatory paragraphs at every opportunity. Tells all about how he smote Bro. Peak hip and thigh and vindicated the 'cause,' and all that.

"Fact of the matter is Hill's imagination outruns his reason, he gets away from the time and place of his defeat and by a curious process of remembering and forgetting—remembering what he might have said and forgetting that he didn't say it—he comes to fancy himself a really formidable person and puts on a sneer and strides about most unbecomingly.

"Fact is, he got a dirty drubbing (and this says nothing as to the value of their respective creeds), but he got a good drubbing and I was glad of it. In fact I'm always glad when a supercilious browbeater in quest of trouble finds that according with his needs.

"Respectfully, O."

Rev. Hill came to Brownville shortly after I held a discussion with Rev. Anderson, of the Campbellite order, in October, 1898, and had for sale a book pretending to give an account of our debates. It was a very dishonest affair to say the least. I challenged him through the paper to meet me in debate at Brownville, Dunbar, Nebraska City, and Shelton, and discuss the same questions that we debated before. This he refused to do, but wanted to hold a written debate through the Herald. This I refused to consider. As a result we have kept up quite a correspondence through the Brownville paper. This article signed by "O." presents the situation about as it was, and it is of more interest, as we have reasons to believe it was written by one of the few liberal-minded members of the Adventists. This demonstrates the truthfulness of a statement I heard the President of the Church make several years ago: "Truth can afford to wait."

The articles on the gathering, presiding officers, city missionaries, and the need of a council of the quorums, have been of interest and profit to me; yet I feel the force of the statement, "Truth can afford to wait." The Seventy is one of the three quorums whose decisions cannot be appealed from, and their decision is equal to the First Presidency's; yet in 1894 when the Lord directed a council of the leading quorums the Seventy was not included. Why! Is it possible, that the answer may be given, "Because there are too many of us who are too anxious to air our own views, and then grow restless and desire to vote, before others of less desire for notoriety have an opportunity to express themselves"? There are many wise, experienced men in our quorum that seldom make a speech. Those men do not like to talk when several are manifesting anxiety to vote. My advice to my quorum would be, "Let us so live that when another council is called by the Lord through the President, we will be in a proper condition to be included." Satan succeeded in keeping the leading quorums in such a condition that the much-needed council could not be held till 1894, but just as soon as the conditions were favorable the council was called. So it will be again.

If we could influence our President to call a general council of the quorums, without the direction of the Spirit, I would not have the confidence in him that I now have; neither would I expect any good to result from the council. But if God directs it, the desired results will be obtained. Let us remember that God is at the helm and will steer the old ship of Zion safely into port.

Your brother and colaborer,

CANEY, Kan., Feb. 17.

Editors Herald:—I have not been in the church long, about one year. I was formerly a Missionary Baptist, but through the labor of one of Christ's servants I was brought to see the light of the gospel; but before, as Paul said, I could but "see through a glass darkly."

We have no minister with us now. We are a little band of five Saints and are trying to do the Master's will, but owing to bad weather we have not been permitted to meet regularly. We ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may prove faithful.

Yours in truth,

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"We can never be too careful
What the seed our hands shall sow;
Love from love is sure to ripen,
Hate from hate is sure to grow.
Seed of good or ill we scatter
Heedlessly along the way,
But a glad or grevious fruitage
Wait us at the harvest day."

MOTHERS.

Bishop Thompson once wrote that "there was no velvet so soft as a mother's lap, no rose so lovely as her smile, no path so flowery as that imprinted with her footsteps." Men and women frequently forget each other, but everybody remembers mother. Her very name is so entwined round our hearts that they must cease to throb, ere we forget it! It is our first love; it is part of religion. Nature has set the mothers upon such a pinnacle, that our infant eyes and arms are first uplifted to it; we cling to it in manhood; we almost worship it in old age. The mother can take man's whole nature under her control. She becomes what she has been called, "the divinity of infancy." Her smile is her sunshine, her words its mildest law, until sin and the world have steeled the heart.

The mother is the angel-spirit of home; her tender yearning over the cradle of her infant babe, her guardian care of the child and youth, and her bosom companionship with the man of her love and choice, makes her the personal center of the interests, the hopes, and happiness of the family. Her love glows in her sympathies, and reigns in all her thoughts and deeds. Every woman, in becoming a mother, takes a higher place in the scale of being. A most important work is allotted to her in the economy of the great human family. No longer does she live for self, no longer will she be noteless and unrecorded, passing away without name or memorial among the people.

No longer can it be said of her reproachfully, that "she lent her graces to the grave, and left the world no copy." Mothers constitute the only universal agent of civilization, for nature has placed in her hands both infancy and youth. Look into the records of history and biography, and you will find but few exceptions to the rule that all great men have great mothers. The father's influence upon offspring is comparatively small and insignificant to that of the mother's. Sons usually inherit the mother's prominent traits.

The number of wives and young women in our day is not small who look upon the duties, cares, pleasures, and responsibilities of motherhood as irksome, disagreeable, confining,—not to say a little degrading in some particulars.

Accordingly, the duties and pleasures are shunned,—yea, and even prevented,—to an extent that bodes no good to the perpetuity and welfare of our nation.

There is an evil here of an alarming magnitude.

One or two children now constitute the average family, and the birth of even this number is prevented whenever it can be done without great injury to health. The crown and glory of womankind; that diadem of motherhood, honor, and dignity; which has rested upon the sex since the first woman exclaimed in joyful triumph: "I have gotten a child from the Lord," is now being torn in pieces by the hand of woman herself, and trampled in disdain under her feet.

O shame on such a woman!

That woman who deliberately and willfully refuses to wear this glorious and holy crown of motherhood; who had rather idle away her time and strength in following the devious and senseless ways of fashion; in parading the streets and lounging in shops and stores; in dressing beyond the bounds of economy, or prudence; in gratifying vain, frivolous, sensuous wishes and desires, than in bringing up children to do good and thus throw back credit upon their parents, is unworthy of the name of a woman, is untrue to the highest and holiest impulses of her own nature, is false to the design and intent of God in her creation.

We are aware of the fact that women must not be made to bear all the blame in this matter, yet as far as they can, it is their duty and privilege alike, to shrink not from the mingled pain and rapture by which noble sons and daughters are reared to fill the places made empty by death.

A childless woman is always an object of pity; but when she makes herself childless through downright laziness and hatred of care, she becomes an object of scorn.

BY ALICE R. CORSON.

If earth's flowers never faded;
If earth's fruitage never failed;
If the glad and golden sunlight
Of her summers never paled;
If no blighting breath of winter
Ever brought us frost and snow,
We would miss the sweet contrasting
That the changing seasons show.

If life's pathway ever lead us
Through a smooth and flowery mead,
Or through quiet, peaceful valleys,
Vine embowered should it lead,
With no need for toilsome climbing
The desired goal to gain;
We would miss the glorious outlooks
Those who've scaled the heights attain.

If earth's gold would never tarnish,
If earth's gems ne'er turned to dust,
If the treasures fondly cherished
Could escape the moth and rust:
We might miss the heavenly treasures,
That will never more grow old;
Jewels of unchanging luste;
Star-gemmed crown and harp of gold.

If earth's friendships never failed us,
If earth's loves were always true,
If life's wine was never wasted,
Or was never mixed with rue,
We might miss the lasting friendship
Of the changeless One, nor taste
The wine of joy and bread of heaven
On which now he bids us feast.

So I hold that "over yonder,"
When we see with clearer eyes,
We shall learn in all our losses
Some sweet hidden meaning lies;
And we'll find the compensation,
Far outweighs the pain and loss,
And earth's missed and mourned for treasures,
We shall count as worthless dross.

GETTING HOLD OF THE SCHOLAR.

Presuming that our teachers invariably honor the Bible and exalt Christ, I proceed immediately to consider the third division—the consecration of self as a living epistle through whom the Spirit works. Consecration or devotion to a person's interests always involves earnest study of ways and means to promote that person's interests.

Getting hold implies nearness. A person in St. Louis cannot shake hands with a person in Paris. The life of the teacher must touch the life of the scholar. We must meet the scholar on his own ground. Moral destitution and spiritual poverty never knock at the door of spiritual wealth, except in great crises. Reason—the Devil blinds the soul to its own needs. The approach of disaster or death often opens their eyes.

To be more specific, we get hold of scholars by going into their native element, as we catch fish by casting our lines into the water. (A parenthetical remark may be pertinent here. There is not much pleasure in catching fish from a stocked reservoir. The keenest delight is connected with their capture in their wild haunts. The teacher who collects a class from the outside world experiences the greatest pleasure and often receives the highest reward.) Even in their native element we must study their habits. A thorough fisherman must know the daily habits of the fish. Many an empty creel is due to thoughtless fishing. Sometimes we must stir them and move them out of their accustomed haunts. It is often better fishing after a rain that stirs the water. Experienced trout fishermen often say that if some one goes down the stream in advance, disturbing the water, the fish are more readily caught. Throwing aside figurative language, we mean, as you get into touch with the scholar try to show the possibilities of a happier and better life, and thus beget discontent. Try to move his mind to look at a brighter life (evidenced in yourself), and this will create dissatisfaction with his own career.

Then we must allure with fresh and attractive bait. One fish in this creel, twenty-five in that; but this fisherman has but a little end of a dead worm on his hook, while that one keeps his hook full of wriggling life. Note this quotation: "Christ uses no stale illustrations. The lilies that he plucks for his sermons are dewy fresh; the ravens in his discourses are not stuffed specimens of birds, but warm with life from wing-tip to wing-tip; the fish he points to are not dull about the gills, as though long captured, but squirm in the wet net, just brought up on the beach of Tiberias."

This brings me to a most important point in the teacher's effort to get hold of the scholar. As I have previously suggested, we must displace by replacing. If my companion loves to play golf while I love football, I do not win him to my way of thinking by throwing his golf balls into a neighboring swamp. I cannot get hold of a boy as a member of a "No Tobacco League" by snatching his pipe from his mouth and breaking it upon the pavement. I cannot wean a girl from the dangers of the ballroom by driving nails into her slippers so that she cannot dance.

Let me connect the wrong and the right way in a little experience of my own boyhood. I want to go fishing. I want Jim to go with me, for Jim is the only fellow who knows how to keep quiet when the fish are biting. But he is up in the school yard watching a game of base ball. I go up and sit by his side and say, "Jim, let's go fishing. This game is no good." At once he answers: "This is more fun than a week's fishing. It's one of the best games I ever saw." I wait until a bad play is made and renew my effort. "Jim, you and I can play better than these fellows; that left-fielder can't hold a ball." Again he is ready with, "Can't he? You ought to have seen him take one with his left hand—the best catch ever made on the ground." I have failed to get hold of Jim. I must change my mode of attack. Waiting until there is another bad play, I say: "Jim, you know the place in the creek where we used to go in swimming, where the old willow tree lies. I looked into the pool there and saw six or eight big fellows, more than a foot long. A grasshopper jumped into the water and one came up and snatched him before he could move. Jim, here's a whole bottle of grasshoppers in my pocket." A moment's silence and Jim jumps up, saying, "I'm getting tired of this; let's go down and try them." I got hold of Jim. My work as a boy was along the line that the most advanced teachers must pursue.

Let me illustrate again, for this point cannot be too strongly emphasized. You went out nutting one beautiful autumn day. On the way to the wood you found an abundance of apples and filled your pockets. One of your companions said, "Throw the apples away, they are sour." But not an apple was thrown away. You came to a shell-bark tree and the ground was covered with nuts. In a moment every apple was out of your pocket to make room for the nuts. A little later an abundance of chestnuts greets your eyes. Every shell-bark is driven from your pockets, because you have found the more precious chestnuts.

Putting these two illustrations together we learn that we must win a scholar, not by defacing his favorite picture, but by holding more attractive ones before him. Then we must get him to give up his old companions, not by telling him that they are bad, but by revealing the superior pleasures of good company.

Now, about the best picture that we can hold before a class is our own life. If it be bright and radiant, if it clearly reveals the superior happiness of Christian living, it is likely so to impress as to move them towards a renunciation of their evil companions and habits. If you get hold of those careless and indifferent boys it will not be with the grip of a police officer, but the welcome grasp of an accepted lover.—Prof. Forest E. Dager, Philadelphia, in "International Evangel," St. Louis.

Original Poetry.

JESUS IN THE TEMPLE.

BY ELBERT A. SMITH.

The little Master gravely watched the doctors of the law;
He questioned them, and answered them, and put their school to naught;
For he felt a higher wisdom flowing from above, and saw Things that yet were dim to human eyes and dark to human thought.

"I must be about my Father's work," thus soon his spirit dwelt
On the higher truths that touch the soul and make the flesh as naught;
And the undefined promptings of the duty that he felt,
Led him early thus to mind his Father's business as he ought.

Plain and simple were his lessons, yet they vexed the elder mind.
He could draw such depths of meaning from the rockrose on the hills
Or the lilies in the valley; never Rabbi thought to find
Half the handiwork of God he showed them in the rocks and rills.

Only twelve the years he numbered, yet how subtle, strong, and true.
Well they marveled that their musty tomes of law became to him
Like a stream of crystal water that, his clear eyes wand'ring through,
Beheld the grains of golden truth that to others were so dim.

He must be about his Father's work, how great it was to be!
How strong the heart to tranquil beat beneath its wealth and weight.
No wonder that the Rabbis felt what they were slow to see
The presence of the master-mind, the greatest of the great.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

WESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The Western Passenger Association has granted reduced rates (one and one third fare for the round trip) to the coming General Conference and conventions of Zion's Religio-Literary Society and the General Sunday School Association. Tickets on the going passage may be purchased (over Western Association lines) from April 3-9 inclusive—on any of those dates. The conference meets on the 6th, but the sale of tickets from April 3-9 will permit attendance also at the conventions.

Reduced rates are granted on the following conditions:—

1. Going tickets must be purchased not earlier than April 3 and not later than the 9th. (Take special notice that going tickets are sold over Trunk Line Association roads from April 1-8 only.)

2. The rule is to purchase full fare tickets on the going trip (except in cases where parties travel together on special rates, as hereinafter provided).

3. Passengers must, in all cases, obtain a separate certificate with every ticket purchased. Do not accept a certificate covering two or more persons. Each ticket bought requires a separate certificate, and to which the purchaser is entitled.

4. Such certificates must be delivered to the Church Secretary, and when signed by him and signed and stamped by the railroad agent at Lamoni, will entitle purchasers to return tickets to destination at one third the usual fare; provided one hundred tickets are purchased; provided further, that ministers holding half-fare permits are not entitled to said reduction; nor are tickets purchased at fifty cents or less to be counted in total number required to secure reduction (except where they form part of a larger total fare).

5. Tickets on the going passage may be limited or unlimited, according to the rules of roads selling them; but return tickets are good only for continuous passage, and not later than April 24.

Purchasers should see that their names are written on each certificate before handing to the Secretary. Certificates should be handed in promptly that the local railroad agent may be notified of the required number to secure the rate.

The above contains essential items, but the following particulars are given in full to avoid misunderstandings:—

"We take pleasure in advising that rate of a fare and one third for the round trip upon the certificate plan, from points in Eastern Committee and Trans-Missouri territories of this Association, has been announced subject to the conditions herein named, over such lines shown on the enclosed slips as are interested.

"Reduced rates on the certificate plan to points within this territory become effective only when evidence is presented to the joint agent of the terminal lines at the place of meeting, showing that one hundred persons have actually been in attendance holding certificates reading for tickets over terminal lines to the meeting point, and when such certificates are stamped by him with his office stamp and his written signature affixed thereto; except that where parties or clubs traveling in a body purchase round trip party tickets to the place of meeting from stations from which the local one way rate is more than fifty cents and at not less than the rate announced on the certificate plan for the particular meeting in question (instead of one way tickets at regular rate) and present to joint agent a certificate from the selling agent to that effect, they will be counted by the joint agent in reckoning the attendance at any meeting.

"When reduced rates are made for meetings under double plan providing for sale of individual excursion tickets within a restricted radius and certificate plan outside of such radius, excursion tickets from stations from which the one-way fare to the place of meeting is more than fifty cents, shall be counted when necessary to make up the required minimum.

"No certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single-trip ticket.

"Certificates showing purchase of tickets at fifty cents or less will not be counted in arriving at the total, nor will reduction be granted in any case where the rate at which ticket was sold is fifty cents or less.

"Certificates of the issue of any and all lines in territory from which reduction is announced will be considered in computing attendance, and when lines in this territory arrange to honor certificates of connecting lines for business originating beyond this territory, such certificates will also be counted by joint agent.

"Ministers or others who travel on clerical or half-fare permits or commutation tickets of any description, are not entitled to this reduction, nor to be included in computing the number in attendance at any meeting.

"For detailed information as to the manner in which the business will be transacted by each line, and particularly as to the junction points via which each line will arrange to grant the reduction, please communicate with the General Passenger or Ticket Agents of the interested lines, a list of which lines in this territory is inclosed herewith.

"Under the method usually observed in certificate plan business, the passenger pays full fare on going trip, and on presentation of certificate to that effect, and if all other conditions as herein-named including presentation of evidence to joint agent of the required attendance upon part of those who have purchased one-way or round-trip tickets to meeting point as shown by certificates presented to him are complied with, a reduced rate of one third fare, is granted on return trip (by route traversed on going trip), to original starting point within authorized territory. Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is usually necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket of each road's issue, between points traveled thereon, and procure certificate thereof for each of the lines in this territory over which he traveled in going to the meeting, as through tickets are not always sold, and it is not always practicable for the various lines to honor each other's certificates. Passengers should, therefore, ascertain from the ticket agent what portion of their journey can be covered by the certificate obtainable from him, and procure certificate filled out to correspond with the ticket purchased.

"Failure to procure or present certificate invalidates any claim for reduction in return fare.

"The tickets purchased for going passage may be either limited or unlimited, according to the rate paid or the regulations in effect on the line over which it reads; but the return tickets sold at the reduced fare will, in all cases, be limited to continuous passage.

"Certificates which show the purchase of tickets not earlier than three days prior to the date announced as the opening date of the meeting [April 6], or which show the purchase of tickets during the first three days of the meeting, may be honored if presented not later than three days after the date announced as the closing date of the meeting, Sunday not to be accounted as a day in any case.

"Under the rules it is necessary that the Secretary . . . of your organization collect all certificates at the earliest possible time after meeting convenes, take them all to the office of the Joint Agent at one time, and after he has satisfied himself that the requisite number is in attendance, and that all other conditions upon which reduced rates are made have been fulfilled, he will stamp the certificates with his office stamp, thereby making them valid for return tickets at the reduced rates as announced.

"After one hundred certificates have been thus stamped by him, all others can have their certificates stamped on individual application, provided same is made within the prescribed limit, three days after the closing date of the meeting [April 20], Sunday not to be counted as a day."

Committee cannot report action concerning our conference until March 15. Further notice will be given.

TRUNK LINE ASSOCIATION.

1. Take notice, that tickets are sold from April 1-8, only, on going passage—one day less than over Western Association lines. Travelers may thus reach Western Association territory and purchase tickets over its lines not later than the 9th.

2. Passengers pay full fare on going passage. Secure a certificate with every ticket purchased. Certificates when duly signed by the Church Secretary and signed and stamped by agent at Lamoni, will entitle the holders to return ticket to destination at one third regular fare. Holders may return as late as April 24. "Return tickets in all cases are limited to continuous passage to destination."

3. Tickets costing less than sevety-five cents will not entitle the purchasers to reduced rates (unless part of a series of tickets to destination.)

4. Ticket agents at starting points should have "timely notice of intentions, so that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required."

5. The same general plan is followed as over Western Association lines (with exceptions noted above) but the following rules are published to avoid possible misunderstandings:—

"GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS.

"1. The reduction is from Trunk Line territory, i. e., from Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Dunkirk, and Salamanca, New York; Erie and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Bellaire, Ohio; Wheeling, Parkersburg, and Huntington, West Virginia, and points east thereof, except in New England.

"2. The reduction is fare and one third on committee's certificate, conditional on there being an attendance at the meeting of not less than 100 persons who hold proper certificates obtained from ticket agents at starting points, showing payment of full first-class fare of not less than seventy-five cents, through to place of meeting. Agents at all important stations and coupon ticket offices are supplied with certificates.

"3. Certificates are not kept at all stations. If, however, the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to place of meeting, he can inform the delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained. In such a case the delegate should purchase a local ticket to such station and there take up his certificate and through ticket to place of meeting.

"4. Going tickets, in connection with which certificates are issued for return, may be sold only on three days, and if a Sunday intervenes four days, immediately preceding the agreed opening date of the meeting, and during the first three days (Sunday included) of the meeting; . . . provided also that, when meetings are held at distant points to which the authorized limit is greater than three days, tickets may be sold before the meeting in accordance with the limits shown in regular tariffs.

"5 Deposit the certificate with the secretary or other proper officer of the organization at the meeting, for necessary endorsement and visé of special agent. Receipts for fare paid will not be accepted in lieu of certificates. . . .

"6 On presentation of the certificate, duly validated, not later than the third day following the agreed date for adjournment (Sunday not to be counted as a day), the agent at place of meeting will return the holder to starting point, upon a continuous passage ticket, by the route over which the going journey was made, at one third the highest limited fare by such route.

"7. Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

"8. No refund of fare will be made on account of any person failing to obtain a certificate.

"Delegates and others availing of the reduction in fare should present themselves at the offices for certificates and tickets at least thirty minutes before departure of trains.

CHURCH SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

ENROLLMENT IN QUORUMS.

The law provides for enrollment in quorums of all church officers, including elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. (D. C. 104: 31; 118: 1; 120: 10.)

Such enrollment is regulated by rules adopted by General Conferences, which provide that all applications shall be forwarded to the Church Secretary.

Applications should contain full name, office, dates of birth, baptism, ordination, and by whom ordained; also permanent address,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

and labor done, for quorum records. None of these items should be omitted.

Quorums make selections from applications in the Secretary's hands.

The Secretary cannot enroll anyone in a quorum. Quorums report all enrollments to General Conference. Presidents and their counselors are authorized to select names and enroll members to fill vacancies, between conferences, subject to quorum approval or disapproval.

The General Conference of 1897 authorized the Secretary to enroll applicants in quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, which was done and referred to the Quorum of Twelve, for completion of said quorums by selection and ordination of officers, at the General Conference of 1898. However, the Twelve were unable to complete said organizations then, because of absence of parties and other hindering causes. Brethren whose names appeared in published lists prepared by the Secretary will therefore understand the status of said applicants. Statements designed to reach the matter of more complete enrollment will be made to the General Conference of 1900. In the meantime, vacancies in existing quorums may be filled by quorum officers, from applications in the hands of the Church Secretary.

Brethren who have been ordained to other offices since sending in applications will please send in new applications.

All requests for enrollment should be in hand before April 1.

R S. SALYARDS,
Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 24, 1900.

We bespeak for Sr. Bagley the sincere sympathy and prayers of the saints everywhere. Funeral services from the home, in charge of Elder J. A. Gunsolley; sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith.

KENNEDY.—At Omaha, Nebraska, February 2, 1900, Merrith E. Kennedy; he was born December 15, 1871. They removed his body to the home of his parents, Bro. and Sr. David W. Kennedy, at Logan, Iowa, for burial. Funeral sermon by Elder W. A. Smith. It has been said of him, "He had no enemies." He joined the church when a child, and during his last illness expressed his firm belief in it still. He leaves father, mother, brothers, and sisters to mourn. May our Lord and Master comfort those who mourn.

WARNKY.—Mr. Henry Warnky, at the home of his brother, Elder F. C. Warnky, at Argentine, Kansas, of old age. He was born in Malcho, Germany, January, 1820, and died February 6, 1900, aged 80 years. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, but sometime before his death worshiped altogether with the Saints. In his mind he indorsed the gospel in its fullness, but seemingly could not see but what one man held as much authority as another to officiate in the name of the Lord, and lived up to the best light he had. He was buried in the cemetery at Independence, Missouri, from the Saints' church, Elder G. H. Hilliard officiating.

RANNIE —Mark Dewey Rannie was born December 30, 1898, and blessed by Bro James Caffall; died February 13, 1900, at Omaha, Nebraska. He was a sweet bud of promise, plucked from the loving embrace of his parents. Our Redeemer has said he had redeemed such from before the creation. Satan has no power to lay his corrupting hands on them. They are pure, and shall see God. In the innocence of his infancy he was taken, and of such is the kingdom of God. We sought to mingle our sympathies in the hour of bereavement, and comfort as best we can. No public service could be held. May God comfort them.

PEAT.—Martha C. Peat was born May 8, 1823, at Worcester, England; was baptized, together with other members of her family, February 6, 1851. Came to America in 1856, and started across the plains with the handcart company. After detecting some of the wrongdoings by some of that company, became dissatisfied with such actions, knowing that they were not becoming the children of God, and like many others, with shattered hopes and broken heart, she severed her connections with them. United with the Reorganized Church, November 12, 1878. Lived a consistent member of the church to the time of her death, November 11, 1899. A large number of relatives and friends followed her to her last resting place here on earth. Funeral services by J. C. Hitchcock.

GREENMAN.—At Goleta, California, February 11, 1900, Henry Greenman, aged 88 years, 1 month, and ten days; born at Wirtz, England, January 1, 1812; was baptized September 11, 1892. He had first joined the church in England in 1853. Funeral service in the Methodist church, pastor and choir kindly assisting; sermon by Elder R. R. Dana.

SIMMONS.—Dora, daughter of Elder S. W. and Sr. Alice Simmons, of Maysville, Arkansas, was born at Oscar, Indian Territory, May 1, 1895; died February 21, 1900, aged 6 years, 10 months, 21 days. She was a kind and affectionate little girl; she was loved by all who knew her.

We loved her; yes, we loved her,
But our Father loved her more,
For he has sweetly called her,
To yonder shining shore.
The golden gate was open,
A gentle voice said come,
And with farewell unspoken,
She calmly entered home.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

The human trait of hero worship has this disadvantage, that it often exalts its heroes into the clouds and cuts them off from human sympathy by making demigods of them. No man of modern times has suffered from idealization as much as Washington. We all acknowledge that he was the greatest of Americans, that his patriotism was of the purest and his character of the noblest, and that we absolutely owe our national independence to his consummate generalship. Yet the homage paid to his greatness in these days is of the head rather than of the heart.

Excessive idealization has eliminated the warm human heart from our idea of him and has left in place of the real Washington a sort of alabaster image or only a steel engraving. This is a wrong both to him and to ourselves, but it seems to have been inevitable in view of the undeniable greatness and nobility of his character. His chief fault, so to speak, was in being too perfect. He was so high above the ordinary man that hero worship was bound to strip away all the natural human traits and leave nothing but a sort of demigod exalted on a pedestal to be worshiped from afar off. In recent years this unfortunate process has had its natural reaction, and the pious rhapsodies of Weems have been partly replaced by biographies which allow the lonely hero at least a few human limitations and peccadilloes. It is even said that he hurled strong language at Lee in the battle of Monmouth, but men are still writing books to disprove this evidence that he could lapse into justifiable human passion. For the present, then, we must be content with a more or less deified Washington.

If any man was ever justly idealized that man was George Washington. But for him the country could not have won its independence, but for him it could not have formed its union, and but for him it could not have set its new government into motion. He alone could bind North and South together. He embodied the qualities and virtues which won the admiration of the austere New England colonists as well as of the aristocratic Virginians. He had the practical knowledge and the rare balance of judgment which could cope with every emergency and render justice in every dispute. He could be eloquent with the Virginians and devout with the Puritans, and could command the respect and devotion of all who came within reach of his unselfish and fascinating character. Modest, generous, just, forceful, fearless, of absolute integrity, declining all pay for his priceless patriotic services, what wonder that his soldiers offered to crown him king, or that, after his pained and angry refusal, the nation made him not only its President but its canonized hero forever?

Beyond doubt the greatest of Washington's many services was rendered as a soldier. John Adams and Congress said the colonists were free, and there left the matter. Washington and his soldiers made the Declaration of Independence a fact, instead of a mere assertion. It was a comparatively small body of heroes that presented freedom and nationality to the thirteen colonies. The feats of generalship by which Washington achieved this end have never been surpassed in the history of war.

From the days of his youthful but dangerous mission to the French frontier on the Ohio, and from the time of his warnings to Braddock, he showed an unusual grasp of the art of war. He knew the value of striking quickly as well as Grant did. Napoleon never struck more swiftly or suddenly in his brilliant Italian campaign than Washington did on that Christmas night in 1776 at Trenton. Nor was Napoleon's following-up blow more emphatic than Washington's attack on Princeton a week later. It was not a mere complimentary platitude that Frederick the Great uttered when he sent his kindly message "from the oldest General in Europe to the greatest General in the world." It was not a play of empty words in which the President of the Continental Congress said to Washington when he resigned his commission: "The glory of your virtues will not terminate with your military command; it will continue to animate remotest ages."

This was the man in honor of whose death Napoleon ordered all the standards and flags of the French Republic to be bound with crape for ten days. This was the respected enemy for whom a great British fleet hung its flags at half mast when he passed away a few months over a century ago. The grief of the young nation over his death was heartfelt and human enough then. Since that time the tributes to his memory have been such as no other man of ancient or modern times has commanded. Washington's greatness, unlike that of Lincoln, has been recognized and lauded by all the European nations. His name is a household word in every land that has dreamed of liberty. To every schoolboy in the United States it is the synonym of the highest American manhood. If this use as a lay model has somewhat dehumanized Washington, it has ennobled the ideals and lives of the men of the nation. The nation's future is secure as long as the patriotism and high character of George Washington have any power to stir enthusiasm.—Chicago Tribune.

DOGMATIC SCIENCE.

The dogmatic scientist is having as hard a time of it in these days as is the dogmatic theologian. Exact sciences seem to be running up against inaccuracies about as rapidly as infallible theologies have run up against failures. Lord Kelvin, the great electrician, wrote, a very short time ago: "One word characterizes my most strenuous effort to advance scientific knowledge; that word is failure. I know really no more about the real nature of electricity than I did fifty years ago."

The truth of the matter is that it does not do for any of us to be too sure. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." God does not seem to have had in his plan to make any man's thoughts infallible. The theologian who knows it all and starts to crowd out of the church any one who knows differently—he is pretty sure to know just about the least; and the scientist who has understood all mysteries, and settled every problem of the universe—he is sure to be about the shallowest of scientists. The philosopher who wrote the book "De Omnibus Rebus" ("Concerning All Things") found it necessary, very shortly, to write another book on "De Cæteris Rebus" ("Concerning a Few Other Things").

Sir William Hamilton used to say, "The highest reach of human science is the scientific recognition of human ignorance." Yes, the wisest man will be he who has come to an accurate conception of the things which he does not know. That man will be the one with a real grasp and certainty on the things which he does know. He will, as it were, have surveyed his estate, and have found boundaries. Scientist or theologian, he will be the man who seeks the truth humbly in hope.—The Church Union.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Why is it that no other name in the long roll of American statesmen stirs the heart of the nation so deeply as that of Abraham Lincoln? Orators never weary of sounding his praise nor auditors of hearing about him. Books on Lincoln multiply each year, and interest in them never flags. Thirty-five years after his death we celebrate his birthday with a unanimity and elaborateness greater than any shown in the past. Every trivial relic of his homely life, every scrap of his writing, is treasured to-day, and it has been literally true from the hour of his tragic death that men—> dip their napkins in his sacred blood;

> Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,
> And, dying, mention it within their wills,
> Bequeathing it as a rich legacy
> Unto their issue.

It is not enough to say that Lincoln was a wise and patriotic President, who died a martyr to a great cause. We have had other wise and devoted statesmen, and he is not the only martyr President, but there is only one Lincoln. Washington we reverence, but Lincoln we love. His memory is enshrined more deeply in the heart of the nation than that of any other man—closer to the source of tears and of unreasoning devotion—nearer to the springs of emotion that are set to vibrating by sacred family ties.

This cannot be explained by the fact that Lincoln rose by manly effort from the humblest ranks of backwoods life to the highest position in the gift of any people. It cannot be accounted for by the fact that he was a noble embodiment of the thoughtful self-reliance bred of generations of lonely struggle under the shadow of the forest primeval. It is not even because he signed the emancipation proclamation. These things are a part of the reason for the esteem in which we hold Lincoln, and so are his inexhaustible humor, his intense earnestness, his tireless industry, his honesty and his fairness, his courage and his steadfastness of purpose. His homely and unaffected words and ways had something to do with his popularity, and so had his sturdy common sense. But not all these sterling traits could make a Lincoln without something additional. Nor is the secret revealed by naming what is usually regarded as the crowning trait of his magnificent character—the fact that he always sought the right, as God gave him to see the right, and that he devoted his life to a steadfast pursuance of it when once he was convinced he had found it. This will explain much, but it will never explain the flood of emotion that wells up from American hearts at mention of his name.

The true secret of the love for Lincoln is his own love for his fellow men. In his ungainly giant form there was a heart of infinite human sympathy, and this it was that illumined all his other traits of greatness and made the halo that lingers around his head. Without this he might have achieved greatness—might have freed the slaves as a political necessity—might even have brought the war to a successful close and have fallen from an assassin's bullet—and yet we should not to-day be speaking of him as we do. It is this one supreme trait of human sympathy that carries his name out of the realm of intellect into that of emotion.

It was this that made him a popular boy among boys in an obscure Indiana village. It brought him the friendship of every soul in the Illinois towns in which he lived as a youth. No man could rub shoulders with him without finding that he had a deep and steady sympathy with the joys and sorrows of his neighbors, and that he was ready by day or by night to put that sympathy into concrete acts of generous kindness. It might be a farmer whose team had stuck in the mud of a New Salem street, or it might be a Springfield widow who needed wood chopped; Lincoln put his shoulder to the wheel or his hand to the ax with an instinctive alacrity born of a large heart. Once he happened to see a little girl weeping at her door because an expressman had failed to come and take her trunk to the train. Lincoln put the trunk on his back, told the small maid to dry her tears, stalked with his burden through the streets, and sent the mourner away rejoicing upon her first railway journey. These acts were as instinctive with Lincoln as the drawing of his breath, and it is impossible to overestimate the value of this quality of human kindness in bringing him personal success and in making the greatness of his name and the warmth of the nation's affection for him.

It was this same deep human sympathy that caused Lincoln to hate slavery and to throw all the powers of his eloquence against it. It was this, too, that enabled him to hold that marvelous balance of judgment which could put the Union above all else and could hold back emancipation until the right time; he could put himself in the place of the border States citizen and feel that any radical move would imperil the cause of freedom itself. This human sympathy sounded forth in his first inaugural, ran throughout his relations with the soldiers during the war, and animated his last acts as it had his first. The soldiers fighting and dying in the field thought of him and said to each other: "He cares; he makes us fight, but he cares," and they fought on as they never would have fought without that warmth of feeling for the man at the head of the nation.

Look at the matter in any aspect and at any period of Lincoln's life, and the prime cause of his greatness and of our present reverence for him is the fact that he was "human in the best sense of that fine word." For this above all else the people praise him. He not only came from the ranks of the humble, being the greatest and, perhaps, the last great type of our primitive life, but he had an intimate sense of the joys and sorrows of high and low alike; and "he cared." This is reason enough why the nation loves the name of Abraham Lincoln. —Chicago Tribune.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION ON SECTARIAN INSTITUTIONS.

The long fight over the meaning of sectarian institutions has at last been brought to a close by a very important decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. This decision maintains that institutions which exist under a charter and are incorporated for humanitarian purposes, though they be conducted by sisters in a religious garb, are not sectarian institutions. No decision of the Supreme Court is so far-reaching in its consequences to Catholic institutions as the one given in the case of the Providence Hospital in Washington. So important is it considered that the Catholic World Magazine prints it in full.

ACTIVITY IN THE FIELD.

Just now there is considerable activity in some parts of the field.

Bro. I. N. White was to meet the Rev. Clark Braden, at Viroqua, Wisconsin, in a twelve-nights' discussion, to begin Tuesday, the 27th, and we suppose the debate is now going on. We give the propositions:—

Was Joseph Smith a Prophet of God? I. N. White affirms, Clark Braden denies.

Is the Christian Church, (commonly nicknamed Campbellites) in fact the Church of God; harmonizing in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice, with the Church of Christ set up by divine authority eighteen hundred years ago? Clark Braden affirms, I. N. White denies.

Bro. White has the Rev. Braden at a standstill on the second proposition, and it is a curious thing to know just how the gentleman will be able to show the primitive church of Christ in the Christian Church, "nicknamed Campbellites."

An institution that rose from a Presbyterian root at Brush Creek, Virginia, through the baptism of Thomas Campbell, the father of Alexander Campbell for whom the "nickname" stands, by a Baptist minister named Luse, can hardly go further back in its history than the date of Thomas Campbell's convictions. But the battle rages. May the defender have faith and courage.

Bro. R. C. Evans will probably start for the conference about March 7 and will have fifteen appointments for eight days—pretty good work that.

Papers from Greensburg, Indiana, the Review and the Standard, for February 23 notice the presence and the preaching of Bro. James M. Baggerly, the Boy Preacher, who was to occupy the G. A. R. hall, on the evening of that day, at 7:30.

The Review contains a somewhat humorous sketch of a running debate between Bro. Baggerly and a Rev. Christian, as follows:—

One of the warmest debates ever witnessed in this city was pulled off in the gentleman's waiting room at the passenger station, Thursday night. Elder H. B. Sherman, of Westport, who attended the meeting at G. A. R. hall, and Rev. James M. Baggerly, Latter Day Saint, of Detroit, Michigan, met and by some means became hooked up in a discussion of Joseph Smith vs. Alexander Campbell. The argument waxed furious, sometimes in favor of one and again in favor of the other. So heated grew the debate that Elder Sherman misunderstood his opponent and imagined that he was being accused of handling the truth in a somewhat careless and reckless manner. This the Saint denied, so that the elder was compelled to forego the pleasure of denying the accusation by a physical encounter. About the time that one or the other's patron was about to be enthroned as the only inspired prophet, a mean infidel who had been a spectator in the large crowd of listeners came to the front and knocked things "topsy turvy" by offering five hundred dollars if either would prove or demonstrate that there was a God. The scene instantly shifted, then came a triangular fight of words which carried the matter late into the night without a solution of either of the questions.

Bro. W. H. Smart, wrote from Grove, Indian Territory, February 21, from which we extract:—

The work is onward here. Much good has been done in this field the last two years. Personally I am not doing anything at the present; I have been sick for two months. I would have liked to have Bro. J. T. Davis come and labor some with me, but my sickness has hindered. Bro. John T. is a wise counselor and is greatly needed in this part. I was glad to see Bro. C. R. Duncan's letter in the Herald, dated February 2.

Brn. Duncan, Roush, and E. F. Shupe are busy at Denver, Colorado, holding an indignation meeting at the close of their district conference, protesting against being classed as "Mormons" and "polygamists."

Bro. S. W. L. Scott has closed a successful discussion in Southern Indiana, with Rev. Denney, of the Christian Church. It is spoken of favorably by many.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST; THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF THE RITE OF REMISSION.

In the nature of a covenant it is proper to expect that when an imposed condition is prescribed and fulfilled, there should be a suitable acknowledgment of such fulfillment. So in the gospel covenant. If it is essential that a man shall be born again before he can see the kingdom, then it is not unreasonable to expect that after the birth of the water there should be some acknowledgment upon the part of the heavenly powers of the act of obedience and consequent new birth, and some token be given of the acceptance of the individual into the new life and a salvable condition.

The laying on of hands for confirmation of the baptized believer into membership in the church or body of Christ, and for the conferment of the Holy Spirit, the witness-bearing Spirit, has been ordained of God and instituted by the Lord Jesus Christ for these intents and purposes.

Jesus ordained his disciples as well as baptized them, and in the act of ordination he must have laid his hands on them. In John 20: 21, 22, the story is told like this:—

Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost: Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained.

There is a pleasant analogy between this beautiful rite the performing of which is related above, and that remarkable occurrence which took place when man was brought into being.

And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.—Gen. 2: 7.

As in the one case, by the breath of life from the Creator's lips man became a living corporeal soul; so in the other, by the breath of spiritual life breathed upon his living disciples the Savior infused that better spirit life, which gives them the power of an endless life, and endues them with the authority to minister in the gospel rites by which men may be born again and receive the witness of their adoption, the Holy Ghost.

The giving of the Holy Ghost to the disciples as related by John, took place after the resurrection of Jesus, after the hour in which he could say, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—Matthew 28: 22.

He had therefore won the victory over the environments of the flesh, had achieved the triumph over the adversary of souls, and could control and command all the forces of life, spiritual and temporal.

Soon after this occurred, the Lord having ascended to his place, the disciples scattered from Jerusalem, preaching. One of them, Philip, preached at Samaria, and as the result many were converted and were baptized. This awakening and work wrought by Philip came to the knowledge of the apostles remaining at Jerusalem, and two of them anxious to be about the Master's work and knowing what that work was, and desirous of following out his instructions to them, authorized two of their number, Peter and John, to proceed to Samaria to perform for them the same sacred rite which themselves had received and by which the Holy Ghost was conferred. When these two officers reached the city they at once laid their hands on these many baptized devotees praying for them, and the rite was acknowledged of God and they received the Holy Ghost. (Acts, chapter 8.)

A similar occurrence, or one of similar import, is related in Acts, chapter 19.

These taken in their intended import and effect, point unmistakably to the conclusion that the rite of laying on of hands was to be the physical and open means to be employed for the purpose of effecting the giving the Holy Spirit, the impartation of spiritual life, the manifestations of which should be the tokens of acceptance vouchsafed unto the obedient believer.

By a close reading of John, chapters 15 and 16, it will be readily seen that the office work of the Holy Spirit so conferred was to testify to the accepted believer that Jesus was and is the Christ.

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15: 26.

That this Comforter, the Spirit of truth, is the Holy Ghost, is seen by examining John 14: 26 where it is explicitly stated:—

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bebring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

The laying on of hands is the extended hand of spiritual fellowship, on the part of the church, the outward token of acceptance into the family of God on the earth; the sealing act of adoption, which ratified by the gift of the Holy Ghost, becomes the earnest of the purchased possession until the redemption of the body in the resurrection.

As correlatives of the laying on of the hands for confirmation into the church and the bestowment of the Holy Ghost there are: The laying on of the hands in ordination to office in the priesthood and in the church; the setting apart to the work of the ministry, the work of servants of Christ to preach the gospel, expound the word of God as the same has been written and given of God; to invite men to come to Christ and to baptize and perform all the duties, rites, and ceremonies belonging to the gospel service. The laying on of the hands for spiritual blessings, to bless with strength and spiritual life among the members of the body of Christ, the church.

The laying on of hands for the healing of the sick. To thus minister in the rite of anointing with oil and praying for the sick according to the examples set by the Master and his immediate disciples, and as commanded in the New Testament Scriptures.

The laying on of hands in the receiving and blessing of children who have not yet arrived to the age of accountability, and are not for that reason proper subjects for baptism; not yet being able to believe and repent as the word requires.

All these things follow and appertain to the principle, doctrine, right, and privilege of the laying on of hands, as part of the gospel.

GOTTHEIL TALKS ON ZIONISM.

Professor Richard Gottheil, of Columbia University, New York, addressed a large Hebrew audience Sunday afternoon at West Twelfth Street Turner Hall on the subject of "Zionism."

In the course of his remarks the speaker said that his religious brothers and sisters would never be contented until they could establish a large colony in Palestine and revive the great historical memories of their fathers.

After declaring that France is no longer a place for the Jew, and picturing the sufferings of the Hebrew race in Russia, Roumania, and Austria, Professor Gottheil said:—

"Let us be united under a central governing body. Let us enroll ourselves under the modern Zionistic banner. It is about time for us to appreciate the great good which will result from this Zionistic movement. We will never be happy until we go back to the home of our fathers. I think it is our duty to build up the temples which time has obliterated."

TWENTY-FIVE HEBREW COLONIES.

There are not less than twenty-five colonies of Hebrews, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, most of them thriving and self-supporting, in Judea, Samaria, Upper Galilee, and in trans-Jordanic regions, with a total of 4,500 colonists and about 1,000 hired Hebrew laborers.

CATHOLICS DESIRE STATE AID.

New York, Jan. 26.—Catholics of this city will oppose the proposed educational bill that is being prepared by the statutory revision commission. The bill provides for State aid to State schools and excludes all schools that make religion of any kind a branch of study or a basis of education. A body of representative Catholics from this city may go to Albany as soon as the bill has been submitted to the legislature and strive to procure favorable recognition for the Catholic parochial schools, on the ground that they are doing State work and should therefore receive State support.—Chicago Record.

MORMONS START NEW COLONY.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Feb. 9.—Arrangements for one of the biggest colonization schemes ever engineered in the West have been completed here, where a portion of the Big Horn Basin in Northern Wyoming will be settled by Mormons.

For several years a majority of the Mormons in Utah have felt that they wanted more independence of the Gentiles, and with the idea of getting away and into a new country where they might build their homes anew.

Arrangements were made with the Wyoming authorities for the selection of 200,000 acres of land in the Big Horn Basin under the Carey act. A committee of prominent Mormons is now selecting this land along the Stinking Water River.

The Mormon leaders say upward of 3,000 people will immigrate to the colony during the present year.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

We are asked to explain the following passage of Scripture:—

And no man has ascended up to heaven but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man which is in heaven.—John 3: 13.

All we can say of this is that we understand it in much the same way that we do other passages of similar construction; such as,

Whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven.

Despise not these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.

Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.

Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ.

A brother writes that he is unable to explain how the Son of man could be in heaven and talking to Nicodemus at the same time.

In a similar way we may not be able to explain how we can have our conversation on earth and in heaven at the same time.

To us the passage referred to means that the Son of man, the man which was from heaven, held powers which were exercised by him both on earth and in heaven.

It is as easy to understand this saying in this way as it is to understand his saying, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father;" "I and my Father are one."

He was the representative of the Supreme power both on earth and in heaven. He came from heaven, would go again, had done and could at will; could lay his life down and take it again; and in these things was in his power and the right to exercise it in heaven. He could not have meant to convey the idea that his body was in heaven. He could have meant, however, that in that sublime sense in which he was the Son of God, coequal with the Father, one with him in majesty, power, love, knowledge, and wisdom, he was with him in his seat of power, heaven.

"Great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh," in an endeavor to reconcile the world to himself, "by that man . . . whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

Jesus said on the occasion of the prayer recorded in the seventeenth of John's Gospel,

And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.—John 17: 11.

In the spirit of the question, How

was it? Was not he in the world while he thus prayed? Surely, his body was in the world, he had not yet gone to the Father; yet, in a sense, his work was done on earth; his spiritual life was not in the world; but was with the Father in heaven.

This is all the explanation we can give of the text referred to.

Like the text in Luke 16: 9, "Make to yourselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations," it must be given a literal rendering to get its true significance and see its force.

THE London Lancet has recently cited some instances where diseases were communicated by holy water, and many samples were taken from churches in different towns in Holland. The result was the discovery in most cases of abundant bacterial growth, with the occasional presence of staphylococci and other pathogenic forms. Two guinea pigs that were injected with the sediment from a font of a church in Amsterdam died in thirty hours. Mr. Bruns, of Arnhem, Holland, devised a means of completely avoiding contamination. The water is stored in a narrow-necked jar inverted in a shallow basin, so that the overflow from the jar ceases as soon as the water in the basin covers the neck of the jar. One end of a bent tube filled with hair is immersed in the water in the basin, and the other end overhanging the edge delivers a constant stream of small drops raised by the capillarity of the hair. All these parts are inclosed in an ornamental open case so that the congregation have merely to hold their fingers for an instant in the stream. The apparatus has been sanctioned by ecclesiastical authority. —Scientific American, February 24, 1900.

Is the above another instance in which "science is the handmaid of theology"? or, is there any theology —genuine theology we mean—about this holy water business? If some persons are not mistaken in their conclusions there are worse things than "staphylococci" and other bacteria forms in the holy water superstition. It is interesting to note the progressive spirit in which "the apparatus has been sanctioned by ecclesiastical authority." The Devil has been credited with being in terror of "holy water." Now that high ecclesiastical authority has sanctioned this scientific apparatus by which longstanding and accumulating disease germs are removed and their segregation rendered unlikely or impossible, is it not probable that the fear of his Satanic Majesty may be removed, especially as the superstitious character attaching to the liquid yet remains with its hold upon the people, a continuing factor in binding them to the system of credulity under which so many are held in bondage.

It is evident that the world moves, and that even the extreme conservatism of those who believe in the feature referred to above is not wholly unresponsive to progress.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Gilbert J. Waller, wrote from Honolulu, February 15:—

I am glad to report the situation much improved; have had no cases of plague for several days in Honolulu. However, it has made its appearance in Maui and Hawaii. We are all well, I am thankful to say. None of our numbers so far have been attacked by the disease; and also in our business none of the men employed have had the disease. This is encouraging and tends to increase one's faith in God's promises, for one cannot fail but see in it the protecting hand of a loving Father.

Bro. J. S. Roth, Perry, Iowa, March 1:—

I baptized two more fine young folks at Grinnell two weeks ago. They both served in the Salvation Army, therefore they are workers. They brought their zeal with them. Our numbers are still increasing in Grinnell. That is eight new recruits within a year, and there are still others investigating. Our conference there was a grand affair, pronounced so by outsiders. The Spirit of the Master was enjoyed by all the Saints, and some outsiders felt its hallowed influence. Two Utah elders, Day and Botty, are in Newton, so one of our members wrote me yesterday. The Saints there want me to come to look after their deceptive work, which I will do as soon as I get through here; for they creep into houses and (try to) lead captive silly women. (2 Tim. 3: 6.) I am still in the conflict.

Elder E. F. Shupe, Denver, Colorado, February 26:—

Our district conference held the 17th and 18th inst. was among the best ever held in the district. The weather was quite cold the week before and the attendance was not large, but the days of the conference were fine. The prayer and sacrament service on Sunday was one of those good times when the Spirit was present in abundance. Enough money has been subscribed to assure a tent for the district, and we expect to make this year the best in the history of the Colorado mission. The district officers for the next six months are, E. F. Shupe, president, and A. E. Tabor secretary, of Wray, Colorado.

Bro. W. A. Willoughby, Bonesteel, South Dakota, February 27:—

Bro. Whiting came in our midst about the middle of February and preached eleven sermons, nine in Bonesteel and two in Pleasant Valley. The Baptist church, which was locked against Bro. Caffall last spring, was opened for Bro. Whiting by those who belong to no church, and he preached there when the church was not in use by the Baptists, and the Baptists attended our meetings right along when their meetings were not in session, and quite a number came when their meetings were going on and seemed quite interested. Much prejudice was removed by his kind, mild way. Good attention, and applause many times during his sermons. I think he was the right man in the right place. The Saints desire that he should come again. Sectarians and outsiders say, "Have him come again." The Saints here are greatly cheered.

WHO WAS MELCHISEDEC?

ANOTHER TRIUMPH FOR THE LATTER DAY SEER.

The Hebrew prophet was instructed of the Holy Spirit to say concerning those who should oppose the work of God, "The wisdom of their wise shall perish," thus plainly inferring that sufficient time would be granted for the "wise" opposers to bring forth and place upon record their wisdom, before it should be overthrown; as in fact a thing must exist before it can perish. The comments and verdicts of the learned theologians of the present age, relating to the matter of Melchisedec, and the complete refutation of it all by the "marvelous work and a wonder," as unquestionably proved by late archæological discoveries, (providing their publications are reliable,) is a clear and perfect demonstration of that prophetic utterance.

First, we will call your attention to some of the verdicts referred to.

The Rev. Ingram Cobbin, in his comments in "Family Bible," seeks to refute the theory held by other commentators and believed by many, that this important personage must be none other than Christ himself, by treating upon the statement found in Hebrews 7: 3, "Made like unto the Son of God;" thus, "It would be absurd to say he was made like himself, which would be the case if he were indeed the Messiah," which of course would be quite true.

Still Mr. Cobbin does not commit himself by offering a theory upon the subject, or in any way stating who Melchisedec was, more than to hint that the "Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life," which occurs in the same verse, may simply mean that Moses was not acquainted with his genealogy.

This way out of the dilemma might possibly answer, so far as it relates to his father and mother; but the direct statement, "Having neither beginning of days nor end of life," could hardly be so easily explained away; but it all goes to make up a sample of the "wisdom of the wise," as manifest concerning this matter. Now we will show how peculiarly this wisdom (?) is made to perish.

In the early days of the church as restored in the latter times, Joseph Smith, the martyr, and others taught that the description given in the third verse of the seventh chapter of Hebrews referred, or should be applied, to the office which the man Melchisedec held—that is to say, a priest of the Most High God, rather than to the man himself. For vindication of this, turn to the Book of Mormon:—

> Now this Melchisedec was a king over the land of Salem; and his people had waxed strong in iniquity and abominations; yea, they had all gone astray: they were full of all manner of wickedness; but Melchisedec having exercised mighty faith, and received the office of the high priesthood, according to the holy order of God, did preach repentance unto his people. And behold, they did repent; and Melchisedec did establish peace in the land in his days; therefore he was called the prince of peace, for he was the king of Salem; and he did reign under his father. Now there were many before him, and also there were many afteawards, but none were greater; therefore of him they have more particularly made mention.—Alma 10: 2.

Again turn to the book of Doctrine and Covenants:—

> Why the first [priesthood] is called the Melchisedec priesthood, is because Melchisedec was such a great high priest: before his day it was called the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God; but out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days, called the priesthood after Melchisedec, or the Melchisedec priesthood.—D. C. 104: 1.

To this add the rendering of Hebrews 7: 3, as found in the Inspired Translation:—

> For this Melchisedec was ordained a priest after the order of the Son of God, which order was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life. And all those who are ordained unto this priesthood are made like unto the Son of God, abiding a priest continually.

Thus we have the latter-day Seer committed and on record in the three standard books of the church upon the matter of Melchisedec; and thus the elders have taught for about seventy years in direct contradiction to the wisdom of the world, which scouted the idea as a vagary of Mormonism; nor could we have done any better with no better light than they possessed; but "God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform;" hence the nature of the above caption.

To show the mysterious way in which God worked in this instance, I will relate how a few years ago one Rev. Vincent, who by the way is called a leading light in modern theology, and is said to teach the theory that this Melchisedec was actually the Christ, delivered a lecture in several places in Nova Scotia, entitled, "The Bible and the Spade." I had the privilege of attending the lecture, as it was given in the town of Amherst.

With great pleasure I followed the speaker, as he brought overwhelming proof of the divine authenticity of the Bible, as portrayed upon the monuments and tablets which have in recent years been brought to light by the "Spade" of the archæologist of Eastern lands, but was a little grieved to hear the learned lecturer state that while God had this peculiar way of confirming the believer in the Bible, the believer in the bogus work called the Book of Mormon would always remain destitute of such comfort, for the "Spade" had refused to do anything for that book, save to disprove it, or words to that effect.

After the speaker had concluded his lecture, I stepped to the front and asked him if he would like to enter into a debate upon American archæology, as relating to the Book of Mormon. He declined.

I felt sorry to have the matter end thus, but was powerless to prevent it, because of numbers and prestige; but the good Father is not affected by numbers, nor prestige either, but proceeds right along with his work, and will continue to do so until all his truth is verified.

A few weeks ago I visited Amherst again, for a day, and bought from a lady canvasser a work entitled, "Marvelous Discoveries in Bible Lands," published by R. A. H. Morrow, 59 Garden Street, St. John, N. B.; price, I think thirty cents; date, 1899. This work claims to be authentic.

Attention, dear reader, while we give you an extract found on pp. 40, 41, 42:—

> In these tablets the analogy of Melchisedec is maintained by what is recorded of the meaning and antiquity of the word "Jerusalem." It is evident from these tablet inscriptions that Melchisedec, king of Salem and priest of the most high God, who is taken as a type of Christ in his united kingly and princely office, was not the solitary occupant of that dignity (italics mine), but one in a succession of priest-kings which continued to the time before the conquest. And that Abraham should have received Melchisedec's blessing was only the due acknowledgement of the God of peace to one who had delivered Palestine from the invader and given peace to the land.

In reference to this great personage, Professor Sayce says:—

> Two or three years ago it would have seemed a dream of the wildest enthusiasm to suggest that light would be thrown by modern discovery on the history of Melchisedec. Whatever lingering scruples the critic might have felt about rejecting the historical character of the first half of the fourteenth chapter of Genesis, he felt none at all as to the second half of it. Melchisedec, king of Salem and priest of the most high God, appeared to be altogether a creation of mythology. And yet among the surprises which the tablets of Tel-el Amarna had in store for us, was the discovery that after all Melchisedec might well have been a historical personage.

Among the correspondents of the Egyptian Pharaoh is a certain Ebed-tob, the vassal king of Jerusalem. Jerusalem was already an important city, with a territory that extended to Carmel in the South and to Gath and Keilah in the West. It was threatened at this time by the Kahabiri or "confederacy," confederated tribes it might be, who had their center at Hebron, and the letters of Ebed-tob held a position, which as he tells us, was unlike that of any other Egyptian governor in Canaan. He had been appointed or confirmed in his post, not by Pharaoh, but by the oracle and power of the great king the god, that is to say, whose sanctuary stood on the summit of Moriah. It was not from his father, or from his mother, that he had inherited his dignity; he was king of Jerusalem because he was priest of its god.

In all this we have an explanation of the language used in reference to Melchisedec. Melchisedec, too, was "without father, without mother," and, like Ebed-tob, he was at once priest and king. It was in virtue of his priesthood that Abraham, the Hebrew, paid tithes to him after the defeat of the foreign invaders. Up to the closing day of the eighteenth Egyptian dynasty, if not later, Jerusalem was governed by a royal priest.

Is not this one of the most emphatic and conclusive vindications of the divinity of the latter-day work on record? Verily one would almost be led to think that it was a case of hair-breadth escape from the charge of plagiarism on the part of the writer of the Book of Mormon (see Alma, chap. 10, v. 1, 2) were it not that the Book of Mormon was published in 1831, and this work bears the very recent date of 1899.

Oh, yes, Latter Day Saints get a good deal of comfort from the work of the "Spade" on the American continent, yet have no objections to being delighted to find their peculiar mission vindicated and defended by the same spade that testifies to the truthfulness of the grand old Bible in Eastern lands; which, however, in this case does not pay a very glowing tribute to the King James translation of it in the text referred to.

We rejoice, yet not as over a fallen foe, but are only too glad to have men believe the truth because it is the truth, even though it requires a demonstration to make them do so; and are grateful to the wise Ruler of the universe, that while he is manifesting his long suffering and patience toward the world, by piling up evidences of his truth for their acceptation, he is doing it in a way best calculated to comfort and confirm the hearts of those who have already believed upon a less amount of material evidence. It is to be sincerely hoped that the abundance of testimony will not prove a "savor of death unto death" to any who are expecting a home with the righteous.

The household of faith may well be encouraged and can well afford to be patient over individual trials, when it is so apparent that the great God of all living is from time to time making glorious triumphs for his people along and in harmony with the line foretold by his holy prophets long ages ago.

Peacefully sleep, thou man of God,
Beneath thy distant nameless sod.
Great shall thine honor be;
Nor need thy friend or child repine,
For o'er thy life e'en now doth shine
Light from Divinity.

A heartless people knew thee not,
But with a cruel hatred sought
To stamp thee with disgrace;
But lo! the hand of God is raised,
And thy great work shall yet be praised,
By man: entire race.

HOLSTEIN, Ont., Feb. 22.

Editors Herald:—To-day finds me in the home of Bro. D. W. Cameron, having arrived here from Listowell last evening, at which place I had the pleasure of placing beneath the waves, a Mrs. A. K. Phillips and daughter, and leaving the husband and father awaiting a warm day to also go forth in obedience to the call of the Master. She is the daughter of our aged Bro. and Sr. Robert Taggart, of Grindstone City, Michigan, whose hearts will thus be made glad to know their prayers have been heard and answered, and that the seed sown by them, while on a visit some time ago, has brought forth fruit unto eternal life.

I am glad to be able to report the work in this part of his vineyard to be on the move, and every day or so sees some added to the kingdom, and those already in trying by their lives to become acceptable with the Master.

My heart has been made glad and my knowledge increased the last eight days, by the companionship of Bro. G. C. Tomlinson, whom I met at Stratford; and while with him we had the pleasure of seeing success crown our labors to the extent of six baptisms, and good results follow in several administrations. Bro. George is truly a servant of God, and if humble and patient, will surely become very useful in the house of Israel. We felt pain at parting and severing our connections, and were made to indeed pray for the time when Zion should be redeemed. I expect to leave here for Sable Falls in the morning, where we anticipate much work, and would ask all to kindly remember us in their prayers, that strength, wisdom, and humility may be ours to enjoy. For the truth,

ED. N. COMPTON.

DOWNS, Okla., Feb. 21.

Editors Herald:—In reading your columns we are always benefited; also, through its columns there are a great many that are reached, both in and out of the church. Bro. and Sr. Pate, Bro. and Sr. Reasor, and writer, were in attendance at Oklahoma conference, which met with the saints of the Oak Grove branch. We made some sacrifice and encountered some bad weather in order to get there, but were benefited by attending. The conference passed off with best of feeling, and some lasting good was accomplished outside the saints.

The conference appointed and empowered a committee to canvass the district, and if conditions are favorable, to provide for a co-operative boarding tent at our reunion this summer; and we set to work this early in the season, so that we can talk of the advantages and disadvantages to be derived from it. So far as we have canvassed the matter, the advantages to be derived outweigh the objections that have been urged against it. As far as I can see, there is but one cause for failure, and that lies in the saints of the district not taking an active part and lending it their aid and support. It was a success in California last season. Why cannot it be made a success in Oklahoma? In figuring a good bill of fare, it is possible for one to eat three meals per day at a cost of not to exceed twenty-five cents a day. Now don't just say it can't be done, but take a pencil and paper and do a little figuring for yourself, and find all the fault you can, also all the good points.

One point that must not be overlooked, is the rest that the sisters can have from cooking, and in their attendance at all the services cannot be estimated.

Now every Saint in Oklahoma should consider that they are as much or more interested in this than the committee, and if the committee get slack, urge them to activity. Make it your personal interest. We want to get in communication with the scattered Saints of Oklahoma, and if possible induce them to attend the reunion, also the district conference, which are not as well attended as they should be. By attending these gatherings we can be built up, and come to a better understanding of the truth, by being where we can receive the counsel of the elders. The committee are W. S. Macrae, R. M. Maloney, S. S. Smith, W. W. Budworth, and George M. Hiles. Any one of the above-named would be glad to hear from anyone, in or out of Oklahoma.

Yours for the advancement of the truth,

GEO. M. HILES.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Feb. 16.

Editors Herald:—It is somewhat dull and gloomy this morning, and as I looked through my window and thought of the changes as they take place, each in its turn during the season, I thought of the beautiful spring which would soon be here, and how it would unfold to the eye the beauties of its season. Then the summer, which also brings its charms of nature, the beautiful flowers which blossom in abundance to beautify the earth and please all who are lovers of nature and who love to study the handiwork of the Almighty and divine Creator. Thinking in this line, my mind was turned to the gospel, and to the changes which come to all who are interested in its work, and who desire to become helpers for the advancement of the work. Several thoughts were presented to my mind. How and in what way can we do this?

We must first find if possible the work which he, the divine One, wants us to do;

when we have found this, we must be satisfied and try to fill this place to the honor and glory of God. It may be that we are only a very little stone, so small that it can hardly be discovered, in this building which is to be erected; yet even this small stone is necessary to complete the structure. Another way in which we can help is to love one another; help in every possible way we can find.

First, let us take a visit to a sick room; what is there more cheering, more comforting, than a bright, happy, smiling face, as it enters a room where there are those who are suffering from illness of either body or mind. We may speak a few kind words, or perhaps do some little act of kindness; we may do something to ease or soften their pain, and ofttimes it has been that a little quiet season of prayer may be had by request of those suffering, which has often proved a blessing.

Do you think if we do any of the above mentioned that our heavenly Father will turn us away empty when we go to him asking for blessing at his hand? That is if we do it in a spirit of humility and love. I think not. O, how happy we feel as we return to our home, and realize that we have tried to do what we could, and we feel the Spirit of God with us, which strengthens us and gives us courage to press on.

Another way we can help, and a very important one it is, and that is our little mites. The Savior says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." This is one of the very important ones, I believe, and it is tithing. It is by this that the gospel is spread; by this that God's servants are enabled to go from place to place with the everlasting gospel, full of truth, and a hope of eternal life, to all who will obey.

"Well," says one, "how can we do this? We have only a very small allowance, and how can we pay our tithing." Now I can only speak from experience, and from facts I know personally. I will give an illustration of a case which I think may help some of our young people to do likewise, if they will only put forth the effort.

There are a great many who have a weekly allowance, if not weekly, we have money given us, perhaps to buy ribbons, gloves, or some such article. Can we not give the Master his share of this. Suppose we have fifty cents given us for pocket money, and we put a tenth of this aside, and keep adding to it right along, we shall have in five weeks twenty-five cents. It may seem very small but think if five or six sending twenty-five cents each, there will be just so much more for our Bishop to help some missionary's wife and family who are perhaps in distress. I have tried this small scale, and have found my allowance to grow larger, and have been able to give more next time; and have been happier than if I had a dozen pieces of new ribbon. I know cases that are run on even smaller scales than what I have mentioned, yet it has been for pure love for Christ and a desire to help spread the gospel. Then let us all try to put our little mites together, and they will mount up gradually, and will make our Bishop and others feel that God's people are not sleeping, but are up and doing what their hands find to do.

Another little act of importance, which might be mentioned here, which if allowed to grow will not only hinder us and the work, and should not be found among the saints of God,—and that is backbiting, gossiping, trying to injure our brother or sister. This must not be; we must overcome and fight daily if needs be to master these things. I have learned from experience the result of these, and have found the beauty of learning to shun such evils, for such they are, and will hinder both our spiritual growth as individuals, and also the growth of the church. We must learn not to judge from outward appearances, but try to study the life of that individual, and learn the motive, the pure intent of the heart. I like that passage which reads: "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

I am glad that this is true, for if we should be judged from man's standpoint of view, how far short would their judgment be from that of the divine Creator who knoweth every desire of the heart, and who will judge a righteous judgment. I do not wish it understood that I am free from the above. I wish I were; but I am trying by the aid and assistance of a kind and heavenly parent to live just as near to the gospel as possible, so when that great day comes that Zion shall be established in all righteousness, and shall be as a pure and mighty nation in the sight of God, I can be counted worthy to be among that number.

I know not why my thoughts should run in this direction, or why I should attempt to put them on paper; but hope I may have said something which may be of benefit to any who may read them, hoping and praying that the time will soon come when we as the people of God will become so pure and united that the world can truly say we are of a truth the chosen ones of God. May we be as bright shining lights, have our lamps trimmed and burning, then when the watchman cries, "Lo the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," we shall be ready. May our heavenly Father help us in all our efforts for good, that Zion may grow and prosper, and that all evil may be rooted from among his people; then he can bless us, and cause his work to flourish, that the honest in heart may be gathered into his fold, for truly there are many who are seeking after truth and light; then we must be prayerful and watchful, lest we enter into temptation, for truly the evil one is always on the watch, seeking to tempt all whom he may, and hinder those who have an influence for good in the work. Let us be faithful and press on, till Christ shall come to claim his own.

Your sister in Christ,

B. C. W.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Feb. 21.

Editors Herald:—Our conference just closed was among the best we have held in Southern California. Peace and harmony prevailed and the Saints dispersed renewed in spirits and inspired for better service in the days to come. We had with us of the general ministry Elders G. T. Griffiths, F. M. Sheehy, A. C. Barmore, F. B. Blair, D. A. Anderson, R. R. Dana, and William Gibson. The local priesthood was well represented. Preaching by Brn. Barmore, Griffiths, Sheehy, Blair, and Williams. The district officials were all sustained. Adjourned to meet with the Newport branch October 5–8, 1900.

One salutary feature of the conference was the session devoted to priesthood, and the result is surely an index of what a priesthood council can accomplish. The unanimous verdict was that it was by far the most successful session we held. A more perfect understanding and harmony obtained. What a grand thing it will be when all of the priesthood of the church can come together and, in the spirit of Christ and Christian fortitude, deliberate and come to a common understanding on the weighty things of the law.

Brn. Griffiths and Blair left for the East on Monday, Bro. Anderson on Tuesday, and Bro. Barmore on Wednesday. Bro. Sheehy will visit with us until the 5th of March, when he will turn his face Zionward. I also expect to leave about that time. Bro. Chatburn left us some weeks ago. His departure was hastened on account of the critical condition of his mother in Harlan, Iowa.

It is now about eighteen months since the first of the last conference appointees reached Southern California, and we instinctively review our experiences, searching for progressive evidence. There has been some new work done. Several places have been reached where the gospel was not previously preached, but no new openings have been effected in the sense of holding them. This is what I consider new openings: when we go in and succeed in getting such a permanent footing that we hold it. It was our hope that we would be enabled to do this at several points. We have failed as yet. Bro. Harris and I went to San Diego shortly after I came to the mission. We were not in a condition to follow up the effort, and, although hundreds attended our street meetings, yet not having the wherewithal to rent a hall, the seed was so promiscuously scattered that we have no material evidence that it has borne fruit. We have never seen the "blade of wheat yet." About a year afterwards Bro. Chatburn went there and delivered a number of sermons, with the same results. It will be necessary that some missionary go there and remain indefinitely if we wish to obtain the best results. Street preaching to be a success must be followed up in a building. It is very easy to get big crowds on the streets in California, but too often it is from curiosity that they listen rather than from interest. One finds this out when they move from the street to a building.

Some little preaching has been done at Santa Monica, Santa Ana, Riverside, Redlands, and Cucamonga. The interest has not been phenomenal. We have succeded in baptizing but few in new territory. Bro. Barmore baptized two at Cucamonga; that is all that I know of. Most of the baptisms have been in the proximity of branches and have comprised those who have been investigating for a time or the children of the Saints. Of course there are some exceptions.

I must give due credit to the local workers. Had it not been for the tireless work of Bro. Jones and his aids at San Bernardino I do not think that "we missionaries" would have reaped the harvest that we did there. A year ago when I held my long series of meetings I baptized seven; Bro. Harris baptized some about the same time; Bro. Griffiths went there afterward and baptized seven; I believe Bro. Chatburn followed and baptized nine. These baptisms materialized because the seed that was sown by the several missionaries was cared for and nurtured by the local force. Again, the Sunday school and the Religio have been quite a help along the line. Bro. Chatburn has won his way into their hearts, as witnessed in the number of baptisms among the children of the Saints both in Garden Grove and San Bernardino. He has not been idle since coming to the mission. He has labored in a number of new openings, and, though he has not been more successful than the rest of his brethren as to new converts, still he has the consciousness with all others of having done what he could. Bro. Barmore spent several months at Cucamonga, and though he preached from two to six sermons per week, he has not been idle otherwise. He busied himself during the day picking oranges and succeeded in earning enough money to defray his expenses to the General Conference. This is commendable.

I would here remark that people are not going wild over the simple gospel story in California; in fact, the gospel is not so enticing as some other things, yet there are many honest people here, and if we push the work legitimately and build wisely, we shall yet live to see a fair ingathering from this land of sunshine and sin. The work in Los Angeles is on the ascendancy. There has been much to overcome and it will require patience and fortitude ere perfect success will come. There is a noble band of Saints here and they are doing what they can to pay for their new home. I have been here most of the last year, assisting them in the erection of their chapel and preaching as opportunity afforded. The peculiar demands of city work seem to warrant the appointment of a regular conference appointee who can take charge of the work here. I must not forget to mention Bro. Carmichael, our district president. Would that we had a thousand such men in Southern California; staunch and true is he. I have found the Saints of the Pacific Slope among the very best of all that I have ever associated with in gospel service; free-hearted, kind, and considerate, whom to know is to love. I shall be loth to leave them, and, although I do not know where my lot may be cast another year, I shall ever remember them for their many, many kindnesses to me.

Bro. Griffiths' methods are so different from that of his predecessors that he has almost effected a revolution along some lines. Whether his policy is the best remains to be seen. I do think that he should be given another year in which to develop his plans. From a human standpoint it will be unjust to him, likewise the mission, to take him away now. Another man could not easily take up the work outlined by him and carry it out as he has planned. We are just commencing to see the results of his methods, and, if they continue as they are now, his policy will eventually have to be adopted by all his compeers in quorum service. Do not understand me to say that in every detail his work is faultless, for experience has shown me that those men who are aggressive, while they accomplish much good, sometimes make mistakes. But of Bro. Griffiths it can be said that, when he errs in any particular, and it is shown unto him, no man will endeavor to undo an error more than he.

I notice a perceptible growth in Bro. Blair; he naturally seems to develop along the presiding line. Bro. Anderson is an exemplary young minister who will be a credit anywhere. He has not been privileged to hardly witness a "slight skirmish" along the missionary line, however, and I hope the conference will let him work with some of us seventy on the frontier next year. Bro. R. R. Dana reports good success in laboring with Bro. Keeler in the Santa Marie Valley. They have baptized a number, and the future is encouraging.

From all reports from the northland Bro. Sheehy is in great demand and the New England Saints must not be over-clamorous for "our Frank." He should be returned to California unless the Spirit directs to the contrary.

We are having very dry weather here; the rainy season is about over and the grain all drying up. A rainy season without any rain. How incongruous.

In looking forward to the General Conference I am assured that we will receive all that we are worthy of, and that God will bless us to the extent of our capacity to receive. Could we ask more? Personally I am not so anxious for an additional revealment as I am that God will give us wisdom whereby we can understand and be honest enough both to ourselves and to God that we will apply the law as he has given it to us without any spiritualization or peculiar wrestings that nullify its applications in the lives of men.

Bro. Ed. Miller's article in the last Herald has the right ring to it. You are on the right track, Bro. Miller; follow up your readings and you will land all right. With well wishes to all,

Yours for Zion's welfare,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

CREOLA, Ohio, Feb. 26.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have done some preaching in Akron. There is quite a number interested there, Bro. A. H. Parsons having baptized some. I came here a short time ago and have done some baptizing here. Bro. Moler came and baptized two, and we have nine new converts here now, and we are expecting some more before long. Of course the Saints are rejoicing here now, and so they ought, especially Sr. Monaghan who has for the past six or eight years had a good deal of persecution from her husband, and now through the prayers of the Saints he has been moved upon to confess before a large audience that he has done wrong and asked the forgiveness of all whom he had wronged, and is now baptized and confirmed a member of the body he once hated or persecuted. He used to belong to the Catholic faith and was very bitter against our people; would not speak to the elders, and I was the first missionary he ever spoke to, now he speaks and is certainly a changed man.

The work of the Master is advancing slowly all over, wherever the gospel is preached. May it spread till earth's remotest nations have learned Messiah's name. I am feeling well in the work and my prayer is that success may attend it everywhere.

In bonds,

FRANCIS C. SMITH.

BEVIER, Mo., Feb. 25.

Editors Herald:—The district conference held at San Francisco, February 9–11, was one that will be remembered for many days to come by those in attendance. The spirit of peace and good will predominated throughout all the sessions. The preaching and social meetings were of a high order. There was quite a noticeable improvement along spiritual lines.

The work is growing in the Northern district and we think on a solid basis. There has been quite a revival in most of the branches. The officers are striving faithfully to perform the duties enjoined upon them by the law.

Our new church edifice at Oakland was about completed. It will be a great help to the work in that city, as they will have a place where they can meet permanently and have a series of sermons occasionally, which privilege they have been deprived of in the years gone by. Bro. Blair has rendered good service in that locality. He is held in high esteem by the Saints there, and all beg for his return to that mission for the coming year. He was also elected president of the Northern California district, and we congratulate the Saints on their wise and good selection.

Bro. Parkin, the former president, was faithful to the trust imposed in him and did all he could do in his circumstances. He is engaged in the mercantile business. He is president of the San Francisco branch and is Bishop's agent, hence it was that he had more on his hands than he could attend to. Bro. Parkin is one of that kind of men that never says "No," or "I can't," but does all within his power in the interest of the latter-day work. I wish all of our local men in the various branches were as willing to magnify their calling as is this brother.

Our young brother, A. B. Phillips, has proven himself to be a workman indeed, as he has devoted his entire time to opening up new places, and has done an excellent work, and ought to be returned to the coast by all means.

Bro. Sheehy is in demand and should be continued in that mission, for he has made many friends to himself and the church and is familiar with the mission.

Brn. Keeler and Dana have been laboring for some time in the extreme part of the Central district and have baptized about fifteen or twenty of late, with great prospects of a large ingathering, provided the necessary efforts are continued.

On the 16th the Southern district conference convened at Los Angeles and continued over the 18th. This conference was pronounced one of the best ever held in the district for many years. Truly the Spirit of God was present in great power, to the cheering and comforting of all there. Bro. Carmichael, president of the district, Brn. Van Fleet, Gibson, Dana, Jones, Sheehy, Barmore, Blair, Anderson, Wixom, Hemaway, and Salter, with many others of the local brethren, were in attendance. All seemed happy and joyful in the service of the Lord.

Bro. Blair and I left for Los Angeles on Monday morning for San Bernardino; called on Sr. Dameron, who for some time had been at the point of death. We are glad to note that she was much improved when we left. She seemed to be on the road to recovery. On the 3:37 train we started for the East by the Southern route, passing through Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Indian Territory, and Oklahoma. We were forced to lie over all night at El Paso. Bro. Fred and I crossed over to Mexico. A short time there sufficed our curiosity. We were from Monday morning early to Saturday getting through. Were in one wreck on the Texas Pacific, where an express train ran into ours and damaged both engines and several cars. Fortunately, no one was killed. However, we were jolted considerably in the crash and were delayed twelve hours. The next night we encountered a wreck on the Rock Island road. A freight train ran into an open switch and killed the poor fireman and nearly killed two or three others. It delayed our train several hours.

I got word that my aged mother was in a very precarious condition, hence I came here to see her. She is past her eighty-first milestone and seems to be better since my arrival, and it looks as though the Lord is going to spare her to us for a while at least. I shall spend about a week here and a few days at Brookfield, this State. Thence wend my way to Lamoni to meet with the quorum on the 15th of next month.

The weather is real cold and has quite an effect on me on account of being in a warm climate for the past year.

The smallpox is raging in this town and surrounding country, and in consequence the churches have been closed, hence I am resting up to-day.

Our young brother, John W. Morgan, who is known to a good many of the Saints, met with an accident one day last week in the mines. A large piece of rock and slate fell on him, crushing him very badly. He is still living and seems to be gaining some, but is in a bad condition yet. We sincerely hope that the Lord will spare him to his family and the church, as he would be greatly missed by the Saints. I have known him for about twenty-three years, and in all that time have known him to be one of our most faithful members, as all will testify who are acquainted with him. He has a wife and three children who need his support.

I desire to express my gratitude and tender my thanks to the Saints of the Pacific coast mission for the kind treatment I received during my sojourn among them. I was also greatly supported by the brethren in my endeavors to regulate and set in order the affairs of the mission. The traveling ministry and the writer have worked together in harmony and I have felt and do feel proud of the men that were associated with me in gospel work during the last two years. All have endeavored to acquit themselves as ministers of Christ, and it was the earnest wish and desire of the Saints and officers there that the faithful workers be returned to the mission the coming spring.

I wish to tender special thanks to Bro. and Sr. Anthony with whom we made our home or headquarters in San Francisco. Sr. Anthony is well known to the traveling ministry, who have visited that city, for her kind hospitality. Her son George and wife are also very considerate of the needs of the traveling ministry, as also were Bro. Parkin and wife, Bro. Kaighin and wife, Bro. and Sr. Knight and Saxe, and many others of the Saints there.

Praying our heavenly Father to bless the Saints in all the world, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

P. S.—Sr. Price, of Oakland, has been very ill for some weeks, but was some better when we left San Francisco. We sincerely hope the Lord will spare her life. She has done considerable for the Lord's work in the past, and we feel confident she will continue to labor in the interest of the cause of Christ that she so dearly loves if she is restored to health. G. T. G.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, Feb. 26.

Editors Herald:—It may be of interest to some to know of this place's progress. There are about one hundred and twenty-five houses, all occupied. Quite a number walk from Lucas to work here. There are between forty and fifty Saints living here. We have applied to the authorities for a branch organization. Lucas being two and one half miles away makes it too far for us to meet with them. We have about sixty Sunday school scholars. We have selected and got possession of a beautiful site for a church building. We have over one hundred dollars subscribed and fourteen one-dollar-per-month subscribers.

We expect to collect considerable money almost right away, and then building will commence. As there are so many here from Keb, Iowa, that contributed so largely to the church built there, and as the prospects are that Keb won't last long, it was thought advisable that the Keb church be brought here and rebuilt with some improvements; but there are some that object to it being moved.

Lucas has a coal shaft sunk and operated by the Big Hill Coal Company. There has been a big change for the better. There has been considerable building going on in Lucas during the last summer and fall. There is a good prospect for the future of this place. Bro. John Luke is the pit foreman. The Saints are mostly active and hopeful.

E. B. MORGAN.

DELOIT, Iowa, March 1.

Editors Herald:—The ever-changing month of March finds me in Sac City, Iowa, conducting illustrated lectures, in a pleasant hall, on the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, and origin of the Latter Day Saints' Church. The city papers kindly gave me publicity and I have spoken to full houses with liberty and power. The few Saints here are rejoicing, and the preacher is trying to remain humble and prayerful so the Lord can make better use of him in presenting the great truths of heaven.

A so-called Christian preacher and others have been making some very untruthful, hence unkind assertions in this city about the latter-day work of late. Nearing the close of my lecture last night I was led to make a stirring speech in favor of the divine calling and prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, which I did with power, during which time I told the people I would reward the man with five hundred dollars who could and would prove that Joseph Smith the Seer ever taught, practiced, or sanctioned polygamy; that the offer was good to any man in Sac City, America, Europe, or on the islands of the sea. I tell you, Mr. Editor, that breathless silence reigned in the hall while all eyes were fixed upon me. If the Brighamites wish to accept this offer and hold the investigation in their tabernacle in Salt Lake City, Utah, the offer will hold good for one year. Why not B. H. Roberts accept this offer? Echo answers, Why not?

CHARLES J. HUNT.

SAND POINT, Idaho, Feb. 23.

Editors Herald:—I have not been idle if I have not "much push." I believe I was at Orting when I last addressed you. From there I worked my way back into Eastern Oregon. I made a short trip to the western part of that State, where I had some interesting meetings, the largest our people have had for years, so I was told.

I returned to Condon, Oregon, driving there January 21, and commenced a series of meetings in the Saints' new church, in connection with Bro. A. B. Moore, whom I found to be a congenial colaborer. We held forth for three weeks and baptized three, and left others interested, and hope in time to hear of them accepting the truth. Brn. Moore and Goodwin are able to keep the camp fires burning and will if not hindered.

I came to this place by invitation of Mr. Cyrus Turnbull. His wife is a member and he ought to be, for I think he is a noble, good man. He sent me the means to bring me here, and I am speaking nightly. Have held three meetings to date. Bro. Holt was here a year ago, and with what he and another minister did is all the preaching that has been done. We have three members here, and I hope that we may have more in the near future. We go to church with sleigh or sled. I am this far on my road to the General Conference, which I hope to reach in time to meet with my quorum, April 3, as requested by its president.

The people here give me a good hearing, full house each night. While the house is small, I would rather have a small house well filled with interested listeners than a large house with a few. I shall continue as wisdom may direct.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

D. L. HARRIS.

AMBOY, Ill., Feb. 28.

Editors Herald:—Bro. A. J. Keck and I have been holding meetings at the Ford schoolhouse, this (Lee) county. Stormy weather and the long distance to go made our attendance small. The few scattered Saints there have done nobly, keeping up their Sunday school and Religio constantly. But Brn. John Moose and Lester Wildermuth, with their families, have moved away to Wisconsin, leaving only Brn. Hiel Brunson and M. D. Brunson with their families to continue the work.

We are now visiting some of the scattered Saints in and around Amboy. Expect to stop at Walton for a few days, and then go on to Watertown, working our way towards General Conference.

Yours in the work,

H. E. MOLER.

WIRT, Ind., Feb. 23.

Editors Herald:—I have been waiting and watching to see something in Herald relative to the debate held at Borden, Indiana, January 9–13, between Bro. S. W. L. Scott, and E. G. Denney of the Christian Church. I was informed that some one was authorized to take notes and report the debate, hence I have been loath to make any report whatever; but I consider the discussion of too much importance to say nothing.

Surely it was a grand victory for us from first to last. Much interest was manifested during the sessions, seemingly by all, even by Denney and his associates. While they were loath to see the cause they claim to so much love suffering loss in the estimation of that vast crowd of people, yet we verily believe they heard and learned much that will be hard to absent from their minds. We hope a saying of Jesus will come to their minds, "If ye love me, keep my commandments, and I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter." "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance."—John 14: 15, 16–26.

The arguments of Rev. Denney, though pains had been taken to arrange them in form and numbers, melted away, under the inspiration of the great Creator of heaven and earth manifested in the efforts of Bro. Scott, like the autumn frost before the brilliant sun. To state it in a mild form, Bro. Scott was richly endued with inspiration all the while, more especially when refuting his opponent's theory. It mattered not what position Denney took, Bro. Scott was right after him, and successfully. Denney stated he had held twenty-three or twenty-four debates. If he never before was whipped, so far as argument is concerned, he surely got it this time. And the writer firmly believes he and his coadjutors well knew it.

We were glad to know, however, that Bro. Denney is a fair man, comparatively, in debate, and we hope he now knows it is hard to contend against the power of God.

As a summary in conclusion; we say we believe the debate to be of great importance to Southern Indiana, more especially to the people of Borden and vicinity. Great interest was manifest throughout by those in attendance. Immense crowds assembled, every nook and corner being filled, with standing room at a premium one hour before time of beginning. During the last session the house was so jammed by six o'clock that entrance by the door was impossible. Bro. Scott, the chairman, Bro. Briggs, and others were admitted through a window near the speaker's stand; an estimate of seven hundred people present.

The best of order prevailed, interrupted only by applause for Bro. Scott. We are very sanguine that if a voice of the people could have been had at the close nine of every ten would have been in favor of Bro. Scott; judging from expressions of countenance and their earnest attention and great quietude while Bro. Scott was speaking; also from general remarks of the passers by between sessions. Notwithstanding the bad roads, people came for miles, and seemed to get value received. We were made to rejoice and praise God from whom all blessings flow. Surely the people saw inspiration and noninspiration in contrast.

We think much prejudice was removed. A better understanding of this great work was had, many expressing themselves as being very much pleased, and they were very anxious to have Bro. Scott continue his efforts there. They agreed to obtain use of the city hall and bear all expenses. We were very sorry Bro. Scott could not remain with them. Perhaps much would have been accomplished for good, for surely they think he is a little David with the sling in his hand, going forth to fight the giant Goliath; even Bro. Denney so thought.

At first he rather made light of the Michigan man. Doubtless his mind was changed ere the close of debate. In response to Denney's request for a miracle, Bro. Scott agreed to perform the miracle if Denney would just state to that vast congregation that he was a wicked and an adulterous man. The miracle was not performed, neither did Denney ask for any more signs.

Bro. Scott informed the congregation that Bro. Denney reminded him of a great scuttle fish that would get into shallow water, slap and flutter, dash back and forth, endeavoring to make other fish think he was a Jonah's whale, and when the water became muddy he would lurk away in the muddy stream and seek a hiding place.

One might think from Bro. Denney's bombast and storm that he would clean the clatter, break the broomstick, and kick the little Michigan boy out at the back door; but contrariwise the Michigan boy stood like a stone wall, meeting the arguments of his opponent in such a manner as to impress upon the minds of his auditors that his opponent's arguments were farfetched and strictly found wanting in every sense of the term. Bro. Denney was not blind in this regard either, but had the courage to stem the tide as best he could to the end. We admire his courage, but think his judgment is of minor import. Notwithstanding his number of debates, we presume he has not often been met with such forceful arguments as at this time.

PERRY, Iowa, March 1.

Editors Herald:—I desire to say to the Saints and friends of the Des Moines district, that I am again at home, and as soon as I can move my family to another part of town will be out again doing service for our God.

I left home on the 1st of January and returned the 24th of February; cause of so doing was poor health; and am glad to say that, although my stay was short, I have been benefited beyond expectation.

And this proffered opportunity of a season of rest and recuperation was the kindness of my home branch with the assistance of our dear Saints in the district, to whom I desire to express my heartfelt thanks and gratitude; so I also request a continuation of your prayers in my behalf, that I may so live as to be of service to the church and to the Des Moines district, whom I am now trying to serve in my weakness, but dependent upon His arm.

I see in the gathering agitation a spirit of unrest and perplexity which I fear will be the millstone for many a poor soul. May the Spirit of inspiration be diligently sought after that the law already given may be fully comprehended and the church be all God intended.

In bonds,

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Keep on praying—
God's love and power
In darkest hour
Of deep despair
Respond to prayer.

WHAT CHEER, Iowa.

Dear Sisters:—I for one love the letters in the Mothers' Home Column, and also of our brothers who are out in the field laboring for the Master, often meeting trials and persecution, and leaving their families at home. We all know that must be sad; but the Lord says, "Great shall be their reward." So we will cheerfully say, "Go on brothers, and by our prayers will try and uphold you, and also ask the Lord to bless the dear ones you leave behind." This is a glorious work, and we all should be interested in it. To express some of my thoughts I will repeat a few words of a song

www.LatterDayTruth.org

O, my Redeemer, how can I be silent,
When joyful hosanna from millions above.
Ever repeating that same glad story,
Of Jesus and his wonderful love.

So it is hard for me to keep silent. I feel as though I owe a great deal to the Home Column for the aid and assistance I have received from it. We mothers know how to sympathize with each other. Write often, Sr. Almira, I love to read your letters. Your article, "Why not," was grand. I have been thinking of writing on the subject, When to and when not to marry. It is a most important question, but nearly every one has a different way of thinking. I think parents should be very watchful over their children, especially between fifteen and twenty-five years of age. It is during this time they sow the most wild oats. Wild oats are sometimes sowed with laughter and reaped with tears. We should teach our children to be everything that is good, and to trust in their heavenly Father, and always take him for their guide. If young girls would put off marrying until they were about twenty-five years old, get a good education, learn music, housekeeping and cooking, and fit themselves for all the duties of a faithful wife, would it not be a wiser plan than marrying younger? How often we see young girls married at sixteen, seventeen, or eighteen years of age. In perhaps a year they become mothers, and then how their young minds are worried. Baby to care for, housework to do, often tired and perplexed and their husbands will say many a discouraging word to the young wife, not forgetting to tell her what a clean house his mother keeps. How often I have seen young mothers do their work with their baby in their arms so as to have meals ready and keep their husbands from scolding.

Mothers, don't rush your girls into long dresses. Keep them girls as long as you can. From ten to fifteen years old is when a girl loves her doll best, and I think we should encourage them and show them how to cut and make their doll clothes neatly, teach them to have a time for everything, a place for everything, and everything in its place, and by the time they keep up their music and other lessons, they will have plenty to do until they are about twenty-five. Then kneel down and ask the heavenly Parent to send them a good husband. Don't you think then they would be better able to act as wife and mother?

And again, mothers, while we are teaching our girls how to be good wives and mothers, let us not forget our noble boys, but try and give our boys as good instruction as we do our girls. I believe in treating them both alike. Boys should be taught to respect the girls, and also when they become young men they should respect young ladies. And we should tell them to speak gently of other boys' sisters, because they would not like other boys to speak roughly of their sisters.

But my advice to young men would be, study hard, learn a profession or a trade of some kind, something that you can make a living at. Purchase a neat little home, such as your circumstances will permit, then kneel down to the Father who knows all things, and I am sure you will be directed to one that you will enjoy a lifetime happiness with. I would advise young men to take time; not marry in haste and repent at leisure. At thirty would be a suitable time for young men to marry. Then they would know better how to support a family, and how to meet the many demands of the home. If they marry when they are so young, they can't know how much it takes to keep up expenses after they are married. Of course marriage is ordained of God; but I think we should use wisdom, and realize what we are entering into; and remember that it is for life, and that we should be very careful and prayerful.

We cannot be too careful in giving advice to our young people. Just one more thought. I would like to mention in regard to young people flirting. That is a young lady going first with this and then with that boy. We as Saints should come up higher than to let our daughter do that. We should teach them to be very modest, and never sit up with their gentleman friend later than ten o'clock, as it is hard on their health, and a young man should also be taught by his parents that at ten he should be in his bed. I imagine I hear some of our young people say, "O, she is an old fad;" but never mind, I was young once, and now I can see some wonderful mistakes I made. So I would like to help others to stay in the good path.

From a wellwishing sister and mother,
MRS. R. J. ROWLEY.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

BEVIER, Mo., March 1.

Dear Sisters:—I write this afternoon asking you to pray for our brother, John W. Morgan, who was dangerously injured in the mines while working for the bread that perisheth. We feel it is only by the power of God that he will recover, and we ask that if it be his will that our brother may be restored to health and strength again, and live to perform the labors that are set apart for him, and that he may be able to care for those who are dependent upon him, that faith may be increased and we be able to give the glory and honor to the great physician. Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. A. G. YOUNG.

FIRST REALLY GOOD WAR POEM.

Out of the multitude of indifferent poems which have come from factory and study since the first gun was fired in the Boer-British war, the following, which appears in the Pall Mall Gazette, has merit beyond its mere meter.

Long since our men went forth, superb and glistening,
Flushed with the fierce expectancy of fight;
But on us women of England, waiting, listening,
Dreaming alone at night—
O Lord, have mercy!

They revel high, to war's grim banquet bidden,
To the dregs they drain life's cup, but we sit here,
Silent, obscure, in cloudy shadows hidden,
Tortured with hope and fear—
O Lord, have mercy!

The little feet that once with sweet caressing
The mother fondled, feet of her only son,
Through what red sea of slaughter are they pressing
Beneath an alien sun?
O Lord, have mercy!

In night illumed alone by the scarlet luster
That lights the valley of death from while to while,
We hear the winds of winter rage and bluster
Around our lonely isle—
O Lord, have mercy!

On us, who grudge not that which we are giving,
Flesh of our flesh, life of our very life,
Thou, who art Lord both of the dead and living,
On mother, daughter, wife—
O Lord, have mercy!

THE DELEGATE SYSTEM AND DELEGATE INSTRUCTION.

By the delegate system is the only practical way for an association to do business, if not the only possible way. It would be extremely impracticable for distant districts to be as extensively represented as nearer

ones. Distance and the consequent expense in travel, debars many who otherwise would attend. If all were allowed to vote, the convention would become large and unwieldy; and a resolution passed by a majority of those present would often be the expression of but one school or branch. We have seen conventions where large schools were represented by a single person, and the local school had a majority of the entire convention. One branch or school might do the business for the whole district, and might repeatedly locate the convention in their midst, and thereby remain in power.

With the delegate system in use, this misuse of power is not possible. The one representative can cast the full vote to which his district is entitled, and thus in a measure complete justice is done.

Now that the General Convention is fast approaching, stop and think a moment. Who are you going to appoint delegates? Just anyone that happens to be going? I hope not. It would be a neglect of duty if you did your work in any such a slipshod way. It is very certain that not all good Latter Day Saints make good Sunday school delegates. Would you delegate a farmer to a medical convention? A lawyer to a merchants' association? Or a merchant to a poultry growers' association? No; because it is out of their line. No; the farmer knows nothing of "materia medica." The lawyer is not familiar with the various ways of making goods attractive; or of exactly supplying your trade. What does the mechanic know of many diseases or parasites of the poultry yard, or of dressing birds for market? Yes, we remark, it is out of the lines of work in which they are proficient, and their counsel would be worthless for that reason. Then will you send those who are not active in Sunday school work to speak for you? to vote for you? Can you expect them to be proficient in the Sunday school line, and not be connected therewith?

When you appoint your delegates, in no case should you appoint one who is not in sympathy with the work. And they should be in close touch with it.

Another important question now is, "Is it right to instruct delegates?" Many persons have been grieved because they were obliged to vote against their personal convictions, being on an instructed delegation. Again; persons go instructed, possibly with their own sanction, and after listening to the discussion, their opinions change. They would change their votes, but cannot. Is it wise to instruct delegates?

On the other hand, a school wishes to place its vote a certain way. It may be that it has considered the question well; but their only delegate would vote against them should he go uninstructed. What are they to do? Allow him to go and cast their own vote against them? No, certainly not. Instruct the delegate how to vote, and he is in honor bound to cast his vote accordingly. If the delegate does not care to abide instruction, let him decline the appointment.

We think best, however, to avoid instructing delegates at all, except on questions where a principle is not involved. We believe better results will follow if delegates be left free to vote as convinced in the deliberations. But be it wise or otherwise, it is a right which all bodies have to instruct their delegates, when they so elect, and the delegates are in honor bound to vote accordingly.

Select for your representatives earnest, zealous, spiritual minded, and active Sunday School workers. Send with them your prayers and support, and God will bless the whole Sunday School Association.

A DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT.

SEEING DEFECTS.

Seeing flaws is a good business, or a bad business, according to your purpose in observing. An inspector of machinery, or a corrector of faults, does well to note defects in order to supply what is lacking. But a man who is trying to get the most power he can, safely, out of a machine as it stands, or who would profit by the best words of a speaker or writer, had better not trouble himself over what is lacking. It is enough for him to recognize and use what there is. The average fault-finder gets no good himself, and does no good to anybody else. The lowest grade of intellect commonly shows itself in the power to see obvious defects. The highest grade evidences itself in finding something worth seeing where the average man would miss it.—Sunday School Times.

IT is reported that a boy gave this answer in geography: "The interior of Africa is principally used for purposes of exploration." With some persons the life of Christ is principally used as a subject for speculation. Beware of this error.

THE only way to make a Sunday school a success is to make each class a success; to make the class a success, the lesson must be made a success; to make the lesson a success, the teacher must make intelligent and prayerful preparation.

ONE of the first rules of teaching—never tell a child what you can make the child tell you — should be practiced in the Sunday school. To find what you want gives the child the joy of discovery.

solved, that we hereby petition General Conference to more clearly define the law in regard to those members who continually absent themselves from church services, and who never carry out their promises to so attend when being labored with by the proper officers. What course should the teacher pursue in such cases, in view of the command that "he shall see that the church meet together often," and "that thou mayest keep thyself more fully unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon this, my holy day" (D. C. 59: 2). of the gathering, consecration, and equality; and Whereas, the Lord has counseled his elders to assemble to agree upon his word in the following manner: "And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church . . . and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me, that inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received. Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken. even that which ye have received."—D. C. 43: 3. Again: "I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand."—D. C. 85: 21. "Where no counsel is, the people fall: but in the multitude of counsellors there is safety."—Prov. 11: 14. And in speaking of the council of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and Bishopric, in 1894, the Lord said: "It should have been done before, but the adversary hath hindered, desiring to prevent the success of my work in the earth." Therefore, be it resolved, that we instruct our delegates to the General Convference of 1900 to endeavor to secure a council of the priesthood of the church, where calm and prayerful deliberation shall obtain, and that a general understanding may be arrived at, as to the present scope of gathering; how far it applies now, in what does consecration consist, and to what extent the principle of equality is to obtain in the church to-day; together with any other important questions that may come before the body. REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

WESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The Western Passenger Association has granted reduced rates (one and one third fare for the round trip) to the coming General Conference and conventions of Zion's Religio-Literary Society and the General Sunday School Association. Tickets on the going passage may be purchased (over Western Association lines) from April 3–9 inclusive—on any of those dates. The conference meets on the 6th, but the sale of tickets from April 3–9 will permit attendance also at the conventions.

Reduced rates are granted on the following conditions:—

1. Going tickets must be purchased not earlier than April 3 and not later than the 9th. (Take special notice that going tickets are sold over Trunk Line Association roads from April 1–8 only.)

2. The rule is to purchase full fare tickets on the going trip (except in cases where parties travel together on special rates, as hereinafter provided).

3. Passengers must, in all cases, obtain a separate certificate with every ticket purchased. Do not accept a certificate covering two or more persons. Each ticket bought requires a separate certificate, and to which the purchaser is entitled.

4. Such certificates must be delivered to the Church Secretary, and when signed by him and signed and stamped by the railroad agent at Lamoni, will entitle purchasers to return tickets to destination at one third the usual fare; provided one hundred tickets are purchased; provided further, that ministers holding half-fare permits are not entitled to said reduction; nor are tickets purchased at fifty cents or less to be counted in total number required to secure reduction (except where they form part of a larger total fare).

5. Tickets on the going passage may be limited or unlimited, according to the rules of roads selling them; but return tickets are good only for continuous passage, and not later than April 24.

Purchasers should see that their names are written on each certificate before handing to the Secretary. Certificates should be handed in promptly that the local railroad agent may be notified of the required number to secure the rate.

The above contains essential items, but the following particulars are given in full to avoid misunderstandings:—

"We take pleasure in advising that rate of a fare and one third for the round trip upon the certificate plan, from points in Eastern Committee and Trans-Missouri territories of this Association, has been announced subject to the conditions herein named, over such lines shown on the enclosed slips as are interested.

"Reduced rates on the certificate plan to points within this territory become effective only when evidence is presented to the joint agent of the terminal lines at the place of meeting, showing that one hundred persons have actually been in attendance holding certificates reading for tickets over terminal lines to the meeting point, and when such certificates are stamped by him with his office stamp and his written signature affixed thereto; except that where parties or clubs traveling in a body purchase round trip party tickets to the place of meeting from stations from which the local one way rate is more than fifty cents and at not less than the rate announced on the certificate plan for the particular meeting in question (instead of one way tickets at regular rate) and present to joint agent a certificate from the selling agent to that effect, they will be counted by the joint agent in reckoning the attendance at any meeting.

"When reduced rates are made for meetings under double plan providing for sale of individual excursion tickets within a restricted radius and certificate plan outside of such radius, excursion tickets from stations from which the one-way fare to the place of meeting is more than fifty cents, shall be counted when necessary to make up the required minimum.

"No certificate will be honored which was issued to cover the sale of more than one single-trip ticket.

"Certificates showing purchase of tickets at fifty cents or less will not be counted in arriving at the total, nor will reduction be granted in any case where the rate at which ticket was sold is fifty cents or less.

"Certificates of the issue of any and all lines in territory from which reduction is announced will be considered in computing attendance, and when lines in this territory arrange to honor certificates of connecting lines for business originating beyond this territory, such certificates will also be counted by joint agent.

"Ministers or others who travel on clerical or half-fare permits or commutation tickets of any description, are not entitled to this reduction, nor to be included in computing the number in attendance at any meeting.

"For detailed information as to the manner in which the business will be transacted by each line, and particularly as to the junction points via which each line will arrange to grant the reduction, please communicate with the General Passenger or Ticket Agents of the interested lines, a list of which lines in this territory is inclosed herewith.

"Under the method usually observed in certificate plan business, the passenger pays full fare on going trip, and on presentation of certificate to that effect, and if all other conditions as herein-named including presentation of evidence to joint agent of the required attendance upon part of those who have purchased one-way or round-trip tickets to meeting point as shown by certificates presented to him are complied with, a reduced rate of one third fare, is granted on return trip (by route traversed on going trip), to original starting point within authorized territory. Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is usually necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket of each road's issue, between points traveled thereon, and procure certificate thereof for each of the lines in this territory over which he traveled in going to the meeting, as through tickets are not always sold, and it is not always practicable for the various lines to honor each other's certificates. Passengers should, therefore, ascertain from the ticket agent what portion of their journey can be covered by the certificate obtainable from him, and procure certificate filled out to correspond with the ticket purchased.

"Failure to procure or present certificate invalidates any claim for reduction in return fare.

"The tickets purchased for going passage may be either limited or unlimited, according to the rate paid or the regulations in effect on the line over which it reads; but the return tickets sold at the reduced fare will, in all cases, be limited to continuous passage.

"Certificates which show the purchase of tickets not earlier than three days prior to the date announced as the opening date of the meeting [April 6], or which show the purchase of tickets during the first three days of the meeting, may be honored if presented not later than three days after the date announced as the closing date of the meeting, Sunday not to be accounted as a day in any case.

"Under the rules it is necessary that the Secretary . . . of your organization collect all certificates at the earliest possible time after meeting convenes, take them all to the office of the Joint Agent at one time, and after he has satisfied himself that the requisite number is in attendance, and that all other conditions upon which reduced rates are made have been fulfilled, he will stamp the certificates with his office stamp, thereby making them valid for return tickets at the reduced rates as announced.

"After one hundred certificates have been thus stamped by him, all others can have their certificates stamped on individual application, provided same is made within the prescribed limit, three days after the closing date of the meeting [April 20], Sunday not to be counted as a day."

CENTRAL PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

Territory: That portion of the State of Illinois east of a line drawn from Chicago to East St. Louis, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Ontario, Western Pennsylvania, and a small portion of Western New York.

Committee cannot report action concerning our conference until March 15. Further notice will be given.

TRUNK LINE ASSOCIATION.

1. Take notice, that tickets are sold from April 1-8, only, on going passage—one day less than over Western Association lines. Travelers may thus reach Western Association territory and purchase tickets over its lines not later than the 9th.

2. Passengers pay full fare on going passage. Secure a certificate with every ticket purchased. Certificates when duly signed by the Church Secretary and signed and stamped by agent at Lamoni, will entitle the holders to return ticket to destination at one third regular fare. Holders may return as late as April 24. "Return tickets in all cases are limited to continuous passage to destination."

3. Tickets costing less than sevety-five cents will not entitle the purchasers to reduced rates (unless part of a series of tickets to destination.)

4. Ticket agents at starting points should have "timely notice of intentions, so that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required."

5. The same general plan is followed as over Western Association lines (with exceptions noted above) but the following rules are published to avoid possible misunderstandings:—

"GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS.

"1. The reduction is from Trunk Line territory, i. e., from Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Dunkirk, and Salamanca, New York; Erie and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Bellaire, Ohio; Wheeling, Parkersburg, and Huntington, West Virginia, and points east thereof, except in New England.

"2. The reduction is fare and one third on committee's certificate, conditional on there being an attendance at the meeting of not less than 100 persons who hold proper certificates obtained from ticket agents at starting points, showing payment of full first-class fare of not less than seventy-five cents, through to place of meeting. Agents at all important stations and coupon ticket offices are supplied with certificates.

"3. Certificates are not kept at all stations. If, however, the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to place of meeting, he can inform the delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained. In such a case the delegate should purchase a local ticket to such station and there take up his certificate and through ticket to place of meeting.

"4. Going tickets, in connection with which certificates are issued for return, may be sold only on three days, and if a Sunday intervenes four days, immediately preceding the agreed opening date of the meeting, and during the first three days (Sunday included) of the meeting; . . . provided also that, when meetings are held at distant points to which the authorized limit is greater than three days, tickets may be sold before the meeting in accordance with the limits shown in regular tariffs.

"5. Deposit the certificate with the secretary or other proper officer of the organization at the meeting, for necessary endorsement and visé of special agent. Receipts for fare paid will not be accepted in lieu of certificates. . . .

"6. On presentation of the certificate, duly validated, not later than the third day following the agreed date for adjournment (Sunday not to be counted as a day), the agent at place of meeting will return the holder to starting point, upon a continuous passage ticket, by the route over which the going journey was made, at one third the highest limited fare by such route.

"7. Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

"8. No refund of fare will be made on account of any person failing to obtain a certificate.

"Delegates and others availing of the reduction in fare should present themselves at the offices for certificates and tickets at least thirty minutes before departure of trains.

CHURCH SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

ENROLLMENT IN QUORUMS.

The law provides for enrollment in quorums of all church officers, including elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. (D. C. 104: 31; 118: 1; 120: 10.)

Such enrollment is regulated by rules adopted by General Conferences, which provide that all applications shall be forwarded to the Church Secretary.

Applications should contain full name, office, dates of birth, baptism, ordination, and by whom ordained; also permanent address, and labor done, for quorum records. None of these items should be omitted.

Quorums make selections from applications in the Secretary's hands.

The Secretary cannot enroll anyone in a quorum. Quorums report all enrollments to General Conference. Presidents and their counselors are authorized to select names and enroll members to fill vacancies, between conferences, subject to quorum approval or disapproval.

The General Conference of 1897 authorized the Secretary to enroll applicants in quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, which was done and referred to the Quorum of Twelve, for completion of said quorums by selection and ordination of officers, at the General Conference of 1898. However, the Twelve were unable to complete said organizations then, because of absence of parties and other hindering causes. Brethren whose names appeared in published lists prepared by the Secretary will therefore understand the status of said applicants. Statements designed to reach the matter of more complete enrollment will be made to the General Conference of 1900. In the meantime, vacancies in existing quorums may be filled by quorum officers, from applications in the hands of the Church Secretary.

THIRD QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Will you send in your reports of your labors in the past two years so they will reach me by April 1. Our brother, John T. Kinnaman, who was for many years president of our quorum has been called home by the Master, hence at the coming General Conference in our quorum meeting we will have to elect another president. I trust we may have a good representation.

Your colaborer and secretary.

GENERAL CONFERENCE VISITORS.

The committee calls attention to the train service at Lamoni, giving time of arrival. We have two trains from the north daily (except Sunday), a passenger 6: 25 a. m. and a freight carrying passengers, connecting with passenger at Bethany Junction 12: 30 p. m. From the south a passenger 8: 17 p. m. and a second train from the south to Bethany Junction 2: 10 p. m. This latter train is met at Bethany Junction by a hack. Passengers from the south would do well to arrange, so far as practicable, to come on evening train, and save hack fare.

No trains arrive or depart from Lamoni, on Sundays. However, the hack from Lamoni meets the passenger trains at Bethany Junction on Sunday as follows: arriving from the north, 12: 15 p. m.; from the south, 2: 10 p. m.

Members of the reception committee will be at the trains, and may be known by their wearing a ribbon badge. Should anyone arrive and not find the committee they should go at once to the Brick Church, three blocks west of the depot, and there inquire for the reception committee.

The committee does not promise free board to any except those who make such arrangements previous to their arrival. There are not many such places to be had, and if you do not receive notice of being assigned to a place for free entertainment, come prepared to pay $2 50 per week, or take your own chances.

If the committee can be of any service to you, they would be pleased to hear from you. Those who have made their own arrangements need not write, but if you need help to find your place when you arrive the committee will aid you.

A large attendance is expected and places will be rapidly filled up.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

THE MAJESTY OF THE TRIVIAL.

The poet Goethe once expressed the pessimism of many thoughts, saying: "When we are young, we think we shall build palaces for the gods; but when we are old we are thankful if we have dug away some of the rubbish under our feet." We cannot help feeling that, when we are foolish and discouraged we are all inclined to talk like that; but that when we are wise then our eyes are opened to see that he who digs away even a little of the rubbish from under his feet, is building palaces for himself and for God. It is so easy to belittle the little. It is so hard to discern the greatness of the small, to appreciate that, indeed,

"The common deeds of the common day
Are ringing bells in the far away."

We see the man chipping away at a rock, and we say: "He is cutting stone." The fact of the case is he is building a cathedral, or a palace; or, better than either, maybe, a schoolhouse. We see the coarse hands and soiled apron, and we do not see the glory that is to be, and that part which is with this man.

We remember a traveler telling of his visit to Cologne. Standing in front of the great cathedral, he suddenly heard a voice speaking just behind him: "That was a good job we did, wasn't it?" "You did?" "Sure, sir!" was the reply, "I worked on the spires." Perhaps that man only cleared away the rubbish or set in a block or two; but he had the right idea of it. The whole work was great, wonderful. His part was therefore worthy and glorious. Yes, Michael Angelo was only clearing away the rubbish which kept the stone from showing the angel there was imprisoned within it; and Luther, in his day, was only clearing away the rubbish which was keeping the powerful impulse of religion and righteousness from shining out into the world, as God meant it to do. No man knows whether his work is small or great, nor how great it is, until the whole thing, as it is in the Mind of God, is finished. Then the rubbish is cleared away, and the palaces of God appear.—Church Union.

SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT ON PURE FOOD.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 28.—The Senate Committee on Manufactures to-day submitted a report on the investigation of food and drink adulterations.

Accompanying the report is a great mass of testimony taken in the leading cities of the country.

The report says:—

"The adulteration of prepared or manufactured foods is extensively practiced and in many cases to the great discredit of our manufacturers. It is only fair to say, however, that a large proportion of the American manufacturers who are engaged in adulterating food products do so in order to meet competition.

"It is the purpose of this committee to adopt this uniform rule: To prohibit the sale of deleterious and unhealthy food products, and as to those food products which are simply cheapened by adulterants to compel the marking of those goods for what they are. Deleterious food products should be prohibited and the rest thoroughly regulated.

"There have been two general ways suggested as to the matter of regulation. First, to put the important food products under the internal revenue law, as we have in the case of butter, filled cheese, and, at the last Congress, flour.

"The other plan to regulate the food products is contained in Senate Bill 2,426, which establishes a department under the Secretary of Agriculture and provides for the establishment of a board which shall fix the standards for foods, drinks, and for drugs, based on the American pharmacopœia. The strong argument in favor of this plan is the fact that it would be cumbersome to take all the small articles of food products that are now adulterated and allow their sophistication or adulteration for the purposes of cheapening, and require a stamp upon each of the small packages offered for sale.

The report says the committee has had many difficulties to overcome, and feels that in many cases it has not been able to secure the absolute truth. That so much knowledge has been gained, it feels, is due largely to Secretary Wilson and Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief chemist of the Agricultural department.

After a detailed explanation with reference to the testimony and analyses as regards many specific articles of food or drink, and the extent to which they were found free from, or guilty of, adulteration, the committee takes up the matter of the importation of adulterated foods, and says:—

"If it is policy to restrict our citizens to the use of pure food, we certainly should apply the same rule to foreigners who manufacture goods to be sold in this country."

The committee gives some glaring instances of this unwholesome and unjust competition which reputable American dealers and manufacturers have to meet.—Exchange.

CUBAN CATHOLICS MAY SECEDE.

Havana, Feb. 21. — Salvador Cisneros, first President of the Cuban provisional republic, presided last night at a meeting called to protest against the appointment of Mgr. Sbaretti to the Bishopric of Havana. The meeting decided to send to Rome and Washington dispatches protesting against the appointment, and a special committee was chosen to wait upon General Wood in connection with the matter. It was decided that in case all these methods should fail an independent national church should be founded. General Maximo Gomez sent a letter expressing his sympathy with the movement. Another meeting was held this evening.

REASONS FOR LOST FAITH.

GREEN BAY PASTOR TELLS WHY HE LEAVES METHODIST CHURCH.

The Rev. William Forkell, who has just resigned as pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Green Bay, Wisconsin, sets forth his reasons in the following letter to the Tribune:

"Green Bay, Wis., Feb. 2.—I resign voluntarily because of my inability to feel at home in an organization whose characteristic dogmas I cannot heartily accept. After a struggle of some six years with the question as to my theological fitness as a Methodist preacher, during which time I have tried to do my fullest duty and have not altogether failed, I have at last taken the only step an honest man can take—viz.: resign from the Methodist ministry.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

"The dogmas I cannot find myself in harmony with are:—

"First.—The deity of Jesus (as distinguished from the divinity of Christ), as implied in the first paragraph of the articles of religion. The divinity of Christ, as I believe, is not contingent upon supernatural physical condition, but rather upon his entire surrender to the influences of God. That which is in all men but a spark was in him a living flame.

"Second.—The interpretation of the theory of the atonement as though it were the payment of a penalty to 'reconcile the Father to us,' as implied in paragraphs 2 and 20. Nowhere does the Scripture allow the theory that Jesus changed God's mind, but rather that 'God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself.' Jesus did not suppress God's anger, but expressed God's love to such a degree that it wins (reconciles) us to God.

"In the same paragraphs 'original guilt' is mentioned, a doctrine to me unbelievable. Man was made a character-developing being, and as such must needs have the privilege of knowing good and evil, choosing between which develops character; the fall of man was in reality a rise of man out of brute innocence into tried virtue.

AS TO SALVATION.

"Closely related to this is the doctrine of substituted righteousness, as founded on paragraphs 9 and 10. Jesus came into the world, not to cover up sin, but rather to uncover and 'condemn sin in the flesh' by the life he lived amongst us. 'Salvation' means more than escape from the punishment of sins; it certainly means a change of inclination from sinning to a life of rightness. Salvation means character. Heaven cannot be earned by another for us, no more than education. Salvation is not primarily intended as a ticket to heaven, or a life insurance policy for the other world; it is a spiritual capacity to know and enjoy God. 'Jesus paid it all' is a dangerous doctrine, not to say an immoral one, and its effects are seen on every hand in the many abortive Christian attempts.

"The forgiveness of sins is not a matter of commercial adjustment between God and Jesus; sins are forgiven as soon as they are given up. We must join God in the forgiveness of our sins. The words 'propitiation,' 'satisfaction,' and 'oblation' savor too much of the times when stakes and dungeons figured prominently in the 'church militant' arsenal. Christ is the winning power of God amongst men, and we as Christians are to join him in the 'redemption' of the world, by explaining God to the world, as he did. The word 'atonement' does not occur once in the original New Testament. Wherever it is used it gives the meaning of winning or reconciling.

"The doctrine of endless punishment, though not in the articles of religion, is nevertheless a test of the loyalty of the Methodist preacher to the theology of his church. This theory I cannot accept in the light of the eternal love of God. All punishment in human relations must be corrective in its aim and loving in its motive; and how can we for one moment attribute to God's nature what we would vehemently condemn in human relations? I believe more than ever in the fact that all sin will be punished; the way of life is a 'narrow way;' sin becomes more and more fearful as the soul rises toward the ideal; the purest and tenderest human relations feel the horror of sin the most; sin becomes black under the white light of God's truth and love; punishment is as certain as that fire burns, cold freezes; and the purpose of the pain is to warn us away from further harm.

"The thought that even the worst man should suffer forever would turn my heaven, should I gain it, into unrest and pain. I would ask that God allow me the privilege of spending part of my eternity in that dismal and horrible realm and thus save one soul from torment, rather than 'sit and sing my (selfish) soul away in endless bliss' amongst angels; I expect an appointment in the great beyond among those who need a word of cheer and a helping hand; heaven bought at the expense of such torment of millions, yea even to a single soul, is too dearly bought. I could not enjoy it even though I could room next door to Gabriel.

DOUBTS THE BELIEF.

"I could not believe the doctrine of endless punishment unless I accept the inevitable conclusion that God had abdicated his throne and surrendered it to demons. No, 'the Lord reigneth, let the people rejoice.' These are the lines on which I differ from the supposed (?) views of the Methodist Church. I might say 'there are others,' but in time they will speak. For six years I attempted to do what older ones than myself advised me to do—viz.: suppress my convictions and preach on general lines, or, as some say, 'preach the gospel, and do not delve into those subjects. I tried it and failed; the mind was made to think; truth never injures, error always does. We demand that the student of anatomy tell us all he knows; the scientist is paid for thinking new thoughts; the astronomer has an observatory built for him; but in many instances we train our preachers to think 'our' way of 'our' God in 'our' church: in other words, we groove paths for thinkers in theological study, instead of demanding independent and inspired thought. Theological gramophones are not wanted in this day.

"In closing, I desire to say, in justice to the church, whose spirit I shall ever love, that I leave of my own accord, and in face of the unanimous petition of the members of my church to remain, and the consent of the authorities, but I could not remain and be an honest man; hence the step. I felt that I must be true to the light that has come to me with so much inspiration, and to suppress my convictions would make me untrue to God and man." — William Forkell in Chicago Tribune, February 12, 1900.

THE EXPLODED DEVIL.

Men don't believe in a devil now, as their fathers used to do;
They have opened the doors of the widest creed to let his Majesty through,
And there isn't a print of his cloven foot, nor a fiery dart from his bow,
To be found in earth or air to-day; for the world has voted it so.

But who is mixing the terrible draught that palsies heart and brain?
Who loads the bier of each passing year with ten hundred thousand slain?
Who blights the bloom of the earth to-day with the fiery breath of hell?
If the devil isn't and never was, won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saint? Who digs the pits for his feet?
Who sows the tares in the fields of Time wherever God sows the wheat?
The devil is voted not to be, and of course the thing is true;
But who is doing the terrible work which the devil alone should do?

We're told that he does not go about like a roaring lion now;
But whom shall we hold responsible for the everlasting row
To be heard in church and state to-day, to earth's remotest bound,
If the devil, by unanimous vote, is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody step to the front forthwi and make his bow and show
How the frauds and crimes of a single spring up. We'd like to know.
The devil is voted not to be, and of co
the devil's gone,
But simple people would like to know w no carries his business on.

PENROSE VS. PRES. B. YOUNG.

Bro. Quincy Anderson, of Ozark, Missouri, has been in correspondence with Elder C. W. Penrose, Editor of the Deseret News, the organ of the dominant church in Utah, in reference to the teaching of President Brigham Young concerning the Adam-God theory. In the reply of Elder Penrose he denies the accuracy of the quotation made by Bro. R. Etzenhouser from the teaching of President Young, in his book, "Utah Mormonism in Contrast," pages 32, 33. We give Elder Penrose's letter in full, and also the quotation from "a sermon delivered by President Brigham Young, in the Tabernacle, Great Salt Lake City, April 9, 1852."

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah,
Feb. 17, 1900.

MR. QUINCY ANDERSON, Ozark, Mo.,

Dear Sir:—In reply to your letter of inquiry, I have to say that President Brigham Young, in the discourse of which you speak, did not say that "the Virgin Mary was not overshadowed by the Holy Ghost." He did not say that it was "Adam." He did not say that "Adam was our only God." What he did say, on this subject, was that Jesus was not "begotten" by the Holy Ghost. He taught that Jesus was the "first-begotten" of God in the spirit, and the "only begotten" of God in the flesh. As to Adam, he taught that he was God in the sense of being at the head of the human family. That he was Michael, the Ancient of Days, and in the resurrection would be at the head. In that way the whole human family will be related to him as his children, and in the Patriarchal order he will be the personage with whom they will have to do, and the only one in that capacity. President Young taught faith in that Eternal Being to whom Adam and all his race should bow in humble reverance, who is our Eternal Father and the Father of our elder brother, Jesus Christ, and is the Great Elohim. The Journal of Discourses is not now in print and I do not know of any volume now on sale; however, I have given you the substance of President Young's teaching as to Adam. Hoping that this will be satisfactory, I am,

Yours truly,
C. W. PENROSE,
Editor News.

The letter is typewritten and signed by Mr. Penrose in ink, with the words, Editor News, added in writing, evidently in Mr. Penrose's handwriting.

The citation from the Journal of Discourses is as follows. The heading of the article in the Journal of Discourses, page 46, volume 1, published by F. D. and S. W. Richards, No. 15 Wilton Street, Liverpool, (though the title page bears the imprint of both London and Liverpool,) has as a closing sentence in capital letters, this: "ADAM, OUR FATHER and our God."

Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is MICHAEL, the archangel, the ANCIENT OF DAYS! about whom holy men have written and spoken—HE is our FATHER and our GOD, and the only God with whom WE have to do. Every man upon the earth, professing Christians or non-professing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later. They came here, organized the raw material, and arranged in their order the herbs of the field, the trees, the apple, the peach, the plum, the pear, and every other fruit that is desirable and good for man; the seed was brought from another sphere, and planted in this earth. The thistle, the thorn, the brier, and the obnoxious weed did not appear until after the earth was cursed. When Adam and Eve had eaten of the forbidden fruit, their bodies became mortal from its effects, and therefore their offspring were mortal. When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family; and when he took a tabernacle, it was begotten by his Father in heaven, after the same manner as the tabernacles of Cain, Abel, and the rest of the sons and daughters of Adam and Eve; from the fruits of the earth, the first earthly tabernacles were originated by the Father, and so on in succession. I could tell you much more about this; but were I to tell you the whole truth, blasphemy would be nothing to it, in the estimation of the superstitious and over-righteous of mankind. However, I have told you the truth as far as I have gone. I have heard men preach upon the divinity of Christ, and exhaust all the wisdom they possessed. All Scripturalists, and approved theologians who were considered exemplary for piety and education, have undertaken to expound on this subject, in every age of the Christian era; and after they have done all, they are obliged to conclude by exclaiming "great is the mystery of godliness," and tell nothing.

It is true that the earth was organized by three distinct characters, namely, Eloheim, Yahovah, and Michael, these three forming a quorum, as in all heavenly bodies, and in organizing element, perfectly represented in the Deity, as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

Again, they will try to tell how the divinity of Jesus is joined to his humanity, and exhaust all their mental faculties, and wind up with this profound language, as describing the soul of man, "it is an immaterial substance!" What a learned idea! Jesus, our elder brother, was begotten in the flesh by the same character that was in the garden of Eden, and who is our Father in Heaven. Now, let all who may hear these doctrines, pause before they make light of them, or treat them with indifference, for they will prove their salvation or damnation.

I have given you a few leading items upon this subject, but a great deal more remains to be told. Now, remember from this time forth, and forever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pp. 50, 51.

Whatever may have been the motive of Elder Penrose in replying to Quincy Anderson as he has done, it is not a little strange that one who should be acquainted with the published works of his church should make such an answer.

The evident effort of President Young in the discourse from which the quotation was made by Bro. Etzenhouser, and which we have given above, was to discredit the relation of the New Testament writers touching the nativity of Jesus. The statements of both Matthew and Luke in their opening chapters, in both the King James Version, and the inspired Holy Scriptures, are contradicted by President Young, even as what he said is given by Elder Penrose. And in the quotation as it is found in the Journal of Discourses, the statements of Matthew and Luke are not only discredited, but a different and contradictory version is given.

In the discourse of Pres. Young, the Bible relation of the origin of man on the earth is directly ignored and disputed; and a speculative theory spun about celestial bodies becoming mortal by eating of the forbidden fruit. This was evidently done to create a basis for argument bolstering the celestial wife dogma. In the Journal of Discourses the words "celestial body," "one of his wives," "Michael, the archangel, the Ancient of Days," are emphasized by caps, small caps, and italic letters; and the sentence "HE is our FATHER and our GOD and the only God with whom WE have to do," is put in italics, and caps to call especial attention to the sentiment expressed. Can anyone who reads this quotation, and we have given it as it was printed by the brothers, F. D. and S. W. Richards, believe that it does not say "Adam was our only God"?

Is there anything in this about Adam being God in the sense of being the first of the human race? Not a word. And can anybody read the marked declaration and believe that President Young did not say that "Adam was our only God," in most positive terms? What else can the words "And the only God with whom we have to do," mean?

Mr. Penrose is the wrong man to undertake to apologize for these and other teachings of President Young, and to tell what that distinguished man meant by this and that saying of his. It is too late in the day.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Men who believe in the angel's message and in the mission of Joseph Smith, are drifting back to the books of the church. There is not so strong nor so blind a reliance on the living oracles. The books are now of much more worth than the "ashes of a rye straw;" they are more to the church than "a schoolboy's jacket;" hence, no subterfuge by an inferior mind can dematerialize these teachings of the founder of Utah, and rehabilitate them into harmless platitudes meaning less than the words themselves convey. We have compared the quotation from pages 32, 33, of Bro. R. Etzenhouser's work with the statement as it occurs in Journal of Discourses, and find it correct, less the italics and capital letters.

It is absurdly foolish for our Utah friends to accuse us of purposely misquoting President Young; for the publications from which we quote are many of them in the possession of the Utah people and should we misquote it would be sure to be found out and exposed. It is equally foolish for these same men to deny the import of such plain statements as the one in question concerning Adam-God theory.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

What is the meaning of the last sentence of paragraph 11, section 117, Doctrine and Covenants.

It means as the Lord had given commandments concerning the gathering of the Saints into the "regions round about" those commandments were still in force, and should be honored. (See Sec. 102.) The revelation given on Fishing River, June 22, 1834.

What territory is included in the term "regions round about" (D. C. 117:11)?

We have no data from which to state positively, but approximately it would include an area around the center of at least one day's travel by the best method at the disposal of the people. From five hundred to seven hundred and fifty miles.

In an organized branch where an elder and a member get drunk for the first, second, or third time, can the president of the branch prefer charges against them without first consulting the branch?

Drunkenness is usually a public offense; and if a member offends in this way, he should be labored with kindly and admonished in gentleness and quietness, for the first and second offense; if he persists in his course the president of the branch may proceed against him by reporting him to the branch business meeting with specifications of the time and place of the offense having been committed, and let the branch order the inquiry into the matter. This is the better way and would avoid complications.

A branch of the church with three priests in it, one of them presiding priest of the branch; has this presiding priest a right to call on either of the other two priests to help him in his labors without the branch first calling one of them, or both as the case may be, to help him?

We so understand the matter; that he would be so authorized to do.

When the presiding elder of a branch calls a council meeting is it right for whosoever will in the branch to come to that meeting, or just the branch officers only?

It would depend on the terms of the call. If for branch officers, then branch officers only should attend. If for the priesthood of the church, then all of the priesthood who could should attend.

How often should a branch have council meetings in order to grow in and advance with the work?

As often as the condition of the branch and the circumstances of the priesthood could arrange to meet for that purpose. In ordinary branch; once in every two months, or if convenient, and results were satisfactory once a month would seem to be often enough. And if, and if the council meetings were made the scene of wrangling, and official domineering, it would be too often if they met once a year. If peace and good will prevailed, once every month to take the matters of the work into consideration should give evidence of spiritual growth and accord.

When? where? and by whom was John the Baptist baptized?

We know of no means to determine when, where, or by whom the rite of baptism was performed for John the Baptist.

In the revelation on priesthood given through the Seer, September 22, 23, 1832, section 83, paragraph 4, Doctrine and Covenants, is the following, referring to John:—

Whom God raised up, being filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb: for he was baptized while he was yet in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God at the time he was eight days old unto this power: to overthrow the kingdom of the Jews, and to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of his people.

The relation in the Scriptures is very brief. But little is said of him until his coming as a prophet.

Luke 1:80, has this:—

The child grew and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel.

He was ordained to be a Nazarite from his birth; is stated by William Smith in Bible Dictionary; and citing to Luke 1:15.

He was the fulfillment of prophecy, a child of promise named by prophecy and his work set out before him. He was of a priestly house on either side of his parentage. The probabilities are, that as the other rites usual in such cases had been attended to in the instance of John in his childhood, the rite of baptism had been also observed. And it is clear that by the acknowledgment and acceptance of the office work of John by the Savior, he was fully authorized to fill the office to which he was called and to baptize not only other men of his race, but Jesus as well.

HONORS FOR GRACELAND.

Bro. Daniel and Sr. Fannie Jones intended this last fall to take a trip to Europe, including some parts of England and the Paris World's Fair, but business conditions assumed with Bro. J. M. Stubbart, changed their design. In making their preparations to go they secured letters of introduction and certificates of social and financial standing that would have given them the entree to portions of the social world over there, and as their daughters Martha and Pearl were to have been of the party, it would have placed graduates of Graceland in a position to bring that institution into notice. Letters from Gov. Leslie M. Shaw, of Iowa, our own excellent Governor; Gov. W. A. Poynter, of Nebraska, commending Bro. Jones and family to the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States, as well as to others, would have helped them. Letters from the Leader, Fremont, Nebraska; and one from Lillian M. N. Stevens, President of the National W. C. T. U., to Miss Agnes E. Slack, Secretary of the World's W. C. T. U. and British Women's Temperance Association, Ripley, Derbyshire, England, and one from General Boardman, a relative of Sr. Jones; and one, a personal letter, from Lady Henry Somerset, permitting the girls the privilege of seeing Eastnor Castle, Ledbury, for two days; all taken together would have afforded these graduates of Graceland an opportunity few have.

Had they taken the trip they would have arranged for Martha and Pearl to have given recitations at the castle, an honor for Graceland, certainly.

It is well for our students to aim high, to take the best opportunities for improvement as they come, and be prepared to stand before kings and queens, if needs be, in honor and without fear or shame.

PRESBYTERIANISM ALL A-SHIVER?

The following is sent us by J. M. Belknap, Auditor of Adams County, Iowa, at the request of Bro. W. E. Messenger, of Prescott, Iowa, and is from the Morning American for February 21, as we understand the letter of Mr. Belknap.

Washington, Feb. 20.—The suppression of polygamy was further considered Tuesday by the House Committee on Judiciary, Dr. Josiah Strong, President of the League of Social Service, and Rev. William R. Campbell, a missionary of long service in Utah, speaking in advocacy of federal legislation.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Dr. Strong stated that while the Mormons were only one-fifteenth the number of the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists, yet in a stated period they had increased more than all three combined. Dr. Strong also said that if the government did not act it was not unlikely that Joseph Smith's prophecy that every State west of the Mississippi River would be brought under Mormon influence would be fulfilled.

What is the trouble with Dr. Strong? Is he fearful that the truths of which the Palmyra Seer was, under the guidance of revelation from God, the first, and for the short period of fourteen years the leading champion, have enough of divine energy and vitality to strike at and endanger the foundations and superstructures of the three popular systems of theology named by him, Presbyterianism, Methodism, and Congregationalism? And what would the reverend Doctor have Congress do about it? Does he wish to make Congress the clerical battering ram of the ecclesiastical dreibund to smash Mormonism?

All three of these named denominations have had their heresy-hunting episodes, from Doctors Swing and Thomas to the last gentleman who renounced the close rule of the Presbytery and adopted the surplice of the Episcopacy; and now would they have Congress come to the reinforcement of their clerical cohorts and suppress Mormonism by law?

We of the Reorganized Church are not Mormons, as that term is usually employed and applied, and do not propose to attempt an apology for any evils of doctrine or practice that may be justly charged to any portion, or faction of the believers in the faith as it was proclaimed by Joseph Smith and his coworkers, but as these doctors of divinity bearing denominational names persist in classing all believers in the angel's message as "Mormons," and mean all phases of the faith when they say or write "Mormonism," we are interested directly when any wholesale denunciation of the whole faith is made, or repressive measures possibly involving the faith are asked for.

Dr. Strong assimilates a great fear that because all three of the denominations named had made fewer accessions to their faiths than the Mormons, only one fifteenth so strong in numbers, there is need for the government to act, and says that "if the government did not act it was not unlikely that Joseph Smith's prophecy that every State west of the Mississippi River would be brought under Mormon influence would be fulfilled."

Joseph Smith, the Palmyra Seer, made no such prophecy; Joseph Smith, his son, has not made any such prediction; and unless Joseph Fielding Smith, of the present Presidency of the Utah Mormon Church has given utterance to such prediction, then it has no Joseph Smith of Mormon bias in belief as its author.

No, Doctor Strong has lifted the mask a little and permits it to be discovered, that while he and his fellow workers against Mr. Roberts and polygamy have insisted that their hostility was against the evils of the practice of plural marriage, there was sectional and churchly antagonism rising from denominational jealousy. And now that Mr. Roberts has been refused a seat in Congress and thus notice served on Utah that polygamy will not be recognized by the national government, Doctor Strong and others want something done by the government to keep Mormonism from achieving success in other States than Utah.

We once heard a man of some intelligence say that Mormonism with polygamy left out was as good a system of religion as any other, so far as he could see. To us, what was once called "Mormonism," the system of faith promulged by the Seer and his immediate helpers and associates, as found in the current published works and literature of their day, is not only "as good as any other," but is very much better than any of the others, so far as we can understand both it and its contrasting faiths. There was then no secret oath-bound allegiance to the faith; no plural marriage, with its system of espionage and subterfuge between families; no substitution of Adam for God, or other embarrassing tenets, requiring denial in public and compromising practice in private. With polygamy and its correlatives out, the faith and system of worship known as "Mormonism," is the best of the Christian theories of religion, the best development of the Christ idea extant.

Of what is Doctor Strong afraid? He need not fear that supposed prophecy which he imputes to Joseph Smith, for he did not make it. He had better fear this one:—

"Every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God that Jesus is the Christ."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. John Shields wrote from Lowbanks, Ontario, March 2:—

We have a heavy snow blockade here just now. Roads blocked and trains delayed and no one able to get to meeting the last two evenings. Elder John McKenzie is out with me now for about three weeks. I have never seen him in better shape than at present. I am thankful that we have been blessed in caring for the Saints and presenting the word. Have had splendid outside attendance here when the weather has been favorable.

Bro. F. C. Keck, Seligman, Missouri, March 5:—

I commenced here Saturday night; am having fine liberty and large crowds of interested listeners. Bro. Foss, my lungs and voice are as strong as ever. All are looking forward to a good spiritual conference.

Bro. James McKiernan, Montrose, Iowa, March 7:—

Bro. J. R. Evans began meetings here on the 26th ult. and I joined him on March 1. We have good interest. Three baptisms of late by Bro. Tripp; others hoped for soon. Was in Burlington over Sunday; Bro. Evans here. I returned Monday and continue here this week. Bro. Evans went Monday to Fort Madison to look after work there. Good audience and much interest here in spite of iceclad streets and walks, making walking perilous. Looking forward for General Conference.

Bro. James M. Baggerly, Atlanta, Indiana, March 10:—

Arrived here Wednesday, the 7th. This is a new opening. Spoke here last eve. An audience of about fifty was my first meeting. They gave me splendid attention. Also made a new opening at Greensburg, Indiana, a city of eight thousand, where I spoke two weeks. Meet malignant opposition from the preachers, but that is a good sign. Have recently done missionary work at Seafield, Corydon, and Leavenworth in Indiana, and at Louisville, Kentucky. The Louisville branch is a model of unity and zeal. I especially enjoyed my sojourn there. I go from here to South Bend, Indiana.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. F. M. Slover, writing from Parrish, Illinois, from an acquaintance with the conditions at Alma and Orchardville, where Bro. I. N. White discussed with Rev. Clark Braden, expresses the opinion that Braden has lost prestige with his own people there. His manners during debate caused him to lose ground with many of his religious friends.

Bro. E. A. Stedman returned home on March 1 threatened with pneumonia. At last account, however, he was better.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., of Indiana, recently made Lamoni a brief visit.

General Conference arrivals include Brn. William H. Kelley, David A. Anderson, and Albert Haws.

THE CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS.

Allow me space for a reply and criticism to the article under the above heading. The brother states the matter truly when he speaks of the wilderness as being the hidden place which God had prepared for the church, and in that place had hid up the priesthood with Christ in God. But I differ from the brother in his other position. He quotes:—

And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars: and she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.—Rev. 12: 1, 2.

He comments: "This, I understand, was the condition of the church of

www.LatterDayTruth.org

God before Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea." The conclusion is hardly correct, as a study of the following will show:—

After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter.—Rev. 4:1.

Now this travailing in birth was to be hereafter. Time 96 A. D., and it was to be after that. The brother's position that the church brought forth Christ is, I believe, an untenable one. The brother makes some remarks about "Christ's priesthood," which I will examine later. The brother does not inform us how the church brought forth the "kingdom of God and his Christ." After the query, "What about the man child?" some questions are propounded and answered; and while the questions are correctly answered, as applied to Christ, they do not apply to the man child. And why? Because Christ brought forth the church. The brother asks, "But who said Christ brought forth the church? Tell us, if you please." The child had to be begotten before it could be born. Yes, it was begotten, and the church was the mother, but Christ was not that "child," and for a very strong reason; there was no church existing when Christ was either begotten or born. The brother reminds us that Paul says, "that Christ was with the church in the wilderness." Yes, Christ was with the church there, and he was with the church in Enoch's day, and with the church in Adam's day. But there was no church after Moses' day. The Melchisedec priesthood was taken from the earth then, and there cannot be a church without the Melchisedec priesthood. That should be clear to all Latter Day Saints. The church means "those called out;" and those called out are the body of Christ. If we examine the following scripture my position will be clear.

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body.—1 Cor. 12:13.

Now there is no admission into the one body without the baptism of the Spirit, and there is no baptism of the Spirit unless the ordinance of the laying on of hands is administered, and this cannot be administered but by the Melchisedec priesthood. The outpouring at Pentecost and at the house of Cornelius may be cited as exceptions; but even they are not exceptions, as I can prove, if the proof becomes necessary. Now if there was no baptism into the body without the Melchisedec priesthood, and there were none holding the Melchisedec priesthood living when Christ came, then there was no church when he came, and consequently the church could not bring forth Christ. Christ came forth not through the church, but under the law.

But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.—Gal. 4:4, 5.

That woman was Mary, and that law was the Jewish law. Jesus was born under the law, and the law was fulfilled in him, and he brought forth the church. In Matthew 16:16 Peter confessed that "Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God." Jesus answered that "flesh and blood" had not "revealed" this unto him, but the Father in heaven; and in verse 18 he calls this a "rock," and says that "upon this rock I will build my church."

Now if Jesus spoke the truth, he built the church. There was no church existing then, though the tidings concerning it had been preached from the days of John the Baptist. The church is a visible organization, and it was not built at that time. Doubtless he had commenced to prepare the material for the building, but it was not built. We find also that Christ informs his disciples that he had chosen and ordained them that they "should go and bring forth fruit" (John 15:16).

This begins to look as though Christ brought forth the church. Now Christ established the church; he brought forth the church whenever it was brought forth. Did the church come forth in Adam's day, or in Enoch's day? It was Christ that brought it forth. When it came forth later, and was among the children of Israel as they journeyed "in the wilderness," it was Christ that brought it forth.

In the second column of the article the writer says, You remember that Paul tells us that Christ was with the church in the wilderness. Yes, I expect he was, but how was he with it? Was he with it as a member? No. For the members of the church are they who have been redeemed, and Christ never was redeemed, for he never fell. He must have been with it in some other capacity, then. Yes, he was the director, he was the head, and he must have held the Melchisedec priesthood, which brings us to another point.

The writer says, "but when Christ came and offered himself a sacrifice to satisfy the law, he became a high priest after the order of Melchisedec." The italics are mine. Christ came and offered himself. He offered himself 33 A. D., or according to the corrected chronology about 27 A. D., and then according to the writer of the article became a high priest after the order of Melchisedec. Will the brother inform us how Christ could make an offering before he held the priesthood? Where did Christ get his priesthood? David says:—

The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.—Ps. 110:4.

The Apostle Paul applies this to Christ (Heb. 5:6). Lest the brother or anyone else should conclude that David spoke of the future and not of the past, please consider the following:—

There are, in the church, two priesthoods; namely: the Melchisedec, and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priesthood. Why the first is called the Melchisedec priesthood, is because Melchisedec was such a great high priest: before his day it was called the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God.—D. C. 104:1.

Now if it was the priesthood after the order of the "Son of God," the Son of God (Christ) must have held that priesthood before Melchisedec did, and before he came in the flesh. That Christ did not exercise his priesthood for the first thirty years of his life is no argument that he did not possess it.

I think it will be seen that Christ was not the man child, so we must look for what was the man child.

What was the man child? That which the church bore; that for which she travailed in birth. Think of the church travailing in birth to bring forth Christ. Think of Christ taking the church to himself as his bride. Then he takes for his bride that which brought him forth, and he becomes the head of the same body that brought him forth. Question: "Before the body brought forth Christ (who was the head of it) what kind of a head did the body have? If its head had not yet come forth, did it have a head? and if it had no head, was it a body? We will leave that point here. The church brought forth the "kingdom of God." The kingdom of God consists of saints. The church travailed in birth for and brought forth the saints, and they were born into the kingdom of God. She is their spiritual mother. She is called the "Jerusalem above," "the mother of us all," "the new Jerusalem." Of those she brought forth, some of them received the priesthood. This priesthood held authority to rule. They were to rule with the "rod of iron," which the Book of Mormon says is the word of God. (See 1 Nephi 4:5.)

Now the man child was the ruling power, which the woman brought forth. God calls the ruling power in the church priesthood, which means authority to represent God, and this child was to rule by his word.

Notice the statement in the article, "Now if this child is the authority, you see it would be greater than the one who gave it." So if God says his priesthood is to rule the world, it makes the priesthood greater than God! Is it consistent to say that God could not and would not rule the priesthood? Because there is a governor ruling the State of Iowa, does it make him greater that the President of the United States? God has more worlds than this, and he delegates his authority to his servants, and he rules over the rulers. Now the faithful redeemed are to be "kings and priests unto God." (Rev. 4:10; Rev. 1:6). Then Christ rules over the priesthood, and he then is King of kings and Lord of lords. Where is the conflict now?

No wonder then that when the church was driven into the wilderness, the place which God (not man) prepared, that the angels should say, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom (church) of our God, and the power of his Christ (the authority of God's Christ).

Yes, the authority of the Christ, which he had committed to men upon the earth, had returned to heaven. For one who was in heaven said it "is come." No authority remained on the earth then, although the chosen seed lived (in whom was reposed the lineal right to the priesthood), but the priesthood itself was hid from the world with Christ in God. The authority remained on earth after Christ went to heaven, and the man child did not ascend until after Christ ascended, which shows the man child not to be Christ, but the power of Christ vested in the priesthood.

PERFECTION IN THIS LIFE.

Does God require his people to live pure and holy? I answer, He does. And while I answer this, I am aware that I have most of the Latter Day Saints, as well as nearly all of other church members in the world, to confront me in so doing. But while I undertake the task to prove that God does require us as his people to be perfect, I am glad to say his written word, found in the three books that have been accepted by the Latter Day Saints as their rule of faith and practice, furnish us with abundance to prove that a man can and must live pure and holy if he has a part in the first resurrection. I will say in the outstart, that while many do not believe in perfection in this life, as yet but few have felt like going on record to oppose the doctrine. This is sufficient in itself to prove that the doctrine is a Bible doctrine and should be considered with judgment, and in all matters of controversy the written word should be decisive and the end of all dispute.

To say that God gave commandments, and at the same time knew that man would not and could not obey them, would be charging him with something that none of us dare do. But we must acknowledge his commandments true and righteous altogether, and that by keeping them there is great reward. (Ps. 19:11.)

For I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from God. For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me. I was also upright before him, and I kept myself from mine iniquity.—Ps. 18:21-23.

At the time David uttered these words he was pure, and if he had always continued in this way he would always have been a man after God's own heart.

As for God, his way is perfect.—Ps. 18:30.

So you see when David was walking uprightly before him he was perfect. Can we not walk uprightly before him and be after God's own heart, as David was at the time this was said of him? If not, why not?

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart.—Ps. 24:3, 4.

Let me ask you if one without clean hands and a pure heart can stand in a holy place? What think you?

Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.—Ps. 29:2.

Again:—

The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.—Ps. 34:7.

Will the angel of God encamp round about those who will not fear him or keep his commandments? I answer, No.

Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.—Ps. 34:13.

Can we do it? If not, the commandment was a failure.

Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.—Ps. 37:37.

What will be the end of that man that is not perfect and upright? Let David answer:—

Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me. . . . I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord.—Ps. 101:6, 8.

Who is a wicked doer? One who commits sin, is it not?

But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.—Ps. 103:17, 18.

Do we want the mercies of God to be with us? If the condition is that we must remember God's commandments to do them, let us not flatter ourselves that we can have them any other way.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: a good understanding have all they that do his commandments: his praise endureth forever.—Ps. 111:10.

Do we want wisdom and a good understanding? If so, let us keep his commandments, or in other words, the Word of Wisdom. (D. C. 86. Turn and read the whole section, please.)

I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.—Ps. 119:101.

Do not forget, here, that he kept his feet from every evil way, not a part of them.

Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways.—Ps. 128:1.

Have we not shown that God's ways are perfect ways? Can a man walk in them? If so, is he not perfect? So this is what David, the sweet singer of Israel, has testified, showing that God's people can and must live perfect. What say you? Is he competent to testify in this case?

We will next introduce Solomon, the wise man:—

He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.—Prov. 28:13.

The person who confesses and forsakes his sins is the one who will be blessed. And if we forsake our sins, will we not be pure? I would think so, at least until we transgress again, anyway.

He layeth up sound wisdom for the righteous: he is a buckler to them that walk uprightly.—Prov. 2:7.

For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it.—Prov. 2:21, 22.

Who were to remain in the land? The upright, the perfect. What about the wicked? They were to be cut out of the land. So,

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.—Eccl. 12:13.

Mark you, keeping his commandments is the duty of man. Can anyone observe this counsel and at the same time not be perfect? I think not. So, if not objected to, we will place Solomon, the wise man, with David, his father, as another witness testifying that God requires his people to be perfect and live pure and holy lives while here under the sun.

We will next examine the Prophet Isaiah.

Yea, for I will be merciful unto my people, but the wicked shall perish.—Isa. 13:22, I. T.

Who are God's people? The pure and the good. The wicked are those who do evil, are they not? We will read again:—

The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil.—Isa. 33:14, 15.

You see it is those who walk uprightly and do no evil, and none else,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

who are to stand or dwell safely. So we shall put Isaiah the prophet with David and Solomon as testifying that man must live perfect in this life.

Listen to what Jeremiah says:—

But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.—Jer. 7: 23.

Now if the people of God will walk in God's ways (and his ways are perfect, as we have already proven) will they not be perfect? I certainly think so. Again:—

Thus saith the Lord; Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place.—Jer. 22: 3.

Do no wrong nor evil, was the command, and if we as a people do no wrong nor evil, will we not be perfect? Most assuredly we will.

Let us now hear from Daniel. After staying all night in the den of lions, what have you to say, Daniel?

My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me: forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me; and also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.—Dan. 6: 22.

Daniel was without sin before the Lord, therefore God sent his angel and delivered him. Now if Daniel could live pure and holy before the Lord, why not people in this age of the world? For one, I believe they can. So this brings Daniel over with the rest of God's prophets, certifying to what they have, that a man can live perfect in this world.

I will now turn to the New Testament writers and see what can be found in support of this subject:—

Blessed are all the pure in heart; for they shall see God.—Matt. 5: 10, I. T.

Did Enoch, Abraham, Jacob, Moses, and Stephen see God? Yes. Then they were pure in heart. Jesus was the author of the above scripture. Shall I introduce him as a competent witness? If so, we will hear him again:—

It is not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven.—Matt. 7: 30, I. T.

Who are to enter the kingdom of heaven? Those who do the will of God. What is the will of God—to commit sin? No, sir. Sin is unto death, but obedience is unto righteousness. (Rom. 6: 16.)

Paul, what have you to say about a man living perfect, pure, and holy in this life?

Tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; . . . but glory, honor, and peace, to every man that worketh good. —Rom. 2: 9, 10.

Comment is unnecessary.

What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.—Rom. 6: 15.

That is very plain. Do you know anything else? Yes,

For if ye live after the flesh, unto sin, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live unto Christ.—Rom. 8: 13, I. T.

Do you know of anything else that a man can do? Yes.

Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.—Rom. 12: 1.

Thank you, Paul. We have been told that man could not live holy in this life, but had to die before he could reach perfection. So, then, a man can present his body a living sacrifice, holy unto the Lord, in this life. What do you think about the people of God doing evil, anyway?

If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.—1 Cor. 3: 17.

You remember God's Spirit does not dwell in unholy temples, and if we have not the Spirit we are none of his. Now could language be more plain, that if a man has the Spirit of God he is perfect?

But God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.—1 Cor. 10: 13.

So if the way to escape has been prepared, that a man need not give way to the temptation, this puts it in the power of man to live perfect in this life.

Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye the separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.—1 Cor. 6: 17, I. T.

For the grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared; teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world.—Titus 2: 11, 12, I. T.

So this makes it clear that a man is required to live pure in this life. Shall we place Paul, the faithful witness, with the rest as having testified that a man can and must live perfect, if he is a favored one of the Lord?

We will next hear from Peter:—

Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth.—Peter 1: 22.

If they could purify their souls by obeying the truth, could not we do the same now if we obey the same truth?

For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile.—1 Peter 3: 10.

As he is in line with the rest we will place him as a competent witness.

Next comes John:—

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.—1 John 3: 2, 3.

Again:—

Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God; but he that doeth evil hath not seen God.—3 John 11.

So we will close the evidence from the Bible by quoting John's words on the isle of Patmos:—

Blessed and holy are they who have part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.—Rev. 20: 6, I. T.

Notice: Those who were to have part in the first resurrection were holy. Do we want to come forth in the first resurrection? If so, let us live perfect and holy in this life. Be pure as Christ was pure, then we can dwell where he dwells. Paul says, "Let us go on unto perfection." Yes, he knew very well man could be perfect, for he tells us that God set the officers in the church "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry," till we all come to the unity of the faith. Now if the saints are to be perfected by the officers of the church, then is it not the duty of the officers of the church to teach them the perfect way of liberty, the way of holiness, as it is called elsewhere?

We will turn to the Book of Mormon and see what it says in regard to the doctrine of purity:—

And now I say unto you, all you that are desirous to follow the voice of the good shepherd, come ye out from the wicked, and be ye separate, and touch not their unclean things. —Alma 3: 73.

Again:—

For behold, a bitter fountain cannot bring forth good water; neither can a good fountain bring forth bitter water; wherefore a man being a servant of the devil, cannot follow Christ; and if he follow Christ he cannot be a servant of the devil.—Moroni 7: 8.

Here are the two horns to the dilemma. Which one will you take? This idea that a man can serve the Devil all the week and on Sunday make all things right, or serve the Devil one day and the Lord the next, is to my mind absurd. So we shall insist that the Book of Mormon have a place with the Bible as testifying that a man can and must live perfect in this world.

We will close by quoting the book of Doctrine and Covenants, containing the revelations of God to his people in this the dispensation of the fullness of times.

Let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me.—D. C. 38: 5.

The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word and deed.—D. C. 119: 3.

In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. So we find the three books agreeing as to the people of God being required to live perfect. Now, can we live perfect without abiding the celestial law, or perfect law of liberty? We must live by every word of God.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Will the people of God rob God by not bringing all the tithes into the storehouse? (Mal. 3:8–12.) What will be the result to those who will not obey the law of God?

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned.—D. C. 64:5.

Who are to be burned? The wicked (Mal. 4:1); those who will not pay their tithes, as well as to live by every other word of God, will be robbers of God, and if any man climb up any other way, the same is a thief and a robber. (John 10:1, 5.) Mark you, if we climb up any other way. What other way? Why, try to go to heaven without costing us anything.

Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you.—D. C. 106:2.

So this puts tithing as a part of the law of God. Can we ignore it and at the same time claim that we are in that straight and narrow way that leads to life?

The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to nought, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.—D. C. 2:2.

Now, Saints, can we afford to set at naught the counsel of God and walk in crooked paths? You remember the Saints were called once by the Lord to remember the former commandments, not only to say, but to do according to that which was written. Their minds had become darkened because they had treated lightly the things they had received. So let every one learn his duty, then go to work to perform it. Overcome evil with good. C. L. SNOW.

Editors Herald:—It is with pleasure I attempt to write. On March 11, 1899, my wife, self, and Sr. Mary Bussell were led to the water's edge, where Bro. W. M. Kint made a chilling talk for a few moments and then carried us one by one down into the water, where he buried us with Christ in baptism beneath its rolling waves. After baptism we returned to the house of Bro. Bussell, where Bro. Kint administered the ordinance of the laying on of hands. The windows of heaven were opened for us and God sent down his Holy Spirit, and all was in commotion, rejoicing and praising the God of heaven, who lives forever. It was a day long to be remembered with us, and many times since we have rejoiced in the Spirit, and raising our voices with praise and thanks to Him who died that we might live; who has saved us from this world and the power of darkness. What a dear Savior that fills our thirsty souls with such joy and peace, and opens our eyes of blindness and points to us that straight and narrow way that will lead us to that home of one eternal round of peace, joy, and happiness, throughout the days of eternal ages.

I was in Babylon for many years, surrounded with total darkness and drifting on, led by the commandments of men. I desired the truth, although I fought it, being in my blind condition; and after a week's preaching by Elder J. D. Erwin, at Sylvan, I heard a few words of his last sermon which stirred my soul, and I began to seek for rest, and in a few days the good Lord sent two others,—Brn. E. A. Erwin and W. M. Kint,—who delivered the angel's message of the gospel restored in these the last days, which I believed, and was led to the water's side.

Let us be faithful, and the Lord will bless us, and when the Lord comes to redeem his own he will give us a crown of life. I will close, hoping all will be faithful.

Editors Herald:—I had the privilege of attending the Pender-Collins debate at Brownell the latter part of February, and feel safe in pronouncing it a grand success in the interest of the cause. We fail to see how anyone can oppose holding these religious discussions from time to time, as they certainly are a powerful factor in bringing added light and truth before the minds of the people. They help in making scores of friends for the cause and dispelling prejudice like darkness is being chased before the morning light. For scriptural citations in favor of public discussions see the following: Luke 2:42–47; Acts 15:7; 17:17; 19:7, 8; 1 Thessalonians 5:21; Jude 3.

A young lady was baptized during the debate, and in time will make a useful member. While Bro. Pender's hands were upon her head in confirmation, grand blessings were pronounced under the influence of the Holy Spirit. Blessings physical, moral, and spiritual were promised, if faithful, and in the end rest and peace in the eternal kingdom of our God.

We wish to state that the writer has witnessed some marvelous cures recently in connection with the ministrations of Elder W. S. Pender to the sick and afflicted, both outside and in the church. We hereby furnish the Herald readers with the written statement of Sr. Bean herself, who now rejoices in the goodness of God.

"To Whom It May Concern:—This is to certify that Mrs. Joseph W. Bean was instantly healed under the hands of Elder W. S. Pender, on the 6th day of January, 1900. The affliction was of long standing and caused serious suffering for months out of every year, during the last twelve or thirteen. Competent and responsible physicians in both Chicago, Illinois, and Battle Creek, Michigan, had, after examination, repeatedly stated that a cure could only be effected by a surgical operation. Already knowing 'that these signs do follow those who believe and are baptized for remission of sins,' we placed our trust in God and his word rather than in the surgeon's knife, and are glad to testify of the above to any honest inquirer, by letter or personally. (Signed,)

"MRS J. W. BEAN.
"JOSEPH W. BEAN.

"I was present when the above case of healing occurred under the hands of Elder W. S. Pender, at Ames, Cloud County, Kansas, and do testify to its genuineness.

"(Signed) FRANK J. PIERCE."

Why should men deny that "these signs shall follow them that believe: . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Dear Saints, we are living witnesses to the fulfillment of the promises of God. We know for ourselves that "our gospel came not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." We have much to be thankful for, and to stimulate, encourage, and strengthen us in the great work of God.

I am here alone now, Elder J. M. Brown having gone home to Leon, Iowa, some three weeks ago. This Western Kansas is a fine and promising field to labor in. The majority of the people do not appear to be so creed-bound as they are in the more thickly settled parts of the Sunflower State. I hope, after General Conference, to be again associated with a colaborer in the field, as I am young in the ministry. In Doctrine and Covenants, section 115, the Lord says: "And moreover it is expedient in me that my elders in going to declare my gospel to the nations, shall observe the pattern which I have given. Two by two let them be sent, that they may be a help and a support to each other in their ministry." I often wonder why this divine plan is not more generally observed by the church. This was evidently the rule our Savior adopted when he traveled in his ministry, and it seemed to work well enough then. If sufficient elders cannot be sent out, the young priests should be encouraged to travel, and thus gain for themselves the much needed experience and profit. My work at present is chiefly among the Saints, trying to strengthen and encourage them to life and activity in the Master's cause. The Saints always welcome me to their homes, which kindness I hope to ever appreciate.

The branch here is known as the Homestead branch, with about fifty members enrolled. I never was in a branch before where all the members lived so far apart, hence it is ofttimes difficult for them to meet together to worship God. This branch has membership in at least four surrounding counties. Too bad that the Saints are in so scattered a condition instead of being together where they could worship in sweet communion and fellowship. May the children of God everywhere learn and prepare themselves to dwell in peace and love one with another. "Behold, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Saints should cease from backbiting and evil-speaking, and learn to love one another, for "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." Would to God that the Saints everywhere would realize that it requires a strong united effort to build up and sustain the word of God in the earth. How great our responsibilities and privileges! How great and glorious are the blessings which flow through the gospel! "Let nothing separate you from each other, and from the work whereunto you are called." Did you ever read that before, dear Saints, and if you did, do you now realize its deep import? Let us all "awake to righteousness and sin not." Now is the time to work, not leave it for some future time. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might;" also, "In cheerfulness do whatsoever you are permitted to perform, that the blessing of peace may be upon all." Your brother,

FRANK J. PIERCE.

BUFFALO GAP, Texas, Feb. 24.

Editors Herald:—We are moving on as best we can in the latter-day work founded upon old principles; sometimes meeting opposition, but undiscouraged we battle on, knowing it to be the will of God.

We hear of swarms of Utah elders charging in on the branches of the true church in different places. Can you not induce some of them to come this way? We need them in our business. We think if we could get a little opposition from that quarter we could have better success in our efforts to convince the honest people that we are not of the salt tribe. However, we have no room to complain, although we have preached, borne testimony and scattered tracts in many counties of this State, and for the last year baptized none; yet we desire to labor on in the hope of a reward that none but the Master has the power to confer.

I appreciated very much the reading of Bro. Etzenhouser's letter published recently in Herald. It so very much fitted my condition wherein he told of his exclusion from church privileges through his efforts to get the message before the world. I, too, Bro. E., have not for the last eighteen months had the blessed privilege of meeting with branch, district conference, or reunion, and during that time have seen very few members; and when I read from the elder's pen what a grand conference or reunion they have attended, I do not envy them, but reflect, O how glad I would have been to have been with him.

When I was here last fall the sanctified boom was at its zenith. I find, on my arrival this time, that it has floated away in the distance, and like the bubble on the water, collapsed.

I see very little prospects of accomplishing anything at this place, but we never know what is in store for the morrow. One word of advice from Bro. Joseph to me at one time, when I felt despondent, has ever since been a benefit to me under like condition; that was, to keep on hammering and pounding.

Brethren, if we have a hard, rough corner in this great work it will make it no easier to complain or be envious or become jealous when it seems to us that some one has an easier or a higher seat than ourselves. All these are nothing but the work of a demon. Let him who would be great first become least of all. Yes, I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of the wicked. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.

My body is wearing away, but my love for God, my faith in Christ, and my confidence in the success and triumph of this latter-day work and hope of eternal life grow stronger and brighter as my eyes grow dim.

Yours in Christ,

L. L. WIGHT.

SYDNEY, Australia, Feb. 6.

Editors Herald:—We have just returned from the water's side, where we bade farewell to Bro. and Sr. Wells, and ere you get this they will be in San Francisco, if the steamer lives to get over the Pacific. Bro. Wells came to Australia six and a half years ago with myself and wife, and is now returning with two others—Sr. Wells and daughter. Not a few tears were shed, as good-byes were being said, and sweet little eighteen months' old Lena Chloe waved her tiny hand and threw kisses at us who were standing on shore, as the steamship slowly moved away toward's Zion's land. May our heavenly Father go with them and richly bless, that they through humble faithfulness may continue to serve God and increase in usefulness in this great and glorious latter-day work. Bro. Wells, while in Australia, preached something like six hundred sermons, baptized upwards of a hundred people, did a splendid work in the Sunday school, and also organized Daughters of Zion Societies, and converted a young lady, and then made her his wife, and after being blessed with a sweet little daughter, sets sail for home, taking his two precious sheaves with him; while we are left behind sadly wondering, "When shall we all meet again?"

The work in Australia is going along slowly. A goodly number have been baptized of late and others are near obedience. The Devil has tried hard to injure and overthrow the work, but thanks be to God, his purposes have been frustrated by the wisdom of God in rightly executing the divine law. A painful duty fell to our lot of late; viz., cutting off from the church a brother and elder who had been for years one of our best workers. But such is the weakness and folly of the flesh that some will get weary in well-doing and faint by the wayside and lose the reward of the faithful, who endure unto the end of life.

Our last conference was one of the best I ever attended, and the Lord in his mercy blessed richly and pointed out the mistakes of the Saints in the past and gave promise of bright future if Saints live more faithful, as indicated in the following prophecy:—

"Verily, thus saith the Lord, There is a great work to be done in this mission field, and that my Saints may be qualified and have power to accomplish this work, it is needful that the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, also members of my church, live more humble and faithful; for verily there are hundreds, yea, thousands, to be gathered into my church on this island of the sea. I the Lord have not been well pleased with my people in Australia in years gone by, for they have not been sufficiently willing to heed the counsel of the Lord; for there has been evil speaking, contention, and backbiting among my people, therefore I could not pour out my Spirit upon you to hasten my work in this land, as I have hastened it in the land of Zion; but verily the hastening time shall be upon you from this very instant, if my Saints will live more humble and faithful before me, and I will raise up laborers unto the harvest, and send them forth to preach this restored gospel, by the power of my Spirit; for verily I will choose the weak and foolish things of this world to confound the mighty and the wise. Therefore let mine elders, priests, teachers, and deacons rebuke the power of darkness, and stand faithful; declaring my gospel before the church and the world, and let my Saints not find fault, but sustain them by the prayer of faith, and then will I pour out my Spirit upon you and bless you with great blessings. Yea, verily, I will bless you in body and in mind, in basket and in store, and will show forth signs and wonders among my people, and will heal their sick, so that they need not resort to the arm of flesh for help. Therefore live humble and faithful and love one another. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called, and I will be with to bless by the power of my Spirit. Thus saith the Lord unto the conference of his people in Sydney. Amen."

The above is an abridgement of the prophecy, written from memory.

Editors Herald:—This gospel is grand to me. It is worth living for. God's people ought to be the happiest people on earth. When we look out in the world and see it in such a discontented, uneasy condition, looking for something to come, they know not what, it makes me thankful that I have heard and obeyed the gospel.

Before I came into the kingdom I seemed to be looking for something and could not find it. I felt that I could not stand the persecution. We lived in Bell County, Texas, at Elmwood branch. I knew the gospel was true, and wanted to obey. I would think, If I obey the gospel, my friends will go back on me. Then I would let the evil one step between me and the water. We then moved to Coryell County, and I had a dream that convinced me I should be baptized.

How thankful I feel for the gospel, a gospel that tells us of the things to come.

When any of our loved ones are gone we have hope of grasping their hand again, though it is sad to part with those we love; yet we realize that they are better off than we are, for the time is come and not far spent when God's children will have to go through a great struggle. Perilous times are coming, and if we endure to the end our crown will be bright. May God be ever with us to keep us in that straight and narrow path, and ever be found doing his will.

I often think of the happiness and beauty of the thousand years' reign, when our Savior will burst the clouds, come forth with his angels to take their abode on earth, and see the children singing and praising our Father. Won't it be beautiful. If I can only be permitted to take a part with them.

Your sister,

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Feb. 20.

Editors Herald:—About thirty-two miles north of Boston, standing on either side of the Merrimac River, is the busy little city of Haverhill, Massachusetts, with a population of about thirty-five thousand inhabitants, that in 1860 numbered less than ten thousand. Its principal business is the manufacture of shoes, but they are not as durable as those that Israel wore when traveling through the wilderness. The mutterings of discontent that exist between labor and capital elsewhere are also heard here, and the theory of the socialist has prevailed to such a degree that the present mayor of the city is serving his second term, he being a member of this political faith.

Its existence began in 1640 by white settlers. Prior to this it was under Indian control, and it furnishes the usual stories of cruelties by the red men upon those who disputed his right of possession.

In its official directory for 1899 it is credited with having thirty-five religious societies, which is a different one for each thousand of its inhabitants. From this a person may form some conception of the great effort that must be put forth by the nineteen members of the Saints who reside in this place to get the people to listen to the true gospel. This little band of believers are members of the Boston branch, and have been blest with the labors of such noble workers as Brn. Sheehy, Robley, I. M. Smith, Luff, Bullard, Bond, and others, who are spoken of with kindness by those both within and without the church. The resident Saints are very devoted and earnest in the work, of which I now remember by name Brn. Frost, York, Thayer, Dane, Rogers, and others, with the sisters and their children, who ably second the efforts of the brethren.

There is also a very interesting Sunday school. They have also placed in the Free Public Library and Reading Room, the two volumes of the Church History, the Book of Mormon, and the Saints' Herald and Ensign, and the writer thinks that our people should see that these public places in their different localities are furnished with our church literature.

Under instructions from the powers that be, the writer made his first appearance in this place last December, and was kindly received by the Saints, and was assigned to the hospitable home of Bro. Thayer. Preached six discourses on gospel themes. The Christmas holiday deferred our labor, which was again renewed the latter part of January. An interest having been stirred on the Book of Mormon, it was decided to give a course of lectures on the Biblical evidences of said book. The Saints circulated five hundred cards advertising the lectures, which were well attended, and five evenings were devoted to this subject. The Saints were comforted, strengthened, and rejoiced in the truth. The district conference closed the labors for the present, which are to be renewed at an early day.

In these meetings we had the assistance of Bro. J. N. Ames, also the presence of the Holy Spirit, and the liberty and freedom were all that could be desired, thus verifying the promise of the Master, "I will be with you." It is said that one clergyman made the statement that we were "pests," and the writer speaking from past experience is of the opinion that "pests" are troublesome things to have around, and we are likely to continue to be "pests" to all who seek to lead the people from the right way. Readers of the Herald, the work is still true, and our Father is still ready to manifest it to all who will obey his commandments and do his will. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—Jesus. John 7:17. Let all who love the truth heed the Master's call.

BEELER, Kansas, March 2.

Editors Herald:—Elder W. S. Pender, and Rev. Denton Collins of Secor, Illinois, held a debate for eight nights at Brownell, Kansas, closing February 21. We attended the last three sessions. Large attendance throughout, although the weather was cold and stormy a large portion of the time. The Saints were well satisfied with the debate. One was baptized, a young lady of Alexander, where our faith has been preached some during the last year. She is a daughter of Mr. W. A. Coddington, who once lived in Decatur County, Iowa. One young man expected to be baptized but failed to attend the meeting at which the baptism was performed. More are to follow. Bro. Pender has done a good work in Ness County since he has been in this mission. And as he does not seem to think he will return to this field next year, we sincerely hope some one will who is able to do as much good as he has done. I heard that another challenge was sent to him while he was at Brownell. So it seems the war is not over yet. We need a man in the district who is able to debate. We are very courageous over the condition of the cause in Ness County, although there are some discouraging things also, but we were few and scattered for years. Now we rejoice to think we are numerous enough to receive help frequently from the missionary force, and now we have a fine field to labor in. A visit by Bro. G. H. Hilliard did the cause good, although the visit was short.

To-morrow we go to Bazine, thirty-two miles, to where our sacrament meeting is to be held, also a business meeting, as there is where the members of the Homestead branch are most numerous.

Yours in the faith,

T. E. THOMPSON.

TABOR, Iowa, March 6.

Editors Herald:—Since our conference of the Fremont district, held in Hamburg, February 10, 11, our labors have been chiefly in the Pottawattamie district. Leaving Hamburg we stopped at Mill Creek for a few days in company with Bro. Charles Fry and Sr. Maggie. The weather being stormy, we visited the families of the Saints, giving them all the cheer we could in singing the songs of Zion, also giving words of peace and consolation as revealed in the gospel, holding only one meeting. May the Lord be with the dear ones there.

Thursday, February 15, went to Red Oak. Stopped off there for two nights. Met with the Saints and friends in the home of Sr. Jennie Stephenson, and spoke to them upon the importance of the great work intrusted to us, and the necessity of living in harmony with the word, that we may not come short of the glorious reward promised.

Saturday, 17th inst., moved on by way of Creston to Fontanelle, an old historic place, where a few of our people have been trying to establish themselves in the truth of the gospel as restored in our day. They have had a hard struggle to keep the light before the people so as to be seen and understood. The few have stood the test, with Bro. S. Butler and his worthy, faithful companion, who have labored to the best of their ability in the interests of the work. We assisted the president of the district in regulating the branch, endeavoring to put it in better working condition by ordaining Bro. James Baker to the office of priest and Bro. Livie Lentz to the office of teacher. Held one business meeting, five preaching services, and one prayer meeting. God blessed us abundantly with his Spirit in presenting the word, and spoke peace to the dear Saints in their prayer meeting, giving them words of cheer and encouragement to press onward in the good work.

Friday, 23d, went to Council Bluffs. Attended the Sunday school convention in the evening. Saturday morning, ten o'clock, business of the conference. We had a pleasant, interesting time in transacting the business of the district; not a single jar in all that was brought before our notice. Preaching and prayer meetings of Saturday night and Sunday were a little more than average, and appreciated, as we believe, by all. Bro. I. M. Smith left for Glenwood and Carson, from thence to Lenox. Bro. D. R. Chambers was called back to Fontanelle to administer to sick, after which, to resume his duties and work in the district, your humble servant to remain for one week with the Saints.

I must say I enjoyed myself hugely with the Saints of Council Bluffs. Was greatly blessed in preaching the word and in visiting quite a number of the old-timers in that town. We truly had a time long to be remembered. Was kindly cared for and highly entertained by Bro. C. A. Beebe and family, with others of the branch who are ever willing to do their part in the Master's cause. I am encouraged and hopeful for the work in that branch, with Bro. C. A. Beebe as president, Samuel Harding priest, and Arthur Dempsey teacher. With Elders Strain, Dodson, and others, a corps of willing workers, I feel they are in a condition to press on in the good work. They did not forget to help the missionary on his way. We predict for them, if faithful, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost, with strength of body and power of mind to enable them to move the work onward to the glory of God and the salvation of souls and to the obtaining of eternal life in the mansions of bliss prepared of God for the faithful.

Shall remain here and at Thurman until the last of the coming week, then to Shenandoah. I am still in the faith and hopeful for the final triumph of our cause.

Yours very truly,

HENRY KEMP.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you I have been busily engaged in preaching and fireside talk and administering to the sick. Have just recently visited some of the scattered Saints in Aroostook and Hancock counties. Found some of them rejoicing in the faith once delivered to the Saints. Others lack confidence in themselves and love for the cause of truth and have become inactive and are not walking in the light sent from heaven. Experience has taught me that to enjoy the promises of this latter-day work, one must expatriate himself from all that savors of the flesh. Indeed, with such evictions God is well pleased, and we are inviting him to remain with us all the time. It is a blessing to visit those whose theme is that of the gospel. With such I believe God is well pleased and will constantly help them till their hope will increase unto the brightness of perfect day.

I admire the spirit and genius of C. R. Duncan's letter in a recent issue of the Herald. It tells us of what may be found in all parts of God's vineyard. All are not found living as we have mentioned above. In a great house there are vessels unto dishonor, as there are also unto honor. There are such vessels as are used for slops, and others that are used for better and cleaner purposes. Some seemingly prefer to remain a dishonored vessel rather than purge themselves from sinful habits and become a vessel unto honor. God is willing to honor those who seek honor of him. To please God there are many things we should learn to do. First, we should try not to be selfish and grudging, but to be cheerful and kind to all, under all circumstances. Heaven will be composed of those who do God's will. Jesus is our example, and as he ever tried to do that which pleased his Father, so should we seek always to please him by living as he has commanded us.

We should try to bless the cause by our means as circumstances shall permit, both as individuals and as benevolent and aid societies, and the wants of all should be considered, that equal distribution may be had. It is not right nor pleasing to God for us to give to one and withhold from the other, who may be in need as much as the other; and this possibly because we may like the style and appearance of one better than we do the other. It should be remembered that the draft horse must be fed as well as must the speedy horse. Let us try to come to heaven's gate with clean hands and pure hearts. It is doubtful if mistakes which have been made here can be corrected there.

I pray that the different quorums who are soon to meet in conference may find favor and grace to help, and that by the Spirit's direction every mooted question may be shaped to the satisfaction of all. Should very much like to be present at that august assembly, but circumstances rule otherwise and I must bide the time till a more convenient season.

CADILLAC, Mich., Feb. 25.

Editors Herald:—We are trying to keep the camp fires burning and spread abroad the name of Jesus, mighty King of Zion. We have good meetings, though our numbers are few. We have proved the word of our Savior to be true, "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."—Matt. 18: 20. We are truly blessed in our efforts to serve him. We have organized a Book of Mormon class to study the history of the red man, who once occupied the country from sea to sea; from the rising to the setting sun the whole land was theirs. It was given to them by the Great Spirit. No pallid faces were among them. But time has made their possessions small, their numbers few, and the pale faces many. About forty centuries ago the red man's forefathers dwelt on this land and possessed it. They lived in peace and plenty. The Great Spirit talked with them. His law and his will were revealed to them, and much knowledge to their wise men and prophets. This they wrote, together with their history and the things which should befall their children in latter days. We have had three meetings and the time was well spent, for God blessed us with his Spirit while we were studying this book. We have our meetings Monday nights. After I returned home from our last meeting I sat down and read the Book of Mormon for some time. I read from the Book of Nephi. After retiring for the night and falling asleep, the sweet, calm voice spoke to me and said: "Teach this Book to my people, for it is the fullness of my gospel. For obedience to the fullness of my law cometh the fullness of my glory."

I am glad that I am enlisted in this work, for it is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe and obey. I desire the prayers of the people of God that I may always do his will and keep his commandments, all things pertaining to the celestial law, that when Jesus comes I may have an entrance into his kingdom. My prayers are for all the people of God, that faithfulness be all their theme, and at last be united with that unbroken family in Christ.

Yours in the one faith,

A. WHITEHEAD.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 9.

Editors' Herald:—At last communicating in December, I had just concluded an interesting series of services at Eagle Grove, Wright County. I then visited the branch at Richland Creek, Tama County, where I preached eighteen sermons, enjoying excellent liberty, and with splendid interest manifest, and all Saints at their post. Brn. George Shimel and C. E. Hand were on hand for duty and aided in the services. Young people there seem wide awake in the work, which is an encouraging feature.

I next went to Grinnell and preached eight times in their pleasant little hall, so cosily arranged for services and lighted up with the most pleasant and beautiful light extant,—artificial,—carbide gas light, and lamps with new improved white burners. Saints there have had six or eight added to their number, more through the influence of fasting and prayer than by the preaching of the word there. The few Saints there, mostly sisters, maintain their regular weekly prayer meetings, a live Sunday school, and an active, wide awake Religio-Literary, and most of their officers are sisters. Bro. Elbert Clark, a late accession to the work there, is coming rapidly into usefulness in the work, and is a capable young man, and if faithful to God, will be of use to the cause.

Taking leave of Grinnell, I went to Boonesboro, Boone County, to labor in that region. I was laboring some four miles west of Boonesboro, and had held four services at the Incline schoolhouse with good interest, large audiences, and with the Sunday school children occupying front seats and observing a decorum and interest becoming cultivated youth; when a letter from the missionary in charge was received requesting me to go to Pawnee, Harrison County, Missouri, to look after an attack on the faith, made by Elder Poppelwell, of the Disciples' Church, a resident of Independence, Missouri, and who came and delivered three, I hardly know what to call them, as the Rev. Gentleman said he called them neither lectures nor sermons! The ti—efforts were prolific of misrepresentation, with a generous sprinkling of downright slang, and the whole heavily ornamented with anecdote, to carry the fun-loving. I was not allowed to reply to the attack in the Disciples' church, but was there to "take the medicine;" but it has not had the effect they intended. We, from long use of such "treatment," usually fatten, and "thus it was," by the time I had digested his potions, after a five-meal reply to the semi-religious, semi-flat funny talk. I could scarcely tell whether he was really in religious earnest in the efforts or not. He misrepresented our books to make points. But this became known before my reply, and was having its effects in our favor in the community. And even then some of his hearers

wondered why the Saints would not be convinced by him! (?)

This will apprise the Saints of the absence of "ye missionary" from the field of labor assigned him, so early.

Elder Poppelwell has, since leaving the late field of attack, sent propositions for discussion covering grounds of difference between the Disciples and Saints. He boasted in his closing talk of his willingness to meet in debate any representative of our faith from somewhere "before or after the Psalms," on up to or including Apostle I. N. White, or even Presiding Elder Joseph Smith! At his conclusion, I accepted his challenge, if "before or after the Psalms" included me, submitted a proposition, offering to affirm it with him, if he would come recommended by a leading organ of his church as a representative man. His propositions will be considered later on. He turned the matter of debate "over to the brethren located here"!

The Saints of the Des Moines district have always treated me with the utmost kindly consideration. Have ever regarded graciously my necessities, and their hearty good will will ever be gratefully remembered by me. I believe the dawning of a brighter day for the work in the district is appearing. I believe and trust they may renew their courage in the Lord and enlarge their faith in the triumph of his work.

With an earnest desire for the continued advancement of the latter-day work and growth of the Saints in his favor,

Your coworker,

C. SCOTT.

DENNISPORT, Mass., March 1.

Editors Herald:—I arrived in this place February 23. The wind was blowing across the Cape with force, with the glass dangerously near the zero mark. Our old camping ground looked cold, bleak, and deserted. The roar and splash of the ocean could be heard, and I thought how unlike the scene of animation and joyousness that pervaded the place during our last reunion. Here and there could be seen a figure with a few yards of warm shawl around them, head, ears, and noses covered up lest the salutation of Mr. Jack Frost should leave too warm an impression upon those extreme members. They were making their morning call, as our Cape Cod women are very neighborly and are anxious to know if youme feeling all right. This custom has doubtless arisen through the occupation of the men who go down to the sea in boats fishing, and often get caught in the many storms and gales which frequent the New England coast, and have cost so many lives of husbands, fathers, and sons. During these times of anxiety the women naturally turn to each other for sympathy.

During my stay here I have visited most of the Saints, among the rest old Brother Tripp, whose barn and outhouse were the rendezvous of the merry bathers who took a plunge or swim during the happy afternoons of our reunion. The path from this spot to the shore, through the small pines, looked lonely, but there was plainly visible to my mind's eye the happy faces who frequented that walk for a few days in August last. Brethren Joseph, Alexander, Joseph Luff, W. H. Kelley, from the West, were prominent figures among our little band of Saints —but I must stop here and leave the Saints who were present to fill in the picture.

I have preached five times to small numbers, only once exceeding twelve adults, since coming here; but was blessed in my efforts. There is some sickness among the Saints, which made some difference to my audiences. The few sisters here are active and generous hearted in meeting the expenses of the work. Their sewing circle or helping hand society is an example for many large branches. Others not of the church assisting in this good work. May the Father bless their work. Bro. Nathan C. Eldredge has charge of the work here and is doing what he can to keep unity and peace among the Saints. While here I have shared the hospitality of Sister Ruena Nickerson, who was baptized last August. Her life has been made sad by the loss of her husband at sea, during that terrible storm of November, 1898. She has a little boy to cheer her heart and home.

East Dennis, March 5.—I was carried here last Thursday to administer to Belma, daughter of Sr. Abbie W. Chase, who was quite sick of measles. Belma is teaching school at Chatham, where there are more than one hundred cases of measles. She is up to-day. We procured the Methodist church and preached morning and night. We were not allowed the whole church, but occupied the vestry. Was glad to get that, to tell the people the old gospel story. Fair audience in the morning with excellent liberty. Vestry full at night and a number standing in the entry. Favorable comments by some. Others elevated their orthodox noses just a wee bit. They have no fixed pastor for this church, but hire them by the job, as they find this the cheapest way. I offered my services for a week or two to advocate the principles introduced yesterday, without money and without price. Have received no answer yet, as the committee has to be consulted, etc., etc. I anticipate the reply.

There are a few warm-hearted and faithful saints in this place who make an elder's stay among them one of pleasure. I am at writing at the home of Sr. Abbie Chase, who has her father with her, old Bro. Luther Sears, aged eighty-four, with a clear, black eye and a mind as clear as his eye, especially when the gospel is the theme, and that is about all Bro. Luther cares to talk about.

Srs. Nettie and Tressa Sears are mothers in Israel, whose children are showing their home training by a love for and obedience to the gospel. They have many hard places in life, as their companions are not in the gospel, and not in harmony with it.

We held a sacrament meeting in the afternoon, when the Father manifested his approval by the presence of the Comforter. There were nine of us present. Our aged sister, Olive Sears, eighty-two years of age, with Bro. Luther, made a venerable couple upon whom rested the Holy Spirit in power, they testifying to the truth of the work and the goodness of their heavenly Father to them all the days of their life. It was a season of blessing.

I hope to be at General Conference this year, but will not feel satisfied to leave the district without some one to look after the work here. However, I shall be guided by the light my Father may be pleased to give me, and circumstances, favorable or otherwise, as the case may be.

Yours for the triumph of truth,

R. BULLARD.

HILL CITY, Kansas, March 3.

Editors Herald:—At present I am holding meetings near Hill City, Kansas. At Mt. Hope and Lone Tree schoolhouses, have preached fourteen sermons in succession. While at Mt. Hope I put up with a Baptist family by the name of White, and they are white in principle as well as name.

I am stopping now at Bro. Boyd's, whose home is a resting place for the weary elder that comes this way. Sr. Boyd, although her avoirdupois brings the scales down to two hundred and eighty pounds, down weight, attends most of the meetings, and she is solid spiritually as well as physically. She had a spiritual manifestation some three years ago that convinced her of the law of tithing, and since then she and Bro. Boyd have observed it to the letter of the law and have been blessed therein.

Elder S. V. Pratt has done some good local work at Mt. Hope, but is now called away to Crescent, Iowa, to the bedside of his sick father, who is very low.

The gospel is in good demand here. I have more calls than I can fill. I have one pressing call south of Hill City, where Bro. Earl D. Bailey held forth a few years ago. The work in this part of the district has been somewhat neglected. I was here about a year ago, but the weather was against us, and I preached only two sermons. The weather is somewhat against us now, but notwithstanding the dark nights and muddy roads, we have a fair audience, and sometimes a full house. We don't mind riding home five miles after the services in the dark and through the mud if we have an appreciative audience.

Our next place from here will be Lenora, where our oldest son is located and running a photograph gallery, and from there on towards the city of the Saints.

In gospel work,

J. M. BROWN.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, March 4.

Editors Herald:—The work here is progressing, but not without an effort on the part of the few Saints living here. Our congregations have increased of late, and the effect of Bro. White's visit was felt for good. The Saints here have resolved to build a small church, which is badly needed, and we have a little army out soliciting help. The prospects look good. Bro. Middleton heads the list of my book with twenty-five dollars and Bro. Don Schofield with twenty. These are both noble men, and we wish that circumstances were such with them that they could attend our meetings more often. We have gained a host of friends here who will help us when it comes to the push.

We shall not have time to sleep on duty, for we have four Utah elders here in town going from house to house with the same old story: Polygamy is a dead issue; only one third of the males ever practiced it in Utah. They have an article in the daily Republican this morning giving the above. I shall answer, so the war with the Boers (of Utah) will commence to-night and the British will go to the relief of Ladysmith (Emma), and also to that gentleman Smith (Joseph). Our artillery is of the latest style, but we shall use the old shot which has made these Boers retreat, and we expect by the help of our Leader (Jesus) that you will hear of a British victory in Springfield. I think these elders will prove a help to us, for the hardest work we have had in the past was to prove we were not allied to the Utah people. Now they will know it. There are some ready for baptism, and others that ought to be. I expect to be at conference if I can raise the "wherewith." In gospel bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

LOGAN, Utah, March 5.

Editors Herald:—I do not write often, leaving that for abler pens; but I have endeavored to labor according to my gifts and calling, as conditions would allow. No doubt some of the scattered Saints of the Idaho district who have not seen an elder of the church in years might be interested in hearing a word from us occasionally through the Herald; but our work seems to be productive of so little results compared with its importance, that we don't say much.

After the close of tent work, last fall, with the aid of some of the Saints and friends of the district we purchased and fitted up the team and wagon left in the mission by our beloved brother, R. J. Anthony; but after three months' use of it we were enabled to sell for more than we hoped to raise from the Saints, and were thereby permitted to place in the hands of the Bishop something more to Sr. Anthony's credit, and fifty-two dollars subject to demand of Idaho district. Others have offered to aid if we want to purchase a team and rig suitable to move tent with the coming season; so if it is deemed advisable, and to us it seems the proper thing, it will perhaps not be difficult to get a suitable outfit for such work.

Bro. Albertson has given a little to your readers of our labors together, and I will not add more of them, but say that after a pleasant labor together with him and separating at Albion and selling the team at Malta, the first of the year, I proceeded to Blackfoot and Idaho Falls, visiting briefly with the Saints, preaching a couple of times with fair liberty, and receiving material aid from Brn. Jennings and Hansen. I returned to Cache Valley, where I have since been laboring as the way seemed to open. I have been holding forth alternately at Smithfield and Benson Ward on the north, and Millville and Hyrum on the south of here, in the schoolhouses, endeavoring to preach once a week in each place, besides meetings here in Logan. At Millville and Benson I have had much opposition, which insured full houses, and I believe more of the Master's aid. Part of the time I was able to travel to and fro by wheel, but of late the mud has forbidden, and has afforded an excuse for the trustees at Millville closing me out of the house there, as the crowd left the house too muddy, etc.

Generally, elders of the church here who have labored among our people report good treatment. However, we have met with a few exceptions. One Clarke of Benson has been cited to us as having been badly treated by the Josephites. I think he labored in Kansas some, but am not sure. But one of the abused ones testified to us at Hyrum that he was threatened with poison and was warned not to eat at the table of the presiding officer of the branch, as his wife would have a dish fixed for him. I believe this was in Michigan. It may be if the sister who had those designs (?) reads this she will be moved to repent of the evil intent (?). The elder who so narrowly escaped (?) is known at his home in Hyrum, Utah, as Alvin Allen.

While at Montpelier, Idaho, last fall we had a conversation with E. W. Croft, who had labored in Fondulac, Wisconsin, and there met two of the Josephite missionaries whom he succeeded in moving to tears by convincing them that they had been deceived. He didn't say they had given up their former heresies (?), however. These are about the only instances in my experience in the West where they have made claim of bad treatment at the hands of the Josephites. On the other hand, their report of having been well treated has resulted in good for our work, intercession having been made for us by those who had been warmed toward us by the kind treatment they had received. Elder Dan Walker of Ogden Valley secured us a hearing there. Chadwick of Dayton, Idaho, and others at different points, have been moved to aid us in getting a hearing and treat us cordially because of the manner in which they were treated. I believe it is "bread cast upon the waters" that will return, if it should be after many days. While they receive for their temporal wants, though, I think it would be wrong to neglect their spiritual needs. We are sometimes made the victims of the practical application of the text quoted by Bro. Blair (2 John 10) in a recent issue of the Herald. I said "sometimes." Well, we don't get much quarters at the hands of the Brighamite people, as a rule; but I would feel chagrined to hear that they had been treated in like manner by the members of the body of Christ; that is, if I knew the report were true.

I recently had a five-mile walk through the mud after preaching late at night, and a hard day's work walking and talking to the people preceding it. Although I plainly hinted my willingness to be spared the tramp in the dark, no invitation was offered, but it did elicit some offer of sympathy and excuses for not giving me shelter. But these experiences are not new to the missionaries in this salt land. Should we manifest a like inhospitality by applying the same text that they on some occasions, at least, use to excuse themselves for not sheltering us? Many of the people here are honest, and as a rule hospitable to all people, "Josephite" preachers often excepted; but not always; and if they are to be led out of bondage with power and an outstretched arm, it would indicate love and longsuffering should be among the agencies by which we would reach them.

We attended services at the Smithfield tabernacle, February 18, and was gratified to hear the Bishop read from Doctrine and Covenants, sections 9:5-10; 17:2; 26:2; 34:4; and 66:1 to prove his side of a controversy with the religious class, that the gospel had been restored in its fullness. We could not help but wonder, though, where in that gospel the Bishop found his excuse for his several wives. We felt pleased, too, for so authoritative an acknowledgement of a principle we had sharply contended for; that is, that the gospel was taught in its fullness long years before the plurality system was thought of, and it included the monogamic idea.

Still in the faith,

S. D. CONDIT.

TOPEKA, Kansas, March 8.

Editors Herald:—Your readers do not often hear from me, nor anybody else in the Northeast Kansas district. This is not due to a lack of interest in the work, but rather because we feel content to let others, more able, do the writing.

As elsewhere, the work in this district may not be up to the standard, but we are striving to improve, and I think that evidences of advancement are visible throughout the field.

Our last conference, at Netawaka, was a good one in point of representation. Brn. H. A. Stebbins, J. A. Davis, and M. F. Gowell, assisted by our local forces, all ministering acceptably, made it interesting to all.

Last Sunday, I joined in marriage Bro. John Taylor and Sr. Minnie Olds, both of Atchison. May peace and prosperity attend them throughout life's journey. As further evidence of the business qualities of the Atchison Saints, let me mention that, at the close of last Sunday evening services, Sr. Phebe Donnaldson, only fifteen years of age, now working in the city, came up and handed me a sum of money, with the statement that she wanted to pay her tithing. Young Saints, this is starting right. Why not all make an effort and do likewise?

As to the gathering, so much agitated of late, it seems to me that, just now, there is more danger of our being too fast than otherwise. In my opinion, the only thing that can be done, at present, and should be more strongly agitated, is for the Saints to be more diligent in preparing themselves spiritually and gathering into the "regions round about." In order to reach those conditions, perhaps we may have to change our policy somewhat. Instead of sending out our most talented and spiritually minded men to minister to the world, and letting our own people struggle along the best way possible, I think that some of our best talent should be employed at home, "for the perfecting of the saints, . . . for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," etc. Would not the placing by the general authorities of the church, of high priests over, and evangelical ministers in, organized districts and large branches, aid materially in this direction? Should it become necessary, in order to do this, to take from the field some of the general ministry, what does it matter? Would not the Lord direct in this matter, at our next conference, if we place ourselves in proper conditions before him?

It is evident to my mind that the Lord alone can remove certain hindrances, now in the way of our gathering and building up Zion, and I believe that they will be removed when suitable preparations upon our part have been made.

Elders speaking the German and Scandinavian languages should be employed to labor among those nationalities in this country. They could do so to greater advantage, as several hundred thousand people could be reached easier and with less expense. Opportunities being so favorable here, and so unfavorable in other countries, to my mind, it seems unwise to send men abroad until the Lord so directs and designates who should go.

In gospel bonds,

PETER ANDERSON.

PLANO, Ills., March 8.

Editors Herald:—I was appointed by Apostle John H. Lake, missionary in charge, to labor in the Plano and Sandwich branches from October 1, 1899, until the next General Conference. Accordingly I have tried to labor as diligently and zealously as I know how, and I have the satisfaction of knowing that the spirituality of both branches have increased in a marked degree since I have sojourned with them.

While it is true that in each of these branches and especially in the Plano branch there are a few careless and indifferent ones, it is also true that there is a peaceful harmony and a great desire to do good existing among the most of the Saints in those branches. I hope ever to be at my post of duty, laboring for the common weal of Zion.

"What shall I do to be just?

THEY DON'T KNOW.

People can talk, but ofttimes they don't know what they are talking about, yet think they know it all, even as a schoolboy often thinks, when he has learned only the first principles of the common studies. In many similar cases individuals feel perfectly satisfied with the extent of their knowledge, feel that they know enough about the subject and are just right in their opinion.

Sometimes a person will freely express his or her opinion in regard to the business of others, tell them how they ought to do in order to have success, or how he or she would do, or did do, or intended to do, or how somebody did, never once recalling to mind their own mismanagement and failures in consequence. If a person has not had good judgment in the business that he has invested in, would he have had better judgment in handling that of his neighbors', if that had been his? Perhaps so, if his abilities are better adapted to the same, or if he has learned wisdom by the things he has suffered.

Not unfrequently we hear one make uncharitable remarks concerning the failures of others, such as, "I should have thought he or she would have known better than to have done as he did. Where were his eyes? Where was his judgment? Any fool would have known better." Stop for one moment, Mr. or Mrs. Speaker, and recall your own doings, and note the many mistakes you have made.

Did you wish to be sneered at? Was not your failure all you could bear? And did not you need sympathy instead of censure? Was there ever a person, since that apparent mistake was made in Eden, who never erred in judgment? We think not, and also think that those who are the most liable to thus err are the first ones to gossip about others, the most liable to talk when they do not know what they are talking about. That is, they do not know all the existing whys and wherefores of the case in question, consequently they do not know, and therefore should not hastily judge. All failures are caused, more or less, by a lack of forethought or a lack of judgment, usually based on a lack of experience.

Who ever knew what the result of his undertakings would be until the problem was solved? No one; not even Adam or Solomon. If, yes; if we had only chosen the exact business that our mental and physical powers were adequate to perform, and had faithfully and diligently stuck to that business till our ability and continuity were fully developed, great must have been the success. Then we could talk, and know what we were talking about. But probably by that time the habit of attending to our own business would be established, and we should not be impolitely peeping into other folks' affairs.

Not unfrequently a person who has had comparatively a small amount of sickness will try, like Job's comforters, to comfort one who has suffered many years, and in various ways, from a complication of diseases, from loss of friends, from reverses of fortune, and perhaps from a state of almost perfect helplessness. O how kind and thoughtful such people are. How much good they think they are doing. But in fact they don't know what they are talking about. How they do love to tell their own experience to those who are greatly afflicted. Tell them just what they ought to do, just what their ailments are, and how much worse they have been, and just how patient invalids ought to be, forgetting all about how unreconciled they had been to their own afflictions. And in fact they had been only as a mole-hill compared to a mountain.

It reminds one of a lad who has been to Boston as hand on board of a Maine coaster. He meets a veteran of the sea who has sailed a ship around the globe and visited many, very many foreign ports and many in his own native land, but the lad in his limited experience thinks he can give the old captain many interesting and instructive points in regard to the sea. When the captain had related a little of his great experience, the lad told him how he should have done under such circumstances; but as he did not know what he was talking about, he only exposed his ignorance. Poor boy, better if he had kept quiet.

So in like manner there are people professing Christianity, who, when they have obeyed a few points in the gospel plan think that they have got the whole and try to teach and convince others who are far, very far in advance of them. They know that many parts of the Scripture are done away, and much more ought to be done away; some of it is not necessary, and some of it was not to be understood. Such think they are qualified to argue with others, but what is their foundation? What can their argument rest on? Surely not on the plan given by the Lord and his apostles. They would not have persecuted the Savior and his early followers; no, no. But they are just the ones who have persecuted the advancing followers of Christ in all ages. Every new inspiration in the progress of Christianity has been met and been combatted by such foes—by those who did not know what they were talking about. Such was the order of things up to 1830, and still later, when the work of ages past was revealed to the children of God, and by them to the children of men. And how was it received by the world in general? And how is it still received? About as the schoolboy received the professor's instruction. What then is the difference between those who believe in a part and those who believe in the whole? Similar to the lad's and the captain's knowledge.

A PLEA FOR PEACE.

What anguished sound rends all the vast karoo
'Neath Afric's sunny skies? Is't not the time
When we were wont to hear the joy-bells chime
Their Christmas music to the vaulted blue?
What right has Sorrow, then, to raise her voice
At such a season? Stilling everywhere
With her sad notes the mirth that should be here
At Christmas-tide, when all on earth rejoice?
What hand is it has wrought this hideous change?

www.LatterDayTruth.org

And turned the song of "Peace, Good Will, and Love"
To lamentations wild? Those cries would move
To deepest pity hearts to pity strange.

The voice of Rachel weeping for her sons—
Her noble sons—is heard through all this land—
For war, with its all-desolating hand,
Hath robbed the mother of her precious ones!

Oh, mother-country! far beyond the seas,
Thou mournest, too! Thy tender women's eyes
Are dim with bitter tears. All nature cries:
"Enough! Enough! Will naught thy wrath appease?"

Wilt thou not stay thy dread death-dealing darts,
And join instead the old familiar prayer:
"Give peace, O Lord; incline to us thine ear!"
That comes to-day from many bleeding hearts?

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

Local societies are urgently requested to report concerning their work and their present condition, that the reports may be presented at the general meeting of the Daughters of Zion to be held during the session of General Conference. Let none fail to respond because of having little to report, for it is earnestly desired that every local society shall be heard from.

Locals are still reminded that all losses or gains, and names of members of societies organized since 1897, should be reported before April 1, in order that the record may be made as complete as possible, that the secretary may be able to make a correct report. Send all reports to the recording secretary, at Lamoni, Iowa.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

WE look forward to the forthcoming General Convention with anticipation of a profitable and enjoyable time. It having been two years since our last meeting, there will be an unusually large amount of business to transact. With this in view the program committee will probably not announce a very large amount of miscellaneous work. But provisions will be made to furnish all that there can be found time for. The indications are that there will be a large attendance, and this should render the convention the more interesting. Let us bear it up before the Lord, that we may be guided and blessed in our efforts, that the convention may be one of great good to the Sabbath school work.

OWING to the fact that the space in the Saints' Herald is always so crowded during the time of General Conference and the conventions of the Sunday School Association and Zion's Religio-Literary Society, in publishing the minutes of the conventions and conference, the Sunday School Department will probably not appear in April, or for a longer period if found necessary. The Herald has always given our convention full and valuable notice, and we appreciate the efforts of the editors in that line. And to enable them to do the same with all meetings we dispense with the department till the rush is over.

WHO IS TOO BIG OR TOO OLD FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK?

The writer does not expect to teach the average Latter Day Saint anything new in regard to Sunday school work, but may be able to offer some thoughts that will do some one good along certain lines of this work. All who are truly interested in this great latter-day work will have their hearts set to see that their children are taught in all the truths of the gospel—will be interested in the education of the entire generation of young people now growing up, to the end that they may see the restored gospel in its true light.

There is a feeling with many

that if they send their children to Sabbath school they have done their duty; and often, too, take no interest in assisting the children at home in preparing their lessons, thinking that the children can get all the information necessary to fit them for after life at the Sabbath school. This is a mistake. Parents are making the mistake of their lives in not teaching their children by precept and example. It is as much a duty of the parent to attend Sabbath school as of the child; yes, it is more. The parent is responsible for the conduct of the child while the child is young in years. It is also as much a duty of the parent to assist a child during the week as it is for the teacher to teach it on Sunday. It is not reasonable to expect that the teaching of one hour in the week will fit the child for all the battles of life. Parents should be interested in the eternal welfare of their children. To my mind, if we neglect this, we are selfish. Who could feel at home in the "celestial glory" if their children were not there by reason of the neglect of the parents? But if they thus neglect the children, they will scarcely get such glory. We are told in Doctrine and Covenants that "if parents neglect to teach their children all the principles of the gospel and to pray, the sins be upon the heads of the parents."

Let me call your attention to the Lord's dealings with Samuel on this line. Read first Samuel 3: 11–13: "And the Lord said to Samuel, Behold, I will do a thing in Israel; . . . in that day I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: when I begin, I will also make an end. For I have told him that I will judge his house forever for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not." The Lord was angry with Eli for neglecting to correct his sons. And I reason that if we are neglectful of this duty, we too may expect to be rebuked sooner or later. We read, too, that some of the early men of the church were rebuked for not attending to their family duties.

The Sabbath school is the place for both old and young. When a person feels for the Sabbath school, he is making a sad mistake. There is the place to get a good schooling. I have been five years in the Sabbath school, and can truthfully say that of what I know of this latter-day work (and I read almost all of the church papers), the most was learned in the Sabbath school. I thank God for those inspiring lessons found in the Quarterly, and may he bless with his Spirit those who prepare them, that the work may thus continue for years to come. Surely no one will find fault with the lessons of the Quarterly. They have been a great educator to me. . . . I have for many of you may be in exactly the same condition that I was in five years ago. I was then the only Latter Day Saint in this place, although two families moved in a little later on. My wife was then opposed to the church. We had four children, which we were very anxious should attend Sabbath school somewhere. We had been English church people, and the preacher became very interested in the salvation of our children. I did not know whether to send them to other schools or to keep them at home. I felt sure they would teach them some things that were not correct. Anxious to know what to do, I went to our convention at Niagara Falls, hoping to get assistance in solving the problem. I there listened to two splendid addresses, one by Sr. Maggie MacGregor, and the other by Bro. R. C. Evans. Bro. Evans spoke to me, as I believe, though he did not know it. He seemed to strike upon the very theme that had engrossed my mind so much, answered the very question that I would have asked. He said in the course of his remarks, "I would not send my child to gather mushrooms where there were toadstools." I saw the point at once. There might be the good there, but there was also the poisonous, and it looked as well as the good. It might be as readily chosen by the child as the good, because they are not able to discern the difference. . . .

"TOO BIG OR TOO OLD"

If I were a "scattered member" again, I would do just as we did when we returned from that convention, would gather my children around me, take Bibles and Quarterly, and have a real Sabbath school at home. Five years have passed now, and God has raised up a branch of about seventy-five members. We have a grand Sabbath school, a nice churchhouse free from indebtedness, and all is well. We have learned to "despise not the day of small things."

Yours in the covenant,

GEORGE BUSCHLEN.

ARTHUR, Ontario.

[WE are pleased to get this report of good work done. While it is but the repetition of what we have heard from several other places, it is nevertheless a very encouraging part of the work. We are always glad, indeed, when we can see such manifest results for good to the work of the church coming from the work of the Sabbath school. And as we write, though many miles lay between us, we feel that we would like to grasp the hand of the brother and those of his fellow workers, and bid them a hearty "Godspeed" in the work. It is by the efforts of the faithful, those that will keep all the law and instruct their children so to do, that Zion will be built up. May our efforts never cease, our zeal never abate, our love for the work never grow cold, till we have heard the final "well done."—ED.]

FIRST QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Report blanks have been sent to each member of the First Quorum of Elders, and should have reached you ere you see this. If for any reason you fail to receive a blank, write at once to me at Henderson, Iowa, and another will be forwarded. This is very important, as there is a rule of the quorum that will cause your name to be dropped from the quorum if you fail to report to two consecutive sessions of General Conference. Fill out the blank very carefully, being sure to give name and post office address in full, and mail same to Elder D. C. White, Lamoni, Iowa, on or before March 25, 1900. We trust we may have reports from every member.

T. A HOUGAS,
Acting Secretary.

FOURTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

It is desired that as many of the members of the fourth quorum as possible be present at the coming General Conference, as there is important business to be done, and that all reports be sent so they will reach me at Denver, before the first of April. If not sent by that time, please direct them to me at Lamoni, Iowa. J. W. GILBERT, Sec.

GENERAL CONFERENCE VISITORS.

The committee calls attention to the train service at Lamoni, giving time of arrival. We have two trains from the north daily (except Sunday), a passenger 6:25 a. m. and a freight carrying passengers, connecting with passenger at Bethany Junction 12:30 p. m. From the south a passenger 8:17 p. m. and a second train from the south to Bethany Junction 2:10 p. m. This latter train is met at Bethany Junction by a hack. Passengers from the south would do well to arrange, so far as practicable, to come on evening train, and save hack fare.

No trains arrive or depart from Lamoni, on Sundays. However, the hack from Lamoni meets the passenger trains at Bethany Junction on Sunday as follows: arriving from the north, 12:15 p. m.; from the south, 2:10 p. m.

Members of the reception committee will be at the trains, and may be known by their wearing a ribbon badge. Should anyone arrive and not find the committee they should go at once to the Brick Church, three blocks west of the depot, and there inquire for the reception committee.

The committee does not promise free board to any except those who make such arrangements previous to their arrival. There are not many such places to be had, and if you do not receive notice of being assigned to a place for free entertainment, come prepared to pay $2.50 per week, or take your own chances.

If the committee can be of any service to you, they would be pleased to hear from you. Those who have made their own arrangements need not write, but if you need help to find your place when you arrive the committee will aid you.

A large attendance is expected and places will be rapidly filled up.

REDUCED RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

NEW ENGLAND AND SOUTHEASTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATIONS.

These associations have granted reduced rates, (one and one third fare for the round trip,) on the certificate plan, to the coming General Conference and conventions of Zion's Religio-Literary Society and the General Sunday School Association. Tickets on the going passage may be purchased over the lines named below from April 3–9 inclusive—on any of those dates.

Reduced rates are granted on the following conditions:—

1. Going tickets must be purchased not earlier than April 3 and not later than the 9th.

2. The rule is to purchase full first-classs tickets on the going trip.

3. Passengers must, in all cases, obtain a separate certificate with every ticket purchased. Do not accept a certificate covering two or more persons. Each ticket bought requires a separate certificate, and to which the purchaser is entitled.

4. Such certificates must be delivered to the Church Secretary, and when signed by him and signed and stamped by the railroad agent at Lamoni, will entitle purchasers to return tickets to destination at one third the usual fare; provided one hundred tickets are purchased; provided further, that ministers holding half-fare permits are not entitled to said reduction.

5. Tickets on the going passage may be limited or unlimited, according to the rules of roads selling them; but return tickets are good only for continuous passage, and not later than April 24. Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

Special instructions, together with addresses of chairmen and lists of lines in each association, are given below.

NEW ENGLAND PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

N. E. Weeks, Chairman, 67 Federal Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

"The reduction applies to persons starting from points named on the back hereof [list too lengthy to insert; the following instructions make it unnecessary] in New England Passenger Association territory by any of the lines named below."

"Certificates are issued only at the stations named on the back hereof [omitted]. If the ticket agent at a station from which delegates or others are expected to come is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to the place of meeting, he may inform the delegate or person of the nearest important station where the certificates and tickets can be obtained, in which case local ticket should be purchased to the point and there obtain certificate and through ticket. It must be understood, however, that persons should arrange to arrive at the station where the certificates and tickets are procured in ample time to allow agent to execute same.

"List of lines making the reduction: Bangor & Aroostook; Boston & Albany; Boston & Maine; Central Vermont; Fitchburg; Grand Trunk; Maine Central; New York, New Haven & Hartford; Portland Steamship Co.; Washington County Railroad."

SOUTHEASTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

Chairman of this association urges that it is important that all persons desiring to attend this meeting be fully advised as to the conditions. Therefore those intending to travel over the territory of this association on any of the lines named below should write to Joseph Richardson, Chairman, Seventh Floor, Equitable Building, Atlanta, Georgia, inclosing three cents in stamps, asking for a copy of "Blank form 14, Conditions of excursion rates on the certificate plan."

"If a through ticket cannot be procured at the starting point, the person should purchase to the most convenient point at which such ticket can be obtained, and there repurchase ticket through to place of meeting, procuring a standard certificate from each agent from whom a ticket is purchased."

BORN.

MCLAUGHLIN —At Davis City, Iowa, December 31, 1898, to Bro. William O. and Sr. Edith E. McLaughlin, a son; named Richard, and blessed February 4, 1900, under the hands of Elders H. A. Stebbins and James McDiffett.

MONROE.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, October 24, 1899, to Bro. Isaac A. and Sr. Ida C. Monroe, a daughter; named Edith Lucile, and blessed December 24, under the hands of Elders H. A. Stebbins and J. M. Stubbart.

MARRIED.

FISH—FEASTER.—At the home of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. George W. Feaster, two miles east of Mallard, Iowa, Wednesday, March 7, 1900, at nine o'clock p. m., Bro. John Fish and Sr. Rachael Della Feaster were united in the bonds of holy matrimony, Elder Charles E. Butterworth officiating. About thirty relatives and friends were present to witness the ceremony and extend congratulations to the worthy and happy young people. At the close of the ceremony all present partook of a bounteous repast that was made ready for them by Sr. Feaster and assistants. May the clear day, the bright sun, and the lovely moonlight evening betoken a long, prosperous, and happy future for the young people.

DIED.

MALLORY.—February 17, 1900, near Ashland, Oregon, Cecil Mallory at the age of 20 years and 7 months. The funeral was held in the Christian church conducted by Elder S. Crum.

GOREHAM. — Bro. William M. Goreham died at Jamaica, Iowa, December 16, 1899. Funeral sermon by J. S. Roth in the United Brethren church. House crowded full of very attentive hearers. Every store and shop in town were closed till after the funeral. Bro. Goreham was very highly respected by all his neighbors; and those not of the church said, "That man was a true Christian, an honor to our town."

ROGERS —Mrs. Catharine Rogers, wife of Davis Rogers, was born October 8, 1831, in Oneida County, New York; died at her home in Sandwich, Illinois, February 20, 1900. The deceased, whose maiden name was Heavener, came to Illinois in 1854, and was married to Mr. Davis Rogers, March 25, 1855. To them were born seven children. She bore her sickness with remarkable patience and Christian resignation, without a murmur or complaint, and passed away peaceably to the rest prepared for the faithful ones. Sr. Rogers leaves a kind husband, five children, a sister, and one brother, to mourn her loss. At her death Mrs. Rogers was 68 years, 3 months, and 12 days of age.

RIDGE —At Argentine, Kansas, February 15, 1900, Lottie May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ridge, aged 5 months and 9 days. As the little bud of promise has been transplanted from this world by the angels of God into the sweet fields of Eden, and beckoning her parents to come. May she prove an incentive to them to press forward in the right direction, so as to meet her in the sweet by and by. Funeral services at the residence by Elder F. C. Warnky, assisted by Bro. F. Parker.

CARTER —Mirley, daughter of Bro. Aaron and Sr. Eliza Carter, born March 29, 1892, died February 4, 1900, near Provo, Utah. Little Mirley was an angelic child, and has surely gone to happiest rest. Funeral services from Saints' chapel in Provo, in charge of Elder H. N. Hansen, sermon by Elder D. W. Wight.

TYLER —At his home, Smethwick, Birmingham, England, Elder Charles Tyler died January 7, 1900, aged 77 years. In the death of our aged brother, one of the links that connect us with the past has been severed. A member of the church in the days of the martyr, he often spoke with animation of the glorious times they had in those days, and how the meetings were then thronged with people who came in their carriages, and who when the blighting influence of polygamous doctrine fell upon the church, vanished like snow on a summer's day. He was baptized into the Reorganization August 11, 1867, and until his death the gospel was "all in all" to him. It is grand and comforting for his friends to know that he is no more the poor, worn out, nearly blind, old Bro. Tyler; but a glorious, radiant soul, set free forever from the infirmities of the flesh by the matchless love of God through Jesus Christ our Redeemer.

POWELL.—At his home near Ravenwood, Missouri, January 26, 1900, Elder William Powell. He was born in Crossful, Herefordshire, England, March 4, 1824, and was 75 years, 10 months, and 22 days old. In 1849 he was married in Ohio, to Miss Mary Morgan; to them five children were born. His wife died in 1856, and on January 15, 1859, he married Miss Jane Morgan; to them twelve children were born. He joined the Baptist Church while young, and preached for that denomination a number of years; but when he heard the restored gospel he gladly accepted it, and was baptized February 14, 1866, at Malad, Idaho; was ordained an elder the same day. He always bore a faithful testimony to the divinity of this work, and died as he had lived, firm in the faith. He leaves a wife and ten children. Services at the house of Bro. John Hawley.

BRYDON. —Sister Esther Taylor Brydon was born in England, April 28, 1828; died February 22, 1900, at Waterloo, Nebraska. She came to America in 1867, and to Nebraska in 1874; was baptized September 21, 1886, and remained a faithful member unto death, loved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves three children to mourn the loss of a faithful and loving mother; her husband having gone long before. Funeral from the Presbyterian church; sermon by Elder F. A. Smith.

MOSS.—Ida May Moss died January 29, 1900, aged 19 years, 4 months, and four days. She leaves a husband, one son, and a host of relatives to mourn their loss. This is sent from Hearne, Texas: Whereas, the all-wise God, has seen fit to take our sister to himself; therefore, be it resolved, that in the loss of our sister we lose a bright mind and a faithful sister. We as a church and Sunday school do extend our sympathy to the bereaved ones, and commend them to him who doeth all things well. A. M. Nunley, J. M. Nunley, and W. B. Dotson, committee.

BYERGO.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, February 27, 1900, Sr. Hannah Byergo, after seven years of affliction, aged 34 years, 1 month, and 5 days. She united with the church when nine years of age, and so long as she retained her mental powers, was exemplary in life, and true to the faith. Funeral services at the home of her parents, Bro. and Sr. C. Christenson, Barnard, Missouri, Elder M. F. Gowell officiating.

DOBSON.—At Guilford, Missouri, February 24, 1900, Coral Ivy, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. C. M. Dobson, age 1 year and 10 days. Funeral at the Saints' church by Elder M. F. Gowell.

FRANK.—Near Tawas City, Michigan, Sr. Amanda Jane, wife of Bro. Alfred Frank, after about two weeks' suffering passed away March 2, 1900. She was born July 10, 1860, in Moulton, Ontario. With her husband has resided near Tawas City since 1883, and was baptized January 25, 1885. She leaves a husband, five boys, and three girls to mourn. Funeral services conducted in the Saints' church by Elder David Smith, and E. A. Goodwin.

SHEER.—Sr. Elizabeth Sheer was the daughter of David Powell; was born at Potosi, Wisconsin, February 28, 1847; married to Milton Sheer in 1869; to them sixteen children were born. Sr. Sheer was baptized in 1863. She died at her home in Plano, Illinois, February 25, 1900, leaving husband and six children to mourn. Funeral from the Saints' church, attended by a large concourse of people; sermon by Elder E. M. Wildermuth, assisted by A. R. Wilcox.

Archæological Committee's Report,

WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

CHRIST NOT CRUCIFIED ON FRIDAY?

The alleged inaccuracy of our Lord's prediction concerning the time in which he was to be in the grave is the result of ignorance of the record and the Greek in which it is recorded. Let the clergy who adduce it smile at the imputation. Let them go to the text and their lexicons, to Moses and the Evangelists.

What did Jesus say? "For as Jonas was in the stomach of the sea monster three days and three nights, so shall the Son of Man be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights."

That is a statement precise and definite. The parallel is perfect.

The historical fact which Christ uses as the type of his burial is thus definitely stated in the inspired record. "Now the Lord had prepared (or arranged) a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And Jonah was in the stomach of the fish three days and three nights."

Jesus was divine. His knowledge of the future was as accurate as his knowledge of the past. Was he ever inaccurate or indefinite in any statement concerning the past? Could he be inaccurate or indefinite concerning the future?

In what would consist the fitness of the type, if its characteristic fact was absent from the antitype? Could he or would he make a loose declaration concerning that event which was to be the consummation and confirmation of his express mission in the world? Especially when he was challenged for a sign or proof of his Messiahship and mission?

A remarkable thing about Christ's answer to the demand is that he had just uttered these words: "For by thy words thou shalt be justified and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." The attempt to explain the words of Christ by making a part of three days and three nights to stand for the whole is to mistranslate the record and attribute vagueness of mind and laxity of language to Christ.

He was literally "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

This I shall show from the record. I shall also prove that he was not crucified and buried on Friday, but on the preceding Thursday.

The observance of good Friday as a memorial of his death and burial is a misfit.

TO THE RECORD.

Six days before the Passover (Friday), Jesus was in Bethany, the home of Martha and Mary (John 12: 1).

This was the weekly Sabbath, our Saturday. The next day, our Sunday, was his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. He returned at even to Bethany. On the next morning, Monday, he went again to Jerusalem, and at even returned to Bethany. On Tuesday morning, he is again in the city, and in the evening back to the home on Olivet.

On this Tuesday evening, which was the beginning of the Hebrew Wednesday, Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye know that after two days is the Passover, and the Son of Man is betrayed to be crucified."—Matthew 26: 2. Two days to the fifteenth of the month Abib. The Hebrew Wednesday and Thursday intervened.

I have thus traced Christ's locality during the week preceding the Passover, to Tuesday night, the beginning of the Jews' Wednesday, thirteenth day of Abib, two days before Friday.

It was then the chief priests and scribes began to perfect their plans for his death. But they said, "Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people." Now, that feast day was Friday. Why would there have been "an uproar of the people" on that day more than on any other day? It was not because of their feeling or attitude toward the victim. The people were acquiescent in his death. There was an ordinance and a law concerning that day. They are found in Leviticus, 23d chapter, and Numbers, 28th chapter. No Hebrew would dare violate them and desecrate that day. It was a Sabbath day of even greater sanctity than the weekly Sabbath.

Thus read the law of its institution, "In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein." This was added, "It shall be a statute forever in all your dwellings throughout your generations."

Such proceedings as the arrest, trial, execution, with all their attendant work, horror, and excitement, would have been the grossest violation of the sanctity of the day and most abhorrent to the people, and disobedience of the law of Jehovah concerning it. The sacred office of the priesthood would not have protected the violators against the indignation and fury of the people. That is why they said, "Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people."

John assigns the reason why the Jews besought Pilate to have the legs of the three crucified ones broken and they removed from the cross on Thursday, the day before Passover Sabbath, "for that Sabbath day was an high day."—John 19: 31.

THE PREPARATION THURSDAY.

Preparation for the Sabbath began by express statute on the fourteenth of Abib. (Leviticus 23: 5: "In the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, is the Lord's Passover.") In the year of the crucifixion that was Thursday. Not only all the work, the slaughter of the animals for sacrifice and the offerings of the multitude assembled for the feast, but the killing of the Passover lamb were required to be finished on that day.

The law and regulation read: "At the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in, there shalt thou kill the Passover at even, at the time of the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt." This "even" was that of the fourteenth day of Abib, the day before the Passover Sabbath. We shall find that Christ was slain at "even" on that day. Thus the Evangelists refer to it as the day of his trial and death and burial:

John — "The preparation of the Passover."

Mark—"The first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the Passover."

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Luke—"Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the Passover must be killed."

Matthew—"The first day of the unleavened bread the disciples came to Christ, saying unto him, 'Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the Passover?'"

By the statute order, the feast of the Passover lamb was kept "between the two evenings" of the fourteenth day of Abib. On the evening and night of the day occurred the supper with the disciples, Christ's table talk, his agony in Gethsemane, his arrest, the trial before the High Priest and the other incidents before day. "In the morning," wrote Matthew and Mark, "the chief priests, scribes and Council bound and delivered him to Pilate." Then ensued his trial and its scenes, his deliverance to the executioners, and his crucifixion, beginning at the third hour, nine a. m., Matthew wrote: "From the sixth to the ninth hour [twelve to three p. m.] there was darkness over all the land." Then Christ uttered the last words on the cross and expired. Then, during the first part of the evening, between three o'clock and sunset, Joseph of Arimathea obtained the body of Jesus from Pilate, and laid it in his own sepulchre.

Mark records this, with this particular statement: "And now, when the even was come, because it was the preparation, that is the day before the Sabbath [not the weekly Sabbath, Saturday, but the feast Sabbath, Friday], Joseph of Arimathea came, and went in boldly and craved the body of Jesus." Matthew, Mark, and Luke record the additional fact that Mary Magdalene and the other Mary witnessed the burial that evening.

John completes the proof of the death and burial of Christ on the preparation day with these two statements: "The Jews, therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross during that Sabbath day—for that day was an high day—asked of Pilate that their legs might be broken and they taken away."—John 19: 31. The 42d verse: "There they laid Jesus therefore, because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was near." Because, as it was the preparation, the burial must be made before the next day, as it was the Sabbath of the Passover. Its nearness would enable them to complete the work of burial before the Sabbath of the feast began, into which the sunset glow was then fading.

Thus, by the record of the four evangelists, Christ was crucified and buried on Thursday.

CONFIRMATION.

The statute of Jehovah made the fifteenth of Abib, the day of the Passover feast, a great Sabbath. When the first day of the month came on Friday the fifteenth, or Passover, would fall on Friday. Thus two Sabbaths would occur side by side—the Passover Sabbath on Friday, the weekly Sabbath on Saturday.

This happened at the Passover the year Christ was crucified.

Failure to observe this fact has caused the confusion in the translation and revision of the evangelists and in the popular apprehension. Ignorance of this fact explains the imputation of inaccuracy to Christ's prediction.

Six times the dual Sabbaths are mentioned in the Greek of the Gospel narratives — in Matthew twice, in chapter 28: 1; Mark 16: 2; Luke 24: 1; John 20: 1 and 19. The word used is "ton Sabbaton," Sabbaths, the genitive plural. The particle which precedes "opse" is "after," "at the end of," with the genitive.

Where the old and revised versions read "In the end of the Sabbath," and "On the first day of the week," the Greek reads "After the Sabbaths," "opse ton Sabbaton."

For instance, Matthew 28: 1, literally translated, reads: "Now after the Sabbaths, as it began to dawn unto the first day after the Sabbaths, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulcher."

Mark, 16: 2, wrote: "And very early on the first day after the Sabbaths they came to the tomb, the sun being risen." Luke and John use exactly the same words in recording the event of the resurrection morning, "opse de Sabbaton." The translators substituted "The first day of the week" for "The first day after the Sabbaths."

John, in chapter 20: 19, records the appearance of Christ to the disciples thus: "Then, it being the evening on that day, the first after the Sabbaths, and the doors being shut where the disciples were through fear of the Jews, Jesus came and stood in the midst and said to them, 'Peace to you.'"

Two whole Sabbaths intervened between Christ's death and resurrection. Thus, each of the evangelists recording the visit of the women to the tomb on the morning of Christ's resurrection used the expression, "te miai ton Sabbaton" ("the first day after the Sabbaths").

This shows that three days and three nights intervened between the burial of Christ on the evening of the preparation day (our Thursday) and his resurrection on the morn after the two Sabbaths (our Sunday). Confirmatory of this is the remark of the disciples on the road to Emmaus relating to the trial and death of Jesus: "To-day is the third day since these things were done." If he were crucified on Friday that would have been the second day.

Here is the double proof that Christ was crucified on Thursday and was buried three days and three nights: Four times in Matthew, Mark, and Luke is recorded the positive prediction of Christ to his disciples that he would be crucified and "the third day rise again." He would not be indefinite or inaccurate with them, as they were to be the witnesses of his resurrection, and proclaim it in its verity and exactness in proof of his divine power in salvation.

Paul wrote, "Christ, our Passover, is slain for us." As such he was the Lamb of God, slain in his purpose, from the foundation of the world. He came in pursuance of redemption, fulfilling the prophecy, promise, and type expressed in the Passover covenant. As the time drew near he said, "With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer." There and then he was to fulfill it, and transpose the paschal feast into his own memorial supper; that community feast whose symbol elements commemorate the events by which his people are emancipated and enfranchised and constituted an "elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a purchased possession" for God.

Faith in the historical facts of Christ's life from his birth to his ascension is absolutely necessary to avail of his redemption. To cast any uncertainty or haze about him is to obliterate the covenant and break the unity of the commonwealth of Israel.

The whole significance of the cross of Christ rests on his complete and particular fulfillment of the covenant which he came to ratify and extend to all who believe on him, "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Christ himself must state the facts explicitly, and so must they whom he commissioned to publish them to all men to the end of time.—The Rev. H. L. Singleton.

PRESBYTERIANS

Should become familiar with the handsomest religious paper published. Write us stating that you wish to receive a free trial subscription, and we will be glad to send the Interior to you for eight weeks free of charge, in order that you may know it.

As a first class weekly religious paper, the Interior cannot be surpassed. Presbyterian in nature, it is however, a broad, comprehensive, and progressive periodical, partaking much of the character of its home, Chicago. It looks out on the whole world, analyzes social problems, discusses all living religious questions, reports the progress of the world in every particular, gives news of the churches, and sparkles with pertinent editorial paragraphs. The calling of the disciples and the beginning of the ministry will be the special themes of "The Life of the Master," by Dr. Watson ("Ian Maclaren"), in the March number of McClure's Magazine. There will be more of Mr. Linson's beautiful illustrations, both in color and in black and white.

"AS JESUS WOULD DO."

The HERALD editors subscribed for the Topeka Capital during the editorial management of the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, who during the past week has been conducting said paper upon the presumption of "what Jesus would do" with general problems, and under conditions and circumstances now existing in the world. We have failed to receive the paper, for some cause, but present, in this statement and in the extracts from the Chicago Tribune, a fair summary of public opinion of the late effort of Mr. Sheldon.

The first issue of the Capital under "the new journalistic Moses" contained on its first page a prayer written for the occasion by Bishop Vincent. Next came an article appealing for help on behalf of the starving people of India, urging aid from Christian America. Next came, "War a Disease," in which is set forth the physician's diagnosis of all war as "military fever," "a disease epidemic in all latitudes; its causes, dangers, and cures." Then follow in their order, "Kansas Prohibition," setting forth that it has been a success; "Colorado Charity" — in receiving consumptives from all climes who enter the State for health, and calling upon the nation's philanthropy to help provide for them; "The Liquor Evil" in general; "the cry for work," "the answer the saloon makes to it," "the fearful waste caused by the liquor industry," etc.

Speculative market reports are "curtailed," "all reports of gambling deals in futures and unreal values" are eliminated, and a lecture follows on the evils of stock, grain, and other forms of speculation.

Mr. Sheldon explained his purpose at length to conduct the paper on the lines that would "probably" be adopted by Jesus himself. He decries against the "battle of greed" and announces his "rules" as follows: "No theatrical news whatever." "No pugilism or wrestling;" "only the cleaner kind of sporting news." "In crime no details of the horrors, but only the bare facts with amplifications of the cause and the lessons which their causes convey." "Politics from a purely nonpartisan standpoint, locally and editorially." "No scandals and nothing which in the remotest degree is of a scandalous nature." "No slang, not even that which is considered permissible by the average newspaper." Articles on general lines of reform, including departures on socialistic lines, are duly announced for later issues of the paper.

From these brief statements our readers will get the drift of Mr. Sheldon's work as a journalist and see the drift of his views of public and general policy concerning the conduct of the daily press. From the comments republished it will be seen that the opinion prevails that he has championed no reforms not already championed by most of the religious press, and many of which are already urged by the editors and publishers of secular papers.

The following item purports to reveal Mr. Sheldon's ultimate intentions:—

Topeka, Kas., March 14 —The Rev. Charles M. Sheldon's Christian daily is only a step in the direction of a gigantic project which the Topeka minister will attempt to carry out. He contemplates building a new religious system for the Christian world. The preacher-editor has not told the public of his plans, but an editorial in to-morrow's Capital, will pave the way for the announcement. The information bearing on Mr. Sheldon's plans comes from one close to the minister, however.

The Sheldon project for a new religious institution contemplates the abandonment of sects—a structure founded on the teachings of the Bible, and made strong by the obliteration of the lines which now divide the churches. He already has decided on preaching this faith in two continents.

"Practical Christianity" is what the author of "In His Steps" chooses to call his idea

"On the 1st of May, having obtained leave of absence from his congregation, Mr. Sheldon will start for England, where for two months he will conduct a campaign for "practical Christianity," the whole scheme being laid along the lines found in his books and his sermons.—Chicago Tribune, March 15.

MR. SHELDON'S FAD PAPER.

There are two things which every man thinks he can do—edit a newspaper and poke a fire. A week's experience at the head of a paper is apt to take the conceit out of anyone who goes into the work with that assumption. Judging from the first specimen of the Rev. Mr. Sheldon's handiwork most people will think his paper chiefly notable for its tiresome lack of general interest. This was to be expected, for he is simply exploiting his fads. He is putting into his paper those things which interest him, regardless of whether they interest other people or not. The first duty of the newspaper editor is to put himself into the place of the great outside world of readers and seek to determine what interests them, whether it interests him or not. This primary law of journalism is usually enforced by the application of a lingering death penalty upon such papers as ignore it. There is no reason to believe Mr. Sheldon's paper would be any exception to the general rule in this regard were he to go on with it.

The difficulty is that he is a preacher and not an editor. He has simply carried the preaching profession into the printing office. The primary function of the editor is not to preach but to give the news, just as it is the primary function of the preacher not to give the news but to moralize. A good preacher is likely to be a poor editor, and a good editor is likely to be a poor preacher. Mr. Sheldon is a misfit in the editorial chair. His attempt to measure the news of the world by the private footrule of what he thinks people should be allowed to read or like to read is not a success.

Mr. Sheldon's daily paper does not differ materially from the religious weeklies already published in abundance, except that it is more primitive and crude in its editorial methods. His idea of attaching a little sermon to every news item belongs to the days of the infancy of journalism. The same natural and salutary causes that have forced the modern editor to keep his news and views apart would in due time compel Mr. Sheldon to do the same. Nor would people continue to read a paper which served out all the news in a censor's pintpot. To compel them to support such a paper would require the Russian idea of government or the system that prevailed in England before Milton made his eloquent plea for unlicensed printing. Public opinion is a sufficient censor for the press of any free nation.

Juvenal had the right newspaper idea when he said that he would choose for the subject of his satires "all things that men do"—that he would write of their acts, their hopes, their fears, their amusements. Any narrower scope kills human interest. Dispatches from Topeka state that Mr. Sheldon's paper is not satisfactory to the regular subscribers and that they are buying outside papers freely to get the news. Here is the public verdict in a nutshell. Probably when the end of the week arrives Mr. Sheldon will be as glad to get out of the newspaper business as the readers of the Topeka Capital will be glad to have him out.—Chicago Tribune, March 12, 1900.

CALL SHELDON IDEA A FAILURE.

The Rev. C. M. Sheldon's endeavor in journalism does not meet with the approval of all the editors of religious papers in Chicago.

The general tenor of their opinions is that the undertaking is not dignified, that it will be practically useless as a demonstration of any theory, and that it will be injurious to the prestige and dignity of the Christian Church.

Dr. W. C. Gray, editor of the Interior, said: "Dr. Sheldon tells us he would show the world how Jesus Christ would conduct a newspaper. A man who can utter such a remark is a monumental egotist. No man has the right to say such a thing. It is a degradation of the name of Jesus Christ. As to the paper that Dr. Sheldon brings out, it does not rise to a level that would justify criticism. It is not a newspaper. The effect of the whole thing will be simply to bring ridicule upon Christianity. The whole object of the thing seems to be to give notoriety to the paper and to Dr. Sheldon himself at the expense of the Christian Church. True Christianity means hard, energetic, level-headed, and industrious work for the elevation of our fellow men, and Dr. Sheldon's undertaking is surely not a step in that direction."

Dr. Arthur Edwards, the editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, said:—

"It is difficult for me to see how that experiment will demonstrate anything. Mr. Sheldon might learn in time, perhaps, to edit a religious newspaper. This week, however, he is trying to edit a secular newspaper, the contents of which are more or less valuable. When he finishes the paper will return to its old managers. For general purposes it undoubtedly will be a better paper than it is now.

"Of course, it would not be fair to judge his work for a single day. I have my doubts about the success of the experiment, because the time is too short."

The Rev. J. S. Cantwell, editor of the Universalist Leader, expressed himself as follows:

"I do not think Jesus would have attempted to edit a paper for a week expecting his conduct of the editorial columns would embrace any better teachings than he has given in the gospels.

"While conceding Dr. Sheldon's excellent motives, I think he has made a serious mistake in the way he undertakes to reform the newspaper world, and I cannot relieve myself from the impression that the enterprise savors strongly of the sensational.

"Eliminating certain features, such as the undue attention given to scandal, horrors, and sporting news, I cannot see that Mr. Sheldon's paper is any improvement in a moral way over many issues of papers of Chicago and other cities, which are clean and decent and are admitted freely into our houses."

J. S. Dickerson, editor of the Standard, said:—

"I do not think one may judge of Mr. Sheldon's epoch-making experiment by the dispatches in the morning papers. Neither is it fair to judge of Mr. Sheldon's success as a manager of a daily newspaper by one issue. While I think the experiment is interesting, while it will be of great value in advertising the Topeka Capital, I do not believe it is possible to discover what effect a newspaper edited and published under Mr. Sheldon's peculiar ideas will have on daily newspapers —with so brief an experiment. At least a year would be necessary to ascertain the real merits.

"I give Mr. Sheldon full credit for sincerity and for a genuine effort to help humanity. I think the Capital's move will be suggestive to many other daily newspapers. After all, the great majority of people in the United States are moral, if not religious, and appreciate every honest effort to ameliorate the condition of mankind. I have little sympathy with the phrase, 'What would Jesus do in editing a paper to-day?' as it is impossible to imagine our Savior in any such position. His mission was that of Savior and Teacher. But, as I have said, some good will come from the experiment, and I notice that even some of the 'yellow' papers of New York are giving greater attention to the discussion of news from the religious point of view."—Chicago Tribune, March 14.

A CORRECTION.

Bro. I. M. Lane writes asking that there be a correction in the next to the last paragraph of his letter on page 137 of HERALD for February 28, 1900, third line from the bottom of paragraph, the name "Moroni" should be Marion, his own name. Please read with this correction and oblige.

WILL PRAYER HELP THEM?

PREACHERS, POLITICS, AND PROHIBITION.

The Methodist bishops have called for a week of prayer beginning on March 25, because it is discovered that Methodism is on the decrease. Ed Howe, of the Atchison Globe, observes that "'instead of a week of prayer, conservative men should be appointed to use scissors on the church doctrine." The editor of the Kansas City Gazette protests and declares that the Globe is wrong. What is wanted, says the Gazette, is to get the church back to good old Methodist doctrine, Methodist preaching, and give the people Christ and judgment, instead of the yowling we have had in Kansas about politics and prohibition. As one of these opinions is that of an agnostic, and that of the other of a dyed-in-the-wool Calvinistic covenantor, the chances are that the bishops are not far wrong in demanding more praying and less preaching.—Wichita Eagle, March 11.

The Methodist people were a praying people years ago, and there was much devotion and piety among them.

The M. E. Church was then the poor man's church, the elders a "band of singing pilgrims," who took delight in pulpit and prayer exercises.

But the same thing occurred among them that turned the favor of God from the Nephite brethren; the membership grew in numbers, the churches in many places grew wealthy and took on the airs of superiority and local aristocracy; the ministers became proud and exclusive, and a species of social and religious domination increased, to the sapping the sources whence true piety will flow. Hence it is no wonder that the church has begun to fall into decadence.

We once heard a popular M. E. minister say in a discourse preached in his own church, that the church to which he belonged was "perishing from a species of spiritual dry rot." He spoke from the text "Were there not ten cleansed, but where are the nine? There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger."

We presume that sermons might be preached in many pulpits of to-day from the same text with great propriety under existing conditions.

Will prayer help them?

WE publish the letter given below, asking some of our field captains to write upon it. We will publish the three best articles on the subject that may be sent us.

The subject is an excellent one to call out the talent of the writers. Let us have some articles. Of course we shall have to decide as to the merit of articles, length, clearness, and thoroughness of statement and proof, etc.

FULTON, Ky., March 5.

Editors Herald:—I desire information on the point of our agency, or our probationary state. When does our agency cease, at death, the resurrection, judgment, or either? or does it ever cease? Are you able to tell us? Any of the Saints will give us great satisfaction by telling us.

Does the judgment of the righteous take place at the same time as that of the unrighteous, after the thousand years? Do the Saints who are raised at Christ's coming, the beginning of the millennium, reign with him a thousand years before their judgment?

We learn from the Book of Mormon, page 536, that whatsoever inviteth, persuadeth, and enticeth to do evil is of the Devil. Now if good and evil were not both set before man, could he be able to choose either, and thereby be a free agent? Is it understood by the church that men will be free agents during the millennium, after that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, is bound and cast into the pit, and is sealed? If he is the prince of this world, the prince and power of the air, what will there be left which will entice men to do evil? And if all things which inviteth and enticeth to do evil are of the Devil, his deceptive power will not be completely sealed if there is anything here whatever which will entice men to do evil. Can we choose between two things if we have but one?

Am I right in understanding that we will not have but the one, "good," before us during the thousand years?

I ask these questions in a spirit of meekness, as an honest inquirer of the truth; hoping some one that is "set in the church" will answer by the knowledge of the Spirit.

In the faith,

J. W. WILLIAMS.

RETURN OF BRO. GOMER R. WELLS.

Seven years ago this coming spring the church sent Bro Gomer R. Wells, then of Knobnoster, Missouri, a young and untried man, to Australia, to assist the work started in that far-off land by Brn. Wandell, Rodger, Gillen, Smith, and carried on by Brn. Wight, Butterworth, Kaler, and others.

Bro. Wells returns to the land whence he started, this spring, and we have received the following clippings from the Newcastle-Wallsend Sun, for January 12, 1900, and the Newcastle Morning Herald and Miners' Advocate for February 3, as tokens significant of the esteem in which Bro. Wells is held in the field of his recent labors. We are pleased with the honors he has won in the Master's cause:—

The Rev. G. Wells, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ (Latter Day Saints), Hamilton, has just received a letter from his bishop, in America, recalling him to the States. During Mr. Wells' stay in the district he has worked hard for his church, and he has done much towards advancing it in the Newcastle district. The members of the faith will regret Mr. and Mrs. Wells' early departure. It may be mentioned Mrs. Wells is a district lady; she was the daughter of the late Mr. Pascoe, of Broadmeadow.

BROADMEADOW.

VALEDICTORY SOCIAL.

The "Latter Day Saints" (reorganized) of the Newcastle district, tendered a valedictory social to Elder G. R. Wells and wife in the chapel, Gosford road, on Thursday evening last, on the eve of their departure for America. Elder W. J. Haworth, president of the New South Wales conference, presided. Elder J. Kaler, of Sydney, offered the opening prayer. During the evening suitable selections were rendered by the choir. Vocal and literary items were contributed by Miss A. Burt, Misses B. Reed and N. Davis (duet), Miss Florrie Potter (who was encored), Miss A. Jones, Mr. H. Gammidge and party,

www.LatterDayTruth.org

W. J. Haworth (encored), and Mrs. Wells, who by request sang "Where is now the merry party?" As a response to an encore she sang "Jeanott and Jeanette." The chairman, in a brief speech, said that they parted with Elder Wells with considerable regret. During the seven years in which he had been doing evangelical work in the colony he had made many friends, both inside and outside of the church, by his affable manner and kindly disposition. The church had been materially benefited by his labor. Since he had been in Australia several new churches had been built, and the church aspect was a brighter one than ever before. His personal friendship for both Mr. and Mrs. Wells was of that kind which could not be broken off by the distance which would soon be placed between them. In losing Mrs. Wells, the district was losing a lady possessed of considerable musical ability; her voice having often been heard in the cause of charity and at the local Eisteddfods. He hoped that the loss to the church of their services in Australia would be the gain of the church in America. He had much pleasure on behalf of the "Saints" of the Newcastle district in presenting Elder Wells with a traveling bag, as a slight token of the esteem in which he was held by them. Mrs. Wells was also presented with a handsome silver mounted biscuit barrel, and little Lena Wells was also given a beautiful silver mug, suitably inscribed, to remind her of her many little friends in the land of her birth.

Elder Wells, on behalf of Mrs. Wells, himself, and child, thanked them for these kind expressions of their good will. They should always remind them of their many loyal friends, and of the many happy days spent in the land of the Southern Cross. Like the chairman, he had formed attachments here which the breadth of the Pacific Ocean could not sever. He hoped that they would all remain firm in "the faith that was once delivered to the Saints," that they might all be found among the redeemed of earth's children. During an interval light refreshments were served by a committee of the lady members of the church. Before closing, the chairman, on behalf of all present, wished their guests good-bye, and a pleasant voyage and safe return to Elder Wells' native land. The meeting terminated by singing, "God be with you till we meet again," and the benediction by Elder Haworth.

BRO. JOHN SMITH, laboring at Haverhill, Massachusetts, secured favorable notice of his efforts in the Gazette of that city in its issue for March 7. Bro. Smith is evidently an advertiser, judging from the following "ad" in the regular "want columns" of said newspaper. Read it, and learn how "John Smith" goes to work:—

WANTED—The people of Haverhill to know that Elder John Smith, of New Bedford, is back and will be at Summer Street church on and after February 28 to defend all attacks made against the Apostolic Gospel of Jesus Christ; restored to earth by an angel to Joseph Smith.

A WORD FROM THE BATTLE FIELD.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser wrote from Fayette City, Pennsylvania, March 11, 1900, to Bro. W. H. Kelley, in regard to the debate between Rev. Hancock, Christian, and Bro. J. F. McDowell at the place whence he wrote. We quote:—

Perhaps a word from the seat of war will be pleasant to you. I inclose account up to to-day, which I think Professor Jeffries, chairman, wrote. Hancock shows unusal grit and is a splendid quibbler, and that about tells it. He had a finely executed chart on "Maya Hieroglyphics" compared with Book of Mormon characters. McDowell put up one on "Hieratic and Demotic, Book of Mormon, Egyptian, and our Phonetic." It was a crusher; I think the finest hit yet made on that. Hancock is losing heavily by his unfairness, while our cause gains in the same ratio. Bro. McDowell is making a fine defense. Hancock has turned up nothing new to us, but strikes somewhat different from others. Time on first question extended two sessions, ten instead of eight. I leave on the 15th. Regards. Hand an item of this to Herald if you choose.

AT Fayette City, Pennsylvania, there has been a rather sharp set-to in debate between Elder G. B. Hancock, for the Christian, and Bro. Joseph F. McDowell, for the Reorganized Church, beginning on the evening of March 5.

From what appears in the Pittsburg Leader, Rev. Hancock managed to put the contest in the form of a syllogism, thus: 1. That inspiration and revelation ended with Christ. 2. The claims of Joseph Smith to inspiration and revelation were since Christ. 3. Therefore the claims of Joseph Smith were false.

Of course Rev. Hancock would stoutly contend that his premises and argument were correct; while Bro. McDowell would as stoutly affirm that the premises were incorrect, hence the argument must fail also.

The Leader for the 9th and 10th of March gives quite fair reports of the debate, so far as held.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. F. G. Pitt, Chicago, Illinois, March 8:—

We arrived in Chicago, last Friday and met a very warm reception. It is good to be home again and among friends. I find plenty to keep me busy, but it is work I like, and enjoy it.

By a late letter from Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, Creola, Ohio, we get a good word:—

You will no doubt remember telling me that we would prosper here if faithful, and that your visit would do us good. Whether that was spoken from your earnest desires, or whether you so felt to state I do not know; but this much I do know, that we have increased eighty per cent of the number we had when the words were spoken, only twenty in our branch then, and thirty-six is our present number. Six were baptized during conference, among the number my two boys, little fellows you remember. Bro. F. C. Smith came down from Akron, Ohio, and put eight under the water, and Bro. James Moler two more in the past two weeks, making sixteen in all since you were here.

There is not one in the number who will not be an honor to the work. One was Mr. Defigh, one of the building committee, who lives just across the way; you evidently have him in remembrance. Another was Sr. Monaghan's husband, a life-long Catholic, and has been an opposer of the work, but who at last melted to the gospel and is rejoicing in the work. Four were men whose wives have been praying in their prayer union meetings for them, and God heard. The Lord spoke comfort to us last Sunday at our sacrament meeting, telling us he was pleased with our sacrifices, and to continue faithful, also placing a blessing upon two of our young brethren.

H. E. Moler wrote from Moline, Illinois, March 12:—

Bro. A. J. Keck and I are working as best we can in and around Rock Island, Moline, and Watertown. We find some who are interested. Some attack was made on us in yesterday's issue of the Moline Journal; we reply to-day. Tuesday and Wednesday nights we occupy in the Art League Hall, showing the difference between the Reorganization and Brighamism.

Bro. A. E. Weidman, of Knobnoster, Missouri, aged eighty years, writes of his labors in a recent letter to the Herald Office, as follows:—

The main expense of Sunday school and branch falls upon myself and wife, as well as the work of the same. I am past eighty years of age. Am president, teacher, and deacon of branch, superintendent of Sunday school, and teacher of primary class.

Bro. Henry Sparling, Springfield, Missouri, March 7:—

If all is well we shall baptize four if not more on Sunday next. The Saints here have put forth a noble effort and have bought a lot for a church house on the corner of Vernon and Dale Streets, paid cash down, and they have gone to work with a will, the Ladies' Aid Society giving twenty-five dollars for a start. This is something needed very much in this town. We have a nice band of Saints here, and God is blessing us.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Henry Sparling wrote for publication an article stating the faith of the Reorganized Church, which was inserted in the Springfield, Missouri, Republican, March 8; a timely and clear statement of the general position. We are pleased to see the Saints of Springfield are united in determination and effort to forward the interests of the cause in the South Missouri metropolis. Their efforts to erect a house of worship and their work in general is in harmony with what is being done by the Saints of other branches toward building up the church and establishing its prestige for good. "All are called"—men and women—to so engage, and all who bear part in the burden of work have ground for assurance of reward when such shall be given everyone according to his work. Love for the work prompts the doing, and without doing no true lover of the cause can be satisfied. Let us then be workers together for good, unite to forward the interests of the church in our home branches and thoughout the world entire.

Representative Afrikanders met at Cape Town, March 17. Mr. Hargrove, English author, stated that leading authorities of the Dutch Republics, when most successful in the field, authorized him to state they desired no enlargement of territory, and would cease hostilities instantly if their independence was assured. The statement, supported by documents, deeply impressed the audience, which pledged itself to strive unceasingly for the freedom of the republics.

WHAT I SAW IN MY TRAVELS.

I saw men and women who hated the truth, and hated those whose mission was to teach it. I concluded they were in bondage; for Jesus said, "The truth shall make you free."

I saw people, many in number, who were "wise in their own conceit." I thought "there was more hope of a fool than of them."

I saw many who had "a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof;" and I remembered Paul's counsel to "from such turn away."

I saw professors of religion who made it a part of their business to tattle, and circulate stories, so full of foul expressions about Latter Day Saints, that I thought of what Jesus said, "They shall say all manner of evil about you."

I saw sectarian preachers who would tell horrible tales about Joseph Smith being a "horse thief," "polygamist," "impostor," and "fanatic;" and this scripture came to my mind: "All liars shall have part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone."

I saw men and women who said "the Latter Day Saints are right," but they would not obey, because their system of faith was not popular. In meditation I was assured "they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God."

I saw those who were kind to the servants of God, in word and deed. I believe "they shall in no wise lose their reward."

I saw parents who had, and were training their children to be courteous, and kind. I believe they had read, "train a child in the way he should go."

I saw children who were disobedient to their parents, rude, unkind, and boisterous. I thought the parents would have the children's sins to answer for, and their own too. Usually parents of such children are ready to offer excuses to strangers for the actions of their children; but the source of the trouble is not difficult to find.

I saw parents who are members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ who seldom pray in their families; their spirituality was seldom of the highest type.

I saw quite a number of heads of households who have the idea that once a day is sufficiently often to have family prayer. They fear if oftener, it would culminate in "formality." I thought of "good old Daniel's" "formality" and the favors he received thereby.

I saw scores of smokers, chewers, and snuffers, or rubbers of snuff, numbers of them members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Some of them are near death's door, caused by the dreadful curse. Others are weak and sickly; and nearly all are suffering in some way from its poisonous effects on the system. I remembered that "tobacco is not good for man," and "is not for the body."

I saw some who were ordained to offices in the church who use tobacco, not "sparingly." I saw them chew and spit the stenchful, filthy, poisonous fluid over a considerable portion of floor and hearth. I have read, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord;" also, "Avoid the use of tobacco," and was convinced that these were not heeding the word of the Lord to them and that they were not "converted;" for he that loveth tobacco in any form more than he loves to obey my words to "avoid" its use, "cannot be my disciple," would be the sum and substance of the matter.

I saw things unbecoming: such as a quid of tobacco in the mouth, and at the same time, that same mouth testifying of the genuineness of this latter-day work; and the same ones members of the church. I had heard it said, "O, consistency, thou art a jewel." Consistency is hard to find under such circumstances. To me the Lord's argument against the "use of tobacco" weighs more than all the users of it have ever said, or can say in its favor. It is a mystery to me how the Holy Ghost can dwell in a house (human body) thoroughly impregnated with nicotine (tobacco poison). Man cannot explain it; it requires a revelation from God to solve this.

I saw a book prized much by the owner, who loaned it to one who used tobacco lavishly, with a request not to get tobacco spit on it; and when it was returned, was stained on numerous pages. I saw the owner was more disgusted than ever with tobacco users.

I saw a lady of the world set out a spittoon near a Latter Day Saint (?) officer, and said, "You spit in this." I looked upon her as administering a stern rebuke to the use of the weed; but it is not likely the rebuke was heeded. I did not feel proud of the officer, but wondered if it was not a mistake made when he was ordained by somebody to an office in the church.

I saw a man rise in meeting and say he would stop then, chewing, and called the assembly to witness his resolution; and in less than ten days he was chewing the very thing he had said he would abandon. I mused on, "better not vow than to vow and not pay." And also, if he loved God as dearly as he loved tobacco, he would be a first-class Latter Day Saint. The words of Christ to Peter apply appropriately to such officers, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."

I saw in Matthew 24: 31, "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other," and felt comforted in contemplating that the "elect" are not tobacco users; that it would be one of the strangest sights ever seen, to see an angel taking a body (member) by the hand, or under his wing (?) (arm) that smelled like a tobacco house, and carrying him up to Zion to clean him up; quite a lot of work for angels to do, if that is a part of it. I have not seen it written that the angels had such work to do. For I gather from what is written that tobacco users are not the "elect" to be gathered by angels.

I saw that those who used the most tobacco and snuff had the most to say. They reminded me of broken pitchers—everything runs out of them. They seem to evidence that they know as much, or more than some who do not use tobaccco. I have not forgotten what Solomon said, "There is a time to speak, and a time to keep silent.

I saw those who said there were in the church men, who, when angry, would "curse and swear." I thought they could not be moved by the Holy Ghost to use such language. It must have been from the "abundance of the heart" that the mouth spoke. Such should continue to ponder the words of Christ to Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren;" and Paul to Timothy, "Take heed unto thyself, and to the doctrine."

I saw members who seemed to be "a law unto themselves," and say it is no harm to learn their children to play cards, and in that way learn them the evil of it. I thought of the "card players" of which Brigham Young could boast; but I felt glad that the Church of Christ had so few in it, who applied the rule of learning their children the "trade," in order to show them the evil it would lead into. It is equally consistent to learn them to chew, smoke, and rub snuff, lie, steal, and swear, in order that they may learn the evil in such things. I have read somewhere, "Touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing." The Lord's advice is "prohibition" on all these worldly evils. The precepts and example of those who practice otherwise weighs but little in favor of the church.

I saw members who did not like to pay money into the hands of the Bishop, or his agents, to be paid out to missionaries' wives and families to buy snuff and tobacco with.

I saw members who would have means to procure tobacco and snuff, but had no change to help the traveling elder on his way.

I saw homes of Latter Day Saints (so called) where the Ensign or Herald is not found; and enough tobacco used the price paid for it per year would purchase all the church papers if double their present cost.

I saw children nearly shoeless and ragged, while money was freely paid out to procure tobacco and snuff for the father and mother.

I saw those who are dying by inches from the use of tobacco and snuff, call for the elders to administer to them, and they received no permanent benefit from the administration.

I saw that the words of Christ were true when he taught that "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven."

I saw it is a good thing to "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." If so, we will be clean in speech, in mouth, in person; not swearing, not covenant breakers, not rehearsing coarse and vulgar stories, in which the name of God is blasphemed, shoes and clothing bought instead of tobacco, and pure, sweet homes undefiled by tobacco's foul, poisonous stench.

"WHO MADE GOD?"

Sometime previous to writing this article, two Utah Mormon elders were at one of our sessions, and in conversation with one of them, in which the other also joined, in regard to their position as to God having a wife, "our mother in heaven," the following is about the result: "Of course we believe that God has a wife, and was born from some previous god. Do you think he sprung up like a mushroom?" You consequently believe in a plurality of gods? "Oh, yes; there are many gods!" This, then, is the postulate you advance, as there are a multiplicity of gods, there is necessarily a multiplication of gods—reproduction of the divine species? "Oh, yes; certainly. God didn't spring up like a mushroom (a stereotyped phrase of theirs), he must have come from some previous god." Well, how many gods are there, at least four? "Oh, yes; there are many gods." The four came from the three? "Yes." The three from the two? "Yes." The two from the one? (hesitation.) "Yes." Now where did the one come from? "Oh, there are many gods; don't the Book of Abraham say so?"

Another class think it is necessary to ask who made God, when the argument is offered that a design suggests a designer. We will try and deliver the Utah elder from the necessity of having progenitors for his god, and meet the question, "If God designed the world, who designed God?"

Here is a room 25 x 20 x 12 feet; there is space inside, finite space, outside is an infinite vacuum. There never was a time in Universe history when space didn't extend to the infinite, it always will be thus. The 20 x 25 room was designed for use. It is embellished with pictures, bric-a-brac, and furniture. There is an undesigned design in space and matter being in the relative proportions existing. Conceive space having the potentiality of solidification and becoming matter, every development we are acquainted with would be defeated; all life would be annihilated; chaos of inaction would result. It didn't "happen" that matter didn't or will not predominate infinitely. God didn't so order it, but we view a perpetual design, without alpha or omega. The starry worlds of blazing suns, pale moons, asteroids, and meteors, are but the embellishments of chandeliers, mirrors, and furniture in this infinite room of the Universe. It contains the book from which the angels learn; in this life we are privileged to read a few short chapters, but the unturned leaves contain our intellectual food for eternity.

Space and matter are not subject to annihilation; where there is no beginning, there is no end. Space and matter had no progenitors. The infinite is also revealed in energy. There is no such word as "motionless," in the vocabulary of human thought. Energy is not the product of so-called creation, but is susceptible of transformation. Edison hopes to extract electricity from coal direct. The earth is supposed to have been born from nebula, which cooled and solidified, yet energy and matter were stored in the gaseous nebula. Taking a hypothetical condition of a motionless universe, only energy could have started it in motion; so energy always was in some form, and has not been caused. There is an undesigned perpetual design in force. There would be no object of space and matter without force to utilize the infinite possibilities that these infinite conditions present, as means to ends. There is an undesigned design in shapeless matter. Only the infinite One knows of the possibilities wrapped up in a clod of clay. The range is from a star in the sky to a man on earth; from a projectile that can pierce eighteen inches of armor plate and come out with the point preserved, to a tuft of cotton that the breezes blow hither and thither; from a blood red rose that scents the air to a black ebony tree that bends to the blow of the winds.

It's a misnomer to say "a law was broken." Law can't be broken; we are broken when we don't observe the requirements of law. There is a law for moral government, but no moral law, as law is neither beneficent or demonic, it is neutral. The force known as gravitation is neither for or against the human family, yet it can be made to kill a man or save a nation. Only mind has the power of intention, good or evil. There is design in law. Intelligence can't expand without law, and law is apparently useless without intelligence. "The glory of God is intelligence." "That which is governed by law is preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same." Energy needs intelligence to direct; laws, to become beneficently operative, need mind to apply them. Herbert Spencer is quoted as saying, "There is infinite energy," and "perfection is somewhere in the universe." Now why the necessity of a god and goddess of progeny? Why should not this "perfection somewhere in the universe" always have been? parallel with perfect space, matter, laws, energy, comprehended by a perfect mind—God; the uncaused first cause, the great undesigned design, who neither made infinite space, everlasting matter, human intelligence, or perpetual laws; but who has infinite intelligence to use the infinite in space, matter, energy, laws, for an infinite time and purpose; the extreme apex of Divine accomplishment being immortality for humanity for eternity, to all those who are willing to be governed, perfected, and preserved by law. God works by laws, so does Satan, likewise man. Results are accomplished or destroyed by law. God is no more a product of law than is space. Only one God because the infinite is not divisible. Only one infinite space, one infinite universe, one infinite God, without the possibility of beginning or end, creation or extermination. "Behold, I am God and change not, the same yesterday, to-day and forever." "From everlasting to everlasting." An infinite mind and infinite love offering to lead humanity to infinite possibilities.

Only that which has life can give life. It may simplify the task of those who want to have a universe without a God in it by starting man from floating protoplasm in the waters of the ocean, but it would be as difficult to make the President of Harvard out of an oyster as to make him a man direct and outright. "Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be." In our human experience we only see mind in an organized body. Why not a personal God, with a body of an undesigned design, with a mind that is the uncaused cause of the designed designs that environ us. When we look at a watch we may ask, "Who made this?" When we look at the solar system, may we not also ask, "What master mind organized this melody of motion and matter?" But we must distinguish between the finite and the infinite; between the undesigned design and the designed contrivance. A person is not thought manifesting systems of idiocy if, in examining one of the triumphs of invention in the form of a type-setting machine, he asks, "Who is the inventor and constructor of this machine?" but surrounded everywhere with the marvelous manifestations of an infinite mind, "the fool in his heart says there is no God." Another class of the same genus asks, "If there is a God, who made God?"

A REPLY TO "SECRET SOCIETIES."

"He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him" (Proverbs 18: 13) is one of the statements made in the good book; and since an article in the Herald, on secret societies, written by a friend and brother in the church made its appearance, in which only one side of the matter was misrepresented, I desire to call the attention of your readers to a few facts in regard to this subject. The brother makes this statement:—

> The church has ever held it to be contrary to the Scriptures given for anyone who belongs to this church to join these human organizations.

It is an easy matter to make assertions, but where is your proof, brother? Paul says, "prove all things." I heard Brother Joseph Smith say, if memory serves me right, that he did not belong to any secret society, nor had he a desire to join any, but he had no fault to find with those who did belong; speaking of such fraternal organizations as make a specialty of furnishing protection for the families of their members. The brother further states that it is wrong for any Latter Day Saint to join these secret orders, from the fact that the gospel is a perfect system.

I agree with the brother that the gospel is perfect, and its author has made ample provisions for the welfare of all who embrace it; but does that prove that men may not belong to any other organization, even if such organization is in harmony with the perfect gospel law, as far as its own laws are concerned? I think not. For if this was the case, the members of the church could not be citizens of the State or the Republic, for both are organizations to themselves, and the law of God admonishes us to keep the laws of the land, though this law of the land is imperfect.

The Saints are not forbidden to become good citizens, and are admon-

ished to keep the law of the land, until he shall reign whose right it is to reign. And I would thus argue, that as long as the gospel law is not in perfect operation, and the church is unable to properly care for its poor, widows, and orphans, it is wise for the Saints to make such provision for their loved ones as are placed within their reach. And I believe it is perfectly lawful to do so, providing they do not neglect the duty they owe the church in paying their tithes and offerings. Nor do I only think it is lawful, but I believe it becomes a sacred duty, for the Apostle Paul says, in his chapter on widows, 1 Timothy 5: 8:—

But if any provide not for his own [widow], and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel!

In becoming members of these societies we do this very thing. It is one of the means offered us by the world to provide for our widows and those of our households – the means of support and subsistence. Is this wrong? God has given us intelligence sufficient to look forward to a time when we must be taken from this scene of action; then why should we be denied the privilege to shield those we love from unnecessary suffering and want, should we be removed suddenly and unexpectedly, as is often the case.

The gospel—with its righteous laws, its eternal truths, its sacred obligations and duties—is more than earthly blessings; is as far above the drapery, the mystic ceremonies, the hidden signs of secret orders, as the heaven is above the earth.

I will agree with the brother in this, but would ask, Which secret order does make any pretensions of supplanting the gospel? or holding out to its members any promises beyond this life? There are none. They all aim to add earthly blessings to the spiritual blessings of the church, with the limited means at their command, in a systematic and just manner.

And we cannot add these human mysteries of earth, to the righteous spiritual law of God, etc.

The secret societies do not attempt to add to the law of God, but simply carry into effect that part of God's law which the church has thus far been unable to carry into effect; namely, the supporting of their widows and orphans, because a large number of those church members who are so anxious to raise their voices against secret societies have failed to keep the temporal law of God, and have neglected to bring their tithes and offerings to the storehouse of the Lord. I am informed by our Bishop's agent that out of a membership of 426 in our branch, only 20 or 25 pay tithing, and more than one half of the latter are members of secret societies.

So far as the mysteries of the secret societies are concerned, they are all known to Him who knoweth all things, and judges accordingly, and the Master said about well doing:—

But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: that thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly.—Matt. 6: 3, 4.

I believe that not one of the members of any society, whether secret or otherwise, need give an account of the transactions of their society to anyone, except those who are authorized to receive such an account by the law of the land. The obligations and pledges of any of the secret societies do not interfere with any man's religious convictions; and the principles: love, charity, friendship, justice, truth, neighborly consideration, etc., on which the laws of these orders are based, are all in harmony with the principles of the gospel; and as these orders teach to observe these virtues, and live according to these principles, they teach only such virtues as the Bible teaches, and are in harmony, but not in opposition to God's law. It is true they protect themselves against imposition from the rest of society, but this is no more than the church does; or does it scatter its temporal means broadcast into the world, regardless of whether a person is a member of the church or not? Or does God recognize any man as a member of his kingdom, whether he has been duly received into the same, in the prescribed manner or not? I think not. Could it be expected, then, of any secret society to extend its benefits to everybody, whether friend or foe? I say, no! True, there are good and bad men mixed together in all human institutions, though these secret orders try to keep the real bad ones out, if possible. But what does the Savior say in regard to the gospel net? It catches all manner of fish. Does the brother protest against anyone coming into the church on the same grounds? And the church is a divine institution! The brother says:—

But some of the members of the church support these orders and societies; yea, even some of those who hold the priesthood of God join hands with the secret orders of to-day. We see the church exhausting every means to raise money, but this money is not raised for the poor and the needy, nor for the families of those who are sent out to preach the gospel of Christ, nor for the orphan and the widow; but it is for the fine and costly churches, which have been built in some place, and where thousands of dollars, yet unpaid, have been spent for unnecessary show and pride of a few individuals.

I should like to have the brother show me where any secret societies have built any church. Also where the members of the priesthood are assisting secret societies in paying the indebtedness of any sectarian church, and at the same time neglect to pay into their church treasury for the support of its needy members. The brother quotes:—

The Savior said to his disciples: "What ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops," etc.—Matt. 10: 27.

Does this have reference to everything the disciples should hear? I think not. Their teachings would have been a pretty mix up. Supposing the brother would preach on the housetops what he sometimes hears when paying an official visit to some of the Saints? Or how would it be to preach on the housetops what occurs in our homes, or how would it be for the proceedings of the branch council or the priesthood meetings to be preached from the housetops? What then does the Savior refer to in the above quotation? Let the brother's quotation answer the question: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16: 15). Yes, proclaim the gospel on every street corner if you so desire. He further quotes:—

If there is any good or truth in these orders, every principle of philanthropy and love would say, its benefits and blessings ought to be universal, and not alone to a few favored ones.

The secret orders are open to any individual that has sufficient love for his family within his bosom to sacrifice from five to ten cents per day in dues to these orders, and thus secure their protecting care; that is if he is morally and physically acceptable. The name "secret societies" is really not the correct name for these fraternal organizations, because a secret order is not known to exist except to its members. But these fraternal societies advertise not only their existence and the objects which they are trying to attain, but actually send out men who lecture in their interest and solicit publicly for membership everywhere. Not much of a secret about that, is there? If people reject their teaching, they do exactly the same thing that others do when they reject the gospel message, and consequently the fraternal orders offer just the same opportunity to men to partake of the blessings that accrue to their members as does the church, in temporal matters at least, to its members.

One more of the brother's assertions I will answer, and then close:—

When a man joins the secret orders, they make him take an oath or pledge that he will keep the secrets of the order, and that he will keep the requirements of the order. He pledges himself to all this before he knows to what he has pledged himself or taken oath.

This is unreasonable. Anyone who becomes a member of a fraternal order is given every opportunity to become acquainted with the objects and requirements of the order, because these are used by those who are already members or agents of an order as arguments to induce a person to join the order. Consequently the person so solicited becomes acquainted with these requirements before he has even decided whether to become a member or not.

As to the secrets of an order. They could be of no use except to members of the order, and are of a private nature, as are the transactions of one's own family, except of course the signs, grips, and passwords used to keep out intruders. But before taking the oath or pledge of secrecy, the candidate is assured that such pledge will in no wise interfere with his political, moral, or religious views. Consequently, if the pledge contained anything contrary to these convictions, he would not be bound to keep it.

And now, kind reader, in conclusion, let me draw two word pictures. Here is one man who opposes all secret orders. He is paying on a home, but has only half succeeded. He is thrown out of work; he has no friends except those in the church, who are mostly unable to help him as they desire to do, and as he has declared himself against secret orders, their members will not do anything for him. He, who once had in abundance, cannot now keep up the payments on his home; he loses it. Death overtakes him, and as he leaves a widow with several children possibly, it becomes frequently necessary to separate the mother and children, who are often just of that age when they need the mother's care in the worst way. But the children are sent to strangers, and into the cold world, and left to shift for themselves, outside of church influences probably, and as is frequently the case, they go astray.

What a sad and gloomy picture!

The church may try to help them some, but its means are limited, and so must of necessity the assistance be.

On the other hand; here is a man who belongs to several secret orders. Through the influence of its members he has good and paying work, he prospers, pays his tithing and offerings according as the Lord prospers him, he is able to secure a home for himself and family, and when he dies his widow receives one, two, or three thousand dollars, as the case may be; and instead of becoming a burden to the church, she is able to pay into the Bishop's hands one, two, or three hundred dollars as her tithes; keeps her children at home, educating them under church influences, and make noble men and women of them. Yes, the fraternal orders will even look after the welfare of the widow and orphans, and secure profitable employment for them, if they are of such age so as to be able to work. How inviting! How cheering in the hour of death! How much more profitable to the church! Which picture do you like best, dear reader?

Your writer who holds the lesser priesthood, belongs to three fraternal orders, and should he be suddenly called away from this life's fitful scenes, he leaves with the consoling thought that his family will not be wanting. One order of which I am a member, paid eight million dollars to the widows and orphans of its deceased members; and thus in a systematic way fulfilled the injunction of James 1:27, "to visit the widows and fatherless," not with empty words of consolation, but with substantial assistance, because their father had fulfilled the Golden Rule, in this case at least, "to do unto others as you would have others do unto you," and, "bear ye one another's burdens, and thus fulfill the law."

HENRY B. TADDICKEN.

THE GATES OF HELL DID NOT PREVAIL.

In an article in Herald for January 17 last, the writer attempts to show that paradise and hell are about the same place, because Jesus said to the thief on the cross, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," and at the same time went to the prison to preach to departed spirits, and the thief perhaps was one of them; and Luke, sixteenth chapter, is cited for proof, because Lazarus and Abraham were in talking distance with the rich man, and he was in hell.

Now let us examine the sixteenth chapter of Luke. The rich man and Lazarus both passed from this stage of action. Lazarus went to Abraham's bosom or paradise, and the rich man went to hell or the prison. In verse 30 is shown the difference between the place where the thief and Lazarus went; and the place where the rich man and them that lived in the days of Noah went. One is a place of happiness and comfort, and the other is a place of sorrow and torments; and as for them being in the same country, it is stated in verse 28 that the rich man in hell lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and saw Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. Now just how far this "afar off" was, we are unable to say; but suffice to say, it was afar off. And in verse 31 Father Abraham says, and beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that neither party can pass back and forth. Now Webster defines "gulf" to mean a large bay; but the gulf that Abraham spoke of was a great gulf, so at least we have the distance of a great gulf between them. Now as Bro. L. has held the idea that a spirit may go to paradise with the Savior, and then become righteous by obeying the gospel, please note the following:—

> Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, etc. And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil; for behold, they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord: for behold they choose evil works, rather than good: therefore the spirit of the devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house; and these shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth; and this because of their iniquity: being led captive by the will of the devil. Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked: yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them: thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection —Alma 19: 42-45.

Now it is stated in the before mentioned article, that it does not matter whether the thief was a baptized believer or not. Now if the thief was not a baptized believer, down goes the scriptures, for Jesus said:—

> Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God —John 3: 5.

Now this will apply to the kingdom of God on the other side of this vale of tears, as well as entering the church or kingdom of God upon earth. Now it is plain that one of these births or baptisms were manifested in the thief, and that was the gift of the Spirit; for the thief said to Jesus, "Lord, when thou comest into thy kingdom, remember me." Here we see that he called Jesus, Lord. And Paul says:—

> Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Cor. 12: 3.

And when Jesus, in the likeness of his Father, cannot lie, said unto man, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5), that is enough to silence any opposer; for when they enter paradise they enter the greatest sphere that God has for the righteous, for it was made known unto Alma by an angel (and that ought to be pretty good authority) that the spirits of all men, as soon as death, go back to God, and God sends them to their abiding place; the righteous to paradise, (not to give them a chance to obey the gospel,) but they are in a state of rest, a state of peace, where they rest from all care and sorrow; and the wicked into outer darkness, where sorrow and torments bring weeping and gnashing of teeth; and this is their condition until their resurrection. Now when a spirit is permitted to enter paradise, it is a righteous spirit, notwithstanding while in the flesh it might have sinned; but it requires a true repentance, for if we are permitted in the spirit state to dwell in paradise, we are entitled to all that God has for man. For proof, I cite the following:—

He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.—Rev. 2:7.

In the above quotation we are asked to "hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches," for to them that are members of the churches that John refers to, if they overcome, they are permitted to enter paradise and partake of the tree of life. Who will say that the thief was not a church member? and one that overcame by confessing his theft before Christ, and prayed him for a remembrance when he should come into his kingdom. Now there is no promise of anyone entering paradise unless they overcome and are righteous; and if they are righteous, they are made so by the gospel, for the righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel through faith (Rom. 1:17).

Now the trouble lies here, almost everybody that believes in Christ's mission to the spirits in prison, have believed and taught that while his body lay in the grave his spirit was preaching unto the captive spirits in prison. And to make it strong, it is necessary to teach that paradise and the prison are in the same country; and as I have always been taught this idea, that Christ did not go back to God the Father, but went to preach unto the spirits in prison; and for proof we are cited to John 20: 17, where Jesus says to Mary:—

Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God, and your God.

In this statement he has reference to his resurrected state, and not that his spirit did not go back to God, for Alma 19: 5, small edition, says that an angel made it known to him that spirits of both good and evil, as they depart from this mortal body, are taken home to that God who gave them life. So Jesus' spirit returned to God, and then to paradise, where they remain until their resurrection. (Alma 19: 6.) So I can trace the spirit of Christ from the cross back to God, and then to paradise, where the spirits of the righteous remain until the time of their resurrection. And, remember, that the thief went with him (Luke 23: 43); so if any one can cite me to chapter and verse where the scriptures say that Christ's spirit left paradise and went to preach unto the spirits in prison while his body lay in the tomb, will confer a favor, for I cannot find it; but I do find that he went and preached unto spirits in prison. The Inspired Translalion gives us a statement like this:—

For Christ also once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, that he might bring us to God.—1 Peter 3: 18.

Now we see that Christ just being put to death would not bring us to God, for we see how far short it came of bringing the disciples to God; for some had gone fishing, and some had gone to Emmaus, and they had trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel (Luke 24), and another would be brought to God, providing he could thrust his hand into his side if he could be convinced that he had been quickened. And thus we see that it was necessary that Christ should show himself to his disciples in his quickened state, and invite them to handle him and see, for a spirit had not flesh and bones as ye see me have, to bring them to God. And how should we expect the captive spirits to be brought to God, with a more unfavorable opportunity than others have, and after Peter relates that Christ was "put to death in the flesh" and "quickened by the Spirit," that he might "bring us to God," says for which cause "also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." Some may object to Christ having gone to the prison in his quickened state, for the spirits were all wicked; but how about the Nephites upon this land, they were sinners, and the statement is:—

Oh all ye that are spared, because ye were more righteous than they [your wicked brethren], will ye not now return unto me, and repent of your sins.—Nephi 4:8.

The spirits in prison were as righteous as those Nephites were. In the Doctrine and Covenants we read:—

These are they who are of the terrestrial, . . . whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them. . . . These are they who are honorable men of the earth.—76: 6.

These received not the testimony of Christ while in the flesh, but afterwards received it. And just so with the Nephites; they received not the testimony of the prophets nor of Jesus until he appeared unto them.

And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words, the whole multitude fell to the earth, for they remembered that it had been prophesied among them that Christ should shew himself unto them after his ascension into heaven.—Nephi 5: 5.

And why the Nephites should be more highly favored than the prisoners is a mystery to me, seeing that when Christ finished his mission and established the church at Jerusalem with the gospel, it was to all the world, and to every creature. So why come to the Nephites, if it was not to bring them to God; and if so, why not all see him alike, for when Jesus comes in his glory, all shall see him—those in the flesh and in the spirit. (See Rev. 1: 7.) Even those wicked murderers who pierced his side shall see him. Assuredly these have not been resurrected that pierced his side, so that they could see him in their resurrected state. Enoch spoke of the releasing of many spirits who were in prison, and of their coming out and standing on the right hand of God (Gen. 7: 64, I. T.), and Paul spoke of Christ leading the captive spirits out of prison on this wise:—

Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth.—Eph. 4: 8, 9.

Now we find that he that ascended first descended, and he that descended is the same that ascended. (Verse 10.) And Jesus says to Mary, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended" (in my resurrected body); but after he did ascend, and then showed himself, he invited the disciples to "handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have" (Luke 24); and Paul's teaching is plain, that the same condition that Christ ascended in, he first descended and led captivity captive. And now "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16: 18.)

It is evident that the rock was the revealed truth, that Jesus was the Christ, and upon this rock, says Christ, "I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," (the church or rock,) which I believe he meant the last-mentioned (the church). In Doctrine and Covenants 9: 16 I read, "Behold, this is my doctrine: Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church;" "and Jesus being the head of the church, went to hell, and having "the keys of hell and death" (Rev. 1: 18), he could unlock the gates or doors of hell, and preach the doctrine of the church there in hell, and could well say to Peter, "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (the church).

MOLINE, Ill., March 15.

Editors Herald:—Bro. A. J. Keck and I came here on the 3d inst. and have been preaching at Watertown, Moline, and Rock Island. Some interest at Watertown, where we expect to follow up the work for a few days.

The Saints have organized a Sunday school in Moline, and meet in the Moline Art League's Gallery. We have preaching there also on Sundays, and sometimes during the week. There has been some opposition to our using the hall, by the Presbyterians, and some threats have been made to throw us out of the hall.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

An article appeared in the Sunday Moline Journal, March 11, making an attack on the Saints, and even insinuating that they believe in polygamy. To this we wrote a reply, which the editor gladly accepted, and was published in the Daily Journal for March 13.

On Tuesday and Wednesday nights we delivered lectures on the differences between the Reorganization and the Brighamites. We felt blessed in our effort to show the distinction between truth and error. It is a pleasure to us to show the pure teachings and clean record of the church in its early history of the restoration, as contrasted with the corrupt doctrines and practices of the Brighamites. It is also a satisfaction to point to the character and the noble and honorable career of Joseph Smith's posterity. We take pride in pointing to the fact that none of Joseph Smith's near relatives followed Brigham Young.

Not as many of the outsiders came to hear us as we would liked to have seen present, but we feel satisfied that those present were enlightened regarding the Saints who worship in Moline. We will continue this week at Watertown, and on Sunday at Rock Island and Moline. We expect to visit Muscatine enroute to Lamoni.

Bro. W. E. Larue, president of the Rock Island branch, returned yesterday, after an absence of nearly two months. The Saints were all glad to welcome him home again. Bro. J. B. Johnson, priest, had oversight of the branch during Bro. Larue's absence. We find a band of noble workers in the Saints of the tri-cities; they are earnest, humble, and prayerful.

May the Lord bless his Saints everywhere.

Still in the fight,

VIROQUA, Wis., March 9.

Editors Herald: — I have spent several weeks preaching near the above place, in a Campbellite [Christian] neighborhood. The people of that faith sent to Alma, Illinois, for Clark Braden to come and lecture against the Saints. He sent me a proposition for a debate and next day he came. I wired Bro. I. N. White and followed the dispatch by a letter. Braden gave three lectures against us. The writer and three others were all the Saints there were to defend the work. Bro. White came all O. K. and the debate began in the Christian church at Viroqua. Braden's moderator, after the first night, refused to serve Braden because Braden was so abusive, he said. The Saints feel that it was a sweeping victory in our favor.

They did not debate on Sunday eve, so Bro. White preached at the I. O. G. T. hall where Braden delivered his three lectures. Bro. White also lectured in the evening on the Spalding romance, to a good house. He scored Braden in good shape and carried the people with him.

Braden was badly defeated upon the first proposition, and made an utter failure upon his proposition. Though there are no Saints living in the city, the debate has won for us many friends. Braden was ably met upon every point; he got very angry and abusive at times. We are sure that if the Campbellites have any shame about them they will feel ashamed of his efforts at this place. Bro. White won the admiration of the people by reason of the Christian spirit exhibited to his opponent in debate.

We are now at Readstown waiting for a train to go to Rhodes, Iowa. We rejoice in the truth, and thank God for so able a defender of our work as Bro. White. He wielded the gospel sword with power and skill, and the Lord crowned his efforts with a glorious victory. I wish to say farther that I feel that I have enjoyed better liberty in speaking and felt more of the Spirit of the Master with me this winter than ever before. Let us all remember to especially pray for the isolated ones. Your brother in the faith of Christ,

J. B. WILDERMUTH.

GREENLEAF, Kan., March 10.

Editors Herald:—It is possible that some among whom I have labored in the past will be glad to know whether O. B. is "dead or alive," "in the faith or out," at work or idle. If this is all, however, it can be gleaned from the Eastern Colorado district conference minutes. I notice in these minutes, in Herald for March 7, mention was made of the very spiritual meeting of Sunday p. m. It was not until that meeting that I was able to decide where my duty lay for the next conference year, in case I should be found worthy to labor on. In that meeting I had such a prophetic view of the field for tent work, for which provision is being successfully made, that I was no longer in doubt. Although tent work is sometimes attended with discouragements, the limited experience I had in the Des Moines and Eastern Iowa districts prevents any dread of the work, or hesitancy to engage in it, should it be mine to do. House to house work is something I thought I never could do, only for lack of courage to call where I have not been invited. But I have learned during the past year that I can do that kind of work, where I have not the opportunity for public preaching. I find it to be quite effective, and nearly always receive an invitation to "come again." "Don't wait to be invited," has surprised me in some cases. The work is onward in most places in the Colorado mission.

I have by pressing request labored in three places outside of the territory of my appointment, in the interest of Saints having their membership in Colorado branches. From this work, have some new calls for preaching to which I am anxious to respond. I am sure that I have not at all encroached on the rights of others. I am assured of this by the fact that in the field where most of this outside work was done, I was requested by the sub-missionary in charge, Bro. W. S. Pender, to act as moderator in four debates with Rev. Denton Collins, and render other legitimate assistance, to three of which I could conveniently respond. The first of the three was held at Barnes, Kansas, closing one week ago. As usual, the little band of Saints present, Bro. and Sr. Transue, who furnished us a very pleasant and comfortable home while there, one young brother, resident, and a number from Greanleaf were encouraged and confirmed in the faith, and I believe others saw the truth of our work. At least, one interested listener invited the writer to visit him when convenient, and took the address to send for the Book of Mormon. The second debate was to be held at Idylwild, but because of the burning of the church of the Saints there, and inclement weather and bad roads, this one has been indefinitely postponed by mutual agreement. The next and last one will begin the 14th, if nothing unforeseen prevents. In the meanwhile, Bro. Pender has been preaching at Idylwild, and the writer at Greenleaf.

The Saints here are nearly all alive, and zealous for the cause. Some interest manifest by a few outsiders. One most worthy young lady was baptized here by Bro. Pender one week ago last Sunday. Another is making inquiry, "Is it necessary to understand all the Bible before being baptized?" The Saints here have a very interesting and growing Sunday school. I hope to be found in the work during life.

In the faith,

MANCHESTER, Texas, March 2.

Editors Herald:—I am still trying to carry the banner of the gospel of our Savior, ever trying to help prepare a people for the coming of Christ. Saints, we can talk about the gathering all we want to, but we will never be gathered until we learn to live the laws of God. O, how long will it be before we are one, as our Savior prayed? Yes, brethren, we must be united in the bonds of love and peace before we can live in Zion. The gathering is near at hand, and we must begin to live as one family of God. It is the pure in heart that will see him. So let us make ready to meet the great day that is so near at hand. There is one of the darkest clouds hanging over this generation that ever hung over any people.

Friends, I am not guessing at what I am doing. When I came into this work I did so praying for the Holy Spirit that I might know of God and of his work, and I thank him that I can say, like Brother Job of old, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." So let us pray continually that we may be ready to meet him when he comes. So, dear Saints, let us fast and pray that God will greatly bless this coming conference with his Holy Spirit in power, so that the Saints may be edified throughout the earth, and come up higher and prepare to meet in Zion in love and peace and joy. I have a great desire to attend this General Conference, but I cannot, owing to my financial condition. And then, labor is greatly needed down here, so I will strive to do all the work I can, and try to be ready to meet the pure in heart in Zion.

I have just attended district conference at Wilburton, Indian Territory. We had a spiritual and peaceful conference. Bro. J. Cole Moxon was ordained an elder, and preached as good a sermon as I ever listened to. If Bro. Moxon will live faithful and be meek and lowly, he will be a great light in the church. So may God bless him with the Spirit of his calling. The Saints are trying to finish their church at Wilburton. May God bless them in their efforts. I think there is a good work to be done there. May God bless his work through the earth, is my prayer. E. A. ERWIN.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

PEKAY, Iowa, March 11.

Editors Herald:—During the last year Bro. W. H. Kephart has done a great work around here. He has removed a great amount of prejudice from the minds of the people, especially at Eddyville. We have fought hard to get the gospel before the people there, but we have succeeded. Never before has the true gospel been presented there, and now we have many kind friends there that we hope will obey the gospel soon, for they are tired of being led by another form of doctrine that has not the power with it. They are anxious that Bro. Kephart be returned to this district, and this is the desire of the Saints around here. He has organized a good Sunday school here, and all seem to be interested. The work is moving on. We think he is the right man to sow the good seed of the kingdom on new ground. We hope it will germinate and bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God.

I love this latter-day work more than ever as the days pass by. If we only look around us we can see things transpiring almost daily that are fulfilling the scriptures to the very letter. There are so many who are lovers of pleasures more than of God. But my Bible teaches me that if a man will follow Christ, he must deny himself, and take up his cross. That is what our Savior said. It means to deny ourselves of these worldly pleasures, take up our cross, and be willing to make great sacrifices for this work. If we do little, we will have a little reward. So let us be up and doing while we have opportunity. At best, we cannot do too much for this grand and noble work. Let us work while it is called to-day, for the night will soon come.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, your brother in Christ,

GEORGE LONGDEN.

MARLIN, Texas, March 6.

Editors Herald:—Time and events serve to impress us with the great latter-day work, which we believe to be the grandest work we can be engaged in; and we are especially impressed at this time with these words of admonition: "Be doers." The work in this locality is on the decline because there are not enough doers. The branches are going down, Sunday schools are becoming disorganized, and prayer meetings are not what they were in these parts a year ago, and prejudice and confusion within results. Reader, ask yourself why, and this will be the answer: Because there are not enough doers.

The church is represented as a human body, which, if kept inactive and in one position long at a time, will go to sleep. The different members of the body, from head to little toe, must be kept moving, in one direction, too. Our great Teacher prayed that his disciples might be one, as he and the Father were one, that the world might believe.

Our mind is called back to the time when we were investigating the work, and of course we investigated the Saints, too, when they were gathered together in prayer meeting; for instance, to see them, from least to greatest, get right down in humility and pour out their very souls in prayer to the Lord, and to see the zeal and courage with which they prosecute the work in every way. It caused us to say, "It means something, sure; all this means something." At that time the body was alive, its officers were alive, and they were about their Master's business. Since that time the offices have changed hands, some of them—I have reference to this branch. The officers must be doers. We believe the zeal and activity of a man should be considered, as much or more than his mental qualifications. As officers in the branches we need doers; we need men with zeal and courage to keep the flock and feed them and be examples to them by doing the things they expect them to do. In our election of officers is the time to act, and too, Saints, if we ever expect Zion to be redeemed we should begin to be doers in regard to tithing. This is one part of the work that is sadly neglected and misunderstood. "O, well," says one, "we don't expect Zion to be bought with money." If we do not, we expect this gospel to go to all the world for a witness to them. We do not know just what our Lord wants with the money, and in how many ways he will use it; anyhow, he had the Israelites of old take all the gold and silver with them out of Egypt. And, sure enough, he had a use for it. The Lord wants our tithing, and we believe tithing means a tenth of all we have. If it does not, how can we know how much we owe the Lord as tithing? If it means a tenth, have we really paid any tithing? Have we assessed ourselves and paid the Lord, or at least given him credit for it? We believe that would be a good way to begin paying our tithing—assess yourself. If you are worth one hundred dollars, ten of it belongs to the Lord. If you cannot pay it all, pay what you can and give him credit for the rest, and pay it as you can. Then you will know you have paid your tithing. Let us be doers.

Yours in bonds,

W. R. STANDEFER.

INDEPENDENCE, Iowa, March 12.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Sutton came here the last day of February and left March 5. He preached five sermons, which were well received by those who heard. The congregations increased to the last, and all spoke well of the sermons. There were quite a number more who had promised to come, but I could not get around to notify them. Bro. Sutton blessed my son's child, whose father died last April. He said it was not best to let the interest die out, so I have written to Bro. Hand to come and preach for us.

I have seen quite a number since Bro. Sutton left who say they were disappointed because they did not hear of the meetings in time to come to them.

Bro. Rogers has moved onto his farm near Shady Grove.

MARY A. HINES.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 17.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have been kept busy, preaching and visiting from house to house, talking on the good old gospel story. On January 11, I left the city and went north to open up some new places, as previously arranged. I had the best of liberty, and, in fact, at some places it seemed as if I were standing in the air, so great was the power of the Spirit upon me. Our worthy brother, T. J. Martin, of Detroit, assisted me two evenings at Frazee City, and our souls rejoiced together in the service of God. Some are interested at that place, and will obey in the near future.

I preached four times at Evergreen, being assisted by our worthy brother, F. D. Omans, of Perham. From Frazee City I started for North Dakota; stopped at Audubon, Minnesota; visited one day with the Saints in that place; had a good visit, and then in company with our estimable young brother, J. C. Nunn, of Detroit, Minnesota, went on to Fargo, North Dakota. Was met at depot by another noble young brother, O. L. Nunn, who gave us lodging and something to eat. Here we parted; J. C. remaining with his brother, the writer going on to Hillsboro, where I was met by Bro. N. C. Anderson, of Clifford, North Dakota, and hied away to his home some sixteen miles distant. It was very cold, but we enjoyed the trip much.

I remained at Clifford and vicinity for ten days, preaching every night with good liberty. Visiting during the day, was the theme, and enjoyed much by the writer. It made my heart rejoice to meet with the Saints here, whom I had not seen for years. Most of them seemed firm in the faith. They kindly cared for me while with them, and when the time came to separate I was amply supplied with the means to defray my expenses both ways. Pardon my intrusion, Bro. Caffall, I will try and do so again sometime.

I left North Dakota February 10, and returned to Minnesota. Spent one day in Audubon, visiting and bidding Saints and friends adieu. At night I went to Perham. It being late, I stopped at a hotel until morning, then went to Bro. F. D. Omans'; found all well. I stayed here from Friday morning until Saturday afternoon. Bro. E. G. Huntington took me to Dead Lake, where I began a series of meetings. I was greeted with good crowds most of the time, also good liberty. Visited with the people most every day, everything we said seeming to be taken in; but when I began to show up the coming forth of this work, trouble began; not public, but on the sly. Well, it was funny. While I would be speaking of these things some of the kickers would nod their heads, sanctioning what I said, and then afterwards, when with others, would do the kicking. But they took good care to say nothing to me. A good work will be done there.

While there I sold four volumes of the Church History, two Books of Mormon, and two subscribed for the Ensign. I am glad to say that on Sunday, February 11, Bro. F D. Omans baptized Miss Katie Jepson, the school-teacher at Evergreen, where we had held meetings and baptized two in the month of November. She was confirmed on Saturday, the 17th, by the writer, at Bro. Omans' home, in Perham. The Spirit of God was with us in power.

I went from Dead Lake to Bermidji, by request of the Saints living up there. I was suffering with a severe cold which soon terminated in lagrippe. I spoke once on Sunday, March 4, in the morning: had good liberty. We held prayer meeting in the afternoon, and truly it was a time of rejoicing. On Monday I got worse and was confined to the house for eleven days. My sufferings were terrible; I shall not attempt to describe them. I finally anointed my head with oil and laid my hands on it, which brought relief at once.

On Sunday, the 11th, all met at a nice little schoolhouse and organized a union Sunday school; Sr. Emma Anderson superintendent, and a Miss Lyon assistant. At eleven a. m. I preached; had good liberty and splendid turnout. I was well cared for by the Saints there. In the afternoon we had sacrament and prayer meeting; a joyful time indeed. Blessed one child, formed a temporary organization by appointing Bro. F. E Anderson in charge, the appointment being adopted by the Saints present. The day will soon come when a permanent organization will be established there. On Tuesday, the 13th, I bade all good-bye and was off for Minneapolis. I am now feeling better, but am weak in body.

The work is gaining in all parts of the mission where I have been. The reports of my associates show that there is interest in their part of the mission. Bro. Swenson is doing good and is well received by all.

Hoping and praying for a feast at General Conference, I am still in the warfare.

Editors Herald:—We are striving to serve the Master the best we can here in Southern Missouri. Here is the place for poor Saints to buy land cheap. A good farm of one hundred acres can be bought for from three to five hundred dollars. It seems as if the Lord has stirred the people up to leave here and give the Saints a chance to come in. Six have been baptized here since we came, and some Saints are moving in, and we are looking for more. If any of the Saints who want homes will write me, inclosing stamp, I will give them all the information I can. We are building a chapel so that we can serve God in our own house. Pray for our success.

Editors Herald:—An explanation: In a late issue of the Herald appears a letter in which I made the statement that "we expected Bro. D. L. Harris last June, and money was sent to help him on his way."

Lest some reflections might be cast on our worthy brother I will say. Bro. Holt wrote us that Bro. Harris and perhaps himself could be here about the first of June, and that they would need some help from Portland to this place; so money was sent to Bro. Holt to bring them both; but I was told that Bro. Harris had been called away to another place, consequently he did not receive the money, he being gone; so Bro. Holt came alone.

FINALE.

Three busy, happy years have been spent in the preparation of this book, yet it leaves many broad fields with rich harvests still untouched. I am content to leave them for others' reaping if I have succeeded in impressing upon your minds three thoughts: the possibilities of childhood; the responsibilities of parenthood; the fullness of grace the All-Father is ready to bestow.

The father of Origen used to uncover the bosom of his sleeping son, and kissing it, say reverentially: "It is the temple of the Holy Ghost." The father of Dr. James Hamilton wrote in his diary on the day of his son's birth this vow: "To devote the remainder of my life to God's glory and service; to promote the temporal comfort and spiritual improvement of my wife; to guard myself against levity and folly; to suppress peevishness and irritability, and to cultivate a meek and quiet spirit. O Lord, I am thine! Thy vows are upon me." Who shall say how much the reverent spirit in which these fathers received their sons as gifts from God had to do with the noble character developed in those sons!

Hare says: "Every family should be a cluster of grapes hanging from the Heavenly Vine." Thus hanging, the life of the Vine flows through all the branches and fulfills Christ's words: "I am the Vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without Me ye can do nothing." One spring my father trimmed his cherry trees late, after the blossom buds were well formed, and threw the cuttings into a pile. A warm rain came on, followed by sunshine, and lo! that pile was all abloom; the buds had opened into flowers. It was a beautiful sight, yet it deceived nobody. Not even the little children expected to gather fruit off that brush-heap, for all its fair promise of blossom. Those branches could not bear fruit because they were severed from the trunk and the lifegiving roots. So family life may be bright with blossoms, yet bear no fruit unto eternal life, because it has no connection with the source of life. Only when your life is hid with Christ in God whose power flows through you to your children, can you and they bear rich fruit.

To fulfill a parent's duties aright you need a humble, hopeful, devout mind; humble, because in your own strength you can do nothing in child culture; hopeful, because you can do all things through Christ who strengthens you; devout, because only the devout soul is in an attitude to receive the grace of God. You need strong faith, first, in God, then in the possibilities of your children. Jeremy Taylor says that all sin results from lack of faith in God. It is certain that most family sins have their root in lack of faith. Cultivate this faith in yourself and in your children; it will give strength, courage, and inspiration.

Respect the individuality of your children. God never made any two people alike; for each soul he has his own ideal. There are questions which must be settled between it and him. Lead your children to Him. but remember you cannot force them into the right way. Albert Barnes says: "The power of the parent is to teach, advise, and entreat. The duty of the child is to listen with respect, to examine with candor, to pray over the subject, to be deliberate and calm, not rash, hasty, impetuous, or self-willed. But when the child is thus convinced that his duty to God requires a particular course then here is a higher obligation than any earthly law, and he 'must obey God rather than man,' even father or mother."

Sometimes very little children seem full of perversity. Your boy of seven or eight annoys you with his naughty ways almost beyond endurance. But have patience; remember how few years he has lived, how little experience he has gained, how little he has had time to learn of goodness, and how strong within him may be the power of inherited evil. Do not array your strength against his weakness and hope thus to subdue him. Ally your strength to his weakness and help his better self to conquer his evil nature. Cherish the little spark of goodness within him—for there is some good in every child—and teach him to go to God for the strength he needs. The good within may seem very small, but God cares for and cherishes the weakest things. I once spent a stormy night on the top of Mount Washington. Darkness and desolation were all around and the wind raved as though it would tear the rock-bound house from its foundations With the morning light it lulled and we went outside. There, flitting around amid that dreary desolation, as secure as though hovering over a garden of roses, was a frail little butterfly, teaching God's care for weak things. If he thus cares for ephemera will he not much more care for the faintest germs of good in souls fashioned in his own image? Take courage, then, in the care and culture of your children, even when your husbandry seems vain. It is only seeming, for you are workers together with God, and his work is never a failure.

Often God makes a silence in our homes by sending Death to lay his cold finger upon lips we love. He does this not in anger, but in love, to teach us lessons we could learn in no other way. Sorrow has a blessed ministry, teaching us the reality of heaven and drawing us nearer it, uniting family bonds more closely, and above all, drawing us nearer the Great Comforter. Whittier says:—

"Alas for him who never sees

and all to whom has come the blessed ministry of sorrow feel this truth. The stars shine with a holier light when shining on the graves of those we love; their shining speaks of that land which has no need of the sun nor of the moon to lighten it, for the Lamb is the light thereof, and where our loved ones await our coming in the mansions prepared for us by Him who purchased our redemption with His own blood.

By removing our treasures God exalts and spiritualizes our love and draws us near to himself. We never know his tenderness till "like as one whom his mother comforteth" he comforts us. "God gives us love; something to love he lends us." When he recalls his own it is not to punish us for loving it too well; he has a reason which when we learn it, as we shall in heaven, will make us glad and thankful through all eternity. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

The minor keys of life's diapason often yield sweetest music. "The back-log amid the flames sings the songs the birds sang in its branches. The sweetest tones of home music come in the flames of affliction."

Affliction draws members of the family near to each other. We often see long-sundered brothers and sisters reunited around the parent's coffin. Perhaps there has been no visible sundering of ties, only an unconscious drifting apart of hearts and lives, till brought back to their common moorings by a common sorrow. Even where the union of heart seems perfect, Affliction's furnace has a welding power which Joy never possesses. James Russell Lowell in writing to his wife after the death of their child, says:—

"I thought our love at full, but I did err;
Joy's wreath drooped o'er mine eyes; I could not see
That sorrow in our world must be Love's deepest spokesman and interpreter.
. . . I felt instantly,
Deep in my soul, another bond to thee
Thrill with that life we saw depart from her.
Oh! mother of our angel child, twice dear;
Death knits as well as parts."

There are sorrows deeper than death; sorrows typified by the heavenly Father's lament over wayward, wandering, unrepentant Ephraim, "How can I give thee up!" Yet even in these we can trust him. He is touched with the feeling of our sorrows, for he has suffered even this pang, is suffering it continually, and so knows how to succor and comfort you.

"Lord, we can trust thee for our holy dead;
They underneath the shadow of thy tomb,
Have entered into peace; with bended head
We thank thee for their rest and for our lightened gloom.
But, Lord, our living—who on stormy seas
Of sin and sorrow still are tempest-tossed!
Our dead have reached their heaven, but for these—Teach us to trust thee, Lord, for these, our loved and lost."

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Elder David Scott, of New Albany, Indiana, desires an interest in the prayers of the Union, and all the Saints, in the name of Jesus Christ, for restoration of his health from his afflictions which have troubled him so long.

Dear Sister Walker:—Will you please ask the Prayer Union to fast and pray for my husband, that if it be God's will, he will heal him of his afflictions and grant him health and strength to provide for his family, also that he will direct him in what he should do. We have a family of seven little ones, and his health is failing him very fast. He knows God is able to help him, but he feels his own prayers are not enough, so I take this step and hope and pray God will hear and answer the prayers of the Union in his behalf. Your sister in Christ,

"TO TEACH A CHILD, BE A CHILD YOURSELF."

If children are to understand the lessons intended for them, the teacher must place herself as near on an equality with them as possible. Thoughts and words should be used that are simple and capable of comprehension by the children. How often the teacher prides herself on her simplicity of teaching, only to discover afterward that some pupil failed to get what she intended to teach. An amusing illustration came under our observation recently. The story of the transfiguration had been told by the primary teacher. She told them of Jesus and his three disciples going up into a high mountain; of the visit of Moses and Elias; of the cloud of glory, and the voice which caused the disciples to fall down through fear. The children seemed to understand; but one little fellow, when the superintendent asked in reviewing, "What did the disciples do when the cloud came over them?" replied, "They fell down out of the mountain." He evidently reasoned, that as they had gone up into the mountain, and had "fallen down," they must have fallen "down out of the mountain." Such a conclusion was natural, yet few teachers would ever have thought that pupils would get such an idea. Yet, possibly, incorrect ideas are often held by the little ones which seldom came to the knowledge of their superiors. Teachers can hardly expect perfection in their work, but all may work toward it, and improve as the days go by.

Sometimes the teacher, in looking back over her work, may feel that much of it is fruitless, especially with that mischievous little boy or troublesome little girl. But our observation shows us that the teacher's words sink deep into the minds of many children, though not apparent at the time.

A little boy, who will not be four years old for several months yet, repeated while asleep one morning the golden text of the previous Sunday lesson. It was those beautiful and touching words, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed." This little fellow had heard some words that lodged in his mind, and which furnished him material for bright dreams. Is it not possible that in that sweet hour some bright angel was helping to fix those grand words where they would remain in after life as a star of hope, bringing light and peace to a weary soul? Work on, then, teachers. Work on, you mothers! Cease not to sow the seeds of truth in the tender minds, for God's angels are your helpers. It is the first step in redeeming the soul, and if you fail to sow the good seed, the enemy will come and plant tares so thick as to be difficult to root out. Though you may not see the result of your labors, cease not to toil, for seeds of truth sown in pure and tender minds cannot fail to bring a harvest.

AMBITION.

Ambition is a necessary quality of every individual who seeks success. Without it, what advancement would be made in the march of truth? What development would there be in character? What progress would there be in the world of science? Of education? Of social conditions? Without it the world would stand still.

A gift of God, by which man is enabled to reach the ends designed by his great Creator; but like all of God's great gifts, it may be turned to evil. The first instance of such a change was in heaven, when Lucifer sought to rob God of his honor. Since then, men have often sought honor by robbing others. Instead of being masters of their ambition, they have become its slaves. Where it rules, honor is gone; the rights of other men are at stake, and there is no limit to its desolating influence. It refuses to respect the ties of friendship, or the still closer ties of nature. Nothing satisfies its cravings but to rule. As one says:—

"To reign is worth ambition, tho' in hell; Better to reign in hell than serve in heaven."

Opposed to ambition, and underlying the whole work of the gospel, is that grand principle of humility. Not that kind of humility which results from inactivity and weakness, but that which keeps one submissive in working to the full extent of his powers. Humility in strength. Let ambition and humility go hand in hand, and our lives will be spent more acceptably to God; but remember that alone—

"Ambition is the dropsy of the soul, Whose thirst we must not yield to, but control."

UNPROFITABLE DISCUSSION.

The only profit in a discussion is in the light that comes out of it. Whether light may be fairly expected, depends partly upon the subject, and partly upon the motives and relative positions of the disputants. The discussion of those things, for instance, which God has chosen not to reveal, can never yield a ray of light. On the other hand, the discussion of a proper subject with an improper motive—as merely to get the better of another in an argument—is not apt to yield any light, though it may generate a good deal of heat. And, again, neither a proper subject, nor a proper motive, nor both together, can make profitable a discussion between two men who are immovably fixed on opposite sides of a question. The point to consider is not merely whether a subject properly admits of discussion, but who may be properly admitted to the discussion. Only as each one is willing and eager to gain all the light possible, even at the expense of "losing his case," can discussion be other than profitless.—Sunday School Times.

GOOD THOUGHTS.

Good thoughts are true wealth. They are fountains of living water. They are gems that always shine. They are impenetrable shields to protect the character. They are goodly apparel for the mind; they are right noble companions. They are fair angels of light. They are flowers of rich beauty and sweet fragrance. They are seeds of noble actions and noble institutions. They are moulds in which exalted characters are formed. They make good and great men. They are a nation's mightiest bulwarks. A good thought is a grand legacy to bequeath to the world.—Selected.

Sunday School Associations.

FREMONT.

Convention met with Hamburg branch, Iowa, February 8. Three papers were read on "What constitutes a Sunday school;" also a Sunday school newspaper. Sixteen delegates were elected to General Convention. The following officers were elected for the year 1900. District superintendent, Emma Hougas; assistant, Charles Fry; secretary, Clara Roberts; treasurer, Mary E. Pace; librarian, Blanche Andrews. A temperance program was rendered on Friday evening. The convention adjourned to meet at Henderson just prior to the next district conference; time to be determined later.

To My Fellow Sunday School Workers; Greeting:—Having been placed in charge of the work of the Northern California District Association, by the late convention at San Francisco, I send you this greeting, and ask your hearty coöperation in trying to advance this great work, especially in the department in which our part thereof is assigned. Let us remember Paul's admonition in 2 Timothy 2: 15: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

It is our duty to qualify ourself the best we can to do the best work we can. We must use the talent God has given us before asking him to give us more. There is a necessity for great effort on our part, "if we would become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Let every Sunday school officer and teacher put forth an earnest and persistent effort to fit themselves for their work, asking God to guide them and give them knowledge wherever needed.

I hope to be able to visit all the schools in the district. I feel very keenly the responsibility of the position I occupy, and assure you that any suggestion, information, or advice you may be able to offer will be thankfully received and appreciated. Let me hear from you.

Hopefully, I am your brother and colaborer,

CLAUS C. JOEHNK.

NOTICES.

To those interested I wish to make amends, as far as possible, for an oversight which I made in the minutes of last conference of Eastern Maine district. I failed to mention the action of the conference in requesting (if consistent with the mind of the Lord) the return of Bro. T. C. Kelley to this mission another year, as his labors here seemed to prove very beneficial. I feel that justice to the conference making the request calls for this apology, and also to Bro. Kelley.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Mrs. Fred Maps, will please notify Mrs. Mary A. Rood, Lamoni, Iowa. When last heard of was at Newell, Buena Vista County, Iowa.

Words, as vessels, are too weak to convey our gratitude to our many, many devoted friends; yes more than friends, brothers and sisters, who have so wonderfully administered to us in our sad bereavement in the loss of our beloved and only child. May heaven bless you as earth cannot.

In bereavement yet in hope,
Your brother and sister,
